3. Will the minister lay the tenders and contracts on the table of the House ?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) :

1. $192,500.
2. No tenders were called but agreement made as to prices.
3. Copy of agreements as to prices can be furnished.

JURISDICTION OVER IN-SHORE FISHERIES.

Mr. LEFURGEY asked :

1. Is the government aware that in the speech of the Lieutenant Governor of Prince Edward Island, in opening the provincial legislature, the following clause appeared : Measures for the better protection of our most valuable in-shore fisheries and the cultivation of our oyster areas and beds will be submitted to you ?
2. Is it the intention of the government to take any action in regard to preventing such grave complications as might arise from any such interference with powers now exercised by the federal authorities ?
3. Has the government taken any action in this regard ? If so, what ?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) :

1. Such intention on the part of the provincial government has been intimated to the Dominion government.

2 and 3. The government hopes to reach an early adjustment of the matter without the necessity for any interference of one authority with the other, and it is proposed to hold a conference with the several provinces at the end of the present session of parliament, at which this, among other matters, may be considered.

PILOTAGE COMMISSIONERS.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN asked :

1. Do the members of any board of pilotage commissioners in Canada receive remuneration for their services as such members, whether by way of salaries, allowances for expenses, or otherwise ?
2. In what cases is such salary or allowance granted or permitted ?
3. What is the amount allowed or permitted in each case ?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) :

1. Members of boards of pilotage commissioners do not receive remuneration for their services as such members.
2. Salary is allowed in the case of a commissioner being appointed secretary treasurer of the board. The salary is fixed by the board.
3. There is no fixed amount allowed pilotage commissioners except in the case of a commissioner being also secretary treasurer of the board.

ACCIDENTS ON THE ST. LAWRENCE.

Mr. BERGERON asked :

1. How many accidents have happened on the St. Lawrence route below Montreal since 1890 ?
2. How many between Montreal and Quebec, and how many below Quebec ?
3. What is the number of vessels of 100 tons and over wrecked, what are their names, and the date of the accident ?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). Will the hon. gentleman allow that question to stand, as it will require a large amount of work ?

Mr. BERGERON. Instead of saying vessels of 100 tons, I desire to make that read vessels of 1,000 tons and over. Less work will therefore be required to make up the answer.

Mr. BRODEUR. I would much prefer that the question should stand, because it will take some days to prepare the answer.

Mr. BERGERON. I only want to know in reference to sea-going vessels.

LAND GRANTS TO RAILWAYS IN THE NORTHWEST.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE asked :

1. When was the selection of the land grant to the Qu'Appelle, Long Lake and Saskatchewan Railway and Steamship Company completed ?

2. Has the land grant to the Manitoba and Southeastern Railway been selected ?

3. If so, when completed ?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of Interior) :

1. A portion of this company's land subsidy was retained by the government as security in connection with the transport subsidy contract, dated August 5th, 1889, and such portion is not yet selected. The balance of the company's land subsidy was selected prior to December 31, 1905.

2. No.

3. Answered by the answer to question 2.

DISMISSAL OF POSTMASTER AT EAST ROMANS. N.S.

Mr. LANCASTER asked :

1. Has Patrick Walsh been dismissed from the office of postmaster at East Romans post office, in the county of Guysborough, N.S. ?

2. If so, what was the reason for such dismissal ?

3. Did the government receive any petition asking for his dismissal ?

4. Did the government receive any petition asking that he be not dismissed ?

5. Who has been appointed in his place, and upon whose recommendation was such appointment made ?

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Postmaster General). Under direction of the Postmaster General, of date 21st September, 1905, Mr. Patrick Walsh was removed from the postmastership of East Roman Valley (not East Romans), county Guysborough, N.S., because of active and offensive political partisanship.

A petition calling attention to the facts had been previously received, and after the dismissal, another petition was received asking that Mr. Walsh should be continued in the office.

Mr. John M. Rogers has been appointed to the office on the recommendation of Mr. J. H. Sinclair, M.P.

PAYMENTS FOR EXTRA SERVICES IN DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS.

Mr. FOSTER asked :

1. Has the government taken cognizance of the correspondence between Deputy Minister Gobeil, and Mr. J. L. McDougall on the subject of payment to Deputy Minister Gobeil, Chief Engineer Lafleur, and Engineer Brophy, for extra services during the fiscal year 1904-5 ?

2. What action was taken by the Treasury board in this matter ?

Hon. CHAS. S. HYMAN (Minister of Public Works) :

1. Yes.

2. Matter was referred to the Treasury board, but as the main objection of the Auditor General was the lack of an order in council, no other action was taken beyond the passing of one authorizing the work to be done and the payment of reasonable compensations to officers named, out of and within the appropriation made.

REPORT OF TRANSPORTATION COMMISSION.

On the order being called :

That in the opinion of this House the government should, at the earliest possible day, present the report of the Transportation Commission, together with all the evidence taken before the said commission, and that the same should be thereupon dealt with by the House.

Mr. W. H. BENNETT. I would ask the Minister of Public Works when that report of the Transportation Commission is to be published. It is now two or three weeks since he promised it would be published.

Hon. CHAS. S. HYMAN (Minister of Public Works). I do not think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) is correct in saying two or three weeks, but I promised it would be brought down. It was put on the Order Paper about two weeks ago. As soon as possible it will be brought down. I have communicated several times with the printers, they promise it will be brought down early next week.

Mr. BENNETT. Then I will ask that the resolution be allowed to stand.

JUDGES SALARIES, &c.

Mr. H. LENNOX (South Simcoe) moved :

For a return showing : (a) The number of judges whose salaries are paid out of the consolidated revenue of Canada ; (b) the name and residence of each judge ; (c) the amount of salary and expenses paid to each judge ; (d) the area of the judicial district in which such judge exercises jurisdiction, and in the case of local, district and county judges, the population of the district ; (e) the number of cases tried by each judge in each year since the 1st January, 1901 ; (f) the number of motions, petitions, &c., disposed of by each judge during each year, at chambers or in a summary manner ; (g) the number of days during which each judge was actually engaged in the performance of judicial duties ; (h) the number of days during which each judge was engaged in any occupation, business or matter other than the performance of his judicial duties.

Hon. CHARLES FITZPATRICK (Minister of Justice). I am afraid my hon. friend will embarrass me somewhat if he insists upon a categorical answer to subsections (e), (f), and the following subsections of his question. That information is not under the control of the Department of Justice.

Mr. LENNOX. If the minister would intimate when he is ready with what he has, then I might speak to the motion. I intended to draw attention to certain matters in connection with this if that information could not be returned.

Mr. SPEAKER. The motion will stand.

ADDITIONAL CLERKSHIPS—POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

Mr. SAM BARKER (Hamilton) moved :

For a copy of the report of the Deputy Postmaster General, that an additional first-class clerkship is necessary for the proper performance of the public business in the department, for which clerkship parliament is asked to vote money. Also for a copy of the report of the Deputy Postmaster General, that an additional second-class clerkship is necessary for the proper performance of the public business in the department, for which clerkship parliament is asked to vote money.

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Postmaster General). There is, of course, no objection to giving to the hon. gentleman, or to the House, the fullest information in the possession of the department upon any such subject as is mentioned or indicated in this proposition, but I had supposed when the answer was given to the hon. gentleman during the consideration of the estimates in connection with this question that he would perfectly understand from what I said that there was no formal or written report upon this subject from the deputy Postmaster General. I stated in answer to a question then put to me that the estimate under consideration had been prepared by the deputy Postmaster General. He discussed the subject with me informally at the time and it was upon his verbal recommendation so made to me that I approved the estimate and presented it for consideration upon that occasion. The deputy Postmaster General at present, as hon. gentlemen are aware, is not in the country; he is attending the Postal Conference in Rome, and this is a matter in regard to which, as I say, there simply is a verbal report to me of the necessity for the offices mentioned in this resolution.

Mr. FOSTER. Bring down the verbal report.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. You have it now.

Mr. BARKER. I now understand that after all there is no report such as the Civil Service Act calls for. I understood from the hon. gentleman that there was such a report, and it must be very clear to everybody that I had ground for so thinking. When the minister was asking money for certain new clerkships, a first-class and a second-class clerkship, I asked :

Has the deputy minister reported that these additional offices are necessary ?

When estimates are being passed through the House a member has a right to know whether the deputy has reported in accordance with the Civil Service Act, which requires not only that the deputy shall report on the need for the new office but state his reasons for that report. Now, when I first asked the minister :

Has the deputy minister reported that these additional officers are necessary ?

His answer was :

Yes, the deputy minister is responsible for this very estimate.

We have had that sort of answer very frequently from the several departments and it was not what I was seeking. I repeated :

I asked if he had reported ?

The minister said :

He has reported it to me.

Well he would report it to nobody but his chief. That is what the Act calls for. The hon. gentleman's deputy would report to his superior officer, to the Postmaster General, but that report, I presume, would be one that would enable the minister to explain to this House the need for the offices he was creating. I wanted that information. The hon. gentleman seems to think he is not obliged to give it. I can only say that in compliance with the spirit of the Civil Service Act, he ought to give it, and to lay that report on the table of the House. The 17th section of the Act provides :

A first-class clerkship shall only be created by order in council, passed on the report of the deputy head, concurred in by the head of the department, setting forth the reasons for creating the office, and after the salary has been voted by parliament.

Now, we are asked to vote the money, and I think that before we vote the money we are entitled to the information to which the minister is entitled.

We ought to know from the deputy, who is the officer entrusted with the duty, that he needs this officer and we ought to know what his reasons are. It was for that purpose I called for this report, and I say again I have a right to assume that when the hon. minister said his deputy had reported to him, he meant such a report as is referred to in the statute. I am surprised to learn now that he has no such report.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I apprehend the meaning of the Civil Service Act quite differently from the way in which the gentleman (Mr. Barker) seems to understand it. As I understand the meaning of the statute, if this House votes the money the office would be created by order in council upon the recommendation of the minister proceeding upon the report of his deputy, and when the time comes, if this House votes the money, I have no doubt such a report will be made.

Motion agreed to.

TENDERS FOR FLOUR FOR PENITENTIARIES.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR (S. Leeds) moved:

Hon. CHAS. FITZPATRICK (Minister of Justice). In answer to the motion I produce the information.

FLOODING OF RIVER THAMES.

Mr. H. S. CLEMENTS (West Kent) moved:

For copies of all correspondence, plans, specifications, surveys, &c., pertaining to relief from River Thames, say between the city of London and Lake St. Clair, for the overflow of water from the said river, pertaining to canal or cut of to Lake Erie or other points.

He said: Mr. Speaker, my object in moving for this return is to call the attention of the government and the individual ministers of this House to the very serious situation of that immense and valuable tract of land lying along the River Thames. I had occasion to bring this matter up in a somewhat different form last session. I want hon. ministers to understand the position in which the people living adjacent to this river are placed. The River Thames is 160 miles in length running through a narrow peninsula comprising, I suppose, some of the best farming land in the province of Ontario. There is also a large population in the villages, towns and cities including Chatham, Glencoe and London and extending up to St. Mary's as well as along the tributaries of the main stream. This River Thames is, on the average, about 300 feet wide and the territory upon each side of it is possibly 20 miles in extent. This river has to take care of all the overflow water of these districts extending from its rise to Lake St. Clair into which it empties. Up to a few years ago the residents in these districts have had no serious complaints to make because of the overflow of this particular river, but for the last four or five years there has been very serious damage done to the magnificent farming lands and city property throughout the district from London to Lake St. Clair by the immense floods which have taken place.

Previous to last session there was a severe ice-jam in the river which caused an immense flood in the district, and last session I brought the matter before the Minister of Public Works. It was thought that if the government took measures to prevent the ice-jam the floods might be prevented also. The Minister of Public Works lives in the city of London, and while that city is not so seriously affected as the district below towards lake St. Clair, yet I have no doubt that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Hyman) has the interests of his constituency at heart just as I have the interests of mine. At the mouth of the St. Clair river there is a sand bank extending for miles, with only a narrow passage a few feet wide to allow boats to enter the river, and if the mouth of the river were dredged to the full width of the channel into the deep water of Lake St. Clair, it is thought that it would at all events have the effect of lessening the floods. I commend that suggestion to the government. A deputation of prominent citizens from the district waited upon the Prime Minister and Sir Frederick Borden last year and made representations with regard to this matter. The Minister of Public Works was then busy in his election, and the Prime Minister informed us that as soon as his colleague returned he would give the question serious consideration and endeavour to come to some conclusion. In my many discussions with the Minister of Public Works on this question, he seemed rather to be inclined to the idea that it was possibly one with which the provincial government should deal. I am not a lawyer, but I have taken the advice of the best counsel in the district and their opinion is that the Thames being a navigable river it is within the jurisdiction of the Dominion. However that may be, I am quite sure that the province of Ontario would be glad to join with the Dominion government in endeavouring to find a remedy for the evil. In order that the House may understand the serious importance of this question, I would point out that the district where the floods occur has rich and fertile farms worth from $75 to $100 an acre; it is one of the oldest settled districts in Ontario, and there is no more fertile land in that rich province. I remember that during one of these floods there was some seven to nine feet of water covering a great extent of these beautiful farms, and the resident engineer of the Grand Trunk Railway at St. Thomas was present with me when the farmers of that district and their families had to be taken from the tops of straw stacks and the roofs of houses to save their lives. I think I may safely say that during the last four or five years the damage caused by these floods would amount to $1,000,000. This winter, even though the flood was not very serious, the residents of the city of Chatham lost $30,000 by reason of it. There must be some action taken to prevent the renewal of these floods. While the country was in its original condition and clothed with forests, the snows melted gradually and the natural bed of the river was doubtless able to take care of the flow of the waters in it, but with the disappearance of the trees and the improved system of tiled draining and so forth, the water rushes down in the spring in four or five days, instead of moving gradually as it did in former times when probably the same volume of water would take five or six weeks to discharge. I submit to the Minister of Public Works that he should send to that district one of the ablest engineers in his department to consider the question carefully and to propose some remedy. May I point out that the assessment of the one township of Raleigh amounts to about $25,000,000, a fact which is sufficient to impress upon the members of this House that this question is one of vast importance. The Minister of Public Works promised me last session that if it were at all possible he would send an ice crusher there in the spring to try and to prevent a jam occurring in the river, and I have reason to believe that the minister made every effort to relieve the situation. Last spring the ice melted away gradually with the heat of the sun and there were no abnormal conditions, but yet the flood was almost as disastrous as in former years. I do not wish to force upon the government any suggestion of my own, but it does seem to me that there are several remedies which might be applied. There might be a cut-off made to Lake St. Clair or Lake Erie or Lake Huron which would give relief to the district. I am satisfied that according to the highest authorities on constitutional law, including that eminent lawyer, Mr. Clement, and others, that this is a Dominion matter and not a provincial matter. I am not suggesting what should be done, but I do in all seriousness ask the Minister of Public Works, who I am sure is interested in the district as well as I am, to place that eminent engineer on the ground and endeavour to provide some solution for this difficulty, and thus save the vast amount of property which is going to waste each year, and which must necessarily increase as the years go by so long as this difficulty remains unsolved.

I ask the pardon of this House for taking up so much time on this matter, but I feel that it is a very serious matter to a great many residents of that district. If I had the time I could mention a hundred families whose ancestors settled in that district seventy-five or one hundred years ago, who were well to do, and who were never troubled with these floods until the last few years, but whose farms have been practically ruined and who have lost every dollar they had through the overflow of the water of the Thames, and are at present working by the day upon any job they can get. Some of these farmers were worth $10,000 or $15,000 or $20,000. I only mention this to show that the hon. minister should take this matter into his consideration and give us some relief from the present difficulty.

Hon. C. S. HYMAN (Minister of Public Works). Mr. Speaker, I can have no possible objection to the motion which the hon. gentleman has moved, and I have every sympathy with him in the case he has presented to the House. This is a matter that has been brought up in the House of Commons by the hon. gentlemen who have represented the county of Kent at various times and I realize its importance. The hon. gentleman is in error when he says that it has only been within the last two or three years that these floods have occasioned any serious damage. In 1881 the city of London suffered very seriously by reason of these floods. The damage done on that occasion was in the neighbourhood of $1,000,000, in addition to which a sad loss of life occurred, some fifteen or sixteen people being drowned. I only mention this to indicate my deep sympathy with the hon. gentleman in presenting this matter to the House. So far as the Public Works Department is concerned, there is a very grave difficulty in dealing with a matter of this kind. While it is the duty of the department to do whatever may be necessary to maintain navigation on the Thames, the question of making a large expenditure solely for the benefit of the people living on the banks of the river who suffer from floods, is a question of very serious importance to the government and this House. There are a great many constituencies in Canada where there are rivers of similar character, and where floods do as great damage as is done by the floods of the River Thames. Hardly a week has passed since I have been in the Public Works Department in which similar representations of the strongest kind have not been made to me. I think that this House fully realizes that this is a provincial matter. The provincial houses deal with questions of drains and drainage, and it is almost always recognized that there ought to be a charge made against lands which have been drained by public expenditure. That is not within the purview of this House, but lies entirely within provincial lines. I may say that I have already had a report from an engineer who has gone very carefully over the whole question, and I shall be very glad to bring that report down and discuss the substance of it with the hon. member, and if it is felt that there should be further inquiries into the subject, I have no objection to placing another engineer on the work to report upon any points that need to be further looked into.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). The hon. mniister says he has no objection to bringing down the papers, but he intimates that the government can do nothing. What reason does he assign? First, that the question belongs to the provinces, because they have to do with drainage works, and, secondly, that it would be a very expensive undertaking. It does not seem to me that these are valid reasons or even plausible excuses. Is the minister not aware that we voted money some years ago for the drainage of the Nation river to prevent its flooding the land in the same way that the Thames river does? Attention was drawn to the fact that this was to provide better drainage, and the government justified the vote on the ground that a large area of land was submerged through the damming of the water by ice. If the government provided a remedy for that in the past, why cannot they do so in the present instance? It was very properly suggested by the hon. member who brought this matter to the attion of the House that the government might provide ice-breakers to break up the ice in the spring and thus prevent the overflow. The government have an icebreaker on the lower St. Lawrence to assist navigation, and what is to prevent them from providing similar means to break up the ice on the River Thames? It would not be such a great expense as the minister seems to intimate that it would be, because the distance over which the icebreaker would have to work is not very great. The distance that ice-breaker would be obliged to work would not be very long or very great. I think the hon. member deserves the thanks of the people of that section of country for bringing this matter to the attention of the House, but I do not think that the government are showing themselves equal to the occasion because the remedies which they might provide, and which they undoubtedly have furnished to other localities of Ontario, they do not propose to supply to these people, but propose to let them continue suffering from the evils under which they are now labouring.

Mr. W. B. NORTHRUP (East Hastings). If the hon. minister would consult some of the legal members of the cabinet, for instance his colleague the Postmaster General, he would find that the Thames, being a navigable river, lies within the jurisdiction of the Dominion government and not of the province. I was told the other day by one of the leading lawyers of Chatham, Mr. Matthew Wilson, who is no doubt well known to the hon. minister, that some years ago a by-law was passed by the city council of Chatham requiring a certain bridge across the river to be closed a half an hour every day at noon in order to enable the labouring men to reach their homes more quickly during the dinner hour. The Dominion government however refused to allow the by-law to be carried into effect on the ground that as the Thames was a navigable river, the Dominion had control and they would not allow any interference of navigation. The government having assumed control in that way and having prevented the people of Chatham exercising the rights they otherwise would have over the river, they can hardly now repudiate all responsibility or liability. There is a great difference between drainage under the Ontario Act relieving the lands from the overflow of water and damage caused by a river overflowing its banks. Possibly a little dredging at the mouth of the river would remove all difficulties.

Mr. HYMAN. The Thames is navigable from its mouth to Chatham and possibly a few miles further up, but that is the only navigable part in an extent of about 175 miles. With regard to the ice-breaker, I did try in every way possible last year to have something done, but it was impossible to get an ice-breaker across the lake in time to be of any service.

Mr. F. R. LALOR (Haldimand). I might point out that there was a parallel case to this in my own constituency where the waters of the Grand River overflowed the lands on both sides and where the government on two occasions paid the damages to the parties whose lands were overflowed. The government even went so far as to buy the land on both sides of the river in order that they might own the banks and thus avoid having to pay compensation. I am not objecting to the government having done this. On the contrary I think it was right that these people should be reimbursed for the damages caused by the overflow, but I merely call attention to the fact to show that the cases are parallel and that the government would be warranted in following that precedent by paying for the damages done in connection with the overflow of the Thames. If in the one case the Dominion government had jurisdiction, surely they have in the other.

Mr. HYMAN. Was it not claimed that the government had put up some works on the river the effect of which was to cause the flood ?

Mr. LALOR. That is correct. The government have works and embankments on the river which forced the water back and caused this overflow. At the same time I desire to say that there are still many damages unpaid in connection with the overflow of the Grand River. All along the river on both sides are small streams leading into it, and the embankment at Dunnville which caused the waters of the Grand River to overflow, has enlarged the streams leading to the river to such an extent that the bridges are very much longer and more expensive to keep up. The attention of the government has been called repeatedly by the county council to the fact and the government have been urged to take over those bridges and help to pay the expense imposed on the county of Haldimand in connection with keeping them up. A large deputation from that county, representing the county council, waited on the minister in this connection and asked him to have the government assist in defraying the expenses of keeping up these long bridges which were rendered necessary by the embankment at Dunnville. I shall probably at a later day bring this matter again to the attention of the government, but in the meantime I hope the hon. minister will take into his serious consideration the case presented to him by the deputation which waited on him last year.

Mr. J. E. ARMSTRONG (East Lambton). I think my hon. friend from Chatham deserves credit for the able manner in which he has placed this question before the House. I am sure the Minister of Public Works realizes its importance. He has frankly admitted that the river from Chatham to the St. Clair is navigable and therefore under his control and that that is the part which requires dredging. Dredging is required especially at the mouth of that river, and I fail to see any reasonable excuse for not giving any assistance to those people whose case my hon. friend from Chatham so ably placed before the House. I have visited that section, part of my riding is tributary to it, and I can emphasize the remarks of my hon. friend with reference to the damage done in that country. This damage is continually going on. Year after year the people suffer great loss owing to the overflow of that river, and when we take into consideration the large expenditure being made on the rivers in this eastern province, I am sure the hon. minister will find that he is in duty bound to do something for the relief of the people of Chatham. Many such works are carried on in these eastern provinces for the protection of the people along their rivers. In my own riding on the river Au Sable the government have spent $20,000 to $30,000 at its mouth for the purpose of keeping it open so that boats may go up into the small town. I believe that such an expense is justifiable and that the minister would be perfectly justified in spending a considerable amount to open up the mouth of the River Thames.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I think the hon. minister will bear me out when I say that in the district in question, we have prominent men whose opinion on such matters would have weight in any part of this Dominion. A great many letters have been written in the public press by prominent drainage men in that district, and, as the hon. minister knows, we in that district are the fathers of drainage in the province of Ontario. These eminent men, thoroughly acquainted with drainage, have offered suggestions as a solution of the trouble. In almost nine cases out of ten they have advised a cut-off, either to Lake Erie, or to other points. My own personal opinion is that if the government would dredge a cut equal in width to the river and out into deep water in Lake St. Clair, this would be a partial solution. But I am certain it would not entirely prevent trouble which will arise in future years. I am not asking for anything pertaining to drainage, I am simply asking the Dominion government to take charge of a stream over which they have full control, and to take charge of the overflow of water.

THIRD READING.

RAILWAY ACT, 1903 AMENDMENT.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN (South York) moved the second reading of Bill (No. 9) to further amend the Railway Act, 1903. He said: Mr. Speaker, the first clause of this Bill proposes to deal with express companies. I did think that in the legislation which was introduced here this afternoon by the government dealing with the Railway Act, they would have adopted the principle of government regulation of express companies. I have pointed out time after time in this House that the express companies are an integral part of the railways, that they are owned by the railways, that they carry freight, that the service they perform for the public is largely increased and that a large number of industries are altogether dependent for their success on reasonable rates being charged by the express companies. It seems to me there is no way of obtaining reasonable express charges other than by the control of the railway commission. In this connection I would call attention to an interview which is referred to by several organs of hon. gentlemen opposite, given by Sir Thomas Shaughnessy in New York the other day as to the efficiency of the Railway Commission in this country. He says that the railways have found it is a good thing for them to be under a railway commission and if it is a good thing to be under it in connection with the freight tariff it is a good thing to have it in connection with the express tariff now imposed on the public by these companies. The area of the market open to the fruit growers of this country is altogether governed by the express tolls; if these tolls are high that market is limited, but if the tolls are regulated and kept within reasonable bounds their market is widened. I believe there is a delegation to-day on its way to the capital to ask the government to include express companies within the purview of this Act, I have never heard a reason why they should not be so regulated. I did hear the Minister of Justice in his role as apologist of the corporations say they could not quite reach them and I did hear other hon. gentlemen use the same argument, because the express companies did their business partly by rail and partly by water. That may be, but a parliament advised by eminent lawyers and having a Minister of Railways ought to be able to make the law so that the tolls of the express companies will come within the regulation of the Railway Commission. Boards of trade all over the country have asked that these express charges be regulated by the Railway Commission.

Farmers in their conventions have made the same request and, as I said before, no reason has ever been given that has commended itself to my judgment or that has received any endorsement from the public, why it is impossible to regulate these express companies. Of course the railways have at times put up the pretense that they did not own the express companies, that they are private corporations aside from themselves; but I was able to quote a year or two ago from the annual report of the Canadian Pacific Railway and in that annual report they speak of the Dominion company as 'your property' in their address to the shareholders. That is they admit in their own document that the Dominion Express Company was the absolute property of the Canadian Pacific Railway, just as the Canadian Express Company is the absolute property of the Grand Trunk Railway. These express companies are doing more and more business. The big express trains carry from three to six express cars to handle the business, and all this business is without any regulation, they can charge what they like, and do charge what they like. Not only are these express companies overcharging their clients but they are all powerful here at Ottawa, all powerful with the government to prevent extension of the parcel post system of this country.

We had recently a Postmaster General in this country who also believed in the extension of the parcel post system and there are people in the United States today who are advocating the extension of the parcel post system in that country as they have it in Great Britain, but the public enemies in the United States, as in this country, to the extension of the parcel post system are the express companies as they are consolidated and organized at Washington and as they are consolidated and organized in this country. The hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick) said here this afternoon that the greatest tribunal we had in this country was the Railway Commission and that it was doing good work. If that be so, I say it is hampered, its importance is very much decreased as long as it remains without jurisdiction over the express companies. It is incumbent upon the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Emmerson) to tell us why he has not brought these express companies within the jurisdiction of the Railway Commission in the Bill which he introduced to the House this afternoon. I understand that an hon. gentleman in this House has a Bill which he will introduce a little later on dealing with this same question, and that he has gone to the extent of going through the Railway Act and drafting a Bill that may meet the difficulties that will crop up later. I understand and appreciate that there are these difficulties, but what I propose here to-night is to bring the principle into the Railway Act as it exists to-day and once we bring the principle in we can go into committee and wherever we find that the Bill conflicts with the present law we can straighten it out. I think that is the proper way to deal with a Bill of this kind. However, I will be glad to support the Bill of the hon. gentleman who is also moving in the same direction and if it clears all the difficulties out of the way so much the better, but this goes on to introduce the principle of placing the charges of express companies, as well as those of railway companies, under the control of the Railway Commission.

The second section I will leave in my Bill till it comes up in committee although the Bill introduced by the government this afternoon deals with that point. At least the government have conceded the point that the independent telephone companies of this country are entitled to access to railway stations. I introduced that measure session after session in this House. It was derided, it was denounced, it was stated to be an attack on vested rights. The principle is at last admitted and the government are undertaking the responsibility of conceding this convenience to the independent telephone lines. So far as that goes some headway is being made in telephone legislation.

Now, Mr. Speaker, my third amendment is in regard to passenger rates charged in this country. That too will soon become the law of this country. Hon. gentlemen opposite and hon. gentlemen on this side of the House may scoff at that idea but the great item in railway reform that is sweeping through the United States to-day is the two cent a mile passenger rate. We are told that in this country we have made provision for the regulation of passenger rates by leaving the matter to the Railway Commission. That has never been done in any other country in the world as far as passenger rates are concerned. The maximum passenger rate is fixed by parliament. The rate is made by the legislature whether in Europe or America. The other day in the great and flourishing state of Ohio the legislature passed a two cent a mile passenger rate and it went through both sections of the legislature almost like lightning. Now, in Indiana, in Ohio, in Illinois, in Pennsylvania, in nearly every state of the union the most prominent railway question before the legislatures is the regulation of passenger rates and in some of these states two cents a mile is made a maximum passenger rate. Some of the railways have had the wisdom, have had the discretion to admit the reform and reduce their rates without an Act of the legislature. The great Boston & Maine did not wait for two cent a mile legislature to be passed in that state, but on all their lines, whether in New York, Connecticut or Massachusetts and on almost all of their lines in New England they have conceded a two cent passenger rate. This idea of a two cent a mile rate was laughed at in this House, yet I can say to hon. gentlemen who said that they did not think it was good for the public and they did not think it was good for the railways that it is good for both. The railways make more money and the public get cheaper travel. On every railway in this country the charge is over two cents a mile. Take the great Canadian Pacific Railway so largely bonused by this country with land and money; it to-day is paying six per cent in dividends, it to-day is in a position to pay eight per cent in dividends, its stock is valued at 170 when the ordinary face value of the stock is $100. That great corporation is extending its system in every direction. I travelled over it last summer and I saw its great express trains running in three sections and every section crowded with passengers as it is to-day. That railway is crowded with passengers from one end of the line to the other and yet there are places in the Northwest Territories where it is charging four cents a mile.

Mr. MACPHERSON. You can buy a ticket from the city of Montreal via. the Canadian Pacific Railway to the city of Vancouver, a distance of about 3,000 miles, for $48. That is one and a half cents a mile.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I know it and I know that there are lots of people buying transportation over that line at four cents a mile. The public are not after commutation tickets; they are after the lowest possible standard passenger rate.

Mr. MACPHERSON. Is not that a pretty low passenger rate ?

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I do not say it is not, but I hope the hon. gentleman is not justifying four cents a mile.

Mr. MACPHERSON. No, I am not justifying four cents a mile; I am simply calling the attention of the hon. gentleman to the fact that here is a rate which is less than three cents a mile. He should be gracious enough to concede that.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I concede the point. But, they should not be permitted to charge more than two cents a mile in any case. Take the great province of Ontario from which I come and where the railways are surfeited with traffic ; they are charging, between Montreal and Toronto, three and a third cents a mile, while in Manitoba, by reason of legislation introduced by the government there, they have a maximum passenger rate of three cents a mile. In Ontario they are actually charging three and a third cents a mile, in the west the Canadian Pacific Railway are charging four cents a mile, in Quebec they are charging between three and four cents a mile and they will continue to charge it just as long as this parliament fails to do its duty in the matter. In the state of Michigan the legislature tackled this question, they reduced the rate and the railways had to accept it. As I have pointed out to this before these great companies that ran across the province of Ontario and Quebec handling traffic from Boston and New York to Chicago and the west charge the travel that originates in the United States two cents a mile and less than two cents a mile while sitting alongside of these passengers are Canadians whom they are charging three and three and a third cents a mile. Is that fair treatment of the Canadian public by the parliament of Canada? I doubt if that question will ever be approached and dealt with by the Railway Commission. The Railway Commission is not competent to deal with it, it would not undertake the responsibility of dealing with it and it looks to parliament to fix a standard passenger rate. The railways are doing such a business in this country that the old argument that they are opening up new country will not now prevail. Even in the new country the railways are overcrowded. The new line of the Ontario government running up north is overcrowded every day. It is making money; all the railways are making money and they ought to concede something to the public. The only railway that has put up rates on the public is the Intercolonial Railway. I regret that this has happened. The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals told us in the House that he had increased the rates. They had a two cent a mile rate on the Intercolonial Railway. They might have it yet, but it is very limited in its application.

Mr. EMMERSON. It was very much too low at two cents a mile.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Then it should have worked out very much to the profit of the Intercolonial Railway. I would like nothing better than to see the experiment tried on the Intercolonial Railway; I think it would justify itself. The province of Ontario to-day is making a maximum passenger rate of two cents a mile for the electric lines in that province, and that follows what has been done in the United States. There is any amount of traction in the United States to-day for a cent a mile and the companies are making big money. Wherever railway travel has been reduced in price the result has been greater profit to the railways and less cost to the travelling public. Every time railway rates have been reduced the traffic has been increased, the convenience of the public is enhanced, and the profit of the railways larger. Time and again I have presented these facts in the House and I do not want to reiterate them. I trust that parliament will now accept the principle of the regulation of express charges by the Railway Commission, and that a maximum rate of two cents a mile on all railways in this country will be fixed by legislation. I move the second reading of this Bill.

Hon. H. R. EMMERSON (Minister of Railways and Canals). It is always an agreeable task to deal with some of the points raised by my hon. friend (Mr. Maclean) because he presents them in a novel if not in an erratic way.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. And an erratic government adopts them a little later on.

Mr. EMMERSON. The hon. gentleman has propounded the same old question with respect to express companies; but oftentimes those who are not freighted with the responsibility of enacting legislation, can see a clear road ahead when others cannot. However, there are difficulties in this case. Year after year the hon. gentleman, presenting his case, has never yet suggested anything in the form of a remedy. In the first place, one difficulty is that express companies are not in the same position as are the railways. The Dominion parliament has subsidized railways from the beginning, and it can be claimed that this parliament should hold the strings on these railways and exercise control of them. The same argument would not apply to the control of express companies. An express company is an incorporated body—whether it be under the control of a railway company or not—having for its object certain methods of transportation. They call around at different places with their wagons and their delivery teams and gather merchandise to be transported by rail or steamer to certain points. They seek the cheapest and speediest means of transportation, but their care of the freight does not stop at the railway station because they deliver it to the place of business or the residence of the consignee.

Mr. J. D. REID. The railway company does the same thing.

Mr. EMMERSON. Only in certain large centers, such as Montreal.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. But it is done.

Mr. EMMERSON. It is done but under special circumstances.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. It is no obstacle then.

Mr. EMMERSON. In the case of freight carried by railways, the Railway Commission can form a judgment as to a reasonable rate, but in the case of express companies, the goods for example are taken out by rail to some town on the prairie, a private team by an arrangement or the mail carrier, will take it thirty or forty miles and deliver it to the farmer right at his home, and it would be very difficult for any tribunal to determine under these circumstances what a rate should be.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the minister say that is the usual custom with express companies ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I say it is the universal custom.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman is speaking without knowledge, because I am familiar with the custom in my part of the country and the express companies do not deliver freight or gather it up either. It is taken to the railway station and presented to them and when freight comes by express it comes to the station and you have to hunt it up yourself.

Mr. EMMERSON. I do not know exactly where my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) lives, but it is the custom in eastern Canada, and it is the custom in the west, and it is the universal custom in the United States.

Mr. SPROULE. I can tell the hon. gentleman—

Mr. EMMERSON. Will my hon. friend wait till I am finished.

Mr. SPROULE. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to merely state this—

Mr. EMMERSON. No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SPROULE. I am living on the Canadian Pacific Railway, and to-day—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. FOSTER. I think the hon. gentleman should be allowed to say where he lives.

Mr. EMMERSON. I had no intention of calling into question the place of residence of my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) or to say that the hon. gentleman did not have a place of residence either in Ontario or elsewhere in Canada, but I do question the knowledge which the hon. gentleman has of the custom of express companies.

Mr. FOSTER. I live in the east, or used to, along the line of the Intercolonial Railway and what the minister says is news to me.

Mr. BENNETT. It is news to everybody.

Mr. FOSTER. The custom must have been changed since I was down there two or three years ago. The express companies never hunted me up and delivered a parcel; I had to go to the station and get it.

Mr. EMMERSON. My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) was never there when he was living in that section of the country.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. EMMERSON. That is a pretty good Irish bull, but what I mean is that when my hon. friend was living in New Brunswick he was in Ottawa all the time.

Mr. FOSTER. Seriously, what you say is not the custom of the express companies in the east.

Mr. SPROULE. Nor in the west.

Mr. EMMERSON. It is all very well for hon. gentlemen to make statements of this kind. My statement is made on the authority of a member of parliament who has had actual practical experience, and I know it is true with respect to eastern towns and cities. I am not going to question the experience of the hon. gentleman, but I am speaking now with a knowledge of facts which have led me to a conclusion with respect to the difficulties of bringing express companies under the rule. It will be admitted that railway companies will carry their freightage from one point on their railway to another point or to a connecting railway. Express companies do not depend on their own powers of transportation, but are dependent upon other companies—railway lines, steamship lines, private conveyances, mail carriers, in different sections of the country. I do not say that it would not be desirable to have the tolls of the express companies regulated and controlled, but I do say that there are not the same reasons why this parliament should put its hands on these companies as on railway companies, because they have been granted no subsidies and there are practical difficulties in the way of attempting to deal with them that do not exist in the case of railways. Changes are going on every day in the methods of transportation. The mover of this Bill has said that he has made suggestions in years gone by that are bearing fruitage to-day. The tree that would bear fruitage to-day may not have been a fruitage-bearing tree a few years ago. In the process of evolution the changes going on from time to time make applicable to-day what was perhaps very inapplicable a few years ago under the conditions then prevailing. We must all recognize with respect to passenger rates that you could not apply arbitrarily the same rule in a sparsely settled section of the country that you would apply in a thickly settled section. My hon. friend speaks of populous centres where there is a very large passenger traffic. In such conditions a very low passenger rate would be applicable, but my hon. friend who comes from the east will bear me out in the statement that there is hardly a railway in the eastern provinces that is paying a dividend—why? Because they serve sparsely settled sections, and they have not the freight or the passenger traffic to justify this parliament in arbitrarily fixing a low rate on these lines because a certain rate would be applicable between Toronto and Montreal. With the very moderate rates charged over these branch lines of railway in the east, they do not make any money; indeed, in some cases, their earnings are not sufficient to meet their expenses. The main point we must all recognize is this, that traffic governs. It is all very well to cite the illustrations of Ohio and Massachusetts. We all know that the Boston and Maine system has such an immense traffic and its earnings are so great that it is compelled, I will not say to waste its money, but to expend it in permanent betterments, because under the law of Massachusetts, which governs its charters, after its dividends reach 10 per cent the excess goes into the state treasury. What has been the result? That though its earning power, in spite of everything, has exceeded 10 per cent all along its lines; it builds stone and concrete embankments and stations in order that its surplus earnings may not reach the 10 per cent dividend. It will hardly be contended, even by my hon. friend from York, that that illustration should govern us. They needed no law to control them; the conditions controlled them. The same is true of Ohio. Those who know anything with respect to the progress of that country, the increase of population and the expansion of manufacturing interests, know that the railways might under certain circumstances have been compelled to charge a rate not in excess of two cents per mile. That has not been found necessary, and the railways are enabled voluntarily, without any compulsion of the legislature, to lessen their rate.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Will the hon. gentleman let me say that I hold in my hand the statement of the Pennsylvania lines west of Pittsburg in connection with the proposition to fix a maximum passenger rate of two cents a mile which railways may charge in the state of Ohio. Here is the whole case presented by their own lawyer. They would not admit it until they had to. So my hon. friend's whole argument falls on the ground.

Mr. EMMERSON. My hon. friend says they passed the law. The legislature recognized that the conditions had changed, and that the rates should be lessened. But no man who knows anything of railroads and railroad conditions in Canada will say that outside of a certain area there is that earning power that will justify parliament in taking the railroads under their control and compelling them to reduce their rates. It may be true that the Canadian Pacific Railway, by reason of its large land grant and the large subsidies given it, might be in a position to have its earning power curtailed and might be fairly compelled to reduce its rates. But there are so many other railways in Canada which are not in that position that it would seem to me we should hesitate before saying arbitrarily to them all: You shall do this. I am not antagonistic even to the principle of controlling express companies although I can see many reasons why there is no justification for this under the circumstances. It is unfortunate that my hon. friend should indulge in the statement that because one is not able to see eye to eye with him, either as to the time a thing should be done or as to whether it should be done at all, one is necessarily under the control of some corporation. Such charges and imputations of motives are unworthy of the cause the hon. gentleman is attempting to espouse. It will hardly be said that I am in any way connected with railway or other corporations or am a very great friend of theirs because my position with respect to the government railway would surely militate against my being always in favour of the private corporations. The remarks of my hon. friend apply to every member of this parliament who may chance to differ from him, and I think more highly of this parliament than to suppose that hon. members are actuated by the unworthy motives which my hon. friend is so free in attributing to those who are not prepared to accept his views.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). I wish to refer for a few moments to the argument of my hon. friend the Minister of Railways, if his remarks may properly be designated as an argument. But before doing so I wish to say a word regarding the accuracy of a statement I made. If I understood the hon. gentleman correctly, he said it was the universal practice for express companies to collect and deliver their freight. Well, I venture to differ from him, and in doing so I referred to the custom, which I know from personal knowledge prevails in the section where I live. There the express companies neither collect nor deliver their freight. In reply to that statement the hon. minister questioned my knowledge and experience and wanted to know where I lived. I endeavoured to tell him that I live in a section which is an important feeder of the Canadian Pacific Railway. But the hon. gentleman would not allow me to give the information and seemed very adverse to obtaining it. Well, I say now emphatically—and I speak from knowledge quite as extensive as that which the hon. gentleman possesses, because I happen to be one of those who have handled for many years express companies freight in a certain locality—I say emphatically that it is not the custom of the express companies to collect or deliver freight. I know as well that in some towns or villages an exception may be found, but it is only an exception, and originally on the Canadian Pacific Railway, where I speak of, the express business was done by a private company, but that has been changed and that the private express company which did the freighting along that route was compelled to abandon it and the Canadian Pacific Railway took over the express business and have carried it on ever since. And in some of the larger towns and cities, I admit that they deliver the freight, but in the great bulk of the smaller places they neither collect nor deliver freight to-day. When therefore the Minister of Railways speaks of the universal custom of express companies which makes their business different from the transportation of freight by railways and justifies the refusal of the government to bring them under the board of railway commissioners, I say that he is simply putting up a man of straw for the purpose of knocking it down. The custom is not a universal one. It is not even a common one. The freight will lie there and the parties for whom it is intended may not become aware of the fact for days unless they send down to inquire about it. I speak from personal knowledge. I need only appeal to the members of this House; many of whom are in commercial life and doing business with the express and railway companies every week of the year, to have what I say verified as absolutely correct. In some of the larger places the express companies do collect and deliver the freight but in the great majority of smaller places they do not.

Mr. FINLAY. May I put the hon. gentleman a question? I live in a village of 1,200 inhabitants and I can tell the hon. gentleman that there they both deliver and collect our freight.

Mr. SPROULE. What question is the hon. gentleman attempting to put?

Mr. FINLAY. About express companies. You are stating what is not correct. I am willing to put up $50 and let you do the same, and we can telegraph to the head office of any company and ascertain which is correct.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the hon. member pretend to say that my statement is not correct?

Mr. FINLAY. I do.

Mr. SPROULE. I can tell the hon. gentleman that he is—but I will not say what was in my mind because it would probably be unparliamentary. I can tell him, however, if he is either a merchant or a man who uses the express companies or railways for the transportation of freight, that his knowledge is extremely limited.

Mr. FINLAY. I am a manufacturer and ship more goods over railways in one week than you do in a year. I ship by express every day and they collect the freight right along.

Mr. SPROULE. That may be the case and yet it does not refute the statement I have made. I am speaking of what I know. I have known for years, and can verify what I state, that right along the Canadian Pacific Railway between Toronto and Owen Sound, in village after village along that road, the express companies neither deliver nor collect the freight. And if the hon. gentleman denies that, he is speaking without knowledge. The Minister of Railways says it is the universal custom in the east. Well, I did not say anything about east because I do not know what that is, but I do know what is the custom in the west because I have been using both railways and express companies sufficiently to enable me to know it. The hon. minister said that the railway companies would not carry freight beyond the ends of their roads but would exchange it with other roads, but that express companies will transport sometimes by stage and sometimes by rail and therefore you cannot bring them under the Railway Commission. Is it a fact that railway companies do not send freight beyond the ends of their lines? Not at all. It has been the custom of some of these companies in our country to send their freight on by boat and by stage 20 or 30 miles beyond their lines. Therefore there is no force in that argument. If the railway companies can be dealt with successfully by the Railway Commission I do not see any reason why the express companies cannot be controlled equally as well in the same manner.

The hon. member says that traffic governs, that conditions force them, that railway companies voluntarily reduce the rate to two cents per mile where traffic justifies it. I have never yet known such a case. I would like him to give me an instance where a railway company of their own voluntary motion and without pressure, reduced their rate for travel to two cents per mile. The hon. minister did not give us a single example, he made the bald statement. But to controvert that statement we have the fact that in the United States railway companies have been compelled to reduce their traffic rate to two cents a mile. It was done by compulsion of the state legislatures, over which railways have not sufficient control to prevent such legislation. They lobbied against it, they presented their arguments, but they did not succeed in convincing the legislature, or in dissuading it from passing a Bill to compel them to reduce their rates. Now they are working under that system, and find it is paying fairly well.

Mr. EMMERSON. If my hon. friend will pardon me—the hon. member for South York (Mr. W. F. Maclean) stated that the Boston and Maine system made the reduction without any compulsion, they did it voluntarily.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Yes, but the hon. gentleman said that Ohio had done it voluntarily, when I immediately produced a document showing that the companies had bought it.

Mr. SPROULE. I refer to the two cent a mile rate on the railways of Michigan, where it was only done after the legislature of that state compelled it to be done. The same thing, I believe, took place in the state of New York, or some state through which a portion of the New York Central passes; and they were compelled to do it in several instances. There may be isolated cases where the railways have done it of their voluntary motion, but I say that is not the rule, and the two cent a mile rate is a result of compulsion.

Mr. EMMERSON. The Boston and Maine system is one of the largest in the United States.

Mr. SPROULE. The Boston and Maine may be one of them, I am not contradicting the minister in that regard. Now this Bill seeks to do two or three things. First, it seeks to put these express companies under the Railway Commission; second, it seeks to compel the railway companies to allow telephones to be put in their stations without being compelled to pay the railway companies therefor, as the law at present compels them; third, it seeks to introduce a two cent a mile rate. Now, with regard to the proposal to compel the railways to allow telephones to be put in their stations, I am pleased to believe that the amendment to the Railway Act, which the Minister of Justice said he intended to introduce, will accomplish it. I am sure this House and the country will be glad to know that he intends to make that amendment.

Mr. EMMERSON. That is in it now.

Mr. SPROULE. Well, I say that it then does away with the necessity of one clause of this Bill of the hon. member for South York, and I intend to direct my attention to that portion of it. Now, to-day, one of the important conveniences of a railway company is that it is a common carrier, that is the important work of a railway company. It is equally a common carrier when it is an express company, doing an express business over its own lines; it is a common carrier in the latter case just as much as when it is carrying ordinary freight. The man who is transporting freight in an ordinary freight car under the rules of the road, and who is also transporting freight over the same road, and perhaps in the same car, under authority of an express company that is owned by the railway company, controlled by the railway company, the freight being handled by the same company—I say the man who is doing that is doing the same work with two companies where in reality he ought to be doing it only with one. If the railway company is willing to allow itself to be under the control of a railway commission when it is transporting ordinary freight, it ought to be equally willing to allow an express company to come under the same restrictions when it is transporting freight of the same character, by the same hands, freight drawn by the same engine, and carried over the same road. I do not see any difference.

See the convenience it would be to the shipper. To-day if shipping freight he sustains a loss when he wants to get redress he is obliged to go to two or more different tribunals. If he wishes to send that freight over the company's line as a common carrier, and any injustice is done him, he prosecutes his suit in the one way and before the one tribunal. If he sends a portion of the freight by express, because he desires to have it handled more quickly, and if an injustice is done him, he cannot prosecute his suit before the same tribunal and in the same way. Therefore he finds the present system complicated, annoying and disagreeable. So, I say that since the railway company handles the freight in both cases, both as an express agent and as an express company—because they are an express company themselves as well as freight agents—then I do not see any argument and never could see any argument why express companies should not be under the control of that Railway Commission as well as railway companies. To my mind it is no argument to say that because an express company handles freight a little differently from a railway company, though it is handled by the same company in both cases, and carried over the same road, I say the mere fact that it is handled in a little different way by the express company, is no argument why it should not be under the control of the Railway Commission as well as the railway company. The shipper who is constantly sending and receiving freight uses at the same time the same railway, the same men handle and carry both classes of freight; then why should he have to go to different tribunals to get redress?

One argument which was frequently presented to this House and to the Railway Committee years ago in favour of taking over the provincial roads and declaring them to be railways for the general advantage of Canada, was that you gave the shipper the advantage of prosecuting his suit under one law. Under the one system, if a man put his goods upon a provincial railway at Toronto, goods consigned to Halifax, and they were destroyed in the province of Québec, he was obliged to enter suit in a different place; whereas if the railway was declared to be for the general advantage of Canada he could prosecute his suit in any part of Canada, under the same law, under the same conditions, in his endeavour to get redress. The system that obtained was then declared to be very inconvenient. I remember the late Dalton McCarthy giving an illustration of the inconvenience. A lot of cattle were killed and the owner did not know how to get redress. I believe the cattle were shipped over a provincial line. How could he get redress? The suit was entered in one court, and he was told that was not the proper court. What court was he to go to? It was contended that in the interest of the shipper these railways ought to be declared railways for the general advantage of Canada, and then you could prosecute your claim in any court, no matter in what part of Canada the injury was sustained by the shipper. Now the very same principle applies to the transportation of goods when they are in the possession of express companies. You ought to be able to prosecute that suit in the one court for any portion of Canada; you ought to be able to go before the Railway Commission and get redress where injustice is done in the handling of that freight, in the charges on it by an express company as you can in the case of a railway company.

There is another feature that always seemed to be very important, owing to the fact that railway companies are of late acquiring express companies themselves, they have practically done away with the competition that formerly existed between the express and railway companies; you have no competition to-day. It is true that express companies usually charged more, but they were always bidding for more freight to be sent by express and very frequently would offer lower rates than usual to induce you to send a larger quantity of express than you were in the habit of sending. The railway companies were bidding against them for the same freight, and you had a healthy competition between the two that brought about the best results and the lowest rates for the shipper. That is all done away with to-day and we have no control over the rates, but if the express companies were placed under the Railway Commission, we might have some control, and a remedy where injustice was done. We desire to have the control and for that purpose it is desirable, in our judgment, to have these express companies placed under the Railway Commission. There is no longer the competition we used to have and therefore evils will creep in, and injustice will be done. I am in favour of this Bill. I could never see any good reason why the express companies should not be under the control of the Railway Commission the same as the other corporations.

With regard to the two cent rate I hold somewhat different views from the member for South York (Mr. W. F. Maclean). I believe that where a railway company is doing a good, paying business, we would be justified in compelling them to reduce their rate to two cents. But there are many portions of the country where they are not doing that business and it always seemed to me that the graduated scale imposed by the state of Michigan was a fair, proper and reasonable system. Under that system where the earnings are $3,000 per mile, the rate is two cents; where the earnings are between $3,000 and $2,000 the railways may charge a little more and where the earnings are less than $2,000, they are allowed to charge three cents. I still think there should be a graduated tariff, and therefore I would not be prepared to go the whole length of this proposal and say their rates should be absolutely the two cent rate. But I think there are many portions of Canada where that rate ought to be given to-day and where people believe it would be a reasonable rate. The hon. member for Vancouver (Mr. MacPherson) spoke as if the people in this country were perfectly satisfied with the rates charged by the railway corporations. I can only tell him that was not the impression left on my mind when travelling in his country, and I do not think he is voicing the sentiment of his own constituents in saying that with regard to the ordinary passenger travel.

Mr. SAM. BARKER (Hamilton). I agree in a great measure with what has just been said by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule). We have had this question up before and I think that what has just been said with reference to the express companies will be endorsed by most of this House. I live in a city and I know that within very recent times, within a very few years, in a city of over 50,000 people it was not the general rule to deliver the goods sent by express. It may be that in a village of 1,000 people a manufacturer who has a pretty large business may get his goods delivered regularly but the ordinary inhabitant of a city does not and I think this statement will be generally endorsed. I live not over three-fourths of a mile from the express office, and I have received notices by card and have had to go for express parcels sent me. As a rule in such places a line is drawn within which they deliver, but outside of that line you have to send for the goods, and I think you will find that in the smaller towns and villages that is the general rule. To say that a gentleman who is a manufacturer gets his goods delivered promptly is no test as to the experience of the general body of people.

Mr. FINLAY. I would like to inform the hon. gentleman that all the store keepers and business men in my town, which has a population of 1,200, receive prompt delivery.

Mr. BARKER. I just said that a manufacturer and large business man might receive it, but I am speaking of the ordinary person who receives goods by express. I am not a merchant or a manufacturer and I have received many parcels by express and not very long since I had to send for my parcels to the express office. I do not say that as a complaint against the express companies ; I am only stating what I know to be a fact. I agree with the principle that an express company, like a railway, telephone or telegraph company, having corporate powers and exercising the functions of a carrier, should, as to its tolls and the conduct of its business be under the supervision and control of the Board of Railway Commissioners. I do not doubt that a moment, but I do not approve of this Bill ; I do not quite see how it is possible to insert two or three lines in an Act like the Railway Act and thereby effectively apply that Act to some particular body or business.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Not two or three lines, only two or three words.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. But it is a principle that you adopt and settle the details in committee.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I will have occasion to point out to my hon. friend how this principle will work out.

Mr. BARKER. I have given some thought to this question and I think it is absolutely impossible to make the Railway Act applicable under such circumstances.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Hear, hear.

Mr. BARKER. And I have told the hon. member so before.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Hear, hear.

Mr. BARKER. With regard to the principle, I thoroughly agree with him and I think the Bill might be read as a recognition of the principle ; but I observe that another member has given notice of a Bill on this very subject, and I hope and believe that he has drawn a Bill that may be made applicable without altering the Railway Act. That is the system on which any person attempting to make a working Act for the express companies would proceed. The principle is the same in both cases, but one Bill will, I think, be a workable Bill and the other absolutely unworkable.

As regards the question of the two cents a mile passenger rate, I am quite in accord with the member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule). I think any person who has any knowledge of railway business will admit that it is absurd to try and apply the same rate per mile that is charged passengers carried in a thickly settled community, to all parts of the country. You can get in the state of New York a rate per mile that gives an enormous return to a railway company, but apply that rate to a sparsely settled country and the company would starve under it. Everybody recognizes that. I do not think I can appeal to a better witness on that point than the member for South York (Mr. W. F. Maclean). That hon. gentleman had a Bill of this character before the House in a previous session in which he sought to make the law of the land exactly what he proposes to-day, a compulsory rate of not more than two cents a mile. That Bill was referred to the Railway Committee and was discussed day after day there. Railway men and other men were brought to give evidence and make statements to the committee.

What was the result? The hon. gentleman was successful in his usual manner in drawing to his support hon. gentlemen on both sides of this House. Hon. gentlemen on this side of the House supported him in the committee; hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House supported him, and yet without consulting, as far as I know, one gentleman who thus supported him, he abandoned his two cent a mile Bill and adopted another system. He took up, without a word of consultation with his friends, the Michigan scale system, adapting the charge to the revenue, acknowledging the principle that everybody, I think, who knows anything about it approves of, that the rate must be governed almost entirely by the extent of the traffic. So, as I have said, when you take a country like the state of Ohio or the state of New York, where there is an enormous traffic, a rate may be a paying rate there, which, if applied to the northern parts of Ontario, would ruin the companies. The hon. gentleman saw that himself, and after discussing it in committee he sought to apply the Michigan scale. He now goes back to the two cents a mile rate. I cannot approve of that. I believe that everybody in this House and in this country will approve of the principle of the lowest possible paying rates. That is a principle we all can agree on, but here the hon. gentleman says that the rate in all parts of this country shall not be more than two cents a mile. I do not think that there is any business man who tries to consider the subject at all with fairness to the public and to the company who will say that there is no part of this country where two cents a mile would not be too little a charge to allow any margin of profit to the railway company. For that reason I do not approve of this part of the Bill. I shall be very glad to see the whole subject dealt with fairly but I think, considering the fact that we are paying a very large sum of money per annum for a Board of Railway Commissioners and that within two or three years we have given them power to deal with this question of rates in any way that may be just and equitable, we ought not now to interfere, and take this power out of their hands. At all events, I think that my hon. friend should have brought a large body of his constituents, or at least some of his enthusiastic supporters before the Railway Commissioners and shown that the rates should be lowered in particular sections of the country, or in the whole country. That has not been attempted. We are asked, after appointing a Board of Railway Commissioners, men who are admitted to be honest and fully capable, to take the work out of their hands and say that with all their experience, knowledge and facilities for gaining information we do not care what their opinion may be, they shall not allow more than two cents a mile. I cannot agree to that. I do not think the members of the House are justified in agreeing to it. As to the other feature of the Bill, I agree with the principle that express rates should be controlled by the government through the Railway Commission. The only difficulty I see as to the hon. gentleman's Bill is that he does not provide any machinery to apply it and I do hope that this session another hon. gentleman in this House will endeavour to present a Bill which will apply such machinery.

Hon. CHARLES FITZPATRICK (Minter of Justice). Mr. Speaker, I am quite sure that it will be considered unnecessary for me to say anything in respect to the two cent a mile rate after what has just fallen from the lips of the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker.) I think he has disposed of the Bill of the hon. member for South York (Mr. Maclean) pretty effectively in so far as that point is concerned. Dealing with the question of the control of express charges, I think there is no doubt that it would be most desirable that we should either give to the Railway Commission jurisdiction in respect to the control of express charges or that we should arrange in some way to have that control exercised through some other channel. But, this is not a question that comes up to-day for the first time. My hon. friend from Hamilton will remember that when the Bill to consolidate the Railway Act was first introduced into this House in 1903 it was referred to a committee for the purpose of hearing any suggestions that might be made from the different interests in the country that would be affected by this legislation. Among the other bodies that appeared before the sub-committee at that time was the Toronto Board of Trade, and I can remember quite distinctly that they were represented by an eminent lawyer from the city of Hamilton, Mr. Lynch Staunton, who pressed for the consideration of this question in connection with the Railway Act that was then under consideration; that is to say, he was anxious, speaking in the interest of the Toronto Board of Trade, that we should endeavour to find some means to carry out what I think we all have in view—the control of express rates and charges. After considering the matter in the sub-committee the conclusion arrived at then was that it was practically impossible at that time to find machinery which would enable us to exercise that effective control which we ought to have over these express charges. Since that time the matter has been considered again and again, and we, up to the present, have not been able to find a solution for the difficulty, but that we ought to find a solution for it I agree and that we can find a solution for it I also believe. Let me suggest in order that the members of this House who are giving to this matter serious and honest consideration for the purpose of applying a remedy to the existing evil—not those who are here simply for the purpose of making a little capital out of it—

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Hear, hear. The hon. gentleman is taking his medicine now.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Let me suggest to the consideration of those members of the House who have been giving and are willing to give some honest and serious consideration to the subject what the difficulties are. Let us take for instance, an express package that leaves Toronto, the point of destination being Charlottetown, P.E.I. This express package leaves Toronto either by the Canadian Pacific Railway or the Grand Trunk Railway, and reaches Montreal. At Montreal the package is placed in the possession of the Intercolonial Railway, let us say, or it is placed in possession of the Quebec Steamship Company to be carried by water. How are you going to deal with the charge for that express package after it reaches either of these two carriers? The Railway Commission have no control over the steamboat and they have no control over the Intercolonial Railway. How are you going to deal with it? That is one difficulty that ought to be considered.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Can it not be surmounted?

Mr. BARKER. It is a difficulty, but I think it can be surmounted.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I do not say that it cannot be surmounted; we want it to be surmounted, but I want some one to suggest a way to deal with it.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. That is what you are for.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I want some one to suggest a way to deal with it. In addition to that the express company does a large amount of business in the way of transmission of money. How are you going to deal with that?

Mr. BARKER. That is a very serious difficulty.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. What is going to be the remedy applied to the charges they make in connection with that branch of their business? In addition to that we all know that in large cities express companies do what I might call a domestic business.

Mr. BARKER. Does the hon. gentleman see any difficulty in applying the rules of the Board of Railway Commissioners to everything that the express company does except the carrying of money?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I will try to deal with it. I will say how far I think we can remedy the difficulty. You have in addition the domestic business that the express company does, that is, the business they do in large cities and towns in the way of receiving and delivering parcels.

Mr. FOSTER. Received in these towns and being delivered in them?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. How are you going to deal with that? You have no control over that sort of business. It is a mere cartage over which you cannot exercise any jurisdiction or control. Therefore, to be brief in connection with the matter, the point to which I would direct the consideration of this House would be whether or not we ought to consider the advisability of dealing with express charges only in so far as these express charges are connected with railway corporations which are under our jurisdiction and control. That is a suggestion that might well deserve consideration. How would the difficulty with respect to excessive express rates be met by this Bill which we are asked to accept? It is suggested that we should agree to amend section 3 of the Railway Act. I would ask my hon. friend from Hamilton and those who have given to this some serious consideration to bear with me for a moment while I let them see what it would mean. Section 3 says:

> This Act shall apply to all persons, companies and railways (other than government railways).

The difficulty occurs there immediately in respect to the Intercolonial Railway.

> Within the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada, and shall be incorporated and construed as one Act, with the Special Act, subject as herein provided.

Now, does not that section apply to express companies in so far as an express company is a 'company' within the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada? How much further does the amendment carry you? The member for South York suggests we should add:

> This Act shall apply to all persons, and express companies, companies and railways.

As a piece of model drafting nothing can be conceived superior to that.

> Express companies and companies.

What would be the effect of our adopting such legislation as that. Is it necessary for me to discuss this Bill any further?

Mr. E. A. LANCASTER (Lincoln and Niagara). I come from a district where there is a great deal of express business done, and I am entirely in favour of bringing these express companies within the purview of some authority to control their rates. I am not in favour of this Bill in the way it is drawn, and I shall give my reasons. But, first, let me say a word as to the statement of the Minister of Railways and of his ally from East Peterboro (Mr. Finlay), in regard to express companies delivering and collecting freight from the people at their houses or offices. Although a much younger man than the member for East Peterborough, I would advise him to travel a little, I would ask him to come to the Niagara district in May when the blossoms are on the peach trees, or in September when the trees are laden with fruit, and there he will see more express business done to the square mile than anywhere else in Canada. And if he can point out any places but Hamilton and St. Catharines, between Hamilton and the Niagara river, including the old historic town of Niagara-on-the-lake, the large village of Merritton, population 2,000 ; the thriving village of Grimsby, population 1,200 ; the beautiful little village of Beamsville, population 1,000 if the hon. gentleman will point out a single place except the large city of Hamilton and the smaller city of St. Catharines where any collecting or delivering is done by the express companies, with their own wagons, I will get some good natured fruit grower better off than I am to present him with some peaches to keep him in a good state of health and his blood in better order, so that he will not make such rash statements. We have allowed the hon. gentleman (Mr. Finlay) to tell us that we do not know what we are talking about on this question, but I know the province of Ontario well and I assert here as a fact that the member for Grey (Mr. Sproule) was absolutely right when he said, that outside of the very large towns and cities there is no such custom among the express companies as to deliver and collect freight by their wagons.

I am opposed to this Bill, and why ? It is because in my humble opinion it will accomplish nothing, because it simply lays down an academic proposition without providing a remedy, and because it will simply made confusion worse confounded. I have had occasion in this House to find fault with certain matters being referred to the Railway Commission instead of being dealt with by the House, but there were reasons why the Railway Commission was appointed ; and perhaps the chief reason was that the Commission might control the rates charged by railway companies for the transportation of freight, and to regulate the interchange of traffic between themselves. The express companies are closely allied with the railway companies, and there should be some authority to control their rates just as the railways are sought to be controlled —the railways are not controlled as much as we want them to be, but we have hope that the Commission will accomplish more in that direction in the future. I agree with what has been said by the member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker) and by the Minister of Justice, that some remedy ought to be applied in the case of the express companies. I want a remedy applied, I believe the Railway Commission the proper tribunal to deal with the matter, and to that extent I am in favour of the Bill introduced by my hon. friend (Mr. Maclean). But as that Bill is now drawn it would simply introduce confusion and not provide a remedy. I understand that the hon. gentleman from Prince Edward (Mr. Alcorn) is to introduce a practical Bill, to the drafting of which he has given great care and attention, and which will deal in an effective way with the control of rates charged by express companies. Knowing that my hon. friend (Mr. Alcorn) is to introduce such practical legislation which I believe will accomplish good, I feel justified in voting against this Bill because I will get more effective legislation from the proposal of the hon. gentleman from Prince Edward. I did vote for the Bill of my hon. friend (Mr. Maclean) in the session of 1903 in the absence of any better legislation, and as I felt we would be able to amend it in committee. But, having looked into it more carefully since, I am bound to say that if we adopted it we would have to amend the Railway Act in 100 or more clauses in order to make this proposal workable. In the interests of the fruit shippers of the Niagara district I am anxious that express companies should be controlled, but I cannot vote for this Bill for the reason that it would not bring about that proper control which we desire. I shall have pleasure, however, in supporting the Bill to be introduced by my hon. friend from Prince Edward.

Two years ago I voted against the proposal of the hon. gentleman from York (Mr. Maclean) for a two cent rate. I shall be obliged to vote in that way again, and for this reason if for no other : While we want the lowest passenger rates we can get, we want to ensure that the man who is entitled to low rate shall get it. It is the duty of the Railway Commission to declare what is a fair rate both for freight and passengers in all parts of this country. Supposing the people west of Winnipeg (because of the long distance between the stations and the scarcity of travel, should fairly be called upon to pay two and a half or three cents a mile, and supposing that the people in the populous Niagara district where the stations are only a few miles apart were entitled to even a lower rate than two cents a mile, I want to have it so that they will be enabled to get what they are entitled to in this respect.

When they do that much more travelling every week or every month, I think they are entitled to a correspondingly lower rate. The Railway Commission should have the power to fix a one-and-a-half-cent or two-cent rate, if they chose, for a certain part of Ontario, and a different rate for another part. But this Bill, if passed, would not permit a higher rate than two cents anywhere, which in my humble opinion would prevent the railways giving a lower rate than two cents in some districts where they might otherwise do so. If the Commission should be of opinion that in the Niagara district or in some other part of Ontario the rate should be a lower rate than two cents a mile, they could not insist upon railways giving that lower rate because they could not allow them to charge more than two cents a mile in some other districts where the conditions would justify a higher rate. The question of what the rate should be in any particular section of the country can best be adjusted by the Railway Commission, and I think that body ought to be allowed a free hand to fix the rate. If we passed this legislation, the railways could nowhere charge more than two cents a mile, and that would indirectly prevent them from giving a lower rate in some parts of the country where they might otherwise be disposed to do so, and therefore the people in those parts would be paying more than they would be entitled to pay, and the whole net result would be different from what ought to be accomplished by legislation of this kind. Then, what about the freight rates? If we so act as to compel the Railway Commission to fix a maximum passenger rate which will not enable the railway company to earn a decent dividend, what then? Although I am sometimes accused of being too hard on the corporations, I want it to be understood that I do not expect any corporation to be made to work for nothing. What I have claimed has been that they are unfair to the people; but I do not want the people to be unfair to them. I want to render to Caesar those things that belong to Caesar, and when a railway company is not able to pay proper wages to its employees, or to pay damages to people whom it injures, or to carry on its business in a proper way, because its passenger rates, have been drastically reduced to a point that will not enable it to pay a reasonable dividend, what is the result? The result is that the freight rates will go up, and who pays the freight rates? the farmers, and others whom I am endeavouring to represent in this House. The result would be that the people who now pay the great bulk of the taxes of this country, would be paying heavier freight rates in order that the people in the cities and towns, who travel the most, and most of whom are better able to pay the passenger rates than the farmers, could travel around at reduced rates. In short, the railway company would have to place an additional burden on the farmers in order to lessen the burden on the few travelling people of the cities and towns. For these reasons I am disposed to vote against the Bill.

Mr. J. H. SINCLAIR (Guysborough). There seems to be a disposition on the part of some hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House to doubt the statement of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals that in the small towns in eastern Canada the express companies both receive and deliver goods. I would like to say that the statement of the minister is entirely correct, in my experience. I live in a small town of 5,000 inhabitants, and I think for the last fifteen years the express companies have both collected and delivered express parcels in that town. This is true of New Glasgow, Sydney, North Sydney, Westville, Truro, Amherst, Spring Hill, and every town and village of any size in the province of Nova Scotia. I believe it is also true of the province of New Brunswick and the province of Prince Edward Island, and I am told that it is true to a very large extent of the province of Quebec. I have no doubt that it is also true to a great extent of the province of Ontario. It may be that there are some country districts in that province where they are a little slow, and they do not do it; but in the province from which I come, they would not tolerate such a system for a moment.

Mr. R. BLAIN (Peel). I am in favour of the Bill as it proposes to enact such legislation as will bring the express companies under the control of the Railway Commission. In the consideration of this question we must keep in view this fact, that a very large quantity of goods are now being carried by express which in the earlier days were carried by freight. For instance, the farmers within a area of ten, twenty or fifty miles of every large city in Canada—this is the case around the city of Toronto—ship in express packages many products, such as butter, eggs, cream and milk, which fifteen years ago were sent by freight or taken in wagon, this means that the farmer is a larger contributor to the express companies and a smaller contributor to the freight of the railways. As this is the trend of trade in this country, I think it is very important that when the Railway Commission has proven itself such a success in the regulation of freight rates, it should have an opportunity of regulating and controlling express rates as well. It is almost impossible for us to separate the carrying of freight from the carrying of express parcels because one train carries both kinds of parcels, and it is rather difficult for us to say that in one case the Railway Commission shall have the right to regulate the rates while in the other case it shall not have that right. I wish to read the statement of Sir Thomas Shaughnessy which has been referred to by my hon. friend from South York:

> It is my opinion that the railroads are making altogether too much opposition to the proposed regulation. It seems to me that the people are entitled to regulate rates. It is, therefore, only a question as to the best method of securing that end.

I shall not weary the House by reading the balance of the statement, but it shows that after two years experience in Canada of the Railway Commission regulating freight rates, not only are the people being satisfied but the corporations are also contented. If that be the case, I cannot understand why it would not be in the interest of the people that the Railway Commission should also control the charges paid express companies. Important bodies in this country have urged the government to bring these companies under the control of the Railway Board. Only a few days ago the Fruit Growers Association, which met in this city, sent a deputation to wait upon the government and urged the government to adopt this policy. Canada is rapidly becoming a great fruit growing country. In the early days it was thought that we had too cold a climate ever to become large fruit producers. To-day, however, we are not only growing fruit for home consumption but are also exporting it in large quantities, and the time has arrived when the government should see that legislation is adopted to put the express companies under the control of our Railway Commission. Such a move would be in the interests of the whole people.

Mr. E. D. SMITH (Wentworth). I intended to speak at some length on this subject, but as my arguments have been anticipated by one member after another, I shall be very brief. My hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain) has just quoted Sir Thos. Shaughnessy as stating in public that he is well satisfied with the Railway Commission which has control over the railways of this country. That being the case, one would naturally suppose that the express companies should also be well satisfied to be put in the same position as the railways. As regards the reasons which would compel me to vote against a two cent rate on the railways, my hon. friend from Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) has anticipated my argument so fully that he has dispensed me from stating it. We had the Minister of Justice arguing that because the Intercolonial Railway is not under the Railway Commission, the express business on that railroad could not well come under that board. But I would point out that the express business on the Intercolonial Railway is not carried on by the government but by the Canadian and Dominion Express companies. That being the case, there is no reason why these companies should not come under the Railway Commission and let the Railway Commission control their rates just as well as they might control the rates charged by express companies doing business on the Grand Trunk Railway and Canadian Pacific Railway. The Minister of Railways and Canals argued that because express companies operated upon stage routes and steamboat lines, the Railway Commission could not control their rates.

Mr. EMMERSON. My hon. friend perhaps misapprehended me. I said that would add to the difficulties.

Mr. BLAIN.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. No doubt it would, but that is no reason why these difficulties might not be overcome. The Railway Commission has control of the rates charged on railways, both passenger and freight rates, and as the conditions are extremely different in different parts of the country, there are just as many difficulties to overcome in this connection as there would be in the case of express companies, and yet the commission is supposed to be equal to the task of equalizing these rates in the interest of justice. The placing of express companies under a railway commission, which would have authority to investigate and ascertain whether or not they are making excessive profits, seems to me the only way in which one could arrive at a satisfactory conclusion as to whether really these companies are charging excessive rates or not. It is easy to say that they are charging excessive rates ; but if we appeal to the managers of these companies, we shall find them pointing out that in spite of the most economical management, the companies are not making more than a legitimate profit of six per cent. Whether that be the case or not, we are unable to tell, and the only way to find out would be to have these companies put under some commission with power to investigate. These companies being public carriers, the public have the right to demand that they shall not charge exorbitant rates ; but apart altogether from the question of rates, there are many things which this commission might regulate. For instance the rates upon fruit from the Niagara district to the Northwest are higher by Toronto and North Bay than they are by Smith's Falls, although the latter route is 300 or 400 miles longer. The reason given is that in the latter case the fruit is carried by the Dominion Express Company alone, while in the former it is carried by two companies, so that although the distance in the latter case is shorter, the rates charged must be higher. That argument is incontrovertible so long as the second express company—that is the one carrying the goods from Toronto to North Bay, not the one originating the freight or delivering at destination—has the right to charge a fixed rate. That rate is fixed at 50 cents a hundred pounds. If the Railway Commission could remedy such a grievance which handicaps very largely the fruit trade in the Niagara district and other parts of Canada, it would be doing good work in the public interest. In the northwest we have to meet the competition of fruit from the United States; and if the rates were made more reasonable, our Canadian fruit would no doubt command a monopoly in that market. It does not stand to reason that even although the goods are carried by two companies, the rates should be higher by Toronto and North Bay than they are by Smith's Falls over a longer route. On the contrary the rates in the former case should be less. This is just one instance in which a railway commission could do us great service apart altogether from the general lowering of rates. There can be no doubt also that higher rates are charged in some cases from one point to another than they are in other cases between other points equally distant. This also could be regulated by the commission, and thus prevent injustice being inflicted on one section of the country as compared with another. However as regards express rates in general, the fruit growers believe that they are excessive but have no means of proving it. A commission with power to investigate would be able to ascertain whether these rates are really excessive or not. This is a matter extremely important to the fruit growers of Ontario. We have our markets in the Northwest and the maritime provinces for our fruit; and if the express charges were cut in two we would be able to drive out the California fruit, and these express companies, instead of taking up one car of freight to the Northwest every other day, might be able to take perhaps four or five up there every day. We believe that the markets in the Northwest will consume all the fruit we are growing now, and very much more, and at good prices if we can get what we consider fair rates. But without this law we have no means of securing lower rates; therefore it seems to me the principle of the Bill the hon. member has introduced is a good one. Whether it is workable or not, whether or not it has been brought in in the right manner, it seems to me the principle of the Bill is undoubtedly correct; and if it is not workable, I presume it can be remedied. Therefore I should take great pleasure in voting for it when the opportunity occurs that we can place upon the statute-book a law that is workable.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I can well afford to put up—

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member cannot speak again.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I have a right.

Mr. SPEAKER. I do not think so, there is no right of reply on a motion for the adoption of an Order of the Day. The question is upon a motion for the second reading of Bill (No. 9).

Mr. H. LENNOX (South Simcoe). It may be that almost everything that needs to be said on this question has been said, but that does not relieve members from the necessity of defining their position in regard to this matter. Now, the Bill consists of three sections, two of which have been frequently referred to, and one of which, the second section, has not been referred to to any extent. The second section proposes to amend section 193 of the Railway Act of 1903, which is the section dealing with the right of telephone companies to have their instruments in railway stations, and it puts that matter under the control of the Railway Commission. This provides that the compensation to be exacted for that privilege is to be a reasonable compensation, and it uses these words :

> And such compensation shall be limited to the direct and immediate local damages actually suffered by reason of such construction, operation and maintenance by the railway company at such stations or premises, and not from any cause, matter or business extending beyond the same.

With that proposition I entirely agree. Whether the section is happily worded or not, it expresses very fairly what would be right in that connection. If that section stood alone I should think it was in a very fair state to be sent to the committee for the purpose of enabling the committee to deal with the principle, and to see if we could put the law in better condition than it is to-day. Now, I find that after leaving that section I am confronted with a very serious difficulty. Taking section one of the Bill introduced by the hon. member for South York (Mr. W. F. Maclean), it provides for three additional words in section three of the Railway Act. The Railway Act is composed of upwards of three hundred sections. By that Act we constituted a new court hitherto unknown in Canada, and probably unknown in any country, giving it very large powers, and very ample control over the railways. Unfortunately it does not include the Intercolonial. I think it should have included the Intercolonial, and if conditions remain as they are I hope it will soon include the Intercolonial. In constituting that new court we defined their powers, and in defining the procedure we have referred to railway companies and to matters relating to railway companies more than a hundred times. There are probably nearly a hundred sections which deal with the procedure of that court alone; and it is impossible to suppose that by the mere introduction of three words it would bring about the remedy which we on this side of the House desire. I think I speak for the majority on this side of the House when I say that a great number, at all events, of the gentlemen on this side wish to see the express companies brought under the control of the Railway Commission. Now, I am glad to hear, because it paves the way for the easy success of the Bill which is about to be introduced by the hon. member for Prince Edward County (Mr. Alcorn)—I am glad to hear the Minister of Justice expressing similar views. Therefore I feel that it would be absurd to pass legislation of the nature proposed by the first section of the Act introduced by my hon. friend from South York, because we would be making an exhibition of ourselves before the country, which, whether we regard ourselves as lawyers or laymen, would not be complimentary to us as parliamentarians. The clause as proposed to be amended would read :

This Act shall apply to all persons, and express companies, companies and railways (other than government railways), within the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada, and shall be incorporated and construed as one Act with the Special Act, subject as herein provided.

Now, any one who follows that out will see that he is confronted in that section alone with innumerable difficulties, not only by reason of the exception of government railways, but by other matters such as the Special Act, and so on, referring to railways alone. But that is not the main difficulty in the matter, because if it only consisted in remodelling the third section of the Railway Act we could set to work and do it. But we would find that as soon as a person applied for a remedy under this Act against an express company, the Railway Commission, at the very inception of the transaction, would find that it was impossible for them to take the matter up. I stated when this matter came up before, introduced by the hon. member for South York, that I was in favour of the proposition. I regret to say that sometimes these matters are not fairly represented to the public. I regret to notice in a paper which is usually fair to this House—I won't mention the newspaper—I noticed not very long ago that it attacked certain members : for instance, it attacked the leader of the opposition, and read him out as being one of those who were opposed to putting express companies under the jurisdiction of the Railway Commission. I say that was unfair or dishonest; it was unfair if it was accidentally said, and if it was intentionally done, it was dishonest.

What are the facts, Mr. Speaker? The fact is that when this was introduced my hon. friend was confronted with some technical difficulty and not only did the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) rise and smooth the way for the Bill but he expressly stated that the reason he would not support the legislation was because it was not a practical measure and could not be worked out; but so far as the principle of the Bill—I should not say the principle of the Bill, for there is practically no Bill—so far as the principle of putting the express companies under the control and management of the Railway Commission was concerned, he was heartily in accord with it, and that he hoped legislation would be introduced. And I think he intimated too, that if legislation was not introduced from some other source it would emanate from himself or from this side of the House in order to put this matter clearly and properly under the jurisdiction of the Railway Commission. That promise has been implemented I am glad to say, as the promises of the Conservative party are invariably redeemed, and we have had upon the order paper for several days a notice that the member for Prince Edward county (Mr. Alcorn) is introducing a Bill and I have had the advantage of reading it, although it was not requisite that I should see that Bill in order that I should have absolute faith that when it is introduced in the House it will be found to be a workable measure and in itself carry all the provisions necessary to the efficient working of this scheme which is so manifestly in the interests of the country. Therefore I congratulate the member for South York (Mr. Maclean) that although I and many members of the House cannot support his measure he will not be disappointed but will have the satisfaction of seeing an efficient measure become law at this session. If I did not know that this other measure was about to be introduced by the member for Prince Edward county (Mr. Alcorn) I would be disposed, notwithstanding the formidable objections that surround this first section with the amendment introduced by the member for South York (Mr Maclean) to vote for it. And why? Because I think the government have had time to introduce legislation. Two years ago when this matter was brought up before, the argument was advanced that we had just passed the Railway Act and that we should get it into working order. A sufficient length of time has elapsed for us to expect the government to bring forward a measure dealing with this matter and therefore I say if it had not been that another member on this side of the House is bringing forward a measure that will be workable, although I do not think that the present proposition is workable, I would vote for it to go into committee where we could in time, perhaps, hammer it into shape.

As to the two cent a mile rate. I could probably adopt the argument that was used by the member for Lincoln and Niagara (Mr. Lancaster) but I want to define my own position. When this qeustion was before introduced, by the member for South York (Mr. Maclean) I voted for it ; I admit with no very great enthusiasm, but I did so because I knew a large portion of the farmers in Ontario were in favour of the proposition that the rates on railways should be reduced. I voted for it as the best proposition on the matter that was then before the House, but at that time we had this safeguard that we were not introducing legislation that would certainly close up certain of our minor railways. We had a graded system, a system by which until the earnings of the railway should reach a certain point the two cent law would not apply. But now we have the bald proposition, a much more formidable proposition, that in every case the railways shall be confined to the two cents a mile rate. I am prepared to adopt the argument set forward by the member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule). I believe it is a reasonable way of looking at this matter, and I believe that if we adopted a two cents rate all round we would be shutting up some of the smaller railways in the portions of the country which can least afford to be deprived of them, that is the very rural and sparsely settled portions of the country. A railway running branches into these remote regions would say: This thing does not pay, and we will abandon this railway. This has been done in times past and so we would probably be doing the very worst stroke of business we could to those who can least afford to lose the services of a railway. If the member for South York (Mr. W. F. Maclean) had advocated the proposition of two years ago I would vote for it again, as I voted for it then. I believe that a proper control of the railways in regard to rates is not only advisable but necessary in this country, and that if we find that the Railway Commission is not controlling the rates, both freight and passenger in the interest of the people of Canada, it will be the duty of parliament to see that effective measures are brought about, which will lead to the proper control of the railway company in that regard. But it must not be overlooked that there are only three sources from which a railway can get revenue, the carrying of mails, and the carriage of freight and of passengers. Now if you pull the blanket too much one way you shorten it at the other end, and if you press the railways too closely upon the question of passenger rates, the inevitable result is that the rates must go up. It is not a sufficiently formidable proposition to have prevented me from voting for a graded system such as was introduced by the hon. member two years ago, but it is a proposition that has to be borne in mind when we are confronted by the bald proposition of a two cent a mile rate over every railway in Canada. Then we are set thinking as to the effect upon the farming interests all over the country. We must recollect that the home market is the valuable market for the people of Canada and if you reduce the passenger rates to the lowest possible grade the railway company go to the Railway Commission and say: We have to meet fixed charges upon the railway, we have to meet our interest account and our running expenses and we only get so much from the passenger rates; therefore our freight rates must go up. And who pays the freight rates but the farmer, who sends out his produce to the market and brings back to his home the different commodities which he has to use including his agricultural implements? When we come to deal with this proposition, either directly by statute or through the Railway Commission, it is a matter that we must be very careful about and we must be careful that we do not, instead of bringing greater advantages to the rural communities, the farmers of this country, work to their disadvantage.

I therefore say that I am fully in accord with the second section of the Bill. The first section I regard as unworkable, and in addition to that we have a measure coming before us at once that I believe will carry out efficiently and well the object of putting the express companies under the control of the Railway Commission, and the last section I could not vote for, under any conditions, in the form in which it appears.

Mr. F. R. LALOR (Haldimand). I desire to explain my position briefly upon the measure now before the House. I have listened very attentively to the arguments presented by members on both sides of the House in reference to the measure.

Here, at last, it would seem, that a measure has been introduced upon which, almost unanimously both sides of the House might agree. But, a great many members of the House have to-night vied with each other in explaining why it is that they are opposed to this Bill. They state that the principle of the Bill is all right, that they are in favour of the control of freight rates, that they are in favour of the two cent rate for passenger traffic upon the railway and being in favour of the principle of the Bill they find some excuse for opposing the measure. I think it is quite natural that the lawyers who are in the House—and they seem to predominate—should find fault with a Bill that is introduced by a layman. They seem to think that the Bill has not been drawn properly, and that there are mistakes and errors as to legal phrases in connection with this measure. Well, if that is all there is in the opposition to this measure why not let these legal gentlemen introduce amendments to this Bill that will correct the mistakes that are contained in it? That would be very easily done indeed, and I think such an excuse as that for opposing this measure cannot be justified before the electors of this country, because I believe that the farmers and people generally are in favour of the Railway Commission controlling express rates. They control freight rates and why should not the same jurisdiction be given to them over express rates that is given to them over frieght rates? They can just as easily control one feature of the traffic upon a railway as the other, and therefore I believe that we should place express rates under the control of the Railway Commission. We have no competition practically in this country in regard to express rates. We have to accept whatever rates the express company may name regardless of how high those rates are. The fruit grower, the merchant, the farmer and the manufacturer alike must pay whatever express rates the company may ask and in towns which are fortunate enough to have only one railway line there is an agreement between the express companies by which there will be no competition whatever and the result is that we have to pay whatever rate the company asks. The hon. member for East Peterborough (Mr. Findlay) has told us that the companies collect and deliver express parcels, but let me tell the hon. member for Peterborough that this is a matter of enterprise on the part of the express agent in each particular locality. It is not part of the regulations of the express company that the express packages should be collected or delivered, but if the express agent is an enterprising gentleman as he is in the town in which I live, then it is a matter of business with him if he collects the express in that town and also delivers it in order that he may encourage the express business and make his commission upon it. In other towns where the express agent is less enterprising the express packages are not collected.

Mr. FINLAY. It was not Peterborough at all that I referred to but the little village of Norwood.

Mr. LALOR. The hon. gentleman will pardon my mistake, but that does not make any difference whatever, I thought it was from Peterborough that the hon. gentleman came.

Mr. FINLAY. No.

Mr. LALOR. However, that does not alter my argument in the least. There is probably an enterprising express agent in the hon. gentleman's town who collects the express matter, but the express company does not require him to do it. I believe that express rates are altogether too high. I am a large manufacturer in the town in which I live and a great deal of my product goes by express. I am in the knitting business and a large portion of my stuff goes to all parts of the country by express. I cover the entire country from the Atlantic to the Pacific with travellers and I send express parcels to British Columbia and we have to pay altogether too much in express rates. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Macpherson) who spoke to-night as representing a British Columbia constituency, I do not believe gets very much by express or he would not express himself as being satisfied with the express rates.

Mr. MACPHERSON. Does the hon. gentleman suggest that I said anything about the express companies?

Mr. LALOR. I understood the hon. gentleman so.

Mr. MACPHERSON. I assure the hon. gentleman that I did not mention them at all.

Mr. LALOR. I accept the explanation of the hon. gentleman, but I understood him otherwise. In reference to passenger rates I firmly believe that the railway companies make a very great mistake indeed in the high passenger rates they charge. I believe that if the passenger rates were reduced to two cents a mile as they are in almost all portions of the United States there would be twice as much travel upon the railways as there is now and the railway companies would make more money than they do to-day with the high passenger rates they charge. You know what it is when there is an excursion. When the Toronto fair is going on enormous crowds of people travel to the fair largely because passenger rates are reduced. The people are able to travel much more freely and if the railway companies would generally adopt a lower passenger rate I believe there would be twice as much travel as there is now and that the railway companies would derive more revenue than they do at the present time. We have heard many excuses. The excuse is made—and I must say that I have heard that excuse brought forward before—that if we reduce passenger rates freight rates will go up. That is all nonsense. It is a farfetched argument against this Bill. There is nothing in it whatever. Freight rates are under the control of the Railway Commission and the railways are charging now all they can possibly manage to charge for freight and if they were able to charge any more they would do so. So, the argument that if we were to lower passenger rates freight rates would be increased is nonsensical, ridculous argument and the farmers of this country will not accept any such argument as that. I know that the people of the constituency which I have the honour to represent in this House want a two cent railway rate. They are in favour of it and so far as I can use my voice in assisting in bringing about a two cent rate I am prepared to do it, because I believe it is in the interest of the farmers of the country as well as in the interest of the railways. I, therefore, without desiring to delay the House to any great extent upon this measure, want to say that in the interest of the county I represent and in the interest particularly of the farmers of that country I propose to support the Bill introduced by the hon. member for South York (Mr. W. F. Maclean).

Mr. GEO. O. ALCORN (Prince Edward). Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to make any extended remarks, but merely to state a few points which, to my mind, are reasons why this Bill should not now be read the second time. The first section, we are told by the hon. member (Mr. W. F. Maclean) who introduced the Bill, deals, or attempts to deal with the subject of placing express companies under the control of the board of Railway Commissioners. Having given the subject some attention I have been entirely unable to appreciate the method by which it is expected that this first section shall accomplish that object. Its meaning as applied to the Railway Act is extremely difficult to discover; in fact, I have not been able to make out that it has any appreciable meaning whatever.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Did you find any principle in it?

Mr. ALCORN. No person doubts the propriety of the principle of placing express companies under the Railway Commission. I have not heard a single gentleman speak here to-night or a person express an opinion outside of this Chamber against the propriety of accomplishing that end, but it seems to me that this first section absolutely and entirely fails in that object. The hon. member who introduces the Bill has not made the faintest attempt to elucidate how he hopes to accomplish that end by the section which he has placed in the Bill for that purpose. As has been intimated and as hon. gentlemen will perceive from the order paper I have given notice of a Bill which I hope to introduce in a few days and in which I have attempted some what fully to deal with this entire subject. I therefore think it would be at least convenient if not expedient, that I should be given an opportunity to place my Bill before the House before the second reading of this Bill takes place. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Maclean) tells us that the second section of his Bill deals with the entrance of the telephone companies to railway stations. That entire subject is fully covered by the Bill introduced by the Minister of Railways to-day and so that clause is wholly unnecessary. As to the third section of the Bill which calls for a two cent rate on railways; it has always seemed to me that the same agitators who are now asking for a two cent rate, would, if it were granted, be later on asking for a one and a half cent rate or a one cent rate. A great many of the gentlemen who attempt to discuss this subject on the platforms of the country, do so without fully appreciating the merits of the subject. At all events, the conditions to-day being absolutely the same as they were two years ago when this subject was fully thrashed out in the House, it would appear to me that the House is not going to stultify itself by reversing its judgment of two years ago, the facts being the same now as they were then.

Mr. J. D. REID (Grenville). The Minister of Railways stated that express companies are not subsidized, but as railway companies are subsidized and as express companies are part and parcel of them, it would seem to me that the question is not quite so clear in that respect. The statement of the Minister of Justice that these express companies are operating on steamers as well as railways, makes it more difficult to bring them under the Railway Commission. I am in favour of the principle of controlling the rates charged by express companies, but after hearing the opinions expressed by able men on both sides of the House I believe that the Bill before us is not drawn in proper form to accomplish that. In view of the fact that the hon. member for Prince Edward (Mr. Alcorn) is to introduce a well considered Bill on this very subject, I think we are wasting time to-night and that it would be better to wait until the Bill of my hon. friend (Mr. Alcorn) comes down when the whole question can be more intelligently discussed. I beg to move that the debate be adjourned.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I now have an opportunity to reply to the various statements that have been made to-night, and I can well afford to bear with the criticisms that have been heaped upon me. I am strengthened in my position by the remark of an old Yorkshire farrier who had to handle an old mare that did not take her medicine, and so he said : 'There is nothing like putting on the twitch.' The government have had the twitch put upon them and until the twitch is put upon them we will get no progressive legislation in this parliament. To-day the Minister of Justice (was forced to accept three principles in respect to telephone management which he denounced me for proposing some years ago. To-day the hon. gentleman laid down this principle : that any public franchise owned by a private corporation should be regulated by the government. If he can apply that principle to telephone companies why cannot he find a way to apply it to express companies ? I have been criticised all round here to-night by very able gentlemen, and I was a little surprised to see the splendid support the Minister of Justice has on this side of the House. One would think that all his followers were here and that he had none on his own side. I take the criticism of gentlemen around me, and I say that as a private member I had a right to propound a principle to the House, no matter in what form I put it. I could have moved a resolution saying : Resolved that in the opinion of this House the tolls of express companies should be regulated by the Railway Commission; or, as I have done, I could have asserted the bold statement in a clause of a Bill. I knew that difficulties were in the way, but I knew also that I had the right to put a principle before the House, and that if it were adopted we could go into committee and perfect it. What have we a Minister of Justice for, what have we a well manned law department for; why do we pay them large salaries, why have we all these law clerks, why do we go into committee, why have we a Minister of Railways and a Department of Railways; if it is not that these gentlemen would sit down with private members in committee and perfect the legislation which is introduced. I was in the right, and the hon. gentleman from Prince Edward (Mr. Alcorn) who has lectured me to-night and told us he has a perfect Bill—well, we will see whether his Bill is perfect or not when it gets before the House. Hon. gentlemen around me here to-night have criticised the wording of my Bill and have taken this means of shirking their responsibility. It is not the duty of a private member to draft a perfect Bill. But, I have had my experience of that. I hired a high priced draftsman to draft me a Bill dealing with the telephone question and all the thanks I got for it was that I was sent to a special committee and that special committee did their best to block the measure and talk it out. And the men who talked it out, where are they to-day? They have gone into a certain retirement. One went on the bench and now I see he has gone another step forward. After I presented my Bill, and after I spent a large sum of money out of my own pocket to get a perfect Bill I was hung up in a special committee. No matter what you do in this House, if you assert a principle beneficial to the community, some one will find a way to block you. But, if you stick to a good principle and keep the twitch on the nose of those who oppose you, you will at last bring them up to the mark. I challenge this House to say that the principle is not right that express tolls should be regulated and controlled. No one can dispute it. All these gentlemen around here say they are in favour of it, and yet on both sides they want to kick this Bill out of the House. And who are the people that are asking for this legislation? It is the farmers of this country who are deeply interested in the question, and who have appealed to us time and time again, and yet to-night we see members who say they represent the farming community, opposing the best interests of the farmer.

They have all got something to say here to-night in favour of the farmer, but they say double as much in favour of the express companies. The Minister of Justice, in his own pettifogging way, gets up and talks about the difficulties in the way; he says there are lions in the path. He says the express business is handled partly by rail and partly by water; and his friend from Hamilton, an ex-solicitor of a railway and with a large experience in fighting the public, says, how are you going to handle the money packages? What I want this House to decide is, how are you going to handle the ninety-five per cent of the express business which is done on the lines of one company. That is what the farmers, the fruit growers and others want to have settled; and they do not want such pettifogging reasons against action by this House as have been presented here to-night and on other occasions. I am surprised to hear hon. gentlemen admit the principle, and then, as it were, read the Riot Act to me on the ground that my Bill is not properly drafted. My principle is right, and if your principle is right, you can soon get your words right. I would have expected hon. gentlemen who admitted the principle of the Bill to have sat down with me in the committee and helped me to put it into proper shape; but instead of that they have all joined together to shy rocks at the yellow dog. All right, gentlemen; I am prepared to take care of myself and my principles, and have them embodied in legislation, and the criticisms that have been passed on my Bill to-night may amount to very little. I want to come again to this question of the regulation of railway rates, as to which we have had such a fine lot of disclaimers to-night. Hon. gentlemen are are all in favour of a reduction of passenger rates, but they are afraid the poor farmer is going to have his freight rates put up. It is the poor farmer who wants to have reduced passenger rates. The farmer in the Northwest cannot come out of that country unless he pays four cents a mile. Is that fair to the farmer? Do you know that from the day that railways began to run in this country there has not been a change in the passenger rates? Freight rates have been cut into and reduced half a dozen times, but the passenger rates have not been changed. Surely the people who pay passenger rates are entitled to some consideration; but when that is proposed, these gentlemen get up and weep for the poor farmer whose freight rates are to be put up on him. It is the farmer of the United States who wants reduced passenger rates, and I am going to read the facts which prove this, and set at naught all these bogus arguments which have been put forth to-night. The Minister of Justice may boast that he has a splendid following in this House, because when he puts up his finger both sides of the House rise and do his bidding. I congratulate him. In the old days when a man had one side of the House with him he was considered to be doing pretty well; but now we have reached a new stage. I think the Prime Minister had better make way for this Goliath from Quebec, who commands the support of both sides of the House in vindicating the cause of the railways in this country.

An hon. MEMBER. Oh, dear!

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. The hon. gentleman says, 'oh, dear.' He does not like his new leader, although he has been in service only five minutes. With regard to the two-cent rate I am going to read from the New York 'Herald' a despatch written on March 4, by its special commissioner in Chicago, and it will show the House and the country what the people of the United States think of this much-abused principle that is going to ruin the railway companies and cause higher rates to be put upon the farmers:

The railroads of every state east of the Mississippi river are face to face with threatened reductions in passenger fares to a two cent a mile basis. That it will come in the near future seems almost beyond question. It is recognized by the railroads that nothing can be done to stop the progress of the agitation.

The example of Ohio is becoming contagious, and quick action is demanded and is expected in several states as soon as their new legislatures shall convene. In Indiana the two cent fare is almost a campaign issue, for the legislators who will be elected next fall will, as a rule, be tacitly, if not openly, committed to a two cent measure.

The action of Charles S. Mellen, president of the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad, in reducing fares on several divisions and in announcing that he proposes speedily to make similar reductions over the entire system is expected to do more to advance the two cent fare cause than any other one thing.

Still another important factor is the electric line. Almost everywhere has the trolley invaded the territory of the steam road and fares on electric lines never exceed two cents. More and more have the steam roads been compelled to confine themselves to through business, leaving the local traffic to the competing trolley.

Seeing the tremendous stimulus that has been given to travel by the lower fares of the trolley and by the special steam road rates, many passenger men really do not view the two cent era as an unmixed evil. They honestly believe that a reduction would have two effects—stemming trolley line competition and creating a tremendous flow of new business. This accounts for the failure of the railroads of Ohio to attack the legality of the new law in the courts. They wish first to see what effect it will have on their earnings, and many of them do not expect the trial to prove disastrous.

Michigan took the initiative in the reduction of passenger fares, but the law there is a graded one, depending upon the earnings of the railroads. The fares permitted to be charged range from four cents on some roads in the upper peninsula to two cents on the main lines in the lower state.

This law has resulted in giving the people of Michigan a two cent fare on over seven hundred miles of main lines and a two and one-half cent rate on four hundred miles of road. The operation of the law has proved eminently satisfactory to the people of the state, and so far as can be learned has not affected adversely the revenues of the railroads.

In the state of New York fully ten Bills have been introduced looking to a reduction from three or two cents in passenger fares. One of the Bills introduced provides for a one and one-half cent rate, and the provisions of all the pending Bills are generally applicable to all railroads in the state.

In Massachusetts, Connecticut and Rhode Island, it is likely that the legislatures will take no action in view of the voluntary reductions by President Mellen of the New Haven road. These reductions now give the people of Western Massachusetts and of a large portion of Connecticut a flat rate of two cents a mile.

Mr. Mellen has also notified his directors that he proposes to make a similar reduction on the entire Old Colony division, which covers the eastern and the southwestern portion of Massachusetts and part of Rhode Island. At present the rates of the New Haven main line between Boston and New York are slightly in excess of two cents a mile, but it is Mr. Mellen's expressed purpose to have a uniform two cent rate on all lines owned by the comapny. The Boston and Albany and the Boston and Maine roads will undoubtedly be compelled by the force of competition to follow Mr. Mellen's lead.

Governor Henly, of Indiana, has determined that his next legislature, whether it be a special or a regular session, shall pass a two cent law that shall apply uniformly to all lines within the state. Sentiment in the state is strong, because of the fact that a great deal of the through business is done on a two cent rate, whereas the citizens of the state are compelled to pay three cents.

The state of Iowa is also moving rapidly toward a two cent fare action. Governor Cummins recommended compulsory legislation for a family mileage book to be sold at two cents flat. In connection with this there is a Bill pending for the abolition of passes to all candidates for office, delegates to conventions, members of political committees and public officials, except notaries.

In Wisconsin the Secretary of State has presented a complaint to the Railroad Commission that he is compelled to pay three cents a mile when riding on Wisconsin railroads, and that this is an excessive fare. The commission is what is termed a 'strong commission,' having power over rates, and, as the temper of the people of the state is toward rate reduction there is little doubt that the railroads there are facing a two cent fare.

Had the Governor's call permitted it, a two cent Bill would have been rushed through the Pennsylvania legislature during the last session. There is not the least doubt that such a measure will be introduced at the next session next January.

In Virginia a Bill has been introduced requiring two cent fares, and it will probably be passed.

In Illinois the State Commission recently reported in favour of a reduction to two cents, but action was postponed pending further investigation by the committee.

Was there ever such evidence of the desire of the people to have a two cent per mile fare prevail in the United States, and the people are getting that rate in nearly every instance through the direct action of the legislatures and by the action of the farmers themselves who travel on these roads? I would like to hear the hon. gentlemen get up and protest that our farmers are willing to pay three cents and four cents per mile and do not want a lower rate and that it is the duty of their representatives to see that the law I am advocating should not be put on the statute-book. One after another these gentlemen have declared themselves in favour of the principle, but they say my measure must be voted down because it is not couched in such language as will satisfy the lawyers. Well, I think I have made out a case why this Bill should go forward. Why should my vindication of the principle, as it has been vindicated here to-night, be set aside because of the promise of an hon. gentleman, let him be as learned in the law and as experienced in legal terms as you please, that he will deal with the matter in some other phraseology? Are we going to vote down this principle, which every one admits, because of the promise of some one to express it in better shape? How can such conduct as that be justified? It is pettyfogging of the cheapest kind. I present the issue as a principle and ask the House to pass upon it. Why cannot the Solicitor General, who has a great deal of legal acumen, not sit down with us and prepare a Bill once we adopt the principle? We have had the Minister of Justice forced to admit the principle here to-night, but he did this only after he had got some light from the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker). He is learning his railway law at the feet of that hon. gentleman. And after the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker) stated that the express rates should be regulated by the Railway Commission, we had the Minister of Justice adopting that view, but declaring that he cannot find terms in which to express it. That, Sir, is simply the subterfuge of a pettyfogging lawyer. If the hon. minister is in favour of the principle, it is his duty to find the terms in which to give it expression. I leave the issue between myself and the members of this House. I have cast no reflection on any body.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. No; I brought in my Bill and supported it as well as I could. And once that Bill has been presented and its principles admitted, I cannot see why it should be rejected because its phraseology does not meet with the approval of some hon. gentleman. If the principle be accepted, it is the duty of the House to go on with the measure and alter the phraseology to suit its views. There is no argument in the remark, which we hear made so frequently, that because a man happens not to be a lawyer he cannot be a parliamentarian. I have given some time and study in order to fit myself to discharge the duties of parliamentary life, and I have not found that in the old land a man is hounded down because he does not happen to be a lawyer and has not given expression to a principle which the House approves in phraseology that would suit the legal mind. In the British parliament the whole gang of lawyers do not turn on a man in the interests of the corporations, but they respect a man who presents a principle and when that principle is adopted the members of parliament leave it to the lawyers, who can be hired, to draft a Bill that will embody and settle the principle. But here in this instance everybody says he is in favour of the principle which I advocate, and yet is prepared to kick it out of the House. Well, they can do that, but they will have to settle with the people.

Mr. A. BRODER (Dundas). I wish to say a few words as a layman who does not agree with the other layman. The hon. gentleman who has just spoken has told us that he was stoned as the yellow dog. Well, the yellow dog gnaws his own bone. There is no doubt about that. Let me say that if the hon. gentleman who represents South York (Mr. Maclean) were really sincere in this matter, he had every opportunity to give us some convincing proof of his sincerity. We have had for some years a Railway Commission authorized to deal with passenger rates, and yet this hon. gentleman has made no effort to bring that question before the tribunal established by law to deal with such matters. If that tribunal had refused to deal with the matter, there would then be some justification for the hon. member bringing in his measure. It seems, however, that while he is anxious to bring the question of the express charges under that commission, he is not anxious to submit to it this question of passenger rates. He has made no attempt to bring the passenger rates under the control of the Railway Commission and let that commission determine whether they would be justified in reducing the rates. The hon. gentleman is like the Irishman who complained of a grievance; but when an English public man said to him we can remedy that, the Irishman replied: I do not want a remedy; I want to keep my grievance. Well, what the hon. member for South York (Mr. Maclean) wants is a grievance, and he would be very much disappointed if by any chance it should be taken from him. He reminds me very much of what another man said—a much greater man than I. When a certain lady wanted him to change his religion, he looked over the document she presented to him and said: I cannot do it; there is too much to swallow and not enough to eat. That is about where we are in this matter—too much to swallow and not enough to eat. I believe in putting the express companies under the commission. I believe in putting them where the passenger rates are. Our friend, however, will not trust the commission with the passenger rates, but is anxious to trust them with the express companies. That is scarcely fair. There is no class of people more interested in the railways being successfully and properly managed than the farmer. I do not believe in creating circles in the country, and saying that within certain zones you shall charge certain passenger rates and within other zones you shall charge other rates. I believe we should have a flat rate for the whole country so far as passenger rates are concerned. The question should be dealt with in that broad, comprehensive way which would give the people a flat rate, but that rate should not be forced on a railway unless the conditions justify it. We have large railways running almost clear across this country, largely under the control of one company, and for that reason there should be a flat rate over the whole length of that road, and that rate should be a reasonable one to suit the conditions and the earning power of that road and the difficulties with which it has to contend.

We must look this thing in the face. It is not an agitation we want, it is a remedy. My hon. friend wants an agitation, I want a remedy. The railways no doubt can economize in directions that would not affect the people generally. For instance, they might cut off the large salaries that are paid to their leading officers, and perhaps the Minister of Railways could take a hint in this direction and apply it to his road. We have established a Railway Commission which has jurisdiction in these matters. Doubtless these things could be brought about step by step in the general interests of the country. Our hon. friend here from South York wants to make the railways the yellow dog in this country, he is throwing stones at them every day in the year except Sunday. And what for? Not for a remedy but for an agitation. I say that if he is sincere he will go to the Railway Commission before he comes back to another session of this House, and see if that Railway Commission won't take up this matter and look into it from a business standpoint, and in view of the conditions that confront railways in this country. Now in regard to his Bill I am only a layman but I have a little common sense, and I have not used it all, I have got some left. But when I look at his Bill what do I find? He says he is striking out the second section of that Act, and any man of common sense need not be a lawyer to see that if he strikes out that particular clause in order to harmonize the rest of the Bill with it, he will have to change fifty or sixty other clauses. That is why I oppose his Bill. Now I say that if he wanted to deal with this matter in a common sense way, he has not done so. He has a lot of common sense, but he has not used much of it. He could bring in a Bill to put the express companies under the control of the Railway Commission, dealing with express companies but not dealing with the Railway Commission, and then he would be dealing with it in a common sense way. He would have the horse on the right end of the cart, it is on the other end now. I will vote against the Bill until he gets it into proper shape. There is no use tinkering with statutes. It is hard enough now to interpret them, and if we do what he wants us to do it would be still harder. For these reasons I intend to vote against this Bill, but I will vote for a Bill that will put express companies under the control of the Railway Commission.

Mr. A. B. INGRAM (East Elgin). I believe a fair definition of demagogism is a man who engages in wild politics. If I were a demagogue I would attend this parliament probably one day in a week, and every day I came I would introduce a fad of some description, and publish it in my paper all over this country. If I found I had some supporters of that fad in this House, I would at least give them some credit for their support. I would not look for an opportunity of turning on the friends who had always supported me. Now, Sir, I am not a man of that kind. A few years ago I introduced a Bill in this House dealing with the Michigan Central Railway so far as it runs in this country, simply asking for certain legislation affecting that and an other company. A Bill was introduced by the hon. member for South York (Mr. W. F. Maclean) on that occasion, one section of which read as follows:

> The tolls charged in any standard passenger tariff shall not exceed the following, namely: for all companies the gross earnings of whose passenger trains, as reported to the minister, under the provisions of section 304 of this Act, equalled or exceeded the sum of $3,000 for each mile of road operated by the said company, two cents per mile; and for all companies the earnings of whose passenger trains, reported as aforesaid, were over $2,000 and less than $3,000 per mile of the road operated by the said company, two and one-half cents per mile; and for all companies whose earnings, reported as aforesaid, were less than $2,000 per mile of road operated by the said company, three cents per mile.

Now my hon. friend from South York on that occasion endeavoured to tack on to the Michigan Central legislation this clause I have read. Sir, I opposed it then, but I said I would support any legislation proposing to amend the Railway Act of Canada and applying that principle as general legislation. But I opposed that legislation, applying only to one American railway passing through, this country. Well, Sir, for taking what I believed to be a fair and manly stand on that occasion, I was attacked in my constituency as having opposed a two cent rate. I defended my conduct in respect to my position about a two cent rate, and as a result I was elected, notwithstanding the hostility raised against me by friends of the hon. member for South York. Now was not that a fair proposition, an honest proposition? What does the hon. gentleman want? He comes here and asks this parliament to amend the Railway Act so as to compel every railway company in Canada to carry passengers for two cents a mile. My hon. friend who just preceded me (Mr. Broder) asked this House to apply common sense to the proposed legislation. Let us apply common sense to the proposal. Every hon. gentleman knows that there are a large number of railway companies in Canada, some large and some small. Now is it reasonable to suppose that the small railway companies which have the greatest difficulty now to exist, could stand the imposition by parliament of a two cent rate per mile on their passenger traffic? I say absolutely, no. There is nothing in the history of railway legislation in the world that would support such a contention. So I say, if we are to apply common sense to this proposition, when we are asked to impose a graded scale to railways in this country whose rates are so much and whose income is so much, and when we are asked to apply a two cent rate to all of them I say it is impracticable, and we would not be doing our duty to impose it on the small companies as well as on the large ones.

Sir, I have advocated before that the express companies should be put under the Board of Railway Commissioners. But, when you consider the proposition of the hon. member for South York, it does not require a legal mind to perceive that you would require to change a great many different sections in this Act in order to make his Act workable. What have we before us ? We have a proposition introduced by the Minister of Railways, we have a proposition to be introduced by the member for Prince Edward county (Mr. Alcorn). I have no hesitation in saying that I am in favour of the position, so far as I understand it, of the Minister of Railways, I am in favour of the position of the hon. member for Prince Edward ; I prefer either of their propositions to that of the hon. member for South York.

Sir, I am not the slave of the member for South York (Mr. W. F. Maclean) ; I am entirely independent of the member for South York. I stated before and I state again that I care neither for the member for South York nor his paper. I am not going to stultify myself or my opinions in this House for the member for South York or any other man. I come here to express them and I am going to express them, and I am going to express them in what I believe to be my own common sense way, and every other hon. gentleman in this House has a perfect right to express his opinion in his own way and that is no reason why we should receive personal abuse, simply because we differ from this man who has already denounced previous supporters of his. Why ? Because he wants to be the great Goliath of the Conservative party. There was a time in the history of the Conservative party of this country when the member for South York (Mr. W. F. Maclean) wrote to his friend that he was about to become leader of the great Conservative party.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Oh, where is all that ?

Mr. INGRAM. The time has come now when he has not even a follower instead of a party, and I do not know a man who deserves to have fewer followers than that same member.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Hear, hear.

Mr. INGRAM. I have in a few words explained exactly where I stand on the telephone amendment, the express amendment and on the two cents rate ; I have expressed myself honestly, openly, fearlessly and above board, and I can say to the member for South York that when he chooses to consult members in this House who are friendly to him and chooses to show and suggest to other members of this House any proposed legislation he will find members on both sides prepared to assist in any legislation that may be in the interest of this country. None of us have a cinch on all the great ideas ; we have to depend a little on each other for support in this House, and I can say to the member for South York (Mr. W. F. Maclean) that he has to take another tack, a different tack to what he has been pursuing for some time past, if he proposes to get any reasonable support in this House.

Motion (Mr. J. D. Reid) agreed to, and debate adjourned.

Mr. FITZPATRICK moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. FOSTER. Could we have an intimation of the business for to-morrow in case we reach government business ?

Mr. PATERSON. If the business of private members be finished at an early hour we will go into supply ; we can take the balance of the Indian Affairs, Inland Revenue and Penitentiaries.

Mr. FOSTER. In the order named ?

Mr. PATERSON. Yes, in the order named.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11.10 p.m.

That in accordance with the recommendation contained in the fourth report of the Select Standing Committee on Standing Orders, the time for receiving petitions on private Bills be extended to Thursday the 12th of April next,

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 63) to incorporate the National Fire Insurance Company of Canada—Mr. Zimmerman.

Bill (No. 64) respecting the Atlantic, Quebec, and Western Railway Company—Mr. Gauvreau.

Bill (No. 65) respecting the Richelieu and Ontario Navigation Company—Mr. Bureau.

INDIAN ACT—AMENDMENT.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 66) to amend the Indian Act.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Explain.

Mr. MONK. The object of this Bill is to amend the section of the Indian Act which regulates fines and punishment. In the province of Quebec and no doubt elsewhere, there are certain Indian Reserves, where the residents—although they belong to the band and although they are Indians under the interpretation section of the Act—lead exactly the same lives as white men and have nothing in their appearance to indicate that they have Indian blood; they are half breeds to all intents and purposes. These residents of the reserve come from Caughnawaga to the large manufacturing town of Lachine which is on the opposite bank of the river; they work in the factories there and they sometimes purchase intoxicating liquors and violate section 69 of the Indian Act. The merchants who sell liquor in Lachine and Montreal, although they take every possible precaution to prevent the sale of intoxicants to those who reside on the reserve, yet, these vendors of intoxicants although acting in perfect good faith and anxious to prevent a violation of the Act, are often deceived by the purchaser who has nothing in his appearance to indicate that he is an Indian. As a matter of fact he is only a technical Indian, if I may use that expression, and it seems unfair that under such circumstances the innocent seller of liquor should be subject to the heavy fines provided by the Indian Act.

These cases occur sometimes, and, as I will show when the Bill is read the second time, they have attracted the attention of the magistrates in Montreal, and the opinion has been expressed that the Act should be amended. That is the object of the Bill.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

PACIFIC AND ATLANTIC RAILWAY AND WHITE FISH ISLAND.

Mr. BOYCE—by Mr. Cockshutt—asked :

1. Is the Pacific and Atlantic Railway a railway declared to be for the general benefit of Canada ? If so, when was it so declared ?
2. Is White Fish island, in St. Mary's river, Ontario, entirely owned by Canada ?
3. If not, what portion is owned by Ontario ?
4. Is such portion, if any, of the island as is owned by the Ontario government included in the plans allowed by the government for the expropriation of the island by railway companies ? (See 'Hansard' of 1906, 200, 201 and 202.)
5. Is the island Indian land ? If so, what arrangements have been made with the Indians living thereon, and have they been consulted with regard to the expropriation ? If so, when, and did they assent to the allowance of the plans ?
6. Is the northerly part of the island, containing what is known as the Ryan-Heaney water power, covered by the plans filed and allowed ? If so, by which company is that portion expropriated ?

Hon. HENRY R. EMMERSON (Minister of Railways and Canals). The officers of the department have not been able to find any Act declaring the Pacific and Atlantic Railway to be a railway for the general benefit of Canada. White Fish island was an Indian Reserve and administered by the Dominion government. Five acres of land have been purchased on the main land and houses erected thereon for the accommodation of the few Indians who reside on the island. As the land was taken for railway purposes, the Indians were not consulted. The northerly part of the island on which are constructed the dams in connection with the Ryan-Heaney water power, is covered by the plans filed and allowed and this portions of the island was patented to the Ontario Hudson Bay and Western Railway Company.

SPRING GARDEN ROAD, HALIFAX.

Mr. FOWLER—by Mr. Taylor—asked :

1. What disposition, if any, has the government made of the property fronting on Spring Garden road, in the city of Halifax, upon which the old drill shed is or was situated ?
2. What is the area of the said property, and what is its frontage on Spring Garden road, and what is its depth ?
3. If the government has disposed of the said property by lease or other conveyance, for what term, at what rental, and to whom was the lease or conveyance made, and on what date ?
4. Has the government been in occupation of the said property or any part thereof, or has it made any use thereof, since the lease or other disposal as above mentioned ?
5. If the government has received in consideration of the said property any other property in the city of Halifax, where is such property situate, what is its area, and from whom was it acquired, and on what date ?
6. What use, if any, has the government made of the last mentioned property, so acquired in exchange or otherwise, and how long has it used the said property ?
7. Has the government any information as to the price paid for such last mentioned property by the person who conveyed it or caused it to be conveyed to the government ?

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia). An arrangement was made in 1902 to exchange the old Halifax drill shed property for a property situated nearer to the new armouries but the proposed exchange was not carried out. The drill shed property has been continuously and exclusively in use and controlled by the ordnance branch of the Militia Department and is being so used at present.

3. Did the department grant him a leave of absence during the month of February last ?

4. If so, what was the extent of that leave of absence and what were the apparent reasons therefor ?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) :

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Postmaster General) :

1. The 30th November, 1903.
2. Three persons have since been appointed to the postmastership of Wilton—Mr. C. A. Neilson, who was appointed on the 30th November, 1903, and who died on the 8th February, 1906—Mr. William C. Bullock, who was appointed on the 6th March, 1906, but was unable to accept the office, as he was removing from Wilton, and Mr. Guy Simmons, who was appointed on the 22nd March, 1906.
3. These appointments were in each case made on a memorandum from the Postmaster General directing the appointment. There is nothing on file in the department showing by whom Mr. C. A. Neilson was recommended. Mr. William C. Bullock was recommended by Mr. M. F. Parrott, of Wilton, and Mr. Guy Simmons was recommended by Mr. M. F. Parrott, and also by Mr. W. A. Martin and Mr. W. H. Reynolds.

MICHEL CAMPEAU.

Mr. WM. JACKSON asked :

1. Is Michel Campeau employed in the Post Office Department at Montreal ?
2. If so, in what capacity and at what salary?
3. Is his employment permanent or temporary ?

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Postmaster General.) No.

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND WINTER COMMUNICATION.

Mr. A. MARTIN asked :

What is the total yearly expenditure by the government for maintaining communication between the mainland of Canada and Prince Edward Island for the years between 1900 and 1905, inclusive ?

Mr. LEONARD.

ROCK HILL POSTMASTER.

Mr. BENNETT asked :

1. Who is postmaster at Rock Hill post office ?
2. Upon whose request was said office opened?
3. What were the receipts of the same for the past year ?

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Postmaster General).

1. D. A. Campbell.
2. Upon application of Mr. William Robinson and a petition of residents of the locality, accompanied by nomination of Mr. Robinson as postmaster, made by the late Mr. N. Clarke Wallace, M.P.
3. Revenue for the year ending 30th June, 1905, $17.95.

DUTY ON JACKS.

Mr. WM. JACKSON asked :

What, if any, is the duty on jacks imported for breeding purposes ?

Hon. WM. PATERSON (Minister of Customs). Twenty per cent ad valorem.

TRENT CANAL.

Mr. McCOLL—by Mr. Ralph Smith—asked :

1. What is the depth of the eastern or southern section of the Trent canal, that is, the portion from Rice lake to Lake Ontario ?
2. Has the government decided that the depth of said portion of said canal is to be 8 feet 4 inches above the lock sills ?
3. If the depth is to be 8 feet 4 inches above the lock sills, what will be the total depth in canal cuttings, and river and lake channels ?
4. Upon what depth will the engineer who had charge of the surveys of the different proposed outlets of said canal, make his report and estimate of the cost ?
5. What is to be the width of said canal ?

Hon. H. R. EMMERSON (Minister of Railways and Canals) :

1. It has not been definitely settled.
2. No.
3. About an average of 9 feet 6 inches.
4. Upon a depth of 8 feet 4 inches on lock sills; also for a depth of 6 feet on lock sills.
5. Fifty feet at base of prism with side slopes of 2 on 1 will be the general sections.

INSURANCE COMMISSION—APPOINTMENT OF MR. LANGMUIR.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Carleton, Ont). Before the Orders of the Day are called I would like to ask the government whether the fact that one of the members of the commission appointed to investigate certain matters with regard to insurance companies was a trustee of one of the United States companies was within the knowledge of the government when they appointed that gentleman ?

Hon. CHARLES FITZPATRICK. (Minister of Justice). Subsequent to his appointment, Mr. Langmuir discovered that he was one of the trustees of one of the companies. He had forgotten about the matter, having become trustee in connection with a loan company with which he was connected. The matter was considered by the Finance Department, but it was thought that the fact that Mr. Langmuir had acted in that capacity for the insurance company in question did not disqualify him for the position. Mr. Langmuir, at the time, wished to resign.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I presumed that there was an explanation of this kind, but thought it would be better to have it made public.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I am glad to have the opportunity to make the statement.

LIEUTENANT GOVERNORSHIP OF NOVA SCOTIA—APPOINTMENT OF MR. D. C. FRASER.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would also like to know whether the government have any answer to make to an inquiry respecting the conditions upon which the present lieutenant governor of Nova Scotia accepted his appointment. A statement has been made in the public press as follows :

> Relief loomed in sight in the person of Judge Fraser, and as a compromise candidate Judge Fraser was finally accepted, but only with the stipulation that he should hold the lieutenant governorship for a second term, in the event of the Liberal party retaining power. Judge Fraser's conditions were accepted, and his appointment went through at yesterday afternoon's cabinet meeting.

I observe that, in another place, an inquiry with regard to this matter elicited considerable warmth but not much information. Possibly we may obtain from the present leader of the House, the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) less warmth but more information on this occasion.

Hon. WM. PATERSON (Minister of Customs). I do not know that I have anything to say on the subject. The authority quoted by the hon. gentleman (Mr. R. L. Borden) is a newspaper article. I do not know that I have even read it——

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I have just read it.

Mr. PATERSON. Perhaps, if the hon. gentleman (Mr. R. L. Borden) does not feel satisfied with the answer I give, he will put the question in another form. I have nothing further to say on the subject than that I accept what the hon. gentleman has stated—that such a report as he has referred to has appeared in the press.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. And, I suppose silence indicates assent.

INQUIRY FOR RETURNS.

Mr. PATERSON. The hon. leader of the opposition was not in his place yesterday when I wished to refer to a matter to which he had called attention. He had asked me the day before to bring down from the Department of the Secretary of State a return with regard to the returns that had been moved for during the last session of parliament. I do not suppose it is necessary to have a formal motion for the bringing down of this return.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. No, merely bring it down for information.

Mr. PATERSON. The hon. gentleman also asked for the Japanese treaty. I understand from the Secretary of State, that the treaty has not been received. Word has been received that the treaty has been signed, but the treaty itself has not arrived.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is not the treaty only that we asked for, but all documents connected with it, including correspondence. I gave the hon. gentleman the reference to the page in 'Hansard' where I had set out in detail what I wanted.

Mr. PATERSON. I thought it convenient to bring down all at once. Of course, if the hon. gentleman would like any of the documents earlier, I can renew the request.

Another hon. gentleman called attention to the Eastern Supply Company. I did not take a full note of the point, but the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Hyman) is in his place and will deal with it.

Another hon. member called attention to the fact that a return supplied in accordance with an order of the House made last year was only a partial return, and did not cover all the information he wanted. I brought the matter to the attention of the Secretary of State, and I understand that he has written to the librarians of parliament and the Clerk of the House of Commons whose reports were not submitted, and asked them to furnish the information as soon as possible.

With regard to the temporary employees of the Department of Public Works, which was the only other matter referred to, I think the Minister of Public Works took a note of that.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to call the attention of the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) to the fact to the return that he has been good enough to bring down, while it is very useful, covers only one year, and not two as I desired it should. The return seems to cover very completely the year 1905 but it does not touch the year 1904. If he will ask the Department of the Secretary of State to give us a precisely similar return for the year 1904, everything I have asked for will be supplied.

Mr. PATERSON. I will do that. The hon. gentleman (Mr. R. L. Borden) wants the information for 1904. He does not want an account of the returns called for this session ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. No.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER (North Toronto). I would like to ask the Minister of Marine and Fisheries why he has not that return ready which he promised the other day ?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). I am sorry to inform the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) that although I gave instructions for the preparation of the return it is not yet ready.

Mr. FOSTER. I would also like to call the attention of the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Emmerson) to the fact that a return moved for in 1904 by Mr. Tolton, amended by Sir Wilfrid Laurier, and agreed to by the House, has not been answered even up to the present time. This motion is for a return showing how many official or private cars have been constructed, purchased or acquired for the government since 1896 ; the purpose for which each such car was purchased ; whether any, and what members of the government respectively, and to any, and what departments of the government respectively— together with a number of other important items of information which I need not read. There seems to be no good reason why what was agreed to and passed by the House could not have been placed before parliament between that time and this. I wish the Minister of Railways and Canals would have that return completed and brought down. And if he would, by way of paying a little penalty, furnish the information down to the present time, it would save putting another notice of motion on the paper.

I would also like to ask—and I ask it in the interest of pure science—whether we have yet received a copy of the order in council making that contract with the celebrated Hatfield ? I think the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) has had time to think over that.

Mr. PATERSON. Is that the rainmaker ?

Mr. FOSTER. The same.

Mr. PATERSON. I do not know whether we have a copy of that contract—in fact, I do not know whether there is such a contract in existence or not. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) read a report of it from a newspaper, but does he understand that there is such a document in existence.

Mr. FOSTER. Surely, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Paterson) belongs to the Know-Nothing Society. I imagine it is his business to know, and he ought to give the House the information, if the House wishes it. Is not that right ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN.

Mr. PATERSON. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) says he knows that there is a contract and says he wishes it brought down, of course, it will be my duty to see to it.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, I think I will have to ask the minister to ascertain if there is such a contract, and if there is, to bring it down.

Mr. PATERSON. But if it should turn out that there was no such contract, my hon. friend would have been guilty of taking up the time of the House in talking about something that had no existence.

Mr. FOSTER. Not any more than my hon. friend.

Mr. EMMERSON. In reply to my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster), I may say that I was not aware there was a single return asked from the Department of Railways and Canals that has not been furnished. I remember the fact that there was a return referred to, but I was not aware that it had not been laid on the table. I will make inquiry.

Mr. FOSTER. June 20, 1904.

EASTERN RAILWAY SUPPLY ASSOCIATION.

Mr. SAM. BARKER (Hamilton). Before the Orders of the Day are called I wish to ask the Minister of Railways and Canals when he will have the return as to the Eastern Railway Supply Association which he promised two weeks ago?

Hon. H. R. EMMERSON (Minister of Railways and Canals). I was not present, I think, when reference was made to that matter, but my hon. friend the Minister of Customs called my attention to it I think this morning or yesterday evening. I inquired of the deputy minister, and he said that he was waiting for copies of some of the papers from Moncton. There were some questions to be answered with respect to the Eastern Railway Supply Company. The papers in connection with the whole matter are not voluminous. I think my hon. friend will find in the end that somebody is misleading him again, as occurred not many sessions ago. I hope to have the papers at once, because the transactions with that company have been so limited that there certainly could not have been very extensive correspondence or contracts.

Mr. BARKER. I may remind the hon. minister that when I asked the question the reason he gave for not answering it was that the papers were voluminous, and he would prefer to bring them down on a motion for a return.

Mr. EMMERSON. They might be too voluminous for a question, and not be very voluminous for a return.

CASE OF FRED COCHRANE.

Mr. H. A. WARD (Durham). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I desire to bring to the attention of the government certain facts which, immediately they are known, I am confident the minister in charge of such matters will take prompt steps to investigate and to apply the necessary remedy. About nine years ago a man named Fred Cochrane left his home in the township of Manvers, the home of his relative, Mr. George Price, and went to Vancouver. After spending about four years there he drifted over to Japan, where he was last heard from. My information thus far comes from Mr. Price himself, but my subsequent information concerning him is derived from letters from different parties interested who have got their information from the public press. It appears that during the late stages of the war between Russia and Japan a man named Fred Cochrane, who is believed to be the identical man of whom I speak, was, with two others named Grant and Finnie, on a fishing expedition in a small craft in the waters adjacent to Japan. While returning to the Japan Sea they were fired upon by the Russian cruiser 'Gromoboi,' their craft was sunk and these three men were taken prisoners. According to the reports, Grant and Finnie were subsequently released, but Cochrane was held, and is still held, as I am informed and believe, a prisoner by the Russian government, ostensibly as an American citizen. I believe that these statements are true, according to the public press, and for this reason also that the relatives of this man Cochrane in my county have had no word whatever from him since the late stages of the war, and they are quite convinced that the young man who went away nine years ago is the person in captivity whose release I am anxious to secure. As I said at the beginning, I am confident that the Minister of Justice, in the absence of the Secretary of State from this House, will take the necessary steps to relieve the anxiety of the relatives of this young man, and I have no doubt that when the British government finds out that a citizen of Canada and a British subject is held in captivity by the Russian government, the promptest possible steps will be taken to procure his release.

Hon. Chas. FITZPATRICK (Minister of Justice). The attention of the home authorities will be drawn to what my hon. friend has said. I will report my hon. friend's speech to the Secretary of State and call his attention to it to-morrow.

MASTERS AND MATES OF SHIPS.

House in committee on Bill (No. 7) to amend the Act respecting certificates to masters and mates of ships.—Mr. Lancaster.

On section 1,

Mr. LANCASTER. Since we were in committee on this Bill last week, I have recast the Bill to meet the objections that I understood were raised to it. I have handed to several gentlemen in the House who were taking part in the discussion, and to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, a redraft of that section 1 as I now propose to ask the committee to pass it. It reads as follows:

> The section substituted for section 3 of the Act respecting certificates to masters and mates of ships, chapter 73 of the revised statutes, by section 4 of chapter 42 of the statutes of 1894, is amended by striking out the words 'or for persons domiciled in Canada for at least three years' in the second and third lines of said section.

That is the amendment that I understood the minister wished to be made to that section. It dispenses with the amendment of the Masters' and Mates' Association so far as it provides that the examination shall be made under oath. It enacts simply that if a man is a British subject he is qualified without having resided three years in Canada.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). I would have been ready to consider this Bill at this time were it not that I am in receipt this morning of a letter from the Dominion Marine Association. I intended to show it to my hon. friend (Mr. Lancaster) before the Bill came up, but unfortunately I had not time to do so. It is dated March 20:

> Sir,—I have the honour, on behalf of this association, to make the request that an opportunity be afforded to the association to express its views upon Mr. Lancaster's Bill respecting the certificates of masters and mates before it is reported by committee to the House. We had the privilege last year of notice and appointment and hearing in connection with the Bill regarding marine engineers, and it is the same opportunity in connection with the present Bill that is desired now. I trust it will be possible for you to issue instructions which will permit our request being granted.
> I have the honour to be, sir,
> Your obedient servant,
> (Sgd.) FRANCIS KING,
> Secretary-Treasurer.

Of course, I have no right to issue instructions but in view of the request of this body, which, I understand, is a very important one, it would perhaps be only fair that we should give it an opportunity to be heard and I was therefore going to suggest that this Bill be referred to a special committee in order to give this association the opportunity which it seeks. If my hon. friend does not object I will move that the committee rise and we will agree as to the members of the special committee.

Mr. LANCASTER. Of course, if the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries feels that he ought to take that course, I am in the hands of the House and of the government, and I would not strenuously object, only there is this about referring a Bill like this to a special committee and it is that it would perhaps not come down to the House in time to be passed, another year might go by and this grievance which is recognized by the House as a serious one would not be remedied. I think, if the hon. minister would not mind, I would make this counter suggestion that he should see what these representations are from the Marine Association and probably next week we could determine whether we should listen to them or not. The hon. minister could tell the House what their objections are. I know that they want a free hand in the employment of these men so that their interests are against the interests of the masters and mates. When last the Bill was up I got letters to that effect and so did other people. The answer to that is that we must protect our Canadian masters and mates ; we must give them a monopoly of these jobs on our Canadian boats. The Marine Association naturally want to have as free and open a market as they can and it is to their interests that they shall be enabled to employ aliens as well as British subjects. But if that is the only objection I think this House will agree with me that it should not be listened to. I quite concede that there may be some other suggestions made to the minister. I do not know but what they may have some other good objection to the Bill and there may be some object in ascertaining what that objection is. But I do urge upon the minister, that, if the effect of sending this Bill to a special committee is going to be to so delay it that it cannot be reported back to this House in time to be passed this session, it not being a government measure, the days being taken for government business as we naturally expect they will before long, particularly when we are to have a short session, he ought not to put us in that position. The Bill was admitted, the last time we were in committee, to be a proper Bill in principle. The Marine Association have had plenty of time before now to register any objection and I do submit to this committee, Mr. Chairman, that they ought to have given us more details of their objections than those contained in the letter which the hon. minister has just read. They want to be heard upon this Bill. We are not, as members of this House, going to do anything wrong or unjust to the Marine Association. We know what their objections will be. We know that they would be benefited by having a Bill like this not passed in the sense that they would have a free market to draw their employees from, whereas they will, if this Bill passes, be compelled to employ British subjects. I do not see that they should be heard in the sense that they ought to complain in the public interests in regard to that, and I would therefore ask the hon. minister to reconsider that suggestion and see if we cannot deal with this Bill in such a way that it will become law this session.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Perhaps it would satisfy my hon. friend (Mr. Lancaster) if the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) would undertake to give my hon. friend an opportunity of having the Bill discussed in the House.

Mr. LANCASTER. Put it on the government orders.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It makes no difference where as long as an opportunity is afforded.

Mr. BRODEUR. In view of the request which is made by this association which, as I understand, is a very important association, it would be very hard to refuse a hearing. This is an important matter and I think my hon. friend will be pretty well advised in agreeing to the appointment of a committee. We might perhaps agree as to the personnel of that committee to-day.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What does the hon. minister say as to my suggestion ? It is right that the association should be heard, but it is right also that my hon. friend should be heard. He wants an opportunity of discussing it in the House after the committee has reported. That course has been taken sometimes. The government have sent Bills of this kind to committee upon such an undertaking.

Mr. BRODEUR. I am going to present a Bill this year in regard to the Act relating to masters and mates, so that we will have an opportunity to discuss the matter on the Bill which I introduce. I move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again and that the Bill be referred afterwards to a committee.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Am I correct in understanding the hon. minister to say that he will give to my hon. friend, after the committee reports, an opportunity to discuss the subject in this House ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Certainly.

Progress reported.

RAILWAY ACT 1903, AMENDMENT.

Mr. E. A. LANCASTER (Lincoln and Niagara) moved the second reading of Bill (No. 8) in further amendment of the Railway Act, 1903. He said : Mr. Speaker, I find it my duty to again this session to bring before the House this Bill which is designed to obtain some relief from the conditions that the people are suffering from at the present time and have suffered from for some time in regard to this matter of level crossings in thickly peopled parts of cities, towns and villages in so far as damage is caused by railway companies. Last session a Bill to enact this legislation was introduced by me, was discussed in this House on the second reading, was sent to the Railway Committee, was discussed there, voted upon, rejected by a majority of the committee, came back to the House on a report advising that it be not passed and was discussed again in the House on that report. This year I am introducing a Bill to accomplish the same object, to carry out the same principle of protection to the people, but I have worded it differently, from the one which was dealt with last year, so as, if possible, to get around the objections that were made to the Bill. I believe that I have succeeded in the way I have worded it this year in getting over all objections which were made to the Bill except the objection that the Railway Commission and not the people of Canada as represented in this House ought to deal with this question. The law has been gone over and over again in this House and I will not trouble to go into any detail about it, but the section of the statute which I am amending does not give to the people any protection at those crossings which are contemplated by this Bill unless an order is obtained from the Railway Commission for that protection and the position of affairs is to-day that the people have no protection in regard to any of these dangerous crossings in the thickly peopled portions of cities, towns and villages where trains cross on the rail level—no protection whatever no matter how fast the trains may be running unless the village or the municipality or somebody has obtained from the Railway Commission a special order in regard to each particular crossing. The issue is this : Should we in this House pass legislation to create a general law for a limited class of cases of which there are numbers all over the country, or should we leave these numerous crossings absolutely without any protection until a special application is made to the Railway Commission in regard to each one of them ? Last year I had before the House a Bill under which the railways were bound to furnish either watchmen or gates.

The year before, I thought I was letting them down as easily as I could in the interests of the people, when I said that they must have watchmen. The year before last when I used the word 'protection' in the sense of watchmen, I was told in the Railway Committee that I was limiting the protection, because there was better protection than watchmen, and it was suggested that the wording should be 'watchmen or gates.' Last year I tried to comply with that idea, but it was objected then that there was some other protection besides watchmen or gates, and that if I said they should provide reasonable 'protection' that was all that was required. Well, in the Bill this year I have suggested the simple word 'protection' according to the suggestion made to me last year. The result of this wording would be, that if on the trial of a case for damages the judge found on the evidence that there was reasonable protection the company would not be liable, and if he found that there was not reasonable protection the company would be liable. I have been forced into the position of proposing in general terms that there must be some protection. If it is now contended that the word 'protection' is too general, and that I should specify the kind of protection, then I say that the House has little respect for the opinion expressed by it and by the Railway Committee for the two last sessions, that I should use the language to be now found in this Bill. It comes now fairly and squarely before the House to decide whether or not we are going to enact a general law to protect people on these level crossings in well settled portions of cities, towns and villages where trains run faster than ten miles an hour. Let not any hon. gentleman imagine that this is a new law which I am trying to enforce on the railways. Since 1857 we have had such an enactment—an enactment to the same effect though not in perhaps the precise words—and it is only within the last few years it has been discovered that it amounts to nothing. About three years ago, in the case of Mackay and the Grand Trunk Railway, the Supreme Court decided that notwithstanding the language of the statute the plenary power to order protection was left in the Railway Committee of the Privy Council. It was a surprise to the profession, it was a surprise to the railway companies who got that decision in their favour. I am told, that so much of a surprise was it to the railway companies, that when the people interested determined to see that Mackay should get justice and threatened to take the case to the Privy Council, the railways paid his claim rather than run the risk of the Privy Council reversing that decision. And why did they do that ? It is because as that decision stands to day, unless we can beat it by an Act of parliament, it is quoted against every one who is injured at a level crossing under anything like the similar circumstances, and all the judges in the land other than the judges of the Supreme Court are bound by that decision which has not been reversed by the Privy Council. From 1857 until 1903 it was always the law that the railway should provide protection at level crossings, or, that the speed should not be more than six miles an hour, but in 1903 the present Act was passed and that allowed a speed of ten miles an hour in thickly peopled portions of cities, towns and villages ; the intention of parliament being that the railways should protect the crossings. But such is the language of that section, that when you apply the decision of Mackay in the Grand Trunk Railway, it simply means that the railways have to protect these crossings only if the Railway Commissioners have granted an order especially requiring protection. I want it to be distinctly understood by the House that unless we amend the Act in the direction I have suggested it would be far better to repeal that section, because it amounts to nothing, and it simply misleads people into believing that they have rights which they do not possess.

The section of the present Act reads :

> No train shall pass in or through any thickly peopled portion of any city, town or village, at a speed greater than ten miles an hour, unless the track is fenced or properly protected in the manner prescribed by this Act, or unless permission is given by some regulation or order of the board. The board may limit such speed in any case to any rate which it deems expedient.

I propose to add to that section these words :

> But wherever in any such portion of a city, town or village, a railway crosses a highway at rail-level, the said speed of ten miles an hour shall in no event be exceeded unless the company provides protection at such crossing for persons using the highway against approaching trains.

The effect of this is that the onus would be on the railway companies to get from the Board of Railway Commissioners a certificate that the protection they have at a particular crossing is good and sufficient, and if they did not do that, the court would hold that they had not afforded proper protection. Is that too much to ask of the railway companies of this country in view of the rights and privileges which we give them. The result of my Bill would be that in an action for damages they would be obliged to show that the Railway Commission had approved of the protection at the crossing where the accident took place, or otherwise the court on the evidence would be entitled to award damages. If my Bill does not pass, then in every town, village and city in this Dominion wherever a highway is crossed by a railway at rail level, there will be no protection to the people and they can be killed and injured by trains running at fifty or sixty miles an hour without the railway company being obliged to pay compensation in damages, unless indeed some one makes up his mind to have a lawsuit with a railway company before the damage occurs and get a decision from the Railway Commission that he was entitled to certain protection at that crossing which was not afforded by the railway.

Now, who should be at all this expense and trouble? Can the ordinary citizen afford it? Is it fair that he should be subject to it? Who is entitled prima facie to the use of the highways? Surely His Majesty's liege subjects. But out of goodness, I might almost say charity, to the railways when they are building, and in order to promote the development of the country at as little expense as possible, they have been granted permission to cross the highways on the level—to make use free of charge of the people's highways to which they have acquired no title, and for the keeping up of which they contribute nothing. Is it unfair that they should be compelled to go to a reasonable expense to safeguard the lives and property of the people whose highways they are using for the purpose of carrying their goods and passengers? I believe that the hon. members of this House will, on reflection, come to the conclusion that the proposition is not unreasonable.

Now, I am not wedded to the words of this Bill. I am not sure that the language which I have used is the best to carry out my intention. It is the best that I can think of. I am trying to provide a remedy for what I consider to be a serious grievance. If any member will suggest language different from what I have used which will ensure the protection of the people at these crossings without compelling them to bring each particular case before the Railway Commission, I am quite willing to adopt it. I am quite willing to withdraw this Bill if any hon. gentleman can show me that there is any protection for the people without it. But I am here because I am absolutely convinced that the people are not protected under the law at present, as the statutes are construed, unless we pass some amendment such as this. In England, under the common law, the people have the rights which I am asking for in this country. We have in Canada a very peculiar state of railroad law. There is no common law liability in these cases of negligence by a railroad to-day. The Supreme Court has decided that a railway company is not liable for negligence unless you can put your finger on some section of a Dominion statute which it has transgressed. In other words, unless something has escaped our notice which ought to be made an act of negligence on the part of a railroad company, it is not liable How did the law work out in the McKay case? At the risk of wearying the House, let me briefly point out. In that case Mr. Justice MacMahon, who is known as one of the safest and wisest, if not the safest and wisest, of the trial judges we have in Ontario, who not only knows the law, but has a large fund of common sense to back it up, said in his charge to the jury that he did not see that a railway company was in any different position from a man travelling on the highway. He said : If one farmer is driving down a concession line, and another on a side line, the one travelling on the concession line is not to gallop his horses at full speed across the side road taking chances of no one meeting him. If he does, he is liable under the common law, and the same thing ought to apply to a railway company; and when we say by statute that it shall not do this and the other thing, we do not mean to say that it may do everything else. No reasonable man would take that position. We mean to say that besides what it is not permitted to do under the common law, it shall not do the other things specificed by statute. But Mr. Justice MacMahon was overruled by the Supreme Court, with one judge dissenting, and the decision of that court is now the law, and we are bound to submit to it unless we change it in this House. If there is no such thing as common law liability in Canada, we must meet the case by adding another enactment to the statute law regarding railways. In the Supreme Court decision, Mr. Justice Davies, who gave the decision of the court, points out that in England the law is different. This is his language :

> In a thickly settled country like Great Britain, parliament has thought fit explicitly to provide that wherever a railroad crosses a highway on a level it shall maintain good and sufficient gates across the road on each side of the railway and employ proper persons to open and shut them.

What is the common law all over England, I am asking, should be made the law with reference to the thickly peopled portions of cities, towns and villages in Canada and I submit that that is a reason why some Bill of this kind should be enacted. Another objection to the law as it stands is the uncertainty which it involves. In the city in which I live there is a street called Geneva street and another called Niagara street, which are about the ordinary distance apart of blocks in cities, that is, about one-eighth of a mile, and they both lead in from the thickly settled and fertile township of Niagara to the heart of the city at the market place. There is an order from the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, the predecessor of the Railway Commission, requiring protection to be furnished at Niagara street, and there is a watchman there, but at Geneva street there is no protection. A farmer, knowing that he is stopped at Niagara street if a train passes, is apt to suppose that the same will be the case at Geneva street, and if he is not stopped there, he is likely to suppose that it is safe to go on, and a train comes along at the rate of forty miles an hour and comes into contact with him. He may not be killed or injured, but if such a sad state of affairs does occur, there is no remedy against the railway company. A child going to school, or anybody, old or young, using sidewalks, and seeing no gate down and no watchman at this crossing to stop them, would naturally suppose that everything was right. In this way you cause people to think they are safe when they are absolutely unsafe, by the uncertainty that exists through one street being protected by order of the board, while another is not.

They know they are heading for the market or church or whatever place they particularly intend to reach and they get into trouble because of the uncertainty. Such should not be the case. I submit that the common sense of this House ought to convince us that we should make some general law requiring greater protection at all these places which are in the class I have mentioned.

One of the chief arguments against this Bill in the railway committee has always been that the Board of Railway Commissioners is just as well able to attend to this matter as we are, that no two cases are alike, and that therefore a special decision is required with regard to each crossing. But I humbly submit that the Railway Commission could only deal with the matter in the way I am proposing to deal with it, and I do not think that its judgment is any better than the judgment of the 214 members of this parliament. No one, in his lucid intervals, expects that the Railway Commissioners are going to visit every one of the thousands of level crossings and make a special decision with regard to each. What they would do would be to group together a lot of cases and deal with them in the way I am asking this House to deal with them. They would simply make a general law applicable to all cases of especially dangerous nature, whose dangerous nature parliament has recognized ever since 1857, and I am asking parliament to continue recognizing that danger and make some effort to lessen it or obviate it altogether.

There is another objection to the Railway Commission dealing with this matter. As Judge Sedgewick said in the Supreme Court, when he was agreeing with the conclusion to which Sir Louis Davies had come, but had written a judgment of his own, this power in the commission to give orders includes the power to rescind orders. The Commissioners could not only make orders with regard to crossing but could revoke them. That being so, our citizens should not be put in the position of being protected in our public streets to-day and the week following be divested of that protection because the order requiring it was rescinded. Everybody would not have notice of the application to rescind. Possibly it may be said that the Railway Commission would not rescind any order without giving notice of its intention to somebody, but it would not give notice to every one of the inhabitants of a city, yet every one is entitled to be protected, and the uncertainty which Judge Sedgewick pointed out is another reason for parliament dealing with this matter and not leaving it to be dealt with by the Commission. It should not be a matter that could be repealed, rescinded and reversed every once in a while as the Commission might see fit. We have reached that condition when our railways should be compelled, in the thickly inhabited portions of our cities, towns and villages, to build their roads over the highways or under them and abolish level crossings, or to at least be compelled to put some adequate protection at these crossings.

The first section of my Bill of last year I have divided into two sections in my Bill this year, because several hon. gentlemen last year objected to vote for the Bill as I had drawn it on the ground that the section required two things. They were willing to grant one but not the other. This section I have therefore divided into two, and in the first I simply ask parliament now to strike out the word 'or' and insert the word 'and' so that the people will be entitled not only to have the track properly fenced but also to have it properly protected. The decision in the Mackay case was that if a railway company fenced the track against the adjoining owners it had nothing whatever to do with the protection of the people on the highway. In such a case, the companies may run their trains as fast as they like and they would not be liable because they were only required to do either the one thing or the other. Although the eminent counsel who appeared before the railway committee last year for the railway companies tried to make us believe that we should leave 'or' and not change it to 'and', I have the stenographers report here of what was said in that committee, and I find that the counsel took that back and admitted that the word should be 'and'. Let me read from the report :

Mr. LANCASTER. Does Mr. Chrysler contend that we should not have both ? Does he contend that if we get the fencing we do not need any protection on the highway ?

Mr. CHRYSLER. You get both.

Mr. LANCASTER. We do not get both if you leave the word 'or.' We want both, and therefore we should have the word 'and.'

Mr. CHRYSLER. That is a small matter. however, I wish to get at the principal point involved.

But my hon. friend from Northumberland (Mr. Cochrane) with his well known common sense did not think it was a small matter. And he said :

It is not so small a matter.

Then the hon. member for York (Mr. W. F. Maclean) said :

He conceded it.

And Mr. Chrysler replied

If the committee think it better to change 'or' to 'and,' I do not care. It does not matter.

So that neither the government nor any gentleman in this House need to be afraid of earning the undying hatred of the railway corporations if they now change the word 'or' to 'and' since Mr. Chrysler has said it did not matter and he did not care. I submit therefore that the House should go into committee and pass the first section of the Bill, and it ought to do so irrespective of the fact that Mr. Chrysler said in the end that he had no objection to the change.

Mr. Chrysler contended that this Bill should be thrown out and the law left as it is and everybody be free to invoke the Railway Commission because that commission was competent to deal with every case. But cases were referred to in which the Railway Commission, although appealed to, had not taken any action. Referring to one of these cases, Mr. Talbot said :

Mr. Wright says that no action has been taken.

A voice. What about the Almonte case ?

Mr. Chrysler. I cannot answer as to that. Of course the Board of Railway Commissioners were overwhelmed with work.

That is another reason why parliament should pass a law. Mr. Chrysler gave as a reason why the dangerous crossing in Almonte was never attended to that the commission was overwhelmed with work. I believe that to be the case. I believe that the Commission is doing the best it can, and that Commission has been appointed more specially to deal with certain matters that become more particularly within its purvieu than does the protection of railway crossings. If the Commission had nothing to do with regard to the much vexed questions of interchange of traffic, freight and passenger rates, and compelling one railway to allow facilities to others, it might have time to attend to the regulation of level crossings which are dangerous to the public. But the Commission is overwhelmed with work and is not able to deal with this matter.

How many level crossings have the Railway Commission dealt with since they were appointed ? I know of none in the province of Ontario, except in the city of Toronto and the city of St. Thomas. There are several gentlemen from Toronto here, and I leave it to them to say whether one-quarter of the level crossings in Toronto which ought to be attended to have received attention. We know that the Railway Commission have many very, very serious disputes between the railway companies themselves to settle—disputes between the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Canadian Northern, between the Grand Trunk Railway and the James Bay, and so on. It would be nothing less than insulting to ask the commission to drop or postpone these very weighty matters to give their attention to the question of level crossings. Therefore, we ought certainly to do this work. We ought to bring in legislation that will cover a principle that will work out in the redress of these grievances and the removal of these dangers to which the public are exposed. I have only to make the statement to be certain of the concurrence of every hon. member—the statement that the loss of life and personal injuries due to these level crossings are increasing every year. Trains are running faster every year. And there is no reason why the companies should not run their trains at any rate they choose. If the public demand fast travel, I do not object to the railway company meeting the demand because it pays. It is done because it pays, and the public demand for it makes it profitable. But if they are making such profits, the companies can afford to provide protection at these crossings. This will be a step in the direction of abolishing level crossings. I shall be glad when there is no such thing as a level crossing in the country. But we must walk before we can run ; and until we are in a position to abolish level crossings, let us make sure that these crossings are protected as well as possible.

As I have just said, I shall be thankful indeed for suggestions from the government or from any member of this House for the improvement of this Bill. I have done my humble best in the legislation I have drawn; but I do urge this House to assist me to make such a measure as will be satisfactory to the people, such a measure as will have the effect of affording protection to the public. I therefore move the second reading of the Bill, and trust that when we get into committee upon it, our joint wisdom will direct such a wording of the measure as will satisfactorily redress the grievances in this matter that undoubtedly exist to-day.

Hon. H. R. EMMERSON (Minister of Railways and Canals). I always listen with pleasure to my hon. friend (Mr. Lancaster) when he brings in his annual Bill with reference to the matter under discussion. I certainly have great sympathy with him in the object he has in view. I may go even further than does the hon. gentleman so far as sympathy is concerned. He seems to be quite—I was going to say agonized, but that might be too strong a word—he is quite concerned about the position of affairs in cities, towns and villages. My own observation is that rural districts are quite as much at the mercy of modern travelling conveniences as are the more densely populated sections. The hon. gentleman shakes his head. It is true that the dangers are greater in a town or city because there are more people. But on the other hand, in towns and cities, as a rule, the people are more alert ; They know what to expect. But the accidents of which we read in the public press, often serious, heart-rending accidents, as a rule, occur in the rural sections.

The section of the Railway Act which my hon. friend (Mr. Lancaster) would amend is section 227. There is no doubt that it is very properly designed to protect the people in the more thickly populated districts. There is no section of the Railway Act which provides for any protection at railway crossings in the country districts, except as to the whistling of trains and the ringing of bells. But this section 227 seeks to protect people in cities, towns and villages. Yet, as I have said the greater number of accidents occur in the country sections. We ought to give as much attention as may be necessary to the thickly settled portions of the country, but, we should not forget the rural sections.

Now, this matter has been dealt with at previous sessions, it has come under my personal observation from time to time. I had hoped to find time and opportunity to think out a section that would result in affording greater protection to life and property, while, at the same time not unduly hampering the transportation interest of the country. For I am not concerned—at least, not deeply concerned—about railway corporations : I want to see them get fair play so far as that accorded is consistent with the public interest. But I am concerned in the proper operation of railways in the interest of the general public. While life is dear, while life is sacred and must be so considered, and while property rights must be recognized, yet at the same time, we must have regard to the advancing necessites of our own modern civilization.

To that end any members of parliament who seek to enact legislation in the direction which my hon. friend is travelling, and has been consistently travelling since I have had the honour of meeting him in this House, will have my assistance, having regard to all these other interests. I certainly would be glad to follow along with him and assist if I could possibly do so. I may say, Mr. Speaker, that personally I have had in mind the improvement of this section. I have not been able to go into it personally, but I would like to see it done. My suggestion is that this Bill be given a second reading and then be referred to the Railway Committee where these matters can be better attended to than they can be in Committee of the Whole. In the Railway Committee the whole subject involved in this section can be considered and discussed, not merely in an academic way, not merely with a view of stating something for effect, not here but elsewhere, but with the sincere aim of protecting the travelling public and their interests. It is easy sometimes to frame a section intended to accomplish something, but it is quite a different thing to acomplish that which you are aiming at. I am sincerely desirous that every effort should be made in that direction, and I will certainly promise my assistance to that committee in creating a clause that will accomplish all that my hon. friend has in view, or that other hon. members have in view, having regard to the public interests and the interests of transportation and railway operation. It would be idle for us here in an academic way to declaim against the dangers of the operations of railways, to declaim against corporations doing this or that. Those of us who indulge in that kind of declamation must realize down in our inner conscience that there is much to be considered on both sides; that we must recognize modern conditions and we must recognize what these conditions demand. We are all anxious to secure trade in this country; we are all anxious to have modern travelling accommodation; we all demand it; we are always anxious to annihilate distances so far as we can, and this can only be accomplished by the speed of passenger trains. Now, all these things must be taken into consideration, and I am sure a committee of the whole House could not fairly and fully consider all these matters as they deserve and frame a section that would meet every interest. I want to say to my hon. friend that I am sincere in my expression of a desire to co-operate with him in attaining the desired end. I will certainly not oppose his motion, but I would ask my hon. friend to consent to the Bill being read the second time and referred to the Railway Committee with the object of securing the object which my hon. friend has so sedulously striven to secure during the past two or three sessions.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The Minister of Railways has spoken of the object of this Bill in a very sympathetic way, and indeed he has made reference to the possible necessity of legislation of this kind extending to rural districts. I do not know whether I would quite concur in the reason advanced by my hon. friend, because he seems to base it on the supposed incapacity of the people in towns and villages to dodge as expertly as city people when they see a railway train approaching.

Mr. EMMERSON. They are expecting it; the others are not.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Well, the difficulty in legislation of the present time has been pointed out. The Supreme Court of Canada has concluded that the words 'unless the track is fenced in the manner prescribed by this Act,' in section 259 of the former Railway Act, do not necessitate any protection whatever on the highway, and the judgment of that court in effect affirms the view that if a railway company fences its tracks up to the highway and turns that fence into a cattle guard in a proper and reasonable manner, then it can run its trains at any rate of speed it may deem proper 'through any thickly peopled portion of any city, town or village. Obviously that does not give very much protection. Probably there might be some distinction made between the words of that statute and the words of the present Act, section 227 to which the hon. gentleman has referred. I will not dwell upon the necessity of legislation. The Minister of Railways has not only admitted the necessity of legislation, but he has expressed strong sympathy with the object of my hon. friend from Lincoln and Niagara (Mr. Lancaster). It is only necessary therefore, to consider his proposal. His proposal is that this Bill should be referred to the Railway Committee. Now, the Railway Committee consists of 194 members, or practically the whole House. It is a committee so unwieldy that it is practically impossible to deal with a measure of this kind in any effective manner. The only course would be to appoint a small sub-committee, which should report to the Railway Committee, and that committee in turn to this House. It does not seem to me that is a wise course to pursue. Any one who has made a study of the methods which are pursued in the British House of Commons will remember that the best work in that House is performed by committees consisting of not more than seven members. That principle has been acted upon in this parliament many times ; during the present session the Minister of Justice has proposed a committee of five members for a certain important Bill, and at my suggestion the committee was increased to seven. Might I suggest to the Minister of Railways that in place of sending this Bill to a committee of 194, the Railway Committee, he should send it to a smaller committee which could do some effective and efficient work upon it ? It seems only reasonable that those who are interested in the operation of railways should have notice of the proposed measure and should have an opportunity of urging before a committee of this House any objections or suggestions which they may desire to present in regard to the features of this Bill. All I suggest is that the committee should not be the Railway Committee, but should be a small committee, a committee from whom one might expect a reasonable amount of attention and a reasonable amount of work.

As my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals has very well pointed out, there are a great many considerations to be taken into account in dealing with a subject of this kind. People throughout the country demand fast railway trains ; they demand express trains. The running of these trains at a high rate of speed across highways on the level must necessarily be attended with very great danger to the travelling public. There are considerations on one side; there are considerations upon the other. In the end the consideration of the safety of human life must prevail, in my opinion. I would, therefore, suggest to the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals that his proposal might perhaps be modified in that way and that we should send this Bill not to the Railway Committee, but to a smaller committee of this House.

Mr. J. E. ARMSTRONG (East Lambton). I merely wish to say a few words upon this question. I noticed that my hon. friend from Lincoln and Niagara (Mr. Lancaster) referred to the Mackay case which happened in my own riding, in the town of Forest and I can assure the House that the people of that district are very anxious that some remedy shall be given to the town of Forest. They have at the present time trains rushing through the town at a very rapid pace. The accident to which my hon. friend has referred happened at a place where there are obstructions to the view on either side of the track and the people who were crossing at the time did not observe the approaching train. These obstructions are not likely to be removed and I believe this is a crossing that deserves the attention of the Railway Commission. I am very glad indeed to see the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Emmerson) take the interest he does in this question and I sincerely hope that before the session closes some measure will be placed upon the statute-book dealing with level crossings and giving the people sufficient protection for life while crossing railways at these points.

Hon. CHARLES FITZPATRICK (Minister of Justice). Mr. Speaker, I may say that the suggestion which has been made by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) is one that I should welcome in so far as the government is concerned because we realize that this is an exceedingly important measure which ought to receive the most careful consideration that we can give to it. From my own personal experience I am of the opinion that more serious and effective consideration would be given to this measure by a small committee such as that to which he has referred. I would suggest to my hon. friend (Mr. Lancaster) in this connection that when he provides for this committee he should take into account two things: first, the terms in which his amendment is drawn. My hon. friend in his amendment suggests that the company shall provide protection at level crossings. He does not mention the character of the protection nor does he make any provision as to the authority which is to decide what is to be proper protection. I apprehend that my hon. friend might adopt a suggestion to the effect that this protection ought to be sufficient to satisfy the Board of Railway Commissioners. The desirability of referring this matter to a select committee is quite apparent when we come to realize that this legislation, if passed, would affect, on the Canadian Pacific Railway, over 805 crossings and on the Grand Trunk over 781 crossings. That was established last year when this, or a similar measure, was up for consideration before the Railway Committee and it was then stated that protection at each of these level crossings, such as it was intended to provide by the Bill of last year, would involve an expenditure at each crossing of something like $1,000. That means that we would be putting on these companies an expenditure of $160,000 a year.

Mr. LANCASTER. That was for watchmen and gates.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Yes. Of course, my hon. friend says it was then for watchmen and gates; now, it is for adequate protection which may come higher.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. You might use that good definite word.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Quite so, if my hon. friend will allow us to make use of it under the circumstances. The Bill is one, which, I think, commends itself to the consideration of the House and in so far as the government is concerned my hon. friend the Minister of Railways will be glad to co-operate in so far as he can to make this legislation effective. I think I must lose no time in introducing the measure it was my intention to suggest to my hon. friend the Minister of Railways because it is quite apparent that our very industrious friends on the other side are going to monopolize all the amendments that I intend to ask for.

Mr. G. H. McINTYRE (South Perth). Mr. Speaker, I have no intention of discussing the matter but having heard the discussion upon it last year, having given my adhesion to the views of the hon. member for Lincoln and Niagara (Mr. Lancaster) and having voted for this Bill on the third reading, it is with very great pleasure indeed that I see now the attitude of the government towards it. I am pleased indeed with the remarks that have fallen from my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Emmerson) and I congratulate the hon. member for Lincoln and Niagara on the favourable outlook there is for a fair and proper measure to be carried for the purpose he has in view.

Mr. EMMERSON. With the indulgence of the House I would supplement what I have already said. I would like to suggest—perhaps we could speak of that privately—that there might be taken into consideration at the same time any dangerous crossings whether in cities, towns or villages, or in rural sections.

Mr. LANCASTER. I agree.

Mr. EMMERSON. There are a great many dangerous crossings in the rural districts arising from snow fences, cuttings, &c., and I venture to say that as far as the Intercolonial Railway is concerned and as far as eastern Canada is concerned the larger number of accidents occur far from settled sections where the highway crosses the railway near a deep cutting or where there has been constructed a snow fence. That matter should not be overlooked.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

Mr. EMMERSON. I move that this Bill be referred to a select committee of seven members to be hereafter named.

Motion agreed to.

JUDGES OF PROVINCIAL COURTS.

Mr. HAUGHTON LENNOX (South Simcoe) moved second reading of Bill (No. 13) respecting the judges of provincial courts. He said: I briefly explained the object of this Bill when it was first read. Its intent is to carry out the principle enunciated a year ago by the Minister of Justice and by other ministers when we passed the Act to increase the salaries of judges. It was then pointed out as an excuse for certain abuses which had existed that the judges had been inadequately paid, and amongst other abuses brought to the notice of parliament was the practice of judges in many instances engaging in work outside their judicial duties, and notably taking part in arbitrations which may be described as of a private character. There is a feeling growing in the country—it is a feeling that will have to be voiced in legislation before very long—that perhaps even in matters relating to government questions, some legislation will have to be adopted or some practice will have to be established which will limit and lessen the number of cases in which judges may act as arbitrators. This Bill, however, deals only with the narrower phase of the question, in reference to judges acting as arbitrators between man and man, or between individuals and companies, or between companies, whereby these judges carry on a system of private arbitration business for gain, and in the course of that, exciting perhaps in themselves a certain interest in favour of one party or the other who may ultimately come before them in the course of the discharge of their judicial functions. Last session the government announced their policy on this matter distinctly and there was embodied in the Act, section 7, chap. 31, 1895, these words:

> No judge mentioned in this Act shall either directly or indirectly, as director or manager of any corporation, or firm, or in any other manner whatever for himself or others, engage in any action or business other than his judicial duties; but every such judge shall devote himself exclusively to such judicial duties.

It was pointed out by several members of the House that while that was a desirable change it did not go far enough. Although the conclusion of the section is pretty general, still perhaps it was limited to the words which had gone before. The Minister of Justice treating the matter in the way he desired to see it, and in the way the members of the House desired to see it, used this language: ('Hansard' 1905, p. 9743):

> This amendment to the Act respecting judges will operate as a clear notice that judges are not to be employed in connection with commissions, except where it is important in the public interest they should be so employed. I think the less a judge has to do with matters which are not clearly within the scope of his judicial duties, the better for himself and the dignity of the bench. Of that I am absolutely convinced. I would even go so far as to say that I entertain grave doubts as to the constitutionality of such appointments.

The Minister of Justice clearly says that he desires it shall be a notice to the judges as to what shall be expected from them, and had the matter rested there it would have been satisfactory. But unfortunately we find that the judges have not refrained from engaging in these arbitrations, and something has to be done, not only by way of notice but I think by way of legislation in order that we shall have a cessation of this abuse.

I do not want it to be understood that I regard the judiciary of Canada as other than a body of men of the highest honour; men whom we should look up to; men whom we should have the greatest respect for; but it seems that the judges look upon it that so long as parliament does not clearly express its opinion by statutory enactment, they may honourably pursue the course they have hitherto been pursuing. Some force is lent to that view by the fact that if we turn to the Supreme and Exchequer Court Act we find a more stringent provision in regard to the judges of the Exchequer and Supreme Courts, than we find in any Act relating to the provincial courts. Probably the judges may find some additional justification for what they have been doing in the language that was used by the right hon. the Prime Minister last session. I have pointed out that the language of the Minister of Justice is clear notice to the judges that hereafter they are not to engage in these arbitration matters, but the subsequent utterance of the Prime Minister is not so definite, and it may be considered as an intimation that he intends there should be a wider scope. The right hon. gentleman said, ('Hansard page 9752):

> This is a very important subject. For my part I agree altogether with the motion that judges should confine themselves to their judicial duties, but is it the intention of parliament—I never understood so—to prevent judges from going into cases which are of a semi-judicial character? For instance my hon. friend (Mr. Macdonald) has referred to arbitrations between the Dominion and the provinces. The judges are specially well qualified to act in arbitrations between the Dominion and the provinces or between the provinces themselves, and I think no one would object to that. The judges have also been called upon to act as arbitrators between workmen and their employees on the occasions of strikes, and as that is in effect a judicial matter to determine, I do not think judges should be prevented from so acting.

As to that last sentence I would have my doubts.

But what parliament intends and what we are all agreed to is that judges should not be allowed to participate in any kind of business which is of a commercial character; they should not be directors of insurance companies or banks or such. But as regards anything which partakes of a judicial character, I do not think any one has the intention of preventing the judges from acting.

