Are checks by federal inspectors carried out on commercial interprovincial trucks and buses in highway use and, if so (a) what percentage of checked vehicles have been found to have mechanical deficiencies (b) are such vehicles ordered out of service until the deficiencies are corrected?

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Federal government inspectors do not check the mechanical condition of commercial trucks and buses in interprovincial operations as regulation of the mechanical fitness of such vehicles is a provincial responsibility.

MOTOR VEHICLE SAFETY ACT—SAFETY STANDARDS APPLICABLE TO TIRES

Question No. 405—Mr. Mather:

In line with motor vehicle safety standards, are tire dealers required to complete a written record of the purchaser's name and address and the tire identification numbers in the sale of new or retreaded auto tires?

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The federal Motor Vehicle Safety Regulations contain safety standards applicable to the tires provided with new motor vehicles manufactured in or imported into Canada. The provincial governments issue and enforce standards for replacement tires but have not as yet established any requirement that dealers maintain records of tire purchases.

CONSTRUCTION COST OF DAM ON SASKATCHEWAN RIVER

Question No. 419—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

1. What were the construction costs of the dam on the Saskatchewan River?

2. Was the Bank of Canada responsible for the financing of this project and, if so (a) what amount was loaned (b) at what rate of interest (c) for how many years (d) what are the payment terms?

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Regional Economic Expansion and Finance as follows: 1. For the Government of Canada, the construction costs for the South Saskatchewan River Dam, incurred between April 1, 1958 and March 31, 1972, totalled $91,006,828.

2. The Bank of Canada was not involved in the financing of the dam on the Saskatchewan River.

ISSUANCE OF COMMEMORATIVE STAMP ON 100th ANNIVERSARY OF DEATH OF JOSEPH HOWE

Question No. 438—Mr. Dinsdale:

Is the Post Office Department planning to issue a commemorative stamp next year on the centenary of the death of Joseph Howe, recognizing the contribution of this distinguished Nova Scotia statesman to freedom of the press and responsible government?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Postmaster General): The 100th anniversary of the death of Joseph Howe is among those subjects being reviewed as possible themes for Canada Post Office commemorative stamps in 1973.

NORTHWEST TERRITORIES INCOME TAX AND SOURCE DEDUCTIONS

Question No. 453—Mr. Godin:

1. What percentage of his income does a resident of the Northwest Territories, who works in the Territories, pay in Income Tax?

2. What percentage of his income does a resident of Quebec, who works in the Northwest Territories, have deducted at the source for Income Tax?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of National Revenue): In so far as the Department of National Revenue, Taxation, is concerned: 1. A person resident in the Northwest Territories on December 31, 1971, calculates his tax in the same manner as other residents of Canada, except that he is not liable for provincial tax and not entitled to the abatement for provincial taxes, because he is not a resident in any of the provinces at the end of the year. The actual percentage of tax paid is contingent on the amount of the person's taxable income.

2. It is not possible to determine the percentage of income to be deducted for income tax purposes without having the following information: (a) Employee's rate of pay; (b) Employee's personal exemption, and (c) Whether the employee is required to report for work at an establishment of the employer in the Northwest Territories.

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM

Question No. 484—Mr. Burton:

1. What was the initial allocation of funds under the Local Initiatives Program for each province at the time that the program was announced?

2. (a) What number of applications were received from each province (b) what was the total estimated cost to the government of assistance requested?

3. What number of applications were approved from each province?

4. What is the estimated federal cost of the Local Initiatives Program by province?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. No allocation of Local Initiatives Program funds was made at the time the program was announced.

2. (a) Newfoundland, 1142; Nova Scotia, 1009; Prince Edward Island, 258; New Brunswick, 712; Quebec, 5215; Ontario, 2238; Manitoba, 594; Saskatchewan, 493; Alberta, 607; Northwest Territories, 109; British Columbia, 1323; Yukon Territory, 36. (b) $482,747,000.

3. Newfoundland, 400; Nova Scotia, 430; Prince Edward Island, 114; New Brunswick, 385; Quebec, 1979; Ontario, 1007; Manitoba, 201; Saskatchewan, 174; Alberta, 310; Northwest Territories, 35; British Columbia, 642; Yukon Territory, 22.

4. Newfoundland, $9,900,113; Nova Scotia, $10,395,996; Prince Edward Island, $2,047,394; New Brunswick, $9,173,511; Quebec, $62,698,549; Ontario, $22,175,018; Manitoba, $5,365,159; Saskatchewan, $4,029,018; Alberta, $8,027,-

544; Northwest Territories, $1,039,483; British Columbia, $13,670, 599; Yukon Territory, $428,058.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

FEDERAL EXPENDITURES ON PORTS

Question No. 253—Mr. Horner:

How much money has the government spent in each of the past ten years on the ports of (a) Halifax (b) Quebec (c) Montreal (d) Toronto (e) Prince Rupert (f) Vancouver (g) Saint John (h) Churchill?

Return tabled.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR—NUMBER OF CONTRACTS AWARDED FOR PUBLICITY

Question No. 448—Mr. Nystrom:

1. Were any contracts awarded by the Department of Labour (including the Unemployment Insurance Commission) for publicity and/or information in the fiscal year 1970-71 and, if so (a) what were the names and addresses of firms which received such contracts (b) what was the amount of each such contract (c) what was the specific purpose of each such contract?

2. Do the main and supplementary estimates of the Department for the fiscal year 1971-72 provide an amount to be spent on publicity and/or information and, if so (a) what amount is provided (b) what amounts have been encumbered or spent to date (c) what are the names and addresses of the private firms which have entered into such contracts (d) what is the amount of money involved in each such contract (e) what is the specific purpose of each such contract?

Return tabled.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege arising out of the failure of the government to answer question No. 475, which asks:

1. Who are the members of the Special Planning and Research group attached to the Solicitor General's department?

2. What is the authority or area of responsibility of the said group?

3. In what manner is the choice made of the members of the said group?

4. Who is the head or senior member thereof?

That question has been on the order paper since March 29. This House has a right to know who these people are in this special corps. Are they incognitos or inconnus? There should be no difficulty whatever in answering that question. The people of Canada want to know who are the personnel of the Solicitor General's "security selects anonymous".

Mr. Hogarth: Mr. Speaker, I will draw the right hon. member's suggestion to the Solicitor General's attention.

Mr. Burton: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the parliamentary secretary to look into questions Nos. 197, 198 and 199 which have been on the order paper since February 24 and which were on the order paper for some time in the last session.

Mr. Hogarth: I will draw the appropriate minister's attention to the hon. member's remarks.

[Mr. Mackasey.]

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Douglas A. Hogarth (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, would you be so kind as to call notices of motions Nos. 24, 25, 26, 35 and 41.

FEASIBILITY STUDY ON MARGINAL DAIRY FARMING

Motion No. 24—Mr. Skoberg:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the feasibility study on marginal dairy farming undertaken for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion in the fiscal year 1967-68, as mentioned in answer to Question Number 1,323 of the 1st Session of this Parliament excluding confidential references to individuals or individual firms.

Mr. John Roberts (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the study requested was research undertaken for use by officials in programs planning and was intended solely for internal use. I would therefore request the hon. member to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Skoberg: Mr. Speaker, this motion has to do with regional economic expansion. I feel that the people of Canada are entitled to know what type of programs the government has in mind.

Mr. MacEachen: Transfer for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

COPY OF ALL CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN MINISTER OF TRANSPORT AND CNR RELATING TO CNR PENSION PLAN

Motion No. 25—Mr. Skoberg:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of all correspondence between the Minister of Transport and the CNR pertaining to recommendations of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications concerning the CNR Pension Plan.

Mr.Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the correspondence which the hon. member requests in this motion pertains to the internal operation of a Crown corporation and is considered privileged and confidential. The hon. member may therefore wish to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Skoberg: Mr. Speaker, the CNR pension plan happens to be pretty important to many people in this country. I call for the question.

Mr. MacEachen: Transfer for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

COPY OF STUDY BY DEPARTMENT OF REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION REGARDING EFFECTS OF INCREASE IN FREIGHT RATES

Motion No. 26—Mr. Skoberg:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the study undertaken in the Department of Regional Economic Expansion regarding the effects of increase in freight rates on regional economic expansion as mentioned by the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion and reported in Hansard of March 18, 1970 at page 5184.

Mr. John Roberts (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the department studies the impact of various federal programs as part of a continuing appraisal of slow growth regions. However, this is designed to assist in drafting policies and programs rather than to produce formal reports. Therefore, since there is no report which could be tabled I would ask the hon. member to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Skoberg: Agreed, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Dropped.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

COPY OF CORRESPONDENCE DATED SEPTEMBER 17, 1970 BETWEEN CNR AND MINISTER OF TRANSPORT RELATING TO CNR PENSION PLAN

Motion No. 35—Mr. Skoberg:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the correspondence, dated September 17, 1970, between the President of the CNR and the Minister of Transport outlining the company's position on the recommendation of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications concerning the CNR Pension Plan.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this question is of the same type as the previous one. As it concerns again a matter of internal operation, I would ask the hon. member to withdraw his motion.

[English]

Mr. Skoberg: Mr. Speaker, we certainly cannot withdraw this one. I call for the question.

Mr. MacEachen: Transfer for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

COPY OF REPORT OF COMMITTEE CREATED TO DEAL WITH PROGRAM TO HELP SMALL FARMS IN CANADA

Motion No. 41—Mr. MacDonald (Egmont):

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the final report of the Technical Committee created by the Minister of Agriculture to deal with the development of a national program to help the small farms in Canada as well as any documents, letters or communications related to the Technical Committee.

Mr. Baldwin: I move the motion for the hon. member.

Mr. Douglas A. Hogarth (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the technical committee referred to by the hon. member was established by the 11 ministers of agriculture and any reports from this committee would be made to the ministers and considered confidential documents. I would therefore request that the hon. member withdraw the motion.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that this affects the small farmers in Canada, in whom this party is very interested, I would ask that the motion be transferred for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Hogarth: I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the other notices of motions be allowed to stand.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining notices of motions stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Burton: Mr. Speaker, I would ask again that the parliamentary secretary make inquiries about notices of motions Nos. 16 and 18, both in my name. They were placed on the order paper on February 24, over two months ago. Surely the government should be able to give some indication of its response by now, particularly since most of its responses are negative.

Mr. Hogarth: Mr. Speaker, I will pass on the hon. member's remarks to the appropriate minister.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

GOVERNMENT GOAL FOR REAL GROWTH IN 1972—NEW INITIATIVES

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister arising out of the rather sleek economic review tabled by the Minister of Finance yesterday in which it is stated that "it is expected that real growth will continue to surpass its trend rate through 1972." I am not asking the Prime Minister to interpret what this jargon means, but I would ask him to tell the House what is the specific goal of the government during 1972 in respect of real economic growth?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I will be pleased to take notice of this question on behalf of the minister, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Stanfield: I accept that, of course, Mr. Speaker, but I am rather surprised the Prime Minister does not know what that objective is. In view of the position taken by the Economic Council of Canada that the rate or real growth attained even during the last six months of 1971, which seems to have fallen off, would mean that the rate of unemployment would not fall even to 4 per cent in three years, I would ask the Prime Minister whether he intends to take any new initiatives to spur on the real growth of the economy with a view to reducing the rate of unemployment within some reasonable time?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, there is nothing I can announce today, but the Leader of the Opposition might want to take note of the fact that the rate of real growth in this country has been higher than predicted by the Economic Council.

Mr. Stanfield: In view of the very complacent answer the Prime Minister has given, is the government prepared to accept the continuing high rate of unemployment at existing levels?

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Stanfield: When is the Prime Minister going to tell us what he will do about it, Mr. Speaker?

AUTOMOBILES—HIGHER CANADIAN PRICES—SUGGESTED MEETING BETWEEN PRIME MINISTER AND COMPANY HEADS TO EFFECT REDUCTION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In view of the fact North American automotive producers are making excess profits in Canada of about $150 million as a result of charging Canadians on the average $300 more for a car made in Canada than they do for the identical product in the United States, would the Prime Minister consider requesting that the heads of the North American auto companies in Canada meet with him next week with a view to effecting a meaningful reduction in prices to approximate or full parity with prices in the United States within a three-month period?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would be very happy to draw this representation to the attention of the minister.

Mr. Broadbent: In view of the fact the Prime Minister indicated that no action is viewed seriously in this direction by his government, would he consider announcing or having the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce announce to the House within the next few days measures the government intends to take that would effectively reduce automotive prices and subsequently result in an increase in employment in that industry because the price of cars would then become closer to the price of foreign imports and thus lead to the creation of more jobs in this country? Does he intend to move in this direction at all?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the premise of the question is false but as to the willingness of the minister to discuss this problem, he has constantly indicated to the House his willingness to do so.

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT INFORM HOG PRODUCERS RESPECTING SHARING OF SUBSIDY WITH COMPANIES

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture.

In view of the announcement made yesterday by the Minister of Agriculture to the effect that some companies would want a share of the subsidy paid to pork producers, what steps does the department intend to take to advise producers so that this truly deplorable situation might be avoided?

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for putting the question. It gives us one more opportunity to advise farmers of the situation. The statement of the Minister of Agriculture having been made publicly, the newspapers will surely by now have reported it, so that I feel the pork producers of Canada and Quebec will be informed of the situation and will take steps accordingly.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): I should like to put a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Considering that some producers do not regularly read newspapers, has the Price Stabilization Board taken steps to advise producers, by sending a publication to them or to slaughterhouses?

Mr. Lessard (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, I will take that question as notice. I will check and inform the hon. member.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CANADIAN POSITION IN NEGOTIATIONS WITH FRANCE RESPECTING CONTINENTAL SHELF—CONSULTATION WITH NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. According to the text of a television interview released today, the Prime Minister referred to tough negotiations that are currently taking place between Canada and France in respect of that country's claim to certain portions of the continental shelf off eastern Canada. In light of the treaty of 1763 by which Britain ceded St. Pierre and Miquelon to France, has the government of Canada taken any position whereby Canada would concede any portion of the continental shelf to France in light of the provisions of that treaty?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think the upshot of my comments was that we had been discussing various forms of an agreement with France and, as in negotiations of this type, both parties had different points of view and no agreement had been reached yet. But we are hopeful that one can be reached in the future on the basis of the different propositions, either from Canada or from the French.

• (1430)

Mr. McGrath: May I ask the Prime Minister what position Canada is taking with respect to the provisions of the Treaty of Paris of 1763, amd may I also ask the Prime Minister whether the province of Newfoundland has been consulted with respect to these negotiations, bearing in mind that province's special claim to the continental shelf as a result of the Act of Union of 1949?

Mr. Trudeau: It is hard to have a unique opinion on the Treaty of Paris of 1763. Various results flowed from it for various parts of the country. I can only say that it is an historic fact, that we in Quebec are prepared to live with it and I hope that you in Newfoundland are also prepared to live with it.

Mr. McGrath: May I ask the Prime Minister whether Canada is prepared to concede that France has any claim whatsoever to any portion of the continental shelf off eastern Canada?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I do not think it would be to the advantage of Canada for me to say publicly what our negotiating posture is. But the hon. member himself must realize that in so far as there is any territorial water at all around an island, some of it must lie over the continental shelf.

COAL MINING, NOVA SCOTIA—FULFILMENT BY PROVINCE OF OBLIGATION RESPECTING INDEPENDENT OPERATIONS UNDER AGREEMENT WITH FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Would he give consideration to examining the original agreement entered into between the federal government and the province of Nova Scotia with regard to the take-over of Dosco Mines in Nova Scotia and make a statement in the House on whether or not the government of the province of Nova Scotia is living up to its end of that agreement?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, part of that agreement is not under my administration but under that of the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

With regard to the McBean mine, if that is what the hon. member has in mind, I would be prepared to consider making a statement in the House on the government's position about continuation of the mining operation.

Mr. Coates: Would the minister, in co-operation with his colleague, examine the position of the province of Nova Scotia with regard to its obligation to undertake the responsibility for all independent coal mine operations in Nova Scotia because of the agreement of the federal government to assume obligation for the Dosco operations in Cape Breton? From that point of view I wonder whether the minister would consider making a statement to indicate whether or not the government of Nova Scotia is living up to its part of the agreement?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I am certainly prepared to discuss that with my colleague.

SUGGESTED ENLARGEMENT OF JURISDICTION OF DEVCO TO INCLUDE THORBURN COLLIERY

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, the minister may have already answered my supplementary question, but would he consider, while he is looking over the general situation, enlarging the jurisdiction of Devco to include control over the Thorburn colliery since there is already an indirect administrative connection?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the government of Canada entered into an agreement with the government of Nova Scotia and the colliery itself for the phasing out of that particular operation. The coal body in essence has been substantially exhausted at this time and it was agreed that the government of the province of Nova Scotia would assume the responsibility for the winding up of the mine operation. As the hon. member knows, I have seen the respective interests down there and communicated to them the government's decision: it would be in the best interests of all concerned to take other means, such as manpower policies, to deal with that situation rather than to try to keep a virtually exhausted mine going.

POLLUTION

THREAT TO WEST COAST FROM PROPOSED TAPS TANKER ROUTE—SUGGESTED REQUEST THAT UNITED STATES JOIN IN REFERENCE TO INTERNATIONAL JOINT COMMISSION

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I want to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs arising out of the answer he gave me on April 21 as recorded at page 1515 of Hansard in which the minister indicated that Cherry Point was not necessarily a terminal for the TAPS program. Has his attention been drawn to the fact that a United States official has stated in Washington that a survey is now being made of the waters adjacent to Cherry Point to a depth of 90 feet with a view to accommodating oil tankers of some 500,000 tons? In view of the fact this survey is being made, is the Canadian government now prepared to change its position and to ask the U.S. government to join with Canada in making a joint submission to the International Joint Commission with respect to the entire TAPS program?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am familiar with some of the representations that have been made and the work that is going on. The view of the Canadian government is that the moving of oil to Cherry Point is not an essential part of the TAPS program. We have been urging upon the United States, if it does decide to go ahead with the TAPS program, that the oil should not be brought into Cherry Point. The government has made this position very plain and it is well known to the United States. Of course, they make the decision since the oil will move through American waters only and not through Canadian. On the other hand, I suggested to Secretary of State Rogers when he was here that there might be a joint reference to the International Joint Commission on the whole question of pollution in that very beautiful vacation land that none of us want to see despoiled. That is under consideration. As I said to the hon. gentleman, it is not possible, of course, to make a recommendation unless we do have the support of the United States. This we are trying to obtain.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, while undoubtedly the minister is correct that the Cherry Point refinery can get crude oil from other sources, in view of the fact that a survey is now going on which would indicate that a decision has been made to use Cherry Point as the terminal for the TAPS program, may I ask the minister whether he has made any formal application to the United States government asking them to join with Canada in a reference to the International Joint Commission?

Mr. Sharp: Surveys do not imply decisions. There have been many surveys made which were aborted by later decisions. I have made formal representations to the Secretary of State that he should join with me in making a reference to the IJC. I have not yet had a response.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED RECOGNITION BY CANADA OF JERUSALEM AS CAPITAL OF ISRAEL

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Having regard to consideration that is being given to this question in the United States, I ask the minister whether or not Canada has given or will give consideration now to recognizing Jerusalem as the historic and lawful capital of Israel and accept Israel's right to designate her capital city, and in so doing would he move our embassy from Tel Aviv to Jerusalem?

[Mr. Douglas.]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The kind of considerations that are now weighing with the Canadian government are exactly the same as weighed with my right hon. friend when he was the Prime Minister of Canada. We do not want to jeopardize in any way the possibility of a peaceful settlement of the dispute. I am sure he would join with me in that wish.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the minister always goes back to other days. I am asking him about today. Is he aware of the fact that the Republican House Leader, Gerald Ford, in the United States, has proposed that this be done now—not ten years ago but now—and will the minister say therefore that consideration is being given to this matter? I ask that because of his pretended affection for Israel.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Sharp: Of course consideration is being given constantly to this question because I do know the views of the government of Israel, but, like many other countries, we have not felt it desirable to complicate the negotiations for a peaceful settlement between Israel and her Arab neighbours, just as my right hon. friend seems to have taken these considerations into account when he had the responsibility of office.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I now rise on a question of privilege. As usual, the minister manufactured an answer. The matter never came up nor was it ever suggested during that period of time.

FISHERIES

ATLANTIC SALMON FISHERY CLOSURES—TAKING OF PARALLEL ACTION BY QUEBEC

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries. Has the minister been in touch with the province of Quebec this week, and can he say when parallel action will be taken by that province with respect to the ban on salmon fishing that has been applied in other provinces?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): I had discussions with the province of Quebec about two months ago. The substance of the announcements of the last few days has been transmitted to that province but I have not heard from Quebec in reply.

ATLANTIC SALMON FISHERY CLOSURES—SUGGESTED TRANSFER OF JURISDICTION TO OTHER PROVINCES IN ADDITION TO QUEBEC

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question. In view of the minister's statement yesterday that the province of Quebec will take similar action on its salmon rivers can the minister indicate whether that province has been given jurisdiction and control over its salmon fishery? If so, will similar consideration be given to the provinces of New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia and Newfoundland?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member should know, the province of Quebec has been administering the federal Fisheries Act since the early 1920's.

Mr. Lundrigan: Would the minister answer the second and most important part of my question? Perhaps I ought to repeat my question. Let me get back to the important issue of 1972 and ask the minister whether, in view of the fact he has taken action against New Brunswick and against Newfoundland last week, he will give consideration to having that type of resource administered by these provinces inasmuch as Quebec has had control of that resource since the 1920's, as the minister ought to know?

Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I think the action to which the hon. member is referring is assistance in support of a fishery which is in difficult straits. I have not had any offer either from the maritime provinces or from Newfoundland with respect to helping finance this compensation program.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We shall have to move on. The hon. member has asked two supplementaries on this subject. Perhaps he might be recognized for a last supplementary and then we will go to the hon. member for Kent-Essex.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, I will rephrase my question because I am not communicating very well with the minister. Last week the minister made a unilateral decision imposing a ban on the fisheries of New Brunswick and Newfoundland without consultation with the provinces or even with his own officials. In view of the fact that this arrangement has been imposed on the province of Newfoundland, which could not have been imposed if it had not been part of Canada, is the minister considering having that resource at least under joint control with the provinces or administered in some way so that we will have some input into it as a provincial jurisdiction?

Mr. Davis: The simple answer, Mr. Speaker, is no, but the premise of the question is wrong. There has been consultation. I spoke with the ministers responsible for fisheries in the maritime provinces, with the Premier of Newfoundland, and with their senior officials beforehand.

HEALTH

NUMBER OF NURSES TRAINED FOR FIELD SERVICE

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the great scarcity of medical doctors and the establishment of paramedical training courses, would the minister state the number of nurses who are now being trained for field service and indicate how soon they will be operative?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I think that question might be more appropriately placed on the order paper. I do not have the precise figure with me, but I will try to let the hon. member know.

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Speaker, I thought the minister would have it, from the speech he made the other night in Hamilton.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM WAR—GOVERNMENT ACTION IN LIGHT OF INCREASED HOSTILITIES—PLANS FOR EVACUATION OF CANADIANS

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. What action is the government taking in response to the renewed crisis in Viet Nam and the appeal by the Secretary General of the United Nations to end the bombing of North Viet Nam and to reconvene the Geneva Conference so that this tragic war may finally be brought to an end?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian government was not consulted by the Secretary General of the United Nations before he made his offer of good offices, but we have indicated that we would be prepared to co-operate with him in any way, either by the provision of observers or anything of this kind, if suitable terms can be worked out, or in any other way that might be useful. I think it may be partly as a result of the efforts made by the Secretary General that the Paris peace talks have been resumed, and I think the hon. member and myself are both gratified that that much progress has been made. There is no prospect whatsoever, I think, of any reassembly of the Geneva group.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, I point out that the hon. member for Egmont put a question to the Prime Minister yesterday in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs related to action in regard to Canadian personnel who perhaps are in war zones in South Viet Nam. Has the Secretary of State for External Affairs any answer with respect to that matter?

Mr. Sharp: Yes, I have, Mr. Speaker. It is rather long and I do not know whether I would be permitted to make it now, because I think I should give some detail.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. minister might like to give this information on motions at some other time.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

JAMES BAY HYDROELECTRIC PROJECT—ASSISTANCE BY FEDERAL GOVERNMENT—DISCUSSIONS WITH QUEBEC

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Yesterday, Max Gros-Louis stated that he had asked the federal government to intervene in connection with the James Bay development project. Can the minister tell us whether he has received such a request and, if so, what does his department intend to do about it?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, we have effectively received such a request from the Quebec Indian Association and we are now considering the situation. I will soon get in touch with the Quebec Indian Association in that connection.

Mr. La Salle: I would like to direct a supplementary to the minister, Mr. Speaker. Can he tell us if he is now engaged in consultations with the Quebec government and if the latter has also requested the federal government's co-operation?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I have discussed this matter several times either with the premier or with other Quebec ministers and, of course, we are ready to co-operate in order to find a solution agreeable to all.

[English]

ASSISTANCE TO JAMES BAY AREA INDIANS IN OPPOSING HYDROELECTRIC PROJECT

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, I again ask the Minister for Indian Affairs whether, in light of the requests for assistance from the Indian Association of Quebec, he can assure that group that the Indians in the James Bay area will be helped by his department if they request legal assistance in their dispute with the government of Quebec?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): I have already said, Mr. Speaker, that we would be ready to help Indians in seeking a solution to the problem they are facing in the James Bay area. If the whole thing boils down to some kind of legal assistance, we shall be glad to consider this request in due course.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

PROCEDURE IN RECOVERY OF OVERPAYMENTS OF BENEFITS

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, my question was for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration who was in his seat just a minute ago, but I shall address it to his parliamentary secretary. It deals with a number of complaints I have received, and I am sure other hon. members have received similar complaints, regarding unemployed people who have received overpayments. In most cases these overpayments were caused by errors made by the staff of the unemployment insurance offices during that state of confusion they went through. Now these claimants are being asked to repay this money. What steps will be taken in this regard?

Hon. Martin P. O'Connell (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I will take that question as notice on behalf of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Mr. Hales: Mr. Speaker, now that the minister has returned to the chamber I will put my question again. It deals with the large number of claimants who have been assessed for overpayments. In most cases these overpayments were due to errors made by the staff in the unemployment insurance offices during the recent state of confusion they went through. Will these claimants be expected to repay these overpayments, or will each case have an individual assessment?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the custom has always been in these types of cases, to discuss the individual problem rather than give a blanket ruling. If there have been any errors because of the administration during what the hon. member quite properly describes as a period of confusion, every effort will be made with the individual to make the repayments as easy as possible.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I note that there are a number of supplementaries sought, but hon. members should realize that we are running short of time and perhaps we should try to limit supplementaries. For the moment the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador.

Mr. Yewchuk: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: I believe the hon. member for Athabasca has been trying to ask a question supplementary to the previous one, and he might be recognized for that purpose.

Mr. Yewchuk: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry I had to rise on a point of order in order to get your attention.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member rises on a point of order that is a different matter. I will hear the point of order.

Mr. Yewchuk: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker. I just want to ask a supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair has already recognized the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador, and immediately thereafter I will recognize the hon. member for his supplementary. I think that would be more orderly.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INTENTION OF UNITED STATES RESPECTING RENEWAL OF LEASE OF AIR FORCE BASE, GOOSE BAY

Mr. Ambrose Hubert Peddle (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. Has the United States government indicated to Canada any intention of phasing down its base operation at Goose Bay or has it indicated its intention to maintain operations as at present?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, negotiations are presently going on with respect to United States operations at Goose Bay. When I have additional information that I can give to the hon. member, I shall be pleased to do so.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON ACTION TO PROTECT RIGHTS IN RELATION TO JAMES BAY HYDROELECTRIC PROJECT

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. It has to do with difficulties connected with the James Bay power development project. Would the minister be prepared to make a statement on motions early next week, on Monday or Tuesday, outlining the position and action that he and his department have taken in regard to protecting the rights of the Indian people involved in the area?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, yesterday officials of my department met the representatives of the Indian Association of Quebec who submitted a proposal. I intend to discuss the matter personally with the Indian Association of Quebec before announcing the government's position in this respect.

[English]

Mr. Yewchuk: Ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REQUEST FOR ACTION FOLLOWING REMARK BY JUDGE CONCERNING INDIANS

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question. Perhaps it is a related question, but since we are dealing with our first citizens may I direct my question to the Minister of Justice who I hope has had placed before him by the Prime Minister the matter of Judge Collins and his use of some derogatory remarks with regard to our first citizens.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Alexander: My question is—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has the floor for a supplementary question. If hon. members seek and obtain the floor for the purpose of asking supplementary questions which are not supplementary questions, there will be grave disorder during the question period. The hon. member wishes to ask a related question. I am prepared to recognize him for that purpose and he will be allowed to ask his question. I make these remarks as a caution to hon. members not to seek the floor for supplementaries when the questions are not really supplementaries. Having made these general remarks, the hon. member can proceed to ask his question.

Mr. Alexander: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I hope that at this particular stage of the question period, when we are talking about the rights of Canada's first citizens, we may ask questions about judges who are making derogatory remarks against them. If they are not to be treated as citizens it is meaningless for us to discuss their problems in regard to the James Bay project.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member should not ask the Chair to rule on that kind of point of order. He is obviously out of order. He was recognized for the purpose of asking a question which really was not a supplementary question. That is my ruling. However, he is still recognized for the purpose of asking the question to which he has just referred.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the Minister of Justice again. Is the government prepared to make some statement, since it has had the opportunity of looking at this matter for some four months, on what the government's attitude is regarding the statement made by Judge Collins of Sudbury regarding Canada's first citizens? Has he looked into the matter and is he now prepared to make a statement in order that we may be advised whether this country is a multicultural country or not?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, this matter has been gone into thoroughly. May I say I regret that the hon. member, with his legal mind, would liken one situation to another, which can cause great unfairness to individual people involved, as he did in his question the other day. Examination of the whole transcript of the proceedings convinces one that Judge Collins, while perhaps having made an unfortunate remark, particularly so because it can be taken out of context, was in the course of the proceedings fair and lenient to the person who was before him. He made the remark in the course of a lecture while imposing a suspended sentence. The case was discussed with the Department of Justice of Ontario and also with Chief Judge Collin Bennett of Ontario, and we are satisfied that no further action needs be taken at this time.

Mr. Alexander: Although the Minister of Justice seems to think that these are unrelated instances, in my opinion, and I say this with all due respect, they are both similar in that derogatory remarks were directed against individuals. Would the minister be prepared to table all correspondence and other material related to the investigation? Further, would he be prepared to bring the matter to the attention of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs in order that it can look into it?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to examine the question of what properly might be brought forward to the hon. member in connection with this case. I would be pleased to discuss it with him privately. I will not engage here in comparing one case with another, but I suggest to the hon. member that it is extremely unfair to do so.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I cannot understand that remark being made when a member has risen to question the minister in a responsible way in order to obtain information. This matter has been before the Minister of Justice and the government for some four months. The province of Ontario moved with dispatch, and I say this with the greatest respect, with respect to a similar type of situation immediately it became known. Why can this government not move as quickly? I ask this because many people wonder what the minister's attitude is.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Yorkton-Melville.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT

POSSIBLE AMENDMENTS RESPECTING SICKNESS BENEFITS AND SEVERANCE PAY

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration and is supplementary to the question asked earlier about the Unemployment Insurance Commission. In view of the numerous delays in the payment of unemployment insurance benefits over the past few months, is the minister in a position to assure the House that he will introduce appropriate amendments before next fall to take care of some basic problems regarding such things as sickness benefits, severance pay, etc?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): If he is here then.

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member had attended the committee yesterday when the estimates of the Unemployment Insurance Commission were discussed, he would have found that members of all parties congratulated unemployment insurance officials for the return to the degree of efficiency which has always been synonymous with the Unemployment Insurance Commission, with the exception of only two months. He is perfectly willing and able, I am sure, to appear before the appropriate committee tomorrow when it continues and pose these questions to the officials who will be on hand.

TRANSPORT

SHORTAGE OF RAILWAY CARS FOR MOVING BRITISH COLUMBIA LUMBER

Mr. Len Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. In view of the continuing shortage of various types of railway cars serving the forest industry of British Columbia, may I ask whether the minister is aware of the situation and what action is being taken to correct this worrisome problem.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have answered various forms of this question during recent days and conveyed the information given to me by the railways, which is that the shortage is being reduced and that more cars have been obtained in the United States and are either in Canada or on the way to Canada. I will be glad to get another status report as of today and pass it to the hon. member.