Taking these words of the right hon. gentleman:

That sentence, I am afraid, was calculated to mislead the judges and to afford them a justification, because they must have some justification, for engaging in arbitrations contrary to the language of the Minister of Justice a year ago, and to what I understand was clearly the policy of parliament, namely, that the judges were not to engage in these arbitrations. This is not only the policy of this branch of the legislature, but it may be said, I think, to be the policy of the Senate as well. In 1903 a Bill was introduced by the Hon. Senator Ferguson upon this question, but having much wider application than the Bill which I have introduced; and although it did not pass the Senate at that time, owing to the fact that it was said to have certain political bearings, the Gamey investigation being then under way, or perhaps only recently concluded, yet from the expressions of the hon. senators who spoke on that occasion we may gather that the consensus of opinion of the Upper House was that the time for making a provision that the judges should not engage in extra judicial work had arrived—that judges should not thereafter engage in extra judicial work, even in regard to those large matters referred to by the right honourable gentleman who leads this House. But, for the reason that it appeared to have a political bearing at that time, the Bill was dropped. Now, it is not enough to say that the judges are not influenced by the fact that they are engaged by one party or another, say by a large corporation. I venture to say, regarding judges in the same light as other high-minded and honourable men, yet that we must concede, using the words in no offensive sense, that the paymasters are the masters of those employed. I use that expression as a concise expression, and with the greatest possible respect for the judiciary of Canada, and I am not travelling far out of the record of what has transpired in the past, because we have expressions on this subject by a very high authority. You will remember that when the Act was introduced into the Ontario legislature to provide for an addition to the salaries of the judges of $1,000, it was seriously objected to by the Dominion parliament, many prominent members of which pointed out that there was a design in the British North America Act to have the sole control of judges vested in this House, and that to allow the Ontario legislature to contribute any part of the salaries of the judges would be to place the judges under the influence and control, in a certain sense, of the local legislature, which was undesirable. That Act came before the Minister of Justice of that day, and was disallowed. It was placed on a somewhat different basis afterwards, and Sir John Macdonald, being ill at the time, the Act went through without question, but was subsequently questioned by Sir Alexander Campbell and I believe by other Ministers of Justice who succeeded him. A similar case occurred in British Columbia, and Mr. Fournier, who was Minister of Justice at the time that case came before parliament, pointed out how undesirable it was that the local legislature should in any way have power to reward or to influence the judges, and said: 'all of which is incompatible with the faithful and unbiassed discharge by the county court judges of their judicial functions.' Then, it has been well recognized in the past that even where the reward to a judge does not flow from an entirely private source, such as an individual or a corporation, such as a railway company or insurance company, but flows from what might be called a quasi-judicial source, it is undesirable. The legal gentlemen in the House will remember the discussions that frequently have arisen with reference to the payment of judges by fees. Not to go into elaborate quotations, I will just quote a line or two from an eminent judge of Nova Scotia on that question—the Hon. James Macdonald, who says: 'The principle of paying judges by fees was long ago found to be a vicious system, calculated to interfere with the independence of the bench.' Now, if the payment of judges in part by the local legislatures is to be regarded as improper and unwise, and if the payment of judges by fees, even when the provision is made by statute, is to be regarded as a vicious system, I submit that the payment of judges by railway companies and other large corporations—aye, and the payment of judges by individuals who may have to come before them in the course of litigation—is very much more against the true interests of justice than the cases I have referred to. What is the reason? The reason is that it is supposed to sap to some extent the independence of the bench,— not consciously, not intentionally, not because the judges are not honourable men—but because of the almost inevitable suspicion that it creates in the mind of the public. If we could concede in this House, with our more intimate knowledge of the judges, that we were perfectly satisfied that in no case could it possibly in the remotest degree influence the judgment of a judge, yet we must bear in mind that there is still an equally important question, and that is, that the public should have that high regard for the judges that in no instance will they ever have the slightest or faintest suspicion that everything is not what we could desire in regard to the judiciary of Canada. For a long series of years the judges of Canada had earned a reputation which was so high, so free from suspicion of any kind, that we pointed with the greatest pride to them. I am not one of those who say that if you get down to the base of the whole matter, we might not, as regards the fact, point to our judges with equal pride to-day; but knowing that the judges have not perhaps before been too generously rewarded for their judicial duties, and that because of political exigencies from time to time, they have been called upon to travel out of what are purely their judicial functions, and undertake extra judicial work from time to time, I say that we have not in the minds of the great mass of the people to-day that feeling of respect and confidence in our judiciary which was so noticeable in the past and which is so essential to the well being of Canada. A very eminent authority, Mr. J. S. Ewart, speaking at Winnipeg on the occasion of the appointment of a judge, said that the courts of justice stand between society and anarchy; and I believe that among the institutions which stand at the base of society and among the elements which make up the welfare of the people, there is none so important as the judiciary. The lives, the properties, the liberties of the people are in their keeping. Not only that but the efficient carrying on of the affairs of Canada, the place our country fills in the eyes of other countries, is largely dependent on the position occupied by the judiciary. Look at it in any way you like, there is a great objection to judges engaging in private arbitrations. Take for instance the case of Conmee and the Canadian Pacific Railway, in which a judge—and a very hon. and distinguished ornament of the bench and bar he was—acted as one of the arbitrators. But because it happened that the railway company suggested to him, while the arbitration was in progress, that he should take a position in the employ of the company, an application was made to have the proceedings set aside, and they were set aside. Why? Not because the learned judge had done anything improper or was guilty intentionally of any wrong but because he was acting as arbitrator, and a judge deciding a case must be absolutely above suspicion. I might cite other instances, but it must be patent to every one that when we have judges engaging in these arbitrations and more particularly presiding in cases affecting political questions, the people are apt to lose that confidence in the judiciary which otherwise they would have.

There is another view to be taken. Not long ago we had an outcry in the province of Ontario about justice being delayed owing to the lack of a sufficient number of judges. Is it not therefore in the nature of an outrage that when we have had to concur in the creation of an entirely new court, thus adding largely to the expense which has to be paid by the Dominion, our judges should engage in these private arbitrations and add to their judicial salaries the emoluments derived from these matters which do not properly come within their duties. It is certainly unfair to the country that this condition of things should continue and it is also unfair to the judges themselves, take them as a whole. Take the instance of two county court judges, each drawing $3,000 a year. There is no doubt that these two judges were appointed because it was assumed and argued that they would be called on to do $6,000 worth of work. But if we find that one of them—and it is liable to be the senior judge—gives up one-third of his time to arbitration proceedings, the country is not getting the full value of his salary. The country is only getting two thirds of his services and the other third is given to private matters. But this throws on the junior judge the additional labour, and the result is that one judge is paid considerably more than he earns and the other only gets a certain percentage of what he earns. But that is not all. The senior judge probably gets for his services not less than $2,000 worth of fees from this private source of income, so that for eight months work which he does for the country he receives in all $6,000, while the junior receives only $3,000 for the full year's work. And the matter does not even end there, because the senior judge has certain emoluments, in Ontario at all events, in the shape of circuit fees and so forth which the other does not get.

Hon. gentlemen have had their attention drawn to these matters and no doubt have been considering them in many aspects to which I do not propose to refer, but I would like briefly to refer to another view. And that is this. Whilst we are allowing our judges to engage in these arbitrations for their private gain, we are maintaining in Ontario a far greater number of county judges than we need. This phase of the matter has been discussed on several occasions and it is said that this House can apply no remedy. Well in one sense I venture to say that that is hardly the case. I notice that in the discussion last year the right hon. the leader of the government said that attorney general after attorney general had tried in his own province—the province of Quebec—and had failed. Well, I am not familar with the conditions in the province of Quebec and shall not do more than simply refer to them. But take the province of Ontario, where the county court judge represent a very large item. There is no obstacle in the way to a reform there which cannot be easily overcome. Speaking of all the provinces, a very easy remedy was suggested last year, and that was that when a province came asking for new terms, one of the conditions should be a final settlement of this matter.

Speaking of Ontario, in 1895 the legislature of that province passed an Act providing that where there were two judges in a county and one retired or died, the vacancy should not be filled unless the population of the county exceeded 80,000. That was a time when the politics of Ontario were not so good in the interests of the county as they are now ; and when the control of affairs in the Dominion was in the hands of men in whom I have much greater faith than I have in the present administration. At that time the Reform element held power in Ontario and a Conservative government held power in the Dominion and had the authority to appoint the judges. The Reform government in Ontario provided that when vacancies occurred, unless the population exceeded 80,000, there should be no appointment. On April 7, 1896, while the same condition of things prevailed, that statute was re-enacted with no material change. But in the succeeding year after there had been a change in the government of the Dominion we find a complete change in this statute. They did not see fit to actually repeal the law—that would probably have been too glaring. They sought their object by a pious fraud, which, I think, will be regarded by the House as most ingenuous, whatever may be said of its honesty and straightforwardness. These gentlemen provided that, nothwithstanding that we were to have the number of judges reduced and the extra judge eliminated in all cases in which there was not a population of over 80,000, yet if the commission by which a judge was appointed said that there were more than 80,000, that should be conclusive evidence of the fact. Here are the words :

> Or, if any such commission, which may be hereafter issued states or recites that the population of such county or union of counties exceeds 80,000, the fact so stated shall be conclusively assumed and shall not be controverted.

So we have this state of things—that the Ontario legislature, as far back as 1895, determined that we had too many county judges in Ontario and provided a means by which the number should tend to decrease and then nullified their own provision by the one I have just read. Now, I think from what I know of the condition of things that exist in Ontario, that it is not too much to hold that, if any representations are made to the government of that province, that this statute should be repealed, and that so far as the government of Ontario is concerned there will be no difficulty about the point. And what would be the result? Now, let me speak of the other provinces as against Ontario. If Ontario had its fair number of judges, according to the basis of calculation of only one judge for each county less than 80,000, instead of having 68 we should have fewer than 34. The population of Ontario is less than 2,168,000. Divide that by 80,000, as a maximum number for each judge, and the number of judges would be a fraction under 28. But, even at 34, you would reduce the number of judges in Ontario by half. I say I speak to the other provinces, and I ask is it fair that Ontario should be drawing out of the Dominion exchequer more than double the money it is entitled to in this matter of county judges? And, speaking for the province of Ontario, and I ask is it wise that you should have this number of judges—more than double the number actually necessary for the efficient discharge of the duties? These men must become rusty and inefficient through having no judicial functions to discharge. I do not wish to weary the House. But I think we must recognize that it is a matter of great moment to the people. I have faith that the government will apply themselves to this question. I have that faith upon their utterances of a year ago. But whether they deal with this matter properly or not, the people of the country generally are well aware of the condition of things. They have had their attention more or less directed to it, and I think that sooner or later the government—any government that may be in power at Ottawa—will find that, if not by statute, then by a change of policy. a new course will have to be adopted. Judges must not be taken from their proper sphere and away from the proper discharge of their judicial duties and placed on these commissions, particularly commissions that are of a political nature. I can very well speak under this head of those commissions that are of a political character, because the effect of putting the judges upon these commissions is to deprive the country of the services for which these men are permanently engaged. But I would not deal with that phase of the question. I have another Bill coming up, and I am not sure that when this Bill goes into committee I may not ask the indulgence of hon. members to make it even wider than it is. I might, perhaps, refer to the article in the Canada Law Journal, volumn 39, page 420, dealing with this question of extra-judicial functions being discharged by the judges. Also at page 540 of the same volume, where Mr. Ewart is dealing with this question in addressing Judge Perdue, I think it was. I would also refer to the discussion in the Senate—Senate Debates for 1903, pages 398 and 680, where Senator Alexander and others collect a vast amount of useful information. The subject in its broadest aspect has been fully discussed in Great Britain. I might be permitted to refer to the very eloquent passage of Lord Randolph Churchill's address when he was protesting against the appointment of judges on the Parnell commission. He said:

It is submitted that it is in the highest degree unwise and, indeed, unlawful to take the judges of the land out of their proper sphere of duty, and to mix them up in political conflict. In this case, whichever way they decide, they will be the object of political criticism and animadversion. Whatever their decision, speaking roughly, half the country will applaud, the other half condemn, their action ; their conduct during the trial in its minutest particulars, every ruling as to evidence, every chance expression, every question put by them, will be keenly watched, canvassed, criticised, censured or praised. Were judges in England ever placed in such a position before ? Will any judge emerge from this inquiry the same for all judicial purposes, moral weight and influence as he went into it ? Have you a right to expose your judges to such an ordeal ?

Now, if that is true in reference to a quasi political investigation, it does not lack truth in cases where judges are engaged in arbitrations affecting vast interests of railways and other large corporations. There is no engine of such political power in Canada to-day as the great railway corporations. We have had one great railway company in the past, we have other giant railway companies coming forward. We have enormous railway interests in Canada at present, interests which reach from ocean to ocean. Now if what I have just read with regard to conditions in England is true of conditions in this country, is it wise for us to allow judges to have relations with these companies in discharging arbitration duties in the manner I have referred to ? This Bill provides :

Except at the instance and on behalf of the Crown, or for the determination of actions or suits or questions arising in actions and suits as provided for by the statutes or statutory rules of any province, no judge mentioned in this Act shall become, or act in the capacity of a referee, arbitrator, or umpire, or valuator or assessor of damages or compensation upon or for the determination of any question, dispute or matter in difference of any kind whatsoever but the provisions of this subsection shall not apply to prevent any judge from proceeding with and completing any reference or abitration upon which he has actually entered before the 15th day of March, 1906.

The other section provides for getting certain necessary information in order that we may know more as to what is required with regard to judges in future than we possess at the present time. I think that is made clearly necessary by the statement of the Minister of Justice yesterday that certain information that was asked for could not be given because it had not been collected.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. I would ask the hon. member whether he considers this parliament competent to enact the last clause ?

Mr. LENNOX. Before replying to the hon. member, I will read the last clause :

Every judge mentioned in this Act shall keep, or cause to be kept by an officer of the court over which he presides, and accessible to such judge, a record of all judicial acts and duties performed by him as such judge, including all actions, suits and proceedings, whether civil or criminal, had or taken, or coming before him, and the disposal thereof, and shall, on or before the 1st day of March, 1907, and annually thereafter, or oftener if required by the Minister of Justice, upon forms and schedules furnished, upon application, by the Department of Justice, make and transmit to the Department of Justice a return or report, certified by the judge, setting forth the judicial acts and duties performed by such judge since the passing of this Act, or since the date of his last return, as the case may be.

Now my hon. friend (Mr. A. K. Maclean) asked me if I consider it within the competence of this House to enact this Bill. Of course I feel I am not by any means a high authority ; but I may say that this question of assigning to judges of provincial courts extra duties has already been determined upon by a Canadian court, and has been carried to the Privy Council of England where it was determinated that we have power to assign extra duties to judges of provincial courts. I move that the Bill be now read the second time.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Hon. CHARLES FITZPATRICK (Minister of Justice). Mr. Speaker, the Act which it is intended by this Bill to amend by the addition of two subsections reads as follows :

No judge mentioned in this Act shall, either directly or indirectly, as director or manager of any corporation, company, or firm, or in any other manner whatever, for himself or others, engage in any occupation or business other than his judicial duties, but every such judge shall devote himself exclusively to such judicial duties.

This section provides that no judge shall in any way whatever engage in any occupation or business other than his judicial duties but that he shall devote himself exclusively to such judicial duties. My opinion is that the amendment which is proposed would have the effect, notwithstanding its form, of enabling judges to do those things which are mentioned in that section and which, in my judgment, they are precluded from doing under the Act as we now have it. I have, up to the present, construed the Act that we passed last session very strictly and once or twice judges have applied to me to know whether or not on a true construction of the statute it would be permissible for them to act as arbitrators in disputes between private parties. The answer that I invariably have given to them is that it is not competent for them to do so and to-night I regret that I am obliged to deliberately say that the judges of this country have not observed the law passed by parliament and that they certainly have not given that example of obedience to the law which we are entitled to expect of them.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Would the hon. minister say how many have not ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I am going to deal with that matter. Some time ago a question was put to me by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) in respect to violations of the Act passed last session. I gave an answer at that time which substantially was to the same effect as what I have just said and I took occasion of that question and of that answer to prepare a circular letter to the judges in which circular letter I inclosed the question and answer as it had been put in the House so that they must have their attention directed to the opinion of parliament in respect to those who are violating the law. I have not yet received answers to all of the circulars that were sent out. I wish now to say to my hon. friend, the promoter of this Bill, that when these answers are received it is my intention to introduce, myself, in parliament a Bill for the purpose of giving effective sanction to the legislation of last session, and if my hon. friend would allow me a suggestion I would ask him to allow his Bill to remain in abeyance until the Bill that I have referred to has been introduced so that we may together prepare such legislation as will give effective sanction to the will of this parliament.

Mr. LENNOX. It appears to me that that is a very fair proposition of the Minister of Justice and I shall very readily accede to it.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Let the second reading go. We accept the principle.

Mr. MONK. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Justice—I have not had myself, any opportunity of looking into the matter —if he has been able to ascertain to what extent in England the judges are allowed or it is customary for them to fulfil other functions than their judicial functions either in taking part in teaching, in the educational role, or in being interested as directors in commercial and financial companies. Does the custom exist in England ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I am not able to say in respect to teaching what the practice is among the judges in England, but one judge, who, I may say, is one of the most flagrant violators of our Act, thought to justify himself in respect to his conduct under our Act by sending a list of judges in England who act as directors of companies. I know nothing, as to what the practice is there beyond what I have learned from this judge. However, I will say that I care very little about it because as far as we are concerned we are dealing with our own law.

Mr. A. A. STOCKTON (St. John City and County). I agree with what has been said by my hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick). I think that when a gentleman accepts a judicial appointment he should make up his mind to attend to his judicial duties and discontinue all commercial business. When it was proposed last session, not by the Minister of Justice but by a member of the House, to put a clause in the Bill attaching a penalty to the violation of the law the Minister of Justice at that time, and I thought very fairly, thought it would not look well to put such a clause in the Bill as he said we must fairly assume that a gentleman who was appointed by the government to administer the law would obey the law. But, if that has not happened I feel satisfied that from the promise that has been made by the Minister of Justice there will be such an amendment of the law as will avoid the difficulty in future.

Mr. MONK. I would like to ask the Minister of Justice if I understood him as expressing the opinion that judges engaged, for instance, in universities, were debarred under last year's law from continuing their course of lectures. I ask the question because I remember that the matter was discussed in the province of Quebec and that one of the learned judges who occupies a chair in law in Laval University expressed an opinion which was published in the 'Herald' that the law of last year did not debar judges from occupying chairs in the universities. There seems to be very good ground for the opinion which he expressed at that time. Did I properly understand the hon. Minister of Justice to say that the law of last year excludes also the teaching in universities ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. No, I would be disposed, myself, to think, and I was acting upon that supposition, that those who are engaged in the teaching of law in connection with our universities would not come within the law of last session. I think that must fairly be considered as in line with the performance of their professional work and I expressed that opinion, I think, last session when the Act was passed.

Mr. STOCKTON. That question arose when the Bill was going through last year and the Minister of Justice expressed the opinion that he has expressed to-night.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I have not the statute of last session before me and I do not know how it affects those judges who hold positions of trusts such as executors and trustees. Perhaps it contains a distinct or definite statement on that point.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Let me draw my hon. friend's attention to this: In our province there are judges who are in receipt of very large incomes derived from the administration of large estates and who give a large share of their time to the duties to be performed in connection with the administration of those estates—such large share of the time that in the opinion of some members of the bar they do not and cannot perform their judicial work as the result of the time they give to these private duties.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Of course, I do not know anything about the particular circumstances to which my hon. friend the Minister of Justice alludes but I should think, that, not so much in the interest of the judges as in the interest perhaps of those they represent, there must be some question as to how far we should go in respect to positions of trust assumed before any such statute was in operation. That is merely a suggestion. There may be circumstances which would make it desirable that the law should be restricted in that regard. In some instances in my own province, even before this statute came into force, I know that gentlemen who had held positions as directors of banks and other large corporations, thought it desirable in the public interest that they should resign these offices immediately upon appointment to the bench. I think it is the best course, independent of any statutory prohibition. The suggestion of the Minister of Justice, that the further discussion upon this Bill should be postponed, until the government measure is introduced, is a fair one and one which ought to be accepted at once.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. We shall adopt the principle of the Bill first by giving it a second reading.

Mr. MONK. I would be curious to know from the Minister of Justice if the judges in the province of Quebec are greater sinners than the judges of the other provinces in failing to carry out strictly what was intended when we passed that law last year. I do not think there is justification for the Minister of Justice stating that some of our judges make considerable sums out of the administration of estates. It is possible that in Montreal and Quebec some of the judges, by reason of family connection and otherwise, are placed in positions of trust from which they derive some income, but I do not think the remuneration in any case is very large. If the government intends drafting a new law, I would submit for consideration the point as to how far that legislation should be made drastic. I suppose the intention of parliament is that a judge should not become a director of a bank or financial institution, but is it the intention to go so far as to say that a judge shall not act as executor, even if he does receive some remuneration. That would be going very far, because there are cases in which the testator either through family connection, or because of great confidence in a man occupying the position of a judge, may wish to name him as executor of his estate and provide some reasonable indemnity. I do not believe there is any country in the world where a judge would be obliged, in a case of that kind, to refuse the execution of a trust. That is why I refer to the custom that prevails in England. No judiciary occupies such a high position as the judiciary of England, and under institutions of a similar character I think we may fairly look to the custom that prevails there, and which has not in any degree shorn the bench of the respect which attaches to it.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I should like to draw the attention of my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) to this fact: that while in the province of Quebec our judges are perhaps no greater sinners against the law than they are elsewhere, yet, the offences are largely limited to the provinces of Quebec and Ontario. There are several judges in the province of Ontario——

Mr. MONK. There are sinners in Ontario!

Mr. FITZPATRICK. There are some.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. One turned up at a meeting of insurance directors the other day.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. There are some in Ontario, but the number of offenders is greater in proportion in the province of Quebec. I think my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) knows of cases in the city of Montreal where members of the judiciary occupying prominent positions in the province, act on boards of insurance companies and as bank directors; and have continued to act notwithstanding the law of last session. My hon. friend not only knows that, but he knows that in connection with large estates there are judges who if they do not seek the position of executors allow themselves at all events to be sought after. Need I mention the Masson estate, need I mention the Rodier estate, need I mention the O'Brien estate, and a dozen others I have in my mind at the present time?

Mr. MONK. The hon. minister does not mean to say that the income derived from these estates by the judges is a very considerable one?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. My hon. friend (Mr. Monk) must know very well what is going on in the province of Quebec. During the last session of the legislature, application was made to increase by a very large amount the revenue of one of the executors who happened at the same time to be a judge, on the ground that he was obliged to give so much of his time to the administration of this estate. With respect to what is done in England, I say that so far as we are concerned it is usually quite right for us to look to England for our example in matters of this sort. I quite understand that the judiciary in England occupy a very high position, and I know also that the judiciary of this country occupy a very high position. It is not my intention at the present time, nor at any other time, to say anything derogatory of the judiciary of Canada. But we are dealing now with this fact: that we have passed a law which was intended to regulate the conduct of judges, and I say deliberately that the least this parliament has the right to expect is that that law shall be obeyed by the judges.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD (Pictou). At first blush looking at this Bill. I thought my hon. friend (Mr. Lennox) had not excepted from the provisions of section 2 certain classes of matters which in my judgment it was quite within the province of judges to deal with, but on closer examination I see that that class of cases is provided for. I agree fully with the Minister of Justice that this House should lay down definitely and clearly the policy that judges should not be permitted to act in the capacity of executors or trustees. Every one who is familiar with legal matters will realize, that no more delicate task can be placed upon the judiciary than to determine on a technical breach of trust by a trustee, and no more unpleasant duty could be thrust upon the brethren of a judge who had acted in that capacity than to determine as to whether or not a breach of trust had been committed by him. It appears to me that section 7 of the Act of last year laid down the principle very clearly, and it is to be regretted that the Minister of Justice finds it necessary to come here this year and ask parliament to declare more definitely, that judges should refrain from engaging in matters such as the management of companies or the management of estates, which to a certain extent must interfere with the impartial performance of their duties. I would like to say to my hon. friend from Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) that I think clause 3 of his Bill deals with a situation which ought to be left to the provincial legislature. In Nova Scotia we have a system under which the prothonotaries of the various courts throughout the province report to the government the cases which are dealt with, their character, and all the information which my hon. friend proposes to get by this section. It seems to me that this matter comes more naturally within the purview of provincial legislation than it does within our sphere in this parliament. The object which my hon. friend (Mr. Lennox) desires to attain must, I am sure, have been obtained in the various provinces by legislation of this character. That, however, is a matter which will be dealt with more fully when the Bill gets into committee.

Mr. LENNOX. Mr. Speaker, if I may be allowed the indulgence of replying to what the hon. gentleman has just said, it may be that there is some reason for considering it; but as I have accepted the suggestion of the Minister of Justice, and I am quite sure that the government desire to secure this information, I am quite willing to leave it at that for the present.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the second time.

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. ARCHIBALD CAMPBELL (C. York) moved second reading of Bill (No. 14) to amend the Weights and Measures Act. He said: The object of this Bill is to remove a grievance that has grown up in the province of Ontario, and more particularly in the neighbourhood of the city of Toronto. It has been the custom there for many years that all the milk sent to the city of Toronto has been sold by the farmers by the can. From the best information I can obtain, there are between 2,000 and 3,000 cans sent into the city every day. These cans were supposed to hold eight gallons, the farmers getting a certain price for that quantity; but in later years, for some reason or other, the cans have varied very much in size; and now, I think I am safe in saying there are no cans delivered in Toronto holding less than eight and a half or nine gallons, while the farmer continues to be paid at the rate of eight gallons to the can. The result is that there has grown up a great grievance among the people on this subject. They have petitioned this House very strongly for the passage of such a measure as I have had the honour of introducing. It will remove that grievance by fixing the legal standard of quantity, so that when milk is sold by the can, everybody will know that a can means eight gallons, and half a can four gallons. The Bill does not interfere with the present cans, hundreds of which are in use, because it makes no difference what quantity a can holds, whether three or four or seven or nine gallons, the farmer who sells the milk will be paid for exactly what he delivers, and the dealer will get all he pays for. For instance, a man who delivers a can of milk holding only seven gallons, gets paid for only seven-eighths of a can; if he delivers a can holding nine gallons, he will be paid for one can and one-eighth; and so on. A clause provides for the inspection of the cans. In case of dispute between the producer and the dealer in regard to the size of a can, it may be taken to an inspector of weights and measures, who will determine the quantity it holds, and stamp its capacity on the can. So that the Bill will remove a great grievance in the province of Ontario. I do not suppose it will affect matters in the province of Quebec or other provinces, where I understand milk is sold largely by the gallon. The Bill also provides that the Governor in Council may make a tariff of fees for the inspection of the cans, but that the fee shall not exceed one and a half cents a gallon. I had the honour the other day of presenting a petition from over six hundred ratepayers and producers in Centre York, South York, and North York, and also the counties of Peel and Halton. All the counties around Toronto are interested in this Bill, and I hope it will receive the favourable consideration of the House, as I am sure it will remove a great grievance which has existed for some time and is gradually growing worse.

Mr. R. BLAIN (Peel). I am in accord with the principle of the Bill. I think that some remedy should be found to meet the long standing grievance of the farmers who supply a large quantity of milk to the city of Toronto and other places in the province of Ontario. This is an old Bill of my hon. friend's; he has introduced it before.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Only once before.

Mr. BLAIN. The way my hon. friend has been referring to it I thought it was more than that. However, I may say that his attention was drawn to the fact that his Bill was not very well worded, and I was in hopes that this year he would have changed its phraseology to make it meet the wishes of a larger number of the members of this House. However, that is a minor matter which can be made right in Committee of the Whole. I think my hon. friend has fairly pointed out the grievance that exists among the farmers, particularly in his own county and other counties in the neighbourhood of the city of Toronto. The reason milk is sold by the can is that it seems to be the most convenient way both for the milk producer and the dealer. One reason why the cans are made larger than eight gallons is that they may be sufficiently large to avoid the loss of milk in transit. Still another reason is that the cans that are sent every day to and from the city by express suffer considerable damage, the sides being pressed in, and thus the capacity of the cans is reduced. For these reasons the cans are made to hold more than eight gallons in order to protect the dealer in the city. But I think that is not quite fair to the farmers. I think he should have the right to supply eight gallons of milk as a can.

It is only fair to the farmer that when he sells a can of milk supposed to contain eight gallons that can should contain eight gallons and no more. Let the dealer make his can hold more if he wishes and make the contract in the way I have pointed out; but when milk is bought and sold as it is at present, the law should be so changed that the farmer would be compelled to put in his can eight gallons and the dealer would have the right to make his can as large as he wishes within any reasonable size. There is a very strong complaint made by the farmers in the county I represent. Large quantities of milk are sent not only on express trains, but in wagons, and the farmers complain that the dealers refuse to accept the cans unless they are filled up. And as the hon. member for York (Mr. Maclean) has pointed out, the can in many instances hold considerably more than eight and a half gallons, yet they will not be accepted unless they are filled to the top and the farmers are only paid for the eight gallons. This matter should receive more careful consideration at the hands of the government. It is probably a little unfortunate from our standpoint that it only applies in Ontario and in very few points in that province, because the milk business is not very extensive except in and around the cities. But it is of sufficient importance to receive the attention of the government and no time should be lost in getting this long-standing grievance removed. I hope the hon. gentleman's Bill will receive that fair and just treatment the importance of the question deserves. This side of the House will give the hon. gentleman every support in perfecting this legislation in order that this grievance may be removed.

Mr. J. BARR (Dufferin). I am very much pleased that my hon. friend from York (Mr. Campbell) has introduced this Bill. It is intended to remove a grievance which is felt by the farmers throughout the length and breadth of the county. Continual friction has existed between the sellers and purchasers of milk, and it is well known that as a rule the farmer gets the worst of it. It is well known that advantage is taken of them and that when the milk is delivered the purchasers complain that the full amount is not supplied. What guarantee have the farmers if the cans are not stamped ? I submit that if the can should be in any way damaged that doesn't affect the quantity of milk in them very much, and if so the deficiency can be easily remedied. But you can easily see the difficulty which arises in shipping milk to Toronto when there is continual friction between the two parties. I think the Bill has been pretty carefully drawn, but there is one thing I do not see provided, and that is who shall pay for the inspection? I do not think that the burden should be thrown upon the farmers. The expense should at least be divided. When my hon. friend explained his Bill I did not catch how the expense in connection with the stamping of the cans would be defrayed. I do not think it would be just to make the farmers pay the whole of it, and I hope that provision has been made in the Bill to meet this difficulty. The intention of the promoter is no doubt a good one, and when the Bill comes before a committee we will have time there to discuss it more fully and see that it carries out the object we all desire.

Hon. WM. TEMPLEMAN (Minister of Inland Revenue). I greatly regret that I was not present when the mover of this Bill explained its provisions, but having given the matter some attention I am prepared to say that I believe he is moving in the right direction. It is absolutely necessary that some provision should be made for a standard measure for the delivery of milk by the farmers, and the department is ready to assist the hon. gentleman in that direction. I am advised, however, that in some respects the Bill does not meet the view of our officials who have to do with the inspection of weights and measures. But if my hon. friend will permit the Bill to go before the Committee on Agriculture, the department will assist him in having it so framed that it will meet the approval of the department and we shall see that it is enforced when made law. One of the amendments I would suggest would be that a standard gallon should be maintained rather than a standard can. I am advised that throughout the country there are various vessels used for the conveyance of milk. For instance, in the province of Quebec, the five-gallon can is the one generally used. In New Brunswick it is the two-gallon can. Therefore, to provide that only an eight gallon or a four-gallon can be used would do injustice to those portions of the country which use other measures of capacity. I would suggest that this Bill go before the Committee on Agriculture, as that is the committee best equipped for the discussion of matters of this kind, and there we will try to put it in such a shape that it will be acceptable to the House and the department will see that the law is enforced.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN (South York). The difficulty is this, that the dealer in the cities supplies the cans and he knows that the farmer, in order to have his milk good and fresh and avoid its being churned must fill his can. All the business is done on the basis of eight gallons to the can, but the dealer is constantly increasing the size, and as the farmer has to fill it up, he is really delivering eight and a half or nine gallons and only getting paid for eight gallons. I would suggest that we should make a standard can eight gallons and have the cans inspected and stamped. I know that in Montreal the milk is sold in much smaller cans, but in Toronto it all comes in these eight gallon cans because those are found the handiest for lifting from the wagon to the car and from the car to the wagon. All the farmer asks is that the law should be so framed that while the standard may be fixed at eight gallons, if the cans are made larger by the dealer, the farmer should be paid for the milk he actually supplies. All I say is, let us make the experiment. This question has been up for ten years and we have made no headway. The farmers want the evils removed, and the best way is to try the experiment; if it does not succeed we can repeal the law. It will not interfere with the custom of trade in other places, but it will improve the conditions of the trade about Toronto.

Mr. E. A. LANCASTER (Lincoln and Niagara). I would quite agree with the principle declared by the hon. member in moving the Bill, but I am inclined to think that section 2 goes a good deal further than he intends it to go. I understand him to wish to legislate with regard to the trade in milk shipped in cans. But section 2 would affect the trade in milk that is delivered from the wagon, and would compel a vendor of that kind to carry his milk in a can of a particular size. I do not see any necessity for that, and I suppose the hon. gentleman does not mean to go so far. If the milk is to be sold by the quart or pint to the householder, it does not matter what may be the size of the receptacle in which it is carried to the door. I am not on the agricultural committee, so shall not have an opportunity to deal with the matter when it comes before that committee. I would suggest that section 2 be made to read 'milk cans referred to in section 1' or otherwise amended to cover the point. In its present form it will work hardship in the way I have suggested.

Mr. CAMILLE PICHE (Monteal, St. Mary's). If the statement of the hon. member for East York is true—and I do not doubt that it is—the case is a special one, and it seems hardly worth while to make a general statute with a view to reaching a particular case in the neighbourhood of Toronto. The real reason for passing the law would be that in the district near Toronto cans are provided by dealers and not by the producers. I do not see any need for this legislation when the difficulty can be remedied by the producer himself furnishing the cans, as is done in Montreal and many other places. The difficulty, as explained is that the dealer sends larger and larger cans, to get them filled by the producer. But if the producer himself would furnish the cans, he could make them of the regular measure.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. It might be a good thing for Quebec if we made the law so that it would be easy to get the dealer to supply the cans.

Mr. M. AVERY (Frontenac). To make a law providing that a can must have a capacity of eight gallons, would not be fair to those already having cans. As has just been suggested, the producer, if he wishes, can furnish his own cans. There might be a special reason why some would want a larger can than is provided for by this Bill.

Mr. A. A. WRIGHT (South Renfrew). As to the producer furnishing the cans, we have had some experience in that kind of thing, and I will tell you how it has worked. The men who buy the milk have the whole thing in their own hands. They do not want the vendor to furnish his own cans, because they know that if he does they are not going to get a larger can than they ought to have. So, when the dealer goes to the man who sells the milk, he tells him that he must use the cans furnished him or they will not handle the milk. A farmer who has gone to the expense of getting a first-class dairy herd started, cannot change his farming to another line of work. If the farmer thinks he will send in his milk and sell to some one else, he finds that nobody will buy it. As a rule, there are no cheese factories near the large cities, so the farmer has no opportunity to find a market there. Therefore, he has to sell to these buyers or have the milk left on his hands. There is no injustice done under the Bill. The buyer pays only for what he gets. This matter of inspecting the cans and making a standard is just the same as making a standard fruit package. Nobody will be injured and everybody will be benefited because all will know what they are getting.

Mr. G. W. FOWLER (King's, N.B.). The gentlemen from Ontario are bringing a very serious indictment against the dealers near Toronto in saying that these men want to get nine gallons when they only pay for eight gallons. It seems hard to believe that there can be such men in business in Toronto. There is a large milk business in the province from which I come. The dealers supply the cans, but there is no difficulty, because the farmer gets paid for the exact amount of milk he furnishes. We have always been led to believe that Toronto was a good city—a good and righteous city. And yet it appears that in that city there are men such as the hon. member for South York—the hon. members for both Yorks—would have us believe. Montreal is always held up as having a very black character as compared with Toronto. There is none of this difficulty in Montreal, yet we have the testimony of a gentleman from Toronto that we must change the law of the whole Dominion because there are dishonest dealers in Toronto the good. For my part, I propose, to vote against the Bill.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Carleton, Ont.). I do not know whether the Minister of Inland Revenue (Mr. Templeman) has had his attention directed to the view expressed by his predecessor whose observations seem to be cogent. He said he could not understand whether this Bill was intended to create a new standard of measure, and that if it did not the department had nothing to do with it. He confessed himself a little unable to understand it. I confess I do not exactly apprehend the import of the Bill. —It says :—

> When milk is sold by the can, the can shall be considered as equivalent to eight gallons, and the half can to four gallons.

It then goes on to deal with matters of inspection and verification of cans. Would it not do to say that if milk is sold by the can, the vendor must deliver eight gallons. That is what is intended, I understand. But, apparently, you propose to create a new standard of measure unknown to the law at the present time. I would commend to the attention of the Minister of the Inland Revenue, the observations of his predecessor in 1903, which he will find in 'Hansard' of that year at page 2340. He seems to have given the subject a good deal of consideration. The member for East Toronto (Mr. Kemp) who is not now in his place, urged certain objections to the Bill at that time, which objections he was making, I believe, from the standpoint of persons interested in this trade. If there is any grievance, and I have no doubt there is a grievance which has been alluded to by the hon. member for Centre York (Mr. Campbell), it is undoubtedly right to have the grievance redressed in this House, if legislation is necessary. If it were not for what the hon. gentleman states, I would have thought it was a matter that might regulate itself by the course of trade, a little precaution in the way of carrying on the business. It was pointed ou in 1903 that if these cans became indented in any way in the course of transit to and fro, then, under the present provisions of the Weights and Measures Act, they can no longer be used. because there is an express provision in the Inland Revenue Act relating to weights and measures which was quoted in that debate, and which is as follows :

> No measure the capacity of which the sides or bottoms are indented battered or knocked out of regular form will be admitted to verication.

It will be impossible, it seems to me, to carry on the business of transmitting these milk cans every day in the year without their very soon coming within the prohibition of this statute. If I rightly understand the object of my hon. friend from York, it is to make sure that when, in the course of trade, you sell so many cans of milk, you shall get so much milk, that fifty cans of milk, for instance, should contain 400 gallons and no more. Well, it seems to me you should be able to accomplish that object without creating a new standard of measure, as apparently is the intention of the second clause of this Bill. However, if the Bill is going to the Committee on Agriculture, I suppose all these matters will receive due consideration.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I have no objections to referring the Bill to the Committee on Agriculture. I might point out to the House that this is not the first time that legislation of this kind has been passed. A few years ago there was quite an agitation in and around the city of Montreal as to the sale of potatoes. By the Weights and Measures Act, potatoes are sixty pounds to the bushel. But our friends in the city of Montreal said that potatoes were sold by the bag in that city, and they brought forward a Bill here to provide for the weight of a bag of potatoes. That Bill was passed in 1901, chapter 26, entitled 'An Act respecting the packing and sale of certain staple commodities.' That Act provides that in the province of Quebec where potatoes are sold or offered for sale by the bag, the bag should contain at least eighty pounds. Now what difference is there between that Act and the Bill I have the honour to introduce ?

Mr. PICHE. There is a great difference, because that Act applied only to Quebec. If the hon. member will specify that his Bill should apply to Toronto we will not complain.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I have no objections whatever to making it apply to the province of Ontario. But I do not see where it affects adversely the province of Quebec or any other province. If milk is sold by the can in the province of Quebec or any other province, then there must be a law to say what a can contains. There is no law to-day. It may be an unwritten law that eight gallons is a can, but there is nothing on the statute book to show. If I buy ten cans of milk from a man I do not know what I am getting. But in this Bill I make it specify that when you buy a can you get eight gallons, no more and no less. Now then the object of having these cans verified is this : There are to-day a great many cans in existence of different capacities, and it would be unfair to compel dealers to discard all these, and to say that the cans must hold only eight gallons. I presume that in future, as the cans are made, they will be made exactly to hold eight gallons no more and no less. But those that are in existence, it will be necessary to verify them, and have them inspected by an inspector of weights and measures who will show that they hold eight and a half gallons, or seven and a half, or nine and a half, whatever it may be, and thus you are injuring no one and avoiding disputes. The producer may say :This can holds eight and a half gallons. The dealer may say, No, it only holds eight gallons. How are you going to settle the dispute ? By taking it to the inspector of weights and measures. He measures the can and determines exactly what its capacity is, and this settles any difference as to the capacity of the can. Now as I have pointed out, Bills similar to this have already been passed by this House. I have no objection at all to making it apply to the province of Ontario alone. I do not wish to impose upon Quebec or any other province a law that they objected to. But I do say that in the province of Ontario it is becoming a matter of very great concern. Just imagine, Sir, where there are 2,000 cans a day brought in, or a farmer who brings in four cans loses two gallons every single day which, at twelve and a half cents a gallon, is twenty-five cents a day, and that goes on for 365 days in a year. Now the farmers are not small-minded in these matters, they do not object to giving a few gallons of milk for nothing ; but when you come to exact from them two gallons every day in the year, it becomes a matter of considerable importance ; hence the petition that I presented here from 600 men around the city of Toronto all praying for the passage of this Bill. Who is going to be injured by it ? Tell me any man in this country that is going to be injured by the passage of this Bill.

Mr. LANCASTER. The vendor of milk in this city will be injured.

Mr. CAMPBELL. He will not be injured, for he will get all the milk he pays for, and he sells that milk around by the quart or the gallon as he pleases. When he buys from the farmer a can of milk then he pays for eight gallons no more and no less, and the poor farmer is not obliged to give him eight and a half or nine gallons. Sir, this is a measure that ought to receive the commendation of this House, it is a measure that will remove a grievance that has been existing for many years, and should have been removed long ago. It is doing no injustice to anybody. If the Minister of Inland Revenue desires that this Bill should go to the Committee on Agriculture, I have no objections. I am satisfied the committee will see the good points in this Bill and will recommend it to the House.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. It appears to me that the object the minister announces is one that should commend itself to the member for York (Mr. Campbell) that is, that we should stick to the gallon measure. My hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain), I think, has shown you the reason why a can cannot always be equivalent to so many gallons, it is, that a can becomes dinged or dented by shipment continually, and an eight gallon can when it is new and may hold exactly eight gallons, after it has been used a considerable time and these dents become deeper, the can may have less than eight gallons in it. Further, to apply that measure simply to Ontario—it appears to me that legislation of that kind passed by this parliament should apply to the whole Dominion. If it is constitutional to apply it only to the province of Ontario, then we might consider a proposal to limit it to that province. But I think the idea would scarcely commend itself to this House that we should revise here the Weights and Measures Act altogether in order to meet a case regarding milk. What about cans containing maple syrup? That is a very important article of trade, particularly in the province of Quebec where the farmers sell syrup by the can.

Are we to have a different sized can for one commodity from what we will have for another? The hon. gentleman has mentioned that a bag contains a bushel and a half whatever it contains, whether apples, potatoes or onions. That is a recognized quantity, but a can, according to the hon. gentleman, will not be a can unless it contains milk, and that is the only article he proposes shall be put into that variety of can. It changes the whole Weights and Measures Act and we will have to revise our school-books in order that this different standard of measurement may be taught to our children in the schools. This involves a change in the arithmetical calculation as we have always made it in the schools. The hon. member for Renfrew (Mr. Wright) tells us that if we do not take this can while we can we cannot have any other can. I do not know how he figures that out. I believe that milk should be sold by the gallon as well as anything else, and if the dealer asks five quarts to the gallon it is optional with the farmer whether he shall give him that or not. If you stick to the actual standard measurement of an Imperial gallon, four quarts to the gallon, I do not see how there will be any difficulty or why it should be necessary to introduce a measure of this kind simply for Ontario. I do not see the reason for it and I agree with the hon. minister entirely that we should not change our Weights and Measures Act simply to meet an emergency that may arise in a case of this kind.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Colonization.

ELECTIONS TO THE HOUSE.

On the order for:

Resuming the adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. R. L. Borden for the appointment of a select committee of nine, to inquire into the Acts relating to elections to the House of Commons, and the prevention of corrupt practices thereat, &c.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The object of this motion has been subserved by the appointment of a committee to which certain Bills have already been referred. I would think that it might as well be removed from the order paper, and I would therefore ask leave of the House to withdraw the motion.

Motion withdrawn.

RAILWAY ACT, 1903, AMENDMENT.

Mr. HAUGHTON LENNOX (South Simcoe) moved the second reading of Bill (No. 17) further to amend the Railway Act, 1903. He said: Mr. Speaker, I wish to explain this Bill. In consideration of what has happened this afternoon in reference to railway legislation I probably need not go into it very fully. The proposed amendment of section 199 of the Railway Act, 1903, is intended to effect two objects. One is to put the question of fencing a railway upon a more satisfactory basis and the other is in reference to cattle which accidentally get upon the railway not from the land of the owner of the cattle but from probably some adjoining land. In reference to the question of fencing, the policy that Canada adopted prior to 1888 was very definite, and it was that the railway, as a statutory corporation, should fence their line from end to end. The legislation prior to 1888 was based upon the principle that the railway company should fence the land that they had obtained as a right of way or as accommodation for their stations. That principle was preserved intact in the Railway Act of 1888 as far as I have been able to ascertain except that in the Railway Act of 1888, it was only applied to cases where a township had been set apart for settlement, had been surveyed and municipal government established. I refer to section 194 of the Act of 1888. It says that:

When a municipal corporation for any township has been organized and the whole or any portion of such township has been surveyed and subdivided into lots for settlement, fences shall be erected and maintained on each side of the railway through such township——of a certain height, &c. It goes on to make absolute provision for cattle guards and matters of that kind and the third subsection of section 194 says definitely:

Until such fences and cattle guards are duly made and completed, and if after they are so made and completed they are not duly maintained, the company shall be liable for all damages done by its trains and engines to cattle, horses and other animals, not wrongfully on the railway, and having got there in consequence of the omission to make, complete and maintain such fences and cattle guards as aforesaid.

Under that section certain amendments were made to that section, and in the years between 1888 and 1890 it was held that the railway company were liable although the cattle of A might have got on the land adjoining the railway belonging to B and from the land of B got upon the railway. But in 1890 some alteration was made, the result of that alteration being that the railway companies would not be liable where the cattle had strayed on the adjoining land, and so from the adjoining land had got upon the railway, the principle being laid down that they had only to fence against the adjoining owners, and not to fence against cattle generally. The case of Fensom vs. the Canadian Pacific Railway shows the condition of the law between 1888 and 1890, and it is to have the law restored to the same condition as it was in between 1888 and 1890 that I introduced the first part of subsection 3 as an amendment to sub-section 3 of 199 of the Railway Act of 1903. I have adopted some of the language used in the Bill introduced by my hon. friend from Lincoln and Niagara (Mr. Lancaster) in regard to cattle guards, the principle being that the mere fact that cattle have, without the neglect or default of the owner, got upon the railway shall not be an answer to the liability of the railway company for damages. It shall not be sufficient for the railway company to say that in so far as the half mile limit is concerned the cattle were wrongfully at the place where they escaped from the highway to the railway.

The law in force at the time Fensom vs. Canadian Pacific Railway was decided contained in effect the provisions I have incorporated in this section down to the word 'provided.' Then I provide the means by when the railway company shall escape the necessity for fencing in certain cases where it may be just they should not be called upon to fence, namely in districts where there is practically no settlement. As regards that the Bill provides :

> Provided, however, that where a railway traverses territory in which no municipal organization exists and which has not been surveyed and subdivided into lots or opened for settlement, the board may make orders modifying or relieving the company from compliance with the provisions of subsections 1 and 2 of this section for a limited time or until further order made therein ; but no order, unless renewed, shall have any force or effect beyond the period of ten years.

Until 1903 the law was that the railway had to fence in all organized territories in territory or where there was a municipal government established, and in localities which had been surveyed and opened for settlement. Section 199 of the Act of 1903 introduced a new system which I submit was not a wise system and was not fair to land owners. Subsection 3 of section 199 provides :

> Whenever the railway passes through any locality in which the lands on either side of the railway are not improved or settled, and inclosed, the company shall not be required to erect and maintain such fences, gates and cattle guards, unless the board otherwise orders or directs.

The present law is that a railway company need not fence if there is one vacant lot adjoining the railway, so that if a township is pretty thickly settled and almost every lot occupied, if there be two or three lots of bush lands, the company need not unless they do so voluntarily, erect a fence along the unoccupied lots. That I believe is unfair. It is provided of course that upon application to the railway board the board may compel the company to fence. This Bill provides that in cases in which the railway company wish to be relieved from liability to fence they must make application to the Railway Commissioners and obtain their order, instead of as now driving the farmer to take the initiative and throwing upon him the onus of establishing that it is a place that should be fenced. I quote from a speech of the late Postmaster General (Sir William Mulock) which expresses very distinctly the effect of the law of 1903 in placing upon the farmer the obligation of coming to Ottawa in order to obtain relief. In 1888 or 1890 Sir William Mulock said :

> To compel the individual to make an application at Ottawa amounts to a denial of justice, for the whole value of his land may not be equal to the expense of applying to the government here for redress. You are offering him a remedy which he cannot avail himself of, and the very knowledge of the fact that he has to appeal to Ottawa and have the whole examination made here where he cannot appear in person and must have some one to act for him makes him despair of getting relief and so he suffers.

I presume that probably the Minister of Justice will suggest that this Bill be referred to a special committee in the same way as the Bill introduced by my hon. friend (Mr. Lancaster) in regard to level crossings. I have no objection to that.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. This is quite an important piece of legislation and I would suggest that it be referred to the Railway Committee, or perhaps better still, to that smaller committee to which the Bill of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lancaster) is to be referred.

Mr. LENNOX. I am quite prepared to accept the suggestion of reference to the Special Committee, and I move the second reading of the Bill.

Mr. BRODEUR. This Bill provides that the onus probandi will be on the railway company, but suppose the railway company should be guilty of considerable negligence in reference to the fence and the owner of the animal should be guilty of a lesser negligence, is it not possible that under the Bill the railway company will be discharged from all liability.

Mr. STOCKTON. If the railway company is guilty of any negligence it would have to pay.

Mr. LENNOX. I do not think there would be any contributory negligence by the owner of the animal in the form in which I have framed my Bill. It says :

The company shall be liable to the owner of the animal for all damages in respect of it caused by its getting or being upon the railway, or by the company's trains or engines or the operation or management thereof ; and no animal allowed by law to be at large, and no animal running or being at large without the actual negligence or wilful act or omission of the owner or his agent, of which negligence the onus of proof shall be upon the comapny, shall be held to be unlawfully or improperly on a place adjoining the railway merely for the reason that the owner or occupant of such place has not permitted it to be there.

If the railway company neglects to fence where it should fence they would be liable, unless their owner has been guilty of negligence.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

On motion of Mr. Lennox the Bill was referred to the select committee to which was referred Bill (No. 8) to further amend the Railway Act.

INDEMNITY OF MEMBERS AND PENSIONS OF PRIVY COUNCILLORS.

On the order,

Second reading of Bill (No. 18) respecting annuities for certain privy councillors, and respecting the Senate and House of Commons.—Mr. Maclean (South York).

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Mr. Speaker, before the Bill is called I would like to ask the acting leader of the House if the government is prepared to fix a day for the discussion of this Bill. I have said to some of the gentlemen who feel interested in the Bill that I was prepared to have a day fixed and I would like to suggest that it be next Thursday.

Hon. WM. PATERSON (Minister of Customs). I am not in a position to fix a day for the discussion of the hon. gentleman's Bill, but if the Bill meditates, as I think it does, a rather radical change, if it is intended to introduce the principle that members of the House of Commons shall receive no indemnity hereafter, I would like to have the Prime Minister present while it is discussed.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I may say to the hon. gentleman, to remove all doubts as to that, that there is an additional clause in the Bill to restore the conditions that existed before the Bill of last session was passed. That clause is substantially as follows:

The sections repealed and amended respectively by chapter 43 of the statutes of 1905 are re-enacted and declared to be in force.

Mr. PATERSON. That changes it somewhat, of course. However, that is rather open to the objection which my hon. friend's paper has taken and which I think he has taken on the platform, that the measure is a grab or a steal. He proposes to repeal that and to enact a grab or steal for a lesser amount—is that the idea?

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. The hon. gentleman asks what is the intention of the Bill. I have told him, and if he likes to say that the previous condition was of the nature of a steal or grab, he may say so; I have not said so. I propose to restore the previously existing condition of affairs.

Mr. PATERSON. I certainly do not term what the hon. gentleman now proposes to return to a grab or a steal; I never did. Nor do I deem what he proposes to repeal to be anything of that kind. However, as the hon. gentleman is not going to introduce the radical principle of requiring members to serve without indemnity, whatever his proposition may be, which does not appear in his Bill, I would rather have the discussion on this question deferred until the Prime Minister is in his place. The hon. gentleman's Bill will appear very early on the order paper, and as he proposes to let it go over till next Thursday, I suggest that it be allowed to stand till then if he does not wish to take it up sooner, but I am unable to say that the Prime Minister will fix that day for its consideration.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. The question stands then?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I think the Minister of Customs does not quite grasp the intention of my hon. friend. He is quite sincere in proposing that we should all appear here without any indemnity. If his Bill becomes law that will certainly be the effect of it.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Not necessarily. Let the Minister of Justice express his opinion when the Bill comes before him. He is a little too quick in this criticism of his. The Bill will be in good shape when it is presented, and let him reserve his criticism. There was a good deal of discussion of this Bill last night when it was not before the House, but the Bill will be before the House and I think the Minister of Justice will somewhat change his view of this question before he gets through with it.

Order allowed to stand.

LOAN COMPANIES.

Mr. A. ZIMMERMAN moved second reading of Bill (No. 40) respecting certain Loan Companies.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

Mr. PATERSON moved that the Bill be referred to the Select Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. PATERSON. We have had three late sittings during the present week, and if there is no objection on the part of the House, as we shall likely have a late sitting to-morrow, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What business does the government expect to take to-morrow?

Mr. PATERSON. I fancy we will go into supply and take first the Department of Indian Affairs and finish that, and now that the report of the Department of the Interior has been brought down, the minister will go on with his estimates. Those of the Department of Inland Revenue will also be ready, and also those of the Minister of Justice with reference to penitentiaries, also those of the Fisheries Department, if we get that far.

Mr. LANCASTER. On behalf of the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. W. J. Roche) I desire to notify the government that when the motion is made for the House to go into Committee of Supply, he will move:

That all the words after the word 'that' to the end of the proposed motion be omitted and the following substituted therefor :

The public lands of Canada, situated in the provinces and territories west of the Great Lakes, should be made available for settlement with the least possible delay ;

That to this end all railway companies, corporations and persons now entitled to select any lands earned by way of subsidy should be obliged to complete their selection of such lands within the earliest possible period, and not later than the first day of November, 1906 ;

That in arranging for the disposal of the odd numbered sections not so selected and which will thus be released from all such subsidy claims provision should be made to preserve them solely for the bona fide settler and to protect them from the exploitation of the speculator ;

That the government should take such administrative measures and introduce into parliament such legislative enactments as may be necessary fully to carry into effect the terms of this resolution.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 9.30 p.m.

SUPPLY—RAILWAY LAND GRANTS.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister) moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). Mr. Speaker, prior to the adjournment of the House last night notice was given that, upon the motion for the House to go into Supply to-day, I would move a resolution regarding our western lands which have been set aside as a reservation within which railway companies are to select their land grants. The subject matter of the resolution is one, in my opinion, of such very great importance as to require the earnest and prompt attention of the government. Anything that tends to hamper the development of our western heritage, anything that has a tendency to restrict the rapid settlement of our vacant lands, is of serious import, and if it is removable or preventable, the government should not only be in a position to propose a remedy, but lose no time in applying that remedy. We are all acquainted with the fact that within recent years there has been a large influx of population into our western country. It is true that we have still a large portion of that country to be settled, but notwithstanding that, the fact of there being millions of acres set aside as a reservation, and practically tied up, within which railways are to select their land grants, and that selection being indefinitely postponed, must result detrimentally to the best interests of the country. According to a letter of the Department of the Interior of November 10, 1905, the companies whose land grants have have not as yet been selected are the Canadian Northern, the Manitoba Southeastern and the Qu'Appelle, Long Lake and Saskatchewan Railway and Steamship Company. It is true, the Minister of the Interior the other day in reply to a question asked in this House, stated that the land grant of the latter company has been completed, save and except that portion of it retained by this government as security for certain financial assistance rendered to the company. To that I will advert in a few minutes. According to the information received from the department on the 10th of November last, the total amount of land yet to be selected within this large reservation was 2,500,000 acres in round numbers. Were that the only amount of land tied up it would be of comparatively trifling moment; but when we take into consideration that there is an immense tract covering 11,000,000 or 12,000,000 acres tied up, so far as the odd-numbered sections are concerned, the government not being allowed to dispose of a single one of these odd-numbered sections until the 2,500,000 acres have been selected, it is patent to every body what very serious injury is inflicted on the country by the indefinite postponement of that selection.

It may be said that this is a condition of affairs of long standing. Well, that may be very true, but it was not the grievance in years gone by that it is to-day. There was then an immense area of lands to be settled, more than sufficient to satisfy the requirements of the incoming population of those days. Now, however that population is coming in more thickly and those lands are being selected, those homesteaders who have located on the even numbered sections are debarred from the privilege of acquiring the odd numbered sections unless at exorbitant prices out of all proportion to the value they would have were these odd numbered sections put upon the market by the government. It is to the interest of the railway companies to postpone indefinitely the selection of their land grants because the longer they postpone the selection the more valuable those lands are becoming. The more numerous are the homesteaders on the even numbered sections, the more valuable become the odd numbered sections. Consequently it is to the advantage of the railway companies to postpone the selection of their land grants until they can find purchasers. Once they take out patents those lands are subject to taxation so that until they do find purchasers the railway companies will not make their selection. The moment the lands are transferred to the companies that moment they become subject to municipal taxation, but while it is in the interest of the companies to defer taking out their patents until the even numbered sections are taken up, that policy is a serious detriment to the homesteaders who have settled on the even numbered sections. At present those homesteaders have to tax themselves doubly in order to provide themselves with modern facilities such as good roads and bridges and educational facilities or else do without those advantages. It is therefore very important that those odd numbered sections should be released and put at the disposition of the government at the earliest possible moment.

The Canadian Pacific Railway has completed its selection of its land grant. True there is in the neighbourhood of a million acres still to be patented by that company but inasmuch as the lands of the Canadian Pacific Railway are exempt from taxation even after they have been patented these lands need not enter into the discussion save in this respect. The premier of the new province of Saskatchewan during the last election declared on every platform that he was promised by the right hon, the Prime Minister that he would take up the question of the exemption of the Canadian Pacific Railway from taxation and have it settled to the satisfaction of the people in the west so that those lands would be no longer free from municipal taxation. I have looked in vain through Hansard to find any declaration to that effect by the right hon. gentleman but none the less that statement was made by the former member for Assiniboia (Mr. Scott). And if the right hon. the Prime Minister has made anywhere such a promise he ought to attempt to implement that pledge at the earliest moment so that those lands may be subjected to taxation. There is one feature of the Canadian Pacific Railway land policy which deserves commendation. That company has declared its intention not to sell in the future any land in large area to speculators but to reserve it for settlement by the individual settlers. That policy will be of great advantage to the incoming population, and it is certainly one I would also commend this government to adopt as soon as those odd numbered sections are open for settlement.

The Canadian Northern is an amalgamation of two companies—the old Winnipeg and Hudson Bay Railway Company and the Lake Manitoba Railway and Canal Company. Each of these had its land grant, but the two have been amalgamated into one under the name of the Canadian Northern Railway. The land grant of the Qu'Appelle, Long Lake and Saskatchewan Steamship and Railway Company has been disposed of except that portion reserved as security by the government, for certain financial assistance, upwards of 400,000 acres.

One million acres was sold to the Qu'Appelle, Long Lake and Saskatchewan Land Company. After selling to individual settlers about 150,000 acres out of that million, the remaining 850,000 was disposed of to the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company so that the total reserve land grant at present is in the ownership of the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company.

Then the Canadian Northern Railway in the spring of 1903 sold its entire land grant to the Saskatchewan Valley and Manitoba Land Company. This parliament has therefore in the selection of those lands, to look, not to the railway company, but the Saskatchewan Valley and Manitoba Land Company. This is the same company which purchased some 250,000 acres of land from the government at $1 an acre in the spring of 1902, the sale of which was coupled with certain settlement conditions. I might here call the attention of the minister to this fact that when he was asked the other day what number of acres of this 250,000 have been patented, his reply was 142,808 acres. Well, the hon. member for Saskatchewan also last session asked what number of acres of this 250,000 were patented and what was his reply? His reply was not 142,000 acres, as he stated this year, but 149,450·21 acres. How does the hon. minister account for this discrepancy? Nine months ago he declared that there were seven thousand more acres patented than there are to-day. There surely must be some explanation of that discrepancy. If he will refer to the Hansard of last year, he will find there his answer given according to what I have just stated. So that if 149,000 acres were selected and patented nine months ago, it is strange that since that time there has not been a single acre of land patented, although the reply of the hon. gentleman would indicate that there were to-day 7,000 acres of land less patented than there were nine months ago. Has this quantity of land reverted to the Crown or what is their explanation of the discrepancy?

The Saskatchewan Valley Land Company was the parent company. That company has transferred its land two or three different times since. The original company was known as the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company. That is the company which purchased the 1,000,000 acres from the Qu'Appelle, Long Lake and Saskatchewan Land Company. It then sold out to the Canadian Northern Prairie Land Company and this again disposed of its land to the Saskatchewan Valley and Alberta Land Company which is the present company doing business. But it is the same gentlemen who constituted the different companies and the exclusive selling agents are Davidson and McRea, so that we are practically dealing with the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company in the matter of these lands. That company was heralded as an organization different from and superior to all other land companies. We were told that they were bringing in American settlers in great numbers, and more than one hon. gentleman sought to convey the impression a couple of years ago that they were in a sense philanthropists who had undertaken to promote the settlement of land in a portion of country looked upon as an almost valueless arid waste. Well, I have here the pamphlet issued by this land company in which they advertise those lands for sale and they do not describe them as inferior in quality and unimportant in value as we were led to believe they were by the former members for Assiniboia and Saskatchewan if not by the Minister of the Interior. In this pamphlet the company state:

> The first purchase of the company included the entire land grant of the Qu'Appelle, Long Lake and Saskatchewan Railroad which, with the other holdings of the company made their aggregate acreage exceed 1,250,000 acres.

The other holdings of the company being 250,000 acres, purchased from this government, which, added to the 1,000,000 acres from the Qu'Appelle, Long Lake and Saskatchewan Railroad and Steamboat Company, made a total of 1,250,000 acres. They go on to say:

> The purchase was made in the spring of 1902—

That is very true.

That seems a remarkable declaration for this company, in view of the statement made by the Minister of the Interior that they have the right to select only 150,000 acres, and that they have patented only 142,000. How could they dispose of the whole? Nobody supposes that they have sold this land to individual settlers, as some hon. gentlemen seem to imagine. Their sale of these lands simply means that they have sold out their entire holdings to a subsidiary company.

> The sale of such a vast acreage in so short a time did much to attract the attention of land men throughout the United States to the importance of this Canadian invasion.

Not settlers, but 'land men.'

> In the spring of 1903, within one year from the date of their first purchase, the company acquired the entire land grant of the Canadian Northern Railroad, which exceeds 2,000,000 acres. In making these vast purchases, as might be supposed, we have secured them at the minimum price.
> We are the first holders and we are in a position and are to-day offering to the investor and to the settler lands at bottom prices. The Canadian government has set apart for the Canadian Northern Railroad a large district from which they have the right to select their land. In taking over this entire grant, this right of selection has been assigned to our company. Our privilege of selection differs from the ordinary railroad grant inasmuch as we are not obliged to take any specific number of sections in any one township.

In other words they are allowed to roam over this great reservation of eleven or twelve million acres, in order to secure 2,000,000 acres.

We have the privilege of selecting in the districts reserved for us any odd numbered sections in the township, excepting the two school sections, namely, sections number 11 and number 29.

They have the privilege, but they do not select until they find a purchaser. Only when they find a purchaser do they take out a patent, and thus they evade taxation.

That gives us the privilege of selecting any part or legal subdivision of any one of the odd numbered sections excepting the two school sections. With the large reserve which we have for the selection of this grant——

They harp continually upon the large reserve which they enjoy.

—and with the privilege we have of selecting as much or as little as we desire in any township, it will be apparent to the reader that it is the desire of the company to sell nothing but strictly first-class land. We are not interested in any second-class land. Our reserve contains several million acres of strictly No. 1 prairie land, and we have only to select from it 2,000,000 acres.

Owing to the conditions under which we acquire our land we, in every case, extend to the purchaser the privilege of making his own selections. This privilege cannot be over-estimated, especially to the purchaser of any considerable tract of land. Our district offers more than one grade of land. We are interested only in selling you the best.

It goes on :

If forfeited, the land reverts to us and we take no chances of any land coming back to us that is not strictly first class. We have no poor land to sell.

That does not harmonize very well with the expressions of the hon. gentlemen on the other side, when they describe this 'arid region' on which the Qu'Appelle, Long Lake, and the Saskatchewan Railway was located.

The reserve set apart for the grant of the Canadian Northern Railroad, from which this company has to select 2,000,000 acres, is all included in the great Canadian wheat belt. Our district, on account of its large area, offers to the intending settler or investor localities presenting different features.

After a description of the various districts in which their land grant is to be situated, they go on :

No settlement requirements are exacted from the purchaser.

That does not look as if this differed very materially from the ordinary land speculating company. They will sell to the settler in large or small blocks if he has the money to buy; they will sell to the investor, no matter how much land he wants or whether he wishes to put settlers on it or not, the only condition being that he shall pay the price for the land. If that land were of the quality described by some hon. members in this House, and if it has been culled over and there is nothing left to be selected save and except this 400,000 odd acres that the government have held as security for the earning of the $80,000 of annual subsidy, what kind of lands will the government have as security ? If they are only worth $1 an acre, the government will have very poor security, and if they are worth $10 an acre, this Saskatchewan Valley Land Company will have secured the best of it. In any case it is clear that the government is very remiss in having failed to select this 400,000 acres. It is their privilege to select it before the 2,500,000 acres are selected by the company. It has been stated, in answer to a question put by the hon. leader of the opposition, that the total amount of indebtedness of the Qu'Appelle, Long Lake and Saskatchewan Railroad and Steamboat Company is :

Interest..	392,047 08

Making in all more than a million and a half dollars. For this, as I have said, they have reserved 493,269.34 acres, which is held by the government as security for the earning of the subsidy of $80,000 per annum for twenty years granted to the company, under the provision of the Subsidy Act. The government does not consider it advisable in this case to get an estimate of the value of the land for the purpose of fixing a valuation. I can see that it would have proved rather embarrassing in view of the statements of some of their supporters as to the inferior quality of a large portion of the land. If the land is of the value the company places on the other lands in the reserve, then the lands to be held as security by the government should have been selected long ago. Now, the land area reserved by the government for the railway company included range 9 west of the 3rd meridian. It now includes range 26 west of the 3rd meridian. And in view of this fact, which I learned from the maps issued by the company, I cannot understand the answer of the Minister of the Interior the other day to a question by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster). That hon. gentleman asked whether there had been a transfer of any large blocks of land in exchange for any other land. The minister's reply, I think, was rather quibbling. But I can scarcely believe that this map would be issued at the instance of the Saskatchewan and Manitoba Railway Company to and including this range 26 if they had not secured possession of the land. We would like an explanation of how it comes that the company advertised that the area within which they have selected has been extended. I notice that the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway runs through this area, largely adding to the value of the territory and so to the value of the odd-numbered sections which the company will select. I would call the attention of the Minister of the Interior to a defence which has been put up by the organ of the ex-Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton), the Manitoba 'Free Press,' in an editorial on January 24, in which the attempt is made to justify the government in making this transfer. The reasons they gave were, first, that the original land reserve had been encroached upon by the Manitoba and Northwestern Railway in selecting their grant; also, that a great deal of land had been taken up by the forest reserves and some more by the Indian reserves. Taking into consideration the inferior quality of much that was left there was not sufficient land to fulfil the conditions of the contract, namely, land that was fairly fit for settlement; hence the transfer that has been made to them in the Territories. I would like to hear from the Minister of the Interior when he is speaking on this subject, as to whether there has been any additional land area added to the original area, and what lands included in such area have been granted in exchange, and what lands have been exchanged for them.

Now this parliament has dealt very generously with our railroad companies in the past. I do not find fault with that. It was an absolute necessity in order to secure railway privileges in that great western territory that this parliament should deal most generously with their land grants. Nor am I finding fault particularly with the large reserves which these railway companies had originally, and for which this government was not responsible. But that area has been added to, I think, on more than one occasion since the original grant was taken; and as I have pointed out, it is much more of a grievance to-day than in years gone by that the railway companies have not been compelled ere this to complete the selection of their land grant. It may be interesting to the members of this House if I read to them the amount of land that has been voted to railway companies by this parliament. The total area voted is 56,087,072 acres. Out of this amount the Canadian Pacific Railway sold back to the government 6,793,014 acres, leaving 49,294,058. Out of this 49,000,000, 29,986,826 acres have been earned; 13,227,232 acres have lapsed, that is the parties have not complied with the conditions under which they were voted this land grant, leaving in the neighbourhood of 6,000,800 acres now earnable voted to railways that have not as yet been constructed. So while parliament has dealt generously with them, the railway companies on the other hand have not been anxious to complete the selection of their land, largely because of the fact that they wished the land to escape taxation.

Now the resolution I have brought forward draws the attention of parliament to the fact of this large reservation being tied up, and also urges upon parliament to adopt a line of policy that I think will commend itself to every member of this House, no matter on which side he may sit, and one that I think the government will accept; because, if we believe their declarations in the past, it is one which in theory, at any rate, they have laid down as their policy. It asks first, that the companies may be compelled to make their selection at the earliest possible moment, naming the date at November 1st. I do not think the Minister of the Interior will object to that, because the other day, in answering a question, he declared that the Canadian Northern Railway had been notified in August, 1903, that they must complete the selection of their land grant by December 31, 1905, that is, they had twenty-eight and a half months in which to do it, and they have not completed their selection yet. Why have they not done so? Why have the government treated them so leniently? The Canadian Pacific Railway were only given eight months by this government in which to select their land grant for the branch lines, and only given four months for the main line grant. But the Saskatchewan Valley and Manitoba Land Company—and it is that company we have to deal with now and not with railway companies—were given twenty-eight and a half months, and they did not complete the selection of their lands within the specified time. It is true the Minister of the Interior declared that he expected that within the course of a few months the selection would be completely made; so that in that respect the date of November 1, allowing them all the coming summer season, should be quite sufficient.

The other portion of the resolution deals more particularly with the disposition of the released odd numbered sections. That is a matter for the government to take up. What we are more desirous of securing is that these lands should not fall into the hands of speculators, that they should not be purchased in large blocks by speculators for the purpose of enriching themselves, but that they should be reserved for the individual settler coming in to make his home on our western prairies. These are two principles that I think the government should accept. It is true that the ex-Minister of the Interior, when speaking in this House three years ago on the National Transcontinental Railway Bill, said that in the course of a few years there would be some 50,000,000 acres liberated, and he had no doubt that in the new territory at least 20,000,000 of these acres would be opened up within a specified time, and be worth $3 an acre. He said it was his intention to introduce legislation into this parliament for the disposition of those odd numbered sections in the near future. The Minister of the Interior has not introduced that legislation yet, although three years have gone by since that time. Therefore the government must have by this time made up their minds as to what line of policy they intend to pursue, which however, they have not disclosed to this House or to the country. I may add in reference to the price, that it would be a great benefit to the settler if these lands were in possession of the government because he would receive them at a more reasonable rate. In looking over the last price list of this land company who have possession of the lands at the present time, I find that they have advertised their lands for sale at $8 to $12 an acre. I am certain much of this land is not worth that at the present time, and many of the incoming settlers will be held up for enormous prices over and above what the government would charge them had the government been selling these lands. In accordance with the facts I have placed before the House, I therefore beg to move the following resolution :

That all the words after the word 'that' to the end of the proposed motion be omitted and the following substituted therefor :

The public lands of Canada, situated in the provinces and territories west of the Great Lakes, should be made available for settlement with the least possible delay ;

That to this end all railway companies, corporations and persons now entitled to select any lands earned by way of subsidy should be obliged to complete their selection of such lands within the earliest possible period, and not later than the first day of November, 1906 ;

That in arranging for the disposal of the odd numbered sections not so selected and which will thus be released from all such subsidy claims provision should be made to preserve them solely for the bona fide settler and to protect them from the exploitation of the speculator ;

That the government should take such administrative measures and introduce into parliament such legislative enactments as may be necessary fully to carry into effect the terms of this resolution.

Mr. F. L. SCHAFFNER (Souris). In rising to second the motion of my hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. W. J. Roche) I may say that it contains principles with which I have been in sympathy a great many years. To my mind that motion, divested of verbiage, means putting obstacles in the way of the speculator and removing them from the way of the settler. That to my mind is the real sentiment contained in that motion. I can scarcely understand how any one who has lived in that western country for many years, more especially in the early days, can feel anything but great sympathy with a motion of that kind. It has been said, and I believe truly, that our Canadian Northwest is the last west. If that be true, and I believe it is, then I believe the government and all other parties who have any authority in connection with the disposal of the lands of that country should be very zealous to get and protect the actual settler. I can quite understand members on the other side of the House saying to this side of the House : You were the originators of this scheme of disposing of these lands in the Northwest to railways and other speculators. I would draw your attention and the attention of this House to the fact that times have changed. When the Canadian Pacific Railway went into that country it was an absolute necessity, and I may say that notwithstanding the fact that the Canadian Pacific Railway was given a great deal of land, the necessity of giving them so much of it was added to, I believe, by the manner in which our friends opposite deprecated that country at that time. The Conservative party who were in power at that time must be given the credit for the wise policy of opening up that western country and I say, and I think it cannot be contradicted, that they received absolutely no assistance but a great deal of hindrance from the members of the Liberal party of the day. I shall just refer you to one sentence, uttered by a gentleman who was no doubt the leader of men who then sat on this side of the House. Mr. Blake, who in one of his addresses, said :

Granting that you open up that country, granting that you get your railroad into that country, it will be necessary for you to have 3,000,000 people there before your railway will even pay for the axle grease.

We have not yet nearly 3,000,000 people there, but we are not only paying for the axle grease of the Canadian Pacific Railway but we have another almost transcontinental line, the Canadian Northern, and we have also the road that our friends are building at the present time, the Grand Trunk Pacific. I may say that there is a little difference between the undertaking of our friends opposite in connection with the Grand Trunk Pacific and the work of the Conservative party in connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway. I have never heard a Conservative during my campaign nor since I came into this House say that another road was not necessary. Any objection or any criticism the Conservative party has given to the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway has been in reference to ways and means. We believed, Sir, we had a better way, a way and means more in the interests of the people of this country than they had, but we never objected to the building. I may say that notwithstanding the Conservative party had to give large tracts of land in order that that country might be opened up—and no one denies that we had to have the railway, which was the only way of getting our products out of that rich country—we had to give large tracts of lands for the building of railways. But to my mind the time has come when no railway company in that country should receive any grants of land and without detaining the House I am going to prove that no railway company requires a grant of land from this parliament in order to enter that country. We had a very novel experience in our town last summer. Two men came to the town one day after dinner and asked the mayor to call a meeting. No one knew what it was about, but when they got us there, these two gentlemen said: Sirs, we want the privilege of building a railway through your town. Now is that not a novel experience? They said: We do not come here asking for any bonus, we do not come here asking you to pay for any right of way, we simply want you to give us the privilege of coming into this town and we ask you to appoint a committee of three men who may assist us to select a site for our station, and may get options, and prices on the land where we are to place our stations and where we wish to go around the town. Now Sir, that road was none other than the Great Northern—as we say in the west 'Jim Hill's road.' Jim Hill does not build roads for fun. He has an idea that with people coming to that country the products of the country will be sufficient to produce freight for the roads already there and also to make the building of a new railroad without a bonus a paying proposition. I understand that not only is this road coming into our town but that during next summer, before parliament meets again, we will have at least three railroads from the south coming into that country absolutely without bonus. He is going to do more than that, he is going on to Brandon, he is going on, as I hear, to Hudson's bay, and I would like for one moment to turn aside, to deviate a little from the subject before us, and say that that is a point in which we western people are very much interested. I hope I will be excused if I say that I am of the opinion and believe that it is the opinion of a great many people in that western country, that there never yet has been an unprejudiced inspection made of that great sea, the Hudson's bay, as to its facilities for transportation. You ask me why I think that? We think, rightly or wrongly, because of eastern prejudice. They are afraid, my friends here from Montreal and the eastern provinces are afraid that traffic will be diverted from their roads, and taken to the Hudson's bay. Now, Sir, I want to say that I will be pleased at any time to devote any amount of money that will be properly, economically and judiciously expended to improve the harbour of Montreal, to open up the River St. Lawrence. I want to see Montreal made a national harbour and will always vote for it, but on the other hand, I do not want eastern men to obstruct the Hudson's bay road. Talk about interfering with the rainmaker and Providence; I believe you people are interfering with Providence, when you are trying to keep us, or it seems to me you are trying to keep us, from getting to Hudson's bay. I do not see how any one can look at that inland sea and not come to the opinion that Providence had a very wise thing in His mind when He put Hudson's bay there. It was to carry out the products, not only of Manitoba and the Northwest Territories, but also, as Jim Hill realizes, from the Northern States, and carry these products out through that country. As I said before we are willing to grant all the money you want for the opening up of the St. Lawrence, but we want you not to put any obstacles in the way of building a road to Hudson's bay that we may get our products out as cheaply as possible. This is no new motion that has been moved here to-day. In looking up this question I find that when the senator from Portage la Prairie (Mr. Watson) was in this House he made, to my mind, a very wise motion. He moved that the Canadian Pacific Railway should make a return to parliament of the lands that had been sold up to April 1, 1896; he said that the Canadian Pacific Railway were in the habit of selling their lands to speculators; that these speculators neglected to get their agreement registered and that consequently they were not compelled to pay taxes, thus throwing all the burden of the cost of schools and roads and other municipal charges on to the ordinary ratepayer. The reasons then given by Mr. Watson are just as applicable to-day. When the Canadian Pacific Railway charter was amended in 1896 it was provided that the company should at the beginning of each session of parliament supply a return of all lands sold, the names of the purchasers, and the dates of sales. By means of this provision the municipalities were able to get a return of the lands that were sold each year, and that resulted in considerable benefit to them. Mr. Watson is no longer a member of this House; he has been transferred to a place of quiet repose.

Mr. AMES. Only sometimes.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. As my hon. friend (Mr. Ames) suggests, the Senate is only sometimes the place of repose. However that may be, Senator Watson has gone there and ever since we have not heard much from him about this question. The Hon. David Mills, and the Hon. Edward Blake expressed opinions somewhat similar to those of Senator Watson, and my object in referring to these gentlemen is that I want to raise this question of the disposition of our Northwest lands to a higher plane than that of mere party politics. I shall not go into details, as my hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. Roche) has dealt ably with the whole question, but I do say that if you take the map of the Alberta and Saskatchewan Land Company you will see that their lands occupy a very fertile belt. If you take a line running southeast to northwest from the Red River valley, you have 400 miles or a little more; you have the timber belt lying to the northeast, the grazing belt lying to the southwest, and the great wheat belt (which produces the staple product of that country) lying in the district where they are likely to get their land grant. I firmly believe that this government or any government will make a tremendous mistake if it does not give these lands in the west to the actual settler. The day of the speculator has passed. It is no use for the supporters of the government to tell western men that it is the policy of the government to give the lands to the actual settlers. It may be their policy, but like a good many of their policies they have one policy on paper and another policy in practice, so far as the administration of the great west is concerned. I am surprised that the members from the Northwest particularly, do not take more interest in this question. There are not many of them here now who were here supporting the government last year; the most of them seem to have gone to their reward for work done last session, and as those who remain seem to be in the preparatory stage I suppose they are not in a position to speak out their minds. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that it is becoming a serious question in the Northwest as to whether our lands shall be given to speculators or whether they shall be given to to the actual settler. This is not a provincial question; it is not a question in which the people of Manitoba and the Northwest Territories alone are interested; it is a question of very great importance to every province in the Dominon, because your sons are going from Ontario (more perhaps from Ontario than from any other province) and they are going from Quebec and from the maritime provinces as well. If they go up into that country and find these odd sections reserved in order that they may be sold to speculators, these Canadian settlers from the east are going to experience a great many of the trials and hardships which the pioneers of Manitoba experienced in earlier days. Let us look well to the west; let us preserve that fertile territory for the people. It is said to be the policy of the government—and if it is I shall be happy to support it—that as soon as the odd numbered sections are brought into the market the first choice will be to the settlers living on the adjoining sections. That is a good policy. What I want to make plain is that the whole purpose of this motion is to keep out the speculator and to give a chance to the actual settler. And, Mr. Speaker, I care not from what country the actual settler comes. I am told that to-day one in every twelve of the population is a Galician. I would a little rather see them come from Northern Europe, but, Sir, I never intend either in the west or here to stand up and make very strong objections to these people. They are not coming in as large proportions as the people of other countries. We do not ask the government to bring in men with money particularly. But, we look to the government to see that the settlers in that country should be a sturdy and moral people, and if they are we will give them a good welcome. But when you get these settlers in the west, do not let them have to go to a land agent or any one else to buy land the value of which has been inflated by speculators. Let us have the land for the people; the land for the actual settler and not for the speculator.

Mr. J. G. TURRIFF (East Assiniboia). I do not intend to detain the House long, but there are one or two things I would like to say on this question. Judging from the remarks made by the mover and seconder of the motion there seem to be two points in the policy of the government which they particularly criticise—one is, that the railway companies have not been made to select their lands as quickly as they should have selected them, and the other is, that the government has disposed of certain of the lands to speculators. I would like to point out in the first place that practically speaking everything that has been done towards compelling the railway companies to select their lands has been done by this present government. For something like 20 years the Canadian Pacific Railway owned all their lands; they had I think earned all their lands prior to this government coming into power, and practically they had been compelled by the previous government to select only the few hundred thousand acres which they had sold to the actual settlers. But, as soon as this government came into power they immediately took the necessary steps to make the Canadian Pacific Railway and the other railway companies select their lands and with the result that a few years ago, in one year, I think some 8,000,000 or 9,000,000 or 10,000,000 acres were patented to the Canadian Pacific Railway by the government.

The same thing occurred with the Calgary and Edmonton Railway Company. They were made to select their lands, and the patents were issued direct to the company, irrespective of whether the company had sold those lands to settlers or other purchasers or not. In reference to the Qu'Appelle and Long Lake Company, the same course had not been followed, but for what reason? Simply because that company objected to the lands. They made the claim that the lands that had been set apart for them were not lands fairly fit for settlement and that they were not obliged to take them. They had been given quite a large selection; and when they made that claim, what did the government do? The government said: We will allow you to select from any odd-numbered sections remaining undisposed of in the whole province of Manitoba and the whole of the present provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta. The government went still further, and offered to allow them to select even-numbered sections as well as odd-numbered sections in vast tracts of the present provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta ; so that if they wanted land in the sections suitable for ranching, they could have it in blocks. What was the reply of the company ? They said : The land is not fairly fit for settlement, and they refused to accept it. What is more, that company offered to sell the lands back to the present government at $1.25 per acre. Reference was made by the hon. mover of this motion to the fact that the present owners of the Qu'Appelle and Long Lake Railway Company's land grant, the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company, put a high valuation on the land, and were selling it at high prices. He also criticised the fact that the government had sold them 250,000 acres at $1 per acre. Let me point out this fact, that that same company bought 500,000 acres of that same land from the Qu'Appelle and Long Lake Railway Company, in which the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler), is largely interested ; and everybody recognizes, I think, that he is a good business man, that he knows the value of land, and that he has been connected with that western country for the last twenty years ; and the price paid for that land by the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company was $1.52 an acre, without any conditions of settlement whatever. The Saskatchewan Valley Land Company got that land from these good business men cheaper than it bought the 250,000 acres from the government, because in regard to the latter the company had to fulfil certain conditions. It was not sold to land speculators without settlement conditions, but they were compelled in each township to put twenty settlers on free homesteads and twelve other settlers on the lands which they might purchase from the government, making a total of thirty-two settlers in each township before they had the right to purchase the balance of the lands in those townships at the rate of $1 per acre. These onerous conditions made the land which they bought from the government cost a great deal more than the land which they bought from the railway company at $1.52 an acre, or even at $1.65, which they paid for a portion of the land. So that the statement that the land was sold to speculators is not correct. As a matter of fact they have put enough settlers on the lands to doubly, yes, five times, fulfil their conditions. In many cases, when they took the settlers to the lands they found that they had not been surveyed, with the result that they located the settlers in townships outside of the tract set apart for them; so that they put in double the number of settlers they were required to put in. In other parts, where they purchased the railway lands, they put settlers to the extent of between 5,000 and 10,000 on lands that were not included in the colonization lands which they bought from the government. So that the government did not sell to speculators, but to people who brought in settlers, and a good class of settlers.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I thought it was the Department of Immigration that brought these settlers in.

Mr. TURRIFF. There is no doubt that the Department of Immigration had been bringing in settlers by the thousand each year, and that some of these settlers settled in that tract ; but this company, of its own efforts, has brought many thousands of settlers into that part of the country. Reference was made to the fact that the larger tract was given to the Saskatchewan Valley and Manitoba Land Company, the successors of the Canadian Northern Railway Company, in which to select their lands. I can give a little information on that point. They were given the right to select 250,000 acres west of the South Saskatchewan river, in exchange for lands which this government got from the Canadian Northern Railway Company. This government secured from the Canadian Northern Railway Company all the odd sections that were included in the Doukhobor reservation, and the odd sections in the Riding Mountain timber reservation.

Mr. FOSTER. When were these lands got ?

Mr. TURRIFF. They were got from the Canadian Northern Railway Company six or eight years ago. The government was to give them other lands in exchange, and it gave them the right to select lands west of the South Saskatchewan river. That accounts for the extra area that was given to them in which to select their lands ; but they were only entitled to select a limited area, some 250,000 acres, if my memory serves me. That accounts for the whole matter ; there was nothing further given them. In regard to the Qu'Appelle and Long Lake land grant, I think it is within the memory of most of the members of this House, the old members at any rate, that that company had taken action in the courts to compel the government to pay them cash for the land in lieu of selecting land. I think that proves conclusively that the government made a reasonable deal with the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company, a good deal better than the railway company made. There is no doubt that since that time there has been a great increase in the value of the lands, and that makes it a little easier now to criticise the deal. But I would like to point out here that the government preceding the present government went into a number of colonization schemes —they had twenty-six of them—and they did not give the colonization companies poor land which could not be sold in any other way, but gave them the choice lands throughout the whole country. Yet all of those twenty-six colonization companies put together did not bring in as many settlers as this one company has brought in since 1902.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to ask my hon. friend a question. I do not as yet understand how he is able to distinguish between the settlers brought in by means of the $600,000 or $700,000 that we pay for immigration and those brought in by this company. How does he distinguish them?

Mr. TURRIFF. I could not go and pick out what settlers in one section were brought in by the Immigration Department and what were brought in by the company, but I can say this, that the methods adopted by this company and all Americans who are dealing in lands are these.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Was this an American company?

Mr. TURRIFF. A good many of the members of that company were Americans and the settlers they brought in were practically all Americans. The way they disposed of the lands was this: They sell a man 10,000 acres at wholesale prices. This man would go back to the part of the country where he was known and would arrange to sell that land to settlers and bring them out and put them on the lands. In that way they directly brought in a large number of settlers irrespective of anything done by the Immigration Department.

As regards that part of the motion calling on the government to dispose of the lands to actual settlers, I have a great deal of sympathy with that object, but that is just what the government has been doing all along. The government has been disposing of the land to actual settlers. From what I know of the matter, I think it would be very advisable that the government should get their railway land grants cleaned out before they start disposing of the odd-number sections. Those railway companies are entitled to land fairly fit for settlement and for some years to come there are lots of even numbered sections opened for every body, open for free homestead entries, so that nobody need go without free homesteads on the open prairie at present. If the government decided to dispose of the odd sections directly to settlers I think it would be a good move.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. About how many homesteads does the hon. gentleman think are remaining at present?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Available?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Yes.

Mr. TURRIFF. Last year it took some 5,000,000 to satisfy the homestead entries. This year it will probably take 6,000,000 For three or four years there are lots of clear, open prairie for homesteads, and after that, for quite a number of years, there will still be lots of land to homestead, but more or less covered with scrub and some timber.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If that be the case, how is it that the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company and the subsidiary companies are selling their land at from $8 to $12 an acre?

Mr. TURRIFF. I cannot answer that any more than I can tell you why the Canadian Pacific Railway have put up their lands to $15 an acre. They claim that they are trying to keep it out of the hands of the speculators, but they are putting up the prices higher than any other company holding lands. At present there is such a rush to the country that people are looking forward to the future and land has been going up in price largely the last few years. Therefore I think it would be good policy on the part of the government to get all the railway land grants cleared up first of all before they begin to dispose of the odd-numbered sections. There is one point I would call attention to, and that is that the lands given to the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company, held by the railway people with whom my hon. friend from West Toronto (Mr. Osler) is connected, were for many years considered of no value. For ten years after the railway was built from Regina to Prince Albert, and when there was a train two or three times a week through that country, you could go from the town of Lumsden to where Saskatoon now is and find scarcely a homestead taken up. Not even the quarter sections on which the stations were built were homesteaded. It was considered a great drawback to immigration and the progress of the country that that land should be lying in that unoccupied condition, and that was one of the reasons why the government made the deal with the Saskatchewan Valley Land people, which induced these people to undertake to put settlers on that land that for ten years had lain vacant.

Mr. hon. friend made some reference to the Hudson Bay Railway. I hope and trust that that railway will be built in the near future. I also hope and trust it will be built without the expenditure of one dollar by either of the three provinces interested. These new provinces have each been given a subsidy, but not for the purpose of subsidizing railways, and I consider it would be the duty of this House to subsidize any railroads that may be necessary. I hope, therefore, it is the intention of the government to subsidize this line. I would also point out that the land grant given to the Hudson Bay Railway Company was given by our friends opposite, so that I am sure they at all events will have no objection to that railroad being built with the assistance of the federal government rather than with the assistance of the local governments of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Prince Albert. I agree with my hon. friend from Souris (Mr. Schaffner) that that railroad is a necessity and will be a valuable additional route for the whole of that western country. Whether the navigation be for four or five months, it would be a great advantage to have that railroad built.

I do not wish to take up further the time of the House, save to repeat that, under the circumstances, I think we can fairly and reasonably leave this matter in the hands of the government who have handled it so well in the past. I may say that during the last Dominion campaign I heard no complaint at all, in any shape or form, regarding the way in which the government have administered the lands of this country, and in that respect the contrast was great with the conditions which used to exist in the old days when hon. gentlemen opposite were in office.

Mr. R. S. LAKE (Qu'Appelle).—My hon. friend who has just sat down spoke in his closing words about the Hudson Bay Railway Company. It seemed to me that he spoke by inspiration. He certainly appeared most hopeful and to have very little doubt that this railway would be constructed in the near future. That reminds me that during the recent election in the province of Saskatchewan a very definite statement was made by the premier of that province, Hon. Walter Scott, in his address to the electors. He said:

> We have been obeying the direction of the Saskatchewan Liberal convention to urge the Hudson's Bay road project on the federal authorities and not without success. I have now received assurance that the Dominion government admit this project to be a national undertaking and that they will not deny their responsibility. In other words the Dominion government will take measures to procure the construction of a railway from a point in Saskatchewan to the Hudson's bay.

I need not say that I hail that statement with infinite delight; and I take it that it is a definite fact that the government have made that promise to Hon. Walter Scott. It was foreshadowed in a speech made by the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) to the electors of Moosomin, in which, after criticising the policy of the provincial rights party, which called—in desperation it seemed to me—for the building of that road by the joint efforts of the Northwest provinces, he said that that was a Dominion work and that the Dominion government would not deny their responsibility in connection with it. That is a change of attitude from the old days when the Minister of the Interior himself moved a resolution in the legislative council of which he was a member, seconded by Mr. Ross. That resolution was as follows:—

> That it is therefore advisable that steps should be taken by the government of the Northwest Territories towards joint action with the government of Manitoba, having for its object the construction of a railway to Hudson's bay to be constructed and operated under local control.

I believe that the Minister of the Interior had the right idea then, and I am sorry that the project then outlined and advocated by him, has not been advocated by him in the same terms since. However, as we are now, apparently definitely promised by the government that they will undertake this great work, we are all satisfied that they should do so and save this expense to the people of the Northwest.

And, while I have happened to refer to the election address of Hon. Walter Scott to the electors of Saskatchewan, I would also like to express the delight I had in the announcement that he made as to the policy of this government with respect to wiping out the exemption from taxation now enjoyed by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. This is what he said:

> I have Sir Wilfrid Laurier's promise that his government will bring about the complete abrogation of these exemptions and free the lands of Saskatchewan in this respect.

We are delighted to hear this, and I can only urge upon the Prime Minister that it should be done at once. A heavy burden we have had to bear for years, and the sooner we are relieved of it through the action of the government the better pleased we shall be. I hope that in the course of this debate, the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) will supplement the statements of Mr. Scott with his own assurance on the subject.

There is just one other matter that has occurred to me in looking up these old questions—and it was brought very forcibly to my mind by the hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff)—that it was a Conservative government that had promised the land to the Hudson's Bay Railway Company and that he himself in those old days was also a warm advocate of the granting of lands to railway companies. I have here a resolution which was moved by himself on the 24th of July, 1884. It was as follows:—

> Moved by Mr. Turriff, seconded by Mr. McDowell: That a Liberal policy on the part of the government towards railways in the way of making grants of land, would most conduce to the opening up and development of the country, and would therefore recommend that the grants of land already made or that may be made in the future for railway purposes in the Northwest Territories at one dollar per acre, be made free grants.
> That this matter be referred to the executive council to be dealt with.

And it was not merely the member for East Assiniboia who held that opinion in those days. The Minister of the Interior

(Mr. Oliver) himself was in the legislative council at that time, and the resolution passed without division so I think we may fairly assume that he was also quite on the right track in those days according to the circumstances which then faced the people. Circumstances have altered; times have changed; things are very different at the present time.

Now with regard to the motion that is before us, I do not think that there is any member of this House who has the interest of the great Northwest at heart who will dissent from the proposition set forth in this resolution. To my mind it is the case that the grant of large tracts of land, in the form in which they were granted to railway companies for the opening of the Northwest, necessary as it was at the time, has been a very great detriment to the progress of the country. It created conditions which conduced to slow progress for many years. The country, as every hon. member understands, was surveyed on the checker-board system into square miles or sections. These were numbered consecutively, and every alternate section in the best portion of the country was reserved either for school purposes or for land grants to railway companies. The majority of the even-numbered sections were reserved for homesteading, while two of them were reserved for the Hudson's Bay Company. It will easily be seen that the ordinary homesteaders who came in without sufficient money to purchase lands from the railway companies and land corporations had to settle far apart—that is they had to settle on the alternate sections. This rendered settlements sparse. I can speak from some little personal experience on that subject, having settled in that country some twenty-three or more years ago. We in those days with our sparse settlement had to build up those religious and social institutions which must exist in every civilized country. It was a very great detriment to us to have such thin settlement all through the country. Further than that in the opening up of our roads, building our bridges, and so on, we had practically to tax ourselves double owing to the fact that the odd numbered sections were in the hands of the railway companies and exempt from taxation. And again in the matter of schools it was a very great hardship to us to find that in an area of five or six miles square we could get practically only about half the land for purposes of taxation—a very serious drawback to the people of the country. Now I say that we should profit by that experience in the past, and we should not allow for one day longer than we can help it any odd-numbered sections which we are not bound to keep back, to remain withdrawn from actual settlement. I consider the time has come when the situation demands the release of the odd-numbered sections which have been tied up, and for action to be taken to make them available for settlement.

The homesteads even now are getting comparatively scarce, and one has to go some distance from the railway in order to get them, and even then one is not able to get the very best. The hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) treated that part of the question rather airily. He spoke of 6,000,000 acres being homesteaded during the past year. I presume as the country continues to settle up the increase in the number of homesteaders to be provided for yearly will be in arithmetical progression, and year after year we may fairly expect a larger number of settlers to come in until all these homestead lands are taken up. I have made a calculation which I think is pretty accurate, that there are only about 12,000,000 acres of land still available for homesteading in the settled parts of the North-west, 12,000,000 acres of the best land. I listened last night to a very interesting lecture by the hon. member for St. Antoine Division, Montreal, (Mr. Ames), and I quite agree with the figures he gave as to the homestead land available, namely, that there are only about 12,000,000 acres of the best homestead land left, and that in two years the whole of that will practically be exhausted. After those two years, men who require free lands or come in with small capital, will have to take inferior lands. For my part I believe that only a very small portion of that whole western country is not fit for settlement; nearly all will ultimately be good settling land, but you will have to have railways pretty close to the people. You cannot send the settlers 20 or 30 miles away from the railway, and expect them also to take up the poorer land. If you do that you will very soon check the progress of the country. The settlement on the poorer class of land and in districts more distant from the present railways, must come later on. For the present we want to put within reach of all homesteaders coming in the very best land available. We also want to enable the settlers to settle as closely together as possible in order that they may be better able to build up their institutions, and I consider it is necessary for that purpose that we should have these odd numbered sections opened up at the earliest possible moment. As has been pointed out, the great land corporations of that country have been increasing the prices of their land month by month and almost week by week. We have seen how the prices asked for these lands are going up. Now what will happen when all the homesteads are taken up, and the only land that is procurable in that country has to be purchased from these great land corporations? Why, there will be an immediate stoppage of immigration, at any rate, of that class of immigrants who are not able to pay enormous prices for their land; whereas, if the government would take such action as will render these lands available for settlement at moderate prices and on moderate conditions, they will be able to compete with the great land corporations and to keep their prices down to a moderate figure, and prevent them being constantly pushed up in a way which would be likely to check immigration in the near future.

Another point I would like to make is in regard to the question which has been raised relative to patenting lands and so rendering them liable to taxation. It was in August, 1903, I think, that the then Minister of the Interior declared that in a few weeks, I think he said, arrangements would be made by which these claims would be finally settled. He proposed then at an early day to submit a measure providing for the disposition of the lands so as to render them available for settlement by the actual settler. Well, that is a considerable time ago, and we are still waiting. Even yet we find that some of these companies have not yet selected their lands, and a considerable number have not yet patented their lands. The hon. member for East Assiniboia told us that the Canadian Pacific Railway had to get a move on in this respect. Quite right, and we are glad to hear they have had to make a selection of their lands. But I understand these lands have not yet been patented, or a considerable portion of them. I think it would be a good thing for the government to put on an extra force of men to issue patents for their lands at the earliest possible day to everybody who has earned a patent. I think it is false economy to allow the issue of patents to drag along as it is doing now. Every day that the issue of a patent is deferred means in many cases that the collection of taxes in those sections is also deferred.

With regard to the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company, the hon. member did not state that it was being pushed to get its lands patented at once. He did not reply to my hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. W. J. Roche) who pointed out that, according to the answers given by the Minister of the Interior, apparently fewer lands are patented to that company to-day, of the even numbered sections, than there were a year ago, or fourteen months ago, and apparently the company is still at a standstill as regards these even numbered sections. They had earned in the neighbourhood of 158,000 acres of homestead lands last year, and they have still earned only about that same number. We find that there is no effort being made on the part of the government to inspect these lands, and to see that they have earned them. To my mind the company are not likely to come to the government and say : We have earned another block of land which we want to pay you for—the company would rather hang back in order to delay paying taxes. It stands to reason that is the course they would take. Yet we find the Department of the Interior made the last inspection, I think in January of last year, nearly fifteen months ago. It seems to me that these people should be forced to take out patents for the lands that they have earned and have a right to at once. Let them contribute their fair share of taxation to the development of the country. We have now been waiting nearly three years to see the promise of the Minister of the Interior carried out, when he said that the government intended to introduce legislation to dispose of these odd numbered sections which were to be set free at that time. I think it is time that the government should take steps to see that the selection of lands is completed, and that patents for them are issued immediately, in order that the lands may be released and made available for the actual settler on reasonable terms and conditions. I trust, therefore, that this House will agree to the motion which has been moved by the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Roche). The member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) declared that he would sooner leave the whole question in the hands of the government. I presume from that that he intends to vote against the motion. Now is there any single portion of that motion with which the member for East Assiniboia is not in accord ? If there is I think he should come out straight and say to what portion of it he objects and not content himself with saying : Oh, I think I will sit down and rely on the government to do what this motion simply calls on them to do.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). I am sure the House and the country, and particularly the western country, is to be congratulated upon the motion which is before the House, considering where it comes from, and upon the addresses that have been made in support of that motion. For many years, ever since, in fact, the responsibility of administering the affairs of the Northwest has been laid upon this parliament, there has been a division of opinion between the two sides of the House as to what should be the method of administration of the lands of that country. It is certainly a pleasant thing, and I must say particularly pleasant to myself under all the circumstances, that now at last, after some twenty-five years of division of opinion, we are unanimous and we believe on both sides of the House in the policy of the land for the settler. My hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. Roche) said that this was an important question. It is an important question. It is a question of the very last and highest importance to the Northwest and to all Canada. It must be a matter of the deepest regret to Canada that this agreement was not reached many many years ago. The resolution, as it stands, expresses, in fairly good terms, the past and present, and so far as I know it, the future policy of this government in the administration of the western lands. I may be asked: what is the evidence of that outstanding difference of opinion that has always prevailed between the two sides of the House in regard to this matter? I find here, so far back as the year 1880, that on the 5th or 6th of April, the following resolution was moved in parliament by Mr. Charlton and seconded by Mr. Schreiber:

That in the opinion of this House, the proper policy with reference to the disposition of the public lands of Canada should be, so far as practicable, to sell such lands to actual settlers only, on reasonable conditions of settlement, and in lots or quantities limited to the area which can be reasonably occupied by a settler, and that the sale of public lands to speculators, free from conditions of settlement, is impolitic and calculated to injuriously affect the settlement of the country by keeping large quantities of land locked up for years, and by obliging the settler thereon, ultimately to pay a price much larger than that which is paid into the public treasury for the same.

That was the expression of the policy and the principle of the Liberal party of that day, twenty-six years ago. Here is the position of their opponents, the gentlemen of whom our friends on the other side are the successors in place and in principle.

It was moved by Mr. Domville, seconded by Mr. Wallace, of Norfolk, that

This House do now proceed to the orders of the day.

But it was moved in amendment to the amendment by Mr. White of Cardwell, afterwards Minister of the Interior, under the party of the opposition, seconded by Mr. Colby, who is not now a member of the House but who was in recent years, that

The policy of the government for the disposal of the public lands in Manitoba and the Northwest is well calculated to promote the rapid settlement of that region and to raise moneys required for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway without further burthening the people, and that it deserves the support and approval of this House.

And that principle of the land for the speculator was carried by a vote of 120 to 40.

Mr. FOSTER. That was rather the lands for the railways.

Mr. OLIVER. The result of that motion, as any man who has lived in the Northwest, as many of us have, during all these years, knows, was most disastrous to the welfare of our western country and to the welfare of Canada. Because of the principle there enunciated and because of that principle being carried into effect under the then administration, that western country, which today is the foundation of the greatness and prosperity of this Dominion stood still for fifteen years and was a drag or considered to be a drag upon Canada. It is a happy thing, I say, that, after all these years, we have come to a unanimous choice in regard to this matter of administration. Might I call the attention of the House and the country to the fact that this decision has been reached on very short notice by our friends on the other side. I fancy it might almost be said it has been come to on the spur of the moment, because it is only a matter of two or three months since we had an appeal to public opinion, or I might perhaps more correctly call it an appeal to prejudice, in the Northwest in the provincial elections. There were figuring in that contest the Liberal party and the Conservative party. It is true that in one of the provinces the Conservative party assumed, very properly, I fancy, a disguise. They were, very properly, ashamed of their name and their record. But although the name was changed, the men were the same. The battle cry of the Conservative party, if I may be permitted to use that name in this connection—in these two provinces, only three months ago, was, as it was in this House of parliament in the year 1880, 'the land for the speculator.' The leader of what has turned out to be the opposition in Alberta and the leader of what has also turned out to be the opposition in Saskatchewan announced from platform after platform that their policy was to sell lands in the west to the highest bidder in order to secure money for expenditure in that country.

Mr. LAKE. May I ask a question?

Mr. OLIVER. They spoke of the sale of millions of acres of land, they issued literature in which they declared that the policy of this government in giving the land free to settlers was robbery of these provinces, and they headed their document 'Public Lands Robbery.'

Mr. LAKE. May I ask a question? Does the minister say that that was the policy announced by Mr. Haultain.

Mr. OLIVER. I most assuredly say so.

Mr. LAKE. Has he ever heard that policy announced by him——

Mr. OLIVER. No, I did not hear him speak.

Mr. LAKE. And can he produce documents to show it was Mr. Haultain's policy.

Mr. OLIVER. Most assuredly I can, without any question.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Prove it.

Mr. BENNETT. Make good.

Mr. OLIVER. I will make good if my hon. friends opposite wish and if they give me a little time. I am not carrying these documents around in my pocket, but in the meantime I will suggest for the information of my hon. friend that my word is quite as good as his, and my memory as well.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I understand the hon. gentleman to say that he did not hear it.

Mr. OLIVER. I did not hear it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Did he see it ?

Mr. OLIVER. I saw it in print, credited to Mr. Haultain.

Mr. FOSTER. 'Credited' to him ?

Mr. OLIVER. Certainly, I saw the literature on which Mr. Haultain hoped to secure judgment in his favour. He and his friends may repudiate it if they please, and if they did it would be part of the policy on which they appealed to the electors of that province.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Was he speaking of the odd sections or the even sections ?

Mr. OLIVER. He was speaking of the public lands.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. But which ?

Mr. OLIVER. Without distinction, so far as I know between the odd and even sections. He claimed the public lands for the provincial government for the express purpose of selling these lands to raise revenue with which to conduct the business of the provincial government.

Mr. LAKE. I understand that means, that he claimed the whole of them for the purpose of selling the whole of them, odd and even numbered sections alike.

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend (Mr. Lake) and I will hire a hall some time if we cannot get along here, but we do not want to waste the time of the House.

Mr. LAKE. Is that what the hon. gentleman means ?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. May I ask one more question ?

Mr. OLIVER. Surely.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Does the minister assert as a matter of fact, that Mr. Haultain stated that he proposed to sell the land now reserved for homesteads ?

Mr. OLIVER. Well, he did not go into such detail as that, but he certainly spoke, his literature definitely spoke of a proposed sale of six million acres of the public lands, and based a long calculation upon that proposed sale as showing to what extent the provinces were robbed by this government.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The minister is aware that his predecessor proposed to sell 50,000,000 acres.

Mr. OLIVER. Possibly.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The late Minister of the Interior did ?

Mr. OLIVER. Possibly, I am not discussing that at all.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Oh.

Mr. OLIVER. The late Minister of the Interior was always able to take his own part in this House.

Mr. FOSTER. He took the part of a great many others too.

Mr. OLIVER. The conversion of my hon. friends opposite is quite recent; I only hope it is sincere. But, I think that a better evidence of sincereity would have been given by them if they had been willing to accept the policy of the government as they knew it to be, rather than to seek by a motion under these circumstances to discredit the government or secure its defeat. I do not think we can accept a vote of want of confidence of our friends opposite as a true evidence of their conversion to the principle which they have enunciated in this motion.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Although we are all unanimous.

Mr. OLIVER. I only hope that when the time comes, these gentlemen opposite will support the government in placing before the country the continuance of that policy of the administration of the public lands in the interest of settlement, which has been the policy of this government in the past, which is its policy now, and which will be its policy in the future.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. May I ask the hon. gentleman whether it is to be introduced this session ?

Mr. OLIVER. Well, I am not able to give the hon. gentleman an answer on that point.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It seems to be rather sudden.

Mr. OLIVER. I can only say that the government rests upon the confidence which it holds from its followers and supporters, and that as long as we retain the confidence and support of our supporters in this House we will be able to give the necessary legislation as circumstances demand.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. At some future date.

Mr. OLIVER. However, as our friends on the other side have seen fit to raise this question, and while endorsing the policy of the government have seen fit to use the occasion to criticise the government—and as I think to unfairy criticise it—it may be well to point out the advantage which has accrued to this country because of the policy this government has pursued, and to show how diametrically opposite the policy of the former Conservative government was to the policy of the present government.

We find that in regard to the matter of railway land subsidies (this question that is exciting our friends opposite so very much) we find that this whole question arises from their policy and practice as expressed in the motion, so far back as 1880, which I have read. These gentlemen saw fit, or their predecessors when they were in power saw fit to reserve from sale and settlement in the Northwest Territories and Manitoba for the purpose of bonusing railways, a total area of practically 50,000,000 acres. They attached to this reservation such conditions that twenty years afterwards, the present government notwithstanding its persistent and determined effort to secure a settlement of these railway subsidies has as yet been unable to absolutely secure their settlement. Would you care for an instance? If so we will take that of the Canadian Pacific Railway and its exemption from taxation. Our friends opposite have spoken of the disadvantage to the country of permitting these railway companies to hold their grants without selection and without patenting their lands in consequence of which they are relieved from taxation. Let me point out that the Canadian Pacific Railway company was granted some 25,000,000 acres of land with the exemption from taxation to run for 20 years. But there was a word—one word—in this provision, the effect of which was that the twenty years exemption on the Canadian Pacific Railway lands did not begin until the land was patented to the company. And because during the 15 years succeeding the granting of the Canadian Pacific charter, while the Conservative government was in power, they never granted a patent (so I am credibly informed) on one acre of that 25,000,000 acres to the Canadian Pacific Railway, they extended by their deliberate act and contrary to the intention of parliament, that exemption of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company from twenty years to thirty five years.

Fortunately, after this government attained power, under the administration of the late Minister of the Interior that company was compelled to complete its selection of its land; and I observe that my hon. friend from Marquette complained because they had not been given sufficient time in which to make the selection. But they were compelled to make the selection: and now we know that their exemption from taxation will terminate some time; but had our friends opposite remained in power, all the evidence is that instead of the exemption being for twenty years, it would have been for ever.

There is a condition connected with these railway land subsidies which I think the House and the country should know in justification of the fact that all the lands are not yet selected. There were in all practically 50,000,000 acres of land reserved for railway subsidies; and of the part of that vast amount that has been earned, there yet remains to be selected about 1,750,000 acres. And our friends opposite wax indignant because that quantity remains yet unselected. May I explain to the House just how it happens that this is the case? There is the land grant to the Qu'Appelle, Long Lake and Saskatchewan Railway Company; there is the land grant to the Hudson Bay, now the Canadian Northern Railway Company; and there is the land grant to the Manitoba Southeastern Railway Company. The conditions attached to the two first mentioned were that the companies were entitled to select two-thirds of their land grant immediately on the completion of their road, but the remaining one-third was held as what is called indemnity lands, as security for the repayment by the company of certain cash advances which were to be made according to contract, to that company. Now, until the twenty years expires, for which this subsidy contract runs, this government cannot compel the railway company to select its indemnity lands, because the railway company need never accept them. This is a condition not created by this government; it is a condition for which our friends on the other side are responsible, and it is certainly unfair that they should to-day put before the House a motion of censure on this government for not doing something which the very conditions they themselves or their friends imposed absolutely prevented from being done. The lands involved in these two partial subsidies, the indemnity lands amount to nearly 1,000,000 acres. There is the Manitoba Southeastern Railway land grant, something over 600,000 acres. The company is entitled to select that land in a certain part of the country; but, owing to an arrangement made, I understand, by the late government with the province of Manitoba, there is a dispute between the railway company and the province in regard to those lands; and again, because of action taken by our friends on the other side when they were in power, it has been as yet impossible to compel a selection by that company of those lands, for the simple and evident reason that the lands are not there. Outside of these three cases involving something over 1,750,000 acres of land—two instances of indemnity lands, and one instance of a grant which, owing to circumstances it has not been possible to select—the vast area of the land grants that have been made and have been earned by the companies, within a small amount, the last acre has been selected and is being patented to the companies as fast as the staff of the Interior Department connected with patents can issue those patents to them. This is a record which I think our hon. friends opposite can hardly justify themselves in asking this House to censure, if they are really in earnest in asking that land grants shall be closed out. There is the further land grant to the Hudson Bay Railway Company. This is a grant made by our friends on the other side. It has only in part been availed of by the company; but I understand that the company stands ready to earn the balance of the grant, and it will be for the government and possibly the House to consider in what way that matter shall be dealt with. So far the company have selected almost all the lands to which they are entitled, except the indemnity lands of which I spoke; and the balance of their grant made years ago not having yet lapsed, this government is not able to deal with that land. That is to say, the government, in dealing with any Northwest lands, have to take into consideration the fact that a vast area has been pledged towards the construction of the Hudson Bay Railway. With the record of our friends on the other side, who in the first place made the land grant, and in the second place attached these conditions to them, and retained power for fifteen years without patenting the first acre to the first company, as far as I am aware, we can very well compare our record, in which the last acre has been patented up to the point where it could properly be patented to the companies. The question of dealing with the odd numbered sections throughout the country cannot be dealt with until these questions of land grants to railways are closed out. Once they are closed out there will be no difficulty in dealing with the matter, and I can assure the House on behalf of the government that this government will deal with that question as it has dealt with the land question from the beginning of its taking power, with a view to the settlement of the land and for the benefit of the settler.

I may say in regard to these odd numbered sections, that we have to consider not only a matter of some 50,000,000 acres of odd numbered sections that were granted to railways. The policy of the opposition, when in power, was that every odd numbered section throughout the Northwest should be locked up for the benefit of the railroads then existing or to be constructed. It was not only a matter of 50,000,000 acres; but every acre there was held under reservation; and because of the conditions attached by that government to the grants then made, this government has not yet been free to open up that tremendous reservation of odd numbered sections throughout the whole Northwest. In every particular this government has carried out its principle and policy of the land for the settler; and, as its policy has been in the past, so it will be in the future.

Mr. H. B. AMES (St. Antoine, Montreal). The hon. gentleman who has preceded me has endeavoured, to a very considerable extent, to show that in times past the Conservative party has not dealt justly with this country in the matter of the land. The hon. gentleman knows the history of the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway quite as well as any other member of this House. He must be perfectly well aware that the first offer which was made to the promoters of the Canadian Pacific Railway was not accepted and that it was only with the greatest difficulty they were induced to agree to the second offer. From all we can gather, there can be no doubt that the railroad could not then have been built on terms less onerous than those to which the Conservative government agreed at that time, and the country has since repeatedly declared that the government then acted wisely and well. I do not see that the hon. gentleman has quite made clear the impossibilty of an immediate selection taking place of that one million and three-quarters acres of which he has spoken. Therefore, we shall continue the argument, convinced as we are that the government has so administered these lands as to cause them to be selected with much less despatch than might have been shown.

Last year I had the privilege of driving several hundred miles across the Canadian prairie. What surprised me as much as anything else was the fact that one could drive many miles without meeting any habitation and yet could not find a free homestead, nor, in many cases, a single acre of purchaseable land. I was given two explanations. First that the even sections have been taken up and are being held for homestead settlement, and secondly, that the odd-numbered sections were withheld as an area out of which certain land grants were to be chosen. Those immense areas are still being held, and the least the goverment can do is to reduce the immense area which is kept out of occupation by its present policy. We all know the procedure which is followed in these matters. We know that the government passes a Subsidy Act, by virtue of which a railway is entitled to earn certain lands and, when the company has earned these lands, it is permitted to select them in areas designated and under conditions set forth by orders in council. For the last ten years this government has been in power and has had a monopoly of orders in council. Therefore, we are of opinion that if there are matters to be remedied, such as the hon. gentleman states, that if these are conditions that require administrative action, the government has had in its power to bring this condition of affairs to an end I contend that at present if there be but one and three-quarter millions of acres of land to select, it is obviously unfair on that account to hold back from the actual settler an area of land containing upwards of thirteen millions of acres.

It is very evident that in this matter there is a conflict of interest between the general public and the land companies. It is in the public interest that these lands be rendered available for immediate settlement, but it is in the private interest that they should be withheld from settlement. You can readily see why a company should be anxious that these lands should not be selected or why the time of selection should be delayed as long as possible. Until the selection is made the companies escape municipal taxation, and besides they are able to get the benefit of the building of new railways and to acquire land contiguous to town lots which have a high value. Therefore, every day these companies are able to put the government off, every day they are able to steal of time, means to them an advance in the value of their lands. You have only to look over the figures to see how remarkable have been advances in value. Take the Canadian Pacific Railway sales. In 1900 the average selling price of their lands was $3.04 per acre. In 1903 it was $3.67; in 1904, $4.10, and in 1905, $4.80. And in the last six months of the last calendar year the price had risen to $5.32. In January of this year the average selling price was $5.63. The prices of lands in the west are advancing very rapidly, so that every month, every day in fact of additional delay which these companies can get, means to them many dollars in the disposal of their lands.

We have introduced this motion because we believe that the policy we are advocating is one obviously in favour of the purchaser, although it may not be to the same extent in the interest of the jobber or speculator. My hon. friend the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) has already pointed out to us what lands are yet to be selected. Last November I wrote to the department and was informed that two and one-half million of acres were still to be selected, that the Canadian Northern, the Manitoba and Southeastern, and the Qu'Appelle, Long Lake and Saskatchewan had not completed their choice. We have since been told that the Qu'Appelle and Long Lake and Saskatchewan has completed its choice of lands, but that the lands which the government hold as security for loans made to the company have not been selected. I cannot see why it would not be possible for the government, if they are desirous of securing their lien, to take a considerable smaller area than the one of which we are speaking to-day, and I am sure they could get sufficient land therein to enable them to recoup themselves for the money advanced.

We understand that an area of selection including four and one-half million acres has been kept for the Qu'Appelle, Long Lake and Saskatchewan and that a further area of eight and one-half million acres was reserved for selection of the Canadian Northern Railway lands. So that to-day we have a total area of thirteen million acres within which are to be selected the remaining land grants.

As a matter of fact a large portion of these land grants has passed entirely out of the hands of the railway companies to whom they were originally given and have come into the hands of this company of many aliases which we first knew as the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company and now known as the Saskatchewan Valley and Alberta Land Company. This company has the right of selection, and their agents to-day can be seen travelling through the Northwest from one end to the other picking out the cream of the land wherever they can find it. Towards this company it would seem that a great deal of sympathy has been shown. I have here a map furnished by the company last October in which it says to the subordinate companies which wish to buy lands from it that they may make a selection within the limits marked off by red lines. They have an area of land stretching all the way from Lake Winnipeg to the fourth meridian, 500 miles in length and 150 in width, inclosed in red lines, and which must contain upwards of thirteen or fourteen million acres in odd sections, from which selection can be made. Regarding that immense area the company says:

> The district reserved by the government for the selection of our land grant you will find included in a red line marked 'district of the Saskatchewan Valley and Manitoba Land Company, Limited.'

They, therefore, have the right of selection, according to their pamphlet, in all that immense area. Now, the terms on which they are entitled to these lands contain some clauses which it is difficult for the uninitiated to understand. For example, you find this clause taken from their pamphlet entitled "Western Canada the Bread Basket of the World," published by the Saskatchewan Valley and Manitoba Land Company, Limited:

> Our privilege of selection differs from the ordinary railway grant inasmuch as we are not obliged to take any specific number of sections in any one township.

Why does it differ from the ordinary railroad grant? If the Saskatchewan Valley and Manitoba Land Company have acquired a railroad grant which is supposed to be similiar to all the other grants given to railroad companies, how does it happen that its mere transference to this land company makes the grant better than any that their predecessors have had? They say:

> Our privilege of selection differs from the ordinary railroad grant inasmuch as we are not obliged to take any specific number of sections in any one township.

Evidently they have a very much larger area at their disposal than is customary, and evidently, like the honey bee, they can go from flower to flower selecting only the very best. So we find in their circular the following :

In this enormous district, in each township we have the right to select, as heretofore stated, all odd numbered sections, with the exception of two school sections, and unless the land has already been sold by us, it is open for selection to our purchasers.

'Open for selection to our purchasers.' That means that this company is a jobber in lands. That means that this company can tell the intending purchaser that he may go over this vast area, select where he will the lands he desires, which, up to last fall, he was able to buy from the company at $6.50 to $8 an acre. It would seem that this company has a marvellously easy time of it—a cinch of the most perfect kind. When the purchaser selects his land, he pays the company $2 per acre cash down ; then the company indicates to the government that they have selected this or that area of 160 acres or more. If ever there was an agreement made whereby a company, without investing capital, and without assuming any risk, could become wealthy, this is that arrangement. So they have gone on. The land has been bought and the first payment has been made, and then, after the settler has made his first payment, the company becomes the owner for a few minutes, and then allows it to pass to the settler. They have no taxes to pay, they need no bank account, not being really purchasers, but having only the option of selection. And so we find that, to-day, that company is selling lands in that country at from $8 to $10 per acre, that being according to the price list they at present publish.

I think we are justified in charging dilatoriness on the part of the government. The hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) says that in the early days, the Conservative government did not sufficiently push the Canadian Pacific Railway Company in the selection of their lands. But the minister knows very well that the lands were not surveyed in those days, and lands cannot be selected before survey. Moreover, the minister knows there was no demand for the lands at that time. For ten years the prices of lands were practically the same. At present, the prices are advancing with each succeeding day. And to-day there is not the excuse of lack of survey, because 120,000,000 acres have been surveyed, and the surveys within the last two or three years have aggregated 30,000,000 acres. If these surveys were made in the right places, there would need to be no delay in selecting the lands.

The reply which the minister gave to a question a few days ago, was in effect, that the department was making every possible effort to have the lands surveyed, selected and patented, and it is interesting to look back and see that, on the 17th of June, 1903, the Postmaster General of that time (speaking for the Minister of the Interior) made almost verbatim, the same reply. Of course, the department is willing to say that it is using every possible effort, but I think the country is about coming to the conclusion that the time has come when a definite limit should be fixed. If certain lands cannot be selected before November 1, 1906, there should be a special statement of them added to this amendment that all other lands may be at once opened and this immense area, to a great extent, reduced. If we leave the matter 'entirely in the hands of the government,' as the hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff), has suggested, and allow them to continue as they have been doing for the past few years, carrying on this matter at whatever rate of speed may suit them, we may find ourselves still in the same predicament when parliament meets next time.

Now, I wish to speak of a phase of this question to which it seems to me, the government is not altogether alive. I wish to point out that the time is very rapidly coming when there will be no free land in the fertile prairie belt of the Canadian Northwest. I think the government is not sufficiently awake to the fact, that, in a very short time, within two or three years at the outside, they will be face to face with the situation of having no more free homesteads within a reasonable distance of railroads within the fertile prairie belt of the Northwest. What are you going to do when lands are held for sale from $8 to $10 per acre, and the free lands are all gone ? Is there soon to be a day when the man who goes into that country with but little money, but with experience and with willingness to establish a home, will have to choose between paying $8 or $10 per acre for land, and going into the wooded regions of the north or the semi-arid regions of the south and west ? The government must ponder this condition and decide upon some method of dealing with these reserves. There must be some sort of semi-homesteader, some class who can avail themselves of the odd numbered sections which are to be released by the railroads. The government should take this subject into immediate and serious consideration, with a view to bringing in necessary legislation with regard to these odd-numbered sections to be released. Here we have an immense area of 13,000,000 acres that is being held down and kept out of use, simply because about 1,750,000 acres must be selected out of that belt. Is not the government going to provide in some way that those 11,000,000 acres and over shall be released and opened for settlement ? Surely, the government can see that something requires to be done.

There is another phase of the question that may possibly appeal to the government. So long as these lands are unselected there are temptations which must face the government pretty nearly every day. I sometimes think that it is most probable that the Minister of the Interior finds himself much in the position of Alexander Mackenzie years ago, when he likened himself to a sentinel, lying on his arms night and day keeping guard over the public treasury.' There are many designs on our free lands to-day. There are many people who know that they are of great value ; and I am sure that the Minister of the Interior could tell us of many propositions that are made in order to obtain lands in the Canadian Northwest.

There are temptations which, I am sure, the Minister of the Interior would like to see out of the way. But, as long as that great area lies unsettled, as long as that 10,000,000 or 12,000,000 acres of odd sections are unassigned, these temptations must exist. There is a temptation to dispose of them to one of these so-called colonization companies, which may turn out to be a company jobbing in lands, as the Saskatchewan Valley and Manitoba Land Company. There may be another temptation, namely, to exchange areas with one of these companies. This innocent looking Bill about timber reserves may mean something more than it purports to mean. It is a great temptation, possibly, for the government, when one of the favoured companies has a large area of land that it cannot sell, to condemn that as a timber reserve and then give to the company an equivalent somewhere else. As long as these rich odd sections are unassigned there is always that danger.

There is also that danger that will arise in building the Hudson's Bay Railroad. We know that a Conservative government in 1887 authorized a company to build a railroad to Hudson's Bay ; we know they have offered 12,800 acres per mile all the distance from the Canadian Pacific Railway line to Hudson's bay. We know that the Canadian Northern can build from Erwood to Fort Churchill and can earn 6,400,000 acres of land whenever they choose. We also know that they are at present only entitled to select out of 22,000,000 acres lying between the 49th township and Hudson's bay. But stranger things than that have happened before. If the company builds that road from Erwood to Hudson's bay and is not pleased with its lands, who knows but that they may want to make an exchange, and again there will be an attack upon this great belt of odd sections lying unoccupied. So it seems to me the Minister of the Interior must agree that the wisest possible thing the government can do is to open those odd sections for settlement within the shortest possible period. If you put good settlers directly upon that land, certainly the danger I have pointed out will be removed.

One thing at least we insist upon on this side of the House; we insist upon it that when the government comes to consider legislation with reference to odd sections that will be released, the government should bring in legislation that will enable that land to reach directly the settler himself. We are not discussing to-day the policy which the government may see fit to adopt in that respect. The question is up to the government, the time is ripe, and the government must within a very short time, if it wishes to relieve the situation, devise ways and means for dealing with the greater portion of the ten or eleven million acres which are not needed to satisfy railroad grants, but which will be left over after the railroad grants have been taken out, but which cannot to-day be used until those grants are completed. The government should at an early day bring legislation before this House in order that we may know what will be done with those odd sections, and in order that the odd sections may reach the actual homesteader, or actual settler. For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, we have introduced this resolution, and for these reasons we are pressing it.

SUPPLY—RAILWAY LAND GRANTS.

House resumed consideration of the motion to go into Supply and the amendment thereto.

Mr. W. E. KNOWLES (West Assiniboia). Mr. Speaker, as far as I can understand the utterances of the hon. gentlemen opposite, their remarks seem to fall into two divisions, one an attack on the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company deal and the other the utterance of their own remorse or an apology for the legislation of this country made while the party of which they are members was in power. I wish to state country made while the party of which they are members was in power. I wish to state briefly how the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company deal is regarded in the west. A good deal of that land is in my constituency but I have heard a great deal more this afternoon in condemnation and criticism of that deal than I ever heard in the west. The facts are that prior to the sale of that land the ground that was eventually given was one that no man desired to live in, even the Indians gave it a wide berth. For many years men passed over it and it was always known as the great salt plain, in which men never desired to linger. I have often heard old teamsters, whose duty it was to transport goods across the plain during the rebellion of 1885, glory in the financial prosperity that the rebellion brought to them. That was almost the first money they had seen in large quantities when they got $10 a day and they said: If this be war, may there never be peace. But when they had occasion to go over this land which was eventually given to the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company, they hurried through it as men would through a desert, and as I have said it was called the great salt plain. A railway ran through it for 10 or 12 years, before any one settled on it. You could travel through it for nearly 100 miles without seeing a house except the houses of section men or those who were obliged to live there. Nothing dwelt there but the gopher and prairie chicken and things of that kind. Now it came to pass that an opportunity presented itself to the government of selling this land at a dollar an acre. That is the only sale of lands the Dominion government has been party to, since the Liberals came into power. A railway company composed of the most astute men in Canada sold at the same time to the same company much more choice lands, lands which gave them a wider choice of selection at $1.52 per acre. True it was an advance, but it was sold strictly according to its value, not at all to secure colonization. There was not one restricting feature about any settlement duty being performed; and yet we find this land company, subsidiary to a railway company composed of the most astute business men in Canada, glad to sell this land at $1.52. I contend, sir, that the sale of the government land there at $1 an acre with the binding conditions of settlement attached was a splendid sale. While I do not for my part believe that the selling of public lands should be continued, yet I believe that at that time it was a most wise policy. In fact if there is anything the present government has a right to be proud of, it is its whole land administration policy in the west. We have our own views about the tariff, and if the tariff had come up at this time I should have been very glad to have said how much my people love a low tariff, but while we want the tariff lowered we have an outstanding wish or desire to present in regard to the administration of land in the Northwest Territories. I mean that no radical change is requested. These lands, it is true, have become valuable now, Mr. Speaker. It was read in this House by two hon. gentlemen opposite this afternoon, that the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company is now asking as much as $8 or $10, or perhaps more, an acre for land for which they had paid only $1. I must confess I fail to follow those gentlemen. I take it as a matter for which the government should be commended if by their administration they have converted that ground in which no man would dwell into a thickly settled country, with waving fields of grain, with villages and towns there as every place else in the west. I say it was a most wise step, three or four years ago, when they secured the co-operation of this company. More than that, we are called upon and asked in the most formal way to say how this land company can say their land is worth $8 an acre. It shows there is a great dearth of material on which to criticise the government; it shows that our friends opposite have great trouble to find anything to bring against the government when they have to go to the Northwest Territories and bring the statements of land men here, and ask us to vote the government out of power on the strength of what land men in the Northwest say.

I am not here to decry in any way the Northwest Territories, nor am I here to in any way question the truthfulness of statements made by land men, but I do say that we have some land men in the Territories, regarding whom I for one, should not like to stand or fall by what they say. They are very naturally praising what they want to sell, as every vendor is prone to do. If hon. gentlemen opposite will frame legislation on the basis of what may be found about the value of land in the literature of these prospectuses, then we will have a strange muddle of legislation indeed. As I have said, the land is more valuable to-day then it was a few years ago. We know that it is not so long since that men could not be coaxed to take homesteads. In many cases where there are now thriving villages, a few years ago a man would not take the land for a homestead and yet at the present hour that very land is worth in very many cases not $8 an acre, but $40, and $50, and $100 an acre. Take scrip itself—it is now worth something over $6 an acre, and just as well might hon. gentlemen ask us: How is scrip worth $6 an acre as to ask us why is land worth $8 an acre. Well, the answer is that it is because under the administration of the present government the whole country is clothed in prosperity, and land is coming to near its normal value. I believe that there will be an enormous annual increase in the value of land during the next few years. Will hon. gentlemen opposite come to us every year and seriously make it a charge against us that land is becoming more valuable every year, and every month for that fact. I was pleased to hear the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ames) make the statement that he believed the day was close at hand when there would be no more homesteads. But, he wished to know how might that condition be relieved. My answer is that we do not want it relieved. We want the day to come when there will not be one desirable homestead left, just because for every homestead some good desirable settler has come to take it up. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Ames) wants to know are we going to have more homesteads than we have homesteaders. He seems to desire that. Well, I do not know any better way to bring that about then to restore the old order of things that prevailed in the early nineties. Then you will have lots of homesteads and no homesteaders. Let me briefly call the attention of the House to the record of this present Liberal government as compared with the record of the former Conservative government. The hon. gentleman who moved the motion asks that certain legislation shall be passed by which the railroad companies shall be kept strictly within their limits. Let us take a moment's view of the history of that party. Let us look at the time when these hon. gentlemen opposite were in power. It is distressing to us in the west now to have to reap the bitter harvests they sowed in these years, when they tied up the lands in railway companies and lavishly and improvidently parted with their control, and saddled us with almost intolerable exemptions from taxation. I say in all seriousness and in all civility, that these same men who gave away not thousands, but hundreds of thousands and tens of millions of acres have monstrous audacity to-day to look the Liberal party in the face;—the Liberal party which never gave an acre of land to a railway company —and to say: Don't you give away the railway lands; when the fact is that was these gentlemen themselves who gave away these lands. To my mind, it is as if the prodigal when he returned home had called the family together and given them a severe lecture on the evils of prodigality. The Liberal government has never given one acre of land to a railway company, and the Liberal government has built railways with speed and economy, and the people are pleased. We have seen the Canadian Northern Railway built, and we see the Grand Trunk Pacific building, and when we realize that to effect this the present government has given not one acre of land, we are greatly pleased. I contrast this with the policy in the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and say that is our answer to the hon. gentlemen opposite. I say 'look at that, and it will alleviate your strange unrest.' I give the hon. gentleman from Marquette (Mr. Roche) credit for good sense, and I can only believe that when he beholds the satisfaction of the people of the west, when he sees how pleased they are with the land and transportation policy of the present Dominion government; when he sees how they prospered and flourished and are content, he is desirous now of placing himself side by side with the Liberal party in order that he may participate in their success. It is only ten years ago since the conditions in the west were far different from what they are to-day, and Sir, if we may judge by the trend of events, then, if the same satisfactory conditions prevails, the same acceptable administration of our lands, the same statesmanlike handling of our transportation problems; in the next few years instead of sending a majority of Liberal members from the Territories, I believe we will follow the good example of Nova Scotia and British Columbia and send a solid delegation to support this government. I can readily understand why it is that my hon. friend (Mr. Roche) is glad, to a certain extent, to ally himself with us and to claim our land policy as his. I have not had the slightest connection with the administration in the past and so I am absolutely free to express an opinion, and I say so far as I know the minds of the people there, I believe there is a universal desire that the same policy and the same principle shall prevail in the administration of our lands in the future, as has prevailed since this government came into power in 1896.

Mr. THOMAS GREENWAY (Lisgar): If it is agreeable to the House I would like to move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

On motion of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, House went into Committee of Supply.

Indians—Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and Northwest Territories—provisions, &c., $109,244.

Mr. BENNETT. I would like to ask the minister a question in reference to some timber lands on the Georgian bay. Has the minister made any disposition of the timber on a large island known as the Giant's Tomb to Mr. Peter Ryan, of Toronto? And if the sale has not been carried into effect, how far have the negotiations proceeded, if any?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). There has been no sale of the timber on the island to Mr. Peter Ryan, and I am informed that there have been no negotiations looking to a sale to Mr. Ryan.

Mr. BENNETT. May I ask, then, has there been a sale of timber on the Giant's Tomb to a party named Alexander?

Mr. OLIVER. The pine and oak on the Giant's Tomb island is under license to a

Mr. Alexander. The license was issued to Mr. Alexander, but it is now held by the Canada Furnace Company. I cannot give the number of years ago that this license was issued.

Mr. BENNETT. Does the minister state positively that there has been no dealing by the department with any person or persons as to the maple or other kinds of timber on this island ?

Mr. OLIVER. There has been correspondence in regard to it, but no transaction of any kind.

Mr. BENNETT. Will the minister please inform me how far these negotiations have proceeded, and who is acting in the negotiations ?

Mr. OLIVER. The negotiations have not proceeded at all. There have been applications for the timber on the island, that part of it which is not under license to the Canada Furnace Company, but no step has been taken by the department to license the timber, for the reason that it is now under license to that company.

Mr. BENNETT. I am quite well aware, and everybody in that neighbourhood is aware, that twenty years ago or more the timber was licensed by the then Liberal government to H. H. Cook, and has been passed on by assignment to others ; but I think that there are at present negotiations pending between Mr. Peter Ryan, of Toronto, and the Department of Indian Affairs for the immense quantity of maple timber on that island. Will the minister inform the House what offer Mr. Ryan has made for the timber, and who has been acting for Mr. Ryan in the negotiations ?

Mr. OLIVER. There are applications in from different parties for the purchase of this island, but the department is not in a position to dispose of the island so long as the present licensees hold their license.

Mr. BENNETT. May I ask the minister who has been acting on behalf of Mr. Peter Ryan in the negotiations ?

Mr. OLIVER. I am informed that we have correspondence from Mr. Peter Ryan, from Mr. Beck, of Penetanguishene, and from the Canada Furnace Company, all applying for the timber on the island.

Mr. BENNETT. And from any solicitor on behalf of Mr. Beck or Mr. Peter Ryan ?

Mr. OLIVER. I am informed that these gentlemen have applied in their own names.

Mr. BENNETT. Well, I have succeeded in getting a little information from the minister, and I suppose I might as well suplement it with what the minister already knows, that Mr. D'Arcy Scott, of Ottawa, has been the solicitor engaged by Mr. Ryan in these proceedings. I do not suppose that his name will be a shock to the minister, as he has probably seen him in this connection. Do I understand that as soon as the claim of the Canada Furnace Company, is arranged for, the timber and the island are then to be disposed of to Mr. Beck ?

Mr. OLIVER. As soon as the Canada Furnace Company's right is disposed of, of course the timber and the island will be for sale.

Mr. BENNETT. With or without the Indians' surrender ?

Mr. OLIVER. It has been surrendered by the Indians.

Mr. BENNETT. May I ask the date of that surrender ?

Mr. OLIVER. In 1856.

Mr. BENNETT. May I ask the minister what other islands were surrendered at the time ?

Mr. OLIVER. A group of islands were surrendered at that time, including the Giant's Tomb, Beckwith island, Beausoleil island, and others in that vicinity.

Mr. BENNETT. How many acres of land and what amount of timber is it estimated there are on this island, and what is its approximate value ?

Mr. OLIVER. The island contains about 1,200 acres. It has been estimated to be worth about $9,000.

Mr. BENNETT. Do I understand that the department are prepared to sell the whole island for $9,000, or that that is the value they place upon it ?

Mr. OLIVER. That is the valuation which has been given the department.

Mr. BENNETT. By whom ?

Mr. OLIVER. I cannot say at the moment but if the hon. gentleman insists I can get the information later.

Mr. BENNETT. The sale of an island of that extent is not an every day occurrence, and surely the minister's deputy, who is beside him, must know it.

Mr. OLIVER. I am informed that the estimate was made by Mr. Chitty, timber inspector for the department.

Mr. BENNETT. Was there a written report by Mr. Chitty that the timber on that island is worth only $9,000 ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. BENNETT. Does the minister consider that this Island should be sold by private sale or public auction ?

Mr. OLIVER. I would be inclined to sell it by tender—advertise for tenders and sell it to the highest bidder. That is if the question came up, but it is not up for consideration.

Mr. BENNETT. How long has this correspondence been going on with Mr. Peter Ryan or Mr. Beck ?

Mr. OLIVER. Various applications have been made dating back for a period of about four years. Mr. Ryan's communications with the department have been within the last year, Mr. Beck's about two years ago, and other parties before that.

Mr. BENNETT. Were there other applications besides those from Mr. Beck and Mr. Ryan ?

Mr. OLIVER. From the Canada Furnace Company.

Mr. BENNETT. I think I have drawn all the information out of the minister I can possibly get, but it is not nearly half as much as I know myself and as is pretty well known in that neighbourhood. The House might as well know what the minister is being pressed to do by some of his party friends in that part of the country. Driven from the spoilation of the Toronto timber reserves, these gentlemen are now making a raid on Ottawa. The minister saw fit last year to dispose of a property up there worth $2,000 to a brother member from North Ontario for $100, and the Marine Department gave for the paltry sum of $100 to Mr. Chew, a defeated candidate, timber worth $3,000. The Indian tribes have always believed that this island belonged to the Indian Department and the department has always treated it as such, but ever since the change of government the train has been laid to pass this timber on this island to party supporters. Mr. Peter Ryan and Mr. Beck are one and the same in interest. Mr. Ryan is the go-between and the minister knows also that Mr. D'Arcy Scott, son of the Secretary of State, has acted as solicitor in the matter, and to-day in the courts an action is pending between Mr. Ryan and Mr. Beck regarding the commission which Mr. Ryan is to receive from Mr. Beck. The minister must not imagine that these things are not known in that part of the country. I have my eyes and ears always open to the suspicious circumstances and instances occurring there from day to day, and it is not possible that such a colossal scheme should pass unnoticed and unseen. The minister might as well throw down the veil at once and say that the deal has been stopped owing to the dispute between Mr. Ryan and Mr. Beck, the beneficiary. Yet in the face of all that the minister says that we are to have that convenient way of concealing the facts, namely, a sale by tender. I will not believe it, until I see the report, that Mr. Chitty estimated the timber on this vast island as only worth a paltry $9,000. Why, the timber on the Giant's Tomb is known far and wide by practical lumbermen in that part of the country, and since the change of government very covetous eyes have been cast on it. The whole train was carefully laid. First there was Mr. Ryan as the go-between. Then Mr. D'Arcy Scott, son of the Secretary of State, figuring as solicitor, and Mr. Beck was to be the beneficiary. If the minister should sell this timber for $9,000 to Mr. Beck, he will be doing the best thing he could in the interests of the opposition for political purposes. He will only be going one step further to show the people in that part of the country that dealings with any department in this government are marked by distrust and suspicion and that they need not expect anything honest and aboveboard. Would the hon. minister bring down at our next sitting this report of Mr. Chitty valuing the timber at $9,000 ? When did he make that report ? Was it in the summer or in the winter ?

Mr. OLIVER. I am not able to give the date but will bring down the report when next we are on these estimates.

Mr. BENNETT. It would be better not only in the interests of the country, but in the interests of the Indian Department—because from all I have heard the Indian Department will regard it as their own property and the proceeds of the sale will go to the benefit of the Indian fund—that there should be a public auction of this property rather than a private sale. It is notorious that for years the late Conservative government were asked by numerous parties to sell the timber on that island either by public auction or by private sale, but the then minister always replied that until there was a surrender by the Indian tribes, who are on the Christian islands, no sale could be had. Would the minister say whether there was a surrender of Hope island ?

Mr. OLIVER. I cannot say for certain.

Mr. BENNETT. I think the minister has a tip not to make any admission as regards Hope island. The reason of that is this. There has been so much underhand dealing about the timber on these islands that his officers know every move which has been made. How can it be possible that the Giant's Tomb which is alongside of Hope island, and Beckwith island and Beausoliel island, which are in the same cluster, could have been surrendered in 1856 and not Hope island ? Hope island was surrendered if the others were. And the deputy minister knows well that if the minister had said that Hope island had been surrendered, I would have asked why it was necessary for the Marine Department, when 100 acres of that island was required for a light-house reserve, to go to the Indian Department first for a surrender of the property. The Indian Department has never treated this island, with the vast quantities of timber upon it, as having been surrendered. The maple timber on Hope island and on the Giant's Tomb is of immense value.

I have been on the island repeatedly. There is no man engaged in lumbering but knows the value of that timber. Yet we are told to-night by the minister that if this is sold, it will be sold by tender. I think that if it could have been sold by private tender Mr. Peter Ryan would have been the tenderer ; and if it had not been for the falling out between Mr. Beck and Mr. Ryan, I think the sale would have been consummated long ago. I can tell the hon. minister that the people of that section of the country will keep their eyes open for this projected sale. I only hope that when the sale is to take place it will be advertised, not alone in the British Columbia and Prince Edward Island papers but in the papers of this portion of the Dominion. There is no doubt that if the government does sell to Mr. Ryan or Mr. Beck in the way in which many fear the sale will take place, the transaction will not find favour with his political friends. Cannot I prevail upon the minister to sell it in the good old-fashioned way, by public auction ? Let men come into the open market where they may know who are bidding, and where there will be no room for suspicion, which there always is in the case of a sale by tender. Cannot I prevail upon him, for the sake of his own good name and the name of his department, to have this sale free from suspicion, and if the sale must take place, to have it take place openly and above board ?

Mr. OLIVER. As to whether the island shall be sold by public auction or by tender, I have already suggested that the time to decide upon that point has hardly yet arrived, because, while the department is quite willing to sell the island, or the timber upon it, as a matter of business for the benefit of the Indian fund, yet the department is not in a position to sell either the island or the timber, because of the timber license which now exists upon the island. I did say a few minutes ago that my view would be that when the sale takes place, it should be by public tender and not by public auction. The reason I suggested that was, because, it being an island and uninhabited, it would be rather difficult to hold the sale upon the property, and it might be difficult to satisfy all who might desire to bid, whereas there would be no difficulty about satisfying everybody if tenders were publicly invited. My hon. friend (Mr. Bennett), who is certainly inclined to be critical, might very well have found fault if we held an auction sale upon the island, because it might be complained, if the attendence at the auction was small, that the bidders had combined to purchase the island at too low a price. If we held the sale at the town at which the hon. gentleman resides, the people of any other town on the coast might possibly complain that the sale was not held there. But if the sale is properly advertised and tenders are received, no person is placed under special difficulty no matter where he may be—all have an equal opportunity to tender ; and so the Indian Department would probably get the highest value for the timber. I am afraid there is no possibility of relieving the mind of my hon. friend of the suspicion of wrongdoing on the part of any department of this government. But, so far as the transactions of the government in connection with these islands are concerned, he did us the honour to discuss the matter at the last session of parliament and he has done us a similar honour this session. In the year that has intervened, the nearest he has been able to come to unearthing a scandal in connection with these sales, is his announcement to a horror-stricken world of the terrible fact that one Peter Ryan, of Toronto, has applied to purchase a certain piece of property. So long as he does not come any nearer than that to finding a wrong transaction, I think the department will be fairly safe in the eyes of the public.

Mr. MILLER. I have no knowledge whatever of the particular island under discussion ; but I have had some experience which has led me to a conclusion as to the best method of selling such islands whether by public auction or by public tender. A few years ago the department advertised for sale by public tender islands that were under control of the Indian Department, Hay island and Griffith island in Georgian bay, each containing between 2,000 and 3,000 acres of land and having a considerable quantity of timber. The advertisement of sale appeared in the Toronto 'Globe', and possibly other papers. I spent a considerable time, with another officer of a furniture company with which I was connected in examining one of the islands, for which we afterwards put in a tender. Our tender was not the lowest and we did not get the island. Each island was sold at a price which, most people thought, was considerably higher than the value. So, I can believe that what the minister has said is correct, that these islands bring a larger price when sold by tender than they are likely to bring if sold by auction, because if they are sold by auction there is an opportunity for the bidders to arrange with one another to keep down the bids. In the case of each island to which I have referred the highest tender was considerably above the tender next below it. I agree that the better method, and the one by which the highest price would be realized is to sell by public tender.

Mr. TELFORD. As the purchaser of Griffith island, I believe we paid nearly $1,000 more than the thing was worth. But we were afraid that it might be sold for a very large sum, and we gave $4,020 for it which, I believe, was a long way above the value.

Mr. BENNETT. Coming as he does from the province of Ontario, I can well understand that my hon. friend from South Grey (Mr. Miller) approves of sale by tender. He has a recollection, no doubt of the famous limit bought by Captain Sullivan for $90, and afterwards sold for $10,000—that is always a very dear recollection to the Liberals of Ontario. They are sighing for the good old days in that province, and, knowing that province, and, knowing that they are very far away so far as lands held by the province are concerned, the hon. gentleman looks for the fulfilment of his friends' desires at Ottawa. The minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) talks about having the sale on the premises. Why, whoever suggested that the party should adjourn up to the Giant's Tomb ? Certainly, I did not, and no person in his sane senses would. Let me tell the hon. gentleman that when his friend, Mr. Peter Ryan, has sales of timber lands, those sales do not take place on the limits, but in the Board of Trade building in Toronto. And where does the province of Quebec have its sales ? Surely the party do not go from river to river to show off the limits.

They have a public auction, above board. It is true I complained of a sale made by the hon. gentleman's department last year when he sold an island to a brother of the hon. member for North Ontario (Mr. Grant)—I do not suppose they would do anything more now in that quarter after the onslaught made by the member for North Ontario on the cabinet, I do not suppose he could get anything now—but they gave away then for a paltry $100, an island worth $2,000. and the minister knew it at the time. And now the minister is going to put up this island by tender and says : What an awful thing it would be to the detriment of the department if you had a public auction, that these bidders would all go there and conspire one with another not to bid against each other, and in that way keep the price down. That is a wonderful theory for the minister to put forward. He runs away with the idea that all the property has to be exposed at a sale. He has recollections of old time auction sales in country newspaper offices where they got together to see the cattle show. This is not a cattle sale at all, this is a sale of valuable timber amounting to many thousands of dollars. The very best proof that the limit is a most valuable one is the manner and form in which the train has been laid by these hangers-on to possess themselves of it. The minister, I suppose, will not put it up at public auction, he is so afraid that the buyers will stand together and conspire one with another to keep it down. They will do nothing of the sort. Each one will vie with the other to become the possessor of a very valuable timber limit. There will be suspicion and distrust if this matter of tenders is persisted in. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will do like another head of a department did a little time ago, he will ask for tenders, and if prices are too low, then he will withdraw it from sale, and afterwards he will send some circular letters out to a few friends and ask them to put in tenders. Perhaps the minister will adopt that plan. That was done the other day in the matter of flour for a penitentiary. Perhaps the minister will follow that idea ; and perhaps it may happen then as it happened with the penitentiary flour, that the public will get the benefit. I hope the minister will yet see his way clear to selling this property openly on the market by auction.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. In connection with this matter of flour for a penitentiary, the statement just made by the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) is absolutely unfounded in fact, and he knows it. Tenders were called for through the public press for flour. The price asked for flour was higher than the ruling market price at the time, and the tenders were refused. Now tenders were called for, and we got the flour for less price than it was originally offered. These are the facts, and the hon. member for Simcoe knew them to be facts when he made that statement a moment ago.

Mr. BENNETT. I made the statement a few moments ago to this House that tenders were called for, and the department, for reasons best known to themselves, did not give the tenders to any person, that later on certain persons were invited to tender, and that then an hon. gentleman who sits on that side of the House and who is practically the owner of a certain company, secured the tender. I did not say that his was the highest tender or the lowest tender. I did not say there was anything unfair about it. But I do say this, that an examination of the papers produced show that that hon. gentleman's tender was only a few cents lower than the lowest—but of that perhaps more anon.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Hear, hear, the sooner the better.

Mr. BENNETT. Very well, perhaps we will see that. I will not do like the member for North Ontario, assail the Minister of Justice outside and come in here and be as calm as a cooing dove, I will not do that. Why that should be so, I know not. All I know is that after the attack of the member for North Ontario upon the Minister of Justice and upon his connection with the Grand Transcontinental, the Solicitor General busied himself, and the member for North Ontario was placed again as chairman of the committee of which he had formerly been chairman. It goes without saying then that if a man wishes to obtain eminence under this government—if it is eminence to have a chairmanship—all he will have to do is to attack them outside and then come in here and get a chairmanship on condition that he won't say anything more. It may be this, that the ex-Postmaster General who went out of this government very much against his own will, and making great mutterings when he did go out, was very close to the member for North Ontario, and it was a notorious fact that of all that brood the brother of the member for North Ontario was the only duckling the Postmaster General had. Perhaps the government thought the member for North Ontario had been loaded up by the ex-Postmaster General and that it was better to smooth his fur down the right way than to smooth it the wrong way, and that the member for North Ontario might have been annoyed if he had not been given that chairmanship. And so the Solicitor General went over the other day and assured the committee that the government desired, that the government wished, that the member for North Ontario might again be reinstated in his position. Now, Sir, I have only this to say with regard to tenders for flour for the penitentiaries, that as it was necessary to call for tenders in the first place it was equally necessary to call for tenders in the second place. Instead of sending out eight or ten circulars, why didn't the Minister of Justice call for tenders in the second instance ?

Mr. FOSTER. Too expensive.

Mr. BENNETT. It cannot be too expensive, because the Minister of the Interior who sits alongside of him is advertising to-day for the sale of a single little island up back of Peterborough or Cobourg. So the government do not find that expensive, we saw it advertised the other day. As to firms tendering for thousands of dollars worth of flour, if the government thought it was necessary in the first instance to call for tenders it was equally necessary in the second instance. And it will be a matter of public comment and a matter of public suspicion that the tender of the hon. member for Centre York (Mr. Campbell) for that large quantity of flour was only a few cents lower than the lowest tender, as the returns show. But of that perhaps more anon.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Perhaps it is best to settle that question now, I do not like these things to lie too long.

In May, 1905, tenders for flour (and other penitentiary supplies) were asked for by advertisement in seventy newspapers. Tenders were received as follows :

Kingston Penitentiary, 10 at $4.19 to $5.20 per barrell.

St. Vincent de Paul, 8 at $4.19 to $5.30 per barrel.

Dorchester Penitentiary, 8 at $4.29 to $5.70 per barrel.

Manitoba Penitentiary, 5 at $4.28 to $5.60 per barrel.

British Columbia (Manitoba hard), 4 at $4.90 to $5.75 per barrel.

British Columbia (local wheat), 3 at $4.20 to $4.95 per barrel.

These prices were sixty cents higher than the then current contract prices It was decided to accept none of the tenders, but to ask again in September. Eighteen firms tendered, some for one penitentiary, others for more than one penitentiary.

On the 15th September, a letter inviting tenders was sent to every one of the eighteen who had tendered in May and to a number of others —thirty-one firms altogether.

Instead of the five or six that the hon. gentleman has alluded to. Of course, accuracy of statement is not essential.

Mr. BENNETT. I did not say five or six.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Well, perhaps seven or eight. We will consult 'Hansard' as to that.

Mr. BENNETT. Try again now.

Mr. FITZPATRICK (reading)

Thirteen responded, some tendering for the supply of one, others for more than one, penitentiary. The following were received :

Penitentiary.	No. of tenders.	Range of price.
Kingston	9	$3 84 to $4 75 per barrel.
St. Vincent de Paul	9	3 84 to 4 80 "
Dorchester..	8	4 04 to 4 65 "

In every case the lowest tender was accepted.

Mr. BENNETT. The Minister of Jusice should be a little better natured with me. I do not say that there was anything wrong with the tenders.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Then I apologize.

Mr. BENNETT. I said that it was a matter of suspicion, that the figures of the hon. member for Centre York (Mr. Campbell) should be the lowest and that it should be four cents. Now these things are not going to redound to the credit of the country. I am going to use the remarks of the hon. member for North Ontario. Why Sir, the way he assails the Minister of Justice is wonderful. He says :

Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick, whom they looked to to influence the actions of the chairman of the Transcontinental Railway Commission. This chairman, S. N. Parent, was a law partner of Mr. Fitzpatrick, and the Ontario Liberals fear that there will be certain arrangements relating to the Grand Trunk Pacific made, which will not redound to the credit of the country. Contracts would be let for the construction of the section east of Winnipeg within 48 hours, and he was doubtful whether they would be let in the best interests of the country.

Why Sir, when millions of dollars worth of contracts are being let, when a supporter of the government comes out in the public press and states openly that he fears they will not be on the square and will not be straightforward on account of the Minister of Justice, surely the Minister of Justice should be a little more pacific with me when I point out that some officer in his department has accepted a contract for flour at four cents a barrel less than other tenderers after it has not been tendered for in a public way. I care not whether the whole twelve or the whole eighteen were asked, the fact was that a large quantity of flour was needed, the public tenders were not called for in the newspapers, and according to the return which I saw hurriedly the other day, by a very odd coincidence, the figure of the hon. member for Centre York is just a few cents below the others. I do not say that the hon. member for York knew the figures of any tenders, because I am not in a position to state that, but I do say in the words of the member for North Ontario, that such deals as that will not redound to the credit of the country.

Triennial clothing, $5,237.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not see how you should have an item so much larger here for the nine months; the weather has not been cold.

Mr. OLIVER. We supply only one suit of clothes to each person and the reason of the increase is because there is a greater number of chiefs. This issue is only to chiefs, and on account of the new treaty in northern Ontario there is a larger number of chiefs than before, and of course the chiefs of the new treaty all have to be dealt with this year.

Mr. FOSTER. Is the clothing given every three years ?

Mr. OLIVER. Every three years.

Mr. BENNETT. I would like to ask the minister a question in connection with another deal in the Indian Department. How much was paid for the water power sold to the Pulp Mill Company known as the Imperial Pulp Mill Company in Sturgeon Falls ? That is a pretty old friend in the department and has been well canvassed in North Ontario. How much was paid for the twenty-five acres or the quantity of land that went along with the water power by this company ?

Mr. OLIVER. $10,000.

Mr. BENNETT. Who acted on account of the Indians in that sale, and how much has already been paid to the Indians on account of the sale ?

Mr. OLIVER. The Indian agent, Mr. Cockburn.

Mr. BENNETT. Is he the postmaster too, may I ask ?

Mr. OLIVER. I could not answer that question.

Mr. BENNETT. May I ask the minister as to the balance of $9,000 and the rate of interest which the Indians are to be paid on that ? It is to be paid every year is it not ?

Mr. BENNETT.

Mr. OLIVER. The deferred payments on the property carry five per cent interest to the government. This interest is counted along with the principal and on both interest and principal the Indians get the usual rate of three per cent.

Mr. BENNETT. Now this is about exactly as my informant has told me in connection with this deal. The Indians have been overreached in this deal. In the first place the Indians had no independent adviser at all when the deal was consummated except Mr. Cockburn, who is actually closer to the Pulp Mill Company judging from the large correspondence I have had, than to the Indians. What lawyer or counsel acted for the Indians in the contract that was drawn up ?

Mr. OLIVER. The Indian Department is responsible for the interests of the Indians and the officers of the department are the parties who are responsible for the Indian side of the transaction.

Mr. BENNETT. There is no doubt about it, the department is responsible, and there is no doubt about it the Indians are the losers. Here was this wealthy pulp company who had very strong influence through certain members of parliament with this government making a deal for this water power in which the Indians have alleged they were overreached. A contract is made and they are to receive $10,000 and that contract is so worded and drawn up that the company make payments of $1,000 a year, as I understand, and there is not one cent of interest payable to the Indians afterwards. It is true the money is to be paid in and they will receive the usual rate of interest on the fund, but I am going to ask the minister why the wealthy company should not have to pay the money to the Indians at fair rate of interest instead of paying off as they do. May I ask this question ? His deputy could name the solicitor who drew it up.

Mr. OLIVER. There was no contract as it is generally understood, there was a surrender on the part of the Indians which was prepared by the officers of the department, but the Indians receive on account of the surrender the government rate of interest, and just what they are entitled to according to custom in dealing with Indian bands, under such circumstances. The company pays five per cent on its deferred payments. The terms are $2,500 down and three annual payments of $2,500 each. The deferred payments carry five per cent interest so that the company gets no advantage from the rate of interest that the Indians receive. The Indians lose nothing because both interest and principal paid by the company form the funds on which the Indians are paid three per cent, the government rate of interest.

Mr. BENNETT. I quite understand that the Indians are paid 3 per cent interest, but my contention is that on this $9,000 they should have been allowed the rate of interest received by the government. The Indians did not know at the time the deal was carried on by Mr. Cockburn that that was the manner in which it was being done, and they were led to believe they would be paid interest on the $9,000 balance. I understand the payments are $1,000 each year?

Mr. OLIVER. $2,500 a year, and the company pays 5 per cent on the deferred payment.

Mr. BENNETT. The net result is that the Indians are not drawing any interest at all on the deferred payment.

Mr. OLIVER. The 3 per cent interest goes to the funds of the band and is distributed to the band each year.

Mr. BENNETT. It amounts to this, that the government pays the Indian fund 3 per cent on that amount, but the 5 per cent the government is deriving from the company does not go to the Indians at all. If there was no interest paid by the company, the Indians would still be paid 3 per cent on their money.

Mr. OLIVER. The Indians are being paid 3 per cent, and there is no reason I know of why the Indians of that band should receive a rate of interest different from that paid the Indians of any other band. I understood that the hon. gentleman at first complained that an unfair advantage had been given to the company. That is not so, because the company is paying a fair rate of interest upon the money that is still due and the Indians are being dealt with just as all other Indians are.

Mr. BENNETT. I could understand that if it were a cash sale the department would invest the money and pay this tribe 3 per cent, but a certain sum being due, and the government being paid 5 per cent on that the Indians naturally expect they would get the 5 per cent. They are apparently getting 3 per cent, but the contention of the Indians is that they should be paid 5 per cent on the balance remaining unpaid. The Indians were deceived, because they were led to believe by the agent they were going to get the 5 per cent interest.

Mr. OLIVER. The 5 per cent interest is added to the capital and upon that capital the Indians receive 3 per cent interest for all time to come. They are getting exactly the same treatment as all Indians similarly circumstanced. I cannot answer for what the understanding of the Indians was, but my acquaintance with Indian thought leads me to the conclusion that this would be a very remarkable band of Indians if they were getting under any possible circumstances all they thought they were entitled to.

Mr. BENNETT. The minister has developed a new phase of the question, when he says the 5 per cent interest is added to the fund as capital. What I first inferred from the statement of the minister was, that the 5 per cent went into the general funds of the government. I am simply voicing the complaint of the Indians that they were overreached by the agent when he lead them to believe they were to have the interest on the money.

Mr. OLIVER. When it takes my hon. friend (Mr. Bennett) so long to understand such a simple explanation, the Indians are not to be blamed for failing to understand it.

Mr. BENNETT. If the minister will look at 'Hansard' he will find that when he started out he was ignorant of the whole case, and it was difficult for me or any one else to understand what he was saying or trying to say, but being prompted word for word and line by line by his deputy he at last made an intelligent explanation.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. The ex-Minister of the Interior stated some time ago, that he was in communication with the Indians of the Crooked Lake reserve with reference to the surrender of that reserve. Has there been any surrender since then?

Mr. OLIVER. There has been no surrender of that reserve.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Are the Indians subject to the game laws of the various provinces?

Mr. OLIVER. It is to some extent an open question, but for purposes of administration it is assumed they are.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. If an hotelkeeper sells liquor to an Indian and he is fined by the Indian agent who is also a justice of the peace, does the fine go to the Dominion treasury?

Mr. OLIVER. In Alberta, Saskatchewan, and Manitoba it does; in British Columbia it goes to the provincial government.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. In Manitoba the fines go to the Dominion government?

Mr. OLIVER. Half the fine is to the informer and half to the government.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Assuming that the magistrate is not the Indian agent but a justice of the peace appointed by the provincial government, does the fine go to the Dominion government when the administration of justice is under the provincial authorities?

Mr. OLIVER. If the offence is under the Dominion Indian Act, I am informed that half the fine comes to the Dominion.

Indian schools, $221,795.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Do the teachers in these Indian schools require to have the same qualification as the teachers in the public schools of the province ?

Mr. OLIVER. The desire of the department is to secure teachers who hold at least third-class certificates, but it is not always possible to get such teachers.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. What inspection are they subjected to ?

Mr. OLIVER. The inspectors of the department and the agency.

Surveys, $11,000.

Mr. LAKE. I brought to the attention of the minister last year the case of an application which was being made for the opening up of a portion of the Crooked Lakes Indian reserve. The people in that section are most anxious that a portion at any rate of that reserve should be placed on the market.

Mr. OLIVER. Several attempts have been made to secure a surrender, but so far, they have not been successful. We hope at some favourable time and at an early date to make another attempt.

Mr. LAKE. This is a matter which has been under consideration a very long time. I myself brought it to the attention of the then Minister of the Interior about seven or eight years ago, and it seems that the department takes a very long time to do anything. There is an area of something like 181,000 acres reserved to the Indians close along the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway. I think that the furthest distance it is from the line is about four miles and much of the way within a mile. It extends from the town of Whitewood to the town of Grenfell and cuts off a great deal of the business of those towns and the town of Broadview, which comes in between, is not able to get any business at all from the north. On these 181,000 acres there are living 520 Indians, according to the report of the minister. That gives an average of about 350 acres per head for every man, woman and child on that reserve, and that is four or five times as much land as they can possibly make any use of. As a matter of fact they make very little use of their land. On a strip of about six miles broad and four townships long they practically make no use of the land at all. Occasionally there may be a few tons of hay cut there and at the extreme eastern end of the reserve there may be one or two Indians living, but if that strip of land were taken off it would only reduce the area of the reserve one half and still leave double the quantity of land which the Indians can possibly make any use of in the future. It must be quite apparent that the existence of so large a tract, absolutely undeveloped, lying in an old district on the original main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, is a great drawback to the progress of the country, and every effort should be made to have that drawback removed. It ought to be removed from another point of view. I calculate that the cost to the country of maintaining the Indians in the Northwest amounts to something like $40 per head. Well, a strip of land six miles broad along the southern part of that boundary, which is not used by the Indians, which is not used for anything at all, would probably supply a capital sum which, put out at interest, would keep the whole of those Indians on the reserve. It would give them an average of $40 per head, sufficient to relieve the government from any further expenditure. At the same time there would still remain to the Indians living on the other part of the reserve twice as much land as they are able to make use of. The idea that it is impossible to act unless we can get the free consent of the Indians to parting with these lands, seems to me rather strained. It would not apply to any other portion of the country. If lands are required to open up a railway through private property, there would be an expropriation and reasonable compensation paid, and the existence of private rights would not be allowed to stand in the way of public development. I cannot help thinking that some little pressure and negotiations on the part of the department would bring about a voluntary surrender by the Indians of a portion of this reserve. If the Indians will not give it up absolutely voluntarily, the government should put some little pressure on them and not allow the development of that part of the country to be retarded by keeping that great undeveloped tract of land there.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to add a word in support of what my hon. friend from Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) has said. It appears that this reserve extends 24 miles along the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway between Grenfell and Whitewood and is on an average one and a half miles from the railway. It has an extent of 182,000 acres and a population of 520 Indians and the land under crop last year was less than 900 acres. It shuts out the town of Broadview from the farming country to the north and the towns of Whitewood and Grenfell from a good deal of the territory which would naturally bring business to them. I understand that the southern portion of the reserve is not occupied or used by the Indians to any extent. Of course the rights of the Indians must be absolutely respected, but when you have a population of 520 Indians on 182,000 acres, situated in a part of the country which is rapidly developing, and in close proximity to the railway, this is a case which demands every effort of the government to bring about better conditions, so far as the development of the white population is concerned, without any detriment to the Indians, but realizing always that we must keep the most absolute good faith with them.

Mr. TURRIFF. I am in sympathy with what both the hon. gentlemen who have preceded me have said. This reserve is mostly, if not all, in my constituency, and for the past two or three years every effort has been made to induce the Indians to give up a portion of their reserve. One half might be sold for the benefit of the Indians and the Indians would still have more land left than they can possibly use. But the land cannot be disposed of until the Indians of their own accord agree to the proposition. Two or three attempts have been made by the department to get the Indians to surrender this part of their reserve, but in each case the effort has failed. I am, however, in hopes that the next time the matter is submitted to the Indians, it will be more successful. I have been doing all I possibly could, and will continue to do all I possibly can, to bring that about, because there is no doubt that Whitewood, Broadview, and to a certain extent Grenfell, are largely interested in having that land put up for sale, so that it will be brought under cultivation.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Was a part of an Indian reserve secured for the National Transcontinental Railway?

Mr. OLIVER. On the Fort William Indian reserve, some 1,600 acres were secured for the Grand Trunk Pacific Railroad.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Was that done with the Indians' consent?

Mr. OLIVER. That is done under a special law which permits expropriation for railway purposes. It is only for railway purposes that Indian lands can be expropriated.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is that a provision of the Indian Act?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes. Section 35 of the Indian Act provides for dealing with Indian lands for railway purposes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I understand that there is a legislative difficulty, but it is remarkable that the law should give a railway company power to do that for the benefit of its promoters which the government has not power to do for the inhabitants of a large community. If it is proper that a railway company, carrying on an enterprise for its own profit, and to a certain extent exercising a public function, should have the power of expropriation, it would seem equally proper that for good cause and in the interest of a large community, which is developing very rapidly, some similar power under proper restrictions should be placed in some tribunal to be created by the government, either a commission or a department of the government. This is a subject which urgently demands the attention of the government.

Mr. OLIVER. What has been said is well worthy of consideration. The case of the Broadview reserve is only one of many in the west, and it is no doubt a hardship to the surrounding country and to large business enterprises that these reserves should be in the position they are. But the case is hardly the same as a matter between a railway company and a private individual. A railway must connect the points which it is intended to connect or the whole country suffers damage, and it would never do to allow the possibility of constructing a railway to rest upon the good will of a body of men who have no interest whatever in its construction. The moral right of the Indian is no doubt just the same in the case of a railway as in the case of a private individual; that is to say, the Indian is the absolute owner, and he should not be deprived of his right without his consent. But, just as in the case of an ordinary individual, so in the case of the Indian, there is a recognized public necessity in connection with a railroad which makes it proper that private rights should be to some extent overriden. As to whether conditions in the west are so grievous as to require special legislation dealing with Indian reserves in such a drastic manner as has been suggested, is a matter for consideration. It is contrary to all the record of the government of Canada or of Great Britain to deal with the Indians in that way. But of course the interests of the people must come first, and if it becomes a question between the Indians and the whites, the interests of the whites will have to be provided for. In the meantime, it is the policy of the department to make every reasonable effort to secure an amicable surrender from the Indians of such lands as are not being employed by them and as would be of value to white settlers. Quite recently the department has been successful in securing the surrender of a part of a reserve at Kamsack on the Canadian Northern, and some time before it was successful in securing a part of the Stoney reserve south of Sintaluta and also a part of the reserve south of Battleford. The department is so thoroughly alive to the necessity of making special efforts to secure parts of Indian reserves that it has made considerable alterations in the terms it now offers to the Indians for these surrenders, and we hope it will be possible, by continuing these efforts, to secure such surrenders as will avoid any necessity for legislation on the subject. However, I am very glad the leader of the opposition has drawn attention to the matter, as it will show the House and the country that it is not a matter that can altogether be secured by departmental action, but that in the last resort legislation would be necessary.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If the minister will permit me, I would like to say that the cases appear to me to be more analogous than he seems to think. It is not necessary that any particular land should be taken for a railway. The railway can be run around the land ; but the law does not require that to be done. In the one case you run the railway through an Indian reserve, and the law gives you power to expropriate. I do not know whether it gives power to expropriate the whole of the Indian reserve ; I suppose that would depend on the view of the Railway Commission and on the consent of the Minister of Railways ; but in any case you can expropriate what is reasonably required for the right of way. In the other case a railway runs two miles distant from an Indian reserve, and the development of the country causes a prosperous community to be established there. It is all due to the railway in the first instance. I do not see much difference between expropriating the land for the right of way of the railway and expropriating it in order that the community established by the railway may have its proper development. So far as the public reasons are concerned—and that is what we are discussing—it seems there is about as much ground in one case as in the other. I fully appreciate what the minister has said, that, whether for a railway or for any other public purpose, you must consider carefully what you do, and you must observe as sacred the rights of the Indians ; if you take their lands you must make sure that they have a habitation elsewhere and also that they have full and ample compensation for everything that is taken. Subject to that, it seems to me that the cases are much upon the same level.

Mr. LAKE. I was very glad to hear the remarks of the minister. One thing I should like to have heard him say was that an immediate effort would be made with regard to this particular reserve, because the thing has been hanging fire for so very long. Year after year this matter has been up, yet nothing seems to have been done. It seems to me that surely the exercise of a certain amount of diplomacy and negotiations ought to be, and must be, successful with Indians. If an honest effort is made to push the matter through, I do not see how it can fail. I appreciate, of course, the rights of the Indians and our duty of keeping absolutely sacred our promises to them.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. I understand that the minister has stated that every effort has been made to obtain the consent of the Indians to surrender. Now, certain representations have been made to the department with regard to the Sarcee reserve, about three miles from Calgary. I understand that the minister's friends in Calgary, as well as the Board of Trade there, have made representations to him with regard to that reserve. I would like to know what action has been taken by the department to obtain the consent of these Indians. I notice that the report of the Indian Department gives the area of that reserve at something like 69,120 acres and the total population as 205. There are reserves for Indians not far away which are far in excess of the requirements of the Indians. No person can seriously contend that you require that quantity of land for 205 men, women, and children, or rather Indians, squaws and papooses. I would like to know what steps have been taken to enter into negotiations with the Indians with regard to that reserve.

Mr. OLIVER. The question of the Sarcee, reserve, of course, has been under my notice for a long time. A special agent of the department was sent, some time in February, I think, to the Sarcees—an agent in whom the department had every confidence—with instructions to try to secure from them a surrender. This agent was authorized to offer the Indians the best terms that we could arrange to give them, as we were very anxious to secure the surrender of at least a large part of the reserve, because of its proximity to the city of Calgary and its desirable agricultural character. However, the Indians refused to sell—in fact, they simply refused to negotiate, they would not listen to proposals at all. We thought it was better to drop the matter completely at the moment than to try to struggle against the expressed wishes of the Indians at the time. I can assure the hon. member (Mr. M. S. McCarthy) that at the very first moment that seems opportune negotiations will be resumed, and that every advantage that the Indian Act permits us to give in order to produce that surrender will be offered to these Indians.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. Did the department offer to negotiate with other Indians at the same time with respect to their reserves ?

Mr. OLIVER. Not exactly at the same time. But the same officer was successful in negotiating the Kamsack reserve on the Canadian Northern.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. Have not reserves been surrendered in the neighbourhood of Battleford and Prince Albert and along the lines of the Canadian Pacific Railway and Canadian Northern ? Have not surrenders been obtained from the Indians on reserves further north ?

Mr. OLIVER. As I have just stated, within the last year surrenders have been secured on the Kamsack reserve on the Canadian Northern. The same is true of the Stoney reserve at Battleford and part of the Assiniboia reserve at Sintaluta.

Mr. FOWLER. I would like to ask the minister if any of the reserves in British Columbia have been surrendered or if steps are being taken to have such reserves surrendered ?

Mr. OLIVER. There have been no surrenders in British Columbia within recent years. There was an exchange two or three years ago, of part of the land in a reserve for another piece of land.

Mr. FOWLER. Where was that exchange ?

Mr. OLIVER. At Hadley, in the Similkameen Valley.

Mr. FOWLER. It seems to me that it is more important that there should be surrenders of some of the reserves in British Columbia than of the reserves in the Northwest, because of the fact that the area of cultivable land in British Columbia is so much more limited than in the great provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan. Take two reserves that I know a good deal about, one near Kamloops and the other near Enderby. These two Indian reserves are upon the very best land in the country, lying very close to these towns, both of them thriving growing towns. It is very important, in the best interest of the community, that the Indians should be removed from these reserves and the land taken for the purposes of settlement, for fruit farms for which it is especially suitable. The Enderby reserve is particularly valuable for cultivation, but it is not being cultivated by the Indians; the land is simply lying there waste, in a province, where as hon. gentlemen know, there is not a very large quantity of available agricultural land. Moreover it is not particularly good for the morals of the Indians themselves that they should be so close to the towns as they are in these cases. As we know, the Indians are not so strong to resist temptation as are the whites; they more easily acquire the vices of the whites than they do their virtues. Of course, the rights and interests of the Indians must be considered and safeguarded by the Indian Department; but it would be a very important matter for the people of these communities which I know, and of which therefore I speak, for the department to take steps to remove these Indians from reserves, paying them a proper and reasonable price for their lands. They are lands which will bring a large price if opened up and sold by auction. The Indians could be removed to some other place in the province more removed from the towns. I think this is a matter that might be well looked into. It is one of great importance, not only to the Indians but also to the people of British Columbia.

Mr. OLIVER. I appreciate the special conditions existing in British Columbia as stated by the hon. member. There is one difficulty in British Columbia, however, that does not exist in the Northwest Territories, namely, that the British Columbia government claims to hold a certain interest in these reserves. Therefore, in order to get the land into such shape that the government can give a clear title to it, we have to deal with the British Columbia government as well as with the Indians. The question is therefore more complicated than it is in the Territories. Besides, the Indians are possibly more difficult to deal with, owing perhaps to their more businesslike disposition, and also to the fact, which is apparent to them as well as to everybody else, that they have a corner practically on the best there is, and they do not feel like giving it up. In this case I may say the terms which the department is permitted by the Indian Act to give the Indians in order to secure their consent to surrender, are not particularly attractive to the Indians. If the sentiment that has been expressed here to-night is a general sentiment, it might be worth while considering whether the terms which are permitted now by the Indian Act might be somewhat relaxed so that they would be more likely to meet with the views of the Indians. Perhaps we had better move in that direction rather than adopt the somewhat drastic suggestion of expropriation. We are anxious to do the best we can to secure the land for valuable development ; at the same time the traditional policy of this country in regard to the Indians is to observe very carefully their treaty rights.

Mr. FOWLER. Those who selected the reserves for the Indians in British Columbia certainly gave them full justice, because in the tracts I know of, they have selected the very best lands in the country. I would like to ask the minister if the British Columbia government claim a reversionary interest in the land after the rights of the Indians have been extinguished.

Mr. OLIVER. I understand the position is that if an Indian band becomes extinct, or if the band abandons a reservation, the British Columbia government claims the right to that land, that is to say, they claim a reversionary interest in the reserves.

Mr. FOWLER. If the rights of the Indians were extinguished by purchase would they have that reversionary interest or would that only apply in case of abandonment? I do not know the law with respect to the matter. Is that a statute or a decision of the courts ?

Mr. OLIVER. That is by arrangement between the British Columbia government and the Dominion. It has not been made the subject of a judicial decision.

Mr. FOWLER. Then it is simply in case of abandonment by the Indians. I suppose there might be some question as to what was meant by an abandonment, whether a sale outright, or a removal of the Indians would be an abandonment, they moving away voluntarily without receiving anything for their lands.

Mr. OLIVER. I understand the contention of the British Columbia government is that whenever a reservation becomes vacant for any reason they then take possession of the land.

Mr. HERRON. In the western country particularly we all recognize the importance of the government keeping faith with the Indians. But has as been stated here tonight, these reserves are very important in many parts of our country. Not only do they exist in the places already mentioned, but they extend, I may say, to many other portions of our country. In my district there is a Blood reserve which extends to the town of Cardstone. I have no authority from the people to make an application to the government to secure the abandonment of any portion of that reserve, but I know they have been making an effort for a number of years to get a portion of it thrown open. Cardstone is a very thriving town, one of the most prosperous towns in the southern country, and this Blood reserve extends, I might almost say, to the very centre of the town, the town has actually grown round a corner of the reserve, and the main street comes squarely to the line fence. Now it would be a great advantage to that town if a small portion of that reserve could be thrown open. I do not know what obstacle is in the way. The minister is well aware of the circumstances, and I would like him to take the case of Cardstone into consideration when he is considering these other Indian reservations.

Mr. OLIVER. I am well acquainted with the circumstances alluded to by the hon. member. Some years ago an effort was made to secure a surrender but it was not successful. We are now arranging to renew negotiations with the Indians in regard to that piece of land, and I hope we will be successful.

Mr. BENNETT. Who has the lease of the Blood reserve, when was it granted, for how many years and the consideration?

Mr. OLIVER. The reserve is not leased. But there is a lease of a right upon the reserve which was granted in 1903 to the McEwan, Cattle Co., of Brandon.

Mr. BENNETT. What is the consideration?

Mr. OLIVER. The cash consideration is $5,000 a year, and the limitation is 7,000 head of cattle. Then the lessees are compelled to purchase 700 tons of hay at $4 a ton from the Indians. There are other conditions with regard to the fireguards, &c.

Mr. BENNETT. Are not Mr. Peter Ryan and Mr. Charles Beck connected with that so-called McEwan Cattle Company and are they not known in the department as the actual lessees ?

Mr. OLIVER. I am informed that the department has no knowledge of the connection of these gentlemen with the lease.

Mr. BENNETT. Is there any correspondence between Charles Beck and Peter Ryan with the government in reference to this ?

Mr. OLIVER. My officers say they have no remembrance of any such correspondence in the department.

Mr. BENNETT. I can tell the minister that Mr. Beck has either a hallucination, or a very vivid remembrance of it. One of the boasts of Mr. Beck's life is the deal that he made with the Indian Department at Ottawa when he got the celebrated grazing rights on the Blood reserve. What is the usual rate per acre for such a privilege as is enjoyed?

Mr. OLIVER. There are two grazing leases on Indian reserves, on the Bloods and the Piegans, and the rental is per head of stock, not per acre of the reserve. I have said the rental is $5,000 per year with a limit of 7,000 cattle.

Mr. BENNETT. Is there a fixed two cent rate ordinarily on these leases in the department and for how many years is this lease granted ?

Mr. OLIVER. The lease is for 10 years. The rate of 2 cents an acre that my hon. friend speaks of is the rate paid by the holders of grazing leases from the Interior Department, not connected with the Indian Department at all.

Mr. BENNETT. Can the minister tell me of another 10 year grazing lease in the department ?

Mr. OLIVER. The only leases on Indian reserves are the two I have mentioned, and they are each one for a ten year period.

Mr. BENNETT. May I ask who has the other one, the Piegan ?

Mr. OLIVER. Maunsell Bros. of Macleod.

Mr. BENNETT. I am not in possession of facts about the Maunsell one but was it subsequent to the MacKenna one ?

Mr. OLIVER. The Piegan reserve was leased shortly before the Blood reserve. The Piegan reserve was leased in the beginning of 1903, and the Blood later.

Mr. BENNETT. The minister will see that an extraordinary privilege was granted by his predecessor in office. In the first place none of them, I am informed, have been for more than two years, and yet this is made for 10 years. The worst of it, is as I figure out, that this amounts to about 1¼ cents an acre of what is notoriously the finest grazing reserve in the Northwest, and yet it is given to these gentlemen. It is a notorious fact that Peter Ryan and his colleagues are the beneficiaries at a cent and a quarter an acre ; that is what it amounts to and they are given it for 10 years. I am surprised the minister's officers have not heard of Mr. Beck or Mr. Ryan. Mr. Ryan is so interested that he goes out to view it and admire it, and Mr. Beck makes similar pilgrimages. Perhaps the minister, with a little persistent inquiry from some of his officials, can recall to their minds Beck or Ryan as being concerned in the transaction.

Mr. OLIVER. I am not able to answer the hon. member as to whether these gentlemen have negotiated with the department in that case or not. Of course it is possible to bring down the papers that would show it if it is considered important.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Who are the ostensible lessees ?

Mr. OLIVER. The McEwan Ranching Company of Brandon.

Mr. BENNETT. I think the House will be surprised that with his deputy beside him the minister has to inform us that his deputy cannot recall these gentlemen ever figuring in the transaction, which is one of very great note. Perhaps I can remind the deputy of the great struggle there was in the department ; perhaps the deputy can recollect it if I recall the great struggle there was on behalf of friends of an hon. member from British Columbia who were looking for this concession also. This was one of the great boasts of Mr. Beck that they had beaten all other competitors in securing this ground at 1¼ cents an acre when the going rate is 2 cents an acre on the very best grazing lands in the Territories. And better than that they had got it for 10 years when its value might be enhanced, doubled or trebled, and yet the minister informs the House that the deputy has no recollection of these gentlemen being in the transaction. I will accept that statement and friends of Mr. Beck will know what reliance is to be placed on the official statements made in this House through the Minister.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not know if the House is as much interested in Mr. Beck as my friend is, but it may be interested in knowing what these people are getting for the 1¼ cents an acre which they are paying. I said a little while ago that they are not paying by the acre but by the head of stock pastured. My hon. friend figures out the acreage of the reserve and the number of stock, and figures the payment at 1¼ cents an acre. He is not aware that the largest band of Indians I think in the country the tribe who own the largest number of stock also pasture their cattle and horses on the same reserve. The Indians have 11 stallions, 3,034 mares, 135 bulls, 371 steers, 2,695 breeding cows and 2,937 young stock which they also pasture on the reserve, along with the 7,000 head which the McEwan Company is entitled to pasture on it. Therefore, as the Indians are pasturing something like 8,000 or 9,000 head of stock on the same reserve that the ranche company is pasturing 7,000 head upon, if the figures which my hon. friend gives are correct and that figures out at 1¼ cents a head, then the 8,000 or 9,000 head pastured by the Indians should figure out about the same way. Therefore that lease or that reserve is carrying stock at the rate of 2½ cents per acre, and not at the rate of 2 cents an acre, which my hon. friend has said is the going rate of leases from the Indian Department. Instead of these people paying less than the going rate they are paying more than double when you consider the number of stock.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the area of the reserve ?

Mr. OLIVER. About 350,000 acres.

Mr. BENNETT. I was figuring on so large a number and it amounted to about 1¼ cents. On this other basis it amounts to about ¾ cents per head for the cattle. May I ask the minister—this is no sin of the minister's he found it when he came into the department if it is a sin—if tenders were called for this arrangement ?

Mr. OLIVER. No, no tenders were called for. The arrangement was made direct with the Indians under the sanction of the department.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the statutory authority with regard to that.

Mr. OLIVER. This arrangement being a lease and not a sale it is not dealt with by statute. There was a large area of 350,000 acres carrying the stock owned by the Indians, but it was not yielding any other revenue and the Indians were not making any very serious use of it. Other ranchers in the vicinity were, according to the custom, using the reserve for pasturage without being interfered with by the Indians. The department thought it well to arrange that the pasturage not required by the Indians for their stock should yield a revenue for their support, and the Indians were permitted to enter into this arrangement whereby they received a fixed yearly revenue for permitting the grazing of this stock on the reserve.

Mr. BENNETT. The Indians are supposed to be the wards of the government, and if, as I am informed, Mr. Peter Ryan made the contract it was certainly taking advantage of these Indians to let Mr. Peter Ryan, who has the reputation of a spell binder, go there and deal with them. Tht minister stated that the Indians derived no revenue from other people who let their cattle pasture on the reserve. I was there four years ago and I heard a gentleman say that he paid the Indians for the privilege. There is a strong suspicion that the Indians were not looking for Mr. Peter Ryan and Mr. Beck but rather that Mr. Ryan and Mr. Beck and some one else were looking for the Indians when the arrangement was made. It was a beautiful arrangement for these gentlemen, and it is thought that McEwan and Company were only stalking horses in whose name the deal was made. There was no public competition in this deal and there will probably be no public competition in the deal that Mr. Ryan and Mr. Beck are making with regard to Giant's Tomb. If the deputy minister can find any correspondence from Mr. Beck or Mr. Ryan in connection with this, the minister can bring it down with Mr. Chitty's valuation of the timber on the Giant's Tomb and the valuation of the island at $9,000.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The condition of affairs seems to be unsatisfactory. The Indians are simply wards and the lease in the end must be made with the Crown. If the government can make a lease for ten years without any statutory authority, I do not see why they cannot make it for 100 years; the result of which, of course, is that those who have influence with the adminstration might make a very pretty arrangement about some of these reserves in the Northwest. If it is desirable that a lease should be made, then there should be statutory authority, or regulations by the department under statutory authority. The present system is not in the public interest nor in the interest of the Indians.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. What is the name of the officer who negotiated with the Sarcee Indians in February last?

Mr. OLIVER. The gentleman is not in the regular employ of the department, but was especially employed for the purpose of making this arrangement. He is the same gentleman who made the arrangement with regard to the Kamsacks. He is the Rev. John McDougall, of Calgary; a gentleman who has been in the Northwest for a very long time, and no other man in the Northwest is as well acquainted with the Indians or as fully trusted by them as the Rev. Mr. McDougall. The department got his services and we thought we were exercising the best judgment in doing so.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. Who negotiated for the reserve close to Edmonton?

Mr. OLIVER. There has been no surrender in the vicinity of Edmonton within the past year.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. There was one near Battleford, one near Kamsack, and one at Sintaluta. Has not a reserve been surrended in the vicinity of Edmonton within the last two years?

Mr. OLIVER. There has been no surrender within the past year, or I think within the past two years, but before that there was a surrender of a strip of what is called the Stoney Plain reserve, of another strip of what is called the Michel and another strip of what is called the Alexander reserve. Many years ago, there was a reserve known as the Passpasschase, which lay immediately south of Strathcona and which was surrendered, but that is very long ago.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. The situation seems to be that it is a very difficult matter to receive the consent of the Indians in the south, but it is an easy matter to receive their consent along the line of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway and Canadian Northern Railway.

Mr. LAKE. The minister gave an answer the other day, and I understood he was speaking of all the reserves that were being opened at the present time. In his answer he said:

It was the intention to open for sale the following lands which have been surrendered by the Indians to be sold for their benefit.

A portion of Alexander's reserve, No. 134, about 25 miles from Edmonton, comprising 9,518 acres which have been surrendered by the Indians to be sold for their benefit, and which will be subdivided as early as possible for purpose of sale.

Sioux, $4,514.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What does that mean?

Mr. OLIVER. They are a band of Sioux Indians who came to this country in 1860 and for reasons between themselves and the government of the United States, they have never been able to move back. They have lived in Manitoba ever since, and while this government has no obligation to these Indians, it has been thought good policy to treat with them in such a way as to keep them under reasonable control.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Are there reserves for them?

Mr. OLIVER. Reservations have been set apart for them, and they have been given certain consideration, but they are not treated the same as Indians who have been the original inhabitants of the country.

Indians—Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, and Northwest Territories—general expenses, $130,036.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Before going into a general discussion of that item, I would ask the minister if he has any information to give to the House about the Indian schools, which were a subject of discussion the other evening?

Mr. OLIVER. There are a number of different kinds of schools, nearly as many kinds as there are schools. The difference of situation also makes a great difference. One particular class, however, has attracted the most attention, that is, the industrial schools. These are large and expensive institutions, with buildings erected by this government and in two instances conducted directly by the Indian Department. The other schools are conducted in connection with the missionary enterprises of various religious denominations. These schools were instituted many years ago with a view, to put it shortly, of turning the Indians into white men, and I think I am not going too far when I say that at this date and after the experience that has been had, it is evident that success to that extent has not been attained. Just how far short of that measure of success we can be content and still consider that we have done good work, is something that must always be an open question. I may say that the question of the usefulness of the industrial schools has been brought somewhat strongly to the attention of the department by the fact that some of the religious denominations charged with the joint conduct of these schools find difficulty in carrying them on under the financial arrangements under which they were begun. I have met representatives of several of these denominations, have heard their representations, and have discussed the question with them, but have not yet been able to reach a conclusion which would enable me to make any announcement. I can only say that the department is thoroughly aware of the importance of the question and of the interests involved and of the great difficulties surrounding the question; but an effort will be made to reach an adjustment which, if not satisfactory to every one, will be as satisfactory as possible.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. While I have considerable delicacy in criticising payments to medical men, knowing that there is no class of persons who render better service for their fees, still, there is an item in this connection to which I think the minister's attention should be called. In looking through the Auditor General's Report, I find that Dr. Lafferty, of Calgary, as medical attendant of the St. Joseph Industrial School, received a salary of $300, besides expenses; for the Calgary Industrial School, a salary of $200; for expenses to Ottawa, $200; as medical officer for the Stoney reserve, a salary of $400; as medical officer for the Sarcee agency, a salary of $300; a large amount for livery; as medical officer for the Blackfoot agency, a salary of $600; besides expenses; making a total in all $2,000. I would like an explanation from the minister as to how this gentleman comes to have a monopoly of all these reserves situated at various distances within fifty or sixty miles of Calgary. Surely there must be medical men who live much nearer the reserves, and whose expenses would be much less; or is it that none of these local men are of the right political colour? I have been in Calgary lately, and some people there claim that Dr. Lafferty was in Ottawa on a mission for a senatorship; but I cannot imagine that he would charge to the government his expenses on a mission of that kind. Is it necessary for this gentleman to visit Ottawa in connection with the discharge of his duties as medical officer for these agencies? I think this matter requires an explanation from the Minister of the Interior, especially as this gentleman engages in private practice, or, to use the words of the Postmaster General, is subsidized by the government to the extent of $2,000 to compete with his fellow practitioners in Calgary. An Ontario postmaster was dismissed the other day because it was said that he was subsidized by the government to engage in the grocery business in competition with his fellow grocers; and here we have a medical practitioner subsidized to the extent of $2,000 and engaged in private practice in the city of Calgary. Perhaps the Minister of the Interior has some explanation of this.

Mr. OLIVER. I may say that the idea of the hon. member that there may not be any medical officer available at these reserves is correct. Settlement is sparse in their vicinity, and it is practically necessary, if the Indians are to have such medical treatment as would warrant the government in paying a salary, that the physician should be one residing in Calgary, and therefore likely to possess medical skill of a high order. The Blackfoot reserve is sixty miles east of Calgary. The Stoney reserve is some fifty miles west. The Sarcee is immediately adjoining Calgary and there is an industrial school within the city of Calgary. There is no reason why Dr. Lafferty or any other physician in the city of Calgary should not discharge the duties on all these different reserves.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. And carry on private practice besides?

Mr. OLIVER. I do not know any reason why he should not, provided the Indian Department has the first call upon his services. If it does not require those services, I see no reason why he should not engage in private practice. I understand that Dr. Lafferty is not able to engage in any lucrative amount of private practice because of his visits to these reserves which take up most of his time. As regards the expenses, Dr. Lafferty came to Ottawa on departmental business connected with medical work.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What was it?

Mr. OLIVER. To discuss hospital arrangements and the treatment of the Indians. Dr. Lafferty is a physician of considerable eminence, a long resident in this country, and his advice and experience are considered of value by the department. At the same time the Tuberculosis convention was sitting in this city. As is well known tuberculosis is the great cause of death among Indians of the west, and it was thought well that Dr. Lafferty should attend this convention in the hope that some advantage might accrue.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Did he come here in consequence of the direction of the department ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I suppose that is contained in a letter or telegram.

Mr. OLIVER. I am informed that he came with the approval of the department, but on the suggestion of Dr. Bryce, of the Interior Department, who was in Calgary and discussed some of these matters with Dr. Lafferty.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is Dr. Bryce an official of the Indian Department ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, of the Indian and the Interior Departments.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Was it part of his duties to send this gentleman to Ottawa ?

Mr. OLIVER. I am sure my hon. friend will agree that it is his business to do anything that may be necessary in order to improve the medical standing or work.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Why does not the minister own up and say that Dr. Lafferty came down here to lay claim to the senatorship. That would save a good deal of time. I would suggest that it might be advisable to appoint this gentleman medical officer for every Indian reserve in Canada. Perhaps that would simplify proceedings. The Minister of the Interior, says he knows of no reason why Dr. Lafferty should not carry on his private practice. I would refer the minister to the Postmaster General. If that hon. gentleman were in his place, he would give the minister a more effective answer than I can and one to which he would give greater regard. The Postmaster General seemed to think that although a postmaster gave the whole of his time to the duties of his office, he should not be interested in any other business. Now, however, we learn that this rule does not apply to a gentleman who fills the position of medical officer in five different agencies, and yet I understand that there are medical men nearer some of these agencies than this gentleman, although I did not gather that from my hon. friend. My hon. friend said there was no one else, but I understand there are others nearer some of these agencies, so that the minister will have to abandon that ground and consult his deputy again in order to find some better excuse.

Mr. OLIVER.

Mr. OLIVER. There is no medical man near those agencies of anything like the standing or qualification of Dr. Lafferty.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is rather a serious reflection on those gentlemen. Is the Minister of the Interior so thoroughly conversant with the different capabilities of these men that he is able to pronounce as to their respective merits ? He is certainly very venturesome. I should think that that would be a little difficult for the hon. gentleman considering the short time he has been in the department. It indicates, however, that he has gone into the business of his department in very great detail since he is able to state that although there are other medical men nearer these reserves, none of them possess the qualification of Dr. Lafferty. My hon. friend is evidently master of the details of his department to a greater extent than any of his predecessors.

Mr. OLIVER. I happen to be personally familiar with the facts in this connection. I am well acquainted with the ground and the circumstances and with the gentleman whose name is in question. I think it must be obvious to everybody that at outlying places, where there is no density of population, it is not possible to have a physician of the same standing as in a city of 12,000 or 15,000 people.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Who are the medical men to whom my hon. friend refers as not being equal to Dr. Lafferty in qualifications ?

Mr. OLIVER. I do not know that there is a medical man resident in the vicinity of the Morley reserve.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. How then can you speak of his qualifications ?

Mr. OLIVER. I know that if he were of the standing of Dr. Lafferty, he would not be there.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Is there not a medical man at Cochrane between the Stoney and Sarcee reserves? I understand there are two medical men there and with all due difference to Mr. Lafferty's qualifications, I do not think he bears that superior reputation with which the hon. gentleman credits him or at any rate not more so than Dr. Parks, who is at Cochrane. The hon. gentleman is not so well acquainted with the particulars as he would lead us to suppose he is, for if he were he would know that there are medical men in these localities. At Cochrane, there are two, Dr. Parks and Dr. Ritchie. Dr. Parks especially is a very eminent man in his profession, just as eminent, if not more so, than Dr. Lafferty. There is another, Dr. Rose, at Gleichen, right at the Blackfoot reserve. Why has a medical man to come all the way out from Calgary, when you have on the spot a man abundantly qualified to perform the duties of physician on the reserve ? I think the minister has not improved his position by his later explanation. He started with the explanation that Dr. Lafferty came here in connection with departmental work to consult about the hospitals, but when driven from pillar to post, he explained that he was here in connection with the tuberculosis conference, and had come at the suggestion of Dr. Bryce. I think his attempt at explanation of this gentleman's position is not very successful.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The successful lieut. governor gets two terms and the unsuccessful senator has his expenses paid.

Mr. HENDERSON. Are we to understand that in the event of one of the Indians on this reserve being taken ill it is necessary to send sixty miles for a doctor ? Why the Indian might die, long before the doctor reached him.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Or he might get well.

Mr. HENDERSON. Are we to understand that this medical man is the only one who is permitted to attend these Indians and that the Indian patient live or die, is obliged to await this doctor's arrival ? It might be that Dr. Lafferty might be fifty miles off attending some other Indian; then when he returns to Calgary he must undertake a trip of sixty miles to attend his patient. I presume they have no telegraphs or telephones to call the doctor, in which case a messenger has to be sent all the distance to call the doctor and the doctor must drive out. That seems to be an arrangement not very much in the interest of the Indians. If there are doctors living in the neighbourhood of the reserve, even if they are not so politically eminent as Dr. Lafferty, I think it would be well, in the interest of humanity, to give the Indians the privilege of calling them. I am surprised that, with all this heavy cost of providing medical attendance for the Indians, it seems to be managed according to a system that gives very little relief to the Indian population.

Mr. OLIVER. The position is this : The government, assuming the responsibility of doing what can be done to maintain the health of the Indians, does not feel that it would be discharging that responsibility in such a case as that of Calgary except by employing a medical man of recognized standing and ability. Such a man Dr. Lafferty is. He certainly received his appointment when there was no medical man available at Gleichen. It is true that Cochrane is nearer to Morley than Calgary, but it is also true that it is as easy to go from Calgary to Morley as it is to go from Cochrane to Morley, because the communication is by train and the run from Calgary is the nearest point, as it is, of course, in the case of the industrial school at Calgary. Having to employ a Calgary physician for the Sarcee reserve and the industrial school, it is only reasonable that the same physician should have charge of these other reserves until such time as there shall be physicians of standing and reputation at points convenient to the reserve. It is simply absurd to suggest that a medical man resident at a town like Gleichen or even Cochrane has the same standing and reputation as a man with an established practice for many years in a city like Calgary. If these gentlemen have the ability and standing, they certainly show very little business instinct, or they would get into some place where they would have an opportunity to build up a larger practice.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That seems to be rather a reflection on the inhabitants of Gleichen and these other towns. The argument with the minister seems to be that the physician who is presumably fit to attend the white people at Gleichen or one of these other towns is not competent to attend the Indians on the reserve. The people living in these towns employ these physicians and, presumably, are satisfied with the treatment they receive, yet these physicians, although unknown to the Minister of the Interior are branded by him as absolutely unfit to attend the Indians. I presume that the minister would not have gone so far and pronounced this judgment upon them, or instituted this comparison, unless he had made a thorough study of the diplomas that Dr. Lafferty possesses and the diplomas that these other physicians have. Would he be good enough to tell us where Dr. Lafferty graduated and where these other physicians graduated ?

Mr. OLIVER. I have no knowledge where any of these physicians graduated. But I do know that Dr. Lafferty has been a physician of first-class standing in the city of Calgary for the last fifteen years. And I am satisfied, as every man must be satisfied, that a physician has not open to him the same opportunity for a lucrative practice in a small village that he has in a large city. If he has ability he will be found in a city and not in a village. That is evidence that I put before my hon. friend far more conclusive than any evidence concerning diplomas.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Would it not be reasonable to help out the struggling young men to eke out a livelihood in the towns that the minister describes, instead of adding this wealth of salaries to the splendid practice which he says Dr. Lafferty has in Calgary ? This seems to be a case of giving to him that hath and withholding from him that hath not.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. I do not think the minister has improved his position much by his explanation. He undertakes to judge of the qualifications of gentlemen of whose being at these places he was not even aware. He says that Dr. Lafferty enjoys a large and lucrative practice in Calgary and has been there for fifteen years, and yet a few minutes ago he said that Dr. Lafferty had all his time taken up attending to the Indians. When I was speaking of the local physicians I should have mentioned Dr. Richardson, of Canmore, besides the two I have mentioned at Cochrane and one at Gleichen. As to the minister's judgment of these gentlemen, how does he know but that, like Dr. Lafferty, they may have some other employment more lucrative than medicine—land speculation for instance, or land cultivation. It is not necessary for a physician to have a large country practice to be well qualified or to be well known. However, perhaps the minister has made the best explanation he could. There is another item to which I would like to call attention. At page J—19 of the Auditor General's Report, I find the items of the expenses of Dr. Spurgeon Campbell and nurses to the Norway House agency, Manitoba. I notice this very large item : Dr. S. Campbell, services, 169 days to April 10, $25 per day. Then his expenses, $15, amounting altogether to $4,240 for the one year. There are two nurses, Miss. Langridge, a nurse, 228 days to June 8, at $4 a day, and Miss. Webster, a nurse, 228 days to June 8, $4 a day, making altogether, with dog trains taking them in and out again, upwards of $7,000 for this trip. Would the minister say whether there was an outbreak there of any infectious disease, such as smallpox, which took them up to the Norway House agency and kept them there over five months and a half ? I think the nurses were there for seven or eight months. I am sure that if the doctor had remained in Winnipeg where he resides he certainly could not have earned $25 a day. This seems a very liberal allowance.

Mr. OLIVER. I am informed that there was an outbreak of diphtheria at Norway House which occurred in the month of January, and in order to cope with that outbreak it was thought necessary to send a doctor and nurses there, which at that time was a very expensive operation of course, involving substantial remuneration, and the charges which are shown in the Auditor General's Report.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. The minister will see by the item that the doctor must have gone up in the month of November, because he was there 169 days to April 10, which I think would mean that he went there some time in November. The item is found on page J—19. Did this outbreak last all that time ? How many patients were there under the doctor's charge ?

Mr. OLIVER. I cannot give the hon. gentleman the information off hand, but I will place it before the House later on if desired.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. I think I can explain the item probably a little better than the minister himself. As a matter of fact, the doctor and the nurses went there in the month of November, and there were no dog trains to bring them out, and they had to stop there until spring, and charged for all the time they were there, even though doing nothing, Dr. Campbell at $25 a day, and the nurses at $4 a day. I think that is the true explanation. It was owing to some negligence on the part of the department in not making arrangements for the return trip. As a matter of fact I know that to be the case, because I employed one of the nurses since myself, and she explained it to me.

Mr. OLIVER. I will be glad to bring down a full report in regard to this matter, if desired. It occurred last year, and I have no knowledge of the circumstances.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. There is another item I would like to have explained, I notice on page J—45 of the Auditor General's Report an item that might be made a little clearer.

Salaries to June 30, 1905 : Agent, A. J. McNeill, 12 months, $1,100 ; stock man, A. Marshall, 11 months, $550 ; interpreter, G. Hodgson, 12 months, $480 ; scout, Otter, 12 months, $120.

Well, these are quite well understood. But I am not so clear about the meaning of the following items : Herders at $15 a month, Bull Collar, $45. I do not know whether it is so much a month or not by the way it is printed here. I imagine these are the names of the herders. First there is Bull Collar, $45. Is that the name of one of the herders, or is it $45 for a bull collar ? If so, I think the collar must have been silver mounted. The next item is 'Dodging a Horse, $45.' We have to pay that high price for this piece of agility. The next is 'John One Spot, $165.' If we have to pay $165 for one spot, I suppose we would have to pay double that sum for two spots. The next is 'Jim Starlight, $15.' No doubt his work was done after sundown. The next is ' Sarcee Woman, $75.' I do not like to press the Minister of the Interior too closely to tell us what she was doing, because I do not know whether this is a woman or not. But if she is a woman, what was she doing ? Is this one of the herders ? Evidently they believe in woman's rights up there. The next item is 'Wolf, $45.' The next 'Assistant Issuer, Tom Godin, twelve months, $60.' Am I right in interpreting these names as the names of herders ?—because if so, they are as unique as the names of some of the hon. gentleman's constituents.

Mr. OLIVER. These are the names of herders.

Some resolutions reported.

HARBOUR OF NORTH SYDNEY.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 74) respecting the Harbour of North Sydney, in Nova Scotia. He said : Some years ago the harbour commission of Nova Scotia obtained power to borrow the sum of $4,000. This power was acted upon by the corporation to the effect of borrowing perhaps the full amount of $4,000. Since that time they have paid back most if not all of the money which they borrowed. Last year they asked for power to borrow the same sum of $4,000 less the balance remaining due. The matter was referred to the Department of Justice, and it was considered that their borrowing power was exhausted. So it becomes necessary to have an Act passed empowering them to borrow the sum of $6,000.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

BROCKVILLE CHEESE CURING ROOM.

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture). Before the Orders of the Day are proceeded with, I wish, in justice to my hon. friend from Leeds (Mr. Taylor), to refer to a matter which he brought up in the House on March 27. On that day he brought before the House an answer which had been given by me on the day before regarding the Brockville curing room, and he pointed out that there was an inaccuracy in my reply. I had the matter looked up, and I wish now to inform the House and my hon. friend that the clerk in the accountant's office, to whom was entrusted the making up of this expenditure did make an error in his computation. Here is the explanation which has been furnished me by my deputy:

I find that the clerk in the accountant's office who was entrusted with making up this expenditure, made an error in his computation. The figures which were furnished you as the expenditure were $18,661.34. They should have been $20,831.50.

These figures are made up from the Auditor General's Report for the year 1901-2, 1902-3, 1903-4, 1904-5, and for the current fiscal year up to the 1st March instant from the ledger of the department. The details are as follows :

Expenditure.

1901-2—building, plant, installation, &c. (D—67-68)..	$ 7,553 26
1902-3—maintenance, $3,806.04 (D—101-102) ; hauling, $1,011.60 (D—100) ..	4,817 64
1903-4—maintenance, $2,265.95 (D—85) ; hauling, $1,076.30 (D—84)..	3,342 25
1904-5—maintenance, $2,958.61 (D—67) ; hauling, $660 (D—66)..	3,618 61
1905-6, March 1, 1906—maintenance, $1,333.24 ; hauling, $166.50..	1,499 74
	$20,831 50

Mr. Taylor, according to 'Hansard' (page 710) undertook to give the expenditure from the Auditor General's Reports for the fiscal years ending respectively 1st July, 1903, 1904, 1905. For the first two years the accountant is unable to say what items Mr. Taylor included in his addition, as he does not and the totals of any of the several items in the reports for those two years tally with Mr. Taylor's totals.

For the last fiscal year, however, it appears that to make up the total given by Mr. Taylor viz.: $5,929, he took the expenditure shown at (D—67) under the heading 'cheese curing room, Brockville, $2,958.61,' the item 'Brockville cheese haulers, $660,' page (D—66), and also the item 'Brockville curing room, cheese purchased and cured,' under the heading 'cheese account,' at page (D—66), $1,732.72, and, lastly, the item 'services of N. G. Somerville, Brockville, to 30th April, 1905,' under the heading 'cheese curing rooms, general,' at page (D—67), $578.38. These two latter items should not be included in making up the total expenditure in connection with the Brockville cheese curing room. It has happened that cheese have been purchased at some of the cool curing rooms and resold, but the transactions did not affect the expenditure, were not connected therewith, and had no connection with the operation of the cool curing room. These transactions have generally resulted in a gain, but the losses, whenever they have occurred, have not been charged against the curing rooms, nor has any gain derived from such transactions been treated as revenue. The matter of such transactions has been considered quite separately and distinct from the operation of the curing room. The item of Mr. Somerville's salary, $578.38, should not be charged against the curing room, as during the time when this salary was earned, he was not working in connection with the curing room, but was doing the work of the department generally.

I make this explanation in justice to my hon. friend and the department.

WINTER NAVIGATION, PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND.

Mr. ALEX. MARTIN (Queen's). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to call the attention of my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to a reply which he gave to a question regarding the winter communication between the province of Prince Edward Island and the mainland. That reply appears not to have satisfied the people of that province. They appear to consider it as rather equivocal. The reply given was as follows:

A steamer is being built which will, in conjunction with another steamer, assist in winter navigation.

There is a rumour afloat that the intention is to put on this service the steamer 'Montcalm', and the people of our province have some doubts as to the ability of that steamer to be of any great assistance in maintaining communication. To show the minister that I have some proof of what I say, I would ask the House to be patient while I quote from one of the leading papers in my province:

A disquieting report comes from Ottawa that no new steamer for the Prince Edward Island winter service has yet been contracted for and that the reply given in parliament to Mr. Hughes, M.P., in relation thereto, was misleading. The report referred to intimates that a new ice-breaking steamer is being constructed for the lower St. Lawrence, and the steamship 'Montcalm,' which has proved rather disappointing there, will next winter be assigned to help out the winter service across the Straits of Northumberland.

Another rumour has it that after the late lamented Minister of Marine (Mr. Préfontaine)—whose death we all regret—started for England, a cablegram was sent after him with the advice not to enter into an agreement with anybody for the construction of a boat. Perhaps the minister will give the date on which the contract for the building of the boat was let and also state whether this boat is to be finished by July 1. Would he also be kind enough to state whether this new boat is to be put on the route between Prince Edward Island and the mainland or whether the 'Montcalm' is going to be put on that service?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). I cannot undertake at present to give any definite answer. I shall have to look up the record in order to see how the matter stands and I shall give my hon. friend an answer to-morrow.

Mr. FISHER.

STEAMER 'SEAGULL.'

Mr. BENNETT. May I ask the hon. minister if the department have purchased the steamer 'Seagull' from the Parry Sound Lumber Company?

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not think so. If that is the boat we had last year, it has not been purchased.

VOTES AND PROCEEDINGS.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Carleton, Ont.). I would like to call attention to an inacuracy in the Journal of the House on Friday last. The Journal has this entry:

The House resumed consideration of the proposed motion of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, That Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair, and the motion of Mr. Roche (Marquette) in amendment thereto.

And the debate continuing—the said amendment was, with leave of the House, withdrawn.

And the question being put on the main motion, it was agreed to.

That is not an accurate record of what took place. The amendment of the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Roche) was not withdrawn. But what happened was this. The government whip came to me and asked if I had any objection to the debate being adjourned. I said that I had not, and it was adjourned accordingly upon the motion of the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Greenway). I did not observe for a few moments, as I was otherwise engaged, to what business the House then proceeded, but I observed presently that it was in Committee of Supply. That was brought to my attention as being irregular, as undoubtedly it was, because the main motion having been put that the House go into Committee of Supply and to that motion an amendment having been moved and the debate on that amendment having been adjourned, it was perfectly obvious that the main motion could not be put again, and the House could not go on with supply as if the motion had been put and carried. I had a conversation with the clerk of the House and he suggested that the amendment should be technically withdrawn. To this I objected, but I told him that there was no objection to ignoring the proceeding then being had in committee, upon the understanding that the items discussed and passed, should, as soon as the House resumed supply regularly, be passed without further discussion.

I thought that the clerk of the House understood me, and I told him that I would mention the matter to the Prime Minister, to whom it had also been mentioned by the clerk. I stated it in that way to the Prime Minister and he assented to it. I came back and gave the message to the clerk, and supposed it would be arranged in that way. The clerk of the House informed me—and I am quite satisfied as to that—that he understood me to have assented to his original suggestion. I did not intend to, and never did, assent to his original suggestion in any way. I think, therefore, that the journals should be amended so as to leave the matter as it was when the debate upon the motion was adjourned. I repeat my assurance, which I have already given privately to the Prime Minister, that any items which were passed on Friday evening in that informal and irregular way, shall be passed without further discussion when the House once more resumed consideration of Supply.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). My hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) is quite correct, when I read the Votes and Proceedings I was surprised to see that the motion of my hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. W. J. Roche) had been withdrawn, because as I understood it the leader of the opposition had agreed to just what he has now stated. If the clerk will correct the proces verbal, we will resume the discussion of my hon. friend's motion at the stage at which it was left.

INQUIRY FOR RETURNS.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. May I ask the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver), through one of his colleagues, as I see the hon. gentleman is not in his place at the moment, to lay upon the table of the House, some time to-day, any documents from his department which were referred to in his speech on Friday upon the motion of my hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. W. J. Roche). If there are any which are not available in the Statutes, I think that it is only right that we should have access to them before the debate is resumed.

In that connection I would also point out to the Prime Minister that some thirty motions for returns were adopted on March 14th last, nearly three weeks ago. My hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Barker) informs me that two of these returns have been brought down. Especially in the case of papers concerning which notice was given to the department from ten days to three weeks in advance of the session, I think we might reasonably expect the returns to come down very soon.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Returns from the Department of the Interior ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Some from the Department of the Interior and some from other departments. I trust that especially those of which notice was given, as I have said, will be expedited.

TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY—CONTRACTS.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. May I ask whether the contracts mentioned on Friday have been awarded ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The government have not yet received the report of the commissioners with regard to these contracts. I understand, however, that the papers will be laid before the Railway Department to-morrow.

GRAIN INSPECTION ACT.

Mr. LAKE asked:

1. Has the government received any communications, resolutions or memorials from parties or associations in the provinces of Manitoba or Saskatchewan during the last twelve months, asking for changes in the Grain Inspection Act, in respect to the definition of the various grades of Manitoba grain?
2. From whom were these received?
3. Is it the intention of the government to introduce at the present session of parliament any amendments to the Grain Inspection Act in respect to grades?

Hon. WILLIAM PATERSON (for the Minister of Trade and Commerce):

1 and 2. In so far as the Department of Trade and Commerce, to which such communications and resolutions would naturally come, is concerned, no such communications or resolutions or memorials have been received within the time specified.

The department has, however, noticed various communications in the public press of Manitoba on the subject, and some viva voce discussion has taken place between members of the staff in connection with the subject.

3. The matter is under consideration.

GERMAN DUTIES ON GREEN DRIED APPLES.

Mr. ARMSTRONG asked :

1. What are rates of discriminatory duties imposed by the German government on green and dried apples ?

2. If any change has been made, what is the date on which the German Government announced said change ?

Hon. WILLIAM PATTERSON (for the Minister of Trade and Commerce) :

1 and 2. Inasmuch as neither the German tariff in force up to the first instant nor the proposed new tariff gives any further intimation as to the discriminatory duty other than that given in the answer to the question on the 19th instant, the government has no official knowledge with reference to the duties imposed by the German government on green and dried apples further than was stated in the answer to the previous question. The rates of duty quoted were those of the tariff in force up to the first day of March instant and the only official figures so far received on the subject.

In 1903 the German government issued a proposed new tariff, but it was distinctly stated that 'the date upon which the new tariff is to enter into force will be fixed by imperial ordinance subject to the approbation of the Bundesrath; until otherwise ordered, therefore the latter duty, July 15, 1879, together with subsequent amendments thereof as published in the first edition and respective supplements continue to be in operation,' which is supposed to have been the first day of the present month, as the 'Trade Journal' of the 22nd February ultimo states that it would be put in force on that date.

The proposed tariff in question was under discussion for months after its issue and many changes were made therein. The government receives through the International Tariff Bureau at Brussels a number of copies of all tariffs as issued; but no recent one concerning Germany has as yet come to hand; and until the text of the present tariff is received no other answer can be given.

NEW BRUNSWICK PETROLEUM COMPANY.

Mr. BARKER asked :

1. Is any member of parliament, to the knowledge of the Minister of Railways, a stockholder, president or other officer or director of, or in any way interested in, the the property of the New Brunswick Petroleum Company, or has he been so at any time since 1st July, 1902. If so, when, for what period and in what manner ?

2. Who are such members, if any ?

3. What offices and interests did such member or members hold in said company or its property ?

4. What are the names, addresses and positions of the several officers of said company ?

5. What are the names and addresses of the shareholders of the said company ?

Hon. H. R. EMMERSON (Minister of Railways and Canals):

1. Yes.
2. H. R. Emmerson.
3. Was formerly a director and president of the company, and is now a stockholder in it.
4. F. W. Summers, of Moncton, president and managing director; Hon. A. D. Richard, vice-president; Matthew Lodge, of Moncton, secretary. The department has no knowledge as to the other officers of the company, and I may add that neither has the minister.
5. The department has no information nor has the minister, nor has he or they any means of information.

MR. J. H. LAMONT, PRINCE ALBERT.

Mr. WM. WRIGHT asked:

1. Referring to the Auditor General's Report for 1905, volume II., page (M—4), there is an item for Crown prosecutor, J. H. Lamont, Prince Albert, salary $902.65. Is this the same Mr. Lamont who sat as a member of this House during the session of 1905?
2. Referring to item on above page, A. Turgeon, Crown prosecutor, salary $1,306, is the said Mr. Turgeon, the business partner of Mr. Lamont, and member of this House during 1905?

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Solicitor General):

1. Mr. Lamont resigned the Crown Prosecutorship on 8th October, 1904, on the ground that he was a candidate for parliament at the general election of November, 1904. The Auditor General's Report for 1905 is for the fiscal year ending 30th June, 1905, so that the amount paid Mr. Lamont was for fees paid him from July, 1904, until he resigned in October, 1904. The Crown prosecutors were paid by fees not by salary.
2. We have no information.

TELEPHONE COMMITTEE.

Mr. MACDONELL—by Mr. Lancaster—asked:

1. Does the report of the select committee appointed last session to inquire into and report upon telephone systems, contain any conclusions, or make any recommendations upon the subjects referred to them?
2. If not, is it the intention of the government to appoint a select committee this session for the same or like objects and purposes, which shall come to conclusions and make recommendations to the House upon the subject?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). The report is before the House and speaks for itself. It is not the intention of the government to appoint another select committee for the same or a like object and purpose.

PAYMENTS TO WOODS LIMITED.

Mr. FOSTER asked:

What amount of money has been paid to Woods, Limited, for supplies for the different departments of the government up to 31st December, 1905, and what parts of the several amounts have been paid on contracts after public tender had been called for?

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (for Minister of Public Works). Total payments by the Department of Public Works up to December 31, 1905, was $11,036.33.

Hon. H. R. EMMERSON (Minister of Railways and Canals):

1. By the Department of Railways and Canals, $426.90; by the Transcontinental Railway Commission, $16,125.29. The purchases represented by these amounts were made from time to time to meet immediate requirements without tenders.

Mr. FOSTER. I have not had an answer to that question yet. It would be a great deal more convenient if some one were instructed to put these answers all in one. It is quite a task to go through all the departments and know that you have the information supplied from all of them. As it is now, you see we have only answers from three of the departments and by no means the most important one.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Is there another department?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes. The question is: 'What amount of money has been paid to Woods, Limited?' There ought to be a compilation of this information.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes; let it stand.

Mr. BRODEUR. As far as the Marine and Fisheries Department is concerned I suppose there are no supplies because no answer has been given to me by the officers of the department.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think that would follow.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Stands.

Question allowed to stand.

SUPPLIES FOR STEAMER 'ARCTIC.'

Mr. FOSTER asked:

1. What amount of money was expended by the Dominion government in supplies for the steamer 'Arctic'?
2. Of this, how much was purchased and paid for under contract after public tender?
3. What amount was expended upon repairs to same steamer, and what proportion thereof was paid out on contract?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries):

1. $118,582.60.
2. None.
3. $29,839.75. No contract; partly in Sorel shipyard and partly in Quebec.

SUPPLIES FOR DOMINION STEAMERS.

Mr. FOSTER asked:

What amount was paid out during the last fiscal year for supplies for Dominion steamers and of this what was paid on contracts awarded on public tender ?

PAYMENTS TO B. J. COUGHLIN.

Mr. FOSTER asked :

1. What amount of money was paid to B. J. Coughlin for supplies from 1st July, 1904, to 31st December, 1905 ?
2. How much of this was paid on contracts based upon public tenders ?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) :

1. $6,628.24.
2. No tenders or contracts.

Hon. H. R. EMMERSON (Minister of Railways and Canals) :

1. There was paid to Mr. B. J. Coughlin for supplies from July 1st, 1904, to December 31st, 1905, $13,715.70.
2. The sum of $13,594.94, was paid out of above mentioned amount on contracts based on public tenders.

Mr. TAYLOR—by Mr. Lancaster—asked :

1. What was the cost for installing the acetylene gas system in Windmill lighthouse, east of the town of Prescott ?
2. What was the cost of maintenance for the year 1905 ?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) :

1. $2,096.25 (double storeholders).
2. $110.10.

NEW BRUNSWICK VACANCIES IN THE SENATE.

Mr. FOWLER—by Mr. Lancaster—asked:

1. How many vacancies are there now in the representation to the Senate from the province of New Brunswick?

2. When did they respectively occur?

3. When does the government propose to fill these vacancies?

4. Why were they not filled before the meeting of parliament?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). There are two vacancies in the representation in the Senate from the province of New Brunswick. One occurred in 1904, and the other in 1905. The government is considering the appointments.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) did not answer the last question.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The answer is, the government were then considering and are now considering.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY, BELMONT DISASTER.

Mr. LAURENCE asked:

1. Has any investigation been held by any commissioner or official of the government in relation to the disaster on the Intercolonial Railway, on December 6, 1902, at Belmont station, wherein seven persons lost their lives, with a view to ascertaining the cause of said disaster? If so, when, where, and by whom was said investigation held?

2. Have claims on behalf of the relatives and dependents of the persons killed in said disaster been presented to the government? If so, has any action been taken in regard to such claims, and what action ?

Hon. H. R. EMMERSON (Minister of Railways and Canals) :

1. Yes. On February 19, 1906, at Truro, by Geo. M. Jarvis, District Superintendent of the Intercolonial Railway.

2. Yes, claims have been received. The department considered in view of the circumstances, a test case should be submitted to the Exchequer Court for its adjudication, and has so advised the Department of Justice.

SEIGNIORY OF RIGAUD.

Mr. BOYER asked :

1. Has the government paid to the owners of the Rigaud Seigniory the sums that may be due to them under the Seigniorial Act of 1854, and its amendments ?

2. If so, what sums has it so paid, and when?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister) :

1. Yes.

2. $67,777 on December 23, 1874.

SAGUENAY RIVER—PIERS AND BOOMS ABOVE CHICOUTIMI.

Mr. PERLEY—by Mr. Martin—asked :

1. What is the estimate of the total cost of the piers and booms being built above Chicoutimi, on the Saguenay river ?

2. What is the estimated annual revenue from these works ?

3. Will these works be of service to any one except those engaged in the log and pulpwood business ? If so, to what class of persons ?

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (for the Minister of Public Works) :

1. $50,000.

2. $2,625 ; however, if the revenue falls short of the maintenance and operation, the Chicoutimi Pulp Company is bound by a written agreement to make good such deficit.

3. Though built to retain logs, these works will prevent timber from getting into the river below, where they would be a danger to navigation.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—ACCOMMODATION AT ST. PHILIPPE STATION.

Mr. LAPOINTE—by Mr. Johnston—asked:

1. What number of wood-cars were loaded and forwarded at St. Philippe station, in the county of Kamouraska, during the last fiscal year ?

2. Is the government aware that at the said station there is neither yard nor land accommodation in accord with the wood traffic carried on there ?

3. Is it the intention of the government to lease or to purchase land for that purpose ?

Hon. H. R. EMMERSON (Minister of Railways and Canals) :

1. About ninety cars.

2. The yard and land at that station is 100 ft. wide, which is not deemed sufficient accommodation, but, as there was no parliamentary appropriation to enable purchase of additional land, the matter has had to stand.

3. The matter is having the consideration of the department.

4. Three.

Mr. FOSTER. Which three ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I have not that in the memorandum before me, but the three must be the Stanley, the Minto and the Champlain. Of course, I am not very sure about that.

Hon. WM. PATERSON (Minister of Customs). The answer given includes the Constance. In addition, we have a little steam tug with a crew of three men at Halifax.

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture). Does the hon. gentleman care for the boats in the quarantine service at Grosse Isle, Halifax and British Columbia? Because if he does, I have not got them today, but I will get them.

Mr. FOSTER. Then let the question stand. Will the Minister of Marine and Fisheries kindly answer the fourth question.

Mr. BRODEUR. I gave the number as three.

Mr. FOSTER. But as to the names.

Mr. BRODEUR. That was not asked.

WINNIPEG IMMIGRATION AGENTS AND MINERS.

Mr. VERVILLE—by Mr. Ralph Smith—asked:

2. If so, how many have been sent under such authority?

1. No.

THEFTS OF PROPERTY OF INTERCOLONIAL.

Mr. FOWLER—by Mr. Lancaster—asked:

1. Is the Department of Railways aware that certain employees of the department at Moncton have been publicly accused of stealing government property?
2. Is it aware that paragraphs have appeared in a newspaper published in St. John, New Brunswick, charging that employees were discovered stealing Intercolonial Railway property, and settled with the employee who discovered them, by paying him partly in cash and partly by a promissory note, to prevent exposure?
3. Has the department made any inquiries respecting this matter, or has any investigation been held?
4. Is the Department of Railways aware of any theft of any postage stamps from the railway offices at Moncton by employees?
5. Has any report been made by a detective officer in the service of the department implicating an employee of the department at Moncton?
6. Has there been any investigation as the result of such report?

Hon. H. R. EMMERSON (Minister of Railways and Canals):

1. One of the employees at Moncton has been arrested and committed for trial for stealing scrap from the ruins of the burned buildings.
2. The paragraph referred to has been seen in the newspapers.
3. The matter is being investigated.

Mr. BRODEUR.

4. No, the department is not aware of any theft of postage stamps, but the department has been advised of irregularities respecting stamps, which irregularities gave rise to suspicions as to how the stamps were handled.
5. Yes, charges were made.
6. Yes, and the result indicated that irregularities had occurred; no particular persons were found to be guilty, but the result disclosed that the system in use was one that rendered it well nigh impossible to check the improper use of stamps; in consequence it was changed.

SETTLERS ON RIDING MOUNTAIN TIMBER RESERVE.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE asked:

1. Is it the intention of the government to prohibit settlers from locating in the Riding Mountain timber reserve?
2. Is it the intention of the government to allow those who have located within the reserve in township 19, range 19, west of principal meridian, including the half-breeds who are located near Clear lake, to remain on their present locations?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior).

1. Yes.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) moved :

That the order be discharged and that the Bill be referred to a select committee to be composed of the following persons : Messrs. A. K. Maclean, R. Bickerdike, Pardee, Macpherson, L. G. McCarthy, Brodeur, Fitzpatrick, A. H. Clarke, Lancaster, Stockton, Bennett, Lefurgey, A. C. Macdonell, with power to send for persons and papers and to report from time to time.

Mr. LANCASTER. I have no objection. I suppose there will be no harm in letting this order stand until the report comes down.

Mr. BRODEUR. According to the rule of the House the Bill should be referred to the committee which will have to report during the session and when the report is made the Bill will go on the Order Paper again.

Mr. LANCASTER. Very well.

Motion agreed to.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved the adjournment of the House.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The first order to-morrow will be to take up the Sunday Observance Bill, then we will resume the debate upon the motion of the hon. member

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, April 3, 1906.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC BRANCH LINES.

Mr. JOHN CRAWFORD (Portage la Prairie) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 75) to incorporate the Grand Trunk Pacific Branch Lines Company. He said this Bill asks for a charter to construct certain branch lines in eastern Canada as well as in the west. Those lines would be used as part of the Grand Trunk Pacific system.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 76) respecting the Revillon Bros., Ltd.—Mr. McCool.

Bill (No. 77) respecting the Calgary and Edmonton Railway Company.—Mr. M. S McCarthy.

Bill (No. 78) respecting the Great Northwest Central Railway Company.—Mr. W. J. Roche.

Bill (No. 79) respecting certain patents of Chester Burnell Duryea.—Mr. Belcourt.

Bill (No. 80) respecting the Pacific Northern and Omenica Railway Company.—Mr. Leighton McCarthy.

Bill (No. 81) respecting the Bell Telephone Company of Canada.—Mr. Bureau—by Mr. Demers.

EXPRESS COMPANIES AND THE RAILWAY COMMISSION.

Mr. G. O. ALCORN (Prince Edward) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 82) respecting Express Companies. He said: The principle of the Bill is one which seems to meet with general approval, namely that express companies, in the conduct of their business and in the tolls they may charge for their services, shall be subject to the jurisdiction and control of the Railway Commissioners. Hon. gentlemen who will read this Bill in conjunction with the Railway Act of 1903 will see that I am not asking the House to adopt new legislation except so far as the principle is concerned, but that I simply take the clauses of the Railway Act that appear to be applicable and endeavour to mould and apply them to the case of express companies.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC—CHINESE LABOUR QUESTION.

Mr. RALPH SMITH (Nanaimo). Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to direct the attention of the First Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) to a very serious rumour afloat in the west as described by the telegram I hold in my hand—namely that the Grand Trunk Pacific Company are bringing pressure to bear upon the government at Ottawa to get a reduction upon the poll tax on Chinese from $500 to $50, for the purpose of utilizing that labour in the construction of the western section of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, on the plea, of course, that other labour cannot be had. I wish to ask the First Minister if there is any shadow of truth in the rumour, and if so, to what extent it is true.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). There is not a shadow of truth in the rumour. The Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company have made no such application whatever.

COAL LANDS IN THE NORTHWEST—Mr. C. F. CALDWELL.

Mr. J. D. REID (Grenville). Before the Orders of the Day are called I would like to call the attention of the government to an item in one of the local papers last evening; as follows:

Looking for a coal mine—Novel way of procuring claims—$1 paid for signed application.

Stranger at Russell House causes some mystification among bell boys and other employees.

A guest who rather astonished a large number of bell boys and other employees of the Russell House was registered there last week. He was giving them $1 each for what they considered rights to coal mines in the west, of which they had never heard and about which they were decidedly mystified.

The stranger gave his name as Mr. C. F. Caldwell, of Alberta, and explained his work to the 'Journal' readily enough. He said that there were, without doubt, many rich coal fields in Alberta. It was impossible, however, to buy a large block of land, or secure options upon it, from the government, as this is all being kept open for settlement. To overcome this difficulty he was getting different parties to make application for a single section. This he buys from them for $1, and as he has not to finish the taking over of the section for six months, he will prospect each claim for coal in the meantime. If coal is found he completes the transaction with the government at a nominal fee.

Mr. Caldwell said that Mr. F. H. Clergue, of the Soo, was interested in his plans and that his work was being done by other parties in the west. Large blocks of land which have been held for speculative purposes have to be thrown open to settlers by April 1, said Mr. Caldwell, and many applications for sections are being made on these lots.

I would like to ask the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) if Mr. Caldwell has called upon him and if applications have been made in this way ?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). I have no knowledge of Mr. Caldwell or of his applications. Of course, such a gentleman may have called at the department and made application. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. J. D. Reid) desires it, I will make the necessary inquiry and be able to give him the information at a later day.

MILITIA CAMPS—SERVICE ROLLS.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES (Victoria). I notice in the press that an order has been issued by the Militia Department requiring the officers in command of the various corps that are to proceed to camp in June to send in service rolls to the department, and these service rolls, I believe, are to be in ten days in advance of camp. I need hardly point out to the Minister of the Militia that that would be a hardship. I sent the minister notice that I was going to bring this matter forward to-day——

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence). I did not receive it. But no matter ; I hope the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sam. Hughes) will proceed.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I was about to say that to have these service rolls in the department ten days before camp would mean that they must be prepared, practically, fifteen days before camp. This would be a very considerable hardship. It is perfectly right that the service rolls should be worked up as far as possible by that time. But it would be a little hard on the officers of rural corps. In recent years, it has been hard to keep up the recruiting which went on before, and which I hope will be resumed in the near future. I would like to know the facts and what the intention of the minister is with regard to the matter.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. It is quite true that an order such as my hon. friend mentioned has been issued, but the time fixed is not ten days but one week. It was felt, in view of the large increase in the pay—practically double what it was formerly—that the officers in command of the units, companies and regiments should take more pains than they have done in the past. It was also thought desirable that the department should be in possession of information by which they could check the different pay rolls and see whether the different companies are being charged improperly for efficiency pay. It is absolutely impossible for us to do this unless we get the roll at least one week before camp. I do not think there will be any serious hardship in the case of officers who are interested in the work and anxious for the country to get the full benefit of the money that is paid.

Mr. H. A. WARD (Durham). I desire to say a word or two with regard to this matter, being personally interested. I am sorry that this order is about to go into force, because I know that the rural battalions will find it a very difficult thing to get a full muster. I do not think for a moment that the government in late years has intended to make it difficult for us to fill up our regiments. The skeleton battalions were a mistake. They were referred to by the hon. member for South Victoria (Mr. Sam. Hughes). They resulted in scattering the men who were in the habit of going into camp, and it was a very difficult thing to get them together again. Now that had a bad effect in regard to recruiting the regiments. Then again last year the same order was issued, that the service rolls should be handed into the district officers commanding on May 1; but I am glad to say that on representation to the minister that was done away with last year, and I hope that he may see his way to do away with the order that has been issued at the present time. I had an interview with one of my captains only last week, and he informed me that he had been travelling over fifteen miles from the headquarters of his company, and found great difficulty in recruiting his company for the camp that is to take place next month. If he is obliged to have his service roll in eight or nine days—I think that is the order—before camp, the result will be that every company will arrive very short, and probably only half strength. The last two or three years, several regiments, as my hon. friend knows, have not been up to strength. Another thing that has militated against the regiments in our district is that we have been required to go into camp a great deal later than the regiments in the west. I am glad to see the minister has listened to the representations that have been made to him with regard to that, and has placed the camp at Kingston on June 19 this year. But we have had a great deal of difficulty during the past year owing to that fact. Another thing I would like to point out to the minister, and which I regard as an injustice to the officers commanding companies and to the officers commanding regiments, is that they only received pay last year for the men that actually drilled in camp. That is an injustice, because we have put forth every effort to get the men into camp and have failed for these reasons, in the first place, as I have pointed out, because the camp is so late, and next, the scattering through skeleton battalions. Now, it does seem an injustice that after commanding officers of companies have done their very best and spent their money in endeavouring to secure a full muster of their companies, they should only be allowed for the men taken into camp. They have a great deal to do all through the year in keeping up their companies, and they do it honestly and as far as they can. I would ask the minister not only to reconsider the order requiring service rolls to be produced at the date mentioned, but I would also ask him to reconsider the matter of pay as well.

Mr. F. B. CARVELL (Carleton, N.B.). This is a matter in regard to which I have heard some complaints. I hold in my hand a copy of an order issued from the District Officer Commanding, Militia District No. 8, in which officers are required to send these service rolls to headquarters not less than ten days before the opening of the camp. According to legal decision that would mean twelve days, and besides it would take two days to get them to headquarters. Practically, these service rolls must be at headquarters a fortnight before the camp is opened. That will work a great hardship in the lower provinces, at least in the province of New Brunswick. If there are officers of the Canadian militia who are so dishonest that they will certify that men are entitled to efficiency pay who have not had the necessary training, then I say those officers should be got rid of. I fear this rule will not only demoralize the militia, but perhaps it will not be of much advantage after all. If these service rolls arrive at headquarters a fortnight or ten days before the opening of the camp, it will take an enormous staff in order to compare them with the rolls of three or four years previously, to see whether every man on those rolls is entitled to his efficiency pay. Now, I can assure the minister from practical experience, that the difficulty in rural districts lies very largely in this at least so far as we are concerned, not that we cannot get sufficient men to fill the corps, but that, as our militia are drawn largely from rural localities, it is often a very serious question whether a man who has belonged to the militia perhaps for two or three years can get away from his farm duties. Very often the best men we have in the militia do not know until perhaps two or three days before the opening of the camp, whether they can get away or not. It is not fair to ask a man to leave his important duties, the business perhaps in which he earns his living, to abandon his farm to his help, to go into a military camp. I apprehend the object of the department is to train the very best men in the country, not the floating population that have no permanent place of residence, not to pick up men who may be able to spend a few days in camp because they have nothing else to do, but to get men who are the bone and sinew of the country, and who have some stake in the country. While the minister says the time is changed to one week, the order I hold in my hand says ten days, which really means fourteen days, and I can assure the minister that it will work a great hardship to the militia in the province of New Brunswick. I hope he will see his way clear either to modify it or to abolish it entirely.

Mr. O. E. TALBOT (Bellechasse). A few days ago, I attended a meeting of the officers of my regiment to consider this very matter, and every one of my captains informed me that it was impossible for them to furnish a service roll any sooner than the opening of the camp. They all told me that the last week was the best recruiting week of all, that many men who would not attend fifteen days before camp, required to drill two or three day previously. Under the circumstances they considered it was very difficult for them to abide by this order. I am glad to endorse what has been said by other hon. gentlemen on this question, and to point out the difficulties that will arise in our rural districts in the way of recruiting if we have to furnish that roll in the time now asked for by the department.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to inquire of the Minister of Public Works (Hon. Chas. S. Hyman) when we may expect the printed report of the Transportation Commission. On March 14, the minister, in reply to a question from this side of the House, stated that the report was then in course of being printed, and he expected to have it brought down at a very early date. Unless the report is more voluminous than it should be, we might have had it before now. On March 16, I moved that the two reports of the Transcontinental Railway Commission should be printed. The order passed. I would think it time that these reports should also be on the table of the House for nearly three weeks have elapsed also in that case.

Mr. HYMAN. I desire to assure my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) that it is not the fault of the department. The orders were very promptly given in regard to the printing. I personally inquired several times and made an effort to hurry them up. There is a considerable amount of work in connection with the revision and everything, but I was promised them last Saturday and I am in hopes almost any day to have these reports.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. We are also without the report for the past year of the Department of Marine and Fisheries. Can the hon. minister (Mr. Brodeur) inform us when we may expect it ?

Mr. BRODEUR. It has not yet been received from the Secretary of State's Department.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. No, we are well aware of that; but what we want to know is when we may expect the House will have it in possession.

Mr. BRODEUR. I hope it will be brought down in a few days.

BROCKVILLE CHEESE CURING ROOM.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR (Leeds). Mr. Speaker, I wish to draw the attention of the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr Fisher) to some facts in relation to a statement made by him which appears in 'Hansard' of yesterday. The hon, minister acknowledged that the officers in his department had made a mistake in reference to the expenditure in connection with the cheese cool curing room at Brockville and that practically almost all the figures I gave were correct. I took my figures from the Auditor General's Report and in making my statement I gave the page and the amount of each item, but when 'Hansard' came out the page and the amount of each item was not given but only the gross amount. On March 26 I asked this question :

1. What has been the total expenditure in connection with cheese curing at the following places : Bagotville, Brockville, Chrontine, Cowansville, Drummondville, Hebertville, St. Alphonse, St. Felician, St. Hyacinthe, Victoriaville, Woodstock ?

2. What has been the total revenue received from the above named places?

When I asked what the total expenditure was I expected to get it, not from the Auditor General's Report, as the hon. minister told the House in his reply that these statements were made up from the Auditor General's Report, but I expected that this department, as every other department, would charge up every item of expenditure in connection with every account and that all the clerk would have to do would be to go to his ledger account and find out what the expenditure was under each heading so as to enable the minister to bring down a correct answer to the question. The hon. minister, in reply to the question as to what the total expenditure was in connection with all of these cheese curing stations, said that it was $107,886.14 and that the total revenue received was $32,451.51, showing a loss to the country of $75,434.63. The hon. Minister of Agriculture yesterday made the following statement :

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture). Before the Orders of the Day are proceeded with, I wish, in justice to my hon. friend from Leeds (Mr. Taylor), to refer to a matter which he brought up in the House on March 27. On that day he brought before the House an answer which had been given by me on the day before regarding the Brockville curing room, and he pointed out that there was an inaccuracy in my reply. I had the matter looked up, and I wish now to inform the House and my hon. friend that the clerk in the accountant's office, to whom was entrusted the making up of this expenditure did make an error in his computation. Here is the explanation which has been furnished me by my deputy :

I find that the clerk in the accountant's office who was entrusted with making up this expenditure, made an error in his computation. The figures which were furnished you as the expenditure were $18,661.34. They should have been $20,831.50.

A difference of $2,000 more loss to the country than the minister's original answer indicated.

These figures are made up from the Auditor General's Report for the year 1901-2, 1902-3, 1903-4, 1904-5, and for the current fiscal year up to the 1st March instant from the ledger of the department. The details are as follows :

He then goes on to give the details making up the $20,831.50. Then he says :

Mr. Taylor, according to 'Hansard' (page 710) undertook to give the expenditure from the Auditor General's Reports for the fiscal years ending respectively 1st July, 1903, 1904, 1905. For the first two years the accountant is unable to say what items Mr. Taylor included in his addition, as he does not, and the totals of any of the several items in the reports for those two years tally with Mr. Taylor's totals.

I may say that in making my statement I gave the items and the pages at which they are to be found in the Auditor General's Report but these were not reported, as I stated before, in 'Hansard'.

For the last fiscal year, however, it appears that to make up the total given by Mr. Taylor, viz.: $5,929, he took the expenditure shown at (D—67) under the heading 'cheese curing room, Brockville, $2,958.61,' the item 'Brockville cheese haulers, $660,' page (D—66), and also the item 'Brockville curing room, cheese purchased and cured,' under the heading 'cheese account,' at page (D—66), $1,732.72, and, lastly, the item 'services of N. G. Somerville, Brockville, to 30th April, 1905. under the heading 'cheese curing rooms, general,' at page (D—67), $578.38. These two latter items should not be included in making up the total expenditure in connection with the Brockville cheese curing room. It has happened that cheese have been purchased at some of the cool curing rooms and resold, but the transactions did not affect the expenditure, were not connected therewith, and had no connection with the operation of the cool curing room. These transactions have generally resulted in a gain, but the losses, whenever they have occurred, have not been charged against the curing rooms, nor has any gain derived from such transactions been treated as revenue. The matter of such transactions has been considered quite separately and distinct from the operation of the curing room. The item of Mr. Somerville's salary, $578.38, should not be charged against the curing room, as during the time when his salary was earned, he was not working in connection with the curing room, but was doing the work of the department generally.

I make this explanation in justice to my hon. friend and the department.

I have gone over the accounts to ascertain the corrections of the reply in reference to the total expenditure in connection with the cheese curing rooms at the following places: Bagotville, Brockville, Chrontine, Cowansville, Drummondville, Hebertville, St. Alphonse, St. Felician, St. Hyacinthe, Victoriaville and Woodstock. The reply to the question was that the total expenditure was $107,886.14 up to March 1, 1906. I have no way of ascertaining what the expenditure from the 30th June, 1905, to the 1st March was, but I presume it was very nearly as much as that of the preceding year. I have gone carefully through the Auditor General's Report for the years 1901-1902, 1902-1903, 1903-1904, 1904-1905, and up to the 30th June and I make the total expenditure $108,623.74, to which should be added the expenditure from the 30th June last year to the 1st March, which would be in the neighbourhood of $20,000 or $25,000 more, and would make a total expenditure of $133,632.74, not taking into account, as the hon. minister said there must have been, the purchases of cheese at these places. I have left that out of the account altogether, and in regard to these places the revenue should be accounted for to ascertain the loss. I find that practically every year there has been a loss incurred by the government purchasing and reselling cheese. I want the minister to put his accountant to work to go through the ledger to verify the answer he gave me that the total expenditure was only one hundred and seven thousand odd dollars. I have the details here and could give the items of expenditure for each year, but the total amount is $108,623 not including from the first of July last year to the first of March, which measuring by what the expenditure in the same period of other years has been, will be between $20,000 or $25,000 more to add to the $108,000, making a total expenditure of $133,000 whereas the minister stated the total expenditure is only $107,000. Will the minister have his accountant go through the accounts again so as to give us the gross amount of expenditure in reply to the question I submitted, and the gross revenue, and let us see how much the country has lost? When these curing rooms were started I understood there were only to be four of them but now there are seven or eight. I want to know how much the country has lost by this sideshow of curing rooms for the benefit of political friends.

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture). I shall be very glad indeed to have the accountant go through these figures again. Perhaps, in order to facilitate, the hon. gentleman would be kind enough to let me have the details which he says he has and which have not been published in 'Hansard.' Of course my accountant only had the 'Hansard' report to go upon. My hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) speaks of what he calls the 'loss,' but he does not take into account the benefit which the experiments have reaped for the country and which far outbalance any apparent loss.

Mr. TAYLOR. I leave that to the cheese men in Brockville who say it is no benefit, and they have one of those curing rooms right under their nose.

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend will have to leave it to the dairy men of the whole country.

INQUIRY FOR RETURNS.

Mr. J. E. ARMSTRONG (East Lambton). On the 19th of March I asked the Minister of Customs for certain information, and he gave me to understand that if I asked for a return it would be placed on the table of the House immediately, and that he had the figures in his hand. I have not received that information.

Hon. WM. PATERSON (Minister of Customs). I expected it would be down to-day; I will inquire about it.

RAINMAKING IN THE YUKON.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER (North Toronto). Have any steps been taken towards getting that order in council which was passed by the Yukon Council in reference to the contract with Hatfield. I have pressed for it two or three times in a good natured sort of way and have not got it, but I am afraid good nature has its limits.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). I did not hear what the hon. gentleman was saying.

Mr. FOSTER. I referred to the rainmaking order in council.

Mr. OLIVER. Certainly not.

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly not, what?

Mr. OLIVER. Because the Department of the Interior has no jurisdiction over the action of the Yukon Council in matters in which it is locally concerned.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the minister mean to say that he does not propose to act between this House and the Yukon Council, as an intermediary to obtain that document? The commissioner of the Yukon was here at the time this was being discussed. I have no doubt at all that the minister knows exactly what was done; if he does not he ought to. Does he mean to say that he is going to take no steps to satisfy the demands of parliament for the information required.

Mr. OLIVER. I am not aware that parliament made any demand. As soon as parliament makes any demand I will accede to it, but not until—

Mr. FOSTER. The other day I asked the minister whether he would bring that contract down without the formality of asking parliament to call for a return. I expected no other answer but that he would. I did not hear him say that he would not, and I certainly expected he would do that without being compelled to do it.

Mr. OLIVER. I beg to say that I have no recollection of hearing the hon. gentleman ask for it. If I had heard him ask for it I certainly would have given him the courtesy of an answer at the time. As the matter stands at present I am not aware that I, as administering the Interior Department, have any authority to call upon the Yukon Council to lay that document before this House.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the minister kindly make inquiry from the proper source as to whether he has that authority or not; as to whether there is any obligation upon him? When he gets that information will he kindly tell me whether or not he will do what I have very courteously requested him to do?

Mr. OLIVER. As I have no curiosity in the matter I will not make the inquiry. If the hon. member has knowledge of the matter he may bring to bear his knowledge on the country and the House to secure the information he requires.

Mr. FOSTER. Now we have a straight answer.

DOMINION GOVERNMENT STEAMERS.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR. The hon. member for Toronto asked me yesterday as to the government steamers that carry passengers, and I told him that only the 'Minto,' the 'Stanley' and the 'Champlain,' carried passengers. I inquired this morning and I find my statement is correct.

HALIFAX ARSENAL.

Mr. SAM HUGHES (Victoria). I have in my hand a very excellent journal seemingly, called 'Le Canada' and in it I find the statement that the maritime arsenal at Halifax has been taken over by the Canadian government, and that they are now in possession of it. What are the facts?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I would expect my hon. friend before he quotes a newspaper report and bases a request on it, would give some notice.

Mr. SAM HUGHES. This is dated April the 2nd and it says that at a cabinet meeting 'to-day,' the government has considered the offer made by the Imperial authorities to hand over to Canada the maritime arsenal at Halifax, and then it gives the details. If it was only done so lately as yesterday surely the cabinet ought to have some recollection of it.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes, there is no such thing.

LORD'S DAY OBSERVANCE.

Hon. CHARLES FITZPATRICK (Minister of Justice) moved the second reading of Bill (No. 12) respecting the Lord's Day. He said: On moving the second reading of this Bill, I deem it necessary to offer some few brief words in explanation of its provisions. If I may judge by the criticism offered by some public bodies, by the press, by anonymous correspondents; it appears to me quite evident that the Bill has not been very generally read, or if read has been misunderstood. The Bill is entitled 'An Act respecting the Lord's Day'. From this it must not be inferred that it is intended to regulate or in any way to affect the question of the religious observance of the Sabbath. Religious freedom, legal equality amongst all religious denominations is an admitted principle of legislation in all the colonies of Great Britain, and is consecrated by the terms of the Consolidated Statutes of Canada, 1859, chapter 74, reproduced from the earlier statutes where it is especially declared that:

> In the state and condition of this province (Canada), to which such a principle is peculiarly applicable, it is desirable that the same shall receive the sanction of direct legislative authority, recognizing and declaring the same as a fundamental principle of our civil policy.

This Bill is really intended to provide a day of rest for all, so that each man may be free to abstain from labour, and if he so desires, to give one day in the week to the service of his Creator. In my judgment it is always desirable to abstain from placing an individual in the position of being obliged to choose between his honest religious convictions and his personal gain. There are, of course, in this country great commercial interests which have to be considered, and we have also to bear in mind the needs of the great consuming class, and I feel that a careful examination of this Bill will show that they have not been overlooked; and as hasty legislation is not to be desired, it is my intention to ask that this Bill be referred to a special committee, so that we may have ample opportunity to discuss it in all its details, to hear all the honest criticism that may be offered of any of its provisions and to meet the reasonable needs of the community.

I know that among all classes Sunday is becoming more and more an accepted period for expeditions of some sort in pursuit of pleasure. I cannot say that personally I agree very much with that view of the day. This Bill is not intended in any way to facilitate or encourage these Sunday amusements. On the contrary it is intended to increase our regard for Sunday observance. It will be found, however, that its provisions in no way affect the right of any man to spend his Sunday in the open, in the fields or in the woods under the broad dome of Heaven, or in the public parks; and facilities which now exist by way of steam or electric railway or by ferry may still be utilized for that purpose. But that which the Bill is intended to prevent, that which I sincerely hope it will prevent, is the open shop, the exploitation of the public by the organizers of excursions, which, in too many instances, are little less than carousals, and also the opening of places of public amusement for entrance to which a fee is charged. Legitimate recreation and amusement are in no way interfered with, but the business of amusement will be prevented and I am not aware that such business deserves greater consideration than any other business. Ferries such as that to St. Helen's Island, in the neighbourhood of Montreal, to the Island of Orleans, in the neighbourhood of Quebec, and to Toronto Island, in the neighbourhood of Toronto, or other similarly situated localities, are protected, but if there is any doubt on that point the terms of the Bill may be amended in committee so as to make this provision absolutely clear.

With respect to amusements, ball, lacrosse, or any other game will be just as lawful as it is now, and pleasure parks as such, not run as a business and for gain, can be utilized to the same extent as under the existing law.

Perhaps I had better take up the clauses of the Bill.

Section 1 deals with definitions.

Section 2 provides that no sales are to be made, or business or work done, on the Lord's Day. Some such provision is to be found in the legislation of all nations, from, I think the very earliest times.

Section 3 makes an exception with respect to Quebec, and provides that in so far as that province is concerned, those sales that now take place on Sundays at the church door of small articles, the proceeds of the sale of which are intended for charitable purposes, may still continue to be held. Perhaps I may offer a word of explanation of the custom in our province in that regard. As members of the House are aware we have no such thing as a poor-house or a poor rate in the province of Quebec. Under our system the people of our parishes, making provision for the share of their worldly goods, which in their estimation belongs to the poor, bring these goods to the church door, and there they are auctioned by some one connected with the church. The proceeds of the sale are applied to the poor of the parish, and it is merely for that laudable object that these sales are held. It may also be necessary to amend that provision so as to enable us in our province to continue what we are now doing, that is to pass notarial deeds on the Sabbath by common consent between the two parties. As hon. gentlemen who come from our province are aware, there is provision in our Revised Statutes that on Sundays when the farmer comes down to church, if he desires to pass a deed with respect to a sale of property on that day, and both parties agree, they may go before a notary and if the deed is passed on that day, the sale is effective.

Mr. FOSTER. For a sale on that day?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Not for a sale on that day but the passing of the deed giving effect to the sale. As hon. gentlemen are aware, with us, a deed is only an evidence of a sale. The sale is perfected by the simple agreement between the parties. The title passes by the simple agreement and the document is only the evidence of the agreement.

The next provision, section 4, provides for works of necessity and makes other exceptions to the operation of section 2. It provides for exception:

(a). With respect to all necessary or customary work in connection with divine worship,

(b) For the sale of drugs and medicines. I think it will be necessary to amend that section, so as to make it applicable exclusively to sales by retail, because in the words used here might be found an excuse for the sale by wholesale of drugs and medicines on Sunday.

(c). The work of physicians and surgeons for the relief of sickness and suffering. I think in committee we might amend that so as to make that exception read:

Work for the relief of sickness and suffering.

without limiting it to the work of physicians and surgeons.

Then I think it might be necessary to make provision for the production of food for human subsistence. That would apply to the baker more especially. However, that is simply a suggestion.

(d) Receiving, transmitting or delivering telegraph or telephone messages.

(e) The conveying of travellers and His Majesty's mails.

(f) Maintaining fires or doing urgent repairs, in cases of emergency or other work of a like incidental character in connection with manufacturing processes.

(g) The continuance to their destination of railway trains in transit when the Lord's Day begins, which are loaded exclusively either with live stock, destined for immediate shipment at any ocean port or with perishable goods or both. I intend to amend that so as to provide for the shipment of grain at certain seasons of the year. It is equally important in order to avoid congestion, that grain should go forward to the ocean port, as it is that perishable goods should go forward.

Mr. FOSTER. Do you need the word 'exclusively' as it now reads?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. No, I intend to amend that, and before the word 'both' at the end of subsection insert 'or with grain or with any of these articles.'

(h) The carriage to the next divisional point on any railway, or to the next regular port of call of any vessel, of any freight, which is in transit by any railway or vessel when the Lord's Day begins.

I think it will be necessary to add another subsection to provide for the hiring of horses and conveyances for any purpose that is not forbidden by the Act.

Section 5 prohibits games and performances where an admission fee is charged, and subsection 2 has reference to the charges for conveyance to performances to which an admission fee is charged, when the proprietors or managers of such performances, or their agents provide such conveyances.

Section 6 applies to excursions by conveyance where a fee is charged. It will be under that section that ferries will operate, and if the section is not broad enough to allow existing ferries to continue operating as they have done in the past, we will have to broaden it. Section 7 applies to pleasure grounds where a fee is charged and section 8 deals with advertisements of prohibited performances. Section 9 says:

> It shall not be lawful for any person on that day to shoot at any target, mark or other object, or to use any gun, rifle or other engine for that purpose.

That section is narrower than the section in the Sunday laws of the United Kingdom and those of the various provinces. Under these laws shooting game is prohibited. In none of them is the prohibition limited to target practice as here. It may be a question whether or not we should broaden the wording of that section.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the margin you would leave for a miss?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I am not competent to give an opinion on that point. Section 10 requires very careful consideration. It is exceedingly inquisitorial, and it will be necessary to consider how far we ought to permit encroachment on a man's private property or domicile. My hon. friends are aware that in our Criminal Code, in sections 570 and 572, provision is made whereby any constable or peace officer may search any vessel or vehicle or any of His Majesty's ships or any mill yard, &c., for public stores, intoxicating liquor or lumber. In these cases a search may be made without a warrant, but they are all cases of a special character, and this provision will have to be examined very closely so as to see whether or not it is open to abuse.

Section 11 provides for a penalty. Section 15 is an important section to which I ask particular attention, because it provides for the continuance of the Lord's Day Acts in force in the provinces. My hon. friends, who are familiar with provincial enactments, will admit that there are in the majority of the provinces, if not in all of them, laws much more stringent in their character than the Bill I have introduced.

Mr. FOSTER. Shall we have a synopsis of these provincial laws?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I have one here at the disposal of any hon. gentleman who wishes to consult it. It has been suggested in some quarters that this is a mere parsons' Bill. Well, all right thinking people admit that the parsons are an important element in this community, who have an undoubted title to be heard and are in a position to speak with authority on legislation such as we are now considering. And I am free to admit that I was glad to solicit and obtain from that element the benefit of their views and advice on this matter, But this Bill does not proceed from a mere puritanical desire to maintain the strictly sabbatarian view or, as I have already pointed out, to rigidly prohibit legitimate forms of amusement. Apart altogether from the question of religion, the observance of one rest day in seven is a matter of great physiological advantage to all who are leading a strenuous life, and there can be no reasonable doubt that it would largely contribute to maintain and improve the physical and intellectual vigour of our people. One of the first obstacles in the way of legislation will be the religious convictions of some elements in our community; but, as the Archbishop of Canterbury pointed out during the course of a recent debate in the English House of Lords, it is not desirable for us to be too considerate of the wishes of alien immigrants who, as he justly said, while they are obtaining the benefits which this country is affording them, will not be subjected to undue hardship if they are obliged, in the public interests, to obey any rules which we, as a Christian community, find it necessary to lay down for the observance of the Sunday.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

Mr. FITZPATRICK moved that the Bill be referred to a select committee to be composed of members to be named hereafter.

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLY—RAILWAY LAND GRANTS.

House resumed adjourned debate on the motion of Sir Wilfrid Laurier that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the House to go into Committee of Supply and the motion of Mr. W. J. Roche in amendment thereto.

Mr. THOS. GREENWAY (Lisgar). As hon. members are aware, Mr. Speaker, my position has hitherto been that of a listener rather than a participant in debate; and if I depart somewhat on this occasion from my usual course, the importance of the subject, which my hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. W. J. Roche) has brought before us, must plead my excuse. Ever since my first recollection of the province from which I hail, land for the settler has been the most serious question we have been called upon to consider. The lack of knowledge perhaps in the early days of the value of the lands of that western country, led to very grievous mistakes. One of the worst of these mistakes was in the first organizations of the province of Manitoba. A little province, of a very few square miles, extending as far west as range 12, west of the first principal meridian, was mapped out. Some ten or eleven years later that province was enlarged, but it is still not as large as the large minded westerner would like to have it. Some of our friends have been calling in derision, the province of Manitoba, especially since the erection of the two sister prairie provinces, a postage stamp upon the map. I am free to admit that it is entirely too small, and I hope that in the very near future the government will see their way clear, in the negotiations which they shall have with the other provinces, to make Manitoba a good deal larger, but I must say that, on account of the mistakes to which I have referred, the province of Manitoba can never be the size it ought to be. That province was in the early days the victim of a policy which was entirely the opposite of that which my hon. friend has enunciated in his amendment. I have said that the province was too small, but the area, so far as the settlers were concerned, was very much limited by the action of the government in granting large tracts of land to railway and other corporations; and I speak with a knowledge of the land regulations which I have acquired during many years during which I have been intimately associated with the work of developing the province of Manitoba and from having been for more than a quarter of a century intimately connected with the development more especially of a part of it.

I know that there were large areas that, through the action of the government, fell into the hands of speculators, and many of them still remain there. I referred a moment ago to the smallness of the province. Perhaps I could better illustrate the effect of the policy of the early days upon the province of Manitoba by giving a comparison of the area under crop of last year. The total cultivated area in the province of Manitoba last year was 4,140,898 acres. There were 42,320 farmers cultivating that area, and they produced 55,761,416 bushels of wheat, 45,424,000 bushels of oats, 14,064,175 bushels of barley, 173,075 bushels of rye and 53,706 bushels of peas—a total of 115,863,361 bushels of grain produced on something over four million acres of land by something over forty-two thousand farmers. It appears to me that the question of the land for the settlers is most important in that province, for a careful calculation which I have frequently made shows a fact —of which I would ask some hon. members who do not seem to have a clear idea of the resources of that great country to take careful note—that this cultivated area which would now be much larger but for the old land policy can be multiplied by at least five in the little province of Manitoba, to say nothing of the province of Saskatchewan, that magnificent province, or the province of Alberta. And, in passing, I may say that I was pleased to notice that Saskatchewan outdid in production the older province of Manitoba, so far as the average yield was concerned. I refer to these matters principally for the purpose of showing the importance of this subject and to bring out more clearly the fact that this area, which is not now cultivated, has been locked up by a policy pursued in reference to Manitoba a good many years ago. Now, I was much pleased that my hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. W. J. Roche) had brought this resolution before the House; because, Sir, I like to have members like that hon. gentleman assisting us in this work of securing the land for the settlers. It shall be my aim, so long as I have a seat in this House, or so long as I have a place of influence anywhere, to do anything I can to help any proposal, no matter from where it may emanate, to promote the interest of the people of the west. And, Sir, I do not think that the western man can be fairly accused of taking a sectional view of affairs when he voices such a determination. Foremost in my mind, the guiding star of my action in public affairs, is the interest of the west; and in that I believe I am best promoting the interest of Canada, because of the great possibilities of that splendid western country.

It appears to me that the principal object of the hon. gentleman (Mr. W. J. Roche) in bringing this question before this House was to discredit the scheme inaugurated some years ago, that of the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company. Now, perhaps, it would be well for us to consider this scheme. I have a list here of the land companies that have been formed to handle the lands of that western country. There are twenty-six of them. And, Mr. Speaker, this is the first company that has ever carried out what it undertook to do.

As has been already remarked by some gentlemen who have spoken upon this subject, the land which this company took over was considered to be not of much use for settlement purposes. Years ago we held it to be true that the 'American Desert,' as we called it, ran up into the Northwest and extended east as far as the present Soo line of railway and west to take in the country now under discussion. The Qu'Appelle and Long Lake Railway was built in 1890 and ran up through this country. The Qu'Appelle and Long Lake land grant, which these gentlemen took over, they purchased from Messrs. Osler, Hammond and Nanton, who represented that company—good business men. For part which they acquired from the company they paid $1.25 per acre. Messrs. Osler, Hammond and Nanton, representing the railway company, had sent their examiner over this land and he had come back with the report that the land did not come within the terms of the contract which had been made with the government, in that it was not fit for settlement.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. When was that?

Mr. GREENWAY. It was some time before the company of which I am speaking bought from the railway company.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. About 1899 or 1900?

Mr. GREENWAY. Somewhere along there. I do not recollect the date; I am merely relating the circumstance.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Of course, the date is important.

Mr. GREENWAY. I presume that we can get the date. But, as I have said, this examiner came back and said that this land was not fit for settlement. The company then asked the government for leave to bring an action against the government for the purpose of showing that he land was not fit for settlement and to have the terms varied. While this suit was pending this company came forward and bought the land from the railway company, relieving the government of the suit, and entered upon the work they proposed to do. The leading spirits of the company of which I am speaking—immigration company, if you choose to call it so—had been engaged in similar work in Minnesota for years. They had purchased from the Northern Pacific people—who are business people and do things in a business like way—some 670,000 acres $1.07 per acre some of which land was within 100 miles of the cities of St. Paul and Minneapolis.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If I do not interrupt the hon. gentleman (Mr. Greenway), I would like to ask a question?

Mr. GREENWAY. Certainly.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. gentleman calls this an 'immigration company.' Was there any provision in the agreement between this company and the government that the persons to be settled on these lands should be immigrants? Were not the conditions perfectly satisfied if residents were settled on these lands?

Mr. GREENWAY. Yes, I think so, but the company brought in large numbers from the United States as a result of the contract with the government. I am reminded that my hon. friend undertook the other day to make what he thought a point out of an interjection he made while my hon. friend from East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) was speaking, saying that this company had brought in large numbers of immigrants saying he understood we upon this side of the House claimed the government had brought in the people. I will give him some examples before I have done, I will give him some illustrations of what has been done upon this land where a gopher could not live. The hon. gentleman thought he had made a point against my hon. friend from East Assiniboia when he said that the government had been bringing these people into the country, and had made a bargain with the company. Well, if the government made a bargain with the company the result of which was to bring people into the country, are not the government entitled to credit for it?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Certainly. But will the hon. gentleman allow me to ask him this for information: Did the government make a bargain with the company that the latter should bring immigrants into the country, or was it not the bargain that certain people either from other points in Canada or out of Canada, should be settled on that land?

Mr. GREENWAY. I think the bargain made with the government was that the company should put settlers on these lands.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Whether coming from outside Canada or not?

Mr. GREENWAY. Yes, I think so, I do not exactly remember the details of the bargain. But I promised to give the hon. gentleman some of the results obtained on this land concerning which we are told that after these people had gone over the lands and examined them they came to the conclusion that they were unfit for settlement, and that they would take steps to get rid of the load which had been put upon them. As I remarked a while ago, the railway was built in 1890. It ran for ten or twelve years before this bargain was made, from Lumsden to Saskatoon, a distance of 140 miles. I believe I am speaking within bounds when I say that there was not a single agent along the line ; there was not a furrow turned in sight of the railway, there was not a homestead, properly so-called, for cultivation purposes. What is the result now ? Along that same line there are a number of towns with a population varying from 300 to 600, where a large amount of business is done, supplied with schools, churches elevators and all the other advantages which our little towns in the west enjoy. Our hon. friends opposite seem especially to object to the manner of advertising that was employed, and they read extracts from advertisements of the land company which they considered objectionable. These gentlemen came to the government and wanted to get the even numbered sections in order that they might do what they had done on the other side of the line where they had run large farms, and they wanted the even numbered sections to be allotted. They came to the government and wanted to buy. They were told, so I am informed in the department, that the government would not sell. They went away, and came back again, and said: We will undertake to buy and settle these lands. That was another proposition. Now here was the difference between the manner in which this government did business and the manner in which the former government did business with colonization companies. When these men made that promise the government said : We do not know whether you will keep your promise or not, and we want you put up security that you will. The government demanded a security of $50,000, which the company put up. Now that looked to me like a business transaction. But I was going to refer to the mode of advertising which this company adopted, but which the government could not adopt. The first thing they did after acquiring the land was to go south—and I call especially to this the attention of my hon. friend the leader of the opposition, because it seems that a great part of the people came in from the south, I know most of them did. Well, these men went south, they chartered a train with eight sleepers, a dining car and other cars, and travelled from Chicago to Prince Albert, with four hundred guests, among whom were some very prominent citizens. For instance, there was the president of the First National Bank of Chicago, Mr. James Fargin, as one of the delegation ; Governor Lynn, of Minnesota, was one of the delegation ; ex-Governor Miller, of Dakota, was one of the delegation. So this company determined at the beginning what they would do. They brought in 400 guests, including leading business men, leading farmers, all men who knew what the country was when they saw it, because they were acquainted with a similar country on the other side of the line. The company took these men in there to be witnesses of what they had seen. They took them in there and entertained them, and the result was that they did bring people in from the south of the line.

I will give my hon. friend another illustration, another evidence of what has been done ; I will give him the names of two gentlemen who have been farming in this district since 1902. One of them lived near one of the towns I referred to a while ago, and I will mention some of those towns now : Craig, Girvan, Davidson, Bladworth, Hanley, Dundurn, and there are half a dozen others along the line of 140 miles which was a desert previously. Well, Sir, these gentlemen brought in one man that is worthy of notice. He came from the state of Illinois, Mr. Detcheu, who lives near Davidson. He came in in 1902, four years ago next June. He grew last year from this desert over 3,000 acres of wheat, and from 500 to 600 acres of oats and barley. He had over 100,000 bushels of grain. Was not such a result worth the effort that was made? There is another gentleman, Mr. Meilike, of Dundurn, he had last year 46,540 bushels of wheat.

1,857. So that my hon. friend will see that if that had gone on there would have been plenty of land for generations so come. What has been the result since ? The vigorous immigration policy my hon. friends adopted on taking office, the vigorous work that was done in the Department of the Interior, the knowledge that was spread of the capabilities of the country resulted in this that there was about a doubling in the next year, then the number went to 4,000 odd, then, in 1899, it went to nearly 7,000 in 1900 to 7,426, in 1901 to 8,167, in 1902, when this movement of which I have been speaking began, to 14,673, in 1903 to 31,383, in 1904 to 26,073, in 1905 to 30,819 and in the six months ended 31st December 1905 it was 17,771. From the reports which we get now these homesteads entries are increasing every month. I know we shall require to look around for some more land. I know it will be a good thing by and by if we can get the odd numbered sections, but that reminds me of another little matter that I must point out especially for the benefit of my hon. friends who moved and seconded this resolution. In 1899 the government of Manitoba acquired from the Manitoba and Northwestern Railway Company, for the purpose of discharging a debt that they owed to the government, 542,000 acres of land and they acquired from Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann, who had themselves acquired the Hudson's Bay Railway charter, 256,000 acres of land in settlement of an old claim which the government had against them, or in round numbers 800,000 acres of land, or about half the area which is under consideration in the motion of my hon. friend. These were odd numbered sections. The government of that day, in that year, formulated a policy in reference to this land. They said : Now the time has come when we want to make an impression upon the other side of the line because we all recognize that if we are to get a large influx of population it must come from the south and we want to interest those people. We knew that their lands were pretty scarce and we said that we would take this plan. We said : We will advertise in the papers to the south of us that the government hold in the province of Manitoba 800,000 acres of land which they propose to sell with settlement duties to the actual settler for $3 an acre on easy terms of payment. There was, to my mind, a grand opportunity to give the people a chance to get land—land for the settler. Where were my hon. friends when this was being done ? They were all denouncing the government for having made such a bargain which turned out to be a grand one in the interest of their own friends. They opposed the government. A government came into power of the political stripe of my hon. friends. What did they do ? I have before me a copy of a return which was brought down to the legislature of Manitoba some time ago. I do not propose to weary the House by reading it but I propose to take two or three specimen bricks out of this return and show the admirable manner in which these gentlemen undertook to give the land to the settler. For instance, some of this land of which I have been speaking was sold to Mr. J. M. Savage, a gentleman who, at one time, I believe, was a Conservative candidate. I think he lived outside of our province. In any case it was not a quarter section but it was 14,748 acres and it was sold at $2.50 an acre. They sold to the brother-in-law of the late treasurer—my hon. friend who comes from that country will know him—a Mr. Hamilton—Hamilton and Forrest were the firm—and by the way they made up firms for the purpose of disposing of these lands—41,305 acres at $2.50 an acre.

Mr. CONMEE. Were there settlement duties attached ?

Mr. GREENWAY. No, not that kind of settlement we are talking about. I might give a long list of such transactions; but sufficient to say they sold to Robert Ridd an employee of the government working for $700 a year a tract of land comprising 6,841 acres at $2,40 an acre. This gentleman immediately transferred it to another friend of his who was working in the same department, and he in turn sold it to some capitalist at $10 per acre. The lands for the settler indeed. Then Sir, we have a gentleman, a Conservative organizer I am told. I think he is at Portage La Prairie, named W. Richardson, I shall only give this one other illustration, and the only surprise is where in the world this man got the money to buy the land even at that price; they sold him 80,386 acres at $3 an acre ; then the 25,000 acres were sold in one lot at $1.56 an acre That is the kind of policy my hon. friends opposite have been supporting and are supporting, because I cannot conceive that under any possible circumstances they would do anything else than support the gentleman of whom I am speaking. If they did, it would be a very great surprise to me, and it is this sort of thing that leads me to think my hon. friend is not quite sincere and has not got quite converted to the idea that the land ought to be conserved for the settler. I said a while ago that it was because of a want of appreciation that lands were wasted as they were years ago, and I am willing that it should go that way. But that is not the case now. Our western lands are so much appreciated now that every one wants a piece of Manitoba land, a piece of Saskatchewan land, a piece of Alberta land; it is the best thing, Mr. Speaker, in which to invest that there is under the sun. And people are beginning to realize that. And the reason of that is that the land in that country is intrinsically worth more money than it is valued for to-day because of the amount that can be produced from it. That is what makes it valuable. Why Sir, in the old days of 1879 when the regulations came in reserving the odd numbered sections which made our settlement very sparse, we went in there and we got 320 acres of land (half a mile by a mile) and the settlement looked very sparse to the former Ontario man. But when you came to take out of that the odd numbered sections as was done on the first of August, 1879, that made the matter so much worse. Then, the Canadian Pacific Railway bargain was made and lands were belted A, B, C, D, E. I happened luckily to live near the international boundary in belt E. When that regulation came in we could buy these lands in belt E at one dollar an acre. We could do more than that, and that helped to make settlements still more sparse; men who had taken previous to that the odd numbered sections as homesteads and pre-emption, could abandon them and could what was called railroad them. That is what I did myself. I abandoned my homestead and pre-emption and bought it as a railway half section at a dollar an acre. And, Sir, notwithstanding the present rush to the west, and a great many are going from our district to the west, land in that vicinity is to-day worth from $30 to $40 an acre. So that the whole land question is changed; the value of land has changed. I went into Manitoba in 1878, I was engaged by the way in immigration work, in running solid trains via Chicago to Manitoba from western Ontario, and I took in the first party that was taken to the southern Manitoba town of Emerson. We came in conflict with the Americans who were trying to settle Dakota and Minnesota; they would continually board our train along the line and try to induce our people not to go up into the frozen country as they called it. My first year there was in 1879 and when we were getting nicely at work, what was done by the government? While people were looking for land and anxious to get all the land they could, because the moment a man saw it he knew what it was going to be. The Conservative government was then in power, and I think my hon. friend from North Toronto was in the government at the time, and the Conservative government who were giving away large areas to colonization companies and all that sort of thing; the Conservative government provided that the homestead and pre-emption should be reduced from 160 each to 80 acres; 80 acres for a homestead and 80 acres for a pre-emption. That regulation was in existence for several months and it did more to settle up Northern Dakota with Canadians, of which there are a very large number there, than anything else that was ever done. That is the way the Conservative government was keeping the land for the settler in those days. I shall not refer to the colonization companies of these days in detail, I shall not weary the House. I have here a list of the colonization companies which were formed and dealt with, in the eighties. There are over 20 of them—Armstrong and Cook, The Montreal Western Land Company, The Dominion Lands Colonization Company, The Edmonton and Saskatchewan Land Company, The Farmer's Northwest Land and Colonization Company, The Prince Albert Colonization Company, The Primitive Methodist Colonization Company, The Temperance Colonization Society and a number of others. Now, what was the result of that policy of the Conservative government; what did it accomplish? The whole box and dice of the colonization societies paid the government $731,783.93.

Mr. GAUVREAU. For how much land?

Mr. GREENWAY. I was going to tell the hon. gentleman that; for 438,208 acres of land and 375,518 acres of scrip, in all 813,726 acres and for all that land and scrip all they paid was 85 cents an acre, and they accomplished the magnificient work of settling 1,243 people. That was the whole result of that great scheme of colonization under the Conservative government. Now, Mr. Speaker, if the present government had been remiss in its duty in not having the lands selected as they ought to have been, I for one would have voted against the government. What is the actual result. The late Conservative government, patented to railway companies on account of land grants up to the first of July, 1896, 1,965,191 acres or less than 2,000,000 acres. Since July 1896 this government have patented 22,338,259 acres. There remain to be patented 6,319,024 acres, and there remain to be selected, on account of railway land subsidies less than 1,750,000 acres. It does appear to me that the government have had in view what was in the best interests of the west, and I believe that if my hon. friend lives for another ten years, and I hope he will live longer than that, and pursues the same policy that he has been doing in reference to the work—and our friends opposite ought not to forget the west, the west is going to be the great country——

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. GREENWAY. Lord Dufferin said upon the occasion of his visit to that country that Winnipeg was the hub. I believe, Sir, that by the year 1916, ten years from to-day, we will have as many people west of the Great Lakes in Canada as we have east of them, and that, Sir, is due, it must be due, and it ought to be credited to the vigorous or individual work that has been done; and no one single agency has had more to do with that than the agency to which

I was referring a little while ago, that land company, which took hold of the thing, as Americans usually do, in a vigorous manner. I said we had dark days in Manitoba, I remember them very distinctly, and I remember, Sir, the struggles in which I was engaged, and I recall this in passing, just to refresh the minds of the hon. gentlemen who are now so much interested in the far west. It may be remembered that we had a Canadian Pacific Railway contract, passed I think in 1881. It contained a monopoly clause and notwithstanding that very little was known of that country it began to develop and they saw that they needed other railways and they chartered them but as fast as they were chartered the charters were sent down here and disallowed. We could not have other railways, and one of the most strenuous periods of my life was a period of about five years during which I undertook to speak and to agitate the people of Manitoba on that question until the people looked at it in the proper light and they elected men to office who would look after their interest in that regard. And where was my hon. friend then ? Was he up helping to take off the shackles and the weights that were preventing the progress of Manitoba? No, he was helping to make them tighter. The people of Manitoba changed, they elected other representatives and I had the honour in 1888 of being requested to come to Ottawa by the then premier, Sir John A. Macdonald, and in a few weeks we got that re-adjusted, we got the shackles taken off and now my friend can get up and say : We can get the Great Northern to Boissevain, we can get the Great Northern to any other place. Why ? Because of the change that was made in the policy at that time.

My friends have one and all spoken of the Hudson's Bay Railway. I shall turn from no one in my advocacy of the Hudson's Bay Railway. I look on it as the natural outlet of that great country and no matter how many railways we may get we shall need them all when these millions of acres are under cultivation. And we want the Hudson's Bay Railway if it were for nothing else than as an outlet for our cattle and dairy products. The shorter line to tide water the shorter line upon the ocean, the line that has been traversed by the old Hudson's Bay craft for over 200 years, will you tell me that with the improved ice going steamers and all that sort of thing it cannot be successfully operated now ? I have never had any doubt about that for years. I agree with some gentlemen who have spoken that we ought to have this railway free of any cost to the provinces, that ought to be built because of the vast interests which Canada has there, the largest asset that she has—it ought to be undertaken from here. But Sir, in the light of what I have been saying about land and the change that has come over the value of land, I beg to submit to my hon. friend that the land grant for the Hudson's Bay Railway is entirely too large and it is in this position : The land grant north of the Saskatchewan river, lapsed last January. The land grant south, from Erwood, to the Saskatchewan 90 miles, is still in force, and will be for two years, so on account of the state of that land grant I think my hon. friends might well consider whether or not some other bargain cannot be made for the building of the Hudson's Bay Railway. I presume that after the experience of the Minister of Railways in reference to railway operations he would not care to build it as a Dominion work ; that would be perhaps a very good way of doing it. But it does appear to me that the whole question, now that the land grant has lapsed to that extent, may be revived and it may be considered what it is worth to build that railway. I believe that the railway can be built and equipped for one half the proceeds of that land grant. Believing that, Sir, I join with my friend in trying to do what we can to save as much land as possible for the actual settler.

Let me say a word in conclusion to illustrate what I believe to be the policy of the government—and it appears now to be the policy of our friends on the other side--that the land is for the settler. I am quite sure I am speaking within bounds when I say that half of the correspondence which I get is from gentlemen who have become possessed of knowledge of the Northwest and want to buy a piece of land. Well, Sir, I have now got it in this shape that I have a stereotyped answer : No matter what may have been the policy of the governments of Canada in the past, the policy of this government now is to sell no land except the school lands which are sold at public auction, so that you cannot buy land, you have to go and settle upon it, become an ordinary settler, develop it, and that is the only way that it can be acquired. I do not know whether that was the matter with my hon. friend when he went to the west and saw the scarcity of land, saw that it was not possible to buy from the government at a cheap rate. I believe there are companies that can supply land of that class and their charges are not to be considered as exorbitant. All the best companies, the Hudson's Bay Company, for instance, a little while ago, before I left home, increased the price of land very largely. I forget the percentage of advance, but they did more than that ; they said, we will only sell one half of any parcel that we have in any particular district. If we have a section there we will sell one half ; if we have a half section we will sell one half of it. If we have a section, we will sell one half and wait to reap a greater profit out of the efforts of the settlers before we part with the balance. That was the condition years ago. People went in and settled that country in those days under arduous circumstances. Many of us had to drive a hundred miles before we could reach a railway, and we were not allowed to construct railways there for a good many years. I have only to say again that I hope hon. members will take a broad view of the question affecting the Northwest, in the interest, not only of the Northwest, but of the whole Dominion, I was pleased to see to-day that our Governor General spoke of us as a nation.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. GREENWAY. He dropped the word 'colony.' We ought to be a nation. But how would you build your nation if you had not the west? Somewhere in this building I have noticed a minature reproduction of the arch which we had in London some years ago and upon which the designer had printed the words 'Canada, Britain's Granary.' What was it that led him to put that inscription over that arch? Was it the grand old provinces of Ontario and Quebec? No, it was because of the vast wheat fields of the west, capable of producing food for the whole British empire.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER (North Toronto). I have listened with a great deal of interest to my hon. friend (Mr. Greenway) who has just taken his seat and so no doubt has every hon. member in this House. I always like to hear from the pioneers, and we all recognize in the hon. gentleman one of the pioneers of our great western country, and I believe one of its successful pioneers. But whilst listening to him with much interest. I could not help thinking how strangely sometimes the best of people will confuse cause with effect and how effectively in one part of his argument, a man may efface the point made in an earlier part of it. Let me analyse some of the arguments that have been made and some of the expressions used by my hon. friend and others who have spoken on that side. I thought I discerned, in the expressions used by many of them, a kind of sneer. I thought they indulged in a sneering reflection on the sincerity of hon. gentlemen on this side regarding the interest they take in the Northwest. I hope I was mistaken.

Mr. GREENWAY. Does the hon. gentleman refer to me?

Mr. FOSTER. I did not particularly refer to my hon. friend, but I was merely pointing out what I thought was discernable in some of the speeches that have been made on his side. Might I ask if that attitude is not rather misplaced? Is it wise or consistent with common sense? Supposing hon. gentlemen opposite should think that the political party to which they are opposed was at one time mistaken in its policy for the development of the Northwest, is it wise on their part, if they think that party has come around to their views, to warn it off? My hon. friend the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) was a particular sinner in that regard. He declared, in his opening sentences, that we on this side had come to think exactly with hon. gentlemen opposite, and then he proceeded to empty the vials of his wrath on our devoted heads for having done so. He went back to ancient history and pulled out of its musty records—not what he thought he was pulling out. He wanted an argument but all he got was a catch-cry. That cry however captivated him. It was 'the land for the settler.' That he said was the motto of the Liberals, and in contrast with that was 'the land for the speculator,' which he declared was the motto of the Liberal Conservatives. Well, I am quite ready to admit that the cry was a capital one if it only had some basis. But let us see if there was any basis for this catch-cry taken up by the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) and repeated by subsequent speakers on that side, including my hon. friend from Lisgar (Mr. Greenway).

In his first sentence my hon. friend (Mr. Greenway) who has just sat down declared that the only reason for this motion of my hon. friend (Mr. Roche) is a desire to discredit the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company. Well, that may be his opinion, but I venture to say that it is not a correct one. No doubt, however, he will cling to his own opinion whether it be correct or not. And in defence of the government my hon. friend said that that company was one of the most beneficent agencies—and in saying this he parodied something which Lord Rosebery had said before with reference to a greater subject—that had ever been employed in order to rouse up and settle the Northwest. Heaven help us if that was the most beneficient of all the agencies in the development of that country. But into that question we shall look a little later.

But my hon. friend went on the same tack as the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) in conjuring up his historic conflict between the speculators and the settlers and in charging the Liberal Conservative party with having been the aiders and abettors of the former. Let me ask the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) and my hon. friend (Mr. Greenway) to go back and follow the course of legislation in 1871, 1872, 1874, 1879, 1880 and up to the present, and let me put to him this question. When the two parties ranged themselves up on this question—much more difficult then, when we were looking forward into the mist and dimness, than it appears now when we are looking backwards, after twenty-five years have elapsed—let me ask these hon. gentlemen if this was not true. Was it not true that when the two parties ranged themselves up on the great question of building a railway to the Pacific coast in order to open up the great Northwest, there was absolutely not a shadow of difference between them as to how that railway was to be built from the point of view of ways and means? The plans and the routes were different but the ways and means were absolutely the same. In 1871 the Canadian Pacific Railway Act was passed—the first one. It was passed by Sir John Macdonald and his government and the party which supported him.

What was the basis, financial and otherwise that lay under that Act ? It was three fold : First, that the existing rate of taxation, the burden of taxes upon the people, should not be increased ; second, that there should be a money subsidy ; third, that the lands of Manitoba and the Northwest lying along side the road should be used to build the road. On these points in the legislation of 1871 both parties, one led by Sir John Macdonald and the other by Alexander Mackenzie, were agreed. After the failure to secure capital for the building of the road under the Act of 1871, the Act of 1872 was passed. This Act, in so many words, laid down the very same three essential principles. And there was no difference of opinion as between the two sides of the House. The government of Sir John Macdonald went out, and the government of Alexander Mackenzie came in. In 1874, under the direction of the new government, a new Canadian Pacific Railway Act was passed. What do we find in that Act ? My hon. friend had something unfavourable to say about devoting alternate blocks of land fronting the railway to the building of the road. Yet the same three principles as before were laid down. The tariff had been somewhat increased making the rate of taxation slightly higher; but it was laid down in the Act that the country should not be unnecessarily burdened ; that there was to be a cash subsidy of $10,000 a mile ; and that there was to be a land subsidy not exceeding 20,000 acres per mile, to be taken from lands lying alongside the railway through Manitoba and the Northwest. In 1879, after the Mackenzie government had gone out and when Sir John Macdonald was again in power, there was still substantial agreement between the parties on the question of the money subsidy and the land subsidy.

Now, Sir, if it was the accepted principle in 1871, in 1872, in 1874 and 1879, that the road was to built without unnecessarily burdening the country, that a money grant was to be given, and that a land grant was to be given, laid out in alternate sections in a belt of from three to six miles along the whole line of the road, how does the Minister of the Interior, or how does any other man, substantiate this figment of the imagination that there was a continuous battle between the two parties with reference to the land grant of the Canadian Pacific Railway ? How, were the lands to be utilized in the legislation of 1874 ? Two-thirds of them were to be sold by the government, after agreeing with the contractor upon a price, and the money was to go to the contractor ; and one-third was to be granted to the contractor direct. In either case the land would be in the hands of speculators, would it not ? Did Mr. Mackenzie suppose, when he was penning that legislation and putting it through parliament, that if two-thirds of the land set aside for the benefit of the contractors were sold, it would be sold exclusively to settlers ? Would it not be sold to whoever would buy at the price agreed upon and the proceeds handed over to the contractors ? And the buyers would properly be speculators, would they not ? And the one-third was to go directly into the hands of the contractors. Well, were they to settle upon it themselves, or were they to speculate ? They would sell out at the best price they could get. What, then becomes of this figment of the imagination, of the Minister of the Interior ? He saw what looked like the end of a strong argument ; he seized it and pulled it out, but it turns out that it is something far different from what he expected.

'The land for the settlers,' says the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Greenway) : 'I stand by the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company ; I stand by the government that made that deal with the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company. Why ? Because I love the settler, and I stand for the principle the land for the settler.' The Saskatchewan Vallley Land Company bought 250,000 acres of land at $1 per acre ; the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company sold out every acre of that land at prices which will yield to them on the average more than $7 per acre. Will anybody deny it ? Why it is absolutely undeniable. If the government had adopted the rule of the land for the settler, and not the land for the speculator, they would have sold that land to the settler at from $1 to $3 per acre. But, to-day, when the settler goes to get the land, he does not face a beneficent and paternal government anxious for his welfare. He faces the stern visage of the speculator, who says : 'You can have that land, but you shall pay me $8, $10 or $12 an acre.' 'And who are you?' inquires the settler. 'We are the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company.' 'And where did you get your land ?' 'From the government.' 'What did you pay the government for it ?' 'We paid a dollar an acre.'

But, says the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Greenway), they made the land. Why, what an idea for a sensible, good looking man like my hon. friend to put forth to a reasonable assembly. The hon. gentleman declares that this land was a desert before the company bought it. Yet this land which he says was a desert in 1902 had upon it in 1904 one man who raised, according to the hon. gentleman's own statement, 100,000 bushels of grain and another who raised 46,540 bushels of wheat ;—a desert one year, a garden the next, all brought about by the wonder-working Saskatchewan Valley Land Company. The speech of the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Knowles), we did not take seriously, because it was not meant to be a serious speech. But one passage in it was quite pathetic. He said that that great tract was known as 'no man's land.' The poor freighter groaned when he approached it and he heaved a great sigh of relief when he had passed successfully through it. It was a great salt desert; it was shunned by humanity and was left to the disputed, or divided, sovereignty of the gopher and the prairie chicken. And the Minister of the Interior, in 1902, said the land was absolutely valueless. Mr. Speaker, what a wonderful country we live in, and in what a wonderful age. Here is a tract of half a million acres: On December 15, 1902, it is a salt desert, it is 'no man's land,' shunned by humanity and taken possession of only by the gopher and the prairie chicken. In 1903, one year afterward it is a veritable paradise, a land growing any quantity of wheat, with smiling farms in every direction, villages growing as though by magic and a town rising fair and stately at every other station along the line of railway which passes through it. And what brought about the change? The Saskatchewan Valley Land Company. Where is Hatfield's magic now? Why it pales into insignificance before the wonderful alchemy which is directed by the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company. But is there not another reason? Where were these officers and employees of the government? Asleep, as they declared, over a desert, when, in reality they were sleeping upon a garden of wonderful of inexhaustible capacity. Where were they that they found out none of the richness, none of the fertility of this great section of land, when, within six months after they made the sale, it was found to be all that could be desired, and has since proven itself to be of wonderful richness, and fertility and producing power.

Well, my hon. friend says that the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company brought this about. They immediately went to work and got 400 guests together, and a splendid train of bankers, business men, magnates of every kind, ex-governors and governors, and they took them all up there, fed them well, and showed them the country. These, Mr. Speaker, were the settlers that came into that country, each one of them taking up his 160 acres and settling down to till the soil, under the aegis of that benevolent government which always stands for the settler and never for the speculator. Is it not allowable for us to think that this Saskatchewan Land Company went down with malice prepense and aforethought into the southern country, and that they there gathered together bankers, business men, magnates, potentates and powers, and took them up, showed them the richness of this promised land, then kindly took them back again, back as the buyers of wholesale blocks, and as men who would recommend the buying by other speculators, and perhaps in some cases, by settlers as well in that great northern country? But be it remarked, Mr. Speaker, that when a settler purchased one of these sections of land, he did not get it at a dollar an acre from the government that represented the settlers, but he had to pay $7, $8 or $10 an acre to these dear gentlemen who, I think, were little else than speculators. Less than one year after the company got that purchase they said in their own literature that they had sold every bit of it out. To settlers? Not at all. They were speculators, and they sold it out to the speculators who came in to make their profit again. Since the 1st day of September of last year the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company has sold more than one million acres of land, of the land that they possessed in that territory. Have they sold it to settlers or to speculators? My hon. friend from East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) declared himself as very much in favour of the settler as against the speculator, and then again in the most amusing manner he undertook to upset his own contention. Here is the way he described these gentlemen:

> A good many of the members of that company were Americans, and the settlers they brought in were practically all Americans. The way that they disposed of the land was this: They sell a man 10,000 acres at wholesale prices, this man goes back to the part of the country where he was known, and he would arrange a sale of that land to settlers and bring them in and put them on the land.

It was not the government that sold to the settlers at $1 an acre, it was the speculator who received the land at $1 an acre, and then sold it to other speculators in 10,000 acre lots, and when this at last got to the settler, they made him pay a round price per acre of $7, $8, $9 or $10 before he could till a single acre of that soil. My hon friend absolutely answered himself.

But my hon. friend who spoke this afternoon (Mr. Greenway) seemed to make it a grievance that the present Manitoba government sold lands at $2.50 and $3 per acre. Why did he so condemn them, and at the same time why did he so strenuously argue in favour of the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company and the present government that sold to the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company at $1 per acre? Surely, the Manitoba government selling at $2.50 or $3 must stand in a better position than the present government selling land in the valley and garden of the country at $1 per acre. He condemns the one, and yet he stands up for the other. Where is the consistency of the hon. gentleman? But again he says: There were dark days in those times. What days were those in Manitoba, the days when my hon. friend was in power in Manitoba? Things have changed since then. Another government is in power, and may I ask my hon. friend to note what has taken place. During those days that his government was in power and their malign influence was, so to speak, over the country, how few homesteads were taken up in Manitoba, what a very small number of settlers went into Manitoba, what a small area of land was sold to settlers in Manitoba. Presto change, he and his malign influences went out, the present government and brighter days came in. Take the records that he read himself —how the homesteads leaped up, how settlers crowded in. The number of homesteads sold mounted up and mounted up as on eagle's wings. That is an argument as good in this case as his argument was. I am only treating him to an argument of his own, and I believe from the way he looks that he considers it is a conclusive argument. Why, my hon. friend said we always believed that country to be the granary of this continent. I am thinking he was right in his belief, but a statement he made directly after is worthy of attention.

He believed that our great influx of population was to come from the south. So do I; so did I then and long before. Since I have studied the question in reference to the Northwest I have stated it more than once that our population would come when the tide of immigration, from certain causes turned from the United States of America and its broad, cheap lands, and, compelled by land hunger, overflowed into the great country to the north. You cannot change the ways of Providence, nor very much the course of the world, and no matter how rich a country you may have north of the 49th parallel of latitude until land hunger could not find its fair and reasonable appeasement in the United States and therefore compelled its hosts of land seekers to look elsewhere, Canada's opportunity had not come, and when that time came Canada's opportunity had come. Another thing. Need we spend hours in arguing as to the conditions from 1874 to 1880 and as to the conditions from 1880 to 1905? Is not the whole face of things changed? Where was your transport in the Northwest Territories and what could you do in the settlement of lands or in bringing in immigrants in any large way until you had your country opened up by railway systems? But was there not a preparation period? Was there not that long period of strenuous work which taxed to the utmost the best qualities of two governments and of two parties in this country before we became successful in interesting capital and using it to the extent of opening up that country so that people could get into it and get out of it, and so that it might become some man's land instead of no man's land as it was previous to the opening up of the country? Is it right or fair to compare the progress for that twenty years with the ten or twelve years which have succeeded with the country gridironed by railways, with a transportation system which vies fairly well with the transportation system of the great country to the south? Surely, it is unreasonable to institute the comparison, to press the contrast, between these two periods.

Now, I will put a common sense question and let each man answer it for himself. Suppose that in 1900 the fortunes of political warfare in this country had consigned my right hon. friend to the opposition and had placed a Liberal-Conservative government in power and that for the last five years the Liberal-Conservative government had had the direction of affairs; answer this question, each man in his own heart: Does he believe that there would have been any less progress shown in that five years under the Liberal-Conservative management than there has been shown under Liberal management during the last five years? That is a question which I do not expect hon. gentlemen to get up and talk much about before the Speaker or before this House. Every man knows when he asks himself that question that there are conditions and circumstances outside and above parties and that these conditions, changing and being different, the results that springs therefrom are different as well. But, let no man on either side of this House forget that for many long years and in dark periods the Liberal-Conservative party, doing its best and looking out into the future, which was not well seen at that time, but which was obscure, never wavered once in its faith in the Northwest and never left over for one single day its efforts—be they misdirected in some cases or not—to achieve that one great object of opening up by way of railway communication and transportation the great middle country which is to be so much the basis and strength and power of this great Canada of ours.

I am not going to import the discussion of partisan politics in it. I am not going to state how much the Liberal-Conservatives were impeded and fought during that time by the Liberal party; I am not going to state what tardy confessions have been made by some Liberals since that time, notably the Hon. G. W. Ross, who admitted that he was mistaken in that fight and he owned it up manfully and truthfully. We do not expect my right hon. friend to own it up; that is not good politics for him in his view, but there are men occasionally who not only took the course that he did, but who had the manliness to get up and abjure what they had said.

Let me take up another point. The hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) did not meet the points that were raised by my hon. friend who moved this motion and by my hon. friend who so ably seconded and supported it. He was asked some very pertinent questions. He has not answered these questions. I propose to call some of these questions to the attention of the House in order that either he or some one who speaks on that side of the House may meet them and meet them, if possible, fairly. One of the questions asked by my hon. friend from Marquette was this: Why is it that nine months ago the hon. minister made the statement in this House that at that time 149,450 acres were patented to the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company, that he has been carrying on his policy of quickly getting these lands patented since and that just a few days ago, in answer to a question, he stated that up to the present time 142,808 acres only had been patented? That was worthy of the hon. minister's attention, and if he had devoted just a little time to that instead of pulling up these alluring tufts from the old resolution of 1880 he would have satisfied us on this side of the House a good deal better, and I think he would have shown himself to just as much advantage. Then there is another question that has not been answered: Why has an extended area been given to the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company as at present constituted in which to select its lands? Has an extended area been given? Why has an extended area been given and what is it to be? Our information is—and we got it from the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company itself—that the area has been widely extended from which they now have the opportunity of securing and selecting their land. Under no terms of the contract is it made exigible or necessary. Why has it been done and to what extent has it been done ? Another question. I have been groping in the dark, putting question after question on the order paper to get at the rights of the transfer of certain lands of the Canadian Northern Railway Company for certain other lands in another section of the provinces. I asked question after question. On some technical point I received the answer that there had been no such transfer as asked about.

Now, when the minister was confronted with the statement that there had been a transfer, and was asked what that transfer was and why, we got no answer from the minister. The Manitoba 'Free Press' answered it or pretended to, in some of its editorials. The member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) answered it in a way, and gave certain explanations with reference to it, but we have not been able to get an authoritative answer from the minister of the department. He has dodged that question, he has not met it, he has not met the spirit of my inquiry, which was this: Has there been a transfer, why has it been, and to what extent has it been ? The member for East Assiniboia says there has been a transfer of some 200,000 to 300,000 acres ; that they have been allowed to select 200,000 or 300,000 acres in this great Saskatchewan Valley ; that a transfer was made for some reason or other and he gives two of the reasons—the Doukhobor reservation and the Riding Mountain timber reservation. But why can we not get a plain statement of fact from the Minister of the Interior ? Ought we not have it and the reasons for it by some member of the government inasmuch as the Minister of the Interior has already spoken ? Another question that was asked was; why was the promise of the late Minister of the Interior given some three years ago : That he was on the direct road towards liberating from 50,000,000 to 60,000,000 acres of land, that he was about to bring in legislation in order to deal with that liberated land, and that he saw no reason at all why this could not be done within a reasonably short space of time ; why was not that promise carried out ? I have the minister's words here. He said :

> We have had in the Northwest Territories ever since the government has been in power a state of affairs under which the great bulk of odd numbered sections of public lands have been held locked up by our obligations to furnish large quantities to railway companies. Many years ago the system was adopted of surveying the country into odd numbered and even numbered sections and holding the odd numbered sections for railway purposes, to be given to the railways as government land grant, the even numbered sections were kept as homesteads. We have not been able to deal with the odd numbered sections in the Territories or in Manitoba because of the fact that we have large obligations outstanding, binding us to furnish certain specified quantities of land to various railway companies under arrangements made by the previous government.

Now, that was a minister who had been in power for several years ; he knew the Northwest from beginning to end if any minister knew his department, and he said this :

> I am not expressing any opinion as to whether this was wise or not, but that was our position.

He was more reasonable and a little more wise and considerate than the present Minister of the Interior. He did not launch out into a revival of old discussions of old policies ; he did not express an opinion as to whether this was wise or not at the time. But he says :

> We are now arriving at the position when I fancy within the next two or three weeks a final arrangement will be closed under which the railway companies which have claims for land grants, including the Canadian Pacific Railway, will have these claims finally settled. I am pleased to say that as a result of this an enormous quantity of odd numbered sections will come back to the government and be available for disposal in any way which the government may be authorized by parliament to adopt. We shall no doubt have in the neighbourhood of 50,000,000 acres of odd numbered sections to dispose of in such manner as parliament may authorize. I trust at an early date to submit a measure providing for the disposal of these lands.

That is the statement made by the then Minister of the Interior some three or four years ago. We on this side of the House asked why that minister's promise had not been implemented, and what reasons had arisen which made it impossible to carry out during three long years what the minister then thought it possible to have carried out within the space of a few weeks. But we got no answer to that. Now then, comes the main point in question. Here you are with 13,000,000 acres of odd sections of land actually tied up from sale or from settlement, and against that you have about 1,750,000 acres of land to be selected. Let all the past gone controversies lie still for a moment; let us address ourselves to just this condition of things as it is now. There is no reason why this condition of things should continue for a single month longer; for a single year longer at the most. Why should it not be brought to a sudden and quick ending? What reasonableness is there that 13,000,000 acres of odd numbered sections of land in one of the best parts of the Northwest should be kept from the homesteader and from the settler simply because there is to be a selection of 1,750,000 to be made in order to satisfy, one company only; that is the present Saskatchewan Valley Land Company. That is the point. And what answer has the minister given to that? He talks about indemnity lands. I have read what he said over and over again and I have read the contracts under which these indemnity lands as he calls them are held, and I can see no reason in any way why that selection cannot at once be made. And if the Dominion government has an obligation against it let the selection be made, but, let the lien stand against that one-third of the selected lands until the government obligation is met. Then you have only 1,750,000 acres of land which are in the hands of the company or covered by the indemnity of the government; you have the other 11,000,000 acres of land free for disposal in the best possible way towards the up building and the settlement of this country. That is the question at issue and the only question at issue just now. Permit this side of the House to have some convictions and some opinions on that question; opinions which are honest and which are frankly held and which are frankly put before this House. It is utter folly and childishness to say to us: Your principles are bad, you are doing it just to discredit the government, you are not sincere at all. Cannot the two sides of the House approach this great question which has very vital connection with what is the most important part of this Dominion; cannot they face that question together and come to a sensible and reasonable conclusion with reference to the best policy just now and under the present conditions? I think they could. The opposition have put forth their reasons. Have they said a wise thing or not when they said that we should get that 12,000,000 acres of land where it can be utilized for the up building of the nation, or is it wiser that it should be locked up for years and years still. What is the insuperable difficulty of setting aside that 1,750,000 acres of land and putting your government obligation against one-third of it if you wish, but at the same time liberating the 11,000,000 or 12,000,000 acres which are left.

That is something for sensible men to canvass, and to give their opinion about instead of throwing bombs and darts at each other across the House and impugning motives. I warn the government as strongly as my hon. friends behind me have warned the government that there may come upon them the same whirlwind that came upon them in 1902. Why did the government sell that land in 1902 to a speculator company for $1 an acre? Because they were importuned to do it. That is the reason, because they were importuned to do it by men who stood close to the minister and to the government, because relatives and close friends of the Commissioner of the Interior joined in that pressure. I can understand it and I can see it all. It was a partnership, somebody was to get the franchise, somebody else was to work the oracle financially and otherwise, and the proceeds were to be divided. 'Against the speculators' said the member for East Assiniboia. Would the member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) be as well off as he is to-day if it was not for speculators? Will he do us the favour to rise in his place in the House and say that he has not now and never had any connection with that company? Where is the Mr. Adamson, the strong henchman and follower of the Minister of the Interior, a brother-in-law of the man who was your Commissioner in the Interior Department when the deal was put through? My hon. friend slates the local government because some land was sold to relatives of that government; put the boot on the other foot and see if it fits any easier or not. I can see the pressure brought on the Minister of the Interior by his friends, not by Col. Davidson, for that franchise. I can see very clearly how they worked together: You get us the land, we are old land men, and we will make this so-called desert, a teeming garden. Within four years they have done what?

Mr. ADAMSON. Will my hon. friend allow me to make a remark.

Mr. FOSTER. Subtract 1902 from 1905.

Mr. ADAMSON. Will my hon. friend allow me to make a remark? The Saskatchewan Valley Land Company did not buy the land at $1 an acre and never sold any at $7 an acre. I never had any consultation at any time with regard to this deal with the member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff).

Mr. FOSTER. I will take the hon. gentleman's denial exactly as he gave it, and yet my argument stands just as true. 250,000 acres of land were sold. Will the Minister of the Interior tell us to what company it was sold ?

Mr. OLIVER. I cannot tell the hon. member just now; I will give him the information later.

Mr. FOSTER. Always unready.

Mr. TURRIFF. The land was not sold to any company; it was sold to some individuals who later on formed the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh ! oh !

Mr. TURRIFF. One moment; as you have mentioned the Commissioner of Dominion Lands; I was commissioner, at that time, and I make the statement now that I never saw Col. Davidson, I never spoke to Mr. Adamson, who happens to be my brother-in-law. I never knew about it in any shape, form or manner, good, bad or indifferent, until several days, until two weeks after the deal was made, because I was not in this part of the country at the time. I knew nothing about it.

Mr. FOSTER. Are there any others now who want to make confessions ?

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. FOSTER. At six o'clock, Mr. Speaker, I had pretty nearly finished the few remarks that I had proposed to address to the House, and just at that time was engaged in a pretty animated conversation with several of my hon. friends on the other side. I do not just now see them here, which I regret because I had intended to renew that conversation. And it is a distinct disappointment for me that, owing to the absence of one of the parties, I cannot proceed in the same way. I notice that several of these gentlemen were somewhat sensitive regarding some remarks that I had made. Of course these remarks were entirely innocent on my part. They were provoked by what the hon. gentleman who spoke this afternoon had said in his strictures upon the Roblin government for having sold lands to persons who were more or less related to them by ties of blood. And just on the spur of the moment I had to allude to the fact that the same thing took place in this transaction. That it was which led to the momentary excitement. If the hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) were here, I would, in order to give him the fullest and freest opportunity for making a statement, ask him whether or not he would rise in the House and deny that he had in any way profited by the sale of this 250,000 acres of land by the government to the first parties to whom the government sold them. If he had not, he could so state in the House, and there would be no further controversy between him and me in that connection. If the hon. member for Humboldt (Mr. Adamson) were here, I would say to him that it is of course very difficult for one on the outside to trace exactly how negotiations start and proceed to fulfilment between parties with whom he is not conversant, and the denial of my hon. friend is absolutely taken by me as correct with regard to his not having had interviews with certain persons. But if my hon. friend from Humboldt (Mr. Adamson) were here, I would like to ask him whether or not, in the original transaction and in the various transfers from one company to the other up to the present, he has or has not profited largely by reason of this original sale of 250,000 acres of land by the government by private contract. That would enable the hon. member to entirely dissociate himself from those persons against whom the hon. the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) is actuated by the most stern and righteous indignation, namely, the speculators. All this reminds me very much of the old nursery rhyme, the caption of which is 'The house that Jack built.' We were led through a formidable succession of events, one occurrence took place after another, but all joined together in the one end, which was the destruction of the house that Jack built. In like manner, whether the 250,000 acres at $1 per acre, part scrip, was sold originally to a syndicate or not, or to a company or not, or sold to a company of one certain name or a company of another certain name, the fact remains that the government got but a dollar an acre, and that all these sales and transfers piled up the price of the land until in the end the ultimate price came out of the settler and not out of the speculator. That is the conclusive fact to which I would invite the attention of this hater of speculators, the Minister of Interior (Mr. Oliver). He is not so dense as not to see that fact which stares him in the face and he cannot be so careless as not to apprehend it. He cannot fail to see that the government sold the land at $1 an acre but not to the settlers ; that it went through series after series of speculating syndicates or companies until ultimately it was almost entirely sold out, and the man upon whom it was unloaded at the last was the settler. That is the self-evident fact out of which there can be no crawling, and no subterfuge will enable any person to parry the force of that conclusion. The government did not sell to a company, says my hon. friend from Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff), but to a syndicate. Ah! but who paid the money to the government? To that question there is an answer given by a man who knows—Mr. James A. Smart, the deputy minister. What does he say ?

Dear Mr. Clancy,—Referring to your question of yesterday——

A question put him in the immigration committee.

I beg to say that the company——

Not a syndicate——

—paid $58,000 in cash and about $92,000 in scrip covering their application for a patent.

Now, I take the member for Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) on his own ground. Does it make the thing better or worse for the government? They did not sell to a company? No, they sold to a syndicate. The syndicate unloaded on a company and never put up a dollar of money, for the company paid the shot. There you had a speculator in the most happy circumstances, where he can buy on credit without paying interest and unload before the cash has to pass from his pocket. I would ask my hon. friend from Humboldt (Mr. Adamson) whether he belonged to that original syndicate or not. I would ask him whether he belonged to each of these companies which, like the turns of a kaleidoscope, have assumed name after name, but always kept the substance and pocketed the profits. And if he has stock in that company, whether he were in the original syndicate or not, every dollar of appreciation of that stock, every step made firm by a preceding speculation, which enabled him and other members of the company to stretch out for another million of acres out of which to make another round profit—every dollar of that advantage was given him because this government, which abhors speculators, sold in private 250,000 acres of the best land in the country for $1 an acre.

There the evidence of Mr. Smart, I think, is very conclusive. So, the turn sought to be given this matter by the hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) has not proved a very happy one for the government. What, then, were these relations between the government and the minister on one hand, the syndicate keeping in the dark and the company which took over from the syndicate what it had filched from the government at so small a price? I cannot tell what those relations were; we can only imagine. But they were relations—relations which resulted in loss to the government of hundreds of thousands of dollars as compared with what might have been obtained, and in great gain to the speculators, who could not have had a footing for their scheme if it had not been that they got on the soft side of the government, and obtained the lands supposed to be a desert but which they knew well to be a garden. Look at Col. Davidson, look at his partners, look at the hon. member for Humboldt and other participants in this matter. Do they look like men who would plant $250,000 in a salt desert, a country that only the gopher and the prairie chicken would contend for? They were alive. But how about the government? Why was the Minister of the Interior asleep? My hon. friend from Lisgar (Mr. Greenway) lauded himself by saying that in Manitoba, just before he went out of office, they proposed to take 800,000 acres of land and sell it at $3 an acre to the settlers. A good plan; a laudable plan. He afterwards scored the Roblin government because they sold it at half a dollar less in some cases, though for $3 in other cases, and did not sell it to the settlers but to the middleman. Yet he stands up and lauds and praises and fights for a government that took 250,000 acres of the best lands of the country and sold them at $1 an acre to speculators who have made out of them about $2,000,000. And made it out of whom? Out of other speculators? No, Mr. Speaker, one end of this chain may be in the speculator's hands, but the other end tugs at the wealth, almost at the very soul of the settler. Let us make a calculation. The speculator bought 250,000 acres of land at $1 per acre. Much of the pay was in scrip filched from the poor half-breed or any others who could be forced to discount. The government did not even ask fair cash for the land, but gave these friends of theirs power to dog the foot-steps of the half-breed, to take him at a disadvantage and buy at a small percentage what was worth cash at par in this land deal. These friends of the government had the privilege of paying half or even more if they pleased, in scrip. This $250,000 in cash and scrip went into the coffers of the government. And now look at the other side. I make the assertion here, knowing something about the lands in the Northwest, their prices and their sales, that the land handed over to this company the company would turn over at an average of not less than an even $8 per acre. It has averaged that, and it is not all sold yet. Multiply 250,000 by $8 and you get $2,000,000. Subtract $250,000 paid to the government, and you have $1,750,000 left, for the company. Out of whose pockets did that money come? Out of the pockets of the settlers, the men in whom the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) has such a deep and sympathetic interest. Had this money been taken from other speculators I should not mind. But pile up the profits, advance upon advance, and who must meet the bill in the end? Your settler and nobody but the settler. Put your settler on 640 acres of land and give him that at $1 an acre—a total of $640. How he would be ready for the work of subduing that land and making it blossom like a rose garden, reaping wealth for himself and his family. But under this regime, if he wants to get 640 acres of land, he must pay $5,000 and more. That is where it pinches the settler. Yet the hon. gentlemen opposite weep crocodile tears over the settler, the man for whom they have such sympathetic regard. There never was a bolder, more brazen scheme of speculation than that of this Saskatchewan Valley Land deal by the government that sits opposite.

And they did it in the light of the present day. When colonization companies were formed twenty years ago they were formed in the time of the dim beginnings of things, when there was no access to the Northwest worthy of the name, when men who undertook the work of bringing in settlers had to face immense difficulties making success almost impossible. And these companies failed. But the land came back to the Crown and at least these companies were an honest attempt on the part of the government of that day to settle that country. But the present deal was made in 1902, when the full capacity of that country had been proved to the hilt. It was done after this government had, for five years, been spending over half a million dollars a year in an immigration propaganda in the United States, to turn the tide of homeseekers in that land to our great Northwest. As a result of this five year's work the seed had been sown. And, at the psychological moment along come Col. Davidson, and syndicate, along come Mr. Adamson and his syndicate. They catch the government sound asleep—or worse—and they make a bargain then and there. And five months had not passed by before they had their settlers streaming in. All due to two things, the fact that the fertility and desirability of the soil had been all uncovered, uncovered to the home seekers of the United States; and that these men fresh from long and varied land experience in that country, simply took advantage of the whole propaganda of the government and directed the immigrants, paid for, hunted up, sought out by the exertions of the government, directed twenty of them to every township they had in those lands where they were able to select. Now we are told the company did all that, the government's efforts counted for nothing. They were shrewd but in proportion as they showed their shrewdness they also showed the suppineness and inability of the government. Why had not the government shown the garden that lay there instead of going around and justifying their course by declaring that it was a desert, and a salt desert at that?

Well, Sir, let us ask the question. What is a speculator, and let us make a little analysis of this company. Oh, says my hon. friend who spoke this afternoon (Mr. Greenway), that company did a great work, they were great pioneers in settlement in the Northwest; it is from their beginnings and their work that we may date our prosperity in the Northwest. What an absurd statement to make is that. Now, then, what was this company, what was it to do, and what was it to get? You imposed hardships on that company? What was the first hardship? You compelled them to pay a dollar an acre for land that they sold out at $8, that is a hardship. What was the second one? You allowed them two years without interest. That is a hardship. A man who goes two years on an obligation without paying interest—oh, it is a hard-hearted taskmaster that will impose that on him. That is the second hardship you imposed on him. What more did you do? You said to him, before you go in there—oh, how shrewdly this was thought out in order to blind the thoughtless—before you go in there and get an opportunity to take a single acre of that land, you have got to put twenty homesteaders into a township. What a hardship it was—twenty homesteaders—on whose land? The government's land. It cost little to put in twenty homesteaders on that district when, for four or five years, your money and your men have been exciting every homeseeker, nearly, in the northwestern states to go up into that country and take homesteads and buy lands. A terrible hardship. But here is where the special hardship comes in. That company was to have the odd-numbered sections in that township—just keep that in mind—it was to have the odd-numbered sections in that township; the hardship imposed on that company was to compel them to put twenty men on the government free homesteads as future buyers for their own odd sections that lay right side by side with these homestead sections. When a homesteader goes in on the 160 acres, he cannot pick that up and run off with it somewhere else, he cannot pick up a portion of land out of some other quarter of the Northwest and dump it down alongside of his homestead. He is shut up to the quarter that is next to him, he has got to buy it, no matter at what price, he has got to have it; and when they were obliged to put twenty prospective customers on each of the government's homesteads in each township, translated into English, it was simply that they took time and a great opportunity by the forelock, and they put in twenty customers who, in the course of one, two, three or four years, would buy their adjoining sections at $7, $8, $9 or $12 an acre. That is the third hardship you impose on this company.

But you went further, I think you went further. We have not had a denial, we have the statement of the company on the other hand. You gave them sixty-three townships out of which to select their 250,000 acres on those conditions. Thirty-five would be quite sufficient in which to get every acre of that 250,000. Did you or did you not let them range over those sixty-three townships, and thereby have almost a double choice, to pick and choose, so that they could leave the poorer and get the better and richer land in the whole range of 63 townships? The company says you let them do that. Did you? The minister has not denied it. We will see if the First Minister denies it to-night. No company in Canada, no land company I believe in the world, none in my experience, has ever had the position that company has held for the last five years in the Northwest. They could simply come down to a town in Ontario or anywhere else and gather together a number of friends and say : Would you like to buy some land?—Yes, we would—Well, we can suit you.—Yes, but there are other companies who can suit us too.—We can suit you better than any other company.—Tell us how.—Do you see that great block of land there, hundreds of thousands, millions of acres. Now if you want 10,000 acres of land you can range over that whole area and pick out just what you like. Make your own choice and selection, come to us and pay us the price and you get those lands. No other company in Canada could do that. That is why that company has been able to make such enormous sales in so short a space of time? The first syndicate—if we take the syndicate idea of the member of East Assiniboia—unloaded without passing a dollar to the company. That company within a year unloaded every acre of its land to another company at a very fine price. Then they buy another million, two millions of land from the Canadian Northern, and then they got an extension from this government, and they transferred the lands which, in a certain area, could not have been sold but for a very small price, to the government, and they were given an equal quantity of land in the garden of the Northwest along the line of the Grand Trunk Pacific which they have since almost entirely sold out, sold out to companies and to speculators who to-day are taking $8, $9, $10 and $12 per acre for these same lands, and I know it. Now that is what has been going on. These are the tremendous hardships that these gentlemen have placed upon the shoulders of that poor syndicate or first land company, whatever you may choose to call it.

Oh, but says the Minister of the Interior, we did something else. We compelled them to put twelve settlers on their own land. Do you see what a hardship that is, Mr. Speaker ? The company owns twelve quarter sections, and the government is actually so inhuman as to impose upon them the duty of selling to settlers twelve of those quarter sections of their own land at a price of $5, $7 and $8 per acre while they only paid $1 per acre for it. See how we make them settle the land. These gentlemen say : This is not a speculator's company, it is an immigration company. Why, did they not get a train load of bankers, governors and potentates to go right up there at once with hoes, and mattocks, reapers and sickles, to become settlers on quarter sections ? An immigration society ! No, they were a grand army of speculators who went up to view the richness of a garden, turned into a garden from a desert within a space of three months, and to buy it at low prices and go back and sell it at higher prices, and so make their little pile. Does anybody find fault with the syndicate ? No. Anybody find fault with the land company ? No. Anybody find fault with the bankers ? No. If they can make a bit of money, let them make it. That is not where the fault is, the fault is with the gentlemen opposite who put such an immense franchise into the hands of these speculators, the whole cost of which, I repeat for the twentieth time, comes absolutely and entirely from the pockets of the settlers.

Well, were there any other favours ? Yes, there were. The member for East Assiniboia is not here to-night, if he were I would ask him another question. When Mr. Sifton, the former Minister of the Interior, was asked in the House as to this sale what did he say? 'During my absence an examination was made by my officers of 250,000 acres of land, and it was sold at $1 an acre.' What were the conditions? Two-fifths of the settlement that I have spoken of had to be done before they got one acre of land. Was it done ? Call Mr. Sifton and ask him, and what will he tell you ? That when he was out of office, without his knowledge, or without his assent, or that of his deputy, somebody in that office, patented 150,000 acres of land to that company without an inspection, and before they were entitled to a single acre.

I would ask the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) if he was the land commissioner in the department at that time. In spite of every question we have put to the government we have not found the clerk, the officer, who had the almost colossal audacity to dispose of 150,000 acres of the public domain without leave or license, illegally, unlawfully. Who was he ? Has he been punished ? Has he been reprimanded ? Now what took place ? Two-fifths of it had to be settled before they got a patent. What was done ? They have a man who is an inspector, Mr. Spears, I think. They came and asked 150,000 acres of land to be patented to them. They said : Look at our entries ; there—count them up. We have the proper number. They were all put in and Mr. Speers closed both ears, and I suppose closed his eyes and every other officer did the same, and he simply wrote down: Yes, there are more entries than are sufficient to make their claim good. On that the lands were patented. Does not anybody know that there is a vast difference between a homestead entry and a homesteader settled on a homestead ? I charge the Department of the Interior and this governmnt of which it is a part with having alienated 150,000 acres of land by patent without ever having had an officer go on that land and report to them the number of homesteaders actually in possession of the homesteads taken and to this day no censure and no punishment have been meted out to the officer who took the burden upon himself of disposing of that portion of the patrimony of this country.

Any more favours—no, hardships, I mean, imposed upon that company ? Yes. They were allowed to range around over 63 townships to get what they could have satisfied in 35. They were allowed to range all around year after year. Then came a time at last when the minister said : I must be stern and I will only allow you twenty-eight and a half months to make your selections and close this thing out. That twenty-eight and a half months would have closed it out on the 31st December, 1905. But, it is not closed out yet. They are on the next twelve months and the year will probably expire before it is closed out. Why this hardship of allowing them to go on—first twenty and a half months and afterwards on to a third year—without making their selection and thereby keeping 13,000,000 acres of land absolutely tied up from sale or settlement or disposal by the government in any way ? What a hardship that imposes upon them ! How long is this hardship going to be kept up ? All the rest of this year ? We wish to be reasonable. We wish to limit it to November of this year but the government oppose us in that. Why ? Why ? Does the company want more land? Is it here to-day seeking more land ? Is it is a fact that it is now nearly sold out, that it wants another million and that it proposes to get it. Keep this open and very likely it will get it.

I said before six o'clock that the keeping of this open any longer in this way was a peril to the government. Another syndicate, backed by another Saskatchewan Valley land company, may come to the minister in an unguarded moment and offer him for a liability that this government has of $1,400,000 against these lands for subsidy purposes to take over 500,000 acres of land and while wiping off that liability get their land at a small amount per acre ? What security has this parliament, what security has this country for believing that the government, the ministry, which sold privately 250,000 acres for $1 an acre will not under the same pressure sell 500,000 acres more for $2 or $2.50 in order, as they may say, to liquidate their indebtedness under an old subsidy arrangement ? What they have done once they may do again. What is to prevent some railway company in a time of political or party stress sitting right straight down on the government as they so often have done before and making them do just what they want them to do ? The Prime Minister knows what that means. He has swallowed the leek many, many a time before—swallowed it always with a good grace, without making a very wry countenance and always in such a way as to get some political or party gain out of it for his followers. The Grand Trunk Pacific is a case in point. The Grand Trunk Railway Company asked you for nothing else than a franchise from the lakes west saying that they would build the whole of the road at their own costs and charges and if you would give them a little subsidy for the hard portion of it until they got to Winnipeg. Well and good, but the partisans sat down on you and they said to you : You will not do that unless you also build on the back lands of Ontario and go down to Quebec. You yielded and you may yield again under pressure in this case. But when you got to Quebec you were not out of the woods. Then another crowd lit down on you and they said : No, sir, neither the great west nor the back lands unless you give a parallel line to the Intercolonial Railway down to Moncton. Again the Prime Minister yielded. Will he be more strong, will he be more able to resist the demand for a little more of this land at the hands of some powerful partisan or at the hands of some strong railway company ? Now, we seek to make the government strong. If we cannot make them strong we want to relieve them from further moments of weakness.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. FOSTER. My right hon. friend is fond of using that phrase and I make him a present of it on this occasion, for moments of weakness my right hon. friend certainly has. We would like to help you to take these lands out of that category in which they would be liable to these pressures which the Prime Minister in his good nature is the last man to withstand. We think you would be relieved if you would simply have these lands selected and then do something with them in the way of public policy and in the line of good for the settler. One thing has puzzled me. It is well known that the government cannot alienate from the Crown any great or small portion of what belongs to the Crown without the assent of parliament ; yet you have a department of this government which, can tomorrow, if it can persuade the government to assent to it, sell 50,000,000 or 60,000,000 acres of land in the Northwest Territories at whatever price it pleases over and above a certain minimum, and we in the country know nothing about it until we are informed through the press or when the next parliament opens. That ought to be changed. No minister has the right to sell the territory of this country in that way without the sanction of parliament to the special transaction, or without the most rigid conditions as to the policy and the terms of the sale. These gentlemen over there hate the speculator and love the settler.

Yes, I have endeavoured to show to-night the manner in which they demonstrate their love for the settler. They loved the settler, the poor half breed especially ; and yet they sat down after parliament had had the stated policy of this government for years, and had approved of it ; they sat down and went against all the precedents of parliament, all the conventions of parliament, and their Minister of the Interior just before an election issued a secret order in council, news of which went to his own friends by the connivance of the department, and made possible what was not possible before, what had been reported against by their own commissioners whose reports were laid before parliament and sanctioned by parliament. They reopened that scrip matter and they set every partisan of theirs to whom the news went on the heels of these poor half breeds until they had them all or nearly all tied up with agreements, and in the end their friend Macdonald and other friends got a vast amount of scrip at an average of less than $2 per acre which is worth to them $10 and $12 an acre in the markets to-day. That is the way you love the half breed; that is the way you hate the speculator. Why, Sir, during the last ten years the day has not dawned in this country when some of your friends in the Senate, in the House, in the country, somewhere, have not been constantly on the scent for half breed scrip, following them up, herding them up in tens and twenties and getting the transfers of their scrip at a mere pittance, and then buying with it the best lands of Canada, and so getting a value of $8 or $10 or $12 for $1 or $1.50 or $2. That is what has been going on. Men must be blind not to see it. You cannot speak to a household in the Northwest that does not know it. That is the way this government proves its sympathy for the settler and its abhorence for the speculator.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have just one or two points to make and it is in reference to the future. I subscribe absolutely to the sentiment uttered with so much feeling by my hon. friend (Mr. Greenway); he is one of the old and worthy pioneers of that country, he has seen its hard days and he contemplates it now in its palmy day of prosperity. He says: You must not expect me to forget the west. We do not expect him to forget the west. It is an unhappy thing for any public man, any reading man, any thinking man, to forget the great Northwest and its possibilities at this stage of our country's development. When we say: What provision is the government making for the settler of the future, for the homesteader of the future; we are met with this most logical and convincing argument from the other side: Oh, you are perturbed about whether there will be any lands in the course of three or four years; why, if you and your government had been in power you never would have any perturbation of that kind for there would be millions of acres of free lands for hundreds of years to come. That is the cogent argument, that is the irresistible logic with which they meet our proposition. And, what is the government doing in the face of the crisis that is approaching. Six millions of homesteads last year, six or seven millions this year, seven to eight millions next year, eight to nine millions the year after; how long can you go in that course without exhausting every homestead you have to-day. What then, and what provision are you making for it. So far as we see you are making no provision to get other lands to replace those, and in less years than you can think, the footpath of the homesteader will be seeking free lands, going further and further out from nearness to railway transit from the better and more open lands of the country, trudging further out into the scrub, into the broken areas where he will have poor land, less society, less comfort, less wealth, and ultimately—and that not very long hence—when the foot of the homesteader will find for itself no acre of free land in this great wide Dominion of ours. And what is the government doing? Absolutely nothing. Something ought to be done. The first thing that ought to be done is to clean out these arrearages of selections and get that 40,000,000 or 50,000,000 acres of land, if it is that much, within the power of the government and of this parliament, and then sit down here and formulate a policy which this government shall carry out with relation to it. It is not our part to outline that policy. Whether more free lands or homesteads are to be made, or whether it is not the best policy from this time out when our present free homesteads shall have gone to the diminishing point, to then, (instead of free homesteads,) encourage the better element of immigration which can afford to pay $3 or $4 or $5 or $6 per acre. And whilst we can no longer say: Absolutely free land; we will have the step over the world in saying: Free land we gave them with a lavish hand, we have no more free lands but we have good lands and cheap lands for the settler and the settler alone; we have millions of acres for them; we have no very great temptation for the neer-do-well and the spend-thrift and the man of little worth and of little energy, but we have a constant and alluring attraction to the man of small means who is able to pay for good lands at a cheap rate and who will come with his stake in the country, and an energy dominant and strong to make of that stake the best thing for himself and for Canada.

We have got to face two questions, Mr. Speaker, we have got to face this question of immigration and the mixture of populations in this country of ours, and we have got to face it quickly. We have got to face the land question also, and these two are bound up with each other. No longer has Canada necessity for going out in this broad world of ours anywhere hat in hand to beg for men to come, and take up their abode in Canada. No longer has she the necessity for seeking out in the hidden purlieus of middle and southern Europe for men of other races, men of different ideals, men of other status in civilization, men of other concepts of constitutional government.

Hereafter the best will seek Canada and will seek it at their own expense, and if at first we do not get quite the number of hundreds of thousands, let us come to the conclusion quickly that it is not a multitude that makes a country, it is the virtue and worth and homogeneity of the people in a country that makes it great and prosperous. The word 'foreigner' is a relative word. To the man in France we are foreigners; to the man in Italy we and the French are both foreigners; it bears with it no disgrace. We welcome foreigners to this county, but I do say, Mr. Speaker, that the time has come when we ought to be most discriminating as to those whom we bring into this country. What have we just before us? $294,000 of the people's money paid out up to July 1, 1905, for Buckowinians and Galicians and men from all parts of that area of Europe—$294,000 for bonuses alone, and staring us in the face a contract, with whom we know not, and with whom we cannot find out, which will involve this country in $100,000 and more each year for eight succeeding years. To bring in the best classes ? No not the best classes, and we all know it. This year see the sentiment of the people. Every paper says: Why this looks better. There is a jubilant tone. What is the difference? The class of immigrants coming in this year is better than ever, more northern blood, more British blood has been infused, more of those who know our conditions and have something of the genius of our civilization; and everybody, every paper is jubilant because of it. Does that not point the way to the hon. gentlemen opposite? With their heads down and a sullen air they drive ahead in an unknown and unproductive contract that will land us in an expenditure of a million dollars, and that not for the best class of immigrants such as we ought to have and will have in this country.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). The speech to which we have just listened is a very fair illustration of the spirit in which the motion now before the House, this innocent motion, as my hon. friend characterizes it, was conceived. My hon. friend has travelled all over creation this evening. He was not satisfied to review the motion upon which we have to pronounce, but he has talked about everything connected with the administration of the government, the policy of the government upon the Grand Trunk Pacific, the scrip business, immigration, and not only that, but my hon. friend thought it in good taste, at a certain moment, to invite us in tones of sweetness and honey to give up all our differences and agree upon the land policy. All this was very well in its way, if my hon. friend had only persevered in these very dulcet tones, but in the very next breath my hon. friend did not hesitate to insult, in so far as he could, two members of this House just as honourable as he is himself. What in the world has the position of Mr. Adamson to do with the question that we have at the present time to deal with? And if Mr. Adamson could not be a member of the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company why in the name of common sense could the member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler) be a member of the Qu'Appelle, Long Lake and Saskatchewan Land Company? If one could be a seller why could not the other be a buyer, and if one were a buyer why could not the other be a seller? Sir, my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) must be driven to very hard lines indeed to so far forget himself as to introduce a matter of this kind into a debate of this importance. But, Sir, before we proceed with this debate perhaps it is better I should read to the House the motion on which we have to pronounce and see exactly where we are. This is the motion moved by the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. W. J. Roche):

> The public lands of Canada, situated in the provinces and territories west of the Great Lakes, should be made available for settlement with the least possible delay ;
> That to this end all railway companies, corporations and persons now entitled to select any lands earned by way of subsidy should be obliged to complete their selection of such lands within the earliest possible period, and not later than the first day of November, 1906 ;
> That in arranging for the disposal of the odd numbered sections not so selected and which will thus be released from all such subsidy claims, provision should be made to preserve them solely for the bona fide settler and to protect them from the exploitation of the speculator ;
> That the government should take such administrative measures and introduce into parliament such legislative enactments as may be necessary fully to carry into effect the terms of this resolution.

If my hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. W. J. Roche) were sincere when he introduced this resolution and if he expected that the government could adopt the policy which was there indicated, I may say to him that it was a singular method to introduce a resolution of want of confidence in order to carry out a policy of this kind. But I would pass this over altogether and I would have no hesitation at all in accepting the motion of my hon. friend (Mr. W. J. Roche) were it not for the insinuation contained in it that the government has been guilty of favouring the speculators at the expense of the settlers. Upon this the hon. gentleman has thought fit to introduce a resolution of this kind coupled with an insinuation against the honour and integrity of the government and it goes without saying that we cannot adopt any such resolution. But, Sir, as to the policy which is here indicated, I have no hesitation in saying that we have no fault to find with this policy. It is the policy of the government. It is another example of the wonderful agility which has been displayed by the hon. gentlemen on the other side at turning somersaults. They have shown more than once a wonderful acrobatic genius in turning a sharp corner, and this is another instance of it. My hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. W. J. Roche) knows that the policy there indicated is the absolute denial of the policy he has been supporting for the past twenty years. He knows that the policy there stated, that the government should take care of the settler and taboo the speculator, is the policy that has been maintained by this side of the House ever since we have had a land policy in the west. My hon. friend is familiar with that, but, Sir, what has taken place since that we should have such a departure at the present time? Let us examine this question of public lands in the new provinces, Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. The lands are divided into sections and these sections are of course odd-numbered and even-numbered sections. For the last 20 years or more the only land that has been open to settlement has been the even-numbered sections. A settler might go into the Northwest Territories, he might select a plot of land that suited his fancy, but he was told by the agent: You cannot have this land, it is an odd-numbered section. You can make your selection only out of the even numbered sections. That was not always so. It was not so in the earlier years. In the earlier years the even numbered sections were reserved for homesteading and the odd numbered for pre-emption. The settler, after taking a homestead, could buy an odd numbered section by way of pre-emption and pay a dollar an acre for it. This was done away with twenty years ago. Twenty years ago all the efforts of the settlers were confined to the even numbered sections alone. They were not allowed to settle on the odd numbered sections. What was the reason for this? The reason was that the government had blanketed the whole extent of that territory, from the Lake of the Woods up to the Rocky mountains, with subsidies to railway companies and land companies; and in order to allow these companies to make their selections, a blanket was placed over every odd numbered section from the limits of Manitoba to the foot of the Rockies. The railways could not earn their lands all at once, and therefore in order that they might be sure of their selection, when they had earned it, the government of hon. gentlemen opposite put every odd numbered section out of the reach of the settler. That government gave 25,000,000 acres to the Canadian Pacific Railway, 2,000,000 acres to the Qu'Appelle, Long Lake and Saskatchewan Railway Company, 2,000,000 acres or a little less, to the Calgary and Edmonton Railway Company and about a million acres to some twenty-six colonization companies which were formed in the eighties. In order therefore to be able to furnish each its selection, the government prevented settlement on the odd numbered sections. This has been going on for twenty years, and it is still going on. Yet now, on this late day, at this last moment, these hon. gentlemen opposite, who were the authors of that policy, who initiated and forced it upon the country, all of a sudden appeal to us with the gravest solemnity to save the country at large from their own folly. Do not lose a day, they exclaim, but without further ado clean out all the subsidies of the railway and land companies and leave the land to the settlers. Well, I do not object to that policy. Why, that is the very policy we have been endeavouring to carry out for the last ten years. We have been clearing up many of these land subsidies as my hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. Roche) well knows. We have closed out our land subsidy with the Canadian Pacific Railway so that company cannot blanket any more lands on the prairie. It has been forced to make its selection and has made it and the book is closed. We have closed the Calgary and Edmonton Railway subsidy. We have at last made an arrangement with that company and the book is closed. We have closed with most of the land companies but there are a few yet remaining. We have not closed with the Canadian Northern for the good reason that it has not yet earned its subsidy. We have not completed closing with the Qu'Appelle, Long Lake and Saskatchewan Railway Company, but are negotiating with it and hope in a few weeks, perhaps in a few days, to be able to close with it and fix an area from which it must select its land. We hope shortly to close with the Canadian Northern also and then throw the rest of the land open to settlement. We hope to do this within perhaps a few days, certainly within a few weeks, and probably before the session closes. We are engaged in cleaning up these old arrears, we are engaged in trying to put an end to the folly of these hon. gentlemen, but it takes a longer time to do that than they imagine. It is always an easy thing to do mischief, but it takes sometimes pretty long to undo it. And we are engaged at this moment in putting an end to the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite. How long that will take I cannot say yet, but I believe that we shall be able to do so before the session closes. My hon. colleague the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) knows that I have discussed this matter with him more than once since he has taken office. He knows that I have pressed him again and again to have this state of things put an end to as soon as possible, and he is doing his best, but at this moment, with this Qu'Appelle, Long Lake and Saskatchewan Railway Company complications have again arisen—not of our making—which we have to settle. That may take a few days, perhaps a few weeks longer, but we shall not cease our efforts until we have closed that last deal and have set aside a few hundred thousand acres for their selection and then release the thirty million and more acres which were blanketed by the former government. But, as I said a moment ago, these hon. gentlemen opposite will not give us any time. They say this thing must be done immediately, and what is the reason they give? We heard it again a moment ago disclaimed with great emphasis by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster). He put it in patriotic tones and pathetic tones and indignant tones and in all sorts of tones. And the reason he gave us why we should make haste was simply that he wanted to remove temptation from our path. Because, as he says, we sold a certain number of acres of land to a land company. And this charge comes from this gentleman who did not hesitate to sell lands to no less than twenty-six companies. Our one company shakes his sense—what shall I say?—not of righteousness—I cannot well define it.