FAMILY INCOME SECURITY PLAN

SUGGESTED DELETION FROM BILL OF SECTION DENYING INCREASED BENEFIT TO CHILDREN IN FOSTER HOMES—OBJECTIONS BY NEW BRUNSWICK

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Are the minister and the government considering deleting a certain section of the FISP bill so that children in foster homes and institutions will not suffer further disability because they will not receive the increase that other children will receive under the plan?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I would point out to the hon. member that this only happens in cases where we are already supporting these children through the province by cost-sharing under the Canada Assistance Plan.

Mr. Fairweather: Has the minister now responded to a telegram from the minister of welfare of New Brunswick objecting to the bill in its present form, pointing out that these family allowance funds are held in trust for the benefit of children and objecting to the fact that the bill took on its present form without any consultation with that province?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway.

Mr. Fairweather: Is there to be no answer? That was not a hard question to answer.

HEALTH

MEDICARE—INVESTIGATION OF REPORTED EXCESSIVE CHARGES BY SOME ONTARIO PRACTITIONERS

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Is the minister working with provincial authorities to investigate charges that under medicare some Ontario doctors are gouging the public at rates of $1,000 per week for services in institutions and $300 an hour for clipping toenails?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I must advise the hon. member that medicare, so far as the federal government is concerned, is a cost-sharing arrangement with the provinces. The administration is entirely within their area of responsibility and jurisdiction. They have not asked that any role be played by the federal government in this.

Mrs. MacInnis: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since medicare—

An hon. Member: The minister has just answered your question.

Mrs. MacInnis: Yes, and I will ask another one. Since medicare is a federal-provincial cost-sharing scheme and since it is essential for medicare to work better and for the public to have confidence in it, does the minister intend to insist on a full investigation of these charges which indicate that very serious practices are going on?

Mr. Munro: Mr. Speaker, I answered the hon. member's question precisely as to whether we were investigating this particular area of alleged abuse, and the answer was no. The province has not asked us to investigate. If, on the other hand, she wishes to know whether we are behind the provinces and support them in attempting to cut down wastful expenditures and abuses of this kind, the answer is yes.

ADULT OCCUPATIONAL TRAINING ACT—INQUIRY WHETHER COURSES WILL BE TERMINATED BEFORE COMING INTO FORCE OF AMENDMENTS

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I have for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration a question related to the bill to amend the Adult Occupational Training Act.

Can the minister assure the House that those now receiving vocational training will be able to complete their studies before the minister's new bill is implemented?

[English]

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the two matters are unrelated. I might say, while I have the opportunity, that I intend later in the week to table the appropriate correspondence between my department and the premiers of the various provinces. People presently on courses will not be affected by this bill; it simply widens the scope of the program and permits people who were previously ineligible for courses to become eligible.

AIRPORTS

PICKERING TOWNSHIP SITE—PROVISION OF INFORMATION TO MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. When will the documents that were made available at the airport meeting with the minister this morning be available to members of this House and the general public?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the answer is now. Rather than make a general distribution—I would be glad to do but goodness knows we receive enough paper—any member who wishes to see the documentation should call my office and we will see that it is delivered right away.

Mr. Cafik: Mr. Speaker, will these documents be made available in sufficient quantity to allow members of parliament to cope with the heavy demand for additional information regarding the Pickering site?

Mr. Jamieson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Any information that any taxpayer wants on the plan can certainly be made available.

[Later:]

Mr. Cafik: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that a special group of departmental officials is being made available to provide in-depth information to the People Over Planes group regarding the Pickering airport site, will the same expertise be made available to others who express interest in obtaining similar in-depth information?

Mr. Jamieson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Whether their name is Pop, Pow, Alakazam or whatever it happens to be, they will get the same treatment.

Mr. Baldwin: How about Danson?

It relates to the indication we now have that Treasury Board is going to initiate a review with regard to housing for employees within the public service. My question is more specific and concerns members of the Canadian Armed Forces. Will the minister assure the House that representation will be made within the context of this policy review with regard to a method by which members of the Canadian Armed Forces might build some equity through the rents which we compel them to pay because of the nature of their service to Canada?

ALLEGED ADVERTISING OF BENEFITS AS PART OF CONDITIONS IN EMPLOYMENT OF MATES ON FISHING VESSELS

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Is the minister aware that west coast fishermen are advertising for fishermen's mates for the current season on the basis of 15 per cent of the gross catch plus $400 a month, plus unemployment insurance guaranteed for a number of months?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, knowing the vagaries of the sea and recognizing the fact that most fishermen in this country have a very indefinite type of income and should be assisted rather than ridiculed, I think that type of advertisement is not necessarily out of order.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Forrestall.]

Mr. Hellyer: Will the minister be less flippant and investigate the allegation and, if it is proved to be correct, introduce some changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act which will remove some of these grotesque anomalies?

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, the advertisement which the hon. member has described is certainly quite legal. If he knew a little more about the fishing industry and how it is—

PROCLAMATION OF ARCTIC WATERS POLLUTION PREVENTION AND NORTHERN INLAND WATERS ACTS—AVAILABILITY OF REGULATIONS

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In view of the need for more environmental protection in the north, I ask the minister whether the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act and the Northern Inland Waters Act which were passed a year ago have been proclaimed by the government and, if not, when will these acts be officially proclaimed?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, as far as I am concerned they have been proclaimed. However, I will double-check and inform the hon. member accordingly.

Mr. Harding: Have the regulations governing both these acts been drafted by the minister's department and, if so, are they available to members?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM WAR—STATEMENT ON ASSISTANCE TO CANADIANS

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, since Canada has no diplomatic representation in Viet Nam, the British Embassy in Saigon provides consular assistance to Canadians in the area and has agreed to include Canadians and certain other Commonwealth citizens in its contingency plans for evacuation. We are in consultation with the British authorities concerning the present situation.

Until recent developments in the central highlands region of South Viet Nam, Canadians serving under the development assistance program have not been in areas affected by the present hostilities. However, in recent days the security situation has deteriorated in the coastal city of Qui Nhon where the joint Canadian-Vietnamese rehabilitation centre is located, and it was considered necessary to move part of the Canadian team and their dependants temporarily to Saigon to await an improvement in the situation. Other Canadians working on assistance projects elsewhere in Viet Nam remain outside the major areas of hostilities, but we are continuing to watch the situation closely. The remainder of the Canadian aid program which comprises in part humanitarian and paramedical projects such as providing vaccines, food aid and emergency relief is continuing, and in response to an appeal from the government of the Republic of Viet Nam for assistance to persons displaced by the current hostilities Canada has undertaken to provide 500 metric tons of canned fish on an emergency basis.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Peace River.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I apologize to the hon. member for Peace River. The hon. member for Gander-Twillingate rises on a question of privilege. I will recognize the hon. member for Peace River shortly.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. In the last few days a number of questions have been raised in the House concerning the salmon fishery and the need for consultation with the provinces. Reference was made to what took place under the administrative arrangements with Quebec arising from the understanding reached in 1920. The Minister of Fisheries, I do not think deliberately, has consistently stated that such consultations have taken place, and he referred specifically to the Premier of Newfoundland with respect to the salmon licensing arrangements on the southwest coast of that province.

Two considerations arise. First, I should like to state for the record that there have been no such consultations specifically in connection with these problems and the minister has a responsibility to set the record straight. Second, there ought to be some means whereby urgent questions of this kind—

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is not a question of privilege by any stretch of the imagination. I do not know under what guise the hon. member is trying to bring this matter to the attention of the House. Does he intend to propose a motion or ask for a reference to committee in connection with this matter? This is not a question of privilege and the hon. member is entirely out of order. He has a question which he would perhaps like to clear up during the question period, but this is not a question of privilege.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): My comment will be brief, Mr. Speaker. I am sure hon. members appreciate the fact that the minister has responded to requests for information on this serious situation. Because of the gravity of these events and the fact that Canadians are involved, I would only ask the minister whether, within the limits of security for Canadians who are in the area, he would from time to time keep the House informed as to what is being done.

Mr. Diefenbaker: How long is "from time to time"?

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, this is perhaps going beyond my experience as a member of parliament, but I understand that if information is conveyed to the House which is not in accordance with the facts, an hon. member has a grievance. I have just had a discussion with the Premier of Newfoundland, and in connection with the statement by the minister that he did hold consultations with that province on the recent announcement concerning the salmon fishery, specifically on the southwest coast of Newfoundland, may I say that the minister has not given the House information in accordance with the facts. Is there no provision whereby the record can be set straight—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member may have a grievance, but the matter he has raised is one for debate. It cannot be raised or discussed in the House by way of a question of privilege. There are opportunities for hon. members to bring to the attention of the House grievances of this kind, but again I suggest to him that the correct procedure is not by way of a question of privilege.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

FAMILY INCOME SECURITY PLAN

MEASURE TO PROVIDE BENEFITS IN RESPECT OF CHILDREN

The House resumed, from Tuesday, April 25, consideration of the motion of Mr. Munro that Bill C-170, to provide for the payment of benefits in respect of children, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Lewis (p. 1448).

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, before the Easter recess I made a speech in which I set forth in detail my criticisms of Bill C-170. Since then speakers who have taken part in the debate have contributed further arguments criticizing the bill and strengthening the points I made in opposition to the measure.

There were three main areas of objection to which I directed attention in the course of my previous speech. The first was that Bill C-170 replaces the principle of universality with the principle of selectivity; second, the bill stigmatizes people in receipt of low incomes; third, that the measure is so confused that it will lead to misunderstanding and resentment. Moreover, the abandonment of the principle of universality will lead to divisiveness, as has been the case in the past when the government has applied the principle of selectivity to other acts.

I hardly need to remind the House of the divisiveness which has been created in connection with the old age security legislation and the income supplement related to that scheme. All hon. members have received letters reflecting the ill-feeling which has been created among senior citizens who receive the basic old age security allowance of $80 and do not benefit from a cost of living bonus. They contrast their position with that of people who receive old age security payments together with the income supplement and the 2 per cent cost of living bonus. I do not think it is worthy of the government to ignore these feelings which have been engendered among recipients of old age security benefits.

The government is repeating this mistake in connection with family allowances. The principle of selectivity was applied recently in connection with unemployment insurance benefits and has created not only chaos but ill-feeling among workers. I was surprised yesterday when the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Basford) said the government intended to make money available at low rates of interest to people in low income brackets so they might purchase homes. I am surprised he should have chosen this course rather than announcing comprehensive housing plans which would lead to a proper mix of people at different income levels. The government is once again stigmatizing and segregating a certain group of people. I have given three examples of the improper use of the principle of selectivity as opposed to the principle of universality.

The House has before it an amendment to the motion, in the name of the leader of my party. In substance, it says we should give consideration to the introduction of legislation amending the Family Allowances Act and Youth Allowances Act to provide for substantial increases in the allowances paid thereunder, to continue the principle of universality and make related changes in the income tax legislation. I hope the minister will support the amendment.

It is heartening to note that members of the Conservative party have been speaking in support of the amendment. It is also heartening to note that members of the Créditiste party have in their speeches indicated support of the amendment. I would think the substance of their argument can be deduced from the amendment itself; many of us wish to continue the principle of universality.

I would remind the minister that when he brought forth his white paper on family income security, many of us believed he would refer it to the appropriate committee for study in depth before legislation was brought down. He did not do so. He introduced legislation concerning old age pensions and this resulted in the criticism to which I have referred. One of the ways in which the hon. gentleman could avoid criticism of this bill would be by supporting the amendment, continuing the principle of universality and at the same time making an appropriate increase in the allowances under this program. Alternatively, he could withdraw the bill and refer this legislation, together with the white paper, to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs where it could be studied in depth.

I recall that in his opening statement the minister attempted to persuade members of the House that the Canadian Council on Social Development and the Canadian Labour Congress were in agreement with the terms of the measure before us. The speech of my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) drew attention to the criticisms and reservations expressed by those bodies.

I am making a special appeal to the Minister of National Health and Welfare who I think basically is attempting to bring forth legislation to help the children of Canada. I ask him to support not only the amendment but to give full consideration to transferring the subject matter of this bill to an appropriate committee. I think he would be the last to want to stigmatize or categorize people in regard to their income. It is high time that we in Canada stopped doing this and I think the minister, who most of the time wants to do his best for Canadians and is concerned for them, would not want this principle to continue.

The third point that I set forth regarding the complexities of the legislation I am sure has had an effect upon the minister. It certainly has had an effect upon hon. members who have read the bill and have tried to determine what its provisions mean and how they will be applied. Some have said that it would require the genius of a Philadelphia lawyer to determine what will be income and how much income a person must have before qualifying for family allowances.

We should always make bills as simple and as understandable as possible. The minister has failed to do this. He has taken directions from a cabinet committee as to what should be done and has tried to squeeze into the bill a principle that should not be applied in Canada. I ask the minister not to be persuaded or counselled by his officials regarding this bill but to read it and see whether he can understand it. He is a lawyer by profession and knows how to read statutes and the clauses of bills. I would give him the Pulitzer prize or the Nobel prize if he could tell the members of the House in clear, concise and convincing terms what is meant by some of the provisions of the bill.

As I have said, I have had the opportunity of setting forth in detail my main criticisms. At this time I rise only to repeat them and to plead with the minister. He has brought forth a very bad bill both in principle and in administrative complexity. I would ask him as a Canadian, not as a Liberal but as a Canadian who is concerned for the social security of all Canadians, to reconsider the bill and to bring forth a measure that is clear, concise and convincing. If he does this he will have the support and gratitude not only of the members of our party but of all Canadians.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, if I may speak to the amendment to this bill moved by the New Democratic Party, one of the members of that party has indicated that I am surprised by their opposition to the bill, that indeed I looked surprised when they took the position that they would vote against the bill on second reading. They are right; I am surprised. As many hon. members know, the Economic Council of Canada, the Senate report on poverty, the Council on Social Development, to say nothing of numerous other studies, have all indicated that in this country perhaps four to five million Canadians are living below the poverty line and that something must be done to alleviate their situation.

This is why the government has brought in what is undeniably an anti-poverty bill, a bill that is based on the principle of selectivity which will vertically redistribute income to the low income groups. Added to the present $650 million paid out yearly in universal family allowance payments will be another $170 million, making a total of $820 million vertically redistributed to improve the economic condition of those in the lower middle and lower income groups. And the New Democratic Party, the supposed party for the underprivileged, is going to vote against it!

Some 1,249,000 families, representing 35.5 per cent of all families in Canada which have been receiving universal family allowances, are below the minimum income levels provided in the bill. The minimum income levels in the bill are higher than the minimum tax levels and these families will receive maximum benefits under this legislation. If we relate the benefits under the bill to the family allowance we will see that the benefit structure under the bill provides benefits that are more than double for children up to 10 years of age. For children 10 to 12 years of age the benefits are doubled. For children between 12 and 15 the benefits are, again, more than doubled. For children between 16 and 17 the benefits are exactly doubled. And one wonders why I am surprised that the New Democratic Party is voting against this bill!

The bill provides greater benefits than is now the case for an additional 623,000 families. These are in addition to the 1,249,000 families I referred to earlier who will receive full benefits, more than they receive today. These families are, of course, in the lower and lower middle income groups. Again, some ask why I am surprised, as indeed I am, that the New Democratic Party is voting against the bill.

Let me give an example of what this legislation means to a family at the $5,000 annual income level. Take a family with two children receiving the maximum benefit of $30 a month if the children are under 12, and up to a maximum of $40 a month if they are over 12. This represents a net gain of $18 to $20 a month. If there were three children in the family, the maximum benefit would be $45 to $60 a month or a net gain of $27 to $32 over the previous family allowances which were universal.

Looking at this situation in terms of yearly incremental income in both instances which I have just mentioned, a family with two children under the age of 12 would receive $216. If the children were over 12 the family would receive $288 per year incremental income. In the second example I referred to, the family with three children under 12 would receive a yearly incremental income of $324. With three children over 12 years of age, including those receiving youth allowances, the amount could be up to $432 a year.

Now let me cite the case of a family with two children, at the $6,000 a year income level. If both children were under 12, the family would receive $11.70 for each child or a total of $23.40 a month. This compared with the present legislation means a net gain of $11.40 per month. If both children were over 12, for each child the family would receive $16.70, a total of $33.40 per month, amounting to an incremental income per year of $208.80; in other words, under the family allowance program that represents a net gain of $17.40 per month.

In the case of four children under 12, the family would receive maximum benefits under this legislation of $60 or an incremental income of $432 per year. In terms of monthly net gain over the present family allowances it would be $36 per month. For a family with an income of $6,000 a year, with four children over 12, the maximum benefits would be $80 per month. In terms of comparison with the monthly benefit under the present family allowances structure, that is a net gain of $36 to $48 per month.

I ask hon. members opposite to tell the mother of a family at the $5,000 income level that this program is a cruel hoax. Let the leader of the NDP, the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis),tell the mother of a family at the $6,000 level, with four children, that the incremental income here of $432 to $576 per year, a monthly net gain over the present system of $36 to $48, is a cruel hoax perpetrated on the poor. Let the leader of the NDP tell these families that is why his party voted against the bill.

Let me read an excerpt from a recent column by Douglas Fisher which appeared in the Toronto Sun of Monday, April 24, 1972, under the heading, "The rich get richer and the poor get poorer". He was referring to a question placed on the order paper by the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow). The question was:

> In respect of the years 1961, 1966 and 1971, what was the distribution by income groups of families and individual taxpayers, and particularly the grouping of income above $1 million?

The question went on to ask what the levels were at $6,000, $5,000, $4,000, $3,000, $2,000 and $1,000 annually.

The answer from the national revenue department was that there was no distribution by family income groups, but it gave the following distribution of individual taxpayers based on the annual analysis of tax returns. These were the latest available figures, being those for 1969. They are very interesting. The table of figures shows that out of the total number of taxpayers in Canada, 7,363,000—69.9 per cent or a total of almost 70 per cent—were receiving a total income of $7,000 a year or less. If you take the intermediate figure for the group of taxpayers earning between $7,000 and $8,000, in order to arrive at the percentage earning $7,500 or less, using that calculation as a rough guide the percentage escalates to 74.1 per cent of the total number of taxpayers earning $7,500 or less. It is precisely this group that will do no worse than at present in respect of benefits under the family allowances program and a very significant majority of the people within this group of 74 per cent will do very substantially better under the legislation before the House.

Therefore I ask, when this legislation is of tangible benefit and improvement for a great majority of this 74 per cent, and none within the 74 per cent will do worse, can you wonder why I am surprised that the NDP will vote against it? Can one be surprised that they seem to be advancing their appeal to the top 25 per cent of the income earners in Canada? It seems to me a weird and wonderful posture for the leader of the NDP and its members who have historically adopted the posture of more for the little man.

It is very interesting that the leader of the NDP states that he has had a chance now to more carefully read the bill. He stated on April 19, as recorded in Hansard at page 1444:

> —we have had an opportunity since the Easter recess to study the bill before us further and the more one studies it and its effect, the more it becomes clear to us that it is unacceptable in principle.

Then he said:

> Of course, I know that my colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), in leading off for our party in this debate said that we were prepared to give the bill second reading and send it to the appropriate standing committee.

That was the leader of the NDP referring to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, saying that he was speaking for the entire NDP. The leader of the NDP went on to say, again referring to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, that the hon. member did have many serious objections to make in respect of the bill. So over the Easter recess the leader of the NDP decided to reverse the previous decision of that party as expressed by their own House leader and said that on second thought they were no longer prepared to support the bill. What kind of drivel is that? I suggest it is indicative of the cynicism of the NDP with reference to its posture on this bill. Will that hon. member for one minute and in all seriousness advance the proposition to all hon. members that the selectivity principle of this bill is new, that it spells the end of universality and that this became apparent only over the Easter recess?

All the essential features of this bill were in a bill tabled in the House in September, 1971. We know that when the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre indicated he was prepared to give the bill second reading he had studied it fully. Every member of this House knows that he is a well known expert on matters of income security. Do the members of the NDP really expect the House to believe that only over the Easter recess did they become fully aware of the provisions of this bill and decided to reverse their stand and vote against it?

Are we to assume that the leader of the NDP thinks so little of his House leader that that hon. member would not have explained the provisions of the bill to the whole caucus and therefore they did not know what they would be voting for when they said they would support the bill on second reading? Are we to assume that over all the months since September, 1971, during which this bill has been before us, a major piece of social legislation, none of the members of the NDP understood its provisions? I suggest that over the Easter recess the NDP decided to change its posture. It decided, cynically, that perhaps it could appeal to the middle income voter and obtain some political gain at the expense of the poor of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Munro: Perhaps a further indication of this political cynicism and expediency can be found in the example which the leader of the NDP selected in pointing out why he could not support the bill. Of course, he picked out the income level of $7,500. I point out that this is the very level at which he hopes to capitalize by obtaining some support. When he refers to this level he does not refer to the man making $15,000 a year, $20,000 a year, or the millionaire, all of whom are losing all the benefits under the plan. He zeroes in on this particular income group and thinks it is the group where the government is vulnerable. This is the group to which he chooses to refer.

The leader of the NDP picks out the example of a family with an income of $7,500 and one child and says, "Look at the deplorable features of the bill" because in this particular case they receive $1 less per month than under the present family allowances scheme. If he had picked one child of that family, and instead of placing him under the age of 12 had placed him over the age of 12, then it could be calculated that they would not lose $1 per month compared to the present family allowance, but would gain up to $2.10 per month. Or if the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) had wanted to be a little more objective he could have said that that family at $7,500 had two children over age 12, and then he would have had to say they would receive extra FISP benefits of $3.50 to $7.50 per month.

Let us look at another example of picking carefully selected examples to point out his particular point of view. He went on to give the example of a family with an income of $8,000 and on that family he again bestows one child under 12. Naturally, the child receives the lower of the two benefit levels, $5 compared to $20. The leader of the NDP said:

> If the family income is $8,000, the payment to the child will be $3.45 a month.

Of course, in that case the child had to be under the age of 12. If the family had two children, one under age 12 and another over 12, the benefit would be $15.10 instead of $14 as at present, for a net gain. But he did not give this family two children, or even one child, over age 12. This was probably contrived to indicate his point that here is an income redistribution policy which is detrimental to the middle income group. He had to pick an example where there is a marginal decrease of $1. Just how cynical an approach does the New Democratic Party think it can perpetrate not only on the members of this House but on the Canadian people? The leader of the NDP hopes he can show that he cares for the middle income people. He thinks he has assessed their most vulnerable spot and therefore picks out this example which will cost them a little money.

I and the members of this party think the hon. member has misjudged the intelligence of the middle income voters in this country. I believe the members of the New Democratic Party have belittled themselves and the principles for which they stand. I think the leader of the New Democratic Party speaks with a forked tongue. He talks about policies designed to make the poor better off as setting class against class. I think his own design in picking out these contrived examples is to do precisely that, to turn the middle income group against the poor.

The leader of the so-called party of the left seems to be ready to resort to tactics of this kind. Now we see the real politics of polarization. Again he picks out the most contrived example in the middle income range to point out a marginal increase. We ask: Do the New Democrats feel they can win votes in this way, by disavowing everything they have said they stand for during the last decade? Does the leader of that party really believe he can cynically count on the tactics of polarization?

We know that at one time the socialists went about trying to constructively use the tactics of polarization. That was when they tried to polarize the poor against the rich to bring home their point and get action to alleviate their circumstances. Now they have moved up a notch and would endeavour to polarize the middle income group against the poor.

An hon. Member: The government's economic policies are doing that.

Mr. Munro: I do not know what the New Democrats think they will gain, in terms of appeal, from the Canadian people. Many of the people in the middle income group are not prepared to support the New Democratic Party in any event. Even if they believe the New Democratic Party, they will think this is such a desperate and cynical move that they will not approve its tactics.

Mr. Gilbert: We are getting to you.

Mr. Munro: The New Democrats say they are getting to me. I want them to get to me one of these days on an election platform in Canada, before the people of Canada and the middle income groups whom they are cynically manipulating for support and using as a justification for the fact that they intend to vote against this bill. I do not think they will stand up very well.

I would like to tell that party something about my experiences with the middle income group in this country. I have been going across the country talking to many of these people. I agree that some of them, apparently the ones to whom the New Democratic Party are listening, rather resent the fact that they are losing their family allowance, but on reassessment they indicated to me that they were prepared to lose part or all of it if it would be of tangible assistance to people in worse circumstances than theirs. Of course, they also said this applied so long as the wealthy in this country also lose all their benefits. That is precisely what this legislation provides. They know there is far too large a group of the work force earning a marginal income which means there is little incentive to work. They know the wage scales do not take into account the number of dependants but merely the value of the labour to the employer.

They know that a worker's wages do not provide adequate compensation to a man who has family responsibilities, and that this discourages him and provides little incentive for him to remain in the labour force. They know there is inducement for him to go on welfare. They know that a man with a marginal income must receive incremental assistance. They are prepared to join the ranks of other Canadians in attempting to do something about it and to build incentive back into the welfare scheme, as well as attempting to make up for deficiencies in the minimum wage laws and provide incremental income to the man with a family.

The people in the middle income group are prepared to pay their fair share to see that this is done. They know that the man earning an income of $5,000 with children is living in poverty in Canada. They know that it is the unorganized worker about whom so many of us should be concerned. He is the income earner who does not have a union to represent him. They also know something about the minimum wage legislation. Many of these income earners know that the minimum wage legislation only assists single persons and married couples without children. But even as low as the income of low income earners is, whatever tangible benefit they do have from the minimum wage legislation is diminished in terms of anything approaching a semblance of adequacy every time an additional child comes into the family. The middle income workers know that only by raising minimum wage levels above the social assistance level will there be any real incentive to work. They know that the only way this can be done is by legislation providing incremental income based on additional children. Once we bring in legislation of this kind we can realistically raise our minimum wage levels and perhaps make a joint, effective attack on poverty.

In that connection let us look at the minimum wage levels in some provinces, including those which have NDP governments. I will pick one province in particular, Manitoba. It provides for a minimum wage of $1.65 per hour. Extrapolated in terms of a week of 40 hours, this works out to $66 a week. How can a man with a family live on that? How much is it a year? It is $3,432 a year. Why would that man with a family not go on welfare? The minimum wage levels there depress the social assistance rates and ensure their inadequacy.

Under this legislation, if a man has three children and, say, two are over 12 and one is under 12, we can give him an extra $660 a year. That, combined with a more realistic minimum wage law, would at least elevate that man to the poverty line. Surely we must all agree that taking the legislation in terms of what the minimum wage laws can do, it would be virtually impossible to expect it to take care of the situation of the low income earner with a family. It can relate only to the single and married people without children. But we can have a realistic policy to combat poverty when we combine the minimum wage laws with FISP, which would provide incremental income such as I have just stated, and in the process would provide real incentives for people to remain in the labour force and not to go on welfare. So a combination of these two policies would take care of the most difficult problem over which this country and those concerned about poverty have agonized for many years.

The NDP is voting against this legislation and they wonder why we in this party are surprised. They wish to go to the people of Canada with this cynical, political device. I submit that if they do they will be truly repudiated. The NDP states that they do not like this selective approach; they wish to adopt the universal approach; they would pay everyone a universal benefit irrespective of income, and they would not only double the present family allowances but, as their amendment indicates, they would increase them substantially over that which the FISP legislation before the House provides. Everybody would automatically ask: How in the world are we going to pay for this?

The hon. member who moved the amendment suggested that we amend the tax legislation but he does not say what amendments he would make. He is appealing to the middle income group by telling them that we should double or more than double their benefits, but he does not give any detail on how he would collect this money through amendments to the tax legislation. I wonder how naïve he thinks middle income group earners are whom he is subjecting to such a cynical and blatantly superficial appeal for their support? These people know very well that if there is to be a redistribution of income in favour of those in the lower income group, someone has to pay for it. When the New Democrats talk about amending the tax legislation they mean that these benefits would be paid from taxes. The intelligence of the middle income group cannot be insulted in this way.

Let us consider the figures given by Douglas Fisher in the article in the Sun from which I quoted a few minutes ago. He indicated that those making $10,000 a year and over—as we know, under the present tax structure they are in the 35 per cent tax bracket—constitute only 11 per cent of the total number of taxpayers in this country. To only double the benefits under the bill presently before the House—not more than double them, as the NDP would have it—would cost roughly an additional $700 million a year. We know from these figures that only 11 per cent of all taxpayers in this country earn $10,000 or more a year.

Where would the leader of the NDP get the additional money to pay the $700 million that he wishes to pay out in universal benefits? is he going to tax this 11 per cent? If he wanted to recover that $700 million a year from 11 per cent of the taxpayers in Canada, he would almost have to apply a 100 per cent recovery rate through taxes; and even if he took back dollar for dollar the amount of the family allowance they receive he could not collect the $700 million which is necessary. So who do the NDP think they are fooling?

The NDP talk about the Canadian Council on Social Development which recommended universality. What they did not mention in any of their speeches is that the council recommended special recovery rates. The NDP would pay these cheques to all the mothers of this country and then they would take the money back from the wage earners in the form of income tax. They would pay out the money on the one hand and on the other take it off the husband who is earning a salary, at a 100 per cent recovery rate. The wife would go out and spend the monthly cheque and the husband would lose the money from his salary dollar for dollar.

How naïve do they think the middle income group is, to be fooled by this blatant charade according to which money would be given on the one hand and then taken back dollar for dollar from the income of the wage earner? Even so, the bill amounting to $700 million could not be paid. If the recovery rate through the taxation of many in the high income group was less than 100 per cent, there would be a significant wastage of funds. Money would be given to people who did not need it, to those in the high income group, and millions of dollars which could go to those in the lower income group who need it would be wasted.

Mr. Speaker, I do not think that the middle income group will be fooled one bit by this charade when they know that almost 90 per cent of the taxpayers in this country are below the $10,000 a year income level. They know that these bland promises are cynically thrown out in an appeal for their vote. They know, also, that the money has to come from somewhere, that it cannot come from just the 10 per cent earning over $10,000 a year. They know it is impossible to finance arrangements of this kind in that way.

Perhaps the leader of the NDP would suggest that we increase corporation taxes. What would he do? Let him be frank with the Canadian people. Would he increase corporation taxes by 10 per cent? My figures indicate that that might bring in roughly $230 million a year.

An hon. Member: What about the resource industries?

Mr. Munro: Would he increase corporation taxes 20 per cent? According to the law of diminishing returns, that would bring in perhaps another $150 million a year. In effect, this would pay roughly only half of the bill that the Canadian people would have to meet as a result of the amendment the NDP are now advancing. Let them be specific. They are not fooling anybody. They say they are going to have special recovery rates. Are they going to give the universal benefit to the middle income group on the one hand and then take it back, dollar for dollar, at a 100 per cent special recovery rate? If so, will they apply that special recovery rate at the $8,000, $9,000 or $10,000 income level? Why try to delude the middle income earner? Why try to deceive him by in effect saying you are defending him at the expense of the poor?

Then there was the statesmanlike approach taken by the hon. member for Winnipeg North. He gave the example of a steelworker in my riding and said he would lose marginally on the benefit to be paid.

Mr. Gilbert: That got to you.

Mr. Munro: Yes, that got to me. I would like the hon. member who is cynically trying to appeal for votes from that group to come with me and see whether the steelworkers in my riding are as naïve as he thinks they are. I can tell him that they are not nearly so naïve as he thinks and this blatant insult to their intelligence will not get him or the NDP very far.

Mr. Speaker, we have talked about the just society. We have talked about licking poverty in this country. I will tell you something about the steelworkers, about these people in the middle income group. They, too, have been joining the chorus of voices that are saying we must do something about poverty. And if we can do something to redistribute more income to workers in the low income bracket, they are prepared to pay their share. That may come as a surprise to the cynics in the NDP. Any member of that party can come to my riding any day of the week and try to fight that issue.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Munro: Another misapprehension that the leader of the NDP had was that families on social assistance would receive only half the benefit. I state unequivocally that that is not the intention of the bill, nor does the bill state that. The children of families on social assistance will receive the maximum benefit. What he is talking about relates largely to children in custodial care or in institutions where half the benefit is paid and we share the cost through cost-sharing arrangements under the Canada Assistance Plan.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I regret having to interrupt the minister, but his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): It seems to be the disposition of hon. members to allow the minister to continue. This can be done only by unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Munro: Mr. Speaker, I shall not take up much more time. I thank hon. members for the opportunity to finish my remarks.

Mr. Fairweather: May I ask a question at the end of your speech?

Mr. Munro: Certainly. As I was saying, it was stated that this program would not help families on social assistance. I repeat that they will receive the maximum benefit, contrary to what the leader of the NDP stated. I think it was the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall) who indicated that although we pay out the maximum benefit for the children of a family living in poverty on social assistance, this will not mean any increased income to that family because the province in turn will deduct dollar for dollar the amount of the increased benefit from its social assistance levels.