Mr. FOSTER. Propriety.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. He says he wants to shield us from our own weakness. Well, go cover yourself with sack cloth you daughter of Jerusalem. Deplore your own sins and cease shedding tears over our possible delinquencies. We are doing the best we can in this matter, and now let me go further into the merits of this motion of my hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. Roche). What is its object? Is it to define a policy and ask us to adopt that policy? Not at all. There was no necessity for this motion because the policy it indicates is our policy. Its sole object was to give my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) an opportunity to ventilate what he has been leading up to, this Saskatchewan Valley Land Company grant. I have no objection to discuss that with my hon. friend, but I am sorry that I cannot discuss it to the same advantage. My hon. friend was prepared. He knew his brief well. He went into it very minutely. But I could not see that what he really intended to discuss, by means of this motion, was the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company, and therefore I am not in a position to go into all the details. But I do know something of the transaction and am quite prepared to discuss it with my hon. friend and take issue with him and put myself and the conduct of the government in this matter in the judgment of friend and foe—not only in this House but out of it also.

Just what accusation has my hon. friend lodged against the government? It is that in the year 1902 the government sold to a certain syndicate 250,000 acres of land at $1 an acre. Sir, the statement is true. It was done above board it was done without concealment. It was brought to the notice of this House in that year, or certainly the year after. And when the fact was discussed that the government had sold 250,000 acres of land at $1 an acre, nobody found fault with the transaction; there was not a single man on the other side of the House who told the government that the price was too low. Why, on the contrary, everybody at that time thought that the government had made an exceedingly good bargain. The lands had not then the value that they have now. Consider what my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) said a moment ago. The pre-emption lands, in the early days were sold at $1 an acre. Nobody found fault with that price; it was as high a price as could be got at that time. My hon. friend has outlined a policy for us—that we should open the new lands that are released from the incubus upon them and sell them at $3, $4 and $5 an acre. He is right. The price of land has appreciated. But I leave it to any hon. member of this House, I leave it to the members west of Lake Superior particularly, to say if in 1902 these arid lands were worth more than $1 an acre.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I say, no; I take issue with my hon. friend upon the point, and the evidence is very clear. Why, if these lands had been worth more in 1902 when the transaction took place, we should have been denounced for making the sale at $1 an acre. But time has gone on, immigrants have rushed from all over the world, and especially from the United States, and land has appreciated in value. Here is another evidence that the land was not worth more than we got for it at the time when it was sold. About the same time that the company bought from us they bought from the Qu'Appelle, Long Lake and Saskatchewan Railway Company a block of land in the vicinity. They got it without conditions of settlement and they paid for it, how much? Five dollars an acre? Seven dollars an acre? No, but $1.50 an acre. This sale was made by this railway company; and, if I am correctly informed—and I think I am—one of the directors of that company, if not its president, was the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler) as good a business man as sits in this House. And why was the land sold to this company, instead of being sold to the settler? It has always been our policy not to sell land in large blocks to speculators, but to sell to the settler alone. And I say that when we sold this land, we did not depart from that policy. How do I prove that? Everybody knows that the lands of the prairie country are divided into three classes—fertile lands, grazing lands and arid lands. Everybody knows that, as the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Greenway) said this afternoon the American Desert projects into our territory giving us a certain proportion of arid land. This block of 250,000 acres was along the Qu'Appelle, Long Lake and Saskatchewan Railway, and, when the road was built, and for some time afterwards this land was reputed to be unfit for settlement. I say that advisedly. Because the railway had been built across that track, and when the road was put in operation, up to 1902, there had not been a single homestead located upon the land. The territory was tabooed by the settler. The railway company which had built the road and earned the subsidy was offered the land as a part of its subsidy, but refused on the ground that the land was not fairly fit for settlement according to the terms of the contract. We even had a lawsuit with the company, they seeking to force us to give them not these lands but other lands. I do not know what became of that lawsuit. But one thing is sure: Certain people from the United States 'land speculators', my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) calls them—that does not matter, they were dealers in land—made an offer to the Qu'Appelle, Long Lake and Saskatchewan Railway Company to take these lands at $1.50 an acre, and the company was glad to sell the lands at that price. This was clear proof that the lands were not worth more than that up to that moment. After that these people came to us, and we agreed to give them another block of land contiguous to the block they had bought from the railway company so as to round out their holdings. Then, these dealers went to work to settle the land—for we had sold subject to terms of settlement; we had accepted 50 cents an acre less than the railway company had sold for on condition that the lands should be sold to settlers. Then came the revelation. This land had been refused by the settler from the older provinces of Canada, by the settler from England, by every class going into that country. It was supposed that, owing to lack of moisture, these lands would not grow cereals. But Colonel Davidson and his associates, went to Dakota, Montana, and other sections of the United States even more arid, and brought from there settlers who found means of cultivating this land, and making it yield crops. And the moment it was done, everybody rushed for these lands. People came from the United States, forty thousand, fifty thousand in a year. And from that moment the lands appreciated more and more until they are worth to-day $7 an acre and upwards. What makes the value of that land? Intrinsically it is what it was before—neither better nor worse than it was twenty-five or fifty years ago. That which makes it high in price to-day is the fact that it is sought by the settler, the fact that people are coming in thousands and hundreds of thousands seeking to get possession of it. We should never have heard of this transaction in this House if the conditions of 1906 were what the conditions of 1902 had been. As I have said, during the session following this transaction we heard not a single word of criticism. But now the lands are sought for and they have a value which they never had before; and hon. gentlemen opposite, finding land selling to-day at $5 and $6 an acre and more which, in 1902, was worth only $1 an acre, attack the government. But it is altogether too thin; we see through it easily. It would be a thing for the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) to thank heaven for if he could find us involved in some scandal equal to one of the many of his own time; if he could see us tarnished as the government to which he belonged was tarnished in the old days. Hon. gentlemen opposite have been looking for a scandal, and they would like to believe that they have found it. But I leave it to the honest judgment of every man in this House. If the conditions are what I have stated; if these lands could not find a purchaser in 1902; if the railway company that was offered them would not take them, and even went to law against us to prevent us forcing the lands upon them, what blame can attach to us for selling the lands under such conditions as $1 an acre?

Sir, the conditions are changed, and because the conditions are changed my hon. friend and his friends try to create a scandal against us. But it is one of those scandals which, like a bubble, is dissipated into thin air as soon as it is touched. The position is clear, and we shall hear more of it, I hope. There are certain features of this transaction which I cannot discuss with my hon. friend. He says there were certain conditions, certain advantages given to this company which they should not have had. To that I cannot say yes or no, because I have had no notice at all up to this moment, nor has my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior, that we were to be called upon to discuss that question. But it is something that can keep, and we shall discuss it again in all its bearings, without any concealment at all. I think I can leave that question to the judgment of the House on both sides, we can leave it to every man to say whether he thinks there has been any wrong doing in any sale which has been made to this land company.

But the discussion took a very wide range. The hon. member for Marquette (Mr. W. J. Roche) went into a disquisition upon other matters. The hon. gentleman who seconded that motion (Mr. Lake) the hon. member for Souris, who I think is not here now, brought up another question which it is perhaps just as well that I should say a word about in passing. The hon. member for Souris spoke of the Hudson's Bay Railway, and he said, and said truly, that the people west of Lake Superior attached great importance to the construction of that railway. Let me say to him that the people of the Northwest, not one of them, do not attach greater importance to the construction of that railway to the Hudson's bay than I do myself. But the hon. gentleman said that if they did not get that railway he feared it was due to the prejudices of eastern Canada, he thought that the people of Montreal, the people of the St. Lawrence valley, would not agree to have another outlet to the sea north of the St. Lawrence. Sir, let me say to him, I hope and believe that he misjudges the people of Montreal and of the St. Lawrence valley. If I thought that opinion prevailed in the city of Montreal, I would be glad to accompany my hon. friend from Souris to Montreal and tell the people of that city and of the valley of St. Lawrence that the Canada of to-day is not to be confined within the valley of the St. Lawrence, but it must be pushed northwards as far as we can go. Sir, I hope that I shall live to see a city at the terminus of a Hudson's bay railway at the mouth of the Churchill river. It is not enough for us to confine our views to the Canada that is now settled, we must look ahead, we must push northward as far as colonization can go. I have great confidence that before many years are passed we shall see towns and villages on the shores of Hudson's bay, as we see on the shores of Norway, where the people will be prosperously engaged in the lumbering business, the pulp industry, the fishing industry, the mining industry, and others. This is what I hope Canadians will see ere long.

I have only to say to my hon. friend from Marquette that if he had brought in his motion without introducing into it an insinuation, an innuendo of wrongdoing I would have been glad to accept it, because that is our policy, and the evidence thereof will be brought before the House in a few days. But with the insinuation that is made in the motion against the government, it is not possible for us to accept it, and I hope the friends of the government will simply vote it down.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Carleton, Ont.). A rather remarkable contrast is to be observed between the remarks of the right honourable gentleman and his Minister of the Interior. We understood from the Minister of the Interior in a very forcible way, and from the right honourable gentleman in a somewhat milder way, that the Conservative party in days gone by had been the friends of the speculator. A motion emanating from this side of the House is directed against the exploitation of the speculator, and these gentlemen who have always been opposed to the claims of the speculator find themselves insulted by the words of that resolution. That is the logic of the right honourable gentleman, that is the ground upon which he asks his followers to vote down a proposition which he himself has declared to be in the best interests of the country, and upon which his Minister of the Interior declares that both sides of the House are unanimous. Well, I will tell the right honourable gentleman, not in my own words which he will appreciate as coming from a better source than myself, why is he asking his friends to vote down this resolution. In 1895 an hon. gentleman in this House was discussing a resolution of a very much more controversial nature than the one which is now being considered, and he used these words :

> But I dispute altogether the proposition that this is such a motion as to involve want of confidence.

Here is a motion upon which both sides of the House are unanimous, and which admittedly, from the very words of the Prime Minister and of his Minister of the Interior, is in the best interests of the country. The gentleman to whom I referred continued as follows :

> I know this is a weapon often resorted to by the administration in order to defend a rather dubious course where the existence of the administration is dependent on such a vote, and I remember more than one occasion when hon. members have been placed between their conscience on the one side, and giving support to the administration on the other, and as a rule their conscience has given away to their confidence in the administration.

Those are the words of Mr. Laurier in 1895, the present Prime Minister and leader of this government. The right honourable gentleman complains that the Saskatchewan Land Company has been discussed, and that he had no notice of it. Did not his chief whip come to this side of the House early on Friday evening and ask that this motion should be adjourned ? Have not three days elapsed since, and has not the right honourable gentleman had an opportunity in that time to make himself familiar with the details of which he professes ignorance to-night ? This discussion has taken a wide range. Immigration has been discussed. Who discussed it first ? His Minister of the Interior. And this afternoon he put up an hon. gentleman who indulged in what I call a misuse of the English language when he ventured to describe this company as an immigration company. An immigration company, and not one word in the contract from beginning to end, as the hon. gentleman must have known, or ought to have known, before he undertook to discuss it, not one word regarding a single immigrant to be brought in from the United States or elsewhere for the purpose of settlement upon these lands. The Prime Minister finds the government insulted because forsooth there is a sentence in this motion which declares that there should be no exploitation of public lands in the interest of the speculator. If this government is so pure and so innocent, if that has been its policy in all times past, why is it insulted ? My right honourable friend did not make that very clear. Insulted because my hon. friend from Marquette declares by a motion on which the hon. the Minister of the Interior says that both sides of the House are unanimous that there has been in the past an exploitation of the public lands in the interest of speculators ! My right honourable friend is supersensitive. He finds himself insulted and that is the only reason that he is able to give to his friends to whom he made a frantic appeal to vote down this resolution which is admittedly in the best interests of the Northwest and of this country as a whole.

He not only finds himself insulted but he finds the hon. member for Humboldt (Mr. Adamson) insulted and he finds the hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) insulted. Why, forsooth ? There was a reference to the fact that these two gentlemen were brothers-in-law. Was that the insult ? I do not know. What was the insult, I repeat ? The hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Greenway), this afternoon, did refer to a certain relationship between two gentlemen in Manitoba, and the right hon. gentleman applauded and looked remarkably well pleased. There was no insult in that, but reference to a certain relationship between two of his supporters, a close relationship under very peculiar conditions, causes the right hon. gentleman to be extremely sensitive on behalf of these two hon. gentlemen neither one of whom has been in the House since six o'clock. There was a little cross examination going on when the House rose at six o'clock and one would have supposed that in the interest of good taste, if good taste is to be called in question, these two hon. gentlemen would not have absented themselves during the progress of this debate. What was the insult ? There was no insult. There was a statement of fact. The statement of fact was that when the hon. member for East Assiniboia was land commissioner of this government, when he should have known, as many men did know, that these lands were not arid but that they were valuable, he remained silent or ignorant, one or the other, when his brother-in-law became a member of a syndicate which acquired these lands at $1 an acre and sold them at $8 an acre. That is not an insult—only a plain statement of fact. The right hon. gentleman will have to accept such insults because I do not think that any taunt of that kind will prevent any hon. gentleman on this side of the House from asserting on the floors of parliament face to face with the right hon. gentleman any facts of that kind which are of peculiar significance and which affect the public interest of this country. Not sincere ! That is getting to be the watchword on the other side of the House. If anything is proposed from this side of the House from the right hon. gentleman at the head to the newest backbencher the cry is : Oh, they are not sincere. Does the right hon. gentleman think he is the one to throw that taunt across the floor to any man in this House ? I am not going over old history. I just put the question to him. Not sincere ? These hon. gentlemen who were going to cut off the head of protection and trample on its body, who were going to give us prohibition, who were going to reduce the expenditure and who were going to lighten the burden of taxation, who were going to reform the Senate and who were going to do a number of other things that have not been done and never will be done, when they have no other answer to what is proposed from this side of the House, when they have no other answer to any motion which they declare to be in the true interest of the people of the country, call upon their followers to vote it down because the government is insulted and because hon. gentlemen on this side of the House are not sincere. They blanketed every other section, said the right hon. gentlemen of the Conservative government in the past. Does he recollect that he was a member of Mr. Mackenzie's government from 1874 to 1878 ?

An hon. MEMBER. From 1876.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Well, he was in the House in 1874 and supporting the government; from 1876 he was a member of the government, and during all that time there was upon the statute-books of this country a statute which blanketed every other ten miles along that railway. Is it worse to blanket every alternate ten miles or every alternate section? Has the right hon. gentleman ever given much consideration to it ? I venture to think that there has been a conversion from the opinions of the old days when the right hon. gentleman says that it is not easy for this government, even after the ten years during which they have been in power, to rid themselves of the effects of the folly of the government of the late Sir John A. Macdonald in 1881. Folly ! Does he know that the government of which he was a member made and continued a standing offer of 50,800,000 acres of public lands which were to be given by way of subsidy to build a railway to the Pacific coast? Does he apply the term 'folly' to that ? In view of that how does he distinguish between the proposition made by the government of which he was a member and the proposition which was carried into effect by the government of Sir John A. Macdonald ? There was no criticism, he says, of the price in 1902. Not a word of criticism in this House in regard to the price at which this land was sold to this company. No criticism? There was no criticism of the deal—well named a deal—in this House in 1902 because not one gentleman in this House knew a single thing about it and if by cross examination in 1903 we got at a few of the facts we were not able to go very far. We went on again at the first meeting of the Committee on Agriculture in 1904 and before we were able to get at these facts—yes, the year before we were able to get at the facts in regard to this deal—this company had disposed of these lands at $8 an acre. No criticism of the price! Would they have brought more—asks the right hon. gentleman. Would these lands have brought more?—and he gave a very easy and a very comforting answer in so far as he is concerned by the bold assertion that they would not. What is his warrant for that? I asked the question in the House the other day and I got the answer that the government made no attempt whatever to value these lands before they sold them. Why did they not value them? Why did they not make some effort to ascertain what the lands were worth? If they had proposed to bring these so-called arid lands which suddenly blossomed into a garden within a year after the lands had been sold, if they had proposed to bring them to the attention of the country why did they not do this thing openly, put these lands up for tender, have an examination made of them, satisfy themselves that the lands were good and let any profit out of the sale of these lands be realized by the settlers or by the people of the country as a whole instead of giving them to the extent of $2,000,000 into the hands of these gentlemen some of whom have been insulted to-night by the remarks made by my hon. friend beside me (Mr. Foster). Would they have brought more? Well, I think it is extremely probable that they would have brought more if the government had not been either ignorant or guilty of a gross dereliction of duty. We are paying a good deal of money for the Department of the Interior; we are paying a good deal of money for immigration. If Col. Davidson, in one or two years preceding 1902, was able to go into the so-called barren or arid lands of Nebraska and ascertain with very little effort and very little research that these does it happen that this government, spending hundreds of thousands of dollars for the work of the Department of the Interior, was unable to obtain exactly the same information.

The right hon. gentleman pleads ignorance and incapacity in order that he may save some of his friends from the charge or imputation of fraud and corruption. Ignorance and incapacity had to be pleaded in order to save the government from something worse. Colonel Davidson, a citizen of this country, is put forward as a man able to go into the United States and obtain information which, if it had been available to this government, would have justified them in selling these lands for double or treble the money which they did sell them for by private contract and behind the back of the people of this country. The right hon. gentleman is strongly convinced that these lands were worth no more than one dollar per acre in 1902. He promises us a further discussion; we shall welcome a further discussion; we shall welcome an inquiry. Perhaps the right hon. gentleman is willing to go that far—not only to have a further discussion, but to have an inquiry into this whole question. The assaults that have been hurled at his friends behind him to-night would justify an inquiry. I have not heard it denied that Mr. Adamson was a member of that company. I find the name 'A. J. Adamson' among the gentlemen who made this contract with the government in the first instance—Mr. A. J. Adamson who rose in his seat before 6 o'clock and endeavoured to escape the logic of my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) by the unworthy quibble that these lands had not been sold to a company at all. They had not been sold to a company; they had been sold to Colonel Davidson and six or seven other gentlemen, and among these gentlemen was Mr. A. J. Adamson, a brother-in-law of the land commissioner, who ought to have known some thing about the value of these lands in 1902. I will tell the right hon. gentleman what he will find if he examines the public documents of Canada, and I will tell him a part of what he will find if he makes some inquiry, or if this House makes some inquiry into this matter. He will find that the value of these lands was pretty well known to certain men who were going around the Northwest at that time gathering up scrip and using that scrip to secure the best lands. And if any inquiry is made I think I shall be able to give the right hon. gentleman the name of a gentleman who acquired some of these lands in that vicinity in 1901, and who purchased a very large amount of scrip and went back in 1902 to secure some more of it and found he had been forestalled by the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company.

The right hon. gentleman says land is only worth money when there is a demand for it. That is quite true. Has he investigated the statistics to see how the demand was increasing in the very year in which he gave these lands away for a dollar an acre? The sales of the Canadian Pacific Railway lands increased a little in 1899; they increased a little more in 1900; they fell off a little in 1901; in 1901 the sales aggregated 339,985 acres; in 1902, the very year in which these lands were given away for the benefit of the syndicate among whom and with whom were these prominent friends of the government; in that very year the sales of the Canadian Pacific Railway sprang to 1,362,478 acres. You could hardly expect an incapable government would see fit to make an investigation with regard to land of similar quality in the United States; you could hardly expect them, perhaps, to know how Canadian Pacific Railway lands were selling in 1902, but you might expect them to know something about their own statistics. In 1901 the homestead entries at the Regina agency were 1,318; in 1902 they had jumped to 4,158, more than treble. That year was the beginning of the boom in Northwest lands, when this government, this pure government above any suspicion or any scandal, gave these lands away to its political friends. The homestead entries in Prince Albert in 1901 were 601, and in 1902 1,637, showing practically the same story. Why, the right hon. gentleman surely knows the facts. He knows that before the Northwest was advertised by two or three bumper crops—not by the immigration policy of this government, but far more by two or three bumper crops—it was almost impossible to find a demand for lands anywhere in the Northwest. But when the bumper crops came, when the export of wheat from Canada began to be known all over the world, then the lands of the Northwest acquired a marked and increasing value; and if the government had not been as ignorant and as incapable as the Prime Minister has confessed it to be to-night, it would have known well enough that these lands which sold afterwards for from $8 to $12 an acre should not have been given away behind the backs of the people of this country at $1 per acre to the political friends of this administration.

Now, the Minister of the Interior has wonderful confidence in the Department of the Interior. He did not always share that confidence. I recollect on one occasion when a certain inquiry was proposed into the affairs of the department in respect to the Yukon, and when this government voted down that inquiry as it proposes to vote down this motion to-night, when it covered up as best it could the iniquities that were perpetrated year after year in that part of the country, I recollect that that was too strong even for the present Minister of the Interior, and he rose in his place and voted against the government of which he is now a member. I do not know whether he is now proposing to make the inquiry which he thought should have been made then. There have been some disclosures; I will not read them; they are almost too bad to read in any public assembly. But if my hon. friend (Mr. Oliver) will turn his attention to an interview published in the Winnipeg Tribune of October 9, 1903, perhaps he may find some occasion for opening up that subject again, and among other things he may notice that it was publicly charged that the report of a certain officer of the government had been suppressed and never brought down to parliament. I do not know whether that be true or not, but I would venture to think that that circumstance may very well invite the attention of the Minister of the Interior if he proposes to carry out when he is in office these principles which he professed on the occasion to which I refer.

But, Mr. Speaker, there are one or two matters upon which the Minister of the Interior based some argument in reply to my hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. Roche) to which I would like to allude for a moment. Before doing so may I be permitted to say that the Minister of the Interior is remarkably discursive when he debates such questions before the House, and he always succeeds in dragging in irrelevant issues. He saw fit to attack the policy of Mr. Haultain in the recent campaign in the Northwest, and to make certain observations in regard to that gentleman which I would very much like to have him substantiate if he can. The other day when he was asked for the proof he told us he did not carry the proof about with him. He has had three days since. Might I venture to inquire of the hon. gentleman whether or not he has succeeded in finding the proof of the statement, or at least the impression he endeavoured to convey to this House that Mr. Haultain had declared himself in favour of granting no more homesteads and selling all lands if they should be passed over to the provincial government? Has the hon. gentleman found any proof of that statement which he made the other day?

Mr. OLIVER. If I have the privilege of making a statement on that matter after the hon. gentleman is through, I shall be very glad to do so.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Good, very good——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Now.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. No, the hon. gentleman is not prepared to make that statement now, he is still unready.

Mr. OLIVER. I am something like my hon. friends the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) and his lieutenant, I am very cautious.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Well, I do not think he is very cautious; on the other hand I would say the hon. gentleman shows a remarkable recklessness, and an unequalled facility for making statements which he cannot substantiate. I may tell him that I have in my hand his statement and I have the statement of Mr. Haultain made upon a public platform in the west. The hon. gentleman's insinuation against Mr. Haultain, if it meant anything, conveyed the impression to which I have just referred. He said that Mr. Haultain had declared himself in favour of selling many millions of acres of land. I pointed out that his predecessor in the Department of the Interior had declared the policy of this government to be a policy which would bring into the market not less than 50,000,000 acres—but they were not homesteads nor were the lands to which Mr. Haultain referred. Here is the language of the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) :

> The leader of what has turned out to be the opposition in Saskatchewan announced from platform after platform that their policy was to sell the lands of the west to the highest bidder in order to secure money for expenditures in that country. They spoke of the sale of millions of acres of land, they issued literature in which they declared that the policy of this government in giving the land free to settlers was robbery of these provinces, and they headed their document 'public lands robbery.'

Here is Mr. Haultain's statement at Arcola, on November 21, 1905:

> Mr. Haultain then spoke at great length on the public lands question, quoting the most eminent authorities on the subject and proving conclusively the loss the province would sustain by the so-called compensation allowed by the Laurier government. He showed the absurdity of Mr. Scott's statement that by having the lands, the province would run into direct taxation. By figures and facts he proved that if the province had the lands in its own hands, by only selling a small proportion at a very low figure, it would be more than $4,000,000 a year better off. He had been accused of wanting to do away with the homesteads. This was not a fact, for it was his opinion that they must continue. He pointed out that much money might be saved in regard to the land by making the staff employed do their duty and not spend their time electioneering.

I am sure that whatever other part of Mr. Haultain's policy the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) might concur in, he would be absolutely and irrevocably opposed to that contained in the sentence which I have just read.

The Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) seemed to consider that there was some technical difficulty in the way of carrying out this resolution. He referred to certain agreements which he called 'indemnity agreements', and I asked the hon. gentleman to be furnished with copies of them. I have in the meantime made the best inquiry and the best examination I could in this matter. I have read over the agreement, and there is not one word in it, from beginning to end, that justifies any position such as that hon. gentleman took. This company had a certain land grant. They found themselves in financial difficulties, and it was on account of the very financial difficulties in which they were involved that they sold this land for the sum of $1.53 per acre in the year 1902. The Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) was perfectly aware of that fact I am sure. Every one knew that that road was practically in bankruptcy, and they took the opportunity of selling nearly a million acres of land for $1.53 an acre, although they did not secure the advantages which they secured from the government by means of homestead rights under the agreement made between the Minister of the Interior and Mr. Adamson and his friends. This company was in difficulties ; it undertook to carry the mails and it received from the government $80,000 a year. It was considered that that sum would be in excess of the sum earned each year by the carriage of mails, and it was provided that in respect of such excess the government of this country should have a lien upon the land grant of the company as security for that purpose. The taking of that lien did not give the company any right to postpone the selection of its land grant. It is easy enough to see what the situation would have been if the company had made a mortgage to a third person instead of to the government. Suppose this company had secured an advance of $80,000 a year from a third person or corporation, that corporation would have a charge or lien upon the land grant of the company under the terms of the charging document, but the fact that that charge was created could not possibly give that company any right as between itself and the government to postpone the selection of this land ; and so when the advance is obtained, not from a third person but from the government, there is no postponement of selection unless you find it within the four corners of the agreement. I have examined that agreement, and I say it contains no clause and no provision which to my mind brings about any such result as that which is claimed by the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver). If there had been otherwise any force in the suggestion of the Minister of the Interior it would be swept away as the member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) points out by the statement of the Prime Minister this afternoon that this matter is to be dealt with in a very few weeks. In 1903 the then Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) said that all these land grants would be closed up within a very few weeks, within three weeks, if I remember his language correctly, and he said that the government would introduce legislation at an early day to bring into the market 50,000,000 acres of land and he expected that the government would be able to sell 20,000,000 acres of these lands within a reasonable period, bringing into the treasury of this country $60,000,000 which would recoup the country for all the pecuniary outlay involved in the construction of the Transcontinental Railway.

For these reasons I do not find anything in the remarks of the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) which would justify the House in not supporting this motion. It is admittedly a motion along right lines, a motion on which both sides should be unanimous, and the only reason assigned by the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) for asking his followers to vote it down is one which should not commend itself to any hon. gentleman in this House ; it is the trivial excuse that the government of this country is insulted by some reference in the motion to the exploitation of the speculator. The exploitation of the speculator has taken place ; it may have taken place under previous administrations, but undoubtedly under this administration, and notably in the very case so fully gone into by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) not one of whose arguments the Prime Minister when he rose to reply was able to confute. For this reason I find myself entirely in accord with the motion of my hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. W. J. Roche) and I shall have a very great deal of pleasure in voting for the amendment which he has proposed.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). Mr. Speaker, I should not trespass upon the House by asking for the privilege of speaking again on this subject but the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) has discussed a certain part of the remarks which I made in connection with certain documents which I placed in his hand ; and as his reading of those documents radically differs from mine, if he will be good enough to hand them back to me, I shall try to make clear the interpretation clear which I put before the House. The position, as I stated it the other night, with regard to the closing out of the railway land grants is this, that every land grant made to any railway in the Northwest, which has been earned by that railway, has been closed out absolutely by a selection of the land, except in those cases where the terms of the grant absolutely prevented the government from compelling a selection. The three instances of which I spoke were the Qu'Appelle, Long Lake and Saskatchewan Railway, the Canadian Northern and the Manitoba and Southeastern. What I meant to say was this, that the land subsidies to the Qu'Appelle Railway and the Canadian Northern were connected with an agreement called a transport contract, under which the selection of one-third of the total subsidies could not be compelled by the government or required by the company until the period of twenty years, for which the transport contract was to run, had expired. The selection of that one-third of the subsidy might be made by mutual agreement before the expiry of the twenty years but not otherwise.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Will the hon. gentleman read that portion of the agreement ?

Mr. OLIVER. That is what I propose to do. In respect to the Qu'Appelle Company, the reading is this :

Section 6.— By way of indemnity to the government in case the amount earned by the company for such service should not amount to the sum paid by the government in any year, the government, as the land grant of the company is earned from time to time, shall retain one-third of the land so earned, which shall be held by the government as a first charge or lien securing the repayment of any such deficiency, and shall issue to the company patents for the remaining two-thirds thereof.

Section 8.—If during the said period of twenty years, the government sell any land included in the land grant so retained, or if the same is sold by the company with the consent of the government, patents therefore shall be issued to the purchaser upon payment to the government of the prices for which said land has been sold : it being distinctly understood and agreed that the government, in the event of any deficiency, shall retain the whole proceeds of the sale of any portion of the said one-third acres so retained until the expiration of the said period of twenty years, allowing interest thereon at the rate of four per cent per annum; but in the event of no deficiency the government may, if they see fit, cause to be returned to the company a pro rata proportion of the land so retained.

My reading of that section is that there is no authority, by virtue of which the government can compel the company to select that land or the company can compel the government to come to a conclusion with regard to it, as long as the transport contract is in operation. This applies to the Canadian Northern as well as the Qu'Appelle, Long Lake and Saskatchewan Railway.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. They are all practically the same.

Mr. OLIVER. I said with regard to the Manitoba and Southeastern Company that the conditions of the land grant—there being no transport contract in that connection—were such that, owing to a conflict between the company and the Manitoba government as to the right to the land, the company had not selected its land, nor could it do so, for the good and sufficient reason that the land was not there to select.

The position I repeat is this, that of the vast land grants which were made in the Northwest to railway companies, which had been earned by the companies or should have been earned (except a part of the Hudson's Bay Railway grant, amounting to some six and a half million acres), all these have been closed out, so far as the government could compel that to be done. The balance can only be closed out immediately by mutual agreement between the companies and the government. Such a mutual agreement is being negotiated and we are in hopes of a satisfactory conclusion being reached within a very short time.

As regards the other matter, concerning which my hon. friend was so very anxious, the position of his friend Mr. Haultain, my hon. friends were so eager that I should give evidence of what I said that I took the trouble to obtain some of the documents on the subject and I happen to have probably a report of the very speech of Mr. Haultain which my hon. friend has just read.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Of the 21st November.

Mr. OLIVER. This is a report of the meeting at Arcola which is published in the Arcola 'Star' of November 24. In the course of his remarks, Mr. Haultain is reported to have said :

For himself he considered $4 an acre a low estimate, which for a basis of calculation he would adopt for his illustrations. He maintained that by sale of 5,000,000 acres at $4 an acre the province at three per cent would realize $600,000 per annum.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is good arithmetic.

Mr. OLIVER. No doubt, but Mr. Haultain was there suggesting to the people of Arcola that his policy was to sell this land.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What land ?

Mr. HAGGART. Is there anything about homesteads there ?

Mr. OLIVER. I did not suggest that Mr. Haultain had ever said he would not grant homesteads. What I said and repeat is that he and his friends distinctly declared themselves in favour of selling the land to the speculator. That is the principle set forth in this speech and in other speeches by Mr. Haultain.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Does he use the word 'speculators' ?

Mr. OLIVER. Certainly not, he is too prudent for that, but at a meeting at Weyburn, reported in the Winnipeg 'Telegram,' he said :

Suppose that of the 73,000,000 acres yet remaining, half was put aside for homesteads,——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. OLIVER (reading),

—a principle he heartily endorsed,——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. OLIVER (reading)

—and the provincial government took 5,000,0000 acres of the 36,500,000 and offered them for sale at the low price of $4 per acre, with long terms of payment, preference being given to contiguous or actual settlers,——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. OLIVER (reading)

—and four per cent being charged on the capital sum. Then the provincial government would have a further fund of $800,000 at its disposal annually, which, with the $650,000 mentioned above, would amount to more than the total compensation the federal government offered when the province reached a population of 1,200,000. While 31,500,000 acres would still remain for the people of Saskatchewan.

Again, I find the report of Mr. Haultain's Arcola meeting in the Winnipeg 'Telegram' where he is reported to have said :

Mr. OLIVER.

By figures and facts he proved that if the province had the lands in its own hands, by only selling a small proportion at a very low figure, it would be more than $4,000,000 a year better off.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, Oh.

Mr. OLIVER. I notice that my hon. friends opposite are very enthusiastic over the land for the speculator.

Mr. NORTHRUP. The speculator is not mentioned at all.

Mr. OLIVER. He does not need to be mentioned.

Mr. NORTHRUP. But the settler is mentioned.

Mr. OLIVER. I took the liberty of alluding to the literature issued by our friends on the other side in that campaign—

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Issued by the provincial rights party.

Mr. OLIVER. In Alberta they were called Conservatives. But they need not be called anything now—there is not enough of them left to carry a name. This is the appeal that the Conservative party made in Alberta on this question. 'The Land Question' is the title of the document, and here is a sample paragraph :

There is no reason why a good-sized block of lands in the province should not be sold. They are in great demand now ; colonization companies are willing to purchase them, and the best of settlers are willing to buy them at good prices. Settlement would probably take place faster, and the province would be at little, if any expense, yet obtain a handsome income for immediate wants as regards roads and bridges.

It can't be disputed that if the province of Alberta had its lands to-morrow, it could sell 6,000,000 acres for $5 per acre cash, and the buyers would do the colonization. This invested at the small rate of four per cent, would give us $1,200,000 annually or $75,000 a year more than the maximum we will ever get from the Dominion, and still we would have millions of acres left for settlers.

But this was to be for the speculator.

Mr. LALOR. Would the hon. gentleman allow me to read the statement which he read in the House on the occasion—

Mr. OLIVER. I am speaking under the privilege accorded me by the House. Of course, if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lalor) objects I shall have to take my seat.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Oh, no; no one objects.

Mr. OLIVER. In the province of Saskatchewan, where the friend of the hon. leader of the opposition was the leader of the Conservative party and where he was delivering these magnificent addresses in favour of the land for the settler, this is what he was publishing as campaign literature. The document is headed 'The Public Lands Robbery!' 'How the New Provinces are Plundered Under the Compensation Clauses.' 'Are You Going to Endorse it?'

If the lands were turned over to the absolute control and disposition of the province, an immediate realization would be possible. By advertising these lands for sale in the financial centres of the world an abundance of liberal offers could be obtained. The sale of the entire lot at a figure not less than $4 per acre would be easily affected. This would mean that a sum of $200,000,000 would be immediately available. By investing this sum at three and a half per cent, a matter of little difficulty, a perpetual income of no less than $7,000,000 would be secured. In comparison to this, what is the pittance of $375,000 allowed by the Dominion government? The province could, if it chose, afford to wait until the value of the lands increased, and then sell them piece-meal, at great advantage. An even larger return would be assured by following this method. The objection that the Dominion needs the lands in order to promote immigration and settlement is a trifling one. Full allowance for this purpose is made in deducting 50,000,000 acres before the share remaining to the province is calculated All the immigrants who will be brought to this country by the active agency of the Dominion government will be here by the time the 50,000,000 acres are exhausted. . . . The rate of interest allowed by the Dominion is ridiculously low. If the increase of population should come at the rate of 50,000 per annum it would take about nineteen years to reach the level, 1,200,000 where the maximum rate, three per cent is to be allowed. During all that time the average payment to the province by the Dominion on account will be $562,500 per annum. If Saskatchewan were permitted to realize on her lands at once, an annual income of several millions would be secured. Why may the province not have the lands?

Mr. Haultain had a number of candidates supporting him. There was a rather small percentage of them elected. One of these candidates was Mr. W. D. Dunlop, who announced his views on the land question to an expectant world.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What was his name?

Mr. OLIVER. His name was Dunlop. He was not elected. In fact, I might mention he lost his deposit. And this was his policy of the land for the settler, speaking as one of the candidates on behalf of the Conservative party:

We need every dollar that can be made out of our lands to be expended for public purposes in our province, to keep taxation as low as possible; let those who develop the country get the increase in the value of our lands which increased settlement will bring. If the lands are not worth more to the Dominion government than it offers for them, why does it keep them?

To add to the evidence which I have offered to hon. gentlemen opposite as to the policy which they have pursued for so long, I would refer my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) to the speech which he himself made last session in this House, in which he spoke of setting apart certain millions of acres of land for the purpose of selling to whom? To speculators. Anybody who had the money was good enough for him to sell these lands to. But today he weeps crocodile tears over the settler. It is the poor settler who occupies his whole attention. I am obliged to hon. gentlemen opposite for their courtesy in permitting me to reply to the demand made by their hon. leader.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. As a part of this is in the nature of a controversy between the hon. minister and myself as to the effect of this document perhaps I may be permitted a word. The sections which the hon. minister has read do not, so far as I understand them bear out in the least what he bases upon them. Section 6 says:

By way of indemnity to the government in case the amount earned by the company for such service should not amount to the sum paid by the government in any year—

He is speaking not of the earning of the lands, but of the earning of the mail subsidy.

—the government, as the land grant of the company is earned, from time to time, shall retain one-third of the land grant so earned on the line between Lake Dauphin or thereabouts at the point aforementioned to the Saskatchewan river, which shall be held by the government as a first charge or lien securing the repayment of any such deficiency, and the government shall issue to the company patents for the remaining two-thirds thereof.

All that means is that after the lands are selected the government shall not issue a patent for that one-third. Perfectly plain if any one takes the trouble to read it.

Mr. OLIVER. There is no word in that section about selecting land.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Of course there is not, and therefore it does not affect the selection of land.

Mr. OLIVER. I used the word because my hon. friend used it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I used it too because it is the proper word to use. For the very reason that this section is not dealing with the selection of land; it mentions the issue of patents of lands which have been selected. I would think that the veriest tyro in construction of documents could not make such a mistake as that into which the Minister of the Interior has apparently fallen. And the other section does not alter it at all, and even if it did alter it, the privilege is not a privilege of the company but of the government, and the government could waive the privilege whenever it requires these lands to be selected.

Mr. OLIVER. What privilege.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The privilege of having these lands remain unselected.

Mr. OLIVER. Why could they waive the privilege ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Because any person who has a right or privilege under the law of this country has the option of waiving that right or privilege. The government of this country has that option in common with all persons. Any party to a contract who has a right or privilege thereunder can waive it to the advantage and in favour of the other party.

Mr. OLIVER. Was the privilege the hon. gentleman speaks of the privilege of the company or the privilege of the government ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am trying to point out to the hon. gentleman that if this is a privilege—assuming his argument is correct, though there is not the shadow of a foundation for it—but assuming it is correct, then it would be a privilege not of the company but of the government, and the government possessing that privilege could waive it. Therefore there is no legal or technical difficulty in the way. I will not pursue the matter further, it is so simple and plain that it is difficult to argue about it.

Mr. FOSTER. The difficulty is that the Minister of the Interior has got the opinion of the law officer of the government upon it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I have only one word to say about the very interesting extracts which the minister read at great length. Permit me to say that I was particularly struck with the remarks of Mr. Dunlop, I never heard of that gentleman before, but I thought his remarks contained a good deal of good sense : and if the minister would propound his future policy based largely upon what he has read to us to-night, I am sure the department will be much better administered in the future than it has been in the past.

Mr. H. BOURASSA (Labelle). Before the question is put I wish to explain the vote I propose giving on this motion. I will not go over all the ground that has been opened up, but will simply take the advice given by the Prime Minister and consider this motion on its merits. With the general principle contained in that motion, we must accept the word of the Prime Minister as well as the word of hon. members on that side of the House, that the House is unanimous in the opinion that the public lands should be sold to the people directly by the government without the interference of the speculator. As regards subsidies to railways, I am not going to follow the line of discussion which has been adopted by both sides of the House. To my mind this House indulges too often the habit of trying to escape the straight discussion of an issue by throwing stones at each other, and by trying to excuse one party by the faults of the other, I am not going to inquire either, the justification the last government may have had for their railway policy. I think that railway policy was wrong, but perhaps if I had been a member of the House at the time it was adopted and applied, I might have made the same mistake as the men of that time made. Moreover, the circumstances were not the same then as they are to-day. Now the reason given by the Prime Minister why his friends should resist this motion is that it contains an insinuation that this government acted wrongly in selling land to the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company. I think the government have proven by their acts that they wish to repair the mistake committed in the past by other governments. But it seems to me it is rather a strange way to repair past mistakes by committing another one of the same kind. Therefore if the fact that this motion implies blame on the government for granting land to the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company, is the only reason for opposing this motion, I cannot agree with the leader of the government. I think that the actual transaction which took place according to the facts we have before us, will justify me in voting in favour of this motion.

Although I am only a comparatively young member of parliament, I have learned by experience that it is not always possible for a government or a party in power to apply all the principles it professed in opposition. I have left in abeyance some of the ideas I have preached in former days because experience has taught me that there is a long way between propounding a policy and executing it. But as I have said on a previous occasion, there are a few principles that I preached when in opposition when opposing the Conservative party, to which I still adhere. I am ready to lay aside my own judgment, and have done so many times in the past, and have supported the government on some question that I did not approve. But I think it is a poor excuse to shelter ourselves under the fact that previous governments have done the same. We have denounced those governments because we claimed that they were ruining this country and were concentrating the wealth of this country in the hands of a few corporations. This is one of the few principles of the old Liberal party to which I still adhere, and I am not prepared to vote against a motion simply because it might imply blame on the government, when that motion condemns a policy that we have denounced time and time again in the past, and which as a Liberal I am prepared to denounce now.

House divided on the amendment (Mr. W. J. Roche).

Amendment negatived.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Indians, British Columbia—salaries, $18,060.

Mr. OLIVER. The only change is that the salary of Mr. Dalby, who has been in the service for six or seven years, has been increased from $720 to $840 on the recommendation of the superintendent, Mr. Vowell.

Mr. FOSTER. $120 seems an irregular increase.

Mr. OLIVER. It is $10 a month. A clerk at $600 is provided for the Indian agent at New Westminster. We have been charging this salary to 'miscellaneous,' and it is proposed to change that.

Mr. FOSTER. That disappears from the 'miscellaneous.'

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Indians, British Columbia—relief, $6,000.

Mr. OLIVER. That is for the relief of actual destitution among Indians throughout the province when absolutely necessary. The Indians are exposed to many dangers; the department is called upon to assist those whose homes have been entirely destroyed and to help the old and destitute in the different agencies. The expenditure in 1901-2 was $6,499 ; in 1902-3, $8,767 ; in 1903-4, was $7,182 ; in 1904-5, $8,002. The maintenance of the insane Indians while in the asylum is charged to this vote.

Mr. FOSTER. The minister should be careful that that item of relief does not creep into British Columbia where it was never intended to be at first. The British Columbia Indians have been self-supporting and it is better that they should go on in their old independent and self-supporting way. Of course if it is a matter of taking care of the insane it is a perfectly legitimate expense.

Mr. OLIVER. The expenditure is actually in the line the hon. gentleman suggests.

British Columbia Indians—seed, $750.

Mr. OLIVER. Implements and seed grain are given to Indians who show an honest desire to cultivate their lands, but who are too poor to purchase. It is seldom the Indians are able to save enough seed for the next spring sowing owing to drought and unavoidable causes. Tools are sometimes supplied to boys who have learned trades at the industrial school to assist them to make a living and that they may be of use in improving their houses. The department is informed that much benefit has been derived as a result of the expenditure made this way. The amount expended for the last two years has been:

1901-2	$510
1902-3	153
1903-4	416
1904-5	723

Mr. FOSTER. What supervision is there over them that they do not dispose of their tools ?

Mr. OLIVER. That of course is under the general supervision of the agent. I do not know that there is any very close tally kept but of course it is part of his duty to see that no improper disposition is made. The British Columbia Indians are very much more expert in the use of tools than the plain Indians, and have much more requirement for them.

Mr. FOSTER. I presume as a general rule they are supposed to buy their own.

Mr. OLIVER. They do as a rule, it is only, as this says, to encourage the young fellows.

Medical attendance and medicine, $15,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Here is a very large item.

Mr. OLIVER. This item does not seem to be excessive, it is the same as last year.

Mr. FOSTER. How has that been running for the last few years ?

Mr. OLIVER. The expenditure has been:

1901-2	$20,468 43
1902-3	18,341 45
1903-4	15,534 44
1904-5	17,407 59

Medical attendance and medicines are provided for Indians who cannot afford to buy them themselves. The physicians are either upon salaries, which represent a fair allowance for their services and the medicines supplied or when paid by accounts they are allowed the lowest possible charges made to poor white patients. Medicines are supplied by medical missionaries who distribute them to Indians under their charge.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. What medical men are permanently employed ?

Mr. OLIVER. The following is a list of the doctors :

Victoria office—
O. M. Jones	$ 500
Babine agency—
H. C. Wrinch	300
Cowichan—
H. P. Millard	240
H. B. Rogers	300
W. F. Drysdale (Nanaimo)	500
P. W. Rolston	400
Fraser agency—
W. D. Brydone-Jack, M.D., Vancouver and vicinity	1,200
Drs. Hall and Drew, New Westminster	1,200
C. A. Elliott, M.D., Harrington Hot Springs	750
J. C. Henderson, Chilliwack	300
R. F. Greer, Steveston	300
A. A. King, Ladner	500
A. J. Stewart, Mission City	500

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. At Mission City or Harrison Hot Springs for instance how many Indians are there ?

Mr. OLIVER. At Mission City my officers say there are 300 and about 400 in the vicinity of Harrison Hot Springs.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Would the minister explain why in Quebec medical attendance and medicines cost only a little over $4,000, in Ontario a little over $2,000 and in British Columbia $15,000 ?

Mr. OLIVER. In Quebec, I am informed, there are only about 10,000 Indians, and they are all on a small number of reserves, which are so situated as to be conveniently reached, whereas in British Columbia there are 25,000 Indians and their reserves are scattered all over the province; there are over 1,000 reserves. The Indians are scattered in very small bands, and in that way the medical attendance comes much higher, and of course medical fees are higher any way in British Columbia than in Quebec.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. How many Indians are there in Ontario ?

Mr. OLIVER. About 20,000. In Ontario on a number of reserves where the bands are large and they are well advanced in civilization they pay for a good deal of their medical attendance out of their own funds.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Then I think it is high time the minister should make some investigation into this. In Ontario and in British Columbia there are practically the same number of Indians, 20,000, but in Ontario we pay only a little over $2,000 for medical attendance and medicines, whereas in British Columbia the government in the nine months are paying $15,000 for the same service, for practically the same number of Indians.

Mr. OLIVER. The explanation, as I have said, is that in Ontario the Indians are massed in large numbers on a few reserves which makes it very much more easy to give them medical attendance whereas in British Columbia they are scattered over an area of over three or four times as large as the settled portions of Ontario.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. 1,000 reserves ?

Mr. OLIVER. 1,040 reserves. Reserves there are on an entirely different principle from the Ontario reserves or the Northwest reserves. A few families have a reserve and they are scattered all over the province. That makes the cost of medical attendance much higher than in Ontario. Besides I am informed that in Ontario where the Indian bands have become fairly well civilized, they pay a large part of their own medical attendance.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Do I understand that there are 1,000 reserves in British Columbia with an Indian population of only 20,000.

Mr. OLIVER. That is what I am informed.

Mr. SPROULE. If the Indians in the other provinces are able out of their earnings to pay such a large portion of the cost of their medical attendance it seems to me the British Columbia Indians are not up to the mark. For 1904, the British Columbia Indians earned $425,694, while the Ontario Indians earned $462,000, pretty much the same, and yet it is said that the earnings of the Indians in Ontario enable them to pay for their medical attendance whereas in British Columbia they do not.

Mr. OLIVER. Not the earnings. The Indians of Ontario, the large bands, have large revenues from property which has been sold and the proceeds funded so that they have a steady revenue, which, of course, the British Columbia Indians have not. The Ontario Indians are property owners, that is they have a valuable income which the British Columbia Indians do not.

Mr. SAM HUGHES. Do not many of these British Columbia Indians earn large sums at fish panning ?

Mr. OLIVER. The hon. member has read that they earn $400,000 a year. Their earnings are as large as those of the Ontario Indians, but the Ontario Indians have in addition this fixed revenue, aside from their earnings, and it is out of this that they pay their share of medical attendance.

Mr. T. CHISHOLM. What is the difference between the charges the medical men make in Ontario and in British Columbia ? I have always understood that the Indians in British Columbia were fairly well civilized. Why should they not pay their own medical fees ?

Mr. MACPHERSON. In British Columbia the Indians contiguous to the water earn fairly good money but there are a great many removed from the possibility of making much money. For instance the Indians on the watershed of the Fraser river and in the interior.

Mr. SPROULE. The Indians make money from two sources—one, wages earned; and the other, other industries. Take wages earned and the proceeds from other industries, the British Columbia Indians last year earned $692,000 while the Ontario Indians only earned $601,000. If the British Columbia Indians are able to earn more, they should be able to pay a large share of their own expenses for medical attendance.

Mr. OLIVER. There are one-third more of them than in Ontario, which increases the cost of medical attendance without a corresponding increase in the earning power.

Mr. SAM HUGHES. Has the hon. minister any report to show that one out of a thousand of these Indians ever sees a doctor or gets any medicine on these one thousand and forty reserves ?

Mr. OLIVER. I imagine that a good many are so far away that they do not get medical attendance except very rarely.

Mr. SAM HUGHES. Are there any reports from these doctors ?

Mr. OLIVER. Certainly, they have to report from time to time.

Mr. FOWLER. Do you pay them a stated price per year as is done in New Brunswick ?

Mr. OLIVER. I was reading a list of the doctors and the salaries that are paid.

Mr. SPROULE. Does that include medicine ?

Mr. OLIVER. They have to provide medicine as well. We pay them a stated salary to attend certain bands, and they provide their own medicine.

Mr. FOWLER. If another doctor should be called in, does the regular doctor pay his fee ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. J. D. REID. This item of medical attendance and medicine is rather misleading. I see that in the Auditor General's Report of last year out of $5,615 paid under the heading of relief and medical attendance, are included payments for items such as lumber, oats, provisions, amounting to about two-thirds of the whole expenditure.

That looks to me as though the amount of $20,000 voted had been used for other purposes than medical attendance and medicine.

Mr. OLIVER. The heading in the Auditor General's Report is not medical attendance alone but relief and medical attendance.

Mr. J. D. REID. Is the item we are now passing intended to cover both ?

Mr. OLIVER. We are now dealing with medical attendance only. Relief is kept separate from medical attendance in British Columbia.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Is there much tuberculosis among the Indians of British Columbia ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, considerable.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Has the hon. minister had any of the British Columbia medical officers visit Ottawa at the time of the tuberculosis convention ?

Mr. OLIVER. No.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. It would appear then that Dr. Lafferty is the only favoured one. Can the minister tell us if the visit this year of Dr. Lafferty to the tuberculosis convention was at the expense of the government ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, and the reason is that tuberculosis is very prevalent among the Indians in the Northwest, more so than in British Columbia. Tuberculosis is common to all Indians, especially where they have adopted civilized life to any extent.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Was there any other medical officer in the service of the government in any of these Indian reserves, invited down by the government to attend the tuberculosis convention at the government's expense, besides Dr. Lafferty ?

Mr. OLIVER. No, but we have had other medical men come here. Dr. MacKenzie of Manitoulin and Dr. Fraser of Brandon were brought here previously to discuss the question of tuberculosis.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. At the expense of the government ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes. Not to attend a convention but for the purpose of having discussion on this question.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. The other night the minister told us that Dr. Bryce had invited Dr. Lafferty down to attend this convention. Did he invite Dr. Lafferty down this year as well ?

Mr. OLIVER. I could not say at the moment but will find out.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. This is either not complimentary to the doctor at Calgary or the Indians who reside there are specially favoured. I do not see any physician from any other province, except Dr. Lafferty, brought to attend a convention at the expense of the country. The trip is a very nice one, but I do not see why there should be this discrimination. It would lead one to imagine that Dr. Lafferty does not really possess those qualifications with which the Minister of the Interior so profusely credited him the other night, when Dr. Lafferty has to come to Ottawa to improve himself in his profession while the physicians of the other provinces do not require to take that course. But one can hardly call the deal a square one for the Indians of the other provinces, especially when the hon. minister states that the British Columbia Indians are suffering from tuberculosis.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Probably he made an elaborate report to the government upon the proceedings of the Tuberculosis convention. Has the minister that report with him ?

Mr. OLIVER. I certainly have not.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Does the minister know whether there was one ?

Mr. OLIVER. I am not aware that there was.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. There is another reason, I think, why there is such a discrepancy between the Indians of Ontario and those of British Columbia in this respect. As I understand the state of affairs in the reserve in Brant county, the largest reserve in Canada, the doctor and medical attendants are paid by the Indians themselves. Why is it that some Indians should be charged with the whole of this expense while those in British Columbia and other places have medical attendance provided at the expense of the people of Canada. Because the Six Nations have saved money, they have to provide a fine house upon the reserve for their doctor and pay him a large salary out of the Indian fund. I think this is the explanation rather than that which the minister gives, that the Indians are scattered over many reserves.

Mr. TAYLOR. In the time of the late government I have often heard its leader Sir John Macdonald say that the Indians were the wards of the government. The Indians were looked upon then as human beings and Christians. But the hon. member for Vancouver (Mr. Macpherson) who, I presume, speaks for the government says that the Indians of British Columbia are a different breed of animals. So, I presume, they are treated as animals.

Mr. MACPHERSON. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) must not say that I said that. I said that they were different animals.

Mr. TAYLOR. Well, then, they are not human beings, according to the hon. member for Vancouver. Comparing the figures in the Auditor General's Report for 1895-6 and those of the Auditor General's Report for 1904-5, which is now before us, I see that it costs the country a great deal more to take care of these Indians in the time when they are designated as animals than it did when they were regarded as human beings. I have often heard the late Sir John Macdonald say that the expenditure on the Indian should decrease year by year as the Indians were settled on reserves and taught to cultivate the ground and support themselves. But instead of that, the expenditure on Indians is going up by leaps and bounds, not only in the newer provinces but in the older ones as well. I find that in 1895-6 the Indians of Ontario and Quebec cost $74,369, while under this government they cost $117,383. And we know that in Ontario and Quebec the Indians are not increasing in numbers, but decreasing. Then take the management of the department here at Ottawa, the expense of which certainly should not have increased. Under the late government the cost was $49,000 while now it is $59,000 an increase of $10,000. And so it is with every department. I hope the hon. member for Vancouver will withdraw the statement he has made and will say that the Indians of British Columbia are wards of the government, that they are human beings and Christians.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. There seems to be great discrepancy in the expense for medical attendance in these Indian reserves. Take, for instance, the figures for the William's Lake agency, at page J—70 of the Auditor General's Report. I find there :

Salaries of physicians to June 30, 1905—S. Clarke, M.D., 12 months, $480 ; J. M. English, M.D., 3 months to May 31, $75 ; A. D. Morgan, M.D., 1 month to July 31, $35 ; Mactyn-Hoops, M.D., 12 months, $700 ; $1,280.

In another agency I find half a dozen doctors receiving only $263. These medical men do not seem to be up to their business. In the Kootenay agency the doctors are only paid $17.50. These gentlemen need to be given a pointer.

Mr. FOSTER. There is more there—It says, 'physician, Hugh Wall, M.D.', 3 months at $30, 9 months at $40.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Still there does not seem to be the same treatment all through. I do not know all these reserves but I know some of them, and I cannot understand why so much should be spent for medical attendance.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I believe that the discrepancy between the expenditure for this service in relation to the Ontario Indians and the British Columbia Indians requires further explanation. Then, I notice that in British Columbia boarding schools the expenditure is over $69,000, while in Ontario, Quebec and the maritime provinces, Indians numbering possibly 30,000 have only $40,000 spent for their education. I believe these two items should be left for further statement from the minister. I may say also that I am sorry that the hon. member for Vancouver has not made the apology suggested by the hon. member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor). If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Macpherson) will look around this Dominion, he will find Indians filling some of the most prominent positions in the country. I feel sure that the hon. gentleman will take back the words he has uttered to-night.

Mr. J. D. REID. The minister stated a few minutes ago that several of these doctors were permanently employed. Are these physicians allowed to practice outside the agency ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. J. D. REID. I think that is unfair, I raised the same point last year. Such a physician practising in a town practically has a bonus, and so enjoys advantage over others. I think now would be a good time for the hon. minister to take a lesson from the Postmaster General and make the rule that these gentlemen confine themselves to this work. I hope the minister will take this into consideration.

Mr. OLIVER. I can give the hon. gentleman (Mr. J. D. Reid) the conclusion that I shall be bound to come to after considering the matter, without keeping him waiting. There is no object in providing medical attendance for the Indians unless the medical man engaged has some standing and experience in his calling. And of course, as the medical profession is one that is, very properly, fairly highly paid, we are giving these physicians only a retainer for their services to the Indians. Not in any case that I have noticed would the sum be considered an adequate compensation for a first-class physician giving up his right to practice outside. My hon. friend will appreciate that a medical man whom the department could hire for the amount paid at Comac, $240, would not be of great value to the Indians.

Mr. J. D. REID. This gentleman gets $1,500.

Mr. OLIVER. That comes nearer to being a fair compensation to a first-class man. But in these cases I do not think the amount is really a fair compensation for a first-class physician in that country. Besides, the duties pertaining to physicians where these salaries are paid are such, I am informed, as practically to preclude outside practice to any serious extent. The physician has got to give up outside practice in taking that position.

Mr. THOMAS CHISHOLM. Does the department supply medicine besides giving this salary?

Mr. OLIVER. No, the physicians provide their own medicine.

Mr. J. D. REID. I know a case where the physician employed by the government let a student practically do all the work at a very nominal salary.

Mr. OLIVER. I would consider that a very improper proceeding unless it was a case where the physician was temporarily disabled or absent and unable to attend to his duties, when it would be necessary to secure a supply for a short time. But if the hon. gentleman knows where such a a practice prevails I would be glad if he would communicate the facts to me.

Mr. J. D. REID. I do not feel like lodging a complaint of that kind, but I know it is done.

Mr. OLIVER. It is not done with my knowledge or consent, and I will make further inquiries.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I think there should be some further explanations with reference to this item, and also to the items for schools. I cannot understand how 30,000 Indians in one case should only cost $40,000 to educate, while in another case 20,000 Indians cost $62,000.

Mr. OLIVER. I think the hon. gentleman spoke first of the difference in the cost of medical attendance, which I have already explained. The explanation is partly due to the fact that in Ontario the Indians are in much larger bodies, where one medical attendant can give his services to a large band, and where the attendance is paid for out of the funds of the band and not out of the appropriation; whereas in British Columbia there are no such band funds from which medical attendance can be paid; the Indians are scattered far and wide, which makes medical attendance more costly. Besides, the physicians' services are more expensive than they are in Ontario. With regard to the difference in the cost of schools, the explanation is very much the same. The Indians of Ontario have been under the influences of civilization for nearly two hundred years, and there is not the same necessity or urgency to educate them that there is to educate the Indians of British Columbia. Besides, the Indians of British Columbia are much scattered and they need a larger number of schools in proportion to their number.

Day schools, $8,550.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Why have you not day schools in the province of Ontario? There is only one item for day schools, that in British Columbia district. Adding this to the $62,000 it would make $70,000 for education.

Mr. OLIVER. There are 72 day schools in Ontario and 37 in British Columbia.

Industrial and boarding schools, $62,500.

Mr. LAKE. I notice a number of boarding schools at or near the Indian reserve. Are these provided by the government or by private enterprise?

Mr. OLIVER. They are given a grant of so much per head on a certain number of pupils.

Mr. LAKE. I refer to the buildings themselves.

Mr. OLIVER. These are generally mission schools, but in some cases the government contribute towards the building of the schools. There are some cases where the government build the schools at public expense.

Mr. LAKE. On what principle is the discrimination made?

Mr. OLIVER. There is no principle governing the appropriation which is paid by the government to schools. It varies according to circumstances.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I suppose these are all under clerical control?

Mr. OLIVER. They are mission schools.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Can the minister give us a statement showing the various denominations that are concerned in this, and what grant is made to each school by denomination?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, I can give the list if the hon. gentleman wishes it.

Kamloops I. S., 50 pupils at $130, Roman Catholic	$ 4,875 00
Kamloops for erection of suitable class room	500 00

Unforeseen expenses at industrial and boarding schools	1,387 50
Total required for 9 months	$62,500 00

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Has the hon. minister any classification as to the total amount paid to the various denominations? We have some placed at $130 per head and some at $60 per head.

Mr. OLIVER. The schools that are classed industrial schools receive $130 per head.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. What is the difference between these and other schools?

Mr. OLIVER. Those which are classed as boarding schools receive $60 per head. The difference between the two is that the education is more limited at the boarding school than at the industrial school. At the industrial school trades of different kinds are taught while the boarding school is simply an educational institution.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Does the government make an inspection of these?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes. The Metlakathla school is a government school and in that case there is a payment of $140 for boys and $100 for girls. That is an industrial school.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. I would like to ask the hon. minister if there is not another school in British Columbia that he has not mentioned, at Lytton?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, I mentioned it.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. I understood that was entirely supported by a theological institution called the New England Company.

Mr. OLIVER. For the Lytton industrial school there is a payment for 40 pupils at $130 each, it is under the auspices of the Church of England, and the total amount is $3,900.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. Was the building provided by the department as well?

Mr. OLIVER. The building was put up entirely by the Mission.

Mr. LAKE. The hon. minister has said that no particular principle has been adopted by the government in making grants for the building of these schools. Would the government give a grant for a school building on private property as readily as for a school building on an Indian reserve? I assume that a school on an Indian reserve would belong to the government as trustees for the Indians while a school on private property would belong to the particular church or society that built the school.

Mr. OLIVER. None of the industrial schools are built on the Indian reserves, but the property on which they stand is under the control of the government as long as they remain industrial schools.

Mr. LAKE. But does not the government contribute part of the cost of building these boarding schools?

Mr. OLIVER. The boarding schools are on the reserves and they are owned and controlled by the government.

Mr. LAKE. I would like to refer to one boarding school in particular; that is the Muscowequan's boarding school in the Touchwood Hills agency, Northwest Territories.

Mr. OLIVER. My answer was in regard to British Columbia schools.

Mr. LAKE. Could the hon. minister give some information in regard to Muscowequan's school in the Touchwood Hill agency?

Mr. OLIVER. That school, I am informed, is on the reserves.

Mr. LAKE. I think that is a mistake. The minister's own report contains the statement that it is not on the reserve. I think that several schools up there are not on the reserves.

Mr. OLIVER. Our report is that it is on the reserve. We may be in error but that is our report.

Mr. LAKE. I would like to read to the minister the statement of the principal of the school contained in the report of the Department of Indian Affairs, page 328:

> The land connected with the school is a homestead of 160 acres and belongs to the society of the Reverend Oblate Fathers, to whom nothing is paid for the use and benefits from it.

What I wish to know is whether there has been any contribution from the government to the building of this school and if so, how much.

Mr. OLIVER. I cannot answer that at the moment but I will probably be able to in a few minutes.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The hon. minister says that these industrial schools in British Columbia are not on the reserves. Are the children taken from the reserves and do they board at these industrial schools?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Well then, what is the difference between industrial boarding schools and those that are called ordinary boarding schools? I presume it is six of one and half a dozen of the other.

Mr. OLIVER. The difference is in the instruction given in the two classes of schools.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Oh, I know that is the theory, but what is really done?

Mr. OLIVER. We say that is what is really done.

Mr. LAKE. Has the hon. minister that reply yet?

Mr. OLIVER. We are just looking it up. That, of course has no bearing upon this particular item, but I will have the reply in a few minutes.

Mr. HENDERSON. I notice that the land on which the Alberni industrial school is erected is owned by the Presbyterian church. Did the government erect the building or was it erected by the church society?

Mr. OLIVER. The church erected the building.

Mr. HENDERSON. How much does the government contribute to the support of the school?

Mr. OLIVER. The vote is $2,250.

Mr. HENDERSON. Does that vote pay for the full staff of seven teachers or is there anything else contributed?

Mr. OLIVER. That is the only contribution towards maintenance, but we have a vote of $500 to provide a water supply for the building.

Mr. HENDERSON. Does the government contribute anything for the clothing of the Indian children, or is that done entirely by the church?

Mr. OLIVER. This is our total contribution and is under control of the church. I cannot say whether they use any part of it for clothing.

Mr. HENDERSON. Has the government no supervision over the money voted? Do they hand over the money to those in charge of the school and allow them to dispose of it as they see fit? In the case of this particular school I know that a considerable quantity of clothing has been sent to it by the Woman's Auxiliary in the section of the country in which I live. I wondered whether the church has to supply all the clothing for the children of this school. That is the information which those who are sending this clothing would be glad to have. I am surprised that in case of a school like this the government does not supply clothing to the children. I understood the plan is to contribute a sum which goes in part to pay the teachers and to leave the church to look after the children in other respects.

Mr. OLIVER. I understand the church desires to carry on a boarding school at this place; they erected a building and undertook to conduct it. The government contributes this amount to the school; which complies, I presume, with the requirements of the department. We do not interfere with the application of the money, but we see that the school is properly conducted, leaving the responsibility of the management, with the church whose missionary enterprise established the school.

Mr. HENDERSON. Does the government send an inspector to the school?

Mr. OLIVER. Certainly.

Mr. HENDERSON. Is the inspection with regard to religious subjects or ordinary educational questions?

Mr. OLIVER. We inspect the school both as to education and conduct.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Last year the government paid $62.72 freight on this clothing to which no doubt the hon. gentleman (Mr. Henderson) has referred; they also put in a few desks in the schools. I see they have furnished the industrial school at Kootenay with lumber and nails and spikes and so on. Is any manufacturing done at that industrial school and if so what becomes of the stuff manufactured? Is it sold: who gets the rake off on that?

Mr. OLIVER. The product of the school is the property of the institution conducting the school.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Has the minister no report on what the product of that school is?

Mr. OLIVER. I have none here; I do not know that we require the school authorities to make a return.

Mr. HENDERSON. Does the government pay the freight on the clothing sent out by different religious bodies to the Indian children in these schools. They did so in the past, but this year for some reason they are asking the contributors to pay the freight.

Mr. OLIVER. That is the intention of the department.

Mr. HENDERSON. Why the change in policy?

Mr. OLIVER. The idea is that the department does not wish to mix up in the charitable enterprises of those who are interested in the schools. We desire to make a certain contribution to the schools and we wish that to be the limit of our responsibility. If there are charitable people who wish to contribute clothing or other supplies to the schools we do not see that we are under any obligation to interfere in that.

Mr. HENDERSON. Possibly there is no obligation, but why the change in policy? The payment of the freight by the government was regarded as of material advantage and no doubt larger contributions were sent because the freight for such long distances was borne by the government which is responsible for the care of the Indians. This change of policy on the part of the government is a mistake, for it discourages the contribution of clothing by the various churches. If the government had continued the system of paying the freight it would have met with general approval. I understand from the minister that that sysfen. is to be withdrawn.

Mr. OLIVER. It is the intention to withdraw it.

Mr. BLAIN. I endorse what my hon. friend (Mr. Henderson) has said. If the government have not already decided to discontinue paying the freight upon such goods as are contributed, it would be well for them to continue the laudable practice. I rather think that if they refuse to pay the freight, the contribution of clothing and other articles will not be as large as in the past, and the government will be doing an injury to the Indian wards. I think the practice should be continued, and I hope the minister will consider it very carefully before he decides that the payment of freight on such goods as are contributed freely to the Indians shall be discontinued.

Mr. SAM HUGHES. I notice that the Kootenay Industrial School gets a large sum, and one of the others in the way of 'fixing dam.' Does the government pay for all this sort of thing for one school and not for all, or is it building the school ? What is its policy ?

Mr. OLIVER. In this vote there is a sum of $500 to furnish a water supply for the Alberni school and we are also asking $500 for the erection of a suitable class room in connection with the Kamloops school and in the case of other schools there are similar items. We from time to time give some assistance in the way of improving the conditions of the school buildings as well as paying the per capita grant for the support of the schools.

Mr. SAM HUGHES. I notice that Dr. P. H. Bryce has made a medical inspection. Has he furnished the department with a report of his trip ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, it is in the Indian Report.

Mr. LAKE. Is that information ready yet ?

Mr. OLIVER. The department contributed to the building $2,250.

Mr. LAKE. The point I wish to make is that this building is on private property. It seems to me it is quite a legitimate expenditure for the government to contribute to the building of these schools, in fact to build them entirely if they are on the reserve, but when they are being built on private property it seems to me it is contributing to the assistance of the owner.

Mr. OLIVER. The understanding of the department is that the building was on government property. We will have it looked into and decide whether we are in the wrong or not, and will try to arrange the matter so that we will have security in the control of the property.

Mr. LAKE. The information is contained in the hon. gentleman's own report and I have private information to the same effect as to the location of the school. Of course I fully concur that these institutions are doing a great work in the matter of education and that they should be assisted in the actual work they do, but I do not think the government should spend money on private property. I would like to ask if there is any intention to make any further grant to this school during the coming year ? Is that provided in the estimates ?

Mr. OLIVER. No, there is provision for a grant of $72 per head for forty pupils, but there is nothing further asked towards the building.

Mr. LAKE. I notice also that the proprietor of the land appeared to make something of a complaint that nothing is paid for the use and benefits of the school. It looks as if they wanted not merely to have the school supplied, but to have the rent paid for it as well. I understand that the principal in this school did very good political work during the recent local election.

Mr. OLIVER. What is his name ?

Mr. LAKE. Rev. Father Menyon.

Travelling expenses, $4,950.

Mr. OLIVER. This item is to provide for the travelling expenses of Superintendent Vowell, School Inspector Green, and the nine Indian agents in British Columbia. The appropriation for 1905-6 is $4,000 in excess of the appropriation for 1904-5 owing to the appointment of School Inspector Green. The estimate for 1906-7 is proportionately the same as for 1905-6.

Office and miscellaneous, $7,927.50.

Mr. OLIVER. This is divided into different items, contingencies and unforeseen expenses, $2,600, and assistance to hospitals, $4,450. These hospitals are at Lytton, Metlakahtla, Port Simpson, Bella-Bella and Hazelton.

To provide for the prevention of the sale of intoxicants to Indians and for the punishment of offenders, $1,520.

To provide for dyking, irrigation and reclaiming of land, $1,520

Mr. SAM HUGHES. Does the minister know the population of Hazelton ? And how many nurses and attendants there are in the hospital ?

Mr. OLIVER. We have a report in the department.

Steamboat for northwest coast agency and running expenses, $12,000.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. This is entirely new ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes. The note I have on that is

The advisability of providing a steamboat for the northwest coast agency, and for its running expenses has been urged upon the department by Superintendent Vowell and by the Indian agent for the district, Mr. G. W. Morrow. The former agent, Mr. Chas. Todd, had a boat at his disposal, but several years ago it was sold as it had become unseaworthy. It was thought wise to allow a few years to elapse in order that experience might be gained as to whether the work of the agency could be performed by the ordinary facilities for coast travel. It has become clear that these are not sufficient to meet the needs of the case. The Indian agent has to cross a long and dangerous stretch of open water to the Queen Charlotte Islands, and has also to visit many reserves on the sea coast which are not served by the ordinary steamboat navigation. It is thought advisable, therefore, in the interest of good administration and also to save Mr. Morow undue exposure and risk, to provide him with a thoroughly seaworthy boat which can be at his demand at all times to visit the reserves in his large agency.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to ask how the boat will be constructed and where ?

Mr. OLIVER. No decision has been reached as to the building of the boat yet. I am informed it is the custom in British Columbia to have boats built by tender and I imagine this will be done in that way.

Mr. HENDERSON. Does the minister know any one out there who has a boat to sell worth $12,000 ?

Mr. OLIVER. If the hon. gentlemen will pass the item we will give them a guarantee that we will have a boat built.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. By tender ?

Mr. OLIVER. Public tender.

TRANSPORTATION COMMISSION.

On the notice of motion :

That in the opinion of this House the government should at the earliest possible day, present the report of the Transportation Commission, together with all the evidence taken before the said commission, and that the same should be thereupon dealt with by the House.

Mr. W. H. BENNETT (East Simcoe). Mr. Speaker, this motion has stood on the paper now for about three weeks, and if the Minister of Public Works does not bring down the papers, I shall have to rely on what was printed in the newspapers at the time. If the minister can give the House some assurance that the report will be brought down soon, I will ask that the motion be allowed to stand.

Hon. CHARLES S. HYMAN (Minister of Public Works). I regret that there has been any delay, but it is not the fault of the department. The moment the report reached the department, it was put into the hands of the printers. I have endeavoured on several occasions to hurry the printers along. I had hoped to get the report on Saturday. I am now in telegraphic communication with the printers, and I will give the hon. gentleman the information as soon as I get an answer.

Mr. BENNETT. Then, I would ask that the motion be allowed to stand.

Motion allowed to stand.

THE REPRESENTATION OF PROVINCES.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES (King's, P.E.I.) moved

That an humble address be presented to His Majesty, King Edward VII., praying that he may be graciously pleased to cause a measure to be submitted to the imperial parliament, for the purpose of amending the British North America Act, so that no province of the Dominion shall at any time have fewer representatives in parliament than it was given when it entered confederation.

He said : Mr. Speaker, in moving this resolution, my purpose is to have, if possible, the British North America Act amended, so that what I believe was the intention of the fathers of confederation and the framers of the Act itself, shall be carried out, namely, that no province of the Dominion, particularly none of the smaller provinces, should at any time have fewer representatives in this House than the number originally assigned to it. But if there be any doubt on that point, there can be no doubt whatever that that was the intention of the delegates from Prince Edward Island and of those who negotiated with them the terms of union for the admission of that province into the confederation. In order to prove this statement, I will turn to the documentary evidence on the subject. I find that resolution No. 21 of the Quebec conference reads as follows :

No reduction shall be made in the number of the members returned by any section unless its population shall have decreased relatively to the population of the whole union to the extent of five per centum.

The principle of that resolution was subsequently embodied in the British North America Act, and constitutes subsection

4 of section 51, which was plainly intended to limit the application of the principle of representation by population, and thus save the representation of the smaller provinces. If it was not intended to have that effect, and if it was not placed there for that purpose, I at least can see no reason why it should be in the constitution. At that time it was felt that the increase in the population of all the provinces would be about the same, and it was considered highly improbable that any one province should fall behind in the increase to a greater extent than five per cent, as compared with the increase of the whole union. This five per cent was to be the saving clause, so that if any province should come within five per cent of the increase of the whole union, a new basis of calculation might be established every ten years, which in time might give to any province a larger representation in this House than its actual population entitled it to.

Conditions have arisen since confederation which the fathers of confederation did not and could not foresee. It is reasonable to conclude that since they were then making provision to meet all probable contingencies, had they known that the conditions and circumstances would become such as they now are, they would have made sufficient provision to meet them. We know by actual experience that this provision in the constitution has proved entirely inadequate. And if it has proved insufficient in the past, it is bound to be doubly and trebly so in the future. The fathers of confederation could not foresee the very large emigration which took place from the maritime provinces to the United States. Nor could they foresee that the cultivable portion of the province of Quebec would extend so far north and be capable of sustaining so large a population as we know it will have in a few years. Neither could they foresee the immense possibilities and resources of the great west, then called the Great Lone Land, and consequently could not provide for the conditions which have since arisen. To show that they thought they were making adequate provision for future conditions, let me turn to the discussion which was had on these resolutions. But first of all let me say that the delegates from Prince Edward Island were strongly contending for at least six representatives. No smaller number, they emphatically declared, would at all satisfy their local conditions and requirements, and unless they were given that number it would be impossible, so far as Prince Edward Island was concerned, to carry out the scheme of confederation. Some of the delegates from the other provinces were anxious to meet the views of the delegates from Prince Edward Island. Mr. Galt moved this resolution :

> That Upper Canada shall have 99 members, Lower Canada 74, Nova Scotia 21, New Brunswick 17, Newfoundland 8 and Prince Edward Island 6.

That resolution however, did not carry, but here is what Mr. Galt said in proposing it :

> We have supposed that the population of Lower Canada, being tolerably equable in its character, would afford the best basis. But having respect to the rapid increase of Upper Canada, we think the lower provinces should not be reduced if they do not increase in the same ratio. Therefore, the lower provinces would have the same as they have now unless in the very improbable case of any one falling off by five per cent or more—that is a decrease relatively to the whole federation.

Evidently it was then considered that whatever number the province of Prince Edward Island would start with, that number would continue and be permanent. That resolution, however, did not carry, and Mr. Brown, the great apostle of the principle of representation by population moved a reduction in the total number. He moved that Upper Canada should have 82 members, Lower Canada 65, Nova Scotia 19, New Brunswick 15, Newfoundland 7, and Prince Edward Island 5. That resolution carried, the delegates from Prince Edward Island alone voting nay. But the number for Newfoundland was subsequently increased to 8. Here is what Mr. Brown said, in speaking to his motion :

> The practical result will be that while Lower Canada certainly will not be less and the lower provinces may increase in population, they cannot decrease in the number of representatives. It keeps the House within a reasonable limit.

That was 194 members. The idea, however, underlying the scheme was that Prince Edward Island would never have its representation reduced below 5. Were the delegates from that province satisfied ? No, Sir. On the contrary, they contended that they could not advise their people to come in with a smaller representation than 6. Mr. Brown's motion, however, carried, Prince Edward Island alone voting nay. Here is what the representatives from the Island said :

> Mr. HAVILAND. Prince Edward Island would rather be out of the confederation than consent to this motion. We should have no status. Only five members out of 194 would give the Island no position.
> Mr. PALMER. Our trade and revenue are rapidly increasing. Why give up so great certainties for an uncertain benefit where we have only a feeble voice. Looking first at the larger provinces, Canada has secured to herself a greater number of representatives than she had before. It may be said that we may join with the other maritime provinces in any matter affecting our common interests, but even then our united strength would still be far below Canada's number of representatives.

On the same day, Mr. Galt, on the motion, said :

It would be a matter for the greatest regret that any difficulty should arise over this matter. We request the Prince Edward Island delegates to reconsider their decision. It would be a matter of reproach to us that the smallest colony should leave us.

And Mr. Whelan, another of the delegates, spoke as follows :

We are in an isolated position. Our resources are large and our people would not be content to give up their present benefits for the representation of five members. It may be said that the confederation will go on without Prince Edward Island and that we shall eventually be forced in. Better, however, that, than that we should willingly go into confederation with that representation.

The conference adjourned for that day, and two of the delegates from the island, who were somewhat disposed to favour Mr. Brown's motion, took time to consult with their co-delegates. After the Prince Edward Island delegates had consulted together, they made the next morning this statement :

Col. GREY (Prince Edward Island). I am instructed by my co-delegates to say that the provision of five members is unsatisfactory. Prince Edward Island is divided longitudinally into three counties, each returning ten members. But they are always opposed to change of representation. You cannot divide the three counties into the five members.

Mr. POPE. I agree in all that has been said by Col. Grey and Mr. Cole, but the circumstances of Prince Edward Island are such that I hope the conference will agree to give us such a number as we can divide amongst our three constituencies. Nature, as well as the original settlement of the Island, has made three counties, and it would give rise to much difficulty if we had to adjust five members to the three counties. I cannot ask it as a matter of right, but one of expediency, as one without which it is impossible for us to carry the measure in Prince Edward Island. I therefore ask for six members.

Mr. HAVILAND. I fully agree with Mr. Pope. It would be an insuperable difficulty to us if we had not six members.

Mr. A. A. Macdonald, then one of the delegates, and now a senator, spoke as follows :

We are not bound by the principle of representation by population laid down in Charlottetown. Our constituents will say and will speak of the increased representation of Canada and the decreased representation of the lower provinces.

Sir, the delegates from Prince Edward Island took this position at the Quebec conference and when they returned to Prince Edward Island their attitude was unanimously endorsed by the press and the legislature and the people of that province, and when confederation took place, three years afterwards, Prince Edward Island remained out of it because of this consideration. Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island remained out of confederation. The home authorities and the Dominion authorities were very anxious that Prince Edward Island should come in, no matter what Newfoundland might do, and accordingly we find negotiations resumed from time to time. In 1869, I think, Earl Grenville, then Colonial Secretary, wrote to the then Governor General suggesting the advisability of the island joining confederation, saying that, inasmuch as Manitoba and British Columbia had come in and the total representation in this House was about 200 or upwards, more than 194, the Dominion government would be justified in giving liberal terms to Prince Edward Island, and what is known as the Better Terms of 1869 were offered, but still the Dominion government would not consent to give six representatives and the negotiations again fell through. In 1873 they were again taken up and Earl Kimberley wrote to the then Governor General in terms somewhat similar to those used by Earl Grenville and the Governor General of Canada in a communication to Lieutenant Governor Robinson of the province suggested to him that if his government would send a delegation to Ottawa a committee of the Privy Council would meet the delegation to negotiate terms of union. Accordingly the Prince Edward Island government sent delegates here, Messrs. Laird and Haythorne, and a committee of the Privy Council met them consisting of Sir John Macdonald, Sir Charles Tupper. Sir Leonard Tilley, Sir Hector Langevin and Mr. Howe I think. To show the importance that was attached to this question of the representation of the province I will quote some telegrams that passed between the Lieutenant Governor of the island, Governor Robinson and the delegates at Ottawa. Mr. Haythorne on the 26th of February sent this message to the Lieutenant Governor :

Probably yield six representatives.

On the 6th of March, we find this telegram :

Highly probable get six representatives.

And in a telegram from the Lieutenant Governor to Mr. Haythorne on the same day the Governor says :

We hope six representatives will be conceded.

And later in the same day Mr. Haythorne wires to his colleague in the government, Mr. Edward Palmer :

Six representatives conceded.

Thus after nine years the principle for which Prince Edward Island was contending was yielded, six years after confederation had taken place. Now, Mr. Speaker, was that to be for a few years only? If it was in the minds of any of these delegates that that privilege or concession was to remain for a few years only, would it have been worth while to have made it so important and to have remained out of confederation for six years because of it? It certainly would not. It was certainly in the minds of the delegates from Prince Edward Island that we were obtaining a concession which would be permanent and that being the idea that they had, we must conclude that the committee of the Privy Council which was negotiating with them must also have had the same idea because they knew what the delegates of Prince Edward Island were thinking of what they were contending for, and if they deceived them or even allowed them to deceive themselves on a matter which to them was so important, they would not in my judgment be men worthy to occupy the positions which they held. I think, Sir, it would be doing an injustice and more than an injustice, it would be a crime against the character and memory of these men to say that they knowingly deceived the delegates from Prince Edward Island or allowed them to deceive themselves. Therefore we are driven to the conclusion that both parties, when conferring, thought they were giving to that province for all time to come, six representatives. According to the decision of the courts it appears they had not the power to do it, but whether or not they thought that the principle which was embodied in the constitution, by subsection 4 of secton 51, would be sufficient to meet all the difficulties and probable contingencies of the case, for some reason or other no person reading all the negotiations that took place in connection with this matter can come to any other conclusion than that both parties to the contract thought they were negotiating for at least six representatives for the province of Prince Edward Island for all time. Under the terms of confederation we are granted for all time to come four representatives in the Senate, and it never was at any time in the mind of any person who laid the foundations of the confederation that any province in this Dominion should have fewer representatives in this House than in the Senate. According to the interpretation given by the courts and according to conditions as we now know them to exist the time is rapidly approaching when Prince Edward Island will not have more than one or two representatives in this House while she has four in the other chamber. That was a condition of things, that was never contemplated at the time of confederation, and the conditions of things, I am satisfied, for which provision would have been made if it could have been foreseen. I do not think, so far as I have been able to look into the constitution of other countries, that there is a country in the world having a confederation such as we have, with representative institutions, having two Houses that has in the lower House fewer representatives from any section than it has in the upper House, and we are fast coming to that in this country so far as Prince Edward Island is concerned. Whether the same thing will apply to New Brunswick and Nova Scotia or not I do not know. I have looked into the constitution of the German empire which is a confederation of kingdoms and states and I find there that no great attention appears to be given to the principle of representation by population. I find that the unit of representation, leaving out the odd numbers, is as follows:

State.	Unit.
Kingdom of Prussia..	146,000
" Bavaria..	128,000
" Saxony..	200,000
" Wurtemburg	127,000
Grand Duchy of Baden..	130,000
" Hesse..	124,000
" Mechlenburg-Schwerin	101,000
" Saxe-Weimar	121,000
" Mecklenburg-Strelitz..	102,000
" Oldenburg. ..	133,000
" Brunswick ...	155,000

That is in the lower house or Reichstag.

In the United States, upon which our constitution was to some extent founded, they have, I think, in the House of Representatives, the principle of representation by population carried out. But in the Senate no attention whatever was paid to population, and we know that the Senate is the all powerful body in that country, the popular body, the law making body. But I come to a country which, though further away from us in point of distance, is nearer in other respects. I refer to the Commonwealth of Australia, which was established a few years ago, and doubtless to some extent based its constitution upon ours and perhaps avoided some of the mistakes we made. I find provision is there made that no state of the Commonwealth shall at any time have fewer representatives in the popular chamber than five, and provision is also made for a minimum representation, which is practically what I am asking for to-day. Let me read that provision in the constitution of the Australian Commonwealth:

> The House of representatives consists, as nearly as may be, of twice as many members as there are senators, the numbers chosen in the several states being in proportion to the respective numbers of their people as shown by the latest statistics of the Commonwealth, but not less than five shall be chosen in any original state.

I may be told that this is a matter of sentiment, and so it is to some extent, but it is more than sentiment to the province of Prince Edward Island. Already one-third of our representation has been cut off. Within a few years, in another decade, we will have at least another member taken from us, and in a very short period our representation may be reduced to one member, or perhaps we may have no representation at all. And if at the time of confederation five representatives would give us but a feeble voice in a House of 194, what voice will we have at the Council Board of the nation when we shall be represented by only one member in a House probably consisting of 300? This may be a matter of sentiment to some extent, but the world is largely governed by sentiment, and it is surely not an ignoble sentiment for any province to desire a reasonable voice in the public affairs of the nation. We of the maritime provinces, including Prince Edward Island, sat by the cradle of confederation; we were among the first to conceive the grand idea of a united British North America extending from ocean to ocean; and it was at Charlottetown that the first conference on the subject was held. We have borne our per capita share of the burden, and we would like to share in the triumphs, whatever they may be. We are glad to know that the cultivable and habitable areas of the province of Quebec have been greatly extended since confederation, and that that province is capable of supporting a very large population. We rejoice in the fact that numbers of our countrymen are coming back from the United States and going into the northern counties of that province, where they are building it up and making prosperous and comfortable homes for themselves. It is with great pleasure that we look forward to seeing that province the home of a large, thrifty, vigorous and virile population. We are glad to hear of the wonderful mineral development in the northern part of Ontario and of the thousands who are going in there to develop its great natural resources. It is with equal satisfaction that we realize that the northern part of Ontario not only has an abundance of minerals, but unknown quantities of rich agricultural land, destined to be the homes of millions of people. We equally rejoice when we hear of the immense resources and development of our great Northwest, of the tens of millions of acres of golden grain under cultivation, and the hundreds of millions of bushels exported. We are pleased also to learn that the territorial areas of these western provinces are likely to be extended. The hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Greenway), speaking yesterday, referred to the almost certain extending of the territorial limits of the province of Manitoba. The province of Ontario is also to be extended to Hudson bay. But the limits of the maritime provinces cannot be extended. We are narrowly circumscribed by nature. If we were in a similar position to that of the other provinces, we could look forward to the future with brighter hope. I may add that we in the maritime provinces note with a glow of pleasure and satisfaction the various resources of the province of British Columbia, her great mineral wealth, her vast timber areas, her rich agricultural land, her valuable fisheries, her open and spacious harbours destined to be the gateways of the trade to the Orient and to contain a very large population. But when we look to the other side of the picture, when we realize what all this means to us, the picture is not so pleasant. When we realize that all this progress in the other parts of the Dominion means our practical exclusion from a voice in the public affairs of our country and the council board of the nation, the prospect is not so agreeable. We have given and are still giving to the other provinces that which is dearer to us than any earthly consideration. We are giving them our flesh and blood, and it is hard for us to think that this contribution is the very cause of our exclusion from any control in the public affairs of this Dominion. Is there any man in this House who will say that the privilege I am asking for, the principle which is contained in this resolution, can mean any injury to any other province or any interest in any other province or even an individual. If it did, I would be prepared to reconsider it. But if on the other hand it cannot be shown that to give Prince Edward Island and the other maritime provinces for all time to come that which they thought they were getting, in the matter of representation, when they entered confederation, will not affect prejudicially in any possible way any other province or any interests or individual in any other province, will it be too much to expect that the representatives from these other provinces will favourably consider our request. In 1892, when a possible reduction in the representation of British Columbia was suggested, the late Sir John Thompson spoke strongly against it and likewise did the right hon. gentleman who is now leading the House. He said he would be sorry that the representation from any province should ever be below the number it always had considered it was entitled to. Of course we know that a strict application of the letter of the law will not give us six representatives, but we know that the letter killeth where the spirit quickeneth and giveth life, and the spirit of the constitution would give us the representation we had when we entered confederation. It is with confidence, therefore, that I submit this resolution—confidence in the large-minded generosity of the men from the other provinces. This may be an unimportant matter to the large provinces, but it is a very important matter to us. Why withhold this privilege from us? I say again, it is with confidence that I submit this resolution for the consideration of the House.

Mr. A. MARTIN (Queen's, P.E.I.). I am much pleased that the hon. gentleman (Mr.

J. J. Hughes) has brought forward this resolution. It is a very important one, not only to Prince Edward Island, but to all the maritime provinces, and also to the province of Ontario. As the hon. gentleman as shown, the representation in this House changes according to the increase or decrease in the population of all the provinces except Quebec. We find that in the last distribution the province of Ontario lost six members, the province of Nova Scotia lost two members, the province of New Brunswick lost one member, and the province of Prince Edward Island also lost one member.

Mr. STOCKTON. New Brunswick lost two.

Mr. A. MARTIN. I see one here, this is according to the last change.

Mr. STOCKTON. We have thirteen now, we had fifteen years ago.

Mr. A. MARTIN. These figures are made under the last redistribution. So far as Ontario is concerned, she lost six out of eighty-six, that is, they lost about one-fourteenth of their representation ; Nova Scotia lost about one-ninth of her representation ; New Brunswick about one-thirteenth ; and when you come to my own province, we lost one-fourth of our representation. Therefore, while this rule bears heavily on Ontario, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, it bears still heavier on the province from which I have the honour to come. I think the proposal in the resolution merits the serious consideration of this House. It would result in no serious disadvantage to this great country ; on the contrary, if we maintained the representation as it is, there would be no need for a redistribution of the ridings every ten years. In 1864, as the hon. gentleman has said, when they were discussing the terms of confederation, this question was thoroughly gone into. The first proposal was not for a representation by population, though that rule was afterwards adopted. The unit of representation at the time of confederation was one representative for 17,000 population ; to-day it is one representative for 25,100 of a population. Quebec was made the pivotal province and was given a representation of sixty-five members, giving her an increased representation of forty-three members, while there was a decrease in Ontario according to the ratio then adopted.

Now we know that in Quebec the increase of population is very rapid, the birth rate is greater than in any other province of Canada. We have a very keen race in the other provinces to keep up with Quebec on account of her large birth rate. The birth rate of Quebec, I see, is about thirty-eight per thousand, the birth rate in the rest of Canada is only about twenty-eight per thousand. I suppose Quebec's birth rate is owing to the physical vigour of her people, and the healthy religious sentiment that prevails, for which I honour them, and give them praise. We would have to make a very keen race to overcome that disadvantage of ten per cent under which we labour on account of the different birth rate. But there are other circumstances which make my argument still more effective. When Quebec was made the pivotal province, it had only an area of 233,000 square miles. In 1896 the boundaries of Quebec were increased and 118,420 square miles were added to her territory. So that besides having a greater birth rate than the other provinces, Quebec has largely increased her territory, increased it over fifty per cent. Taking that increased area into consideration, I think it would be unfair to the other provinces that they should be compelled to maintain the same ratio in their representation according to population as Quebec. Why, Sir, an area of territory was added to Quebec in 1896 equal to all England, Scotland, Ireland and a few other islands thrown in. When you consider that at confederation Quebec, the pivotal province, had only a small area and that that area has been so largely increased, the chances for the maritime provinces especially are very small. But this argument does not apply to the same extent to Ontario, because Ontario has also increased her territory. In 1884, 159,000 square miles were added to the area of Ontario. The only provinces whose area cannot be increased on account of the situation in which they find themselves are Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island. So these three are, I think, under a peculiar disadvantage in that respect. I think in coming to some conclusion this House should bear these facts in mind, particularly the fact that the area of Quebec, the pivotal province, has been increased fifty per cent since confederation. Why, that area is equal in extent to Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, Ireland, Scotland and a few other places. The population of Quebec is very rapidly increasing, and will soon raise the unit above what it is to-day. The day is not far distant when the unit, instead of being 25,100, will be at least 50,000. When the unit goes up to 50,000 Prince Edward Island possibly may have two, when it goes up to 75,000 we will have one, and when it goes up to 120,000 we will have none at all. That is a state of affairs which I am sure there is not a member of this House would welcome, especially in view of the fact that when that prosperous province entered confederation it assumed that the understanding, as it has been quoted by my hon. friend who has just sat down, would be carried out. I have here the excellent work by Mr. Joseph Pope entitled 'Confederation Documents' which proves exactly what I say. As they have often been quoted I forbear doing so. I am going to speak more particularly in regard to Prince Edward Island because there are other gentlemen from other provinces who are well able to take care of their own.

When confederation was first mooted there were two questions of paramount importance as far as Prince Edward Island was concerned. One was the question of representation in this House. The other question was that of maintaining communication with the rest of Canada. In regard to both of these paramount questions Prince Edward Island has not been treated as she had a right to expect. Prince Edward Island, when she entered confederation, being an island, was cut off from the rest of the Dominion and it was realized that her position in the confederation would not be equal to that in which the other provinces were situated. So, they made it a part of the bond of union that steam communication should be maintained daily between the province and the mainland. I need not go fully into this phase of it, because it will come up for discussion, perhaps, before very long, that that part of the terms of confederation have not been carried out. Then there was the other point. The people of Prince Edward Island understood that their representation should consist of six members in perpetuity. They were given to understand that this was the least representation they should have. Therefore, in regard to the maintenance of communication with the mainland we have not been treated as we should have been treated. In regard to the question of representation we have likewise not been treated properly. The resolution proposed by my hon. friend would not only give Prince Edward Island justice but it would do so for New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, and perhaps Ontario, what I think would be to their advantage and to the advantage of the Dominion. I was very well pleased that my hon. friend quoted from the Australian constitution to show that the representation of the various states of the Commonwealth was not, under the constitution, decreased, but was maintained at the minimum which had previously existed in the various provinces and was not to be decreased. I know that there are a good many to speak on this subject here; it is a subject of general interest to this House and I think I may safely leave it to the consideration of the hon. gentlemen whom I see around me and who will take part in this discussion. I think it would be very improper for me to occupy too much time in this discussion. These are my views hurriedly expressed, in regard to the question, and I hope the government will take it up and remove the grievances which exist in that province. If they remove this grievance and that in regard to winter communication they will be held up in Prince Edward Island as the benefactors of their country.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD (Pictou). Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a word in support of the motion of my hon. friend from King's, Prince Edward Island (Mr. Hughes) which proposal, as it has been presented by my hon. friends from that province, has been along the line of remedying the injustice which has come to Prince Edward Island by reason of the interpretation which has been placed upon the British North America Act in regard to the particular section which relates to representation. That injustice is one which does not affect merely Prince Edward Island but which also affects the other two maritime provinces more particularly. It does so by reason of the fact that what may be called the other smaller provinces in the Dominion have come into the union under conditions, which, to a certain extent, protect their status as regards representation. It may be urged that as we have had an interpretation of the British North America Act upon the rights of the various provinces in regard to representation given by the Supreme Court of Canada and confirmed by the Privy Council we have a condition of affairs with which we ought to be satisfied because it may be said that these decisions interpreted correctly what the views were of the fathers of confederation at the time of the passage of the British North America Act, but I desire to point out the fact, which I am sure every member of the legal profession in the House will agree with me upon, that, as my hon. friend from King's has said, the interpretation placed by the courts on this Act has been due to a consideration rather of the letter rather than of the spirit of the law. The confederation documents, speeches and agreements which were made, spoken and entered into and which formed the basis of the confederation subsequently arrived at were not of themselves in evidence before the courts, and they could not be regarded when they came to interpret and go into all these statutes, and therefore they present to us a side of this agreement which we in this House to-day, asking the Imperial parliament as we do by this motion to reconsider this question, have at least a right to consider. In 1867 and previous to that time we had a condition in the four provinces similar in degree to four individuals coming together and saying: We desire to enter into a partnership whereby we lose our individual identity which for certain purposes becomes lost in this partnership. This partnership is to have certain rights and powers and there are reserved to the individual partners certain other rights and powers. Among these rights which were allocated to the different individual members of the partnership the one which formed the principal bone of contention was this question of the representation in the confederation of each of these partners and it will be at once agreed as a matter of fair play and as a matter of consideration of what must have been the understanding of each one of these entities at that time that no one of them would have entered into the partnership if it had thought as a result of the entrance that it would have been placed in a worse position in so far as representation in the common bond thus established was concerned. As a result and consequence each one of these provinces had allotted to it in the federal parliament a certain specified number of members. As a matter of fair play this House and this country must admit that each one of these partners must have thought that the figure as fixed at that time would be the minimum figure as far as representation was concerned. That is shown by reason of the fact that the language used in the British North America Act dealing with the question of representation, as it is to be found in section 51 of the Act, speaks of the representation being the representation of the four provinces not each one of the provinces then in existence or in the Canada that was to be and that now is, but each one of the four provinces which then made this partnership, which then combined themselves together for the inauguration and inception of this Canada that is to-day. The fact is to be remarked that in that agreement which took place and which led up to the final passage of the British North America Act you find in the first draft the provision which adjusted the representation as affecting 'each' of the provinces.' Then, you will find in the second draft the word 'each' eliminated and the words 'four provinces' substituted, while the third draft reproduces the word 'each' and finally it is settled once and for all by the final draft and subsequently by the Act that was passed that, in so far as the representation of the different partners that formed the confederation was concerned they were dealing with the representation of the four provinces. Let us see what was done afterwards. By section 146 of the British North America Act certain provisions were made by which various other portions of the then British North America Act should come into the confederation, and they were to come into confederation 'subject to the provisions of this Act.' It was argued before the courts which gave the present authoritative interpretation to the wording of this section of the Act, that these words 'subject to the provisions of this Act' were limiting words, and words which bound every member of the confederation as it came in subsequently by the clause in regard to representation. But that was not the course that was adopted. That is not what was understood by Sir John Macdonald in 1871. In the memorandum which he sent to Downing street with regard to the effect of the Manitoba Act, and when, in dealing with the necessity which was realized at home of having a special Act conferring upon the federal parliament the right to deal with representation, it was shown that Sir John Macdonald's view was as I have stated.

When we come to look at the way in which the other provinces came in, we find that as regards representation there was a special provision. While you see a general observation of all the other provisions of the Act there was a special clause relating to representation in each one of the agreements which were made. You find that British Columbia came in with six members and a provision which provided for an increase of these six members at each decennial census. The British Columbia Act did not contain any clause which provided for 'readjustment', and therefore British Columbia ever since she came into confederation has stood in the anomalous position that while its representation may be increased it cannot be decreased. But, Prince Edward Island which came in with six members, the same as British Columbia, came in with the words in its Act that its representation should not merely be increased, but readjusted. As a consequence of the word 'readjusted' Prince Edward Island has had its representation decreased in this parliament. Then as regard all the other provinces have come in since confederation, their representation has been fixed not under the terms of the original confederation Act but by virtue of the power conferred on this parliament by the Imperial Acts of 1871 and 1886. Therefore the status of the other provinces cannot be regarded in looking to find what was the spirit of the men who formed the confederation in 1867 in regard to this matter. A moments consideration will confirm the contention which has been made with respect to Prince Edward Island. In 1873 when Prince Edward Island came into confederation it was not entitled to six members, if you take the unit of population as it then existed in the province of Quebec ; it was entitled to less than five members. And yet in the agreement which was made it was given six members. Whether you are dealing with the ordinary affairs of life or whether you are dealing with constitutional problems and constitutional rights which perhaps should be given a higher regard than the other ; it is only common sense and fair-play to say that the people of Prince Edward Island who were given six members in 1873 although they had no right to that number according to the unit of population, are entitled to preserve that number of six members right through so long as the confederation of Canada lasts.

Let me deal for a moment with the different conditions existing to-day which render it necessary to ask for the relief which is sought for in this motion. The trouble today does not arise on account of any difficulty with reference to the unit of Quebec; the trouble of our friends from Prince Edward Island is not in regard to that, although the unit of representation no doubt will increase so long as Quebec will increase in her population, and so long as her immense resources will be developed and so long as Canada will advance. But the trouble in this: That under subsection 4 of section 51 of the British North America Act, the men who formed confederation when they drafted this section as relating to the four provinces merely, they understood that the comparison which was to be made under subsection 4 between the population of each province and the population of Canada was to be a comparison which was to be made with 'Canada' as it was constituted in 1867 and not 'Canada' as it may be constituted from time to time in the future. It was on that question that the discussion was raised in the Supreme Court of Canada. The word 'Canada' might have three interpretations. 1st, Canada composed of the original four provinces; 2nd, Canada composed of the seven provinces; and 3rd, Canada as it was known territorially taking in all the territories. The Supreme Court of Canada decided that the word 'Canada' was to be interpreted as meaning the seven provinces of the Dominion as they existed in 1903, and not the four provinces which existed at confederation. Had they decided that the word 'Canada' was to mean the four provinces in the very terms in which this section apprehends that it should mean, then our friends from Prince Edward Island, our friends in Nova Scotia, our friends in New Brunswick would not be hampered by the difficulty which we have to face to day; because, with all the enthusiasm for the great Northwest, with its tremendous possibilities, the enormous population which is going in there, and the abnormal unheard of increase that has come to Canada as a result of the influx of settlers into that portion of our territory; if you consider the seven provinces as being the unit with which this comparison was to be made you can readily see that those of us who live in the maritime provinces cannot begin to increase and cannot be expected to increase in any measure either to-day or as the years roll by (so far as we can see) so that we can have the advantage of any comparison with the seven provinces of the Dominion. Whereas, if what we say is the intention of the fathers of confederation were carried out, and a comparison was to be made only with Ontario, Quebec, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, then we claim that that comparison would be a fair one and that we would be perfectly willing to go along on and stand by the electoral unit fixed by the province of Quebec, and take chances on our comparison with the original four provinces.

The result of the decision which has been given upon this question fixing the comparison with Canada as it may be from time to time; was this. That whereas the words 'four provinces' are used specially in section 51, the Supreme Court of Canada decided that the word 'four' should be read out of it, and that the word 'seven' which was the number of provinces which existed at that time, should be substituted for the word 'four'. That was a case in which you had the letter of the law interpreted on account of the meanings which were given to the word 'Canada' in other portions of the Act. But when I read section 51 you will see the situation perhaps more clearly than I have been able to present it. Section 51 of the British North America Act says:

> On the completion of the census in the year 1871 and of each subsequent decennial census the representation of the four provinces shall be adjusted by such authority, in such a manner and from such time as the parliament of Canada from time to time provides, subject and according to the following rules.

Subsection 4 contains these words:

> On any such readjustment the number of members for a province shall not be reduced unless the proportion which the number of the population of the province bore to the number of the aggregate population of Canada at the then last preceding readjustment of the number of members for the province is ascertained at the then latest census to be diminished by one-eleventh part or upwards.

It was contended on behalf of the provinces that the word 'Canada' in that subsection 4 should be interpreted to mean Canada as originally constitued by the original four provinces. It has been decided not to mean the four provinces which were the parties dealt with by this section; but the word 'four' is stricken out, and the word 'seven' used. Hence the smaller provinces are in this position, that in comparison with Quebec, by whose developments we are to be judged, we are face to face with an anomalous condition of affairs which the fathers of confederation never thought of, in the tremendous development of the Northwest. We do not ask anything unfair; we do not ask that the view which the fathers of confederation held was the correct view in 1867 should be subverted; but we do ask you to say that, whereas in the latter portion of the nineteenth century there has been a development in our national life which those men never thought of forty years ago, that unusual development should not bring about a condition of affairs as a result of which these smaller provinces by the sea would be prevented from having those full rights which they had at the time of confederation, and their full share in the doings of the nation which they were intended to have when the partnership was originally formed. I do not wish to detain the House further than to make clear what our position is; but this motion is the natural consequence of the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada and the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. I may be permitted to re-state the fact, which every man who appreciates fair-play and common sense will admit, that no province came into this Dominion with the idea that it was going to have less representation at any time afterwards than it had at the beginning. I think that every one will concede as a matter of common sense and fair-play that the people of the province of Prince Edward Island would not have come into confederation if they had known that as a result of a legal decision their representation in this parliament would be reduced to one member; for the statement of my hon. friend from King's (Mr. J. J. Hughes) is not the statement of a possibility merely, but of an extreme probability if the developments go on in the west which we expect. I submit further that it is in the best interests of confederation that a minimum number should be fixed. We are not asking for any extension of rights. We are not asking that there should be given to us any greater representation than it was always intended we should have. In the United States the little state of Rhode Island, which is less than a postage stamp on the map, retains its senatorial representation to the same extent as the great state of New York; it has the same status in the union as one of the entities that go to make up the United States, as Pennsylvania, Ohio, or any of the other great states; and so far as the provinces by the sea are concerned, looking to the future of Canada, anxious to share in the great events that will come to us, we are here asking the parliament of Canada to accept this resolution asking the imperial parliament to declare that the law is what the fathers of confederation thought was the law—that our status in this country shall remain unimpaired, and that the condition of affairs which has been created as a result of a judicial decision on the letter of the British North America Act should be done away with, and a minimum of representation fixed for the people of the maritime provinces.

Mr. A. A. STOCKTON (St. John City and County). Mr. Speaker, coming from one of the provinces especially affected by the interpretation which has been placed upon the British North America Act by the highest judicial authorities, I feel that I should say something upon the question before the House. The hon. member for Pictou (Mr. E. M. Macdonald) has presented an argument as to the meaning of the term 'Canada' in section 51 of the British North America Act. I remember that the argument of those representing the provinces before the courts was as my hon. friend has pointed out, that is, that 'Canada' meant the four original provinces of the Dominion. Unfortunately for us, however, the judicial committee of the Privy Council held that 'Canada' was not a variable term—that we could not apply to it in 1867 a meaning different from its meaning in 1902 or 1903. I quite agree, however, with my hon. friend that it was fairly understood by all the framers of the Confederation Act that there never should be any diminution of the representation of the provinces named in that Act; and why do I come to that conclusion? We must bow to the decision of the Judical Committee of the Privy Council, which is the highest appeal authority for us within the empire. Under the British North America Act we were to have fifteen members from the province of New Brunswick, nineteen from the province of Nova Scotia, and six from the province of Prince Edward Island was provided by the terms of Union with the latter province. Now, it was supposed that as we took Quebec as the pivot, there would never be any diminution of the representation of the other provinces; and if the confederation had been permitted to stand as it began, I do not believe there ever would have been any diminution in the representation. The fault that I have found is that there has been a change in the pivot, that the territorial boundaries of the province of Quebec have been increased to such an extent as to be unfair to the other provinces of the Dominion, by disturbing the respective representations of the different provinces. I do not know how far—I have not looked into that question—there would have been a change in the representation of the different provinces in the last re-adjustment if there had been no change in the territorial boundaries of the province of Quebec. If we look into that question, I think we shall find that there would not have been the change there has been. At the same time, Sir, looking at this matter from a constitutional standpoint, I express the opinion which I have expressed before on the floor of this House, that the smaller provinces, the weaker parties to the confederation, should be careful how they endeavour to get away from the fundamental principles of the constitution—that we should stand as firmly as we possibly can by the terms of the British North America Act. But there is force in what my hon. friend from the county of Pictou says, that it was never understood that there should be any diminution of the representation of the different provinces; but the pivot has been changed, and as a result the principle of representation as between the different provinces has been disorganized.

I am not going to prolong the discussion. I merely mentioned that it is unfair to the other provinces that that change should have taken place, and in consequence of that change the time may come, as my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island (Mr. J. J. Hughes) has said, when they will have but one or two members from the little province of Prince Edward Island and only four or five members from the small province of New Brunswick or from the province of Nova Scotia. That was never intended by the framers of confederation, and I am quite satisfied that the right hon. gentleman who leads the House (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), who leads the government to-day, never for a moment in his political history supposed that that was going to be the case. Some person has handed a note to me to say that it would be especially unfair to Prince Edward Island, because Prince Edwad Island can never be increased in area. The same argument applies, as pointed out by the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. E. M. Macdonald) with reference to New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. Nova Scotia cannot extend its boundaries unless it runs out into the sea. The province of New Brunswick cannot extend its boundaries unless it takes in some part of Nova Scotia or a portion of Quebec, or probably, as my hon. friend (Mr. Fowler) suggests, some of the state of Maine. There is not much probability of that, but if we did we would only get back probably what we are entitled to. I do not intend to prolong the discussion except to say that the fault I have to find is that there was a change in the method of computation in the pivotal province of Quebec, in extending the boundaries of that province to the detriment of the maritime provinces.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN (Queen's, P.E.I.). I quite agree with the remarks made by the hon. member for St. John county (Mr. Stockton), and I am of his opinion that the pivotal province of Quebec has been changed by the reason of the great increase of territory which that province has acquired since 1867. The case of Prince Edward Island especially has been very ably put by the hon. members for King's (Mr. J. J. Hughes) and Queen's (Mr. Martin) and the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. E. M. Macdonald) has backed them up well and presented the case in a clear light. The legal aspect of this case was threshed out, so far as Prince Edward Island was concerned, before the Supreme Court of Canada and also before the Privy Council in London. Prince Edward Island was ably represented by Mr. Aylesworth, now the Postmaster General. Mr. Aylesworth in presenting the case for Prince Edward Island stated that an agreement had been reached between the province of Prince Edward Island and the Dominion of Canada that Prince Edward Island should have a representation in the Dominion parliament of six members. He stated, and the same statement was made here to-day by the hon. member for King's (Mr. J. J. Hughes), that Prince Edward Island had refused in 1864 to join the confederation because they could not come to an agreement with the other provinces as to the number of representatives which the province should have in the parliament of Canada. Canada, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia were willing to concede to Prince Edward Island five representatives in the Dominion parliament. Prince Edward Island asked for six, to which number, as the member for Pictou (Mr. E. M. Macdonald) stated, the province was not entitled at that time. But it asked for six and the other provinces would not concede the point. Subsequently, owing to representations made from London and also to an agreement which was entered into between Prince Edward Island and the Dominion government, they came to an arrangement that Prince Edward Island should be represented in the parliament of Canada by six representatives. This was purely and simply a matter of agreement. Prince Edward Island at that time was not entitled to six representatives, but as Mr. Aylesworth said in his argument before the Supreme Court of Canada, and I take it that this is a matter which should have the greatest weight with the government of Canada in asking the British parliament to pass a law to give Prince Edward Island the representation which it had when it entered into confederation in 1873:

> It came to be a matter of agreement between the Dominion on the one part and the Island on the other, and it was settled that there should be six representatives, and upon that footing and basis these addresses were passed by the provincial Houses at Charlottetown, and by the Dominion legislature here and incorporated in the Queens Order in Council admitting the province.

By some oversight it was incorporated in the resolution that Prince Edward Island should be subject to all the provisions of the British North America Act and this privilege which the province was fighting for from 1864 and which was conceded to them in 1873, was overlooked and the province entered into confederation by resolution of the Privy Council under the provisions of the British North America Act, with reference to representation.

There is no doubt in my mind, there was no doubt in Mr. Aylesworth's mind when he argued this case, and I do not think there was any doubt in the minds of the members of the Supreme Court of Canada, that this agreement had been made between Prince Edward Island and the Dominion of Canada that they should be entitled to six members in this House, but the fact remained that when this matter came up in 1903, there was a law and the parliament of Canada had to take the law as they found it. Mr. Aylesworth ably argued his case. He went on in his argument, as will appear at page 601 of the report:

> Now according to representation by population there was no such right. If one had divided the population of Prince Edward Island as it stood in 1873 by the unit fixed in section 51 of the statute in reference to the population of Quebec, the Island would not have been entitled to six members at all, it would have been entitled to barely five, and that circumstance coupled with the fact that the province had been, from the time of the original proposal of confederation, standing for better terms, so to say, standing out for larger representation; now that the terms of union were being arranged it was stipulated on their part and agreed to by the Dominion that they should have a representation larger than their population entitled them to.

This was a matter which the Dominion government was justified in conceding to any province, particularly to Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland these colonies need not come in under the British North America Act on the same terms as the four original provinces. The Dominion parliament had power to concede them greater representation than, according to population, they were entitled to under the British North America Act. Prince Edward Island thought they were getting this, but, by an oversight they came under the provisions of the Act and they are today entitled to a representation in this House of only four members. Now suppose the population of Canada and Quebec increases as it has during the last ten years, what will be the condition of Prince Edward Island and of the provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, perhaps 25 years from this time? We will not, I consider in 25 years be entitled to more than one representative in this House. I do not think the framers of the resolution which admitted Prince Edward Island into this Dominion thought for one moment that Prince Edward Island was to come into the union other than under the terms of the agreement referred to. That is a matter which the leader of this House and his government should represent to the Imperial parliament in asking that a law should be passed by the Imperial parliament conceding to Prince Edward Island and the maritime provinces the representation to which they are entitled, and which it was the intention of the framers of the constitution they should have in this House.

Mr. F. B. CARVELL (Carleton, N.B.). I consider this matter, Mr. Speaker, of so much importance to the province of New Brunswick, that I do not feel justified in allowing it to go by without giving my views on the question. It was considered so important in the province of New Brunswick that our provincial government undertook to pay the expenses of laying this matter before the Supreme Court of Canada as a special case and of appealing from the adverse decision of that court to the Privy Council of England. Unfortunately—and I use the word advisedly because I think it was a great misfortune—the Privy Council upheld the decision of the Supreme Court, and as the result of the consequences of that decision have been ably set forth by my hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Macdonald), I need not refer to the legal side of the question, but there is another side which I think of much greater importance. It is within the knowledge of many hon. members of this House, it is in fact a matter of history, that many serious objections were raised by the maritime provinces against entering confederation. It is of course a matter of history that insuperable difficulties had arisen between the old united provinces of Canada, consisting then of the two provinces now known as Quebec and Ontario, which rendered it impossible to carry on government in these united provinces, and the best means that could be devised to get rid of the deadlock was to confederate all the British American provinces. For that reason mainly was confederation brought about. It is also known that the province of Prince Edward Island at first absolutely refused to take any part in confederation. It is equally of record that the provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia at first refused and in fact it was only after considerable discussion and perhaps enlightenment that these two provinces were induced to join with the others ; but I would like to ask the right hon. the leader of the government and every hon. gentleman in this House if at that time any one supposed that these provinces could have been induced to join confederation had they ever imagined that the representation which they were given by the last draft of the Quebec resolutions would eventually become reduced below that number. I admit that the basis of representation from the different provinces was to be governed by population. There is no escaping from that proposition. I also admit that that is the stumbling block against which we are face to face. But I submit that the principle of representation by population was not held inviolable or unchangeable like the laws of the Medes and Persians. Because when Prince Edward Island afterwards came into the union that province was actually given six members, when, according to population, it was only entitled to five. And again when British Columbia joined the union, it was given six members, and it was further provided that its representation should never be less. Therefore the principle of representation by population is not something which cannot be changed and which we need have any scruples about asking the imperial parliament to change.

Unfortunately the courts havt decided that the legal construction of the sections in the British North America Act compels us to submit to a decrease in our representation, but as has been ably pointed out by the hon. member for St. John's (Mr. Stockton) and also by the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald), the great difficulty arose from the fact that the unit has been changed, that the boundaries of the province of Quebec have been increased very largely, and the question is not now so much what took place in the past when confederation was framed. It is not such a serious matter that New Brunswick should have lost two members, Nova Scotia one, and Prince Edward Island two. That could pass. While serious enough, is not so very serious. It is not so serious that we could not get along if no further changes took place. But the thing I am afraid of, the thing which looks unavoidable, is that on account of the increase of territory of the province of Quebec, it is probable that within a few years the representation of the maritime provinces will be so materially reduced that we shall no longer occupy anything like the position we expected we would, and the provinces of Quebec and Ontario and the British government expected we would, when confederation was consummated. We have only to remember that not only are the boundaries of the maritime provinces circumscribed, but the chances for increase in population, the prospects of maintaining our own, are not nearly as satisfactory as are those in the province of Quebec. We have not in the interior of New Brunswick any large quantity of land fit for settlement such as there is in the province of Quebec. We have very large quantities of land immensely valuable as timber property, but unfortunately, while worth almost untold dollars, that does not increase our population. Nova Scotia fortunately is in a better position. That province has vaulable mines and fisheries, but as an agricultural country can never hope to compare with the province of Quebec. On the other hand, while the province of Prince Edward Island possesses every advantage from an agricultural standpoint, its boundaries are so circumscribed that in these days, when by means of machinery one man can cultivate as much land as four or five could thirty or forty years ago, we can expect no possible increase in the population of that province to compare with the growth in the province of Quebec. Therefore the natural possibilities of increase in population in the three maritime provinces are very much circumscribed compared with those in the province of Quebec. We all know that an immense territory has been opened up in the northern portion of Quebec. This territory which has been added to that province since confederation is going to be traversed by the Transcontinental Railway. Lands have been opened up upon the headwaters of the rivers entering the St. Lawrence, which were heretofore considered unfit for settlement. Lands are being opened up today in that province which in 1866 were supposed to be barren and unfit for cultivation or the support of any reasonable amount of population. For these reasons it seems to me a great injustice to the maritime provinces that they should be compelled to submit to any decrease in their representation. Unfortunately the Act of Confederation has been construed against us by the courts but it seems to me that we can, with every right and claim to justice, ask this parliament to go to the imperial parliament and there have this wrong righted which has resulted from the British North America Act of 1867.

Mr. A. A. LEFURGEY (Prince, P.E.I.). I do not intend, Mr. Speaker, to take up much of the time of the House as this matter has been very well discussed by the hon. members who have preceded me and I had occasion, when the Representation Bill was before the House, a year or two ago, to go into it particularly as regards the claims of Prince Edward Island. However, I may say that I am in entire sympathy with this motion. At the time this question was being discussed before, I suggested that if this parliament would not take the responsibility of giving Prince Edward Island the representation we had at entrance into confederation and to which we are fairly entitled, namely, six members, and if the decisions of the Supreme Court and the Privy Council should go against us, an address should be sent from this House to the Throne asking that the constitution be amended so as to apply a remedy, and I believe that upon that occasion the right hon. leader of the government suggested to me that means of meeting the difficulty. It was also supported by, and I believe had the sympathy of a great many members of this House. The hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Haggart) on that occasion suggested this, and the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Logan). I think it would be better now, if the government is not prepared to accept this motion, that a sub-committee of this House should be appointed to look into the situation; and if it found, as I believe it can be clearly shown beyond peradventure, that Prince Edward Island was entitled by the intention of the framers of the bond of confederation to have six members in perpetuity representing her in this House, then I think this House is in honour bound, on the report of such committee, to petition the Imperial authorities to have that intention expressed in the bond. Now that we have had a decision of the Privy Council on the legal construction of the bond of confederation, saying that we were not entitled to the six members, I believe it is proper for this House to take some action with a view to providing that the intention of the parties to the union, the intention on both sides, is carried into effect. The intention of the parties to confederation as regards Prince Edward Island has been ably shown by the hon. member for King's (Mr. J. J. Hughes) who quoted from the leading men of the conference of 1864 who represented on that occasion Prince Edward Island, showing that this point was always in the foreground, and was the obstacle on that occasion which prevented the island coming into conferedation. Her representatives claimed that on account of our isolated position, and the possibility and probability that the population of Quebec would increase very rapidly, ultimately we would be left without any representation. You will find from the quotations made by my hon. friend from King's, and from others that I could give, and have quoted previously, that our province would not have entered confederation had she not been assured that six members would be given her in perpetuity. For some reason that condition was not placed in the terms of the bond, although the intention of giving her that representation was clearly manifest; and I think under these circumstances we are in honour bound to have it placed there. The right hon. leader of this House said, in 1903, that we had acquiesced in the reduction on two occasions. In 1882 when the Redistribution Bill was before the House, Prince Edward Island was only entitled to five members according to the unit of population, but she retained her six members. That was when the Rt. Hon. Sir John A. Macdonald was leader of this House, and it is to be remembered that in 1873 he was at the head of the conference held with a view to bringing Prince Edward Island into confederation; and it is reasonable to suppose that if it had not been the intention of the conference to give Prince Edward Island six members in perpetuity, this parliament in 1882 would have reduced her representation to five. But as I have said before, discussion at the conference showed on the part of leading men on both sides that it was intended that the island should have six members in perpetuity. I trust therefore that the government will take this matter up seriously, because it means, as has been pointed out by my hon. friend from Queen's (Mr. A. Martin), that if the present movement goes on for another decade or two, the representation of Prince Edward Island will be pulled down to one, and indeed we may suppose that as time goes on we shall have absolutely no representation at all under the present rule regarding representatives. The point that has been brought out regarding the increased area of Quebec is also deserving of a good deal of consideration. Already that area has increased her population, and will do so to a much larger extent in the future, and consequently will raise the unit of representation. The increased area given Quebec is 59 times as large as the province of Prince Edward Island. You will see therefore, Mr. Speaker, that our fears are justifiable that if the present rule is continued, and the present increase of unit of representation maintained, the time will come when we shall have no representation at all.

Mr. LEFURGEY.

Mr. TURGEON moved the adjournment of the debate.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). I understand that several members desire to speak on this question who are not present. It is one of great importance, and the government have no objection to the adjournment.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The right hon. gentleman might say further that he himself suggested the adjournment, if he were inclined to be frank about it.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The subject is one of great importance, and it is desirable that it should be discussed and brought to a conclusion, and not buried. Therefore I trust the adjournment of the debate does not mean that we shall hear no more of it.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It will be placed on the order paper for next Monday.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

THE MONTREAL HARBOUR BOARD.

Mr. L. A. A. RIVET (Hochelaga) moved :

For copies of all documents, correspondence, reports and resolutions received by the government, or by the Department of Marine and Fisheries, from the Chamber of Commerce and the Board of Trade of Montreal, or from any corporation or private individual, respecting the reorganization or abolition of the Montreal Harbour Board.

He said : My object in introducing this motion is mainly to call the attention of the House to a question which has engrossed public opinion in Montreal, and it is one with which the country as a whole is at the present moment deeply concerned. For some years past the trend of public opinion in Montreal has been in favour of making some change in the constitution of the Montreal Harbour Board. That public feeling, though at first it was not very marked, has grown until now it is asserting itself in no unmistakable way through the leading organs of the press, and by resolutions passed by the Montreal Board of Trade.

These expressions of opinion are of such import,—the state of things which they have in view is pregnant with such far-reaching results as regards the general interests of the metropolis, and of the Dominion at large, —that this House should not be left in ignorance of them. And while there is not likely a single hon. gentleman in this House who is not aware of their existence and of their purport, I deem it advisable to introduce them as a subject worthy of the attention of this House. I do not propose to indulge in any lengthy remarks. I simply want to direct the attention of the House to the state of affairs and to the reasons which have led public opinion in Montreal to ask for a change. The port of Montreal, I suppose, like most of the Canadian ports is under the management of a commission, which is composed of representatives of the government, the boards of trade, the city of Montreal, the shipping federation and the Montreal Corn Exchange. This state of affairs has been in existence now for fifty years. In 1852 the powers which were possessed by Trinity House, which then had jurisdiction over the harbour and also, if I am not mistaken, over the ship channel and the navigation of the St. Lawrence between Montreal and Quebec, were transferred to a body which was constituted by statute and which body was incorporated under the name of the Commissioners of the Montreal Harbour. In 1855, by another statute, this body was composed of five members, three to be appointed by the government, one by the board of trade, and one by the shipping federation. The constitution of the Harbour Commission was altered twice. At the present time it is composed of 11 members, six representing the government and five representing the city of Montreal, the board of trade, chambre de commerce, the Montreal Corn Exchange, and the shipping federation. In 1889, by a statute passed by this parliament, the government took over the ship channel or, took over the control of and jurisdiction over the navigation of the St. Lawrence between Montreal and Quebec, and at the same time assumed the debt which had been incurred by the commissioners of $3,000,000 in the deepening and improvement of the channel. In 1903 another statute was passed by this parliament by which the jurisdiction which had been exercised over the harbour improvements by the Department of Public Works was transferred to the Department of Marine and Fisheries. That is now the present state of affairs in regard to the administration of the port of Montreal. Now, Mr. Speaker, has the system of management of the harbour been satisfactory, to Montreal and the country at large ? I have not the least hesitation in answering, 'yes.' In the half century during which the commissioners of the harbour had control very extensive improvements were accomplished not only in the port, but also along the ship channel. It is not necessary for me to refer in detail to these improvements. Suffice it to say that the harbour commissioners have been, as a rule, conscious of their responsibility and have certainly effected a number of improvements which have facilitated ocean navigation in the St. Lawrence river and attracted to the port of Montreal a great deal of traffic which otherwise would have been diverted to American roads and American ports. Amongst those who have accomplished these great results I felt it my duty to recall the name of one man whose memory is still honoured by the citizens of this country ; I mean the Hon. John Young. Every one in this House knows that the Hon. John Young accomplished more than any one else towards the improvement of the St. Lawrence and the improvement of the port of Montreal, and the Act which was passed last year authorized the harbour commissioners of Montreal to erect a monument on one of the public squares as a just and due recognition of the great services which he rendered not only to the province, but to the country at large.

If the system of management of the port of Montreal has been satisfactory up to the present time how is it that there is a movement on foot which has for its object the reorganization of that board ? It seems to me, Sir, that for the last few years, taking into consideration the many expressions of opinion which I have heard in Montreal from the leading financiers, business men and especially those in the shipping interest—and these are opinions which cannot be ignored—that the commissioners have not met with the general approval of the citizens of Montreal or of the public at large in the management of the port. In order to meet the growing needs of the trade and in order to cope successfully with competition offered by foreign routes, especially by the New-York route, the commissioners had, a few years ago, to undertake some very extensive improvements in the harbour of Montreal. These included high level wharfs, elevators and sheds. Some of these works have been accomplished. Others are actually in course of achievement. But the fact is undeniable that they have not been accomplished with the speed that is necessary to meet the crying needs of the trade and to offset foreign competition. This state of affairs is calculated to cause not only disappointment but also a great deal of harm. Owing to lack of proper accommodation in the harbour a great deal of the traffic, especially of the western traffic, which used to pass through our channels is now diverted to American ports. That is the reason why, at the present time, public opinion is almost unanimously in favour of a radical change in the management of the port of Montreal. About this point, I do not think there is a doubt. As to the nature of the change opinions differ. I have heard many expressions of opinion. There is an opinion prevailing in some quarters to the effect that the harbour of Montreal should be placed under a system of municipal management. If I am not mistaken a French paper of Montreal has spoken of that system, but rather in a condemnatory way. That is also my position. I do not believe in the municipalization of the port of Montreal. I have the greatest confidence in the wisdom of the city fathers of Montreal, and I have no doubt that they would endeavour to carry out successfully the improvement of the port. I assert, Sir, that it is a national necessity that the port of Montreal shall be brought under the immediate control and jurisdiction of the government of the Dominion. There have been two important expressions of opinion from the commercial interests of Montreal on this question ; I refer to the resolution adopted by the chambre de commerce de Montreal, and the memorial presented by the Montreal Board of Trade. The resolution adopted by the chambre de commerce reads as follows

Considering that the chambre de commerce has reason to deplore the slowness with which the improvements to the harbour of Montreal are being prosecuted ;

Considering that this chamber, as well as the country at large, recognize the desirability of declaring the port of Montreal a national port:

Resolved, that this chamber request the Dominion government to have the necessary legislation enacted, during this session, which will vest in said government full control over the management of the harbour of Montreal.

That resolution means the abolition of the board of harbour commissioners and the establishment of state control. The expression of opinion by the Montreal Board of Trade is set forth in a memorial addressed to the Hon. L. P. Brodeur, Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and it reads:

The Montreal Board of Trade,
Montreal, March 15, 1906.

To the Honourable L. P. Brodeur,
Minister of Marine and Fisheries, Ottawa.

The memorial of the council of the Montreal Board of Trade humbly showeth :

That your memorialists have repeatedly urged upon the Dominion government the importance of its assuming the existing obligations of the Montreal Harbour Commissioners and the cost of maintaining the port of Montreal, in order that the trade of the country may for ever be freed from the harbour charges now imposed :

That the Dominion government has expended large sums of money upon its canal system, the channel of the St. Lawrence and aids to navigation, in order to develop the carrying trade of Canada and that your memorialists submit that the object of such expenditure will be defeated if the Montreal harbour dues are not abolished at an early date and Montreal created a free national port.

That the growth of trade and the increase in transportation facilities render urgently necessary the early completion of the projected improvements in the harbour ;

That most unfortunately there has been for several years undue delay in the progress of the improvement works in the harbour and that even at the present time, owing to the lack of harmony between the members of the commission and its officers, a deadlock exists which has retarded the carrying on of the works during the past year.

That although navigation will be open in a few weeks yet owing to the aforesaid deadlock there will be no more berth accommodation in the harbour than at the close of last season, a fact which will seriously restrict the trade of the port ;

That your memorialists deem it urgently necessary in the interests of the port of Montreal and also of that vast section of the Dominion which it serves, that the projected harbour improvements should immediately be pushed to completion ;

That your memorialists have arrived at the conclusion that such speedy completion of the works can only be accomplished by a reorganization of the board of harbour commissioners;

That your memorialists therefore urge the Dominion government to take immediate steps towards such re-organization by introducing at the earliest possible date during this session of parliament an amendment to the Act whereunder the number of commissioners shall be reduced from eleven to three, and your memorialists consider that these three commissioners should be men closely in touch with the commercial, shipping and transportation interests of the city, who, in return for a liberal remuneration, shall engage to devote a large part of their time to the duties devolving upon them ;

That your memorialists consider that if the harbour commission should be thus re-organized it would be in the best interests of the port that the Montreal Board of Trade, whose members supply the greater part of the revenue obtained from inward and outward cargoes. should have the right through its council to nominate one of the said three commissioners until such time as the Dominion government is prepared to assume the obligations of the harbour commission.

(Sgd.) P. H. MATHESON.
President.

GEO. HADRILL,
Secretary.

Signed on behalf of the council of the Montreal Board of Trade, March 15, 1906.

Mr. BERGERON. By whom is that signed?

Mr. RIVET. It is signed by Mr. P. H. Matheson, president, and Mr. Geo. Hadrill, secretary of the Montreal Board of Trade. The memorial of the Montreal Board of Trade seems to be of a more conservative character than the resolution of la chambre de commerce, but the object of both is substantially the same; they both seem to have in view that the government should take over the port of Montreal and declare it a free national port. That question is one which now presents itself to the serious consideration of this government and of this parliament. From 1852 to 1889 the Montreal ship channel was under the control and jurisdiction of the Montreal harbour commissioners, who, I give them the credit of saying, have accomplished very essential improvements and greatly developed the facilities for navigation in the channel. In 1889 the Dominion government saw fit to accede to the repeated representations of the commission and they decided to take over the control of the ship channel. And why? It was because it was considered that the deepening of the ship channel was not a work of a local character, but was just as much a work for the advantage of the whole Dominion of Canada as the enlargement of the canals. It was decided then that the ship channel work should be carried out at the public expense. Now, cannot the same argument be used with reference to the port of Montreal? Bearing in mind that port terminal facilities at Montreal are to-day more required than ever before, and remembering also that at no distant date this parliament will be called up to complete the task begun in 1889, let us consider if the time has not arrived when the government of this Dominion should declare the port of Montreal a free national port. It is not for me to suggest what is the best solution of this question. I am perfectly prepared to stand by any policy which may be adopted by this government to improve the present state of affairs in the harbour of Montreal. I have stated that there have been delays in the work of improving the harbour. Those who have looked closely into the management of the harbour have been pointing out that there are three factors lacking in the management of the port which are essential to its efficiency. It is said in the first place, that there is lacking a thorough understanding between the government and the commission. As every one knows, most of the improvements accomplished in the harbour have been effected with the aid of money advanced by this government, and I understand that at the present time the total indebtedness of the Montreal Harbour Commission is $7,200,000, and out of that amount $5,020,000 is due to the Dominion government. This money was voted by parliament upon the condition that all improvements shall be carried out with the consent and approval of the government, represented first by the Minister of Public Works, but under the amended legislation, by the Minister of Marine. It will strike every one that in order that such a division of power should bring satisfactory results, it is indispensable that there should be a cordial understanding between the harbour board and the government. I regret to say that this cordial understanding has not always been present. We all know of the difficulties and delays which have been a feature of the relations between the harbour board and the Hon. Mr. Tarte, when Minister of Public Works, with regard to the erection of high level wharfs in Montreal.

However, every one knows that the Hon. Mr. Tarte exhibited clear sightedness, energy and intelligence in that connection, and that in the end public opinion sided with him. I may remind the House also that his worthy and lamented successor, the Hon. Mr. Préfontaine, met with obstacles in the carrying out of his plans for the improvement of the harbour. I do not mean to say, and no one believes, that in every case the commissioners should have conincided in their views, but it does appear that they have not always exhibited the necessary degree of conciliation or given sufficient attention to the representations of the government. In speaking of these misunderstandings, I mean no disrespect towards or disparagement of any member of the harbour commission, but I say that the interests of this country require that a change should be made. There is a condition which is lacking in the management of the board which is due to misunderstanding between the commissioners themselves. I regret to say that for the last few years, and especially for the last few months, the harbour commission has been the scene of general strife, and that in consequence there has been a deadlock in the management. Is it not natural to infer that on account of that deadlock the improvements of the harbour have been neglected? The management of a great port like Montreal should be the main, if not the sole, occupation of those who compose the commission. I know all the members of the board; they are all honourable citizens, men of high ability, who have attained the highest positions in their respective callings and who enjoy the confidence of all their fellow-citizens. For my part I admire and esteem and respect every one of them, not excepting my honourable colleague, Mr. Bickerdike, who since 1896 has devoted his time and energy to the improvement of our national port. But, Sir, these gentlemen cannot devote all their time to the interests of the harbour; they can give to the work only a few hours per week, in the midst of other cares at times very numerous and exacting, and I believe that, as a result, the improvements of the harbour have been neglected.

With regard to the nature of the change to be effected, I say that at the present time I have no policy to offer. It is for the government of this Dominion to do what is fair and right by our national port. I believe, however, that I am only voicing public opinion in Montreal and propounding what is in the best interests of my constituents, when I say that the government should not defer adjusting the management of the port of Montreal so as to make it better meet present requirements.

Again I say, this is no merely local question. It is a much higher and broader question; it is even a question of national importance. This is not merely my own opinion. In a report made in 1852 to the Board of Harbour Commissioners of Montreal by United States engineers, Messrs. John Childe, W. J. McAlpine and James P. Kirkwood, regarding proposed improvements to the port of Montreal and to the channel of the St. Lawrence, I read the following conclusion:

> The improvements in the channel of the St. Lawrence at or near Montreal, and the construction of the proposed harbour, are not local questions, but of national importance, by which the final success of the scheme of the Canadian public works will be materially influenced.

That report, which is very elaborate, sets forth a fact which is to-day generally admitted, viz.: that the waterways supply the best and cheapest means of communication and that, among the waterways of North America, the St. Lawrence route stands pre-eminent. That report also evidences the fact that the port of Montreal, at the head of ocean navigation and at the foot of the great rapids, is of all the most advantageously situated along that great sea route, and can compete successfully against all United States ports, provided it be suitably equipped. The only waterway capable of competing with the St. Lawrence route is that between New York and Buffalo. But even this route cannot compete to advantage if the port of Montreal be provided with improvements and the accommodation necessary to handle the traffic which naturally would come to it. I might show, by means of more incontrovertible testimony, that the improvement of the port of Montreal is inseparable from the development of our national trade, and for that reason is a great Canadian seaport. It has never been contended that it is the only port, as was stated some time ago in some correspondence which I read. But we do say, in accord with engineers, financiers and business men, that, owing to its geographical situation, that port is the only one which will insure the success of the St. Lawrence route.

There is only one standpoint from which we ought to approach the consideration of this question and that is the national standpoint. Whether we hear from Quebec, from Halifax, from St. John, or from Toronto, we should put aside all sectional considerations and endeavour to serve only the great interests of the country at large; and I say that the longer we delay the improvements in the harbour of Montreal which are at the present time so urgently needed, the severer is the blow which we deal at the prosperity of the Dominion. Now, Sir, I have every confidence that the Dominion government will take the necessary steps to improve the present condition of affairs. In 1896, when the Liberal government came to power, they undertook to make very extensive improvements in the St. Lawrence route. They considered then, as they consider now, that this is the only way to attract to our channels not only the traffic originating within our own country, but also a great portion of the traffic originating in the western states. For the last few years we have been attracting that traffic; but at the present time, as I said before, owing to the lack of proper accommodation in our harbour some of that traffic has been diverted to American routes. Sir, we must approach this question with due consideration and care, and I have every confidence that the Dominion government will act fairly and generously by our national route, and more particularly by the port of Montreal. I have every confidence that the new Minister of Marine and Fisheries, the Hon. Mr. Brodeur, whose patriotism, energy and talents enable him to cope successfully with the task, will act generously and fairly with the St. Lawrence route, and will continue the improvements which have been carried out so ably by his predecessors, and will also act generously by the port of Montreal. The state of affairs in that port at the present time is not satisfactory, not alone to the citizens of the metropolis, but also to the country at large. Therefore I have every confidence that the improvements which are urgently needed at the present time, which are called for by public opinion in Montreal and the whole country, will be effected without any further delay, and I believe, Sir, I am sure, that should those improvements be effected, the Hon. Mr. Brodeur, who is especially entrusted with the management of the port, who has jurisdiction over the port of Montreal, will acquire new titles not only for himself, but also for the government of which he is an honoured member, new titles to the gratitude and confidence of the citizens of this country.

PRIVATE BILLS.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 22) respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.—Mr. Calvert.

Bill (No. 19) respecting the South Ontario Pacific Railway Company.—Mr. Guthrie.

Bill (No. 24) respecting the Campbellford, Lake Ontario and Western Railway Company.—Mr. McColl.

Bill (No 28) respecting the Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway Company.—Mr. Sloan.

WEST ONTARIO PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 26) respecting the West Ontario Pacific Railway Company—Mr. Pardee.

Hon. CHARLES FITZPATRICK (Minister of Justice). I would like to draw attention to the words 'that period' in the fourth line of section 4. There are two periods previously referred to, and I would like to know to which period these words apply.

Mr. SPROULE. That Bill provides that the Governor in Council may grant permission to build branches to the extent of thirty miles.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I draw attention to the uncertainty that results from the use of the words 'or period'. You cannot say whether it refers to two years or to five. I propose that we add the words 'a period of five years.'

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

VANCOUVER AND LULU ISLAND RAILWAY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 29) respecting the Vancouver and Lulu Island Railway Company

On section 1,

The Vancouver and Lulu Island Railway Company may, within five years after the passing of this Act, construct and complete the railways and branches which it has been authorized to construct: Provided that as to so much there of as is not constructed within that period the powers of the said company shall cease and determine.

Mr. DEMERS. The words 'and branches' in the third line were struck out in committee, which I think was a mistake. Section 2 provides that the delay for constructing a branch should commence only after permission is granted by the Governor in Council, and the Governor in Council may not grant that permission for many years.

Mr. SPROULE. Provision was made in the Bill that the two years time limit for commencing was to begin from the date of the passing of the order in council.

Mr. DEMERS. Yes, but as we passed the Bill we gave two years delay in which to commence a branch railway on each of those sections. In that case parliament knows when the delay begins and when it ends. But when you give permission to build branches within two years after the Governor in Council should give permission you do not know where you are, they may not give permission for fifty years. That is why I say we should pass the Bill as it was presented, giving permission to construct the main line and branches within two years. The words 'and branches' should be left in.

Mr. LENNOX. I think there is some misunderstanding about this matter. The Act which this Bill amends provided that there should be a main line and certain branches. As it was explained to us in committee, there was also a power given to the Governor in Council to authorize the construction of other branches not to exceed 30 miles in length in any case. The understanding in committee was, I think, that this section was satisfactory as regards the main line and as regards the defined branches, those branches that were defined in the main Act; but that as regards the branches that might be constructed under an order of the Governor in Council, as the order might not be made for several years to come, it would be unfair to limit the time for commencement within two years. So the committee have not reported the Bill in the manner in which it was understood in committee. I think it would be safer to all parties to refer the Bill back, and I move that it be referred back to the committee.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I might explain that this Bill provides, as the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) has stated, for a main line and some branches. The words 'and branches' here were struck out by the committee, and another clause inserted providing that these branches should be commenced within two years from the time of the passing of the order by the Governor in Council and completed within five years. I think this is as the committee ordered. The second clause will explain that.

Mr. LENNOX. I did not understand you had a second clause there.

Mr. DEMERS. The objection was made that we should not give such a power. This power should be kept by parliament. In a Bill passed a few moments ago we mentioned that the obligation to construct the main line and branches should commence within two years. Why should we give power to build those branches within perhaps fifty years? Why should we leave that power in the hands of a company? I think it is not a wise policy. The other day the Minister of Railways objected to such a policy, he said it was not proper for parliament to grant such a power, and for my part I think we should pass the Bill as it was presented. I move therefore that section 1 be reinserted as the Bill was presented.

Mr. BARKER. It seems to me that when we have adopted the second section, clause 1, without the words 'and branches' is all right.

Mr. DEMERS. I object to striking out the words 'and branches.' If we do not carry section 2 we should reinstate the words 'and branches.'

Mr. BARKER. Had we not better consider that when we take up section 2 and then go back to section 1?

Mr. SPROULE. The reason for leaving this unusual provision in the Bill was the fact that this work had been financed under the original Bill which contained this provision. It was contended by the secretary of the Canadian Pacific Railway, who was there and spoke for the Bill, that they had already financed it with that provision in, and that it would be an injustice to those who had put their money into it to take that provision out now. In view of that, I think it was finally passed by the committee, although it was regarded as a very exceptional thing and the principle as a very unsound one.

Mr. DEMERS. We have their own petition and Bill, we know what they want and they do not ask for clause 2, but they ask for clause 1. I do not see why we should complain.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. A new section has been added to the Bill as section 2. It is as follows :

2. Section 3 of chapter 86 of the statutes of 1901 is amended by adding the following subsection thereto :

2. Such branch lines shall be commenced within two years and completed within five years after the construction thereof has been authorized by the Governor in Council, and if such branch lines are not so commenced or are not finished and put in operation within the said periods respectively, the powers of construction conferred upon the company shall cease and be null and void as respects so much of the said branch lines as then remain uncompleted.

Mr. LENNOX. I have sent for the Act. We cannot get along very well without seeing what we are asked for. But, as I understood it to be explained the day before yesterday the position is this : The former Act provided for the main line, provided for branches that were defined in the ordinary way and in addition provided for branches that might be constructed under the order of the Governor in Council at any time hereafter, these undefined branches not exceeding 30 miles in length. This clause, when it was framed was intended to apply to the main line and the defined branches—those branches which have been laid down and prescribed in the original Act, and if so, the words 'and branches' should remain in the section as it is. I did not understand that the words 'and branches' were to be struck out. Then, I point out that we were not to read that section as applying to the branches which were to be authorized by the Governor in Council ; that is that there might be no such authorization for 10 or 15 years and we could not say that they should be commenced in two years after the passing of this Act. So that, we would require both clauses. It was certainly so understood by the committee at the time. In regard to what the hon. gentleman says about it not being right to have this provision authorizing the issue of the order of the Governor in Council, it seems to be perfectly fair in this case where the enterprise was entered upon, where money was expended and the project financed upon the strength of this legislation. Otherwise, I would be very much opposed to the system of legislating by order of the Governor in Council, but in this case the committee were unanimous in the view that it was fair having regard to the circumstances as they exist.

Mr. DEMERS. I think that this is a very important matter. This is a question that concerns an island, a small territory, and you are granting an unlimited permission to build branches.

Mr. LENNOX. The parties who are promoting this legislation are not here, and I think the only satisfactory way for us to deal with this Bill is to refer it back. I move that it be referred back for consideration.

Mr. CAMPBELL. This matter was very fully considered by the Railway Committee and the committee were almost unanimous in opposition to the power that was granted some five years ago to build branches not exceeding 30 miles by getting the consent of the Governor in Council. The Minister of Railways and Canals thought that that was not the right thing to do and he opposed that principle in any further Bill. But this power, in so far as this Bill is concerned, was granted five years ago, and it is very difficult to take it away now. If we leave the Bill as it is now, without that second amendment, they will have unlimited power to build branches, in the second clause as it has been read by the chairman we limit them and we oblige them after having obtained the power from the Governor in Council to build these branches to commence operations within two years. If they do not do this their powers cease under this Bill. The committee were practically unanimous as to the terms of the second clause which was read and which was formally drafted afterwards by the Clerk of the House. I may say that this is according to the decision of the committee and it seems to me that under these conditions the Bill cannot be very objectionable as it is. If you let it to go without that second amendment then they would have an indefinite power to build branches.

Mr. DEMERS. I beg my hon. confrère's pardon. It is quite the reverse. If we leave clause 1 as it was left in the committee then the time for building the main line is perfectly certain—it is limited to two years and five years—but if we adopt this amendment the result is quite the reverse. We agree on the principle, but we disagree only on the effect of that clause, and I think that everybody who will read the clause will come to the conclusion that for the purpose of limiting the time the clause should be adopted as it was proposed by the company.

Mr. SPROULE. The reason, as I understand it, why the words 'and branches' were struck out was that the original Act provided for completing the railways. The contention of the Canadian Pacific Railway was that the enterprise was financed under this privilege in the Bill, and that it would be an injustice to restrict it in any sense now. Then, for the purpose of compelling them to commence the branches which were authorized by the Governor in Council to be built within two years, and to finish them within five years after the passing of the Bill, this additional clause was put in.

Mr. DEMERS. I move that the words 'and branches' be inserted again in clause 1.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. You cannot do that under rule 72. All you can do is to move that the committee rise and report progress and let the House deal with it.

Mr. HENDERSON. I think there is a very grave doubt as to whether it was the intention of the committee or not to strike out the words 'and branches.' We cannot determine that until we ascertain what is defined in the Act. We have sent for the Act of 1901 and we find that it confirms an Act of the British Columbia legislature passed in 1891 and until we get the statutes of British Columbia passed in 1891 we are unable to ascertain just what branch lines are authorized. If there were branch lines authorized in the original Act then I think the intention of the committee was to extend the power then conferred in reference to these branch lines as well as to the main lines. The new clause was intended to apply wholly to lines authorized by this parliament in 1901 when it gave power to construct lines not exceeding 30 miles in length. We had better not hastily adopt that clause without ascertaining whether there are branch lines authorized by the original of charter.

Mr. SPROULE. I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

KOOTENAY AND ARROWHEAD RAILWAY COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 30) respecting the Kootenay and Arrowhead Railway Company—Mr. Galliher.

Mr. DEMERS. I have the same objection to this Bill as I have to Bill (No. 29). I move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. HENDERSON This Bill is quite different from Bill (No. 29). In this Bill there are no branches in the original charter beyond the branches that may be constructed under authority of the Governor in Council. In this respect this Bill differs quite materially from the other Bill. I understand there is a clause added which provides for the extension of time with reference to the branches to be authorized by the Governor in Council. I am strongly of the impression that this Bill is exactly in the form that the Railway Committee wished it to be.

Mr. DEMERS. I object altogether to giving this power by order in council.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I may inform the committee that the following clause has been added.

Such branch lines shall be commenced within two years and completed within five years after the construction thereof has been authorized by the Governor in Council. If such branch lines are not so commenced or are not finished and put in operation within the said periods respectively, the power of construction conferred upon the company shall cease and be null and void as respects so much of the said branch lines as then remain uncompleted.

Mr. LENNOX. That is what the committee agreed to. We fought out the question of policy in the committee and unless it is intended now to reverse the decision of the committee the Bill should pass.

Mr. HENDERSON. There are no branch lines specifically defined in this Act with regard to which they ask extension of time. The extension of time asked for with regard to branches would relate to the branches to be constructed on the authority of an order in council. This Bill is complete as the Railway Committee intended it to be. The question of policy with regard to the authorization by order in council of a branch 30 miles in length was fully discussed in the Railway Committee and it was considered unfair to change the Act because the Railway Company had negotiated the bonds on the strength of this charter, and to interfere with that would be to interfere with securities which are pledged in the old country.

Mr. DEMERS. The amendment was accepted in the committee because it was more favourable to the company, but my hon. friend knows that with reference to one of these Bills there was read a letter of protest from the people of that country against too long a delay.

Mr. McINTYRE I wish to draw the attention of the Minister of Railways to a point in relation to all railway Bills, though not especially to this one.

Rule 53 calls for the production of a map before the committee, and this map is produced and it shows the proposed line. As soon as the committee rises that map disappears and I am told it is sent to the Senate committee. After that I understand that it no longer belongs to the House or to the Railway Department. I believe that map should be kept in possession of the department, because eventually the company will file its plan for the railway and the Minister has not the benefit of that plan to show him the route of the railway which had been adopted by the committee of parliament. It would be well for the Minister of Railways to see that the map that is filed with the committee should remain the property either of the committee or of the Railway Department, so that when the plan is filed later the minister may be able to know the route of the railway which the committee has endorsed.

Mr. EMMERSON. When the Bill to amend the Railway Act is before the House there will probably be a clause requiring those who make applications under section 122 of the Railway Act to submit their application either the original map used when obtaining the charter or a certified copy thereof which may be used as evidence on the hearing as to the route.

Motion that the committee rise negatived.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY.

On the order:

Second reading of Bill (No. 58), an Act respecting the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company.—Mr. L. G. McCarthy (Simcoe).

Mr. LEIGHTON G. McCARTHY (North Simcoe). Mr. Speaker I desire to say that in my absence the other day the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) introduced a Bill which was on my desk as if it were to be introduced, but which was not the proper Bill. I beg leave, therefore, in place of this Bill to introduce the Bill as it should be. While it is an important Bill, it is a very simple one. It merely asks power, in accordance with section 111 of the Railway Act of 1903, to issue $25,000,000 of debenture stock as required by that section.

Mr. SPROULE. This Bill cannot be introduced unless it has gone before the Committee on Standing Orders and has been reported upon by that committee.

Mr. LEIGHTON G. McCARTHY. The Bill does not go before the Standing Orders Committee. It is only the petition that goes before that committee. The petition prayed for a Bill to enable the railway company to issue debenture stock to that amount, and the petition was duly approved and reported upon.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I think it would be a dangerous precedent to substitute one Bill for another. I can understand that the Bill does not require a petition, as a petition has been reported upon by the Committee on Standing Orders, but by some mistake a Bill was presented which should not have been presented. I think the best course for my hon. friend is to withdraw this Bill and introduce another and have its second reading on Monday.

Bill withdrawn.

Mr. McINTYRE.

STEAMBOAT INSPECTION ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. LEIGHTON G. McCARTHY moved second reading of Bill (No. 16) to amend the Steamboat Inspection Act, 1898.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR. I have no objection to the Bill being read the second time, on condition that it be referred to the same committee as the Bill respecting certificates to masters and mates of ships. The same principle is involved in this Bill as in the other.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and referred to the said special committee.

SAFETY OF SHIPS.

Bill (No. 48) to amend the Act respecting the Safety of Ships.—Mr. Sinclair—read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

On section 1,

Mr. STOCKTON. Will the promoter of the Bill explain its object ?

Mr. SINCLAIR. The purpose of the Bill is to correct a curious anomaly that exists in the law. The law as it stands now was intended to apply to ships of the old style which had not a shelter deck. There is a new type of ship known as the shelter-deck ship, and the construction put upon the law by the board of trade is that wood or lumber is not permitted to be carried between the main deck and shelter deck, excepting to the height of three feet, whereas there are some eight or nine feet of space between the main deck and the shelter deck. This space is inclosed and is as strongly protected as any other part of the ship. Under the existing law you can carry pig iron, coal or any other heavy material there, but you are not allowed to carry wood or lumber. If this Bill becomes law, deals and wood goods may be carried in this space. That is the curious anomaly that exists in the law. I am endeavouring to remove that by striking out the section, and if this amendment is made it will enable a ship owner not only to carry coal or heavy goods of any description in this space, but also to carry deals and boards. It is curious that such a thing should exist in the law but it does. An amendment, I understand, is passing through the Imperial House at the present time for the purpose of correcting the same mistake, and I propose that this Bill shall not come into force until the Imperial Act comes into force. I intend, therefore, if this clause passes to move that a clause be added to the Bill by which it will not come into force until proclaimed by the Governor in Council.

Mr. DANIEL. This, I presume, is intended to allow vessels to carry a deckload of deals after a certain date ?

Mr. SINCLAIR. It is intended to allow vessels to carry deck loads between the main and the shelter deck which is not allowed at present, that is a deckload of lumber. The present law allows them to carry a deckload of any other material except lumber. I am endeavouring to correct that.

Mr. BRODEUR. There is no objection to the Bill as far as the department is concerned. Of course we would like that the clause which is about to be moved by my hon. friend (Mr. Sinclair) should carry, so that the amendment would come into force on proclamation of the Governor in Council ; that is when the Imperial parliament has passed legislation which it is expected they will pass this session. If that Imperial amendment is passed this session the Governor in Council will probably issue the proclamation, but so long as the legislation is not passed by the Imperial parliament it is not intended to have this legislation proclaimed.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I beg to move that the following section be added :

This Act shall come into force on a day to be named by proclamation of the Governor in Council.

Motion agreed to.

Bill as amended reported.

On motion of Mr. Paterson, House adjourned at 9.05 p.m.

WEST BLOCK—COLLAPSE OF NEW TOWER.

On the Orders of the Day being called :

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Carleton, Ont.). Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the government

whether or not they have any information as to the somewhat extraordinary accident that happened within a few feet of us this forenoon. I would like to know to what the accident is supposed to be due and who is charged with the supervision of the work. It seems very remarkable that such an accident should have happened under such conditions; that is what the immediate supervision of the Department of Public Works, at the very centre of affairs, and with the entire force of the department ready at hand to see that the work was properly done. I do not know anything of the details of the accident, except that I understand it was only by a miracle that three or four men did not lose their lives. The accident therefore might have been attended with very much more serious consequences than those which fortunately have been present. I fully realize, of course, that it is not possible at this early hour to give the result of any detailed investigation or examination, but I would suggest that some information might be vouchsafed to the House on the question.

Hon. CHAS. S. HYMAN (Minister of Public Works). Mr. Speaker, I desire, in the first place, to say that I am very glad indeed that this unfortunate accident should not have been accompanied by any loss of life. Immediately after the accident happened, I instructed the chief architect to make as early a report as possible. He has looked over the work. Of course, it is impossible for him to come to any conclusion in regard to the reason for the unfortunate accident so soon after the occurrence. This is a contract work. The contractor is Mr. Geo. Goodwin. The plans and specifications are exactly in accordance with those used in the construction of the other towers in the buildings and in general work all over. The materials specified are exactly the same as those specified for the other portions of the buildings. Mr. Taylor, one of the most experienced architects in the department, had full and complete charge of the work. It was under his immediate personal supervision. I have not had an opportunity yet of making that full investigation which I purpose making into the whole question of the accident and the reasons which led up to it. I intend to make the most searching investigation possible not only by officers of the department but possibly by those outside of the department, so that the government and the House may be in a position to have a full report in regard to the matter.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. May I ask the hon. gentleman whether or not, in addition to the architect, there was a permanent inspector appointed, whose duty it was to examine the work from hour to hour as it went on?

Mr. HYMAN. Mr. Taylor, who is, as the hon. gentleman knows, employed in the department, had full charge. In addition to that an inspector, who is also employed in the department, had part of the inspection work to do. I have not had a full report in regard to that matter yet, but it is one of the matters which I intend to fully investigate.

Mr. HAGGART. Who was the inspector of masonry?

Mr. HYMAN. Mr. Taylor, one of the chief architects in the department, was actually in charge of the building operations.

Mr. HAGGART. Who was the actual superintendent or inspector or clerk of the works?

Mr. HYMAN. I have not that information yet.

Mr. HAGGART. Was there any?

Mr. HYMAN. I have not inquired as to who was the inspector. However, the moment I get an opportunity, I will bring down full details of the matter. This is practically the first accident of any kind which has occurred in the Department of Public Works, in connection with any building which the department has erected. There has been a large number of works erected and this is the first serious accident that has happened. This is a contract work and there will be no loss by the government. The contractor will be called up to complete the work according to the plans and specifications. I think it will be shown that there is no fault in the plans and specifications under which the building was erected. I have no further information to give the House at the present time, but I will see that the fullest investigation is made.

Mr. HENRI BOURASSA (Labelle). Mr. Speaker, I think it is very important that this inspection should be made by some one outside of a government engineer before any of the materials are removed. Without desiring to throw any reflection upon any of the officers of the department, I think it would be only natural on the part of any officer of the government who would go on the work, to try and protect other officers of the department, who might be responsible. I think the minister should immediately have an outside inspection made.

Mr. HYMAN. I quite agree, and I will see that an outside inspection is made.

Mr. FOSTER. Let not the corpse be removed until the coroner has done his work.

Mr. HYMAN. Well, we will have the coroner on as rapidly as possible.

AGRICULTURAL COMMITTEE—ORDER TO A WITNESS.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). Before the Orders of the Day are called I deem it my duty to bring to the attention of the House a matter of great urgency and importance, as to which its attention cannot be called too soon. A witness under examination before the Committee on Agriculture and Immigration, yesterday—Mr. Scott, superintendent of immigration—received an order from the committee to communicate by cable with Lord Strathcona, High Commissioner in London, as to the standing and other circumstances connected with the North Atlantic Trading Company. That order was to have been executed at once, and the answer of the High Commissioner was to be placed in the hands of the chairman of the committee in the afternoon. I am creditably informed that the Minister of the Interior forbade the witness to carry out the order of the committee, to cable Lord Strathcona the High Commissioner. This interference of a minister of the Crown with a witness acting under the orders of one of the standing committees of this House is a very grave infraction of the privileges of parliament. The day is past when ministers can defy the wish of the House of Commons or any of its committees, and having been informed on reliable authority of this interference it is my duty to call the attention of the Minister of the Interior and of the government to this matter. I hope the minister will give the House an assurance that the order of the committee given to its witness who is an official under the control of the minister, will be executed at once. We have not gone back 150 years; we are living in a century when parliamentary authority even over ministers must predominate. We cannot revindicate too soon our privileges in that regard.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). I think my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) must be under some misapprehension. I can assure him and the House that certainly I never interfered or never wished to interfere with any order issued by a committee of the House. I can give the hon. gentleman the most positive assurance on that point. As I understand the workings of parliamentary government here, I have no authority to interfere, and my instructions to an officer of mine would have to take second place to the order of a committee of the House. I cannot imagine that such an absurd position could be taken as that an order issued by a committee of this House could be countermanded by myself even if I had the wish to do it, which I most certainly say I have not.

Mr. MONK. Mr. Speaker, my informant is the witness himself. It was understood when we left the committee that I would communicate with Mr. Scott in the afternoon to find out what answer he had received from the High Commissioner. I communicated with Mr. Scott after 3 o'clock and that gentleman informed me that he had not even sent the cable ordered by the committee; that the minister had told him not to do so; that if the committee wished to communicate with Lord Strathcona it had money at its disposal and it could do so itself.

Mr. OLIVER. That rather puts a different face on the affair. If I understand it right now from the hon. gentleman who has spoken, the committee issued an order to me to communicate with Lord Strathcona.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. OLIVER. Because, if the committee wish to order me to communicate with Lord Strathcona, not being a witness before the committee I was not I think required to accept that order.

Mr. MONK. Did the hon. gentleman say that to this witness?

Mr. OLIVER. Well, I did not see the witness nor did I have any communication with him since the witness appeared before the committee. However, I hope the position is clear. That a committee of this House has full authority to send for persons and papers and to require any communication that it wishes to send, to be sent. There can be no question about that. I cannot understand how the idea can have been arrived at, that even if I had wished to interfere with the orders of the committee I have any authority to do so.

Mr. SPROULE. That seems to be the preposterous part of it.

Mr. OLIVER. It is preposterous. I submit to the House that I am not responsible for a preposterous supposition that may be entertained by hon. gentlemen on the other side.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Well, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me the matter is not quite so clear as the minister would have us suppose. We have the definite assurance of the minister that he has not communicated in any way with the witness; we have the definite and distinct assurance of the witness, (according to my hon. friend from (Jacques Cartier) that the minster did communicate with him and order him not to send the cablegram. It is a matter which the minister should take in hand at once, and inform the House how it is that this extraordinary misunderstanding has occurred. One thing at least seems to be clear: That the witness was directed by the committee to send a certain cablegram for information that is not available here; that that cablegram has not been sent; that therefore no answer has been received; that therefore the information is not forthcoming and that the action of the witness must be due to some cause. It is not due to the minister as the minister assures us. It is the duty of the minister to ascertain at once why an officer of his department should have made so extraordinary a misstatement and why it is that the direction of the committee has not been complied with.

Mr. MONK. I may say that the witness stated in the committee that he was ready to send the cable—it was he who suggested it as a means of getting the information—and that he would send it at once provided he did not have the disapproval of his minister.

Mr. OLIVER. Oh, then the matter is not quite so clear. I understand now, Mr. Speaker, that the witness did not undertake to send a cable and was not ordered by the committee to send it.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Yes he was.

Mr. OLIVER. There seems to be a very radical misunderstanding as to what the witness was instructed to do. Now I say that if the committee did instruct Mr. Scott to send that message and Mr. Scott did not send the message, then Mr. Scott is subject to discipline on the part of the committee. That is as I understand the matter. But, that if the committee saw fit to hold a discussion with Mr. Scott in regard to a certain cablegram which was to be sent or was not to be sent on the responsibility of myself as minister, then, I do not see that the witness is to be subject to the discipline of the committee or that any fault has been committed either by him or by myself. If the committee has any orders to give let the committee give its orders and let it be responsible for the carrying out of these orders, but I submit that a discussion or an understanding in which I am involved and in regard to which I did not appear before the committee, is not to the point at all.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. According to the minister's own statement, the witness is apparently, at least trifling with the committee. Let us assume that he was to obtain the minister's approval; the minister has given his assurance to this House that he has held no communication whatever with that witness nor the witness with him. Therefore, this witness is trifling with the committee or the minister is trifling with the House; one or the other.

Mr. OLIVER. If I may explain the matter to the House it is this: That my hon. friends being anxious to find fault have jumped in and found it where it did not exist, and as a matter of fact on this occasion as on many others all they have found is a mare's nest.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Has the minister held no communication with the witness?

Mr. OLIVER. I have never seen nor spoken to the witness from that time to this.

Mr. SPEAKER. I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that this discussion is all irregular. There is no report of the committee before the House nor any motion before the House.

Mr. BARR. Then, Mr. Speaker, we will move the adjournment.

Mr. E. N. LEWIS (West Huron). Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. There is no occasion at all for moving the adjournment of the House. There is no report of the committee before the House. It may be that there is something extraordinary that may have to be explained, and the committee may perhaps see fit to bring in a report to the House for its consideration and action. But the question brought up by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier is whether the Minister of the Interior gave orders to his subordinate not to issue that telegram. The Minister of the Interior says emphatically that he has given no such order and that he has had no communication with the witness.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. So far as moving the adjournment of the House is concerned, that is not necessary at the moment, though it may be necessary on some future occasion in connection with some matters that the minister has not made quite clear. I understand that the hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Lewis) desires to bring a matter to the attention of the House to-day, and that it is in that connection that he proposes to move the adjournment. I understand he has given notice to the Prime Minister.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. If that is the subject on which the hon. member for West Huron wishes to speak, I would suggest that it will be far better for him to speak on the motion for the House to go into Committee of Supply. It is not a matter of urgency, and my hon. friend will have an opportunity to make his speech either to-day or to-morrow.

CANADA'S MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. LEWIS. I wish to inform the Prime Minister that I have consulted with the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, but not with the Prime Minister, with reference to the matter which I wish to bring before the House. It is a matter which I consider of sufficient importance to justify me in bringing it to the immediate attention of the House. If it is the wish of the Prime Minister that I should not go on—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Go on.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. Speaker, some of my hon. friends around me seem to think that I am very anxious to go on with this matter. It is a matter which has been standing for some time, to which I have given considerable thought, and a matter of great importance and interest to the members of this House and to the people of Canada. During the last few days certain articles in the press have come to my knowledge which make it still more important that this matter should be brought to the immediate attention of the House. I ask the attention of you, Sir, and the hon. members of this House on two grounds. The first ground is that I have not trespassed on the time of this House before to any considerable length. The second ground is that the matter which I require to bring to the notice of the members of this House is one of the utmost importance to the people of Canada. It is in reference to the merchant marine of Canada. On March 28, 1906, the North Sydney 'Herald' had the following :

It is both commendable and practical on the part of the Halifax Board of Trade in calling attention to the surprising declension in the tonnage of vessels registered in Canada in the past thirty years of almost fifty per cent, while our water-borne commerce has increased during that time considerably over fifty per cent : which only goes to show that Canada is losing control of one of her greatest assets, consistent with her growth of commerce should be a proportionate increase of registered tonnage, instead of the regrettable decrease. Doubtless the passing of the old-time barques and sailing ships and their supplanting by the swifter and surer foreign steam freighter will account largely for this.

The organization within the past two years of several steamship companies in Cape Breton and the purchase of foreign steamers is a step in the right direction, giving employment to our own Canadian seamen, and proving that it is one of the best paying investments. The profits made by foreign steamship companies on this coast and the opportunity for employment lost to thousands of Canadian seamen is so apparent, it is surprising that this opportunity for investment has so long been overlooked.

It is generally conceded, Mr. Speaker, that maritime nations have an advantage over inland countries, and it is also conceded that no maritime nation which does not handle its own produce in its own ships can make true progress as a nation. Now, it is contended that the merchant marine of Canada, instead of increasing as it should increase, in view of our opportunities, is decreasing. There are reasons for this. I have facts which show conclusively that Canada is in a better position than almost any other nation of the globe to increase its merchant marine. I have a good case, Mr. Speaker, to lay before this House: and if you do not see it as you should, it will be solely my fault. There is no other question which affects the farmers of Canada as does the shipping question; there is no other question which so affects the labour of Canada. Canadian shipping is not linked with the transportation systems which take the produce of our farmers to foreign markets and I contend that the missing link should be supplied by ourselves. The United States in 1810 had 100,000 tons more of foreign-going shipping than it has to-day. In 1838—and this is a statement which I am prepared to verify—the United States had more foreign-going steam shipping than Great Britain. This is a statement which may surprise a great many. In 1860 the United States was a close competitor with Great Britain; it carried sixty-two per cent of its own produce. To-day it carries only eight per cent. Ninety-two per cent of the exported produce of the United States is carried in foreign ships. What is the case with Canada ? Our ships carry comparatively nothing.