Mr. Fairweather: No.

Mr. Munro: That was the suggestion advanced. If the hon. member who just said no had been in the House yesterday, he would have heard a member of his own party say so.

The reply to that statement is yes. Conceivably, that could be done but it would have to be a conscious act or policy of the provincial administration, that once such a family received the increased FISP benefit it would deduct dollar for dollar the amount of the increase from the social benefits paid to the family, the cost of which we share. I may say that I have not met in my travels any provincial ministers of welfare who have indicated that under any circumstances they would adopt a policy of that kind. I believe there are very few provinces in which that type of action would be resorted to, so I have high hopes that this measure will add to the disposable income of the people who desperately need more money. I would think that any provincial administration which would adopt such a policy of avarice, such a harsh policy in terms of the low income group, would be repudiated by provincial electors.

Another point that should be clarified concerns how income is calculated. For FISP, your income is the combined net income of husband and wife. This means all payments—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Munro: Just hold your "Oh, ohs" because there are more breaks here than some members of the NDP think. This means all payments that both parties receive, but their unavoidable expenses are not counted. In other words, there is every exemption save two counted in assessing income; those two are the personal exemption for one's self, spouse and children and one's medical and charitable deductions. Thus, combined gross income would include the following: wages, salaries, rents, dividends, interest, capital gains plus certain government payments like unemployment insurance, Canada Pension Plan and old age security. Not included in the computation of income are workmen's compensation, veterans pensions, the guaranteed income supplement, social allowance, any insurance award for damages and the family income security payment itself.

So to arrive at net income you subtract all the money you do not really have use of, in other words your non-disposable income. This includes business losses, office overhead for the self-employed, union dues, membership fees for professional organizations, tools and equipment, alimony and child support payments, day care expenses, registered retirement savings plan including payments to the Canada Pension Plan, superannuation and other employee private pension plans, and personal annuity insurance policy payments. This gives you your net income before personal, medical and charitable exemptions. Income for the purposes of FISP is calcuated on this basis.

Some hon. member asked: What about the position of farmers and fishermen? Farmers and fishermen compute their family income security payments, so far as income is concerned, in the same way as they compute their income tax. Deductions from gross income are allowed as follows, taking fishermen first: fuel, repairs and maintenance of equipment, including boat, purchase of nets and net repair, capital cost allowance of equipment, insurance on equipment, municipal taxes on a privately-owned wharf and wages for employees on the boat.

For farmers the deductions allowed are as follows: wages to farmhands, cost of livestock purchases, all property tax on farm buildings and farm house, insurance on buildings and equipment, livestock feed, grain seed for planting, twine and bags, pesticides, herbicides and fertilizer, repairs to buildings—100 per cent on farm buildings and 50 per cent on a farm house—and the capital cost of buildings and equipment. I could elaborate on some of these examples, Mr. Speaker, and in committee I will be prepared to do so in order to alleviate the fears of some hon. members.

Another objection taken to the legislation was the terrible administrative bureaucracy that it was alleged would be built up as a result. It is indeed strange to hear this type of argument being supported by the NDP who indicate that we should have more bureaucracy.

An hon. Member: Why?

Mr. Munro: Their policy is that government should move into more areas to assist people suffering injustices in our society. Nevertheless, strange as the objections may be, I think hon. members have greatly overestimated the administrative problems that will be encountered. I ask hon. members to compare this plan with the guaranteed income supplement for the aged. In that program we brought in selectivity. Benefits were based on the previous year's income. If during the current year the recipient of the guaranteed income supplement suffered a marked drop in income, he was given the option of going on the current year's basis so that his benefit level would increase and overcome that hardship.

• (1610)

Upward of one million of our 1,700,000 old age pensioners are receiving all or part of the guaranteed income supplement. They must file an income statement in the same way as is proposed in connection with the family income security plan. I ask hon. members present to say frankly how many complaints they have received regarding those applications. There have been some, but not many. Can any member of this House say that the approximately one million pensioners receiving the guaranteed income supplement do not welcome that payment even though there is an income test? They must make a statement in full, but do they not welcome the program? No investigators come around bothering them. The cheque is in an envelope and they can go to an impersonal bank and cash it; therefore there is no humiliation connected with it. Do our approximately one million old age pensioners not welcome these payments, for all these reasons?

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Orlikow: No, Mr. Speaker; I rise to ask a question.

Mr. Munro: Can any hon. member say that many of those one million Canadians have complained about being humiliated? In their objections, hon. members opposite have made excessive statements about this particular policy. The program we are considering will be administered in the same way. There will be many variations in payments just as there are variations in the cheques that go out for the guaranteed income supplement. Under this program the size of the cheque will vary according to the number of children, the income level of the family and the ages of the children; so that even when a cheque is cashed, anybody else watching will have no idea of the income level of the family.

Objections along these lines entirely ignore the functioning of our banking system in many urban areas. One can simply cash a cheque by signing it and presenting it at the bank where it can be paid into an account. The gross exaggeration in terms of what will happen in the administration of this program is merely another device hon. members opposite are using to distract the attention of this House and the citizens of Canada from what is at issue. Those exaggerations are a form of blatant cynicism and an attempt to manipulate the opinion of a group in Canada that is not greedy, the middle income group. Hon. members will soon discover the truth once this legislation is passed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Some hon. members wished to ask the minister questions and he agreed to accept them. The Chair recognizes, first, the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather).

Mr. Fairweather: Mr. Speaker, I thank the minister for accepting my question and I apologize for interrupting him. The question I wish to ask is one of great seriousness. Does the minister not realize that family allowance moneys paid to children in foster homes, institutions and otherwise outside the normal family structure are used, as one might put it, to pay for extras such as school supplies, clothing and other supplies for children who in ordinary circumstances get a very meagre shake in life? That is what bothers me so much about clause 6(2). In many cases the money is used to help these children get a start in life and takes the place of help otherwise provided by parents. Can the minister see his way clear to changing this aspect of the bill?

An hon. Member: Through amendments?

Mr. Fairweather: The hon. member will have to wait for the amendments that will be brought forward in committee.

Mr. Munro: Mr. Speaker, I will endeavour to answer the question. May I say that I realize the significance of what the hon. member has said. Rightly or wrongly, in this legislation we are providing maximum benefits for children of families receiving social assistance who are not being raised in an institutional setting. We are trying to equate equally benefits received by children in families and by children in institutions. Since we are already sharing with the provinces half the cost of operating many of these institutions—

An hon. Member: But those are different payments.

Mr. Munro: I am trying to explain in a rough way the rationale behind the bill. I believe the hon. member who asked the question, or a colleague of his received a communication from the minister responsible for social welfare in New Brunswick. I am perfectly willing to look at this matter again in committee and see if some better formula cannot be worked out.

Mr. Fairweather: Thank you.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister a question? In talking about administrative problems, he said that there have not been many complaints or problems connected with old age pensioners receiving supplementary benefits. Would he not agree that there is a vast difference between people receiving the old age pension, who have a relatively stable income, and working people and farmers whose incomes fluctuate as a result of unemployment, pay increases and other factors, and that therefore there will be many problems for people in the latter category in figuring out what their benefit level will be because their incomes may change from month to month?

Mr. Munro: Mr. Speaker, the recovery rates under FISP will be in a closely compressed bracket. Without doubt, there are considerable variations in connection with the guaranteed income supplement and, of course, there are bound to be great variations in the family income security plan, if for no other reason than that more people will be applying than is the case under GIS. I am trying to point out that the GIS program is selective, applying to a significant number of people, one million. Although members of parliament I have talked to have complained about benefit levels, and so on, they have not mentioned many serious complaints with respect to administration. That shows that this country, in advance perhaps of any other country in the free world, has been able to use the income test and not the means test in an appropriate way so that we are able to protect the dignity of people and still give them a supplementary income on which to survive.

Mr. Marshall: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a question? Perhaps the minister would clarify something that worries me. The best way of asking my question is by giving an example. Let us say that a man is earning $4,500 a year and is getting maximum benefits. Let us say, also, that his wife works for part of the year and that the family still gets maximum benefits. She may begin working six months after the beginning of the year. Then let us say that next year she loses her job and the family's income drops to $4,500. How will the government recover any overpayment? There is bound to be confusion because people will have to repay certain benefits received in the previous year.

Mr. Munro: If I understood the hon. member's question correctly, let me say this. If because of hardship in the current year a man decides to exercise his option on the basis of his current year's income, and if his income jumps back up in that same year, recovery will take place. This is all done by computer. A similar sort of thing happens in connection with the guaranteed income supplement for the aged. Speaking of the guaranteed income supplement for the aged, in cases where we had to effect recoveries in the following year, many of the complaints did not concern so much the recoveries themselves as the fact that we tried to make recoveries within too limited a time frame. Since then we have spaced out the time and minimized the payments; in other words, the monthly payments necessary to make recoveries are lower. By so doing we have effectively dealt with most of the complaints.

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Since the hon. minister intends to solve the problem of poverty in Canada, I should like to ask him how he can do so by taking money away from those who do not have enough already.

[English]

Mr. Munro: Mr. Speaker, I explained at considerable length in my speech the precise answer to that question. If the hon. member did not listen to it, I hope he will read it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is the hon. member rising for the purpose of asking a question?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): No, Mr. Speaker; I want to make a speech.

[Translation]

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take part in the debate on this amendment as I sincerely believe it deserves our attention since the bill before us is not entirely adequate. This piece of legislation was not prepared well enough; in other words, it would be a good thing to accept this amendment even if we have to deal later on with another bill on that subject.

The reasons that lead me to support this amendment, Mr. Speaker, are the following: first of all, the basic problem dealt with in this bill does not seem to be solved adequately.

As for the inadequateness of clause 6, I have already proved it in a speech on the motion for second reading and I shall not go back to it.

Still, one of the factors which leads me to support the amendment is the inadequateness of the amounts provided for in respect of allowances. The vast majority of my colleagues have already spoken against selectivity being applied to family allowances. I share their views; consequently, that point should be reviewed.

Other major reasons should also be considered and lead the minister to pospone study of the bill, so that a better bill might be prepared.

Mr. Speaker, this bill deals with a constitutional matter. I believe the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) has already mentioned it in a speech, and that the bill, because we are selecting those who will receive the allowances, becomes anticonstitutional, and that it was through an amendment to the very Constitution of Canada that the federal government stepped into this field of exclusively provincial jurisdiction.

Now, the amendment that had to be proposed when family allowances were introduced gave all Canadian families, without any distinction, the opportunity of receiving family allowances. Consequently, by accepting Bill C-170 as drafted, we are running counter to the Constitution itself. More especially, Mr. Speaker, since we are dealing with a matter about which there are great differences of opinion among the various parts of the country. We all know that Quebec does not accept that system and that it would rather control all those benefits through a system which it would co-ordinate itself.

As for the bill, it even seemed to us that we were witnessing a federal-provincial race or, if you prefer, a Canada-Quebec race. They are both competing to be first. On the one hand, the Quebec Minister of Social Affairs, who had set May 1, as the target date, was compelled at a certain moment to say that he would postpone for a month or two his comprehensive family allowances plan. On the other hand, the federal government is endeavouring to have the legislation concerning family allowances passed quickly.

If in such an important part of the country as Quebec there is not full agreement with this measure, we realize immediately the need to further consider this subject and to pstpone for a little while the passage of this bill. There is a major reason, in my view, for supporting the amendment.

We must also, instead of making a petty reform of this kind, consider a general plan where anything relating to social questions would be coordinated within a system which would provide every Canadian with a guaranteed income.

It is in a comprehensive scheme that all these things should fit. This is why I say, again, that instead of passing a particular legislation, we should further consider a general solution to the whole problem, thst is, the establishment of a guaranteed vital minimum income for all. Such should be our objective. Social laws that we have considered should be drafted in view of this major objective.

It is obvious that giving $15 or $20 more, in a very niggardly manner, checking books of every family in order to find out, to the month, what is its income, will not solve the problem. It is some form of excessive socialism that such a method would introduce. And as was stated by, I think, my colleague from Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) a few days ago, such selective benefits create discrimination.

I say in effect, Mr. Speaker, that discrimination is created, considering that in knowing the amount of family allowances received by a family, one also knows the approximate amount that family's income. Is that not indirect intervention in matters concerning individual freedom, collective freedom and, especially, the freedom of families?

Some will say: The same thing happens with regard to income tax. The situation is slightly different there, because, as everyone knows, family allowance cheques are seen by all. Everyone knows that the children themselves speak about them, and that is why I say that there is discrimination.

It might even come to this. Two small boys, two little girls, or a little girl and a small boy will say: Me, I am not getting an allowance, while the other will reply: I am. So how are we going to accept such a situation? This is what I call discrimination.

One child will be told: I am not getting an allowance; at home, we are not getting any. The other will reply: I am because my parents are getting allowances. So, will they have to argue and say: I am not getting any because my parents earn more money than yours; yours are no good. We can easily see what this could lead to. This may be a viewpoint which has not been considered but this is really what could happen, all the more so since when children are 12, 13, 14 or 18 years old, parents usually give such allowances to the children themselves, especially when they are old enough to attend secondary school. Then I would really think that there is discrimination.

If they really want to score political points right now, for electoral purposes or otherwise, Mr. Speaker, there would be a very simple solution. Instead of introducing this legislation, all that is necessary would be to increase family allowances as we know them. All we need to do is to increase them. There is nothing complicated there.

That is why I say that those who feel that by supporting this amendment we are against raising family allowances are completely wrong. On the contrary, I would be in favour of a proposal such as this: From now on, family allowances will be $12 and $15 instead of $8 and $10. I would not object to that. I would even prefer to see them tailored to the real needs of families. Therefore, I am not against their immediate increase within the framework of the legislation that is already in existence, and we should wait before introducing a bill which could really help families with the problems they are facing daily, and particularly those resulting from the continuous rise in the cost of living.

Mr. Speaker, in closing I want to remind hon. members of a major fact, that nothing can be changed through hastily developed legislation to increase family allowances for the purpose of making a good impression on people, so that the government can claim to have increased family allowances from one amount to another, whereas there has been in fact all kinds of chicanery to deprive some people of these benefits according to their salary bracket.

I feel that any effort to achieve a worthwhile legislation in this field should concentrate on the basic determining factor and aim at bringing about social security as a whole, which could really solve basic problems of all Canadian families. And I repeat that to achieve this, it must be taken into account that this field comes under provincial jurisdiction and that there should therefore be more consultation with the provinces on the subject. Also, any agreement relative to family allowances should first be examined jointly with those provinces which want to implement their own system.

[English]

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I listened with a great deal of interest and very close attention to the speech made by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro). In terms of its construction and in terms of the manner in which he delivered it, I must say it was one of the best speeches he has made in the House of Commons. But in terms of any appreciation of social philosophy, in terms of any understanding of the needs of our society, that speech was so far off base I am as surprised he should have made it as he says he is surprised that we are opposing his bill.

The minister enjoyed using the word cynicism in the course of his speech. I did not count the number of times it appeared but it must have been a dozen or 15. Let me say to him, as one who for nearly three decades has been opposing needs and means and income tests, as one who has demonstrated a firm belief in the principle of universality, that I am not touched at all by his suggestion that our opposition to this bill because it does not stick by the principle of universality is a case of political cynicism, and I suggest to the minister that he himself knows better.

The hon. gentleman also appeared to derive some pleasure by affecting to discern a change in the position of this party between March 24, when I made the first speech on this bill, and the date on which my leader, the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) spoke after the Easter recess. He was in the House for my speech on March 24—I presume he and his speechwriters have read it since—and he knows that that speech was one of opposition to this bill for the reasons I stated clearly at the time. At that point we considered that despite our opposition to the measure, we would let it go to committee in the hope that in committee we might be able to make the necessary improvements in it. However, the longer we studied the bill, the more we became aware of the obvious intent of the government to depart from the principle of universality wherever it could and the firmer became our conviction that at some point it was necessary to take a stand, that at some point it was necessary to say: You are going no further.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I do not mind telling you, Mr. Speaker, even though some of my hon. friends behind me may say I am revealing caucus secrets, that we had a struggle over the bill to amend the Old Age Security Act which the minister brought down in December, 1970. It confronted us with a dilemma. The bill did provide for some increase and for this reason we felt we ought to let it go through. But there were members of our caucus who argued that we should vote against it because it attacked the principle of universality.

On balance we let it go through, because although it attacked the principle of universality by increasing the guaranteed income supplement without increasing the basic amount—unless the minister still calls 42 cents an increase—nevertheless it was still true that there was universality at the $80 level. In other words, all persons in Canada 65 years of age and over can qualify for and receive that amount of money.

The minister now comes along and introduces a bill that completely takes away the principle of universality from family allowances. We know that the minister is a member of a government that seems to think it has to tear down everything that has been built up during the past 50 years and remake it, and we are wondering what is next. Will this government take universality away from medicare, hospital insurance and what have you? We think that in our day we should be moving further in the direction of universality, not away from it, and this is why our party has decided that at some point we have to say no. I say to the minister that this is that point. We are saying no, in our amendment, to second reading and we are going to say no by our vote on second reading itself.

As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, I was planning to make a speech today before the minister spoke, but in different vein. It was going to be a speech in which I would appeal to the minister to take this bill back to the drawing board or back to the experts in his department who drew it for him and to do his best to come back here with a reasonable and sensible piece of legislation.

I still think that the minister is a man of some common sense. I remember in particular the way in which we were able to work together when he was a private member and even when he became a parliamentary secretary, particularly in the days of the Canada Pension Plan. There has been a bit of a gulf between us since he became a minister and has all the authority and the power that goes with that, but behind all that I think there is still something in the minister to which one might appeal.

Despite the speech that the minister made this afternoon, which seemed to be one of defending the proposition he has placed before us, I say to him—and the minister referred to this—as one who has been paying attention to income maintenance and social security measures for a long time that this bill is a serious mistake in Canadian social security legislation. Far from his worrying about any disavowal with which he charges us, I would say to him that he and the members of the cabinet to which he belongs, led by the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), are in fact disavowing a position that it has taken the Liberals 50 years to achieve.

Mr. Douglas: "No more of this free stuff", says the Prime Minister.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Not only does he say that, but he says that it is a lot of guff for pensioners to be claiming that they are not getting enough to live on, and so on. Just as the government feels that every other area of government has to be torn apart and put together in some different way, they seem to think that King, St. Laurent, Pearson and the ministers that they had in their day were wrong to the extent that they moved gradually toward the concept of universality in social legislation.

Because this bill is not only opposed to what we have stood for across the years but is also opposed to what the Liberals themselves finally got around to putting on the statute books, we think that we are being true to ourselves, that we are doing a service to the Liberal party and most of all to the people of Canada, by taking a firm stand and saying that this bill in its present form ought not to pass.

I now want to say something about some of the comments made by the minister in his speech, on which I have commended him for its construction and the way he delivered it despite what I think of some of its contents. The minister rose in his seat only 20 feet away from me and said that we were voting against increasing allowances for the poor. I say nonsense, Mr. Speaker, we are not voting against increasing allowances for the poor. We want our people to get even greater allowances than the minister is proposing to assist them in the upbringing of their children. We are voting against the strings that the minister and the Liberals are attaching to the increased allowances provided in this bill.

In the first place, despite all the persuasive language the minister used when he said that this is not a means test but an income test, the fact remains that it is a test to which people must submit themselves. Indeed, it is so far from the simple arrangements that have been in effect under the Family Allowances Act that I still cannot understand why the minister has brought in the bill.

Earlier today while thinking about the speech I intended to make this afternoon, which was to be different from the one I am now making, I went into the files in my office. Actually, I intended to pull out a copy of the original Family Allowances Act which Mr. King brought in in 1944 and to see what else I had in my files. I was amazed to see how simple the bill was—just a few pages, and there it was. But as I looked into my own files I discovered that in the 27 years since that legislation came into effect in 1945 I have not had ten letters from people complaining that they were not getting the right amount or that they were not getting the family allowances to which they were entitled. There were many letters calling for higher allowances, but almost none dealing with administrative errors.

We all know the kind of correspondence that we have been getting recently about unemployment insurance. We all know the kind of correspondence we receive about veterans pensions and allowances. We all know the kind of correspondence we have about problems experienced by our old age pensioners. Yet in a quarter of a century we have had precious little correspondence as members of parliament about family allowances cases because of the very simplicity and directness of the legislation that was brought in in 1944 and which was put into effect in 1945.

Under this bill we have a set of rules and conditions that I defy any member of the House, having read the bill three or four times, to comprehend. Under the old system, if you had a child of a certain age you got a certain allowance and that was it. Under the new rules you have first of all to consider the level of income of the family. During the latter part of his speech the minister made quite a bit about the limits on income for family allowance purposes being not as severe as we think they are. He went on to read off a long list of items. In effect, he was telling us that the definition of income under the family income security plan will be the definition of income used in the Income Tax Act. There might be one or two differences but in the main the definition is the same.

So that is where you start; you have to find out what is your level of income. You then have to face the fact that above a certain point, for every $500 in the family income there will be a difference in entitlement or in the amount of the family allowance. Even within the $500 range we will have to face the fact that every $100 difference in income can mean a difference of 33 cents per month in the amount of the family allowance. Then you will have to consider how many children you have, what their ages are, what happens when they move from one age to another, and so on.

Then there is this very interesting system that has been developed in the bill in which there are extensive references to the benefit year and to the base calendar year. The benefit year starts on September 1 and continues until next August 31. That is the period for which you get your allowance at a fixed amount, except that nothing is really fixed. The amount you will get in that benefit year from September to August in most cases is determined by what your income was in the base calendar year, which is the calendar year that ended eight months before the benefit year began. However, there will be many people, in fact I would say many thousands of people, who will find it difficult to base their claim on that base calendar year which, as I say, ended eight months before the benefit year began.

So there is a possibility of substituting for the base calendar year the current calendar year, but the conditions under which you can make that substitution take several sections to spell out. Then under certain conditions, if you cannot estimate your income for the full amount of the current calendar year you can submit what your average income is for a certain number of these months and multiply it by a certain figure, getting an estimate that will be accepted.

Then there is the whole question of what happens to people when their levels of income change, especially the working people of this country, the people whose wage rates may go up a few cents an hour or who may have a bit of time off, a lay-off, and so on. It does not take very much of a wage increase to amount to $500 a year. You will probably have cases where employees will be wishing the increase were $490 a year instead of $510 because of what it will do to the family allowance.

The point I am making is that the items which will have to be fed into a computer will be legion, and it was the minister himself this afternoon who talked about putting these things into the computer. Any suggestion that it is a simple arrangement, as simple as the guaranteed income supplement—and even the simplicity of that I deny—is inaccurate. It is suggested that this is a lot simpler, but what it means is that you have here a complicated system which will cause the recipients of family income security plan benefits to be completely ignorant of where they stand.

I say to the minister—and this was the kind of thing I intended to say when my speech was being planned, before he made his—that within three years of the time this bill comes into effect some minister of national health and welfare will be coming into this House seeking legislation to change it. Some minister will be coming in saying it is utterly too complicated and too unworkable, that we have to simplify it and go back to a system whereby the amounts are paid out and any recoveries that are to be made are looked after at the end of the year or through the medium of income tax.

When I was talking earlier about all the complications, I forgot to mention the question of recoveries and overpayments. The minister made some reference to these this afternoon. Sprinkled through the legislation—the public will be aware of this and it will have to be in the pamphlets put out—are references to the penalties which can be suffered if one makes a mistake or files a wrong application. So the whole thing, compared to the simple plan we have, is such a hodge-podge of complications that for the minister to stand up here today and say we are making a mountain out of a molehill suggests he has not read the bill. Perhaps I should not say that because I am sure he has read the bill, but I wonder if he has read it, not just with an eye to understanding it as a lawyer and an intelligent person versed in these things but with any attempt to understand what it will mean to the ordinary people of this country.

I come back to what I said at the start of this part of my remarks. I deny completely the minister's suggestion that we are voting against an increase in family allowances. I say we are voting against the strings that are attached to it. One of the most serious strings attached to this whole measure is, indeed, this complicated structure and grotesque array of conditions that people have to meet. This will spoil the legislation. I suggest that within three years—

Mr. Gibson: It is humanitarian.

An hon. Member: Oh, be quiet.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): All I can say to the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. Gibson) is that his father was a smarter man. He was here in 1944 and supported the principle of universality.

An hon. Member: He also knew when to keep quiet.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Gibson: I think it is unfair for my friend to refer to paternity. I would have to be as old as Methuselah to have any knowledge of his father, so I do not think it is a fair comparison.

Mr. Peters: He knew yours, but he sometimes wonders about him now.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I can tell the hon. member, in case he is not aware of it, that his father was not only a member of the House in 1944 who voted for the Family Allowance Act; he was also a member of the King government that brought it in. I hope the hon. member does not feel he has a question of privilege when I say that his father was a smarter man than he is.

I said that our opposition to this bill is not against the increases it contains but against the strings that are attached to it. The second string attached to this bill is the terrible uncertainty which hangs over it as to the amount which people will receive. They will have no idea of that amount, partly because of the complicated structure to which I have made a few references and partly because under the bill it is left to the government to change the amounts any time it wants, or make certain other changes in the legislation.

It is true there is a provision in the bill about the necessity of bringing these things before parliament for one of these affirmative or negative votes, and I am not sure which it is at the moment. The whole question of whether there will be any increase in the amount of the allowances to keep pace with the rise in the cost of living, or to keep pace with other conditions that might make further increases necessary, is not in the hands of parliament but in the hands of the government. It is that kind of uncertainty that we feel is a string which should not be attached to these allowances.

Now, Sir, without following any particular order I come to the string in respect of this bill that bothers me most of all, and it is the reason why I have reached the point where, along with my colleagues, I have to say no. The reason I must say no is that there is a string attached to these increases which makes it necessary that those who get them must wear the badge of poverty. The government can talk all it wants about this being an anti-poverty measure, but the fact of the matter is that in order to get the benefits under this legislation people have to parade, declare and assert their poverty. I say this is no way to get rid of poverty. We have had far too much of this in Canada and in some other western countries, where we make handouts to people because they are poor.

The fact is that we should be providing the means for a decent standard of living for people because they are people, the way in which we did it under the Old Age Security Act, before this government messed it up, and in the way we have been doing it over the years under the Family Allowances Act. But now the government proposes that the allowance to be made available for the support of children is not to be made available because children are children. It is to be made available to those on whom we place the badge of poverty. That is a string we do not accept and that is why we are opposed to this bill in its present form. That is why I think this minister ought to use the common sense he has left and take it back to cabinet and to his research people and ask them to redraw the bill in the simpler terms we have had since 1944.

Another string attached to this proposed increase in family allowances is one that came out in the speech the minister made this afternoon. He says the whole purpose of this approach of the government is to redistribute our social welfare dollars to make sure that they go not to those who do not need them but to those who do. That would be a plausible argument if it were not being made by a government which has done the very opposite. It has done nothing toward redistributing the wealth of this country. In fact, the approach in this bill and in the tax legislation in particular has been one to redistribute the wealth of this country in favour of the wealthy. The minister stands here with all of the charm of which he is capable and says we must not give any advantage to the wealthy. Was he around in this House or in cabinet when the present Minister of National Defence (Mr. Benson) was putting through the income tax legislation last year? Is he not aware that in that bill we gave to the wealthy infinitely more than we are giving to the poor, and infinitely more than we are taking away from the wealthy by taking away their family allowances?

Mr. Munro: We took one million off the tax rolls at the lower levels.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, these people over there think they have done something about poverty. My hon. friend, the minister's colleague, should worry about the poverty of the Indians.

Mr. Chrétien: Yes, and they will also benefit from this legislation.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): My hon. friends over there, both of whom have some experience of poverty in their background and who ought to understand it, seem to think that when they take one million people off the tax rolls, some of whom were paying taxes of $10, $15, or even $100, they are placed in the class of the affluent and suddenly their poverty problems are solved. Merely relieving people of $10, $15 or even $100 a year in taxation does not solve their basic problem of poverty. Giving people an extra $8 or an extra $10 a month per child of itself does not solve the problem of poverty.

I am as sure as I am that I am standing here that if the ministers opposite me this afternoon, the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien), were not here as members of a cabinet with all the power, authority and prestige they have—I see my friend laughing. Does he not have the power, authority and prestige I think he has? If they were just discussing this matter out of the chamber with some of us, out of their social concern, they would agree with me that what is needed in this country is social reform which moves in the direction of greater equality of income, and that we must bring up the incomes of those in the lower brackets and do it substantially. This business of a few dollars in the proposed legislation, or taking one million people off the tax rolls is peanuts and does not solve the problem at all.

Mr. Chrétien: You are voting against it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): My friend says we are voting against it. We are not voting against the increase. We want an even larger increase. We are voting against the strings and against a government which thinks it is doing something for those in the lower brackets when at the same time it has given an increase amounting to tens of thousands of dollars a year to those in the upper brackets through changes in the income tax legislation.

Mr. Chrétien: That is not true.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It is true. Do not ask us to look at these things in isolation. One of the reasons we have this kind of responsible government where the government controls the purse strings, and so on, is to have some integrity about these things and to have them looked at together. The fact is that all these things must be taken together. The increase in old age pensions, what we have done for the veterans and what we have done for the children of families represent a total package. This does not solve the problem of poverty and does not redistribute income. Maybe there is some redistribution. The poverty of the poor is being redistributed because those a little less poor will pay more so that those who are very poor will get a little more. However, those in the upper brackets, because of the changes in the tax bill of last year, get far more.

[Mr. Munro.]

The minister stands up today—I was taking notes a dime a dozen—and says that one of the aims of the government was not to give money to those in the upper brackets and to those who did not need it so that these many millions of dollars could go somewhere else, to those who need it. It does not happen that way. Not giving this family allowance money to those in the middle and upper brackets does not result in more money going to those in the lower brackets. Until the government is prepared to come in with a total package that is deliberately aimed at redistributing the wealth of this country and raising the economic levels of our people so that no group in society is below the poverty line, this kind of legislation should not be put through. It should be taken back to the drawing board and improved so that it is something worth bringing in. The minister said that between four million and five million Canadians are living below the poverty line. What a statement from a Minister of National Health and Welfare of a country producing over $90 billion worth of goods and services, with a population of a little over 20 million people!

Mr. Munro: Why are you voting against the bill?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The minister asks why we are voting against the bill. I have to come back to what I said at the start. He made a well constructed speech with excellent delivery, but he does not seem to have any appreciation of social philosophy and some of the real needs of our time. It is using a popgun against an atomic weapon for the minister to think that the kind of legislation he is bringing in today will do anything at all toward solving the problems of poverty in this country.

Our opposition to this bill is because we want something that will really tackle the problem of poverty. Even an adequate family allowance scheme would not do this, but a family allowance scheme that was simpler than this which paid everyone and in which there was no dividing of people into various groups would go in the right direction. What we need, along with that, is a program of really full employment and adequate social security measures right through the piece. We need programs of housing, urban development and anti-pollution. We do not want to have it said of Canada that it is a country that can produce $90 billion worth of goods and services and yet have four million to five million people, 25 per cent of its population, living below the poverty line.

I said earlier that a number of strings were attached to this piece of legislation and I singled out the one that bothers me most, namely, that these people are called upon to put on the badge of poverty, to advertise it, to assert it. This is really the reason that for all these years some of us have argued for the principle of universality. I am going to be accused of saying things I have said before, things which some of my own colleagues may have said, but I have the floor so here it goes.

I well remember the attitude of the older people toward the pension when it had the means test attached to it. They were ashamed to admit they were drawing the old age pension. That was back in the 1930s and 1940s. I remember equally well the change that came about and how quickly it came about when that means test was taken off, the pension was raised a bit and people could say with pride that they were old age pensioners because everybody was receiving it. There was also the incentive to save something, and the lot of the older people materially improved, not only the economic lot but the attitude toward life.

I can go back in my memory to the golden weddings in the 1930s. There were not many of them and they were not very happy affairs, but in more recent years they have been and I think it is partly because of this attitude that once a certain age is reached everybody should be in the same boat. I think that is equally true about family allowances, and the fact that they have been universal, that the rich and the poor families received them alike, did something for the unity of this country.

Now, Sir, we are being told that that is an election issue. The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) was quoted a few days ago when he was Acting Prime Minister as saying that the real issue in the next election will be Canadian unity. I will not quarrel with that any more than I would quarrel with motherhood, but I say to the Minister of National Health and Welfare that this is not the way to do it. You do not bring the country together, you do not establish unity by dividing the country into the haves and the have-nots, by giving certain social moneys to people because they are poor rather than because they are people and dividing the country in this way.

We will go from bad to worse if we follow this course. We think it was a gross error when the Old Age Security Act was violated, as it was by this government, and part of it was put on a means test, a needs test or an income test basis, and we think that doing that to family allowances will have the same effect. I also think that the tendency will be for the children of families that are on family allowance because of their poverty to be another generation who will also get the family allowance because of their poverty. You perpetuate the very thing which we are trying to abolish.

What really annoys me about this minister, because I think he has enough sense to understand it, is this whole situation of the country being divided and of the divisions being perpetuated. It is the poverty that is here and that stays with certain classes of society that we should be attacking, and this bill, far from attacking this kind of division, this kind of poverty that is perpetuated from one year to another and from one generation to another, will actually increase it. So I still say to the minister, despite the confrontation we are having, despite the vote that may come on our amendments or on the main motion, despite the political challenge which he throws out and which is accepted—if he wants us to debate the issue on the hustings, we are prepared to do so—that he should take this bill back to the people in his department and back to the cabinet.

I wish it had been possible for us to get the original version of the Willard report. I do not know how many versions there were, but we did not see any of them. I hope that some day the records of this government will be open and students of history will be able to go into them and find out how it came about that under the present Prime Minister it was possible to reverse all these trends that we had finally sold to the Liberals across the years.

I believe that if we could really get to the sensible people in the government service—and the Minister of National Health and Welfare has many of them in his department; I am talking about public servants—they would agree that our job is to unite society, not divide it, and the way to do it is not by this kind of bill but by a bill that retains the principle that was in the Family Allowances Act of 1944 and in the Old Age Security Act until the Pearson and then the Trudeau government altered it a few years ago.

Mr. Speaker, I see you getting to your feet. Perhaps I can have a minute or two yet. I am sure the minister will give me five minutes for the ten we gave him.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's time has expired. Is there unanimous consent that the hon. member be permitted to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I thank hon. members and I shall not abuse the courtesy of the House.

We have been arguing that what should be produced is a piece of legislation similar to the one we had in 1944. The minister has put to us the challenge with reference to collecting money from taxes and whether we should follow the principles suggested by the Canadian Council on Social Development. I say to him, yes. There might be some details on which we would differ, but generally the idea of universality and an arrangement whereby in the case of those in the upper bracket the money is taken back in taxation, even to the point of 100 per cent, is infinitely better than this kind of arrangement.

When we drafted our amendment which the hon. member for York South placed before the House, we felt that it was a detail which we need not put into the amendment any more than we need put into it the amounts of the allowance. But we do feel we should get back to the principle of giving family allowance benefits to all families and making up for any excess that gets into the hands of the wealthy by a proper income tax structure. The minister says that we are not prepared to propose that kind of income tax structure. We certainly are, and he knows it. It is his colleagues, the Minister of National Defence and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), who are unwilling to propose the kind of taxation that would get this money back.

The minister said something about the wife getting the allowance and spending it, and then her husband having to pay it back in taxation. That will be up to them, and as a matter of fact I think there would be people who would not apply for the family allowance for that reason, but it would be available to them. You will find that there are many mothers in this country, even in the $7,000, $8,000, $9,000 and $10,000 brackets, who would feel that the rights they have enjoyed since 1944 should be continued, the right to receive that cheque even if the old man has to turn around and pay it back in income tax. I think also that the amounts should be even higher than the $15 and $20 levels proposed in Bill C-170.

The minister keeps telling us, as do other ministers when we advocate increases in the old age pension, that we cannot afford these things. As I have said many times—perhaps my interjections have not always gone on the record—that is what Charlie Dunning said to J. S. Woodsworth when Mr. Woodsworth was advocating a pension of $20 a month. We could not afford it. We could not find the money. The country would go broke. The Senate followed that argument and voted against the first bill. But we found we could pay $20 years ago and a lot more in recent years.

Earlier, Mr. Speaker, I said that things have to be looked at in their totality. What one has to look at is not just the budgets of governments, whether federal or provincial, but the total wealth-producing capacity of the country. That capacity today is producing goods and services in excess of $90 billion and if we had full employment it would be well over $100 billion. What we have to do in this Parliament is decide on a system of priorities. In a country that can produce this much wealth, the first question is how is that wealth to be divided, to be appropriated?

Is it to go into big bank buildings, the profits of large corporations, and that sort of thing? Is it to go into huge incomes, even though there may not be that many of them, that are taxed at only 30 per cent, 35 per cent or 40 per cent? Is it to go into resource industries that pay little or no tax at all, or is this $90 billion to $100 billion to be used to provide a standard of living for all our people that starts with the proposition that in Canada there should not be anybody living below the poverty line?

The minister said that he was surprised we were complaining about an increased bureaucracy because he thinks we want the government to get into all kinds of things. Mr. Speaker, that was just a by-play in that first-rate political speech which he made. And that is what is wrong with him. If he has any social philosophy he should not be sitting over there with the Liberal party. What is wrong with him is his failure to realize that the job of government and the job of parliament is not to touch just a few things in our lives but to cope with this whole question of priorities and to make sure that absolutely the first claim on the wealth we are able to produce is the well-being and the standard of living of our people.

If we are to have any priorities within that general framework, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that they should be for our children and our older people. That is why we want an adequate family allowance program and an adequate social security program. It is why we put such emphasis on health care, on housing, on the things that will give people a standard of living such as they can enjoy and such as the country is able to produce.

So, Mr. Speaker, I hope I have shown the shallowness of the minister's attempt, in that speech of his that was excellent in its construction, to say that we are voting against something for the poor. Really, John, how could you say that? I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but really how could the Minister of National Health and Welfare say that of us?

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

Mr. Munro: I would like to know what went on in your caucus.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The minister says he would like to know what went on in our caucus. I wish he had been there. He would have learned a few things.

Mr. Munro: I would like to know why you made the switch not to approve the bill on second reading.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I can tell the minister that there is another former Liberal who will be in our caucus next time, and she will enjoy it. What has to be realized is that it is possible for government to cope with this problem. It does not lie with the minister to say, as he tried to say today, that we are opposed to increased allowances for those at the bottom of the scale. We want family allowances to be increased even more than the minister proposes in this bill, but we want no strings attached.

We want unity, the kind of unity that comes from providing a decent standard of living for all our people. We believe this can be done. The time has come to say no to this regressive and restrictive measure. The time has come to strike out for a decent standard of living for all the people of this country.

[Translation]

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I have already had the opportunity of expressing my views on Bill C-170. I would like however to make certain comments regarding the amendment before us which aims at postponing the consideration of the bill.

I have no hesitation about repeating my support of the bill which, I think, sets a commendable, justifiable and very advisable objective.

I have listened with a great deal of attention to the speech of the member of the New Democratic Party who has mainly outlined the birth of the Family Allowances Act in 1944. I should like to seize this opportunity to suggest to him that, for almost 30 years, many changes have been brought, and if today this government saw fit to bring major changes, I think that this is justified, considering the changes, of course, that we have had over the past 30 years.

I would also add, for instance, that I have read certain comments, among others those of the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall) who did not hesitate yesterday to say that the debate has already been extended, and that this delay affects millions of Canadians. I think he is perfectly right, if there is a genuine desire to assist, not only those who are in need, but also the whole population of Canada.

I was very interested to hear from the minister that 11 per cent of Canadian workers earn over $10,000. This means that the bill before us is geared directly to the have-nots and I feel that any comparisons we can make between the principle of universality and that of selectivity lead us to believe that the bill aims at giving more to those who really need it.

I fail to understand those who are supporting the principle of universality, according to which no change should be made to the present system. It is evident that the purpose is to narrow the gap between rich and poor and I, as representative of a population which also includes a percentage of poverty, feel it is my duty to defend not the government's position, but those people who are in the greatest need, which, after all, is mere common sense.

Of course I have on occasion not seen eye to eye with the government or certain colleagues. I believe what matters is to support sensible policies regarding the common welfare. I feel in duty bound to support the legislation right away and I invite other hon. members to expedite the matter so that those who have been waiting so long for these changes may benefit by them as early as possible.

I read the speech of the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Latulippe). He was in the House for quite awhile this afternoon. I regret that he is gone. I was very surprised to read, for instance, such stupid statements as he made yesterday when he mentioned that the government was more interested in subsidizing piglets which definitely belong to producers than in concerning itself with children. And he stated that the government had initiated a policy guaranteeing $5 per piglet, which is completely false. No grant is paid unreservedly to piglet producers. Everybody knows that the government has provided a $5 grant for hogs and that such a grant is limited to 200 hogs per producer.

I also note that he stated at a certain moment and I quote:

—50 per cent of the population is unemployed—

And he added later on:

Nearly 35 per cent of our population is now unemployed—

Such statements are nothing short of stupid and I wonder how a member of the Social Credit who often advocates redistribution of wealth from the rich to the poor can put forward such arguments and reject such a legislation which, in my opinion, is precisely aimed at providing increased benefits to the needy.

Mr. Speaker, now that election rumours are flying, each member is tempted to add a dash of electioneering spice to his comments and thus I ask myself how can we serve the community when we raise partisan issues.

As for that redistribution which the Creditists are so eager to carry out, such is the object of the bill now under consideration. As for the amendment, it is aimed at further delaying passage of the bill. On the contrary, I think that it is urgent to pass it, considering that the legislation has remained unchanged for almost 30 years.

However, I cannot say that this bill is absolutely perfect, but even if it has some defects it is better to pass it as soon as possible than to do nothing at all.

Some members say that those who are opposed to this measure will vote against the poor. It is too easy to argue that way if one considers the complexity of this bill, the difficulties that might be ahead for those who will be allowed to take advantage of it and it does not seem to me that those arguments may justify the rejection of this bill.

It is very easy to criticize and to make people think that this measure will be a mystery to them. I do not think that these arguments will convince people to refuse these very useful increases. It is clear that the families who need it most will definitely be protected under this legislation.

As members of parliament with a responsibility to society, we cannot but support this legislation. This does not mean that members of the House must remain quiet and accept it without saying a word. It is very desirable that each member express his concerns about this bill, but I cannot understand why anyone can object to legislation to assist a group of people in need. No member in this House can disprove this.

But to return to the election climate, we may be tempted by electioneering—as a matter of fact we have seen nothing else in this House for nearly a month—but I wonder to what extent, by so doing, we are serving the best interests of our society. Have we forgotten our duty?

The previous speaker, a representative of the New Democratic Party, mentioned the duty of the government and indeed of each and every one of the hon. members. When people talk about the Canadian government, they refer to those wise men who are responsible for the administration of this country's business. I assume that those who can hear the arguments of hon. members will realize their lack of interest in the collective good.

I know that according to our traditions, it is the role of the opposition to criticize the government. This is what members of the present government were doing when they were in the opposition. In my opinion, the Canadians have well understood this game of the system and this is why they have ceased to put their trust in parliamentary members who are indulging in this practice. In fact, this practice leads members to show greater concern for their political aims than for the well being of the people.

I am making these remarks because I share the feelings of those who are deeply disappointed at the attitude taken by certain members, merely bringing up arguments that will serve their political ambitions when, as we all know, more than a million families are waiting for this legislation that will enable them to get a supplementary income, long awaited and precious to them.

To what extent are we aware of this responsibility? When will the people be able to receive assistance from their representatives in the House, and that in a positive and objective fashion? Should we consider making some changes in the system, which would probably allow hon. members to express themselves more freely? We all know that there are awkward party policies. I never hesitated to say publicly that the party line often involves the conscience and the freedom of the member. But if these views are shared by some, I believe it is high time that certain changes be made in order that hon. members who support legislation that makes any sense at all may be able to do so without getting into any trouble.

Finally, I believe that the Canadian people want representatives who will defend a policy of good sense, representatives who will definitely show good sense in the interest of the community.

I say this because of some very favourable comments I made with regard to the legislation. An hon. member, whether he be in the opposition or on the government side, must play a part in the interest of society. And, as long as the people's representatives are satisfied with making comments in order to delay the passage of a bill, to embarrass the government, or to make its work difficult they will continue to lose the confidence of the people and to serve the people badly.

In my opinion, the purpose of this bill is laudable, for it is designed to help those who most need it, and I do not think this can be denied. Of course, some provisions are disputable, some calculations need to be reconsidered, and I trust that at the committee stage some changes can be made to improve the bill. However, to oppose this bill designed to give more to those who most need it is, I feel, to be dishonest towards the class of needy people.

In my opinion, we should stop and think about this. If we consider this possibility, I do not think that arguments as stupid and weak as have been put forward hold. Any change involves difficulties.

But, Mr. Speaker, should we do nothing just because there are difficulties involved? I think we should be braver and more optimistic than some members are—and I want to say again that I am not talking in this way to try and save the government. I do not care whether the government is right or wrong; what matters to me is that it is introducing legislation which makes sense and which could help a class of people who really need it—and I am convinced that this legislation offers real advantages for those who most need help.

I feel, therefore, that we must be objective enough in our comments designed to improve the bill—but let us not try and unduly delay passing of this bill by proposing amendments which simply ask that consideration of the bill be deferred for an indefinite period, when we know very well that large families have for years been in neeed of an increase in family allowances.

Some members use arguments put forward in 1944 in favour of a universal system. This is the way the present family allowance system was conceived of at the time of its introduction. It was agreed to. I believe that those who introduced it 30 years ago were very clever people; that legislation was quite valuable and useful since it was accepted. However, taking into account the changes involved in the present context, where we admit that a number of people belong to the poverty group, we must act. Now, the government is introducing legislation designed precisely to give a little more to the group including the neediest people, and in that respect we are confronted with absurd and weak arguments probably prompted by election fever. I trust that the Canadian people who are closely following the progress of this legislation will not be influenced by such weak arguments since we know perfectly well that the requests of the less fortunate people are much more important than any possible electoral campaigning.

I shall end on these words: indeed, when shall we consider honestly enough the interests of the community? Indeed, when will we manage to behave as businessmen in the administration of the country, since its administration is our responsibility? Indeed, when shall we prove objective enough in this Parliament to get over partisanship in order to grant to millions of people the increased benefits they are expecting?

I would like to think that these few comments will not be interpreted as a mere expression of support for a party. On the contrary, I am making them in the belief that this is my responsibility. If certain governmental measures were wrong, I would not hesitate to convey my opinions to the government. But since I believe that this legislation aims at rectifying a situation that can no longer be tolerated, I think it is my duty, as a member for a riding which has its own share of poor people, to deal with this matter.

This legislation will put a label on a certain category of people, those in need, who are going to be so constrained as to end up begging for their allowances. I am sorry that we should be compelled in the present circumstances to create those distinctions. However, I believe it is better still to implement this legislation as soon as possible. This does not mean that the government should fold its arms and do nothing for the next thirty years.

On the contrary, I think that this legislation should be implemented as soon as possible so long as the government does not entertain the belief that he has nothing more to do to try and find new formulas that will improve it.

Thus, Mr. Speaker, I hope that we will soon proceed with the study of this bill in committee and finally reach this third reading stage, in order that those who are most in need could benefit still more of a legislation that will have been passed by responsible people in Parliament.

[English]

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I could not help noting the remark of the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) when he suggested that although he regretted the fact that this bill provides selectivity, we should pass it. He said it is time we stopped thinking of what is contained in the bill, sent it to committee and passed it in the House so that those affected will know what is in it.

I am sure that anyone who does not belong to a political party which has a philosophy has no real concern about what happens in the House of Commons. People talk about political opportunists. The hon. member is in that category. He talked about sending this bill to committee in order for it to be improved. From his experience I am sure he realizes what little chance there is to do anything in committee when we have a government that is completely insensitive to the rights of Canadians.

In answer to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro), the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) made it very clear that we are not voting against the payment of $15 or $20 but against the type of administrative nightmare that will be created if this bill is passed in its present form. We listened to the minister. He said that something must be done to alleviate the situation now faced by people in the low income bracket. We agree that something must be done. However, when the minister talks about so-called vertical redistribution—I think that is the phrase—on a selective basis, that is not acceptable to the New Democratic Party nor is it acceptable to the majority of Canadians. If the minister and the government would like to test the electorate on this issue and use it as something on which to go to the people, we are willing to withstand any type of criticism they may suggest with regard to our opposition to this bill. It has been said, and I think it bears repeating, that the type of bill we have before us indicates that the minister is not prepared to accept this type of assumption. It is a cruel hoax on the people of this country; it will divide our society as it has never been divided; our society will be divided into haves and have-nots.

The minister spoke about old age pensioners not being affected by this type of means test. He is not in touch with the people of this country. He cannot be reading his mail. The people of Canada do not like to be put on a selective basis. As the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre stated, the bill introduced within the last two years was a type of omnibus bill; you had to vote for it in order for some people to receive benefits. However, the selectivity part of this bill is not needed and we have no intention of supporting that proposition.

The minister asked why we did not look at the issues when the previous bill was before us. He said they were essentially the same. So far in this House we have seen a game of musical chairs. When one minister gets into some trouble, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) appoints another minister to that portfolio. We never know what type of legislation will be introduced until second reading stage. This can happen with any legislation the Liberal government introduces into the House.

We thought that Liberal philosophy was somewhat concerned with the people of Canada but we have found it is no different from Conservative philosophy in so far as concerns recognition of the rights of the individual. It is time the people of this country realized there is not much difference between the Conservatives and the Liberals. This bill is a good indication of that fact.

About two years ago Canada had two major social security programs, the old age security and the family allowances programs. These programs were supposed to be universal in character, a right of the individual with no type of means test. It was ably brought out this afternoon that the old age security legislation providing for the 42-cent increase violated the principle of universal coverage. We now see that the bill before us is based on a means test. Payments are not universal; they will not be made as a matter of right. Surely the minister can appreciate the argument that these two pieces of legislation should be universal in their application rather than selective.

The government has abandoned the principle of universality and entered into the dark, suspicious, degrading, double-standard area of selectivity. There is no escaping the fact that under selectivity where will be a double standard, a degrading, suspicious area in which people will be assessed and documented in a computerized society. They will be subject to a means test, and there is really no need for such a test to be applied. We do not need to perpetuate a society composed of haves and have-nots, yet this is exactly what the legislation would do. A means test in this context is not only objectionable in itself; it is objectionable because it is burdensome in terms of administration. Many speakers on this side of the House have described the bureaucratic set-up which is involved, the administrative confusion which this bill will bring about.

As an illustration of the government's misguided thinking, let me refer to the attempt which is being made to deal with the problem of regional disparity. On one hand the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) is trying to insist on regional rates of pay in his negotiations with the Public Service Alliance; on the other hand the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) is spending millions of dollars trying to bring about a situation designed to eliminate regional disparities. In effect, the President of the Treasury Board is following the same principle as is contained in the bill before us. I use this as an analogy, one which throws light on this bill.

On one hand the government professes to abhor discrimination, but they are still applying discrimination between groups in the public service, on a geographical basis. A similar situation arises with respect to Bill C-170 where discrimination from now on will be shown when dealing with people who formerly were entitled as of right to the benefits of this legislation.

Even though there has been a rise in the cost of living amounting to 230 per cent since 1945, we could probably accept the minister's figures of $15 and $20 if these payments were distributed in the way they should be distributed. The minister says the bill is designed to rid the country of pockets of poverty. Will this, indeed, be the result or will it create a situation in which certain people are forced into a category from which they cannot escape?

I smile when I hear the Minister of National Health and Welfare say that people are not really concerned about knowing who receives what cheque or in what amount. I am sure he realizes that they are concerned about that, and to pretend otherwise is nonsense. We have all heard about the computerized society. I suppose many of us have read the book entitled "Future Shock." We know that today people are wondering exactly where they are going. They are beginning to realize that the system under which we are operating is a complete shambles. They realize they are becoming just numbers fed into a computer. They are faced with decisions of increasing complexity and are wondering how they can get out.

I understand that copies of the proposed new 1972 income tax return have been sent out to certain accountants for their observations and comments. I also understand that the 1972 tax return is red tape personified. There is no question that if one couples Bill C-170 with the 1972 income tax return, the only way in which those concerned will be able to work out what benefits they are entitled to receive will be to hire an accountant or a lawyer. If we suggest the principle of universal coverage and adopt the amendment which our party has introduced, we can at least escape the consequences of some of the rhetoric the minister has been using. As it is, the government appears to be showing no real concern for social justice or the equitable distribution of income in accordance with the social needs of our people. If time were available, I am sure we could continue for a long time giving examples of what the government has done and has failed to do in this area.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Six o'clock.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, may I ask someone on the government side whether we can assume that if a certain event does not take place during our weekly night off we shall be continuing the debate on this legislation tomorrow.

Mr. Deachman: I understand we shall be continuing debate on this bill tomorrow.

At 6 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, April 27, 1972

The House met at 2 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. LAFLAMME—PROCEEDINGS IN PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS COMMITTEE

Mr. Ovide Laflamme (Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, I take the first opportunity to raise a question of privilege, as an hon. member and as chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The House will recall that under an order of reference dated March 14 allegations concerning wiretapping and opening of mail of members of this House were referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, of which I am chairman.

Further to this order of reference, Mr. Speaker, the committee held three meetings. Furthermore, the subcommittee on procedure made rulings and recommendations which were approved by all those present.

I now come to my question of privilege which is, in my opinion, a major one. Following the recommendations submitted by the subcommittee on procedure and approved by the committee, four of our colleagues had been invited to appear before the committee.

One of them, actually the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) who preferred not to appear before the committee, sent me, after this morning's sitting, a letter accusing me, as chairman of the committee, as bias—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I admit that the hon. member is coming to his question of privilege. However, I wonder whether he has taken into account the provisions of the Standing Order, whereby an hon. member should give the Chair written notice one hour in advance of his intention to raise a question of privilege.

Of course, when the question arises from proceedings in the House, no prior notice is required.

• (1410)

The hon. member should, I suggest, consider giving notice in writing after which the question of privilege could be raised by him in due course, either later today or tomorrow.

Mr. Laflamme: Mr. Speaker, I would respectfully suggest that the question of privilege, concerning me and the letter to which I refer was not at all considered by me as giving rise to a question of privilege.

Nevertheless, it is only a few minutes before the House met and some time after the letter was sent to me that I became aware—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I really feel it would be quite difficult for the Chair to consider the question of privilege now unless the specific provision of the Standing Order to which I referred, had been respected, i.e. that one hour's prior notice had been given to the Chair.

APPOINTMENT OF JEAN-LOUIS GAGNON AS AMBASSADOR TO UNESCO—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 43 I seek the unanimous consent of the House to move the following motion, seconded by the hon. member for Lambton-Kent (Mr. McCutcheon):

In view of the uncertainty and discredit that exists in Information Canada, this Canadian House of Commons regrets the appointment of the Director General of that department, Jean-Louis Gagnon, as ambassador to UNESCO in Paris before a full exoneration of his responsibilities.

Mr. Speaker: I have some doubts as to the acceptability of the hon. member's motion. It is in the form of a charge against a high official of the government. I may be wrong in my interpretation of the motion, and the hon. member is indicating by his reaction that my interpretation of his motion may be wrong. Perhaps it might be easier to put the motion. Hon. members know the procedure regarding accusations, charges or allegations made respecting senior officials of the government. The hon. member indicates that that is not the essence or the interpretation of the motion and I will therefore put it. The House has heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster. The motion is proposed under the terms of Standing Order 43 and requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity. The motion cannot be put.

REFERENCE OF ECONOMIC REVIEW TO COMMITTEE—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I rise to move a motion under Standing Order 43. My statement of explanation of this motion is very brief. The motion is made necessary by the fact that the Minister of Finance tabled on Tuesday a document entitled "Economic Review" which in the past preceded a budget so that its contents could be analysed and debated during the debate on the budget. This time that may not be possible because so far the minister has not indicated an intention to present a budget. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That the document entitled "Economic Review" tabled by the Minister of Finance on Tuesday, April 25, be referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs for study and report to the House.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for York South under the terms of Standing Order 43. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity and the motion cannot be put.

TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS

On the order: Motions.

Mr. Skoberg:

That the First Report of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, presented to the House on Thursday, March 16, 1972, be concurred in.

He said: Mr. Speaker, if I may have unanimous consent to withdraw this motion I should like to do so. After all, the dates for the hearings in southwestern Ontario expired earlier in April and the motion will serve no useful purpose at this time.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the hon. member to withdraw his motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

[Mr. Speaker.]

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

POWER

EFFECTS OF JAMES BAY HYDROELECTRIC PROJECT

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I rise to move under Standing Order 26 that the House do now adjourn for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration. The particular matter concerns the federal involvement in the James Bay hydroelectric development project of the province of Quebec and particularly (a) interference with and relocation of Indians; (b) altering the course of navigable waters protected under the Navigable Waters Protection Act, and (c) effects upon the total Canadian environment.

If leave is given, Mr. Speaker, I propose to move the foregoing motion.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka has given the Chair the notice required by Standing Order 26 which has provided the Chair with an opportunity to give serious consideration to the hon. member's proposed motion.

The Standing Order sets out criteria which have to be taken into account in determining whether such a motion can be put. Specifically, the motion must relate to an important matter requiring urgent consideration. The numerous questions asked yesterday and during the last few days by members on both sides of the House, and the information given by the minister in reply to those inquiries, indicate that in the view of many members the problem is one which does require urgent consideration. Whether there might be some other opportunity for debate at an early date is difficult for the Chair to determine, particularly in light of current circumstances.

While I am not absolutely convinced that all the requirements of section 16 of the Standing Order have been met, because of the obvious importance of the matter and the equally obvious interest of so many members I am inclined to give the hon. member the benefit of the doubt. While I am disposed to grant the motion, I have to take into account the relative importance and urgency of the business which the government has called for consideration later today. The rules give the Chair some discretion in the timing of a debate under the Standing Order. I propose, therefore, to have consultations later and announce before five o'clock whether the debate should take place this evening at eight or tomorrow at two o'clock in the afternoon.

Subject to this reservation, the Chair will inquire whether the hon. member has leave to put this motion.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to section 9 of the Standing Order, the proposed motion will stand until either later today or tomorrow.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

HOUSE OF COMMONS

REQUEST FOR CATEGORICAL STATEMENT ON DATE OF GENERAL ELECTION—GOVERNMENT LEGISLATIVE PRIORITIES PRIOR TO DISSOLVING OF PARLIAMENT

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister. As a result of the uncertainty which prevails in the country because of the cat-and-mouse game which the Prime Minister is playing by inflaming the four-year election itch, will the hon. gentleman consult with the Prime Minister as to making a categorical statement concerning the date when a general election will be held in this country?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, a general election has to be held before our term here expires. Other than that, of course it is a well known prerogative of the Prime Minister to call an election when it is in the public interest to do so.

Mr. Baldwin: As, allowing for budget and supply days, there are only 28 days for debate on government measures before the end of June, is it the policy of the government to announce its priorities and intentions as to the legislation it wishes to have completed before this parliament ends so that the uncertainty in the country may be at least in part dissipated?

Mr. Sharp: Yes, the government has certain priorities. These will appear in the next few days and I am sure will clarify all the doubts that may be in the hon. gentleman's mind.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, in light of the fact that the government has brought in less than two-thirds of its announced legislation in the last two sessions and the record for this session is even worse, will the government, with the assistance of the opposition, try to improve upon this appalling and atrocious record of incompetence and indecision?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That question, of course, is not in order.

EXPECTED DATE OF PRESENTATION OF BUDGET

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Finance whether the list of priorities the government has for its legislation includes any budgetary measures, including a budget debate?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I expect to present a budget in the House on the evening of Monday May 8.

Mr. Baldwin: You got smoked out. It took a lot of pushing.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION OF STATEMENTS IN ECONOMIC REVIEW RESPECTING PRODUCTIVITY AND CAPITAL INVESTMENT AND COMPARISON OF UNEMPLOYMENT FIGURES

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether or not the minister's expectation will be realized but that remains to be seen. He is keeping a very straight face. I should like to ask the Minister of Finance some questions which I hope you will permit, Mr. Speaker, arising out of the economic survey he tabled last Tuesday. First would he inform the House on what basis he states in his one and half page sketch of prospects for 1972, the shortest chapter in the book, that he expects productivity to go down in 1970 while in the same brief sketch on the preceding page he expects capital investment to be mainly in machinery and equipment usually acquired to improve productivity?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Well, Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the hon. member would now be patient and wait until the early days of May.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, apparently the answer has not yet been prepared for the minister. May I ask him—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Lewis: May I ask him a supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is recognized for the purpose of asking a supplementary question.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Finance the following question. In view of the fact that Table 8 on page 48 indicates that government revenue and expenditure for all levels of government showed a surplus of more than $900 million in 1971 and almost $1,300 million in 1970, would the minister inform the House what he meant by the statement on page 47 of that document that these figures showed—I am using his words—a "cumulative movement toward deficit"?

Mr. Speaker: I have very serious doubts regarding the acceptability of a question of this kind. It obviously invites debate rather than seeking information. I would think that normally the minister, if he were expected to answer a question of this kind, should do so by way of a statement on motions or under other circumstances.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I will try asking another supplementary question. This question arises out of tables dealing with unemployment in the document to which I have referred. Can the minister inform the House why he chose 1969 as the base year with which to compare present unemployment in view of the fact that in 1969 unemployment was 4.7 per cent, and does this mean that the government considers 4.7 per cent as an acceptable level of unemployment?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, it does not at all. Surely these points are debating points that could be dealt with in the budget debate.

Inquiries of the Ministry

PROVINCIAL BORROWINGS IN UNITED STATES—STEPS TO LOWER CANADIAN INTEREST RATES

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question to the minister arises out of his Economic Review. In view of the fact it shows that the increase in jobs arising out of manufacturing has been only 5.5 per cent since 1967 compared with 26.6 per cent in 1961 to 1966, is the minister proposing to introduce any measures that will stimulate the manufacturing sector in order to produce jobs rather than the major concessions that have been made to the extraction industries which have provided relatively few jobs?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Again I suggest to the hon. member that the considerations I have indicated as applying to the supplementary questions asked by the hon. member for York South apply to the question asked by the hon. member now. It seems to me that all this information should normally be given by way of a statement.

Mr. Douglas: May I ask the minister a very simple question. In view of the fact the province of Ontario is now borrowing $100 million in the United States market and several other provinces have been forced to go to that market in spite of the admonition issued to them by the minister's predecessor, and in view of the fact this is because interest rates are higher in Canada than in the United States, is the minister proposing to take any steps through the Bank of Canada or by consultation with the banks and finance companies to lower interest rates in Canada as has been done in the United States?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the request of my predecessor to the provinces and municipalities to seek their requirements in the Canadian market where possible was repeated by me when I was at the federal-provincial meeting of finance ministers in Jasper. Both the province of Ontario and the province of Quebec particularly have been keeping in close touch with me and the Bank of Canada regarding their borrowing requirements, and we have again impressed upon them the advisability, if they can, of seeking accommodation in the Canadian market.

As for the second part of the question, I am of course in regular touch with the governor of the Bank of Canada and I am watching interest rates.

REAL GROWTH RATE PROJECTION OF DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE—RATE INDICATED BY ECONOMIC COUNCIL AS NECESSARY FOR FULL EMPLOYMENT

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should point out in all fairness that my question is not supplementary to the last question but rather—

Mr. Speaker: In that case, perhaps I might recognize the hon. member in a short while. For the moment, the Chair in fairness should recognize the hon. member for Shefford if his question is supplementary—the hon. member for Hamilton West.

Mr. Alexander: With further reference to the Economic Review tabled by the government, the following statement appears therein:

[Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton).]

It is expected that real growth will continue to surpass its trend rate through 1972.

• (1430)

Can the minister inform the House whether he is aware of the specific real growth rate projection of the Department of Finance and, if so, would he kindly tell the House what it is?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, that might be one of the matters I should properly deal with on the night of May 8.

Mr. Baldwin: You will be pretty busy that night.

Mr. Alexander: Let us see if we can try this another way, Mr. Speaker. As I understand it, the Economic Council has indicated that we require an annual real growth rate of between 6½ per cent and 7 per cent to get unemployment down to around full employment by 1975. Do the minister and his department accept that proposition handed down by the Economic Council of Canada?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): That is a forecast of medium and long-term growth, Mr. Speaker, and certainly we pay a great deal of attention to the Economic Council of Canada. I shall say more about it on budget night.

GOVERNMENT POSITION RESPECTING UNEMPLOYMENT AMONG YOUNG AND SINGLE PEOPLE

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. With reference to the appendix in the Economic Review entitled "Some Facts About The Unemployed", could the minister explain the rationale behind the table seeking to show that only about one-third of the unemployed are heads of families, and similar information? Does this mean the government considers that unemployment among unmarried and young Canadians is socially less serious?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Again I have very serious reservations about a question of this nature at this time.