It takes 15,000,000 tons of shipping to carry our produce for a year. And we do not carry any of it. I have the facts and figures to lay before you to show why the state of affairs is what it is and how it can be remedied. Some say that we cannot build ships here because of the high price of labour. Now, here is a statement that I wish to emphasize—that in building a ship, from the digging of the coal, and ore, the making of the plates and other material, to the putting of the finished products together in the form of a ship, ninety per cent of the cost goes to labour. I wish also to say that we here in Canada, are in a better position than are any other people on earth to increase our shipping. We have an object lesson in the experience, in these matters of the two great English-speaking nations. Great Britain, with very little over one thousand miles of coast line and 40,000,000 people has 100 large shipyards. The United States with 10,000 miles of coast line, and 80,000,000 people, has only 20 large ship yards. And what is the reason ? Great Britain, the great free trade country of the world makes an exception to her free trade policy and protects her shipping, while the United States, a protective country does not extend to her ocean shipping the protection it gives to other industries. We also are a protective country, and protect every other industry, but to shipping we afford no protection whatever. In the United States shipping on the lakes is protected. And the United States has on the lakes 55,000,000 tons of the best shipping, for the object in view, that is to be found in the world. The sailors are paid better wages than any others, and the mechanics who build the ships also receive better pay than any others of their class in the world. And, Mr. Speaker, I am a believer in high wages ; I do not believe in the cry of cheap labour. And what is the result of this policy in the United States ? The result is that the United States shipping on the great lakes carries freight at lower rates than prevail anywhere else in the world. Iron ore is carried a thousand miles from the end of Lake Superior to the end of Lake Erie, at from 85 cents to $1.20 a ton. Ships trading to Sweden and sailing under the British flag carry iron ore for a thousand miles at $2.50, that being the best rate they can give. And what is the reason? The United States shipping on the great lakes is protected as completely as is the ocean-going shipping of Great Britain. These ships are not so much built as manufactured with a view to the special trade in which they are to engage; and by the machines which the ingenuity of our southern neighbours has enabled them to build, these ships are loaded and unloaded so quickly that they are kept constantly on the move during the season of navigation, and so they carry in nine months what it takes ocean-going ships of equal capacity twelve months to carry.

Mr. Speaker, I have many facts that I desire to bring before the attention of the House to establish my position in this matter. Speaking for the first time before this highest and greatest legislative body in the Dominion, I may not make my remarks so consecutive as they should be, but I shall be well content if I can convince this House that this matter is one of serious importance to the people of Canada. We have 2,384 miles of waterway from tide-water to the head of Lake Superior at the centre of the continent, and we own the best half of it. But we are not utilizing it. If the United States had such advantages they would certainly use them. Every dollar spent by us or by the United States in improving this great waterway means an increase in the price of the grain of the farmers of Canada. Before these improvements were started on the St. Lawrence and Welland canals it cost from 15 cents to 20 cents to carry a bushel of grain from the head of Lake Superior to Buffalo. And what does it cost to-day? Sometimes as low as 1½ cents. It used to cost $13 to carry a ton of ore from Lake Superior to Lake Erie; it costs 87 cents to-day. But Canada has not done her share in this great development and improvement. In 1878 we had 1,333,000 tons of shipping in Canada. And, according to the last report available, that of 1904, our shipping has fallen off to 667,000 tons—not half of what it was in 1878. And of this shipping that we have, part is made up of worn out ships which we import from Europe—Sweden and other places. I protest against that. We object to diseased and worn out immigrants coming to this country. Why, then, should old ships be brought in to take the place of ships that should be built by our men? We have the ore, we have the coal, we have the skill, we have the brains, to build ships. And if this industry is protected, I contend we can build ships with any nation on the globe.

Where would Japan be if it were not for her ships. In 1894 Japan had 213,000 tons of shipping. Two years ago she had increased that to 913,000 tons. And how about our shipping? In 1874 we built 191,000 tons of shipping; in 1896 when this government came into power we built only 16,000 tons. I am not making a political argument out of this, you will see. And what is it to-day? Comparatively nothing. There were 58 ships added to the registry of Canada last year, and our tonnage increased by about 4,000 or 5,000 tons. But this was in the shape of worn out ships from abroad, tugs, dredges and other craft on the lakes. Our theory in this matter is commendable in its way; the trouble is that we begin at the wrong end. Where are the sailors to man new ships? You can make a soldier in a few hours, if he knows how to shoot. You can build a ship in eight months. But you cannot make a sailor in less than five years. And I contend that every sailor belonging to this country is worth double a man of any other class. He does perilous work from which other men would shrink; he must be a skilled mechanic far above the ordinary workman. But these men do not exist in sufficient numbers in Canada. And why? Because this government, like past governments, has not protected our shipping. We are in the same position with regard to shipping generally as the United States is with regard to ocean-going shipping. Why has not the United States taken this matter up before? Simply for this reason that although all the presidents from Washington down, have advocated what President Roosevelt is advocating to-day, the voters in the interior of the country took a selfish view and did not know that they were voting against the best interests of their country. We are but 6,000,000 people here, but we may yet run a close competition with Great Britain the great maritime nation of the world. I am an optimist, gentlemen. There are two kinds of politicians.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Several kinds.

Mr. LEWIS. There are only two to which I am going to refer. There is one who says 'I view with alarm,' and one 'I point with pride.' I am one of the latter class. I can point with pride to this country and I hope to point with pride to the fact that this parliament has taken hold of the question which I now bring before it. Sir, we are in a favourable position to attain a maritime supremacy—we have the men—we inherit that from away back in the ages to make the best seamen in the world. Why? Because we inherit the blood of the men who manned the cutters of England in the British channel and the luggers of France. If you take the men who sail the bankers in the maritime provinces or the Mackinaws of the great lakes, or the sealers of British Columbia, I say you cannot beat them on the face of the globe, if they have fair play. They are high-priced men, but they are worth the money. I intend to produce to you certain extracts which I have culled from certain documents and papers in reference to this matter. I have taken considerable time over this, as it is a serious matter, and I wish to place these facts on the Hansard of this House. I have here the Canadian Hand-book issued by the government of this country in which it says that Canada now stands seventh on the list of maritime nations of the world. In 1874 there were ships built in Canada of a tonnage of 191,000; but in 1896 of 16,146; in 1904 total tonnage of 672,838; but in 1878 we had a total of 1,333,045.

Our average total external trade for the 3 years, 1901-1903, was $425,959,428, or an increase of $1,000,000 over the average for the preceding three years.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I put these facts before you and I wish to state to you that in the preparation of this statement I have culled over 7,000 pages of documents of the British House of Commons, of the great nation to the south of us and of this country. I am not going to talk verbiage. I think there is too much talking in this House. I have not said very much before to-day because there is nothing that the farmers of this country deprecates as a lot of talk without very much being done.

With reference to the iron trade, we have nine plants making iron in which we have $50,000,000 invested. In British Columbia we have the coal and iron within 20 miles of each other.

The export trade of the port of Montreal in 1895 was $40,000,000 and in 1903 it was $105,750,000. Halifax has the finest of the many great harbours of the empire, capacious enough to afford anchorage for all the navies of Europe. Bedford basin, which has an area of nine square miles, is completely land-locked. In 1871 the total lake traffic on this side of the line was 14,283,000 tons. In 1905 there passed through the St. Mary's canal over 40,000,000 tons. Why, Sir, more traffic passes the city of Detroit and the city of Windsor in one hour than passes any other place in the world in the same space of time. This statement may seem to some of you not acquainted with the circumstances very startling, but it is a fact.

I am a great believer in object lessons, in comparisons, and I shall point for a moment to what has been done in another place. Here is the little republic of Argentine, away down in South America, with the city of Buenos Ayres, and what do you think they have done? They have spent $25,000,000 on their docks and wharfs alone in that one city. The value of the produce exported is $360,000,000 odd, and they have in that small city the finest newspaper building in the world, erected at a cost of $2,000,000, in which 2,000 words are printed every morning, cabled from New York. But there are special difficulties there, for if an American in New York or Baltimore wants to send his goods or a letter to Buenos Ayres what does he have to do ? He has to send it via Liverpool or down by the Panama canal to the straits of Magellan around the Horn and then up to Buenos Ayres. That is why I contend that our Canadian produce should be carried in Canadian ships. Besides the advantage which would accrue to Canada from the return cargoes and the wealth which the Canadian shipowner would bring to this country, every ship going to a foreign land will advertise our country. There is no greater factor in the promotion of foreign trade than the Canadian ship. A Montreal man going to Winnipeg is not going to advertise Toronto goods there. If we send our freight by a foreign vessel do you mean to say that foreign vessel is going to advertise Canada and tell where and how you can get the produce of this country—and our produce is increasing so rapidly that it is essential that we should adopt every possible means to promote our export trade. I venture to say that in five years there will not be enough grain produced in the United States to feed the people of that country. As an object lesson on that, I cite the two great states of Ohio and Illinois. In the last year, 1904-5, these great states did not produce enough grain to feed themselves. I have documents here to prove that assertion.

Since confederation the federal government has spent on railways $152,000,000, besides grants of land, a total expenditure of $1,100,000,000. We have in all 20,814 miles of railway. I contend that these railways should have their own ships so that a man in the Northwest or elsewhere can make a through rate by one company right through to any of the great trading posts in the world. By doing that he gets the skill and the brains and the continuity of the railway company. We should have the railway men with us in this matter, because when you have the railway men you have thousands of the cleverest and brightest men there are in Canada, whether they are constructing a line of railway in the Rockies or building a great station in the city of Ottawa.

At page 147 of the Canadian Hand-book it says:

> The commerce of Canada is largely waterborne. On the Great Lakes, on the Atlantic, and on the Pacific many vessels are carrying the products of the Canadian farm, forest, factory and mine to the markets of the world. Canada employs in her over-sea trade a tonnage of 15,826,705 tons of shipping.

Canada has an immense length of sea coast. The eastern coast from the Bay of Fundy to Belle Isle is 5,600 miles, while the western sea coast of British Columbia is reckoned at double that of Great Britain and Ireland. The salt water inshores of Canada cover 15,000 square miles, not including indentations. There is a nursery for seamen for this country, and we have had the evidence of the reports of this Marine Department that these men are the best sailors on the globe.

Some two years ago I had occasion to compare the men on a Canadian steamer in the harbour of Halifax with the men on British merchantmen of the North Atlantic and the West India fleet. We had there the little steamer 'Acadia' with 36 men, and in all the sports those 36 men carried off the palm. In fact the gig crew there ran away from the navies of the greatest nation in the world although they had 2,000 to choose from. I say the sailors on the great lakes, the sailors of British Columbia and of the maritime provinces cannot be beaten by any other sailors in the world. Take the steamship 'Canada', our only armoured cruiser; she went to the West Indies and there, in competition with a number of fleets of other nations, our men were quicker in gun practice, quicker in rowing, quicker in everything that makes a sailor. These are facts, Mr. Speaker. The fresh water of the great lakes that belong to Canada covers 72,700 square miles, not including the waters of Manitoba and the Territories. The production of the fisheries in 1903 amounted in value to $36,000,000. We have the waters of the Hudson's bay, 1,000 miles long and 6,000 miles broad.

Now I sometimes talk with our cousins the Americans to the south of us who visit us yearly. We are great friends, and I hope we always will be. I say to them, you can talk about your 80,000,000, but I have read the history of the past and I have read about a great nation that came down from the north and swept everything away to the south of them. I contend we are just on the threshold of greatness. We are not at the parting of the ways, but we are like a girl who is just entering her teens, using the years as a skipping rope. Here let me quote from the London 'Times' of February 16, 1905, the greatest paper in the world referring to proposed United States protection law :

> There should be no misunderstanding. Great Britain is shortly to be called upon to face an effort to wrest from her her commercial supremacy at sea beyond all measure more determined and more formidable than any effort which has been made within the memory of the present generation.

That says the London 'Times' of February 16, 1905. We have our share in that, Mr. Speaker, and how can we best play it? I do not wish any one to think that I am talking against imperial federation with the old land, but I think we can best help our mother country and best help our foster mother France to keep peace among nations by looking after ourselves and improving our own position. Now here is a statement from the crop report of the United States, found in No. 38 of the Congressional Records, page 3 :

> No other class of producers for export has as great an interest in the problem and facilities of transportation from the farm to the primary market and from that to the sea-coast and final markets as the farmers have. Three-fifths exports are from farms or manufactured from farm products.

Two years ago the United States of America appointed a commission consisting of five senators and five congressmen who went through the country looking into the merchant marine business. They took eighteen hundred pages of evidence and here is a part of it :

> The merchant marine commissioners in United States after taking evidence from Atlantic to Pacific, and from the Great Lakes to the Gulf of Mexico, say : Public sentiment throughout the United States is practically unanimous, not merely in desiring, but in demanding an American ocean fleet, built, owned, officered, and so far as may be, manned by our own people.

The London 'Times' of February 16, 1905, says :

> As a United States president said in his message : There is nothing more humiliating to the national pride and nothing more hurtful to our national prosperity than the inferiority of our merchant marine compared with that of other nations whose general resources, wealth and sea-coast lines do not suggest any reason for their superiority of the sea. It was not always so, and our people are agreed, I think, that it shall not continue to be so.

Now we can take every thing that is said by that report of the Merchant Marine Commissioners to ourselves, because we are in a better position than that great nation to the south of us. They are handicapped by millions of people in the interior who do not know anything about marine affairs, who do not know anything of what is going on outside of that country. That is not our case in Canada. Now why are Japan and England so far ahead ? Because they have a large maritime community ; they have not so many people in the interior, not so many voters who will overrule those on the coast who are seeking what is best for the country. I will cite a case to show that the best men in the United States advocate what I am advocating to-day. I am not moving any resolution, I am just bringing these facts before the House. Here is another quotation from the London 'Times' :

> With the question of freights and trade routes is inseparably bound up the question of financial exchange.
> Rightly or wrongly the belief in America to-day is that Great Britain holds her commercial position, not by virtue of her present ability or manufacturing industry, but by reason of her position, won for her by a generation that is gone, as the 'carrier and broker of the world.' It is, they believe, on her accumulated capital in money and ships that she is living to-day, by the leverage that those ships give her, in securing foreign trade, and by the toll which she levies on freights and exchange on the business of other nations.

Now I quote from page 239 of the American Merchant Shipping Report :

This industry calls for products of and furnishes employments to nearly every other industry in the country. If others can carry freight cheap, is it not better to let them do it?

Here I quote again from page 243 of that report :

Washington, Jefferson, Madison and Jackson said no. England has said no for 300 years. Bismark said no. We are far better suited for a shipping nation than Germany. It is for the ultimate good of all.

That is the policy of Bismarck laid down years ago and is now bearing fruit in the German nation. I quote again from page 246 of the American Merchant Marine :

Some one said we did not know how to build vessels. Look at the United States fleet on great lakes, 1,000,000 tons of specially built craft that carry freight cheaper than any other water craft afloat, and still the crew are paid higher wages and fed better than any ships afloat. We have 8,000 vessels less than in 1868 water craft afloat, and still the crews are paid to other countries (how many millions ?), and which if we did our own freighting would be spent at home are still large considerations.

I contend that every ship that leaves our shore is like a delivery wagon leaving a store. If a store in Ottawa, Montreal or Toronto starts employing the wagon of another store to deliver its goods, you know what the result will be after a while. Let us send our own produce in our own ships, Canadian ships built by Canadian labour, out of Canadian materials, manned by Canadian sailors, and the money will be returned, every dollar of it, into the coffers of our own people. The encouragement of our own navigation has at all times been important.

It is incumbent on us to consider by what mode our commerce and agriculture can be best relieved from an injurious dependence on the navigation of other nations.

England has a potential tonnage of 36 million or more than one-half that of the entire world ; Germany 7 million. England leads as she has done for a century. Howe in Encyclopedia Brit. Vol. 21, page 827 ed. of '88 says, that the ships of Italy excelled in the middle ages. In the 16th century Spain was ahead, but Elizabeth and Charles offered bounties for the building of large ships ; preference was given to English ships ; English built and English manned. In 1830, England had 2,199,959 tons and the United States, 1,191,776 tons. England to-day receives $380,000,000, as her share for carrying the world's goods. She has to build 800,000 tons every year, not counting ships built for foreigners, equal to $100,000,000 in construction expenses alone. Before I go any further, I wish to state in advocating the payment of bounties to ships, I also advocate that our waterways be increased and improved. There has been a proposal that we should make a 22 or 20 foot waterway from salt water, to the great lakes. It has been said that ships going from the head of lake Superior to foreign countries would simply make Montreal a place of passage. That is not correct. Lake shipping is of no use on the ocean. It will carry grain, ore or coal cheaper than the shipping of any nation in the world, because our lake vessels have been built especially for that purpose. These are a hull of steel hoppers with sometimes as many as forty hatches separated only by a narrow beam sufficient for strength and the bottom of the vessel is built out to form the hopper. This is not a ship ; it is simply designed to carry grain and cargo on the great lakes. In August of last year a gentleman at Sault Ste. Marie made the statement that the American ship had got to be so strong that it could stand any storm. But, shortly afterwards that was proved not to be the case. Last fall, unfortunately for the poor men who were in charge, a number of these steel ships were cast upon the rocks in lake Superior, and a great many lives and millions of dollars were lost simply because the boats were not loaded and prepared for stormy weather. They have to be loaded and looked after specially to withstand bad weather. These boats would be no use on the ocean. They can carry grain to tide water, they can carry coal back and they can carry ore, but they cannot carry cargo across the Atlantic. What is wanted on the Atlantic is a boat that will carry from 20,000 to 30,000 tons. I have here a statement taken from the official records of the American Mercantile Marine Commission, showing the purposes of the movement re ships.

1. To aid in a practical way. To bring our own foreign trade into our own hands and thus save to our citizens the millions of dollars paid by our citizens to increase the wealth of others. (United States freight yearly over $200,000,000.

2. To increase the exportation and sale of our rapidly increasing productions in the great markets of Africa and Eastern Asia. This trade will go to the country that has its own ships and postal and commercial agencies.

3. To increase the number of that highly skilled and valuable class of citizens the 'mariners.' It will take considerable time to do this, but the sooner we begin the sooner and easier will be its accomplishment. All our citizens will benefit by this. Any measure or movement which tends to increase our exports and augment our foreign trade and build up our depleting merchant marine is worthy of the most serious, painstaking and patriotic consideration of every citizen.

Mr. Wm. Livingston says :

Not one appropriation of the United States has resulted in net results so great as that for harbour and river expenditures. I know of nothing on the face of the earth that will accomplish so much good, that will benefit so greatly the nation and all the inhabitants of the United States as to devise some means by which the United States flag can be found in every port on this round globe.

Instead of inserting in there the United States flag, I would put in the Canadian flag. Mr. Wm. Bird, testifying before the American Merchant Marine Commission, said :

Exporting, &c., 66 years, trade follows the flag. No amount of effort by mails or through salesmen is as efficient as ship.

Mr. J. K. Oldham says :

The British sea-going screw steamship has been the means of largely increasing British export trade by placing British machinery and other products cheaply and quickly in foreign markets. It has increased Britain's commercial connections in all parts of the world to an extent that could only have been accomplished by ships of her own country.

Mr. Geo. D. Gray, San Francisco, says :

While the operations of marine are only seen upon the boundaries of our country it is beneficial to all, or otherwise. A blow upon any part of the body is felt all over ; so a blow to our merchant marine reaches in a more or less degree to every hamlet and township in the land.

Mr. John D. Farquhar, of Buffalo, who is the originator of a Bill, says :

It is a commercial question, and a national question. It involves our well being, and may involve our national existence some day. It is nation against nation, fighting for commerce of the sea. We are in a position as a steel manufacturing country to build ships.

I contend that these words should apply to Canada. The London 'Times' contained the following :

The way to get the trade of any country, said Mr. Blaine, is to send our own ships there to fetch it. Our ships and seamen, our merchants and mechanics, our labour and capital should be employed to earn our own commerce. These treasures, as precious as they are simple, should not be destroyed. If wisely cherished they will always furnish indisputable evidence of our greatness. They are essential to our power. These truths are self-evident, and I wish to say to you and impress on you that this question is wider and greater than any other problem before the people to-day. When you take into account the small pittance ships have received from the American government compared to what railroads have received, it alone is enough to set people thinking.

I apply that to Canada just as much as it applies to the United States.

Admiral Harrington of the United States Navy writes :

Trade is a natural condition of human life and trade is an essential element of national greatness. Our exchange with foreign countries forms the true cause and measure of our prosperity alike in the products of the soil, mines, manufactures, and science.

The Hon. R. G. Bickford says :

Proximity to the sea and dependence upon it have their natural effect upon shipping, when these conditions concur unless retarded by ill-considered legislation the marine progress of such a people is assured, and when under these conditions wise and provident laws exist progress will be rapid.

In the year 1582 there were 136 English ships, but that far seeing woman, Queen Elizabeth, put on discriminating duties and in ten years the number of British ships was trebled. Adam Smith in his 'Wealth of Nations,' says :

English navigation laws are unpopular among nations, but they are the wisest of all the commercial regulations of England.

It is also stated that the growth of a great carrier nation cannot but result in giving such a nation a disproportionate influence among the nations of the earth. Mr. Tyson, of Savannah, Georgia, made the statement that United States merchant shipping was handicapped by political jealousy at Washington. I cite that statement to show that this is a national and not a political question, and that we should all combine together for the good of Canada. It is also said that cheap labour makes a difference in cost and we do not want cheap labour here. Mr. Wright, of Galveston, Texas, says :

Let each nation bring in its own imports free, but tax all nations to carry other nations' imports.

Just hear let me ask why should Norway and Sweden come over here and bring their ships into our ports where the British load line and navigation laws prevail and which prevent our ships carrying as large a cargo as the Norwegian ships do. Why should not every ship that comes to a Canadian port be subject to our law, why should we not put a discriminating duty on every pound of freight that comes here from any other nation and which is not carried in that nation's ships. Mr. Porch, of Galveston, says :

The Atlantic ocean rolling between two mighty hemispheres is a German, French and English sea, but the Pacific with twice the area of water, washing the shores of two nations containing two-thirds the population of the Globe, is henceforth to be an American sea covered with American ships and laden with the products of American industry.

The commerce of half the world realizing the dream of Columbus will go westward to the Indies.

Why should we not say that the Pacific is a Canadian sea; we are nearer to China we are nearer to Japan, we have the coast line, we have the iron, we have the coal and we have the men, and I am glad to say our capitalists have the money ; we have all the advantages and why should we not say that the Pacific ocean is a Canadian sea; that we should carry our own products in our own ships, and then half the commerce of the world, realizing the dream of Columbus, will go westward to the Indies, and go in Canadian ships. We all know that at the time of the Spanish war the United States took over the Philippines, Porto Rico, Hawaii, and Cuba, and prevented foreign shipping from carrying goods to these countries, thus giving an advantage to American ships. In five years the Philippine trade increased from nothing to five millions of dollars; Porto Rico increased from nine millions to fourteen millions, Hawaii increased from four millions to eleven millions, and Cuba from seven and one-third millions to twenty one millions. I would ask the Minister of Customs to take a note of that. These are facts pregnant with great possibilities. The total United States exports of domestic manufacturers increased from $228,000,000 to $407,000,000 yearly, and during the past five years United States tonnage on the lakes increased 570,600 yearly, and yet Canada has gone back. United States report says :

It is well known that British colonies have possible capacity to produce a very large part of such articles as may be needed by Great Britain. Trade once lost to us and gained by Canada cannot be regained by us except at a tremendous disadvantage and sacrifice with consequent suffering and trouble in American agricultural states.

And here is a statement from the London 'Times' of February 16, 1905, which is of the utmost importance to our national welfare. It says :

While in every other direction, in population, in wealth, in power and in size, we are growing in all but our marine interests which are going down.

For the first time in United States history, no square rigged vessel for deep sea trade was launched on either Atlantic or Pacific coast line, and only one steamer for foreign trade under construction in United States shipyard. United States shipyards have not received an order for a steamship for foreign trade since 1901.

President Arthur said, as quoted in the article of the London 'Times' :

With no United States steamers on principal ocean lines or in any foreign ports, our facilities for extending our commerce are greatly restricted, while the nations which build and sail ships and carry the passengers and mails, obtain thereby conspicuous advantages increasing their trade. More recently President Roosevelt said the same thing in a characteristic way : Ships work for their own countries just as railways work for their terminal points.

The way to get the trade of any country is to send our ships there to fetch it.

Mr. John Craig, a gentleman whom I have met and who was formerly established at Trenton, and has now one of the largest ship building yards in the United States, said in his sworn evidence :

I say to you that if the opportunity is given to the shipbuilding interests in this country with its soil and climate, with such a people as we have here with their birth, their habits, their ambitions and their opportunities, and we have as bright men here as anywhere in the world, in ten years we will build ships for England as we did years ago.

Formerly every farmer on the navigable waters in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick was engaged at ship building in the winter time, and I want to know why it is that they are not engaged at that business to day ?

Jas. W. Porch of New Orleans, said :

Steamers chartered by those at a distance and sent here to be loaded with cargoes because it is cheaper, do not materially add to our upbuilding. Our best interests can be handled and developed best by those whose interests are identical with our own. Foreign aid should not be called on to carry the result of our brain and brawn.

Ships of 6,000 to 7,000 tons dead weight are best for present investment.

It takes from 5 to 10 years to put any new trade on a paying basis. Our ships should be on an equality, if not preferred. Put a duty on all transports not carried in our ships.

England limits the subsidy to ships built in British yards—this is new—because she is afraid of Germany.

England has paid $250,000,000 of subsidies ; that is the way she protects her shipping. Formerly she gave a subsidy to ships sailing under the British flag. Now it is limited to ships built in British yards. Mr. Porch said further :

The English navigation law was a great protective measure and was an immense success.

Captain Mahan says : 'A ship becomes a sort of commercial traveller for whatever country it belongs to.'

We must first get the ships and acquire the ship-building habit. Then other matters will right themselves.

Von Humboldt's famous conclusion was : That contact with the ocean has been one of the chief influences in forming the character of nations as well as adding to their wealth and power.

The absolute argument for the protection of the great lakes is that United States shipping is absolutely protected there, and the rates are the lowest in the world, and the men are better fed and paid than in any other industry.

Here is an answer one of the prime ministers of England sent to the British Minister in Belgium :

In matters of commerce the fault of the Dutch is giving too little and asking too much. With equal advantage the Swedes are content So we'll clap on Dutch bottoms 20 per cent.

It is not to moderation of justice of others we trust for a fair and equal access to markets for our own products, or for our due share in carrying our own, but to our own means of independence and business get-up.

There is another matter of serious moment which I wish to bring to the attention of this House, but before I go into that, I wish to quote some extracts from an article which was quoted at the half Centennial of the Sault canal on the great lakes, by William Livingstone :

In an address delivered by Henry Clay to Lafayette, in Washington, December 10, 1824, on the occasion of Lafayette's last visit to America, Mr. Clay opposed the canal, Mr. Livingstone used the following language :

The vain wish has sometimes been indulged that providence would allow the patriot after death to return to his country to contemplate the intermediate changes which had taken place; to view the forests felled, the cities built, the mountains levelled, the canals cut, the highways constructed, the progress of the arts, the advancement of learning, and the increase of population.' Could he stand here to-day and witness the celebration, view this beautiful city, with its many industries, happy homes, progressive people, and the city but yet in its infancy, and destined to be beyond a doubt, with its great natural advantages, one of the great cities of this nation, and when comparing the present with his prediction of sixty-two years ago, who could paint the emotions which would surge through his brain.

A short review of lake navigation, the subject on which I am to speak, reveals a transformation scene even greater. While statistics are necessarily dry, it is an absolute necessity to use a few of them in showing and demonstrating the tremendous increase in the tonnage of the great lakes during the past fifty years. In 1855, fifty years ago, the total tonnage of Lake Superior, not only the cargo, but the ships that carried it as well, could be comfortably stowed away in the hold of any of the largest modern steamers that have come into commission during the past year, and that are daily passing through the canal.

The tonnage of the Detroit river is equal to five times the foreign tonnage of New York harbour, and greater than the combined tonnage of Liverpool, London and Hamburg, and with tonnage to spare in addition. And it must also be borne in mind in connection with this that our season of navigation on the great lakes is 230 days, whereas on the sea-board they have the entire 365 days. In no other place in the world can so animated water view be obtained as the Detroit river. It is a constant procession ships never out of sight.

The progress in the loading and unloading facilities of our vessels has increased in equal proportion. In the inception of the ore trade it was put aboard little schooners by hand labour of severest sort, and at a cost per ton that to-day would be fabulous. It took about four days to load a cargo of 300 tons, and the unloading of the cargo was an even greater undertaking. To get a cargo out of the hold staging had to be built. The ore was shovelled upon this staging, then from the staging to the deck, and then from the deck to the dock, making three handlings in all. By this process it took nearly a week to unload 300 tons, and the next move was by means of block, tackle and a horse. Only a few days ago the steamer 'G. W. Perkins' unloaded 10,514 gross tons of ore in four hours and ten minutes, with only 32 men, the bulk of this being unloaded by clam shells. This is over 50 tons per minute and 1,800 pounds per second and is equal to 260 cars of forty tons capacity, making six trains of forty cars each. Ten years ago this would have been shovelled into buckets, taking a number of days and there is not a dock on the coast to-day could unload this cargo in a week.

Our waterways have acted as a most powerful regulator of rates. When it is considered that a diminution of one mill per ton on the railroads of the country effects a saving of nearly eight hundred millions to the shippers of transportation, the value of this restrictive power cannot be over-estimated. And as Professor Lewis M. Haupt stated in a paper recently at a meeting of the American Philosophical society held in Philadelphia, that had the distinguished senator added as a recognized fact that such regulation by water does not reduce but greatly increases the revenues of the railroads, he would but have emphasized the commercial paradox which comparatively few persons appear to recognize.

As far as I understand it, the reason is the cheaper water transportation. As coarse freight, such as the grain of the farmers and the ore of the mines, is more and more carried by water, the first-class freight, which is carried by the railways, and from which they make their money, increases also. Consequently, by deepening our canals and enlarging our waterways, we increase the earning powers of the railways at the same time.

Another matter on which there has been considerable discussion is the load line This is a serious matter. For a number of years there have been very few wooden ships built in Canada. But some owner of a factory or moneyed man takes small wooden vessels, cuts the masts out of them, and converts them into barges, and then sends them out with a tug, with men in them, in many cases to be drowned like rats in a barrel. Our best ships are inspected and their officers, engineers, captains and mates, require certificates ; but barges are not inspected, and the men who go out in them do not require certificates. This is an outrage, not on the government or on us, but on the whole country. The result is that many a fine seaman is lost, and no one knows the reason.

I am not going to refer to any case in point on this side of the line, for that might lead us into a discussion of other matters. But there are cases on the other side of the line that I can give. A boat will go out of harbour with four barges, the boat herself 150 feet in length, and each of the barges from 200 to 220 feet, and floating 200 fathoms apart. That is to say, five or six vessels will make a tow, with a length of from a mile to a mile and a half. That length is dangerous to the finest ships, and yet these vessels will go out to face the dangers of these thickly studded waters and add to them. Let a storm come up, and the captain cannot see even the first ship behind him, and the whole tow becomes completely unmanageable. These ships should be absolutely prohibited from going out on the lakes except in June or July. There should be a load line, and our shipping should be protected on the maritime province coast, because the lack of that protection is killing a great industry. Foreign built ships carry the traffic between our ports and foreign ports ; but in Nova Scotia they are still building small ships to carry produce in a small way between ports that the large vessels cannot enter. These small vessels should be protected from the grasping monopoly to which I have referred. The Americans are in the same position that we are in. Why did our shipping disappear in 1878 ? It was because of the Plimsoll Act. To prevent the vessels coming under the operation of this Act, the owners transferred them, so that they would be registered under the flag of Norway and Sweden. Under that registry they have rights in our ports that they ought not to have. This national load line is a sinking line, not a floating line. This is not a party question. South and east and west and north are interested. Put our seamen on an equal footing with others and they can compete with any. Dr. Smith, the United States agent to Japan, says that the prowess of Japan is due in no small degree to the skill, bravery and loyalty of her fishermen. And that applies with even greater force to the fishermen of Canada. Dr. Smith says that the unit of Russian ship companies are brave, but, as a rule they are wanting in high sea experience, and in that elasticity that enables British and American seamen to adapt themselves to new and difficult responsibilities as they arise. And the Toronto 'News' of December 2, 1905, says—and I suppose there are other similar items in other papers, but I quote what happened to come under my own eyes :

> Year after year brings its tale of disasters on the lakes, caused by sending out overloaded and undermanned vessels in the stormy weather of November and December. The lives of sailors are sacrificed not to necessity but to pure greed.

The sailors want the Plimsoll line and 'watch and watch outside.' That means that, while outside of port, the sailors should have watch and watch about. This should be fixed by law. Remember, I am talking about the sailors and not about the masters and mates. The sailor is liable to be called up at any hour of the night—storms generally occur at night. His watch, including the dog-watch will make fourteen hours one day and ten the next. He has his four hours off at night. The rule now is to turn him out at eight bells in the morning and to keep him on deck all day, even though he may not be required to assist in navigating the ship. The starboard watch should have the right to be below when not absolutely needed for the navigation for the ship, while the port watch is on deck. There is another contention which the Americans strongly make as shown by the report I have referred to. They say : Stop worn out vessels being brought here. You stop, or should stop diseased immigrants. Keep out diseased ships and help our own labour. You compel a first-class steamer with powerful engines and all that to have captains, mates and engineers all certificated and inspected yearly. Why, a law is a farce that lets a rotten hulk to be made into a tow barge, overloaded, undermanned, neither officer nor boat inspected.

There should be a Plimsoll line for vessels on the lakes. Vessels would be preserved, and what is far better the seamen would be preserved. Page 281 of the report says :

> Is the sailor not entitled to consideration? To whose fidelity, staunch and steadfast courage and heroism do you confide your lives when on the deep ? Who cares for you, your son and daughter when on a voyage through darkness, storms, collisions, wrecks, and, most dreaded of all, fire at sea. Even now they ask for no charity, they only want a chance to work—to get work at fair wages and live on their own earnings.

Now, here is a point to which I ask special attention. Felix Foley said under oath, 'There is no Plimsoll line in the United States.' He added : when the water is coming in the scuppers on deck she is loaded, that is well understood on the American coast. Let me explain what that means. A one-deck vessel has bulwarks, and the scuppers are little doors above the deck and level with it, and opening outwards. When the vessel is so deeply laden that the water comes in at these scuppers, then she is considered to be loaded. At page 1703 of the report of the American Merchant Marine Commission evidence is given of a 1,500-ton coal vessel on the Atlantic coast with only four men before the mast ; and at page 1705 it is testified that sometimes there are only two or three men all green and cheap. Why, the number of men per ton should be fixed by law and undermanned vessels should not be allowed to go to sea at all. The report that I have quoted, page 1706, shows that no industry pays as much to labour as ship building does. The labourer, the mechanic, the farmer, the merchant all benefit. The revival of shipping will benefit the whole country : First by the employment of mechanics and labourers in the ship yards, and second by the employment of these classes in rolling mills, lumber mills coal fields, and factories. And we in Canada can furnish everything that goes into the construction of vessels. Mr. Gorman, whose evidence is to be found at page 1709 of the report referred to, speaks of a vessel of 200 tons, of Rockland, Maine, manned by a captain, cook and two men. Consequently there was only one man on deck at a time and the time at the wheel was four hours. No look-out was kept. At page 1717, Mr. W. B. Barton, of New York, says that an American schooner loads the scuppers down to the water nine times out of ten. These vessels are also undermanned, and in a gale heave and toss ; they are clumsy and awkward and with the strain to which they are subjected are very apt to spring a leak. Here are two instances that are referred to—the wreck of the 'Mears' and the 'Midnight' towed by the steam barge 'Wilhelm.' The wreck occurred on November 27, 1889, on Lake Huron, in a blinding snow storm and northeast gale. All hands perished. The cargo in these cases was lumber. On January 25, 1905, the 'Sea King' lost four barges out of a tow of five, loaded with coal. All hands were lost. The barges were all insured. On September 30, 1896, the 'Sumatra', in tow of the 'B. W. Arnold' and loaded with coal was lost off Milwaukee—all hands lost. From 1890 to 1903, 472 barges were wrecked, with a loss of 118 lives. The causes were overloading, and undermanning. The fault was altogether with the seamen, although these were as a rule men picked up anywhere and engaged at from $14 to $16 per month. At page 61 of the report it is stated that tows are dangerous to sailing vessels. Tows are sometimes a mile long. If the law can make vessels burn green and red lights and otherwise direct details of navigation then it can limit the length of tows.

The law says there must be certain whistles, one long and two short, when a vessel is going in a fog with a tow, but there is nothing as to the length of the tow which may be 300 feet or 6,000 feet.

Then he says :

Seamen should be placed on the same level as our skilled mechanics on shore.

Seamen should have watch and watch day and night, one day, ten hours, the next fourteen. This will not hurt the ship, it will improve and better the condition of everybody, both officers, men and owners.

Standard of efficiency. Deck hands should not be allowed to ship as able seamen.

I cite this one case, the case of the 'Rio' which was lost in San Francisco bay with great loss of life.

Now if you recall this was a large ocean steamer coming in from the Pacific ocean with a great many people on board. She was going through the Golden Gate, there was a little fog and no sea whatever. She ran on a rock and there was an enormous loss of life, although it was 20 minutes after she struck before she sank. What was the reason ? Because the crew were Chinese cheap labour. Here is another case, the 'Queen,' a large ship with a crew and passengers. She caught fire in a heavy sea but very few were lost and the ship was eventually saved. Why? Because the crew were good Anglo Saxon seamen, A. B's every one of them. These are two cases which speak for themselves. In the interest of human life in the interest of property, in the interest of our working people, we think that men who ship as seamen to do seamen's work should be seamen, and that the government of this country should see that they are.

Now here is the English House of Common's report, a very recent report, (1901). Mr. Arthur Norman Hill, not the great J. J. Hill, whom I shall quote later, but an English authority, at page 121 says :

If you put restrictions on foreign traders and they keep away or retaliate we have enough ships to do the business.

That is speaking of British business.

What the British ship wants is a fair field. Then we are able to fight and will fight.

Load Line Act is a good Act, but shipping regulations are fifty years old and want overhauling. For instance Merchant's Shipping Act of 1854 requires ocean vessel to carry salt for seventy days.

This is one reason why we should overhaul our shipping Act. Mr. Hill at page 122 says that in England if a vessel is lost, the owner is responsible for part of the cargo. In Germany it is different in case of overloading or collisions. The German says: take the ship. Colonies enforce regulations against British but not against foreign vessels. Mr. Hill says that subsidies are a last resort, but there are many cases of new trade routes where it is absolutely necessary to give subsidies to start trade until it has been worked to pay.

Great Britain has a complete system of training lads for sea. The German government assists the Hamburg-American line in maintaining two large sailing vessels that seek trade all over the world and carry a large number of apprentice boys. At page XXII it says :

Vessels are nurseries for seamen. They are the pioneers of commerce, visiting new ports where trade is too small or channel too shallow for a steamer. Cheapest carriers of certain important cargoes, and their presence is everywhere a check upon exorbitant steam rates. Steamers do not produce sailors in the strict sense of the word, men who not only have sea habit steps, but skill in all exigencies, contempt for danger, self-reliance under difficulties and adaptability to all sorts of conditions if circumstances, sea-found men, resourceful under any of the thousand liabilities of a sea life.

When we have the ships we will have the sailors. There is no country in the world that is better able to give our boys a chance in the merchant marine than we should be able to do.

I shall now refer to some American evidence, Mr. Harry Coulby, of the Pittsburg Steamship Company, said that this is the most vital issue before the people today. There were 292 ships passing Suez and only 1 United States flag which beat 16 to 1 all hollow. He said that the merchant marine is sick. He said also that transportation which connects producer and consumer and which is the very life blood of commerce, is a science pure and simple, and nowhere is carried out more scientifically than on United States lake side. He said : Let all the people contribute something for the good of all the people; this is an economic, not a political question. Mr. Julius Bleyer spoke of the steamer 'Augustus B. Wolvin,' which is 560 feet long and which carried up the lake 10,500 tons of coal, and brought down 12,289 tons of ore to Chicago. The 'Wolvin' has 33 hatches, and is practically one long steel hopper, built to suit the sweep of dredge scoops for discharging. She and other ships of the same class can carry cargo cheaper than any other vessels in the world, because she has practically a long steel hopper with 33 hatches built so that one man can get out from her 3,000 tons an hour. She can do that on the lakes but she cannot on the ocean, so that Montreal and Quebec should be one on this. In 1903, 18,526 vessels carrying 34,674,437 tons of freight, passed through the St. Mary's canal, and I understand that this year there were 10,000,000 tons more.

Mr. David Vance, one of the most experienced men on the great lakes says that every dollar spent in improving the great lakes waterways has benefited the people of the west, reducing freight 20 cents to one cent per bushel. Ship building and ocean freighting, he said, are domestic industries as much as wheat raising and manufacturing.

Mr. Baker, of Baltimore, said there never was a more opportune time for any country to assist its merchant marine than at the present moment. Ship yards and ship builders need some help to start. New ship lines, skin-resistance, and flat bottoms were best. A ship 20 years old could not compete with the ship of to-day. Steel outlasts iron, the latter is thicker and heavier. Steel was suitable for the North Atlantic and cheaper than iron. He said that $2,500,000 a year for 20 years would put the United States away ahead in the way of ordinary merchant marine, and in carrying United States products.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if $2,500,000 would do that in the United States much less than half of that would do it in Canada. Mr. Baker also said that to cheapen transportation you have to keep up with modern construction. If our ocean transportation could be carried in 20,000 ton ships it could be done for 20 per cent less.

It is probably not known to a great many in this House that no ship ever crosses the Atlantic that takes such a quantity of grain as has been brought into the port of Midland by one ship. The biggest cargo that sails out of Quebec would average 125,000 bushels of wheat, but Midland takes in 216,000. A forwarder took me to task when I told him that a vessel had gone out of Fort William with 350,000 bushels of grain. He laughed at me and said it was and absurdity. This has been exceeded.

Now the reason the Americans can make freights cheaper is because, instead of spending three or four days or a week loading or unloading, they say that the ship is not earning money unless she is at sea, and so they have put all their skill and ingenuity to provide that she should not remain more than one day at a dock. To cheapen transportation you have to keep your vessel going.

Orient business should belong to the United States.

I say it should not, it should belong to Canada, we are nearest.

Price of material that goes into a ship is the small end of the constructive cost. It is cost of operating plant and cost of labour must be mainly considered.

We have all the talent and natural energy to obtain our share of carrying trade of the world if this energy can be directed into a proper channel, but we must first put our own ships and mrecantile interests upon an equal footing with other carrying nations of the world. It must be made possible for a man to build a ship and come out even. It must be made possible for a man to own a ship and come out even.

The issue I lay before you is one between foreign and outside and American labour.

In September, 1903, Mr. Prentiss, of Cleveland, went around the world to find the American flag and a whale. He says: I saw the whale but I have been around the world three times and never saw an American flag.

In 1903, South America used $800,000,000 gold of farm products, all from Europe.

You must nurse an infant for a few years.

We have an infant here, and we have another infant started in the town of Welland; the town of Welland paid some thousands of dollars for a site for another steel factory. We have a thousand men employed in Collingwood building large ships, we should have 10,000 men there. That is an infant which we should nourish. Here is another evidence on page 1870:

English boat same trip in twelve months as lake boat in 7 months. Banks will loan to build ships if government protects them. Ore for centuries must be carried down the lakes.

On that point, there is some question as to whether we have ore in this country. We have ore, according to the Canadian Hand-book. But irrespective of that, if there is no tariff on ore we can buy it from the United States and we can bring it on Lake Superior. England has to get her ore from Sweden a thousand miles away at a cost of $2.50 a ton. We could bring it from Sweden to this country in ships just as cheaply as England does, if we carried it in our own ships.

Measures which have for aim upbuilding of industries of the country, should appeal to great body of citizens regardless of party. Every single industry within our national jurisdiction have received concerted aid of whole nation, except ships.

The interests of the whole country, the enlargement of foreign markets for our surplus products of the farm, the increased work in the mine, factory, ship and boiler shop for labour, and the training of able seamen will all be promoted by the restoration of our merchant marine. An enlightened policy through which we would find an ample reward in the increase of our commerce, and in making our country more favourably known abroad.

Now I will quote from Mr. James J. Hill. I am glad to say that Mr. Hill is reconsidering his opinion of this country, where he was born, because I see he is going to build another transcontinental line in three years. I am glad of it, the more railways we have in the west the better:

Our public domain is gone. To-day people by tens of thousands are leaving their own country and going to the country where I was born, Canada. They do not want to go, but people flock into Canada from Iowa, South Minnesota, South Dakota and often from Nebraska, Kansas, Michigan and Wisconsin. Reason: they often sell their land at from $60 to $75 per acre and buy equally as good at $6 or $8 per acre. I think the agricultural portion of our nation has always been its sheet anchor, and I think it always will be. I think it has its full share of intelligence and patriotism and every thing that goes to make good citizenship. A man loves a little money and wants to buy a farm and sit under his own fig tree.

I will now quote from a great Canadian since passed away, the Hon. Joseph Howe. We know how when he appeared in the great reciprocity convention held many years ago in the city of Detroit, he stood out prominently among all the prominent gentlemen there. He was a man amongst ten thousand, there were few who could compete with him on this continent. On page 730, the Hon. Joseph Howe said:

You don't know your resources. Your debt will fade away in the presence of the great resources which you have. And fifteen years afterwards, he said he had lived to see his words realized.

I say, Sir, that if we have to go to England or to the continent to borrow money for this purpose we should do it. We do not know our resources. It will cost us very little. It will be like a farmer who has to take the products of his farm away and has no wagon of his own to do it with. Do you mean to say he is going to leave them there, or let his neighbour come along and carry them and make money out of them? No, he will borrow a little money and buy a wagon, and make more money in carrying his products himself and get a bigger price. We all know that no man can attend to his business as well as he can himself.

Assets of Canadian lands if sold at $1 per acre, would pay the national debt.

Public buildings, canals, public railroads, and lands are not placed against public debt.

Coal, Alberta, varies from high grade lynite to highest anthracite, supply inexhaustible.

Page 55. Great industry of Canada is agriculture, it employs more people, and has a greater output than all others. Nature has marked Canada for greatest agricultural country of the world, vast expanse of country, fertility of soil, rain of summer, and snow and frost of winter and all climatic conditions are peculiarly favourable to largest possible production of grains, roots and fruits.

Bismarck inaugurated the German policy and the present Kaiser is carrying it out. In other words the present emperor is a far-seeing and wise man and he knows a good procedure when he sees it.

Mr. Thayer says:

Repairs on steamships alone is a large industry. No ship can survive 20 years without a bill of repairs much over her original cost.

Mr. Thayer also says:

England is free trade on land and protectionist on sea.

The report of the secretary of navy of the United States, says:

It requires much more time to produce a marine officer than it does to produce a ship.

In Bullen's 'Men of the Merchant Service' we find this statement:

An able seaman properly so called is a skilled mechanic with great abilities.

Mr. A. Chesbrough says:

Decay of shipping is harder on the masses than on the classes, but it knows no distinction in its influence. It penetrates the nation.

Mr. W. H. Seward said 50 years ago:

The Pacific ocean, with its shores, its islands and the vast region beyond will become the chief theatre of events in the world's great hereafter.

I am speaking not solely for the great riding of West Huron to which I belong, because I believe that the people in sending me here to represent the people of West Huron, sent me here to represent Canada. What benefits Canada will benefit West Huron.

Mr. W. M. Killingsworth, Oregon, U.S., says:

Pacific coast is no longer our back door it's another front door. Business is a warfare without blood. We must use a proper gun. When our people realize that sailors are not made like soldiers. It takes time to become familiar with the roll of ocean waves. We must look at this matter in a national, not a provincial spirit. Young men go to sea in preference to offices and stores.

In my early days, when the spring time came, we had an exodus from our town to the water. There is very little chance now for our boys to go sailing, because there are no boats.

Mr. James Rolph, Jr., Pacific Coast, says:

Commercial supremacy of England has been maintained for many years through her shipping and the knowledge which the leading minds of England have of the law of commerce and the law of trade, the necessities of the marine have resulted in the protection of vessels carrying the flag.

I am now going to quote Mr. August B. Wolvin, the man who started the trade from the west end of lake Superior to Quebec. He said :

The export is going to turn largely through the St. Lawrence if the Dominion government opens the channel.

The people of Sweden said : If you do not take our boats we will put them over there. There is nothing to prevent them coming in here and carrying the grain from Fort William to Quebec. The Swedes have 400 little boats that will go through our canals, they have cheap labour, they have no Plimsoll line, and they have cheap food that we do not want in this country. Mr. Wolvin says:

I do not believe there is any line of traffic by which the exports from the lake country can be carried to any better advantage than down the St. Lawrence. It is hard to be brought to that conclusion, but after wrestling awhile with the question I am convinced that it is so. All year there was no mishap except to one tow barge. Insurance on the St. Lawrence is three-eighths per cent higher than on the lakes, but as compared with the value of the commodity it is small.

In 1838, United States steam vessels represented 193,432 tons and Great Britain 74,-684 tons. In 1860 United States 867,937 tons and Great Britain 452,320. Almost incredible; I could hardly believe it when I looked at the book. But what then appears ? Great Britain then began to protect her interests. The United States were prevented by political jealousies at Washington. Mr. F. M. Todd, of San Francisco, says :

It takes more men to work a ship and handle her freight than it does to build her. When a ship is launched that only begins her expense account. Her owner likes to see her and repair her at home, and in a ship life there must be repairs. Her arrival provides work for pilot, tug, watchmen, stevedores, freight clerks, teamsters, commission men, shipwrights, riggers, caulkers, for sail, block and spar manufacturers, machinery men and boiler shops. dry docks, painters, grocers, boarding houses. &c.

Capt. I. E. Thayer says :

I began in 1855, the palmy days of United States shipping, when to be a shipowner, a master, a ship builder, even a boy on a fishing schooner was a matter of pride. I often paused from my work to watch the launching of the finest specimen of marine architecture the world has ever seen.

——the tea clippers of Baltimore.

The celebrated clipper ships of the day, created and fitted out for the premier trade of the world. The reputation of Boston builders was world-wide, they built for Britain as well as United States.

In that prosperity they had the natural outgrowth of existing conditions ; nothing short of a change of condition could destroy that prosperity.

Now, here is a statement of one of the greatest marine authorities on the lakes, Harvey D. Goulder, of Cleveland. Harvey D. Goulder observes:

After a line once meets with success it goes on from great to greater. The cost in England is about the same as in the United States for boats for the lakes where standardizing is in vogue. One yard builds passenger ships and can build cheaper than anywhere else because of specialization. The cost of moving a ton of freight on the lakes is eight-tenths of a mill per thousand, probably one-fifth of the cheapest cost on the most favoured railroad. Hatches are constructed to suit unloading machines, and floors are specially designed to help steam shovels.

The protection of the United States navigation laws made the United States shipping on the lakes ninety-eight per cent, while only two per cent goes to Canada, but the United States on the ocean carriers only eight and a half per cent of its own produce. Mr. Goulder stated:

Canada by reason of great development of her resources is growing up commendably, wonderfully, splendidly, and we are not jealous, and we are not envious.

Let no man be afraid of extending conservatively, wisely as it is given to human wisdom to do, beneficent aid and protection to our merchant marine.

Well, Sir, I expect to see the Georgian Bay canal built before I die, I expect to see a railway built connecting with the navigation of the Hudson's bay, I expect within ten years to see the depth of the Welland canal increased to twenty feet, and I say that we will have traffic in Canada for all these great waterways. The traffic on the Welland canal at the present time is, of products of the forest fourteen per cent, of the farm fifty per cent and of merchandise and manufactures thirty-six per cent. The greatest benefit we derive from canals is the regulation of railroad rates and in the grain business canals are supreme until closed by ice. The coal on Vancouver Island is superior to all the Pacific coast coal, and it is said that Vancouver island is entitled to be called the Britain of the North Pacific. We have within fifty miles of Ottawa 917,403 horse power for electricity; there are 700,000 horse power along the Georgian Bay canal; Niagara has 7,000,000 horse power more than half of it Canadian; the St. Lawrence river has 10,000,000 horse power; the canals of Canada over 20,000 horse power, but capable of developing more. Mr. W. Downey when sworn said :

A ship costs $350,000, 90 per cent, or $315,000 would be spent on labour from the time of starting to dig coal and iron, to hoist of flag. Look at the money spent out of that. We pay $200,000,000 a year to foreign shipowners for carrying trade to and from the United States. We should make an effort to earn this ourselves and distribute it through all the coal miners, ore miners, mechanics, finally through the sailors and officers of the ships and back to be spent in building other ships.

It is a direct loss to us. We have spent blood and money to develop that foreign commerce.

If money and land are spent to develop railroad, to help the farmer, why should not money be spent on ships to continue the chain.

And, Mr. Speaker, if money and land are spent to develop railroads for the farmer, why should not money be spent on ships to continue the chain of transport and thus raise the price of grain to the farmers. On the question of freight rates I may mention that it costs $4 per thousand to haul lumber 820 miles on the Pacific coast, and $1.75 to haul it the same distance on the lakes. I will wager that there are small ships on Lake Huron that would carry for fifty cents less; the price generally on the Georgian bay to Chatham and in that vicinity is from $1 to $1.25. The freight rate on freight passing through the Soo in 1899 was eighty-seven cents which meant a trip every ten days, there being three days terminal detentions. In 1867 it cost $8 per ton to carry ore and steel rails 1,000 miles, and in 1904 the same transportation only cost eighty cents. The value of goods increases with every increase of transportation facilities and decrease of rates. It is a remarkable statement which has been verified, that an ordinary cargo vessel sailing on the upper lakes will take freight to the sea-board quicker than will a freight train. The cost of freight per ton per mile in Great Britain averages $2.30; on the continent from $1.90 to $2.10, in Russia $1.75 and in the United States seventy-two cents, notwithstanding the fact that train hands and workingmen are better paid in the United States than any where else in the world. There are lower freight rates on the great lakes than in any place in the world and this has been helped out by human ingenuity. In 1859 it cost 15·75 cents to carry one bushel of corn from Chicago to Buffalo; in 1871 it cost 7·50 cents and in 1890 it cost 1·88 cents. In 1867 it cost $4.25 to carry one ton of ore from Escanaba to Erie, in 1870 it cost $2.50 ; in 1890 it cost 82 cents, while during part of 1890 it was as low as 55 cents per ton. Mr. E. C. Plummer of New York on being sworn, deposed :

Fifteen years ago cost 15 cents per bushel grain Duluth to Buffalo. To-day you get it carried 1,100 miles for 1½ cents. Why ? United States brains and ingenuity have done it.

Andrew Jackson, in his message to Congress, said :

Any industry which would be of national importance was entitled to be protected if there was any chance it could compete with foreigners.

The men who are freighting are making money as the 800,000 new tons of shipping built in Great Britain yearly shows. The regular liners carry as cheaply as tramps and they must sail on time, full or not full, and so lose at first until trade is established. At page 432 it was deposed that the cost of carrying grain was cut from fifteen cents to one and one-half cents per bushel, which of course is a great benefit to the farmer, and that a ton of coal could be carried 1,000 miles for about the price you can put it into your basement from the road.

Walter D. Sayle, of Cleveland, said:

Earnings of Britain's fleet are 550 millions yearly or equal to all the earnings of the railways in the United States, or the entire wheat cost of United States. In 1838 Great Britain had a steam tonnage of 74,684 and the United States, 103,423 tons.

Alex. E. Brown said:

The shipping business depends on the regularity with which you receive and discharge cargoes every day.

On the Atlantic coast, in New York, &c., they are as behind as Europe in handling freight. The general method is 2,000 years old, handling freight by hand.

From $2 to $13 per ton was charged in the fall for carrying a ton of ore ; the price now is fifty-five cents.

Labour objected to the first automatic machinery on the lake, but now approves, as it has placed labour on a much higher plane. The charge of nineteen cents for loading comes out of the freight charge of fifty-five cents to seventy cents per ton. The three cents per ton for trimming is not required on large ships.

With a machine at Conneaut, one man can take out 3,000 tons in ten hours, and put it in cars.

Ore is carried from Sweden to England 1,000 miles, for $2.50 per gross ton. The highest rate on the lakes for the same distance is $1.20 to $1.25.

The exports in 1904 from Atlantic ports were 9 millions, and twenty-four millions from gulf ports.

The traffic is changing from the Atlantic ports to the gulf ports and the Pacific ports. For twenty years up to 1903, New York exported about twenty-seven millions, but in 1904, New York exported only three millions.

For twenty years to 1903, Baltimore exported about eleven millions, but in 1904 Baltimore exported only three millions.

From 1899 to 1903 Pacific ports exported from one-sixth to one-third of the total wheat, during 1905 nine-tenths of the total went from the Pacific coast.

Exports of wheat in 1905 were the smallest since 1860, and the total exports of wheat and flour reduced to wheat were the smallest since 1872. This does not necessarily presage a decline in the wheat business. The farm price of wheat in December, 1904, was 92·4 cents per bushel, the highest since December 1, 1888, and the crop harvested in 1904 was by no means a small one. In the fiscal year 1905, Baltimore was the largest. The Atlantic ports shipped only 116,000 bushels. In 1892 the wheat exported was 157,280,351 bushels.

What does that show? It shows that Canada is going to be the granary of the world, and that we should use our own delivery wagon.

The gulf ports' improved methods for handling flour are heping them, especially at New Orleans.

Gulf of Mexico has four large grain and cotton ports. The Atlantic has five or six of each.

In wheat, the Atlantic ports carried fifty-nine per cent from 1884 to 1888; only twenty per cent in 1904. The gulf ports increased from two to fifty-five per cent in the same time but the latter dropped from fifty-five to one per cent in 1905.

For twenty-two years ending 1905, Atlantic and gulf ports handled eighty-seven to ninety-one per cent of corn and considerable wheat and flour, but in 1905 only six per cent of the wheat exported went by Atlantic and gulf ports and ninety-two per cent by Pacific ports.

From 1904 on, cotton began to be exported from the port nearest to where grown. Railroad competition has reduced the rates on the unimproved canals to starvation almost. A few years since the audacious men who ventured to hope a ton of freight might be carried on long routes for two cents per mile were laughed at and pointed out as radicals and enthusiasts, but they have been left far in the rear, one-sixth of a cent per ton per mile being the rate from Chicago to Boston.

Railroads could not carry the coal and iron, but lakers have cheapened railroad freights.

Ocean vessels generally take freight, high-class freight.

Fast liners carry little freight. Most freight is carried in large slow liners with greatest freight capacity.

Geo. Y. Wisner, whom a great many members of this House will know as one of the most efficient civil engineers on the lakes, says:

We have on the great lakes the best conditions in the world for gathering material and labour for ship construction.

A. B. McNairn says:

Cleveland has been a builder of and founded by ships since Moses Cleveland first pushed his boats against the bank of the site of the city that bears his name.

H. D. Goulder says:

Without government aid a revival will not be accomplished.

W. S. Sayle says:

Shipbuilding is an industry which consumes a great many products and furnishes employment to nearly every other industry in the country. For a shipyard revived a hundred correlated industries are stimulated.

Mr. S. Hartman, of Scotland, says:

The building of a ship involves practically every trade and nearly all the materials and manufactures in existence, and there is no industry which needs a greater number of people.

England manufactures ships—you cannot call it building.

The United States has 10,000 miles of sea-coast and twenty steel ship building yards; Great Britain has 1,000 miles of sea-coast and 100 steel shipbuilding yards.

These yards are building tramp steamships cheaper than any other country in the world—not that they get bounties for them, but because they get bounties for the better class of ships, they can build tramp ships cheaper at the same time. The more a man manufactures the cheaper he can do it.

On the great lakes the United States build as cheaply as ships are built on the Ware or the Tyne.

H. C. Calkin said:

Ninety per cent of the cost of a ship goes in labour. It commences in the forest, on the mine and on the farm, and it winds up with the sweat of the man who puts the finished material together.

Wm. D. Sewall said:

Bath, Maine, has been a shipbuilding centre for 150 years. In 1859, fifty-nine square or full-rigged ships were built there, but in 1903-4, not one. Our yard was the last to give up. To-day it is closed after building over 100 full-rigged ships.

Mr. Smith, New York and Cuba mail lines, said:

We have five ships costing three millions; over eighty per cent of the labour to build them was spent in the United States, because foreigners cannot trade there.

Mr. Smith, president of the Mail Steamship Company said:

For five years ending December 31, 1903, we spent in the United States on our four steamers, $397,144.87 to United States workmen.

The United States does not protect ships, but she is going to by a Bill, S—529, now before the United States Congress, brought in by Mr. Gallagher, chairman of the Merchant Marine Shipping Committee. Why can the United States build steel bridges and steam engines in competition with Great Britain, and send them to Africa or Australia or any other country in the world? Because these things are protected, though shipping is not. The United States can put bridges on the Cape to Cairo Railroad cheaper than England can—why? Because the men who build these bridges and these engines are protected. The only unprotected industry in the country, shipping, is going to be protected, by bill S. 529. And that is what called forth from the London 'Times' this statement to which I have referred, that Great Britain is face to face with a very serious problem. Thomas Clyde, of New York, representing the Clyde Line which is known to many hon. gentlemen present says, page 10:

Although not absolutely necessary ships are usually repaired where the owner lives. A vessel costing $450,000 requires yearly $12,000 to $15,000 over-hauling.

And at page 16 it is shown that the standardizing of building is the fundamental element of cheap ship-building. British tramp ships are all similar. At page 23 it is stated that the United States beats the world in loading and unloading—a vessel never makes any money when she is at the dock. The combined tonnage on the great lakes is 55,000,000 tons.

Now, here is a point to which I ask special attention. At page 703, C. E. Creamer, of Chicago, says that lake vessels are not a success on the ocean. The vessel is lame and lopsided when she gets back and is glad to be there in any condition. At page 706, R. H. Ferguson, of Chicago, says that in the past five years, 175 vessels with a combined carrying capacity of 1,000,000 tons were built on the lakes. The modern laker is 560 feet long, 56 feet beam and 32 feet deep. She will carry 10,000 tons of coal and grain at a depth of 17½ feet. Joseph R. Forde, says—page 503—that the United States manufactures and builds and sends bridges, aqueducts, locomotives, engines and agricultural implements all over the world in competition with all others.

At page 578, Wm. F. Humphrey says that in the construction of bridges and locomotives the United States producers have become adepts: continued application makes the hand cunning and the head inventive, and years of experience and experiment reduce construction to a science. Lewis Nixon, marine architect, says that on the great lakes are built the best boats suited to the service for which they are intended—vessels of large dimensions splendid boats of their kind. And, as they are practically all of one kind, a shipyard can apply all its brains, energy and attention to one kind: He does not believe that the same boats could be built abroad at the same cost—this is an age of specialties. Vessels on the lakes are built quicker and cheaper than elsewhere all of one type. And F. W. Wood, Baltimore—page 476—speaking of standardizing, asks how could the manufacturer build at the same time a locomotive, a mowing machine and a stationary engine: where would he come out? At page 478 it is stated that it would take 800 men two years to build a ship of 10,500 tons, at a cost of about $800,000. At page 479 the work of the shipyard is represented as a focus, a head centre; it represents work going on all over the country, in the woods, in the mines, on the farm in a great many other industries. At page 1146 it is shown that free trade England protects her ships. At page 1148 the transportation business is spoken of as the greatest in the world and labour as the greatest factor in the whole question. At page 1150-1 is a strong argument in favour of paying a bounty, if necessary to the seamen: If each person should pay an infinitesimal amount on account of an enhanced freight but would receive a greater benefit in a multitude of ways, certainly the individual and general good would be benefited: If, in the body circulation is not equal suffering is bound to come, and the same with the body commercial. What do we see in Canada with regard to the paying of a bounty. Canada pays in the neighbourhood of $160,000 a year bounty to fishermen. This system began in 1885, and, in five years, instead of having 55,000 fishermen in the maritime provinces we had 77,000. Here is an object lesson for us in our country. At page 871 of the report it is stated that it is a strange thing that a country like the United States with 10,000 miles of coast line and with an export trade of $1,500,000,000 has no ship engaged in carrying its commerce. A British ship or German ship will work for British or German houses in preference to American. This is shown by our Canadian experience. The vessels that were sold abroad owing to the coming into force of the Plimsoll act were originally manned by Canadian sailors, but now they are manned by cheap Norwegian sailors who come here, and by the acceptance of lower wages keep our own men out of this class of work. There has been a similar experience in England where vessels have been transferred so as to sail under another flag. Now, we have in Canada, in the lighthouse service 2,027 men. And who are the men in this service? Are they the sailors? I am not saying a word against hon. gentlemen opposite on this point, because I believe the practice of all governments has been the same. When the sailor gets gray and unfit for this work at sea, why should not he enter the lighthouse service? What else can he do when he leaves the ocean? The nature of his occupation is such that he cannot find employment on shore. It should be a standing rule with governments in this country that men employed in the lighthouse or marine service of the government should be picked from the sailor class. As we have party government, let the party in power pick from among their own men—I would not object to that. At page 1011 of the report I have quoted before me are the figures to which I have referred showing the increase in the number of our fishermen as a result of the bounty given. In 1885 our fishermen numbered 59,483, and in 1902 they numbered 77,801. The fact that these figures appear in this report shows that the Americans are looking into this matter. Our neighbours in the United States are spending hundreds of thousands of dollars investigating the question whether they should build a water-highway from Lake Erie to New York or from Lake Ontario to New York. They estimate the cost of one at $200,000,000 and of the other at $225,000,000.

With the improved facilities for building canals that exist in these days, the cost of these works is greatly reduced, especially if you have a small canal already built. To compete with the American route we may well build the Georgian bay 20 foot and enlarge the Welland canal. But, when you have got that, you are pretty well at the end of your tether, for there are certain probabilities which have been looked into by the United States that show that this is about the limit for the lakes. But up to that limit, every improvement of this kind decreases freight charges and helps the farmers of Canada, for it is our grain that is going to supply the world.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. LEWIS. I have a few more references which I desire to present to the House from the report of the steamship subsidies, 279, House of Commons, 1880, paragraph 37:

British Commissioner Hill, page 1986 maintains sale of British vessels, may cause very serious results.

I quote this with reference to the sale of our own vessels to Sweden and Norway which then come back and take commerce from our Canadian ships:

If purchasers are backed by their governments they may develop new trades which British owner cannot do without assistance. Giffen (1902) 293.

Substitution of British officers and men. Hill (1901) 1986 North German Lloyd bought in 1900 Scottish Oriental and Holts East Indian Ocean Steamships Company. 24 capts., 49 officers and 72 engineers all replaced.

Paragraph 38.

Sir Geo. Drummond states the great advantage to Canada of fast direct inter-communication.

Sir T. Walpole said: If the British government thought desirable, they would be justified in sending mails to Quebec in place of New York, and he would advise the government to carry out that policy.

One of the most effectual means by which Great Britain, the greatest free trade country on the face of the globe, protects her shipping is by giving large subsidies for the carriage of mails.

Paragraph 50.

That granting of subsidies has favoured competition against British ships.

That granting of through bills of lading via state railway and steamship lines has had a great effect to develop trade in Germany.

No British subsidy granted except for conditions that vessel cannot be sold or chartered without consent of the government and the crew should be British subjects (all officers and part of men).

In 1885 men, 59,493; in 1902 men, 77,801. In 1885, total amount invested in Canadian deep sea fisheries 3½ mil in 1902, $11,300,000.

In reference to subsidies and bounties for building ships. Where the ship owner receives a bounty for building, that ship must remain under the flag—until it is wrecked.

Under protection United States marine grew and became a menace to England. Under free and non-protection it went to pieces.

Our industries born, reared, grown to vigorous manhood, but the ship is a foundling denied all shelter.

Why should not a sailor be protected as well as a tin plate roller, &c., &c.

Page 1,113 of the Merchant Marine investigation:

Subsidies lessen as business of line improves.

Report 279 on Subsidies.—IX. From German point of view policy of direct and indirect subsidies have been that of a good investment, but element of success is energy and enterprise of recipient.

Page 513:

Success of England, Germany, Japan and other countries lies in regular steamship lines to all practicable trading ports.

Page 539:

They build up trade and lines soon become paying.

England though claiming to be a free tariff country is the greatest protectionist of any country on earth as to her merchant marine, and the result is she is to-day mistress of the seas and the marine transportation of the nations.

In 1840 England gave Saml. Cunard £60,000 a year to run two ships a month to Boston and Halifax. Increased soon to £90,000.

See what the result has been. Within the last year England has given to the Cunard Line $13,000,000 to build two of the finest ships in the world. Originally a ship of the Campania style cost $3,000,000, then the cost rose to $5,000,000 for such a ship as the Deutschland of the German Line, and now it takes $7,000,000 to build a large ocean steamship.

Great Britain pays bounties to fast mails and many thousand of her seamen.

She has over 30,000 seamen who receive from $30 up to $100 every year, and she finds it a good investment.

XV. Great Britain began in 1839 or 40 and since then has paid between $260 and $300,000,000 in creating and sustaining lines to every great port and market on planet.

XVI. United States line San Francisco to Asia get $63,902 per year, 5 steamers.

Japan has for 3 steamers, $600,000 per year.

Germany pays $1,340,000 per year to East Indies, Australia, N. G. Lloyd.

Great Britain pays $1,660,000 to Peninsula and Oriental.

Indirectly: tramps, benefit, being built in large shipyards created for the subsidized lines.

Those who are not acquainted with marine phraseology may not know what a 'tramp' steamer is. It is a steamer which does not belong to any line, but it carries freight from port to port wherever it can get business.

F. D. Adams, Philadelphia, says :

One of the very first measures George Washington signed was one to give a rebate on duties for goods carried in American ships.

It is impossible to build up our foreign trade without our own ships. One American line to Brazil increased the exports there one million dollars in two years.

But they dropped the subsidies and the line dropped out.

400 million in China need our machinery, our appliances, our manufactures, &c., &c.

In a United States book termed 'Transportation on the Lakes, 1880,' there are certain references touching this question which I wish to bring before the House. In one of them these words occur :

Influence of a large waterway prevents variation of rates resulting from alternate competition and combination of transportation lines, especially upon bulky freights. The increased demand for a higher class of freight created by the business prosperity which would inevitably follow the construction of a great waterway would more than compensate the railways for the loss of the low class traffic.

Considered by high authorities very doubtful whether a vessel can be so constructed as to navigate successfully and economically the ocean, the lake and the canal.

Now some experts and engineers may say that is doubtful, but if you go to any man who owns these vessel and has tried the experiment, he will tell you that it is impossible for a lake vessel safely to navigate the ocean. I read about one of these ships that went to the Pacific coast and managed to get round the Horn, but she was lost and no one knows where.

Big canal would make big ship building for ocean on lakes. 1,258 steel vessels built on lakes in 10 years ending 1900, U. S.

Distinguished authority says : 'Life of any public work is practically with that of the generation which began it.' Reason why it is true, is because in such construction future necessities are almost invariably underestimated.

The traffic is so great in the three locks at Sault Ste. Marie that the construction of a new lock is under consideration. I may say that the United States government has set aside $1,000,000 and has bought land for building a new lock at Sault Ste. Marie canal. Any such work should be of a national not a local character, benefiting many and varied commercial interests, and exerting its influence over the whole country. Debt incurred by Canada since 1867 for canals (capital account) is $66,694,740, and for railways (capital account) $128,534,490, An exhaustive study of relative advantages by the board shows that the benefits from waterways are so well defined that further inquiry would add but little force to the conclusion. A waterway connecting the great lakes with the sea is an instrument of commerce for the purposes of increasing the value of merchandise by transporting it from one side to the other. Comparisons between routes are too narrow and limited if taken from a cost point of view.

Senator Grosvenor says :

You are boasting now of cheapness of freight rates. The primal fact is the size of ships. Each enlargement cheapens the freight and benefits the farmer. Necessities of the people should drive us to sink our differences and join hand in hand.

Now, I am an optimist as to the future of Canada, the lakes are the water arteries of the continent. The Soo has three and a half times the traffic of the Suez canal. The Suez canal is open all year, the Soo two-thirds of the year or less. Thirty-seven years ago 20,000 bushels of corn passed through Welland canal. I have already mentioned the steamer 'Wolvin' as having carried 400,000 bushels in one load. From the St. Lawrence to Lake Superior the distance is 2,382 miles included in which are 67 miles of canals. Lake Superior is the natural outlet and key to the traffic of the west. Fort William is 828 miles nearer Liverpool via Montreal than Duluth is via New York. I have here a statement taken from last week's edition of the 'Canadian Journal of Commerce' in regard to freight traffic :

The domestic freight traffic of the Detroit river, covering the season of lake navigation of 1905, shows a total of 53,639,086 net tons of domestic freight. The freight traffic through the canals at Sault Ste. Marie, Michigan, and Ontario during the same period aggregated 44,270,680 net tons, of which 36,778,738 was south-bound. Of these two canals the total freight movement through the United States amounted to 38,800,190 tons, while that through the Canadian canal totalled 5,468,490 tons. During the lake season of 1905 the difference between the amount of freight carried respectively, through the Detroit river and the Soo canals amounted to 9,368,406 tons in favour of the former route. The total freight of the Welland canal showing the volume of water traffic between Lake Erie and Lake Ontario, aggregated in 1903, the last available date, 979,807 tons, of which only 263,213 was up-bound.

Now, here is a quotation from an American transportation paper some years ago :

New York and Boston now hold Montreal in check by the Erie canal and Central Railroad. After the enlargement of the canal, New York will be obliged to make strenuous efforts to hold its own. Should it fail it will doubtless be its policy to open a ship canal from the St. Lawrence into Lake Champlain and to the Hudson.

Now, that has happened. The grain that was carried through the United States ports in 1905 was 160,000,000 bushels as compared with 127,000,000 bushels, but the Americans are going to build a canal 200 miles in length from Lake Ontario or Lake Erie to the Hudson. As to the value of canals, 2 centuries since Paterson, who founded the Bank of England and the colony of Darien, wrote thus as to a canal to unite two oceans :

> It will be the gate of the universe and enable the proprietors to give law to both oceans.

If the government of Canada, whoever may be in power, improve the waterways from the head of Lake Superior to the St. Lawrence they will provide the key that will unlock the traffic route of the whole continent of America. The first canal on this continent was started in Canada, in 1779, completed in 1781 and enlarged in 1804 and in 1817. The first canal at the Soo was built in 1797. The Welland canal was begun in 1824 and finished in 1829. It was enlarged between 1841 and 1850, and deepened in 1873 to 12 feet. In 1887 it was deepened to 14 feet. Since 1821 the government of Canada has spent upwards of $80,000,000 on canals. After looking into these matters, talking with a number of experienced men and examining many books I am firmly convinced that it would take very little over $10,000,000 to enlarge our canals between Montreal and Lake Huron to an extent sufficient to provide a depth of 20 feet of water. The first suggestion of the construction of the Erie canal was made in 1803. Governor Morris in 1803 regarded it 'as an effusion of an eccentric mind'. In 1808, $600 was appropriated to survey a canal from the Hudson to Lake Ontario, and another canal around Niagara. At that time it was proposed to construct a canal around Niagara through the United States. This was deemed impracticable on the ground that freight having once reached Lake Ontario it was cheaper to take it to Montreal than to New York. That is an argument which is still an important factor in determining the location of a waterway from the lakes to the sea. The United States have spent a large amount of money, they have consulted the most experienced engineers and they have even gone so far as to get contractors to estimate on the cost of constructing a canal according to the Wilson route from Lake Erie and according to the Olcott route from Lake Ontario. They estimate that a 21-foot canal from Lake Erie will cost $206,000,000 and that a 30-foot canal will cost $317,000,000. For divers reasons principally on account of the influence on the depth of water at the Lime kiln crossing it has been decided that it will be impossible to construct anything more than a 21-foot canal. In 1895 the commissioners reported again as follows :

> It is entirely feasible to construct such canals and develop such channels as will be adequate to any scale of navigation that may be desired between the great lakes and the seaboard.

Harper's, 1879-80, page 579, says :

> Under the influence of her canal New York outstripped the rival cities of the Atlantic. The progress of the railroad in this country has been gradual but constant, as steel replaced iron and mechanism improved.

It should be noted here that vessels would not suit ocean, lake and canal. Then Harper's proceeds :

> Indirect advantages and benefits may result from the establishment of a great transportation line which may be of such importance in their influence upon the production, commerce and general prosperity of the whole people that the question of a greater or less return of direct value may become comparatively insignificant.

One-third of east-bound lake freight is exported to foreign countries, the remainder being distributed to domestic markets. The most strongly marked feature of navigation, both on the ocean and on the great lakes, has been the increase in the size of the ships. On the St. Mary's canal in 1882 out of 4,384 passages the average tonnage was 543; in 1891 in was 862, and in 1889 1,146. This does not give an accurate idea of the character of the change, which while on the whole continuous has been the greatest when harbours and channels were deepened. Every time you deepen a canal so that vessels can carry two or three hundred tons more, you lessen the freight charges on the railways and you increase the amount that the farmers of Canada will get for their grain. The time of lockage at the Soo is 37 minutes each way, but it is less on the Canadian canal, which is worked by electricity. The Niagara ship canal, the canal from the lakes to the Atlantic, has been before the public for nearly a century. New York people want it to cross New York to aid in keeping up commercial and financial New York, but western people want it where it will be handiest for lake traffic. The growth of trade in all the lakes has been steady and rapid. Lake Superior is exceptional, due in a large part to the opening of St. Mary's canal. General Poe says:

> For two centuries this brother of the sea, this greatest of all inland seas lay in distant isolation, enfolded by a wilderness, the coming civilization heralded only by the missionary and fur trader coasting along its silent shore.

This is the dictum of a gentleman who had charge of the navigation on the United States side of the lakes; he was as large in mind as he was in body, and he foresaw what the future would bring forth, and had it not been for his efforts they would not have had the last lock at the Soo. The Welland canal up to 1892 cost about $25,000,000, and up to that date the largest vessels to go through were the whalebacks, 265 feet long, 38 feet beam, and 15-foot draft loaded. The report of the government of the United States says that the total cost of all harbour and river improvements up to the close of 1890 was $40,912,- 975, but the saving effected by transportation by lake marine more than pays this back in a single season. I wish to say that the three government vessels that have been built on the lakes, the 'Vigilant,' the 'Lurcher' and the 'Anticosta,' are the best boats that could be built for that purpose. I do not say anything as to their cost, but better boats you could not have. The boats built at Collingwood and other places on the lakes for our merchant marine are better than those built in the old country, because the latter are built as ocean-going vessels and are not suitable for navigation on the lakes. Mr. Speaker, I believe firmly that I have a good case. This is one of the most important matters that has been brought before parliament in a great many years, and my only fear is that I have not been able to present it to the House as strongly as I should. Had I the eloquence of the Prime Minister combined with the eloquence of my own leader, I am afraid that even then I would fail to put these facts before parliament with sufficient force. But I have a good case. It reminds me of an incident that occurred when as a young man I used to be on the lakes myself for a while. I wish I had remained there, because I liked the life and if I had done so I would not be obliged to give up the trust which my constituents have reposed in me in case a certain Bill passes which is designed to cut out all we poor men who come to parliament. Nowadays a vessel makes 23 trips to Lake Superior, but in the olden days a vessel only made 12 trips or 13 at most from Buffalo to Chicago. There was an old owner at Lockport, N.Y., who had a number of vessels that were making money; in those days they got 5 and 6 and 7 cents for grain. This owner noticed at the end of each year that the captain put in each of his trip bills $2 for a horse to the customs-house. One year the owner went to Chicago on one of his ships called the 'Moonlight,' a noted boat, and he found there was a small customs station right at the wharf and that all the captain had to do was to walk upstairs and enter his boat. However, the owner was making good money and he said nothing about the $2 charged for a horse. On the way down he said: 'Captain, I do not think it is any use to have a horse to go up those stairs.' Next season the captain was successful in making 14 trips and when he brought in his bill there was no $2 for a horse to the customs-house. The owner remarked this and the captain replied: 'Well, boss, the two dollars is there all right, but you don't see it.' And so I say I have a good case here whether or not I have been successful in making gentlemen on both sides of the House see it. We in Canada have our cod fisheries on the Atlantic, our salmon fisheries on the Pacific, our endless forests, our inexhaustible iron deposits, our uncounted acres of the finest wheat land in the world, our coal areas unfathomed in British Coluimba and Nova Scotia, and finally the best half of the greatest inland waterway on the globe which must ever be the channel of a stupendous and constantly increasing commerce. Through the administration of this inheritance more than any other perhaps, is the proper destiny of Canada to be achieved. I am reminded of a story told by a German doctor of a capitalist in the west who became ill on a train and when he asked the doctor what was the matter with him the doctor said: 'Vell, I cannot tell you until I get you on the table.' And when they did get him on the table they found him full of undigested securities. I trust that will not be the case with Canada. We can supply England with grain, and after the Nile cataracts have been dammed, Egypt will give her cotton. No one nation is going to allow itself to be dominated and controlled by any other nation. Here is an extract from one of the highest authorities on marine matters, Froude's 'English Seamen in the Sixteenth Century:'

> Viewed from whatever standpoint we may assume, it is impossible to arrive at any other conclusion than that the British merchant marine is not only the greatest British industry, but that for its overwhelming importance and far-reaching effect upon mankind, it is the most stupendous monument of human energy and enterprise that the world has ever seen. Take away her merchant fleet, take away the navy that guards them, her empire will come to an end, her colonies will fall off like leaves from a withered tree, and Great Britain will become an insignificant island in the North Sea, for future students to discuss the fate of, in their debating societies.

This speaks of the navy. I am not discussing this question from a naval point of view. The Beaver and the Maple leaf are emblems of peace. I am discussing the question from a commercial standpoint, and in that respect nation fights nation for the supremacy of the sea. I trust that this parliament, on one side and on the other, will bend its energies and bring in legislation to enable Canadians to build Canadian ships to carry Canadian produce, and bring back the freights to be spent in Canada. Canadian ships must be manned by Canadian men and boys. There is more interest in one old wind-jammer that pounds her way from the Bay of Fundy or the St. Lawrence Gulf to Hull, or from Port Arthur at the western end of Lake Superior down to Kingston, or from Vancouver to Alaska or Honolulu, provided it carries the flag of Canada, than in the proudest liner afloat, if she is a foreigner and is manned by Chinese. Under that flag the hearts at home will go out to the hearts at sea; and, in the language of Lord Dufferin, one of the finest men that ever graced the office of Governor General of Canada, as that ship returns from a foreign clime, the girls at home will have hold of the tow rope.

I move that the House do now adjourn.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). Mr. Speaker, I am very sorry that I have not been able to follow as closely as I would like the remarks that have been made by the hon. member. I was able, however, to hear the greater part of his speech, which was very interesting, especially to me, who happens to be a new minister in charge of the marine affairs of this country. I cannot pretend at this time to discuss all the questions that have been brought forward by my hon. friend; and I am under the impression that I could not deal with them as fully as he has done, or, I am sure, as interestingly. One or two points, however, I would like to draw the attention of the House to for a moment. My hon. friend has referred to the industry of ship building, and has advocated the adoption of a policy for increasing the tonnage and the number of vessels built in this country. We all agree with him in that respect. We all agree that every effort should be made to increase the ship building industry in Canada. Unfortunately, during some years there was a great decrease in that industry. I find that in 1879 the tonnage of Canadian built vessels was about 100,000 tons. In 1896 that had decreased to 16,000 tons. I do not know what the cause of that was. Some people claim that it was on account of the policy which was in force during those years, which tended to decrease our export and import traffic. I do not want to express any opinion on that question just now, especially as my hon. friend has treated the question in a very dispassionate way without touching upon party differences, and in that respect I must congratulate him. The tonnage of Canadian vessels has increased from 16,000 tons in 1896 to 43,000 tons a year ago. I do not know whether that is due to the policy of the existing administration or not, but if my hon. friend looks at these figures I am sure that, with the great knowledge of the subject that he has, he will be able to express views which will enlighten the House.

Mr. LEWIS. A great deal of that has not been kept in Canada.

Mr. BRODEUR. My hon. friend has also referred to the question of transportation. I do not wish to discuss that question just now, especially as it does not pertain to my department. He also refers to questions relating to masters and mates and the inspection of barges. The question of the inspection of barges is a very important one, and I may say is now engaging the serious consideration of the government. We must consider, however, that the inspection of barges would probably result in increased taxation upon the shipping trade, and consequently increased cost of transportation. My hon. friend is aware that water transportation is receiving to-day very serious competition from the railways. There is no inspection of the railways, and there are no charges made upon them on that account. Would it be advisable to impose on water transportation additional charges to those to which it is subject to-day? It is a question to be considered; and I am sure that my hon. friend (Mr. Lewis) who has given to this question so much consideration must have examined that feature of the situation also. As to the question of masters and mates, that matter is now before a committee of this House, which committee will probably report in a few days. Some important interest might be affected by the policy suggested by my hon. friend. I am sorry that he is not a member of the committee to which these Bills have been referred; but I suppose he will attend the sittings of that committee and that we shall have the benefit of his views upon these questions.

I think it would be useless for me to dwell at length now upon the remarks of my hon. friend. I did not expect that he was going to bring up all the questions to which he has referred. But, there is one other subject to which I would like to refer in a word before resuming my seat—the question of ship building. During the sittings of the Tariff Commission, representations were made by several speakers in favour of granting some bounties to stimulate the construction of ships. This question of course, will engage the attention of the Tariff Commission and the government when the time comes to deal with the tariff, and my hon. friend (Mr. Lewis) may be sure that the government will take into consideration in his connection the remarks he has made on the subject.

INQUIRY FOR RETURNS.

Hon. GEORGE E. FOSTER (North Toront). I would like to ask the Minister of Customs whether he has yet received that German tariff about which inquiries have been made on several occasions.

Hon. WILLIAM PATERSON (Minister of Customs). I have not asked since the matter was last referred to, but I will try to inquire to-morrow. The hon. gentleman refers to the tariff supposed to be in effect on March 1st of this year?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. PATERSON. These tariffs go to the Department of Trade and Commerce and I have not yet asked.

Mr. FOSTER. Has the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) that long promised and long delayed return?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). The report was brought before me yesterday; but I noticed that something which was mentioned in the order moved by my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) was not covered by the report, and so I kept it back and gave instructions to have it completed.

LORD'S DAY OBSERVANCE.

Hon. CHARLES FITZPATRICK (Minister of Justice). With the permission and indulgence of the House I desire to move

That the Bill intituled an Act respecting the Lord's Day be referred to a committee composed of Messrs. Daniel, Ames, Pringle, Roche (Marquette), Macdonell (Toronto), Piché, Smith (Nanaimo), Miller, Geoffrion, Macdonald (Pictou), Sinclair, and the mover, with authority to examine the said Bill, summons and hear witnesses and report thereon to the House.

Hon. GEORGE E. FOSTER. Before that motion is carried, there are one or two subsections of section four concerning the meaning of which I would like to inquire. Subsection (g) provides for :

The continuance to their destination of railway trains in transit when the Lord's Day begins, which are loaded exclusively with live stock destined for immediate shipment at any ocean port, or with perishable goods, or with both.

What is the 'destination' of a train such as that described in this section ? Is it the ocean port from which the cattle are to be shipped for export, or is it simply the point to which the train runs with the men then in charge of it, and where a new engine is attached and another set of train hands take charge to make their run ? If it is the ocean port, the objection which occurred to my mind would not arise. But, if the 'destination' is some point this side of the ocean port, and if the train is to be held during Sunday, it seems to me the point requires some consideration. Everybody who has observed these matters must be aware of the hardships endured by live stock in transport even with the best of treatment and under the best conditions. It does seem to me that it would not be to the advantage of the stock or that it would accord with humanitarian considerations to have the live stock held at an intermediate place during the Sunday. If they are compelled to remain in the train, the exhaustion and discomfort of a hard journey are increased. If they are taken out of the train, they must be herded into a place which may be inadequate for the number it has to accommodate. It may be in inclement weather and in a place where there is little shelter and no comfort. In any case it is a great hardship to the stock, and we cannot leave that point out of consideration. It is also a great disadvantage to the shipper of the stock, because the delay and constant expense tells in two or three different ways. When live stock are shipped for export all speed that can be made in order to shorten their journey and land them as quickly as possible is necessary both for the profit of the trade and for the comfort of the animals themselves. That, it seems to me, is worth careful consideration. No Christian man, no matter how much he reverences the Sabbath and wishes to have it observed, desires, in the observance of it and of his wishes, to inflict unnecessary loss and much less to inflict suffering which can otherwise be avoided. If the cattle remain, there still has to be help in order to take care of them in a temporary place. If they go on, it is doubtful if the amount of help employed is very much greater than it would be at the temporary stopping place so far as those cattle are concerned. I would like to have the opinion of the Minister of Justice as to what that word 'destination' means in this clause.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The suggestion which my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) has made is one that naturally comes to any one who has in mind the conditions to which he refers. The intention was, and I think there is very little ambiguity about the clause, and if there is we can remedy it in committee, to make the point the destination of the goods, not of the train. What is intended is, that the goods, cattle or perishable goods, should reach their destination. I presume the destination of the train and of the goods must be considered as identical ; I imagine there might possibly be confusion and it is our duty to make that point absolutely clear.

A difficulty which has presented itself to my mind, but which I do not think I mentioned when I moved the second reading of the Bill but which seems to me to be a very real difficulty, is what is to be done with the cattle or perishable goods when they have reached their destination. The case of the goods while in transit I think is fairly covered. Take for instance a carload of fruit which leaves the Niagara district on Saturday. Of course fruit gathered on that day must be disposed of, it is sent forward, say to Montreal, as a point of destination. When that fruit has reached Montreal it cannot be allowed to remain a whole day on the sidings in Montreal but must be taken care of. The same thing would apply to fish and other articles of that sort. Therefore I would ask the attention especially of any members of the House interested—and I suppose we are all interested in this Bill, I am sure we are interested in making it a workable measure,—to see how we are to provide for this contingency. What is to be done with these goods at the point of destination ?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It is most important, I realize, in the interests of the Bill that we should have a workable, reasonable measure, such a measure as will have behind it the force of public opinion, and not a measure that the judges and other people may consider it practically their duty to endeavour to evade as far as possible.

Mr. FOSTER. Hear, hear.

Mr. BARKER. I would like to call attention to subsection (f) of that same section. It refers to smelting works and requires the furnaces to be 'banked down', as it is called, on Sunday, so that the process of smelting must be checked on Sunday, resumed on Monday and so on until completion. But I call the attention of the minister to the fact that by banking down on Sunday the process of smelting is hindered and checked and that the iron so produced will not be of the quality that it would be if the process were continuous. That is a very important point to consider, especially at large smelters, where the work is continuous, and I think evidence should be received upon the point because it is well known that a large portion of the iron that is produced after such a check is not of a good marketable quality.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. My attention has been called to that very real difficulty which my hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Barker) has pointed out, and one of the objects which I had in view when I suggested to the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) that this Bill might be referred to a committee was that we might have the advantage of the experience of practical men who would come before the committee, make their suggestions to us and enable us by their co-operation and by conferences with them to reach a solution for the difficulties and produce a workable measure.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I would like now, if I may be permitted, to give notice at once that it is desired to have this committee meet on Monday. I make a public statement now in order that all interested parties may take notice of the fact.

SAFETY OF SHIPS.

Mr. SINCLAIR moved the third reading of Bill (No. 48) respecting the safety of ships.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). I think it was understood that all these Bills to which an amendment was made in committee would be referred to the law clerk. I think it would be a good practice to follow that all Bills which have been amended in committee should be submitted to the law clerk immediately after the amendments are made and should not receive their third reading on the same day. I do not know if it has been done, but if it has been done we must wait until the law clerk has seen if it is correct. I move that the debate do now adjourn.

Motion (Mr. Brodeur) agreed to.

MONTREAL HARBOUR BOARD.

House resumed consideration of the proposed motion of Mr. Rivet:

For copies of all documents, correspondence and resolutions received by the government or by the Department of Marine and Fisheries, from the Chamber of Commerce and the Board of Trade of Montreal, or from any corporation or private individual, respecting the reorganization or abolition of the Montreal Harbour Board.

Motion agreed to without discussion.

MOTIONS AGREED TO WITHOUT DISCUSSION.

For copies of all correspondence, reports, telegrams, valuations and memoranda in possession of the government, or any member or official thereof, with reference to damages for lands expropriated for railway purposes on the line built between Montague and Cardigan, Prince Edward Island; also names of commissioners or valuators, or both; copies of all valuations made, by whom made, giving the names and the amounts separately awarded to each; also list of names of persons who accepted valuators' awards, and also of persons whose valuations have not been accepted by the government; also list of persons who have been paid or accepted valuations.—Mr. A. A. McLean.

For a copy of all petitions, letters, correspondence, reports, memoranda and any other documents respecting the dismissal of Mr. Patrick Walsh from the postmastership of East Roman Valley, in the county of Guysborough, Nova Scotia.—Mr. Lancaster.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply.

Indians in the Yukon—relief and medical attendance, $6,000.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). This is the same amount as last year, and is necessary to furnish relief to destitute cases in the Yukon. The number of Indians in the territories actually located is 702. The expenditure for destitute Indians and medical attendance in 1903-4 was $4,611.11; for 1904-5, $5,977.

Mr. J. D. REID. Are not the prices of supplies decreasing each year? The cost of transportation is much less this last year.

Mr. OLIVER. There is not much difference in the last two years, but there is a great difference as compared with former years.

Mr. BARR. How many medical men are employed, and are they on salary or otherwise? It seems to me this is a very large figure. There must either be a great deal of sickness or the physicians charge very high fees.

Mr. OLIVER. I find from the Auditor General's Report of payments in the preceding year that there were four officials who were paid each $50 a month. They are officers of the mounted police, and receive fees to compensate them for their extra duties in connection with the Indians, aside altogether from their duties in connection with the police. These Indians in the Yukon are not on reservations but are scattered over the territories. Of course, medical attendance and services of all kinds are very high in the Yukon. There are over 700 Indians.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Why is it that from 1896 to 1905 the number of physicians has increased to 106, while the Indian population has not increased to any extent? The salaries paid to physicians in 1896 was $33,000; in 1905 they were $69,000.

Mr. OLIVER. A number of those who had hitherto been paid by fees were placed on salary since the date first mentioned. That had the effect of increasing the expenditure somewhat, but I think we have a better service. Our information shows that the results of the change are for the better, although a little more expensive.

Mr. J. D. REID. Are these Indians in the Yukon increasing or decreasing in number?

Mr. OLIVER. They are decreasing. They are not gathered on reserves, they roam at large. We have not very accurate statistics of their number.

Mr. KEMP. Was any money spent for this purpose previous to the discovery of gold in the Yukon?

Mr. OLIVER. No, there was not.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I do not wish to prolong the discussion at all but I certainly believe that it is very unreasonable for the hon. minister to merely make the statement that it is necessary to have 106 more doctors for practically the same population and that instead of $33,000 being expended as was the case when the doctors were under fees, now that they are under salary, the cost to this country is over double—$69,000. I think that some fuller explanation should be made than that which the hon. minister is giving.

Mr. OLIVER. I understand the hon. member to say that that is the increase in ten years?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER. Well, during these ten years there was taken under supervision the additional treaty 8 and there was assumed responsibility in regard to a large part of British Columbia where responsibility had not been assumed before, and of course within these years the responsibilities of the Yukon were also added. While I still say that there was no doubt an actual and apparent increase in the expenditure for medical attendance upon the Indians which we believe was justified by the necessities of the case and has also been justified by the results a large part of the increase is due to the extension of the operations of the department over treaty No. 8, over the Yukon and over the part of British Columbia over which we did not exercise the same supervision before.

Mr. FOSTER. I might ask the hon. minister whether or not the Yukon council has anything to do with the Indians in that district.

Mr. OLIVER. For schools and relief the Yukon government act as the agents of the Indian Department. For medical attendance the work is done in connection with the Mounted Police. The Mounted Police are given an additional fee for their attendance on the Indians.

Mr. FOSTER. This being an item in the Yukon perhaps it would be as well for us to raise the question which has been two or three times raised here as to whether or not there is any medium of communication between this parliament and the Yukon council as regards information required here in reference to expenditures made under the council. I understand the hon. Minister of the Interior takes the ground that if we want information about the Yukon we are to get it the best way we can, that he does not consider that he is bound to look after that or to get it unless he is compelled to. Now, that was not always the minister's proposition. He did not always maintain that the council was absolutely its own master in the matter of these expenditures, and that there was no supervision over it by this government, and consequently by this parliament for in July, 1905, when he was passing his estimates for the Northwest on a vote of $134,000, I, myself, asked him the question:

> Is there any supervision by this government over the expenditure?

And the answer was that,

> The accounts are audited by our Auditor General.

Then asked:

> What guarantee is there that they spend the money for that purpose?

And the hon. Minister of the Interior answered:

> The commissioner is an officer of this government responsible to us and he is president of the Yukon council?

Recently I asked that we should have some information in reference to an extraordinary expenditure by the Yukon council, or a proposed extraordinary expenditure, news of such coming to independent members of parliament as only such news can.

I notice an hon. member for British Columbia smiles when I talk of independent members of parliament. I can quite recognize why he should. That word, may be, is not in his vocabulary, but vocabularies differs with different members and some may have such a word, some may use it and properly use it as well. I was going on to say that the only source from which we can gather a great deal of our first information is from the press, and the enterprising members of the press who ferret out certain things, get at them very closely or get at them altogether and finding their way into the columns of the press they catch the eyes of members of parliament as well as others. Thereupon inquiries can be made. Now, in a very circumstantial way the information came that an extraordinary expenditure was authorized by the council and would be carried out during the coming summer—no less than making rain through the instrumentality of a gentleman from the United States of America. This rain, I suppose, was to come down from above. This government has had a good many different kinds of experiments. About $50,000 of the people's money was spent by the predecessor of my hon. friend in stopping rain from coming up from below ; in other words, in plugging up a hole that some enterprising prospector had bored in his search for the yellow metal, and the former Minister of the Interior, always humanitarian and always large and expansive in his ideas of expenditure, immediately issued an order that the hole was to be plugged, and if it was not plugged he would know the reason why. Whether he was an expert in the matter of plugging holes or not I do not know, but he went to work on it with the resources of the Dominion behind him and before he stopped $50,000 of the people's money is said to have been spent. Whether the hole is plugged for ever and ever or not, I do not know. Now, not to be outdone by the preceding Minister of the Interior the present Minister of the Interior is himself to make a hole in the heavens and bring down rain from above in order to supply the parched earth and help the miners to wash out their mud. This extraordinary expenditure is proposed to be made by a Christian and intelligent people who have outlived superstitions and who, having had some common school education and some of them a chance to look into a college or a university, might very well be supposed to have passed that stage of old time credulity when it was supposed that by mumming, or prayers, or incantations, or anything at all of that kind the courses of nature could be changed or diverted from the way that an all ruling Providence had ordered them long before the creation of this world. I had supposed that we had got out of the idea that such things could be made to interfere with the beneficent laws above us. Of course, our comprehension being limited, may be sometimes, we may consider these laws to be inpinging on what we thought were our selfish rights but on what our long experience had proved to be best for every part of the world for all time. But the hon. minister had an ambition that vaulted clear of everything. He wanted to revive that old time period and under his aegis and regime the council over which he has control, over which he declares he has control, is said to have authorized an expenditure of $10,000 towards interfering with Providence and bringing down rain. Naturally an economical mind like my own is inclined to inquire whether this is a proper expenditure. Every intelligent mind wants to know what in the wide world has got hold of the machinery of government in this enlightened age in Canada, which impels an expenditure of $10,000 to get Hatfield up from the United States to bring down rain in the Yukon. When we asked for information it was treated with an altogether unbecoming levity. Anything which pretends to interfere with the ways of Providence is not a subject for levity. But, the Minister of Customs treated it with almost jocularity, and so did the Minister of the Interior at first ; afterwards he got a little angry at our repeated insistence to know what had been done, and he plainly said that we could go to Boston, and he would not get any information for us.

Mr. OLIVER. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon, I did not say ' Boston ' and I did'nt mean Boston.

Mr. FOSTER. Perhaps the vernacular would be stronger, but I selected the centre of culture and refinement of the United States as a more habitable destination than that to which the Minister of the Interior would have consigned us if his language would have been parliamentary. But leaving joking aside—

Mr. PATERSON. Surely you are not joking on such a subject ?

Mr. FOSTER. I am joking at the Minister of the Interior, I was serious on the providential side of the question. We would like the Minister of the Interior to kindly give us the information with reference to that alleged proposal, and if he has not got it we ask that he will get it as quickly as possible. I believe there is telegraphic communication with the Yukon and I believe the commissioner to the Yukon was here.

Mr. BERGERON. He is here yet.

Mr. FOSTER. It is quite impossible such a thing as this could have been talked about and that the minister and the commissioner did not have some conversation with reference to it. Will the minister gratify our well based curiosity, and not send any of us to Boston for asking this information which we should have.

Mr. MILLER. Whether we listen to a clown in the circus or to the member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) we are always interested and we usually laugh. But some of his wit it is rather difficult to understand at times. What did the hon. gentleman mean when he said he did'nt know whether the Minister of the Interior was an expert at plugging holes.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon gentleman will get his information at first hand if he applies to the ex-Minister of the Interior.

Mr. MILLER. The ex-Minister of the Interior did not use the language ; the hon. member for Toronto did.

Mr. TAYLOR. The ex-minister got $50,000 voted for plugging the hole.

Mr. HENDERSON. And I am not very sure that the ex-Minister of the Interior did not use the expression. Quite a lengthy discussion took place here about plugging up this hole and my recollection of the language of Mr. Sifton was, that after the people of the Yukon had tried to stop the flow of water by putting down bags of peas and beans which they hoped would swell in the hole, they wired to the Minister of the Interior telling him they had failed, and asking what they should do. My recollection is that the minister wired back : 'Plug the hole.' And so he became the author of the expression. At all events the expression was used by more than one member of the House as the debates will show, and the Minister of the Interior regarded it as a very good joke. And more than that, after they had filched $50,000 out of the treasury of this country to plug the hole, it was found that the hole did not require plugging for the water continued to flow, and those in charge of the plugging wired to the minister to know how much rental he would charge for the use of the water. I have no doubt that the present Minister of the Interior recollects very well that during the election of 1904 the issue was raised on the platforms of Alberta, that while the Yukon people could get $50,000 to plug a hole which did not require plugging, the Alberta people could not get any money out of this government at all. It seems to me these two questions are akin. In one case the Yukon council spent $50,000 to prevent water coming up, and now they are spending other thousands of dollars to get rain to come down. We are entitled to information about this. I believe it is another scheme to get money out of the treasury of this country for which no value will be received.

Mr. OLIVER. I presume my hon. friends opposite are not desirous of being taken seriously because if so they would have discussed this question when the vote for the government of the Yukon was up, rather than on a vote for destitute Indians, which whatever may be its merits or demerits the government of the Yukon is not responsible for except as the agents of this government in distributing the money. I think this is the third reference of my hon. friend from North Toronto to the question, of rain making in the Yukon, and he has been so anxious and urgent on the subject that he could not wait until the matter might have been fairly brought up in its proper place and at the proper time. I therefore take for granted that he is more desirous of airing his oratorical ability, ventilating his supposed wit and impeding the progress of business in this House than he is to arrive at intelligent conclusions in regard to an important matter. I understand that the position the hon. member takes now is that business is to be impeded until certain information that he demands shall be secured. In regard to that, I will say this, that there is no member of this House more anxious to facilitate the business of the House and to place before it all proper information than I am; I think I have given ample evidence of that since holding the position I do. But there is a very important question at issue in this matter—the question of responsible government; and, as I took the liberty of remarking on a previous occasion, the hon. member and his friends on that side of the House hold a radically different view from that held by myself and my friends on this side, in regard to responsible government; and we may as well have that question tried out here and now, if my hon. friend wishes. We hold that having established a government in the Yukon, having established a legislature there, and having given that legislature powers of taxation and of expenditure, that legislature is entitled to exercise those powers in regard to the money raised by itself by its own means of taxation, without let or hindrance on the part of this government. That is our position ; we believe it to be correct.

Mr. FOSTER. Do you speak for the government in that ?

Mr. OLIVER. I take the liberty on this occasion of speaking for the government. We are quite aware that it is part of our responsibility to see that money that is voted for any purpose in the Yukon by this government shall be expended for that purpose; but there is money voted to the control of the Yukon Council, and there is money raised by the taxation of that Yukon Council; I take the position that it is the principle of the party on this side of the House that that Yukon Council shall be free to exercise its own best judgment in the expenditure of what is practically its own money. In regard to the position taken by my hon. friend on a previous occasion, if I may allude to it here, we again take issue with him in regard to the authority he may be expected to assume over the Yukon Council and its legislative action, because of the fact that certain members of that council hold salaried positions under this government. When those gentlemen were appointed as legislators for the Yukon, they were appointed to legislate for the Yukon, and not to act as the legislative agents of this government. Their responsibility in regard to legislation and in regard to expenditures agreed to by them, is to their position as members of the Yukon Council, and not to their position as judges or other officers under this government. We take radical ground on that point, and the people of the Yukon thoroughly understand our position, that these men are appointed to legislate for the Yukon, and not for the government at Ottawa. As I said before, if my hon. friend and his leader disapprove of the action of the Yukon Council in this matter—and I am not here to defend the Yukon Council on that or any other matter—it would be, I think, fairer on their part to this suffering country if they combined a portion of their wealth, and telegraphed their distinguished disapproval to the Yukon Council, when I have no doubt it would receive all the consideration it deserves.

Mr. FOSTER. Why, then, if this present version given by my hon. friend on behalf of the government is correct, did the minister use the language he did on the 11th of July, 1905, when I asked him, 'Is there any supervision by this government over that expenditure ?'—that is, the expenditure of the Yukon vote—and when he said : 'The accounts are audited by our Auditor General' and when he was asked, 'What guarantee is there that they spend the money for that purpose ?' he answered : 'The commissioner is an officer of this government, responsible to us, and he is the president of the Yukon Council.' Now what change has taken place since July 11, 1905? Any in legislation? None. Any in constitutional principles ? None. No change has taken place. If the minister uttered the truth and the proper principle on the 11th of July, 1905, it is the proper principle now, and it is true now. Which horn of the dilemma will the minister take? English language is English language, and it is perfectly plain. No statement could be more definitely made than the statement of the minister which I have just read, that the commissioner is an officer of this government, and as such is responsible to this government.

The principle that was affirmed there was that this money was voted for that service. But it is expended under an officer of this government as president of the council which expends it ; and he, being our officer, is responsible. If he is the officer of this government, he is the officer of this parliament. The only means of communication we have with him, however, is through his responsible minister, the Minister of the Interior ; and the government which appointed him and which pays him, and which can dismiss him at any time it chooses to do so. A portion of that money is expended, or proposed to be expended in a certain way. Keeping directly in mind the question and answer of July 11, 1905, we say to the government : If he is your officer and responsible to you, you are the medium through which we must inquire as to expenditures, alleged or real, which have been made under his supervision as president of the council. Cannot this parliament follow its own money and its own officer just as far as that officer can go ? Surely that is a principle which nobody can dispute. Yet the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) who leads this government, who has had experience of the constitution and of the policy, and who knows what has been the practice, is made to stand in his place, through the Minister of the Interior, and declare that if we gentlemen are anxious to find out anything as to the expenditure of the money by the Yukon council, we can club together and send for the information. Does the Prime Minister of this country really take that position ? The hon. Minister of the Interior says he does. Does the Liberal government, of all governments, take that position ? The Minister of the Interior says it does. He spoke for himself, but when I questioned him he also spoke for the whole government. If that is the position, we want to know it. If that is the position, I have no hesitation at all in saying that it is a position that is absolutely indefensible, that it has no constitutional or legal ground ; and I doubt very much, if the Prime Minister were here to-night, that he would take that position himself. I know that I am bound to take the word of the Minister of the Interior.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. Which word ?

Mr. FOSTER. That is a very important and very pertinent question. Which word am I to take ? To-night he says that they are perfectly independent, that they are a legislative body; that they do their legislating and their expending, and we have no control over them—we have nothing to do with them. A few months ago he said the exact opposite.

But here is the simple position : Under our right as members of parliament—as an opposition if the hon. members on the other side do not care to vindicate the right of parliament on this point—under our responsibility to look after the expenditures of this country and to exercise our influence with regard to them, we ask whether such a thing has been done or such an amount expended by order of the Yukon council. We put that question to the only man whom we can ask, the Minister of the Interior in whose department this officer is and under whose department the Yukon is administered. And what answer do we get ? The simple answer—the simple insult, that is what it is—that, if we want to find out, we can club together and cable to the Yukon. The members of parliament have no executive authority; this gentleman is not our officer, he is the officer of the government. We have no right to go to the department of the minister and take any of his officers by the collar and demand of him such and such information. He is the officer of this parliament, the officer of the public; but he is an officer under a system of government, and the man to get the information that he has is the responsible head of the department—the minister can give instructions and demand information. Then, if we cannot go to the officers in the department, we certainly cannot go to the Yukon and order any officer there to send us a cablegram giving certain information. No one on that side of the House, outside of the minister, would attempt to maintain such an absurd proposition as that put forth by the hon. gentleman. I say again that it is unconstitutional; I say again that it is simply an insult to this parliament as it has been put by the Minister of the Interior.

Mr. OLIVER. I am more fortunate in this debate than in the debate of the other day, for then my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) was at liberty to say what he pleased, and I had no right to reply to him. Allow me to suggest that the hon. gentleman has to-night absolutely misstated the words I used; and he has done it deliberately for he made the same misstatement on a previous occasion——

Mr. FOSTER. What is the misstatement?

Mr. OLIVER. I did not say that the hon. member (Mr. Foster) and any others would have to club together and cable for the information. What I did suggest to them and what I do suggest now is that, if they wished to express their distinguished disapproval of the action of the Yukon council if they would cable their disapproval it would avoid a waste of the time of this House and of the country, and I had no doubt that it would receive all the consideration that it deserved. In my opinion the expression of their view is quite different from a request on their part for information. As to information, there is no member of this House who is more anxious to give all the information that can be desired than I am. As soon as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) will demonstrate that the information that he asks for is a matter of parliamentary right and not of idle curiosity, or an occasion for ribaldry, he will get the information and get it quickly. But, so far, he has not attempted to demonstrate that point. My hon. friend suggests that there is a difference between my word of last year and what I have said now. There are none so blind as they who will not see.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) being one of these.

Mr. OLIVER. Oh, I can see all right—I can see right through the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster). I said last year that this government had the right to follow its own money and to call to account its officer for the expenditure of money. And I say so still. But, if this parliament votes money to be expended for certain purposes for the Yukon, the matter to be administered by the Yukon council, that council is responsible to this government. But when we vote a sum of money expressly for distribution by the Yukon council without let or hindrance on our part, I submit it is not constitutional and it certainly is not in accordance with Liberal principles, that we should call the Yukon council to account for the use they have seen fit to make of that which we have placed in their own hands as their own money. Besides that, as I pointed out, the Yukon council raised money on its own account and surely my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) will concede to the Yukon council the privilege of expending as it pleases the money that it raises from the people of the Yukon under the authority vested in it by this parliament. If they will not concede that to the people of the Yukon, to the Yukon council, then they certainly will not concede that to the Yukon people which this government would desire to concede to them and which it does concede to them.

Mr. FOSTER. Let us try that matter out a little and see how it works. My hon. friend (Mr. Oliver) tried to make a distinction and draw himself out of a position which even he saw was untenable.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, I must ask your protection.

Mr. FOSTER. I am not going to hurt you.

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, I need not quote Shakespeare to the hon. gentleman; he understands well enough that when he undertakes to misrepresent and misstate what I say in this House I am entitled to your protection and I claim it.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, I put myself under the Chair's protection. The hon. gentleman, seeing that he had got into a rather tight place and trying to draw himself out of it—

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, I did not try to draw myself out of a tight place but I objected to being put in a wrong position by the misstatements of the hon. gentleman.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. FOSTER. I will accept the hon. gentleman's statement that he did not try to draw himself out of a tight place. That is my conception of it, and with all due deference to my hon. friends knowledge of constitutional principles and the rules of debate I have a right to my own conception of the hon. gentleman's position. My conception of it was that he saw he had got into a very tight place and that he tried to draw himself, as gently and as quickly as possible, out of that tight place by saying that he did not suggest we should club together and ask for information but that we should club together and telegraph to the council our distinguished disapproval of the council's action in this respect. I said before, that I had no right to go over into the hon. gentleman's department and by force compel one of his officers to do something which I wanted done but I suppose the hon. gentleman would think I was quite within my right if I should address a most savage remonstrance to one of his officers, his deputy or otherwise, hauling him over the coals for not doing something in the department which I wanted him to do. There would be a distinction in my hon. friend's mind between these two. There is no distinction in my mind ; when you give me the right to do one you give me absolutely the right to do the other. The minister thinks I am prolonging the discussion and that I am obstructing the estimates. The example has been given before in this House and during this session of parliament where a minister deliberately obstructed his own estimates and did not do so with any great advantage to his estimates or to the time of the House.

Mr. PATERSON. Don't look at me.

Mr. FOSTER. No. And I will just by way of kindness suggest to the Minister of the Interior that he should be careful not to fall into the same pit that his brother minister fell into and be guilty of obstructing his own estimates. We are not obstructing estimates for the sake of obstructing estimates, we are trying to get from the minister either the information, if he has it, or a promise from him that he will get us the information ; we are getting it on the constitutional grounds, and if the minister chooses to obstruct his estimates by refusing to do that the responsibility is on the minister and not on us on this side of the House.

Mr. OLIVER. We have been discussing this matter for some time. I have said to the hon. member before and I say to him again that if he will demonstrate that the question he asks is a parliamentary right, and not a matter of idle curiosity, there will not be one moment lost in securing the information; but does the hon. gentleman suggest to this House and this country that he proposes to hold up the business of this House from time to time as may suit him in the interest of idle curiosity or revelry or ribaldry as he has done ?

Mr. FOSTER. I am afraid I will have to call for the protection of the Chairman. Mr. Chairman, will you look this way once in a while and when you see the Minister of the Interior abusing an independent member on this side of the House will you not throw the mantle of your protection over him ? I know you will, for I know your kindness of heart, but I object to the Minister of the Interior, or any other minister, charging me with idle curiosity. Who is to be the judge of my position here as a member and of the information that I think I require and that I think I have a right to ? Will any hon. gentleman on the other side of the House, be he minister or not, take it upon himself to charge me or any other member on this side with idle curiosity, simply because it suits him to do so, when in the pursuit of our duty we ask for information to which we are entitled ? He invites me to demonstrate to him my right to ask him. I decline to do it ; I stand here on my right as a member of this parliament, representing just as good a constituency, representing it just as intelligently, and representing it with just as long an experience as my hon. friend represents his, and I object entirely to his reading into my action and my speech his own motives, be they worthy or unworthy. I also will not undertake to demonstrate to him my right because I have come to the conclusion that the jury is not a jury to which I would like to appeal. I would like to appeal to a jury of my equals in intelligence and in knowledge of constitutional procedure, and I am sure if the hon. minister takes the position which he has just lately taken and perseveres in it, that he can hardly call himself an equal of other members in this House with regard to constitutional principles and practice. Therefore, again I ask that the minister will give us this information being the responsible head of the appointed officer who administers in part the vote which this parliament gave for general purposes, not for special purposes ? What right has the minister to say that the $5,000 or $10,000 which is to be spent on this rainmaking business is out of the particular portion of money which they raised from taxes in the Yukon? They raise a part of the revenue, we give the rest of it, but it all comes into the one treasury and the $10,000 is just as much a vote of what we vote as it is out of what they receive there.

The Prime Minister is here now and I propose to ask him a question or two in order that we may get out of this dilemma. I have taken the position as a member of parliament with a duty to perform, that we have a right to information as to the proposed expenditure by the Yukon Council of a sum of money for rainmaking purposes. I think I have that right because of the position the Minister of the Interior took on the 11th of July, 1905, when he was trying to get his vote through parliament. The vote was for $134,000, a general vote. I myself asked him :

Is there any supervision by this governmen over that expenditure ?

Mr. OLIVER. The accounts are audited by our Auditor General.

The accounts of the province of New Brunswick are not audited by our Auditor General, the accounts of British Columbia are not audited by our Auditor General. There must be, therefore, some difference generical and actual between the position of the Yukon and the position of a self-governing province. Then Mr. Bergeron asked:

What guarantee is there that they spend the money for that purpose?

Mr. OLIVER. The commissioner is an officer of this government, responsible to us, and he is president of the Yukon council.

That was the answer of the present Minister of the Interior, of your Minister of the Interior. Now that is a fair and plain position. I do not think anybody can draw from it any other conclusion than this: We vote the money, we appoint the officer, we have a right to follow the money and to make requisitions on the officer for information as to how it is spent, and the minister being an officer of this parliament is the means through which parliament or any member of it can communicate in this respect. To-night and on previous occasions the minister takes directly opposite ground that we have no supervision at all over the expenditure of the Yukon council, that they are a legislative body, that they are responsible only to themselves, that they are not responsible to us, and he has kindly invited us, if we do not approve of this expenditure or any other, to draw out of our pockets a certain sum of money, to club together and telegraph our distinguished disapproval to the Yukon council of the methods they are pursuing. I asked him if he represented the government in that, or if it were only his own opinion, and he stated that undoubtedly he represented the government in that respect. I put him right on this basis, that we here as members of parliament authorize all expenditure, we make these votes, we have a right to follow these votes out wherever they are expended under officers appointed by ourselves, through the committee of the cabinet who represents this parliament as an executive. I simply asked your Minister of the Interior if he would give us the information, if he had it, as to whether such an order had been passed and for such a purpose, and if he had not, if he would kindly communicate with his officer there, the president of the council, and get us the information. He flatly refused to do it. He says he is practising Liberal doctrine, and that he voices the opinion of the Prime Minister and of the government in that respect. That is where we are.

Mr. OLIVER. I would like to correct my hon. friend in one remark he made. In speaking of the authority of the Yukon council and of the authority of this government in regard to the expenditure, I did not say that the Yukon council had absolute control of all the money that was placed at their disposal.

Mr. FOSTER. Who has?

Mr. OLIVER. I said that the money that was voted by this government for a specific purpose to be expended by the Yukon council for a specific purpose had to be expended for that purpose by that council; that the governor or the commissioner was responsible to us that the money was spent in that way, and it was to that end that the accounts were audited, but that when we voted a certain sum for general expenditure by the Yukon council, then I held that we could not hold the governor of the Yukon responsible for the distribution of that sum.

Mr. FOSTER. What did you hold on July 11, 1905 ?

Mr. OLIVER. I am holding exactly what I held then. Further, I did not flatly refuse, nor did I refuse at all, to bring the information. I said that if the hon. gentleman would demonstrate that he had a right to the information it would be brought as quickly as it could be brought, and nobody would be as glad to do it as myself.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) has appealed to me, I do not know in what capacity, whether as arbiter or not. I must say that I am surprised at the views advanced by the hon. gentleman. He has certainly advanced doctrines to which I am not able to subscribe, and I do not think he would subscribe to them himself when he had analysed them. The Yukon territory is administered by a council, and, if I remember right, this council is partly nominated by the Crown and partly by the people; therefore, it is an independent council. Does my hon, friend expect that members of the council who are appointed by the government and those who are elected by the people are to expend money which parliament puts at their disposal at the bidding of this government and are responsible to this government? We may be held responsible for the conduct of members that we appoint ourself, but are we to be held responsible also for the conduct of those who are elected by the people of the Yukon?

Mr. FOSTER. But which is the majority?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That is not the point. Is it or is it not an independent body; is it or is it not subordinate to this government or parliament ? My hon. friend assimilates the expenditure of this money by the Yukon council to the expenditure of money by officers subordinate to ourselves, as if we had the power to say to them: You should do this and you should not do that. I appeal to the judgment of both sides of the House. If the members of the Yukon council are entrusted with the duty of expending the money we place at their disposal, if these members misbehave, if they expend the money in a manner which in our judgment is improper, if they expend it negligently or in an unwarrantable manner, then it would be our duty to revise the expenditure, but we have not to say whether they have acted wisely or unwisely.

But in this case what does it amount to after all? I understood from the paper which was read by my hon. friend that the Yukon council agreed to pay $5,000 to a certain rainmaker, and I understood, rightly or wrongly, from the paper which he read that a certain number of citizens of the community also agreed to pay $5,000. Well, Sir, I ask my hon. friend from North Toronto if in the Yukon territory there are five men so credulous, or at all events with such faith in the powers of the rainmaker, that they will each of them put his hand in his pocket to the extent of $1,000 in order that the experiment may be tried, should we be so severe upon the members of the council if they have the same faith? Does he think we should censure the men who paid out $5,000 of the money which we voted them in order to supplement the money contributed by the citizens? They may have been very unwise. My hon. friend thinks they were unwise. I think they are unwise also. I do not think they will have the value of their money. But, at all events, it would be simply an error of judgment. There was no corruption in it. He and I know as others know that the experiment was tried in California and in some of the other western states and that it did not succeed. At all events they thought they would try and make one more experiment; that they would take $5,000 for this purpose if five leading citizens would contribute a similar amount. Under such circumstances my hon. friend thinks these men are liable to censure. I do not think they are. I say unhesitatingly that I would not have them censured. I might tell them that they have made a great mistake, that I think they will have no benefit from the money, but because they did that I am not prepared to say that they should be visited with condemnation or censure. That is my view of this matter.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, my right hon. friend would never have been a very stern reformer in the old days—a John Hampden or a man of that stripe. He does not look at principle as principle but it is only whether it be a little thing or a big thing. I wonder where the world would have been if all its foremost men had gone on that principle or had based their conduct on grounds of that kind. No one was asking to censure the council or to visit them with condemnation. That has not been the question we have been arguing here. It was simply the question of our right to information. That was the basis, that was the important demand, that was the attitude of hon. gentlemen with me here. That is the only demand we have ever put forward. In arguing for information and in having ourselves rudely stopped from it by the Minister of the Interior we have canvassed such other grounds and such other arguments as came up but there was no expression in regard to censure. The whole thing from first to last has been that we have a right to the information and should get that information. Now, that we have a right to that information my hon. friend has proved up to the hilt by two remarks that he made. He says: What can we do? Part of them are elected and we appoint the majority. Then he says: There is one thing we can do. We cannot tell them how they are to expend their money or the like of that, as unfortunately we cannot successfully do to the government that is opposite to us, but there is one thing we can do, says the right hon. gentleman. What is that? we can, if we consider that they have made a bad use of the funds, dismiss them and appoint others who will make a good use of the funds. Pray, how are we to know whether they have made a good or a bad use of the funds? Will something or other occult in its nature inform the right hon. gentleman's inner consciousness that they have made a misuse of public funds? It does not come in that way. The only way we can find out is to make an inquisition. That is all we are making tonight. We are making an inquisition and if it turns out that they have made a misuse of public funds it will then be first for the government and afterwards for this parliament to see whether these men shall be punished by being dismissed or shall not be punished, but it is absolutely necessary to make an inquisition before we can pass judgment on their conduct and either condone or punish them by the only mode of punishment that my right hon. friend says exists. Does not my right hon. friend see that when he makes the admission or the statement that for a certain misuse of public funds they may be punished by dismissal and the misuse stopped for the future in so far as it can be by that method that he has conceded the whole demand of hon. gentleman on this side for information and toppled over completely the house of cards that the Minister of the Interior has built?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend says that evidently I am not of the stern stamp of John Hampden or Pym. I have to confess that it is true I have fallen into degenerate days and with so many examples before me I cannot expect to live up to those high examples mentioned by my hon. friend, but allow me to tell him that it is a far distance from John Hampden to the rain maker of the Yukon territory. I agree with my hon. friend. But he has somewhat fallen from the tone of the discussion that he started with. He wanted to know what were our powers over this Yukon council. I have told him what our powers are. We have the power of supervision and that is the only power we can exercise over them. We cannot undo anything that they do but if we find that they are not up to the mark, that they do not come up to our expectations, that they are guilty of malfeasance, or negligence, or stupidity, we can dismiss them. My hon. friend says: Very well, you concede that you are bound to give information. Yes, we do not deny that nor do I understand that my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior denied that it was his duty to give my hon. friend the information which he gave us. But, there is a method of doing this. Every year we receive a copy of all the ordinances which are passed by the Yukon council. It is the duty of the Minister of the Interior to look over them and ascertain whether or not the money has been well expended. It is not simply the duty of the Auditor General to pass upon them and see whether the money has been spent according to the appropriation, but I go further and I say that it is also the duty of my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior to see that the men whom he has appointed and who are in receipt of our confidence have been worthy of that confidence.

Mr. FOSTER. Hear, hear.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. We shall receive these ordinances in due time and we shall find then whether or not there has been money spent for rain making. But in the meantime, my hon. friend is impatient to have that information. He has not been able to tell us whether there has been such an ordinance passed by the Yukon council. He has only newspaper report for it. If my hon. friend tells us that there has been such an ordinance passed, that there has been such an appropriation made we will telegraph for this information. It may be so that such an ordinance has not been passed.

Mr. FOSTER. I will answer my right hon. friend if he will allow me. His memory will carry him back not very many days ago—oh, in fact, his memory will recall hundreds and hundreds of instances where an hon. gentleman has got up on either side of the House and has read an article from a newspaper in which some statement is made—for instance, that a Canadian subject has been unlawfully detained in Uruguay, or Paraguay, or somewhere else. Now, Canadian subjects have certain rights. The Minister of Justice, or the Prime Minister, will at once rise and say: yes, it is only a newspaper report; it may not be true; I hope it is not true, but you have given prominence to it by rising in your place in the House and the government will inquire into the matter. Either the British authorities, or the British Consul or some one else will immediately look into it. Why such an easy, quick, treatment of the subject in that case, and why such an almost obstinate drawing back from anything of the kind in this case? Must a member of parliament rise in his place and declare that the news is true before the government will take any measures to see whether it is true or not? Every week, every member of the government promises to get information of that kind. Why should there be an indisposition to do the same in this case? I know my right hon. friend wants to let down his minister easily; I am quite willing he should make the place as soft as possible on which the minister is to drop, but concede to us our right for information in this respect. The Prime Minister really has conceded our right, but he wants to postpone it until the season comes round. We may not be here then? Now is the time. The government can telegraph easily for the information, and why does not the minister do so? I may state that it is said this order in council was passed last August; at what period of the year do these orders in council come in.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. At the end of the year I suppose; I do not know whether it is the fiscal or financial year.

Mr. FOSTER. It is probably in the pigeon holes of the minister now.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. If my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) places a newspaper report announcing that some Canadian is in peril on the same footing as a newspaper report announcing that the Yukon council has made a bargain for rain, then I would advise the Minister of the Interior to do everything to gratify his rather fastidious curiosity.

Mr. FOSTER. I will do violence to my conscience just for the nonce by admitting that, on condition we get the information.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. FOSTER. Go on with your supply.

Mr. OLIVER. Would the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) be good enough to state in a few words just what information he wants?

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend knows.

Mr. INGRAM. The members of the opposition are perfectly within their rights in bringing to the attention of parliament newspaper reports on public matters and asking the government for an explanation. The other day a newspaper report with reference to this rain making contract was brought to the attention of the government, and the answer of the Minister of the Interior was:

I would suggest to the opposition that they go to the expense of cabling to the Yukon authorities so that they may be aware of their sentiments.

Is that the way the government should answer when questions on matters of public importance are put to them. Surely not. The Minister of the Interior to-night charged the opposition with not being sincere; it is the minister himself who is not sincere. The commissioner of the Yukon has been living in Ottawa; I have no doubt that he has been in the presence of the minister every day since the question was first raised in this House, and if the Minister of the Interior wanted to do business in a business like way he would have obtained this information for the House long ago. Last year a vote of $100,000 was asked for the Yukon and the previous year a vote of $134,000 was asked, showing that the Yukon vote is on a sliding scale, and showing that we are within our rights in demanding to know if that money is properly expended, and if it is not properly expended then the officers who make improper expenditure should be dismissed. We are quite serious in that. When the Minister of the Interior is asked for information he generally replies with a stereotyped phrase that the members of the opposition are not sincere. He had better cut that out. We are as sincere, if not more sincere, than ever he could be.

Mr. PATERSON. I take it that this incident is closed, but as I give my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) credit for constitutional knowledge I would like to know is it his contention that every cent of the expenditure made by the Yukon council is to be subject to review by this parliament just the same as the travelling expenses of a clerk in the civil service? The hon. gentleman knows the constitution of the Yukon council; he knows that the Yukon has a member in the House, and if that is the theory held by the opposition with reference to the power of the Yukon council, the hon. gentleman who represents the Yukon (Mr. Thompson) would probably feel that the Yukon council would have something to say to that. I ask my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) in all seriousness if he means to declare that every dollar spent by the Yukon council is subject to be criticised by this parliament?

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Paterson) started out by saying that the incident was closed, but he thought it well to reopen it.

Mr. PATERSON. I was referring to the general principle.

Mr. INGRAM. The Minister of the Interior stated last year that the expenditure of the Yukon vote is subject to the Auditor General of the Dominion of Canada, and, therefore, it is not only the right, but the duty of this parliament to see that every dollar of that expenditure is properly made. That is an admitted fact. Then I ask the Minister of Customs, suppose we find that the amounts we vote for the Yukon are improperly expended, is it our duty to go on and vote large sums and allow the Yukon council to expend the money in the way I have described without raising our voices in this House on the subject? Are we to sit silent and say to the people of the Yukon, spend this money as you please, we have nothing further to say about it? I say that we are quite within our rights in protesting against the expenditure of money for rain making.

Mr. HENDERSON. I confess that I do not yet quite understand how the money expended by the government of the Yukon is audited—whether it must have the final approval of the Auditor General of Canada or not. My impression, however, is that the practice in the past has been such that there is reasonable cause for alarm in a case of this kind. We may be told by the minister that the Yukon council has no authority from this parliament to expend this money for the purpose of making rain. That may be quite so, but how do we know but that next year the minister will ask us for an appropriation to recoup the Yukon council for the money they have expended in this way? Take the case of the Eldorado gusher, to which the member for North Toronto has referred. The item reads thus: 'Amount to recoup the local council of the Yukon Territory for expenditure incurred in connection with Eldorado gusher, $50,000.' Now, I take it that the Yukon council did that work without the authority of parliament, though they may have had some quasi authority from the minister. They sent down an account to the minister, and he put an item in the estimates and asked parliament to vote $50,000. What reason have we for supposing that this will not be repeated, and that ere long we shall find an item in the estimates for $10,000 to recoup the Yukon council for an expenditure in an attempt to produce rain? To show how money is expended at the whim of the Yukon council without the authority of this parliament, let me refer to an expenditure for making roads. On page 7284 of 'Hansard' of 1903, in answer to a question of Mr. Sproule. 'By what authority did they make this expenditure?' The minister said:

There was no authority given by the department to the Yukon council to exceed their appropriation, but they went on and they spent the money. We have no doubt that value was received for the money, and that the work was useful work, and therefore we think we ought to acknowledge it and pay the expenditure.

Clearly, then, the Yukon council is expending money in the Yukon which has not been authorized by this parliament, and to my mind this is one of the instances in which we shall be called upon to provide the funds necessary to recoup the government of the Yukon for the money so expended. My hon. friend from South Grey (Mr. Miller) seemed to call in question the propriety of the hon. member for North Toronto, in referring to the expenditure of $50,000 several years ago in the Yukon, ostensibly for the purpose of stopping the water that was flowing out of a shaft, in the term, 'plugging the hole,' and attributing it to the late Minister of the Interior, who the hon. member for South Grey seemed to think was not the author of the expression. I have before me these words of the late Minister of the Interior, on page 7276 of 'Hansard' of 1903:

> This is for plugging a hole in the first place, and afterwards making the ditches to let the water off.

And later on, he said:

> My information is that they let a contract to Matheson to plug up the shaft.

The term 'plug' was the term used by the late Minister of the Interior, and I do not know that he ever repudiated it; it certainly was not originated by the hon. member for North Toronto. I have nothing further to say on the matter, only I hope that the result of the operation now proposed in the Yukon for the purpose of producing rain will not prove as expensive to this country as did the attempt to plug the hole in the Eldorado gusher.

Mr. MILLER. I was not objecting to anything of the kind, but was simply referring to the joke of the hon. member for North Toronto. As that hon member seemed rather ashamed to explain his joke, I am quite pleased that the hon member for Halton has done it for him.

Mr. FOSTER. A joke is always spoiled when you try to explain it.

Mr. INGRAM. We might perhaps avoid a good deal of discussion if we had the ordinances passed by the Yukon council brought down and laid on the table. I notice at page L—151 of the Auditor General's Report certain accounts that are audited by the Auditor General; but the last paragraph of a letter written on January 12, 1906, reads as follows:

> I am sending you by same mail copy of the Consolidated Ordinances of the Yukon Territory, also a copy of the ordinances that have been passed since the date of the publication of the Consolidated Ordinances, which will no doubt be of use to you in your department.

This is signed by the controller, Mr. Lithgow, in January, 1906. Now, if these ordinances were laid on the table, hon. gentlemen on both sides would have the privilege of reading them and would understand how the money was expended. Perhaps the minister will be good enough to say whether he has copies of these ordinances and whether he will lay them on the table.

Mr. OLIVER. I have not seen the copies, but I presume that they are in the department. I shall have pleasure in laying them on the table.

Indians—Yukon—to provide education, $3,750.

Mr. OLIVER. The expenditure under this head in 1904-5 was $3,695. The department has not established any per capita rate for boarding or day schools within the territory, but last year gave the total amount under consideration to certain educational work being done in the district, the work principally carried on by the Church of England. The schools are at Forty-Mile, Cariboo, Selkirk, and Moose Hide. The number of pupils on the roll is 100. The school at Forty-Mile is a combination of day and boarding school. There are, six children in attendance.

At Cariboo crossing the school is conducted by Bishop Bompas. At Selkirk there are 50 enrolled, but the attendence is poor, as the Indians are absent on hunting and fishing expeditions for four months of the year. At Moose Hide there are twenty children in attendence for ten months of the year. The school buildings are represented to be large and comfortable. They are provided by the church authorities. In consideration of the earnest work of Bishop Bompas, and on the recommendation of Commissioner Congdon, a grant of $2,500 was given out of last year's appropriation. The expenditure of the current year's vote and next year's will be governed by the same general principle—that is, no specific rate per capita, but a bulk sum for work actually done.

Indians—general—J. A. Macrae, inspector Indian agencies and reserves, $1,350.

Mr. BENNETT. The other evening I took occasion to refer to the sale of an island known as the Giant's Tomb in Georgian bay. At that time, and for some time before, I had been assured that the timber, excepting that covered by the license of the Canada Furnace Company had been sold to Mr. Charles Beck, of Penetanguishene, or was offered to him at a certain price; but, owing to the fact that he was being assessed by certain go-betweens between himself and the government he had thrown up the chance of purchasing. I asked the question, and the minister's answer given in no uncertain terms, was that practically there was nothing in the sale. I asked first as to the sale to Mr. Peter Ryan, and the minister said:

> There had been no sale of the timber on the island to Mr. Peter Ryan and I am informed that there have been no negotiations looking to a sale to Mr. Ryan.

This will be found at page 968 of the unrevised 'Hansard'. Further the minister stated:

There has been correspondence in regard to it, but no transaction of any kind.

And, further on :

The negotiations have not proceeded at all. There have been applications for the timber on the island, that part of it which is not under license to the Canada Furnace Company, but no step has been taken by the department to license the timber, for the reason that it is now under license to that company.

Again the minister said :

As soon the Canada Furnace Company's right is disposed of, of course, the timber and the island will be for sale.

Nobody reading these answers would come to the conclusion that there had been an offer of this property made by the department. Now, this offer has been made by the department, and I say that when the minister said :

There has been no sale of the timber on the island to Mr. Peter Ryan, and I have been informed that there have been no negotiations looking to a sale to Mr. Ryan.

The minister stated that which was not in accordance with the facts—although I am willing to adimt that he sought to save himself by saying, 'I am informed' that there have been no negotiations.

The information of the minister at that time was information furnished him by his deputy, and there is the most positive statement that there had been no negotiations looking to a sale to Mr. Ryan. The minister cannot escape the fact that there were negotiations with Mr. Ryan on October 21, 1905. And, while I am willing to admit that the minister cannot carry every detail in his head, I have every reason to believe that the deputy minister was very conversant with the negotiations for the sale of this timber. I asked that a report made by Mr. Chitty should be brought down, and it is here now, and I would like to read it. It is dated October 21, and is addressed to the deputy minister. It says :

With reference to the letter from Mr. Peter Ryan hereunder, submitting an offer of $6,375 for Giants Tomb Island in Georgian bay, I beg to state that there is an application from Mr. C. Beck, of Penetanguishene, for the timber on this island, bearing date March 21, 1899. There is also a later application from him for the purchase of the island, dated March 31, 1902.

Yet, with this memorandum in his department, the minister is informed by his deputy that there have been no negotiations looking to a sale with Mr. Ryan. I say there was an offer to Mr. Ryan for something over $9,000. And, though the minister says there has been a correspondence, but no transaction of any kind, I say Mr. Ryan had the offer made to him and he could have been the possessor of that timber on the payment of this sum of money. Will the minister still say that there was no offer to Mr. Ryan ?

Mr. OLIVER. I am certainly informed that no offer was made to Peter Ryan, and that he never had the refusal of the Island at any price.

Mr. BENNETT. So, the minister has been informed by his deputy that there was never an offer to Mr. Ryan. This is a question between the deputy and Mr. Ryan, and I do not mind telling the minister that I prefer to take Mr. Ryan's word for it. Mr. Ryan rushed into print on this subject, as reported in the 'Globe' of Monday, April 2. He says ;

About a year ago I wrote the Interior Department on behalf of Mr. Beck to ascertain at what price the island could be purchased. A reply was received giving the price at something over $9,000, conditional on the existing license held by the Canada Furnace Company being duly assigned.

And Mr. Beck or Mr. Ryan could have been in possession had it not been for the toll-takers who intervened. A little later on, I wrote to Mr. Ryan, and he sent me this letter. It is not private so I will read a part of it :

I have had my attention called to your remarks about the Giant's Tomb Island. The government asked something over $9,000, which, after a personal examination by Beck months ago, was declined as too dear.

Will the minister say in the face of this that there was not an absolute offer, and that if Mr. Ryan had accepted it he would not have been in possession to-day ? It was notorious among the people who are conversant with matters of this kind, that, as Mr. Ryan says, he could have had the property at $9,200. And it has been the game all through to hand this over. So, when the minister tells me there never was an offer, I am going to take Mr. Ryan's statement as I find it in the 'Globe' and in this letter to me. Any one will be able to see that there was an absolute offer. Let us see the history of the whole thing and then we can better judge it. In 1900 the train was laid by Beck to become the possessor of this island with all its valuable timber. As long back as 1900 a report was made by Mr. Chitty, a government inspector of timber, in the hon. gentleman's department. Mr. Chitty went to Penetanguishene and what did he go for ? This report is dated May 1, 1900. He says :

Prior to leaving Ottawa for Penetanguishene I had been instructed to visit Giant's Tomb during my absence from headquarters, and to estimate the quantities of timber thereon which were not included in the license held by Messrs. Chew Brothers, of Midland, and the value of the same.

That is the license subsequently assigned to the Canada Furnace Company.

I met Mr. Beck frequently during my stay, and he expressed a wish to accompany me when I visited the island.

He then goes on to say that he did business with him. That shows that in 1900 Beck was after this island and that Chitty was deputed to go there to make a valuation.

Mr. Chitty in his report sets out this fact that as far back as 1883 this island was offered for sale at a price of $7,000. In his report Mr. Chitty values the timber on the property at $9,230, which was grossly inadequate valuation, and, as Mr. Chitty points out, throughout the prices were very small. When I tell you that he placed the basswood as being worth only $2 a thousand, gentlemen who are conversant with the price of basswood will know that it is practically absurd.

Mr. TAYLOR. It is worth $20 to-day.

Mr. BENNETT. He placed maple at $3 a thousand, which is equally absurd. And so we find that in 1900 this price of $9,230 was placed on this island and the timber on it by Mr. Chitty.

What happened next? Mr. Beck was not prepared to pay that price, but thought there was an easier way to get it, so he laid his train in another direction, and last year and this, when the minister was responsible for all acts as he was then in office, Mr. Peter Ryan, although the minister's deputy tells him now that Mr. Ryan had never been heard of in the transaction, entered the negotiations and here is a report of Chitty in reference to it. Ryan offered $6,375, and what is more, not only was the department offering, as Ryan declares they were, to sell the island to him at that figure of $9,000, but the minister has before him on that same report the warning of the secretary of the department. I see it here:

> The secretary's memo. on my report sets forth that if it be decided to offer the island for sale the sanction of His Excellency in Council will be necessary, and that he agreed that sale should be made by public competition.

Now, is it not odd that in the face of one of the minister's chief officer's report that the island should be sold by public auction that according to Ryan it was being sold to him privately? And more than that, the secretary draws attention to the fact. He says:

> Section 10 of the Land Regulations stipulates that nothing therein contained shall bar the department from disposing of small islands, except the Thousand Island group, in such manner and on such conditions as may seem to the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs best in the interest of the Indians.
> In view of the facts I am unable to recommend the acceptance of Mr. Ryan's offer.

And yet we have the deputy saying that Peter Ryan never took part in the negotiations. The deputy must be very dense, when he had this report of Mr. Chitty, or else there must be something wrong with the whole transaction. We have the records here of what Ryan has said, that the island was offered for something over $9,000. We have Ryan's personal letter to myself stating that it was offered to him at a certain price and that he declined it, and we have the memorandum of the secretary of the department practically warning the deputy minister and the minister that it was in defiance of the regulations to sell it by private sale.

A little attention is devoted to me in reference to this so-called exploded scandal by the 'Globe.' Here we have the statement of Mr. Ryan against that of the Minister of the Interior vouchsafed for by the deputy minister that no transaction was ever made, and I have here the report of the minister's chief officer, the secretary, advising the deputy and the minister that the sale under the regulations could not be made, it being contrary to the law, and if that is not a scandal, I think it should be considered so. As far as the comments in the 'Globe' are concerned, I care nothing for them. Anything that the smug-faced, hypocritical editor of the 'Globe' may say about myself does not interest me. When that worthy stood up on a public platform in Toronto and stated that he could view the blackest chapter of crime perpetrated and committed by the Ross government and pray for a continuance of them in office, I can only say that it is but one more illustration to me of the old saying that if you attempt to wrestle with a chimney sweep you will soil your clothes. We have nothing, therefore, to do with the editor of the 'Globe.' I leave the House to judge the position of the deputy when he states to the Minister on the floor of the House that a statement of mine is untrue when Ryan writes to me and when a statement in the 'Globe' says that he has taken part in these negotiations. I leave the public to read the letter sent to me which fully and conclusively proves that there was an offer made to Beck of these islands at $9,000. Ryan considered the price too high; it was not that they considered the price of timber on the island too high, but, as I am informed by gentlemen who were very close, it was the toll taker's price that was so increasing the value that they did not touch it. That is a fact, and I tell the minister that if it is put up to auction he will find it will bring a very much higher price than $9,000 and that there will be no toll takers to interfere. I have a letter only to-day from a gentleman who intimates that if he could purchase the island for $15,000 he would like to arrange it at once. Let the minister put up this island for sale at once, and for the future let the minister be very careful when he makes statements in this House directly contradicting the statements of mine or of any other gentleman. Let him take care that there are not in his department such tell-tale documents as will contradict his statements and which are vouched for by his deputy.

Mr. OLIVER. As my hon. friend has referred to a certain report it might be as well to give the report as it was given to me for the information of the House and the country. This report is dated Ottawa, May 1, 1900, addressed to the secretary of the department and is signed by George L. Chitty.

Under date of March 21, 1890, Mr. C. Beck, of Penetanguishene, applied for the privilege of cutting timber on Giant's Tomb and Beausoleil islands, in the Georgian bay, Lake Huron, and he was informed that both of these islands were then under license to Messrs. Chew Bros., of Midland; the former for pine and oak and the latter for all kinds of timber. He was also asked to state whether he wished to acquire all the timber on Giant's Tomb other than pine and oak, or only the maple and beech, and he replied that he would like to purchase all the timber thereon, not covered by license. This reply was sent to me at Penetanguishene on the 4th April, 1899, at which place I was at that time acting as agent.

Prior to leaving Ottawa for Penetanguishene I had been instructed to visit Giant's Tomb during my absence from headquarters, and to estimate the quantities of timber thereon which were not included in the licenses held by Messrs. Chew Brothers, of Midland, and the value of the same. I met Mr. Beck frequently during my stay, and he expressed a wish to accompany me when I visited the island.

Being aware that he had been corresponding with the department on the subject of purchasing the timber, and that he had been personally applying for same, I thought it advisable to comply with his request. Prior to leaving for Ottawa I hired a small steamer and proceeded to the island where I made an inspection, the particulars of which will be given hereunder.

For your information I beg leave to submit the following items with regard to this island Giant's Tomb is distant from the harbour of Penetanguishene about twelve miles. It was surrendered by the Indians for sale on the 5th June, 1856, No. 71 Indian Treaties and Surrenders. The area was formerly estimated to be 2,400 acres, but it has been recently ascertained from a measurement of Boulton's chart, 1892-93. that this is largely in excess of the actual fact the correct area is 1,325 acres, of which 51 acres have been sold for lighthouse purposes. leaving the present unsold 1,274 acres.

In 1883 this island was offered for sale by the department to Mr. Hurdon, of Midland, at $7,000, which price was fixed by the late Sir John Macdonald acting as Superintendent General of Indian Affairs. Terms, one-quarter cash, and the balance in three equal annual instalments with interest at six per cent, and the purchaser was required to place at least six settlers on the island.

The license covering pine and oak was the current and held by Mr. H. H. Cook, of Toronto.

Mr. Hurdon offered $2.25 per acre for supposed 2,500 acres, $5,625, and agreed to carry out the conditions of settlement referred to in the foregoing, and he said he would pay more if Cook's license was not in force thereon.

Mr. Plummer, an officer of this department at that time, placed the value of the timber alone on this island at $5,900, and the late Mr. VanKoughnet, Deputy Superintendent General of Indian Affairs, valued the land at $1 per acre. $2,500, making the total value $7,500. It is not probable that either of these persons ever examined the land or timber.

The soil is sandy and gravelly, and it is not generally fit for cultivation. Surface boulders of large size abound in the wooded part or mound, but it is well adapted for pasture for cattle, sheep, &c., and could be quickly utilized by seeding with grass or clover seed. As it stands at present there is fair pastureage for a considerable number of cattle upon it.

It has been estimated that about 800 acres of the island were burned in 1880, the traces of the fire are still apparent, but a considerable part of the burned portion is now covered with small trees.

There have been several inquiries about and applications for the land and timber, the latest being from Mr. Beck. Considering that the licensees have removed from the island all the timber covered by their license, and that the price which may be obtained for it, if offered for sale, will be more or less affected by the continuance of the license thereon which expires on the 30th instant, I would recommend that it should not be included with the other islands in the next renewal of same.

The area of timber land on the island is about 400 acres, and the most of it stands on the summit, or mound, beech and maple are the principal woods, the former is clean and thrifty but many of the larger maples will not turn out well, owing to defects.

The Canada Iron Furnace Company will create an increased demand for firewood in that section, and even now good hardwood is worth on the dock at Penetanguishene $2 to $2.50 per cord. Estimating the product in this form at 30 cents per acre, which I believe is a moderate estimate, the quantity standing on the island is 12,000 cords, on which I place a value of 70 cents per cord, making $8,400. This valuation includes Crown dues.

The timber is worth more in the form of sawlogs than in cordwood, and I estimate the probable quantities to be as follows :

Beech, 2,457,600 feet B.M. at $2..	$4,915 20
Maple, 720,000 feet B.M. at $3	2,160 00
Basswood and birch, 259,200 feet B.M. at $2	518 40
Hemlock and other woods, 500,000 feet B.M. at $2..	637 00
	9,230 60

The values attached include Crown dues.

In view of this showing, I am of the opinion that if the island is offered for sale by auction an upset price of $7,000 should be placed upon it. As it is neither a new or a forfeited berth, sections 3 and 4 of the timber regulations do not appear to be applicable to it. Mr. Beck informed me that he desires to purchase the island as it stands, land and timber, and although the department might be justified in selling it without competition, it would probably be considered more satisfactory by those interested if tenders for same were asked in the usual way. through a limited number of Ontario newspapers authorized to insert government advertisements.

GEO. L. CHITTY,
Timber Inspector.

On the 21st of October, 1905, Mr. Chitty made a further report as follows :

With reference to the letter from Mr. Peter Ryan hereunder, submitting an offer of $6,375 for Giant's Tomb island, in Georgian bay, I beg leave to state that there is an application from Mr. C. Beck, of Penetanguishene, for the timber on this island, bearing date March 21, 1899. There is also a later application from him for the purchase of the island, dated March 31, 1902.

The Canadian Iron Furnace Company, who hold a license from the department covering the pine and oak on this island, applied by letter of May 16, 1900, for the right to cut the remaining hard and soft wood on the island.

There is a large quantity of pine and beech on the island, as shown by my report dated May 1, 1900, the value of which is placed at $2 per thousand feet, which is simply the tariff rate for this timber. The maple is valued at $3 per thousand feet B.M., being only $1 per thousand feet over the tariff rate of dues, and the basswood and birch are valued at only $1 per thousand feet B.M. more than the tariff rate. The hemlock and other woods are valued at $2 per thousand feet B.M., being $1.20 per thousand feet B.M. over tariff rate.

It will be apparent from the foregoing that the values are not high, but very moderate. With regard to the beech I may state that it is not used generally for the manufacture of lumber, but it is coming into use for certain purposes under the diminishing supply of other hard woods. It is probable, however, that a fair proportion of the beech would be converted into cordwood, and assuming that all the woods were manufactured as cordwood, the estimated value of the wood would be, as stated, $8,400. and with the land added, $9,037.

If the Canadian Iron Furnace Company transfer their license to any purchaser of the island, including the timber, there would not be any necessity for issuing another license for the timber on the island in lieu thereof.

The secretary's memo. on my report sets forth that if it be decided to offer the island for sale the sanction of His Excellency in Council will be necessary, and that he agreed that sale should be made by public competition.

Section 10 of the land regulations stipulates that nothing therein contained shall bar the department from disposing of small islands, except the Thousand Island group, in such manner and on such conditions as may seem to the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs best in the interest of the Indians.

In view of the facts I am unable to recommend the acceptance of Mr. Ryan's offer.

GEO. L. CHITTY,
Timber Inspector

Now it is demonstrated by these papers that there is an island called Giant's Tomb, there there is certain timber upon it, that a certain value has been placed upon that timber. It is also shown that communications have been received from Ryan and Beck in regard to the purchase of this island. When I was informed that such communications had been received, my informant was undoubtly mistaken ; but inasmuch as there was no transaction resulting, I submit the information was not important either one way or the other. The important point is that there was no transaction in regard to this island and if there had been any transaction in regard to the island then this transaction, upon the reports of the officers of the department, would have been not by private sale but by public competition. Where my hon. friend sees a scandal in this connection I am as yet unable to discover. Is it because a certain gentleman is named Ryan or because he is named Peter ?

Mr. BENNETT. If the hon. minister will allow me I will answer him.

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. BENNETT. It is because the department offered this island to Mr. Peter Ryan for $9,000 without tender in the face of the report of the minister's chief official, the secretary of the department, that it was illegal to make such a sale and the statement was made by Ryan that the island was offered to him at that price.

Mr. OLIVER. When my hon. friend was speaking of this matter the other night he laid very great stress and emphasis upon the name of Ryan—of Peter Ryan, and if I may judge from the tenor of his argument it was enough that Peter Ryan—this Peter Ryan, whoever he may be—should have applied for the island. Such was the character of this man Ryan. It was enough that he should have written a letter in regard to the island to thereby attach to it a most unspeakable scandal.

Mr. GUNN. Hear, hear.

Mr. OLIVER. He has certainly impressed one of his associates with that view of the case. Now he says that Mr. Ryan's assertion that we offered the island for sale at a certain figure is to be taken as being absolutely authoritative on that matter against the statement of all the officers of the Indian Department. Now, I cannot remove the prejudice that may probably exist in the mind of my hon. friend both in regard to this unfortunate man Ryan and against the deputy of the department, but as evidence that the offer was not made I can only present the file report of the responsible officers of the department recommending that Ryan's offer should not be accepted.

Mr. SAM HUGHES. Was not Ryan's offer a certain figure and the price asked by the department another figure ?

Mr. OLIVER. Well, Mr. Ryan as I understand it, made an offer for the island. Mr. Ryan's offer was not accepted.

Mr. SAM HUGHES. But the department offered to take another price.

Mr. OLIVER. No, the department did not offer to take any price from Mr. Ryan. That is the statement of the officials of the department.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. As I understand it Ryan offered a lower sum, the department asked a little more and Ryan refused to take the island at those terms.

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. BENNETT. Hear, hear.

Mr. OLIVER. Just to show how accurate the reasoning of my hon. friend is in connection let me just recall his line of thought. In the first place Mr. Chitty had undervalued the island. He had valued it at $9,000 when my hon. friend said it was worth $15,000, and Mr. Ryan had refused to accept the offer of the island not because of the price that the department had asked for it but because of a middleman who was taxing him more. If the department offered him the island at $9,000 where was the middleman ?

Mr. BENNETT. I will explain to the hon. minister. If the wherewithal was not coming to the middleman then there was the report on file saying that it must be sold at public auction and if the wherewithal was coming to the middleman the sale was to go through without any public auction.

Mr. OLIVER. That, I am afraid is pretty far fetched. If the island was worth $15,000, as my hon. friend said it was——

Mr. BENNETT. Put it up for sale.

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, and it may be—and if Mr. Ryan was offered it for $9,000, as he says he has been, if he wants this House to believe there was a middleman he will have to produce his middleman. I submit that that is hardly sufficient evidence under the circumstances.

Mr. LALOR. I thought I understood the hon. minister to say that Mr. Ryan made an offer. Would he kindly tell us what that offer was that was made by Ryan ?

Mr. OLIVER. I read the offer and if my hon. friend has paid as much attention as he is now paying he would have known that it was something between $6,000 and $7,000. It was $2,000 less than the valuation placed on the island by Mr. Chitty.

Mr. LALOR. Peter wanted a bargain.

Mr. OLIVER. But, my hon. friend says that Peter was done out of his bargain by some unknown middleman. Now, if my hon. friend cannot produce the middleman as between the price that Peter offered, the price that Mr. Chitty valued the island at and the value that my hon. friend has put upon the island I submit there is no room for the suggestion that he has made in any way, shape or manner. If it is a scandal that Mr. Ryan should have applied to purchase the island from this government then there has been a scandal, but if Mr. Ryan is a good enough man that his word will be taken in preference to that of the officers of the responsible department then surely his communication with the department cannot be a scandal. As a matter of fact, to remove from my hon. friend's mind any anxiety in regard to this island, I will tell him that the Canada Furnace Company have a license upon the island for a certain part of the timber. They own in connection with that license, licenses for a number of other such islands in that vicinity and until their term expires or until their license is released in some way the government is not in a position to sell the island if they wanted to at any price or to any person. I do not know whether my hon. friend's exceeding anxiety in regard to this matter is in order to protect the interests of the Canada Furnace Company but it would seem to me very much in that way. Now, let me tell my hon. friend that when this island is available for sale it will be sold and it will be sold by public competition and if Peter Ryan offers the most money for it Peter Ryan will get the island. No consideration of any suggestion of scandal because of the purchase of this island by Mr. Ryan or anybody else will protect in any undue degree the interests of the Canadian Furnace Company now withholding the island for sale by the government by reason of its timber license upon the island. If that is the point of difficulty with my hon. friend he may relieve his mind upon this subject.

Mr. LALOR. It seems to me that my hon. friend from East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) has done this House and this country a very great service in bringing this matter to our attention. Peter Ryan, the gentleman in question, seems to have offered $6,000 for this particular island, not Cap. Sullivan, as some gentlemen seem to insinuate, but Peter Ryan has offered $6,000 for the island. The Minister of the Interior has been asking $9,000, but the member for East Simcoe says he has a purchaser who is willing to give $15,000 so that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) has been able to place the minister in a position to make $6,000 more for the people of the country on the transaction.

Mr. BENNETT. A reference to 'Hansard' will show that I did not say a word in disparagement of Mr. Peter Ryan for whom I have the greatest respect. I admire Mr. Peter Ryan as a political lever who can make most of the ministers over there sit up when he wants to. Mr. Beck found he was making very little headway in 1900, and so he introduced Mr. Ryan on the scene, and Mr. Ryan did make the ministers sit up because he forced the minister to offer him this property at a certain figure without competition. The Minister of the Interior talks of my veracity. I am willing to put Mr. Peter Ryan's veracity against his, and any one who knows them both will vote in favour of Mr. Ryan. Mr. Ryan says the minister offered him that without competition. Does the minister deny it ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, absolutely and unreservedly.

Mr. BENNETT. Did the minister tell Mr. Ryan the valuation was $9,000, but that he could not have it without a public auction ?

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Ryan was never told that the island was for sale at that time, for the reason that I have given that it was under license to the Canadian Furnace Company.

Mr. BENNETT. That did not debar the government from selling it subject to the rights of the company. The minister knows as well as I do that a deal was on between the Canada Iron Furnace Company and Mr. Ryan for the giving up of their claim. Does the minister not know that ?

Mr. OLIVER. I certainly do not.

Mr. BENNETT. Has the minister never heard of it before ?

Mr. OLIVER. Never in the world ; we do not all live in Penetanguishene you know.

Mr. BENNETT. We do not all live in Penetanguishene, but I know who saw the minister on behalf of the Canada Iron Furnace Company in this matter and I know his statement. We are asked to believe statements made by the minister and his deputy. Let us see. The hon. Frank Oliver said :

There has been no sale of the timber on the island to Mr. Peter Ryan and I am informed there have been no negotiations looking to a sale to Mr. Ryan

There is the solemn statement of the minister whispered into his ear by his political deputy.

No negotiations looking to a sale to Mr. Ryan.

And here is Mr. Chitty's report :

With reference to the letter from Mr. Peter Ryan submitting an offer of $6,375 for the Giant's Tomb, I have to state there is an application, &c.

Your deputy must have known you had that offer. The minister had better not talk about the veracity of himself and his deputy to people who know them so well. I am going to take Mr. Peter Ryan's word for it that he had an offer of this property at $9,000 and I am going to believe the common rumour that the go-between's assessment was so high that Mr. Peter Ryan threw it up—or Mr. Beck because he was the man who was looking for it. Perhaps the minister will tell me if Mr. D'Arcy Scott has seen him in connection with this matter ?

Mr. OLIVER. He certainly has not. I may say I had a letter from Mr. D'Arcy Scott yesterday or the day before—I am sorry I have not the letter with me—in which he states that he had no connection with the transaction as set forth by yourself in the House the other day.

Mr. BENNETT. Will the minister say that Mr. D'Arcy Scott says he made no application to the department for a sale of Beausoleil Island and Giants Tomb.

Mr. OLIVER. I will have great pleasure in bringing the letter down.

Mr. BENNETT. That shows the veracity of the department and the department's officials. The minister stands up and his political attaché, his deputy, sits alongside him, and he make the statement that there has been no negotiation looking for a sale to Mr. Ryan while here is Mr. Chitty's report saying that they cannot accept Mr. Peter Ryan's offer. We can well believe that anything that emanates from the deputy or from the minister must be received with caution, when the minister states solemnly that there have been no negotiations with his department while there is a report in the department that an application has been made. Who will believe the minister and who will believe the deputy. I will reserve my right to believe them. Have I the assurance of the minister that these islands will be put up to public competition by sale or tender ?

Mr. OLIVER. Surely.

Mr. BENNETT. Surely.

Mr. OLIVER. Surely. I have some other documents here that may be of interest to the committee. This is one.

Midland, August 24, 1894.

Hon. T. M. Daly, Minister of Interior,
Ottawa.

Dear Mr. Daly,—There is an island called the Giant's Tomb some fifteen miles from here of considerable size which is in the group belonging to the Christian Indian Islands but upon which no Indians reside and I have been asked by some parties to learn upon what terms a lease of the island could be acquired for purpose of raising sheep in large numbers. The island is now fairly good pasturage and a liberal sowing of grass seed would make it very good pasturage.

Will you please let me know as soon as possible if you would feel disposed to give a lease for, say ten years, and at what rental ? It would be a great advantage to our vicinity if this could be taken in hand as success would mean the enterprise being followed generally if successful.

At present the island is lying unused and I hope you may see your way clear to advising a lease upon easy terms as an incentive to a commencement.

Yours truly,
(Sgd.) WM. H. BENNETT.

Mr. BENNETT. I see nothing wrong about that. I quite believe that the deputy minister has been industriously delving into the archives of the department. He has been a busy politician. People who come from that part of the country know that after the change of government your political deputy was very busy going about giving evidence for the decapitation of Conservative officials ; he was a handy man for that. He has delved a letter out of the department that does not hurt me in the least. I only wish that the department to-day would give a lease to some person for running sheep on this island, I did not ask Mr. Daly for anything that was irregular. I did not ask Mr. Daly to give the island to a political henchman without public competition ; I did not ask Mr. Daly to make a surrender of the right of $10,000 or $15,000 worth of timber to a political friend. I have at least shown to-night that very little reliance can be placed upon statements that come from the deputy minister of that department.

Mr. INGRAM. Would the minister be good enough to tell us when the lease was made out to the Canada Furnace Company ?

Mr. OLIVER. A license was issued in 1870 to the Canada Furnace Company, and has been continued down to the present time.

Mr. INGRAM. What do they pay for the license ?

Mr. OLIVER. I cannot say what they paid as bonus, but they now pay certain dues on the timber they cut.

Mr. INGRAM. Are the conditions under this government different to what they were under the old government ?

Mr. OLIVER. I cannot say whether the dues have been raised or not. That would be the only change, however, within recent years.

Mr. INGRAM. What are the conditions of leasing any of these islands ?

Mr. OLIVER. A bonus is secured for the timber by public competition, an annual ground rent is paid, and the licensees pay dues on all the timber they cut, according to certain rates.

Mr. LAKE. Can the minister tell me, whether a certain P. J. Hamilton, who was Indian farm instructor in the Touchwood agency, has been appointed an Indian agent ?

Mr. OLIVER. He has not been appointed an Indian agent, but he has been given charge of a reserve.

Mr. LAKE. Was he recommended for the position by one of his superiors ?

Mr. OLIVER. I cannot say just on what recommendation the promotion was made. It was necessary to make provision for the supervision of that particular reserve, over which there had previously been no direct supervision, and Mr. Hamilton was taken from the position he occupied at Touchwood and placed in charge of the reserve.

Mr. LAKE. What reserve is it ?

Mr. OLIVER. Kinistino.

Mr. LAKE. That was in the Touchwood agency ?

Mr. OLIVER. I think it was. It is now in the Duck lake agency.

Mr. LAKE. What salary does he receive ?

Mr. OLIVER. $800.

Mr. LAKE. The minister cannot say who recommended Mr. Hamilton for this appointment ?

Mr. OLIVER. I cannot say that there was any formal recommendation made ; but when it was decided to place a person in charge of that particular reserve, it was, I understand, with the approval of the inspector and the agent at Touchwood that Mr. Hamilton was placed in that position.

Mr. LAKE. Looking through the inspector's report, it seems to me that the farm instructors in the Touchwood agency must have had a fairly easy time of it. I find that the population of that agency is 1,012, say 1,000 Indians, and the inspector, when he went up there in the spring of 1905, found no land ready for crop ; but he remarks :

I regret to say that there is much room for improvement in the way the Indians of this agency care for their stock and do their farming. The agency has made no advancement in the last three years, and the set-back the Indians received through loss of stock in 1903-04 will be felt for some time. I am hoping that under the new management a decided improvement will be made.

Mr. Hamilton was one of four farm instructors who were teaching the Indians how to farm on that agency, and yet we find that in the spring of last year no land whatever was ready for crop. I would like to know what were the special qualifications of Mr. Hamilton for this appointment as agent. It seems to me that it would have been possible to find some farm instructor who had been doing some work that had shown some results in the way of getting the Indians to take to farming. The minister says that he has no definite information as to who recommended this gentleman for appointment. Well, I understand that Mr. Hamilton took a very active part in the recent local election—that he did a lot of canvassing, and acted as poll clerk at one of the polls. Will the minister kindly inform us if he considers that Mr. Hamilton was earning his salary as farm instructor while going through the country canvassing and while acting as poll clerk ?

Mr. OLIVER. I have no information as to Mr. Hamilton having gone through the country canvassing or electioneering.

Mr. LAKE. Supposing he was doing so, would the minister consider that he was earning his salary as farm instructor ?

Mr. OLIVER. I would have to know the special circumstances before I could give an intelligent answer.

Mr. LAKE. Does the minister consider that that is part of the work of an Indian farm instructor ?

Mr. OLIVER. As to his acting as a poll clerk, I had occasion to say here before, and I say again, that there are in that country many places and many occasions when it is difficult to get a suitable person, that is, a person who understands the conduct of a poll, and that there is no particular reason why an officer of the Indian Department should be debarred from acting either as deputy returning officer or as poll clerk. The position of poll clerk is such a subordinate one that surely no harm need come to the friends or my hon. friend from his occupying that position on polling day, the payment for which is $2. In regard to the allegation that Mr. Hamilton canvassed, that is an offence according to its degree. If Mr. Hamilton dropped his proper work, and spent his time solely in canvassing, of course, he was not doing his duty to the Indian Department ; but if his duty to the Indian Department required him to go from one part of the country to another, and in conversation with the people he met he expressed himself in favour of the views of the Liberal party, I do not think he was going outside of his rights as a citizen or interfering with his duties as an employee of the Indian Department.

Mr. LAKE. Of course, when I make the statement I refer to active canvassing. I have no objection to any official expressing his opinions privately, but canvassing is a very different matter. I take it, then, that the minister says that when a public officer sets out to make a political canvass he is doing something that he has no right to do. I would ask the minister whether he has sent out instructions to his officials that they must not take any part in the elections either Dominion or local. This House passed a very strong resolution on that subject last summer and I assume that it would be the duty of the government to notify their subordinates that this resolution had been passed.

Mr. OLIVER. I issued no departmental order prohibiting the official from taking part in elections. Each official of the department must bear the responsibility of any action he has taken, and any official of the Interior Department or of the Indian Department who has gone beyond his rights must take the consequences.

Mr. LAKE. With regard to an official acting as polling clerk, I understand from what the minister says that he would approve of that where there is no other man of sufficient ability or education in the neighbourhood to take the office. But he would certainly disapprove of it where there were other men available. Is that right ?

Mr. OLIVER. I do not say that I would object to an official acting as deputy returning officer or poll clerk under any circumstances. What I said was that there were occasions when it was almost necessary—that is, when the official of the Indian Department was the most convenient person to be secured for the office.

Mr. LAKE. In this particular case, Mr. Hamilton's duties could not have been very onerous—at least the results were very poor. Can the minister tell us what his duties were ? He was farm instructor to these Indians, but last year there was no land under cultivation by them. In that case what would the farm instructor do?

Mr. OLIVER. The duty of a farm instructor of course, is to instruct the Indians how to farm. As to how successful they were of course, I have no personal knowledge. I am given to understand, however, that that particular agency was in a very undesirable condition. It was necessary, owing to circumstances which need not be detailed here, to dispense with the services of the agent and place some one else in charge.