SUGGESTED ACTION TO STABILIZE CANADIAN DOLLAR BELOW PAR

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the present value of the American dollar vis-à-vis the Canadian dollar, is the minister taking any direct action or using his good offices to try to make arrangements to stabilize our dollar somewhere below par?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I cannot say any more at this stage except that I am watching the exchange rate very closely.

Mr. Nesbitt: Is the minister aware of the problems this is creating for a great many secondary industries in Canada, particularly those engaged in the manufacture of automobile parts?

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

DELAY IN PAYMENT OF BENEFITS TO CANADIANS WORKING IN UNITED STATES—CO-OPERATION BETWEEN CANADIAN AND AMERICAN AUTHORITIES

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Labour.

Since Canadians working in the U.S. are experiencing difficulties in getting their unemployment insurance benefits, would the minister say whether the officials of the Canadian unemployment insurance offices are getting excellent co-operation from those of the various American states in order to solve this problem?

FLOODS

CARROT RIVER, SASKATCHEWAN—POSSIBLE DECLARATION AS DISASTER AREA AND OPENING OF SPECIAL QUOTAS FOR GRAIN FARMERS

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question to direct to the Minister of Agriculture but in his absence I will direct it to the acting minister. As a result of the flooding of the Carrot River and the very severe damage reported in the area, are on-the-spot inspections being carried out by someone from the department, or by the minister who is on a pilgrimage to the west and perhaps could be diverted to observe the area personally, with a view to declaring it a disaster area so that federal assistance might be given to the people affected?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if I understand the matter aright, the question of whether the federal government should give assistance in such cases depends upon whether the province asks for assistance in dealing with an emergency. I understand that the provincial co-ordinator under the Emergency Measures Organization is on the spot and that we will have a report soon.

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the minister responsible for the Wheat Board. If the reports indicate that the severe flooding has damaged grain in storage, would the minister consider the possibility of opening up special quotas for the people affected in order to salvage whatever grain may already be partially damaged by allowing them to make special deliveries?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member should know that this is a matter within the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board, but I will certainly bring it to their attention. In previous cases they have taken such action.

YOUTH

ACTION ON TASK FORCE RECOMMENDATIONS—REFERENCE OF REPORT TO COMMITTEE—SUCCESS OF INDUSTRIAL REFERRAL GROUP RESPECTING OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROJECTS

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State. With regard to the task force report on youth which was tabled almost a year ago and dealing as it does with recreational, social and manpower policies with respect to young Canadians, can the minister indicate any progress on the recommendations in the report, and when we may expect legislation or some action of another nature?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, this question is under consideration by certain government committees and I am in no position to say today when the government will be prepared to state its position concerning this report.

[English]

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): In view of the importance of the recommendations and the length of time since they were published, is the minister prepared to have the report referred to a standing committee of the House so that the report and its recommendations may be examined before any legislation or policies are enunciated by the government?

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, I am not opposed to the consideration of that report by a standing committee of the House, if such a committee wishes to do so.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Perhaps we might try to terminate this subject and allow the hon. member for Egmont to ask another supplementary. Then the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I direct this question to the Secretary of State. With regard to the series of questions I have asked in the past few weeks with respect to the present employment situation of young people and the final approval of roughly 3,000 Opportunities for Youth projects, can the minister indicate today or in the near future the success of the industrial referral group with some 16,000 projects that will not be funded under OFY and the number that might be picked up by the private sector or other levels of government?

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, I think I should be able to give the hon. member an answer in this respect within two or three weeks.

TRADE

AUTO PARTS—ALLEGED INHIBITING OF EXPORTS TO UNITED STATES BY STRICT ENFORCEMENT OF U.S. CUSTOMS REGULATIONS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the fact the minister denied the accuracy of a suggestion I made a few weeks ago about the strict enforcement of customs regulations by United States customs officials, in terms of inhibiting the export of Canadian automotive parts to the United States, and in view of the further fact that yesterday in Windsor the executive vice-president of the Canadian Automotive Parts Manufacturers' Association, Mr. Wood, stated, "the enforcement of these procedures is inhibiting purchases of automotive parts from Canada," I wonder whether the minister is now in a position to comment on this situation? Are American officials or are they not inhibiting the export of Canadian automotive parts to the United States by work to rule or overzealous enforcement of the tariff regulations of that country?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I stand behind what I said at the time. A further investigation was carried out more recently into that subject, which again confirmed what I said in the House at the time. I will consult with Mr. Wood and ask precisely what he has in mind and report to the hon. member accordingly.

Mr. Broadbent: Would the minister also consult with Mr. Wood concerning his contention that American parent firms of Canadian subsidiaries in the auto parts sector of the industry are apparently putting pressure of some sort on the Canadian subsidiaries to restrict them from gaining access to export markets for this industry?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I like the use of the word "apparent". The hon. member is becoming more cautious in his questions nowadays. We checked sometime ago on that particular issue of whether some pressure was being exercised on them and the report proved to be not well-founded. On the general situation of the auto parts industry my information from well informed sources is that the industry is witnessing a very good trend at the moment, as good as last year but not as good as next year if forecasts of automobile purchases prove to be true.

FAMILY ALLOWANCES—AGREEMENT BETWEEN OTTAWA AND QUEBEC—EXERCISE OF LEGISLATIVE POWER BY PROVINCES

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Recently, the Premier of Quebec announced that this government and the government of Ottawa were prepared to sign an agreement concerning family allowances. I would like to know whether in that agreement the federal government has recognized Quebec's primacy as far as family allowances are concerned.

[English]

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the arrangement has not dealt with the concept of primacy or otherwise. It has been a co-operative endeavour to reconcile the priorities that Quebec feels it has under the family allowance structure with the main thrust of the federal legislation. I am very hopeful that the agreement will be concluded shortly.

[Translation]

Mr. Asselin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a supplementary.

Could the minister tell the House whether provinces other than Quebec want to avail themselves of the privilege that will be granted to Quebec in relation to family allowances?

Mr. Munro: No, Mr. Speaker. No other province has specifically indicated yet that it intends to take advantage of the option. Some are looking at it and studying it but they have not come to any firm conclusions.

DOMINION AVIATION—REASON FOR DELAY IN DECISION ON DEVELOPMENT GRANT

Mr. H. W. Since this company has resubmitted its application by government request, can the minister indicate why there has been a further six-weeks delay in reaching a decision?

TRANSPORT COMMISSION STUDY OF BELL CANADA STRUCTURE—SUGGESTED DEFERMENT OF COMPANY RATE INCREASE APPLICATIONS

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): I have a question for the Minister of Communications, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister aware of the statement made by his counterpart in Ontario who indicated that there would be a federal inquiry by the Canadian Transport Commission into the Bell structure? If this has been set up, when are the hearings going to be held?

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, some weeks ago the Canadian Transport Commission announced a study somewhat along the lines mentioned by the Ontario minister. I think the details of it are of public record.

Mr. Peters: Would the minister, who is responsible for that section of the Canadian Transport Commission's decisions that affect communications, give consideration to delaying the two or three applications that Bell now has before the commission for rate increases until this inquiry is conducted?

Mr. Stanbury: I might, Mr. Speaker, except that the minister does not have authority to delay any such consideration.

Mr. Peters: May I ask the minister, who represents members of parliament in dealing with the commission, whether he will convey to the commission the request made in Ontario and the request being made now by members of parliament to have these rate increases delayed until the conclusion of that inquiry?

Mr. Stanbury: Mr. Speaker, I think it should be clear, unless I am mistaken, that the minister in Ontario did not request a delay in any consideration of existing applications, but I will be glad to convey the suggestion of the hon. member to the chairman of the CTC.

BELL CANADA RATES FOR PRIVATE LINE CONSTRUCTION

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. When the minister is making this inquiry would he also inquire into Bell rates for private line construction to customers who have to build lines under the supervision of Bell?

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister of Communications): Again, Mr. Speaker, this comes under the authority of the Canadian Transport Commission. The authority was given to them by parliament. I would be glad to draw the hon. member's inquiry to the attention of the chairman of the CTC.

FEDERAL ASSISTANCE FOR REHABILITATION OF HOMES

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs.

Would the minister indicate whether the statement published in the Globe and Mail of April 11 is correct concerning loans and grants for house renovation by the federal government?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member knows that he cannot ask the minister to say whether a statement published in the press is correct. Perhaps the question could be considered as having been put directly to the minister and the minister may reply to the hon. member for Compton if he wishes.

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggested that the minister might answer the first question. The hon. member can put his supplementary when the minister has done so.

[English]

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Well, Mr. Speaker, the question, put directly, was answered directly and fully last Tuesday. Proposals have been submitted for discussion purposes to the provinces relating to a number of areas of the National Housing Act and we are consulting with them for the purpose of developing a legislative policy which will be introduced in the House.

[Translation]

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question.

Would the minister tell us whether it is also true that federal funds will be allotted municipal projects in the form of bonds instead of mortgages?

HEALTH

SUMMER OPERATION OF MEDICAL SCHOOLS TO OFFSET SHORTAGE OF DOCTORS

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the minister's recognition of the great need for more doctors and his paramedical services scheme, will he inform the House what provision he has made to operate Canadian medical schools this summer?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, as I have told the hon. member and as I am sure he is well aware, the operation of medical schools is not within federal jurisdiction but is under provincial control. If anything can be done to increase the output of doctors in our communities through our medical schools, we naturally hope the provinces will take whatever action is necessary.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NEGOTIATIONS WITH FRANCE RESPECTING CONTINENTAL SHELF—EXPLORATION LICENCES

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. During the course of the negotiations with France regarding their claims to the continental shelf, has any arrangement been made with that country with respect to the granting of licences for exploration on the continental shelf?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, no arrangement has yet been made with France; everything is under negotiation.

Mr. McGrath: May I ask the minister whether he is aware of any French initiatives in this regard to grant licences for oil exploration on that part of the continental shelf which is claimed by France?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I would not be surprised if this is something that the French government would like to obtain but, as I say, everything is under negotiation.

NEGOTIATIONS WITH FRANCE RESPECTING CONTINENTAL SHELF—SUGGESTED INCLUSION OF PROVINCES IN CONSULTATION AND DISCUSSION

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. In view of the continuing efforts to resolve the question of jurisdiction, whether it is provincial, federal or joint, can the minister indicate whether the provinces have been informed about the negotiations with France and, if not, will he give an assurance that the provinces will be taken into the confidence of the federal government and made part of the process of discussion?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I do not think there should be any doubt about it that it is the government of Canada that has the responsibility for negotiating with foreign countries. We do consult from time to time with interested parties and I am sure we will have the necessary consultation, but the responsibility is ours.

POSSIBLE DANGER FROM AMOUNT OF LEAD IN GERMAN STONEWARE CUPS AND PLATES AND CADMIUM IN JAPANESE ENAMELWARE

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the recent report that the United States Food and Drug Administration has ordered the recall of certain stoneware cups and plates manufactured by Ceramano-Keramik of West Germany because this particular Surf Blue pattern contained up to 44 times the amount of leachable lead allowed under its federal standards, and in view of the fact that certain Japanese enamelware was found to contain from 20 to 100 times the cadmium allowed by U.S. standards, I would ask the minister whether his department has investigated the possibility of these products being sold in Canada and, if so, do they violate Canadian standards?

• (1450)

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the action taken by the department in this particular instance other than to say that the department is in constant communication with what is going on in the United States. If this report has come out I am sure they are looking into whatever implications it may have as far as Canada is concerned. I can give the hon. member more particulars, perhaps later today or tomorrow.

PROVISION IN BUDGETARY DEFICIT FORECAST FOR 1971-72 FOR ANTICIPATED DEFICIT IN UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE FUND

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance of which I have given him notice. In the budgetary deficit forecast for 1971-72 in the Economic Review released a few days ago, what provision, if any, has been made for the anticipated deficit in the unemployment insurance fund?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the hon. member for his courtesy in having sent me notice. The explanation is that with the coming into force of the Unemployment Insurance Act in 1971, the unemployment insurance fund was succeeded by the unemployment insurance account. Any short-fall in this account is supported by a working capital advance. The provision of $325 million for the deficit in this account is shown in Table 61 under the heading, Other Non-budgetary Transactions, on page 145 of that review.

COMMUNICATIONS

PROVISION OF TELEPHONE AND TELEVISION SERVICES IN NORTHERN NEWFOUNDLAND—ALLEGED DELAY IN PROVISION OF TELEVISION SERVICE BY CBC

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Communications. In view of the many pronouncements by the government directing a new vision to northern Canada in the seventies, particularly with regard to communications, can the minister advise the House when the citizens of northern Newfoundland will receive the normal fundamental and basic communications associated with telephone and television coverage?

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, there is an extensive study into that very subject going on now with the co-operation of communications carriers. I am glad to tell the hon. member that it is proceeding well. I will be glad to share with him the information that comes out of it when it is available.

Mr. Marshall: I wish to direct my supplementary question to the Secretary of State. In view of the fact it has been indicated that 98 per cent of all Canadians will have radio and television communication within the next two or three years, will the minister investigate the evident deliberate delays by the CBC in promised television coverage for northern Newfoundland?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I can ask the CBC and convey the answer to the hon. member.

FINANCE

PAYMENT OF INTEREST TO CLAIMANTS OF DORMANT BANK ACCOUNTS NOW WITH BANK OF CANADA

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. In view of the announcement by the Department of Finance that the Bank of Canada will be handling the small accounts in private banks that have not been touched since 1962 and which total a little over $1 million, can the minister inform the House whether interest on these accounts will be included for those who apply for and receive the unused money in these accounts?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the hon. member will allow me to take that question as notice and I will get back to him.

POWER

JAMES BAY HYDROELECTRIC PROJECT—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON HUNTING RIGHTS OF INDIANS FOLLOWING TRANSFER OF LANDS

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, may I recall to the attention of the Minister of Justice a question I asked him about the James Bay area of Canada on March 3 in relation to aboriginal rights in the territories under the terms and conditions whereby those territories were transferred to the provinces. In view of the fact the minister said he would take this question as notice, will he take advantage of the opportunity to make a statement on this very important matter during the course of the discussion which I understand will take place either later today or tomorrow?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I am sure others of my colleagues who have direct responsibility for dealing with the substantive matters involved will be intervening in the debate. I do not think it would be proper for me to comment on whatever legal advice may have been given to my colleagues in this connection.

UNITED NATIONS

GOVERNMENT SUGGESTIONS RESPECTING REVISION OF CHARTER

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs with regard to the forthcoming visit of the Secretary General of the United Nations. Does the government have any suggested revisions to the United Nations charter and will these be given some publicity prior to the visit of the Secretary General? Does the minister have in mind any suggestions with regard to revision of the charter?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The subject of charter revision is now under consideration in the department. Before the time expires, I will be presenting our views on the subject to the Secretary General. The hon. member knows that the prospects of substantial charter review are almost nil because most of the great powers and most of the underdeveloped countries in the world are opposed to revisions in the charter of the kind that have often been suggested to me. However, we will be putting forward what we think are practical proposals in this direction. I do not think, however, that this will be a main subject of discussion with the Secretary General when he is here.

WATER RESOURCES

STATEMENT BY U.S. SENATOR RESPECTING AGREEMENT BY CANADA, UNITED STATES AND MEXICO ON CONTINENTAL WATER POLICY—INQUIRY AS TO DISCUSSIONS

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister, either in that capacity or in his capacity as Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of reports emanating from Washington this morning that Senator Frank Moss stated that Canada, the United States and Mexico are close to an agreement on a continental water policy, may I ask the Acting Prime Minister whether negotiations on this subject among the three countries or between two of the three countries have in fact taken place and whether the reported statement by Senator Frank Moss has any validity in negotiations or discussions among the governments?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am quite unaware of any discussions or negotiations of any kind between Canada and the United States having to do with water. I do not know what is going on between the United States and Mexico, but I can assure the hon. member that the statement he has quoted to me is completely without foundation.

Mr. Lewis: I hoped that would be the answer. May I ask the Acting Prime Minister whether he will look into the statement made by the senator, see exactly what he was driving at and let members of the House know the source of that statement?

Mr. Sharp: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will be prepared to do so. It may be something the senator would like to see happen.

YOUTH

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—ACTION ON RECOMMENDATIONS BY MEMBERS

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State. Has any action been taken as a result of the letters that were forwarded to him prior to April 13 with regard to the Opportunities for Youth program or was this simply an exercise in futility and the recommendations of hon. members were not considered at all?

Mr. James Hugh Faulkner (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, I did not get the full import of the question. Maybe I could consult with the hon. member on it afterward.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Korchinski: May I repeat the question, Mr. Speaker. Was any action taken as a result of the recommendations of members of parliament which were forwarded to the parliamentary secretary's office prior to April 13 on the Opportunities for Youth program or was this simply an exercise in futility and these recommendations were completely disregarded?

Mr. Faulkner: Mr. Speaker, it was not an exercise in futility.

Mr. Korchinski: Will we be receiving replies as a result of these recommendations?

Mr. Faulkner: Mr. Speaker, where a member of parliament is anxious to have an explanation as to why a project was accepted or rejected, we will have the facilities to provide that explanation.

Mr. Korchinski: May I ask the parliamentary secretary from what source we can get this information because I have tried the special liaison office and also his office in order to get some kind of reply. To date I have not received a reply and I do not know who is on the selection committee.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We have just about reached the end of the question period. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville.

PENSIONS

POSSIBLE AMENDMENT OF OLD AGE SECURITY ACT AND CANADA PENSION PLAN TO PERMIT RETIREMENT AT AGE 60

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of increasing concern and the representations by many Canadians in relation to early retirement, I should like to ask the minister whether he is considering amending the Old Age Security Act and the Canada Pension Plan so that people who so desire may retire at the age of 60?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): We have had under consideration the general principle of encouraging earlier retirement but we have reached no conclusions as to how it should be done or what particular program should be amended.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Baldwin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, may I ask the leader of the House to tell us the business for the rest of this week and next week, bearing in mind that there will be consultation with regard to the business for later today or tomorrow, as the Chair has suggested?

Mr. MacEachen: Today we shall continue the debate on the item now before the House. This will be followed by the amendments to the Criminal Code, Bills C-2 and C-6. After that we would take up Bill C-5, the Farm Credit Act and the explosives measure, Bill C-7. The order may be subject to negotiation.

Mr. Baldwin: In light of the announcement made by the Minister of Finance, can the hon. gentleman undertake that the House will be able to hold the usual budget debate prescribed by the rules and that there will be discussion between the parties, bearing in mind that the budget will be brought down on Monday evening, as to the dates when the debate will follow?

Mr. MacEachen: I shall do my utmost to meet the requirements of the rules in that connection.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

FAMILY INCOME SECURITY PLAN

MEASURE TO PROVIDE BENEFITS IN RESPECT OF CHILDREN

The House resumed, from Wednesday, April 26, consideration of the motion of Mr. Munro that Bill C-170, to provide for the payment of benefits in respect of children, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Lewis (p. 1448).

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I sat here yesterday afternoon while the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) attempted to assert that the NDP was opposed to measures taken to assist financially the poor people of this country. This contention was refuted by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), in my opinion very effectively. It is, therefore, not my intention today to go into any great detail in connection with the debate which took place yesterday.

At the outset, I wish to make it clear that not only are we in favour of this bill as far as the money aspect is concerned—the amounts which will be directed to low income families—but we wonder why that amount is not greater. This is one of our basic criticisms. Since 1945 inflation has eroded the value of the dollar by more than half. To be more precise, $15 at the present time buys what $6 bought in 1945; $20 now buys what $8 bought in 1945. So, we are really not giving any more; we are simply catching up with the purchasing power of the dollar, and this is something which should have been done years ago.

There is a further point I should like to make. It is that the bill before us provides for the replacement not only of the Family Allowances Act but of the Youth Allowances Act. This, I feel, is somewhat of a tragedy. I have been informed that Canada is the first nation operating a family allowance program to cut off families from benefits and to introduce the regressive principle of payment according to family income. More than 60 nations operate such programs, including every industrial nation except the United States, and undoubtedly this one hold-out has influenced the more colonial-minded of Canada's elite. Almost all these nations have dramatically increased payments over the past decade. Sweden, the first nation to introduce family allowances, now pays $250 a year with respect to each child; the United Kingdom increased its payments by 150 per cent in 1967 and 1968. Hungary has raised family allowances to $48 a month in respect of all children aged seven and under, having found it was cheaper to pay women to remain home to care for their own children than it was to care for them in government day nursery institutions. And this is in a nation where $100 a month is a good wage.

I should like to address myself, now, to what I consider to be some of the built-in problems which will arise once this bill becomes law. It takes little imagination to think of cases where neighbours who view themselves as in approximately the same financial circumstances will resent their allowances being cut off or be embarrassed by their continuance. This is at the neighbourhood level. Cashing the family allowance cheque in the drugstore or grocery store, where the number of children in the family is known, together with their approximate ages, will amount to a public declaration of family income. Sessions at which parents calculate family income, especially among the working class, may well be traumatic occasions causing internal family resentment. It may well be that the calculation of family income is a socially desirable aspect of the bill, but along with a number of other dimensions of the legislation it will undoubtedly create resentment among the public. Politically and socially, the family allowance is valued particularly by the women to whom the cheque is made out. For some, it is too small to make much difference but for many others, even some who are considered well off, at least in terms of the bill, it is very important.

I turn now to the administrative difficulties—to what some hon. members have called the administrative jungle. Well, the administrative jungle which can reasonably be expected to arise from the introduction of the FISP plan in its present form will make the UIC mess look like an oasis in the desert. I represent what is primarily an industrial riding, and I know what a mess the Unemployment Insurance Commission was in throughout the fall and most of the winter. People became so angry that they stormed into commission offices demanding cheques. Situations of this kind may develop if the FISP plan is carried out.

In reply to a written question in Hansard on December 22, 1971, the Minister of National Health and Welfare stated that the number of employees required to process FISP cheques will more than double, from 730, the number currently involved in processing both the family allowances and youth allowances payments, to 1,477. According to the estimates for 1972-73, the existing manpower of the entire income security and social assistance program is of the order of 2,000 persons. Of these 2,000, the minister has indicated that 730 are involved in administering family allowances. When the new scheme has been fully implemented or when all the bugs have been ironed out, the staff of FISP alone will approach 1,500.

The costs of this program are another major factor. The minister indicated on December 22, 1971, in reply to written question No. 1,714, that the administrative cost of FISP would be $13.7 million the year after the program started. The administrative costs of the program under the new scheme go well beyond the walls of health and welfare. Some of the costs of the scheme will be borne by other government departments and, of course, the new scheme imposes an administrative cost on the recipients of benefits.

The courts will be burdened with the new offences created under the act. It seems to me that as this government draws up more bills and passes more acts, it at the same time creates more crimes with which persons can be charged. The Tax Appeal Board will be required to handle some of the appeals. Supply and services, national revenue, Indian affairs and northern development, Statistics Canada and manpower and immigration are all implicated in the bill.

A massive advertising campaign wil be required to inform the public of the changeover, undoubtedly in flattering terms to the Liberal party, and will have to be continued on a large scale to keep the public constantly informed of their rights and to warn them of the newly-created wrongs that they could commit.

The potential recipients of benefits will be burdened with two economic, if not financial, costs. The first is the cost of acquiring the information they need to take advantage of the scheme. The second is the cost involved in doing all the paper work imposed on them. More and more people every day are spending more time working for the government. There are seven distinct circumstances when a statement or a form must or should be filled out and sent to the department, depending on whether you want the family allowance, whether your income has gone up or down "substantially", as the bill puts it, whether during the year your income has changed, how many children you have and how old they are.

Let us look at the administrative jungle created, Mr. Speaker. First, all applications for family allowances must be checked to determine the eligibility of the applicant. Second, in the case of eligible applicants the benefit payment must be calculated on the family income and age of the children. Third, in the case of non-eligible applicants appeals and explanations must be handled. Fourth, appeals regarding the amount of benefit must be handled. Fifth, statements involving a substantial increase or decrease in income must be processed, with appropriate adjustments to benefits. Sixth, divorces, separations and marriages of recipients must be reported if family income is affected. Benefits must be adjusted. Seventh, adjustments must be made in benefits when estimated income differs significantly from actual income. Eighth, an administrative machinery must be set up to recover benefits paid out to ineligible persons. Ninth, an administrative machinery must be set up to detect frauds involving misrepresentation of income, misrepresentation of the number of children, misrepresentation of the age of the children, failure to report income increases, and failure to report deaths or marriages. Lastly, an administrative machinery for liaison with the provinces will have to be established.

I should like now to refer to some of the comments made by the Canadian Council on Social Development in relation to the white paper that preceded this bill. The council has set forth some guiding principles, and I want to put these principles on the record. The first principle is that family allowances should be universal. This is the main argument of the New Democratic Party. Family allowances should be universal, paid to all families with dependent children as a social right, thus avoiding divisiveness among families and any element of stigma. The present program has this feature but FISP would eliminate it.

The second principle is that there should be equity in relation to family responsibilities and to the financial and other resources of families. Three criteria cited by the federal white paper entitled "Income Security for Canadians" are, size of family, age of children and family income. Of these, the present program takes age only into account and FISP considers only income. Third, there should be the maximum feasible simplicity and efficiency in administration. What I have just mentioned very briefly about the problems that will arise in administration certainly serves to prove, or will eventually, that we in this party are perhaps right, and certainly the council itself. Fourth, the program should be as fully compatible as possible with long-term social and fiscal policies. This is not evident in the FISP proposals. Fifth, the program should have a built in escalation clause to meet the full amount of annual rises in the cost of living. This feature is not included in either the present family allowances program or FISP.

I mentioned at the beginning of my speech that if one compares the purchasing power of money today with the situation in 1945 when the original Family Allowances Act was passed, one finds that at that time $6 went as far as $15 to $18 does today; $8 went as far as $20 does today. This is another criticism that I have: there should be a built in escalator clause. With regard to income tax exemptions for dependent children, the council stated that the primary purpose of the exemption is to reduce the tax burden on low income families, but its value increases with the income of the taxpayer. It should be eliminated for children under 18 as a logical first move toward closer integration of the social security and taxation systems. Then, under the heading of taxation of family allowances, the council suggests that family allowances should be taxed,—this is not part of the present program but is proposed by FISP—the tax system taking into account not only income but also the number of children, a feature that is not included in the FISP program.

With regard to universality and selectivity, the council believes in "selectivity within universality" in favour of people of low income. It sees no contradiction here since equity requires that the level of the allowances be related to family resources. FISP proposes to achieve selectivity through grading the allowances; that is to say, selectivity from the bottom up. The council proposes flat rate allowances, graded indirectly according to income through a special tax schedule, which we can call selectivity from the top down. This method also has the virtue of a comparatively simple and cheap administration.

I have pointed out some of the weaknesses in the FISP program and have criticized it for not providing greater benefits for the needy. I have criticized it for eliminating the principle of universality, and in conclusion have outlined some of the recommendations put forward by the Canadian Council on Social Development.

• (1520)

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I had little or no desire to take part in this debate until I heard the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) speak yesterday. I hope he will return to his seat in the Chamber before I have concluded my remarks because there are some things I should like to say directly to him, I support all that has been said by my colleagues in our opposition to this bill. We oppose it for many reasons, the main ones, as have been pointed out repeatedly and will continue to be pointed out, being the destruction of the principle of universality and the administrative jungle that it will create. It will also divide, inconvenience and even hurt some people.

One can recall the mid-1940's when old age pension measures were substantially changed and improved, and when the family allowance program was discussed across this country and in this parliament for many months. It was finally enacted with a great deal of fanfare by the then Liberal government. One cannot blame them for that, but only expect it. When the principle of universality was suggested the then Prime Minister of Canada, Mackenzie King, spoke fervently about the inclusion of that principle in the field of social security measures, particularly in respect of old age pensions and family allowances. One can recall when the Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent was Prime Minister of our country and became eligible for the old age pension. He publicly and with some fanfare received and accepted his first cheque at the age of 70 to show, not that he needed it, but, his support as the Prime Minister on behalf of his government and the Liberal party of the principle of universality. The point was that he did not need the money, but that the universal application of the old age pension was designed for the benefit of the people.

Similarly in respect of family allowances, Mr. Speaker; those in high places, both in government and in other sectors of our society, who do not need these allowances accept family allowance cheques because they, too, agree with the principle of universality. This government, over the past four years, has adopted many measures that attack people, and many measures which give aid and comfort to wealthy corporations, to an extent that is almost unbelievable. This government has attacked old age pensioners by destroying the principle of universality, and now it attacks children.

I suppose the best illustration I can give quickly is one which can be found in one of the provisions of this bill. The minister proposes that children who are in orphanages, foster homes or are being supported by public funds in other ways, will only receive half the benefits. This is the meanest kind of attitude to adopt. Surely, children in these circumstances need even more than the children in normal homes. Because governments at the federal, provincial and municipal level are participating in the support of these children in foster homes or orphanages, and the federal government is paying half the cost anyway, this government reveals a typical, bureaucratic Liberal attitude by paying only half the allowances. That is surely an attack on the children who are unfortunate enough to be in orphanages or foster homes. It is difficult to understand how the Minister of National Health and Welfare or any self-respecting Liberal, if there are any, could countenance such an outrage.

I should like to repeat what my colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) said yesterday, that the time has come to say no to this further destruction of what was the leading social security system in the world. I agree with him that the time has come to say no to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, and if he wants to take us on in the country in respect of this matter we will only be too glad to oblige him, even in his own constituency. It is time to say no to this destruction of the principle of universality. It is time to say no to the government in respect of snooping into people's private affairs. It is time to say no to paternalism and patronizing of the poor. It is time to say no to the inevitable administrative boondoggle which this kind of bill will bring about, and it is time to put an end to this attack on children and to reject this Liberal government's version of a middle income group. I do not class as a middle income what is suggested by the minister, and I think most people in the country would agree with me.

I recall a survey being conducted in the city of Toronto two or three years ago by a joint group of welfare and business agencies. This survey showed that a man and woman with three children living in an average home with a 30 or 35 year mortgage, with one car, attempting to put the three children through university, could not do so on less than $11,000 per year in the city of Toronto. The minister calls that level of income high or high middle, and excludes people making that much money from receiving benefits under this legislation. We all know of people with a total income of $7,500, $8,500 or $9,500, whether it is a single income family or a husband and wife both working, who have a continual struggle to keep their heads above water. They do not live high off the hog. They do not have two cars and do not go to Florida every winter. They struggle to meet their mortgage payments and the payments on their furniture; they struggle to educate their children. They hope to have sufficient money for a two or three week vacation once a year, and often they borrow the money for that. The Minister of National Health and Welfare says they should benefit less because he calls that a middle income. I would hesitate to classify even $15,000 a year as middle income, let alone $7,500.

Each year we will have to raise the levels of what can be called middle income. In five or ten years someone with an income of $7,000 or $8,000 a year will be living at the poverty level, particularly if we are still victimized by Liberal economic policies, because this will mean more and continuing unemployment and a continual loss of control of our own destiny in this country. If we continue to have this kind of policy we will have more inflation, and what is considered by the experts as the poverty line now will be doubled in a few years.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, who will still be here then, will be pleading with the government, if we are unfortunate enough to have a Liberal government at that time, to double the levels referred to in this legislation. He will be pleading then to build in an escalation clause. We are pleading now to build in an escalation clause in the family allowance provisions just as we did in respect of old age pensions. Each year, automatically, if the cost of living goes up 4½ per cent, the family allowance benefits go up 4½ per cent and similarly with old age pensions. But this miserly, so-called free enterprise Liberal government condescends to provide a 2 per cent escalation in pensions of civil servants and in the guaranteed income supplement, then turns a blind eye to everybody else.

As has been said by my colleague, the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn), the proposed $15 or $20 levels just bring the purchasing power of the family allowance benefits to what they were in 1945. Let us look at these people whom the minister proposes will either receive less benefits or be excluded. Let us take the wage earner. It is usual nowadays rather than unusual, as was the case 20 or 30 years ago, for the income of people to fluctuate, even though they may only change jobs 4, 5 or 10 times in their lifetime. A wage earner will be laid off, fired, promoted or demoted. It is not uncommon for this to happen to him many times in his lifetime. The level of income fluctuates up and down, particularly at a time when people are being victimized by a Liberal government, and when unemployment is high.

Because of unemployment a person's income may go down and then go up again when he returns to work. The Minister of National Health and Welfare says that if this should happen the person could very well make a new application for benefits under this program. It is not unusual for someone with an income of $10,000 or $12,000 a year to have his income substantially reduced because he must take another position, but by the time he gets through all the red tape involved in reapplying and receiving these benefits weeks and months will have elapsed. An unnecessary burden is placed on the public when one must apply every time his income level changes by $500 a year or more. I think this is really an imposition. It is an imposition on the taxpayers in terms of the cost of administering this type of program as proposed by the minister. The single parent in this bracket for whom the minister proposes to provide less benefits have more costs to bear. Oh yes, the minister may say they will be able to deduct the cost of babysitters, the cost of housekeepers, the extra cost involved in educating their children and so on, but it is still an imposition.

There are higher costs, not only in monetary ways but in other ways as well. Even though a single parent, one who is widowed, separated or divorced, may have an income of $7,000, $8,000 or $9,000 a year that parent will have more difficulty in supporting children, but since the minister considers that level of income as the middle level that parent will receive less or be excluded entirely. The more one thinks about it, the more one is ashamed to see this kind of legislation presented in this House. It is uncivilized, it is mean and it is vicious. It divides people.

I am sorry the minister has not returned to his seat. He made some statements about the New Democratic Party, about its leader and about the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). He can say what he likes about me, but when he infers that the New Democratic Party is opposed to giving these allowances to the poor he indicated that he expects millions of people in this country to believe something they know is not true. When he suggests that my leader, the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis), is opposed to this bill and is therefore opposed to giving these allowances to the poor, he is expecting millions of people in this country to believe the unbelievable. It is incredible that the minister would expect anybody would believe this of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. I suppose there is hardly a citizen in Canada who does not know about and recognize the reputation this hon. gentleman has in the field of social security for something over 30 years. In fact, I submit the day will never arrive when the Minister of National Health and Welfare will be able to carry water for the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

[Mr. Benjamin.]

Mr. Peters: And he doesn't drink very much water.

Mr. Benjamin: That kind of a suggestion by the Minister of National Health and Welfare is not only ridiculous, it is insulting. If he had wanted to say it about me I could not care less, but he will not get away with saying it about the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre or the hon. member for York South. We know there could be political difficulties for the New Democratic Party in the stand we are taking on this, but we make no bones about it and are not running or hiding. I think we have established a good reputation in this country for putting up this kind of a fight for people. For the Liberals to suggest that we are in favour of the rich receiving these allowances, is again asking millions of people in this country to believe the unbelievable.

I do not think you, Mr. Speaker, or anyone in Canada has any doubt about the stand of our party, of our leader or of our leaders before him on this matter, over a period of many, many years. Those who are on high income still do not and never have paid their fair share of the cost of running this country and the cost of having as decent a society as we can. We have taken the lead in demanding and fighting for higher levels of taxation for those who are wealthy. We have taken the lead in this country in fighting the gifts to corporations, their exemptions and allowances under the tax laws of Canada which permit them to evade hundreds of millions of dollars in taxes.

When the minister says that acceptance of our proposals to make these benefits at the $15 and $20 level universal would cost $700 million a year more, I say so what. In the first place, if he had completed reading our amendment he would have known that we proposed there be appropriate amendments to the tax laws which would result in those above the level of $15,000, $20,000 or $50,000 or $100,000 a year paying back a major portion of what they received as family allowance. Surely, this is the way in which it should be done. Surely this would involve the least imposition on the public rather than putting people in categories on the basis of how much money they might happen to earn in a given year, then expecting them to return like mendicants year after year and reapply at their new income levels.

Another group which the minister obviously considers to be at the middle income level are the farmers. Their incomes go up and down like a galloping jackrabbit, varying from a low of $1,500 to a high of $15,000 in a period of two years. In a period of low income, they can receive the family allowance, but if they experienced a few years of high income they would lose the benefits of the family allowance while at the same time they would be paying off debts accrued in the years of low income. The minister can allow them all the deductions similar to those he allows when they make out their income tax forms. If this is the kind of paper work the minister demands of a section of our society, I hope they will tell him to go to blazes.

The same thing applies to fishermen and small businessmen whose incomes depend on the profits of their businesses, particularly those located in rural Canada or in areas where fishing is the main industry. Their incomes fluctuate greatly. Those people may belong to what the minister calls the middle income group, people who make between $7,000 and $10,000 a year for a year or two. When their incomes drop below that sum, those people are patronized and told to rush down to make an application for family allowances because that year they are poor. Multiply the number in this group by the hundreds of thousands of people in this country whose income fluctuates every year, then imagine the paperwork that will be required and you can visualize the administrative jungle we will have.

What is even more serious is the fact that this legislation will cause people to feel even more alienated from each other than they do now. They will feel alienated from their government and from each other. They will be computerized and categorized according to the incomes of the father and mother and even the incomes of teenage children, because if those children have incomes over a given amount they must be declared on income tax forms. I assume, therefore, they must also be declared when applying for family allowance benefits under this bill. All of this information goes into the computer and everyone becomes a little card. If your income changes by $500, you must rush down and report it and then the next year make out a new application. Your card goes into the computer, the bell rings, the red light flashes and it spits out another card indicating how much less or how much more you will get or whether you will get anything at all.

Family allowances are for people, for children. Old age pensions also are for people, not because they are old but because they have a right to them which they have earned through their contributions to their country all their lives. Family allowances are for children, for their education. This group of people whom the minister calls middle income people I submit are not middle income people because they are barely making it. Tens of thousands of mothers have had a small savings account for each child into which the family allowance cheque went, and when that child was ready to go to university there was $1,000, $1,500 or $2,000 that had accrued to help finance his or her education. If the boy or girl did not wish to go to university, the money stayed in the account until he or she got married and it helped to start them off. In some cases, it was used to purchase clothes. I know a number of mothers who have saved family allowances in separate bank accounts. They did not let the old man touch it for beer or cigarettes, but would use it to buy clothing for their children or to finance their vacations.

However, if those families are now in what the minister classifies as the middle income group, they will get less money in family allowance benefits. If they earn more than $10,000 a year, they will get nothing at all. It is inconceivable to expect this kind of legislation to work or to be accepted. We do not accept it and we never will. The government has flown in the face of a policy that was traditionally theirs, at least since 1944. It has flown in the face of what members of all parties in the House have favoured for many years, the principle of universality. No self respecting businessman would try to operate his business in the way in which the minister propose to administer this legislation. It flies in the face of good administrative sense and judgment. It asks too much of people. It imposes upon them. As I said earlier, it perpetuates the paternalistic and patronizing attitude of the government towards the poor.

Family allowances are a matter of right, not a privilege. From those whose incomes are in fact high, those who could be called the middle income group, for example people making $15,000 a year, we propose that we would recover a major part of the extra cost through the income tax. The minister mentioned the figure of $700 million a year. We could recover a large part of that sum through the tax system, and do so fairly on the basis of the ability to pay. We should not demand that people come to the government each year to expose all their private affairs, to expose themselves to government scrutiny and to the computer to see whether they qualify for a few dollars a month or even a few cents a month. If the change in income is only $500 as compared with the previous year they will receive 33 cents less per each $100, but the cost of administering this will be more than the 33 cents which will be deducted. I am sure that the bill for electricity for that computer will go up by at least 33 cents each time the button is pushed to make a calculation.

The way in which the minister proposes to administer the family allowances plan in the future is stupid. One thing for which I have always given credit to the Liberals is that they were reasonably efficient, honest and reasonably good administrators. But this will be a boar's nest—

Mr. McBride: This will be what?

Mr. Benjamin: It will be a boar's nest.

Mr. McBride: Describe a boar's nest.

Mr. Benjamin: I would be delighted to do so sometime. It is a good prairie expression. To ask me or any other member in the House to approve that kind of administrative procedure is ridiculous.

May I conclude by repeating that the minister's remarks yesterday, not only about the stand of the NDP on this bill but more particularly about the stand of my leader and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre were unworthy of the minister. I hope he does not try to perpetuate that kind of nonsense. I hope he will be man enough to admit that he should not have said that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is opposed to giving money to the poor. I hope he does not try to perpetuate that kind of nonsense because if he does, he will be earning a punch on the nose from many thousands of people across this country who have admired and respected the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre for his stand with regard to the poor, whether or not they support him politically. I hope that members of all parties will think seriously about our amendment before it comes to a vote and that they will decide it is worthy of support, that in fact it makes this bill into what it should be, a universal Family Income Security Plan that is more meaningful, that does not discriminate, that does not computerize and does not alienate. I hope they will recognize that with this amendment the legislation before us will be much more efficient and will be administered much more cheaply. I hope that the bill will be passed on second reading in record time and that, when amended, it will be in such form that we will be proud of ourselves, then, when it is given third reading, the minister will be proud of the legislation.

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I have no intention of prolonging this debate, but I think it is my duty to say a few words on a subject I consider of extreme importance, not only because I represent a riding that is mostly labour class and where the average salary is relatively low, but also because Quebec workers are not sufficiently represented in Parliament. Since these people do not have much say in Parliament, I think it is my responsibility to take part in the debate and make a few comments on Bill C-170 respecting family allowances.

I would not like to repeat all the arguments that have already been made. I think, Mr. Speaker, that hon. members who have expressed their views on this measure have dealt with the fundamentals of this bill. They have pointed out the flaws both in its drafting and its implementation. They have tried, in particular, to show to the Canadian people that they are being led once again to believe that the moon is made of green cheese, by which means the government wants to assert that it is considering with benevolence, and in accordance with its philosophy of a just society, the situation of the working class, of the small salary earner and of the large family, particularly in Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, we cannot be fooled in this House and we very well know, as the hon. member who spoke before me has pointed out, that whatever our pronouncements and objections to this bill, the government has decided to adopt it and that all our efforts will fail to alter the position or the decision it has already taken.

Indeed, this attitude is not new. Since the government of the just society has assumed power, it, alone, has charted our course of action and it, alone, has made its own decisions while ignoring the democratic role and the contribution of opposition members in the House.

This being said, Mr. Speaker, I felt I had to rise and say clearly that we of the Progressive Conservative party have stated our position, which is that we give outright support to the principle of family allowances. We acknowledge the need for them, and I feel that those who, like me, represent working class constituencies where there are a lot of low and middle income people should acknowledge—no matter what party they belong to—the urgency of seeing to it that the working class will not be once again limited both by the rise in the cost of living and by the cuts the government makes in some social legislation—in short, that it will not lose once again through legislation which attempts to deprive further the families, the middle class of this country.

Mr. Ouellet: What cuts are you talking about?

[Mr. Benjamin.]

Mr. Valade: If the hon. member would have some patience, I will tell him. Let him be quiet and listen. Let him take part in the debate if he has something intelligent to say, and I will tell him what cuts I am talking about.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: The parliamentary secretary on a question of privilege.

Mr. Ouellet: The hon. member for Sainte-Marie says that if I have something to say, I should rise and speak. If he was in this House more often, he would know that I have already taken part in this debate.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There is obviously no question of privilege here.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, not only is the hon. member's remark stupid and silly, but it shows, above all, that he does not see that even the minister who sponsored the bill is not in the House, and that the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau), who supposedly wants a just society, has never been in this House to take part in the debate and to hear arguments and discussions on such an important bill. The Prime Minister of Canada should be the first to give a good example by being present in this House.

Mr. Ouellet: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member rises on a question of privilege. I hope it is not the same he just raised because we could discuss for a long while as to whether an hon. member from any party is present in the House during a debate. I think such considerations have very little to do with the debate which should take place regarding the bill now before us.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Sainte-Marie has called my comments silly. I can take the liberty, I think, to point out to him that his own remarks must be somewhat uninspired since there are no Conservative members—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, I would not want to ignore that remark because among the 55 Quebec Liberals—the province most affected by this legislation—hardly three or four are in the House. There is only one Progressive Conservative member representing the Canadian metropolis. Unfortunately, the injustice committed in the last election is that the present government which is indebted to Quebec for the majority enabling him to exercise power happens to penalize that province by bringing in Bill C-170. Most of all, we should not forget that the province of Quebec responded to the Prime Minister's appeal to give him a majority government in order to establish a just society. Yet, it is the province most severely penalized by Bill C-170 that the Liberal party will compel the House to pass in a few hours.

Mr. Cyr: That is not true.

Mr. Valade: I don't intend to be lead into digressions by such inept remarks.

If the hon. member for Papineau, who represents a Montreal riding, had any sense of responsibility to discuss the merits of this bill, I believe he would have better chances to be assessed more favourably when the next elections come around and he would not bring out in this House the nonsense he just gave us.

Mr. Ouellet: I can go and discuss it at any time in your riding.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, I believe I have the floor and I intend to take advantage of it whether or not it pleases the parliamentary secretary who is far more adept at writing in newspapers than at making speeches in the House.

I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that it is the duty of members to express in the House, where bills are passed, their own opinions and especially their feelings and concern about the people and about a bill which is extremely complex and seems to give something while in fact it withdraws more than it brings. I feel that it is our duty, regardless of our party loyalties, to speak up the truth.

Mr. Speaker, I shall limit myself to the merits of the bill. Personally, I believe the government, instead of making a further amendment to the Family Allowances Act, should first of all have recognized that jurisdiction for family allowances was claimed by the provinces. That, in my opinion, is another violation of the Constitution which stipulates that administration of public health is exclusively a provincial field.

If the government wanted to amend the Family Allowance Act, it should first have tried to come to an agreement with the provinces, to establish whether they want to exercise that responsibility themselves or relinquish it to the federal government.

There again I consider that the government has acted without consultation. It has in fact once more taken the initiative to force upon the provinces legislation which would be better administered by them.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to discuss the substance of Bill C-170. Interruptions have caused me to digress somewhat from this subject, but I want to get back to it, because I think it is more important to discuss the merits of a piece of legislation than to indulge in political or partisan considerations.

Having said so, I think that if we seriously analyze the impact of Bill C-170, there is cause for some concern. No member has raised this point, I think, and this is why I have decided to speak on it.

If we consider the changes that this bill introduces into the family allowance program, I think that we must ask very sincerely whether the government is not seeking a systematic, gradual and definite elimination of all forms of family allowances, for two reasons.

First, as a result of the selectivity principle, and then, as a result of inflation. The selectivity principle obviously reduces more and more the number of family allowance recipients. The government itself admitted it; over 1 million people will no longer be eligible to family allowances.

As a result of inflation, wages and prices tend to increase. The minimum floor on which these new allowances were based will undoubtedly disappear, that is to say that the basic amount of $4,500 which made a parent with one child eligible, will no longer apply, since, because of inflation, a person who earns $4,500 now, will probably earn $6,000 or $7,000 within three, four or five years. And then, a single child will no longer be eligible to family allowances. This means that, in a few years, through the technocratic process related to this bill, most families, maybe all of them, will no longer be eligible to family allowances.

Mr. Speaker, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare seems to disagree. This section on page 6 of the bill is very clear about it. It is clearly stated in section 6(1)(b) that allowances will be paid to a person with one child and that, for each full $100 of income by which the income of the family exceeds, the allowance will be reduced by 33 per cent.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, every person earning $4,600 will be obliged to deduct 33 per cent from the amount exceeding $4,500. Who can say, nowadays, that the head of a family who earns $5,000 has a salary enabling him to make ends meet? In my opinion, it is only fancy.

This is another method which the present government uses to show that he is trying to help the poor, the low income people, the families who need it, but actually, it is only playing a hypocritical game which tend to reduce even more the assistance that large families and low income people need so badly, nowadays.

If the intention is really to do away with family allowances by circuitous means, the present government should have the courage to say outright that it wants to be rid of the burden of helping small wage-earners and large families.

I suggest that the inadequacies of this legislation are evident. Because of the two conditions explicitly stipulated therein, the concept of selectivity and the 33 per cent deductibility clause for each additional $100 of income over $4,500, the legislation clearly indicates that we are going toward complete elimination of family allowances to large families and small wage-earners.

If the government wanted to be really honest, it would state outright its intention of abolishing in the near future legislation assisting large families and it should truly demonstrate its intention to help small wage-earners through the use, as all hon. members suggested, of the income tax.

I feel, Mr. Speaker, that it would be easy for the government to say: We want to help families and small wage-earners. We are going to allow low-income family heads to deduct from their income tax all expenses made for their children. Why should the government not allow deductions of clothing expenses for a child under 16 years of age, of all school fees for children under 16, of medical expenses, of physical development expenses, and even of expenses made for sports which are necessary to the training of young people? This would really be a way for the government to prove its sincerity and its truthfulness to the Canadian people.

Mr. Speaker, the government could also say to the family head who has a small property saddled with municipal and school taxes: We are going to help you by allowing you to deduct a certain amount of your municipal and school taxes from your income tax, so that you will have a little more money to meet necessary family expenses. I feel this would not be a mere statement of intent, but rather facts which would prove that the government is trying to help low-income heads of large families.

The government could also have said on the same occasion: We are going to help senior citizens. This government of the so-called "just society" has not yet indicated what it intends to do to alleviate the burden of senior citizens. I know that this bill does not deal with this matter, but I think this is an opportunity which the government could use to demonstrate that it really wants to implement its policy for a just society by giving more assistance to this class of citizens, elderly people, who only receive a pittance and who cannot, nowadays, make both ends meet.

Mr. Speaker, I think that the important impact of this bill is concealed by several sections which are so complex that they make it difficult for anybody to understand the meaning of the bill and the way in which it is going to be administered. For instance, clause 6(2) of the bill clearly states that where a person receives a pension or any other assistance from a lower level of government or within the meaning of a plan approved by the provinces where this legislation would apply, the amounts of the benefits payable by the federal government will be one half of those amounts which would allegedly be paid to families, as stated in the bill. I think I understand the bill quite correctly, but explain it to me if I do not. How is it possible for the minister to tell the people that he is paying $20 a month in respect of a child of from 12 to 18 years and $15 in respect of another of up to 12 years, in the event that the child's family receives any assistance from the municipality within the meaning of a plan agreed upon by the province?

The government is lying when it tells the people that it is going to pay these amounts. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare might repudiate my arguments, but the government will only pay $10 in respect of one child and $7 in respect of the other. This is clearly established in clause 6(2) of the bill and I quote:

(2) The amount of a benefit that is payable in respect of a person referred to in paragraph 3(1)(b) in respect of any benefit year is the amount set out in paragraph (1)(a) or (b), as the case may be—

The government is once more creating the impression it is going to pay sensational and stupendous amounts, something that will at last enable families which face difficult economic conditions to extricate themselves from their stagnation, when this is not true. Once more, Mr. Speaker, this bill tries to mislead—

Mr. Ouellet: Speak about it to the minister.

Mr. Valade: —Canadians by hiding the real intent of the government in the sense that it is obvious that this piece of legislation will be gradually and systematically self-defeating within a few years, due to the conditions with which the government has stuffed it.

• (1610)

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member for Sainte-Marie answer a question?

Mr. Valade: I will answer any sensible question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Mr. Ouellet: While opposing this bill, is the hon. member for Sainte-Marie aware that through this government measure almost 80 per cent of the families in his riding will see their allowances doubled or tripled?

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, this is not only false but another lie which must be emphasized because I know that it will be used by the Liberal party to defeat a Quebec member—the member for Sainte-Marie—because in Montreal it has been found out that the Liberals have betrayed the people, that one person is trying to set the record straight—the member for Sainte-Marie.

The Liberal party has only one thing in mind: to use all means available to stifle, to knock out the member who, even though he can speak on behalf of the people, is subjected to this government's demagogy and dictatorship.

Mr. Speaker, I will reply to the question of the hon. member for Papineau. Not only will the people of my riding not see their benefits doubled or tripled—because in Sainte-Marie some people do not or barely earn the minimum required under the law—but the 33 per cent deduction on each $100 above $4,500 will automatically deprive most large families of the benefits that the member for Papineau is saying the law will give them.

In fact in Sainte-Marie, not one father of four, five or six children does not earn at least $5,000 or $6,000 a year. He could not make both ends meet otherwise. And when it comes to $5,000, $6,000 or $6,500, the 33 per cent deduction clause for each $100 excess income means that the possible income of large families will decrease by that much. In my opinion, it would be wrong for the parliamentary secretary to say flippantly that the entire population of the Sainte-Marie or Saint-Jacques constituencies or of the Montreal constituencies as a whole will profit from the legislation. It is untrue, because due to inflation, the increased cost of living, the wage raises which have been added to the income, the inflationary pressures, this new system will not enable the heads of large families in labour constituencies such as mine to receive more than they do now. The parliamentary secretary knows it quite well and his intervention is only meant to alter the interpretation of the present legislation.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask another little question to the member for Sainte-Marie.

His comments show that he does not understand the legislation at all. I ask him if he would be kind enough to invite me in his constituency at the next elections; I would explain to his constituents the great advantages of that legislation.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, not only am I happy to tell the hon. member that I shall invite him, but I shall even invite him to his own riding to explain the truth to his constituents.

[English]

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I enjoyed the exchange that has just taken place between some of the members from the province of Quebec. I wish it had been a fuller discussion, particularly on the aspect of why the province of Quebec is trying to negotiate family allowances into its sphere and what bearing the negotiations may have on the plan we are now discussing. I am interested in the fact that most Liberal members come from the province of Quebec.

Mr. Valade: That is right, and it is a shame.

Mr. Peters: I agree it is a shame, but it is a fact.

Mr. Sharp: That is not true. Among other things you cannot do, you cannot count.

Mr. Béchard: What about Ontario?

Mr. Peters: Certainly, the majority of the Liberal members come from the province of Quebec.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. Hon. members should at least give the hon. member for Timiskaming a chance to make his speech.

[Translation]

I would suggest that all hon. members wait before putting questions or making remarks, in order to give the hon. member who has the floor a chance to start his speech.

[English]

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I have said before in this House that my arithmetic is not good. Probably this is the one justification for a computer.

I was interested in the discussion that took place because in years gone by there has been a great deal of support from the province of Quebec for family allowances. I am very surprised that there should be an argument now as to whether you should use the high income figure for a family with one child as the criterion or, as the previous speaker did, use the example of five children at a much lower family income level. Obviously, the people of Quebec are not now as deeply concerned about the matter of procreation as they were previously. The birth rate in the province of Quebec is now very low. In fact, even with government intervention in the form of a family allowance program, it is the lowest in the civilized world. I am interested in the thinking of Quebec members in this regard because they are affected. It might have quite a bit to do with their future because the populations of some of the other ethnic groups in that area are multiplying much faster. The Indian population is enjoying a very high birth rate.

When this matter of social security payments was settled to the satisfaction of most people a long time ago, it was agreed that people would be granted certain fundamental rights because they were Canadians. One was the right to the old age pension. I remember a former Prime Minister from the province of Quebec who said in this House that he was very proud of the fact he was now able to draw the old age pension because he had reached the age at which that pension was paid to all Canadians. Mr. St. Laurent did not need the money. He had a considerable amount of money. He was proud of the fact he lived in a country which paid such a pension because he had contributed to this country and had reached the age at which he was automatically entitled to the old age pension. The wife of the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), who is also well off financially—and this is unusual in the Canadian Parliament—is entitled to receive this universal payment for their offspring. It seems odd that he resents this to the extent of getting rid of the universality of this program. I think it is an excellent idea that people should receive this payment without consideration being given to their incomes.

Yesterday the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) made a great thing about the unions agreeing with him, that they were willing to give up something so that it could be given to the poor. If the minister thinks that is so, he has not talked to them. No matter what income level they have reached, union members are of the opinion that, as Canadians, they have a right to family allowances. If they have six children, they believe it is their right to receive a universal payment for those children.

Mr. Munro: If they have six children, they will get a lot more under this bill.

Mr. Peters: They will not get anything. There is not a worker in the Hamilton area who receives less than the amount at which the family allowance is cut off. Certainly, the steel workers fit into the category which the government now considers to be the middle rich. There are now two thoughts being developed in Canada. The government should consider the implications of both. One concerns the middle income group of Canadians. They claim they are being taxed far heavier than anyone else and, Mr. Speaker, that is true. They ask: Why should we be taxed so heavily to pay money to others who should be able to work but who are living on unemployment insurance benefits, or, in some cases, on welfare, not necessarily through their own fault. Any reasonable government should be making every possible effort to get the economy going again so as to provide the maximum number of jobs, thus lightening the load which presently falls on the middle income group.

Another group in our society is saying that the nation as a whole has provided certain benefits on a universal basis because the persons receiving them are Canadians and are entitled to various concessions for that reason. We went into all this a long time ago when the principle of universality was first exercised. The Conservative party of that day was much opposed to it. Even after this House had passed the universal old age pension legislation, the Senate turned it down. The second House, the House of sober second thought, believed that a measure of this kind would destroy the country. The same was said with respect to the family allowance payments on a universal basis.

I would point out there has been no great outcry on the part of the Canadian public in favour of the change the government is now proposing. There have, however, been many complaints from those who have been receiving benefits on behalf of their children about the inadequacy of the allowance. Time and time again the government has been asked to increase the allowances, at least to the point at which they would be in line with the increase in the cost of living. One of the questions frequently asked of me during political campaigns is: Where do you stand on the issue of family allowances? It is asked by representatives of a group called Union d'Électeurs, a forerunner of the Creditiste party who often attend political meetings for the purpose. I have always been able to say, truthfully, that I am in favour of increasing the family allowance. I believe that at least the amount should be kept in line with its purchasing power when first introduced. Revision should be carried out periodically, in fact an escalator clause should be built into the scheme. If we pass the amendment in the name of the leader of my party we shall only have done what many people in this country have been demanding, that is, to bring the family allowance payments in line with the increase in the cost of living.

Much has been said about the problems which members of parliament have been encountering in connection with programs administered by the government. I was interested to hear the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) tell the House yesterday that over the years he had received very few complaints about the administration of the family allowance program. I can recall only a few instances of my own knowledge, and these difficulties usually involved something other than the benefits themselves. They arose because a child who had reported he did not intend to return to school decided, later, that he would do so, or they arose from questions concerning the guardianship of the child—who should, in fact, receive the cheque, and so on. So, while there have been a few minor problems, they have not been the kind which develop as a result of a too bureaucratic administration. The minister is to be congratulated on the way in which this branch has been administered. It has been easy to get replies from the department, which indicates to me that the staff is sitting waiting for telephone calls, and are able to deal with inquiries immediately.

If we embark on this computerized nightmare which many hon. members have foreseen, the staff will need to treble in size. Before the minister even considers it, I should like him to read a little booklet which should be on the desks of all administrators in the civil service—it should certainly be on the desk of every cabinet minister. It is entitled "Up the Organization". He will find therein a section on computers in which the authors say that anyone changing over to computers should be prepared for a long period of manual checking of everything which is done by the computer. The other day there was an interruption of the power supply to parliament. It caused very little interruption to this particular institution. But in Belleville, where a computer is installed, 12 hours were lost as a result of that interruption. This meant that instead of a man getting his cheque on Thursday he had to wait until Monday, and then only if he was lucky. This is the kind of problem which will be encountered in connection with family allowances if we put the program on a computer system.

I am sure the whole country was shocked to learn recently how poorly our tax system operates. We were shocked to hear the Minister of Finance say it was not possible to raise personal exemptions by $500 and still expect to run the country, because so much money was flowing in from the lower end of the tax structure. This is why we have written into our amendment a proposal that the necessary tax changes be made to ensure that maximum benefit is received by those to whom the allowances are directed. It is certainly not our desire that this money be given to the rich or to people who have no need of it. Nor is it our desire to give it to those who will find it detrimental to their total tax position. The government seems determined to do things in the most complicated way possible, though it would be easy to provide $15 to the entire group we wish to help, $20 to the second group, and sufficient money to the third group to take care of education costs. I once earned an income which would put me in the middle income category, yet my wife could always make good use of the family allowance. I had three boys and it was very seldom that she was able to buy a pair of shoes or some other item of clothing for the children without her having to take money from the family budget. These items were needed by the children and were well used. This sort of thing occurs right across the whole community. Yet this government wants to divide the people into the haves and have nots.

Not a day goes by that I do not receive a letter dealing with some problem in connection with the old age supplement. For example, someone has a burial fund which puts him over the limit. Although he does not have sufficient money to live on, since he has money put away to bury him, it means he cannot get the supplement. If the minister employs an additional 500 people to administer the program, how close is this going to come to carrying the total expenditure when you discount the amount received back through the income tax system, even as it is now? As you know, expenditure has a revolving effect, and it soon gets back into the taxation system. I should like to know whether the cost of the 500 people that are to be hired will exceed the savings that will be made.

Personally, I have always thought family allowances should be increased. I thought that it was a demogrant which served a purpose for the young people and in many cases gave them an equal opportunity. In my area two kinds of youngster go to high school. There are those from the depressed rural areas and there are those from the urban community. This small allowance made the difference whether they were able to dress so that they felt equal to other kids or were not. Although society has changed today, what has not changed is the requirement to make application for assistance if you are in need.

Whether you apply for the guaranteed income supplement, for veterans allowance or any other means tested program, there is a stigma attaching to it which a good many people are reluctant to accept. We have discarded universality in the case of the old age pensioner, and I hope we will not do so in regard to our young people today. The minister did not give the House one legitimate reason for not raising the payment from the $6 and $8 initially set to $15 and $18 instead of involving us in the complications of a computerized society and dividing people into categories.

The regulations that would be established to administer this complex and confusing program of youth maintenance will at the same time bring with them additional problems. I would have thought the minister would have given the House facts and figures instead of trying to make the argument that if you supported universality you were only concerned to give those in the middle income class, as he called it, those earning $7,000 and up, the rights they have had for a period of time when Canada's gross national product was considerably below what it is today. Certainly, today we are in a position to give our young people a decent and reasonable family allowance program at the levels indicated.

I hope those other members of the House in favour of universality, who have voted in the past for universality and have seen the merit of universality in Canada, will again vote to retain universality and will support not only this motion but the increase that is long overdue to the youth of this country.

POWER

EFFECTS OF JAMES BAY HYDROELECTRIC PROJECT

Mr. Speaker: Before recognizing the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose), perhaps the House would allow me a moment to refer to the motion made earlier today by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken) under the provisions of Standing Order 26.

The Chair indicated that consultations were to take place later on. These consultations have been proceeded with, and as a result it was suggested, and is now decided, that the debate should take place tomorrow afternoon at two o'clock.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

FAMILY INCOME SECURITY PLAN

MEASURE TO PROVIDE BENEFITS IN RESPECT OF CHILDREN

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Munro that Bill C-170, to provide for the payment of benefits in respect of children, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Lewis (p. 1448).

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, hon. members opposite need not fear that I shall prolong this debate. However, as an elected member I do feel I have an obligation to speak, on behalf of the people I represent, on this very important bill. I realize, of course, that at this stage of the debate the ground has been pretty thoroughly raked over and any convincing that might have been done of hon. members opposite has perhaps already been accomplished.

I, as I suppose are many other Canadians, am a little tantalized by the prospect of selectivity when the explanation for it is that we are going to deny this extra money to those who really do not need it and in turn use the money to benefit those who do. This would be a program that might bear some public support. On this basis the minister, through this particular legislation, is attempting to seek the approval of many Canadians who are concerned about what I consider to be faulty administration and lack of equity in some of the programs we have at the moment. However, after thinking the matter over I have rejected the concept of selectivity, though I admit its initial appeal, on the ground that the purity of the concept of universality—and I feel the same goes for the old age pensions—should not be tarnished in one area just because there is a lack of equity in another, namely in the field of taxation.

I think the argument goes something like this: Why should H. R. MacMillan or some other magnate get the old age pension? He does not need it because he has millions of dollars. The answer by members of this party has always been that if these benefits were applied on the basis of a means test, an application for old age pension or family allowances would be undignified and would label people as being poor, or at least unsuccessful. It is also suggested that we will get the money back in income tax in any event, and we will not have to employ an army of snoopers and bureaucrats. I believe that is the main argument in respect of universality as opposed to selectivity. The fact is that the affluent in our country have far more means at their disposal to avoid their fair share of equitable taxation than the poor. Therefore the argument of universality tends to break down because it is quite easy for these people to avoid taxation. I am certain that many members of the other place are quite familiar with the business of setting up dummy corporations, foundations and other kinds of financial manipulations to avoid taxation.

If you give $80 a month to "Mr. X", and I will not name any affluent individual as I am not personally acquainted with any, he will not pay it back in taxes. I was initially moved by the fact that we, in fact, have a tax structure and perhaps this was the way to get at the situation. I am no longer convinced of that because I do not think it is worth destroying the purity of the concept of universality and its efficiency just because some other area of government policy, particularly on taxation, happens to have some weaknesses in terms of equity. The so-called tax reform was rammed through at Christmas time, and has been criticized throughout the land by business, corporate and resource company interests. I do not think it nearly approaches the kind of equity proposed by the Carter Royal Commission on Taxation. It is interesting that within the same period of months, almost in the same breath, the government has moved towards selectivity in old age pensions and family allowances, and in terms of collecting money has moved toward universality. I have in mind the Unemployment Insurance Commission. The government has moved toward universality in the collection field and toward selectivity in the payment field. I consider this to be at least mildly anomalous.