Mr. LAKE. I presume there would be some recommendation on which the minister would base his appointment of Mr. Hamilton ? Is it the minister who makes that appointment?

Mr. OLIVER. Of course, the minister is responsible for it.

Mr. LAKE. I would like to know the ordinary course in making such appointments. The vacancy exists and some one must be appointed. To be appointed, he must be recommended, and it seems to me he should be recommended from official sources.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not know that I can give the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lake) the information he really wants. If he wants to know merely the official course these matters take, I can tell him that the recommendation comes to me from my deputy, and I give my sanction to the appointment, thereby becoming responsible for it. But I suppose that that is not the recommendation of which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lake) speaks ?

Mr. LAKE. No. Of course, the minister takes the responsibility. I suppose the recommendation of the deputy was made on proper recommendations of the officials under whom this officer had served. That is all the information the minister can give us ?

Mr. SAM HUGHES. Can the minister tell us who is the medical officer for Twatt's band in the Carleton agency ?

Mr. OLIVER. The medical officer is, or was, Dr. Tyerman.

Mr. SAM HUGHES. The hon. gentleman who was supposed to be elected, and for whom these notorious ballot box stuffers operated ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. SAM HUGHES. Is he still medical officer ?

Mr. OLIVER. No, he sent in his resignation in October last.

Mr. SAM HUGHES. And who has been appointed in his stead ?

Mr. OLIVER. No one.

Mr. SAM HUGHES. And are these Indians left without any one to give them medical treatment all this time ? 'Lo ! the poor Indian' !

Mr. OLIVER. Let me explain. I am informed that Dr. Tyerman did not send in his resignation, that he was asked for his resignation and that he has not been paid since October. When I spoke at first, I was not giving the official information of the department, but I was basing my statement on what Dr. Tyerman had told me—that he had sent in his resignation. Apparently it has not been received. However, the fact is he has not been paid.

Mr. SAM HUGHES. And has the government determined whether they will give him an agency or hold this seat in the legislature for him ?

Mr. OLIVER. I am afraid that it is not within the authority of the department to hold a seat in the legislature for any one. We may have to accept the alternative.

Mr. SAM HUGHES. As to Dr. Tyerman I do not believe he had anything to do with the ballot box stuffing, that was the work for which some of the ex-members of parliament who are holding office up there are responsible. Dr. Tyerman is a very fine man as a medical officer, and I would like to see him continued in that capacity.

Mr. LAKE. There is a question which I omitted to ask the minister the other night, and which I would like to ask the minister now. It is with regard to the Muscowequan school, in the Touchwood agency. Has the minister any information as to whether that school is really located on private property or not ?

Mr. OLIVER. The information I have which was brought down in response to a request of the hon. member (Mr. Lake) was that, after looking up this matter it was found that a clerical error had occurred and that whereas it was stated that the school was on the reserve, it was really situated on the property of the Roman Catholic mission adjoining the reserve. This school was erected in 1894 and the department contributed $1,800 to the building, the total cost of which was over $3,500. Since that contribution nothing has been granted for buildings but $250 has been given for fire protection.

Mr. LAKE. Is it the policy of the department generally to make grants to build schools which are not on government property on Indian reserves?

Mr. OLIVER. The policy of the department is to assist boarding schools either situated on reserves or on property controlled by the department. This, of course, is an exceptional case.

Mr. LAKE. And I understood from the minister the other day that the department would take some steps towards getting some control of this property. Is the grant in aid of these schools given for half-breed children as well as Indian children?

Mr. OLIVER. The principle is that half-breeds are not admitted to the schools. There may be isolated cases of half-breed orphans or cases of that kind, but I am informed that the instances known to the department are very, very few and in such cases the allowance is not paid with respect to them as with the Indian children.

Mr. STAPLES. Has the minister received a petition from the citizens of the district of Swan Lake asking that that reserve might be thrown open for settlement?

Mr. OLIVER. I cannot give the hon. member the information as to our having received any petition such as he speaks of.

Mr. STAPLES. In looking over the superintendent's report I find he has this to say about the reserve at Swan lake:

> Swan Lake reserve is situated on the north side of Swan lake in township 5, range 11, west of the 1st principal meridian and contains 9,634 acres. It is situated in a good wheat producing district and as there is plenty of water it is well adapted for stock-raising.

I may inform the minister that this reserve is located in one of the best wheat growing districts of Manitoba. It is within a mile and a half of the progressive town of Swan Lake, and the citizens, they informed me, petitioned the department to have this reserve reserved from the Indians and opened for settlement. Will the minister endeavour to recover this and open it up for settlement ?

Mr. OLIVER. Is the Indian population small or large?

Mr. STAPLES. The Indian population on this 9,634 acres, and also on a section which is located south of the Assiniboine river and what is known as the Indian garden, is 99 Indians. There is a small portion of this reserve under cultivation and the people of Swan Lake would feel very grateful if it could be opened for settlement.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not know that it will be posible to secure the release of all the reserve, as it is very difficult to get the Indians to remove, but as there seems to be more land than is of use to the Indians, I do not hesitate to say that we will make an effort to secure a surrender of such portion of the reserve as we can get.

Mr. STAPLES. Would it strengthen the citizens' case if they would circulate a petition and forward it setting out the facts?

Mr. OLIVER. No, I think not; we find that any agitation amongst their white neighbours in such a case arouses their antagonism and if the member will leave the matter just as it is I can assure him that a reasonable effort will be made to secure the release without any further effort on the part of the people there.

Mr. STAPLES. May I ask the minister when the effort will be made ?

Mr. OLIVER. We have a good many orders on hand and not very many men with special qualifications for negotiating with Indians, but we appreciate fully the desirability of securing a release of that reserve.

Mr. STAPLES. It will be reached some time during the coming summer?

Mr. OLIVER. I think the hon. member can depend on that, although to go into details of the matter we do not find that the summer is really the best time to enter into negotiations.

Mr. SAM HUGHES. All these Indian reserves taken back by the government are sold by public auction?

Mr. OLIVER. They are not all sold by public auction, it is either by tender or auction. In some cases where the reserve is not situated near a large population it is thought better to sell by tender.

Mr. SAM HUGHES. But they are all advertised?

Mr. OLIVER. Oh, yes, and where they are situated near a large population we think the better way is to sell by public auction.

Mr. WALSH. What right have the Indians to the timber on the different reserves?

Mr. OLIVER. Their ownership of timber is as absolute as is their ownership of land.

Mr. WALSH. Has not the timber been sold on some reserves to different companies?

Mr. OLIVER. Oh, yes, in many cases where the timber is of value, a release of the timber is secured from the Indians and then that timber is sold and dealt with as I described a little while ago. Practically it goes through the same process as timber on the public lands of the Dominion and the Indians of course get the proceeds.

Mr. WALSH. In that case have the Indians any right to timber for their buildings?

Mr. OLIVER. They have what rights have not been disposed of.

Mr. WALSH. I brought a question to the notice of the department to which I have not received any answer, that is with regard to the Doncaster reserve for the Caughnawaga Indians. I understand they have a right to cut timber for building purposes, and there is a lumber company who have a right to cut certain timber there. Last year some of the Indians cut timber which they said was for building purposes, and the company notified the department that these Indians had cut this timber. There is no agent of the department there, I am told, the company has taken possession of these logs, and the Indians are given no satisfaction. I have asked the department to intervene, but I have had no information so far from them.

Mr. OLIVER. I am informed that the matter is being looked into on representations made by the hon. member. The conditions, I understand, are that years ago a license to cut timber was issued to a certain company, that company had certain rights in that timber, and the position of the company is that the Indians, in cutting their timber, have trespassed upon the company's rights. Of course there is a collision, and the department is doing its best to settle their mutual rights.

Mr. WALSH. I understand the Indians are allowed to cut timber for building purposes.

Mr. OLIVER. I am not sure about that. It would depend, I fancy, on the original arrangement when the company was given its license. There would be some saving clause, no doubt, to the advantage of the Indians. with regard to timber. I cannot say what that saving clause is. No doubt there is a difference of opinion as to what the clause means.

Mr. WALSH. The department have informed me that the Indians have a right to cut these logs for building purposes, I have that information from the department. They cut these logs and took them to the mill to be cut into boards for building. The department has no agent there. and they transferred to this company, who have a right to cut logs there, the duty of settling whether the Indians were going to use that for building purposes or not. I have asked the department to intervene, I have written them twice, and have no answer yet. I think the department ought to intervene on behalf of these Indians.

Mr. OLIVER. There is no question that it is the duty of the department to protect the interests of the Indians, and I am informed that there is an effort being made to protect their interests.

Mr. WALSH. Would the minister tell me who are the members of this Charlemagne and Lecouvreur Company ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I think the McLaren's are members of that firm.

Mr. LENNOX. Is it a fact, as the hon. gentleman has suggested, that the department has deputed to this company the right to judge between the company and the Indians ?

Mr. OLIVER. No, I think that is a mistake. Of course the department could not transfer their responsibility in the matter to one of the interested parties in the dispute.

Mr. WALSH. I may inform the minister that the department told me so.

Mr. OLIVER. Would the hon, member mention the name of the official ?

Mr. WALSH. I cannot recollect it at the moment, it was the deputy of Mr. Pedley. Another gentleman was with me when he told me so.

Mr. OLIVER. Was it the officer who is sitting near me ?

Mr. WALSH. No, it was the deputy of your deputy. I will get the name, I think I have it in a letter.

Mr. STAPLES. I would ask the minister if while investigating other Indian reserves, he would see if it is not possible to recover that section which is contained in the Indian Garden reserve.

Mr. OLIVER. I have heard of that small reserve, but I understand there is some difficulty about it, that it is considered a sort of common ground. I am given to understand that it is not altogether the reserve of the Swan Lake band, there are several other interests concerned. However, we will do our best to deal with it at the same time.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Before these items are all carried I wish to ask the minister how much money was gathered from the Indian trust fund and expended on Indian affairs last year. There is the general trust fund, and there is $1,200,000 expended in addition. I would like to know the amount that is taken away from the trust fund, or the amount received from that trust fund and expended.

Mr. OLIVER. The amount expended from the trust fund during the year 1904-1905 was $346,660. That is simply a special expenditure, and is not part of the general expenditure appearing under our vote.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I desire to make the statement that I believe the Indian Department is most extravagantly managed, and I think I can show the proof in a few moments. We have an Indian population of about 100,000, and at present there are 2,200 officers in charge. During the last ten years the number of officials of the Indian Department has increased by 359. The total expenditure for officials last year was $664,072.92, while the total amount these gentlemen had to expend was only $1,594,665. Now in addition to that we find that the reserves in British Columbia amounted to 1,000 in number, while the Indians in British Columbia were only 20,000, 20 Indians to a reserve.

Mr. OLIVER. That is a mistake. I said there were 25,000 Indians.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Well, we will say 25 Indians to a reserve. Is it not possible to place these Indians in larger groups and make them more comfortable than they are to-day, and take care of them with less money than we are expending on them ? It takes $664,000 to $1,594,665 and it certainly seems to me most extraordinary.

Mr. OLIVER. In reply to the hon. gentleman I find that his criticism will apply to the administration of the Indian Department ever since the beginning. A large proportion of the expenditure in salaries arises from the fact that the chief expenditure on Indians is for the direction of the Indians, for their education, for their management, for the supplying to them of that principle which is civilization.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Is it succeeding ?

Mr. OLIVER. Well, it is a question whether it is succeeding. I suppose that many hopes have been entertained that have not been realized. We are not arguing that point at the present time, but I am saying that by reason of its nature it follows that a large portion of the expenditure is in salaries because the work is largely that of direction and management. It does not necessarily involve the expenditure of money for other purposes in large amounts.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Why is the number of officials constantly increasing ? Why has it increased by 359 in ten years ? The population is not increasing to any extent while the officials are increasing in number year after year and the expenditure is constantly increasing. When is it going to stop ? What is the cause of it ? Why are we going to expend such a large amount of the money of the wards of the nation in trying to take care of them, while, if we were to place them in larger groups, we could make them much more comfortable with less money and with fewer officials ?

Mr. OLIVER. The difficulty of collecting together in large groups the Indians of British Columbia, I am afraid, would make the operations of the Indian Department very much more expensive than they are now. The experience of this and other countries with the Indians is that it is much cheaper to deal with them by gentle measures than by coercive measures and that so long as we are able to have amicable relations with the Indians we are really saving money although we may seem to be spending it with increasing liberality. As I have already stated one reason of the increase in the expenditure and in the number of officials is that we have added new territory. We have added treaty No. 8, we have added the Yukon and we have assumed jurisdiction over a part of British Columbia that we had previously paid no attention to.

Mr. FOWLER. Where is Treaty No. 8 located ?

Mr. OLIVER. Athabasca.

Mr. FOWLER. How many reserves have you in British Columbia ?

Mr. OLIVER. 1,040.

Some resolutions reported.

Mr. PATERSON moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. FOSTER. What will be the business to-morrow ?

Mr. PATERSON. Some Bills will be taken up and then we will go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. FOSTER. What items ?

Mr. PATERSON. The Departments of the Interior, Inland Revenue and perhaps Penitentiaries.

Mr. FOSTER. In that order ?

Mr. PATERSON. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. First the Department of the Interior ?

Mr. PATERSON. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. That will do for to-morrow.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12.20 a.m., Friday.

Mr. OLIVER.

ACT RESPECTING SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Hon. CHARLES FITZPATRICK (Minister of Justice) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 97) to amend the Act respecting the Senate and House of Commons.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Explain.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. This Bill is intended merely to remedy an omission that occurred last session when we passed the Act with reference to the indemnity to members of the House of Commons. Through my fault we omitted all reference to the case of a member who though in Ottawa to attend his duties during the session is ill and unable to be present at the sittings of the House. As the Bill stands now he would be deprived of his indemnity under such circumstances. This Bill is to restore the conditions as they existed previous to last session.

Mr. MORIN. That is all right.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved :

That from this date to the end of the session government orders have precedence on Thursday, immediately after questions to be put by members.

Motion agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT FOR EASTER.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved :

Mr. Borden (Carleton).—Papers relating to any efforts or proposals to authorize the investment of trust funds in the United Kingdom in the securities of any province of Canada, and the fulfilment of any necessary conditions to that end.

I thought it advisable to bring these matters to the attention of the departments in this way, by having the list placed upon Hansard. It does seem to me that a great many of these returns have been unduly delayed. As an illustration, I am perfectly satisfied that the papers relating to any efforts or proposals to authorize the investment of trust funds in the United Kingdom in the securities, of any province of Canada, cannot be very voluminous; and yet the motion for them was made last June.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. They were brought down yesterday, I understand.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is, to say the least, not very prompt. Some of these orders may relate to matters of no further interest to the House; the returns have been delayed so long that they would perhaps be of no use now. The departments, I suppose, will be able to judge of that themselves, or by correspondence with the members who moved for them. But apart from that, I would suggest that the attention of the departments be given to them. Some have been standing for more than two years, others for about one year.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. With regard to those orders which go back to 1904, I understand, though I cannot speak personally, that the practice has always been not to bring in a new parliament returns which were moved for in the previous parliament. With regard to the orders of 1905, my hon. friend is aware that very few papers are moved for with the view of having them laid on the table of the House, but most of them are moved for simply with the view of having a discussion on some subject. When papers are ordered and are wanted by the member who moves for them, he usually takes care to renew his motion until the papers are brought down; but my hon. friend will find that in many cases the member who moves for papers has served his object when he has made the motion and made his speech.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not think the departments should take that view. They are not to judge whether the object of a member is satisfied by the passage of the resolution. It seems to me that the departments should obey the orders of the House, and not take upon themselves to judge whether or not any useful object is to be served by bringing the papers down. Of course, the member who has made the motion does in most cases look after it; but he does not always do so. The very illustration the right hon. gentleman has brought to the attention of the House is a sufficient answer to that suggestion. In 1904 certain papers were moved for by gentlemen who are not now members of the House; nevertheless they might be of very great importance. I do not know whether the rule the Prime Minister suggests in regard to the lapsing of orders is one that has been acted on in the past or not; I have not looked into it. The same idea occurred to me. If the orders lapse, it would of course be necessary to repeat the motions so far as any of them are important. Perhaps Mr. Speaker will give us a decision in regard to that at some future day, after looking into the question, so that we may know what is necessary to be done in that connection. I would suggest that it might be well for some official of the House to keep in an accessible form a memorandum of all returns brought down. We should at all times have on the table of the House a record by which any member could ascertain at once, without running all over the building, whether an order of the House in which he is interested has been complied with or not. Perhaps that can be considered in connection with the proposed revision of the rules.

NAVIGATION OF NORTHUMBERLAND STRAITS.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES (King's, P.E.I.). Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to draw the attention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to some questions which were asked a few days ago by the senior member for Queen's county regarding the ice-breaking steamer now being built in the old country. The question was whether that steamer was intended for service in Northumberland Straits or to take the place of the 'Montcalm' on the St. Lawrence river, and whether the 'Montcalm' would be sent to assist in the winter navigation between the Island and the mainland. I also asked regarding some remarks which were current in certain localities concerning the capabilities of the 'Montcalm' as an ice-breaker. The hon. minister said he would give me the information to-day.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). It is the intention of the department to utilize this boat, now being constructed in England, or the 'Montcalm' on the winter service in the Straits of Northumberland. Those two boats will be absolutely fit for such service. There were some doubts as to whether the 'Montcalm' would be suitable. I asked the opinion of the technical officers of my department, and am informed by Commander Spain and Mr. McElhinney that the 'Montcalm' is a far more powerful ice-breaker than either the 'Minto' or the 'Stanley.' She has 1,600 horse-power more than the 'Stanley' and 800 more than the 'Minto.' So far as strength goes, the work therefore could easily be done by the 'Montcalm.' The 'Montcalm' in the last two years has been engaged in breaking the ice bridge near Quebec and this year has been very successful. Last year, on account of an accident in the beginning of the year, she was not able to break the ice during the winter, but during the spring she did such splendid work that the floods which used to occur in the past, and which were due to a large extent to the ice bridge, did not take place. This year she was called upon to go to the Seven Islands during that part of the winter when the ice is thickest and she was absolutely successful. I would be very glad to show my hon. friend photos taken of her when in the neighbourhood of Seven Islands. He will see that she is certainly a boat which can do good service as far as strength goes.

Mr. SPROULE. What thickness of ice can she get through with ease ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Probably twenty-five inches, and perhaps more than that. My hon. friend also asked if the contract was given for the new boat. Well, tenders were asked for in the month of May or June of last year and were accepted by order in council passed last February.

Mr. A. MARTIN (Queen's, P.E.I.). What is to be done with the steamers now on that route ? Why should they be withdrawn? The general belief is that either the 'Stanley' or the 'Minto' would be far more powerful than the 'Montcalm.' Why take these boats away, which have been fairly successful, and send the 'Montcalm' which has not been tested, except in the St. Lawrence ?

Mr. BRODEUR. My hon. friend is absolutely mistaken regarding the 'Montcalm.' She is 1,600 horse-power more powerful than the 'Stanley' and nearly 800 more than the 'Minto.' Besides, I am advised by the officers of the department that there is not the slightest doubt she can do the service in a most satisfactory manner.

Mr. SPROULE. Has the hon. minister any data in his department indicating the depth of ice she can break ? That is very important as regards the harbours in the upper lakes. It is considered that if a good ice boat were sent up there, navigation would continue open much longer.

Mr. BRODEUR. There must be some data in the department and I shall be glad to supply the information. Owing to the work of the 'Montcalm,' the ice has entirely gone between Three Rivers and the port of Quebec whereas in former years the ice bridge at Cap Rouge prevented the ice from getting away and this caused the flooding of the upper St. Lawrence.

Mr. BERGERON. Where is the new boat being built and who are the contractors ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Vickers & Maxim in England—perhaps the best builders in the world.

Mr. A. MARTIN. Is it the intention to put the new boat on the Prince Edward Island route with the 'Montcalm' ?

Mr. BRODEUR. No, either one or the other will go there.

Mr. A. MARTIN. What do you propose to do with the 'Minto' and 'Stanley' ?

Mr. BRODEUR. We have not yet decided whether we will keep three boats there or not. That is a question to be considered.

REPORT OF THE DEPARTMENT OF MARINE AND FISHERIES.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Might I ask the Minister of Marine and Fisheries whether we can expect the report of his department before the Easter holidays ? It is very desirable it should be placed in the hands of members before we adjourn. More than nine months have elapsed since the close of the fiscal year and there can be no good reason why this report should not be tabled.

Mr. BRODEUR. I expect to be able to bring it down Monday.

GERMAN TARIFF.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Has my hon. friend the Minister of Customs any further information regarding the new German Tariff ?

That is a matter which affects this country very closely. It came into force the 1st March.

Hon. WM. PATERSON (Minister of Customs). I made inquiry to-day of the Trade and Commerce Department. They have not yet received a copy of the tariff as finally passed. They have of course the original measure but that would probably be only misleading. I understand, however, that they have written Lord Strathcona for a copy, and as soon as it arrives I shall communicate it to the House.

WINNIPEG STREET CAR STRIKE.

Mr. J. G. H. BERGERON. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to ask the Minister of Labour (Mr. Aylesworth) if the services of his department have been called for in the settlement of the strike in Winnipeg. I see by the newspapers of to-day that the strike is growing worse than ever. In former times the Department of Labour has offered its services towards the settlement of such difficulties; and what I desire to ask is whether the department has done anything in this case ?

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Labour). A telegram was received last week, or possibly this week, asking that the department should send an officer to Winnipeg with a view to enforcing the provisions of the Alien Labour Law. To that request, I replied that, under the amendment of the statute, the provisions of that law could be enforced by any person who chose to set the law in motion, with the assent of the Attorney General of the province. Since that time, I have had no communication on the subject from Winnipeg.

MONEY LENDERS ACT AMENDMENT.

On the order :

House in committee on Bill (No. 11) respecting money lenders.—Mr. Fitzpatrick.

Hon. CHARLES FITZPATRICK (Minister of Justice). I move :

That this order be discharged and that the said Bill be referred to the Committee on Banking and Commerce.

He said : Since this Bill was introduced, I have had representations from parties interested, calling attention to certain provisions in the Bill and asking to be heard. In order that parties may have the opportunity to be heard, I make this motion.

Motion agreed to.

SUPREME AND EXCHEQUER COURTS.

Hon. CHARLES FITZPATRICK (Minister of Justice) moved the second reading of Bill (No. 67) to amend the Supreme and Exchequer Courts Act. He said : This Bill is made necessary by the expression of opinion by the Supreme Court judges during the argument, and in the considered opinion, on the draft Bill in relation to the Lord's Day which had been submitted to the court. The doubt was expressed by the judges whether the court was a court of original jurisdiction in relation to such matters. The majority, while they answered some of the questions submitted, said that they did so notwithstanding the opinion they entertained to the effect that they had no jurisdiction to deal with the matter at all—that they might be called upon, under the statute as we have it, to deal with legislation that had actually been passed, but they could not be asked to express opinions with respect to legislation which was merely projected. However, as I have said, they did answer the questions submitted, and the reasons they gave were considered by the Privy Council. In order to remove any doubt with respect to the jurisdiction of the court I suggest the amendment embodied in this Bill.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I was not aware of the difficulty raised by the Supreme Court of Canada. May I ask in what the consideration of the proposed measure respecting the Lord's Day would differ from a question, for instance, with regard to the respective jurisdiction of the federal and provincial authorities over the foreshore—

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Or over railway crossings ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Yes. What is the difference ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I admit that, for my part, I do not see any difference in principle between the two cases. But their Lordships of the Supreme Court expressed the opinion—though, answering the questions afterwards—that they were not called upon to deal with abstract questions that they were a court of appeal, and that they ought to hear merely those questions that came before them on appeal from other courts. I, of course, do not accept that view myself. The court said, that, in view of the fact that they had dealt with these abstract questions before they would deal with the case, but would not continue to do so. To avoid doubt for the future, this Bill is introduced. To supplement what I have said I may explain that the Lord's Day case came before their lordships on a draft Bill which was submitted to them on the assumption that the Bill might be submitted to a local legislature, and they were asked the question : Assuming that this Bill had been submitted to a local legislature, whether it would be competent for that legislature to pass the Bill.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

On section 1 :

Section 3 of the Supreme and Exchequer Courts Act, chapter 135 of the revised statutes, as the said section is enacted by schedule 'A' to chapter 16 of the statutes of 1887, is repealed and the following is substituted therefor :

3. The court of common law and equity in and for Canada now existing under the name of the Supreme Court of Canada, is hereby continued under the name as a general court of appeal for Canada, and as an additional court for the better administration of the laws of Canada, and shall continue to be a court of record.

The effect of this section is to add the words : As a general court of appeal for Canada and as an additional court for the better administration of the laws of Canada, and shall continue to be a court of record. The section as we now have it, reads as follows : The court of common law and equity in and for Canada now existing under the name of the 'Supreme Court of Canada' is hereby continued under such name, and shall continue to be a court of record. The doubt is expressed whether or not these words constitute a court of appeal and debar the court from sitting as a court of original jurisdiction. The added words are taken practically verbatim from section 101 of the British North America Act which provides for the establishment of the Supreme Court, and which is as follows :

The parliament of Canada may, notwithstanding anything in this Act, from time to time, provide for the constitution, maintenance and organization of a general court of appeal for Canada, and for the establishment of any additional courts for the better administration of the laws of Canada.

It will be seen that the last words of the section are practically the words of section 101, added to section three of the existing Supreme and Exchequer Court Act.

Mr. SPROULE. That is making two courts in one, is it not ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It makes a court which has original jurisdiction as a court of record, and also a court of appeal.

Mr. SPROULE. It is intended that you can initiate any case in the Supreme Court authorized by the Governor in Council without having it to go through the other courts.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It is a question of law. The next clause provides the cases that may be submitted to the court.

On section 2,

Subsections 1 and 2 of section 37 of the said chapter 135 of the revised statutes, as the said section is enacted by section 4 of chapter 25 of the statutes of 1891, are repealed, and the following are substituted therefor :

37. Important questions of law or fact touching—

(a) the interpretation of the British North America Acts, 1867 to 1886, or

(b) the constitutionality or interpretation of any Dominion or provincial legislation ; or

(c) the appellate jurisdiction as to educational matters, by the British North America Act, 1867, or by any other Act or law vested in the Governor in Council ; or

(d) the powers of the parliament of Canada or of the legislatures of the provinces, or of the respective governments thereof, whether or not the particular power in question has any Dominion or provincial legislature ; or

(e) any other matter, whether or not in the opinion of the court ejusdem generale for the foregoing enumerations, with reference to which the Governor in Council sees fit to submit any such question;—

May be referred by the Governor in Council to the Supreme Court for hearing and consideration, and any question touching any of the matters aforesaid, so referred by the Governor in Council, shall be conclusively deemed to be an important question.

2. When any such reference is made to the court it shall be the duty of the court to hear and consider it, and to answer each question so referred ; and the court shall certify to the Governor in Council, for his information, its opinion upon each such question, with the reasons for each such answer ; and such opinion shall be pronounced in like manner as in the case of a judgment upon an appeal to the said court ; and any judge who differs from the opinion of the majority shall in like manner certify his opinion and his reasons.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the difference between this and the existing statute ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Practically no difference. The difference between this statute and the statute which we already have is a difference in words rather than a difference in subject, except with respect to subsections (b) and (e) of section 2. Subsection (b) provides in terms that a question may be submitted with respect to the power of the parliament of Canada or of the legislature of a province or of the respective governments thereof, whether or not the particular power in question has been proposed to be executed. That is to say we can submit a draft Bill or an abstract question. You are not obliged to submit a Bill that has actually been passed either by a provincial legislature or parliament ; you may submit an abstract question in the draft Bill. Then I seek to provide, by subsection (e), that the doctrine of ejusdem generis shall not apply. In the case of the Lord's Day Act, it was held that the matter must be ejusdem generis with the question enumerated but here I provide that the doctrine ejusdem generis does not apply.

Mr. BERGERON. I do not know whether it could be remedied in this Bill, but I wish to call the attention of my hon. friend (Mr. Fitzpatrick) to a state of things that exists in the Supreme Court. It has frequently happened that the court has had to adjourn on account of not having a quorum of judges. That is a source of great inconvenience to lawyers and pleaders. There is also another question. The chief justice is away just now on leave of absence and that leaves on the bench only one judge of the French language, the Hon. Mr. Justice Girouard. I understood the other day from my hon. friend (Mr. Fitzpatrick), in answer to my hon. friend (Mr. Monk), that he was contemplating some arrangement by which this difficulty could be obviated. I especially call his attention to the fact that in the case of one judge being absent who is of the French language, it would be very important that if there is a temporary addition to the court it should be a judge of the same language. I think it is imposing a very large responsibility on one judge when two of them should be there.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Of course strictly speaking, four judges of the Supreme Court are a quorum. The practice, however, is for five judges to sit, and I understand that while there is no rule to that effect, there is an understanding between the judges that in so far as those cases which arise in the province of Quebec are concerned, they are not heard except when the two judges from the province of Quebec are present, sitting on the bench, unless by the consent of the parties. With that exception the practice has been in the past to invariably provide that in cases from the province of Quebec two judges from Quebec shall sit. Of course there are very obvious reasons for that, because of the rules of law which obtain in our province, which are to a large extent, except in commercial matters, different from those of the other provinces. I understand that the judges so regulate the business of the Court that they invariably sit with the two judges from Quebec except when by consent of the parties they determine otherwise. My hon. friend will readily realize that cases arise in the province of Quebec where it is not necessary that there should be two judges involving questions of commercial law where all judges are equally competent.

Mr. BERGERON. Could not something be done as is done in Montreal where the Chief Justice, in case any judge is not competent to sit by reason of having heard the case before or having given an opinion or some other cause, has power to add a judge to the bench. If something of this kind could be done here, say by the Department of Justice, I think it would help a great deal.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I quite agree and the question is now being considered whether it would not be well to have some such provision. I have in mind my hon. friend's suggestion that when the absent member of the bench is from Quebec, the choice of a judge to take the position which he occupies should be made from Quebec, and I think it should be the same in respect to the other provinces. That is a matter which may be arranged for during the present session, but my hon. friend is aware that, in dealing with this question of the constitution of the courts, I like to proceed slowly and do not care to bring in legislation without considering it carefully and especially without getting the opinion of the Chief Justice and the judges of the Supreme Court on the subject.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The appeal to the judicial committee is by special leave in all these cases ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Oh, yes, there is no appeal to the judicial committee from the Supreme Court except by special leave.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Unless it is in admiralty.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. In admiralty, I do not know how that stands.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think there is an appeal there.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Of course there the appeal is to the Privy Council because the admiralty in our country is really a branch of the admiralty in England.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I suppose it is desirable to have the judges certify their opinions for the purpose of the information of the Privy Council.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Apart from that consideration I would be inclined to have the judges answer the question and give the opinion of the majority of the court as is done in the judicial committee. The dissenting Lords of the Privy Council, may have strong opinions, but they do not express them. However, where there is a possibility of an appeal, it is desirable you should have the opinion of the minority judges for the use of the Court of Appeal.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I suppose in case of appeal the appellant would be entitled practically as a matter of right to have the opinion of the dissenting judges.

On the preamble,

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There is just one other question I would like to ask. I think nearly all the provincial legislatures have enacted laws under which the opinion of a provincial court may be taken as to the constitutionality of a provincial enactment. That is the case I know in Nova Scotia, and I think that is the case in Ontario.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It is the case in Ontario I know.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I suppose there is no danger of any conflict. There would be an appeal in any case from the judgment of the provincial court I suppose by statute and certainly there would by special leave of the judicial committee.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Exactly. I know that under our system in the province of Quebec there is a direct appeal to the judicial committee, independent altogether of the Supreme Court. That is, when you have your choice between the Privy Council and the Supreme Court, and I suppose this would be a matter to be regulated by provincial statute.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. An appeal in our province from such a judgment as I have referred to, would only be by special leave, but in civil cases where the sum in dispute is beyond a certain amount, $1,500 or $2,500, then there is an appeal to the Privy Council, and the party can take his choice.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That is exactly how it is in Ontario.

Bill reported.

CANADA EVIDENCE ACT AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 68) further to amend the Canada Evidence Act.—Mr. Fitzpatrick—read the second time and House went into committee thereon.

Hon. CHARLES FITZPATRICK (Minister of Justice). This Bill is introduced because of the judgment of the Supreme Court in a somewhat celebrated case that arose in the province of Quebec that is the case of King vs. Gosselin, in which the judges of the Supreme Court held that the word 'competent' in the Act as we now have it means 'compellable' and that a husband or wife is a compellable witness for the Crown before a criminal court. In order to prevent such construction being put upon the statute hereafter, which construction, I believe, never was intended, I have introduced this legislation, which makes a husband or a wife a competent witness for the defence, but not a compellable witness, and of course they cannot be asked to disclose anything arising between them during the marriage. I would like to suggest an amendment to this Bill. I would like to omit the words 'in addressing the jury' in the second subsection, which reads :

> The failure of the person charged, or of the wife or husband of such person, to testify, shall not be made the subject of comment by the judge or by counsel for the prosecution in addressing the jury.

It can very easily be conceived that counsel during the course of the trial might very well make a suggestion which would be as fatal to the unfortunate prisoner as if he made it when addressing the jury. I am indebted for this suggestion to one of the judges of the court of appeal of Ontario, who, having looked over this Bill, directed my attention to the matter, and I propose to amend it in that regard. I therefore beg leave to move that the words 'in addressing the jury' in the third and fourth lines of subsection 2 be stricken out.

Mr. LANCASTER. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Justice if this would apply to a case where a man elects to be tried without a jury as well as to a jury trial.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Certainly. I did not think of that, but there are many serious cases where persons elect to be tried without a jury.

Mr. LANCASTER. In defending people before our county court judges when they have elected to be tried without a jury, I have known the crown attorney sometimes to tell the judge that we did not want to produce a man who was competent to testify in his own behalf, and I have had to object more than once and point out that counsel had no right to draw the judge's attention to the fact that a man might have gone in the box, but did not go there. I would urge that provision be made that in a non jury trial counsel be not permitted to direct the judge's attention to the fact that I could have put the man charged in the box if I had wanted to.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That would be a direct violation of this provision.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If the memorandum of the present law, which I have before me, is correct, it seems that there is a further limitation contained in the proposed amendment. The law as it stands at the present time is as follows:

> 4. Every person charged with an offence, and the wife or husband, as the case may be, of the person so charged, shall be a competent witness, whether the person so charged is charged solely or jointly with any other person.

The proposed amendment introduces the words 'for the defence' after the words 'competent witness.'

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Designedly, so that he will not be a compellable witness. The defendant may go into the box on his own behalf, or the wife or husband of the defendant may be a competent witness for the defence.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. But, suppose a witness is perfectly willing to be a witness for the prosecution, under the proposed amendment, it seems to me that he would not be competent.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. He would not be competent.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is intended ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. You want to do away altogether with the competency of husband or wife to testify for the prosecution ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Except in certain named cases.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Enumerated futher on ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. In a case of murder ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Yes. Is there any particular reason for making that change ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The relation of husband and wife is such that it is not desirable that either one should be compellable witness for or against the other.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. They would not be compellable if you left the words in ; they would be competent.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. They would be competent. It is not desirable that it should be the case ; it certainly is not the law in England and it was not the law here before the introduction of the Canada Evidence Act.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. They are not competent, even in England ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Not competent. I thought I had the English Act here, but I have not. But that is my recollection of it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Perhaps the hon. minister would permit this Bill to stand in order that we may consider this point. The tendency in England and in this country as well, is to have witnesses competent without any restriction whatever, except in so far as the communications of husband and wife are concerned, departing altogether from the original idea of the common law which was that a person who had any, even the most trifling, interest whatever, should not even be a competent witness. We are making a rather important change in the law if we adopt the amendment in this way, and it might be possibly a matter of consideration if we should go that far. Apart from that particular feature, I agree with the view of the Minister of Justice, as to the amendment which he has just made. If he would have no objection I would like time to consider that point.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I don't object at all. In civil cases it is quite desirable to make the door as wide as possible so as to get at the truth, and the tendency nowadays is to make all parties to suits—except in the case of those occupying certain relations one towards the other—competent as witnesses. In criminal matters, the law has always been, and it is desirable it should continue to be, as far as possible to protect the relation which exists between husband and wife.

Mr. FITZPATRICK.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Suppose a brutal husband who had been separated from his wife for a number of years should commit a very serious assault or even murder in her presence and she was perfectly willing to testify ; under the law as it existed before she would be competent, but not compellable, but under the amendment now proposed she would be competent as a witness for her husband but not competent as a witness against him. I would like time to consider whether or not we should go that far.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The case mentioned by my hon. friend is one which might occur, but is not at all a probability. Then again it may be possible that the wife may have some interest in being examined against her husband. I think on the whole the balance of wisdom would be on the side of preventing the husband and wife from being brought into conflict in a case of that description. It would require almost an unnatural condition of things to exist for such evidence to be at all necessary.

Mr. CLARKE. I would ask the Minister of Justice whether the exceptions in schedule C refer to the case of bigamy, so that the first wife could give evidence against her husband.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Yes, sections 275 and 276 cover the case of bigamy.

Section allowed to stand.

Progress reported.

SUPPLY—WEST BLOCK—COLLAPSE OF NEW TOWER.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister) moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Carleton). I ask the Minister of Public Works whether he has any further information with reference to the collapse of the West Block tower. Who was the inspector, what attention did he give to the work, what were his qualifications and experience? Even at this early date the minister should be able to give us that information at least. I ask also whether any investigation has been begun or completed, and whether the minister will lay the specifications before the House at his earliest convenience? I understood him to say yesterday that the specifications were exactly the same as had been used in the construction of the building originally. It is important that we should know something about this at the earliest possible moment, as the accident is not only of a very serious nature, but an extremely unusual one. That a building constructed of solid masonry, a tower 80 feet in height, should suddenly crumble and collapse without a moment's warning is certainly very extraordinary. It appears that the danger to human life was greater than I mentioned yesterday, because some five or six men narrowly escaped by taking flight on hearing some stones fall and feeling a tremor in the building. It is due to the country and the House that the minister should give any further information that is available.

Hon. CHARLES HYMAN (Minister of Public Works). To my mind the seriousness of the accident is a reason why there should be the fullest investigation. I did not allow one moment to pass before starting an investigation in the way of calling in an outside architect. I am in telegraphic communication with Mr. Fuller, of Toronto, a man who stands very high in his profession. I have asked Mr. Fuller to come to Ottawa at the earliest possible moment and nothing will be done to prevent the fullest investigation by that gentleman. I have not taken any further steps in the meantime until I get Mr. Fuller's report, which I expect will enable me to make such inquiry as will place the responsibility where it ought to be placed. I can assure the House that I appreciate the seriousness of the matter and at the earliest possible moment after receiving Mr. Fuller's report I will lay it before the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I asked the minister who the inspector was, what his qualifications were, what was his experience, and whether he was engaged in any other work at the same time?

Mr. HYMAN. I have no further information than I gave yesterday. The architect of the department, Mr. Taylor, was in full charge of the work. I have not as yet looked into the question as to whether or not there was an inspector appointed. I would prefer that the House allow me to get Mr. Fuller's report before any further steps are taken. Mr. Fuller will be here to-morrow or Monday morning, and immediately thereafter I will have made a full investigation and bring the result down.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. gentleman has no investigation to make to find out whether an inspector was appointed and who he was.

Mr. HYMAN. I want to discuss first with Mr. Fuller the facts of the case and see if any officer of the department was to blame.

Mr. A. BRODER (Dundas). There is no expert necessary to see pretty plainly why that building fell. It is not to be presumed that right under the shadow of the department of government which has control of the public buildings in the country, a contractor would be allowed to depart one hair's breadth from the specifications laid down for the building. You can go over there and look at the building and you will find the brick wall lying inside completely detached from the centre or filling wall, between the brick lining and the outside finish about eight inches thick. There is no strength given the wall by this outer lining. The strength of the wall ought to be in the centre wall and the lining ought to be attached to it by proper mortar or cement. That is not the case in this building; there does not seem to be any bond at all in the centre wall which should give the building its strength. The outside finish gives the wall very little strength, as we know from the fact that three or four years ago the outside finish of the southern wall of the Western block fell away from the inner wall and had to be taken down and put up again. Now, is it possible that the department over which the hon. gentleman has supervision would allow a building to be constructed under specifications that gave a building of that kind no strength at all? I do not mean to say that my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works should give the work his personal attention; that is not expected, but the department is full of officials—experts as they are called, and the more refined the expert is, the less effective, apparently, is the work. We have got science down so fine that we can see better than other people, but the trouble is that in the end we are all wrong. Now, I took the trouble to get some of the—I don't know what to call it. One will have to be an expert to tell what they call this, mortar or lime or cement.

Mr. SPROULE. Sand.

Mr. BRODER. No, filling.

Mr. HYMAN. Might I ask the hon. gentleman where he procured the sample he has in his hand?

Mr. BRODER. I went up in the inside of the building—and this is no matter of curiosity, it is a matter of public concern what our buildings are being built with; I went on to the roof, and got this sample out of the wall at the top of the fallen part of the tower. There is no bond whatever in it. I will take the liberty of sending the sample over to the hon. gentleman, because if he has not seen it before, he should see it now. I understand that the upper part of that wall was built during frosty weather, and apparently there is no bond whatever in the material which is supposed to hold the wall together. Some people say that the trouble is that there are no iron girders or bond timbers. Bond timbers are not for the purpose of holding a wall together; they are for the purpose of bearing other timbers to which lathing is nailed. Under the specifications under which this building was constructed, what happened? When the frost came out of this so-called mortar, it softened and the building tumbled down. Its fall may be prophetic, because I believe it was called the Laurier tower. We have to come to the conclusion that the government's feet are not of brass, but of clay, because the whole thing is falling down. This is a matter of considerable concern to the other side of the House, surely. I do not think that the contractor could depart from the specifications ; but if that is the kind of work the public is getting all over this country from the large expenditure of money by the Department of Public Works, it is a subject in which the public should take a very live interest. I suppose no one will admit that more fully than the hon. gentleman himself. I am quite aware that the tramping of soldiers or even the running of a dog over a bridge is sometimes dangerous, even to a strong bridge ; but there was no tramping to cause this building to fall down. Six men went on the roof to put on the copper, and down she came. There was no wind, no storm ; it was a departmental failure, that was the trouble. I was looking at that building the other day, and with what little architectural knowledge I have, I said that the tower did not improve the building architecturally at all. The building would look quite as well without that tower. I was not aware that events would come to my assistance so soon to remove it. It is down now, and I would suggest that it be left down, because in my opinion the architectural effect is better without it. That question may be submitted to the experts ; if so, you will have my opinion without any cost. Now, what kind of mortar was used in that building—sand and lime, or sand and cement ? Can the hon. gentleman tell me ?

Mr. HYMAN. I do not want to prejudge the report of the architect ; I do not feel myself competent to do so. The hon. gentleman seems to think that he is competent to discuss the matter, and to say where the blame should lie. I confess that I am not. I want to have the examination of experts in order to place the blame on the proper shoulders.

Mr. BRODER. I think the specifications called for mortar and sand or sand and cement. That is surely a question the hon. gentleman can answer.

Mr. HYMAN. I certainly cannot answer the question at the moment. In addition to the investigation, I intend to have the mortar analysed.

Mr. BRODER. If the building was constructed according to the specifications, and if that ingredient which I have sent over to the hon. gentleman is according to the specifications, it is no wonder the building fell, because there is no bond whatever in the mortar, and there is nothing to fasten the brick to the centre wall. These are matters which do not require the knowledge of an expert ; a man's eyes are enough to show him what the trouble is. Any man who knows anything about cement knows that you cannot successfully construct a strong building with cement which freezes after it is used. It was wrong to allow the building to be proceeded with in frosty weather. I am aware that buildings are constructed successfully in winter with what is called hot mortar ; but if cement was used for the construction of this building during severe frosty weather, then I think the people who had charge of the undertaking certainly were not looking after the interests of the country as officials under the control of the Minister of Public Works should.

Mr. J. E. ARMSTRONG (East Lambton). Mr. Speaker, having had considerable experience in building bridges and cement walls, I had the curiosity to investigate the building to which this accident has happened, and I quite agree with my hon. friend from Dundas (Mr. Broder) that it is a very good indication that the present government is dying at the top.

An hon. MEMBER. We have heard that before.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I have here a specimen of some of the filling that was placed in the walls of that building, and instead of it being sand or gravel, properly mixed with cement, and properly bonded, I find that large sections of the ceiling are merely filled with cinders. I have specimens of the cinders used as filling, and I do not see how it is possible for any man to expect to put up a tower to the height that was expected to go and believe it could possibly remain standing with such binding as was found in that centre wall.

Not only should we draw the attention of the government to this matter, but I would like to call the attention of the Minister of Public Works to two of the constructions carried on by this government upon Lake Huron. At the little town of St. Jo, the Minister of Public Works some years ago agreed to construct a pier. As a matter of fact there is really no town in that district, although there is a locality known by that name. He, however, went into that district and agreed to construct this pier and expended many thousand dollars on it. But I have yet to learn that the first boat has called there, and within the last year that pier has been washed away by the waters of Lake Huron. If the minister will go along that lake, he will find parts of the pier scattered along its shores down towards Sarnia. That is merely a sample of the work done by this government. It was built simply on top of the sand in the bottom of the lake and the waves came and washed it out of existence. I want also to call the attention of the hon. minister to the fact that at Grand Bend, in spite of the warnings of a number of people who called his attention to the flimsy way in which that breakwater was being constructed, a breakwater was built with a sand foundation, and the result has been that it is being undermined and is gradually going to pieces. That pier construction cost $20,000. I can hardly believe that the minister can be cognizant of the manner in which his officials are carrying on the work of his department, and I wish to impress upon him the necessity of his taking more pains to see that the inspectors and the other officials on public works should be more careful and competent men. As regards the work at Grand Bend, if the minister will investigate it, he will find that it was simply set on top of the sand and then the department started dredging within a very few feet of the pier. How could it be possible for any man to go into a contract such as that and expect the pier to remain in the position in which it was built?

I sincerely hope that this tower accident will be a lesson to the minister to be more careful in the erection of public works throughout the country.

Mr. PETER ELSON (East Middlesex). Government buildings, above all others, should be safe and free from endangering the lives of persons passing by or frequenting them. Only a short time ago I had occasion to walk past this building and I have reason to be very thankful that the accident did not happen just then. I am not a builder myself nor an architect, but I have seen a great deal of building done, I have seen a great deal of stone work and cement work done, and when the accident happened to that tower, I naturally went and examined the ruins. What surprised me was that that building, constructed as it had been, stood as long as it did. I do not know what the specifications called for, but I would judge that no cement had been used. Nor were there any tie stones. I could see no long stones reaching from one side to the other. The different parts were simply built up on each other with nothing to tie the wall together. I earnestly trust that the government will take a lesson by this accident and look more carefully into the future in the erection of government buildings.

Mr. H. S. CLEMENTS (West Kent). As I took the occasion of accompanying my hon. friend from Dundas (Mr. Broder) to the top of the Laurier tower in order to gather some of the cement which had been used in that tower, I might take this opportunity of giving my experience. I felt that in justice to the case, we should get the cement from the top where the break occurred. I have had considerable experience in cement, and one would naturally suppose that in a construction of this kind the specifications must surely have called for cement. But after examining the top of the tower with my hon. friend from Dundas (Mr. Broder), there appeared to be nothing there but sand, and what surprised me was that the tower should have stood as long as it did. While this accident must be unfortunate for the contractor—as I understand from the Minister of Public Works that the government have a guarantee—it has been a fortunate thing for the country that the Laurier tower fell as it did, because it has brought to the attention of this House the fact that there must certainly be a great deal of laxity on the part of the officials of the department. If there are other public works being erected in the same manner, this casualty should induce the minister to take active steps to have the defects remedied, and I trust he will probe this matter to the bottom and see that those who are to blame are dismissed from the department at once.

Mr. T. CHISHOLM (East Huron). This is one of the occasions when one who has practical experience in building, ought not to hesitate in giving his views to the House. I notice that generally our time is taken up by the lawyers and no doubt there is reason in that since we are most of the time engaged in passing laws. But on this occasion, I think I should give my opinion. I am a practical builder. I not only laid out a village and named it, but during my long life I have built as many houses as would make a good sized village. And, more than that; I have been my own architect most of the time, and have drawn my own specifications. So, Mr. Speaker, I feel that I have had some experience in these matters. I went over to see the ruins of this fallen tower, and I was astonished, astounded, at what I saw. I do wish the farmers of Huron could come down here and see that ruin. It would be the greatest political lecture they ever had in their lives. Why, there is not a farmer in my riding that would take such a job off a contractor's hands if he were putting up a cow-house. I could not help thinking, when I was looking over this building, about the stories I have heard years ago, about the Langevin block. And I thought that the facts in that case and in this showed the difference in the parties. Let any hon. gentleman go down and examine the Langevin block. Why, they used to talk about the Langevin block scandal. But that is a building, Mr. Speaker, founded upon a rock, handsome, solid, reliable, yes and reasonable in price too. On the other hand here is a building put up by this government which cannot even bear its own weight. The attempt of these hon. gentlemen to emulate their predecessors in building reminds me of the story in the old reader when I was at school. A certain bird decked himself out in the feathers of a more beautiful member of this tribe, and so adorned, strutted about thinking he was—quite a bird. The Liberals used to be called Reformers. But the name was not good enough for them. And not satisfied with stealing our policy, they have stolen our good name as well—or at least half of it—for we are proud to be known as Liberal-Conservatives. These hon. gentlemen seem most anxious to justify the name in one way if they cannot do it in any other. At least, they seem to be very liberal to contractors. But the borrowed feathers have fallen away, and the real bird in all its ugliness stands exposed.

Mr. WM. WRIGHT (Muskoka). Mr. Speaker, I presume that in putting up public buildings we have more than one object in view. We are constructing public buildings in the cities and larger towns from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and sometimes when made necessary by political exigencies we build them in the small villages as well. I suppose that the primary object in erecting these buildings is that they may be used by the department of the public service for which they are designed. But, I suppose we have another object as well. We are supposed to put buildings each of which will be an object lesson to the community in which it is placed, an example not only of architectural beauty but of everything that is worthy to be followed and emulated in the proper construction of a building. I believe that these public buildings cost us from fifty to one hundred per cent more than similar buildings would cost private individuals. Expending so much money, I think we naturally expect to have first-class buildings, buildings which the people can depend upon and whose principles of construction they can safely follow. I have been over to examine the fallen building which is now under discussion, and I must say that I never saw a more discreditable job anywhere. I take a little interest in the public buildings in the different localities in which I may happen to be. I would not refer to the subject on this occasion were it not for the strong belief I have that there is a general tendency among builders in this country to slight their work. I speak not merely of the buildings constructed under this government but other large buildings as well. I believe it is high time that the attention of the people should be called to this tendency. I have seen more than one hollow wall,—a wall with two faces, and with the space between them filled with dirt or anything that the builder could get hold off. The attention of the public should be sharply called to the necessity of having these buildings properly constructed. If the falling of this building—and, like other hon. members I am most thankful that the crash was not accompanied by loss of life—shall draw attention not only of the government but of the people of this Dominion to the necessity of watching this work very carefully, the loss will not be without its compensations.

Mr. WM. JACKSON (West Elgin). I regret that it has become my duty as a member of this parliament to express an opinion with reference to the condition of things which has just been brought to light by this accident to the west block. If you look back fifty or a hundred years, you will find that our large buildings were constructed exclusively of stone. That is true of all the old buildings in this city. This was a method of building in the early part of the nineteenth century. But in the last decade of that century a new system was inaugurated, and, I believe, that under this system we are entering upon a system of construction that will be just as strong and a good deal less costly. I refer to cement construction. There is no doubt in my mind that, if the plans and specifications of the addition to the West block had been carried out, the result would have been a building that would have met all emergencies. There seems to be no doubt whatever that one of the ingredients that was supposed to enter into the construction of that building, was not there—the cement—and that is the reason why the building fell. We take pride in repeating the saying that the twentieth century is to be the century of Canada as the nineteenth century was the century of the United States. In the development which is now taking place and which gives us hope that that prophecy will be fulfilled, there is one industry which has been established and which is a most important element in the progress of the country, I refer to the cement industry. But what is the government doing by permitting such work as was done on this West block? They are making a condition of things which will inevitably cause ill-informed people to say that this disaster is proof that cement is not fit for such work. This cannot but be detrimental to the great industry that we have begun.

Let me give the House a little of our experience in the county of Elgin from which I come. The department of Public Works is one of the most important departments of the government. In the county of Elgin we call it our department of Public Improvements. We go on and improve our public buildings and our public utilities as the county just as much as we improve the buildings that we own as individuals. We made a fresh start in this work twelve or fifteen years ago. At a certain stage of our experience we thought that part of our public work was not being done as it ought to be. We stopped all public building in the county and had the work carefully inspected. But, before actually carrying on the inspection, we sought the very best experts that we could find in the province of Ontario, and invited them to come into our county, that we might get their opinion as to what cement and stone mixed together would do for us, and to pass on the condition of the work that had been done by contractors in our county.

We went further than that, and asked them to examine every piece of work that had been done in the county of Elgin for the last ten years. We said : We are starting on something of which we scarcely know what the end will be ; let us find out whether this new way of doing things in stone and sand and cement is equal to the old. If it is not going to be permanent we will do away with it. We brought those experts into the county, they went over the ground and told us that if we went on and did the work as it should be done it was better than the old way of doing things. We found out—and I tell the Minister of Public Works that I think he will find out that the same cause that we had to butt up against existed here—that our inspectors were men not qualified to do the work, they were appointed by some county councillors or commissioners because they were friends of those men, not for any ability they had to do the work. We changed that and got men as inspectors regardless of the influence of any county councillors, men who understood the work, and in Elgin to-day you will find that cement has taken the place of stone, not in our public buildings but in all our large private concerns, manufactories, and even in private dwellings. This is a small thing over here, but it is one of the little things that together make this Dominion what it is to-day. The work that is going on over there is going on in every constituency in the Dominion of Canada. There are 500 works of the same kind under construction or about to be constructed with the same ingredients that should have been in that tower, but whose absence has been the cause of the collapse. We are here the highest municipal body in the Dominion. We are looked to here to do things on that high level that smaller municipalities may look to us and say : The federal authorities have done so and so and we will take pattern by them.

Some good should come out of this I hope, from the very defects that are there. I ask the Minister of Public Works to see and I ask this whole parliament to assist him in seeing, that there are no defects in the 500 or 1,000 different works in Canada to-day. Some of the speakers have referred to this work being done in the winter. If the inclemency of the weather prevented the proper carrying out of the work why was it gone on with ? I do not believe that the cold weather was the cause of that trouble. In Elgin we have done municipal work of that kind in winter and some of the largest railway corporations in Canada or the United States have been constructing cement works of the same kind in the dead of winter and they are not crumbling to pieces as this has done. I hope and believe that the Minister of Public Works, that parliament, will make a thorough investigation of this trouble. If the part that has fallen down is bad I say it is possible that the whole of that work is not what it should be and a thorough investigation should be made of it. That investigation should be extended to each and every part of the Dominion of Canada so that we may ascertain if the conditions existing here exist in all the works of that kind that are carried on in Canada. In the little village in which I live in Elgin, a contract has been let for over $100,000 worth of work on which the same material is used that should have been used in the building of this tower, and in the doing of that work there should be more care as to the carrying out of that work than there has been in this tower. I believe that if the specifications and plans had been carried out, that work would not have been in the shape it is to-day.

Mr. M. AVERY (Frontenac). I think we have heard a good many remarks that will be of benefit to the people of this country, especially where we have public works ; and I hope that the government, if they still intend to have in this beautiful building a structure called the Laurier Tower, should have a better tower than they started out with.

Mr. BUREAU. Will the hon. gentleman inform us when and where this tower was christened the 'Laurier Tower'.

Mr. FOWLER. No wonder you are ashamed of it.

Mr. AVERY. It is the newspaper press. It is not to the credit of the government to allow the use of such material as has gone into that building. Any person accustomed to buildings would not allow such cheap building to be put up on his own place. It is a good thing it fell down when it did for had it fallen later it might have killed many people. I think the building should be well investigated from end to end and it is my opinion that the whole addition will have to be torn down and rebuilt before it is safe. I believe the Minister of Public Works should have his men examine that portion still standing and if it is found to be made of the same material that we found in this tower it is time the whole thing should come down. We have heard a good deal about the Langevin Block and its cost to the country. If it cost this country a great deal they have something to be proud of. It has stood there for many years and will stand for many years to come. It is not like this structure that has fallen down before it was finished. I do not believe that the proper amount of cement or sand was used in this building. There should be a thorough examination from end to end, and it should be seen that binding stones are used. I never saw a building erected in that style without binding stones and the men who erected it could not have understood their business. In the rebuilding binding stones and proper cement should be insisted upon. We have plenty of cement in Canada and that building has cost enough to have it used. You can get better stone in the fields than is used in the inside of that wall; the stone is not cut and is not properly placed. I hope the minister will look into this and see that the men who have had charge of that work will be severely punished for the bad work they have done, which has cost the country so much money.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). It is sometimes said and properly said that it requires great catastrophes to remedy certain evils that from time to time creep up in a country, the destruction of human life by a railway train or by a steamboat, the burning or falling of a building, or the destruction of life in a mine. But, in any of these cases, it generally results in a searching inquiry in proportion to the damage which has been done. Fortunately for the people connected with this building, through the intervention of Providence, there was no loss of human life. It might easily have been otherwise, because I saw, within half an hour of the time the building fell, men engaged putting on the roof of the building. It was by the intervention of Providence that they were saved. But, if it results in directing public attention in a more acute way to what is being done and in remedying other evils that appear to be creeping into this country in connection with the expenditure of public money this calamity will not be entirely a loss. There are times, I believe, in the life of people when, because of a peculiar lethargy growing upon them, you cannot arouse them to a realization of the importance of what is going on. They seem to be almost indifferent, you cannot direct their attention to such things, and it is only when great catastrophies occur that you do succeed in doing so. While this has not been a great catastrophe, it is surrounded by peculiar circumstances which will, I think, attract the attention of the public to it. One of the most important features is that we have in progress the erection of a public building right here at the seat of government where the people's representatives are congregated and where above all other things it might be expected that the greatest amount of care and precaution would be taken to give the work the semblance at least of what is right before the eyes of members of parliament. When we find that it is carried on by the Department of Public Works in such a way that there is no security to life or property and that there is no proper oversight given for the expenditure of public money. A public building is put up in such a way that it is neither safe nor durable, that is not the equivalent of the money spent upon it, and if such is the case right here at the seat of government what may be taking place in other portions of the country where public works are not under the eye nor before the attention of the representatives of the people? We may reasonably conclude that these abuses have prevailed to a much greater extent at a distance from the capital than have been found to exist in connection with this building here. It has been attended with danger—serious danger—and while fortunately there has been no loss of life in connection with it there has been loss of property. It is said that it will cost $20,000 or $25,000 to replace that building. While this is a large loss of money it is not so much as compared with the loss of human life and this accident might have resulted in the loss of a very large number of human lives. It naturally directs our attention to a few things in connection with it. What has been the cause of this? We have employed experts to draw up plans and specifications and we are bound to assume that these architects are professional men who understand their business. The government is responsible and the minister at the head of the department is responsible for it whether it is bad or good, whether it will reflect credit upon the government and the department or discredit, and if the hon. minister was doing his duty we are bound to believe that he employed professional men, men of expert ability to draw up suitable plans and specifications for a building that would be strong, durable and valuable to the country in the future. But, it is the very reverse. Who is at fault? Is it the architect? It is not for me to say whether it is the architect or not, but it is the duty of the government to employ proper architects and if they have failed in the discharge of their duty they must be held responsible to the country for that failure. There is no doubt of that whatever and I say that the hon. Minister of Public Works will be held responsible whether he likes it or whether he dislikes it for the accident that took place there. Who was the clerk of the works, because there must have been a clerk of the works? We have sometimes had occasion to complain in this House that parties have been employed by the government to perform certain important duties and that they have not been selected with regard to their qualifications to discharge these functions. A few years ago we found that a tailor from Toronto was one of the men who was carrying on important dredging work. He was not an expert in that line, yet he was doing that work and making money out of it. What conclusion did the country come to? Either that the work was being slighted or that there was something wrong in connection with it. We complained that he was not the proper man to be entrusted with that work, that having regard to his previous experience and training he could not be considered to be an expert in it. The reply given to us was that this was a man who could be relied upon to do that work properly, that his intelligence, knowledge and experience justified the action of the government in selecting him as an expert to go on and do that work. We had, in another case, a painter selected from Toronto and although his previous life had been devoted to the painting line he was regarded as an equally valuable expert to be entrusted with different public works. We had in another case a journalist who had a very small country press and who was selected by the government to undertake the important work of building harbours and breakwaters. Yet, the government defended this and said that it was not only not wrong but that no injustice had been done the country. When we brought these things to the attention of the government and of the country we were constantly met with the statement: We are responsible, look at the results of our labours. There are the edifices that have been raised the material and workmanship in them are first class and we challenge anything to the contrary. So, it would have been said of this building if it were standing to-day and had not fallen down. The same answer would have been given to us if we had raised the question in this House or if we had said that the building was not properly constructed, that it was not as durable an edifice as it would have been if it had been carried out under the direction of a proper architect, a proper Minister of Public Works, a proper inspector and a proper clerk of works. Then again it raises too the question: What are the duties of these men? A few years ago we had an important inquiry by one of the committees of this House in regard to what took place during the construction of the Soo canal. What was brought out in that investigation? It was that the government inspector, from day to day, had inspected and tested every barrel of cement that went into these works to know that the quality of the material was as good as could be desired, that he had inspected the mortar that was made for the construction of these works to ascertain whether it was mortar made from the combination of pure sand and fresh lime which would form a bond of union between the stones. It was brought out that from day to day an examination took place on the part of experts and it did convince me at least that proper precautions were taken. Now, were the same precautions taken in the erection of this building? Will the hon. Minister of Public Works say they were? Will he convince this House and the country that the men who were appointed to do that work and to look after it were men of ability or men possessed of the right knowledge? I have here in my hand a portion of the material taken right out of that wall. I submitted it to an examination under the glass first to ascertain if it were composed of sand and cement because if it were composed of sand and cement and the cement were tested from day to day to see that it was of the proper quality the result must be a splendid bond of union and a durable structure, but in so far as I can ascertain there is not a trace of cement in it. The sand must be good and sharp sand, the specifications usually say, and the lime fresh and of good quality and the next question that suggests itself to my mind is this: Was the sand and lime mixed in proper proportions because it is only in that way that you can have a durable bond? I examined this also under the glass and what do I find? I venture to say there is not one grain of lime in it for 6,000 grains of sand. It is practically all sand and nearly all dry sand. Where could be the clerk of these works, where could be the inspector whose duty it was to see that nothing but proper material was used there and to see that it was used in proper proportions in the construction of the building? Who were they? Were they men possessing the proper judgment and knowledge?

This sample we have here is simply sand; there is scarcely a trace of lime in it even when you put it under the glass. I tested it to ascertain how much lime there was in it, and in a large portion of it there is no lime; it does not give the reaction which would be given by lime; the indications are that it was put in largely for filling. Now, in view of this, there must either have been a skimping of the work for the purpose of making a large profit or else there was carelessness or indifference or worse on the part of the government employees who were looking after that work. And if such a thing can take place under our eyes in a building which was constructed during the session of parliament, are we not to infer that worse is going on in parts of the country remote from our observation. There is no doubt whatever that by the same parity of reasoning we must come to the conclusion that many of these public works are being slighted. It is said by some that these contracts are given to men who must provide a rake off for some one—I am not insinuating that is so—and that consequently the contractors are obliged to make more than the ordinary profits. If that be the case then the sooner this sort of thing is stopped the better. I am free to say that I hardly think the Minister of Public Works is a man who would lend himself to anything of the kind, but there is the undeniable fact that this tower fell down. If the Minister of Public Works had competent officers under him this accident would not have taken place; it could only have occurred through ignorance or carelessness on the part of the men in charge. I have had some experience in building for the last 25 or 30 years, and I say deliberately that no builder in this country would pretend to build a hog pen out of the material that was put into that tower. It is said that the friends of the present Prime Minister were desirous of immortalizing his name by building a great tower pointing towards Heaven as a permanent monument to his career and therefore they named it the Laurier Tower. But there has been a sorrowful and untimely tumble; I was going to say that I hope it is not an omen of the downfall of the government in a short time. If we can believe one-half of what we hear we must come to the conclusion that the fall of the tower is an omen of the early fall of the government, for the party in power seems to be crumbling away at the top, and the material out of which it is composed, just like the mortar in the west block Tower, has not the proper bond. In a sense it is a good thing for the country that this happened, because it may have the effect of drawing the attention of the people of Canada to the extent to which the present system of contracting for public works is carried on, and the squandering of public money in all directions. I believe the people of Canada will hold the Minister of Public Works responsible for that catastrophe, in that he appointed officials who were either entirely incompetent or entirely ignorant of the duties they were supposed to discharge.

Mr. R. BLAIN (Peel). The question has been fairly discussed from this side of the House and it is left for us to assume from the silence of the government that they have no defence for this bad management of the Public Works Department. It has been shown in this discussion that right at the door of the Public Works Department and under the eyes of the minister the grossest carelessness prevails. For a number of years the opposition in this House has been pointing out to the government that there has been extravagance and carelessness in the Public Works Department in respect to the expenditure of money on public buildings. We have also complained that the government has adopted the policy—a policy which I do not think would be approved by the people of Canada—of expending large sums of money by days' work rather than by contract and by tender. If the government are going to spend money by days' work rather than by contract—of course the expenditure by days' work does not apply in this case—then it is of the greatest importance that the minister should insure that those who have the supervision of that expenditure should be men of experience and men of probity. In the past the government and the ministers have had little regard as to qualifications of the men whom they appointed as clerks of works. Let me draw the attention of the Minister of Public Works to his own language during the last session of parliament. Hansard page 1057. In Committee of Supply on the item for an expenditure of $35,000 on the Woodstock Armoury and Gun Shed, the following discussion took place:

Mr. FOWLER. Have you a clerk of works in charge?

Mr. HYMAN. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. How long has he been in charge and what salary is he receiving?

Mr. HYMAN. $3 a day, the usual price.

Mr. FOWLER. How long has he been in charge?

Mr. HYMAN. Since February the first.

Mr. FOWLER. Of this present month.

Mr. HYMAN. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. What was his former occupation?

Mr. HYMAN. I have no knowledge of his former occupation.

Mr. SPROULE. Hear, hear.

Mr. BLAIN. In this case the Minister of Public Works appointed a clerk of works to supervise a building that cost the people of Canada $35,000, and when he is asked what are the qualifications of this clerk for such a position he expresses absolute indifference as to whether his appointee had any qualifications or not.

Mr. CARVELL. Would the hon. gentleman kindly read a little further on?

Mr. BLAIN. With the greatest of pleasure.

Mr. CARVELL. Read the whole of it and see whether or not this man had any qualifications.

Mr. BLAIN. I will gratify my hon. friend's curiosity. I quote further:

Mr. FOWLER. It is of importance that the department should know his former occupation.

Mr. HYMAN. It may be.

There we have it from the Minister of Public Works that he was utterly indifferent as to whether this officer was qualified for the work or not.

Mr. CARVELL. If my hon. friend will read a little further he will find it reported in 'Hansard' that this clerk of works had 30 or 40 years experience as a builder and is one of the most practical men in Canada.

Mr. BLAIN. I will allow my hon. friend (Mr. Carvell) to deal with that; that is not my point of discussion.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Read it.

Mr. BLAIN. My point is that the Minister of Public Works did not know whether this man was qualified or not, and I quote the minister's own statement to prove it. My hon. friend may be right; I am not dealing with that point at all. I am dealing with the expression of the Minister of Public Works, who said practically that it was a matter of indifference altogether to the department and to himself——

Mr. HYMAN. I did not say anything of the kind.

Mr. BLAIN. Let me repeat it:

Mr. FOWLER. What was his former occupation?

Mr. HYMAN. I have no knowledge of his former occupation?

Mr. FOWLER. It is important that the department should know his former occupation.

Mr. HYMAN. It may be.

And now my hon. friend rather tries to smooth it over as he has been smoothing over some of the important details of the work which we have under discussion at the present moment. The opposition from year to year during the past few years has been drawing the attention of the Minister of Public Works and of his predecessors to the fact that the men who have been engaged by the government at considerable salaries to look after the large expenditures of public money that have been going on throughout the country have been in many cases men without any practical experience whatever. May I stop for a moment to ask the hon. Minister of Public Works whether it is the policy of his department that men appointed as clerks of works shall be men of practical experience ?

Mr. HYMAN. I have very much pleasure in answering the hon. gentleman that it is the policy of the department. The greatest care is always exercised to ascertain what experience they have had before they are employed.

Mr. BLAIN. May I ask the minister if he has carried out that policy with respect to public buildings and other public works throughout the country since he has had charge of the department ?

Mr. HYMAN. Since I have had charge of the department I have always endeavoured to carry it out.

Mr. BLAIN. Then, we have the statement from the Minister of Public Works, if I understand him correctly, that it is the policy of his department that in the future as in the past men of practical experience shall take charge of the expenditure of money in connection with public works.

If that is the policy, I will venture to produce in the House at no distant date several cases of public works under the control of my hon. friend in connection with which men without any practical experience whatever have been employed as clerks of works. It may be that the man employed in the case under discussion had some practical experience ; but the point is that when the matter was brought to the attention of the Minister of Public Works as in the special case referred to, he passed it over by saying practically that it was a matter of indifference on the part of the government whether the man was a clerk or a tailor or a carpenter or what he was. Now, I have only this to say in conclusion, that I think more care should be exercised on the part of the Minister of Public Works. I do not wish to criticise too closely or to condemn in too strong language ; but I do say that the government should see to it that the specifications for public works are more carefully drawn, and that when contracts are let practical men should be employed to look after them, in order that the people of this country shall have proper results from the large expenditures which are being made, particularly as the policy of the government seems to be that a considerable amount of this money shall be expended without any contract whatever.

Mr. F. B. CARVELL (Carleton, N.B.). Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to enter into this discussion, because it seems to be something which the hon. gentlemen of the opposition are having all to themselves, and from which they are receiving considerable satisfaction ; and had it not been for the matter which was referred to by the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat, I would not have trespassed on the time of the House. I do not think my hon. friend has discussed this matter with his usual fairness. It is true, he read from Hansard a statement of the Minister of Public Works, in answer to a question of Mr. Fowler as to the former occupation of the clerk of works at Woodstock, which the minister answered by saying that he had no knowledge of his former occupation. I do not think that it would be reasonable to expect the Minister of Public Works to carry in his mind the former occupations of the clerks of works employed all over Canada.

Mr. BLAIN. Would the hon. gentleman be good enough to read the paragraphs following that answer of the minister ?

Mr. CARVELL. I will read everything the hon. gentleman wishes. But because the Minister of Public Works cannot tell off-hand the occupation of every gentleman who happened to have charge of public works all over Canada, it does not follow that the officers of his department have not the knowledge, or have placed people in charge of these works who have not the requisite qualifications. My hon. friend is trying to draw the inference, that because the minister could not tell the former occupation of this clerk of works, therefore the man had no previous experience, and that this appointment was only a sample of what was going on all over the country. Now, I will read what took place. The discussion arose on account of something the hon. member for King's (Mr. Fowler) had stated; and I might say here that that hon. gentleman has had a hobby on which he has run one election and will I presume run another if he ever gets a chance, that is, that a certain man appointed a clerk of works on a small building at Sussex had once in his life time been a tailor. But the hon. member for King's has not told us that the work was not properly constructed. It has been there for several years, and, so far as we can see, it is all right.

Mr. BLAIN. Will you wait till it falls down ?

Mr. CARVELL. Well, it has not fallen down yet, and it has been there three or four years. I am going to read, as my hon. friend wishes me to do so, every word that was uttered in that discussion, and I will then ask the House to say whether the hon. gentleman has been fair in reading a part of the discussion and not the whole of it. I will read what followed the portion read by my hon. friend :

Mr. FOWLER. It is of importance that the department should know his former occupation.

Mr. HYMAN. It may be.

Mr. FOWLER. Not only may be but is. There was an instance in the town of Sussex where I reside, the principle town in King's, part of my constituency. The clerk of works in charge of an important work was a tailor by occupation and was in active work as a tailor. He had no previous knowledge of building and was not a mechanic except with his needle, and yet he was put in charge of the construction of that building as clerk of works. He was paid $3, or I think it was $3.50 a day. This man must be a mechanic because he is only getting $3 a day whereas the other, on account of his superior qualifications as a tailor got $3.50. The contract price for the building was $4,300, but this clerk of works, who was a tailor, drew $1,900 as clerk of works.

Mr. HYMAN. I am not disputing the hon. gentleman, I have no knowledge of it.

Mr. FOWLER. He will find if he refers to the accounts that they will bear out the statement.

Mr. HYMAN. He must have been a good tailor.

Mr. FOWLER. He knew how to make a bill, which they say is a requisite of a good tailor.

Mr. FOSTER. He evidently found his goose.

Mr. FOWLER. Evidently there was lots of cabbage. It seems that the department forgot he was employed and he kept on drawing his pay all the time. The building occupied four months in construction but he was kept on for a year and a half. I hope the same mistake will not be made in this case, and that is why I asked the minister what this person was. I would like the minister to find out from his officers.

Mr. HYMAN. I suppose the hon. member from the constituency can give the information.

Mr. CARVELL. I think I can give some information to the hon. member for King's (Mr. Fowler). I can tell him that the clerk is Mr. Drysdale, who has been a contractor for probably twenty-five or thirty years, and who, some fifteen or twenty years ago had charge of the building of the record building in Woodstock. . He has been engaged in work of this kind all his lifetime.

That is the portion which the hon. gentleman would not read and which is an answer to the whole question.

An hon. MEMBER. That is another building.

Mr. CARVELL. It is not, it is the Woodstock Armoury, the building which my hon. friend was discussing when he brought up the question. With his knowledge of that, and he must have had knowledge of it—or if he had not the hon. member for King's (Mr. Fowler) had—he should have read the whole thing and should not have made the statement that the Minister of Public Works appointed a man a year ago to take charge of a work at Woodstock without knowing anything of his qualifications, for the evidence is in Hansard that he had all the qualifications necessary.

Mr. BLAIN. Did what he read refer to one or two buildings ?

Mr. CARVELL. The discussion, so far as the hon. member for King's (Mr. Fowler) is concerned, referred to the construction of the armoury at Sussex in New Brunswick. The other referred to the construction of the armoury in the town of Woodstock.

Mr. BLAIN. Entirely two different things.

Mr. CARVELL. But the armoury at Woodstock was the building about which the discussion of the inspector took place. It was the appointment of an inspector in the armoury of Woodstock about which the charge was made that the Minister of Public Works had no knowledge of his qualifications.

Mr. BLAIN. He said he had none.

Mr. G. W. FOWLER (King's N.B.). I had no intention of taking part in this debate but as my hon. friend from Carleton, N.B., (Mr. Carvell) has seen fit to refer to me and to say that I have already run one election on the appointment of a clerk of works in my constituency and he supposed I would run another if I got the chance, I want to say to him that in the late election I had the honour of having against me as an opponent the strongest man that could be produced in that constituency on the Liberal side. I had for my opponent the ex-Attorney General of the province, who for sixteen years had represented the constituency of King's in the New Brunswick legislature, who had held several positions in the cabinet of that province, and had never met defeat. And I suppose it was on account of the rascally work done by the government in connection with the building of this armoury at Sussex and the appointment of that very clerk of works that I was able to defeat that hon. gentleman in the county by a majority of 300 votes or double that given me in the previous election. And since the appointment of the clerk of works proved such a specific in that case, I shall be very happy to use it in the next election. But I shall be able to supplement that appointment with a number of other cases since then. I shall be able to point to the Laurier Tower, that magnificent monument which was to have been erected to this wonderful statesman who had a dream and made a nation in a night. I hope that the nation he created in a night was not one established on such unstable foundations as the Laurier Tower. Why the very materials of which the mortar was composed that should have bound together that building are typical of the condition of that party to-day. There is no bond of union to keep those materials together. It was a case of every one for himself—typical of the condition of that party.

An hon. MEMBER. How about your own ?

Mr. FOWLER. It is bound together strong, firm and staple. Let us take up the question which the hon. member for Carleton, N. B., (Mr. Carvell) brought up. He says that the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) was unfair in not reading the whole discussion which took place regarding the appointment of a clerk of works for the armoury at Woodstock. I say that the point which my hon. friend from Peel was making did not require that he should read the whole of that discussion. He did not make the point as to whether this clerk of works was a competent man or not, but the point he made was that the Minister of Public Works had said it was a matter of perfect indifference to him whether that man was competent or not.

Mr. HYMAN. I am sure the hon. gentleman does not want to put words in my mouth which do not appear in Hansard. I made no such statement as that it was a matter of indifference to me. I simply said that I had no knowledge at the time. That cannot be construed into the statement that the hon. gentleman attributes to me.

Mr. FOWLER. I do not want to be unfair to my hon. friend. Therefore notwithstanding this discussion has already been quoted once or twice, I shall quote it again, since the hon. gentleman does not seem to have grasped the gist of it. The question was, referring to the clerk of works, how long has he been in charge. Mr. Hyman replied : Since the 1st of February.

Mr. FOWLER. Of this month ?
Mr. HYMAN. Yes.
Mr. FOWLER. What was his former occupation ?
Mr. HYMAN. I have no knowledge of his former occupation.
Mr. FOWLER. It is important that the department should know his former occupation.

Here is the answer which the Minister of Public Works made to that. He did not say it was important, he did not agree with that statement of fact which certainly should appeal to every reasonable man in this House or out of it. No, he said :

It may be of importance or it may not .

Here is a man entrusted with the supervision of an important public work, and we are told by the minister that it only may be of importance that that man, appointed for the purpose of seeing that the contractor does not skimp his work but does his duty by the people and performs the contract he is paid to execute—yet the minister tells us only that it may be of importance. With that answer in Hansard by the minster, my hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain) was absolutely justified in saying that to the minister it was a matter of complete indifference whether the man was qualified or not. Yet this armoury is not the only public work which has been erected in my constituency. The government have built a large rifle range there, and the clerk of the works employed was not a man who had experience in the building way in any shape or form. He was a legal gentleman and the secretary of the Liberal association in the county. That gentleman was appointed to supervise the carrying out of a contract covering an expenditure of $10,000 to $12,000. He was a legal gentleman who used to go up on his way to lunch and take a look at the construction. That is the way the business is being done all around. It appears that it is not necessary for a man to know anything about buildings to be an inspector. I say the minister has treated this House with scant courtesy. Yesterday this matter was brought up, and he should have had here to-day the information we require. He ought to have known that we would have questioned him. I give him credit for more astuteness than not to have known it would be brought up. Here, under the very eyes of the representatives of the people, a construction topples down, not in a gale of wind but on a calm spring day in the bright sunshine. Why, we would be doing less than our duty if we did not discuss this matter fully.

And yet, the hon. minister is not able to tell us who was the clerk of works in this case ? The question was asked yesterday, and surely the hon. minister could have found out this fact in the course of twenty-four hours. What has he been doing ? Have the calls upon him socially been so great that he could not attend to the affairs of his department ? Had he been attending to his department, he could surely have brought here the specifications of this building, in anticipation of what he would be asked to-day. Yet, he comes here with absolutely nothing to tell us. And what is his excuse ? He says : Oh, I am going to have an investigation into this matter some day, and I do not want the case prejudiced by bringing the facts before the House until I have had my official investigation. It may be like the investigation that the Minister of Railways (Mr. Emmerson) had recently into the alleged stamp-stealing at Moncton. He sent down an officer from the department, as I am informed, to investigate the case. This officer went down and interviewed the man who was accused. The accused told him it was all a lie, that he had never stolen a stamp. So, the officer came back and reported that there was nothing in it. I suppose that is the kind of investigation that we shall have into this falling of the Laurier tower. One would think that the Prime Minister would be sufficiently interested in this piece of architecture which was named after him to insist upon a thorough investigation of this affair. The Minister of Public Works should have come here with the specifications of the building and with the name of the clerk of works, so that we, the representatives of the people, might know how the matter stands. Does the minister suppose that this is a matter that creates no interest in the country ? Does he think that the people have become so dull, so used to the delinquencies of this government that even the falling of a tower makes no noise in their ears ? I can assure hon. gentlemen opposite that the people are beginning to take an interest in the repeated delinquencies of this government. Of course, these hon. gentlemen may say : We do not care a fig for the people. When the elections come on we will get a majority, no matter how, and will come back here and run the country just the same. I say that the Minister of Public Works has been derelict in his duty and I am surprised that he should treat the House with such scant courtesy. It is rumoured that this clerk of works, whoever he may be, was appointed on the recommendation of the members for the city. I see one of the members for Ottawa present, and I would like to ask him if he can give us the name of the clerk of works of this building ?

Mr. ROBERT STEWART (Ottawa). If the hon. member (Mr. Fowler) is referring to me, I may say that I have been given to understand that the inspector in this case was appointed by the friends of hon. gentlemen opposite, and also that the contractor is, or was, a friend of these hon. gentlemen. I know nothing about the matter myself.

Mr. FOWLER. That is a magnificent answer to be given by the honourable junior—or senior, I do not know which—member for Ottawa. Why, if it had not been for some renegades throughout the country who turned from supporting us to supporting hon. gentlemen opposite, they would not fill the seats that they now occupy. Sixty per cent of the contractors who supported the Conservative government when in power are supporting hon. gentlemen opposite now, and supporting them with far greater force. And why ? Because the plums fall thicker ; because there are greater rake-offs ; because there is more money in it. If this gentleman was once, as a contractor, supporting the Conservative government is that a reason—

Mr. BUREAU. He is a Tory now.

Mr. FOWLER. How does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bureau) know ? If rumour speaks true, the hon. gentleman was once a Tory himself. Now, my hon. friend the junior—or senior—member for Ottawa city says that the inspector of works, as he calls him, was also a friend of our side. I asked him for the name, but he has not given it. I understood that this officer is a man named Canty—probably a very canty person, who changed his politics as soon as the government changed. I can only say that it would certainly be a great departure from the rule so closely followed by hon. gentlemen opposite if they appointed a Conservative to be inspector of works here in Ottawa. If rumour speaks true, this gentleman receives $5 a day and pays no attention whatever to the building. I do not know whether this is so or not. I hope the investigation that the hon. minister speaks of will probe to the bottom of these matters and find out why this clerk of works allowed a public building to be constructed in this rascally manner. I do not care who the contractor is or what his politics may be. What does it matter ? We are here to look after the interests of the people ; and if a man has slighted his work in so important a case as this, the fact that he is a Conservative or that he is a Liberal ought not to count in his favour. But I can well understand why hon. gentlemen opposite speak as the hon. member from Ottawa city has done. He in effect, says : You must keep your mouths closed because, by speaking you may hurt a Tory. All I can say is, if a Tory is a scoundrel, let him take his punishment. We are here to look after the interests of the people, and that should be our first consideration, our last consideration, our only consideration. We are not here to hide the faults or weakness or guilt of a man because at one time, or even now, he is counted a Tory or is counted a Liberal. I, for one, do not propose to take that stand. I do not think it is my duty to do so; and I trust the hon. Minister of Public Works, if he holds this investigation, will not hold it behind closed doors, but will hold it in public, where the press will be represented and where the general public can hear what is said. Let us have this matter probed to the very bottom, so that we may know who is responsible for the fall of the Laurier Tower—that fall which is an omen of the fall, soon to come to pass, of the political party headed by the right hon. gentleman after whom this tower was named.

Mr. W. H. BENNETT (East Simcoe). At a convention in the United States, one of the delegates, Patrick Flannigan, by name, made a speech that appealed to the feelings of all present. It was a short speech, but it was enough. Mr. Flannigan said : ' What are we here for if not for the spoils ? ' That seems to be about the position of the Liberal party from one end of the Dominion to the other. I am not surprised that a man engaged as an inspector of works should be on the look out for graft, when he considers the two members who represent the city in this House. We all remember the celebrated Gilbert dredging claim. The hon. senior member for Ottawa (Mr. Belcourt) stood in his place and said : I am conducting the claim of the Gilbert Brothers in the Department of Railways and Canals; I am going to get a fee for what I do ; I am looking for other cases in any of the departments, and I will take all that comes my way. And ministers applauded that sentiment to the echo. That hon. gentleman has not given up prosecuting claims of contractors, and something more will be heard of one of these claims before the session is much older. And the hon. junior member for Ottawa (Mr. Stewart) was very flippant about this matter. He said that this inspector of works had been in the employ of the department for years. But his name is not on the permanent list. I challenge the hon. gentleman to find it there. The hon. gentleman knows, and the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Hyman) knows, in fact everybody at all conversant with the matter knows, that this man Canty is not only an inspector of this work locally, but also is inspector of the museum building that is now under construction. I ask the hon. minister if that is not correct.

Mr. HYMAN. I understand that Mr. Canty, the gentleman mentioned, is inspector of the museum building. But Mr. Taylor is the gentleman in the department who is responsible for the inspection of the building now under consideration, and Mr. Canty is only called in at certain times.

Mr. BENNETT. The hon. minister knows that it is common report throughout the town that Mr. Canty was on this work too. Before we depart from names, may I ask the initials of Mr. Fuller who is to be called in to act in this matter ?

Mr. HYMAN. I do not remember his initials.

Mr. BENNETT. I may tell the minister that I have looked over the Toronto directory and what do I find? I find that there is a gentleman named Fuller in Toronto, an architect—at least he is not classed as an architect—but he is the assistant engineer of the Public Works Department of Canada. That is the independent gentleman, I assume, who is to come down here and he is a near relative of a prominent official in the Public Works Department. Why, Sir, this great Liberal party that goes from end to end of the province is all in accord with the sentiment of Mr. Flannigan. I am glad the Postmaster General has come in, because he heard the sentiment applauded to the echo. A convention was held in North York and Mr. Fleury, whose name appears in the public accounts for thousands of dollars, who freely declared that it was to the benefit of the party to be out for one thing and one thing only, that is material benefits. What do material benefits mean? They mean exactly what has been seen in this public work to-day; it means that a man contracts for a certain work; it means that by the connivance of either an architect who makes blundering, ill-advised and stupid specifications, or an inspector who is a party to probable fraud, he is going to get the best advantage of the contract. That is what it means and to-day while this debate has gone on not a gentleman on that side has had the temerity to stand up and say that he has gone to that building and picked up a handful of the alleged cement and that it does not bear up to the samples that have been shown here this afternoon. There is the member for Nanaimo (Mr. Ralph Smith) looking up in such a pitiful way, the hon. gentleman who is always shedding crocodile tears for the workingman. To-day he is dumb as an oyster, although his fellow-workmen were exposed owing to the collapse of this building. Behind him whom do I see? That contractor of contractors, the member for Thunder Bay and Rainy River (Mr. Conmee) who could tell us all about the material; who could tell us not only what was to be found in the earth above but also in the waters under the earth, because he is doing dredging by thousands and ten of thousands of dollars worth for this government. I can go further, to the junior member for Ottawa (Mr. Stewart). Could not the junior member for Ottawa tell us what there is beneath and what there is above the water ? Is he not dredging for this government, too?

Mr. STEWART. No he is not.

Mr. BENNETT. I will tell you what he is doing. It is true that he is not, but there is a company called the Dominion Dredge Company in which one of his sons has blossomed out as a large shareholder. Will the hon. gentleman dispute that? Sir, this is the way the Independence of Parliament Act is shelved and this is the way hon. gentlemen are trying to avoid it. A gentleman sat in this chamber who was the owner with others of a dredge. He transferred his stock to the name of another person to cast off suspicion. The gentleman is dead now, but the stock has gone back to the name of his wife. Look at the whole list of hon. gentlemen on that side who are interested in dredges to-day. All that is required with this government is to get a contract and you can easily make your money out of it. We have a case in point. Here is a contractor and it is not to be believed that the architect of the department ever provided that there should be sand between this brick and the stone wall. I challenge the minister to say that is in the specifications. It cannot be found there and never will be found, but the contractor has a way apparently by which he can throw in sand instead of cement. The member for Centre York (Mr. Campbell) has tendered low for the flour for the penitentiaries. I wonder what kind of flour he will supply? Will there not be an awful lot of objection made to the quality if it is a little inferior, an awful lot? Why, Sir, graft? It is graft all through. There is the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Emmerson), I hope I have wakened him up. What is he doing? Going into a petty joint stock company in New Brunswick, unloading its oil on the people of Canada, and that, too, by telegram, regardless of expense, to Mr. Pottinger, to rush the orders for this company.

Is it any wonder that the ordinary man who is given a little petty position in this country when he sees the two members for Ottawa, the senior member pressing claims and getting that business merely because he is a member of parliament, the junior member with his son in a dredging company, and the Minister of Railways starting a little Johnny business for his company. Is it any wonder that every man in town thinks there is something in it and should be for him, and with one accord say with Mr. Flannigan: 'What is there in it, if there is not the spoils?'

At six o'clock, House took recess.

PRIVATE BILLS.

VANCOUVER AND LULU ISLAND RAILWAY COMPANY.

On the order:

House in committee on Bill (No. 29) respecting the Vanocuver and Lulu Island Railway Company.—Mr. Macpherson.

Mr. CAMPBELL moved:

That the order of the House for the House again in committee on Bill (No. 29), an Act respecting the Vancouver and Lulu Island Railway Company be discharged and the Bill be referred back to the Select Standing Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines for further consideration.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Would the hon. gentleman (Mr. Campbell) explain the reason for this?

Mr. CAMPBELL. The reason is that the Bill grants an extension of time for the building of the main line as well as certain branches and this railway company has also power, by getting the consent of the Governor in Council, to build branches not exceeding 30 miles in length. This power was granted some five years ago. The committee amended the Bill, but when it came to the House the other night the House thought the powers granted the company were too large, that the time for building these branches authorized by the Governor in Council should be limited to two and five years and it was thought better to refer it back to the Railway Committee in order that this amendment might be made.

Mr. LENNOX. I do not understand why the hon. gentleman says that the House came to the conclusion that the powers granted were too large. I think I have been in the House every time this matter has come up. The other night, when this matter came up in committee, it was pointed out that the form in which the Bill had been reported to this House was not exactly correct for this reason: The section as it originally existed provided for an extension of time as to the main line and branches. It transpired in the Railway Committee that in addition to having power to build the main line and defined branches the Bill also provided for the building of indefinite lines not exceeding thirty miles in length in any one case upon the order of the Governor in Council. I took occasion to point out to the committee of this House the other evening that the striking out of the words 'and branches' which appeared in the section as it was originally framed was not correct nor according to the intention of the committee and for that reason the committee was asked to rise and report progress. There was no decision, as I understand, by the House, and I think the hon. gentleman will admit when I call his attention to it that there has been no decision of the House, that it was not advisable to grant this extension of time. The House has not considered it in any way and it is hardly fair for the hon. gentleman to make that statement. I hope he will not persist in it now that his attention has been called to it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The Bill as originally brought in provided for an extension of the time for the completion of the main line and the branches which it had been authorized to construct for five years. Now, under the original Bill, power was granted to this company by getting the authority of the Governor in Council to build branches not more than thirty miles in length. The committee thought it was wise to amend this clause by providing that the branches should be commenced within two years and completed within five years from the time of the passage of the order in council. Some gentlemen in the House contended that that was wrong that that amendment should not have been made because the life of the Act was extended for five years but that if we adopted this clause providing that the branches should be commenced within two years and completed within five from the passing of the order in council the order in council might not be granted for ten years from now and so the time would be unduly extended. It evidently was the intention of the committee that it should be made plain that the two years and the five years should be within the extension of time granted in regard to the main charter. The hon. gentleman for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) is quite right when he says that the House did not come to that decision, but the Minister and some others thought it would be the better course to refer it back to the committee and have it amended in that way.

Mr. LENNOX. With the explanation that the hon. gentleman has just made I quite agree. What arose was that when we came to consider in the committee another Bill of a similar character the other day it was thought that it was not wise to leave it indefinite but that we should limit the time for the making of the order in council. So, I have no objection to the Bill being referred back.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. You repeal the time limit and fix another time limit.

SUPPLY— WEST BLOCK— COLLAPSE OF NEW TOWER.

House resumed consideration of the motion to go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. W. H. BENNETT (E. Simcoe). Mr. Speaker, the other afternoon the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Greenway) in addressing the House, prefaced his remarks with this text: The land for the settler; and I think, from the way that the discussion went on this afternoon, a very proper text would be: Graft for the grafter. In the remarks that I made before dinner, I brought out certain facts, not with a view of causing hon. gentlemen opposite to feel annoyed that they had not been feeding in rich pastures like some of their more favoured brothers, but that I might stir in the minds of some of the better members—and I am sure that a majority of the members are such—a feeling of dissatisfaction and disgust at this pillaging of the public chest, and a feeling that as members of parliament we have a public trust and that we should endeavour to rise above petty speculations. The debate has thus far done some good, because the Minister of Public Works announced that a gentleman named Fuller would be entrusted with the work—

Mr. HYMAN. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to say that I made a mistake in the name. It was not Mr. Fuller; I meant to say Mr. Curry. It was a slip of the tongue.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is exactly as I understood the minister, he spoke with inadvertence.

Mr. BENNETT. Of course, I accept the minister's statement, and that disposes of the matter at once. Mr. Curry is a gentleman highly spoken of in the city of Toronto as an architect, and the public will respect any finding he may make.

Mr. HYMAN. I may say also that I have thought it well to ask Mr. Hutchison, of Montreal, to act with Mr. Curry.

Mr. BENNETT. This afternoon I adverted to the fact that one minister did not think it below his position to traffic at the public chest, protected by the law which permits a member of parliament to deal with the country under cover of a joint stock company. When I picked out the Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. H. R. Emmerson), I did it not only to hold him up as an example, but with the hope that before the evening passed some of the other ministers would rise to their feet and declare that in future they would have nothing to do with joint stock companies. It cannot be expected that members of parliament will not participate in what is going when they see Ministers of the Crown doing so. We see more than one minister feasting at the public crib. Take the Minister of Agriculture (Hon. Sidney Fisher) who I regret to see is not in his place to-night. It is a notorious fact that this gentleman for many years was a large stockholder in the Montreal 'Herald,' and what did he do in order that that newspaper might receive public patronage? He confessed before the Public Accounts Committee that he had surrendered his stock in the Montreal 'Herald' Company to his brother, and, when pressed, he admitted under oath that he had done so without any consideration. This year the Montreal 'Herald' is drawing nearly $31,000 of public money, and is any man insane enough to believe that the Minister of Agriculture having handed over to his brother the large block of stock which he held in that company, does not enjoy to-day the advantage of every dollar that accrues to that stock? Let us go a little further. There is the Minister of Inland Revenue (Hon. Mr. Templeman) who also, as I am informed and believe, is a large stockholder and practically the owner of a newspaper in Victoria, B.C., which is deriving large sums of money from the public treasury. I need not go into cases of members of parliament who at all times are practically trafficking in their positions. How they contrive to do it we know not, but we do know that from time to time cases occur in which members of parliament receive substantial advantages from the government and in return are giving their support to the government in every contingency. Take the case of the hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Lovell) who had erected on his property a dock worth $75,000, but of no public benefit to the country as a whole, and which so enhanced the value of that hon. gentleman's property that he was able to dispose of it at a very large advance. Take the case of the hon. member for N. Simcoe (Mr. Leighton McCarthy), whose firm's name figured in the public accounts a year or two ago for $3,000 or $4,000; and when the case came before the Public Accounts Committee, the public were informed that while it was true that the money had come into the office, the firm had carefully set it aside, and he did not participate in it. Well, that can easily be arranged. Children at school may give to one more cake, and to another more apple. Perhaps the hon. gentleman did not participate in that money but the general income of the firm was augmented by what they got from the government. This government has been bred up to this principle of graft; it is in the air. As I showed this afternoon, at a convention at which the Postmaster General was chosen, the speeches rang with graft. Let me read the words used by one of the speakers on that occasion:

> We have got into the habit of being represented by a minister. It is not a bad habit, but rather a good habit, so far as material advantage to the people of North York are concerned. It is a question of material benefits.

I think the Postmaster General will bear me out that that was cheered to the echo; and if you will peruse the public accounts of this country you will find that the gentleman who gave utterance to these grafter sentiments is a gentleman whose name figures in the public accounts for thousands of dollars—a gentleman for whom the former Postmaster General did what? Why, he gave him a contract, without any competition, for the construction of the thousands of letter boxes that one sees from Vancouver to Quebec. The Postmaster General will not deny it, and I trust, for the sake of his reputation, he will see that there is no more gigantic grafting to be done in that department and that in future the contracts for these letter boxes will not be given without public competition and tender. The Postmaster General was present on that occasion.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I beg to correct the hon. gentleman, I was not.

Mr. BENNETT. I stand corrected, but with the sound ringing in his ears and knowing that the keynote of that convention was, what did he say when he met them ? He said : Let us show what can be done by the stalwarts of North York when they are out for their rights. I will show you what were the rights of the stalwarts of North York. The rights are these—that Mr. Fleury was to have, at his own price, the manufacturing of all the letter boxes in this country and that other men in that riding were to have the repairing of all the mail bags in the country. And further, whenever boots were required for the letter carriers, no matter in what city, they must be purchased in the riding of North York. If a letter carrier in St. John, New Brunswick, had his boots worn out, he should get another pair, not in that city, but in North York. We know lately that there has been great speculating throughout the country as to who would be the lucky contractors for sections on the Grand Trunk Pacific. What do we find ? We find that when the time was drawing nigh for giving contracts, the stalwarts of North York were out for their rights and that a gigantic company was formed to tender for the construction of the Grand Trunk Pacific. Needless to say that Mr. Fleury, encouraged by the Postmaster General, was out for his rights, but he was hardly able to tackle such a proposition as the building of hundreds of miles of railway. But the pipes had to be laid and Mr. Fleury and Mr. Tudhope, the member for East Simcoe in the local House, who has promised to be the federal candidate at the next election in East Simcoe, were brought into the field. These gentlemen, in connection with Mr. Gauthier and Mr. Laliberté, from Montreal, looked out for some capitalists with whom they could plunge into this speculation. I have here a formidable list but shall not endeavour to read the names, they are so unpronounceable. And these gentlemen who were brought into the scheme were no ordinary men. They were counts and dukes and viscounts—gentlemen of most exalted position. And rumour hath it that even the King of Belgium was in this contract company.

Mr. SAM HUGHES. Who was the solicitor ?

Mr. BENNETT. That does not appear. There was a formidable organization of wealthy capitalists, including the King of Belgium, and these gentlemen from North York, urged on by the stalwart words of the Postmaster General, were the moving spirits in this company with a million dollars capital. But rumour has it that the Belgian gentlemen got scent of the company they were in and did not tender. Perhaps however the Postmaster General may yet be able to assure the King of the Belgians and the other distinguished gentlemen that the company into which they were about to embark were good men and true. But there is one thing certain, and that is that Mr. Fleury's friends must have been rather surprised when he saw his name paraded in the 'Canada Gazette,' in conjunction with these counts and viscounts, in a contract company with a capital of a million dollars. Well, things have not all gone by on the Grand Trunk Pacific. There is a chance yet. There are still some contracts to be let, and these gentlemen may yet be able to profit by the advice of the Postmaster General. Where are we to-day on the Grand Trunk Pacific matter ? It was supposed by innocent and confiding people that the lowest tenderers would get the contract but what do we find ? We find that Mr. Parent—the gentleman who was assailed by the hon. member for North Ontario (Mr. Grant) for not being what he should be on that commission—we find Mr. Parent and another gentleman holding out for the highest tenderer and the two other commissioners holding out for a lower tenderer. The public know how these commissioners stand, but they will never know, until the cabinet leaks, how it will stand on the question. The whole business is permeated by a desire for greed and graft and by the conviction that if you can only exert sufficient political influence you will get benefits and advantages that should not accrue if matters were properly conducted.

I was referring before dinner to the question of dredging in this country, and I say now that the most colossal swindle going on against the people is the expenditure on dredging. I say that advisedly and deliberately. There are dredging companies to-day in Ontario which have thrown around them the protecting arm of this government and the Minister of Public Works. The hon. minister is to-day endeavouring to give certain favoured friends all the dredging available in this country and not throw it open to the world wide competition. Who compose these companies ? The minister knows it. He knows that in some there are judges and members of parliament. He knows that this afternoon the hon. member for Rainy River (Mr. Conmee) silently acquiesced in this.

Mr. CONMEE. I wish to correct my hon. friend. On several occasions both this session and last session he has made reference to me in connection with dredging. I do not think it is in the interest of this House or the people that members should malign each other across the floor. I can say as many disagreeable and offensive things of my opponents as the hon. gentleman can of me. Has he any knowledge of my business ? He knows absolutely nothing about it. He has no evidence at all. If he has, he should produce it. If I have violated the rules of this House or the independence of parliament, there is machinery in this House to put such things right, and until my hon. friend is prepared to take that position it will be just as well for him to drop my name in that connection. I am here entirely within my rights. I do not owe my election to any person or party for that matter. Certainly not the hon. gentleman's party. I am here in spite of them. I am not here at the bidding of any company or corporation. No man, no corporation, no organization has ever contributed anything to put me into this House. I am not going to bandy words with the hon. gentleman now. But I am willing to go this far—I warn the hon. gentleman that it is just as well for him to keep within reasonable bounds.

Mr. BENNETT. The hon. member for Thunder Bay and Rainy river (Mr. Conmee) is a veritable Rip Van Winkle. These charges that he was interested in the Great Lakes Dredging Company went through the press a year ago, and he never opened his mouth or penned a word to repudiate them. But I am pleased to hear the hon. gentleman rise in his place, and I am pleased to hear the notice he has given to this government. He has notified them that he is ready to get under the tree that has the most apples. He is ready to sound a pæan of independence. Evidently he thinks the government is going, and he is getting ready to jump to the other side. It is charming to hear the hon. gentleman preach political morality. Nobody ever contributed to his expense, he says. Why, has not the province of Ontario contributed heavily to that end ? But I will do the hon. gentleman the justice to say that he is always generous. He did not mind putting up a thousand dollars to protest Gamey when he knew about it. The hon. gentleman is well known in Ontario politics. I am surprised that to-night he should have broken that reserve which has characterized him in the past, that reserve which has always been an evidence of his wisdom. He has not denied, even now, that he is interested in this company. And I am going to give him a chance now to say that he is not.

Mr. CONMEE. I wish to say that when he merely flings insinuations and suspicions across the floor the hon. gentleman puts himself on a level below that upon which a member of this House should stand. The hon. gentleman has the choice of his own standards ; so far as I am concerned he is at perfect liberty to measure himself by any standard he pleases. But I feel reasonably assured that his constituents did not send him here merely to spread slander. What account is he going to give to his riding when he goes home ? What can he tell them to assure them that he has done anything in their interest or in the interest of the country ? He has made many unwarranted assertions ; he has expressed many suspicions. I thought I was quite moderate with the hon. gentleman. I wish to say to him now that if he wants to be the scavenger of his party, he can find work to do among those in front of him. I do not want to be drawn into a discussion here to-night.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. CONMEE. Hon. gentlemen opposite need not be alarmed or amused. I know their history. They may have forgotten it, but I have not forgotten it, nor has this country forgotten it. If hon. gentlemen opposite will have no discussion except such as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) seems to favour, they can have all they want of it. But, for my part I protest against it. I say we are not here for any such purpose. I have already said to my hon. friend (Mr. Bennett) that if he thinks I am here upon any wrong footing, if he thinks I am interested directly or indirectly, in anything that I should not be interested in, it is his duty to go at that matter in a businesslike way. It is his place to make his charge and give his evidence. But the fact is he knows nothing ; he cannot produce any evidence now, or at any future time.

Mr. BENNETT. Well, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Conmee) has my sympathy. The province of Ontario once afforded him rich pasture, but it affords it no longer. That jocund laugh of his which used to echo about the legislative assembly building is a thing of the past. He passes and repasses there, but nothing is heard from him but groans and lamentations. Will the hon. gentleman deny now that the Great Lakes Dredging Company, before he became a member of it——

Mr. CONMEE. I have no interest in or anything to do with the Great Lakes Dredging Company.

Mr. BENNETT. I have got the hon. gentleman (Mr. Conmee) just where I wanted him. Now, Charles Bowman and James Conmee, two members of the local legislature of the province of Ontario, were interested in several dredges. The hon. gentleman will hardly deny that. The hon. gentleman saw the way things were going at Toronto ; he could read the handwriting on the wall. So he succeeded in coming here to Ottawa. I am not sure whether his election was held before or after the general elections. But, be that as it may, he came here. At once it was seen that it would not do for Messrs. Conmee & Bowman to engage in government dredging contracts under the circumstances, and so an incorporated company was formed. The hon. gentleman says I speak harshly about him. Why I have paid him compliments. I have said he is the shrewdest gentleman on that side of the House. I am willing to say that he is one of the most artful dodgers every known ; that his smile is the sweetest of all smiles ; and, that, up to to-night, his discretion has been beyond praise. But he has broken out to-night, and in doing so he has made a mistake. From this day I shall be obliged, when commending the hon. gentleman, to refrain from my customary praise of his discretion. There is a company such as I have named ; and the hon. gentleman will hardly deny that Mr. Bowman is a member of that company; and he will hardly deny that a gentleman whom he trusts very much holds a large block of stock in the company, that gentleman being Mr. Whelan, his son-in-law. There is the whole thing. We have heard of his satanic majesty being chased around a bush—but he was overtaken at last. Not that I would suggest that the hon. gentleman is the personification of the name that I have just mentioned. But there is the whole story of the Conmee Dredging Company. And, if any one imagines that the hon. gentleman, as he trudges back and forth to the Public Works Department, is not concerned in dredging contracts, all I can say is that——

Mr. CONMEE. I rise to a point of order. I have made a statement to the House. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) made a reference to me which I contradicted. I have made my statement here in my place and on my responsibility as a member of this House. I think that the hon. gentleman should withdraw his statement. I have no connection with Charles Bowman in dredging. My hon. friend (Mr. Bennett) is fishing, and he is welcome to fish. I do not want to say nasty things though, I could do it if I wished to. If after being corrected, the hon. gentleman does not feel it his duty to withdraw the statements he made—which statements were false, for which statements there is no foundation ; for which statements he can give no facts, for which statements he has no basis of knowledge, then I leave the hon. gentleman to the judgment of the House.

Mr. BENNETT. If the hon. gentleman wishes me to withdraw the statement that Mr. Whelan is a stockholder in that company——

Mr. CONMEE. I do not intend to permit the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) to quibble with me. He may as well understand that now. I can talk as long as he can——

Mr. SPEAKER. In view of the denial of the hon. member (Mr. Conmee), it is the duty of the hon. member (Mr. Bennett) who has the floor to withdraw his statement.

Mr. BENNETT. Once again I state that I believe that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Conmee) has not one dollar's worth of stock in the company standing in his own name.

Mr. SPEAKER. That is not enough. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Conmee) has stated that he is not directly or indirectly——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order. That was my understanding of the hon. gentleman's statement. If that is so, I consider that any previous reference to that should be withdrawn.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I must say that I did not hear the hon. gentleman use the word 'indirectly.'

Mr. SPROULE. He said that he had no connection with Mr. Bowman in dredging.

Mr. SPEAKER. He said he had no connection directly or indirectly with anything that would trench upon his position as a member of this House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is a question of law.

Mr. SPEAKER. That is a question of fact. The hon. gentleman who had the floor ought to withdraw the statement.

Mr. BENNETT. I did not make the statement that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Conmee) is a stockholder in the company.

Mr. SPEAKER. That is merely playing upon words. The sugestion was the hon. gentleman had some improper connection with dredging contracts. That suggestion has been denied, and now it should be withdrawn.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Speaker, we will have to pass from this political dredging concern to another one.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. That suggestion should be withdrawn.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the impropriety ?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) asks: What is the impropriety of the suggestion? If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Conmee) has an interest in a dredging contract and is a member of this House that is an improper position for him to be in and the suggestion that he is in that position is an improper suggestion.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am referring—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am referring to an incorporated company, I was referring to an incorporated company—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I was referring to an incorporated company.

Mr. SPEAKER. The whole tenor as I gather it—

Mr. FOWLER. Now you are quibbling.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order, please. The hon. member (Mr. Fowler) has no right to reflect on the statement of the Chair while he is making it. The whole tenor and suggestion of the statement of the member who had the floor (Mr. Bennett) was that there was something improper in the connection of a member of this House (Mr. Conmee)) with this dredging company in association with a government contract. That was the whole tenor and suggestion that was expressly and explicitly denied. I think that denial should be accepted and any such suggestion withdrawn.

Mr. BENNETT. I have frankly said I accept the denial of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Conmee) that he is not a stockholder.

Mr. SPEAKER. That is again conveying the same suggestion. The suggestion was made that there was something improper in the association of this hon. member (Mr. Conmee) with the company and a contract of the government. The ruling is in the meantime, whether rightly or wrongly is a question for the House to decide, that the suggestion should be withdrawn.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. But the hon. gentleman—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Hon. gentlemen will not get any further by calling out 'order.' They may as well resign their souls to that idea.

An hon. MEMBER. Address the Chair.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Bennett) says that he accepts the statement of the hon. member who rose to interrupt him (Mr. Conmee). It seems to me, from an experience of ten years in this House, that I have never heard more than that required of an hon. gentleman in this House.

Mr. CONMEE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) did not put it just as the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) has said. His words were these, that he accepted the statement that there was no stock standing in my name. Now my denial is this, that I am not in any sense, directly or indirectly, violating the rules of this House and I have not had any interest in this case that the hon. gentleman has named.

Mr. SAM HUGHES. There is another quibble.

Mr. CONMEE. I cannot make any plainer statement, and I think I am entitled to a straight apology, without any hedging about it.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order, withdraw.

Mr. FOWLER.

Mr. SPEAKER. Meantime my ruling is that the statement should be withdrawn.

Mr. INGRAM. I would like to ask for information. Does the hon. gentleman say that he has no stock—

Mr. SPEAKER. Order; let us not get away from the question. Meantime we are just dealing with one question. The suggestion was made that there was something improper in the association of the member (Mr. Conmee) with these contracts and with this company. That statement has not been withdrawn. I think it should be withdrawn.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is always withdrawn, in my experience, by the gentleman stating that he accepts the statement made by the hon. gentleman who makes the denial. I do not know how you can do differently. Further than that I may be permitted to say, with all due respect to yourself, Mr. Speaker, that the statement of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Conmee) seems to me to differ in a very important particular from your honour's understanding of it.

Mr. McINTYRE. I rise to a point of order. Is it in order for these hon. gentlemen to discuss your decision? Have they not the alternative of appealing to the House and is not that the only alternative ?

Mr. SPEAKER. That is my ruling. I will have to abide by the judgment of the House as to whether I put a proper interpretation on the statement made by the member who had the floor (Mr. Bennett) in reference to the member who objected to that statement (Mr. Conmee). My ruling is that the statement was made, as 'Hansard' will show, I think, that there was some improper connection with this company and as to contracts with the government by the member who is charged with it, and that that has not been withdrawn and that it should be withdrawn.

Hon. WILLIAM PATERSON. My understanding is, I am speaking subject to correction, that when Mr. Speaker has given his ruling it must be accepted; it can be appealed against, but that is the only course that can be pursued.

Mr. INGRAM. I again ask for information; did the hon. gentleman say—

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. INGRAM. I am in order.

Mr. SPEAKER. Meantime I have ruled, and that ruling is not debatable. It is appealable afterwards to the House, but meantime it is not debatable.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I understand it has been accepted.

Mr. BENNETT. Well, Mr. Speaker, I accept the hon. gentleman's statement as he has made it.

Mr. SPEAKER. That is satisfactory.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is what he did long ago.

Mr. SPEAKER. No, I do not desire to be drawn into a discussion, but I do not apprehend that that is not the statement that was accepted before.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not desire to get into any altercation with you Mr. Speaker, but I rose because I had the impression that the hon. member (Mr. Bennett) had accepted that statement.

Mr. BENNETT. Now any gentleman who is at all conversant with dredging operations on the great lakes during the past ten years has seen exactly what has happened. As soon as the change of government was brought about certain practical men who were in the business were at once placed on the defensive. They were told in plain black and white, in effect, that there was no earthly chance of their participating in any dredging contracts. What was the result? Companies in which Liberals predominated took up these dredges and started in on this dredging business and the result has been to exclude Conservatives altogether from the work. And the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Hyman) did what last year for the benefit of the firm of Conmee & Whalen, or the Great Lakes Company—

Mr. CONMEE. I again rise to a point of order. I will not allow this gentleman to use my name in that connection.

Mr. BENNETT. I mean Bowman & Whalen.

Mr. CONMEE. I ask again that he should withdraw that statement. I do not intend to stand here any longer and permit my honoured friend to use that language towards me. I ask him to be a gentleman and drop it.

An hon. MEMBER. Nonsense.

Mr. BENNETT. And at once steps were taken which would virtually give Bowman & Whalen or the Great Lakes Company a complete monoply of the hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of dredging to be executed in the harbours of Port Arthur and Fort William. That firm had a number of dredges at these two ports and the Minister of Public Works so framed an advertisement that only dredges which were in there and frozen up could possibly tender for the work.

Mr. SAM HUGHES. The ice was in the harbours.

Mr. BENNETT. The minister cannot deny that. And when it was debated here, time and again, we forced and drove the minister from his position and even then that favoured firm were in such a position that they got the monoply of the dredging, and what is the minister doing to-day? Why, Sir, he is telling these gentlemen who own dredges in Ontario and who are all Liberals, and I challenge any one Conservative concern to be named, one.

Mr. TELFORD. I beg to correct the hon. gentleman. Mr. Green, of Owen Sound, is a Conservative and always has been.

Mr. CONMEE. I can tell my hon. friend of another, Mr. Boone, who is dredging extensively, perhaps most in Ontario.

Mr. J. T. SCHELL. And I would mention Mr. M. P. Davis.

Mr. BRODEUR. I might quote Mr. E. A. D. Morgan, who ran as a Conservative candidate in Richelieu.

Mr. CONMEE. I might tell the hon. gentleman of another, Mr. Poupore, who was a Conservative member of this House.

Mr. BUREAU. I would mention Mr. Randolph Macdonald, who is a Tory.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Speaker, we, who have been here for the last twelve or fifteen years can largely appreciate the very high tone of this House to-day. It is sublime! Here is the greatest assembly in Canada! It would be a great sight if the King could come and see this assembly and the way it is conducted.

Some Hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. BENNETT. I was referring to Conservatives in Ontario and anybody who mistakes Mr. Boone for a Conservative is very much mistaken. Mr. Boone's activity in behalf of the present hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) in the last election resulted in that hon. gentleman carrying the seat by twenty of a majority. As to Mr. Green we have not heard of him before, but, there is a great big concern in Owen Sound—the well known A. G. McKay Company. What has the hon. Minister of Public Works done? He has practically said to his favoured friends in Ontario: I care not who the man is; I care not what his politics are, you are my political friends and you are to have a monopoly of the dredging in Ontario. You can go and select one point at which you wish to dredge and make a corner of it. An advertisement appears in to-day's 'Globe' calling for tenders for dredging at Penetanguishene, Meaford, Fesserton, Goderich, Point Edward, Port Stanley, Port Burwell, Rondeau, River Thames, Owen Sound, Nigger Island Channel and Trenton. It is stipulated that only dredges which are registered in Canada at the time of the filing of tenders can be employed. Is not that a lovely arrangement that these gentlemen are to participate in? Let us take one of the dredging companies in the riding of East Simcoe. Mr. Bowman had an old dredge up there. Mr. Bowman disposed of it and who did he dispose of it to ? He disposed of it to a company called the Penetanguishene Dredging Company. The minister knows who compose that company. A defeated candidate for this House, Dr. Spohn is the president of it. The minister knows that as well as I know it.

An hon. MEMBER. A defeated Liberal candidate ?

Mr. BENNETT. Yes, Dr. Spohn the Superintendent of the Asylum there. One of his partners is Mr. Gendron and then the Department of Public Works has this dredging concern looked after on their behalf by Mr. Gendron's brother. Mr. Gendron looked after this dredge on behalf of the Dominion government when it was owned by Mr. Bowman. And, it was a wonderful dredge. It would run for four, five, six or sometimes seven hours and then it would have the inevitable breaks due to its age and infirmity, but since the new firm got in the dredge works twelve hours a day. You have to remember that it is paid by the hour.

Mr. HYMAN. Does the hon. gentleman make the statement that it is paid by the hour ?

Mr. BENNETT. Certainly.

Mr. HYMAN. The hon. gentleman's statement is entirely apart from the facts.

Mr. BENNETT. I will challenge the hon. minister to send up now to the public accounts committee because if he does so he will find by the public accounts for this dredge that it is paid by the hour.

Mr. HYMAN. I thought the hon. gentleman made the statement that the dredge is now working by the hour.

Mr. BENNETT. Is not that clever of the hon. Minister of Public Works ? The hon. gentleman is a statesman of the statesman's size. Talk about western Ontario having a giant in the cabinet ! Yes, they have a giant with very small teeth. I did not say that the dredge is working now. It was working last year. Yes, these are wonderful times for the grafter and the grafter is to be found everywhere. What is the result of public opinion on the grafter and what the grafter is doing ? We had the other day brought before this House the case of a blind man named Molloy who unfortunately lost his sight in the South Africa war. If you go up to the railway committee what will you see to-day ? You will find two magnificent canvasses spread on the wall. The first one is a representation of the Colonial Conference of 1894, and in that picture, although Sir John Thompson was the great big man on that occasion, he is dwarfed into insignificance, he is placed in the rear and foremost positions are given to the Premier and Sir Richard Cartwright. Why, Sir, they are life size. We may talk about poetical license but this is painting license and yet after all I think the artist probably did well to remember that these gentlemen in 1894 had very long faces indeed. When you go along a little further. What do you see? You see an important statesman of the present—the hon. the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher). That hon. gentleman was not only not in the cabinet but he did not even have a seat in the House at that time and he should not appear in the picture at all, but the artist was struck with the idea which prevails everywhere in Canada and he said : If I want to sell these pictures there is only one way to sell them and that is to make these hon. gentlemen conspicuous in the picture. What is the accompanying picture ? Alongside of it there are the gallant sons of Canada marching side by side up to the vessels many of them not knowing whether they will ever come back or not and passing the inspection of the Prime Minister and other ministers. When the case of Trooper Molloy is brought before the House we find that thousands and millions of dollars can be spent in every conceivable way but that there is not a dollar to be spent in paying a poor pittance or an allowance to a man who lost his sight in the defence of his country. How is this being regarded in Canada ? I do not ask you to accept any poor words of my own but I will give you the words quoted the other night by a Liberal in the province of Ontario who time and again has stood on Liberal platforms and who by his eloquence and by his force has won votes for the Liberal cause, one whose name will live as the author of that grand old song 'The Maple Leaf For Ever' when the government's memory is dead for ever. What does Alexander Muir say ? Mr. Muir says :

> It was a shame, a bitter, burning shame, that men who had served their country as did Trooper Mulloy and your comrade, Sergeant John Wilkinson, here, should be told by the government of their country, as Mulloy was told when he made application to that government, 'You fought for England; let England pay. It was not our fight.'
> Now that man sits in darkness to remember a bitter injustice at the hands of his country for whom he had done so much.
>
> I tell you it was Canada's fight, and it was well fought by Canadian boys. The boys that went under the Canadian flag, and they honoured it wherever they carried it.
> The voice of the government is not the voice of the people when it says 'It is not our fight; let England pay.'

This unfortunate blind man may go from one end of this country to the other having charity doled out to him, having little kindness shown to him by good hearted citizens of Canada, but this government has to give so much graft to the grafters that it cannot give him a dollar. This government started a good deal like the tower that we have heard of to-day on very shifting sand. It did not start on a high moral plane. After the elections were over in 1896 the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) who had played a great part in that campaign was without a seat and there was not in the Nova Scotia contingent a man who would say : Mr. Fielding, you may have my seat—until what happened ? Until overtures were made, the result of which were that an hon. gentleman got a judgeship, and the hon. Minister of Finance got his seat. Mr. Forbes held a seat in this House, he traded that seat for a judgeship and the Minister of Finance came here. The Hon. Mr. Blair who next came into the cabinet came in under what circumstances ? Although he had been in the forefront of the fight there was not a member from the province of New Brunswick who would give up his seat until a gentleman named King was approached. A seat in the Senate was given that gentleman and Mr. Blair came into this House. Mr. Tarte had been defeated in Beauharnois county. He too wanted a seat. A gentleman who was at that time a member of this House had a senatorship doled out to him. Last but not least when the Postmaster General (Mr. Aylesworth) wanted a seat in this House he could not get one in west Durham, the fates were against him, a gentleman was given a judgeship and a vacancy was created there. When the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue (Mr. Templeman) wanted to come into this House no seat could be found for him. Of all the good men who come from the province of British Columbia not one would give up his seat until what happened? —until the hon. member who surrendered his seat got a senatorship, and Mr. Riley was transferred to the other House.

From one end of the country to the other the pernicious policy of the government has diseased the 'body politic.' So diseased are the members of this House with this graft at the public crib, that the Minister of Justice has told the House that the public men of this country are so tainted politically that it is absolutely necessary to pass a law that will debar members from having a seat in this House if they practice their nefarious practices. Such a law as that is unknown in England, but the Minister of Justice thinks it necessary here, and I hope it will pass. Let me point out the position of affairs in England to-day in this respect. During the South African war two members of the House of Commons negotiated for the sale of some vessels to the British government and when that became known they were forced to resign their seats. That would be considered a very mild offence indeed in this country. The people of Canada look upon the huge expenditure that has been going on in this country for the past ten years with the greatest possible disfavour. As is pointed out by Mr. Muir, a veteran in Liberalism, this government has no longer the confidence of the country. In the great province of Ontario, the province above all others which the Prime Minister would like to have a following from, the government is in such disrepute that the public press to-day says that certain gentlemen must leave the cabinet in order that it may be strengthened by others. I have my own opinion of the timber that is coming as to whether it will strengthen it or not. After ten years rule of these gentlemen opposite, public life in Canada has been dragged down so low that the Minister of Justice says that parliament must rise in its might and pass salutary legislation to preclude members of parliament from selling their services to corporations or others who may desire them; and every one knows that the legislation is not intended for the opposition members for it is not they who have a pull with the ministers. I am glad there is going to be an inquiry into the western tower business. It is not the falling of the tower that is agitating the government now, it is the fact that there has been such a disclosure, and because they know that from one end of Canada to the other the people view with distrust and suspicion the expenditures made by the government, and believe that the falling of the tower is but a sample of what has been going on for the past ten years.

Mr. A. B. INGRAM (East Elgin). It is not my intention to prejudice the cause of the accident that occurred in the west block. We were told yesterday by the Minister of Public Works that:

> The contractor is Mr. George Goodwin ; the plans and specifications are exactly in accordance with those used in the construction of the other towers and buildings, and the general work all through. The materials specified are exactly the same as those specified for the other portions of the building.

I take it for granted that statement is correct, and I shall wait until the documents are before the House before expressing an opinion on the cause of the accident. I have been here several years and I know the contractor, Mr. George Goodwin, is a highly respectable and reputable contractor. I have nothing to say against that gentleman nor have I anything to say against contractors generally, because I know we have in Canada a large number of perfectly honourable contractors who are prepared to do their work according to plans and specifications. But, Sir, I am impelled to rise on this occasion to discuss the public works in my constituency because of the statement made in the Liberal organ published in the city of St. Thomas; a newspaper which is the most prominent liberal organ in my county. A gentleman living in a town where some public works are being constructed wrote to the Conservative paper finding fault with the way in which the work was being carried out, and in attacking that correspondent the Liberal organ has this to say :

> The strongest point which has been scored against the 'Times' is its admission that the work has been bungled and that public money has been wasted, while its champion, Mr. A. B. Ingram, the people's representative, remains as mum as an oyster regarding the whole affair for the simple reason that his government is not in power. If that is the feeling of the Conservative members of parliament it would be better for them were they to remain at home and not be drawing the people's money for sitting with their thumbs in their mouths when there is much to be said in the interest of the electors.

Now, I challenge the Prime Minister and I challenge the Minister of Public Works to say that I have remained as mum as an oyster in this House. Is that my record when the estimates are before the House.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Oh, no.

Mr. INGRAM. The right hon. gentleman merely shakes his head but that is not recorded in 'Hansard,' and I want the right hon. gentleman to say that that is not correct.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It is not correct.

Mr. INGRAM. The Prime Minister assents to my proposition but he merely shakes his head and that shake cannot be put down in 'Hansard.'

Mr. SAM HUGHES. The right hon. gentleman said 'yes.'

Mr. INGRAM. Well, if there is any doubt about my remaining too silent it will be necessary for me to make greater efforts in the future than I have in the past.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Dispense.

Mr. INGRAM. I beg the Prime Minister's pardon. I did not hear him say as I wished him. I think I can safely say that the Minister of Public Works would have been very glad on many occasions had I remained as mum as an oyster. But let us see as to the condition of the public works in my county. I find in this paper a letter from the Liberal candidate who opposed me last election admitting the bungling of the public works in my constituency, and I also find the resident engineer of public works admitting that they are bungled. It is not necessary for me a Conservative member to find fault with these public works, because I can prove the fact out of the mouths of the Liberal candidate on the one hand and the resident engineer of public works on the other. I have been accused by this Liberal paper of remaining as mum as an oyster; but I am perfectly willing to bide my time until the Minister of Public works brings down the returns I have asked for, calling for all the correspondence and documents in connection with Port Burwell Harbour, Port Bruce Harbour, and Port Stanley Harbour. When these are brought down, I shall carefully go over them and analyse them and compare them with the correspondence that has gone on from time to time in my county between the Liberal candidate on the one hand and the resident engineer of public works on the other hand. Let me state some of the accusations which they make. The Liberal candidate states that the cribs were left in the channel, obstructing navigation all last summer. The defeated candidate says that is true, and that they were a menace to navigation. Another statement is that the timber used was of an inferior quality, although the highest price was paid for it, that the channel is too wide, will fill up, and will require dredging from time to time, and that the sheet piling on the west side should be cribwork. This is admitted by the foreman, Mr. Cookson, who had charge of the work. Then, I find Mr. Teall, the resident engineer, saying this :

> Again I challenge anybody, I do not care who he may be, to show before competent judges many defects in the works that were constructed under my supervision, or any that could have been reasonably avoided with one exception of about 130 feet on the west side where I acted under specific instructions.

Thereby properly holding the department responsible for that portion of the work as not being proper work. Another point to which I wish to draw the attention of the government with respect to Mr. Teall, the resident engineer, is this. He was accused by certain members of the Liberal party of not having been loyal and true to that party. Mr. Teall was drawing $120 a month of salary as a resident engineer of these works, and when accused of not having taken an active part in the last election, he said over his own signature :

> I feel I can safely pass all the attempted slurs on my political faith, as it is too well known that I never cast other than a Liberal vote in my life, and that not only did I do all in my power to elect Mr. Hepburn last election, but also enlisted all my friends to that end.

I have heard the right hon. learder of the government and other ministers say in this House on various occasions that whenever a civil servant of this government chooses to engage in practical politics, either on the platform or in the canvass, he shall no longer hold a position as a civil servant under this government. This gentleman not only took the platform, but as he says over his own signature, did everything in his power to secure the election of the Liberal candidate. There is no hearsay in this matter, because this statement is made by the gentleman himself over his own signature. This is the system under which the public works in my county are conducted. To-day every political heeler who has any influence or is of any use to the Liberal party is at work on Port Burwell harbour, Port Bruce harbour, or Port Stanley harbour. These men do not profess to know anything about the construction of harbour works. Mr. Ford is a farmer, who does not know anything about it; Mr. McCrimmon is another farmer employed in that work; and Mr. Smale, who is not good for anything except as a political heeler, is also employed there, and it is a disgrace to have him employed on this work. In the last election the Minister of Public Works gave his candidate a document, or if not, his candidate misrepresented him by saying that he had a letter, which stated that so much money would be expended on a certain harbour. I make this statement in the presence of the right hon. leader of the government and of the Minister of Public Works, and I think it most remarkable that a minister of the Crown would tell a candidate that he could have $5,000 expended on a harbour, and give him a letter to that effect. I am glad to know, from the way the Minister of Public Works shakes his head, that that statement is not true, and I would prefer to take his statement to that of the Liberal candidate. However, that statement was made, and it was by reason of that statement that my opponent endeavoured to secure popular support in East Elgin. I am laying these facts before the House to-night because I am compelled to do so by reason of the statements made by the Liberal organ in my constituency.

Mr. F. R. LALOR (Haldimand and Monck) Mr. Speaker, it was not my intention to take any part in this debate; but as one of the hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House referred to a well known dredge owner as being a Conservative, and as I know the gentleman referred to, I propose to speak of him; but will do so a little later on. First, I want to pay my respects to that famous tower known as the Laurier tower, which yesterday crumbled and fell to pieces.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The late Laurier tower.

Mr. LALOR. Well, it was not very late in falling, because it fell pretty early in its construction. I examined that structure, and I must say that of all the buildings I have ever seen put up, whether by a government or by a private individual, it is about the worst. The building is stone on the outside, in the centre it is filled with mud or sand or something of that kind, and there is nothing to hold it together. Apparently there was no lime used in the mortar and no Portland cement, or if there was, there was so little that it was of no use whatever. The result is that the building is to-day lying a wreck and ruin, an object lesson to every member of this House, and to everybody else who may happen to visit Ottawa. Fortunately, the event has taken place right under the eyes of the members of this House, and it is an illustration of the work being done by the Minister of Public Works. The minister tells us that he proposes to have an investigation by a new architect, who will examine the work and tell him why the building has fallen down. I think, Mr. Speaker, that is not necessary. It needs no architect to tell us why this building is a ruin to-day, because every one who examines it can see that proper material was not used in the work, and that the structure was not properly built. It is all very well to say that the superintendent in charge is to blame or that the architect is to blame. I understand that the architect is a very responsible gentleman, probably a very good man in his profession. I think the one responsible for this structure and the work upon it is the man in charge of that department, the Minister of Public Works himself. He is the gentleman to whom the country is paying a very large salary in order that he may superintend and look after works of that kind. This is a work right under his eye, at the very door of his department, which he passes a dozen times a day; and if he were a practical man, he would not need any architect or superintendent to tell him that the work was not being properly done. I suppose this is a sample of the work being done all over this country under the charge of this department.

If a contractor will put up a building of that kind right here on Parliament Hill, where all the members can see it, where the minister himself looks at it daily as he passes, what will not contractors do in Halifax or the west where the minister is unable to look after the work and see how it is progressing.

The whole thing shows the want of proper management on the part of the department, and the contractors realize they are working for a government which does not look after them and consequently do not care how the work is done so long as they can draw their pay. Probably another reason why these contractors are negligent is because there are too many charges made upon them at election time, too many rake offs. I would like to ask the minister if this building was done by public tender.

Mr. HYMAN. Yes.

Mr. LALOR. Then that is all the more reason why it should have been done up to the specifications provided in the contract. Evidently the contractor did not live up to these specifications. But what I wanted to refer to chiefly is a piece of work done in my own constituency of Haldimand and Monck, which was not done by public tender and which did not require to be done at all. At the town of Dunnville in which I live, the Department of Public Works undertook to dredge the Grand river. Why they did so no one could understand, but the then member for that county, Col. Thompson, urged the government to do it. Last session I tried to get information regarding it, but was unable to do so, for in the Department of Public Works there seems to be little or no record concerning this work or explaining how Mr. Boone—a gentleman who, some one opposite has said, is a Conservative—obtained this contract. If Mr. Boone is a Conservative, I am glad we have not more of his kind, for although he is a very nice gentleman, he is a very strong supporter of this government. The only record in the Public Works Department is that in June, 1903, Mr. Boone wrote a letter to the Minister of Public Works reminding him of a certain conversation he had about the dredging of that river. He was ordered by the Minister of Public Works to bring his dredge down to Dunnville and begin work. The dredge was then on the Welland canal, and the pay mentioned was $8 per hour. One would naturally suppose that since the dredge had been ordered to go to Dunnville to do the work, it would have gone there. There was a letter authorizing Mr. Boone to bring his dredge to Dunnville and a reply from him accepting the offer, but we have nothing else in the record until September of that year when we find a letter from Mr. Boone in which he says he is now ready to bring the dredge to Dunnville and the price will be $12 per hour. It came to Dunnville and worked in the Grand river nearly two summers twelve hours a day at $12 an hour, thus drawing $144 per day for doing work absolutely useless and unnecessary and not worth a dollar to the people of that county or the country. That charge I made on every platform in the county. Col. Thompson was the man who caused the work to be done, and I made that one of the issues of the contest, and the good sense and judgment of the electors of the part of the county where the work was done condemned it, and the result was Mr. Thompson was defeated. Nothing contributed more to his defeat than that very dredging, which was absolutely useless and unnecessary. The dredge was working in the Grand river below the bridge. The farmers from the neighbouring townships have to cross this bridge and they could see the dredge working. Sometimes it was at work and sometimes it was standing idle, but all the time it was drawing $144 a day and every day it was making votes for me. The people knew that the whole thing was a farce and that there must have been something behind the work or it would never have been undertaken. Col. Thompson had had the county gerrymandered so as to make it nice and safe for him. He come to Ottawa a young man, full of ambition, clever and bright, but unfortunately down here he became contaminated and induced the Minister of Public Works to do works that were useless and the people condemned this as they should. This dredge worked in the Grand river until early in the month of December each year although, as every one knows, long before that, the days are so dark that the dredge could not work. Besides the river was full of ice, yet still the public accounts show that the dredge drew $144 per day until early in the month of December. Either the Minister of Public Works, or some one in his behalf, has told us that the men placed in charge of these public works were always competent. I know from my experience that such is not the case. I know that the gentleman who was the inspector of this particular dredging was a painter by trade from Sarnia. I notice another interesting item in the public accounts in connection with this dredging. The government gave $1,553 for towing the dredge from Sarnia to Dunnville. That is a most ridiculous charge. I am told by men who own tugs and who know what they are talking about,—and Liberals too—that they would have done the same work for one-fifth the money charged by these people, and according to the public accounts, paid to them.

This is a sample of the work done by the Public Works Department in my own county. I know whereof I speak, for I saw the work and I know that the dredging done there was useless and wasteful. And if, as the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) said, the dredging all over the Dominion is the same, we can easily understand why the expenditure of the government amounts to such an enormous sum and why so many favourites of the government are in the dredging business. We in Ontario know something of these dredging contracts. Through the public press we know something of the contracts for dredging that are given out at the Soo and other places. I agree with the hon. member for East Simcoe that there is not a department of the government in which there is a greater swindle, or in which the government is more shamlessly robbed than by the men who do dredging work in the province of Ontario. The hon. member for East Simcoe has told us of many of the gentlemen on the other side who are interested directly or indirectly in the rake-offs for these contracts and services. We heard the other night about one of the land agents of this government, who is now a member of this House who has a brother-in-law another member of this House who was a member of the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company, which company got 250,000 acres of land in the Northwest for $1 an acre and sold it inside of two years for $8 and $9 an acre, clearing $2,000,000. So, when I hear of the many other members on that side who are interested in the rake-offs, it reminds me of the story of a coloured gentleman in the south. This man was arrested for stealing hams and was brought before judge and jury for trial. When the evidence was brought forward there could not be the slightest doubt about his guilt. The judge charged directly against him. Nevertheless the jury returned a verdict of 'not guilty.' The lawyer who defended him and who had felt quite sure that he would be convicted, asked him after his acquittal, how it could possibly been brought about. 'Why', said the man 'every one of de jury had one of them hams. I presume that is the reason gentlemen on the other side who have so faithfully supported this government—so many of them have some of the hams.

Mr. CONMEE. Mr. Speaker, it was not my intention to discuss this question, and I would not discuss it now were it not for some of the remarks that have fallen from certain hon. gentlemen on the other side. I believe, and I think that hon. members on this side generally believe, that fair criticism is no less the privilege than the duty of an opposition. We do not shrink from fair criticism. Nor am I prepared to say that a great many of the remarks made by hon. gentlemen opposite this afternoon were of a character to be found fault with on this score. But many remarks were made and persisted in that were not only unfair, but had no basis of truth, and ought not to have been made in a legislative body when so little attempt was made to show that there was anything in the facts of the case to support or justify them. An unfortunate thing has occurred. A tower, part of a building, has collapsed during construction. This is not the only case of the kind that has occurred; we read of such cases every day. But, on the basis of this one fact, hon. gentlemen opposite have built up a theory that the government is bad. Not content with condemning this one department their imagination has carried them into other departments and into the general administration of the affairs of the country under this administration. Surely, Sir, all this is entirely unwarranted. There is no good purpose to be served by taking that course. It is not a dignified or statesmanlike course. It does not require very much ability or tact or skill for any hon. member to rise in his place and throw across the floor all sorts of wild statements. Why, I could slander the greatest man living, if I chose to turn my attention to slander, but I do not believe in that kind of thing. The hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) has attracted quite unnecessary attention. He has seen fit to make some very wild statements in this House. If this were the first offence of this hon. gentleman I would let it pass. But this is not the first or even the second time that the hon. gentleman has been guilty of the same thing. Therefore, I do not think it necessary to let it pass. The hon. gentleman should look to his own record and to the record of the party that he supports. Is his own record so clear that he can afford to asperse his fellow-members in this House? Or, is the hon. gentleman smarting under the exposure that was made last night in that, while he was talking of 'graft' on the part of the supporters of the government, a letter was produced written by himself to a former government of which he was a supporter asking for 'graft'. If I used the term that the hon. gentleman himself used, he and his friends can hardly find fault with me. I have already stated that I do not think that that kind of discussion tends to promote the public interest. The hon. gentleman found fault with the government for not putting a certain island up for sale by auction which had been valued at over $9,000. A sum at which an inspector who had been over the property estimated its value. But he himself wrote a letter asking for the island on 'easy terms,' without competition. The hon. gentleman says the island is worth $15,000; it must have been worth more at that time. Yet he asks for it on these easy terms, by private arrangement.

Mr. BUREAU. What terms?

Mr. CONMEE. 'Easy terms.' We understand what that means. I have already stated that there was probably not a member on the other side of the House who ought to be less prone to indulge in reflecting upon his fellow-members than the hon. member for East Simcoe. No member, I assume, will shrink from the discussion of his public record or of any public act. For one, I do not ask any favours from any gentleman in that regard. But I would like to remind the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) that his own record is not quite clear in relation to these matters. Now, I have in my hand a clipping from a newspaper. Extracts from newspapers are frequently read in this House and perhaps I will be permitted to read one. This article is headed:

Midland slander case.

W. H. Bennett, M.P., will have to pay W. H. Wilson $100 and costs.

Mr. PATERSON. For what?

Mr. CONMEE. I will read it for the hon. gentleman.

Of the sixteen cases on the docket at the spring assizes last week only six were tried, and court concluded on Friday afternoon.

The most interesting case was the slander case of Wilson vs. Bennett. D. S. Storey, of Midland, and J. MacKay, of Toronto, acted for the plaintiff, H. Lennox and A. E. H. Creswicke for the defendant.

The plaintiff is a Midland livery-man, and the defendant is the Dominion member of parliament for East Simcoe. At the municipal nominations held in Midland in December, 1904, the defendant having been nominated for an office availed himself of the opportunity to talk. In his statement of claim the plaintiff alleged that the defendant maliciously libelled the plaintiff in these words : 'I know you, Wilson, I have bought your vote before, and I can buy it again.'

Mr. Bennett, in defence, endeavoured to show that Wilson had changed his political faith from time to time according to the patronage given him at election times. He claimed that the words complained of meant only that the plaintiff had on previous occasions been successfully satisfied——

Successfully satisfied, that is he was acting on easy terms, that is cheap and quietly.

—and quieted, and there was no intention to impute the commission of a criminal offence. Six witnesses were examined on each side, and after lengthy addresses by the counsel the case was given to the jury, who returned a verdict for $100. Costs go with the verdict.

I am not going to impute altogether the worst motives to my hon. friend. This is a newspaper clipping and the facts are strong enough. The fact is that six good men and true were in the witness box on each side and the jury convicted my honoured friend of slandering a neighbour or a fellow citizen. Now that is not a good record to give him the privilege in this House of using the language he generally uses towards members on this side. I do not wish to pursue this case too far.

Mr. BENNETT. Go ahead.

Mr CONMEE. But I want to say that I have been more than twenty years in public life. There is not a Conservative newspaper in my riding that has attacked me against which I have not had a verdict for libel. They have all slandered me, and I have never failed to compel them to retract when I brought them into court.

The hon. gentleman made some references to myself, and that is why, perhaps, I am somewhat personal in my reply. Not satisfied with my statements which I think were ample and particular, the hon. gentleman made references to my record in Ontario and in the Ontario House. If my hon. friend wants to delve into that record, he is perfectly welcome to do so and I am perfectly willing to stand by it. I have nothing to regret, I have nothing to be ashamed of in that regard, either there or in this House where I am only a new member. My hon. friend went far afield, went far outside the question before the House and delved into the general record of the Liberal party. He told us about making room for members going into the cabinet, the resignation of this member and that member and a cabinet minister taking his constituency. Why, Sir, his own party is full of that record. If it is a bad example, if it is an abuse, Sir, that abuse was committed by hon. gentlemen opposite for many years when they were in power. I could name member after member of former Conservative governments who came into this House, who took the place of resigned members who found homes for themselves in the Senate or in some other comfortable position. I am not arguing that two wrongs make a right. If the record of the Conservative party is bad, if it has been corrupt, if it has been decayed and falling from the head to use the expression we heard this afternoon, why Sir, that is a misfortune of the Conservative party. My hon. friend (Mr. Bennett) has been a life long supporter of that party; he supported it in all its corruption; in its McGreevy scandal, in the Langevin block scandal, in the Curran bridge scandal, in a great many other scandals which I could name if I choose, who supported it in all those years, was its mouth piece on the platform, not only in his own constituency, but also in other constituencies. If this man is to lecture us on high morals and political virtue, I might ask him to look just in front of him. It was said here this afternoon that the government is crumbling from the top. Sir, I think the record of this government is such that it has held this country fairly well. The late elections are evidence that it still holds the country. Their candidates in the west, on the Pacific; in the east, on the Atlantic; in the middle, in Ontario; have all come back to this House with large majorities. Wherever there is an appeal to the people the Liberal party is sustained. Why ? Because of their record, because of the administration of this government being progressive, and notwithstanding the sneers and slanders of hon. gentlemen I am prepared to say that I believe it to be clean and honest administration of public affairs.

Mr. CAMPBELL. In the election yesterday the Tory lost his deposit.

Mr. CONMEE. My hon. friend (Mr. Campbell) reminds me that in an election only yesterday the opposition candidate lost his deposit. I might point out to the hon. gentleman that there was a time when the government of this country was rotten at its head, when it was rotten in the centre, when the general body of the Conservative party was unsound. We know the position that party was in, we have the words of one of the hon. gentlemen now leading the opposition that there was an old fool at the head of it, or words to that effect. My hon. friend (Mr. Bennett) supported that sort of thing, what is their position to-day ? Do they expect the people of this country to withdraw their confidence from the government which conducts the public affairs of Canada at the present time and change over to a party that would have a cabinet of whom, Sir, the majority would be made up of the very men who were hurled from power by an indignant people in 1896?

I do not believe that that sort of discussion on the part of our friends is good discussion. I do not believe that they are going to enhance their reputation in the country by drawing into the discussion of a simple matter that sort of debate. I only refer to it because of the reference that was made to myself in the discussion which these hon. gentlemen have seen fit to introduce on this question. But, the record of the Conservative party is not such that they need glory in it. I am not prepared to say that every hon. member opposite is responsible for the wrongs of the past or that he should be held responsible for them, but I mean to say that hon. gentlemen opposite, when they are discussing such a question as this, have no right to impute motives to hon. gentlemen in this House. They have no right to make charges of corruption, wrong-doing, and mal-administration, as has been done this afternoon, unless they are prepared to back them up. I would not rise in my place, if I were a member on that side of the House, if I could not get something better to carry my party forward than a resort to that sort of slander. If these things exist, if there is this corruption, that hon. gentlemen have been speaking about, then it is their duty to unearth it. That is what the Liberals did previous to 1896. They brought their opponents before the committees of this House, partisan committees as they were. I have heard our opponents say on the platform: What is the use of bringing them before the committees? They are partisan committees. Well, the Liberals had to face partisan committees and they proved corruption up to the hilt against many hon. members on the other side of the House, they drove some ministers out of public life; nay more, they drove some of them into the prisons of this country. Therefore, their record is not one that hon. gentlemen opposite should glory in, and I have only to say to hon. gentlemen opposite that if they do not like this mode of discussion, if it is not agreeable or palatable to them, I will ask them not to make the untruthful and slanderous mis-statements that they have cast over to this side of the House on more than one occasion.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES (Victoria). Mr. Speaker, when the hon. gentleman (Mr. Conmee) arose and spoke of fair criticism, of the undignified course of my hon. friend from East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett), and of the course pursued by members of the opposition as not being a statesmanlike course, we all expected that afer his long experience in the pure atmosphere of the city of Toronto—the school from which he has graduated with such distinguished honours—we would have had an exhibition of dignity, statesmanship and high tone in debate. But, what has his speech been? vilification and political blackguardism,—if I may be allowed to use the term,—perhaps I had better not use the term—from start to finish. We have heard the definition of diplomacy given as personal intrigue, influence and unscrupulousness. Our hon. friend has had an experience. Ontario controls the timber and the pulp of that magnificent area upon the shores of lake Nepigon, and it has been corralled through the engineering and diplomacy of that distinguished member who has just taken his seat.

Mr. BENNETT. And Captain Sullivan.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. And Captain Sullivan. The fish industries of lake Nepigon, the most magnificent in Ontario, are held in the breeches pocket of the distinguished gentleman who has just taken his seat.

Mr. BENNETT. With Captain Sullivan.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. And the vast quantities of tie timber along the line of the Canadian Northern Railway from Port Arthur to the west was controlled (that was the word used), held in the trousers pockets of that distinguished gentleman.

Mr. CONMEE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. I never had any timber between Port Arthur and Rainy river. I never owned a foot of timber of any kind or description there.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Would the hon. gentleman please repeat that ?

Mr. CONMEE. I say that I never owned, by lease or otherwise, a single acre of timber between Port Arthur and Winnipeg, or Fort Francis. I just want to tell the hon. gentleman that he is entirely mistaken when he says that I control the Nepigon pulp concessions or even the Nepigon Fish Company. These are matters that I had a perfect right to be interested in if I wished to do so, but I do not control them, and I want to tell the hon. gentleman that he is entirely mistaken. If he has any information of his own knowledge, I am willing to listen to it, or if he has a statement, or will produce a statement in writing from any respectable person who will sign his name to it, I am willing to listen, but I will ask the hon. gentleman to withdraw the statement which was made in reference to the ownership of timber, because I never owned a foot of timber along the line of the Canadian Northern.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. My statement was that the hon. gentleman controlled the timber and I reiterate that statement here.

Mr. CONMEE. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Let the hon. gentleman take his seat until I am through. When I am finished, the hon. gentleman can get up and bluff the House if he has a mind to.

Mr. CONMEE. I rise to a point of order. I say that the statement of the hon. gentleman is false and untrue and I ask him to withdraw it.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Conmee has said that the assertion in reference to him is incorrect.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I have not finished my sentence.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Conmee) has stated that the statement made by the hon. member (Mr. Sam-Hughes) is incorrect. That statement was made. He says it is incorrect and it should be withdrawn.

Mr. SAM HUGHES. But, Mr. Speaker, I have made no statement regarding the timber along that line of road.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member must not persist in stating that he made no statement. The rule is that if he does make a statement which is denied, it must be withdrawn.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I was interrupted before the sentence was finished.

Mr. SPEAKER. It must be withdrawn. We might as well make up our minds to it.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Well, I accept the hon. gentleman's statement. Now, I shall proceed. I make the statement that hon. gentleman controlled this——

Mr. CONMEE. I want to correct the hon. gentleman.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sam. Hughes) has a right to complete his statement before the hon. gentleman (Mr. Conmee) denies it.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES——that the hon. gentleman controlled the tie timber and other timber within a certain distance along the line of the Canadian Northern Railwoy from Port Arthur west—he and friends of his—at one time.

Mr. CONMEE. The hon. gentleman is entirely mistaken. I do not suppose that he would make that statement if some one had not told him that it was true. There is no justification for it at all. I never owned, by lease or in any other shape or form, a single acre of timber along the line of that railway from one end of it to the other, at any time and I do not to-day. Nor, do I control it if the hon. gentleman wants to use the word 'control.' Now, I ask the hon. gentleman to withdraw that statement. I will not say that I appeal to him in this House. That hon. gentleman (Mr. Sam. Hughes) and the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) indulged a good deal last year in that sort of thing and I endured it. I did not take up the time of the House in regard to it, because I thought these gentlemen would become better informed and that they would drop that sort of thing. I would ask the hon. gentleman to be good enough to take that statement back.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I am speaking from personal knowledge.

Mr. SPEAKER. The rule of the House is that when an hon. member makes a statement and another hon. member denies that, the member making the statement should withdraw it. That is what is necessary to be done in this case.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. If you will allow me——

Mr. SPEAKER. You must withdraw.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. But wait.

Mr. SPEAKER. No, the rule is that it must be withdrawn.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, when a member makes a statement——

Mr. SPEAKER. Order. The rule of the House is plain, that if one member makes a statement in reference to another member and that member states that it is not true, the first member should withdraw it and accept the denial.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Of course there is the qualification that it is within the personal knowledge of both members.

Mr. SPEAKER. I understand the rule——

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Will you allow me for just one moment; I have the floor. If the hon. member for Victoria should state that he met the hon. member for Rainy River in the corridor five minutes ago, and the hon. member for Rainy River should declare that statement to be incorrect, I know of no rule of the House which compels one or the other to withdraw what is a matter of personal knowledge to both. If this were a matter within the personal knowledge exclusively of the hon. member for Rainy River he has a perfect right of course to have his statement accepted, but when it is a matter within the personal knowledge of both hon. gentlemen, that is a different thing.

Mr. SPEAKER. As I understand the rule; when a statement is made by one hon. member in reference to another hon. member and the other hon. member denies its accuracy, the rule is that the first hon. member must withdraw. That is my ruling at present.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I bow to your ruling Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SPEAKER. And withdraw the statement.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I accept the hon. gentleman's statement. I say now Mr. Speaker, that I know of my own personal knowledge that what I have stated here is true.

Mr. SPEAKER. I call the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that he is simply repeating the offence ; the hon. gentleman must withdraw.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. If Mr. Speaker wishes me to accept the hon. gentleman's statement I do so and I point out this, Mr. Speaker, that when I stand before this House and make a statement of my own personal knowledge, it has been held by Speakers who were possibly—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order. The remedy, if any, which the hon. member has is to appeal from the ruling.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. May I not quote an authority in reference to the ruling.

Mr. SPEAKER. I am not prepared to enter into a discussion with the hon. member. My ruling is that he must withdraw the statement and he must not reiterate it, for that would simply be repeating the offence.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Conmee) will not deny—perhaps he will, though, for he is in the humor to deny everything to-night. He is rising and I shall not say whether equivocally or otherwise, but he is constantly making denials here. He will possibly not deny having 10 per cent of a rake off on the construction of the Algoma Central Railway.

Mr. CONMEE. Yes I deny that, and I ask my hon. friend to withdraw it. I never had any rake off of 10 per cent on the Algoma Central Railway.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. CONMEE. I never got any contract on the Algoma Central Railway by political influence of any kind ; I never had any contract there that I did not get under fair competition. I met that question in another chamber and I met it just as I meet it here now. I ask my hon. friend (Mr. Hughes) to withdraw it. Now, I want to say to my hon. friend that it is not my fault that we are drawn into this sort of thing.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I have the floor. I am not going to permit him——

Mr. SPEAKER. Order. I understand the hon. gentleman (Mr. Conmee) to say that the statement made by the gentleman who had the floor is not true. The rule is that it should be withdrawn.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I asked a question, I made no statement. Perhaps he will deny that he ever was interested in the Port Arthur dredging——

Mr. CONMEE. Allow me to say——

Mr. PATERSON. Do'nt answer ; he is not making a statement.

Mr. CONMEE. Well let him go ahead and make his statement.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Will he deny he was interested in the Port Arthur dredging ? Will he deny that owing to the action taken by this House last session there was a saving to the country on that dredging——

Mr. CONMEE. Certainly I deny that statement.

Mr. SAM HUGHES. He is in a denying humour to-night.

Mr. CONMEE. I certainly deny it to-night and any other time.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Perhaps he will deny that he ever knew Cap. Sullivan.

Mr. CONMEE. No I wont, and I have this to say that I believe Cap. Sullivan is more of a gentleman than the hon. member.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. CONMEE. That is my opinion and I know them both very well.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I expected that sort of language. Birds of a feather flock together, and undoubtedly he would have a very high opinion of the ingenuity of the gentleman who had steered so many of these timber limits ; characters and types of mind very similar——

An hon. MEMBER. He put up $1,000.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Why, yes, did'nt this distinguished gentleman put up $1,000 once to run as a government candidate and then when he was conveniently left at home it was found he had never resigned his position in the Legislature. He was obliging enough to contest the election of Mr. Gamey, I dare say at the instigation and inspiration of this man Cap. Sullivan. He is the gentleman who will get up and lecture the House on dignity and all that sort of thing, and then with the most convenient memory in the world deny the accuracy of statements that can be proven if an opportunity is given to prove them. Well Sir, we were discussing I believe something in connection with—Oh, yes, I was forgetting ; he referred to a certain letter written by the hon. member for East Simcoe. (Mr. Bennett) and he tried to make it appear that the letter which my hon. friend sent to the department some years ago in relation to the Christian island pasturage was something crooked. Here is what Mr. Bennett says in that letter :

There is an island called the Giant's Tomb some fifteen miles from here of considerable size which is in the group belonging to the Christian Indian islands but upon which no indians reside, and I have been asked by some parties to learn upon what terms a lease of the island could be acquired for purpose of raising sheep in large numbers.

Is there anything wrong in asking upon what terms——

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cape Breton). What were the terms.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Public tender.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. By public tender or private lease ; Mr. Bennett was leaving that to the discretion of the Minister of the Interior. It was a lease for pasturage for sheep on parts of the island that are not timbered. My hon. friend (Mr. Bennett) demanded then as he demands to-day that the timber should be put up at public auction and that the pasturage should be let to these gentlemen for the sheep. I dare say that is a small transaction in the minds of these gentlemen who are in a habit of getting a rake off, of the $50,000, the $250,000, and the $3,500,000. I dare say this little sheep lease seems small to the gentlemen beyond there who had feathered their nests out of the public treasury of this country, who came into the parliament of Canada poor men and who now have stock in the Lake of the Woods Milling Company, and stock in every large institution in the country registered in their names, and the public are curious to know how they got it. There is nothing whatever in the letter of Mr. Bennett that can be considered in any way improper.

Mr. CONMEE. Would the hon. gentleman (Mr. Hughes) permit me a word or two ?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. If the hon. gentleman has a question to ask me I shall be delighted.

Mr. CONMEE. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to represent me as saying of Mr. Bennett that there was any crooked act in his letter? I merely pointed out to Mr. Bennett that while he was contending last evening that this island should be put up for competition, he himself asked, not for the part of it on which there was any timber but for the whole island and upon easy terms without tender. If he preaches a doctrine he should live up to that doctrine.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. We are giving the hon. member for Rainy River all the privileges he can have for he has made twenty or thirty different speeches to-night and in each one of them he has exhibited himself in a worse light than in the previous one. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Conmee) made one unfortunate allusion to the practice of the Tories in dealing with members of the House of Commons who were found guilty of improper connection with contracts. What did the Tory party when in power do ? The Tory party engaged the foremost Liberal lawyer in the Dominion of Canada. Mr. Osler, to try to fasten the charges on these men and the Tory party sent them to penitentiary. If the present Liberal government followed that example of the Tory government, I wonder how many seats would be vacant on the other side of the House to-night? If that practice were followed by the Liberal government and these gentlemen were put on fair trial before the juries of this country how many seats would be vacated and how many cells would be filled? If the practice of the Conservative party, not to whitewash such men, not to promote men to agencies in London, Liverpool and elsewhere when convicted of crime; if the Liberal party imitated the policy of the Conservative party in that respect previous to 1896, they would find themselves very seriously handicapped to-day. Now I shall not enter into details. There are a great many matters I could take up in connection with the Public Works Department, and in connection with the Department of Railways and Canals more than in connection with the Public Works Department because my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works fortunately or unfortunately has not been able to give us much opportunity as yet. But on another occasion, when the House is in Committee of Supply, I purpose taking up some time in discussing some matters concerning the expenditure of public money, and I shall then be able to show, I hope conclusively, that the best interests of the country have not been looked after in the conduct of these matters. I would not have spoken to-night had it not been for the unjust attack which the hon. gentleman opposite made on the hon. member for East Simcoe.

Mr. JACQUES BUREAU (Three Rivers and St. Maurice). Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to take part in this discussion, which started this afternoon with the promise of being a business discussion. For a time we had a sort of experience meeting. Men who dealt in sand, cinders or mortar gave their ideas one after the other and sent samples to my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works. Most of the members who have spoken seemed to have had some experience in building, and wanted to show the House that they knew something of that subject. But there was something hidden and undiscoverable behind it all. The monster showed its head slightly before dinner, and after dinner it continued to show more and more of itself. If I rise now to speak, Mr. Speaker, it is because of the statements made by the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Sam Hughes). When I heard that hon. member say that vilification and political blackguardism was at an end, I thought he was going to talk business, but the vilification and political blackguardism continued, and, if I am not mistaken, it became parliamentary blackguardism. When I see a man who poses as one of those fiery soldiers of King Edward VII., who went to South Africa and captured Cronje, and who refuses to bow to your decision, Mr. Speaker, I think it is high time to put a limit to these discussions. What has the hon. gentleman being doing? Refusing to respect the dignity of the House and continuing to vilify and abuse the hon. member for Rainy River (Mr. Conmee) in spite of that hon. members's denials. The hon. gentleman says, 'I know of my own knowledge,' and then he asks the hon. member for East Simcoe, 'What is it?' We have eyes to see and ears to hear, and I think this is most unbecoming conduct. If the hon. member for Victoria has any axe to grind with the hon. member for Rainy River, that is a question for him; but when he gets up in this House and makes such ungentlemanly statements as he has made to-night—when he says that if we were to take all the grafters, all the robbers and all the thieves on the government side of the House, the penitentiary would be full, and there would be many vacant seats here, I take exception, Sir. When the hon. gentleman gets up and poses as the embodiment of virtue, morality, good manners and refinement, and says, 'Mr. Speaker, when we had scoundrels in the Tory party we put them in jail,' he forgot the balance of the story, just as he forgot the balance of the letter of the hon. member for East Simcoe. He forgot that the Tory party took these scoundrels out of the penitentiary and elected them for Quebec West with the brand still on their foreheads. I listened also to my hon. friend from King's (Mr. Fowler) who said: 'Because the contractor is a Tory you may think we are going to drop our attacks, but we are going to punish the Tories.' In the discussion this afternoon it was contended by one gentleman who claims to have had some experience in building, that great government works or buildings ought to be done by day's work. Well, Sir, what do we hear every day from these hon. gentlemen? They say there ought not to be a single work done except by tender and contract, and they attack the government if the least little work is done without tender. Because Mr. Goodwin appears to be a Tory, because the cement put in was no good, because the tower, which they have chosen to baptize the Laurier tower, came down, it gives their hearts a little satisfaction to see something to which they affix the name of Laurier come down—because the man himself goes up all the time—they say that Mr. Goodwin should be held responsible and the work should be done by the day. Talking about experience in public works, I have the honour to represent a riding which was represented formerly by a Minister of Public Works, Sir Hector Langevin, who, like my hon. friend from Victoria, whose leader he was at the time, was a model of all the virtues. I have nothing to say about that; but let me give you an instance of how in those days public works were carried on. They erected in the city of Three Rivers a post office that was two storeys high. An election came on in which Sir Hector Langevin was the Tory candidate. In those days the electors of Three Rivers would not elect any other but a Tory. They have opened their eyes since. In those days they used to say that Three Rivers was a very expensive riding. It has been reformed in that respect, because it is now very cheap. The government built another storey under the post office; it took six months to do the work, and it cost $35,000. I was told—whether it was true or not I do not know—that it cost Sir Hector Langevin $32,000 to be elected. So you can see how much was left to pay for cement and sand. Let me give you another instance. Our hon. friends opposite like to talk about the dredging in the St. Lawrence river. In front of the city of Three Rivers there is a shoal, making two channels in the river, one running north and the other running south. In the middle of that shoal was a big boulder. Just before another election Sir Hector Langevin, the Minister of Public Works in a Tory administration, and like the others a model of economy and virtue, got this boulder pulled out of the river at a cost of $15,000.

Mr. SPROULE. That is not half as bad as plugging a hole in the Yukon at a cost of $50,000.

Mr. BUREAU. My hon. friend is talking about a matter that I know nothing about. I am talking about Three Rivers. They put the boulder on the dock and many people came from a distance to look at it, and to say what a great man Sir Hector Langevin was to perform such a feat. They did not have to spend any money in removing it, because in the spring the ice saved them the necessity. The ice rolled it into the channel of the river and it cost the government $27,000 to pull it out again. These are the only two public works which the government did in the city of Three Rivers which for eighteen years faithfully elected the Minister of Public Works and the result can be seen to-day. There is a sand shoal forming around the remnant of that boulder and we have the most miserable post office in the Dominion.

Mr. SPROULE. What has the government been doing in the last ten years?

Mr. BUREAU. I have been at them to build a post office, but the Postmaster General was so economical and was so desirous of having a surplus, that he would not build it. In Three Rivers. we have changed our mode of conducting elections. We no longer run them on the erection of public buildings or taking boulders out of the river, and consequently I do not have as much assistance as my Tory friends would have were they still in power. I have heard my hon. friend from East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) say a corporation had been formed, consisting of counts and viscounts, with the object of getting a Grand Trunk Pacific contract. Well, I may be misinformed, but I have heard of some such corporation and was told, if political colours are to count, that it was formed at the instance and through the labours of a very prominent Tory lawyer of Montreal, and that it was through the influence of those counts and viscounts that the King of Belgium became interested in the company. Or if he was not interested, they used his name to give it a little more prestige and weight. My hon. friend exclaimed what a grand thing it would be and how it would redound to the honour of the House of Commons if our King, whom we are inviting to Canada, should walk into this House just at the moment when he was speaking. No doubt my hon. friend thought His Majesty would be impressed, but I should hope that the King would be spared any such spectacle as we have witnessed to-day. The King is supposed to believe that the loyal opposition discuss questions of public interest and do not come to parliament to vent petty grievances and personal feelings against their colleagues. I must say that if this debate is remarkable for anything, it is remarkable for lack of dignity. When I heard the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) exclaim how low members on the ministerial side must have fallen when the Minister of Justice has to bring forward a measure making members of parliament belonging to the legal profession liable to a penalty of $2,000 and two years imprisonment for practising before the departments—

Mr. BENNETT. Hear, hear.

Mr. BUREAU. My hon. friend says 'hear, hear,' but dealings in the departments are not the only things that influence members in this House. If, like the hon. gentleman, I were inclined to believe everything that is dishonourable and disreputable, I would lend a willing ear to those people who come to me and say: Why, Bureau, do you not get into the swim? Why do you not do like so and so and a thousand or two acres of land from the Canadian Pacific Railway for backing their Bills in the House of Commons?

Mr. BENNETT. Does the hon. gentleman say that I ever got an acre of land from the Canadian Pacific Railway? If he makes that statement or any insinuation of that kind, I tell him that it is a deliberate falsehood, and I will tell the same to any other man who makes it. Any land I got from the Canadian Pacific Railway, I got in the open market and paid for it and got it in my own name.

Mr. BUREAU.

Mr. BUREAU. I did not make the statement, but I knew my hon. friend would assume that it applied to him. I said that I would not listen to such statements, that I refused to believe them. But that is not the way with hon. gentlemen opposite. Give them the slightest pretense for crediting something that reflects on their opponents, and they will jump at it. They take every thing for granted. It seems to me the great ambition of some of these hon. gentlemen, especially the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. Bennett), who outside the House is a genial, sociable man whom I always like to meet—it seems to me their only aim in life is to try and lower the level of their fellow members when they come inside this chamber. I do not think that that is the kind of thing which ought to be encouraged. I cannot understand hon. members shaking hands with their colleagues when they meet them outside the House and making all sorts of charges against them inside. The statement that this measure to which I have referred has been brought forward on account of the corruption on this side is, I believe absolutely unfounded. There is a very true saying that out of the fulness of the heart the mouth speaketh; and if we are to judge of what is in the heart of the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) by the number of times he made use of the expressions 'grafting' and 'grafters,' I should conclude that there is very little room in his heart for anything else. I wish I had the command of language possessed by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) so that I might give adequate expression to my sentiments in this connection. As I have said already, the falling down of this tower is a very regrettable incident, but whatever the cause may be we shall know it. The hon. Minister of Public Works has made a statement, and I do not think anybody can ask any more. He has acted as a wise man would. He has called for the best architects and engineers obtainable to examine and make a report. But the hon. member of Dundas (Mr. Broder) thought he would take advantage of a little flying trip he had made to the top of the wall to start this debate, and I want to register my protest against the manner in which hon. gentlemen opposite have conducted it. Whatever may be the feelings which hon. members show to each other outside the House, they should continue to exhibit inside it. We have been sent here to discuss public questions, and there is not one of us so perfect that he can afford to throw stones against the other. If there are members who hold their seats illegally, there are, as has been said by the hon. member for Rainy River (Mr. Conmee), ways and means of bringing them before a committee and forcing them to vacate their seats. If there are members who do not deserve to have seats in this House, let us take the proper means to get them out. But if we were to believe half what is said, there would not be two members on opposite sides who would give each other the hand. This, it seems to me, is most unfair, and unjust. Whatever our political convictions may be, it is our bounden duty to defend them and whatever may happen we shall take sides. I have no desire to lecture to-night, but time and again I have listened to speeches which ought not to have been in the mouths of those who made them and I cannot refrain from making my protest. It is all very well to indulge in witticisms across the floor which we all appreciate, but when it comes to making charges and insinuations which would lead one to conclude that one half the members of this House ought to be behind the bars in the penitentiary, I say it is about time that hon. gentlemen, who indulge in these wild attacks, should pause a little and think before they speak.

Mr. E. A. LANCASTER (Lincoln and Niagara). I wish to make a little protest here to-night but perhaps not exactly of the same kind as my good friend—one of the best friends I have on the other side—who has just sat down (Mr. Bureau) has made, because unfortunately we look at these things more or less from a somewhat political bias and different standpoints, and I have not the slightest expectation of convincing him that the lecture he has just given us should not be applied to this side of the House and not to his also. If, however, he will take time between this and Monday to reflect over what he has said, he might possibly conclude that it would do some good if he were to speak privately to his friends and the Minister of Justice concerning the measure that hon. minister has brought down, before charging us with doing something inimical or discreditable or disloyal to the King when we appeal for a higher state of public moralty.