An hon. Member: What about taking them off the income tax rolls?

Mr. Rose: Don't give me that boloney about cutting people off the income tax rolls. We argued about that for months. You know as well as I do that an increase in exemptions helps the affluent far more than it helps people at the poverty level. Do not try to confuse the House with that kind of nonsense and sophistry.

I have a great personal regard for the minister. We borrow cigarettes from one another behind the curtains. I know he is concerned about people and I thought he had a similar set of values to my own, being concerned with humanity. I always felt he chose to be a member of the government party in order to satisfy his political ambitions rather than on philosophical grounds. I felt he did this in order to be in a position to do things for people. I know he is concerned about medical training and the constitutional problems of getting the provinces to have three or four semesters per year in their universities in order to train doctors rather than steal them from other countries, as Canada usually does. I even suggested the setting up of medical centres in areas where there are no provinces, such as in the Yukon Territory. Perhaps he is so concerned he will make a proposal to abolish fees for medical services and put doctors on salaries such as we pay school teachers and parliamentarians. I am sure he is bold enough. He was recently described in Maclean's magazine as being pudgy and rumpled. In addition to being such a pleasant man, he is that way because he is working so hard. I am sure when he considered this legislation he went over it for hours and hours without rest. I think what happened to him was that he forgot his basic principles.

I am not going to speak any longer on this matter but will say in conclusion, and this is usually when I get some applause—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Even when you have to ask for it.

Mr. Rose: This particular policy is another example of increasing the burden of the middle income earner. The government is not assisting the man who is in the middle income group and, in order to support a family in that kind of middle class life style television leads us to believe most people in Canada and the United States enjoy, both parents have to work. The minister knows that many people do not enjoy that life style. Many of them in this social economic class find it necessary that both parents work. This is not a case of a wife having the right or wanting to work, but a case of her being required to work in order that her family may have a decent kind of living standard with provision for the education of her children.

Minimum wages are too low. Certainly, the organized worker is doing fine. Professional people in our society including doctors, lawyers, school teachers and professors are getting along all right. Many of the people in what we describe as the middle income group find it necessary that both parents work to achieve this standard of living. I oppose the legislation on the ground that it lacks universality and I support the amendment put forward by this party. I should like to conclude by saying that I am disappointed that we have been required in this House to deal with this kind of thing at all.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The question is on the amendment to the main motion. All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Call in the members.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Lewis), which was negatived on the following division:

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate has passed Bill C-78, an act respecting the use of the expression "Parliament Hill", with amendments, to which the concurrence of this House is desired.

[Mr. Speaker.]

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Speaker: Before the Chair calls it six o'clock it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose)—Industry—Action to avoid closing of Skil Corporation plant, Richmond, B.C.; the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis)—Industry—Action to avoid closing of Skil Corporation plant, Richmond, B.C.—Alternative employment for workers; the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St.Barbe (Mr. Marshall)—Industry—Pulp and paper—Closing of mills—Position of discussion with industry to overcome problem.

Is it the wish of the House that I now call it six o'clock?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair.

At 5.46 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CRIMINAL LAW AMENDMENT ACT, 1972

AMENDMENTS TO CRIMINAL CODE, CRIMINAL RECORDS ACT, NATIONAL DEFENCE ACT, PAROLE ACT AND VISITING FORCES ACT

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice) moved that Bill C-2, to amend the Criminal Code and to make related amendments to the Criminal Code 1967 Amendment Act, the Criminal Records Act, the National Defence Act, the Parole Act and the Visiting Forces Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the bill before us is another step in the program of the government in continuing law reform. The origin of this program lies with the omnibus criminal law amendment bill which was introduced into this House on December 21, 1968, by the then minister of justice, the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). When this bill had passed into law it was regarded as a landmark by the legal profession in Canada and as a step in the developing process of law reform. Since that enactment we have seen continuing progress under my predecessor as minister of justice with the legislation of the bill on hate propaganda, the Bail Reform Act, Canada

Evidence Act amendments, and along with the bill now before us we have on the order paper a bill in regard to the invasion of privacy.

In all of these moves to amend the law we have been conscious of the view that there is an important distinction between law and morality, that not everything which some of us may regard as wrong or undesirable need be included within the prohibitions of the law. The law does not have to interfere in everything that is regarded as wrong: it need not be overzealous in this regard.

The legal system is designed to assist in the promotion of order but, of course, the promotion of order itself is desirable because of the freedom which it allows us as citizens in society. Order is important for our freedom, for the free exercise of our rights and for the enjoyment of life itself. The legal system promotes that order.

The order which we are talking about is not brought about by law enforcement alone. Law enforcement is important and we must not lose sight of the importance of the quality of the law enforcement process. That is vital. But order in our legal system is brought about, as well, by the reasonableness of the law inducing a willing compliance on the part of members of our society who see how the legal system means to provide order and how that order means to provide for their freedom.

For far too long we went without any very quick responsiveness on the part of our legislators when the law was seen to lag behind and when it was seen by many who knew it best to fail in providing reasonable solutions. It failed to do that because we seemed never to be able to give adequate attention to the question of reform and improvement of our law in the face of what some thought were more pressing problems of economics or other practical matters.

It has been the performance of this government, and it is my pledge as Minister of Justice, to provide quick action where changes in the legal system are seen to be necessary. To this end we have been improving the ability of the government, and the abilities of others have been improving at the same time, to study what changes should take place so that we can react to studied suggestions for reform. The formation of the Law Reform Commission has been an important step in this regard.

We have seen the growing strength of research in our universities and in our faculties of law across the country as well as in the Department of Justice. From these we may expect increased research and examination of the legal system, with recommendation where it may fail to provide that reasonable order to which I have referred. The bill before us contributes to the process of reform in part by establishing new offences in an attempt to secure a higher level of order through their existence. At the same time, this bill responds in other ways to views about where the law need not be and where we have been out of date in our application of either offences or procedures.

In the area of new offences, the bill before us establishes the offence of hijacking by that name and the related offences of endangering the safety of aircraft in flight and the taking onto aircraft of offensive weapons without authorization. Some of these matters may have been dealt with under existing law in other ways but here we deal with them explicitly.

In the establishment of these offences we have ratified the convention on the unlawful seizure of aircraft which was signed at The Hague on December 16, 1970, and the Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Acts Against the Safety of Civil Aviation signed at Montreal on September 23, 1971. Among the new offences is included the offence of disturbing the peace in relation to apartment dwellings. Protection has been available to those who live in houses in the traditional style and this protection is now extended to those who live in apartments. In a slightly different legal category we propose to treat as prime facie evidence of an offence the obliteration of serial numbers of motor vehicles, for more effective enforcement of law in that area.

There is also, under this bill, the introduction of an offence for the turning in of false fire alarms. This has been the subject of bills placed before the House, most recently by the hon. member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) who withdrew his bill in this session when we tabled for first reading Bill C-2 which is now before us.

The bill removes certain offences and punishments from the law. Corporal punishment is removed in its entirety from the Criminal Code of Canada. We have not used very much this particular form of punishment in Canada in recent years and there has been a growing feeling that it should not have a place in our system at all. This is not to say that corporal punishment in other places and in other situations does not have its role, but we feel that in the penal system, in the penitentiaries and prisons it is out of place and undesirable as a technique for deterrence or punishment.

We have removed, as well, the offence of attempted suicide, again on the philosophy that this is not a matter which requires a legal remedy, that it has its roots and its solutions in sciences outside of the law and that certainly deterrent under the legal system is unnecessary.

The offence of vagrancy, which to this day has been applied in many different ways in the legal system, is modified very significantly. Here we have an offence which has been applied differently to the rich and to the poor in our society and we propose to move against this difference in application. There will be some who will feel that it has served useful purposes, but the question is whether when it served those purposes it was being fair to those who were caught up in it.

I believe that if we must find better ways of strengthening enforcement, we must do so in ways which are more equitable, and we have applied that principle under this legislation. In citing this change I liken the move to action which has been taken with regard to bail reform to which I referred earlier. Here, too, we recognized certain risks which the change entails, risks in regard to law enforcement and perhaps additional difficulties for our law enforcement officers. Yet the changes are necessary in order to try in some way to attain greater fairness in our law as applied to the privileged and to those who are less privileged, to the rich and to the poor. This is an ideal which we must always keep before us. It is not one easy of attainment; it is not one which we should expect to attain very soon, but it should be a goal toward which we move.

Several other changes in the bill before us deal with matters of distinction which exist in our present criminal law as between men and women and which are increasingly under attack today. Less important among these, no doubt, is the change in the vagrancy section relating to soliciting: more important is the change which will mean that in the area of criminal law the responsibility of serving on juries should apply equally to men and women. This accords with the following view expressed in the report of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women:

> We see no reason why women should not in all cases carry the same responsibility to perform this important duty as men.

In the area of criminal law which is open to us in our jurisdiction we will make the change in this bill which renders equal treatment a fact. Another important area included in the bill relates to sentencing. First of all, we propose to put into the hands of judges and magistrates the power to give an absolute or conditional discharge to persons who either plead guilty or are found guilty by them. This means, of course, that the offender will not be convicted. This means that in certain cases, particularly of young offenders who have transgressed in a technical way without in any malicious sense having attempted to injure society, the judge or magistrate is given the power to use this approach instead of rendering a suspended sentence which might otherwise have been the next least severe penalty available to him.

Power to grant a conditional discharge will allow judges and magistrates discretion in dealing with cases where a certain course of conduct may be desirable as a result of the actions of the young offender. This may be particularly relevant in cases of simple transgression such as the simplest of drug offences. The key to how this power is used will be the way in which the judges and magistrates apply it. We are very conscious of our responsibility to help them understand the scope of their power and to promote a uniform and enlightened approach throughout the country. The judicial council, which is another new body available, will have an important role to play in helping to ensure that uniformity and understanding of this power is available to magistrates and judges.

Further discretion is given to magistrates and judges by two clauses of the bill which allow for intermittent sentencing. In sentences of up to 90 days imprisonment, the judge may impose the sentence intermittently so that if he sees the possibility of allowing the convicted person to maintain a job while serving his sentence over a longer period, he can so arrange it. We have all too often seen cases of persons convicted where the fall-out effects of the sentence, loss of job and serious economic hardship for family of the offender, far exceed the simple sentence itself. This may be more often avoided if the judge has power to make sentences intermittent so that the offender may hold his job, support his family, and also serve his sentence. In the same way, in the case of suspensions for driving we propose to allow the judge or magistrate to suspend sentence intermittently, recognizing the fact that in certain cases a man's driver's licence is itself a source of livelihood. The punishment in such a case is of a different level, a different magnitude than in the ordinary case where this principle does not apply. The judge may take this into consideration as he imposes the penalty.

We do, in this bill, increase the penalties which may be applied in cases of obstruction of police and obstruction of justice, recognizing thereby the serious nature of some of the offences which can occur under these heads. At the same time, we provide for an alternative for summary conviction proceedings because the range of action, the kind of activity which may be involved under this offence is so broad that in certain cases the lesser penalty or lower-keyed approach is appropriate.

We also propose to provide for an appeal from conviction for contempt of court. Heretofore these appeals lay in respect of sentence only. This has been seen as a gap in the law which should both be fair and seen to be fair in dealing with persons who offend or are held to offend in this fashion. We also propose to impose a clear duty under the criminal law upon jurors to hold secret the content of their deliberations. Such disclosure by jurors has in some jurisdictions—far less in ours—brought the system into serious question and we propose to move against it in this fashion.

These changes, Mr. Speaker, represent further moves in the direction of trying to respond to the needs of today in our law, and in how our law may be viewed by people who are affected by it. As a new Minister of Justice I earnestly seek hon. members' support in carrying these changes into law. Perhaps even more importantly, I earnestly seek their support in developing further changes for equally rapid implementation into law.

In our day we can far less afford the delays which we have suffered in the past. It is more dangerous and less defensible to leave our legal system, our whole belief in the working of freedom, vulnerable to those who have a case against a particular rule when we have to agree with their case and should move to change the rule. Mr. Speaker, I urge hon. members, in that spirit, to embrace these changes, to quickly, after effective study, put them into our legal system and to work together in improving our criminal law and our legal system as a whole.

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, I suppose this could be called the night of the parliamentary splashdown, after several weeks of starting and stopping in this place as we took to ephemeral flights of fancy as to whether we were to be interrupted by the calling of a general election. We now, apparently, feel there is to be none and it is back to business at the old stand.

The Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) in his first major legislation in that capacity has given us quite a bag of changes in the criminal law. There are 75 clauses in the measure we are now considering and I suppose it could be said that there are at least two dozen principles on which we have to make a decision. I think I can set the hon. gentlemen's mind at rest on most of them. They will be examined, perhaps vigorously, in committee as to the technical nature of the language or as to the reason for change, but at least on the face of it they appear to merit being passed by parliament.

There are one or two, however, that raise serious doubt in my mind and I would like to present those to the House in this brief address. But first it must be said that the changes recognize that in Canada we have had a period of inflation. If one looks at clauses 23, 28, 29, 40 and 41 one finds that the dividing line between serious offences involving theft, and non-serious ones, which used to be $50, has now been raised to $200. So under "just society" inflation you have to steal four times as much before you get yourself into serious difficulty with the law.

Clause 11 recognizes, as the minister has pointed out, that we do live in the high-rise apartment age and if you are going to stand outside on a Saturday night, or any other night for that matter, hollering and making the night ring with your noise, you will pay the penalty for it. In this case the law is simply brought up to date to recognize that the dwellinghouse is not what it used to be.

My favourite, from the standpoint of change that causes a second glance, is the one in which you cannot report your own death. This has a Mark Twain element and this is why it appeals to me. This is made an offence, and if you commit it you are in difficulty with the law. But if you kill yourself, or attempt to kill yourself but do not succeed, you are not in difficulty with the law. In other words, if I should yell out, "I am going to kill myself by slashing my throat" and I slash my throat but do not kill myself, I can end up before a magistrate for making a false report.

Mr. Lang: Maybe you should carry through for a change.

Mr. McCleave: The moral of that is that if you do something in the just society, for heaven's sake be quiet about it. The other change that appeals to the whimsical in me is clause 14 which removes certain distinctions by which some people could live off the avails of prostitution and other people could not. The distinction that is being removed means that if a woman lives off the avails of male prostitution she can now be brought into court and dealt with as pitilessly as if a male had been brought into court for living off the avails of female prostitutes, a distinction that perhaps the recent Bird royal commission had not thought about. Nevertheless, an advantage that had been given to the female criminal has been removed. Several hon. members around me think this is a noble victory for man's liberation. I cannot say I disagree with this provision but there are some measures that I think that will receive our support.

I think the various provisions in this bill which would eliminate whipping as a punishment are correct. This was the conclusion reached by the committee which dealt with this matter almost two decades ago. When I spoke on the same matter in this House about ten years ago, after examining the case in some detail, I felt that it was not a useful measure and should not be part of the law. The hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald), who has been promoting the abolition of whipping since 1967, will no doubt take part in this debate to approve the steps taken by the government. I see no tangible benefits that can be derived from the retention of such punishment, so I welcome its abolition.

Putting the summer joyrider in a boat on almost the same footing as the man who mixes alcohol and driving is a most welcome provision. The changes that would enable the court to deprive the driver of his off-work privileges but enable him to drive to earn his living make sense. I presume the intermittent serving of sentences means serving them on weekends, and this makes sense. It also makes sense to put women in the same position as men with regard to jury duty.

The court of appeal provisions regarding contempt, together with what I gather is an element of parole to be introduced into the courts which mete out punishment also make sense and should have been enacted earlier. Perhaps this will be a good step toward a different attitude to parole. I have often felt that the present system tends to downgrade the function of the judge who metes out punishment and must consider whether such punishment is for the purpose of protecting society. So there is an element of progress in this proposal. I support it and I hope it is a forerunner of further improved measures.

There are some issues on which I have doubts, however, Mr. Speaker. At first glance I thought the elimination of vagrancy as an offence was a great step forward. To arrest a person simply on the grounds of his or her being poor and without means of support was a degradation by society of that person and of itself. I thought it was something that could, and I am sure has been, used by the police to take a person out of circulation even without a crime being committed. The minister and I are on the same side on this one and it would take very compelling evidence that vagrancy is a weapon that can be properly used by the police to make me consider changing my mind. By "very compelling evidence" I do not mean just expediency, where vagrancy is useful in rounding up people in order to find out who committed a crime! I would not agree with that.

Doubts are also raised by clause 62 which deals with a stay of summary conviction. I wonder whether this could not be used as a substitute for the old vagrancy section in the Criminal Code and whether it would not enable police to detain people and eventually obtain a stay of proceedings against them. Such a stay now exists for indictable offences, but this measure would extend to summary convictions. I give the minister notice that I shall ask a considerable number of questions in order to determine how this power will be exercised.

I am told by critics outside the House that in British Columbia the present method of stay of indictable proceedings had led to a great number of prejudicial actions by the Crown, that it facilitates arbitrary arrests, jailing and fingerprinting or even suppression of public disclosure and nothing ever comes out in court. Eventually the accused is freed, but in the meantime he has undergone an unpleasant experience. If I thought clause 62 was a substitution for the elimination of vagrancy from the code, I would certainly want to make a different type of speech on third reading than I am making now. As it is, I indicate to the minister that he must be prepared to defend this clause with all his resources when it comes to committee.

Clause 49 deals with disclosure of jury proceedings. I welcome it in the sense that it prevents jurors from being asked by the press during or after trial to disclose what is going on in what should be a confidential forum, the jury-room. I wonder whether this provision does not go too far. Perhaps there should be a limit, so that within five or ten years of a trial a juror could be allowed to report a reminiscence of what took place. For historical purposes perhaps it would be useful not to impose any penalty, but the imposition of a time limit would remove any difficulties which might be created by press sensationalism.

I should like to devote the balance of my remarks to the clauses which make the bill a matter of the utmost urgency. These clauses deal with air piracy, hijacking and the commission of offences in flight. These are of an urgent nature and I hope the bill will go to committee, if not by tomorrow, when our time will be limited, at least as early next week as possible. I can assure the minister that we in the opposition will deal with it as expeditiously as we can. The Canadian Air Lines Pilots Association have conveyed to us, as I am sure they have to the minister, that they consider time to be of the essence with regard to the air piracy clause.

This association has written to me that if they thought there was going to be any delay in the bill becoming law, the portion dealing with airline difficulties could be severed from the rest of the bill and dealt with. However, I think the bill as a whole can be dealt with expeditiously but I want the public record to note that this is one of the reasons we want to get at it. The pilots wrote as follows to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) during the time of the hijacking of an Air Canada aircraft:

> The recent spectacular hijacking of an Air Canada aircraft points out the need for immediate government action in this area.
> That a man carrying a veritable arsenal can board an aircraft unnoticed indicates a total lack of security measures.
> The Canadian Air Line Pilots Association urgently requests the Canadian government to implement effective security measures at all Canadian airports and terminals.
> Further delays in this matter cannot be tolerated.

I think we are all aware of the event to which this association refers. A person walked on to an airplane with a sawed-off shotgun and some 40 pounds of dynamite, and rather spectacular bravery by the captain of the plane eventually brought the man back to earth. One is entitled to ask whether the measures that are proposed in the omnibus Criminal Code bill before us are sufficient. Some argument can be made, and in fact was made in the Financial Post of August 21, 1971, about the pre-flight screening technique that has been used in the United States more than it has been used in Canada. I quote from that editorial:

> There have been an impressive 815 airport arrests as a result of a preflight screening technique that has been specially developed to pick out likely hijackers. While the eventual charges against those detained covered a wide range, 141 of those caught were actually carrying concealed deadly weapons.
> The transport association figures that in 1969 only 17.5 per cent of hijack attempts were thwarted. By 1970, as the system of preflight screening became better developed, they claim a hijack failure rate of 30.8 per cent. So far in 1971, 43.8 per cent of all attempted hijackings of U.S. airliners have been averted.

[Mr. McCleave.]

I think the Canadian public has conditioned itself to expect the strongest measures possible to deal with hijacking, including the preventive measures I have mentioned. It is not a pleasant experience to be subjected to a search outside an airplane. I am sure it has happened to most members in this chamber when bomb threats have been telephoned to airports. None the less, when you get into the air and look at that rather fragile metal cocoon surrounding you from the elements and great heights, you are happy that all measures have been taken to ensure that no infernal instrument has been brought on board which could put you into the great hereafter and the great beyond before you want to go there.

The minister and, I am sure, other ministers have received correspondence from a gentleman in Calgary, Mr. Van Wielingen. He has written to a sufficient number of people so his writings can really be classed as public documentation. I quote:

> During the first 10 months of this year I logged 72,021 air miles by commercial aircraft. Twenty-seven departures involved embarkations from Canadian international airports, 28 from U.S. airports, and six departures from airports outside of North America.
> In Canada, I was involved in one superficial metal-detector inspection at Vancouver International Airport in January, 1971. Notwithstanding considerable waiting time spent at numerous Canadian international airports, I never witnessed any checks whatsoever, although I had ample opportunity to do so if any had been conducted at those occasions.
> In the United States, I underwent nine inspections, several including thorough bodily inspections and detailed checking of carry-on luggage.
> On transoceanic flights I underwent three inspections.

Notwithstanding his experience, this man argued with various ministers and members of parliament for a more detailed inspection system for Canadian airlines and Canadian airports.

The hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) would normally be carrying the burden of this bill but he is on special assignment to the United Kingdom. However, I think it should be noted that he has presented a measure on air piracy as a private member's bill. Along with the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) and other members of the official opposition, he has consistently argued for quick dealing by Parliament of the legislation to implement the several international conventions dealing with the twentieth century crimes, as they must be called, of air piracy and hijacking of aircraft.

It has been two years since the Air Line Pilots Association met with the former minister of justice to argue for the fastest action possible. I suppose parliament really is not in tune with the jet age, because two years is a long time to wait for remedies. Now that we have embarked upon this legislation, hopefully we will get on with the job and before too many weeks have passed our law enforcement people will have something with which to deter or cut out altogether one of the sophisticated crimes of this era.

I think I have indicated to the minister areas where he can expect opposition and areas where he can expect support. I have tried to do this in the spirit of trying to make the Criminal Code as good and as enlightened an instrument as possible. We will deal further with it in committee.

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, I wish to preface my remarks by congratulating the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) on his appointment. I was delighted to hear him say he would take quick action with regard to the criminal law when and where changes seem necessary. If he adopts that philosophy, I think he will have the support of many members of the opposition.

Canada needs a more contemporary criminal law, one which is credible, enforceable, flexible and compassionate. If we are to have a just society, we must begin with just laws. Nowhere is this more important than in the realm of criminal law. It is here that the most fundamental values of life, liberty, dignity and property are to be protected and sanctioned. It is here that the measure of our commitment to these values will be tested.

The minister mentioned some of the reforms we have passed in this House in the past five years. He properly gave credit to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the now Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner). Probably most of that praise should go to the Minister of Finance. I will mention just a few of the reforms we have passed. There has been the abolition of capital punishment except in the case of the killing of prison guards and police officers. We have had the omnibus bill amending the Criminal Code which dealt with, especially, abortion and driving offences. We have had certain changes with regard to our drug laws and criminal records, and we have had the bail reform legislation. These changes were welcome and the changes in Bill C-2 are welcome. But they still fall far short of the ideal of a criminal law which is enforceable, flexible and compassionate. This is why the Minister of Justice mentioned the law reform commission. I think of the adversary system which the former minister of justice said was in many ways a myth. I think of the concept of mens rea. The minister mentioned sentencing procedures. I cannot help thinking of the important role judges must play in the future. I read in Karl Menninger's book "The Crime of Punishment" the following passage:

> The plight of the judge is worthy of special attention. He is usually the most intelligent individual in the system but he gets too little opportunity to use this intelligence. He must sit passively during the delivery of all sorts of mumbo-jumbo, striving to get some idea of the situation from poorly organized, tendentious stories. His observations are interrupted repeatedly by ritualistic trivialities, and he comes at last to the chore of selecting archaic medieval remedies for the treatment of an acute social and personal problem.

I should also like to quote the words Mr. G. K. Chesterton attributed to a judge passing sentence:

> I sentence you, prisoner at the bar, to three years' penal servitude in the firm and God-given conviction that what you really require is three weeks at the seaside.

This underlines the importance of studying in depth sentencing procedures which prevail. A widely shared attitude toward the criminal law today is what one might call a law and order approach; the attitude is one which is punitive, coercive and retributive. We must develop a system based on a reformative approach—reformative, educative and rehabilitative.

When I read a summary in the Toronto Star of the speech the minister gave before the graduating class at Osgoode Hall I was left with the uneasy feeling that he was taking the law and order approach. He spoke legalistically, almost impersonally. I hope this is not what he intended because in my view it is necessary, as I say, that he take an approach which is reformative and rehabilitative. When I see provision made for increases in penalties with respect to certain offences, I again become apprehensive that the law and order approach is the one being taken. I hope I am wrong.

I was encouraged by the remarks the minister made this evening outlining his philosophy and I am sure he was sincere when he told us he would take quick action to make changes where changes appear to be necessary. At this point I should like to add that the Solicitor General (Mr. Goyer) appears to be adopting a reformative approach. There has been no criticism from members of my party of his action in arranging special leave for prisoners or his proposal to place certain inmates of corrective institutions in the homes of senior citizens as part of a program for their rehabilitation. I hope this attitude continues to prevail and I hope the Minister of Justice adopts a similar attitude.

The Minister of Justice comes to this House with many academic distinctions. He is now being tested on the basis of his practical experience as it relates to the law. I am sure he will be able to apply his academic experience to practical concerns and evolve progressive measures as a result of total exposure to all these issues. The first criticism I wish to direct to the Minister of Justice concerns the title of the measure we are considering—the title Criminal Code. The Solicitor General attempted to bring forth a bill called the young offenders act in substitution for the Juveniles Delinquents Act. Many of us thought it should not be called the young offenders act but the children and young persons act. Maybe we have reached a stage at which we could put aside the words Criminal Code and replace them with more appropriate wording. Speaking off the top of my head, I would suggest "the adult persons act". After all, many of the offences mentioned in the code are not criminal in the real sense of that word. I have in mind offences such as vagrancy, attempted suicide, prostitution and the possession of drugs such as Arthur Maloney, the noted criminal lawyer, described as crimes without victims. Surely they do not belong in the Criminal Code. I think it is time we realized that the origin of many of these offences is social; that many of these problems are social rather than criminal in nature.

Bill C-2 is omnibus in its nature and we in the New Democratic Party give general approval to the measures proposed. At the same time, we hope we can put forward constructive criticism. The first suggestion I would make has to do with consultation on a national scale—consultation with attorneys general of the various provinces, police officers, parole and probation officials, law professors, criminologists and last but not least inmates of correctional institutions. I believe that before we implement Bill C-2 these people should be called before a committee to give the minister and his officials the benefit of the experience they have acquired over the years and, on this basis, to voice their criticisms of the provisions before us.

Ottawa University, speaking on a program called "Viewpoint" said that recommendations which were set forth by inmates of Kingston penitentiary in the early thirties have now, in 1972, been fully implemented. Surely it is time we were given the benefit of a broad range of views on this important bill so that we may use them as a basis for improving the code. There has been no consultation on a national scale in connection with the provisions of Bill C-2 and I hope the minister will see to it that the experience and expertise I have mentioned is made available to the committee.

Bill C-2 makes provision for between 15 and 20 changes. Some of them are substantive in their effect upon the law, others are procedural and consequential in nature. I intend to deal with some of these matters and my hon. friends will deal with other aspects. The first subject I should like to deal with concerns aircraft piracy which is dealt with in clauses 3 and 6 having to do with offences committed on aircraft, hijacking and offences endangering the safety of aircraft in flight, rendering aircraft incapable of flight and the offence of taking onto an aircraft weapons and explosive substances. These changes have arisen out of the Convention on the Suppression of Acts of Unlawful Seizure of Aircraft signed at The Hague on December 16, 1970, and the Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Acts against the Safety of Civil Aviation signed at Montreal in 1971.

The law affecting piracy of aircraft and related offences is international in nature and scope. Its application and enforcement is dependent upon the acceptance of international treaties and conventions. Most countries have realized that the safety of innocent passengers in flight far transcends political motives and acts, and that hijacking cannot be excused as a political action. I should note that the Canadian delegation played a very active role at the conference in promoting a generally acceptable treaty and was particularly instrumental in securing the adoption of strong prosecution provisions. It therefore makes us realize that the job now is to make the treaties international in scope. At the first convention only 55 countries attended, and in view of the many countries there are in the world the support of a great many more is needed.

It has been said that there is also the necessity for strengthening security at airports. I think that all of us would want to congratulate captain Vern Ehman and purser John Arpin for the courageous and constructive action they took regarding the attempted hijacking at Calgary. I think we owe them and other pilots and crew personnel the duty to make sure that this law becomes operative and to make the strengthening of security at airports far stronger than it is at present. Therefore, we of the New Democratic Party support the measures dealing with piracy of aircraft.

The second main area I should like to deal with is corporal punishment. The amendments indicate the number of crimes that carried with them corporal punishment as part of the sentence. May I remind the House that it was in March, 1969, that the Ouimet report came forth, which studied the criminal law in depth. Many recommendations were made in the report and I should like to refer to page 207 where the following appears:

[Mr. Gilbert.]

The committee deems it necessary to record and deplore the fact that corporal punishment may lawfully be included as part of a sentence imposed by a Canadian court. Despite the fact that sentences of whipping are rarely imposed by present-day courts, the emphasis on liability to be whipped in the Criminal Code presents an astonishing anachronism.

Then further on:

The committee considers that the imposition of such punishment is brutal and degrading both to the recipient and the person imposing it.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, the committee recommended the abolition of corporal punishment, and I must congratulate the minister for incorporating this recommendation into the provisions of Bill C-2. It is not only corporal punishment as part of a sentence with which we must concern ourselves, but corporal punishment in regard to disciplinary action in penitentiaries. At page 323 of the Ouimet report there is reprinted some evidence given before the Standing Committee on Legal Affairs on November 25, 1968, by the commissioner of penitentiaries. I directed a question to him as follows:

Mr. Commissioner, I would like to direct other questions to you with regard to corporal punishment—

MR. MACLEOD: —As far as institutional corporal punishment is concerned, it cannot now be imposed in an institution without the specific approval of the commissioner of penitentiaries. Of course, we have very elaborate regulations governing the manner in which it is to be imposed. No more than ten officers can be present. The prison psychiatrist or medical doctor must be there; the warden or deputy warden must be there. The punishment can be stopped at any time by the doctor or the psychiatrist or the warden or deputy warden. Of course, the only problem with making rules about corporal punishment is that the more humane you try to make them, the less humane the operation looks in the end result. My own feeling is that the tendency is for it to go into disuse as a possible prison punishment, and, of course, when that happens then presumably the regulations in the act will reflect the practice.

Then I asked:

In other words, you would not have any objection if I brought forth an amendment to repeal that particular section?

Mr. MacLeod replied:

I would not, no. As a judicial punishment, it is remarkable that it is reserved under the Criminal Code for offences that involve the use of violence or the threat of violence by the offender. Our people seem to think that it may have a useful short-term benefit if it is imposed on an offender but ultimately, society reaps more violence from him than it inflicted upon him.

They were the comments made by the former commissioner of penitentiaries. This week the Solicitor General appeared before the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs and when I asked him about the use of corporal punishment in institutions he said that he was opposed to it. When I put the same question to the present commissioner of penitentiaries, he was certainly ambivalent with regard to it. I ask the Minister of Justice to join with the Solicitor General in his view of the use of corporal punishment as a disciplinary measure in penitentiaries and to make the appropriate amendment to the requisite acts to do away with it. When a committee says it is degrading, inhumane and that society reaps more violence by its infliction, it is time we took action.

The amendments abolishing vagrancy regarding prostitutes are also welcome and in keeping with the recommendations made in the report on the status of women. I am sure that the Minister of Justice and others recall the Wolfenden report in England where this problem was studied in depth and many recommendations were made. At page 370 of the report on the status of women the following appears:

> In the words of the Wolfenden report, prostitution "... has persisted in many civilizations through many centuries and the failure of attempts to stamp it out by repressive legislation shows that it cannot be eradicated through the agency of criminal law." The Prevost commission indicated that the public did not favour the punishment of prostitutes even though it considered prostitution morally wrong. Briefs presented to the commission pointed out that prostitution is fundamentally a social, not a criminal, problem.

Therefore, it was recommended that the appropriate sections of the code dealing with prostitution under the vagrancy provisions be repealed. I note that in the bill a new offence is made of soliciting prostitution. I ask the minister to consider the recommendation made in the report on the status of women, that this offence should more properly be dealt with by bringing a charge under the disturbing the peace section.