If an hon. gentleman on this side cannot be allowed, representing his constituency and trying to do justice to the whole Dominion, to protest against that which is condemned by public opinion, there is but little use in our coming here. My hon. friend cries 'halt' to such a discussion; but I would say 'halt' to the opposition to the discussion. I say that opposition to such discussion should cease, though the discussion went on from now until Christmas, until we had made it clear that things shall not be done or allowed by the government which are contrary to the public interest and which tend to make our people ashamed of their country. The cry 'halt' should be directed to those who would try to stop this discussion till the House is clean. I do not know whether my hon. friend from Rainy River (Mr. Conmee) is going to call me to order when I say that we should seek to win for this parliament greater respect than is now paid it by the people of this country. I am not going to say the hon. member is wrong, if he says that there have been thieves, rascals, scoundrels in the Conservative party. I suppose that every man who is in the penitentiary, every man who ought to be in the penitentiary, is either a Grit or a Tory, and I cannot honestly say that all of them are Grits. But, if the general statement is made by hon. gentlemen on this side of the House that things are not what they ought to be in public life in Canada, is it a sufficient reply to say that some of those who have done wrong have been Tories? What does it matter what the politics of this man or that man may be in such a case? What does it matter though the government of Sir John Macdonald did or did not do things that were amiss. We are elected here to try to attend to the affairs of the country between the last election and the next election. We are here to try to help Canada, to purify the public life of Canada, to make this a creditable nation among the nations of the earth. If a man rises on this side of the House and says that he thinks that the government should take means to prevent the government supporters from doing things that are now done in fact, I do not think it is a sufficient answer to say that unless you can prove that the thing is illegal you cannot prove that it is wrong, and that a wrong thing in our public life is to not to be made illegal simply because it has not been illegal hitherto. The hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) was arguing that the government should not allow people to be interested in contracts with the government who are on this floor or who belong to families that are represented on this floor. Of course, the thing is not illegal, but the suggestion is that it should be made illegal. To say that this must not be considered is to say, in effect, that we do not want our law made better; we do not want that to be made illegal which is not illegal to-day; in other words, the laws are not to be amended in the interests of the people. I do not think that hon. gentlemen opposite, particularly my hon. friend from Three Rivers (Mr. Bureau) means that. So, I think that it would have been better for him to consult, between now and Monday, some hon. gentleman on the other side and see how far they are going to assist in this direction. For instance they might support the Minister of Justice in the Bill he has introduced to prevent certain things being done which are done quite legally to-day, so that public life may be improved and people may have more respect for those who come to this House. I think we ought to be free, in this House, to take an example and argue a general principle from it. I think that if a tower falls down in course of construction by the Public Works Department, we have a right to take it as an example, and, arguing reasonably from it, conclude what may or may not be wrong in the administration of the government. Otherwise what are we here for if we have no right to discuss things relating to the public interest? Are we to be prevented from this fair discussion by being called cowards or being told that we ought to be more gentlemanly? There is such a thing as being too gentlemanly. I am not elected here to be a gentleman solely. I hope the people of Lincoln think I am an ordinarily well behaved man enough. But they did not elect me as the quintessence of gentlemanliness exactly. They sent me to watch public affairs and to try to help on the time when things will be done properly, and to resist them, so far as they are done improperly. I am perfectly willing to be called ungentlemanly if I believe that the argument that I present to the House is in the interests of the people and is within the rules of the House. I am content that hon. gentlemen on that side should say that I am not gentlemanly, so long as I can feel that I am doing my duty to my constituents. I am willing, on these terms, to be lectured by hon. gentlemen opposite. And, so long as we feel that we are doing our duty, I do not think we should bother our heads about whether they think us gentlemanly or not. I would like to be considered a gentleman here, if I can keep that reputation and also promote the interests of my constituents and use what influence I can command to have things done in a way that will be creditable to them and to the country. The hon. member for Three Rivers (Mr. Bureau) said that we ought to discuss here questions of interests. He suggested that if the King had come here and heard the discussion this afternoon he would not have formed a high opinion of this House. We are not anxious to have these discussions. But, if things are wrong, we are anxious to have them put right. Surely the hon. gentleman does not want things to go on in a wrong way simply because they have been going that way. If not, then he must be willing to discuss them with a view to finding out whether they are wrong or not. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick) is surely trying to do the right thing by parliament and by the people. He has introduced a Bill the effect of which is to declare that members of parliament shall not take special remuneration for getting arrangements made with the government which they may be supporting. I cordially agree with that. It may be that when the Conservatives were in power this step was not taken. But, am I therefore debarred from voting for this Bill of the Minister of Justice? Yet is not that the effect of what the hon. member for Three Rivers says? Because I supported the government of Sir John Macdonald and that government did not introduce this measure or apply this remedy to the conditions of that time, therefore I am to vote against the minister's Bill, though I think it a good one—I ask the hon. member (Mr. Bureau) if that is what he would have me do. The hon. gentleman wants us to talk seriously. I ask him seriously and conscientiously if that is what he wants me to do. I expect to remain as good a Tory as ever, and I will vote for the Bill of the Minister of Justice if I think it right. And that is what my people expect of me. They do not expect me to be frightened into voting against such a Bill because I am a Tory and because the Tory government, when in power, did not propose such a Bill. It may be there was not the same occasion for it. We have had Ministers of Justice representing this side who were honourable men: we have had Ministers of Justice representing the other side who were honourable men. Is it not fair to assume that, if no previous Minister of Justice introduced this Bill, one reason was that there was no necessity for it? Is that an unfair statement to make or a wrong conclusion to draw?

It may be assumed that one Minister of Justice is as competent and as anxious to serve the people as another. The fair inference would be that when the Conservative party were in power, no Minister of Justice thought it was necessary to introduce such legislation and the natural inference would be that there was not so much of that kind of thing going on. No one sugegsted it should be done. Here we have the leader of the opposition stating before parliament met, that he was going to to advocate that this should be done, and the Minister of Justice, agreeing that the leader of the opposition is right. They are both trying to purify politics in this country. We find the Minister of Justice bringing as a government measure into the House, the measure which the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) advocated shortly before the House opened. If the hon. member for Three Rivers (Mr. Bureau) is going to vote against the Bill because the leader of the opposition advocated it, and if I am to vote against it because the Minister of Justice introduced it, what are we going to do in the effort to discharge our duty? I suppose if I vote I will be told I voted for it, because the leader of the opposition advocated it. If it is a good measure, I am prepared to vote for it, but I say to the member for Three Rivers (Mr. Bureau) if he votes for it because the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick) introduced it, he is also voting for the measure which the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) advocated before the Minister of Justice introduced it. After all, is it not our duty to try and assist each other to bring about such conditions in Canada as ought to exist. I can understand an hon. gentleman saying: some things said here, but we must not be so thin skinned, so afraid of discussion. I can understand an hon. gentleman saying: I do not like the Minister of Justice introducing this Bill; it is a reflection on us, a reflection on lawyers on this side, a suggestion that we are taking money to get arrangements through the department and to get Bills passed through the House, advocating them in committee, &c. Now, there is an evil or the Minister of Justice would not propose to remove it. The Minister of Justice sometimes, might not apply a remdey because he might not see an evil that existed, but it has never been suggested that the Minister of Justice is trying to apply a remedy to an evil which nobody saw. We often have evils for which we can not find remedies, but when the Minister of Justice advocates the making of certain things illegal and penal, surely we must assume that an impression exists which the Minister of Justice thinks must be dealt with and with which he proposes to deal. I ask hon. gentlemen if they think we are entirely to blame for supposing that things are wrong. Here is a tower not finished, a building with walls that are supposed to be brand new, which collapses. I do not know that the rest of that building is any better than the tower, but I will be inclined to think the walls are all alike. I would not like to see any Canadian fellow citizen go into that building, unless it was quite certain that it is safe. If I had any influence with any one to be employed in that building, I would say to keep out until there is a full report on it. If the tower had lasted a little longer there might have been 150 civil servants there and other people to do business with them. We fear from this accident that things are not as they ought to be in the Public Works Department, and do hon. gentlemen think we are not going to say what we ought to say for fear of being called ungentlemanly? They are applying the wrong dose to us, if they think that is going to prevent us, and I ask them again to come to the conclusion that there is something wrong in regard to the way business is being done by the department. Evidently advantage is being taken by people who know how to get advantages, such as members of parliament in some way secure because the Minister of Justice recognizes that something is wrong when he introduces the Bill. We will assist to make this thing right. We will have our fights on party questions, but do not, for Heaven's sake, make a party question of the morals of this country. Let us all agree to try to make people behave themselves in public life. We may dispute about other things and will take our knocks from each other and take them in good part, but do not let us have any personal trouble if we can help it, over a matter like that. If I have any influence with hon. gentlemen opposite, and I am on the best of terms with all of them and particularly with the member for Three Rivers (Mr. Bureau), and I think he knows I mean what I say, I ask them now to reflect between now and next week whether we should not join hand in hand on this matter, and make every effort to bring about a satisfactory condition. I shall not trespass on the time of the House, but I felt compelled to say this to try and bring back the debate to where I thought it should be and away from the low plane to which I think hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House did more than we did to bring it down.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Mr. INGRAM. Before we proceed, I would like to ask the minister if he has taken any steps towards laying the ordinances of the Yukon council on the table.

Mr. OLIVER. I have the pleasure of informing the House that on March 23 of this year, the premier laid before the House a copy of the ordinances passed by the Yukon council in the year 1905.

Immigration—salaries of agents and employees in Canada, Great Britain and foreign countries, $150,000.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I observe there is an increase of $12,800 for the year.

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, that is correct.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Could the hon. minister just as conveniently take up any other item? One hon. gentleman who is interested very much in this item has been called away to-day suddenly. I think there will be a good deal of discussion and perhaps we could take some other item that would not call for so much discussion and accomplish something.

Mr. OLIVER. I thought that possibly there might be a number of questions that would be asked in regard to this vote that would give me an opportunity of bringing any information that may be required at a later date. We might take a preliminary canter to-night upon this and after that we could take up the vote of the Interior Department for a few minutes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. We can go on with it for a while in the meantime.

Mr. SPROULE. We will have a little inconvenience in discussing this item to-night seeing that we are dealing with the same subject in the Committee of Agriculture, and we have been unable to get all the information we desire to have before this question is discussed. In the absence of that information I would like to ask the minister if he could give us the names and the salaries of the various agents who are employed in Canada, Great Britain and foreign countries?

Mr. INGRAM. I would ask the hon. minister when he gives the names of agents in Ontario to specify the points at which they are located.

Mr. OLIVER. The list is as follows :

The following have been appointed for a period of six months in connection with the distribution of farm labourers coming from England :

Geo. L. Stewart, King post office, Ontario, for North York.

R. J. Crothers, Northport, Ontario, for Prince Edward county.

Robert Holmes, Clinton, Ontario, for West Huron.

W. M. Baker, Woodstock, Ontario, for North Oxford.

L. Burnett, Greenbank, Ontario, for South Ontario.

E. W. Brewster, Compton, Quebec, for Eastern Townships.

The remuneration of each of the above officers is $100 per month with actual travelling expenses.

Mr. INGRAM. Who is this Mr. Holmes who is mentioned at Clinton.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Robert Holmes.

Mr. INGRAM. Is that the ex-member ?

Mr. OLIVER. I cannot tell you at the moment.

Mr. BARKER. It is the same name.

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, it is the gentleman who was formerly member of parliament.

Mr. INGRAM. Are there any Ontario government immigrant agents at these places in Ontario which you have mentioned.

Mr. OLIVER. Not to my knowledge, but of course I am not absolutely certain as to that.

Mr. INGRAM. If the Ontario government has an agent at Clinton for example, then the duties of the officer of each government would conflict.

Mr. OLIVER. I have no information as to what the Ontario government may be doing but to the best of my knowledge the Ontario government has no immigration officials of any kind at these places.

Mr. INGRAM. It is within my personal knowledge that they have. and I know that it is a subject of complaint with the Ontario government that the Dominion officials interfere with their agents in this work. It is a matter which the minister should inquire into.

Mr. OLIVER. Would the hon. member name the place where the officials of the two governments conflict ?

Mr. INGRAM. I want to find out the names of the places from the minister, but I will give the hon. gentleman privately my information on that point and ask him to make inquiry.

Mr. OLIVER. This work has been undertaken at the very strong request of members representing agricultural constituencies in Ontario and we were led to believe that the Ontario government was not doing any work of that kind anywhere in Ontario outside of Toronto. My hon. friend will remember that during the debate last year the hon. member for Prince Edward (Mr. Alcorn) made somewhat lengthy remarks on the necessity of such work as this being carried on and he evidenced the good work that was being done by a Mr. Crothers, in his county and suggested that this government should take up Mr. Crothers and forward him in his work, and parallel that work elsewhere. I thought the suggestion was a good one, and Mr. Crothers is one of the gentleman who has been placed in a position by the immigration department to cary out that idea.

Mr. INGRAM. I have no doubt that what the minister says is quite correct as applied to that time, but the Ontario government has taken certain steps to do that kind of work and there is an objection to the Dominion agent and the provincial agent acting at the same point. There is considerable territory to cover in Ontario and it would be much better to distribute the work and not have two agents in the same place.

Mr. SPROULE. Will the minister give us the names of the other agents ?

Mr. OLIVER. I have given the names of all the agents in Canada. I will give those in the United States and in Europe.

United States and promoting immigration from United States.

Mr. BARR. What is the total number of agents all told ? Are these agents employed the whole time ?

Mr. OLIVER. All those whose names I have read except the seven who are employed in the distribution of farm labourers in Ontario, are employed by the year. The seven in Ontario are employed only for six months.

Mr. BLAIN. May I ask what are the duties of those employed in the province of Ontario ? I understand there was a good deal of complaining by the farmers of Ontario that they had not sufficient labourers on their farms, and this seems to be a very worthy departure on the part of the minister. What are the duties, for instance, of Mr. Robert Holmes, ex-M.P., who has been appointed for work of this kind, and has he and the other gentlemen brought in a report of what they have been doing in the past year ?

Mr. OLIVER. The duties of these men have only commenced. They are to secure information as to the requirements of the farmers in the vicinity where they reside—to get lists of the farmers requiring help, the character of the help they require, the wages they are able to pay, and whether they want married or single men. That information is dealt with by our agents at the ports of landing, and as far as possible efforts are made to direct to those different distributing agents such immigrants as the agents at the ports of landing may think it is advisable or possible to send. Of course, this is only an experiment so far. We have only begun it, and I cannot give any very definite statement as to the results.

Mr. BLAIN. What is the date of their appointment ?

Mr. OLIVER. These gentlemen were to begin their duties on the 1st of March.

Mr. BARR. How long are they expected to remain at their posts ?

Mr. OLIVER. They are engaged for six months during the immigration season.

Mr. BLAIN. I suppose uniform instructions are given to them in writing ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, their instructions are given in writing.

Mr. BLAIN. Will the minister at some future time lay on the table a copy of the instructions ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. INGRAM. Do these men devote their time exclusively for the six months to this work ?

Mr. OLIVER. I do not know that they do, or that they do not. As a matter of fact, we are not certain yet that we are going to be able to supply the demands that are being sent in by these gentlemen sufficiently to keep them properly employed. So far as I have heard, the only complaint against them is of possibly being somewhat too active in their efforts to secure immigrants.

Mr. BLAIN. Is the territory for each of the seven gentlemen in the province of Ontario defined and laid out ?

Mr. OLIVER. The territory, I think, is not exactly defined. The appointments are made with a view to each agent being resident at a central point in an agricultural district where there is a considerable demand for agricultural labour, and anything that he can do to accommodate any person requiring such labour it is of course his duty to do.

Mr. BARR. Looking at the number of immigrants that came into the province of Ontario last year, I should think the work of seven men in distributing that number would be very small. Unless their territory is divided, would there not be overlapping? It seems to me that in order to make it effectual, it would be absolutely necessary to divide out their territories in order that they might accomplish their work properly and not overlap each other.

Mr. OLIVER. I think that the points at which these parties are located are so far apart that there is no possibility of their work overlapping. Especially when it is considered that the demands for labour are so great that we have not been able to supply them. I have had several persistent requests for the appointment of such agents at other points, but so far we have not been able to accede to these requests on account of the condition of our appropriation.

Mr. HERRON. Does the minister say there are two agencies at Great Falls, Montana? Strange that there should be two agents with the same duties in the one city.

Mr. OLIVER. One of them is the resident and the other the travelling agent.

Mr. SPROULE. Do you pay your American agents by commission or salary?

Mr. OLIVER. There are two classes There are the salaried agents who receive no commission and the sub-agents who are paid a commission.

Mr. SPROULE. Could the minister give the names and the amounts paid these sub-agents?

Mr. OLIVER. I can give the total amount paid, which is $5,860.75 during the year 1904-5. The names and the amount paid to each I shall furnish later. With regard to the question of the possibility of overlapping of the work of distributing agents in Ontario and the possibility of their work conflicting with that of the agents of the Ontario government, I notice in the Toronto News of April 5, the following article :

I am strongly of opinion, observed Mr. F. G. Macdiarmid, that the government should establish other distributing points besides Toronto. In the west officials should be stationed at St. Thomas, Chatham, London, Woodstock, Stratford and Brantford. In this way the farmers in these localities could look the arrivals over and have the opportunity of making their own selections. As it is the fellows near by and close to Toronto have the advantage of first choice over the others. The application system does not alleviate this injustice to any extent. You can see in this rush that it is practically impossible for the officer in charge to fill his applications first. As a matter of fact those on the spot get first choice and the outsider gets what is left.

That is the case as has been stated to me by a number of representatives from agricultural constituencies in regard to the situation in Ontario. It was because of that we have attempted the experiment now in progress.

Mr. INGRAM. Mr. Macdiarmid may not be aware of what the Ontario Minister of Agriculture is doing in that direction. There is no reply from the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. OLIVER. The final part of the article is this :

Mr. Macdiarmid expressed his intention of directing the attention of the Minister of Agriculture to the advisability of creating other distributing agencies throughout the province for the next few weeks.

Mr. INGRAM. That may have been done at other points. I do not know what the Minister of Agriculture would say on that point. With regard to the statement made by the hon. minister, he does not say that the Ontario men whom he has appointed are to devote all their time to the work or not. They are to receive $100 a month and have a certain extent of territory to work in. I suppose they would be entitled to railway fares and other expenses in travelling. With respect to the agents distributed in Canada, you have in Halifax 15, St. Johns 6 and Quebec 19. And you have in Montreal about 5. What are the 15 in Halifax employed at and the 19 in Quebec?

Mr. OLIVER. Their duties are to receive the immigrants when they land from the vessel, see that they pass the customs and medical inspection, see that they are started for their destination and that they are cared for. Of course, it is advisable that if 1,500 or 1,000 or 500 immigrants land from a single ship at any of these ocean ports they should not be detained an hour longer than absolutely necessary. Even if this necessitates the appointment of a comparatively large staff in order to facilitate the movements of the immigrants from the ship through the ocean port and on to their destination. I am sure the country will not grudge the money for the staff—a large staff apparently, but not large in reality considering the necessity for quick despatch in the movement of immigrants.

Mr. INGRAM. At which of the ports, Halifax, St. John, Quebec or Montreal do the large number of immigrants arrive ?

Mr. OLIVER. I believe the larger number landed in Quebec—61,000 last year.

Mr. INGRAM. And at the other ports, about what proportion ?

Mr. OLIVER. About 12,000 landed at St. John, and about 25,000 at Halifax. I have not the figures for Montreal.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Do these officers, whom the minister has appointed, consider it their duty to travel in the train with the immigrants to see to it, that sharpers do not take advantage of them ? I ask this, because of what I have learned of the experience of the English colonists who came out here. These people were skinned from the time they landed, until they were settled.

Mr. OLIVER. Every immigration train has a man on it. Of course, there are many people on the train and it is hard to keep track of them all. But the effort is made to take care of the immigrants from the time they land until they reach Winnipeg.

Mr. BLAIN. What is the advantage to the farmers of having an agent stationed at Clinton, over having an agent at Toronto, considering that the immigrants land at Toronto and not at Clinton ?

Mr. OLIVER. The answer to that is given by Mr. Macdiarmid.

Mr. BLAIN. I understand what Mr. Macdiarmid had stated. I suppose the department has a policy on this subject. But, for myself, I do not understand what advantage accrues to the farmers of Ontario from having an agent stationed at Clinton instead of at Toronto.

Mr. OLIVER. If all immigrants were to go to Toronto, the advantage would accrue to farmers in the vicinity of Toronto. But the benefit of the whole province is the thing sought.

Mr. BLAIN. I am not saying there is no advantage, but only that I am unable to see it, and I would like the hon. gentleman to explain it to me.

Mr. WM. WRIGHT. What is the machinery for making the connection between the agent at Clinton and the immigrant when he lands ?

Mr. OLIVER. We have officers. The hon. member for East Elgin (Mr. Ingram) complains that we have too many officers——

Mr. INGRAM. No, I did not complain ; I was asking for information.

Mr. OLIVER. I thought the hon. gentleman complained. The business of the officers at the ocean port is to do what they can to advance the immigrant to his destination. The object of having an agent at Clinton, or any other point immediately surrounded by farm country, is that such an agent can and does have personal knowledge of the requirements of the farmers in that locality, and of their standing and the likelihood of their using any labour they get, personal knowledge that an officer stationed in Toronto could not have. This agent at Clinton, or wherever it may be, informs the agent at Quebec or Halifax of the requirements of the farmers in his part of the country in regard to help. The agent at the port is informed in the same way of the requirements of Woodstock and all the other places. In reply, he advises these agents that there will be so many men coming on a certain vessel. Let us say there are 100 not otherwise ticketed, that is, not going to any particular destination, but simply looking for employment. The local agents are informed by wire of men who are going there. The local agent is on the lookout and he does his best to distribute these helpers among the farmers according to the requirements that he is made aware of.

Mr. BLAIN. This is a new departure on the part of the minister.

Mr. OLIVER. Entirely.

Mr. BLAIN. I think the hon. minister is to be complimented on it, provided he has good reason for the establishment of each local agent. Will the local agents be permitted to take part in politics, speaking on platforms and so on, during the six months in which they are in the employ of the government. I do not want to introduce politics into this matter, but I am sure that the minister will have a policy and this is an opportune time, when these officers are commencing their work, to state what that policy is.

Mr. OLIVER. We have not taken up that side of the question. But I should think that during the time of their employment, six months each year, it will certainly not be the best possible proof of the necessity of their employment of and of their having plenty of work to do, if they had time to spend in electioneering. I should think they would do their appointment most credit by refraining from meddling in politics, for one good reason amongst others, that we expect them to deal with the public without regard to politics. While we cannot claim the right to restrain their views or even political activity, still I think it would militate against their usefulness as officers of the government to take an active part in politics, at any rate during the time of their employment.

Mr. BLAIN. If these men should continue to take an active part in politics, while in the employment of the government, what would be the penalty ?

Mr. OLIVER. I have not given that consideration to this matter which would enable me to reply definitely. It would have to be considered as occasion arises. We are only taking up this matter as an experiment.

We do not know how it will be received by the people or how it will work out, and I think it rather early in the day to begin to make severe restrictions and regulations which may be very proper in due time.

Mr. BLAIN. One of the appointments at least—and I do not want to say anything disrespectful to the gentleman appointed, Mr. Holmes, of Clinton, who I suppose will make a good agent—it is well known, is an active politician in western Ontario, not confining his operations to his own county but going to other counties, and it seems to me that the minister should lay down a policy with regard to this.

Mr. OLIVER. The policy would be to suggest to these gentlemen to keep out of politics, but when my hon. friend asks me to affix a penalty I say it is rather early in the game to make such provision.

Mr. INGRAM. Has the minister's department consulted with the Ontario department about this matter ?

Mr. OLIVER. I am informed not.

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. gentleman has spoken about agents at Halifax, St. John, Quebec and Montreal and of 24 immigrant agents in Ottawa. What are their duties in Ottawa ?

Mr. OLIVER. Of course their duties are various. The whole immigration system is managed from Ottawa and the records are kept here and orders issued from here. That of course involves a large amount of clerical work. To show the increased work in the department I may read a memorandum showing the number of letters received in the Immigration Department which is kept separately from the other departments :

Fiscal year.	Letters received.
1903-4..	59,404
1904-5..	77,610
9 months of current fiscal year..	99,557
1 month, February, 1906..	12,418
March, 1906..	16,500
February, 1905..	7,188
March, 1905..	8,038

Mr. T. CHISHOLM. Could the minister tell me how many immigrants are likely to be sent to the county of Huron, to Clinton.

Mr. OLIVER. As we are only beginning the work we are not able to give that information yet.

Mr. T. CHISHOLM. What steps would the farmers take to get these immigrants?

Mr. OLIVER. If they inform Mr. Holmes of the class of men they want and the wages they are willing to pay, Mr. Holmes will notify our agents at Halifax or Quebec who will do the best they can to furnish these men for distribution by Mr. Holmes. Of course this is only experimental, we have not as yet made any special organization in the old country for supplying this particular demand. We are working to some extent in the dark, so we cannot give definite information.

Mr. T. CHISHOLM. Of course this is an anxious time of the year for the farmers, and any information the minister would give at this time we would be very glad to communicate to the farmers of that district. We would regard it as a great favour if we could know what the prospects are. At this time of the year farmers wish to get help.

Mr. OLIVER. If they put in their names we will do everything we can to send them men. We have made some little changes in the regulations with the view of encouraging the movement of farm labourers from England.

Mr. T. CHISHOLM. What about female servants ? They are needed very much in that district.

Mr. OLIVER. They are in the same class. We will take applications for them just the same. We are giving some increased encouragement to that class of immigration.

Mr. T. CHISHOLM. Would the hon. minister be kind enough to give us information as soon as he can in regard to the number we would be likely to get ?

Mr. OLIVER. I will see that the hon. gentleman gets the very latest information in regard to the matter.

Mr. INGRAM. The minister was speaking about the number of officials in Ottawa and then he mentioned the number of letters written, records to be kept, &c. Is the immigration literature sent from the head office at Ottawa ?

Mr. OLIVER. The greater part of the immigration literature is sent out from Ottawa. Something over 3,000,000 items of literature were sent out last year.

Mr. INGRAM. That is over the Dominion of Canada ?

Mr. OLIVER. And the United States.

Mr. INGRAM. Does the department carefully scan the literature to see that nothing goes out but what should be in this literature ?

Mr. OLIVER. There has not been in the past, perhaps, as close a supervision as might be desirable. I am not able to say that there may not have been some lapses in the literature that has been issued recently, but our earnest desire is to see that the literature is not only correct but that it puts the case properly and is kept up to date ?

Mr. INGRAM. In Winnipeg you have 32 or 33 officials. You have one man who goes up and down on the train between North Bay and Winnipeg. What are the duties of these immigration agents in Winnipeg ?

Mr. OLIVER. Winnipeg is the point from which immigrants are distributed all over western Canada. Of course, it is to the western country that the great effort of the department has hitherto been directed. The railways branch off from Winnipeg. We have extensive accommodation for immigrants there. The system is to run the trains through from the ocean port to Winnipeg and when the immigrants arrive at Winnipeg they are given their final distribution by the agents there. As there are people of various nationalities we have to keep interpreters, speaking different languages, at Winnipeg, so that people may get proper direction for their destinations. We have also helpers, clerks and assistants of various kinds so that there shall be the least possible delay in getting these people forward to their destinations. As at ocean ports so it is at Winnipeg, while the staff may seem large, my hon. friend will see how important it is to a poor man or a man of anything but large means who is shifting the whole course of his life and who possibly has a large family with him and dependent upon him that his movements shall be expedited. Every day's delay means a great deal to such a man and it is very important that there should be no unnecessary delay. I think that no one will begrudge the expenditure necessary to enable these people to arrive at their destinations with the least possible delay.

Mr. INGRAM. Then you have between 25 and 30 officials in the United States. You have four located at Detroit, two at St. Paul, one at Milwaukee and one at New York. This does not include men who are paid commissions at a large number of places in the United States. Has it ever been suggested to the minister that owing to the large amount of cheap land in British Columbia, the Northwest and Manitoba, the government is perhaps not justified in expending a large sum of money in the United States or inducing immigrants to come into the Northwest ? Is it not a fact that the American land companies or individual Americans who own land in the Northwest are interested in filling that land up and would they not act as agents themselves for the purpose of selling their land ? Has it never been suggested to the hon. gentleman that it was not necessary to employ such a large staff of men in the United States for that purpose ?

Mr. OLIVER. Of course, that is an open question. It is a fair subject for argument as to whether the advantages in the Northwest have become so thoroughly established in the minds of the people of the United States that we might relax our efforts in regard to advertising in that country. What my hon. friend has said in regard to the exertions of land companies is also correct. There are large land companies that have bought land in the Northwest from the railway companies and they have a very direct interest in securing colonists, but while the ultimate interests of the land companies and of the government are the same—that is to say to get settlers on the land—the method of the companies and that of the government are liable to be radically different. So that we cannot rely upon the companies to do the work which would be done by the government and which is being done to-day. For instance, I might mention a matter that has been a subject of current report for some time in the western papers, there has been a system of what is called blanketing homesteads which has taken its rise very largely from the very great activity and enterprise of these land companies. While these gentlemen are anxious to secure settlers they are anxious to secure sale for their land and they are quite willing to use the government land as a means of forcing the sale at high prices of their own land. Now, the result of their efforts is that they have succeeded in blanketing a great deal of the homestead lands of the country with the view of securing a personal advantage to themselves in the sale of their land. But, it must be evident to any one that a continuation of that system, while, in the first place it is an evidence of enterprise and may in that way have had some effect in securing settlers, is bound, in the long run, to be absolutely detrimental to the welfare and settlement of the country. The land company exists for the purpose of making profits for the land company. The government is in the immigration business not for the purpose of making money for the government but for the purpose of getting settlers into the country who will make the vacant land productive. It might seem as if we are getting no return for the expenditure, and yet it is because of the result of this policy, that those of us who come from the west any way will admit that the country is as prosperous as it is to-day. We may possibly be warranted in relaxing our efforts to secure immigration from the States, but on the other hand we may not be. We know that in the past while our land was as valuable as it is to-day, it was not until Canada had them advertised that we got these people from the States, and that there was the consequent increase in the value of property. We western people are rather doubtful about relaxing the efforts towards advertising the country yet. The government stands for a continuation of an active policy of advertising for the present, with a view of securing the best settlers we can.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I don't understand how a land company could blanket homesteads.

Mr. OLIVER. Under the Act permission may be given for a person to enter for a homestead by proxy, the intention being that a man from Ontario, for instance, who goes to the west would enter a homestead in the name of his son who would follow him afterwards. That being so it is a simple matter for a land company to get a large number of proxies and make entries and then trust to Providence or some thing else that these entries will not be cancelled. The policy of this government and of the previous government has been too lenient with the homesteader and to give him a little latitude as to going on his homestead.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Do you mean that the land company could procure some person to make an entry?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, they might not improperly procure them. It was not until the land speculator got in the field as extensively as at present that any one thought of abusing this privilege of making entries by proxy. A man for instance goes into that country and he cannot find a place to suit him, but the agent of the company says to him: Now, my friend, if you will buy this quarter section from the company I will find you a homestead adjoining and the speculator then proceeds to enter cancellation proceedings against this homestead he has entered by proxy and in regard to which he had never intended the regulations to be carried out.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Would the land company obtain permission from persons to make use of their names for the purpose of making entries?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. How long has this practice of blanketing homesteads been carried out to the knowledge of the department?

Mr. OLIVER. It has recently been brought to the attention of the department so definitely that drastic measures are being taken.

Mr. LAKE. I brought it to the notice of the minister last summer.

Mr. OLIVER. The evil has been growing, and while the department has been lenient with regard to the cancellation of homesteads it is believed now that it has become necessary for the department to actively interfere so that homesteads upon which the duties are not being performed will be cancelled.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The entries to which allusion has been made by the minister would not be bona fide entries, because these persons apparently only lent their names for the purpose of accomplishing an evasion of the Act. I could understand that a father going to the west might make an entry in the name of his son who intended to settle there, but when you use the names of persons who never had the slightest intention of becoming settlers it seems to me that is really a fraud upon the intent of the Act, and it does seem desirable that some drastic remedy should be applied to ascertain what homesteads have been secured in that way.

Mr. OLIVER. Provision is being made to find out the standing of homesteaders and to take departmental action for cancellation of such as have been obtained in that way.

Mr. LANCASTER. In these cases which the minister has observed, were the names to the department fictitious names, or the names of actual persons ?

Mr. OLIVER. We could not tell whether a name was fictitious or not. It would not be the name of a resident, because a resident would make the entry for himself. There might be a person representing that he was getting up a colony in the United States and that a number of his desirable neighbours would join it. As a matter of fact, this has been legitimately done in a few cases. We cannot tell which case is legitimate and which is not, except from the results.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. What action has been taken by the department to ascertain what entries are fictitious and what bona fide ?

Mr. OLIVER. The principal complaint has been made in regard to the agencies in the province of Saskatchewan, and for the moment we are concentrating our attention on that part of the country. The land agents are required to make a list of all lands under entry up to one year ago from March 1. We are concentrating there all the homestead inspectors who can be spared from the rest of the country, and they are making actual inspection of the land, and if they find a homestead under entry for more than a year on which there are no improvements, unless the entry has been protected, it will be absolutely cancelled without the usual cancellation proceedings, and without waiting for a protest from the person who has made the entry.

Mr. T. CHISHOLM. Do not the parties who blanket homesteads get the parties for whom they have assumed to make the entry to put in abandonment papers at the opportune time ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, that is what they do.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Has the minister given any permission to persons to buy a township of land, say near Eagle Creek or along the line of the Grand Trunk Pacific, or some other part that is not settled, and in that way to hold homesteads from settlement ? I know of one case in which a notice was put up that certain lands had been recently surveyed and warning people to keep off them. It was found that they were held for a colonization company in the United States. Is there any possibility of that being repeated?

Mr. OLIVER. There is certainly not, in my knowledge.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Has not the form of entry been altered in recent years ? Is it not a fact that some years ago a person desiring to make an entry through an agent had to make a declaration, whereas under the existing form no such declaration is required ?

Mr. OLIVER. I am not able to answer the question, but I do not think that to gentlemen in the service of land companies the declaration would make very much difference. However, instructions have been issued that after the 17th of this month there will not be any proxies, but entries will only be accepted from persons appearing before the agent, or the subagent.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. I had one of the forms in use before this government came into power, and it was necessary for the person making the entry to swear that he was a bona fide applicant, and the agent also had to make a declaration ; but the existing form does not require the applicant to make a declaration, though it does require the agent to do so. If the old form were still in use, there would not be so much fake homesteading as there is at the present time.

Mr. OLIVER. As I said before, I do not think the making of a declaration would make much difference to the people engaged in fake homesteading. A few years ago the whole object of the department was to facilitate and encourage the entry of land in every way, especially by permitting men who were likely to bring their neighbours with them from other countries to make entries on their behalf. There is no doubt that it was a good policy at the time, and served a good purpose ; but the conditions have changed so radically that what was very beneficial has become, as we view it at present, detrimental, and the change of conditions has necessitated a change of policy.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. Are the instructions sent out to the different land agents and subagents available, where they can be seen ?

Mr. OLIVER. They can be placed on the table.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. Are they published anywhere ?

Mr. OLIVER. I notice that they appear in the Winnipeg 'Free Press' and 'Tribune.'

Mr. SAM. HUGHES.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. In the different land offices, if a party inquires to ascertain who has made an entry for a certain quarter section, are the agents supposed to tell him ?

Mr. OLIVER. No.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. That is, the condition of a title to a homestead in the Dominion land office is supposed to be kept secret under existing regulations ?

Mr. OLIVER. I do not know that it is required to be kept secret but it has never been the policy of the department to facilitate claim jumping, and the department has never given information which would assist in the disturbance of settlers claims.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. You go to a local land office to ascertain the situation with regard to a certain quarter section, and there is no way you can find out who was the man who entered for the homestead or who the bona fide man is who applies to cancel his entry. The instructions from the head office to the different agencies are not to disclose this information. Are those the instructions ?

Mr. OLIVER. I could not say what the instructions are, but I know that is the practice.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. How has it become the practice ? Is it on the authority of the department ?

Mr. OLIVER. No doubt it is, and I have given my view of the reason for it.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Suppose the minister finds that any of these fake homesteads have been transferred, will he cancel them ? Suppose a speculator blankets a homestead in another name. At the suitable time he gets the other party to cancel and put it in his own name or cover it with scrip, is it the minister's intention to take that piece of land from the speculator ?

Mr. OLIVER. I do not know. If man number two has placed scrip upon the land he is the owner.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Suppose he is the man who made the bogus entry.

Mr. OLIVER. That is a matter I have not gone into.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. What is the object of the department in instructing agents to keep the title a secret from the public? Why should not a man be able to go into the Dominion Lands Office and ascertain a homesteader's title just as he can do in a registry or mining office. What is the object of keeping this secret ? A man applies for a quarter section which is vacant, on which there are no improvements, and he is told that it is entered for. He cannot find out by whom or if anybody has applied for a cancellation. Why does the department instruct its agents to refuse this informations ?

Mr. OLIVER. I do not know what the instructions are or that the conditions are as described by my hon. friend, but the practice of not publishing the standing of the homesteads is in line with the policy of the department which was adopted under conditions that were of course different from those which prevail to-day. The conditions may have changed so that that is not sound policy any longer and that is a matter for fair consideration, but as the hon. gentleman has asked me why the condition has been such as he states, I am giving him the information. Any one who has lived in the country a long while and is acquainted with the homestead conditions will fully appreciate the condition.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. It would be impossible for a party applying to cancel to have cancellation proceedings taken unless the man who made the homestead entry has not complied with the regulations, and I cannot see why this should be kept secret.

Mr. INGRAM. Suppose a person induces another to sign an application and the other simply signs to accommodate him, that would be a fake application.

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. INGRAM. If it is a fake application, how is the minister to know whether the party complies with the regulations or not.

Mr. OLIVER. That is what I have been telling the committee for some time. Agents are making up the lists of the lands which have been under entry for over a year. The homestead inspectors are sent out to inspect these lands, and if they find them unoccupied and without improvements, the entries are cancelled.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. How many homestead inspectors are there in Saskatchewan at the present time who are outside the limits of their local offices ?

Mr. OLIVER. I am not in a position to give that information at the moment, but I will be able to give it when the item of Dominion lands is under consideration.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. When does the examination begin ?

Mr. OLIVER. The homestead inspectors have not started to work yet. The lists are being made up ready for them to start, and they are to start on the 17th.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There seems to be a great deal in what my hon. friend from Calgary has urged. I have had no experience in the administration of the public lands of the Dominion and know nothing about it practically. But I have had experience of similar matters in my own province, both in the Crown Lands department and in the Mining office. The policy pursued there—and I think rightly—was that every record with respect to applications for lands or minerals was open to the public on the payment of a nominal fee. With this publicity I can understand the danger of claim-jumping which has been referred to. But there are dangers on the other hand, dangers growing out of secrecy in withholding these records. There is always the suspicion on the part of the public that things are being done in an unfair way in the land office, and this it seems to me is a greater disadvantage than the other. There is a public domain belonging to this country which is open to claim under the statutes by any citizen. It seems to me that this being a question of title, the records should not be kept secret, whether in Ottawa or in any land office in the west. They should be open to any citizen, and if there is to be any relief against claim-jumping it should be by means of some discretion vested in an independent officer, in a court, or possibly in some officer of the department. I would prefer that this discretion should be in some independent judicial officer who would act within certain limits fixed by statute. I believe that the minister, on reflection, will say that secrecy in respect of these records is not good policy. I have heard a great many suspicions expressed about the department which I will not remark upon in detail, but which go to prove to me that there is danger in a policy of secrecy. These suspicions, I am willing to concede, for the purpose of this argument, are groundless, but, though groundless, they are nevertheless freely expressed. If the records of the department are open to the public, and if everything done in the department is subject to public inspection, that would afford the best guarantee that the management of the department would be above suspicion.

Mr. INGRAM. I moved some time ago for a copy for all forms of application of homestead entries for a number of years back. If that return has not been brought down——

Mr. OLIVER. I placed that return on the table to-day.

Mr. LAKE. I understood that this discussion was more or less a preliminary canter to give the minister an idea of the information that we would want later on. There is one matter concerning which I would like information. The people of Canada have grown accustomed to divide their immigrants into three classes—first, those from the British Islands ; second, those from the United States ; and, third, those from the continent of Europe. Has the minister a calculation of the cost of procuring the average individual immigrant in each class ? What is the amount expended by the government on each of these branches ?

Mr. OLIVER. I cannot give the figures at this moment, but they are contained in the annual report of the department.

Mr. LAKE. I have not had time to go through that report completely. Can the hon. minister bring down an approximate statement of the amount expended on account of immigration into Canada from the United States, covering separately the amounts spent in literature, advertising and salaries of officials, and the same thing for the United Kingdom and the same thing for the continent of Europe ?

Mr. OLIVER. I have given the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lake) the salaries and commissions. The advertising is as follows :

Lord & Thomas, Chicago..	$15,617 65
Chicago Newspaper Union..	10,511 73
Western Newspaper Union..	16,946 96
A. N. Kellogg Newspaper Company	10,675 79
Rand, McNally & Company, maps, &c...	46,500 00

That is the list for the United States.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. May I direct the attention of the minister to a return, ordered on March 14, of correspondence during the past two years between the High Commissioner and Mr. Preston, also copies of the correspondence between Mr. Griffiths, secretary to the High Commissioner and Mr. Preston. I do not know whether that has yet been brought down.

Might I suggest to the minister that it would be desirable to have it brought down before we finish this item.

Mr. OLIVER. It is in process of being copied, but I will see it is expedited.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If there is any correspondence between the department and Mr. Preston and Mr. Griffiths, relating to the subject of the correspondence mentioned in the return, I would like to have it also to make the file complete.

Mr. LAKE. The minister has not yet given all the information I asked for. I would like to have a table compiled of the sums spent on advertising, salaries, &c., for the three different classes of immigrants in the three different countries.

Mr. OLIVER. All right.

Mr. WM. WRIGHT. Will these officials appointed to distribute immigrants arrange for the distribution of any other classes of immigrants than agricultural labourers and domestic help ?

Mr. OLIVER. Not in Ontario. Of course the general distribution is at Winnipeg for the Northwest, but we are only takng part in the distribution of farm labourer and domestic help in Ontario.

Some resolutions reported.

On motion of Hon. William Paterson, House adjourned at 12.55 a.m., Saturday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, April 9, 1906.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 98) respecting the Central Ontario Railway.—Mr. Northrup.

Bill (No. 99) respecting the Mather Bridge and Power Company—Mr. German—by Mr. Guthrie.

Bill (No. 100) respecting the Alberta Railway and Irrigation Company—Mr. Turriff —by Mr. S. J. Jackson.

FRUIT MARKS ACT AMENDMENT.

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 100) to amend the Fruit Marks Act, 1901. He said : Mr. Speaker, I have no doubt the House would like a little explanation of the reasons for this Bill. We have had in operation now for about five years a Fruit Marks Act, which during that time has, I believe, on the whole worked very satisfactorily. The demand which existed for such legislation prior to the passage of that Act has been amply met. But since then there has been improvement and progress in the trade which justify some steps in advance being taken, and for a year or more past representations have been made to me in favour of one or two changes in the Act. In order that the question might be thoroughly discussed and that I might obtain the real feelings of the people interested, I took upon myself this year to call a conference of the fruit growers and others interested in the fruit business, which conference took place at Ottawa about two weeks ago. The administration of this Act and many other matters connected with the fruit business were thoroughly discussed, and the result was the passage with great unanimity, I may say, of a number of resolutions on the part of those present, and it is largely upon those resolutions that the proposed amendments to the Act are founded. I will not go into the general question any further, but I would like to point out the main provisions of the amendments. Section 4 of the Act provides that closed packages for sales shall be marked as follows:

(a) with the initials of his Christian names, and the full surname and address of the packer;

(b) with the name of the variety or varieties; and

(c) with the designation of the grade of the fruit, which shall include one of the following six marks : for fruit of the first quality, No. 1 or XXX.; for fruit of the second quality, No. 2 or XX.; and for fruit of the third quality, No. 3 or X.; but the said mark may be accompanied by any other designation of grade provided that designation is not inconsistent with, or marked more conspicuously than, the one of the said six marks which is used on the said package.

A certain amount of confusion has arisen and a desire has been strongly expressed to simplify the marking of our fruit packages. Those present at the conference who were consulted expressed a strong desire to do away with the X mark, partly to simplify matters and partly because it had been found that those marks were very easily changed. For instance, a package might be marked XX and a purchaser might easily change it to XXX by adding another X, and even X might be changed to XXX without the knowledge of the original packer, and greatly to his prejudice. For these reasons it is suggested that in future this clause should omit the X marks, though they would not be absolutely forbidden. So that, even if the package were marked No. 1, XXX might be put on the package also if the packer or dealer preferred to use the latter mark, but he must put on No. 1, No. 2 or No. 3, as the case may be. This does away with the facility of changing the marks, and will also no doubt in a short time lead to the exclusive use of the terms 'No. 1,' 'No. 2' and No. 3.' There was, however, a very strong feeling evinced that in No. 1, which is the quality of our fruit in a great majority of cases, there is a decided variation. Fruit might not only come up to No. 1 as defined by the Act, but might be a great deal better, and therefore a request was made to have a superior grade to No. 1, which would be called 'Fancy,' so that in the amendment as proposed the new clause will read in this way—I will not read the first parts of it:

(c) with a designation of the grade of fruit, which shall include one of the following four marks, viz.: 'Fancy,' 'No. 1,' 'No. 2' and 'No. 3,' but the said mark may be accompanied by any other designation of grade or brand, provided that such designation or brand is not inconsistent with, or marked more conspicuously than the one of the said four marks, which is used on the said package.

Then I come to the amendment of clause 6 in the Act, which says:

No person shall sell, or offer, expose or have in his possession for sale any fruit packed in a closed package, upon which package is marked any designation which represents such fruit as of finest, best or extra good quality, unless such fruit consist of well-grown specimens of one variety, sound, of nearly uniform size, of good colour for the variety, of normal shape and not less than ninety per cent free from scab, worm holes, bruises and other defects, and properly packed.

That is the only definition in the Act. Grades number two and three have never been defined and there was a very strong feeling amongst dealers and packers that there should be a definition of these other grades as well as grade number one. The only difficulty was to find a definition that would be satisfactory. A great many were suggested but no satisfactory definition of number two could be found. I am glad, however, that at the conference, we came to an agreement on a definition which I think is practical and which I have embodied in this measure. I am therefore proposing a clause which will read as follows:

No person shall sell or offer, expose or have in his possession for sale, any fruit packed in a closed package upon which is marked any designation which represents such fruit as of—

(a) Fancy quality unless such fruit consists of well grown specimens of one variety, sound, of uniform, and of at least normal size and of good colour for variety, of normal shape, free from worm holes, bruises, scab and other defects and properly packed.

That is a definition which is more particular than the definition of number one in the Act. Number one quality remains practically the same, there being no change except a slight one in the wording which makes it better in form. Number two is thus defined:

Number 2 quality, unless such fruit consist of specimens of not less than nearly medium size for the variety and not less than 80 per cent free from worm holes and such other defects as cause material waste, and properly packed.

There was a very long, but harmonious discussion in the conference with regard to these points, anl I am glad to say that it terminated by the practically unanimous decision that these definitions were workable. There is another amendment in section nine of the Bill, which is a more administrative change. The last clause says:

The inspector shall give notice by letter or telegram to the packer whose name is marked on the package before he marks the words 'falsely packed or marked' on the package.

That is a slip in the wording of the Act. Our inspectors have had to ignore it, so that we propose to substitute for the words 'before,' &c., 'within twenty-four hours after' &c. The inspector shall be obliged to notify the packer within twenty-four hours after marking the package instead of before. It is a mere change to make the Act workable without taking from its meaning or intent.

Mr. BLAIN. Will these proposed amendments apply to apples packed in boxes the same as in barrels?

Mr. FISHER. To all closed packages.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

WATERWAYS COMMISSION

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to inquire whether the joint report of the Canadian section of the waterways commission has been printed for distribution and distributed?

Hon. CHAS. S. HYMAN (Minister of Public Works). I hope to have it distributed almost immediately. Not a day has been lost since we received the report.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The report of the United States branch is already printed and available to us.

Mr. HYMAN. They may not have reported at the same time.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think about the same time.

JAPANESE TREATY.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would call the hon. the First Minister's attention to our request for documents connected with the Japanese treaty.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The Japanese treaty is not yet received.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Was it not concluded two months ago ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. We had a cable message that it was signed on January 31, but have received no further information since then.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would again draw attention to the delay in bringing down returns ordered. Hon. members on this side complain continually of this delay and business will be retracted in consequesce. I have taken every precaution to prevent any delay by giving the various departments notice ten days before the session that these documents would be moved for. We shall have to request that certain items stand until we have these returns.

Mr. W. H. BENNETT (East Simcoe) I desire to call the attention of the Minister of Public Works to two returns that I moved for some time ago. The first was in reference to the dry dock at Collingwood. I think the correspondence in that case must be rather short, and it is some time since the return was moved for. The other return was in relation to the amounts paid for dredging up to the end of last year.

Hon. CHARLES S. HYMAN (Minister of Public Works). The former return, I suppose, would not take long ; but I think the hon. gentleman will have to allow some time for the second, because of the fact that the information is not in the department. We have had to engage in correspondence with the outside engineers to get the facts. I will take a note of the point.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The report of the Department of Marine and Fisheries has not yet been brought down, unless it was laid on the table to-day as promised. If the minister (Mr. Brodeur) were here, I would like to ask him whether we may expect it to-day?

Hon. H. R. EMMERSON (Minister of Railways and Canals). Reference has been made by the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) to certain reports moved for but not brought down. I wish to explain that, so far as the Department of Railways and Canals is concerned, I think that practically every return asked for has been laid on the table, with one exception—the return relating to the water powers along the canals and streams. This return involves the Public Works Department as well as that of Railways and Canals. So far as the Department of Railways and Canals is concerned, it is practically impossible to secure immediately all the information called for. The return covers a wide extent of territory and necessitates reference to the superintending engineers of the several canals. Therefore I wish to explain to my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) that he must not expect that return for some little time. We are doing our best with respect to it. So far as the other returns are concerned, I think we have met the demands of the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Has the minister (Mr. Emmerson) examined the list of those in previous years ?

Mr. EMMERSON. As to the point raised by my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) concerning returns moved for in 1904, the custom of the Department of Railways and Canals has been, as I learned by reference to the former deputy, Mr. Schreiber, that, in the case of returns ordered during an expiring parliament, the returns were not brought down to a succeeding parliament. I have instructed the officials to attend to the several returns of last year which were not down at the close of the session. They were returns that involved a good deal of research, and we had to send to Moncton and other points for necessary information, the consequence being that returns were not ready at the time of the prorogation. We shall have these returns, however ; and I gave instructions the other day to have them forwarded at the earliest moment.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Of course, if that is the custom, and if the custom is in accordance with usage of parliament, it would necessitate unusual diligence on the part of the department in the closing year of any parliament to have the returns brought down before the close of the session in which they were ordered.

Mr. A. MARTIN (Queen's, P.E.I.). I understood the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Emmerson) to say that the returns ordered by this House relating to his department had all been brought down. I asked for a return on the 20th of March, and I am not aware that it has yet been brought down.

Mr. EMMERSON. Does my hon. friend (Mr. A. Martin) refer to motions made during the present session ?

Mr. A. MARTIN. Yes.

Mr. EMMERSON. I said that practically all the returns were brought down but a few that had been ordered very recently. The leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden), however, gave us notice before the opening of parliament of certain motions for papers that would probably be moved. The preparation of these papers was begun at the time. But the motion of my hon. friend (Mr. A. Martin) was not moved until recently. These papers are being prepared and we expect that they will be brought down before the House adjourns for Easter.

Bill (No. 84) respecting the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company.—Mr. Leighton McCarthy.)

QUESTIONS.

PAYMENTS TO WOODS, LIMITED.

Mr. FOSTER—by Mr. Lancaster—asked:

What amount of money has been paid to Woods, Limited, for supplies for the different departments of the government up to December 31, 1905, and what parts of the several amounts have been paid on contracts after public tender had been called for ?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). The amount paid by the Department of Marine and Fisheries to Woods, Limited, was $6,650.70, all without tender or contract. The amount paid by the Department of Railways and Canals, July 1 to December 31, 1905, was $322.49; by the Transcontinental Commission, July 31 to December 31, 1905, $8,639.99. These purchases were made from time to time to meet the immediate requirements without tenders.

The amount paid by the Militia Department was $93,689.16. Tenders were not called for by public advertisement, but were obtained by letter from other firms in the trade.

The amount paid by the Department of Public Works was $11,036.33—without tender. The amounts paid by the Department of Mounted Police were—under contract, $2,371.20 not under contract, without tender, $2,596.25.

CANADIAN PRESS ASSOCIATION.

Mr. TAYLOR—by Mr. Lancaster—asked:

1. Who constitute the Canadian Press Association ?
2. Does it submit any statement of its receipts and expenditure to parliament ?
3. In what way is the annual payment of fifteen thousand dollars made ?

INSPECTION OF FRUIT FOR EXPORT.

Mr. E. D. SMITH (Wentworth) moved for :

Copies of all letters, telegrams, communications and correspondence received since the first day of January, 1905, from any government, corporation, firm, or person, respecting the quality of fruit exported from Canada after having been inspected by the officers of the government, or relating to the inspection of such fruit ; and copies of all letters and communications from any department of the government in reply thereto.

He said : I am moved to propose this motion out of curiosity to know whether there has been during the past year only one case in which a slight mistake has been made in the packing of apples in this country. Having been a member of the committee which first framed the Fruit Marks Act, I am particularly interested to know if the Fruit Marks Act has been so conducive to straight and honest work in the packing of fruit for export, that there has been all through this year only this one slight complaint which has been published. This complaint was from a dealer in Birmingham ; at least that is the supposition. The government agent in Birmingham, at any rate, forwarded to the department a letter received from a dealer in Birmingham stating that a few barrels of apples had been marked 'A G Russet' and turned out to be 'Rox Russet.' This letter contained some very insulting and apparently malicious statements, and it was published by the government broadcast throughout the country to the serious damage of myself. My charge is that this is the only case, the first case out of perhaps hundreds, perhaps thousands of complaints some of them of the most serious nature where actual fraud no doubt existed that has been so published. Of course, having been intimately connected with the trade for the past 20 years I know that such cases exist in numberless numbers almost, and yet this is the first instance to my knowledge where a matter of this kind has ever been published. Now, the natural question that comes to my mind is : Why was this published and what is the future policy of the government with regard to the publication of every little mistake, or even of gross frauds, that may be committed in the packing of apples. I am perhaps justified in supposing that this publication was purely political or largely political. I am surely justified in assuming that when we know it was the first instance of publication, and that it was in reference to a very trivial matter. Perhaps it may have been done out of revenge, or out of pique, or out of spleen, because the government just a few months before lost the county of Wentworth which had been especially fixed up for them with two townships each of which gave a Liberal majority of 300 or 400 under normal conditions. The government having lost that county in a by-election the natural inference might be drawn that this was done out of revenge. I may be quite wrong in this, but that is an inference which might well be drawn, especially in view of the fact that the minister himself was in the constituency and made a desperate attempt, at least in those two townships, where he was surrounded by a supposed majority of three or four hundred of his friends, to elect a lumber merchant and defeat a farmer. I would not have been so much surprised at that in any other minister ; and under the circumstances I am not surprised that this letter was published, I will not say by the Department of Agriculture, but by the Department of Trade and Commerce.

Now, I would like to know from the minister what is to be the future policy with regard to this matter. Up to the present time, so far as I am aware, no one has been fined or punished in any way for misnaming a barrel of apples. That is something which is sure to happen in the experience of every packer. I defy any man to engage in the work of picking and packing apples for several weeks without making a mistake in the naming of some of the varieties. I could place on the table of the minister twenty varieties of apples which he himself could not name. How is it to be expected, then, that the foremen of thousands of gangs that it is necessary to employ in the short season in which it is necessary to pack apples, should know every variety ? It is impossible the best experts the minister has could not tell the names of some of these varieties. For that reason it would be absurd and ridiculous to punish men who innocently or ignorantly make a mistake. The right principle is to punish them only when fraud is intentionally committed. But here was a case in which there was no charge or suspicion that any fraud was perpetrated; it was only a slight mistake on the part of a packer; but it was published broadcast, simply because in the letter certain assertions were made which were supposed to be very damaging to a political opponent. I would like to know if in the future, in the hundreds of mistakes of this kind which are made in the country, men's names are going to be published ? If not, why was this particular case selected ? I may say that this particular shipment of apples might have been sold as easily for Roxbury russets as for Golden russets. Messrs. A. & H. Goodwin, of Manchester, to whom they were sold, did not ask for golden russets; they simply asked for russets. That fact does not imply that the man who packed them should not have named them properly; but I mention that to show that there was no fraud. The man who bought them in Birmingham has never yet made any complaint to me or to Mr. Goodwin, of Manchester, from whom the apples were bought, in regard to their having been misnamed. What do you think of a man who, instead of writing to, or calling up by phone, the man in the next town from whom he bought the apples, one of the most reputable firms in Britain, and seeking to get redress from him, writes to the government ? And what do you think of the government which, without inquiring into the merits of the case, deliberately publishes that letter throughout the country for the purpose of injuring a political opponent? That leads me to the belief that this man was incited to write this letter, probably by the political agent of the government in Birmingham. I do not wish to take up the time of the House with a personal matter, but it seems to me that this was done for a political purpose rather than for any other.

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture). Mr. Speaker, I need scarcely say that I am very glad to accept this motion and to ask the House to pass it. The hon. gentleman has spoken about an incident connected with his own trade, as to which I have very little to say. The letter referred to was published by the Department of Trade and Commerce, not by the Department of Agriculture. It was published along with a number of other letters or statements in regard to the trade of our various products in England. I am not sufficiently versed in the doings of the Department of Trade and Commerce to say whether this is the only statement with regard to an individual that has ever been made in Canada. I am therefore not going to dispute the hon. member's statement, which, so far as his knowledge goes, may be correct; whether it is really correct or not I am not sure. The hon. gentleman seems to think that the letter was published with a design upon himself. I do not think that at all. I do not believe that my colleague, in the administration of the Department of Trade and Commerce wished to make any political capital out of the matter, and I am quite sure that I have not any such intention or desire. The Department of Trade and Commerce has been issuing reports on our trade in England in different Canadian products; and for many years, even before we had regularly accredited agents in England, that department has been advising our people in Canada to be extremely strict and accurate in the way in which they fulfil English orders or the way in which they mark their goods in sending them to England. It has come under my own observation in England, as well as in letters received from England, that one of the complaints frequently made in regard to Canadian exports to the English market, is that they do not strictly fulfil the orders given to them, and not unfrequently send goods of a slightly different character from those ordered. So far as my own personal knowledge goes, I cannot say whether these criticisms are justified or not; but I fear, from the reports which I have received, that they are to a certain extent justified. They are often accompanied with other criticisms in regard to the business methods of our exporters—with regard to prompt correspondence, acceptance of orders the non-fulfilment of orders, and things of that kind. I think it is well that such criticisms should be brought to the attention of our exporters, so that they may see the difficulties that our trade meets in the English market, and endeavour to overcome those difficulties. In my own administration of the Department of Agriculture I have always considered it best not to use the names of parties concerning whose products we have had any report. In our departmental work a great deal comes under our observation which we must summarize and give to the public en bloc as we do in the census reports and other statistical work. It is only in our private communications with individuals that we mention their names. I am not aware whether that is the course followed by the Department of Trade and Commerce. In the case in question, it was not. They did publish the name of the hon. member for Wentworth, but I am not in a position to say if that is the only case.

Mr. INGRAM. In what monthly report of the Department of Trade and Commerce will we find that ?

Mr. FISHER. I do not remember which month. In fact I do not know that the report of the Department of Trade and Commerce in that regard is monthly. I think that the officer at Ottawa in charge of the commercial agencies in Europe generally publishes those reports as they come in. Whenever there is a letter from one of our commercial agents abroad on a matter of public interest, I think the officer in charge publishes it at once or very shortly, but I am not quite sure whether these reports are published periodically or not. I know there is a report of the Department of Trade and Commerce which does come out periodically, but I think that in addition letters from commercial agents on matters of interest to the trade are frequently given the press. I do not know whether the communication referred to was one of those, but my hon. friend from Wentworth will be a better authority on that point. I want to assure my hon. friend that there was nothing political in this matter on my part, nor, I am satisfied, on the part of my colleague. We all desire to improve on our methods in the export trade ; we all desire that the reputation of Canadian products should not be impaired in any way, We all desire that the relations between the Canadian sellers and the buyers abroad shall be of the most satisfactory character. I shall not go into any details with regard to this particular shipment. My hon. friend, who is a dealer in fruit, will know the details better than I do. This is a matter I would like to deal with from an entirely impersonal point of view and that is the way in which I would like to see parliament discuss it. My hon. friend is moving for correspondence respecting the quality of the fruit exported from Canada after having been inspected by the officers of the government. I am doubtful whether there is any correspondence in my department which would come under that motion. Every package of fruit is not inspected, and unless a package had been inspected and stamped 'falsely marked', we would have no correspondence about it. There are hundreds of thousands of barrels and boxes of apples shipped from Canada to Great Britain every year, only a small portion of which are ever inspected. It was never intended that we should have a complete inspection of our export trade and still less of our internal trade. The Act authorizes the appointment of inspectors and provides that fruit, in a closed package, shall be marked in the proper way, but it leaves the packer to fulfil the law and if he does not he is open to attack. He may be attacked by the government inspector or by the private individual who has suffered in consequence of the wrong marking or packing. Our permanent inspectors are only eight in number with four or five employed only part of the year. If we were to undertake to thoroughly inspect every package of fruit, even of our export trade alone, it would be quite impossible for ten times that number of inspectors to do the work. ' When the Fruits Marks Act was introduced, I was accused of wanting to make places for party friends. Had that been my intention, I might have appointed two hundred or three hundred inspectors instead of only eight permanent ones and four or five temporary. That being the case, I fear that my hon. friend will get a very small return to his motion. We have a good deal of correspondence about fruit packages and the export of fruit, from people on the other side of the Atlantic as well as from people in this country from those who have been warned and from those who have suffered from wrong packing—very interesting matter and from a large number of people. But as the motion reads, it will cover, few, if any, of the letters in the department. I am quite ready to accept a modification of the order, should my hon. friend wish it, so as to cover a larger mass of correspondence. I draw his attention to the fact so that, if he wishes anything different from what he has really said, the amendment can be made.

I do not know that it is necessary for me to enlarge upon the matter to which my hon. friend has referred. The subject is a very interesting one and covers a good deal of ground. It is a subject upon which the department has secured a mass of very important information, because of the somewhat close supervision of the whole trade with such inspection as seems to be necessary to check intended fraud and to find out defects in method and warn people of these defects. By reason of what we have been able to do in years gone by we have been constantly improving in our work of supervision, and have been getting more and more in touch with the trade and have been able from time to time to give them information which is of great use to them and which helps to safeguard this very important portion of our Canadian export trade. I shall be glad to have any suggestion from my hon. friend if he wishes to add anything to his motion.

Hon. JOHN HAGGART (South Lanark). Some time ago I saw in the newspapers the correspondence to which my hon. friend from Wentworth (Mr. E. D. Smith) refers. I read that correspondence with a great deal of curiosity. It covered the complaint of somebody who, if I remember well, had purchased about twenty barrels of apples from a dealer in England. He alleged that he had bought a particular kind of russet and that when he came to open the barrels he found that the apples were of a different kind or that there was a mixture of a different kind and he claimed that there has been fraud on the part of the seller. But from the statement of the hon. gentleman, and from the correspondence itself, what are the facts? The facts are that there are two kinds of russets grown in that part of the country so much alike that only an expert can distinguish them. And there seems to be absolutely no difference in the quality—experts would as soon have one as the other. But the two were mixed in the shipment. The hon. member for Wentworth says that in selling the goods he did not guarantee any particular kind of russet. How, then, does it come that this complaint comes from the purchaser outside of Birmingham past the Birmingham seller to Canada and is published as a reflection upon my hon. friend from Wentworth?

Mr. FISHER. I think my hon. friend (Mr. Haggart) is not stating the case quite correctly. The apples were marked Golden russets. But apparently they were Roxbury russets.

Mr. HAGGART. The minister (Mr. Fishers differs in his statement from the hon. member from Wentworth.

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. HAGGART. I understood the hon. gentleman (Mr. Smith) to state that the apples were not branded as being any particular kind of russet.

Mr. FISHER. I did not so understand the hon. gentleman. He said the order he received was simply for russets. But under our law, the apples must be marked showing what kind of russet they are. And I understand that they were branded ' Golden russets' when, as a matter of fact, as I understand, they were Roxbury russets.

Mr. HAGGART. The fact remains, as my hon. friend (Mr. Smith) states, that only an expert can distinguish the difference. But what is the queer, the anomalous thing about this transaction ? It is that, although the department has received hundreds of letters of this kind, not one of them has ever before been published with the name of the party affected until this particular letter reached them. And why was this one published? Was it because of any gross fraud perpetrated by the hon. member for Wentworth? Nothing of that kind is even alleged. I have read with interest and with great pleasure the reports of the Department of Inland Revenue showing the results of analyses made of jams, jellies and canned goods from one end of the Dominion to the other. My. hon. friend from Wentworth occupies the proud position of being one canner—not, perhaps the only one, but standing first among them—in the case of whose goods no adulteration has been found. Why is it that in this particular case he is the only man selected among all the shippers of apples to find his name published as that of one who has wrongly branded the barrels ? It cannot be, as I have said, because it is necessary to repress any gross fraud or crime, for, in this case no wrongdoing worthy of the name is even alleged, because only an expert can distinguish these russets in appearance and taste, and as to quality there is no choice whatever. My hon. friend (Mr. E. D. Smith) is perfectly justified in his statement that the only reason possible is that he is a member, and a prominent member, of the opposition in this House and that he has been successful within the last few months in a contest in his constituency. What petty politics. To what low level hon. gentlemen opposite have descended in selecting my hon. friend who stands foremost as a fruit grower and canner in the Dominion to herald his name from one end of the country to the other as that of one who commits frauds in sending out his goods.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Carleton). There is something further to be said. While the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) professes that he is not able to answer for the Department of Trade and Commerce as to the policy which may be pursued in these matters, there should be some one who can answer for the government. If no one can answer but the Minister of Trade and Commerce, perhaps we had better send to another place and bring that gentleman here in order that he may answer for himself. If it is the policy of the government that whenever a letter such as that referred to has been received by any department of the government it shall, under certain circumstances be given to the public press without any communication to the gentleman whom it affects, it would be well for us to be informed what the conditions are under which this will be done. It is a most unusual circumstance that has been detailed by the hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. E. D. Smith).

No complaint was made either to him or to the Manchester firm, and without any such complaint having been made, without any defect or difficulty having been brought to his knowledge, he is confronted with a communication published by the government of this country in every newspaper throughout Canada. It seems to me a remarkable condition. If the rule is a universal one, why has it not been applied universally. In such a case as that, the government would do well to communicate, first, with the exporter and ascertain from him what the real facts are. Differences of opinion might arise, there might be a question of fact, there might be a different explanation of the circumstances. But I now understand they did call upon the hon. gentleman first, and he made a certain answer; yet immediately, without any further investigation, and apparently without any report in respect of what, after all, turns out to be a very small matter, the whole correspondence is published. Will the Minister of Agriculture, or will the Prime Minister, or any other member of the government, inform the House how many complaints of this character have been received, let us say during the last fiscal year ? Is this the only one? If it is the only one, and if the government have adopted the policy of publishing all such letters in the newspapers, we can understand that. If there have been a great many of these complaints and this is the only one that has been published, or if only a few of them have been published, we cannot very well understand that. I think the request of my hon. friend from Wentworth (Mr. E. D. Smith) that the policy of the government in such matters should be declared to the House, is a reasonable request, and one as to which we should have some information before the motion passes.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). In view of the remarks which have just been made by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) and in view of the remarks previously made by the hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. E. D. Smith), I would like the House to read the motion now in the hands of Mr. Speaker. It is in these terms :

> For copies of all letters, telegrams, communications and correspondence received since the 1st day of January, 1905, from any government, corporation, firm, or person, respecting the quality of fruit exported from Canada after having been inspected by the officers of the government, or relating to the inspection of such fruit ; and copies of all letters and communications from any department of the government in reply thereto.

When this motion was brought to the attention of the government, of course there was no objection to it. Everybody will realize that the hon. gentleman who made the motion was entitled to the information it calls for, though it is of a very broad character, and will involve a very large amount of correspondence. But it seems after all that the object of the hon. mover of this resolution when he asked for this bundle of hay, was simply to get out of it a needle. Well, it was impossible for the government to surmise that the hon. member for Wentworth, when he asked for this vast correspondence which covers months and months of time and reams of paper, which takes in a very large range of subjects—it was impossible to conceive that what he had in his mind was simply to obtain an explanation of the circumstance to which he has alluded.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The Minister of Agriculture says that the return as moved for will bring down nothing at all unless it is amended.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It will not obtain the information unless it is amended. But my hon. friend says his object was not at all to take exception to the character of the information that was sought for, but simply to complete it. But I ask the House to note this, that my hon. friend from Wentworth could have reached the object he sought and could have got the information he wished to lay before the House, far more accurately and much sooner if he had stated more clearly what it was he wanted. He now wants to know what is the practice of the government with regard to the publication of this bulletin which the department receives from its commercial agents, and especially with regard to this particular transaction. If he had so stated in his motion there would be no objection at all to give all the information he desires. Now it happens that under our system of government some of the ministers sit in this House and others sit in another branch of the legislature. The ministers who sit in this House can give information on a variety of subjects, but it often necessarily happens that the information which is sought for in this branch of the legislature can only be given by ministers who sit in another branch of the legislature. My hon. friend wants to know what is the practice of the Department of Trade and Commerce with regard to the publication of the bulletins which they receive. That is a reasonable question, but he realizes at once that it is impossible for me or for the Minister of Agriculture, without having some consultation with the Minister of Trade and Commerce, to give the information he desires at the moment. When the papers are brought down then my hon. friend will know what is the practice of the department. But he will surely realize that it is not reasonable for him to ask the department to furnish every detail as to the practice of the department in such matters.

Now let me go a little deeper into this matter. As I understood the remarks of the hon. member for Wentworth, he complained that the Department of Trade and Commerce have not given him any notice—if he did not say so I understood him to say so. I do not suppose there was any wrong intended in that. But it so happens that my hon. friend belongs to the very numerous tribe of Smiths. That is not a fault of the hon. gentleman, on the contrary it is quite a compliment. It is a very numerous family, I admit, and I do not suppose that when the officers of the department found the name of Smith in their correspondence, they at once, with malice prepense believed it was my hon. friend form Wentworth ; I presume they did not think of anybody in particular. Now the hon. gentleman says that it is impossible to distinguish the Roxbury russet from the Golden russet, that only an expert can do it. That is no criticism at all on the action of the Department of Trade and Commerce. But the law makes a difference between these two fruits, because one is some three shillings higher per barrel in price than the other. Therefore if it is impossible for any one but experts to distinguish Golden russets from Roxbury russets, then we either have to amend the law and make no distinction at all, or the fruit grower must employ an expert to pack the apples according to classification. I would be sorry to believe that there was any desire to cast any contumely upon the hon. member for Wentworth, who I believe is a perfectly honourable man. I do not think there was any such intention. At the same time, the Canadian public are very much interested in seeing that the Fruit Marks Act is carried out in its entirety, and they desire that every precaution should be taken to prevent what has taken place last year when complaints were made in the British market that Canadian packers are not obeying the law, and that consequently our fruits have suffered in reputation in that market. I am sure my hon. friend will be the first to agree to this and until I know to the contrary I would hesitate to believe that the Department of Trade and Commerce would desire to bring any contumely upon the hon. gentleman.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). I would like to say one word in regard to this matter. I understood from the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) that he regarded it as extremely important that the party filling the order should fill it accurately. The order was for russets, not specifying what kind of russets. Would it not be an accurate filling of the order to fill it with either kind even though they might not be equal in value or quantity ? I take it that the order would be specifically filled if it were filled with either Roxbury russets or Golden russets.

Mr. FISHER. One of the great advantages of the Fruit Marks Act is that fruit in closed packages must be marked with the exact name of the fruit in those closed packages. The dealers in England know that, they expect that the law will be fulfilled and therefore if fruit is marked wrongly it not only violates the law but it deceives the purchasing public in England.

Mr. SPROULE. The Act says that it shall be marked with the name of the variety or varieties. It so happens that there are two varieties of russets. The hon. gentleman says that in the interest of the fruit trade and for the preservation and promotion of that trade they should fill the orders accurately. Does he pretend to say that my hon. friend from Wentworth (Mr.

Smith) was not filling that order accurately if either one kind of russet or the other was put in it? He filled it with one kind of russet. It happens that that one was about equally as valuable as the other.

Mr. FISHER. No, not in the English market.

Mr. SPROULE. If you will look at the quotations you will see that they are exactly the same.

Mr. FISHER. I have in my hand the quotations of two or three months ago and Golden russets ruled from three to four shillings per barrel higher than Roxbury russets.

Mr. SPROULE. There are times and seasons when that will be the case because certain seasons are more favourable to one kind of russets than the other. But, I have heard this discussed among fruit men over and over again, and I have referred to the reports of the market where time after time Golden russets and Roxbury russets were quoted at nearly the same price in the English market. It is only at particular seasons that you see one kind bringing a little better price than the other. But, I am speaking in regard to the filling of the order. There was an order given. That order, I say, was filled accurately whether it was filled with one kind of russet or the other. There was no complaint on the part of the man to whom the fruit was consigned. He did not write back to say that any fraud had been committed or any injustice done him. It passed on to the next purchaser and there was no complaint back to the individual from whoim he had purchased. But, the report comes back to the department. From whom? From the commercial agent. I would like to ask right here! Who was the commercial agent? Was it the celebrated Jackson who used to be in South Oxford, who, for his rascality, might have been behind prison bars at the present time, who had proven himself to be the political tool of the hon. gentleman's friends and who, no doubt, or some one like him, reported back for the purpose of what? Striking a blow at a political opponent because it happened to be important to do so at that particular time. There seemed to be some other object than the protection and preservation of trade. When you consider that out of the hundreds of reports that are sent back of violations of the Fruit Marks Act and that no name is given to the public except the name of a member of parliament who happens to be a political opponent of the Minister of Agriculture you naturally ask yourself why his name is published. Yet, the name is published. I say that of all the picayune, low administrations of an Act that I ever saw or heard of this is one of the lowest, and I venture to say that if we ever get the information we will find that it comes from such a man as Jackson who is only a political tool of the government and who is venting his spleen on a political opponent. All the information should be brought down. The right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) says that he cannot answer for the Department of Trade and Commerce. He says that our system of government happens to be such that the representative of a department may be in the other chamber and that that is the case in the Imperial parliament as well as here. But, the universal custom when the minister in charge of a department happens to be in the other chamber is that some member of the government in the House of Commons is delegated to answer for him when information is called for; so that, there must be some one empowered to deal with such questions when they come before the Commons although the head of the department may be in the Senate. Where is the hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson)? Does not he belong to the Department of Customs? Where is he? Sitting right before me. And yet the right hon. First Minister says that our custom happens to be that when the head of this department is in the other House they cannot give specific information. Yet, the Minister of Customs sitting there ought to be equally as familiar as the Minister of Trade and Commerce with these questions. We have not the specific information we ought to have in regard to the Department of Trade and Commerce. I do not care whether the Minister of Customs is there or is not there, it is the duty of the government to provide an answer to these questions specifically in regard to any department the head of which happens for the time being to be in the Senate and not in the Commons. I say that the hon. Minister of Agriculture has made an exhibition that is neither creditable to himself nor to his department nor to the commercial agent. The hon. minister has seen fit to give to the public through a little political spleen at a particular time something to injure a political opponent while there are hundreds of greater offenders whose names are never given to the world.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. Mr. Speaker, with your permission I would like to amend the resolution by striking out after the word 'Canada' the words 'after having been inspected by the officers of the government.' I wish to point out in answer to the statement of the hon. minister that Roxbury russets are worth less than Golden russets, that I have in my hand an account of sales. This is the only case that I have been able to get hold of where the two varieties, were sold under the same mark or grade and shipped by the same man. It is therefore a fair comparison. I find in this catalogue that twenty barrels of Golden russets sold for 23¾ shillings; 25 barrels of Golden russets, 23¾ shillings; 25 barrels of Golden russets, 23¾ shillings; 19 barrels of Roxbury russets, 25¾ shillings; and a little farter down—17 barrels of Roxbury russets, 23 shillings; 18 barrels of Golden russets 22 shillings. These are under the same mark, and shipped by the same man. Still a little farther down in the catalogue I find 26 barrels of fancy Roxbury russets at 25½ shillings, and 24 barrels of fancy Golden russets at 20½ shillings, their being a difference of five shillings in favour of the Roxbury russets. These are the prices as quoted in that catalogue. These apples were of the same grade and packed by the same man.

I mentioned that merely to show there was no fraud, and moreover as my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) has stated this sale was made as 'russets' and there would have been no fraud even if they had been all 'Roxbury russets' and no 'Golden russets'. I believe that every barrel of apples should be properly marked; no one will stand more strongly for carrying out the Fruit Marks Act in its entirety than I will. But the point is that it is absolutely impossible to name every variety correctly and the Department of Agriculture knows that because out of the thousands of instances of violations of the Act in that respect they have never punished any one, and the reason is that it would be absurd to punish a man who had no intention whatever of attempting fraud. I have asked the minister, and it has not yet been answered. What is to be the policy of the government in the future? Is every man going to be punished who happens to name a variety wrongly; if so, then the packing of apples in Canada will have to cease because there are scores of varieties that the best experts cannot name, let alone the ordinary men we have to employ in the fall of the year. The minister knows that and so attempts to punish have only been made in cases of fraud. Now, this was a very simple case that occurs every day, and why was this particular letter published? Well, I believe it was published simply because it contained damaging assertions by the man who wrote the letter in addition to the statement that the apples were of a different variety from that named on the head of the bill. I do not wish to take up the time of the House, but I do want to see whether there is not some one else in this country who has made the same mistake as was made in this case, and whose mistake was not published to the people of Canada.

Mr. FISHER. I am very glad to accept the change in the motion, but it will of course call for a very much larger mass of correspondence than the original. I shall be very glad to have that correspondence prepared as quickly as possible although it will probably take some little time. In reply to my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule); the agent who made this report was Mr. Ball the commercial agent at Birmingham. In reply to my hon. friend from Wentworth, I beg to say that since I spoke I remember that there has been a statement in regard to either an individual or a firm of the name of Coyle, also packers and exporters, which has been published in the last few weeks, very much in the same way that the other statement was published. There may have been other statements of a similar character which have not been published although I am under the impression that there have not been reports dealing with individual names. The statement of the Prime Minister in regard to the department dealing with this matter, had reference to that particular point no doubt. It is not for me here to-day to give a statement as to the policy of the Department of Trade and Commerce, that would have to be discussed with the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. As to the other case which the minister says has been published; was not that a case where the man was arrested and fined?

Mr. FISHER. He was arrested here and fined for another case, but there was also a statement published as to a shipment of his which had been sold in England and arrived in England and was criticised there by the commercial agent. My hon. friend (Mr. Smith) had reference to one case, and I had reference to another in connection with somebody by the name of Coyle. I do not know whether it is the same person or not; there may have been two Coyles, but I do not know as to that. I instanced that as another case in which the individual was named very much in the same way as in this other case. Whether these are the only instances in which individual names have been complained of, I can only find out by reference to the Department of Trade and Commerce and I shall do so. My hon. friend complains of my not dealing with the matter, but the Minister of Trade and Commerce being in another chamber we can only give certainties after referring to the minister in charge of the department.

Mr. SPROULE. Knowing that this question was coming up one would think that the Minister of Agriculture would be prepared with the information and able to give an answer.

Mr. FISHER. I had not the slightest idea as to what particular point in regard to fruit shipments my hon. friend (Mr. Smith) was going to bring up. In fact the personal turn taken by this debate is quite a surprise to me. Had I known my hon. friend was going to bring this point up I would have tried to get the information, but I thought he was going to deal with the general question of cold storage shipments of fruit and I have at hand information on that question.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. Does not the minister consider the publication of this letter an extremely severe punishment for a very trivial offence ?

Mr. FISHER. That would depend altogether upon the offence.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. The minister knows well what the offence is.

Mr. FISHER. I think that probably in many cases the publication of a statement that an individual had been offending against the Act would be as severe, if not a severer, punishment than a fine. The gravity of the publication of the letter is entirely measured by the opinions which would be created by it.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. Is it the intention of the department to punish every case of misnaming of varieties ?

Mr. FISHER. That is a matter I will have to consider.

Mr. A. B. INGRAM (East Elgin). The hon. gentleman from Wentworth is quite justified in speaking as he did on this question and I cannot understand why the Minister of Agriculture should find fault with him.

Mr. FISHER. I am not finding fault with him in any shape or way. I am not criticising him in any way, but not knowing what he was going to say I could not provide the information beforehand.

Mr. INGRAM. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fisher) in his farming operations were criticised as the hon. gentleman from Wentworth has been, he would have come before this House and offered not a mild speech like my hon. friend (Mr. Smith) but probably a more strenuous one. If we look at the report of the Trade and Commerce Department for the year ending June 30, 1905, we will find in it sufficient to draw the attention of shippers and packers of apples to the necessity of properly marking their fruit. At page 19 of this report over the signature of F. C. T. O'Hara, I find :

> The undersigned had occasion to comment last year somewhat severely upon the complaints received from commercial agents with reference to export methods, packing of goods, indifference to correspondence, goods not being up to sample, &c., upon the part of Canadians doing business abroad. Shortly thereafter, one of the most influential boards of trade in Canada suggested that commercial agents should not be so prone to complaining of Canadian business methods. Instructions were promptly sent, however, to the agents to avoid 'arm chair criticism.'

This is no arm chair criticism ; this is sledge hammer criticism perpetrated upon the hon. member for Wentworth.

> —but to continue to report facts whenever they were presented. The general criticism has since been less frequent and the number of specific complaints have also been less numerous. Last year only the worst cases were referred to and they made a formidable array of evidence damaging to the reputation of Canada. This year all the specific charges made by commercial agents are referred to, and though some are severe, on the whole there appears to have been less cause for direct complaint.

Therefore, according to this report the complaints are fewer than they were previously.

Now, it seems to me that the department could have sufficiently served the cause of justice by communicating with Mr. Smith and calling his attention to the matter; but not satisfied with that, the department thought proper to circulate broadcast, in almost every newspaper in Canada, the statement that the hon. member for Wentworth was committing fraud in the shipment of his apples. Coming to Ottawa on the train one day, I was discussing this question with a prominent Canadian shipper of apples, who complained strongly of the working of the Fruit Marks Act. He said that he had shipped thousands of barrels of apples to Great Britain, and had taken every means in his power to have them properly packed and properly marked ; that he had gone so far that in employing men he had paid them more than they had asked for packing apples, on the condition that they would properly pack them and properly mark them ; but after having done all this he had found the very men so employed to be packing inferior apples when he wanted them to pack only apples of the highest quality, and improperly marking them ; and that in many cases he had to take the barrels off the cars and re-pack them in order to have them properly marked. These are some of the difficulties that the shippers and packers of apples in this country have to contend with. He thought that the law was too severe upon men of his class, and that some amendment should be made for the purpose of punishing those men who did not properly carry out what they were employed to do. Therefore the department should exercise greater care and that in dealing with men engaged in this business, instead of circulating throughout the country a report that a fraud had been committed when as a matter of fact there had been no fraud at all.

Motion agreed to.

BARRISTERS IN THE GOVERNMENT.

On the notice of motion :

That in the opinion of this House it is expedient that any member of the government, or deputy head of a department, should act or appear as barrister, counsel or advocate in an action, suit or proceeding, except where the interests of the Crown are involved, in any court presided over by judges or a judge appointed by the government of Canada.—Mr. Lennox.

Hon. CHARLES FITZPATRICK (Minister of Justice). Will the hon. member allow that to stand over? I want to take up this matter when the resolution is moved, and I have not yet been able to look into it.

Motion allowed to stand.

MAPLE SYRUP—ADULTERATION.

Mr. GUSTAVE BOYER (Vaudreuil) moved (Translation):

That in the opinion of this House it is desirable that efficient means be taken at once to prevent the adulteration of maple syrups, a practice resorted to at present on a large scale to the detriment of farmers who produce the genuine article.

Mr. Speaker, during the last session the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Béland) inquired from the government whether they intend taking stringent measures against the adulteration of maple syrup and sugar.

I understand that the then Minister of Inland Revenue, now Minister of Marine and Fisheries, assumed the task of solving that important question, by carrying on investigations at various confectioneries, and factories turning out maple sugar, candies, etc.

As a result of such inquiries, have we sufficient grounds for introducing a Bill, or for amending previous legislation, dealing with the adulteration of all products likely to be adulterated and enacting penalties against any infringement of the law in this connection?

Judging from the complaints which are coming in from all parts, I am still satisfied that these acts are not effective or that they are nowhere enforced. The best evidence on this point may be found in the report of the chief analyst, which I shall now quote:

—		Pure.	Doubtful.	Adulterated.	Total.
1st lot..	I syrup..	17	4	76	97

2nd lot..	III syrup	44	2	29	75
	IV sugar	15	0	3	18
		88	8	116	212

If we distribute these samples by provinces according to their various origins, the following result is obtained:

The adulteration is effected by adding or substituting to, or mixing with, the genuine article foreign sugars or glucose.

The examination of samples collected in the various provinces goes to show that these syrups or sugars have not been manufactured, but are merely offered for sale in the provinces where they are found. The samples found to be spurious were supplied mostly by firms in Montreal, Toronto, Boston, St. John, N. B., Hamilton, London, Quebec, Winnipeg, Vancouver, etc., while, on the other hand, samples found to be pure had been obtained direct from the farmers. The manufacture of maple sugar is not equally developed throughout the various counties. While some have a very small output only, in others farmers derive from the same source a fairly good income. The county of Vaudreuil, whose representative in this House I have the honour to be, may be classed with the latter, a fact which is due to the presence of that picturesque mountain bearing the name of the locality wherein I live. That mountain is covered with maple groves, and a number of farmers living in the vicinity, manufacture either syrup or sugar. Consequently, the farming community of Vaudreuil county, interested as it is in the manufacture of maple sugar, and especially maple syrup, has just as great if not greater cause than, many others to feel anxious over the deplorable state of things which now exists; and, to my mind, they were fully warranted in voting the resolution which I shall submit to the House.

On September 4, 1905, the Co-operative Association of the Vaudreuil County Farmers' Institutes, whose membership reaches eight hundred, held its annual convention in the parish of Ste. Justine de Newton, and it was during that meeting of about 1,500 farmers that the following resolution was carried:

RESOLUTION.

Extract from the proceedings of the general meeting of the Co-operative Association of Vaudreuil County Farmers' Institutes, held at Ste. Justine, on September 4, 1905.

Resolved, That the Co-operative Association of Vaudreuil County Farmers' Institutes call the attention of the Dominion government to the manufacture of maple syrup and sugar throughout the country, and particularly in the province of Quebec. The Co-operative Association, many of whose members convert maple sap into syrup and sugar, are anxious that the Dominion parliament should take stringent measures against those who manufacture syrup and sugar out of various extraneous matters. The members are of opinion that the manufacture of spurious syrup and sugar is greatly injurious to the good name, as well as to the sale, of the syrup and sugar manufactured by themselves.

The association urges the passing of an Act, or the actual enforcing of any Act—if such already exists—distinguishing between the genuine maple sugar and the spurious article, and between the pure syrup and that adulterated by the addition of some extraneous matter or other; and urges further, that penalties should be enacted against those who may offer for sale goods of another description than those defined by law.

As one of the by-industries on many a farm, is the manufacture of maple syrup worthy of the attention of the government? I venture to answer: Yes. Now, let us see whether statistics warrant such an assumption on my part.

In 1901, Canada's output of sugar amounted to 17,804,825 lbs. Out of that total, the share of the province of Quebec aggregated 13,524,381 lbs., and that of Vaudreuil county, 138,961 lbs. In 1903, we exported to the United States and Great Britain for $190,344 worth. During the eight months ended February, 1905, we supplied to the two countries aforesaid for $87,925 worth. Now, let us assume that the average selling price was nine cents a pound; we shall reach, for the census year of 1901, the handsome figure of $1,462,434.25. Out of that, a sum of $12,523.40 was accruing to Vaudreuil county.

The above figures are not enormous, I readily admit; but let us not lose sight of the fact that the industry just now is carried on in a rather small way, and that the period during which the sap is running is comparatively very short.

That industry is not developed to any great extent because it is not giving very large returns to the original producer, who, lacking encouragement on the part of the consumer and baffled in his efforts by the rascally competition which he has to face, has come to consider that industry as unimportant.

Competition is an evil in that sense. Producers are unable to secure for the genuine article the price which vendors of spurious goods obtain for theirs, 50 cents a gallon being the regular price for adulterated syrup.

Many are the farmers who would be in a position to tap a great many more trees than they are doing now; those who are tapping 500, could just as well tap 1,000 or even 1,500, if only the product brought larger returns on the market.

At the same time, a thorough study of the question will reveal the fact that the manufacture of maple sugar would be a paying industry, if only the government provided the necessary protection.

It is asserted that the proportion of pure products delivered on the city markets does not represent twelve per cent of the total quantity of maple syrup and syrup handled by the trade. According to the departmental report, out of 212 samples tested, only 24 per cent turned out to be pure.

That is, Mr. Speaker, the gist of it all. Let us go over the facts of the case. In that industry, as well as in others, we find the actual, honest, producers, and, on the other hand, the dealers and imitators. The latter are those who should be dealt with.

The product of maple sap may be adulterated or modified in various ways, two of which should be more particularly noticed. First, by adding to the syrup, while it is being manufactured or afterwards, extraneous matters, such as linseed or corn sugar, foreign sugars, and so forth, which increase the bulk and enable the producer or vendor to realize thereby larger profits. Secondly, by adding to the sugar while it is being manufactured, stale syrups or sugars, muscovado or sweets of any origin. Third, by making a so-called maple syrup or sugar which does not contain a particle of maple sap. That form of adulteration, which is the worst, is also the most widespread. Fourth, if I am rightly informed, there is still another process of adulteration, which, although it may not be carried on with a bad intent, is none the less injurious to trade. I mean the act of the confectioner, who brands certain sweets as being made from pure maple syrup or sugar, when such is not the case. However, in this case the injury is not so great, the manufactured article having a value by itself through its exquisite flavour and make-up. Lastly, these articles remain in the country, while the syrup and sugar are for the most part exported to the United States. At the time of sale, these various adulterated, modified, or imitated products resemble very much the first-class quality of the genuine article, and in a great many cases, it requires an expert to know one from the other. However, at the end after a longer or shorter period, the adulterated product loses its flavour and its keeping quality is not equal to that of the genuine article.

There are to be found in our country two classes of adulterators: first those who carry it on in a small way, and secondly those who practice it on a large scale. Those of the first class do greater harm to themselves than to any others. They are mostly farmers who manufacture maple syrup and sugar in fairly large quantities and who alter these products by the processes which I have just mentioned, for the purpose of satisfying their greed. Their trade is always a local one, and, as it does not extend beyond the limit of their locality, they soon make a bad name for their goods and, the following year, have great difficulty in finding a market for them.

Adulterators on a large scale are more to be feared by the public at large and are liable to injure the country's good name as regards the sale of that particular product on foreign markets. These adulterators have a variety of ways of attaining their object. I may mention two instances to illustrate my point. The owner of a large sugar bush, in a county which I shall not name, at one time made up his mind to double his output of maple syrup. Being provided with the most modern apparatus, he is in a position to turn out a first rate article ? Now, what do you think he did ? He bought out all the inferior syrup manfactured in that vicinity, mixed it with his own, added to the mixture the quantity of glucose prescribed by experts in that art. A large shipment was first sent to this very city of Ottawa. The buyers found out the inferior quality of the product and its adulterated condition and refused to accept it. The owner then shipped it West ; he failed to dispose of it in Manitoba, and a part was forthwith shipped back to the maritime provinces. In brief, to make a long story short, the Ottawa buyers rejected the syrup and sent it back, in two other provinces the syrup is rejected, but not returned. However, in both cases, the dealer did not receive the price of the goods and the shipment was to him a net loss.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if such cases are of frequent occurrence, what will become of the good name of that industry ? The producer to whom I have just referred, himself shipped to England in cans of various capacities and bearing the name of the locality and of Canada, quantities of syrup. However, in the latter instance, I am not in a position to state that the article was adulterated, as it had not been manufactured in the same year as the lots I have just mentioned.

Here is a second instance. I stated previously that certain adulterators manufactured syrup which did not contain a particle of maple sap. To my knowledge, in a certain parish which I might name, some individuals have provided fraudulent vendors established in cities with water in which maple bark had been put to boil, and in which subsequently some essence had been introduced as the finishing touch to this almost miraculous transformation of water into genuine maple syrup, that great relish of epicures.

In view of these facts witnessed and deplored by all, would not the Government be justified in taking efficient steps towards repressing these evils. Are the existing laws against the adulteration of food products applicable to the adulteration of maple sugar and syrup ? I am of opinion they are to a certain extent. On the other hand, they appear to be inadequate and to afford protection of a very uncertain kind to honest producers, that is to farmers generally. Moreover, the manner in which they are to be enforced does not seem to be quite clear in the minds of those who are intrusted with their enforcement. In consequence, I submit that this honourable House should see to amend these Acts in a way that will insure from their enforcement more satisfactory and practical results.

Such a law should oblige any producer, selling maple syrup or sugar outside of his locality, or even within his locality to dealers who in turn will sell it, to brand his cans or packages with his name and that of the locality wherein he resides. In that way, whenever a government inspector chooses at random on the city markets, or in the wholesale stores, or at the retailers, samples of these products, he will be in a position, after testing them to find out by means of the brand, the person or persons who manufacture the spurious article or that of inferior quality.

Moreover, the wholesale dealer should be required to obtain from the producer a certificate guaranteeing the quality of the goods he is buying.

Penalties should be enacted against all adulterators. Lastly, provision should be made for protecting the honest against the dishonest producer.

It should be declared a misdemeanour to use packages or cans branded with another person's name for the sale of one's own modified or adulterated product. Laws stamped with the wisdom characteristic of the law-makers who make up this House, would no doubt help immensely in forwarding the interests of that industry.

The immediate result of such legislation would be to instill courage in the minds of honest farmers, and to induce them to carry on that industry on a larger scale, and in a more systematic way. For, I repeat it, the law should be unmerciful towards those unscrupulous producers who will soon have destroyed the bright prospects of that national industry. My object, Mr. Speaker, is not to stamp out entirely the manufacturing of syrup through the admixture of foreign syrup or sugar. I recognize to every man the right to dilute his wine with water. But what to my mind should not be tolerated, as unfair to the producer of the genuine article, it is the act of the adulterator, who sells as a pure article, that which is otherwise. In order that each one should have his share of credit and remuneration, it is necessary that a line of demarcation be drawn, and that the bottles, cans, &c., be branded in a way that precludes error and makes clear the true quality of the goods contained therein.

The manufacture of maple sugar in our country, especially in the province of Quebec, is worthy of the whole attention of the government. True, it is a by-industry as regards farming; but it is nevertheless a paying industry when properly managed. It is likely to give large returns, just as large as those which may be expected from other industries considered important. The dairy industry, at its outset, was not what it is to-day. It has developed largely as a result of the untiring efforts of governments, through their experimental farms, their schools of agriculture, their lecturers, their agricultural papers and periodicals, their bulletins, and the various bonuses granted in that connection. The bacon industry, which at the present time is carried on profitably in one province only, will before long have a strong foothold throughout the Dominion. And why? Because the Dominion government and the provincial governments have started a vigorous campaign in that direction. Now, let us see what the statistics say. The country as a whole has turned out last year, for a period of twelve months, about $80,000,000 worth of dairy products, both butter and cheese. Of bacon, it turned out about $20,000,000 worth, which gives an average of about $6,000,000 worth per month of dairy products and $1,500,000 worth of hog products.

On the other hand, the maple sugar industry turned out in the course of three weeks in the year 1901, an average approximately of $2,000,000 worth a handsome return, especially if we consider that the heavy expenditure required to carry on the former industries was unnecessary in this case.

The maple sugar industry is likely to develop, if we extend some inducement to those who are carrying it on, and if we build up a reputation for its products, in the markets of Europe.

Our country is equipped, if I may be permitted the term, for the manufacturing of maple syrup and sugar, and it will be for a long time to come. We have large maple groves in every direction. Even the older settlements in our counties, still have, for the greater part, sugar bushes of value distributed here and there, on the various homesteads.

As settlement goes on from day to day, new lands will be opened up for the incoming settlers, and a still greater field will be offered to that growing industry.

Just now settlers in the newer parts of the country, as well as the farmers in the older part, engage in that industry, more in the way of a pastime for the family than as to a business enterprise. However, things will take another turn, should the commercial aspect be attended to. Farmers will find therein a new source of income which will induce them to preserve the woodlands on their farms; and the settler, on the other hand, will be helped thereby in his efforts towards establishing a home for himself.

Then again, if nature has favoured us in this respect, it must also be stated that our farmers, have provided themselves with all necessary apparatus.

The modern evaporator has replaced the old-time caldrons; the sap spouts made of sumac have been replaced by others of more modern style, more serviceable and convenient. The work is carried on in a more rational and business-like way. The new methods permit a saving of fuel and consequently of time. Lastly, a great deal of drudgery, which in by-gone days rendered the work wearisome and slow, has been done away with under the new system. In many localities the only remnants of the past are those quaint customs in accordance with which lively groups of parents and friends congregated around the great black caldrons, lighted up by the flare of bonfires. I do not mean in any way to say that there are no more pleasure parties in the sugar bushes when the sap of the maple is running, but, at the same time, within the last decade or two, the plant and methods in use have progressed wonderfully.

We are apt to praise our beautiful country, we are apt to praise the resources contained in its soil. We are fond of expounding its forest and mineral wealth. We eulogize agriculture because it brings forth the producer, and thereby to the country, immense returns every year. People flock towards gold-mining countries, such as the Yukon, to Cobalt and elsewhere, to rend from the earth its precious metals. However, the natural riches which Providence has lavished on our country should not solely attract our attention. Should not the manufacture of maple sugar, whose development I am advocating just now, be considered as precious a gift of nature as the resources I have just mentioned? I say, the government would be warranted in doing whatever is required to turn the attention of the people towards that industry and to induce those who are in a position to do so to apply their energy towards the production of large quantities of a first-class quality of maple sugar and syrup. Let then the government begin right now to extend a helping hand to those who are manufacturing these products, by protecting them against adulterators of all kinds.

I beg to move that the motion be adopted.

Mr. EUGENE PAQUET (L'Islet). (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, I have listened with interest to the magnificent speech delivered by my hon. friend the member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Boyer). I am unable to follow him over the ground which he has covered, but I am able to say that the industry he has referred to, is not only of importance from the farmers' point of view, but is important as well from a business and even a national standpoint.

My hon. friend who has just spoken is not only the representative of the county of Vaudreuil, but the spokesman as well of all sensible people and an exponent of my own views on the subject. His eloquent appeal on behalf of that fine industry will go straight to the hearts of our farmers. He has the esteem and respect of all men who love agriculture and the industries connected with it.

I, for one, do not hesitate to say that the member for Vaudreuil is a very able lecturer, while at the same time quite capable of vindicating his principles, his ideas, and his opinions. But he is above all a man intent on vindicating on all occasions and under all circumstances, the interests of the farming community and of the labouring classes. He is a man whom I respect, because he is a lecturer for the provincial government. And right here, Mr. Speaker, let me state that the government of our provinces of Quebec and Ontario, have often sent throughout the country, to spread information concerning agriculture and industry men who unfortunately do not know anything about agriculture, industry and commerce. To-day my hon. friend for Vaudreuil, has expressd in a most admirable way the best feelings and the best thoughts which a noble-minded man can entertain towards the farming community.

This debate, Mr. Speaker, has taken me unawares. But there is one thing which strikes me just now, and especially as regards the province of Quebec, and it is this, that our governments have not always selected the most capable men to instruct the farming classes in the various constituencies. I must say that the hon. member for Vaudreuil is exceedingly well versed in agricultural science and his nomination by the government has been a very happy one.

I wholly agreed with the opinions expressed by the member for Vaudreuil on the manufacture of maple sugar and syrup. That industry has, within the last few years, made remarkable strides. It supplies quite a large trade, and I see with pleasure that the farmers in the various districts of our province, as well as of Ontario, have materially improved their equipment and their methods of work. They have kept up with the progress of science. Now, Mr. Speaker, these farmers, who turn out an excellent and pure article, who offer for sale genuine goods, are asking the government to protect them against the competition of spurious products which threaten to flood the market.

I do not intend just now, to engage in a political discussion; I only wish to invite the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue (Mr. Templeman) to follow on the footsteps of his predecessor, the hon. Mr. Brodeur, the present Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and who in that new position so well fulfils the duties of his new position. He is a man whom I respect, he is a man whom I esteem, for I believe that he is truly at heart a French Canadian. When he was Minister of Inland Revenue he well knew how to defend the interests of our race. Now that he is Minister of Marine and Fisheries, I trust that he will show in the future, as he has shown in the past, a spirit of fairness, and that not only will he be friendly to Montreal, but friendly as well to Quebec, and develop the route of the St. Lawrence, that route which is bound to be a means of insuring the prosperity, not only of our province, but of the country at large.

It seems to me that this question of the manufacture of maple sugar involves a good deal more than one would judge at first sight, and is closely interwoven with that of forestry. Too much importance then cannot be given to it. It should be taken up not only from the viewpoint of the local market but also from that of foreign markets which may offer very favourable outlets. You are in power, and consequently you are in a position to protect that industry. You exercise patronage, and have the right to enforce the existing laws, and, if necessary, enact new ones. You may appoint the necessary officers for the protection of that industry, in the same way as you can appoint lieutenant-governors, judges, or grant contracts to your friends.

For some years past, farmers have been going to considerable expense towards adopting modern methods and improving the processes of manufacture of maple sugar and syrup.

The output of these products has increased considerably through the efforts of our farmers. Our exports have gone up very much. In 1901, we exported for $96,000 worth of maple sugar; in 1902, $91,000; in 1903, $128,000; in 1904, $141,000. These statistics illustrate the forward movement of that truly national industry.

Besides, our farmers deliver on the local markets, at Fraserville, Lévis, and Quebec, a pure first rate product, free from adulteration. But they are anxious to be adequately protected against fraudulent vendors. On the 20th of February, 1905, in answer to my friend the member for Beauce, the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue stated :

> The department is taking stringent measures towards preventing the adulteration of maple sugar and syrup. Prosecutions have been instituted under the Adulteration Act. An inquiry will be made.

I have no doubt, the hon. minister has earnestly endeavoured to protect the interests of the farming community.

On the 24th of February, 1906, the hon. minister also said :

> As regards maple syrup and sugar, they are adulterated on a large scale with all sorts of ingredients. Usually cane sugar and glucose are used, and this constitutes an adulteration under the law, unless the manufacturer states on the brand that it is only a mixture.

I may urge on the government the necessity of exercising a more rigid oversight as regards these adulterations.

On the 20th September, 1905, at the fruit growers' exhibition, in St. Jean-Port-Joly, with Mr. Auguste Dupuis, one of the best horticulturists of Canada, as its distinguished president, we expressed our disapproval of the adulteration which is going on of maple syrup products. At that convention, experts had occasion to admire our exhibits of maple sugar and syrup.

That industry should be the object of the greatest attention on the part of the government. I repeat it, our farmers nowadays adopt the most modern methods. They have made sacrifices to further the progress of that industry.

The law protects them, but it may be that it is not enforced. And I hope that the department will take still more stringent measures with a view to safeguarding the interests of the agricultural community.

At 6 o'clock House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Hon. WILLIAM TEMPLEMAN (Minister of Inland Revenue). There can be no objection to our adopting the motion of my hon. friend. I am rather inclined to think that its adoption and the debate which we have had will be a great encouragement to the department in taking further energetic measures to prevent the adulteration of sugar in this country. At all events it will impress upon the public mind the necessity for a more rigid enforcement of the Act. I might draw attention to what has been done since 1905 in this respect. In 1905, there were collected 212 samples of maple syrup and maple sugar, of which 116 were adulterated. There were two collections in that year, the first being a collection of samples to the number of 119 and the second a later collection to the number of 93. In the first collection the adulterations were much more numerous than in the second.

Mr. TALBOT. What time of the year?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. In February, 1905. The first collection consisted of samples from the old crop and the second from the new crop. The adulterations in the first were very large indeed; fully 75 per cent of the total number of the samples analysed while in the second the adulterations were fully 37 per cent. The latter applied I suppose to the collection of the new crop, and the samples came from the producers they contained more adulteration than we expected to find under such circumstances. All this emphasizes the necessity for more stringent measures to be taken to enforce the law. There is an increasing demand in the country for pure maple sugar and syrup, and no doubt if the entire product were pure the prices would be higher. The product of maple sugar and syrup a few years ago approximated in value about $1,750,000. We are told by the Agricultural Department that it is quite possible to increase the annual output five or six times, so that it would reach the value of from $8,000,000 to $10,000,000. If we can do that by a more rigid enforcement of the Act, it is clearly our duty to do so. The department has already issued instructions for the collection of samples. There are now over 110 samples collected from the sugar on the market and collections are being made from the sugar being brought in from the producers. Analyses will be made of these samples, the results will be published in the bulletins as usual, and energetic measures taken to enforce the law. I understand that the penalties paid by those found responsible for adulterations in the past have about equalled the cost of the analyses in each case, or about $9. Possibly it may be found necessary to somewhat increase the penalty so that in course of time we shall be able to stamp out altogether the adulteration in the article of maple syrup and sugar.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries.) (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, I wish to congratulate the hon. member for Vaudreuil, on having called the attention of the House to the adulteration of food products and particularly to that of maple syrup and sugar.

Shortly after my entering the Department of Inland Revenue, I was informed that there was being offered for sale throughout the country, a large quantity of adulterated maple syrup. I then gave instructions to have samples of that product collected, in order to ascertain whether, as a matter of fact, that condition of things existed. I am very sorry to have to state that, on these samples being tested, it was found that 66 per cent of them were adulterated. It is really unfortunate to find that a food product, which I might almost call a necessity of life, should be adulterated to such an extent. Of course, it was judged that under the circumstances stringent measures should be taken towards putting an end to this evil, and I considered it my duty to institute proceedings against persons who had been guilty of such action.

I should state, however, that these adulterations were effected, for the most part, by manufacturers who buy that maple syrup and sugar in small quantities, and in their factories, at Montreal, or elsewhere, put it to boil and add to it some essence, or else maple twigs or pieces of bark, in such a way as to give to the product which is a mixture of maple syrup, cane, sugar and glucose, a taste approaching that of the genuine article.

That is what I found when Minister of Inland Revenue. I ascertained that there were throughout the country several factories established in cities, which were carrying on an illicit trade by putting on the market a product which had only the name of maple. As I stated a moment ago, I ordered that the persons responsible for such frauds be prosecuted at once. They were convicted by the courts. Efforts were made to induce my department to remit the penalty; but I refused, for the good reason that I thought that was the only means of remedying such a condition of things.

We then gave instructions, to collect, in the spring, and also later on, further samples of maple sugar and syrup. I found that these further samples made a better showing, although, to speak the truth, the result was not entirely satisfactory. The fact is, we found that out of 212 samples tested in June, 1905, 116 were adulterated, 88 were pure, and 8 were doubtful. 116 out of 212 samples, that is rather a high proportion and I believe that under the circumstances it was the duty of the department to prosecute those who were guilty of the offence.

These adulterations have still another deplorable result. Not only are they injurious to one of our home industries, inasmuch as they inflict serious losses on the producers who are members of the farming community, but the people who thus open factories specially with the object of turning out adulterated products, export these to England and elsewhere, more particularly to England. I fear that, within a few years, if we are not in a position to put a stop to the exportation of such products, our trade in maple sugar, will be entirely ruined.

That is another consideration which has induced the Department of Inland Revenue to adopt the stringent measures referred to. I know that the present Minister of Inland Revenue is anxious to enforce energetically the same policy and to take inspiration from what has occurred in the past.

No doubt, we should take measures to put an end to such a condition of things, and once more, I congratulate the hon. member for Vaudreuil on having called the attention of the House to that important question.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). I regret that I have not the advantage of being able to understand the language in which the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) spoke. I regret it all the more because, I think, that probably, could I have understood it, I would have agreed with what he said. I commend what I take to be the motive of the hon. gentleman who moved this resolution and whose argument, I am sorry to say, I was not able to follow for the same reason that I was not able to understand the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. I take it that the object is to call attention to a dangerous and growing evil. The proper discussion of this question, the calling of the attention of the government to the evil that exists, is one which will benefit the producer as well as the consumer of this important article of commerce which is now under consideration. It may not be known to those living in the province of Quebec what this all means to them. For many years past those living in my section of the country have regarded the province of Quebec as the one place where they could find pure, unadulterated maple syrup. There has been a large and rapidly increasing market for this article in Ontario, not only in the towns and villages but among the farmers as well. I myself have received numerous requests from people who wished to be advised where they could get the pure maple syrup. Until recently I have advised them to send to the Montreal grocery houses handling this class of goods. There has been a greatly increased demand for the pure syrup and it is spoken of in the highest terms. But I regret to find, that during the last two or three years, the product which we get from Quebec has not been what it used to be. And I would like to show the people of Quebec what an injustice this is doing them and how it injures them more than it injures any others. This adulterated maple syrup has been sold under the name of 'pure maple syrup' from Quebec.

Mr. BRODEUR. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) would allow me to interrupt him, and with the permission of the House, I would say that when speaking in French, I explained, that when I was at the head of the Department of Inland Revenue, I found that large quantities of maple syrup were put on the market that were certainly adulterated. This syrup, I found, was manufactured extensively in Montreal, and in Toronto also, there being two or three houses engaged in the manufacture of it there. This product is manufactured from cane sugar and glucose with some other materials. In some instances a small quantity of maple sugar is added. I was informed also that sometimes the manufacturers use what is called 'maple syrup extract.' This is a very strong extract so that a few drops will transform gallons of the mixture into 'maple syrup.' I was shown a number of bottles of this maple syrup extract. I learned that the syrup thus produced was sent not only to Ontario and other parts of Canada but was largely exported to England. That is why we took such energetic measures to stop this evil. This adulterated maple syrup is not sold by the farmers. If my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) would consult bulletin 102 he would find that the samples of maple syrup taken from the farmers in Quebec are nearly all genuine but that the samples of the product of the factories, for example in Toronto, when analysed were all found to be adulterated.

Mr. SPROULE. It was with regard to these things that I intended to speak, because it is easy to see that a great injustice is being done to the farmers of Quebec who are producers of the genuine article. As an example I may state that within the last three weeks, in the village in which I live, I found a syrup on sale the package of which was labelled 'Quebec maple syrup,' which, when I tested it I found to be not maple syrup at all. I told my friends that this was nothing less than a libel on the farmers of Quebec, and I gave them the names of parties to whom they could write for the genuine article. I was told that this manufactured syrup came from Toronto and Montreal. I was informed also that there was one trick in the manufacture which the Minister of Inland Revenue has not mentioned. When the sugar is dissolved, the manufacturer takes a quantity of the inner bark of the maple tree and boils it with the sugar, thus giving it a slight flavour of the maple. Of course, if this adulteration goes on it will ruin the reputation of Quebec maple sugar and will be a serious injustice to the farmers of that district. We have few people in our section who make maple syrup. The product from Quebec is greatly preferred because it is brighter, clearer and has in perfection the peculiar maple flavour. It is everything that could be desired. But this adulteration, which is a fraud upon the public and injustice to the farmers of Quebec demands attention at the hands of the government. What has already been done is not enough—it may be a fair beginning, but it is only a beginning. More vigorous measures must be adopted to put down the unprincipled individuals who improperly use the name of the province in which they are sheltered and thus libel and injure the farmers of that province who make a pure and valuable product. There may be instances of farmers indulging in some form of adulteration of these goods, but I believe that not one in fifty is guilty of this fraud. For twenty years past I have ordered this product from parties in the province of Quebec and I have never yet received a sample that I did not think was pure. Of course, I have ordered direct from the producer, usually a farmer.

I have already said that this practice of adulteration of destroying the reputation of innocent producers and depriving them of a market that was valuable and rapidly growing. The Department of Inland Revenue is doing all right, so far as it has gone, but it is not going far enough. It is not vigorous enough in its assaults upon those who thus make inroads upon the rights of innocent people and who destroy the market for one of the most valuable products of the province of Quebec and the eastern part of Ontario.

Mr. BRODEUR. Will the hon. gentleman tell me how the Department of Inland Revenue can do more than they have done, when they have prosecuted those who have been guilty of adulterating maple sugar ?

Mr. SPROULE. I have not noticed any prosecutions yet, I have noticed examinations. I say that the department should have first given fair warning, and followed that up by prosecutions, moderately mild, if you like.

Mr. BRODEUR. I will give the case of the Imperial Syrup Company of Montreal, against whom action has been taken, and also a man named Genne.

Mr. SPROULE. Then increase the penalty until you stop the adulteration, because you cannot find to-day one sample in a hundred of the pure product that is on sale in the province of Ontario—unless it has come in within the last week or two. One can understand how necessary it is to stop this evil at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). I did not hear the beginning of this discussion. But I agree with my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) that it is highly necessary that effective measures should at once be taken to put a stop to this terrible abuse. I listened to the ex-Minister of Inland Revenue (Mr. Brodeur) telling us about what he had done when he presided over that department in order to abate this evil. But his efforts have been fruitless, there is no doubt of that, he admits it himself, and asks my hon. friend from East Grey if it was possible for him to do more than to prosecute the offenders under the Inland Revenue Act. Let me venture a suggestion in view of the utter sterility of the efforts made by the late head of that department. I suggest that the Minister of Agriculture turn his attention to this subject, and see if he could not put an end to these adulterations. He has certainly done something of value in regard to fruit. He has made serious endeavours in that direction which have borne fruit in the province of Ontario. Why could he not extend that protection to the manufacturers of maple sugar and maple syrup ? Surely it is possible to obtain a marking of the packages of maple sugar and cans of syrup that would prove as effectual as similar measures have proved in reference to fruit. The adulteration of maple sugar and syrup is doing a great deal of harm in the province of Quebec, and I do not see why some modification of the Fruit Marks Act might not be applied to the product of our maple trees. I think my hon. friend the present Minister of Marine and Fisheries has been making laudable efforts, but in the wrong direction. It is not by the operation of the Inland Revenue Act that he will be able to overcome the crying evil that has been pointed out by my hon. friend from East Grey. We must try something else, and I think the Department of Agriculture might well direct its attention to the sterility of the efforts so far made by the government, and see if it is not possible to frame an Act on the lines of the Fruit Marks Act to protect the honest farmers in our province who manufacture every year such a large quantity of maple sugar and syrup, and afterwards find that frauds are perpetrated to their disadvantage by people in the city of Montreal, or by exporters from that city to Ontario and elsewhere.

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture). I am glad to accept the compliments of my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk). I am only sorry that the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) who usually sits beside him is not in the House, because the member for Halton is always complaining that the Minister of Agriculture tries to absorb too much of the work of other departments. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier now wants me to take a little work from my colleague the Minister of Inland Revenue.

Mr. FOSTER. Because of the sterility of his efforts.

Mr. FISHER. I accept also the compliment of the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), and I am glad to know that my own efforts have not been sterile. But this afternoon hon. gentlemen opposite were not so complimentary to me in discussing the Fruit Marks Act, as is the member for Jacques Cartier. The member for Jacques Cartier and the member for East Grey have both criticised the Inland Revenue Department as not having succeeded in preventing the adulteration of maple sugar. In the first place, let me say that it is only a little over two years ago that any method of analysis was discovered by which adulterations of maple sugar with any other sugar could be detected. If any hon. gentleman will look at the bulletins he will find that a great deal of this adulteration is a mixture of maple with cane or beet sugar—which may not be very harmful, but is all the same a fraud upon purchasers, who think they are getting pure maple, and it is also a fraud upon those who sell pure maple sugar or syrup. It is only about three years ago that a method of analysis was discovered in the state of Vermont by which you can detect the presence of other sugars in with maple sugar or syrup. Soon after that discovery was made it was reported to the Department of Inland Revenue, and that department is now able to detect these adulterations in maple sugar, and the late head of that department took the steps which have been outlined. I may say that for seven or eight years complaints have been made by farmers who manufacture pure maple sugar and syrup, of the difficulties they encounter because of unscrupulous people mixing cane or beet sugar with maple and selling it to the detriment of the makers of pure maple. People may say that this is no great harm, but as a matter of fact it is a fraud. Maple sugar is sold chiefly as a dainty article of food, and is prized because of the peculiar flavour that it has. Now those who adulterate maple sugar with other sugar usually adopt this course. There is a great deal of what I may call coarse or strong maple sugar manufactured, not as pure, stronger in flavour, looking darker to the sight, and tasting stronger; and a great many people who do not know much about maple sugar, who are not connoisseurs in that article, think that such an article is the pure maple sugar. Now as a matter of fact that strong, dark maple sugar or maple syrup is not pure in this sense, that although an analysis may show it to be genuine maple sugar, it is made in a dirty and slovenly fashion. It is darkened by bits of bark or twigs and leaves falling into the sap buckets when the sap is running in the woods, it is darkened by carelessness in cleaning the utensils and conducting the operation of the work, with the result that the flavour is stronger and coarser, and the article is lacking the peculiar delicate flavour of first rate maple sugar or syrup. Now, I can say that real first rate maple sugar or maple syrup, when well made, is as clear in colour as any other kind of sugar, as much so as any of these adulterated sugars which are largely mixed with cane and beet sugar. It depends upon the methods of manufacture, it depends upon the cleanliness of the operation as to the colour, the fineness and the clearness of the maple sugar and maple syrup, but, there is a fine distinct maple flavour to our really pure maple sugar that no adulterated sugar or syrup has. It may taste just as strong and to the uninitiated it may have a maple flavour, but it has not that fine, delicate flavour that really pure, unadulterated maple syrup and sugar, made in a cleanly and successful way, has and nothing can get that except maple sugar or syrup made in the manner I have outlined.

Mr. MONK. I understand that if a man labels a can 'compound of maple syrup' he can pass it as maple syrup whether it is adulterated or not and there is no law against that. Is that the case ?

Mr. FISHER. I think it is the case if he marks it with the word 'compound' as conspicuously as the part of the label bearing the word 'maple.' It may be that it would be advisable to amend the Adulteration Act in some way so as to obviate the facility which thereby seems to be given for passing off a compound article for the genuine article. But, I may say, that the Department of Inland Revenue last year in dealing with these cases pointed out that simply putting the word 'compound' in an inconspicuous place on the label with the word 'maple' in a more conspicuous way was not a fulfilment of the intention and spirit of the law. I know that labels which were submitted to the department to see whether they fulfilled the law, having the word 'compound' in an inconspicuous place, were rejected and the people were warned that if they put these labels upon their cans, boxes or paper wrappings they would be prosecuted and fined. It is possible, however, that it would be better to amend the law in some slight way so as to make sure that that could no longer be done. My hon. friend from Jacques Cartier(Mr. Monk) was good enough to say that the work of the Department of Inland Revenue had been ineffective. Just to indicate its effectiveness I might say that in the spring of last year, before the true maple sugar season had really begun, a large number of samples were collected. It was not known every where that the departmental officers were collecting these samples. In the first collection there was a percentage of 24 per cent found to be genuine. Later on in the season, after the word that the officers of the Inland Revenue Department were investigating this matter, were taking samples, after the people had been warned of what was going on, another set of samples was taken and what was the result? As my hon. friend (Mr. Brodeur) says after prosecution had taken place and after these prosecutions had been published by the newspapers and it was known among the maple sugar manufacturers and producers 63 per cent were found to be genuine or only 37 per cent adulterated, as against 75 adulterated in the first set of samples taken.

Mr. SPROULE. When was the last set of samples collected?

Mr. FISHER. Later in the season or when the maple sugar season was well advanced.

Mr. SPROULE. There never was a time in our part of the country when half as many spurious samples were offered for sale as there was this winter.

Mr. MONK.

Mr. FISHER. I am sorry to say that I have information that this winter again people were selling adulterated maple sugar and syrup. I do not know whether my hon. friend has carefully watched the labels, but I know that in a good many instances these labels do contain the word 'compound' or have some word which would indicate that they are not pure.

Mr. SPROULE. They are labelled 'pure maple syrup from Quebec.'

Mr. FISHER. That may be also. I am sure that the Department of Inland Revenue which several weeks ago started in to take samples again will find a great many of these and will do its duty in prosecuting the offenders. It may be that the penalty is not sufficiently severe. I do not know exactly what the law is in regard to the penalty, but I am quite sure that if the Department of Inland Revenue finds persistent offenders under this law it will inflict the severest penalty the law allows, and if it is found that that is not sufficient I venture to think that we will be able to so amend the law as to increase the penalty and do away with this misrepresentation of a very useful article of diet.

I am glad to say that in Canada we have a very large business in the production of maple sugar. At the time of the taking of the census, some five years ago, the amount of maple sugar and syrup made in Canada was seventeen and a half million pounds—a very respectable figure—and the actual value was about one-tenth of that or $1,750,000. In the eastern townships, where the industry is very largely prosecuted, I know that it has increased in the last five years and I have no doubt whatever that to-day there is very nearly $3,000,000 worth of maple sugar and syrup made annually in Canada. The advantages and importance of the industry are such that the government ought to do all it can to promote its success. It is an industry which is a very useful one for the farmers to prosecute. The work is carried on at a time of the year when there is very little else to do on the farm—in the spring when the roads are breaking up, when the people cannot do teaming work, before the spring work opens and after the winter work is practically done. It is a useful industry and it gives a very fair profit for the labour and the investment. I know as a matter of fact of personal knowledge that within the last few years a very considerable investment in up to date plants for the manufacture of maple sugar have been made. I know a large number of men who have put in evaporators and other appliances, who have invested very considerable amounts of money and who are looking forward to reaping a good profit and return on their investment. They can only make that good profit and return if the price they receive is the price of genuine maple sugar. If the market is cut from under their feet by a spurious article they will not be able to make a fair return on their investment. They will not be encouraged to continue the business and the business will practically die out.

While I am saying this in regard to the business there is another point which I know is of considerable importance in our province. As long as the people can make a profit out of their maple woods they are going to retain these woods and keep them as a sort of forestry reserve, which is going to keep a considerable bit of wood land scattered all through our province. We know what an immense advantage it is to the agriculture and climatic conditions of our province and how much better the conditions will be in every way if we have all over the province these maple groves if they are destroyed and the land used for other purposes. The only way in which these maple woods can be preserved and the industry carried on is to secure for the men who make pure maple syrup the benefits of their work and of their honesty. I may tell my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) that while I have not undertaken to do the work of the Inland Revenue Department in this matter, I have undertaken a little work which may perhaps be of advantage to this industry. In preparation for the maple season this year I have had prepared in my department—and I think I may say it is well prepared—a little bulletin on maple syrup and maple sugar making which has been sent out in the last week or two. The French copy was put in the hands of the printer at the same time, but I am told it will not be ready until next week, and then thousands of these bulletins will be distributed immediately. This bulletin not only contains a description of the best process of manufacture, but it includes the Act with refernce to adulteration and also information as to what has been done and can be done to protect the maple sugar manufacturers in their industry. I trust it will be of help to those engaged in the industry, and I believe it contains useful pointers as to how they may protect themselves.

Mr. MONK. In view of the very important admission made by the Minister of Agriculture I wish to ask if it is the intention during the present session to introduce these amendments to the Inland Revenue Act which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fisher) says are necessary; particularly in reference to the abuse which is now made of the word 'compound?' Does the Minister of Agriculture also intend to introduce legislation this session on the lines of the Fruit Marks Act, in order to protect the farmers of the province of Quebec against such injustices as have been pointed out?

Mr. FISHER. I said that if it were found necessary it should be done but I did not say it had yet been found necessary. I do not know that the Fruits Marks Act would apply to this industry, but if the efforts of my colleague are found to be ineffective through defects in the law, then as always the Department of Agriculture will be willing to do all it can for the welfare of the farmer.

Mr. G. W. GANONG (Charlotte). To one who knows something about the sugar business it is a little ludicrous to hear all this talk about pure maple sugar. If you would make a law to compel the farmer to make some pure sugar first, there would be a good deal less trouble in the country. Perhaps this pamphlet that the Minister of Agriculture speaks of may be along the right lines and I compliment him on it, but it does not go far enough. I speak of what I know. I happen to be a manufacturing confectioner and have had as much experience with maple sugar as any man in this House, and I can say that the class of stuff that is sold by the farmers of this country as maple sugar is outrageous; it is the poor quality of it that requires the harmless adulteration of it by adding granulated or other sugars. You get it so black and muddy that it is not fit to use. It is sold to confectioners, they have to clarify it and in doing that it discolours so that there is an absolute necessity to use granulated or some bright sugar to give it a colour in order that people will look at it at all. My hon. friend talks about the Vermont sugar, but he cannot find as dirty stuff in Vermont as is sold in the province of Quebec and the other provinces of Canada. The demand for good sugar and the law as well, has forced them in Vermont to make a decent article which is almost as white as Quebec sugar that would have one-half or one-third of granulated sugar in it. First make the farmers give us good sugar before they are allowed to market it at all, and if you do that there will not be so much demand for the adulterated material.

Mr. FISHER. I have frequently had confectioners refuse to buy good maple sugar because they said the dark sugar was better for their purpose.

Mr. GANONG. There are confectioners and confectioners. I use several carloads a year and while we find about ten per cent that we can handle and ship for the trade, 90 per cent of it is such that the trade will absolutely refuse. Not only that, but there is a good deal of sugar carried over in the province of Quebec and when kept for six or nine months it becomes dark, so that it is utterly impossible to place that sugar on the market without using some other sugar with it to give it a colour. I am far from justifying the adulteration of maple sugar, but let there be a quality of sugar put on the market that does not require adulteration and then you will find less trouble. The remarks with regard to the adulteration of syrup are all right in their way, but the very moment you allow it to be compounded you induce people to adulterate it so that 90 per cent of the people will be deceived in it.

Mr. R. N. WALSH (Huntingdon). I wish to speak in support of this motion notwithstanding the remarks of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ganong) we have always flattered ourselves in the province of Quebec that we make pure maple sugar, while in Ontario they ask you to take it with something on the side. I believe we produce pure maple sugar and maple syrup in the province of Quebec and I gave the hon. member from Charlotte (Mr. Ganong) a sample last year which I think he will pronounce to be absolutely pure, although he is a confectioner.

Mr. GANONG. It was excellent.

Mr. WALSH. Well, that came from the province of Quebec. We produce the purest maple syrup and sugar in the province of Quebec, and if you can prohibit this adulterated article which is made after the sugar leaves our province then you will be conferring a benefit on our farmers. I am not condemning what has been done by the government already but we ask for more legislation in order not only that from the point of view of afforestation the maple trees may be preserved in our province, but also that from the trade point of view the products of the maple may reach the consumer pure and unadulterated.

Motion agreed to.

NATIONAL TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY—SURVEY BETWEEN QUEBEC AND MONCTON.

Mr. O. S. CROCKET (York, N.B.) moved for :

Copies of all correspondence had between the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company and the government, or any department thereof, and between the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company and the Transcontinental Railway Commission in reference to the survey and location of the proposed Transcontinental Railway between Quebec and Moncton.

He said : My object in making this motion is to discover if I can the real position of affairs in regard to the Quebec-Moncton section of the proposed National Transcontinental Railway. During the first week of the session I obtained an order of the House for a return of all the correspondence had been between the government and the Transcontinental Railway Commission with respect to the surveys and location of the route in the province of New Brunswick. On Friday last the Minister of Railways laid a return on the table which it seems to me cannot possibly contain all the correspondence asked for by that order. That return contains three letters. The first letter is from the late Mr. F. D. Wade, chairman of the Commission, to the Minister of Railways, and is dated April 26, 1905. That letter asks the government for a decision with respect to the two routes in the province of New Brunswick. The second letter dated April 28, is from the Minister of Railways to Mr. Wade in reply to his letter of the 26th. This letter asks Mr. Wade to furnish a concise report on the result of the surveys made in New Brunswick and an advisory opinion as to the route between Chaudière Junction and Moncton that it will be advisable to adopt. The third letter is dated April 29, and is simply an acknowledgment by Mr. Wade of the Minister of Railway's letter, with a statement that he has directed the chief engineer to make the necessary report. The only other document contained in the return is a communication signed by Mr. Lumsden, the chief engineer of the Commission, and addressed to the Commissioners of the Transcontinental Railway, setting forth the results of the surveys in the province of New Brunswick. There is nothing before April 26, 1905, and there is nothing after April 29, 1905. It seems to me to be absolutely clear that there must be a great amount of correspondence that has passed between the government and the Railway Commission in regard to this subject which has not been brought down, and I would like to ask and to understand distinctly now from the Minister of Railways if this return does in fact contain all the correspondence that has passed between the Commission and the government and any department thereof, as set forth in the motion, in regard to the subject therein indicated.

Mr. EMMERSON. Mr. Speaker, perhaps I shall be courteous beyond the courtesy shown by my hon. friend. I do not think that any hon. member should assume that a department would bring a return of all correspondence that was not a full return. I want to say to my hon. friend, from the courteous standpoint, that he has in that return a full return to the order of this House, and that all the documents and all the correspondence have been brought down.

Mr. CROCKET. In relation to the surverys in the province of New Brunswick ? Well, that is rather surprising to me, because we know that after the interim report of the commission was laid upon the table of the House last session, and the results of the surveys in the province of New Brunswick became known to the people, a delegation from the province of New Brunswick waited on the Governor in Council in reference to the matter, and that subsequently a re-survey was ordered. In view of that fact it is certainly surprising to me to learn that no communication has passed between the government and the Railway Commission with reference to that feature of the matter, at any rate. I was in hopes that when this return was brought down, if it did not reassure us with respect to the intention of the government to go on with the construction of the Quebec-Moncton section of this line, it would have at least shown us where we were at and what had been doing in that regard ; but I am bound to confess that the return that has been brought down, has failed to give the assurance which I had hoped it would. The House will not be surprised, in view of what has occurred, to learn that there has been a considerable feeling of apprehension in the province of New Brunswick as to the intentions of the government with regard to the Quebec-Moncton section—a feeling which I may say has been growing from day to day, until it has ripened almost into a conviction in the minds of many that the government have practically decided to abandon that portion of the work. I believe the same feeling exists in those portions of the province of Quebec through which it was intended that the road should pass. Rumours to the same effect are multiplying in all parts of the country and are finding expression in the press of the various provinces. I sincerely trust that time will prove that these rumours and these fears are not well founded, though I am bound to confess that the history of this whole project from its inception down to the present, exhibits altogether too many circumstances which for my liking rather go to confirm these misgivings. In the first place, it was well known to every member of the last parliament that the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company, with whom the government made this contract, did not want the Quebec-Moncton section of this road, that they strenuously opposed the proposition for the extension of the line from Quebec eastward to the Canadian Atlantic seaboard, and in the end only with great reluctance accepted the contract as it was confirmed by this parliament in the session of 1903. It is not difficult to understand the position of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company with respect to that matter, in view of the identity of its interests with those of its parent company, the Grand Trunk Railway company and the latter company's enormous interests and investments in the port of Portland, Maine, as well as in its existing line of railway from Montreal to that United States port. It need only be mentioned in order to be seen, that the building of the Quebec-Moncton section and its lease to the Grand Trunk Pacific Company under the terms of the contract, practically involve the putting of that corporation into competition with its own Montreal and Portland connection, and that it would pay the Grand Trunk Company twenty times over to haul the freight which it collects in the west over the 297 miles of its road from Montreal to Portland, or over the 318 miles from Quebec by Richmond to Portland instead of hauling it from Quebec to Halifax, a distance of nearly 800 miles or from Quebec to St. John, a distance of 600 miles for shipment by these ports, in which it has no other interest than the adverse interest of the promoters of a rival competing port. That was the first feature of this contract which made us sceptical in regard to this matter, and that scepticism was considerably augmented by the knowledge of the fact that the Transcontinental Railway contract as confirmed by Act of Parliament, contained a provision by which the specifications for the construction of the whole eastern division from Winnipeg to Moncton must receive the approval, and the line must be constructed to the satisfaction, of the Grand Trunk Pacific Company's engineers. The section of the Act to which I refer is subsection 7 of section 1. It reads :

> In order to insure for the protection of the company as lessees of the eastern division of the said railway, the economical construction thereof in such manner that it can be operated to the best advantage, it is hereby agreed that the specifications for the construction of the eastern division shall be submitted to and approved of by the company before the commencement of the work and that the said work shall be done according to the said specifications and shall be subject to the joint supervision, inspection and acceptance of the chief engineer appointed by the government and the chief engineer of the company, and, in the event of differences as to the specifications, or in case the said engineers shall differ as to the work or the questions in dispute, a third arbitrator shall be chosen in the manner provided in paragraph four of this agreement.

It is only fair to state that the Transcontinental Commission, in its interim report dated March 30, 1905, which was laid upon the table last session, did state that the Grand Trunk Pacific had already approved of the specifications, but those must necessarily refer only to the general specifications relating to the general character of the work, inasmuch as, according to the information which was furnished by the right hon. the Prime Minister, in reply to a question I asked a few days ago, there has been no portion of the Quebec and Moncton section definitely located even yet. Then in addition we have in mind the precipitancy with which this contract was negotiated and closed with the Grand Trunk Pacific, behind the back of the then Minister of Railways and Canals of this government (Mr. Blair). We remember also the fervent plea of the Prime Minister on the occasion of the introduction of this Bill in the session of 1903—'when the flood tide was upon us'—for haste, for the avoidance of all delays, for non-deliberation, for immediate, instantaneous action. He said:

> This is not the time for deliberation ; this is the time for action ; we cannot wait because time does not wait. We cannot wait because in these days of wonderful development, time lost is doubly lost. Our duty is immediate and imperative. It is not of to-morrow, but of this day, of this hour and this minute.

I must confess that these were encouraging, hopeful, words which ought to have gone a long way to allay the misgivings that arose because of the aversion of the Grand Trunk Pacific to the Moncton and Quebec section. We did not expect immediate instantaneous action. We did not expect that the work would be undertaken that moment nor even that hour or on that day, but we did think that possibly some little headway might have been made with the eastern division, as with the western division, before the lapse of a year. We discovered, however, very soon that although time does not wait, that truism does not necessarily or logically prove that we cannot wait. We found out in fact that we could wait and had to wait, and we discovered also that the government could wait and that the government could delay and procrastinate, and, may I say, humbug as well. In the first place, when the Grand Trunk Pacific, after this Act had passed parliament, ascertained that they could not conveniently finance for the five million dollar deposit required by its terms and that there were many other points with respect to which that contract might be altered to their advantage, that company did not hesitate to ask the government to wait, and the government did not decline to wait in order to make the alterations required. The contract was therefore held up for a year, and a session of parliament was called for the express purpose of modifying it in the interests of the Grand Trunk Pacific. This, Mr. Speaker, was a circumstance which was calculated to somewhat impair the confidence inspired by the Prime Minister's eloquent words, and which, proving as it did, how ready the government was to accede to the requests and yield to the interests of the Grand Trunk Pacific has had a great deal to do with the creation of the fears and the doubts of which I have spoken.

There are numerous other depressing circumstances, but before proceeding to discuss them, I think it is only fair to the government to state that they did at one time develop some little haste and celerity in connection with the eastern division. That haste was indeed a feverish haste so long as it lasted, but it did not last very long. The House will remember that the last parliament was dissolved on the 29th September and that writs were issued for a general election to take place on the 3rd November. This haste to which I have referred began simultaneously with the publishing of the proclamation dissolving the House and practically ended, so far as my constituency is concerned, on polling day. The first annual report of the Transcontinental Commission, which was laid on the table a few weeks ago, states that twelve surveying parties were organized for work in the province of New Brunswick. These were assembled at Moncton on the 27th September—two days before the dissolution of parliament—and simultaneously with the commencement of the campaign they were despatched to as many districts as possible most of them to those districts which contain the largest voting population. Although the Transcontinental Railway contract provided for the construction of this line of railway through the central part of New Brunswick by the shortest and most available route, and although, in the discussion of the Bill, the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance and the present Minister of Railways and Canals intimated very plainly that it was proposed to construct this line in the province of New Brunswick from Edmundston to Moncton through the central and unsettled portion of the province, four of these survey parties were despatched, simultaneously with the beginning of the campaign, into territory which, if we are to believe the speeches made in this House by the gentlemen to whom I have referred, was never contemplated in connection with the location of this road.

In the county of York, which I have the honour to represent, the proceedings began with a rush and were carried on for a time at an extremely lively pace. In such a hasty way were these proceedings begun that one merchant in the city of Fredericton whose adhesion to the party of forgotten free trade and economy was not thought to be sufficiently assured, was required to sign the nomination paper of the government candidate at the same time that he accepted an order for a supply of goods for the commission, and was required to discuss at the same time the probability of future purchases at his establishment. To the city of Fredericton, the parties came in force, the surveyors, transit men, chain men, axe men, and other employees chased each other up and down the valley of the River St. John and moved through the city of Fredericton driving stakes in a conspicuous route through the city and along the valley of the St. John, always where they could be seen to the best advantage. And the voters of that fertile river valley who were thought not to be endowed with quite as much discernment as they proved themselves to possess, were expected already to see and hear the great trains of the transcontinental railway speeding past their doorways on their way to and from the beautiful city of Fredericton. Now, these proceedings lasted just until the advent of polling day. The report I have already referred to states that the two parties, one sent to work up the valey of the St. John river from the city of Fredericton and the other down from Woodstock to Fredericton, met about the 1st of November, when they were promptly detailed to work on the back route. I believe that some work was done on other sections of the road which would be comprised within what might be properly called the river route from Chipman to the city of Fredericton and from Woodstock to Andover. But the report shows that no work was performed on any portion of what properly is the river route after the close of the year. In order that there may be no misunderstanding as to the position which was taken by the three members of the government to whom I have referred when the Bill was going through the House, as to the route that should be adopted, I desire to read the statements then made by these hon. gentlemen. In the first place, the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) said :

At the town of Edmundston that line will connect with the system of railways which now gives direct connection with St. John. From the town of Edmundston the road will proceed eastward to the town of Moncton, it is impossible to say at this moment by what route, perhaps by Chipman or in the vicinity of Chipman, at all events from this point it is impossible to locate any precise line or to say where it will be ultimately. Suffice it to say that we desire to have the best and shortest line between Lévis and Moncton.

Then the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) said :

The line upon which it is proposed to build this road to-day is practically one of the three main lines that were examined and reported upon and recommended by the surveyors for the Intercolonial Railway as far back as 1864.

It is true that that refers to the Sir Sandford Fleming lines, and it is true that one of Sir Sandford Fleming's lines touched the city of Fredericton, but it came through from Tobique and did not follow the valley of the St. John river. So, it is clear that the Minister of Finance did not have in his mind for one moment that this road should follow the valley of the St. John. We have also a statement from the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Emmerson) as follows :

I have received, within the last two or three days, a letter from an engineer who was engaged in that survey——

Referring to the survey, I believe, that was made by Mr. Davie, in 1890, for the Temiscouata Railway, in conjunction with the Grand Trunk Railway Company.

—confirming the statement I made, and this route does not follow down the valley of the St. John river, as stated by my hon. friend——

Referring to the hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart).

He has quoted from the report referred to showing that any line between Edmundston and Moncton must necessarily follow down the valley of the St. John, and he took us down the present location of the Canadian Pacific Railway to Woodstock, then he took us either by the back country or river route, following the curves of the river down to Fredericton. He could not reach Gibson by either route. No doubt these routes are excellent ones. I do not call them in question, but I do know these are not central routes, neither is a central route through the province of New Brunswick, neither is the shortest route, and neither of these routes which are condemned by Sir Sandford Fleming is the route to which I made reference, the one that was surveyed in 1890, the one that is capable of being on a line for this traffic and on a line for opening up a vast extent of rich country.

Then, speaking of the course of the railway across the centre of the province the Minister of Railways speaking of going down from Edmundston, said :

—going from thence down to Grand Falls and on through a section of country splendid for the building of a new railway, because I speak whereof I know, having travelled over every foot of it myself. . . . I have had occasion to travel through what is known as the Gaspereau valley, and I venture the assertion that it is one of the richest valleys, one of the most promising agricultural sections, one of the most beautiful spots that I have ever visited in the province of New Brunswick.

These extracts from 'Hansard' of 1903 show clearly that it was not in the mind of the government to construct this route down the valley of the St. John river at that time, at least. If further evidence were wanted it is found in the fact that a specific resolution was presented to the Railway Committee at the time this Bill was going through, providing for the construction of the route down the valley of the St. John and to the city of St. John and was voted down by the Liberal majority in this House, which I regret very much to say included one hon. gentleman who represented a constituency in whose behalf that claim was being pressed. And there is still further evidence in the fact that an amendment which was moved by the hon. member for King's and Albert (Mr. Fowler) providing for the construction of this line of railway by way of Fredericton was voted down by the Liberal majority in this House. I think, therefore, that what has taken place with reference to the surveys of the route in the province of New Brunswick cannot be expected to give much confidence to the people of the city of Fredericton and those along the valley of the River St. John.

Now I have referred to the first annual report of the Transcontinental Railway Commission which was laid on the table of the House a few weeks ago. I have read that with some care, if not with much satisfaction, and I desire to point out some facts and circumstances which I think show clearly that the St. John river route was not given anything like a fair chance by the surveyors. In the first place, we find that there were twelve surveying parties organized in the province of New Brunswick and detailed to work in various places. Of these twelve parties only four worked at all on what is known as the river route; the other eight parties worked exclusively on the back route. Of the four parties who were engaged on the river route, I find that three devoted more than two-thirds of their time to the surveys on the central route, and only one party, No. 5, worked exclusively on the river route. That party worked from the 27th of September to the 1st of November, 26 days, from Woodstock down to the river, and from the 1st of November to the 22nd of December, 45 days, from Grand Falls to Andover on both sides of the river, making 71 days which that party devoted to the work on the river route, while the other three parties that did any work on that route, as I have already mentioned, gave two-thirds of their time to the back route. These three parties were parties No. 3, 4 and 11. I find that party No. 3 gave 78 days, from the 27th of September to the 30th of December, from Chipman to Fredericton, while they devoted 89 days from the 1st of January to the 13th of April, working from Tobique eastward on the back route, and from the 14th of May to the 30th of June, from Chipman to Armstrong's Brook, also on the back route, 41 days. So that party devoted 130 days to the back route and 78 days to the river route. Party No. 4 was occupied from 27th of September to the 1st of November from Fredericton up the river, 26 days. From the 1st of November to the 27th of November, 24 days, they worked from Edmundston to Grand Falls, which was common to both routes. Then from the Intercolonial from Boiestown west, 21 days, making 162 days which party No. 4 gave to the back route, and 26 days to the river route. Then party No. 11 worked from the 19th of October to the 30th of December, from Woodstock up the St. John river, 63 days, and was from the 1st of January to the 2nd of April, 80 days, in the Miramichi country.

Now the eight other parties devoted to the back route the following number of days: Party No 1, 197 days; party No. 2, 141 days; party No. 7, 131 days; party No. 8, 144 days; party No. 9, 174 days; party No. 10, 141 days; party No. 12, 36 days, or a total of 964 days. In addition, party No. 6 worked exclusively on the back route, but the number of days is not stated. But supposing the smallest number of days that appear in the figures I have stated as having been devoted to the back route namely, 131, we find that these eight parties devoted 1,095 days to the back route, which makes, with the addition of the 372 days which the other three parties devoted to the river route, a total of 1,467 days that were devoted to the back route against 238 days to the river route. Mr. Speaker, I think that shows pretty conclusively that the St. John River Valley route was not treated fairly by these surveying parties. I notice also in reading this report that but one alternative line was tried in connection with the St. John river route, namely, from the town of Grand Falls down to Andover on both sides of the river, while all through this report we find reference after reference to alternative surveys having been tried on the back route and attempts having been made to improve and shorten the different surveys. This report, I may say, bears date 30th of June last. Now in the description of the work of party No. 4 we find an illustration of what I have said:

> This party was disbanded on the 15th of April but reassembled on the 6th of June with instructions to start a survey from their old crossing of the Intercolonial Railway west of Boiestown and work westward, improving and shortening their first preliminary. They were still at work on the 30th.

The same with reference to party No. 6. They were reassembled on the 27th of June, and were sent into the same district with instructions to run further lines with a view of improving and shortening the line already run. Party No. 9—several alternative lines were also run by this party. And so on. Also party No. 11:

> They completed this survey about the end of the year, after which they proceeded to the summit of Lindsay brook on the Miramichi range, and from that point ran north easterly to the old Gulquack lakes with a view to determining whether there was any possibility of crossing this range further north with a lower summit.

So on through all this report, showing clearly that every attempt was made to get the shortest possible route in the centre or back country, but that practically no effort was made to shorten the line of the proposed river route. I have had the pleasure and the great privilege, Mr. Speaker, of reading the report of Sir Sandford Fleming of the surveys he conducted in the year 1864 to find a route for the Intercolonial Railway which was then projected, and I may say that I was very much impressed with the completeness and the fulness of the details which were furnished by Sir Sandford Fleming in the report which he presented as contrasted with the meagreness of the information which is contained in the reports of the Transcontinental Railway Commission that have thus far been brought down. For instance, all we have from the Transcontinental Railway Commission in regard to the distances found on these two routes in the province of New Brunswick is this statement from their interim report, page 59:

River Route.	Miles.
Moncton to Grand Falls, via Salmon river (near Chipman), Fredericton, Woodstock and Andover	249
Grand Falls to Edmundston	37
Edmundston to boundary between New Brunswick and Quebec	25
Boundary to junction with Parties District 'B'	22
Total distance	333

Back Route.
Moncton to Grand Falls	232
Grand Falls to Edmundston	37
Edmundston to boundary between New Brunswick and Quebec	25
Boundary between junction with Parties District 'B'	316
Total distance	316

That is practically all we have in the reports which have come down to the present time from the Transcontinental Railway Commission in respect to the relative distances of these two suggested routes. Now, the House will observe that we have there two very long stretches of country, from Moncton to Grand Falls, via Salmon river, Fredericton, Woodstock and Andover, 249 miles, and by the back route, Moncton to Grand Falls, 232 miles, in reference to which we have nothing more than that very general statement. It seems to me to be very significant that as soon as Grand Falls is reached, which would be a point common to both routes, we have from Grand Falls to Edmundston 37 miles, from Edmundston to the boundary 25 miles and from the boundary to the junction with Parties District B 22 miles. It did occur to me in view of the fact that the relative merits of these two respective routes were the very question which these surveys were to determine, that we ought to have had something more detailed in respect to distances. For instance, I think we might at leaast have had the distance from Moncton to Chipman and from Chipman to Fredericton, the capital of the province, and an important city. We have no distance from Chipman to Fredericton, nor from Fredericton to Woodstock, another very important point, and nothing from Woodstock to Grand Falls. We have all these important sections grouped together in this general statement of 249 miles for the whole distance. I just wish to refer to another fact in connection with this report which I think adds something to the significance of the matter I am now alluding to. When we turn to district B where there were not two rival routes to be decided between we find a very different statement from that which we have in reference to the distances in the province of New Brunswick. This is the way that district B is set forth in the report.

TABLE OF ESTIMATED DISTANCES AND MILEAGE.

Party.	From.	To.	Engineer in charge.	Estimated distance.
				Miles.
1A	Quebec Boundary	St. Alexandre Road	A. F. Macallum	52·0
1	St. Alexandre Road	St. Philip Road	E. H. Pierce	23·5
2	St. Philip Road	St. Marcel	P. C. Talbot	40·5
3	St. Marcel	St. Philemon	C. Garnet	34·0
4	St. Philemon	St. Jean Chrysostôme	C. A. d'Abbadie	60·0
	St. Jean Chrysostôme	Boundary, Co. Portneuf	E. A. Hoare	16·0

It seems that the two portions were dealt with very differently by the respective parties in control. In view of the fact that there were these two rival routes in the province of New Brunswick it seems to me that there was far more necessity for setting out the different sections as the different parties found them than there would be in regard to the route from the New Brunswick line to the city of Quebec.

I want to refer for a moment, Mr. Speaker, to the manner in which Sir Sandford Fleming dealt with the line he ran in 1864 and to contrast his report with the statement I have just referred to. Sir Sandford Fleming's general line was from Rivière du Loup to Apohaqui. He divided the line into eight sections as follows:

	Miles.
Rivière du Loup to Trois Pistoles	24·5
Trois Pistoles to Green River Forks	32·7
Green River Forks to Restigouche	32·3
Restigouche to Tobique	45·4
Tobique to Keswick Summit	55·6
Keswick Summit to Little River	61·6
Little river to Coal creek	26·3
Coal creek to Apohaqui	31·6
Total	360·0

We have in reference to each one of these sections, in Sir Sandford Fleming's report, a detailed statement showing the distances, as I have already pointed out, and not only that, but the characteristics of the country traversed, the gradients and curvatures of each section and the advantages and disadvantages as they appeared to him in respect to each section. Any one reading Sir Sanford Fleming's report can trace the line for himself and can form an intelligent conclusion as to the advantages and disadvantages of each section. For instance taking the section from Keswick Summit to Little River via Fredericton, this is the way Sir Sandford Fleming deals with it:

Keswick-Little River Section.

The line enters the Keswick Valley near the source of the west branch and continues within its limits until the River St. John is reached. Probably the east branch may offer a more favourable approach to the main valley of the Keswick river; but the season was too far advanced to admit of proper examination by this route being made.

From the ninth mile the line winds along the side of the river, occasionally crosses it and then continues on the flats until it finally reaches the north side of the River St. John at the twenty-ninth mile. For twenty miles up to this point the grades are remarkably favourable, in no case being over forty feet to the mile and generally under twenty feet to the mile.

From the mouth of the Keswick the line runs along the north bank of the River St. John almost on a dead level, crossing the River Nashwaaksis at the thirty-seventh mile. It reaches the Fredericton upper ferry at thirty-eight and a half miles and the lower ferry at the end of the thirty-ninth mile. About three-quarters of a mile further on the line arrives at the Nashwaak, an important river 500 feet wide, where it is crossed. Soon after crossing the Nashwaak the line leaves the banks of the St. John and, turning round Barker's Hill, follows an easterly direction with very favourable undulating grades to the Little River, where this section of the survey terminates. The bridging in this section is comparatively light. From the Keswick to the Little river it is believed that stone for all the bridges and culverts may be found readily. Material for ballast, although not of the best quality, can be had in abundance on this section. The timber for cross ties in this locality consists of spruce, hemlock and cedar.

Then, with regard to the Little River—Coal Creek section, he says :

Little River-Coal Creek Section.

From Little River the line continues in an easterly direction to the head of the Grand Lake navigation. For this distance the grades are undulating and favourable. Near the ninth mile the line crosses the Newcastle river and in this locality it passes close to several coal mines, where coal of fair quality crops out on the surface.

Then, generally, he says with reference to this line :

Generally.

The course taken by this line from the Rivière du Loup towards the southern part of New Brunswick is generally direct and at some distance from the eastern frontier of Maine. . . . . The line continues on a course towards the city of St. John, generally direct until Fredericton is reached. From Fredericton it was my object to find the shortest route to St. John on the east side of the river, the crossing of which is in some respects objectionable.

To reach St. John on the easterly side of the river it was found necessary on account of difficulties that could not be easily overcome to pass round by the head of Grand Lake, and in this direction, though rather circuitous, a favourable line was found to a point of connection at Apohaqui with the existing railway leading to St. John. This is probably the most direct line that can be had to the city.

Then he points out :

Fitness for Settlement.

From the River Miramichi on the line surveyed to the River St. John at Fredericton there is for the most part a fine growth of hardwood timber and judging from the portion already cleared along the lower part of the Keswick valley, the soil must be of a superior quality. For a distance of twenty-five miles northwest of Fredericton the country is already cleared and cultivated. Between the line surveyed from Fredericton to the head of Grand lake and the St. John river the land is low, but of excellent quality. From the Grand lake southerly and over the coal fields the soil is rather indifferent. Before reaching Apohaqui the line passes through the Valley of Studholme Mill stream ; here the soil is very good, producing annually excellent crops of potatoes, oats, buckwheat and hay.

He says further :

By crossing the river in the neighbourhood of Fredericton St. John may be reached much more directly by way of Oromocto and Douglas valley on a line carefully surveyed last summer by Mr. Burpee for the New Brunswick government. This would without question be the most direct central route from Canada to the harbour of St. John on the Atlantic seaboard.

He gives the grades on the different sections, the number of miles that are level, the number of miles that have a grade of twenty-one feet to the mile, the number of miles that have a grade of thirty-feet to the mile and so on, so that any one by referring to that survey could trace the line and the advantages and disadvantages of each section. Now, we have nothing of the kind in the reports of the Transcontinental Railway Commission; we have nothing further than the general statement to which I have referred and which fact is regarded as very suspicious by a great many of the friends of the St. John River Valley route. In addition to tracing the general line Sir Sanford Fleming gives no less than twelve alternative routes from Rivière du Loup to the European and North American Railway; six of which touch at the city of Fredricton. In refrence to the second alternative route he traces it in this way :

No. 2.—Rivière du Loup across to St. Basil, on River St. John by Madawaska valley, thence across the Grand river about ten miles from its outlet, passing about five miles east of the Grand Falls, crosses Tobique about fifteen miles from its mouth, thence across the Ottellock and Munquart rivers to the St. John at Hardwood creek, across the St. John and along to connect with the existing railway to St. Andrews, four miles west of Woodstock.

The distances he gives are: Rivière du Loup to Newburg Junction, 223 miles; along the railway to the proposed western extension from St. John, 45 miles; along the surveyed line by Douglas valley to St. John, 82 miles; making the distance on that route, 350 miles, or if we add the 123 miles from Chaudiere Junction to River du Loup it gives 473 miles as the whole distance from Chaudière Junction to the point of intersection with the European and North American Railway.

Mr. EMMERSON. Is that point Apohaqui in all cases?

Mr. CROCKET. Yes; there are some to Moncton but they are not among those to which I am making reference. Then No. 3 is:

No. 3.—Rivière du Loup to Grand Falls across Salmon and Tobique rivers to headwaters of Munquart river, which it crosses and joins the line surveyed by Mr. Burpee at Fredericton.

Of this route he says:

This is the most direct line between Rivière du Loup and St. John which is likely to be found practicable. It crosses and re-crosses the air-line drawn from the extreme points to the northeasterly angle of Maine no less than twelve times, and does not diverge from it at any point more than ten miles. There is, it must be confessed, some little uncertainty with regard to the feasibility of this line between the forks of the Miramichi and the River Tobique, as well as between the Degele and Rivière du Loup, these sections having been imperfectly explored, but there is good reason to expect that a careful survey would result in showing that a line not unfavourable might be had through these sections as well as elsewhere. This line would require a very costly bridge over the St. John near Fredericton, another over the same river at the city of St. John.

This requirement of a bridge at Fredericton would not exist now because we have at the city of Fredericton a bridge which is owned by the government, which was erected in contemplation of the building of the Harvey—Salisbury branch and which would be available for the Transcontinental Railway. The distance from Rivière du Loup to Fredericton, is 235 miles; from Fredericton to St. John, by Oromocto and Douglas valley, 66 miles, a total of 301 miles from Rivière du Loup to St. John, or 424 miles from Chaudière Junction to St. John. Route No. 4 is from Rivière du Loup by Squatook lakes and Head Waters of Iroquois river to Green river lake, thence to the west branch of the Restigouche, along the Restigouche to the source of the Grand river, thence by Two Brooks, the River Tobique, the north branch of the Miramichi and Keswick valley to Fredericton. By this route the distance from Rivière du Loup to Fredericton is 260 miles; from Fredericton to St. John by Oromocto and Douglas valley, 66 miles; a total of 326 miles, or 449 miles from Chaudière to St. John. Route No. 5 is from Rivière du Loup by Island and Eagle lake, the south east branch of Toledi, the northwest branch of Green river, Moose valley, Gounamitz valley, Boston Brook, Two Brooks, north branch of the Miramichi and Keswick to Fredericton, a distance of 262 miles; from Fredericton to St. John by Oromocto and Douglas valley, 66 miles; a total from Rivière du Loup to St. John of 328 miles, and from Chaudiere Junction to St. John of 451 miles. Route No. 6 is identical with the line surveyed in 1864 by Sir Sandford Fleming. From Rivière du Loup to Fredericton and the head of Gravel lake to Apohaqui, the distance is 343 miles; from Apohaqui to St. John, 37 miles; a total of 380 miles; or 503 miles from Chaudière to St. John.

I have referred to these different routes, detailed by Sir Sandford Fleming, for the purpose of showing the thoroughness with which he prosecuted these surveys, and for the purpose also of showing that there were many other routes by which this road could be constructed than the two routes which are reported by the Transcontinental Commission. I think that the extracts I have read show that there is a very marked contrast between the manner in which the surveys were conducted to find a route for the Intercolonial Railway in 1863 or 1864, and the manner in which these surveys have been conducted by the Transcontinental Commission for the present proposed railway.

I have already referred to the great expedition which was exhibited during the election campaign of 1904 along the valley of the St. John river. In connection with that I wish to refer to an interview which was given to the St. John 'Telegraph' by the late lamented Mr. Wade, the Chairman of the Commission, during the excitement attending the general election. That interview I take from the 'Telegraph' of October 17, 1904:

F. B. Wade, chairman of the Commission said last night that in two months they should have sufficient information to be in a position to determine which of the two New Brunswick routes for the Grand Trunk Pacific will be the better.

We are making two surveys in New Brunswick between Grand Falls and Moncton—one down the St. John River valley to the Nashwaak, the other across country by way of Plasteric Rock to Boiestown. We know there is a good line down the river route and the matter of grades on the other route will determine its value. In two months from now we should have information sufficient to permit a decision as to the better New Brunswick route. We were much impressed with the St. John River Valley country, its resources and apparent prosperity. We found the parties in New Brunswick in full swing and doing good work, and district engineer Dunn is highly pleased with the personnel of the parties.

Mr. Wade said good progress was being made with the survey in Quebec province. Under the Act, he added, construction work has to be commenced and carried on simultaneously along the whole line and this we are also applying to the surveying. It is probable that surveys will be sufficiently advanced that contracts will be given out on each end of the line—from Moncton west and Quebec east and Winnipeg east—in the early spring.

The friends of the St. John valley route have looked in vain in the reports which have thus far come from the Transcontinental Commission for any allusion to the splendid advantages with which Mr. Wade was so impressed at that time. Indeed, the reports practically ignore the St. John valley route, make no reference to its real advantages, whereas everything which it was possible to say in favour of the back route seems to have been said. Speaking of the alleged advantages of the so-called central route, the interim report, to which I have already referred, makes special mention of two. It refers to the value of the timber land between Tobique and the Miramichi, and also points out with some enthusiasm the excellence of that country as a game country. Mr. Dunn, the engineer of the district, speaks of it as the most magnificent game country to be found in the Dominion. These are put forward as two of the principal advantages of the so-called central route. It occurs to me that these very facts are very good reasons why the road should not be built through the central portion of the province, because the construction of that line would destroy the very value which the Commission speak of in these lumber lands, and I think it is a fact that there are no persons in the province of New Brunswick who are more strongly opposed to the construction of that line of railway through the central part of the province than the owners of these very lands, because of the fact that it would subject them to great danger from fire. Then it seems to me that the construction of a line of railway would also have a very detrimental effect upon this country as a game country. For some miles at least from the proposed line the construction of the railway would destroy the value of the country for hunting or game, so that the very reasons put forward by the Commission why the road should be constructed through that portion of the province are rather reasons why it should not.

According to the interview given to the St. John 'Telegraph,' by Mr. Wade, the late chairman of the Commission, in the month of October, during the election campaign, the Commission was in two months from that time to have sufficient information to enable them to make a decision as between these two routes. Well, Mr. Speaker, these two months have elapsed and seventeen others besides, and yet we are really further behind as regards the location of this road in the province of New Brunswick than when Mr. Wade gave his interview. In addition to Mr. Wade's statement we have the statement contained in the interim report of the commission dated March 31, 1905:

> The commission is now in possession of sufficient information to enable a decision to be arrived at as to whether the line via Fredericton and the St. John River valley or the one across the centre of the province should be adopted.

The commission also said:

> In this connection it is proposed to commence location surveys in districts A and B as soon as the local conditions will permit, probably the first week in May. It is expected that location surveys of districts A, B and F will be completed so that tenders may be called for in early autumn.

Then the present Minister of Railways (Mr. Emmerson)) said in Halifax in the month of August last, and I take this statement from a little Fredericton newspaper, the organ of the Minister of Railways.

Mr. EMMERSON. I have no organ.

Mr. CROCKET. Here is what it says:

> Since he had left Ottawa the final preliminary surveys had been completed and they will probably be considered next week. The location of the line will depend entirely on the report of the engineers. . . . It is hoped, he said, to ask for tenders for the construction by the end of the present year; so as to give the contractors an opportunity to start work early in the spring.

Now we have these three statements as to when we might expect the completion of the location work on the eastern division and when we might expect the construction work to begin. Notwithstanding, as I have said, we appear to be further behind to-day than we were eighteen months ago. After the interim report of the Railway Commission was published last session, there was quite an agitation in the province of New Brunswick on behalf of the St. John River valley route. Boards of trade, town councils and county councils passed resolutions and a very influential delegation was organized which came to Ottawa and pressed very strongly upon the government the choice of the river route. I know that the delegates who returned to Fredericton were very much encouraged with the belief that it would not be long before a decision was arrived at, and the general hope was that the decision would be in favour of the St. John Valley River route. Some time later a resurvey of both lines was ordered. That survey began last fall. The parties were assembled and set to work, but no sooner did they get fairly started than orders came from Ottawa calling them off. The work was suspended, the parties were disbanded towards the end of December, and practically nothing has been done since.

Mr. EMMERSON. They stopped at Christmas, did they not?

Mr. CROCKET. Yes. I believe the reason assigned for the suspension of the work was that it could not be advantageously carried on during the winter. That statement, however, is accepted with very considerable doubt, because the work on the first survey was prosecuted during the previous winter, which was, in the words of the commission in their interim report, the most rigorous winter with the heaviest snow fall in the memory of living man, whereas the winter which has just elapsed is known to have been the mildest and most favourable experienced in New Brunswick for many years. It is not, therefore, unreasonable that people should be very apprehensive with respect to this matter in view of the very sudden and mysterious suspension of the work at that time. We have in the ordering of a resurvey, very strong confirmation of our suspicions as regards the bona fides of the original surveys. We are told by the Commission in its report at page 21, the following:

> In taking up this part of the work——

That refers to the alternative lines through the province of New Brunswick.

> —the commissioners decided to have an exhaustive and minute examination made of this country, and to acquire and present such information as would definitely settle and determine these conflicting contentions. We deem it best to ascertain beyond doubt which was right and which was wrong in order that the public minds would be set at rest.
> To this end we directed our engineers to make the most exhaustive and careful explorations and surveys, so that having before them all that has been written or said they would be able to make a complete and decisive report.

Now, the Commission stated that these were the instructions with respect to the first survey. Notwithstanding this, it has been deemed necessary to order re-surveys. It seems to me that this fact proves either that the surveying parties did not heed the instructions which they received, or that the re-survey was entirely unnecessary. The re-survey certainly, can be justified only upon the ground that the first survey was unreliable or inadequate. And that is my impression, and, I may say, it is the general impression in the river counties of the province of New Brunswick. The people believe that these surveys were not honest, genuine surveys made with the view to bring before the government the real advantage of the river valley route.

The House will remember that only a few days ago I asked the government as to when the location work would be completed on the eastern division and I received for answer from the Minister of Railways and Canals the statement that it was impossible at present to say. That statement I may say was very disappointing, in view of the high expectations that the people must have had if they accepted the assurances that were made in the first place by the chairman of the commission by the commission in the report, and more recently in Halifax by the Minister of Railways himself.

Now, while this is the condition in respect to the section from Quebec to Moncton, what has been taking place with reference to the section from Quebec to Winnipeg ? I believe that the government has at the present moment under consideration the awarding of two contracts, one for a section of 245 miles from Winnipeg east, and another for a section of 150 miles from Quebec west. That is a fact which certainly causes the people of New Brunswick to be somewhat suspicious in regard to the real intentions of the government as to this Quebec-Moncton scheme, more especially in view of the fact that the letting of these contracts is, as I shall show, a direct violation of the statute in that regard. Section 10 of the amended Act of 1904, says:

> The work of construction on the eastern division of the National Transcontinental Railway shall be commenced, as nearly as may be, simultaneously at Moncton, at Quebec, at the point at or near either North Bay or Nipissing Junction, and at Winnipeg, and shall be carried on westward from Moncton, eastward and westward from Quebec, eastward and westward from the point of junction aforesaid, and eastward from Winnipeg, in such manner that the section between Winnipeg and Quebec, and that between Quebec and Moncton shall be completed as nearly as practicable at the same time.

The contracts that are about to be let provide that these sections covered by the contracts must be completed not later than September 1, 1907. And this notwithstanding that we have the statement of the Minister of Railways made within the past few days as to the Quebec-Moncton section, that it is impossible to say when even the surveys will be completed. In this connection I wish to refer to a statement made by the Prime Minister in his speech on the occasion of the introduction of this Bill in the session of 1903, as to the importance of parliament standing by its solemn pledge. At this time the right hon. gentleman was referring to what he termed a gross breach of faith by parliament in reference to the abandonment of the projected Harvey-Salisbury route, via the city of Fredericton. I may point out that the faith of parliament was not, in point of fact, pledged to that scheme as it is to the present project. We in the province of New Brunswick expected that route to be built, as I believed it was expected in the province of Nova Scotia. The Bill passed this House, but unfortunately for the city of Fredericton it was defeated in the Senate. But, as the quotation that I am to give from the Prime Minister will apply in the present instance to a statute which was passed by both the Senate and House of Commons and is now a law in full force and effect, it is clear that the Prime Minister's words will have more force, a great deal, than with reference to the matter of which he was then speaking:

No, the policy which we propose, apart from all other considerations may be taken as a step, tardy though it be, to implement the solemn pledge which was made in 1885. I confess, that perhaps this of itself would not be a sufficient reason, though in one respect it ought to be a sufficient reason, because if there is one thing as to which the parliament of Canada ought to be firm, it ought to be that the solemn word of parliament is to be sacred and that every promise made by parliament should be implemented.

Now, I would ask the Prime Minister and the members of this government to bear that statement in mind in connection with what is at present going on in relation to the construction of the eastern division, more especially the letting of contracts on the Quebec-Winnipeg section at a time when even the location work has not been completed in the province of New Brunswick.

Now whether this road is ultimately to be built or not, we will suffer a material injustice by reason of the delay that has taken place up to the present time if the work goes forward on the other division. I need not point out to this House the effect of the construction and operation of the section from Quebec to Winnipeg upon the future business of the section from Quebec to Moncton, if the construction of the latter line is to be very much delayed. We all know that when traffic becomes settled or established in a certain channel, it is practically impossible to divert it into any other. I would like to confirm that statement by the authority of the Minister of Railways. In his speech on the Transcontinental Railway Bill in the session of 1903, he said :

We will have to push forward this railway scheme, it would be criminal not to do so. The hon. gentleman from South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) sounded the alarm when he said that unless we do something now, traffic will seek other channels, and we all know that when once traffic has found a certain channel it is almost impossible to divert it into others.

I would ask the Minister of Railways to bear in mind that statement in connection with what has been doing with respect to the Winnipeg-Quebec section, and what has not been doing in respect to the Quebec-Moncton section. Now, Mr. Speaker, just a word with reference to the result of the surveys that have been made I had the honour to ask the government a few days ago what portion of the proposed railway from Winnipeg to Quebec had been surveyed and located, and the right hon. the Prime Minister in his answer gave a statement of the distance from Chaudière Junction to Moncton as 514 miles, by the central route in New Brunswick, and 531 miles by the river route. Now that information was very diappointing, and must have been especially so to those who placed much faith in the predictions that were made by the Prime Minister and other members of his government when the Bill was being put through in the session of 1903, because it showed very unfortunately that the projected line would be eighteen miles longer than the Intercolonial between the same points. It will be remembered that the Prime Minister, in introducing the Bill, estimated that a saving of distance would be effected between the two points of from 120 to 140 miles. I need not weary the House by reading the statement which was made, though I have it here. The Finance Minister was a little more moderate than the Prime Minister, he estimated it at 110 miles, but to be on the safe side he put it at 100 miles. The present Minister of Railways went so far as to declare that a saving in distance would be effected of some 200 miles.

Mr. EMMERSON. Oh, no.

Mr. CROCKET. I will read the statement of the Prime Minister as it appears on column 7662 of 'Hansard' for 1903 :

The Intercolonial Railway makes a long loop towards the north, it describes almost a complete semicircle, the distance covered is no less than 488 miles. We have to follow the line of the state of Maine and following that line we believe we can bridge the distance between Moncton and Lévis by from 120 to 140 miles.

Then by way of excusing what was suggested as a very serious blunder on the part of the government who constructed the Intercolonial, the Prime Minister said :

The Intercolonial was placed where it was for political reasons. Certainly those who built that line, those who conceived it, those who planned it, never contemplated at the time that the day would come when it would be used for transcontinental transportation, yet, scarcely had the last rail been put down, scarcely had a train commenced to run upon it when it was discovered that the long, tortuous meanders of the line were a serious impediment to trade, even to the comparatively small trade of the Canada of that time.

The Finance Minister's statement, in that connection, was this :

Taking the air line and allowing 35 miles for curvature we would have 380 miles as against 496 miles. I propose, however, to treat the mileage of that road as being in round numbers 400 miles.

Now, I have the statement of the Minister of Railways and I will have to ask the House to excuse me for the little delay I have caused by the search for it. I understood the minister to shake his head as if to dissent from the statement I made. This is the statement which he made in the session of 1903, as I have it from 'Hansard:'

Now, this must be borne in mind that by the Intercolonial Railway from Chaudière to Moncton the distance is 488 miles or nearly that, and to the city of St. John by the Intercolonial is 89 miles. I was informed only very recently by an official of the Intercolonial Railway that the actual mileage from Moncton to St. John is 90 miles. That makes the whole distance from Chaudière to the city of St. John by way of Moncton and Intercolonial Railway 588 miles. So if the route projected is followed, the central route through the province of New Brunswick by way of Chipman to St. John you have a saving of distance of at least 200 miles in round numbers, bringing the winter seaport at present used nearer by that distance to the city of Quebec than it is now by way of the Intercolonial Railway.

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes, but my hon. friend made a statement in respect to the distance between Chaudière Junction and Moncton. There is a vast difference between that and going around by Moncton to St. John.

Mr. CROCKET. If I made that statement I stand corrected; I should not have said that. But we have, notwithstanding, the statement that in the then judgment of the Minister of Railways a saving in the distance would be effected of 200 miles between Quebec and the city of St. John.

Mr. EMMERSON. Precisely, between Chaudière Junction and the city of St. John. Comparing the distance by way of the Intercolonial Railway via Moncton with a line from Chaudière direct through the province to Chipman and thence to St. John there would be that saving, but between Chaudière and Moncton by the Intercolonial Railway and Chaudière and Moncton by the proposed Transcontinental Railway there would only be a difference of 110 miles.

Mr. STOCKTON. Did you say there would be a saving of 200 miles ?

Mr. EMMERSON. By going all the way around.

Mr. CROCKET. That would make a saving of 110 miles in the judgment of the Minister of Railways and Canals between Chaudière and Moncton.

Mr. EMMERSON. That is what I figured it at.

Mr. CROCKET. I think that in view of these predictions the country must feel very much disappointed—those at any rate who are interested in the Quebec-Moncton section—at the result of the surveys as it has been disclosed of late. We realize that this can very readily be made a pretext by the government if they are desirous of acceding to the wishes and yielding to the interests of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company by abandoning this section of the road. I sincerely hope, however, that they will not do so and I believe that the people of the maritime provinces will insist that the government implement, in the words of the Prime Minister, the solemn pledge that this parliament has given in connection with the construction of this line of railway. I think it will be conceded upon all hands that the assent of the representatives and of the people of the maritime province to that measure at all was secured upon the faith of the undertaking that the road would be built not only to Quebec but that it would be carried from that point eastward to Moncton. It does seem, however, that the government are up against a little difficulty in this matter, because of the greater length of that projected road over the present line of the Intercolonial Railway between the same points. I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, very respectfully to the government that the proper way out of that difficulty is to do now what the government should have done in the session of 1903—make St. John the terminus and objective point of that line and test then the Transcontinental and the Intercolonial Railway from that point. It will be found then that if the road were constructed from Chaudière, down the St. John River Valley to the city of Fredericton and from the city of Fredericton to the city of St. John, a saving would be effected of 85 miles over the Intercolonial Railway, which, taking into consideration the superior grades on the new route, would be a most important matter and one, which, I think, would justify the government fully in carrying out its pledge to the people of the maritime provinces to construct this section, only that St. John should be the terminus and objective point.

Just a few words before closing in reference to the report of Mr. Lumsden, the engineer of the commission. In the report which the Minister of Railways brought down Mr. Lumsden states :

> The back route running from Moncton westerly across the province in the vicinity of Boiestown, Plaster Rock and Grand Falls to Edmundston is by the preliminary survey lines seventeen miles shorter than the river route, running from Moncton via Chipman, Fredericton, Woodstock and Grand Falls up the valley of the St. John river to Edmundston, the section between Grand Falls and Edmundston being common to both routes. On the back route the final location line will be shorter than the preliminary by at least six miles, whereas the location will lengthen the river route five miles, making the back route some twenty-eight miles shorter than the river route. The difference in bridging and minor structures will be very great. The river route crosses the St. John river twice, calling for 3,000 feet of bridge, and as it also crosses all the lateral drainage of the country close to the St. John river, all the minor structures will be larger and more costly than on the back line. The earth work on the back route will be considerably lighter than on the river route.
> On the whole I am of the opinion that the difference in cost between the two lines will not be less than $1,500,000. The difference in the operating value of the two lines is as follows :
> (Based on the Intercolonial Railway trains mile cost for 1903 of $97.65 per train mile.) For minor savings in distance such as here considered, it can be shown that the cost per train mile is 56 per cent of the average cost per train mile. Hence we get from each day train over the route : 28 miles x 2 x 5 per cent of $96.65 x 313 days equals $9,585 per daily train per year.

I assume that 5 per cent is a typographical error for 56 per cent.

For ten trains daily (the usual assumption in such comparison) it gives us $95,850.11 per year, which sum capitalized at 4 per cent equals $2,396,252.75 ; to which we must add the estimated savings in first cost of $1,500,000, making a total value of the back route over the river route, $3,896,252.75.

Should a pusher grade be made use of from the Tobique river easterly a further saving in distance of say 13 miles would be effected, but the expenses of operating would be of course considerably increased.

3. The back route opens up a new country well adapted for settlement and at present without transportation facilities.

4. The river route is already supplied with railway facilities, and will be connected with the Transcontinental Railway at a number of points.

5. I therefore have no hesitataion in recommending the adoption of the back route with a rate of grade of 0·4 per cent equals 21·1 feet per mile rising eastward, 0·06 per cent equals 31·68 feet per mile rising westerly as the preferable line.

Now, I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that I consider that the engineer of the Commission has been most unfair to the river route in the report I have just read. The first matter I want to call attention to is to the basis upon which he tests the value of these two lines which have the same grade, and the only difference in which is that a distance of 28 miles is saved, according to Mr. Lumsden, by the back route over the river route. The test which he applies is the train mile cost of the Intercolonial which is 97·65 cents. I submit in the first place that that is most unfair in view of the statement that appears in the interim report made by the assistant engineer of the commission, Mr. Butler, who is the present Deputy Minister of Railways and Canals. Mr. Butler at page 22 of the interim report points out that the cost of operation of this new line will be very materially less than the present cost of the operation of the Intercolonial, and I sincerely trust that it will be so if the road is ever built. Mr. Butler makes a calculation in which he says that the same motive power that will haul 660 tons on the Intercolonial, will, by the line secured haul 1,260 tons going east and 990 tons going west. Now, taking that both ways it would be a saving of 41 per cent in the motive power according to Mr. Butler's figures. The same percentage is derived from the figures which Mr. Butler gives in reference to the cost of hauling a given quantity of pay tons over the Intercolonial as compared with the proposed Transcontinental Railway. Mr. Butler says :

It will thus be seen that the annual operating cost to the Intercolonial Railway for the said quantity of freight is $3,016,711.21, while that of the Transcontinental will only be $1,782,-518.72, a saving in favour of the Transcontinental of $1,237,192.47, which capitalized at four per cent per annum equals $30,854,812.25.

That as I stated would show a saving of 41 per cent in the cost of the operation of the Transcontinental Railroad by reason of its superior grades as compared with the cost of the operation of the Intercolonial. And yet the chief engineer, Mr. Lumsden, when he comes to test the relative value of the back route and the river route applies the Intercolonial test, which, from the quotations I have made from the interim report, it would appear would be just 41 per cent too much. I say, therefore, in the first place that from that $95,850 which Mr. Lumsden says will be the cost of the operating expenses of the 28 miles, we are entitled to have deducted 41 per cent which would bring the cost of operation down to about $56,000 instead of the $95,850 which was there given and which would reduce the capitalization by practically $1,000,000. That is the first point in respect to which the chief engineer it seems to me is very unfair to the St. John River Valley route. But to my mind where he is more decidely unfair is, that while he points out in this report that the operation expenses of the river route would be $95,850 more than the operation of the central route, he ignores entirely the difference in the earning capacity of the two routes. Mr. Lumsden knows, as I assume all these engineers and surveyors must know, and as the people of the province of New Brunswick know, that a railway built down the St. John River Valley would serve 15 or 20 times more people than would a railroad through the back route. Mr. Lumsden's own statement is that with respect to the back route it opens up a new country. We know in the province of New Brunswick that there are not a thousand people living between the Tobique and Chipman.

Mr. CARVELL. There are not any.

Mr. CROCKET. The report says there are some.

Mr. CARVELL. Between the head of the Miramichi and Chipman there is not one.

Mr. CROCKET. The statement of my hon. friend (Mr. Carvell) is that there is not a soul living in that district between the head of the Tobique and Chipman. I think it is not unfair to say that between Grand Falls and Moncton there would not be 2,000 people within reach of that railroad from whom local traffic could be expected, whereas, down the valley of the St. John river we have such important places as Andover, Woodstock, and Fredericton, and all the intervening towns and villages along that river which is probably the best settled and the most flourishing section of the whole province of New Brunswick, and furnishing a population of probably between 60,000 and 75,000 people who would be in more or less direct touch with this railway. And yet Mr. Lumsden takes care to point out to the government in this report the increased cost of the operation of that road on a most excessive basis, and never mentions the fact, which one would think would occur to the mind of an engineer who was disposed to make a fair report, that there would be an immense increased traffic secured by the construction of the road down the St. John River Valley over that of the so-called central route. There can be no question, I think that the section from Quebec to Moncton would be largely dependent for its earnings on local traffic; I think railway men will concede that proposition; and if the facts which I have stated—and I think they ought to be sufficient for the purpose—establish that the earning capacity of the railway by the St. John River Valley route would be from fifteen to twenty times more than by the back route, then I submit that this statement is one of the very strongest arguments that can be put forward in behalf of the St. John River Valley route. Why, Mr. Speaker, the road would have practically no local traffic if it went by the back route, whereas if it went down the St. John Valley its earnings would not only wipe out the operating expenses, but would yield the only profit that would be earned on the whole line.

Another point with reference to which the chief engineer is manifestly unfair is in his estimate of the increased cost of the river route over that of the central route, which he puts at $1,500,000; and yet we have in the interim report of the 31st March last this statement as to the cost of the road :

> We cannot estimate accurately the cost of the proposed line from Moncton to Chaudière, but we think that we are safe in stating that it will not exceed an average of $33,000 per mile, and we hope to very considerably reduce this estimate.

And that would necessarily include all the bridges and culverts. Now, twenty-eight times $33,000 does not make $1,000,000; and yet we have $1,500,000 put down as the cost of the St. John River Valley route over the central route. These two facts of themselves show pretty clearly that the St. John River Valley route has not been given anything like a square deal in the location of this road. Then, there is this further remark by Mr. Lumsden, which I submit is an absolute mis-statement :

> The river route is already supplied with railway facilities and will be connected with the Transcontinental Railway at a number of points.

Now, it must have been known to all the members of these surveying parties who travelled up and down the St. John river that there are no railway facilities between Fredericton and Woodstock along the valley of the St. John river, a distance of sixty-two miles. There is a line of railway, the Gibson branch of the Canadian Pacific Railway, which runs from Fredericton to the mouth of the Keswick, about nine miles on the eastern side of the river, and then runs through the back country and on to Woodstock. That is the only railway which touches the River St. John between Fredericton and Woodstock. He further states that the river route will be connected with the Transcontinental Railway at a number of points. I wish in the first place to point out the significance of these words : 'Will be connected with the Transcontinental Railway at a number of points,' rather indicating that Mr. Lumsden, from some cause or other, had already made up his mind that that road, if it were to be constructed at all, would be constructed through the central portion of the province. There are only two points at which that road would be connected with the valley of the St. John river. There would be, in the first place, a connection with the Tobique Valley Railway, running down to the mouth of the Tobique, at its junction with the St. John river. There is only one other point at which there would be a connection in the whole length of this line from Grand Falls to Moncton, that would be at the point of intersection of this road, if it is constructed by the back route, with the Intercolonial Railway, at a point thirty or forty miles from Fredericton. And yet the engineer states that the river route will be connected with the Transcontinental Railway at a number of points.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what I have pointed out—and it is all capable of verification—is, I think, sufficient to destroy entirely the value of this recommendation of Mr. Lumsden, the chief engineer of the commission. The delegation on behalf of the St. John River Valley route that were heard by the government in the month of July or August last, were, I believe, given to understand that the route to be selected would depend on the report of the engineers. That is the statement that has been made from the beginning. I do not want unnecessarily to question the honesty or genuineness of any recommendations or reports that have been given or that may be given by the engineers; but I must say that there is great suspicion that these engineers have been primed and kinked in favour of the back route, and in the interest of the province of Nova Scotia. I need not ask the House to accept my statement as to that. I can refer the House to the Minister of Railways and to the statement to that effect made by his newspaper organ in the city of Fredericton, one of the most pap-hungry and sycophantic papers published in the Dominion of Canada. So strong is the feeling in the province of New Brunswick with respect to the genuineness of these surveys that even that journal, which would swallow almost anything in the interest of the government, made the statement that the surveyors and surveying parties were kinked and primed in favour of the river route. If this matter again comes before the government for the purpose of choosing between the two routes, I ask that these matters to which I have referred be taken into consideration and the fact noted that the reports which so far have been made have ignored entirely the advantages which the river route possesses and exaggerated those possessed by the central route.

In conclusion, I sincerely hope that a very short time will show there is no substantial foundation for the apprehension that exists in New Brunswick with respect to the intention of the government in connection with this eastern division. The solemn word and faith of parliament is pledged to put this road through, and if it be abandoned, its abandonment will be regarded as one of the grossest breaches of faith ever perpetrated on the people by any parliament or government in this country.

Mr. F. B. CARVELL (Carleton, N.B.) At this late hour I think it would be an infliction on hon. members to ask them to listen to me for any time at all, but the matter brought up is so important to the people of my province that I consider it my duty to reply to some extent to the remarks of the hon. gentleman who has just sat down (Mr. Crocket), as well as to give my own views as briefly as possible. I regret exceedingly the standpoint from which my hon. friend has chosen to discuss this question. When I saw that he was to bring this matter up and learned from himself a week ago that he intended speaking upon it, I looked forward with pleasurable anticipation to an honest effort on his part to induce the government to look at this matter from the same point of view as he and I do. But judging from the speech we have just heard I fear that he would not shed many tears if the government should never build a road at all through the province of New Brunswick. He certainly closed his remarks by imploring the government to build the road down to the port of St. John, but I think it is a fair inference to draw from his argument that in his heart he has not forgotten the speeches which he made during the late election campaign when he told the people of New Brunswick that the government had no intention of building the railway through that province and that the whole eastern section was purely a delusion and a fraud from beginning to end. Why that was the stock argument of the hon. gentleman's party all through the province of New Brunswick. I can assure you, Sir, that no proposition ever created such interest and excitement throughout that province as this did during the late election, this proposition to build the eastern section. The discussion that then took place in the maritime provinces will be within the memory of most hon. gentlemen in this House, more particularly because of certain events which transpired in the province of New Brunswick of more than ordinary importance. The whole political situation, from the Liberal standpoint, was considerably disturbed.

Mr. CROCKET. Am I to understand my hon. friend to say that I made the statement in the county of York that the government would never build this eastern division at all?

Mr. CARVELL. The argument of the opposition candidates during the last election all over the province of New Brunswick was that the road would never be built.

Mr. CROCKET. I can only speak for myself. No such argument was advanced in the county of York. We were all apprehensive with respect to the river route and the position of the government in that regard, but no suggestion was ever made that the road would never be built through the province of New Brunswick at all.

Mr. CARVELL. I must accept the hon. gentleman's statement, but let him go into the reading room and read the St. John 'Sun' during the recent election campaign, or any other Conservative paper, and he will find what the contention of his party then was. Who does not remember the cartoon in the 'Daily Telegraph' entitled the Portland Cow, in which the cow was depicted standing across the boundary line, feeding on Canadian soil and being milked by Uncle Sam from Portland. The argument put forward by the Tory party everywhere was that the road would never be built. I have heard that prophecy in this House and it will no doubt be heard again. And I repeat that a reasonable inference to be drawn from the speech made by my hon. friend to-night is that the road may never be built and that in that event he will not shed any tears.

Mr. CROCKET. I venture to say that you will if it is not built.

Mr. CARVELL. Beyond doubt this is a matter of importance to me personally. It is important to the constituents I represent, to the provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, and I contend to the whole Dominion. I accept the statement made by the government at the inception of this transaction as an honest, upright and frank statement made in the best of faith. I believe it was the intention of the government and of every patriotic Liberal in Canada then, as it is to-day, that this road should be built from ocean to ocean, entirely on Canadian soil and have its terminals at Canadian ports. As long as the government is presided over by the right hon. gentleman who guide its destinies, I shall require better evidence than the insinuations and arguments of the hon. gentleman opposite before I will believe that it will deviate one jot or tittle from the contract it made in 1904. It comes with very bad grace from any hon. gentleman to accuse the government of any intention to abandon the eastern section because it has not commenced that section as soon as he hoped it would. I am sorry it did not begin that construction sooner, but I can give some of the reasons—in fact I can give all the reasons—why it has not yet been begun. I myself may as well plead guilty to being one of those who are to blame for the delay, and I have no apology to make for the course I took. But before I go into that part of the case, I may say that I have always understood, since I have taken the trouble to look up railway matters, that modern railway transportation was a question of curvatures and grades rather than distances. Therefore, in considering this matter I have taken considerable time and trouble to look up the question of grades in the different roads which run to the Atlantic ocean. I find that if we take the Grand Trunk Railway to Portland the summit has an elevation of 1,377 feet. I am not in a position to state to-night just what the percentage of grades on the Grand Trunk Railway is, but I do know that many of them must be 1 per cent.

Mr. EMMERSON. Some over that.

Mr. CARVELL. I am informed that some are over that. This must have an important bearing when we attempt to discuss the carrying powers of the Grand Trunk Railway as compared with those of the new transcontinental line. If we take the Canadian Pacific Railway going across the state of Maine, we find that they have a maximum summit of 1,854 feet from Montreal to St. John ; and, it is within the knowledge of every hon. gentleman here that there are dozens and dozens of 1 per cent grades on that line, and I think I am safe in saying that a large number run to 1¼ per cent. If we take the proposed route from Quebec to the St. John river, we find a maximum elevation of 1,500 feet. But as the route crosses the St. Lawrence river at a very great height, I think I am safe in saying that we might consider 1,350 feet to be the elevation of the high lands between the St. Lawrence river and the St. John river. Now this 1,350 feet must be climbed ; and if we want to make this route short we must make the grades heavy, if we want to make the grades light we must extend the road. The standard according to the government has been 4-10 per cent, or not more than 21·1 feet per mile. That is the reason the road has been lengthened. And I am willing to admit that it has been lengthened more than the advocates of the road thought would be needed when the discussions took place in 1903-04. These elevations had not been taken into account though I presume there were figures in existence which would give some idea of what the elevations would be. But there are the facts you have an elevation of 1,350 feet, and with maximum grades of 21 feet to the mile, it takes a certain number of miles to get over the grades. But I understand that it is impossible to build a road with every inch at the maximum grade, therefore it must be longer. But the road must overcome the summit of 1,350 feet in order to reach from the St. Lawrence to the St. John, and there must be hills en route to be overcome as well. In that way, I am willing to agree with my hon. friend from York to some extent, although I cannot agree with him altogether. It seems to me to be a preposterous thing to say that after the elections in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia have been run on this issue, the building of the road should be turned down because the Grand Trunk Pacific do not want to build it. Does the hon. gentleman mean to insinuate that the Grand Trunk Pacific or the old Grand Trunk is the government of this country ? Does he mean to say that that this country is going to break its word given to the maritime provinces, and not go on with the building of this road ? It seems to me that it comes with poor grace from the hon. gentleman to say that nothing will be done at all. They had better wait at least one more year to see what the government will do before they make these wholesale charges of bad faith on the part of the administration. I have here a number of altitudes of the Intercolonial, but it is unnecessary to quote them all. Suffice it to say that, in going over the Intercolonial looking up the altitudes of Canada, there is not a division —and I doubt if there is a section—on the whole line of the Intercolonial which has not grades of at least 1 per cent, and in some places 1¼ per cent. The principal of the important altitudes I may give to the House as it may be a matter of interest to the reading public. I will start where the Intercolonial leaves the St. Lawrence. Before that, I have not taken the trouble to ascertain the figures, though I think there are a number of 1 per cent grades on the route down the St. Lawrence :

	Elevation.	Distance. Miles.
River Ouelle to St. Alexandre..	381	25
Trois Pistoles to St. Fabien.. ..	382	22
Rimouski to Kempt station.. ..	662	33
Nepisiguit river to Bartibogue..	431	20
Barnaby river to Rogerville.. ..	250	12
Dorchester to Evans station.. ..	207	5
Little Forks to Spring Hill junction..	203	5
Oxford Junction to Folleigh station..	524	22
Truro to Summit near Brookfield	121	5

These are only a few of the important summits that have to be climbed by the Intercolonial Railway. And my hon. friend in making his argument as to the fact that this road is longer than our friends supposed it would be at the inception, failed altogether to read the report of Mr. Butler which I think he should have read in all fairness, because he quoted from the interim report exclusively. He might have told the reporters to take in the whole interim report in his speech and then we should have had it in 'Hansard.' Well, I do not like to read reports, and will not trouble the House with any reading of this report of Mr. Butler's, though I think it is a very admirable one and a credit to the gentleman who made it, showing his ability as a railway man, and also the attention he must have given to the question. But Mr. Butler in this report tells us that, were the grades of the Intercolonial reduced to the grades on this new road through New Brunswick, even by the back route—which, I shall show later on is not the proper route—the Intercolonial would be lengthened by 100 miles. Therefore, instead of the two roads being practically the same length, it will be found when the new road is ready, it will be for all practical purposes 100 miles shorter than the Intercolonial from Quebec to Moncton.

Mr. LENNOX. If you lengthen the Intercolonial ?

Mr. CARVELL. It does not matter. If you reduce the grades of the Intercolonial to the standard of the new road, you will have to lengthen the Intercolonial by 100 miles ; or, if you make the grades of the new road the same as the Intercolonial, you will have it, 100 miles shorter than the Intercolonial is. Therefore, the carrying capacity of this road will be greater than that of the Intercolonial, because either it will be 100 miles less or because it will have superior grades at the same distance. I think that, in all fairness, my hon. friend (Mr. Crocket) should have quoted that part of the interim report for it is there in plain English and has a very important bearing upon the question under discussion to-night. And this, if for no other reason, would be enough to justify the government in building this road, in fact would compel them to build it. For, Mr. Speaker, the most important matter in Canadian politics to-day is the transportation question. Anything which will facilitate the transportation of our western goods to the east must be of sufficient importance to be discussed in this House. This question is of so much importance that we must discuss it. If we can get a road that is, for all practical purposes, 100 miles shorter than the Intercolonial we shall accomplish wonders in the transportation problem of Canada.

Now, I am sorry that the report which my hon. friend has read here to-night has been brought to the attention of the people of Canada, for the simple reason that my hon. friend knows—and it is known to nearly every hon. gentleman in this House, and by very many in the country—that this report will never be acted upon ; and for this simple reason, as stated by my hon. friend, that resurveys have been ordered and will be completed. And just here I might tell him that, while the Minister of Railways could not tell him when the surveys will be completed, if he had changed his question so as to ask when these surveys will be commenced, the minister could have told him that they would be commenced about the 1st day of May.

I am not revealing any secrets, it is a matter known to the public and it must be known to my hon. friend, that these surveys will be resumed about the 1st day of May, and will be pushed forward with reasonable speed, and the two routes through New Brunswick will be accurately and I believe honestly surveyed, and will be reported upon, and when that report comes down I believe that an honest decision will be made, and the road will be built by that route which should be adopted from an engineering standpoint. Well, while I never had the privilege of seeing this report until it was laid on the table last Friday, yet from the interim report which was referred to and which was brought down in April of last year, and from information I have received from different quarters, and which was indeed current talk around the city, I came to the conclusion that the surveys through New Brunswick, while I do not say they were dishonest—I won't go so far as that, and I am going to make no comments on these reports because, if I did, I might say something uncomplimentary to somebody—but I do say that they were very incomplete, and I think it is a great pity that when Mr. Lumsden made that report, he did it upon such meagre information. However, Mr. Lumsden was asked to make a report, and he submitted, I presume, the best report he could after getting all the information possible. But, Sir, from my knowledge of the country and from the knowledge which many other people in the province of New Brunswick possess, from the common knowledge of the country, when we read that interim report we saw that great error in judgment had been committed by somebody ; and I at once, in conjunction with Senator Thompson and Senator King, went to the Premier and told him that we believed an injustice had been done, and he told us at once that if that were the case everything would be held up until the matter could be investigated, and he assured us that nothing but justice would be meted out to us. Then the matter was published in the maritime provinces, and the result was that a delegation came here on the 1st of August, and as a result of that delegation the commissioners made a trip to New Brunswick, and during that trip—I presume it was decided before that—but it was announced then that re-surveys would be made. They were resumed, and were continued until Christmas when they were suspended, and are to be taken up again about the 1st of May. My hon. friend finds fault because these surveys were not prosecuted in the winter time. I think if there is anything for which the commissioners are entitled to credit it is the fact they did not push the surveys through in the winter time. It is true that many of my friends were disappointed, I was disappointed myself, that the surveys were not completed earlier. But I feel that this is a matter of too much importance to be put through in the winter time when it is impossible to tell exactly what conditions we may find. The object is to make a location survey, to be able to tell the amount of rock to be cut as nearly as possible, to tell the amount of earth to be removed, the grades to be encountered, and everything in fact that will put the commission in a position to make an accurate report, exactly the same report which the hon. gentleman claims was made by Sir Sanford Fleming. I think I can assure him that when these surveys are completed the report will be exactly as the circumstances demand. That is the whole reason why these surveys have not been completed yet, and I think when my hon. friend thinks it over he will realize that he has been a little unfair in chastising the government the way he has done to-night.

Mr. CROCKET. For not doing what you say now they should have done ?

Mr. CARVELL. For not doing what they could not do successfully in the winter time.

Mr. STOCKTON. Which they intended to do the winter before last.

Mr. EMMERSON. Those were only preliminary surveys.

Mr. CARVELL. When I got hold of this interim report and certain information which evidently was consolidated in this report, I came to the conclusion there was something wrong with the surveys down the St. John river. From my knowledge of the St. John river I knew that there ought not to be any grades at all from Grand Falls to Fredericton. I found a map laid on the table about one year ago in which the elevations were given at different points in the province of New Brunswick, and by that map I found that the difference in the elevations between the head of Grand Falls and the city of Fredericton was about 400 feet. I found the only elevation between Fredericton and Chipman, was about 100 feet. From that I came to the conclusion that in the interim report and Mr. Butler's report they were basing the carrying capacity of these two routes as exactly the same, and from my knowledge of the country I knew is was impossible. I have travelled over practically every rod of the distance of this road from the Tobique river and some distance down the Miramichi, I have travelled over the mountains, I do not mean to say that they are equal to the province of New Brunswick knew that Rocky mountains, but they do look like the Rocky mountains, as compared with St. John valley : I knew and everybody in the there was something wrong, because all of these reports were based and figured out as though the two routes were exactly the same so far as grades were concerned. I never knew where this information was obtained until the time the Transcontinental Railway Commissioners went through New Brunswick when one of the engineers who had a hand in the work along the St. John river, and especially from Fredericton north, assured us that it was impossible to buildl a road along the St. John river without climbing hills 100 feet to 150 feet in height. I was amazed, and I asked him if he, in his surveys, found hills 100 to 150 feet high, and he said he had. Then the matter was plain, it was perfectly plain to my mind why, in all these reports, it was assumed that these two routes would be exactly the same thing as to the question of grades, because if they found hills 150 feet high, that would mean a grade seven miles long in order to climb it and five miles long of a descent on the other side. Now I am in a position to tell this House and this country—and I do not think I am revealing anything which ought not to be revealed, I presume the information is in the hands of the department, but I do not care whether it is or not—I may tell you that this road has been surveyed from Grand Falls to Fredericton in the months of October, November and December, with the exception of about 24 miles north of Woodstock, and the statement which we made to the government in August was more than verified, because the only grade in all of that distance of 137 miles is a hill of 30 feet somewhere below Woodstock. Now you cannot find a road in America 137 miles long with as great a carrying capacity as this road will have down the St. John river if built according to the latest surveys. It is true that 24 miles norh of Woodstock have not been surveyed, but from my knowledge of the country I do not think there will be any greater difficulties in this 24 miles than in the other 100 miles. What do we find on the other route ? When you leave Grand Falls the first hill you climb is going out the basin of the St. John river, you have a hill a little over 300 feet in height.

You then go down into the Salmon river. You have to climb out of the Salmon river over a hill 400 feet in height. Then you have to go down to the Tobique river and you have to climb out of the Tobique river over a hill 750 to 800 feet in height. Then you strike the Miramichi where you encounter great engineering difficulties. The distance from the Miramichi to the Tobique is about 13 miles but the engineers have had to extend the route to a distance of 38 miles in order to reach the desired point. That would mean that you would have an elevation of 21·1 feet per mile, but according to the instructions given in this interim report it was to be a compensated 4-10ths per cent grade which means that on every curve the grade must be reduced 4-10ths of one per cent, which, going eastward, would make the road level on the curves with a maximum 4-10ths grade all the rest of the way to the summit with a maximum 6 degree curvature and that means that the road will probably extend two or three miles further. If you add these hills together—and I am not taking into account all the smaller ones because you are going right across country from one river to another and the whole distance is practically a succession of river basins and watersheds—you have about 1,500 feet of hill to climb or as great an engineering difficulty as that of getting from the St. Lawrence into the basin of the St. John. I ask this House, I ask the people of Canada to consider whether it is a reasonable proposition to climb a hill 1,500 feet high when it is not necessary to do it, when you can carry the road for 137 miles through a country which has no hills in it but which is a little down hill all the way. The grade will be somewhere about two feet or a little better to the mile or less than 1-10th of one per cent going west and it will be a little down hill going east. The ground which I have taken in all my discussions with the different officials, the ground which I have taken and the ground which I intend to take in the future is that it is not a question of whether this road is going to open up new country or not,—I will discuss that a little later on—it is not a question altogether whether it is going to satisfy or accommodate a certain number of people, although that is a very important question, it is not a question of anything else except a question of engineering because this road is a link in a great transcontinental system, this road is to be a road by which the products of the west are going to be carried to the sea-board and I never heard in the first discussion in parliament or in the country that this road was regarded as anything else than a purely transportation proposition. Therefore, my position is and always has been that this road should be located according to the route over which the greatest amount of traffic can be carried for a given amount of money. I think that is an eminently fair proposition and if this route is honestly decided upon, no matter which way it goes, I will be content and I will find no fault with the location. But, I want it to be honestly located. I want the evidence upon which the location is to be based to be honest and while not casting any reflection upon what has taken place in the past, I propose, as far as in me lies, to see that this evidence shall be pretty nearly honest and if this evidence is obtained in that way then I will have no fault to find with the decision. I just want to say to the government, not in the spirit of lecturing in any way and in no hostile spirit at all, that I do think that when this information is obtained it should be given to the public and that we should have a chance to discuss it as well as the commissioners, engineers and officials of the government. This may be, perhaps, asking a good deal but I think it is only a fair proposition when we come to consider the immense importance which it is to the people of the province of New Brunswick; not only to the people of the province of New Brunswick but to the people of Canada as a whole, because one of the hardest things we can possibly do in this world is to divert trade into an unnatural channel and if we have not facilities for carrying this trade equal to what they have on other roads I fear that we will make a dismal failure of the attempt in future. When you come to consider the distance from Quebec to Portland, which route is our great competitor, via the Grand Trunk you will remember that it is 317 miles and that in that 317 miles there is a hill 1,377 feet high to climb. I have no knowledge, though I presume we could find it out, as to how much you would have to lengthen the Grand Trunk road between Quebec and Portland to get grades equal to the grades going over the summit from the St. Lawrence to the St. John, but I think I am fair in assuming you would have to lengthen it 50 miles to make it equal to the new road, so that the distance is not 317 miles in comparison with that of the Transcontinental Railway but it is probably nearer 400 miles. Now, what do we find on the other side? Just here I might as well take up a question, which is no doubt one of some delicacy, one which might lead to some discussion and perhaps to some opposition, but nevertheless I will discuss this thing not from the standpoint of a New Brunswicker, nor from the standpoint of a Nova Scotian, but I will try to discuss it purely from the standpoint of a Canadian. I say the object of this road is to get to Moncton because that is the contract, that is the bond, and it must not be departed from one inch. I was very much surprised this evening to hear from my hon. friend from York, N.B. (Mr. Crocket), suggest that this parliament should go back upon its contract, go back upon the arrangement made with the people of Nova Scotia, go back upon everything that it had done in good faith and say that it will enter into a new scheme and make St. John the terminus and objective point of this road. I perhaps have as much respect for the city of St. John as my hon. friend has, but I have no reason to ask the government to stultify itself in the eyes of the people of Canada and I think I voice the sentiment of the right thinking people in the country when I say, that, the government having made a contract with the people of Nova Scotia, ought to keep to it in every respect and carry it out to the letter. Therefor, I do say that this contract should be carried out. I also insist that it is not the prime object of this road to get to Halifax or St. John, but I say that the prime object is to get Canadian products over Canadian territary and to Canadian seaports. I do not care which seaport it is ; is must be a Canadian seaport and I think there is no question whatever, and our Nova Scotia friends might as well face it, that no matter how hard engineers may attempt, no matter how hard politicians may attempt to divert the traffic from St. John the geographical conditions of the country are such that St. John in the end must get a very large share of the heavy freight traffic of that road. On the other hand I hope to live to see the day, and I hope to see it very soon,—and I believe that as soon as this road is completed and perhaps before we will see it—when a fast line of steamships will be plying from Liverpool to Canada and I have no hesitation in saying that the only natural and proper terminus for this steamship line on the Atlantic ocean is the port of Halifax. Therefore, this road must be built to Moncton in order to accommodate the mails, it must be built through in order to accommodate the passenger traffic and it must go to Halifax in order to carry fast and perishable freight. At the same time I think it is only fair to assume that the heavy freight of the country will find the shortest and cheapest means of getting to the sea-board and it does not make any difference how we may arrange it, it does not make any difference what our wishes may be, this freight will find its natural outlet and that natural outlet must be the port of St. John.

Let us see what the distances are. I regret to say that in the distances which are given in the discussion to-night, and also in the newspaper press, the objective points are taken as Quebec to Moncton, whereas I contend the objective points should be Quebec and tidewater, no matter where it is. And nobody claims that Moncton is at the head of tidewater, although of course they do have a tide there. I say in all seriousness that it was a fair proposition to say that the people of Nova Scotia were entitled to whatever benefits would accrue from this transcontinental line, just as much as were the people of Quebec and New Brunswick, and the people of the west. I say it was only reasonable and proper that Moncton should be the objective point of this railroad. But Moncton was never put forward as a seaport although our friends of the opposition sought to make much merriment of the point in discussing this question as though we were trying to get to Moncton as a seaport. I have no knowledge which I presume is not in the possession of many hon. gentlemen present, but I can tell the House that while it is true that the figures given by the Prime Minister a few days ago in answer to a question by the hon. member for York (Mr. Crocket) show that both the back route and the St. John Valley route had a greater mileage than the Intercolonial Railway, as a matter of fact such is not the case. I am sorry that when the material for this answer was furnished for the Prime Minister we were not given the results of the recent survey. I do not know what they are, but I do know that the answers given by the Prime Minister were the result of the surveys as given in the interim report of March, 1905, because the figures given by the Prime Minister come out exactly to a mile as they appear in the interim report.

Mr. CROCKET. Then, that was not what was asked for.

Mr. CARVELL. I have no opinion to express upon that; I merely state the fact.

Mr. STOCKTON. You don't suggest that the Prime Minister was not telling the truth.

Mr. CARVELL. No, Sir. I suggest that the Prime Minister furnished the information exactly as it was given to him. I don't say that the re-surveys will change it to any great extent, but I do say they will change it to some extent and I will point out why. We are told by the Prime Minister that the distance given here is from Quebec to Moncton, but the figures given in the interim report are from St. John Chysostôme to Moncton and so there would be a difference there of six miles which would have to be deducted, because when you take the distance of the Intercolonial Railway you are taking the distance from Lévis to Moncton and not the distance from the Quebec bridge to Moncton, the Quebec bridge being six miles further away than is Lévis. Therefore, in comparing the two you have to take the distance of the Transcontinental from Lévis to Moncton and there must be six miles deducted at once. I have heard it said—I am not giving this as authoritative—but I make the prediction that at one place in the province of Quebec a saving of ten or eleven miles will be made from the figures as contained in the interim report. I have also been told that there are some savings made on the back route in the province of New Brunswick, and I know as a matter of fact that instead of an addition of five or six miles as contained in Mr. Lumsden's report to the river route, there will be a reduction of from eight to ten miles. I will tell you why I know that. The figures give the distance from Quebec to the boundary as 220 miles; from the boundary to Grand Falls, 62 miles; and from Chipman to Moncton, 59 miles; which distances are common to both these routes. That makes a total of 341 miles common to both routes. If you take that from 531 miles the total distance given, we have 190 miles as the distance from Grand Falls to Chipman via the river route and 173 miles as the distance from Grand Falls to Chipman via the back route. Now, it is within the knowledge of every man who ever lived on the River St. John what the distances are down that river. For the benefit of hon. gentlemen who have not been along there, I will make the statement that at no point along that river can the route vary more than ten or twenty rods either the one way or the other. The banks are high on both sides, with, at different places a small interval never more than fifteen or twenty rods wide. Then again you cannot change the distances of the route down the St. John river more than a mile or two, I don't care who surveys it, how it is surveyed or when it is surveyed. I am now giving the distances furnished on the map of the province of New Brunswick, I am giving the distances furnished by the Crown Lands Department which has surveyed every inch of it; I am giving the distances known to every traveller in the province of New Brunswick and they are as follows :

	Miles.
Grand Falls to Andover..	24
Andover to Woodstock..	50
Woodstock to Fredericton..	62

There cannot be any question about the distances between these three points. I admit there may be some little difference of perhaps a mile or two in the distance from Fredericton to Chipman, but this has been surveyed so many times (there is a carriage road from one end to the other) that there cannot be a difference of more than three or four miles no matter how it is surveyed, especially when we remember that according to the plan laid before this House there is only an elevation of 100 feet to be overcome between these two points which practically means that you can make that grade in ten or twelve miles by using less than the maximum grade. I am placing the distance from Fredericton to Chipman at forty-five miles although it may vary a mile or two either way. Taking forty-five miles as the distance from Fredericton to Chipman, that makes 181 miles from Grand Falls to Chipman. There can be no doubt about the accuracy of this, whereas the interim report says that this distance is 190 miles. There are nine miles that must be taken out of the river route no matter how it is surveyed or by whom. Then again, I have no doubt whatever that by making a slight change in the vicinty of Chipman, a saving of from four to six miles can easily be made. Of course that is only my opinion, but I have no hesitation in giving it as my opinion and I am satisfied that when the reports of the survey come in you will find that there will be a saving of from four to six miles at that point. Therefore we will have to make a reduction of from thirteen to fourteen miles on the river route as compared with the distances given in the interim report. What the saving will be on the back route I do not know. Now, Sir, when we consider that the difference in distance between these two routes is so very slight, I believe we were more than justified in asking the government for a re-survey, and I firmly believe that the result of this re-survey will more than justify all the expense and all the trouble which the government has gone to in the matter. I believe, when these surveys are all brought in that from a purely engineering standpoint the government or the commission can come to no other conclusion but that the route down the St. John river is the only route which can be properly accepted. Now, Sir, my hon. friend quoted from Mr. Butler's report where he claimed that the amount of motive power which would haul 660 tons on the Intercolonial between these two points would haul 1,260 tons by the new route with its four-tenth grades. If that be true why didn't they go on and tell us how much the carrying capacity of that same motive power would be down the St. John river; because, Sir, you must remember that when you have reached the St. John river twenty-five miles out of Edmundston you have got a down grade from there to Fredericton, and practically the same thing on to Chipman.

I am not an engineer, and therefore I am not in a position to give these quantities. I can say, however, that I saw a letter from the manager of one of the important American railroads not long ago in which he stated that where their road had a maximum of only three-tenths they were able to haul ninety loaded cars without any difficulty. Therefore I think it is fair to assume that the carrying capacity of this same motive power down the St. John valley instead of being forty-two cars, as stated by Mr. Butler, would be from 75 to 100, or all that it would be possible successfully to couple behind one engine.

I want to give a few figures of the respective distances of the different routes—not necessarily with a view of showing the superiority of St. John, because that is not my object. I may say there is no burning desire on my part to do more for St. John than I ought to do, and I think I can say the same of all the politicians on our side. You must remember that St. John is a very unknown quantity; it is Liberal at one election and Conservative at another. The people of St. John have no politics except their port, and just here I may say that they have done more towards improving their port than any other city in the Dominion of Canada of the same population. They have spent over a million dollars of their own money in building wharfs and other port facilities. But when you show the people of St. John that anything is going to injure their port, you are pretty sure to rouse their opposition. Who does not remember that in 1900, when the Hon. Mr. Blair went there and made his notable fight, placed his back against the wall and told the people that he was going to stand by the port, the people believed him and gave him a majority of one thousand, but four years afterwards when they got afraid of the Portland howl they gave his opponent a majority of more than a thousand. I am saying that St. John is entitled to justice and no more, and that is nothing more than any one can ask.

With respect to the distances, while I have not the actual distance from Quebec to Portland, if you reduce the grades of the Grand Trunk down to those of the new Transcontinental Road, it must be in the vicinity of 400 miles. By the shortest route the distance from Quebec to St. John is about 475 miles; that would be down the St. John river and utilizing the Canadian Pacific Railway. The distance from Quebec to St. John via Chipman would be 536 miles; from Quebec to St. John via Moncton, by the river route, 608 miles; from Quebec to St. John, by the central route, 598 miles, assuming the figures of the interim report to be correct, which I contend would be materially reduced. The distance from Quebec to Halifax via Moncton by the central route is 694 miles. Now, the distance from Quebec to St. John via Moncton and the Intercolonial Railway is 578 miles, but from Quebec to St. John direct, by the shortest route, the distance is 478 miles, a saving of 100 miles compared with the Intercolonial Railway route, while 100 miles can be saved on account of the superior grades of the new railway over those of the Intercolonial. So that if you take the common sense route, you can for all practical purposes reduce the distance from Quebec to St. John by 200 miles and make the distance so close to the distance from Quebec to Portland that the difference would not be worth considering. On the other hand, if it is contended that the freight must be hauled to Moncton and then back to St. John, you are throwing away all the advantages which geography gives us. If you contend that it must go to Halifax, you are asking people to perform an impossibility, or to do what the ordinarly logic of business will not allow them to do.

My hon. friend has dwelt upon everything necessary to show the advantages of the river route. It must be remembered that the eastern section of this railway is to be a through line for only about five months in the year, while it must be maintained and operated for the other seven months; and if it is constructed through the woods and over the mountains which I have described, where is the money going to come from to pay for its operation during the summer months when there will be no through business? On the other hand, if it is built down the valley of the St. John river, it will pass through a settled country, with a population which my hon. friend puts at 75,000, the finest agricultural portion of New Brunswick and as fine a portion as can be found anywhere in Canada. It will pass through a settled country, inhabited by a wealthy people, people who will travel, and who will furnish enough local traffic from the beginning to make the road a paying proposition during the seven months of the year when it is not used for through freight.

There are some other features of this question that I would have liked to have taken up; but the hour is so late that I have perhaps said enough. I feel anxious about this matter. It is a matter of immense importance to the province of New Brunswick and to all the people of Canada, and I sincerely hope that when the question of the route is decided, it will be decided only after giving due notice, with every consideration and every endeavour to get perfect surveys and to adopt the best route from an engineering standpoint, so that no trouble will arise in the future.

Before I close I want to say a word as to the commission. There has been considerable rather heated discussion about the commission, and perhaps some hard things have been said; but I want to add publicly my testimony to the manner in which this question has been treated by the commission since the first day of August; as to anything before that time I know nothing. I am speaking of it since the commission was reorganized, with Mr. Parent as chairman, and Mr. McIsaac added to the commission. In saying this I am not saying anything against the other two members of the commission, because under the arrangement made, they have to consider the other two sections, and practically the eastern section is not under their control. But so far as Mr. McIsaac and Mr. Parent are concerned, we have received from them nothing but kindness, nothing but an attempt to make this survey as perfect as possible, and I believe that Mr. McIsaac, in whose jurisdiction this portion of the road is very largely, is actuated solely by a desire to make the survey as thorough, honest and practical as can be. I feel it my duty to him to make this public acknowledgement of his acts. He has done everything possible in order that a conclusion best in the public interest may be arrived at; and when the matter is decided, I am confident that our people will feel satisfied that the best decision has been come to.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that the commissioners are divided up into different sections and that each one has a particular section under his control instead of giving his attention to the whole ?

Mr. CARVELL. The eastern section is looked after very largely by Mr. McIsaac, and I think that is the most natural and sensible course to adopt. I only say this because when I go to the commission, I am referred to Mr. McIsaac. I believe that is what any four gentlemen would do under the circumstances. But of course when it comes to a question of making a decision, I would not for a moment say that every commissioner does not take his full share of responsibility and give his full share of attention to the matter to be decided, and give it as much attention as any particular section concerning which he might have more particular knowledge.

Mr. LENNOX. What does the hon. gentleman mean by saying that the other commissioners would have to sign cheques and reports and things of that kind ?

Mr. CARVELL. I never mentioned it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I so understood him. I would like to ask the other question. He says it would extend the rail distance to Portland to 400 miles if the grades were reduced to four-tenths per cent. Does he found that statement on any survey ?

Mr. CARVELL. I do not.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. How can you tell without a survey ?

Mr. CARVELL. I tried to state explicitly that I had not the information but will tell the hon. gentleman on what I base my conclusion. He will find it stated by the commissioners in their interim report that the road from Quebec to the head waters of the St. John river would have to be lengthened some 50 or 60 miles in order to reduce it from one per cent grade down to four-tenths. And I assume that as the elevation to be overcome on the Grand Trunk Railway is the same as it is from the St. Lawrence to St. John you would have to extend the Grand Trunk Railway the same distance as you would have to extend the new road from a one per cent grade down to a four-tenth grade.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is a mere matter of surmise.

Mr. CARVELL. I think it is a pretty correct surmise.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I would like to say a few words upon the subject but as the hour is late, I would move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

ADJOURNMENT—TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY CONTRACTS.

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN I would like to ask whether or not the contracts, to which I have referred two or three times, have yet been awarded and if not what is the reason of the delay. There are rumors flying about, whether founded on fact or not, I do not know. It is said that the commissioners are equally divided on the question. It would appear, from statements we have heard this evening, that this subject might be entirely within the jurisdiction of one commissioner, but apparently that view has not been adopted in this instance. It is said that the commissioners are equally divided, and referred the matter to the cabinet, and that the cabinet are divided eight against six. Is there any possibility of an agreement or will the jury be locked up over night ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Like the Supreme Court of the United States, eight to seven.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I accept the correction of the hon. minister—eight to seven. If that is so, it is a very interesting question as to when the cabinet will be able to arrive at a conclusion and as to what is the important matter which is delaying their determination. I would suppose that the question would be one of the lowest tender. I would suppose that within a period of four weeks—because these tenders have been in about four weeks—it would have been possible for the commissioners in the first instance—and if not for them for the cabinet—in a week or ten days to come to a conclusion as to who is the lowest tenderer. Apparently, however, there are some considerations other than the amount of the tender, which have to be weighed by the administration in this matter. Is there any information to be vouchsafed to-night on this question ? And if it cannot be given to-night, when is it likely that the cabinet will be good enough to make up their minds —or what they may be pleased to call their minds—on the subject. It seems to me remarkable that after a lapse of four or five weeks, no decision can be come to either by the commissioners or by the cabinet. Perhaps I am in error and the contracts have been awarded. But if so, it would be only courteous, after the many inquiries we have made, that information to that effect would be afforded by some member of the cabinet. Will the Minister of Agriculture or the Minister of Marine and Fisheries or the Minister of Railways, or whoever is leading the House at this moment, be good enough to give any information available for that purpose.

Mr. FISHER. I am afraid I cannot gratify the curiosity of the hon. gentleman, and he will have to content himself for the present with pinning his faith to what he sees in the newspapers or what he hears in different ways. I have no doubt, however, that the First Minister will shortly give him the information he desires and give it in authoritative form.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The First Minister pays attention to what is in the newspapers because he dismissed one of his cabinet some three years ago on newspaper reports. Might I ask what business the government will have up to-morrow ?

Mr. FISHER. One or two government Bills and then go into Supply.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What Bills and what Supply ?

Mr. FISHER. The Minister of Justice will take up one of his Bills and the Bill about Inland Revenue will be taken up. Then we shall take supply for the Interior Department.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Has the Minister of Marine and Fisheries any information about that belated report of his department.

Mr. BRODEUR. I have it in my hand and with the permission of the House will lay it on the table.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12.15 a.m., Tuesday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, April 10, 1906.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 102) respecting the Schomberg and Aurora Railway Company. — Mr. Campbell.

Bill (No. 103) respecting the Quebec and Lake Huron Company.—Mr. Lachance.

Bill (No. 104) to incorporate the Hamilton, Waterloo and Guelph Railway Company.—Mr. Zimmerman.

Bill (No. 105) to incorporate the Sterling Life Assurance Company.—Mr. Lennox.

Bill (No. 106) respecting applications for patents of Henry Wurts, Jr.—Mr. Belcourt.

Bill (No. 107) respecting the Erie Ontario Power Company.—Mr. German.

C. F. CALDWELL—COAL MINING LANDS.

Mr. J. D. REID. Has the hon. the Minister of the Interior any further information respecting the question I put him the other day ?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). Mr. C. F. Caldwell has submitted to the Department of the Interior applications from some two hundred and ten of his clients for permission to purchase coal mining lands in the province of Alberta, and he has paid into the department the sum of $1,050 to cover the fee of $5 prescribed by the regulations in connection with each of these applications.

A separate application has been filed in each case, and each of the applications is for the maximum area of coal mining lands which can be reserved for or acquired by an applicant under the regulations, namely, 320 acres.

An acknowledgment has been sent to Mr. Caldwell of the receipt of the fees paid by him, and a separate communication will be sent to him in connection with each of the applications submitted as soon as they have been entered and reported upon. If it is found that the lands are not covered by prior applications, Mr. Caldwell's client will be given thirty days within which to pay the first instalment of the purchase price, (one-quarter) of the lands, and if payment of this amount is not made within the period given, the applications will then be dealt with as having absolutely lapsed.

So long as an applicant for coal mining lands confines his application to 320 acres there is nothing to prevent his submitting any number of applications on behalf of others for a like privilege, provided the prescribed fees are paid and the regulations otherwise complied with. There is nothing in the records or within the knowledge of this department to indicate who Mr. Caldwell's clients are beyond their names.

TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY CONTRACTS.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to repeat to my right hon. friend, the First Minister, the question I put last night in his absence. We understand that tenders for the building of the eastern division of the Transcontinental Railway were received some four or five weeks ago; also that the commissioners were equally divided in opinion as to which should be accepted, and that the matter has been referred to the cabinet. And if one might trust rumour, it is said that the cabinet also are divided in opinion. But of course we cannot expect any confidence from my right hon. friend regarding that. Have any of the contracts been let, and if not when are we likely to be given information on the subject ?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). My hon. friend has not done me justice. I am quite willing to give him all the information in my power.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the majority ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend will know that in good time.

Mr. FOSTER. Is there much of a lobby ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No, that is confined to the other side of the House just now. The facts are these. A report was received from the commissioners last Thursday and the council could not take that matter into consideration until last Saturday. My hon. friend knows well that during the session it is difficult for the council to consider matters of importance except on Saturdays. On the days when the House is sitting, it is almost impossible for us to to take up matters of importance and dispose of them. Naturally, the council dealt with that question the first day and will deal with it again not later than Thursday next, when it will be disposed of, and I shall then be glad to give every information to my hon. friend as well as bring down the papers and lay them on the table.

NATURALIZATION LAWS OF THE EMPIRE.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is the First Minister able to inform me whether any copies are available of the return brought down respecting naturalization ? I moved for an order asking for a memo. from the Department of Justice as to the naturalization laws of the empire. Those laws are collected, with a very exhaustive memo. on the whole subject, in a report to the House of Commons of the United Kingdom. That was brought down in printed shape. Are there any more of these copies available, or will it be necessary to print some part of this for the use of those members interested in the subject ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am quite sure we can supply a few copies yet and will give an answer to-morrow.

INSURANCE COMPANIES BONDS.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. I beg to inquire from the Minister of Inland Revenue regarding the acceptance by his department of the bonds of insurance companies from persons doing business with the government, who had excise establishments and are called upon to furnish security to the government. In this case, I understand, security has been accepted by the government in the shape of bonds of foreign insurance companies. I beg to refer the minister to the interrogation that took place in this House on May 19, 1904, when the Minister of Finance was asked regarding a similar matter, that is, the acceptance by the government at that time of the security bonds of foreign corporations by public officers, and among other answers he gave to the questions put to him, the Minister of Finance replied :

The United States Act does not specially exclude foreign companies, but the effect is as stated.

The effect was pointed out by the minister that so far back as 1894, the American government had excluded from their departments the use of all foreign insurance security bonds and confined themselves strictly to the acceptance of their own companies bonds and declined to accept either British or Canadian securities. The minister went on to state :

After reasonable notice the government will confine its guarantee business to British and Canadian companies.

Later on in the same session, in reply to the member for West Toronto, the late E. F. Clarke, the minister, upon the matter being again called to his attention, stated :

Instructions have been given the various departments that so soon as the existing policies in foreign companies expire they will not be renewed, but the business will then be given to British and Canadian companies. No special date has been fixed because the policies will not expire upon an even date, but when the policies do expire that will be the method adopted.

That was on the 21st of July, 1904. Now, I am informed that the Department of Inland Revenue has sent out circulars to the various collectors at the several ports stating that the bonds of foreign insurance companies of this nature, namely, the United States Fidelity and Guarantee Company, would be accepted. The only other foreign insurance company doing business in Canada is the American Surety Company, whereas, there are some five or six Canadian companies. Now, I have not seen the circulars to which I referred, but I have a letter from the secretary of the Department of Inland Revenue to the same effect.

Ottawa, April 7, 1906.

D. W. Alexander, Esq.,
Manager for Canada,
The London Guarantee and Accident Company, Limited, Toronto, Ontario.

Dear Sir,—Referring to your communication of the 6th instant, I beg to inform you that the United States Fidelity Company is authorized to do business in Canada, and the department cannot prevent any excise establishment from doing business with any company so authorized. The department, however, has not the placing of those bonds, nor has it anything to do with them beyond seeing that proper security is given.

Yours truly,
WM. HIMSWORTH.

Now, surely as the department has the power of either accepting or declining these bonds, I would like to ask the minister if it is the intention to adopt in his department the rule laid down by the Minister of Finance when he said that the acceptance of all security bonds by the government would thereafter be confined to British and Canadian companies as soon as the policies then current expired. That statement was made in May, 1904, and all these policies must, in the ordinary course of business, have long since expired.

Hon. WILLIAM TEMPLEMAN (Minister of Inland Revenue). If my hon. friend will permit me to answer his question to-morrow I will be able to do so more fully, after investigating the subject to which he refers. I may say that my understanding, so far as I have one on the question, is that all bonds accepted by the department for its officers were from Canadian or British companies. I understood further that it was the policy of the department to have all the bonds given by outside parties to the department, made in Canadian and British companies also. But just how far such orders have been given, and how far they have been carried out, I am at the present moment unable to say. I will be pleased to answer my hon. friend more fully to-morrow.

SUPPLY—SHIPPING INTERESTS OF BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister) moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. R. G. MACPHERSON (Vancouver City). Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I desire to bring the attention of the government and the House to a matter which I consider of first rate importance that is the question of further aid to navigation on the west coast of Vancouver island in the province of British Columbia. It is within the memory of every hon. member of this House that three very sad accidents occurred on the west coast of Vancouver island in the month of December last year and January of the present year. Prior to the advent of the Canadian Pacific Railway in British Columbia the shipping interest of British Columbia was a very small item indeed. Twenty years ago the only shipping plying in the waters adjacent to British Columbia was the Pacific Coast Steamship Company, trading from San Francisco to the ports of Victoria, New Westminster and Puget Sound. Also the Canadian Pacific Navigation Company ran coasters, and there was a trade between the city of Nanaimo and San Francisco carried on by the colliers. The advent of the Canadian Pacific Railway has introduced a new era so far as shipping is concerned. From the city of Vancouver which I have the honour of representing in this House, we have to-day the Canadian Pacific Railway liners, the 'Empress of Indian,' the 'Empress of China' and the 'Empress of Japan'; also the 'Tartar,' the 'Athenian' and the 'Montcalm.' These boats ply to and from Vancouver and Victoria and the orient. Also we have the Union Steamship line of boats which ply between the Australian Commonwealth and the cities of Victoria and Vancouver. I speak of the 'Aorangi,' 'Miowera,' and 'Moana,' any one of which boats are of five or six thousand tons burden. Next month we are to have established the Allan Line of steamers running from New Zealand ports to Victoria and Vancouver; while a new line has developed this last year or year and a half known as the Blue Funnel line, the largest boats plying in the Pacific ocean, leaving the city of Liverpool and passing through the Mediterranean, the Suez Canal, the Indian Ocean, Singapore, the Straits Settlements and oriental ports to Victoria, Vancouver and Puget Sound ports. I may say that any one of these Blue Funnel steamers carries a cargo in and out of the city of Vancouver of some 11,000 tons. I am mentioning these points to justify what I intend to bring to the attention of the government and more especially to the Department of Marine and Fisheries, showing that although very few years have elapsed since the shipping of British Columbia was a very small matter indeed, to-day the shipping of that province and especially of the city I have the honour to represent, is of very considerable extent.

Last year 867 vessels came into the harbour of Vancouver, a total of 679,145 tons registered, carrying 113,485 tons of freight and with crews numbering altogether 39,401. The total number of vessels registered for the harbour of Victoria was 1,183, having a total registered tonnage of 989,298 tons, carrying 12,170 tons of freight and with crews numbering 57,903. The difference between the two ports can be very easily explained. Boats plying to Vancouver are only reported one way while boats plying to Victoria are reported both in and out, making a considerably greater registered tonnage reported in Victoria.

On December 28 last, the British ship 'Pass of Melfort,' carrying 23 officers and men, with the captain and his wife, struck the Amphitrite Rocks, which are a very dangerous reef lying north of Barclay Sound. And I may say that two days before the report came in that the 'Pass of Melfort' had struck upon the rocks, the light-house keeper at Cape Beale had telephoned in to Victoria—and the fact was announced upon the bulletin boards in Victoria and Vancouver—that a large four-masted ship was evidently in distress off Barclay Sound. For quite two days, this vessel with its ill-fated crew, endeavoured to make the Straits of Juan de Fuca only to rush upon the Amphitrite Rocks, adding one more to that reef's grim list of death and disaster. Not one solitary soul was saved of those aboard the 'Pass of Melfort.' She was coming up from South American ports in ballast to load lumber in Puget Sound. On December 15, the 'King David,' one of the King Line, from Glasgow, ran on the rocks a little north of Amphitrite Point. However, this wreck was not attended with such terrible disaster as that of the 'Pass of Melfort'; still, no less than six of the men, with the chief officer were drowned, the rest being picked up by the 'Queen City' which plies between the northern part of Vancouver island and Victoria. On January 23 the whole civilized world, certainly the whole of the United States and Canada, was shocked to learn that a large passenger boat had run upon the rocks in Pachena bay, south of Cape Beale, and it was understood that upwards of sixty people were drowned. This was the wreck of the 'Valencia,' belonging to the Pacific Coast Steamship Company and plying from the city of San Francisco to Victoria, Vancouver and Puget Sound points. The vessel was endeavouring to make the Strait of Juan de Fuca when the wreck occurred. I have here, Mr. Speaker, a chart of this west coast. A copy of the same chart was afterwards found on the 'Pass of Melfort,' a copy of the same chart was found in the chart-house of the 'King David' and the same in the 'Valencia—a chart of Vancouver island and adjacent shores of British Columbia, surveyed by Capt. G. H. Richard in the year 1859, so you will understand that a chart nearly fifty years old is the best chart of the coast waters of British Columbia now in existence. And when the 'King David' ran upon the rocks, all that the captain of that vessel had to guide him was a little note superscribed upon the face of this chart, 'shipwrecked mariners will obtain food, shelter and assistance at Cape Beale lighthouse which is a telegraph and signal station.' And all the assistance that shipwrecked mariners could receive at Cape Beale was the opportunity to telegraph to the city of Victoria, 120 miles away. Though they may have thought that they could make Cape Beale in such a storm as passed down our coast from the 25th to the 28th of December, it would be only by the interposition of Providence that they could be saved, for the simple reason that that part of the west coast of Vancouver island lying between Bonilla island on the south to Lennard island on the north is so dangerous as to be known as the graveyard of the Pacific. If I were to tell you the number of disasters that have occurred within that short distance within the last ten or fifteen years, I fear hon. members of this House would refuse to accept the statement without verification. I shall simply mention four of these disasters, but I believe that on the files of the Department of Marine and Fisheries can be found a list of shipwrecks that have occurred in those waters that would appal the people who live upon the Atlantic coast and who are accustomed to speak of Sable island as the graveyard of the Atlantic. And as I have said, the only chart of the west coast of Vancouver island now in existence is one that was compiled in 1859. I wish to bring forward another point in connection with this: At Tatoosh island, on Cape Flattery, there is a light which flashes every thirty seconds. At Carmanah, about twenty miles across the Straits of Juan de Fuca, there is another light which flashes every thirty seconds. Both of these are revolving lights, and the two are almost identical. Either of them can be seen at a distance of about 19¾ miles. But as in the case of the 'Valencia'—and I shall go into that case a little more later on—when a vessel is sailing by dead reckoning through a wall of fog, it is impossible that the rays of light at these two points can penetrate the fog so that those aboard the vessel can see them. If there had been such a light as exists on Lennard island, in the constituency of my hon. friend from Nanaimo (Mr. R. Smith), which was erected only in 1904, and which is of very modern design.

I think there is no question but that the 'Valencia' would have been able to see the light at Cape Beale, which is some 30 odd miles further north than Bonilla point. If you will look at the chart of the entrance to Juan de Fuca strait you will see Tatoosh point, and north of that Carmanah point and a little further north, Cape Beale light. Cape Beale and Carmanah point can be mistaken for one another and Carmanah point and Cape Flattery can be mistaken for one another. The lights are not sufficiently distinctive, although Cape Beale light has a red sector which is visible to the southeast; but a boat which has been buffetted by storm may have been driven a considerable distance out of her way and might not see the red sector pointing southeast by east. It is thought by many that the 'Pass of Melfort' in coming up the west coast in charge of a captain who had never made that trip before mistook Carmanah point for Cape Flattery, and mistook Cape Beale for Carmanah point and, thinking he was making the entrance to Juan de Fuca straits, simply piled his boat on the rocks with the loss of every soul on board.

I wish to press that point very clearly on the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) that the lighthouses which these mariners have to guide them are considered by master mariners, even those who are familiar with the coast, as not being sufficiently distinctive, and in view of that fact some improvements should be made.

The 'Valencia' belonged to the Pacific Coast Steamship Company and on the night of January 23, ran on the Seabird rocks at Pachena bay, just south of Cape Beale lighthouse. The sad story of that wreck is that for 24 hours the 'Valencia' with her ill-fated passengers, were piled upon the rocks and there was no arm long enough and no arm strong enough to save any of those miserable people who went down with the ship, some 126 souls, I am told. I wish to say, Mr. Speaker, recognizing the full responsibility that rests upon me in making the statement, that unless some radical measures are taken to reduce to a minimum the dangers which exist on the west coast of Vancouver island, unless something is done by our government and by the Department of Marine and Fisheries, it is, in my opinion, only condoning murder. That may seem a strong statement to make and may be a strong statement for me to make, Mr. Speaker, but if anybody wishes to combat that statement let him talk to the widows and orphans who are left and who are sighing > —for the touch of a vanished hand,

> And the sound of a voice that is still.

I say further that had there been any means by which boats could have been gotten to the steamship 'Valencia', there would not have been the sad tale of loss of life, there would not be the sad hearts in British Columbia who to-day mourn for those who met death in that disaster.

Of course twenty years is not a very long time in the length of a nation. Twenty years ago we had not as many boats plying to our shores as we have to-day, but, Sir, I think sometimes that just because the province of British Columbia is a long piece away from the east our government sometimes may consider that they do not require the same amount of looking after that they have on the Atlantic coast. But I have faith that if our voice is raised in this House pointing out to the Department of Marine and Fisheries these accidents and the need of improvements in these lights, our government will be alive enough to the circumstances to do all they possibly can to make impossible such accidents as have occurred during the last winter.

Speaking entirely for the benefit of my own city of Vancouver, to which some 50 per cent of the traffic through Juan de Fuca straits, which does not go down Puget sound, comes, the similarity of the light on the west coast I wish to point and to suggest to the minister the advisability of approaching the American department with a view to improving the lights at Tatoosh island and Carmanah point. Carmanah point has a revolving white light with white flash 30 seconds and eclipse 30 seconds, a complete revolution in one minute. At Cape Flattery the United States light on Tatoosh island has a fixed white light with a fixed red sector. Cape Beale has a revolving white light 30 seconds with a red sector bearing to the east and south southeast. It is my opinion that the advancement which has been made so far as aids to navigation are concerned, which I myself have seen on this side of the Dominion, should be extended to the west coast, that the present difficulties there should be remedied, or at least the aids placed in those adjacent waters should be so arranged as to make the possibility of mistaking one light for another very remote indeed. I would also suggest to the minister that those automatic whistling buoys and acetylene gas buoys which I am told are very, very powerful, might reasonably be placed immediately outside the danger zone, warning navigators that when they are as close to land as these buoys are placed, they have then to guard themselves very carefully in making the Straits of Juan de Fuca. That is only one point, there is another point which I wish to make and that is the absolute necessity of having placed on the west coast, somewhere on Pachena bay or Barclay sound a splendid life saving boat, manned by a life-saving crew. It was said to be the intention of our late lamented friend Mr. Prefontaine, to have formed the nucleus of a Canadian navy, and I can tell his successor in the Marine Department that there is no better way to carry out that policy than to have built for the Pacific coast a government steamer similar to our department seagoing tugs, which would carry from 20 to 25 men and which would be able to stand up in any gale. When the 'Valencia' was piled on the rocks and for 24 hours those on board remained without succour, had there been a powerful sea-going steamer carrying surf boats every one of the passengers and crew of that ill-fated vessel would have been saved. The placing of such a boat on that coast to engage in the holy vocation of saving human life, would be an act which would reflect credit on the government. I impress upon the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) that if he wishes to have a Canadian navy; if he wishes to develop a hardy race of Canadian sailors, he can do nothing better than to adopt the suggestions I have made, and have built at once a strong sea-going steamer such as I have described. The government could afford to pay the men on that steamer wages sufficient to be an inducement to them to remain in the service, and thus the most practical means would be taken towards developing a hardy race of sailors.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What distance is the scene of this disaster from Vancouver?

Mr. MACPHERSON. It is 120 miles from Victoria and 200 miles from Vancouver. It needs a catastrophe like the wreck of the 'Valencia' to awaken the public mind to dangers which though always present are unseen or unthought of, and I am not imputing blame to any one because of this disaster. But if nothing is done now to grapple with the situation in a far reaching way, then I say culpable neglect can be laid at the door of the government, and I for one would be the first to place the blame where it should lie. Now, in regard to the 'Clallam' disaster which occurred two years ago.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Where did that occur?

Mr. MACPHERSON. It occurred right off Beacon Hill, four miles from Victoria. The 'Clallam' was wrecked two years ago, and the fact is that she went to pieces like a deck of cards. Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that if the officers of the Department of Marine and Fisheries in the city of Victoria had done their duty, it is my opinion that the 'Clallam' disaster would never have occurred. When the inspector of hulls passed that floating coffin, for she was nothing else, as being in every way seaworthy, he was in effect condemning to death every man, woman and child who might go to sea in that boat. That is a strong statement to make, but I think it is justified. Right in the open sea, when the tug 'Sea Lion' was able to come alongside and ride out the storm without any difficulty, the 'Clallam' went to pieces, as I have said, like a deck of cards. Will any one dare tell me that the man who passed that boat was doing his duty conscientiously? I refuse to believe it, and nine-tenths of the people of British Columbia will refuse to believe it with me. Accidents will happen just so long as ships are built and winds blow, but it is flying in the face of Providence to say that there is no use adopting safeguards because accidents must occur. I impress on the Minister of Marine (Mr. Brodeur) that so far as he is concerned he should take every possible precaution to ensure that in the future these disasters shall be reduced to the minimum. I ask the minister, in the name of the people of British Columbia, in the name of the city of Vancouver, in the name of the shipping interests of the Pacific coast, in the name of humanity itself, that he shall take cognizance of this serious state of affairs. I submit for his careful consideration the suggestions I have made and which are supported by the opinions of the vast majority of the people of the province of British Columbia.

Mr. RALPH SMITH (Nanaimo). The matter brought before the House by my hon. friend from Vancouver (Mr. Macpherson) is one of tremendous importance in the light of what has occurred on the coast of British Columbia. The hon. gentleman has referred to the great increase in the trade of our province and in view of the retarding effect which these marine disasters must have on the growth of that trade, it will be seen that the improvement of the existing conditions is a matter for the very serious consideration of the government. The impression of the people on the Pacific coast is that everything that might have been done by the authorities in Ottawa in the way of providing aids to navigation on the Pacific coast has not been done. I quite understand that in time of extreme popular excitement there is a tendency to blame the government for everything. The government do not create the wind, they do not create the fog, they have not created the natural formations that make the coast exceptionally dangerous, but the government do a very great deal with regard to the security of life in the operation of the marine business. The government ought to be able to regulate the strength and safety of the boats; they ought to control the efficiency of steamships; they are responsible for placing guides where they will be of service to mariners. The supervision of the marine authorities over the operation of the marine business is greater than that over any other business in the country, and is of great importance. Now, many reasons have been given as the causes of these disasters. After the 'Clallam' disaster in 1894 the government had an inquiry made into it. A royal commission has inquired into and has just recently reported upon the facts connected with the serious accident to the 'Valencia.' Having followed these inquiries as closely as it was possible for me to do, I have arrived at an opinion as to the cause of these accidents, and I have arrived also at a conclusion as to the few things which I think could be applied more effectually by the Marine Department in securing the service when boats get into these serious conditions.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Where is the report to be found ? Has it been laid on the table of the House ?

Mr. RALPH SMITH. The report as to the 'Valencia' has just come to hand, I understand, two days ago.

Mr. BRODEUR. It was received two days ago.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. I was in a position, living in British Columbia, to follow pretty closely the proceedings of this inquiry at the time, and thus to learn the facts. Not having had the report to hand, which just came to the department a couple of days ago——

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Has it been published in the press ?

Mr. RALPH SMITH. Day after day considerable reports were published in the press of the province of British Columbia.

Mr. BRODEUR. Not with regard to the disaster itself.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. Yes, with regard to all the evidence. The official report of the committee is of course confined to the department, but all the evidence and the opinions of seamen as to aids to navigation, and what might be necessary to improve the service, came out in this investigation.

Mr. FOSTER. Did I understand my hon. friend to say that he has had a copy of this report ?

Mr. RALPH SMITH. No, I said I had followed the investigation as the reports of it had appeared in the press of British Columbia, and I had come to a certain conclusion as to the cause of these disasters, and as to what I thought might be done by the government to prevent similar accidents in future.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Has the report itself of this commission of investigation—I am not speaking of the evidence—been published in the press ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I think a part of the report has been published in the press—an interim report made some time ago by the persons in charge of the investigation with regard to the aids to navigation ; but the part of the report concerning the disaster itself and the causes of the disaster was not published. That is my recollection.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. Following up the evidence which was presented as to the accident to the 'Clallam' in January, 1904, I think it is important that the facts with regard to that accident should be brought to the attention of this House ; and I think it is especially important that they should be brought to the attention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. The 'Clallam' had only been in commission six months, and it held a certificate of inspection not only from the American government authority, but from the Canadian authority also. The accident to the 'Clallam,' according to the evidence and the opinions of expert seamen on the Pacific coast, was due entirely to the bad construction of the vessel. Here was a vessel which has been in commission only six months going to wreck in an ordinary storm on that coast. But the important thing which I want to bring to the attention of the minister is the fact that that boat which had only been in commission six months, held a certificate of efficiency from the Canadian Inspector of hulls in British Columbia. A report on that disaster was made by the official who was appointed by the Dominion authorities to inquire into it. Whilst that report was made by an expert official appointed by the government themselves, the cause of that disaster to the 'Clallam' was not taken advantage of by the Marine Department to avert any of the disasters that have followed since. From the report of Mr. Lugrin, the official appointed by the government to investigate the accident to the 'Clallam' and a thoroughly capable and impartial man whose work cannot be too highly commended, I want to read a few sentences which I think it is very important for the Marine Department to hear and to know. These were written in 1904 :

I beg to direct attention especially to this matter of inspection. The 'Clallam' was inspected by Captain Collister, Canadian Inspector of Hulls, after completion and while the vessel was lying at a wharf in Seattle, in the state of Washington. In reply to my question he said that he only made such inspection as was possible without opening up the steamer in any way. He knew very little about the vessel's fastenings, did not know whether her frames extended to the passenger deck, nor how the decks were fastened to the clamps, or to the frames. I examined him in considerable detail as to the construction of the ship, but elicited very little information. In fact, he said specifically that he took a great deal for granted, and said, what seems reasonable enough, that unless a ship is opened up it is impossible to do more than inspect her in a superficial way. If the evidence given by Mr. Shea in regard to the 'Isabel' is to be accepted as true, Captain Collister's inspection of vessels when upon the ways is not thorough. Mr. Shea said that the 'Isabel' having met with an accident, was hauled out upon the ways to be repaired, and although her planks were so open at the butts that he could put his hand in between them, the steamer was given a certificate by Captain Collister.

I want to remind the minister that this same inspector of hulls in British Columbia is in the same position to-day. The report goes on :

This statement was brought out incidentally. Mr. Shea having been called to testify as to the condition of some of the wreck of the 'Clallam,' which came ashore. It is, however, only one of a number of statements that have been more or less publicly made as to the condition of steamers to which Captain Collister has given certificates. I express no opinion on the subject, except to say that in the public interest, as well as in justice to Captain Collister if he is blameless in the matter, a full inquiry ought to be made into the manner in which hulls are inspected at this port.

In regard to the ship's boats and equipment, the evidence on the matter of inspection is very direct, and it shows that not only were the regulations in that behalf not enforced in the case of the 'Clallam,' but they are a dead letter, so far as Captain Collister is concerned, in the inspection of vessels plying between British Columbia ports and ports in the state of Washington and Alaska. Captain Collister takes the position that they are not intended to apply to such vessels. This is an important feature of inspection, and I will deal with it in some detail.

Section 1 of part VIII., being the rules and regulations for the inspection of boats, life-preservers and other life-saving appliances, brought in force by order in council of date August 2, 1892, provides that 'no steamboat with passengers on board shall proceed to sea from any port or place in Canada without having certain boats of a specified size and to be fitted and found in a specified way.' The same provision is by the same section applied to steamboats plying upon certain named lakes and rivers and upon any lake or river 'which is upon any point on the route of such steamboat more than one mile broad.' Captain Collister stated under oath that he did not consider this regulation to apply to steamboats engaged in the British Columbia coasting trade, even although their routes lie outside Vancouver island on the open ocean and along one of the most dangerous coasts in the world, or to steamboats running to the Queen Charlotte islands, nor to steamboats plying between Victoria and ports on Puget sound, nor to vessels plying between British Columbia and Alaska ports, notwithstanding the fact that such vessels are at three points along their route exposed to the open ocean. He did not say if he considered any regulations applicable to such vessels, and when I asked him why he did not require the provisions of subsection (d) of section 3 in respect to hooks to be complied with in the case of the 'Clallam,' he declined to give any reason. When asked by me why he did not require subsections (b) and (c) to be complied with, he said that he did not think it necessary.

The boats of the 'Clallam' had no sea anchors, no rudders, no sails, no masts, no compasses, no oil or means for distributing the same, no boat hooks, no lanterns, no spare oars and no water-beakers and were defective in other ways. Captain Collister said he did not make any examination to see whether the boats complied with the provisions of section 2. A witness who examined one of the boats said that the cleats for the row-locks were fastened on with one and a half inch wire nails. I asked Captain Collister if this was the case, but he said he did not know, and in reply to my question as to whether such a fastening would be sufficient he declined to express an opinion. The evidence showed that the davits on the 'Clallam' bent under the weight of the boats and passengers. I asked Captain Collister what test he made of the strength of the davits and he replied that he saw the empty boats hauled up.

The character of the boats and the nature of their finding have an important bearing upon this case, for it is highly probable that if the boats had been properly launched and manned and had been equipped as the regulations require they could have ridden out the gale. But be this as it may, I submit that it is imperative in the public interest that all steamboats carrying passengers upon the coast waters of British Columbia, or between ports in this province and ports in the state of Washington or Alaska, exposed as they are to heavy gales and in some cases for many miles to the open ocean should be equipped with every appliance for the safety of life required by the regulations above referred to.

As to what are the causes of these disasters, when we take into consideration the fact that in the case of the 'Clallam' the whole of the evidence indicates that the construction of the boat was faulty and inferior and taking into consideration also the evidence given by the government officials as to the positive neglect, carelessness or ignorance on the part of the inspector of hulls at British Columbia, we cannot fail to conclude that these had a great deal to do with that particular disaster.

Take the case of the 'Valencia', we can judge by the evidence what was, to a great extent, the cause of the accident. And if we can arrive at the cause of these accidents, we shall be in a position to remove them. What we require to do is to find out where the fault lies in order that we may apply the requisite remedy. Take the case of the 'Valencia', belonging to the Pacific Coast Steamship Company, which had been called into commission in consequence of the regular passenger steamer, on her downward trip, losing her propeller. People who had sailed from Nanaimo on that vessel sent information back to their friends giving their experience. They stated that they had gone through a very dangerous passage during which they were likely at any moment to perish. This steamer 'Valencia' was suddenly called into commission, and the evidence at the inquiry showed conclusively that her crew had been recklessly raked up in the streets of San Francisco and put on board without any examination. Witnesses declared on their oath that there was absolutely no discipline among the crew and none shown in the operation of the steamer. The captain himself was only sailing for the second time into a British Columbia port and went, in consequence of his lack of knowledge, nearly fifty miles out of his course. This could be attributed only to recklessness and carelessness and bad seamanship. I do not blame the government for that, but it seems to me that the intelligence or the ignorance of the men called upon to man these boats and operate this business should come under the supervision of this government. In my opinion it is part of the duty of this government to ascertain whether or not British subjects, sailing on vessels, even though these vessels may be American, enjoy adequate protection against accident. My experience on the Pacific coast is this, that the confidence of British subjects is very materially strengthened when they realize either that they are going to sail in a British boat or a boat that has come under the scrutinizing authority and inspection of a British officer. Let me say this—and it can never be questioned for one minute—that public confidence in the minds of the British people on the Pacific coast in American vessels has been absolutely destroyed. This itself only makes it the more imperative that there should be the most scrutinizing examination by Canadian authorities in their inspection of American vessels and of the seamen who man these vessels. We should have supervision over these men. We should insist upon knowing, in the interests of British subjects, who sail on these vessels, that the men in charge are capable and understand their business. That is my opinion of what the government should do. But what do I find? I find that at the time of the 'Clallam' disaster, it was necessary to have a British certificate for the inspection of the vessel and a Canadian certificate. But I find that on May 5, without any regard to the report I have read or the consequences to the 'Clallam,' an order in council was passed making it possible to accept American certificates as a guarantee of the efficiency of American vessels in a British port. I do not at all agree with that view, however. This order in council was passed in 1905. Let me read the instructions which were issued under it:

I havet to inform you that an order in council, dated the 26th day of April last, was issued, ordering that whereas the Minister of Marine and Fisheries of Canada has received satisfactory assurances that the unexpired certificates of inspection held by Canadian steamboats plying to and from ports in the United States will be accepted by the United States authorities without any further inspection than is necessary to satisfy the United States inspectors that the condition of the steamboats, their boilers, machinery and life-saving equipment is as stated in the Canadian current certificate of inspection; and ordering that unexpired certificates issued by the lawful authorities of the United States of America shall be accepted in Canada as evidence of lawful inspection of United States steamships plying to and from Canada, and that no further inspection shall be required of such steamships beyond that which is necessary to satisfy the Canadian inspectors that the condition of the steamers, their boilers, machinery and life-saving equipment is as stated in the United States current certificate of inspection.

The Canadian inspectors will be supplied with temporary certificates to issue to such steamboats for presentation to the collector of customs at the port from which they clear, in proof of the Canadian inspectors being satisfied as to the condition of the steamships, and the collectors of customs are to treat such vessels as having satisfactorily passed Canadian steamboat inspection.

This regulation came into effect on the 6th instant and is to be observed by the collectors of customs and steamboat inspectors until further instructions are issued on the subject.

Now, I regard that as a very serious matter. I am certain that, as I have stated, the British people have no absolute confidence in the construction of American vessels on the Pacific coast, and they have less confidence in the value of the American inspection, and yet the government has made an arrangement whereby these certificates of inspection can be accepted by Canadian authority. I would recommend to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries not only that we should have a closer and more efficient inspection in Canada, but that we should have our own inspection, and that we should declare to the British subjects who become passengers on American steamers, the condition of those steamers and the condition of the crews who have to manage those steamers and who have the lives of the people in their hands.

Now, I wish to make for the benefit of the minister who has just taken charge of this department a few recommendations that seem to me of very great importance. I know that boards of trade and every kind of so-called authority have presented to this department numerous, extensive, and, in many cases,—according to my opinion,—theoretical recommendations, some of which cannot possibly be carried into effect. The few recommendations that I shall make, I think, can be carried into immediate practical effect:

First, I would recommend the establishment and operation of a wireless telegraph service. The government has a telegraph service from Cape Beale to Victoria. But, in looking over the reports of this service, I find that the line is out of order, about seventy-five per cent of the time. The coast is tremendously rough, broken with deep gulches which make it almost impossible to maintain an efficient service. I find that on the Atlantic coast, the government, three years ago made an investment in the establishment of a wireless telegraph system and has spent money—and very properly—in this service in the interest of the marine on the Atlantic coast. I say I would strongly recommend that the same plan be adopted on the Pacific. I understand that 13 wireless telegraph stations have been established on the Atlantic coast, at a cost of only about $100,000. I understand that also three of the government ships have been equipped with the system at a cost of only about $8,000. I believe that the service is absolutely owned and exclusively operated by the government. Now, while there are companies in British Columbia applying at this time to the government for a franchise to own and operate a wireless telegraph system on the Pacific coast, the efficiency and security of that service depends absolutely upon the government owning it. I strongly commend the government for owning and operating the business, so far as it has gone, on the Atlantic coast, and I would like them to establish and maintain the system on the Pacific coast as well. This in my opinion, would afford an immediate remedy for some of the troubles in marine matters on the Pacific.

The next thing I would recommend, is one that was mentioned by the hon. member for Vancouver (Mr. Macpherson), and that is the improvement of the light on the point on Cape Beale. That point more than any other on the west coast of Vancouver island, stands prominently into the sea. Ships from Alaska, as well as ships from Australia and New Zealand always strike for Cape Beale, and even coastwise steamers from the south; the 'Valencia' was a case in point. Coastwise ships coming from San Francisco and getting out of their course strike for Cape Beale. I would recommend that the very best light and fog alarm that modern science has produced should be placed on this most important point.

Another improvement I would mention, which seems to be very important. I would suggest to the minister the consideration of applying the principle of compulsory pilotage on passenger steamers. I am not so positive in my opinion as to the application of compulsory pilotage to vessels carrying freight only, but when we remember the 'Clallam's,' whose wreck was a serious disaster, and the 'Valencia,' which was forty-five miles out of her course, and neither of which was in charge of a Canadian pilot, the case in favour of compulsory pilotage seems very strong. As one who came from the old country some years ago, I can speak with some authority when I say that one of the guarantees of the British people coming to this country, so far as marine dangers are concerned, is the fact that vessels on reaching Canadian waters are manned by Canadian pilots, men who understand the local conditions. According to the present regulation, there is a system of compulsory pilotage to this extent—that even if vessels do not call for pilotage they are compelled to pay one-half of the cost of a services of a pilot. Every vessel that carries passengers into a Canadian port should be compelled to call for a Canadian pilot should be compelled to take on the vessel some local authority whose knowledge of the local conditions will give confidence to the passengers aboard. I recommend strongly to the minister the adoption at once of the principle of compulsory pilotage so far as passenger steamers are concerned.

Now, I have completed my statement of this matter. My object has been to bring to the attention of the minister the very serious condition of things on the Pacific coast. I believe the minister will take notice of these matters; and I hope he will effect these improvements not five or ten years hence, but this very season, before we run the risk of further disasters in the winter that is coming.

Mr. WM. SLOAN (Comox-Atlin). I desire to say a few words on the question before the House, and to touch on one or two points which have not been dealt with by previous speakers. We have an extensive coast line in British Columbia, which measured in direct lines from headland to headland, extends 800 miles. But when you consider that the coast line is deeply indented by many bays, inlets, sounds and channels, which form innumerable islands, and when you measure the sinuosities of those various shore lines, you have an enormous area of coast line of some 7,000 miles. The district of Comox-Atlin which I have the honour to represent embraces a very large portion of this coast line of British Columbia. As I have had to travel over many miles of this district, I have become familiar with existing conditions, and have given this question of aids to navigation some little attention. There is one feature which has been neglected to a certain extent, both by this government and by former governments, and which has only been appreciated by this government as late as last year, I refer to the question of a hydrographic survey of the waters of the province of British Columbia. The first work in this connection was done in 1793 and 1794 by Captain George Vancouver. Nothing more was done until the year 1857 when the British Admiralty decided to survey and chart the waters of the British possessions on the Pacific coast, taking as a basis the surveys of Vancouver. This work was prosecuted with less or more vigour by the imperial authorities until British Columbia entered the confederation, when it was discontinued by them, evidently under the assumption that this work would be continued by the Dominion government. Nothing further was done for many years until the work was again resumed by the imperial authorities and is being by them continued to this day. The result of these surveys up to the present time has been that so far as the extreme southern portion of British Columbia is concerned, we have a very fair knowledge of the waters of that portion of the province. But there are still large areas of which our knowledge is inaccurate and incomplete, and many a good ship meets with accident and disaster on sunken rocks and hidden reefs in those waters. These will continue to be a menace and source of danger to our shipping until such time as these waters are surveyed and our knowledge is made accurate and complete. We are approaching in British Columbia a new era of development. The Grand Trunk Pacific will open up the northern portion of British Columbia; we will have in that region the new city of Prince Rupert which we expect will rival the sister cities to the south, and it is very important that the waters in that neighbourhood should receive our immediate attention. I was pleased last session to know that an item of $75,000 received the sanction of parliament, which item was designed for the construction of a vessel for the purpose of hydrographic survey work in British Columbia. That is the first real recognition of the importance of this work of survey by the Dominion government, except any small surveys that have been performed from time to time. Now, I wish to call the attention of the House and the government to the utmost necessity that exists that this work should be undertaken without delay in the interest of the marine of British Columbia.

Another matter in which I think the claims of British Columbia have to a certain extent been overlooked is in respect to the Lighthouse Board of Canada. This board is composed of officials of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, along with Mr. H. A. Allan, of Montreal, who represents the shipping interests generally, and the presidents of the corporations of Pilots of the cities of Quebec and Montreal. The duties of the Lighthouse Board are laid down by order in council of February 20, 1904:

To inquire into and report to the hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries upon all questions relating to the selection of lighthouse sites, the construction and maintenance of lighthouses, fog alarms, and all other matters assigned to the minister by section 2 of chapter 70 of the Revised Statutes of Canada.

This board meets in Ottawa from time to time to consider all applications that come before it from the various parts of the Dominion. Now, Sir, I maintain that the province of British Columbia should have a voice in the deliberations of that board. In a new and growing province such as we are, with such a large extent of coast line, I think it is vitally important that our interests should be represented, and I would respectfully urge the minister that this request should receive his favourable consideration. While on my feet allow me to present a plea for greater salaries to our lighthouse keepers in British Columbia. As you are aware, Sir, the regulations require certain qualifications from our lighthouse keepers and rightly so. They are often called upon to meet trying circumstances in time of emergency, and the present rate of wages paid is no inducement for the best men to enter the service. Now, I hope this question of the adjustment of wages for lighthouse keepers will receive the attention of the government, and will be treated on a broad and liberal basis. With special reference to the immediate requirements of the west coast of Vancouver island which have been dealt with by the hon. member for Vancouver (Mr. Macpherson) and the hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Ralph Smith) I earnestly hope the government has already adopted or will soon adopt a policy with a view to preventing as far as possible a repetition of the disasters of the past few months. The interim report of the commission which was appointed to inquire into the wrecking of the 'Valencia' and to make a report as to what they consider advisable in the way of aids to navigation and to the saving of life, deals very fully with these requirements. It is prepared by able and practical men, and their recommendations are in every way feasible and practical. While their suggestions cannot ensure the absolute safety of life and shipping, the proposals which have been presented to the government, if carried out in their entirety, will certainly do much to protect the shipping interests and above all the lives of our fellow men.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). I cannot find any fault with the manner in which this important question has been brought before the House by my hon. friend from Vancouver (Mr. Macpherson) and discussed by the two hon. gentlemen who have followed him. Immediately after I took charge of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, I had occasion to look carefully into the various questions which were raised regarding the protection of marine navigation on the Pacific coast. It was only a few days ago after the lamentable disaster to the 'Valencia', that I was called upon to take charge of that department. There was at the time a great deal of agitation in the west, and consequently I felt it my duty immediately to look into the causes of that disaster. Instructions were given to make a full investigation, and I may tell the House that I received at the end of last week a full report by the commissioners who were appointed to investigate the causes of that disaster.

Mr. FOSTER. Who were the commissioners ?

Mr. BRODEUR. The commissioners were Mr. Godin, Capt. Cox, and Capt. Newcombe. They are competent men against whom nothing can be said. Mr. Godin has been an officer of the department for many years, and is considered a very competent man. I must say the same thing with regard to the two other gentlemen whose names I have just given.

With regard to the 'Valencia' disaster full investigation was made by the American authorities, in Seattle, if I am correctly informed, and it was stated by the American officers who were instructed to investigate that wreck that it was caused entirely through the fault of the captain who had not taken the necessary precautions and had, in the discharge of his duties, failed absolutely to carry out the dictates of good seamanship. Although the report of our officers is not yet before the House I will have no objection to placing it on the table of the House, and I may say that practically the findings or the conclusions of those who have been making the investigation throw almost all the blame on the captain of that ship. He seems to have forgotten one thing which was most essential in the circumstances, he seems to have forgotten that at this time of the year—I understand he was almost a novice in piloting vessels in that part of the country—there are very strong currents which flow northward there. He missed a light at the entrance of Juan de Fuca strait at Tatoosh and went several miles above that and when he saw the light of Cape Beale he thought that it was the light at Carmanah, and went ashore just at that place which has been mentioned by the hon. member. We must not find that the department should be blamed in any respect, because I understand he saw the light of Cape Beale but thought that instead of being the light at Cape Beale, he thought he saw the light on the American shore and that seems to have been the main reason why that accident occurred.

My hon. friend from Vancouver (Mr. Macpherson) has drawn the attention of the House to the very important development which has taken place in the last few years in the navigation on the Pacific coast. It is absolutely correct to state that there has been in the last few years an important development and it is important consequently that all necessary precautions should be taken by the department and by this government in order to protect the navigation on that coast just as fully as we protect navigation in other portions of the Dominion. I may say in this connection that it is the intention of the department, as I shall try to show in a few moments, to adopt what might be considered a very aggressive policy in this connection. My hon. friend from Vancouver (Mr. Macpherson) has referred to the chart which was made in 1859. I may say that these old charts were made by the imperial authorities, and as my hon. friend has said the chart to which he has referred is an imperial chart. We took in last year's estimates a certain amount of money to build a boat in order to make our own charts on the coast of the Pacific ocean. Tenders were called for just a few days ago for the construction of that boat. We retained the services of an officer from England, supposed to be a very competent officer who was connected with the surveys there, in order to make a proper design of that boat and to superintend the construction of a boat which would meet all the requirements of the case. It is expected that that boat will be finished by the end of the year but in the meantime I have given instructions for the building of a small launch in order to carry out in the Strait of Georgia, and near the coast, some soundings which it will be necessary to make in view of the proposed chart for that section of the country. I fully realize, as has been said by the member for Vancouver (Mr. Macpherson) and also by the member for Comox (Mr. Sloan) that this is a very important step, and we are going to take the necessary measures to carry out their wishes in that respect. My hon. friend from Vancouver (Mr. Macpherson) has referred to the want of surf boats in that section of the country. I have given orders for the construction of one of these surf boats and I hope it will be in the service within a very short period of time. It was thought we might possibly use some of the boats used on the great lakes here until we had constructed that surf boat on the Pacific, but it was found that the boat could be constructed in a very short period and now it is constructed and I think it will be completed very soon.

With regard to the light at Cape Beale, my hon. friend from Vancouver (Mr. Macpherson) claims that that light is bad.

Mr. MACPHERSON. No, the minister misunderstood me; I claimed that the Tatoosh light and the Cape Beale light are too much alike, one on the American and one on the Canadian side, and that the Cape Beale light could easily be mistaken for the Tatoosh light on account of the red sector in both lights.

Mr. BRODEUR. I beg my hon. friend's pardon; I thought he said the Cape Beale light was bad, and I was surprised because the report we have in the department is that this light has generally given satisfaction.

Mr. MACPHERSON. It is not equal to the light of Lennard island north of it.

Mr. BRODEUR. We are trying to improve as much as possible the aids which have to be given to navigation. The Cape Beale light has been established for many years, I think it was established about 15 years ago and I suppose that at that time the improvements which we now have in our aids to navigation were almost unknown and the lights which were then used were not so good as the ones used now. The Lennard island light was established in 1905. We then established a lighthouse and fog alarm. The only two aids which existed for the protection of navigation in that section of the country until a couple of years ago, were the light, not perhaps a very extraordinary light at Cape Beale, and the other light and fog alarm at Carmanah at the entrance to the Juan de Fuca straits which was built in 1891. These were the only two aids to navigation in that part of the country. Since that time here is what we have done: In 1905 we established a lighthouse and fog alarm at Lennard island which, I think, is giving complete satisfaction to all those on that coast. We established last year a whistling buoy at San Juan and also one at Barclay sound. We intend to replace the whistling buoys with gas buoys which are supposed to be very much better even than the buoys we have to-day. In 1906, just a short time ago, we started a new light at Amphitrite where the wreck of the 'Pass of Melfort' took place. We had a wrecking plant in the maritime provinces and one on the St. Lawrence, but there was none on the Pacific coast until recently when we called for tenders and awarded the contract to the lowest tenderer.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is the steamer 'Salvor' owned by the government or by a private owner.

Mr. BRODEUR. The 'Salvor' belongs to a private owner; the wrecking plant belongs to a private individual and we pay him certain compensation just as we do on the Atlantic coast.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What life saving appliances are on board?

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not think there are any, but I intend to advise that she shall in future be equipped with a surf boat;

Last year Col. Anderson, the chief engineer of the department was sent to British Columbia to report on what further aids to navigation were necessary and his report has been furnished to me and will be laid on the table of the House. My hon. friend (Mr. Ralph Smith) advocates the establishment of a fog alarm at Cape Beale, but Col. Anderson is not quite in accord with that suggestion. His report is dated the 27th of February, 1906, and referring to this point it says :

I am satisfied that a fog alarm at Cape Beale will never be a success. It would be necessary to locate it so far above the sea and so far back from the edge of the water, and there are so many outlying reefs off the point that the air between it and the vessel at sea would never be homogeneous and with air of different densities a sound is refracted so that it will not go out in horizontal lines. Therefore a fog signal so situated must necessarily be a failure.

It becomes a question therefore whether we should advise the erection of a fog alarm at that point.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. Does not the Royal Commission recommend a fog alarm at Cape Beale ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I cannot answer that off hand because I have not had time to read over the report of the commission, but I think my hon. friend (Mr. Ralph Smith) is right as to that.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. The minister will find that the marine authorities in British Columbia are particularly strong in recommending the strengthening of the light and the establishment of a fog horn, in contradistinction to the report of Col. Anderson.

Mr. BRODEUR. I should say that Col. Anderson's report contans this further :

If this conclusion of mine be questioned, it would be an easy matter to experiment with sound signals at Cape Beale by sending a few hundred explosive bombs to the station and experimenting with them, carefully noting results. If the bombs are audible freely in every direction my theory would be mistaken and a steam signal would also be audible, in which case one should be built there.

Col. Anderson says further in this report ' that a fog signal could be built some miles below Cape Beale and that it would probably meet the requirements of the coast. When Col. Anderson was there last year, unfortunately an accident happened on the ' Quadra ' on which he was travelling so that he could not land at Cape Beale, but he went along the coast on a ship and he says that though he did not go on the shore itself, he is satisfied that a fog signal cannot be easily established there. Col. Anderson had printed instructions published all along the coast giving instructions to mariners so that if a wreck happened at any point they might know exactly a safe place at which to land. In addition to what we have done in late years in supplying aids to navigation on the Pacific coast we have made arrangements for two lights, one at Quatsino and another at Quiquat. We are now considering the establishment of a first-class fog alarm between Carmanah and Cape Beale and we will have to decide later whether a fog alarm will be placed on Cape Beale or at some distance below. That would have to be decided by the officers of the department ; of course I cannot express an opinion on such a technical matter. We propose also to extend the telegraph service and put up additional lookouts. The telegraph line to-day is so exposed to storms that it is not rendering the service it should, and so we intend to establish wireless stations at different places along the coast which will have communication with some points near Cape Beale where the Pacific cable will land,

Mr. RALPH SMITH. Does the government intend to own and operate the wireless service on the Pacific coast ?

Mr. BRODEUR. The department has not come to any formal decision ; I am simply stating what we intend to do. We intend at all events to establish wireless stations at that place in order to connect with our telegraph system and that being done I expect that there will be no difficulty in having communication at all times with Nanaimo, and Victoria, and the rest of the world. My hon. friend from Vancouver suggested the idea of having a Canadian government vessel manned with a number of men. I understand that the United States government has some vessels of this kind, and the officers of my department are making inquiries to ascertain whether they are a success or not. Colonel Anderson has special charge of that question. My hon. friend from Nanaimo has called the attention of the House to an accident which some years ago happened to the vessel ' Clallam ', and attributed some blame to the inspector of hulls, boilers and machinery at Victoria, as not having done his duty in regard to that vessel. In connection with the inspection of steamboats, we are obliged to adopt some simple arrangements with other countries. The American authorities accept our inspection, and it was felt that we should reciprocate by accepting their inspection. But, in view of the accidents which have happened, especially in view of the fact that the 'Valencia ' disaster was to a large extent due to the fault of the captain and was also to a certain extent due to the nature of the inspection of the boat, I intend to consider seriously whether we should not have some more rigid inspection of American vessels. This is a question of great importance, because it affects to a certain extent our international arrangements with the United States. I may say that this inspector at Victoria, who inspected the 'Clallam', is a very old officer of the department, having been in the service fifteen or twenty years. This is the first time that any complaint has been made to me against him ; but I intend to look into the report with the view of ascertaining whether the accident was due to his having been remiss in his duty. My hon. friend from Nanaimo suggests that we should require Canadian pilots to be put on all vessels plying in Canadian waters. This is a question with which I am not very familiar, so far as the west is concerned, but it seems to me that that suggestion would be somewhat difficult to carry out, because we should have to provide when and where these men should be landed and when and where they should board the vessels.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. They would have to call at certain points on the coast for certain pilots, as is done in England.

Mr. BRODEUR. I know that is done in the east ; but when vessels come from the sea, and also in the gulf of the St. Lawrence, which is wholly Canadian water, we have always allowed foreign pilots to take charge of them. My hon. friend from Comox (Mr. Sloan) has suggested that the government should appoint a representative of the west on the Lighthouse Board. I may say that my hon. friend had already made that suggestion to me some time ago, and I found it so good that I took immediate steps to provide for such a representation from British Columbia on the board. The difficulty is to find the best man for the position. I am obtaining reports from my officers on that question, and as soon as I am able to find the man whom I consider best qualified to discharge those duties on the Lighthouse Board in all matters concerning British Columbia, I shall be glad to give his name. My hon. friend from Comox also referred to the salaries of the lighthouse keepers. Several applications of the same kind have been made to the department since I have been the head of it, and it is a very important question. I found that there was no system for the regulation of the salaries of lighthouse keepers, the salaries having been increased in some cases and in other cases not. I have asked the officers of my department to make a full report, classifying the lighthouses, and giving the particulars in each case, so that we may adopt a minimum and a maximum salary on the same principle that we have applied to all the civil service. I think it would be in the interest of the service that such a system should be adopted. It is true that some accidents seem to be a necessity of navigation. I have in my hands the last report, published in February last, with regard to the accidents which have been reported to Lloyd's, or the International Register of Shipping, and I find that in one month, from the 20th of February to the 19th of March, 1905, no less than 598 accidents happened. I may say that the number of accidents to large vessels on the Pacific coast does not seem to be out of proportion to the number in other parts of the world. But that is not a reason why we should do nothing to lessen them. It is my intention, I can assure my hon. friends from British Columbia to use every effort in this direction. I shall probably visit British Columbia next season in order to become more intimate with that part of the country, and so to be in a better position to judge of its requirements.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the hon. minister use the ' Kestrel ' ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not know the names of the boats, but I suppose I shall have to use one of them to visit the coast in order to familiarize myself with the needs of the country, and I can assure my hon. friends from British Columbia that I shall do my best to render justice to all their legitimate requests.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Carleton, Ont.) Before this question is disposed of, I would like to say a few words. The accident which has been referred to by the hon. member for Vancouver (Mr. Macpherson) was beyond question very deplorable. It resulted in the loss of 126 lives, and for at least twenty-four hours 75 of those persons were on board this steamer while three vessels, for a part of that time, were a little outside at sea unable to give them assistance. One of these vesels was the steamship 'Salvor,' to which reference has already been made. I do not profess to know much about the condition of aids to navigation in British Columbia, but the report of the commission would indicate that there is a good deal of force in some of the remarks of the hon. member for Vancouver (Mr. Macpherson). The reticence displayed about this report seems rather remarkable because I find it was published in the Victoria ' Daily Times'—the organ of the Minister of Inland Revenue—just three weeks ago. One would think that this report might have been sent to Ottawa and laid on the table long before this, and I must confess I do not understand the statement of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) that this report has been in his hands only two days.

Mr. BRODEUR. This report consists of two parts, one of which has regard to the aids of navigation. I authorized the publication of that portion some time ago in order that we might have a full discussion on these aids to navigation before the opening of the season. The other part, which has reference to the disaster, was received only two days ago.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The report published three weeks ago deals not only with the causes of the accident, but with the failure to afford any relief to the survivors for at least forty-eight hours and those survivors met their death afterwards notwithstanding there were three steamers outside. I should think it would have been proper for the Minister of Inland Revenue, even if there was a supplementary report, to have placed the one in his possession on the table and afford the House that information which would be of assistance to all of us for a proper discussion of the very important question brought to our attention by the hon. member for Vancouver (Mr. Macpherson). And it would perhaps have been not out of place for the hon. gentleman, when he proposed to discuss an important matter of this kind, to have had the courtesy to communicate to the House his intention to do so. On this side we are in the habit of communicating our intentions with regard to such matters to a member of the government or to the House itself upon the motion to adjourn on the day before, and if that be good practice on the one side, it should be equally good on the other.

Mr. MACPHERSON. So far as I am concerned, the omission was simply due to lack of knowledge of parliamentary procedure and not intentional. I should have been only too glad to have made my intention known.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. No doubt my hon. friend, I think, will recognize the desirability of acquainting the House with the intention to discuss questions of this importance as otherwise they can be discussed only very imperfectly. Not having had the opportunity of seeing before hand this report, I am not in a position to discuss the matter as fully as I would wish. But even when I mentioned this report I could obtain no information from the hon. minister of Inland Revenue (Mr. Templeman) or the members from British Columbia as to whether or not it had been published in the press of that province. The only answer seemed to be an evasive one, so that I took the trouble of having two or three of the British Columbia newspapers examined and eventually found that this report, about which so remarkable an amount of reticence has been observed, was published on the 20th March apparently in full, signed by Captain James Gordon, Captain J. G. Cox and Captain James Newcombe. Of course it has been impossible for me even to read the report in full in the brief time at my disposal since I discovered it, but I propose to give one or two extracts for the benefit of the House and the Minister of Marine (Mr. Brodeur).

My hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries declares that he has no fault to find with the spirit in which this question has been discussed by the hon. member for Vancouver (Mr. Macpherson). In saying that I do not think he pays any great compliment to the administration of his own department either by himself or by his predecessor, because the very direct charges made by the hon. member for Vancouver (Mr. Macpherson) against the administration of the Marine Department may be briefly classified as follows: That although during the past ten or twenty years the number of steamships plying along the coast of British Columbia has enormously increased, there are no proper charts of that coast today, and persons entrusting their lives to the safety of these steamships are liable any day to meet with disaster and death.

Mr. MACPHERSON. The hon. gentleman, I am sure, does not want to be unfair. I did not say there were imperfect charts.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Then what was the point?

Mr. MACPHERSON. What I said was that the chart which these boats were sailing by was a chart that was compiled in 1859.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Are there any better charts?

Mr. MACPHERSON. No.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Was that a good chart?

Mr. MACPHERSON. I am not questioning that nor did I question it, but I said that a better hydrographic survey should be made at once.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not know yet what my hon. friend means. I understood him to say that this was a chart made in 1859, and that there was necessity for more perfect service and better charts. Otherwise I do not at all understand the pertinency of his remarks with regard to the chart. If he did not mean to say that the charts were imperfect, his remarks were irrelevant. I accept his statement as to his intention, but if his remarks did not convey the intention to which I have just alluded, they should not have been introduced into this debate. In the next place he finds that the lights are not only imperfect, but confusing. Not satisfied with stating that they are imperfect, he states that there are two lights near together, which so much resemble each other not only in their general character, but in the period of their flash, that they are almost sure to confuse any master mariner who is seeking to determine his position by means of them. He went on further to say that to continue the conditions which have existed in the past on the coast of British Columbia amounted practically to condonation of murder. It seems to me that if we heard remarks of that kind applied in criticism of the government from any hon. gentleman on this side we would hear something about extravagance and undue censure, and possibly certain Liberal journals in the country would give free vent to criticism. I have not heard language in condemnation of this government out of the mouth of any hon. gentleman on this side during any session I ever sat in this House which equals in force and violence the criticism pronounced on the administration of this department by the hon. member from Vancouver (Mr. Macpherson).

'Neglect amounting to condonation of murder.' And yet the Minister of Marine and Fisheries professes himself as thoroughly satisfied with the spirit with which the hon. member from Vancouver has discussed this question. Well, if the hon. gentleman is satisfied to find the department over which he presides and the officers of that department charged with conduct equal to condonation of murder, all I have to say is that the hon. gentleman is very easily satisfied, and that we can hardly hope for much from his administration of the department in the future. Either the hon. gentleman to whom I have referred or the hon. gentleman for Nanaimo (Mr. R. Smith) said that some of the officials of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, for whose conduct the minister is responsible in this House were just as guilty with respect to this loss of human life as if they had taken a loaded rifle and destroyed the victims of one of these disasters. Is the Minister of Marine and Fisheries satisfied to have the conduct of officials for whom he is responsible in this House characterized in that way? And is he thoroughly satisfied with the spirit of the address of the hon. member for Vancouver who characterizes in this violent, and I hope, extravagant, manner the administration of the department and the conduct of its officials? That is a matter which the hon. minister will have to settle with his supporters.

But I have one or two remarks to make about the report of this commission, and with respect to the notice that this department has had, not this or last year, but for many years past, with regard to the need of life-saving appliances on the coast of British Columbia. The hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. R. Smith) describes that coast as one of peculiar danger. I do not think he will find himself supported by the report of the commission in that regard. For I find that that question was put to the commissioners at the close of the investigation, and they said, in effect, that the coast of British Columbia, like all cosats has its peculiar dangers, but it is not more dangerous, if properly safeguarded by aids to navigation and appliances to secure the safety of life, than any other coast. I do not think the hon. member for Nanaimo was quite fair in characterizing the great Pacific coast of this Dominion as especially and peculiarly dangerous.

Let us see what took place with regard to these seventy-five people who remained for about forty-eight hours clinging to this wreck,—what measures were taken for their relief and what success those measures met with. The report is very voluminous; in quoting, I shall endeavour to be as brief as possible. Three steamers were sent out for the purpose of rescuing the unfortunate seventy-five people who clung to that wreck for forty-eight hours. One of them was a small steamer called the 'Czar' belonging to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, which was ordered to be sent to the wreck by the superintendent of the Pacific coast branch of that company's steamship service. Another steamer was the 'Queen' belonging to the company to which the lost vessel also belonged. Another was the 'Salvor,' a steamer either owned or chartered—chartered, I believe—by this government to assist, in case of wreck, in the preservation of property and the saving of life. The report describes the efforts made by these three vessels as follows:

> The three vessels named arrived off the scene of the wreck on the morning of the 24th.

The vessel, was wrecked, I believe, on the night of the 22nd, or early in the morning of the 23rd.

> Great difficulty was experienced in finding the stranded vessel owing to the fact that her hull being wholly submerged and her house-works being swept away only a small portion of her remained above the water, and also owing to the heavy sea that was running and the occurrence of heavy rain squalls. When the wreck had been made out the people on board the 'Queen' saw that there were people on the wreck. The 'Czar' went nearest to the wreck of any of the ships at the scene, but being a much smaller boat and lower in the water than the 'Queen,' those on board were not able to make out that there was any life on the wreck, and so reported to the 'Salvor.' The 'Queen' did not report either to the 'Czar' or to the 'Salvor' that there was life on the wreck. As a matter of fact there were upwards of seventy-five people on the wreck at that time.

So, here were three boats, one of which discovered that there was life on the wreck, and two others that did not make that discovery for the reasons mentioned. The one that did make the discovery did not report to the other two.

> Believing that there was no living people on the wreck, those persons in charge of the 'Salvor' and the 'Czar' deemed it advisable to proceed with all speed to Bamfield, the nearest harbour, and there organize for the relief of any of the survivors of the 'Valencia' who might have reached the shore. This was done with satisfactory results, although the people to whom aid could be extended were few. The 'Queen' remained off the scene of the wreck for a short time, not more than half an hour after the 'Salvor' had left or until the 'City of Topeka,' a steamship owned by the Pacific Coast Steamship Company, arrived from Seattle with the company's manager on board who directed, the 'Queen' to return to Victoria which she immediately did. The 'City of Topeka' remained at the scene and picked up a life raft from the 'Valencia' with eighteen people on it.

This circumstance shows most distinctly that there was an opportunity to proceed from the 'Valencia' and from the ledges on which she was wrecked to the open sea. The 'Salvor,' be it remembered, was chartered by this government to save life and property. Had she had proper boats aboard, all these seventy-five people whose death has been deplored in such eloquent terms by the hon. member for Vancouver, might have been saved. That is the position in which the government finds itself according to the statements contained in the report of this commission about which so discreet a silence has been maintained by hon. gentlemen on the other side.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. If the hon. member (Mr. R. L. Borden) would excuse me, I would remind him that the report of the commission, says that nothing could have been done from the sea.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I will come to that in a moment, and will deal with the question whether the commission says that or not. But I would like to ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. R. Smith), who is so prompt to excuse the government in this matter, if a life raft for the 'Valencia' was able to reach the open sea and be picked up by the 'City of Topeka,' what was there to prevent a proper and efficient life boat going from the 'Salvor' to rescue the people on the 'Valencia ?'

Mr. RALPH SMITH. I can only refer the hon. gentleman to the authority upon which he relies, the report of the commission, which states that it was considered impossible.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not care what any authority says. I say the fact speaks for itself. One boat, or rather a mere life raft, was able to go from the 'Valencia,' where she was wrecked on this ledge, out to sea and was there picked up. Is my hon. friend from Nanaimo (Mr. R. Smith) courageous enough, rash enough, to say that a proper boat from this steamer the 'Salvor' could not have made the same journey to and from the scene of this wreck? Why, the idea is preposterous, and if reports from the province of British Columbia are correct, my hon. friend from Nanaimo (Mr. Ralph Smith) has taken the whole responsibility for this condition of the 'Salvor'. I understand that he took that responsibility in a speech delivered by him in the city of Victoria, which I will quote in a little while. I can therefore understand his earnestness in protesting that these 75 unfortunates who saw out at sea three steamers, had no right to expect them to come to their assistance and so had to remain there hour after hour and day after day, waiting and hoping for the aid that never came. A more outrageous condition, a more scandalous state of affairs could not be imagined. Think of the agony of these people, with steamers only a few miles out at sea, steamers which should have been equipped with the means of saving their lives; think of the agony of these people at seeing these steamers depart one by one without making any attempt whatever to save them. And the hon. gentleman is content to stand up in this House and declare his belief that although a life raft was able to go from the 'Valencia' to the place where these steamers had been cruising, he is satisfied to excuse this government by declaring that it would have been absolutely impossible for the 'Salvor,' even if properly equipped, to save the lives of those people.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. I made no such claim. What I did say was that the commission to whose report the hon. gentleman is attaching so much importance, declares that it was impossible to do anything to save them. Why does the hon. gentleman read only that part of it ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I will read the whole of it. Then the hon. gentleman's position is that he relies upon a statement of this commission which he does not at all believe in. It means that or it means nothing. I am not concerned with the report of any commission. If I find that commission reporting that this was impossible, and stating at the same time a fact that shows it was thoroughly possible, I do not propose to stultify myself by saying that it was impossible that these people could be saved. I will proceed with the report of this commission.

The 'Topeka' did not see the wreck, nor did she lower her boats to search for persons who might have been carried out to sea on wreckage. The court is of the opinion that had any attempt been made to reach the wreck from the sea, it would have been wholly useless, in part owing to the kind of boats carried by those steamers——

'Owing to the kind of boats carried by those steamers'. Why, I may ask, was this steamer not equipped with the proper kind of boats to go through that surf and rescue those people ?

Mr. RALPH SMITH. Which steamer does the hon. gentleman refer to ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The 'Salvor' chartered by this government.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. It was no part of the contract with the 'Salvor' that she should proceed to life saving.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is to say, because this government did not provide by contract for a proper boat for the saving of these lives, this government is wholly justified in their attitude. That is the position of the hon. gentleman, as I understand it. Well, it is not necessary to comment upon it, his statement speaks for itself.

—it would have been wholly useless, in part owing to the kind of boats carried by those steamers, but chiefly because of the heavy sea that was running and forming what appeared from the sea to be a continuous line of impassable breakers outside of the wreck. Logan and Daykin, who observed the conditions from the shore, said that the breakers did not form a continuous line——

'Stated that the breakers did not form a continuous line'.

—but two lines overlapping each other, with a comparatively smooth place between them, through which the rafts got away from the ship, but this place was not discernible from the ship, and Logan and Daykin expressed it as their opinion that such boats carried by coasting steamers could not have reached the wreck.

Now, that is the portion of report which the hon. gentleman desired me to read, and which, he declared, shows that it would have been absolutely impossible to save the lives of these men, even if the 'Salvor' had been equipped with proper life saving appliances, and had been provided with boats which reasonable precaution would have provided if the government and the Department of Marine had been attending to their duty.

The court desires to express its deep sympathy with those who have suffered loss through the death of relatives or friends through the disaster.

If the court, instead of expressing that sympathy, had seen fit to give us information which is not to be found in the report as to how near these three steamers to which I have alluded approached that wreck I think we might have placed more reliance in the wisdom of the court and in its capacity to conduct an investigation of this kind. There is not one word in this report from beginning to end which, I can find, to show how near the 'Salvor', or the 'Czar', or the 'Queen' was able to approach this wreck. I venture to think that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries might find it advisable to direct a further inquiry in that regard.

Now I find that this steamship 'Salvor' has been subsidized by the government of this country to the extent, I believe, of $10,000 a year. It is called the British Columbia Salvage Company. It is a statement made in the public press, of which I have no knowledge, but I am submitting this to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and I am saying what I am now about to say for the purpose of information, and in order that a statement of the actual facts may be placed before the House by him, either on this occasion or on some future occasion. This steamship has been chartered by this government, at least has been subsidized by this government, to the extent of $10,000 a year for the safety of life and for the salvage of property as well.

Mr. BRODEUR. It is a wrecking plant.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Well, it is a wrecking plant. Does the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, after the repeated notices which I understand his department has received from the province of British Columbia, does he excuse himself in respect of this disaster by saying that although the department found it necessary to make provision for saving property, they found it unnecessary and undesirable to make any provision for saving life in cases of a wreck of this kind ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I may say that the contract made with this wrecking plant in British Columbia was the same contract which was made by a former Conservative government for Nova Scotia.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not care whether a Conservative government or a Liberal government made it, I say that out of the mouth of his own friends he has been condemned, because they tell us that the traffic on that coast has been increasing by leaps and bounds during the last ten or twenty years. Further than that, I tell him that the Board of Trade in British Columbia, that his own officers in British Columbia, have urged upon this government over and over again, if statements made in the public press are true, that appliances for the safety of life should be provided. I do not know whether that is true or not. I have placed upon the order paper a motion for all communications of that kind, and we shall see by and by whether or not the officers of the hon. gentleman's department on the Pacific coast, and these Boards of Trade have made these representations to the government, and whether or not these representations have been absolutely neglected, as they appear to have been. But I would like to quote to the House the statement made by the hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Ralph Smith) on this subject. I do not know whether the report of his remarks is correct, I take them as I find them in the public press. The words of the hon. gentleman speaking, at the A.O.U.W. Hall on Wednesday—I do not know the date—were :

I take the full responsibility for that 'Salvor' contract. I have no doubt you all believe me honest. The assumption seems to prevail among many that this subsidy towards this service is intended for life-saving. That is an erroneous opinion. Infected by the disaster, people have received the false conception that this service was intended for the saving of life.

The hon. gentleman seems to think that it is absolutely unheard of that the government, on a coast which he himself pronounced especially dangerous, should undertake the task of providing appliances for saving life, although in his opinion they were bound to do so for the saving of property, and he continues :

It's a salvage service, to save property, and incidentally save life.

Life is a mere incident to property. Look after the property in the first instance and as a mere incident to that, in a mere casual way, you may be able to save some human lives now and then.

It is not part of its service to save life, actually.

Whatever that may happen to mean. The press comment upon this rather forcibly in one or two places. Might I be permitted to read some of the quotations ?

Who should we hold culpable for ignoring the numerous representations that were made about the protection of life on this coast, and were sent to Ottawa by the agent of marine and fisheries in Victoria and by the Board of Trade ? When the people asked for bread, who gave them a stone ? When lives were always at stake, who provided facilities for saving wrecks only ?

Mr. RALPH SMITH. What paper is that in ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not know the paper.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. That is the 'Colonist,' the Conservative paper in Victoria.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Well, I have read the report of the commission from the Liberal paper and I am now quoting in turn from the Conservative paper. Both of them seem to condemn the hon. gentleman with about the same vigour.

I am not reading this for the purpose of any partisan comment, I am reading it for the statements of fact which it contains, and one of these statements of fact which I have just read is that numerous representations as to the necessity of protecting life on that coast were sent to Ottawa by the agent of marine and fisheries in Victoria, and by the board of trade. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman who has interrupted me so frequently whether he knows anything of these and whether that statement is correct ?

Mr. RALPH SMITH. What statement ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The statement that numerous representations have been sent by the agent of marine and fisheries and by the board of trade as to the necessity of appliances for the saving of life on that coast.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. I think perhaps as far as the board of trade is concerned that is true; I could not say what the report of the agent of marine and fisheries is because that is a private matter.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If these representations were made by the board of trade do they not seem to have been well founded ? Think of the loss of a steamer loaded with freight and carrying a large number of passengers on a dangerous coast such as has been described, and tell me why in the name of all that is human should you provide means for saving that property and provide no reasonable means for saving those lives ? I do not understand the point of view of the hon. gentleman who seems so anxious to justify the view of the government although he has been elected to this parliament as a perfectly independent member, free entirely from all party ties.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. What is the hon. gentleman's conception of an independent member ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Well, it is the exact opposite of any characteristic I have ever seen the hon. gentleman display.

I should like to continue with a few more statements of fact contained in this article. I do not know whether or not the statements of fact are correct, but they are not statements over which the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. L. P. Brodeur) should go to sleep and he seems a little inclined to somnolence just at this moment.

Immediately after the loss of the 'Pass of Melfort' on the west coast of Vancouver island with all hands,——

I do not know at what date that took place; perhaps the minister could inform me when the 'Pass of Melfort' was lost ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I have not the date before me.

Mr. MACPHERSON. December 26, 1905.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (reading) :

Immediately after the loss of the 'Pass of Melfort' on the west coast of Vancouver island, with all hands, the board of trade once more took up the question with the government of life-saving appliances on that coast and pointed out that a whaling company had been formed and were operating at Sechart, and had the steamer 'Orion' engaged in the business ; that this steamer kept steam up constantly, and that her crew were always on board. The board of trade requested that an arrangement be made with this company by which their steamer could be called upon at any time for the saving of life and property ; also that telegraphic communication be established between coast points and the whaling station. The board went fully into the question of the great loss of life on the west coast and referred the minister to the records of his own department. A copy of this letter was sent to all the members and senators from the province. Mr. Ralph Smith acknowledged the receipt of the letter and stated that the board 'must be aware that the government had entered into a contract with the British Columbia Salvage Company, and that a subsidy of $10,000 a year had been provided for that purpose.'

That seems to deal with life-saving appliances and the answer of the hon. gentleman to the letter seems to indicate that at that time at least he expected that this steamer the 'Salvor,' would be equipped with everything necessary for the saving of life which might be endangered by wrecks on that coast.

In this way the governmen have left the matter, they have taken no action up to the present time. The discussion to-day will not be without profit to the House and the country if it induces the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to give his immediate attention to this question and to provide on the coast of British Columbia those reasonable and necessary means for saving life which, if provided at the proper time, would have resulted in the safety instead of the death of 126 human beings. I understand that although the Minister of Marine and Fisheries is technically responsible for the administration of his department under his predecessors we must not hold him personally and humanly responsible for that administration in the past. I do not wish to impute that to the hon. gentleman who has only been a few months in his department. I believe he will give vigour and industry to the administration of that department and I join with my friends from British Columbia in urging upon him the necessity of undertaking this work at once, because, however valuable and necessary may be the appliances he has provided for the safety of property, I am sure that he and his colleagues on the treasury benches will realize and recognize that ten thousand times more valuable and necessary are the appliances which should be immediately provided for the purpose of saving human life on that coast.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Hon. WM. TEMPLEMAN (Minister of Inland Revenue). The hon. members for Vancouver (Mr. Macpherson), Nanaimo (Mr. Ralph Smith), at Comox (Mr. Sloan) have advanced many and cogent reasons in favour of improving the aids to navigation on the Pacific coast by the erection of lighthouses, fog alarms, beacons, buoys, wireless telegraphs, and other modern appliances. This is a question of very great importance to the province of British Columbia, and its importance is fully realized by this government which in recent years has taken active steps towards improving the navigation of the Pacific coast. The hon. the leader of the opposition in his address, thought it well to depart from the arguments adduced by the members from British Columbia, and to attempt to fasten upon the government responsibility for the wreck of the steamship 'Valencia' and the lamentable loss of life which followed. It does seem to me to be an unfortunate thing that the leader of a great political party should attempt to make political capital out of such a misfortune. One would think it too small a thing for a gentleman in his high position to attempt to saddle upon the government of the country responsibility for loss of life in a marine casuality of this kind. I am sorry to say that the leader of the Conservative party seems to be attempting to build up a political platform upon calamities and misfortunes. It is only the other day that political capital was sought to be made out of the falling of a tower, and this afternoon we had a similar attempt with regard to a disaster which happened at the other side of the continent and for which possibly no one was directly responsible except the unfortunate captain who went down with his ship. So I say, the leader of the Conservative party seems to be attempting to form his political platform out of a couple of misfortunes such as the falling of a tower in Ottawa and the loss of a steamship on the Pacific coast.

Mr. BARR. It is a misfortune for you.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. It is a misfortune for the opposition that such tactics should be resorted to. What are the facts in respect to the loss of the steamship 'Valencia'? She was an American mail steamer registered in San Francisco, officered by Americans and on her voyage from San Francisco she ran north some 700 miles in a fog. She passed the American lights at Tatoosh, and at Cape Flattery without seeing them, the fog being so dense. She passed Carmanah light on the shores of Vancouver island and stranded within six miles of the Cape Beale light without seeing any lights whatever. The captain simply sailed forty or fifty miles too far north and instead of getting into the Straits of Fuca he ran on the shores of Vancouver island. There was an extremely heavy sea and his ship landed among the breakers and in among the rocky ledges only a few hundred yards from the Vancouver island coast. As soon as information arrived in Victoria that the accident had happened, three ships, the 'Salvor,' the 'Czar' a powerful tug, and the 'Queen' of the same line as the 'Valencia,' hastened to the rescue. These ships got outside of where the 'Valencia' was stranded and the evidence given at the investigation which is backed up by the opinions of the captains on board all these vessels is, that it was absolutely impossible for any aid to be rendered to the stranded 'Valencia' by the three steamers I have named. My hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) read some portions of the evidence—

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I did not read any portion of the evidence.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I beg his pardon; he read from the report which is founded on the evidence, and I should like to quote some few extracts from that report. It says :

The accident to the 'Valencia' happened on the 23rd, information was conveyed to Victoria on the 23rd at half past two p.m., and the salvage steamer 'Salvor' hastened to the rescue. The 'Czar' and the 'Queen' also were ordered to the scene. These three vessels arrived at the scene of the wreck on the morning of the 24th. Great difficulty was experienced in finding the stranded vessel owing to the fact that her hull being wholly submerged and her house work being swept away, only a small portion of her remained above water.

It appeared in evidence that it was very difficult indeed to distinguish the remains of the 'Valencia' through the fog and through the blinding rain.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The report says so.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The report continues.

And also owing to the heavy sea that was running and the occurrence of heavy rain squalls. When the wreck had been made out, the people on board the 'Queen' saw that there were people on the wreck. The 'Czar' went nearer to the wreck than any of the ships at the scene, but being a much smaller boat and lower in the water than the 'Queen,' those on board her were not able to make out that there was any life on the wreck, and so reported to the 'Salvor.' The 'Queen' did not report either to the 'Czar' or to the 'Salvor' that there was life on the wreck, although it is in evidence that some one called out to the 'Czar' that there was ; but this was not heard on the 'Czar.' As a matter of fact there were upwards of seventy-five people on the wreck at the time.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is the hon. gentleman reading the evidence or the report ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I am reading the report.

As a matter of fact there were upwards of seventy-five people on the wreck at that time. Believing that there were no living people on the wreck, those persons in charge of the 'Salvor' and 'Czar' deemed it advisable to proceed with all speed to Bamfield, the nearest harbour and there organize for the relief of any of the survivors of the 'Valencia' who might have reached the shore. This was done with satisfactory results, although the people to whom aid could be extended were few. The 'Queen' remained off the scene of the wreck for a short time, not more than half an hour after the 'Salvor' had left, or until the 'City of Topeka,' a steamship owned by the Pacific Coast Steamship Company, arrived from Seattle with the company's manager on board, who directed the 'Queen' to return to Victoria, which she accordingly did. The 'City of Topeka' remained at the scene and picked up a life raft from the 'Valencia' with eighteen people on it. The 'Topeka' did not see the wreck, nor did she lower her boats to search for persons who might have been carried out to sea on wreckage.

And this is an important statement and is the crux of the whole thing.

The court is of opinion that had any attempt been made to reach the wreckage from sea, it would have been wholly useless, in part owing to the kind of boats carried by those steamers but chiefly because of the heavy sea that was running and forming what appeared from the sea to be a continuous line of impassable breakers outside of the wreck. Logan and Daykin, who observed the conditions from the shore, said that the breakers did not form a continuous line, but two lines overlapping each other, with a comparatively smooth place between them, through which the rafts got away from the ship, but this place was not discernible from the ship and Logan and Daykin expressed it as their opinion that such boats carried by coasting steamers could not have reached the wreck.

Daykin is the keeper of Carmanah lighthouse. Logan is a resident of Alberni district. The two men had made their way through the woods, across the mountains and along the shore to a point opposite to where the wreck was, some hundred yards distant. I have read the whole reference in the report to the attempted rescue of the passengers and crew of the wrecked vessel, and I call the attention of the House expressly to the opinion of these nautical men that it would have been absolutely impossible to have rescued any of these people from the direction of the sea. The commission was composed of three marine men, Captain James Gaudin, for many years the agent of the Department of Marine and Fisheries in British Columbia, Captain Cox and Captain Newcombe, of the government steamer 'Kestrel.' The opinion of these men ought, I think, to be taken before that of my hon. friend, who said that these men should have ventured closer to the ship and should have attempted to rescue the people who, it was afterwards shown, were aboard the 'Valencia,' although at that time it was unknown to the people on the 'Salvor' and the 'Czar' that any of the crew or passengers were on board of that ship.

Now, it seems to me that the attempt of my hon. friend to fasten on the government the responsibility for the loss of life that occurred will be absolutely unsuccessful. It is only a few weeks since I had to return to the Pacific coast and face the electors of the city of Victoria, and the only question discussed at that election was the 'Valencia' disaster. Our Conservative friends forgot altogether the questions which they sometimes discuss in this House. They never once refered to the Autonomy Bills nor to the question of trade or the tariff, but they tried—because my election was only a few weeks after this unfortunate calamity—to work up public opinion on this question in the hope of defeating me. What was the result? In the city of Victoria, where all the facts are known, where the nature of the coast line is known, where the efforts of this government to provide greater facilities to navigation are known, my friends of the Conservative party were unsuccessful in inducing even one voter to hold this government responsible in any respect for this melancholy disaster.

Now, we all realize the necessity for more aids to navigation on the Pacific coast. As one of the hon. members from British Columbia said, our coast line is several thousand miles in extent, and this particular part of the coast, Carmanah lighthouse westward, and northward, is exceedingly dangerous. It would be absolutely impossible, I am advised by the experts of the department, to maintain a life-saving station at any point between Carmanah and Cape Beale, this is the stretch of coast where most of these unfortunate disasters have taken place. The coast is abrupt, mountainous almost down to the water's edge, is densely wooded, is cut into here and there by mountain streams and gorges, and it would be absolutely impossible to maintain at any point along that coast a life-saving station. But I understand that it is the policy of the department to place life-saving stations at Bamfield Creek, from which point life-boats might proceed to sea. It might also be well to have life stations at Carmanah, but along this coast line, all the way from Carmanah to Barclay Sound, there is no point where life-boats could be launched. This matter has been engaging my personal attention for some weeks, and I have been in communication with the officers of the department, even before my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries had attained that position, with the view of trying to solve the difficulty. The officers of the department have had the matter under consideration and have been making an inspection with the view of establishing a certain number of wireless telegraphic stations, arranging to have constructed a road along the coast line in order that life-saving appliances could proceed from point to point as might be found necessary. The problem is an extremely difficult one. We cannot do in a hurry all that we expect to do, but I am quite certain that the necessities of the case will be met, and that every possible security that can be given to life and property, and every possible appliance that can be provided for the saving of life in the case of marine disasters will be provided by the government at a very early date.

I do not know that I have any thing further to say. We all regret this lamentable disaster. I do not think my hon. friend can make any political capital out of it; I am quite sure he cannot. His party failed in the city of Victoria, where every man, woman and child know all about the loss of the 'Valencia,' and I am quite sure he will fail in this House in any such attempt as completely as did his friends in the city of Victoria, where the one and only thing they had to talk about in the recent election, when the Conservative party was defeated by about 700, was the unfortunate loss of the steamer 'Valencia,' only about one hundred miles from the city in which I live.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Might I call the attention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to the circumstance that the Victoria 'Daily Times', from which I quoted this afternoon, declares that

> A supplementary report recommending various aids to navigation, life saving appliances and arrangements was read at the last sitting of the commissioners this morning. This report was published in the 'Times' some weeks ago.

Therefore, instead of having been delayed, it evidently was published in advance, and everything was available on the 20th March.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. That portion of the the report to which my hon. friend refers consists of recommendations of the commission regarding improvements which were made at my request.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am only referring to the date of course.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. At my request they furnished me with suggestions as to what improvements could be made and my object was to get those suggestions before the public as early as possible. I received that supplementary report from the commissioners at Victoria and read it at a public meeting, and it was published in the newspapers. That interim report is the conclusion of this report. It simply refers to the proposed improvements and was published before the report was finally prepared.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am not criticising anything but simply calling attention to the fact that everything was complete by the 20th March, and I understood this afternoon from the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) that the report only came to his hand only a few days ago.

Mr. BRODEUR. I meant the final report.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I may be under some misapprehension, but the report from which the Minister of Inland Revenue has just read, was published in the Victoria 'Times' on the 20th March, and the same issue of the paper states that the supplementary report had been published in its columns some weeks previously. I think therefore it should have been available long before this.

Mr. BRODEUR. That the whole report should have been published before it reached the department.

Mr. J. B. KENNEDY (New Westminster). I had not intended, Mr. Speaker, to take any part in the debate, but having heard some very curious assertions, I should like to add my testimony to that of my hon. colleague from Vancouver (Mr. Macpherson) as to the necessity and importance for better protection and lighting of the entrance to the Straits of Fuca. As my hon. friend has told the House, practically all the shipping of British Columbia—certainly all the shipping of the southern part—and all the shipping from Puget Sound has to reach the open sea through the Straits of Fuca, and it is very important that the entrance, although wide and easily found in daylight should be well lighted at night. Thanks to the efforts of the government, the entrance is comparatively safe now, but it can be made safer. Improvements are always in order, and we are anxious to see still further improvements made in the lighting of those straits. Every one understands that one side is on American territory and the other on Vancouver island. The Americans have their side as well lighted as ours—I do not think any better. I have not gone through it for some years, but the first time I came through was in a storm in the middle of the night, and we made the entrance quite easily. That was a good many years ago, and no doubt it is much better lighted since then.

In giving statistics regarding the shipping which leaves Vancouver, my hon. friend did not mention another shipping point. I do not propose to trouble the House with any statistics at all, but I would like the House to know that there is another shipping point, with a deep water harbour, the only fresh water harbour in British Columbia—the Fraser river, about sixteen or eighteen miles from the mouth of which is the city of New Westminster. Thanks to the efforts of the government within the past few years in dredging some of the worst places in the river, the largest vessels can go to the city of New Westminster and load with perfect safety. Last week a vessel drawing twenty-two and a half feet of water and loaded with one and a quarter million feet of lumber left New Westminster and went over the worst bar with several feet of water to spare.

But that is not what I rose to draw attention to. In discussing that terrible disaster which befell the 'Valencia', some statements have been made reflecting very severely on the government. Well, I am not here to defend the government. That is not necessary. But there were some very strange assertions made. I understood the hon. the leader of the opposition to say that there was nothing to hinder those boats which were lying outside from reaching that vessel when a light raft could get away from her and find a channel out.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I did not say that.

Mr. KENNEDY. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. Being a little deaf, I do not always hear what is going on and consequently must have misunderstood what the hon. gentleman said.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I said that if the 'Salvor' had been equipped with a proper boat which could go through the surf, as she should have been, that boat would have been able to reach the wreck because a raft had come from the wreck.

Mr. KENNEDY. That is if she had been equipped with proper life-boats.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Yes.

Mr. KENNEDY. That is all right. I understood my hon. friend to say that there was nothing to hinder a boat reaching the vessel. Any one who has ever been on a deep water tug and tried to get a line to another vessel in a heavy sea would easily understand how difficult it was to reach that ship when the wind was blowing heavily against it and rocks all around. There have been all sorts of reasons given why the vessel was lost, and we are very apt to lose sight of the real reason why so many wrecks take place. The real reason is the inordinate greed and thirst for making money which characterizes so many of our shipping companies as well as other companies. The man in charge of that vessel could very easily, by losing the night's run, have saved his ship, but the officers of these steamers are under such orders from the owners that they very often take chances which their better judgment would lead them to refuse. Just fancy a man with a large number of human beings under his care running a rocky shore looking for an entrance. The only entrance was from the east. Just imagine his looking for that entrance and losing his reckoning and then, although he knew he was out of his reckoning, rather than lose time by going out to deep water and waiting for daylight, trying to find his way in, and in consequence wrecking his ship and causing much loss of life. The same thing happened years ago when the steamer 'Islander, belonging to the Canadian Navigation Company, now controlled by the Canadian Pacific Railway, was lost. The captain of that vessel, in trying to make a record run, was running almost at full speed in a fog when he knew there were ice-bergs all around, and consequently lost his vessel. Therefore, I say that people in trying to find scapegoats for these disasters very often do not blame those deserving of censure, but instead blame the government or some other authority that had nothing to do with it.

THE YUKON CONCESSIONS.

Hon. GEORGE E. FOSTER (North Toronto). Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I want to refer very briefly to a matter which has come to light through the press, and this time, as often at other times, through the medium of the Yukon press. There are in three or four of the numbers of the Dawson 'Daily News' a sort of serial running composed of various letters and comments thereon. These letters have seen the light on account of a law suit which has gone on there and here between certain concessionaries in a dispute which has arisen among themselves. And in that correspondence, these gentlemen, and a member of the House, and a department of the government, each play a part. I have no fault to find with gentlemen taking hold of a concession that they think they can make a good thing out of it—it is their own affair and they are not to be blamed for taking hold of it. But there are some parts of this transaction which seem a little peculiar, and which, I think, might with advantage be commented upon in the House.

It is the Department of the Interior that, in this case, as in so many others, furnishes food for thought. It is over that department, in this case, as in so many others, that the shadow of suspicion draws closer and closer towards the department itself and the central figure of the department. It is in the management of that immense part of our domain which fell into the hands of the ex-Minister of the Interior that this suspicion has had birth, has developed and is, I suppose, now coming somewhere near its denouement.

Mr. BUREAU. Hear, hear.

Mr. FOSTER. I infer from the plaintive expression that I hear from the other side that that word is not clear enough to my hon. friend, and perhaps I should ask his pardon for using it. I will refer him to the Minister of the Interior for a translation of the word, for I can hardly translate it myself. It appears, however, that, in 1899, two business men of the city of Ottawa obtained from the government a valuable concession in the Yukon. These were excellent business men, and in every way reputable and worthy citizens of this city—Messrs. Bronson and Ray. Associated with them was Mr. Joseph Tyrrell, at one time an officer of the government connected with geographical and topographical exploration of the Northwest. It seems to have been the intention of these gentlemen—as appears from the correspondence which was published—to pay the rents and fees of the lawyers, and, outside of that, to spend as little as possible in developing and working the concession. It seems to have been in the carrying out of that policy that they got into trouble. For, about the year 1902, as appears from the correspondence, these gentlemen were rudely startled by a notice from the Department of the Interior that the time for the operation of the concession would not be extended, and that it was the intention of the department to terminate the concession a short time after the notice. This notice impelled to action. Two courses were open to these gentlemen in order to keep their concession. One was the simple, plain and businesslike course of expending a proper amount of money upon the concession in order to do the work which was made necessary by the regulations. That would appear to the ordinary person to be the best, quickest and most proper method to follow. But it had not been the policy of these concessionnaries up to that time, nor did it appear to be the policy that they thought best to adopt. They looked around to see what other course they could follow. They seem to have had an impression—and here is where the first reason for thoughtfulness comes in—that it was possible to retain the concession by some other method than that of putting on the machinery and doing the work necessary to fulfil the conditions attached to the granting of the concession. They seem to have had an impression that it was possible to bring influence to bear upon the minister to have him make it unnecessary for them to actually develop the concession in 1902 that had been running from 1899. And so, as it appears from the correspondence, instead of putting on their machinery and working their concession so as to make it impossible for it to be taken away from them, they sought the other method of bringing influence to bear upon the minister. Assuming that affairs were in a normal condition, one would suppose that the first idea that would occur to two business men like Messrs. Bronson and Ray, would be that if they as business men were handling a business proposition and had to deal with a business minister, the natural and the quickest way to settle the whole matter would be to go to that business minister with their business proposition, talk it over with him and present their reasons. Then, if the reasons were sound and sufficient, the business minister would give his agreement and consent, and everything would be all right. Why was it that two business men like Messrs. Bronson and Ray did not think that was the natural as well as the best way of making their approach to the minister ? I have said that this affords food for thought. I think it does. I cannot conceive of their taking any other course unless they were under the impression that it was possible, under the government as it was constituted, and taking into account their experience with that government, to bring a sinister influence to bear upon that government and upon the minister who was chiefly involved and so get an extension of a concession which they could not get for business reasons, however good or reasonable those reasons might be.

Now that in the first place is not very complimentary to the government, and was not very complimentary to the minister. But they did not think that they themselves were the proper persons to go and see the minister. They cast around for some saviour other than themselves. The course of the correspondence shows how this gradually developed. Perhaps it would be better to read the correspondence in part, so as to show the various steps which were taken. There seemed to be a series of letters written along about the latter part of June or the 1st of July, some of which are shown in the exhibit as being brought out during the trial. One of the first of these letters is directed to J. B. Tyrrell, who at that time was in Dawson City, and it goes on in this way :

Dear Mr. Tyrrell.— Mr. Ray brought into me yesterday a notice received by him and Mr. Bronson from the Department of the Interior, in which the department notifies them that the extension of time granted to them of an indefinite time to do the work on the Bonanza hydraulic concession, has been withdrawn, and that the lease in question will be cancelled because of a lease executed by you on the 30th of March, 1901, in the name of E. H. Bronson and C. C. Ray to S. J. Thurber on the McKay fraction being a part of this concession. Both Mr. Ray and Mr. Bronson are very much exercised over the matter, and they have asked me to try and straighten it out with the minister, which I am trying to do.

Then follows some writing which is not important to the subject immediately in hand. The writer goes on to say :

I am also instructed by them to request that you will be good enough to forward at once to me a letter which I can show to the minister, and if necessary have filed with him, giving the best explanation possible why this lease was entered into, and containing such details as will enable me to get over the difficulty created by its execution. Please do so. You might also write me a letter for myself, in which you will give me such explanations as you think will enable me in the matter. . . You are no doubt aware that Mr. Ross is very much opposed to these concessions, and that he has set himself to the task of abolishing as many of them as he can.

This letter is signed N. A. Belcourt. Now you will notice that Mr. Belcourt, in writing to Mr. Tyrrell, asks him to send two letters. One is to be a letter of the kind which will help Mr. Belcourt with the minister; the other is to be a letter natural, as it would seem, an explanation of affairs exactly as they were. Then Mr. C. C. Ray writes to Mr. Tyrrell some time later, about half a month or so. Writing to Mr. Tyrrell he says :

Dear Sir,—Your letters of May 11 and 12 were answered as far as possible by my wire and Mr. Belcourt's letters. It looked as if we would have no concession to work. Mr. Ross and the minister seemed determined that it should go. If we hold it we can thank our solicitor, who is moving heaven and earth to save it. . . . I hope the proposed arrangement with Belcourt and McDougall will meet with your approval, it seemed the only thing to do if we are to save the concession, and if we cannot save it, there is nothing lost by giving them an interest.

Here is a hint at a modification of the terms under which Messrs. Ray, Bronson and Tyrrell went into this arrangement, and the share which each was to have in the development of the concession. Some other arrangement is hinted at in this letter of Mr. Ray, an arrangement with Messrs. Belcourt & McDougall, and the statement is made that they hope Mr. Tyrrell will acquiesce in that arrangement, as it is the only possible way, seemingly to them, by which the concession can be retained. Well, there comes another letter also written by Mr. Tyrrell, in July, 1902:

Referring to your letter of May 20, wherein you made some suggestions as to the future working of our concession, I write to say that certain events have transpired which seem to render necessary another arrangement which will take the place of the one you suggested. A short time ago we received a letter from the minister in which he stated to us that our extension of time for working had been cancelled ; that he could not give us any additional ground for dumping purposes for the reason that we had granted a lease for a portion of our territory contrary to the conditions of the grant to us, and that therefore the concession would be cancelled and notice to that effect posted on the ground. . . . We saw at once that prompt action must be taken if we were to save the concession, and after talking the matter over decided to interest Messrs. Belcourt & McDougall with us in order to secure their assistance, both in arranging to retain the concession, and also, later on, in connection with the working or sale of it as the case might be, if we succeeded in holding it. Mr. Belcourt will draw up a memorandum covering the organization of the company we decided to organize in case the chute fell through, and also providing for an allotment of a certain proportion of the stock to them. It may be necessary to sell them their proportionate interest before the company is organized, and we would then all join in the sale to the company for the allotment of stock as proposed. You will notice from Mr. Belcourt's memorandum that the firm of Belcourt & McDougall, Mr. Ray and Mr. Bronson each are to receive $100,000 of paid up stock in the company.

Up to this time it was a concession owned by three. When this trouble arose a saviour was sought for, and the saviour could only be gained, as it seems, by making a new distribution of the deal, putting it into the form of a joint stock company with a million dollars of capital, putting $500,000 of this in the treasury for development purposes, and dividing the other $500,000 amongst the three concessionnaires, and as it appears by these letters, also a portion to Messrs. McDougall & Belcourt.

The House will understand that Mr. McDougall is the Yukon end of the firm of Belcourt & McDougall ; that is I believe he is the partner of Mr. Belcourt here. This also should be read :

The understanding with Messrs. Belcourt & McDougall is that they give their professional services free and that you do the same, and that Mr. Ray and Mr. Bronson will do anything that may lie in their power and that they may be able to do here at Ottawa during the session.

Another series of letters appears shortly afterwards, mostly duplicating in sense those that I have already read, one from Mr. Belcourt to Mr. Tyrrell reiterating just about what was stated in the preceding letter of Mr. Belcourt to Mr. Tyrrell which I have already read. One comes from Mr. Tyrrell to Mr. Ray:

Dear Mr. Ray,—About ten days ago I was greatly surprised to see a notice in the papers saying that the Bronson & Ray concession was to be thrown open and a little later I received letter from Mr. Belcourt saying that the department was taking action on account of the lease to one Thurber. . . . I went at once to see Mr. Ross——

Who I believe was then commissioner in the Yukon.

—and he told me what he had been doing and will do all in his power to have the ground thrown open. I therefore wired you :

The Thurber lease can be bought for less than $1,000. What do you advise me to do ? The government——

That is the local government of the Yukon.

—is decidedly hostile to you unless you are able to commence work at once.

That bears out what I said in the beginning, that one way to have secured this lease without doubt was simply to have gone on and commenced work and put their money and machinery into it and develop the proposition according to the terms and conditions on which it was granted. Mr. Tyrrell goes on:

It is certainly their intention to take advantage of any technical quibble to annul the lease, and if possible it will be cancelled on 29th of September, in spite of any vague promises that may be made in the meantime.

Trusting that you will be able to arrange things satisfactorily in Ottawa,

Yours sincerely,

J. B. TYRRELL.

Again Tyrrell writes to Ray on July 21 and says:

I do not believe for a moment that they can save the concession as well as we can, by merely promising that we will go on and work.

That seems to be the opinion of Mr. Tyrrell on the ground, that one way and the only way to save the concession is to go on and do the necessary work on it. That is on July 21, 1902, and these negotiations through Mr. Belcourt are going on with the minister and with the department here. The minister, through his deputy, appears after awhile to have telegraphed to Mr. Beaudette in Dawson asking him whether any work had been done on this concession, and here is the reply :

Sir,—In answer to your telegram of the 6th instant re work done on the Bronson & Ray concession, I have the honour to report that no work has been done nor any preparatory work to commence operations has been started, nor any machinery placed thereon.

Your obedient servant,

A. J. BEAUDETTE.

That is on November 11 when all this trouble started and was brought to the head of the department between the 1st of June and July. Previous to that Mr. Tyrrell had said: There is one way by which this can be saved—go on and do your work. Another method was sought for and on November 11, months thereafter, the minister telegraphed for information and is informed by Beaudette that no work has been done, that there is no sign even of preparatory work being carried on necessary to the other work, and that no machinery has been placed upon the concession. But a better way was, as it appears, actually found, and on January 7 a letter started from Ottawa to Mr. Tyrrell signed by C. C. Ray, the president:

Dear Mr. Tyrrell,—After several inevitable delays we were able yesterday to have a meeting of the board of directors. . . . Now that the irritation against the concession is allayed here, and I think that the head representative of the government in Dawson, who, amongst ourselves, is to be Mr. Congdon, if you are careful in not infringing on any provisions of the lease as to granting lays, payment of annual rent and doing the required work annually, &c., I hope and feel that our troubles have come to an end.

That is a happy finale to this second method which was taken to prevent the concession from lapsing as against the other method of which I spoke at first.

There is not much more of importance in the letters so far as I have them in this paper, except for an expression or two in the evidence which was taken during the lawsuit. A question was asked :

Q. The work had been in default from the time of the granting of the concession up till 1902 ?

A. I do not consider that it was. We were exempted by the minister from doing it.

Q. Was this exemption granted after the default had been made ?

A. No, I do not think so. It was granted early—I think very soon after the concession was secured, the exemption was granted.

Q. When you were in Dawson did you have any negotiations with Mr. Louis Williams as to water ?

An answer was given to the effect that there had been negotiations, and the end of the sentence is a follows:

We also had some conversation with Mr. Congdon, the commissioner, and he thought that he could recommend the minister at Ottawa to allow some such arrangement, if we could make it, to be carried out without violating our lease.

An account which comes out in the shape of a letter between some of the parties shows that in the period between 1899 and 1902 there had been a total expenditure of about $6,800 on that concession, but of that total expenditure more than one-half had been on rental and on legal fees and all these expenses of lawyers and the like of that, and that $3,000, about, was put in the item of drafts to Mr. Tyrrell who was in Dawson. The outside estimate that that statement of financial expenditures will allow you to put on the expenditure on the concession from 1899 to 1902 is not more than $3,000. Then it went on until November 11, 1902, and to January, 1903, without the evidence showing that any further expenditure had been put upon it; but what has been done between 1903 and now I do not know. It may be that further evidence that is to come out will show whether or not any expenditure has been made from that time to this. But in January, 1903, the minister had been pacified here and everything was at rest owing to the good services of Mr. Belcourt who took the matter up for them.

Now, as a comment upon this I have not very much to say; I will leave that to gentlemen who are to come after me in the course of this discussion. But there are two or three things that I will say. One is, to ask a question : Why Mr. Ray and Mr. Bronson two good business men with a business proposition did not go straight to the department and the minister and look after their concession ? Were they not as good business men as Mr. Belcourt ? had they not just as good standing with the government, and the community, and the ministry as Mr. Belcourt ? Were there any legitimate reasons that could be urged before the minister and the department in a business way, that Messrs. Ray and Bronson as business men could not urge upon the ministry just as well as could a third party? What influence did they expect that Mr. Belcourt would bring to bear, if no influence was to be brought to bear which was not an open and legitimate influence ? There must have been somewhere in the minds of these gentlemen a feeling which had grown into them from their observation of things and their experience of things, that the safest way for them to do was to influence the ministry in some other way than a mere open business way, and by some other means than through the medium of two most excellent and most reputable business men.

Now, the next thing that comes up is this, and it is the second comment I wish to make. In the case of a member of parliament elected by his constituency to represent them in parliament—no matter though he be a lawyer who can in his profession offer his services to any cause or any person who will pay him fair remuneration—is it the best plan, the safest plan, the wisest plan, the plan most conducive to pure public life and good public administration, that he should in such a case as this interpose himself between the government and the parties concerned in an attempt by influence to get for these parties what they by the urging of business reasons do not seem to think they could get for themselves ? More than that, does it tend to the best and highest type of public life that a member of parliament shall make an arrangement with men in the exact predicament that these men were, by which it is made obligatory that if they want to be gotten out of a tight place they have to rearrange their concession and put it into a different shape and give him $100,000 out of $500,000 of stock for his services in the matter? If that is allowable in this parliament—if it is good for one it is good for the other—what is to prevent every member in this parliament selling his services to every seeker for favours from the government and turning the High Court of parliament into a mere debauch ; nothing more and nothing less. There is no reason why if one man does it another man shall not do it. And just let us sit down for a moment and think out for ourselves, what would be the condition of public life and public administration if every member of parliament held himself for sale in that way. It has been said—is there truth in it or not—that there are numberless instances where people coming to this Ottawa having business to transact with ministers find it difficult to get the ear or the time of the minister, and after many fruitless efforts some man in the 'know' says to them : Why don't you employ so and so ; he will take your case, he will find an opportunity of getting an audience with the ministers and he will get for you much better than you can get for yourself what there is to be got out of the ministry. Is that taking place in this city of Ottawa; it is an occurrence that takes place so often that it becomes a matter of common remark not only by people in Canada but by people from other countries coming to Canada who have to do business with the ministers. The man who makes an arrangement of that kind and goes to the minister to urge reasons in private which the first parties themselves do not seem able to do though they be competent business men, establishes if he is successful, an unholy partnership between himself and the minister in which neither can ever afterwards have the same respect for the other that he had before such a transaction took place. And it is very easy to fall down from that into co-partnership between the minister and the advocate which loses sight of the public interest in the mutual advancement of private interests. Am I too strong in these strictures? Ask the history of that best and greatest and oldest of all parliaments, the parliament of Great Britain? There you do not find that such a thing is tolerated in a single instance. A lawyer may do this work before he becomes a member of parliament in England, but when he becomes a member of parliament, then under the rigid scrutiny of strong public opinion he is not allowed to do what I have described as having been done here. The reflection of that sentiment has at last dawned upon gentlemen opposite. One of their best members, their Minister of Justic has to-day on the Order Paper of parliament a Bill that will make it absolutely impossible for lawyers in this House any longer to practice before its committee and make a source of gain out of the position that they have been given by their constituents for other far different and I am bound to say far better purposes.

So that if you take the consensus of opinion in the best parliament in the world and what has been its guiding motive and impelling impulse, you find that my argument is strengthened; and things which are done here, if done by a British member of parliament and in connection with the British ministry and the British House of Commons, would find short shrift, for the man who had been so bold as to carry them out. Mr. Speaker, this parliament is not simply now approaching—it has already approached, to the very verge of what is decency and seemliness in regard to the administration of public affairs, when a minister of the Crown seems to see no wrong, seems to have no feeling that it is not quite fit and up to the mark, to confess in this House that he is a shareholder and virtually the president of a company—if not the president actually, a president in esse—confesses with the utmost show of innocence that he instructs his first officer to patronize a company in which he himself is a stockholder, and out of the sale of whose property he benefits by every thousand gallons of the stuff that is sold—acknowledges that in parliament at this age and at this time, and does not seem to think that anything has been done which it is not quite the best and most proper thing for a minister to do. Aye, Sir, and men who have shared, and who as members of parliament would not like to come right out and show themselves as being partners, in contracts and other arrangements with the government, do it in another way, by becoming members of companies and corporations—not may be sleeping partners in them, but pretty close to sleeping partners. They get contracts from the government; worse than that, they get large sums of money expended with them without any tender or contract at all. Under the cover of a company, the strong man, a member of parliament, gets the patronage; the business man who has the other share in it, does the work, and before the public seems to be the man in the transaction. There are members of parliament to-day, not one nor two, but more, who are silent partners in companies and corporations that are to-day taking hundreds of thousands of dollars of public money without a shred of public tender or of contract based upon public tender.

Now, these are just the outside instances, and a few of them, which are public indications of that disease which is prevalent in this parliament, and which this parliament ought to rid itself of just as quickly as possible. I make no further comment to-night, Mr. Speaker, on this episode. It will be followed up later in other respects in this parliament; and as one member of the opposition, I believe in the members of the opposition standing straight and true to that line. Whatever gentlemen on the opposite side may do—and we wish them to co-operate with us—we at least will do our level best to induce a better, stronger and healthier sentiment in the administration of public affairs than we find to-day. In some cases it is an absolute challenge and defiance of the proprieties; in other cases it is a covert avoidance of doing the thing, but yet having it done in the name of son, or nephew or the silent partner in a concern, but getting at the public treasury and at the public expenditure of money. Something that was said the other day with reference to the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company bears on the same thing that we are discussing to-night. It seems to be difficult for some people to understand that it is not the proper thing for a member of parliament, by the force of his political position, urged upon his minister or minsters, to get hold of valuable public franchises, and then to work and operate them to his advantage and the advantage of his friends.

As I began, so I end. This unfortunate Department of the Interior is the one that we are discussing to-night, as we have discussed it so often before. It is most especially the one over which the darkest shades in these transactions have gradually and from time to time lowered. What have we to-day, Sir, just as another sample ? We have a Deputy Minister of the Interior, brought from the west under a minister who came from the west, and whose course lay through golden paths whilst he administered a department at $7,000 a year of annual salary—brought from the west, active, at work ; and all at once it dawns on parliament that that deputy minister spent some of the best years of his service, supposedly in the department, in concocting and completing a mighty contract to unknown people ; and when it is all fixed, and fixed, it is thought, so that it cannot for ten years be disturbed, that deputy minister steps out of office without reason given or assigned, though it was often asked, and to-day he blossoms out as the agent of that unknown company which has secured a ten years' contract with this government involving a million dollars. And we could place many other cases side by side with that. Mr. Speaker, that is all I have to say with reference to this matter at the present time.

Hon. N. A. BELCOURT (Ottawa). Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) should have deemed it proper to bring this matter to the attention of the House and to connect me with it in the manner he has done, is of course a matter for which he alone is responsible. I have nothing to say as to his bringing it up. It might, however, have occurred to him, as I am sure it has occurred to most of the members of this House, that when these newspaper articles came to his notice, it would have been a matter of common courtesy on his part to have shown me the articles and to have asked me if there was not some explanation I could have given of them that would have put a different complexion on the whole matter. One would have thought that gentlemen who have sat in this House for a number of years, who could claim the privilege of being old colleagues, would be entitled to a courtesy of that kind. However, that the hon. gentleman did not choose to extend that courtesy to me is another matter of which he is the sole and only judge.

I do, however, object to the manner in which the hon. gentleman has brought this matter before the House. Every one who has regard for the dignity of the House has a perfect right to call its attention to any matter which he deems affects its dignity or honour ; but when a matter of this kind is brought up, there is but one manly way of doing it, and that is by making a charge and demanding an investigation. If the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) thinks that I am guilty of any wrong-doing, if he thinks that I have violated the independence of parliament, if he thinks that I have been guilty of conduct unbecoming a gentleman, or have in any way infringed on the honour and dignity of the House, he has a well recognized constitutional remedy, and that is to make a charge and demand an investigation. If he has not chosen to do so, we can all draw our own conclusions. If the hon. gentleman thought that discretion was the better part of valour and did not venture to make any charge, it is quite evident he is convinced he could not prove any charge. If I were content to rely upon what is clearly my strict right, I would treat with silent contempt the insinuations contained in the newspapers to which the hon. gentleman referred, and which he repeated here to-night. However, I am not disposed to do that. However unfounded, however vague and indefinite these charges may be, I am not willing to stand under any aspersion cast on my honour or reputation by any person or coming from any quarter or channel, however such aspersion may be made, without giving it an absolute and unqualified denial. I am willing, charge or no charge, investigation or no investigation, to tell the House here and now, the whole truth about this matter. I have no desire to conceal anything for the simple reason that I have no reason to be ashamed of any part or share I have had in this matter. There is absolutely nothing in it of which any man with a most punctilious sense of honour could have any reason to repent. What I am about to offer to the House, I do not offer in the shape of any excuse or apology. There is obsolutely no reason why I should. But I have in my hands a statement made by two of the most honourable citizens of Ottawa, the Hon. E. H. Bronson and Mr. C. C. Ray, who volunteered to make it, and who are gentlemen against whose honour and veracity I have never heard any one say a single word. This is a simple statement of the facts which I shall read and then leave the matter in the hands of the House :

The hydraulic concession known as the Bronson and Ray concession was obtained in the summer of 1898 by the undersigned. Mr. Belcourt and his partner had nothing whatever to do in obtaining from the department the said concession. And it was not until two years later that the firm of Belcourt & McDougall, having law offices at Dawson and Ottawa, were retained as solicitors for the concessionnaires.

In 1902 the concessionnaires, being indebted to the said firm in a large sum for professional services, proposed to and it was agreed with them that in consideration of the said indebtedness and of the undertaking on their part to give in the future gratuitously their professional services whenever required at Dawson and at Ottawa in connection with the operations of the company or the negotiations for a sale of the concession and to be responsible for their proportionate share of all expenditures on or in connection with said concession, they would receive 10-100 of the stock of a company to be incorporated by said firm and ourselves to take over, operate or sell the concession.

The company was incorporated and it took over the concession in 1902; the firm of Belcourt & McDougall then became and are now entiled to 10-100 of the shares of this company, though no certificate for said shares has as yet been issued to them.

The firm of Belcourt & McDougall have contributed of their own moneys over $6,000 in the expenditures made on or in connection with the said concession, besides giving gratuitously their professional services, which, if charged for, we are told, would amount to considerably over $6,000 additional.

The agreement between the company and the said firm was merely a matter of business and the interest assigned to them made only in payment of their past and future professional services and in consideration of their joint liability for all expenditures.

The firm of Belcourt & McDougall could not in our opinion dispose of their interest in this connection or company so as to realize the amount invested by them.

The company has never been relieved of any of the duties and obligation imposed by the lease or by the regulations governing such leases.

It has received no favour, exemption or privilege of any kind either at Ottawa or in the Yukon.

On the contrary it has been constantly hampered, hindered and embarrassed in its operations and attempts to work the property by officers of the government at Ottawa and in the Yukon by others.

The company has been refused and prevented from acquiring proper dumping ground without which no extension operations could be carried on.

It was refused a grant of the only water available for hydraulic work on the concession and this water was granted by the gold commissioner to a subsequent applicant.

The property was, by the officers of the government, allowed to be trespassed upon, worked by outsiders and stripped of its timber.

The concessionnaires and the company were required by the ex-Minister of the Interior and the present head of that department under the regulations covering hydraulic leases to expend from time to time between $25,000 and $30,000 and to incur liabilities for about the same amount when it must have been known by the minister and his officers, as the concessionnaires and every one at all acquainted with this concession knew that such expenditures would be absolutely useless and profitless and as the fact is now well and generally known in the territory and by the officers of the government.

Any statement, expressed or implied, that anything improper was contemplated by the agreement between the company and the said firm of solicitors or any member thereof or that any attempt has been made by any member of said firm or shareholder or officer of said company or by any one in their behalf, directly or indirectly, to exert any improper influence upon any minister or officer of the government at Ottawa or in the Yukon, or that the company has been granted any favour, exemption or privilege is wholly without foundation, reckless and malicious.

The company has fully and strictly complied with the terms of its lease and the regulations governing the same and should the Minister of the Interior decide to cancel the lease in question the company will be compelled to seek redress from the courts of justice against what would constitute a grievous wrong.

C. C. RAY.
E. H. BRONSON.

Ottawa, April 2, 1906.

What does this statement mean? It means absolutely the reverse of what the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) has asserted. It is a complete and flat contradiction of the insinuations to which he has given expression. It is an absolute contradiction of the insinuation that because an interest was given me and my partner in Dawson, Mr. MacDougall, we secured from the government something to which the concessionnaires were not entitled. As a matter of fact it was while we had an interest in the concession that the then Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) withdrew the exemption which had existed previously. For two or three years the concessionnaires had been relieved from doing any hydraulic work on that concession. But in 1902, when the new company was formed, the Minister of the Interior of that day took away that concession and compelled the concessionnaires to go on and do assessment work yearly. As a result they had to expend $20,000 to $30,000 doing work from which they did not get one penny in return. The minister himself, the officers of the department at Ottawa, the officers in Yukon knew that every cent spent by the company in that connection was absolutely thrown into the sea. Yet, because of objections made to the concession, and made unjustly, the minister compelled the concessionnaires to incur this expense. The hon. gentleman says that since that time no work has been done. If he had taken the trouble to look into the files, he would have seen that the officers reported that the work was done.

Mr. FOSTER. I said that up to November 11, the report of Mr. Beaudette was that no work had been done, and that up to January 3, 1903, the same state of things existed.

Mr. BELCOURT. Certainly he made that statement. It was late in the summer of 1902 when the exemption which these concessionnaires previously enjoyed, of not doing the annual assessment work, was taken away. The work could not be begun for the next year until the spring. So, in the month of January, 1903, Mr. Beaudette, of course, reported that no work had been done. But, if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) will take the trouble to go to the department he will find that for 1902-3 the work was done to the complete satisfaction of the officers of the department. And he will find there annual certificates showing that the work as stated in the declaration has been