I have found that it has been unfair in many cases where a prostitute is charged under the act because very often inmates of the bawdy house are not charged. This creates an unfair situation between the persons participating, more especially the male participants. It would be far better to lay a charge of disturbing the peace than soliciting for prostitution. I thought the minister was quite right in saying that the vagrancy provisions in the code create a difference between treatment of the rich and the poor.

The next area I should like to deal with is that of attempted suicide. It is rather remarkable that we in Canada are now getting to the position where we want to abolish the offence of attempted suicide, particularly when we think of England which abolished it in 1961. They said this was done after many years of resistance. Of course, relatively few persons are affected directly by this provision; the number of persons convicted for this offence last year, before repeal, was only 460. Twenty-one of them were sentenced to prison for periods of between three and six months.

The study also indicates that the arguments which were used for and against repeal are still instructive. Very few of those who defended the old law which punished suicide attempts did so on the ground that suicide was harmful to others or to society in general. Nor was the argument often heard that the law prevented suicide through fear of punishment. The main argument was that even if the law was ineffective through its sanction, the retention of attempted suicide as a crime sustained and reinforced the moral and religious condemnation of it; consequently, repeal of the law would weaken this condemnation and cause moral opinion to move in a permissive direction. That was said in 1961 in England. Now we are taking the same human approach with regard to the problem of attempted suicide and we are placing it more in the field of a medical and social problem rather than a criminal one.

The next area with which I should like to deal involves driving while disqualified and the prohibition part of Bill C-2. As you know from your experience as a lawyer, Mr. Speaker, the present law imposes serious hardship on an accused and his family if the accused requires his motor vehicle to earn a living. I am thinking of truck drivers, taxi drivers and travelling salesmen. The new law modifies this hardship, and we welcome it.

It is rather striking that the Scandinavian approach with regard to drunken driving has made this offence almost non-existent in those countries because of the sureness, swiftness and severity of the prohibition that is so well known by the people. When I think of the number of people who are killed and maimed, I believe we probably have to reconsider some of the driving charges where drink is involved. I welcome this change in the case where disqualification or prohibition would directly affect the earning power of the person involved.

The hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave), pointed out the changes in respect of theft, namely, the change from $50 to $200. This certainly indicates the inflation factor but at the same time it points out the necessity for change. The next area I should like to deal with is that covering the broadening jurisdiction of the courts in respect of offences. It is now proposed that the offences of bribery, rape, attempted rape, manslaughter and causing death by negligence will be tried not only by the supreme court but also by the county court. This raises the question of the absence of murder and treason and I should like to put the minister on notice to give his reasons for making that change and not including the offences of murder and treason in giving both the supreme court and county court jurisdiction.

The question of jurisdiction raises the problem of whether we should use the English approach, where they have specialized courts dealing with criminal law, divorce, chancery matters and so forth, or whether we should merge the present supreme court and county courts, having them act as a unit covering all offences. I think I would be fair in saying that at the moment the only difference between the county court and the supreme court is really a question of quantum. We should give some attention to the merging of the county and supreme courts.

The Minister of Justice waxed eloquent with regard to the changes concerning conditional and absolute discharge, and I thought he was right in doing so, and taking a great step forward from the approach of suspended sentence to that of conditional or absolute discharge. This is a giant step forward. I was happy to see that not only if a person pleads guilty, but when a person is found guilty and a conviction is registered we will give the judge discretion to grant an absolute or a conditional discharge if it is in the best interest of the accused and is not contrary to the public interest. The result will be that in time the offence will be deemed not to have been committed.

One may ask why we have advanced from the suspended sentence approach to the conditional or absolute discharge approach. We have experienced so many convictions, more especially convictions affecting the children of middle and upper income groups, that the government was bound to act in this matter. It had the same problem when we brought forward the Criminal Records Act, because many sons and daughters of rich people found that the restrictions of a conviction, in regard to employment, travel and bonding, were too severe. Therefore we brought in amendments to the Criminal Records Act.

I would assume this to be one of the underlying reasons we are bringing forward this amendment. I do not justify it on those grounds but on the ground that it will affect all persons who are charged. I thought the minister was quite right in saying it grants a tremendous discretion to judges. It imposes upon him as Minister of Justice the job of selecting as judges men who are enlightened and have in mind the reformative and rehabilitative rather than the punitive and coercive aspect. If we get that type of person acting as a judge, applying attitudes of reformation and rehabilitation, I hope he will not be influenced by any difference in income or status of young persons who appear before him. If he is not, then we will have taken a giant step forward in respect of this problem.

Mr. Speaker, the minister was quite right in saying that another advance has been made in the inclusion of the provision regarding the serving of intermittent sentences. How many times has a man lost his job, having received a short sentence of jail or reformatory. The loss of his job has affected the security and the happiness of his family. The provision for the intermittent serving of sentences where the sentence does not exceed 90 days is a welcome step forward and I hope that judges will use it frequently in sentencing. It will enable a person to hold his job and to retain contact with his family. It is a step in the right direction.

I said at the beginning of my speech that Canada needs a criminal law which is credible, forcible, flexible and compassionate. I said that we have not gone the full distance but we are moving in that direction. The Minister of Justice said that he seeks the support of the members of this House in making changes to the criminal law. He can be told that he has our support because this matter far transcends political parties and necessitates the co-operation, participation and partnership of all of us to ensure that we develop a system of penology which is consistent with attitudes of reform and rehabilitation and is credible, forcible, flexible and compassionate.

We in this party support the provisions of this bill and I hope we can bring forward constructive criticism when the bill is referred to the standing committee.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to be able to make a few comments on this bill. First I want to congratulate the minister on his new appointment. I congratulate him also on the fact that he has been able to introduce as his first substantial measure this very excellent bill amending the Criminal Code. The high quality of the speeches of my friends the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave) and the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert) has been an indication that the spirit of the House with regard to these matters is not, and should not be partisan.

There is a reasonable approach, not only by members of the House who are members of the bar and have practised the law but by members who have an interest in this matter. It is an indication of their earnest sincerity in their attempt to improve the quality of our laws. The minister had to carry a heavy burden in his previous portfolio. If I were speaking on matters having to do with his previous responsibility, I could not congratulate him. But this is a reward for a minister who has laboured hard and zealously. He still has the burden of the blind goddess in one hand and the sack of wheat in the other. I think it is bound to cramp his style to some extent.

I will not go into the details of the bill, with the exception of one issue on which I will make a few general comments. I notice there is an amendment in the bill with regard to the breathalyzer test. When the minister responds, I wonder whether he would give an indication with regard to the situation which exists so far as concerns various judicial decisions which have been made. How does the breathalyzer provision stand now, to what extent is it valid, what is the status of some of the appeals, and when will there be an authoritative decision from the Supreme Court of Canada?

I was following this matter with interest but work has prevented my continuing to do so. Perhaps the minister will be able to indicate that there have been settlements. My understanding is that there have been some successful challenges to the legislation. I think there was one decision which validated it and a more recent decision which invalidated it because of certain facts. I know that the former minister of justice did have some problems there and perhaps the minister will be able to bring us up to date.

I do not wish to deal with particular issues. My hon. and learned friend, the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants, has indicated our approach. We will examine the proposed amendments with care and be prepared to make suggestions as to changes from time to time. However, I want to make one or two general observations and suggestions to the minister. I know that we have a law reform commission. I know there are some professionally trained people in his office. But I think, Mr. Speaker, that it would not be without benefit if the standing committee of the House, in addition to the excellent work it does—and I only regret that I am not able to be a member of it as I used to be—had a general observing jurisdiction to deal not only with legislation which comes before it, not only with private members' bills which may be referred to it, but to look at the question of criminal law reform.

This committee would work in consultation with the officials of the minister's department, with members of the judiciary, with the respective attorneys general and their officers and with members of the bar, so that there may well be an opportunity for legislation, not to be initiated—I know the responsibility for initiation of legislation is that of the government—but to be studied by members of the House who are probably in more continuous and closer contact with members of the public. I refer particularly to those members of the committee who when they are at home or travelling in other parts of Canada are bound to pay close attention to observations and discussions about the state of the criminal law and the feelings of people, and are bound to be influenced by the impact of the criminal law upon the people of Canada.

They might well act through the committee or subcommittee in making suggestions to the minister and to the House about changes in the law.

I realize that the minister's department has a very heavy responsibility. There are problems with regard to drafting legislation, and the complexities of the legislative system under which we now live place a heavy onus on the government. It is not easy any more to find people of the professional status which is desirable. Without in any sense qualifying the value to the country and to the government of the officials in the minister's department, there is a substantial role to be played by the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs in being engaged in a continuous examination of the effects of the necessary changes in, and the proposals in respect of, the criminal law and its administration in Canada. It would not constitute an alternative but a supplement to the functions which are exercised by the other groups which I have mentioned.

I also want to make a comment on the statement made by the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) at the time when the minister's predecessor called a national conference on law, in January. In reading that I was particularly struck by what the Prime Minister said about the adversary system. I believe in the adversary system. I say this because it struck me that the Prime Minister at that time was rather inclined to take the position that there is some merit, if not immediately in dispensing with that system then at least in moderating it.

Through the ages, both in the House and in the courts of this country, in fact in the courts of all civilized countries, it has been through the medium of the adversary system that we have come closer to an approximation of the truth. There is nothing more calculated to bring out the true facts than a witness being called to give testimony in public, standing up before a man accused of a criminal offence and in front of the public being cross-examined under the keen eye and scrutiny of an experienced judge, knowing he is going to be cross-examined by counsel for the other side.

There is nothing more calculated to permit a court to arrive at the truth which is so essential to try to bring about, not judicial perfection—we do not get that—but the closest thing to it which is possible under our system. I will be fair and admit that the Prime Minister's statements were somewhat ambiguous, but I felt at the time that it was essential that someone should take the position that it is not proper, that it will not be adequate and will do a great deal of harm for us to suggest that the adversary system should be abolished either in this House or in the courts of the land. There may be some changes made, yes—but abolition, no. We change, of course. When I was younger in the practice of law I liked nothing better than a good fight. I have now moderated. I approach my duties at the bar as I do in this House, with the moderation and ease which I think are essential.

If I may, I will illustrate that by a story. Many years ago when I was a great deal younger than I am now, the first case I ever had in the appellate division in Alberta involved a young woman who had come up into the Peace River country, taken up with a homesteader and was living with him. She persuaded him, by measures which I leave to the knowledge of hon. members who are knowing in the ways of human nature, to give her a half section of land. Ultimately their liaison terminated; she left, and he came to me to bring an action to get the land back. I was successful in the court in the first instance and he got the land back, but she appealed. As this was my first appeal, I had memorized my peroration to the court of appeal: "My Lords, it is a terrible thing that this young and attractive woman should be able to seduce this poor old man of 60 and take his land away from him."

Just as I said this, I knew I had said the wrong thing because the chief justice was 88 and in fact all the judges were over 75. There was a pause in the court. These five white heads drew together and then the chief justice said to me, "Mr. Baldwin, how old are you?" I admitted to the tender age of 26. He then said, "It isn't relevant to this case, but it is our opinion that at 61 you are not senile and it is just as pleasant to be seduced at 61 as it is at 26." Having now come close to 60, Mr. Speaker, I know what he meant. We do change; our approach is a little different. I may not be as eager for the adversary system as I once was, but I say that there is a limit to which the system can be changed.

I want to close on this note, Mr. Speaker. I have spent all my professional life defending people in the criminal courts. Now I have changed and I am defending taxpayers from the government. But it is very much the same thing. The fact is that I believe in reform; I believe in moderation; I believe in the sanctity of the individual first. However, I want to issue a warning that we are now moving in our society on this continent and in many other parts of the civilized world into a situation where because of conditions that exist in large metropolitan areas there is a strong movement, in some cases represented by undesirable elements—a genuine movement, and it is not an organized movement—toward a greater degree and need for stability in our society, stability in our life, for the retention of the family as the pivot of our society.

That feeling will have a very considerable impact on the extent to which law reform is going to be brought about. I do not mean by that to suggest to the minister that he must from time to time take this into account. He need not ignore it. I point out that it is there and I say it is very important, because the extent to which we can move forward and make changes must be modified by the mores of our society. This is a fact of life that cannot be ignored. It is for this reason I have urged that the involvement of the standing committee, being composed of members of this House who have to seek election from time to time, would provide a very stabilizing and moderating influence on the type of law reform which we need from time to time in the Criminal Code.

Mr. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, in the few minutes left tonight I would like to make some comments on this bill. The bill contains many amendments that private members have requested for several years through private members' bills. Although we do not get many of our private members' bills passed, this government bill incorporates several of them and in a way constitutes a victory for all private members who persisted for years and years in putting forward their ideas.

This is a very humane bill, one which responds to many requests for justice by ordinary people. One matter in the bill that I raised in the House several times is that of aircraft hijacking. It is a question of great concern not only to the travelling public but to the airplane crews who have to fly day after day. Although the provisions of the bill are tough and comprehensive, their purpose is really to deter hijacking. As a matter of fact it is my opinion that the purpose of the criminal law is to deter, and if it cannot deter then it should be directed toward rehabilitation.

It is my hope that the provisions of this bill on hijacking will deter and reduce that problem. We know it is a complex problem. Its solution requires the co-operation of other countries. Canada, along with many other countries, has been trying to negotiate treaties which will help in the enforcement of these kinds of provisions. I am very pleased that the government has come forward with these anti-hijacking provisions.

There are other items in the bill which respond to the wishes of hon. members. There is the abolition of corporal punishment, whipping, and there is the clause concerning false fire alarms. Last year the hon. member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) introduced a private member's bill on this subject because a man in Montreal was killed as a result of a false fire alarm. This could be just as dangerous as many other crimes and could involve people in situations where their lives could be endangered, so we are also pleased to see this item. The item which provides for jury duty for women is one which was raised in parliament in recent years by the hon. senator from Fredericton. In the other place she introduced a motion to bring about this reform and she is very pleased to see it in the bill.

One of the outstanding reforms in the bill is the clause which deals with conditional or absolute discharge. A great many people believe that the deterrent effect of criminal justice can be achieved just as effectively by charging a person with an offence, bringing him before the courts and dismissing the charge without any criminal record once the accused has appeared before the judge. This will achieve a great deal because it is sometimes felt that penal institutions only serve to accentuate the criminal behaviour of inmates. I think we can achieve our purpose of criminal justice more effectively with provisions such as this, and I congratulate the minister.

Another reform awaited by many accused in this country is the one which permits the judge to make an order for the prohibition of driving at specified times and places. I know of two cases pending where the accused have requested postponement of their trials until passage of this bill. The individuals concerned need their licences in order to work. They are truck drivers and if they lose their licences they will lose their jobs. This will cause a lot of unnecessary hardship. The provision which allows a judge to take away a licence for specified periods of time, say weekends or evenings, is much better.

[Mr. Allmand.]

I hope the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) will deal with another matter which concerns me. That is the provision of legal counsel to people accused of criminal offences. I hope the government will introduce a plan to assist accused persons with legal aid. Ontario has a complete system of legal aid and Quebec has proposed a system which I do not believe is as good as that of Ontario. But a legal aid system for criminal justice right across the country should be introduced soon.

Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the minister and the government for bringing forward this bill which incorporates so many of the ideas put forward by private members.

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I want to make reference only to two matters in the bill at this stage. I have been critical of the slow pace of change made by the government in implementing the recommendations contained in the report of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women, but two of those recommendations are embodied in this new legislation. Reference has been made to both this evening but I want to take a moment to speak about them.

The vagrancy section has been repealed. This was recommended in the section of the commission's report entitled "Women under the Criminal Code". The investigations of the commission showed real sex discrimination in the vagrancy section. When pressed by the public, the authorities have tried to clear the streets of prostitutes. However, many of the so-called prostitutes were not arrested for prostitution at all, but for vagrancy. Men were never picked up for vagrancy and consequently there was discrimination in the code. The commission recommended that section 164(1)(c) of the Criminal Code be repealed. This has been done, and I think the minister has gone even further by making the section relating to soliciting equally binding on men and women. This is a very welcome change in the code.

The hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand) has referred to the matter of women on jury service. It was a recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that women should be given exactly the same conditions of jury service.

May I call it ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Minister of Justice what the business of the House will be until one o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I believe it is the intention to continue with this item, followed by Bill C-6.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

INDUSTRY—ACTION TO AVOID CLOSING OF SKIL CORPORATION PLANT, RICHMOND, B.C.

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, in rising to participate in the debate tonight I could probably just as well read the speech I made on June 22, 1970, because it dealt with precisely the same matter. I think it has identical implications and concerns the closing of a Canadian subsidiary of an American corporation that was once an independent Canadian company.

I am dealing with the problem faced by people who are employees of the Skil Corporation which purchased the Canadian Chainsaw Company located in Richmond, British Columbia, in the constituency of my good friend the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond-Delta (Mr. Goode). I do not quite understand why I am called upon from time to time to take up his case, Mr. Speaker: this is the second time in two years, and we have yet to hear publicly from the member who represents that constituency. If he is not particularly interested in this problem I should like to indicate that other members from British Columbia are and think it is worth while.

I asked a question of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) on March 21 relating to the closing of this plant with the subsequent loss of from 125 to 150 jobs for Canadians. The ostensible reason for the plant closure was that there existed in the United States excess plant capacity to produce these chainsaws under Canadian patent. They will be produced in Chicago and imported into Canada.

I think this case is particularly significant. It indicates the general trend and problem faced by Canadian manufactuers, especially those industries that have been purchased by corporations beyond our national borders. Most of us can appreciate the problems faced by such a corporation, with its head office and main decision-making centre beyond our borders when there are domestic problems of unemployment similar to those of our own. I suppose it is only natural that if a large plant happens to exist in the United States with unused capacity, and there is a Canadian operation here, that it be rationalized into the American industrial complex. The priorities of that foreign corporation would demand that the plant outside its borders be closed down and the jobs and plant capacity used for the benefit of the nationals of that country. In this case, it happens to be the United States.

Many people are concerned about the increasing amount of dominance of the foreign corporation in the manufacturing sector of our economy. This is why from Walter Gordon to Watkins to the present Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Gray) the subject has become one of increasing interest and study. The problem is not linked to British Columbia but I think it provides an interesting example. It is not because this particular plant, operating on a Canadian patent and Canadian development, is not making money. I have documents here and if pressed I will quote from them to indicate that the company is making a profit in Canada. However, because the profit is only marginal, the plant intends to close and therefore 125 to 150 jobs are being denied to Canadians.

While the government has allowed this to happen, it has moved with its customary band-aid approach. I am not criticising this. I think it is only right. It is the old story of locking the barn door after the horse is out. Manpower is spending considerable public funds to retrain and relocate those people who were displaced by this particular move. This is typical of what can happen when a government turns a blind eye to the problems of priorities concerning the employment of its nationals.

Of particular significance is the fact that this particular dimunition of employment occurs in the manufacturing area of our economy. It is well known to people who have studied these matters that manufacturing or secondary industries tend to be much more labour-intensive, that is, produce more jobs, create more employment and produce more money for our economy than do the resource industries upon which Canada has been dependent.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's time has expired.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, in the middle of 1970 the company to which the hon. member has referred first indicated that they were considering closing the plant in question because of marketing problems which the company was then encountering. At that time the officials of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce had discussions with management of the company expressing concern about the curtailment of the operation and pressed the company to consider alternative solutions to their problem which would not require cut-backs in that plant.

I may say in answer to the hon. member who raised this question that members of parliament from this area and supporters of the government find it possible to make direct representations to the minister and that they do so very effectively. Since the date mentioned, the market for chainsaws has become increasingly competitive, and in order to realize the necessary economies of scale the company decided in July to cease chainsaw production in Richmond. Some components will continue to be manufactured in Toronto and this should result in a small increase in employment there.

Officials of the department have again held discussions with the company, but the company has advised that its decision to close the plant is irrevocable because of economic conditions. In some cases employees have been offered alternative employment in other plants of the company, and the company is working closely with officials of the Department of Manpower and Immigration to assist employees to obtain work in other locations. I am glad the hon. member recognizes the merit of these efforts to help the employees involved. I am not surprised to learn that he does not appreciate the nature of the economic difficulties which can occur when profits are small or inadequate. He would, of course, be more sympathetic to the procedure adopted on occasions in my own province of Saskatchewan following the serious failure of plants operated there by the government.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): You had better stick to justice.

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

INDUSTRY—ACTION TO AVOID CLOSING OF SKIL CORPORATION PLANT, RICHMOND, B.C.—ALTERNATIVE EMPLOYMENT FOR WORKERS

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, like the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose), I raised this matter two years ago and, also like him, I raised it a very short time ago. I have no doubt that other members are interested in this plant. But when the minister says the Liberal members have been very effective in making representations to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin), I can only say that I am afraid the effectiveness of their representations is not apparent from the results. They have neither been able to prevent the plant from closing nor to bring out the facts of the matter.

According to the confidential memorandum we have been sent, the interoffice memo of 1969, the 1610 power-saw produced in Vancouver is actually a money maker and was expected to gross close to $5 million profit in a five-year period. It was demonstrated that in a 15-month period from December, 1970, to March, 1972, the plant produced and sent out 45,000 saws, reaching its third year projected potential in only 15 months. In these circumstances the very least you could expect from the government would be confirmation or otherwise of the truth of these facts and figures so that we could find out why this firm is finding it necessary to switch its operation from Vancouver to Chicago. From the facts and figures we have seen, it is expecting a lot of these employees to ask them to believe it is really necessary for the Vancouver plant to close down.

I also think that the government is settling for very much less than it should if it is simply working with Manpower to try to find jobs for the employees when the plant closes down instead of making some effort between time. If the efforts of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce two years ago in persuading the plant that it did not need to close down were successful, I cannot for the life of me understand why similar efforts are not being made at the present time. I am not saying that such is not the case; what I am saying is that we do not know the facts. Those of us who have workers in our constituencies among the 150 who will be thrown out of work on July 1 have the right to know what are the facts in this connection. For that reason I am not happy to see this veil of secrecy descend. We are given no facts. The firm has told us its story and we have to let it go at that. We believe that the government has an obligation to investigate the truth of the matter and to reveal the facts and figures so that we know the situation.

The steelworkers have done all they can, but they have been unable to get the true picture from the company. They have also ascertained that the company has not applied for government assistance of any kind. Perhaps they would not get it even if they did, but the point is they have not tried. I think that is an interesting point.

The steelworkers asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) himself to use his good offices to prevail upon the Canada Development Corporation to put pressure on the company to stay, but the Prime Minister's office has been content to refer the steelworkers to the CDC, and as far as I have been able to learn the CDC did not reply. Nor, apparently, has the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, to whom they also wrote. For these reasons these workers are in a very unsatisfactory situation, being asked to acquiesce in the loss of their jobs at the end of July.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, we are all mindful of the difficulties that the closure of a plant causes its individual workers. As a result, my department, like the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, goes to great pains to attempt to encourage the continuation of operations, as it goes to great pains to bring new plant into existence as well as new manufacturing. This does not mean that in every case these efforts are successful; there are times when the result is that the plant closes anyway. At that point in time we have other programs that attempt to ease the burden the best way we can, in terms of finding other employment and offering assistance in the relocation of employees involved.

Naturally, in the course of the conversations between the department and the plant concerned a certain amount of confidential material is discussed and examined. From the point of view of future discussions with other companies it would not be wise to treat that material in any way other than in the confidential way it is given. This approach is taken by the department and it is one which has success from time to time, as shown by the continued operation of this plant for a period.

As I say, we regret the impact of this projected closure on individual men and women who may lose their jobs, but we do attempt to offer them such services as we can in an effort to find alternatives that are suitable to them.

INDUSTRY—PULP AND PAPER—CLOSING OF MILLS—POSITION OF DISCUSSIONS WITH INDUSTRY TO OVERCOME PROBLEM

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, as I have done for many months, I asked the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) to give me a progress report on April 20 dealing with the critical situation which exists in the pulp and paper industry. For some reason the pulp and paper industry is facing a critical situation not only in my own district but in every province and region. The most recent crisis occurred in western Canada at Ocean Falls.

The answer to my many questions has been that meetings are being held with the pulp and paper industry to consider tax relief and other methods of providing impetus to the industry in order that it may recover. The pulp and paper industry is probably the most important industry in Canada and the complacency which exists on the government side regarding this critical situation amazes me.

Meetings have been held since February, but every time I ask the minister for a progress report he says that meetings are continuing with the hope that they will come up with a solution. At the same time, people are being laid off across the country. But the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) is giving grants in respect of new mills in a number of regions, transplanting employment.

One of the problems could be solved by tax relief, so that pulp and paper mills could renew old equipment. More investment could be made in the industry in this way. Other problems exist in marketing. I am asking the minister, for the benefit of Canadians, to give us something more than the reports we see in the newspapers and those emanating from the pulp and paper associations regarding the progress being made at these meetings. In this way the workers being laid off without hope of finding new jobs may have some hope in the future.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) has reported to the House from time to time, several members of the government have held discussions with senior executives of the pulp and paper industry to discuss the marketing and production situations which face this industry. Following these discussions, concentrated work is being done at the official level in close co-operation with the industry and its associations. Several departments of government are working together as may be required to bring the right expertise to bear on the problem. The government is fully aware of the industry's current difficulties and the necessity to ensure its viability in the long term so it can contribute to Canada's economic growth.

With reference to current conditions, although the government considers the situation to be difficult and is taking steps to develop policies to help the industry and Canada's economy, the situation is improving somewhat at the moment. Shipments of the industry to date this year are 3.5 per cent higher than those of a year ago. The production of a number of products, such as linerboard, has improved substantially. Demand for pulp has tightened up considerably in the last two months, and prices should improve. There is also some optimism in regard to newsprint sales to the United States for 1972.

In relation to the particular plant to which the hon. member has referred, I understand that the major reason for closure of the mills involved obsolescence, heavy transportation charges affecting the cost of raw materials, maintenance and service and the relative isolation of the plants. This has resulted in chronic deficits and has placed these plants in economic difficulty. With the programs being developed by the companies, in co-operation with the associations and the government, it is hoped that the situation of the industry as a whole will improve, with the result that employment potential and jobs available to workers will improve.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.22 p.m.

EFFECTS OF U.S. DISC PROGRAM ON CANADA—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I rise to move a motion under Standing Order 43 on a pressing matter. In view of the fact reports from Washington show that automobile and auto parts manufacturers as well as manufacturers of non-auto products are exporting their products to Canada under the United States DISC program, contrary to information given this House by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin), with possible serious consequences to Canadian manufacturing and Canadian jobs, I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent):

That this House refer the subject matter of the effects of the DISC program on Canada and the urgent need to develop an effective Canadian response in order to safeguard manufacturing and jobs in Canada to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs for immediate study and report to this House.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York South proposes this motion under the terms of Standing Order 43 which requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent. The motion cannot be put at this time.

UNITED STATES DISC PROGRAM—USE BY AMERICAN AUTO MANUFACTURERS—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT BY MINISTER PRIOR TO BUDGET

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question arising out of a statement made last March by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, to whom, as he might assume, my question is directed. At that time the minister said the government understood that United States automobile manufacturers had no intention of using the DISC program. In view of the revelation today that Ford did establish a corporation under that program last December and is exporting cars and trucks under it, is the minister going to make a statement to the House on the subject?

• (1110)

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I will try to answer the question succinctly, Mr. Speaker. As my hon. friend has suggested this was my "understanding" and "impression," and I referred to it in the House always in those terms. My understanding was based on conversations I have had with representatives of the automobile manufacturing industry in Canada. I emphasized in the House that I received no commitment from them. My understanding of these conversations was confirmed by discussions which took place between my officials and officials of the United States in respect of the automobile agreement. They, too, understood the U.S. manufacturers would not use DISC. I might observe that we received information from Ford to the effect that it was registering for DISC status last week, and we received information from General Motors yesterday. So I want to stand on what I said to the House; I said it and nothing else. It has to be observed also that U.S. companies—

Mr. Lewis: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, if the minister is making a statement he should return to motions for that purpose.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Obviously the minister must determine whether he simply wants to answer the question or revert to motions for the purpose of making a statement. If an answer is long and involved, normally the information conveyed at that point should be conveyed by way of a statement on motions. At that point the minister should seek the consent of the House to return to motions. If not, he should be satisfied with replying to the question.

Mr. Pepin: I think hon. members on the other side will have a few supplementary questions.

Mr. Peters: Chicken!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, when the noise has subsided I will ask the minister my supplementary question. He has already answered some questions that might have been supplementary, but let me conclude with just one question. Because of the seriousness of the problem and the fact that the DISC threat is now a reality, and keeping in mind that a budget will be presented in the House a week from Monday, will the minister seize an opportunity next week in order to make a full and frank statement of the government's position and the facts, to which there could be a reasoned response? This development is bound to have some impact on the coming budget debate, so will the minister seize an opportunity to do this early next week?

Mr. Pepin: I will do that, Mr. Speaker, but I cannot say at what precise time. It might be during the budget debate, for example.

UNITED STATES DISC PROGRAM—PROVISION TO GOVERNMENT OF NAMES OF AMERICAN COMPANIES MAKING USE THEREOF—CANADIAN PROTEST

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister the following question. According to the report to which reference has been made, the United States government refuses to reveal the names of the DISCS which are in place, and refuses to reveal the names of the parent companies. There may or may not be justification for that as far as the public is concerned, but I should like to ask the minister whether the government of Canada, as a partner to the auto pact agreement and generally as a partner in trade, has demanded that it be given the name of these DISCS and of the parent companies which have established such corporations so we may know exactly how our trade and jobs will be affected?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, my officers have made attempts to find out which companies were registering or applying for DISC status. They have not been successful. I do not know exactly at what level that was done, but I have already indicated this morning that in respect of Ford and General Motors we have received information from those companies that they have registered for DISC status. If the question is wider than that I will see what I can do about obtaining official information, but I have little influence on the way the United States decides to implement its laws.

Mr. Lewis: With your permission, Mr. Speaker, may I remind the minister of the very soothing words the President of the United States used—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We have not yet reached the point of debate on this matter but we should try as much as possible to limit the exchange to questions and answers.

Mr. Lewis: I will put it this way, Mr. Speaker. In view of the soothing words addressed to this House by the President of the United States, is the minister making a protest to the American administration that, as he himself said on March 17, the DISC program is a violation of the auto pact as well as all other trade arrangements under GATT?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, this has already been done. A note was sent to the United States government last December, if my memory is good. We also made a formal protest during a debate which took place at GATT on all of the United States economic measures of August 15.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There are many members seeking supplementaries. The matter is important and we will spend some time on it, but I must try to establish some kind of balance between the representatives of parties in the questioning. I think the hon. member for York South should be allowed one further supplementary for the moment and then I will recognize the hon. member for Edmonton West.

UNITED STATES DISC PROGRAM—NON-IDENTIFICATION OF DISC EXPORTS FOR CUSTOMS PURPOSES—SUGGESTED PROTEST BY CANADA

Mr. David Lewis (York South): My further supplementary is based on the information that the American program does not require American exporters to export their products under the DISC name, with the result that customs officials in Canada cannot ascertain whether the products were manufactured under DISC. In view of the fact this practice seems to be a deliberate, clandestine attempt to take advantage of Canada, may I ask the minister whether the government will protest vigorously against this kind of policy by the American administration?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I said in answer to the previous question that this had already been done. I do not see what we would gain from repeating these things. I might observe en passant—

Mr. Lewis: You did not say you did it.

Mr. Pepin: I might answer this morning the question asked yesterday by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby. I just want to observe that the prices of the exports of an United States Manufacturing Company to Canada are not necessarily affected. It may very well decide to use the DISC advantage simply to maximize its profits. Therefore there is a distinction between the DISC effect on the profits of the company in the United States and its effect on export prices to Canada, which is an important distinction.

UNITED STATES DISC PROGRAM—PROVISION OF INFORMATION ON CANADIAN COMPANIES AFFECTED

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. It has to do with the request of my colleague from Peace River that the minister consider making a statement next week. In the interval I wonder whether he could direct the not inconsiderable energies of his department to ascertaining from Canadian industry, which may have a fair intelligence net, what industries will be particularly affected? I have in mind the Canadian petrochemical industry, fine papers and many others. Would he do this so that he could amplify his statement and we could look at the whole question with much more information at the time of the budget debate?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, this is being done by a group studying the effects of DISC in Canada. As every hon. member knows, there are a number of things Canada could do to react to the DISC effects, but it is too early for me to indicate which route the government will take.

SUGGESTED REASSESSMENT BY CANADIAN AUTO MANUFACTURERS OF POSITION IN LIGHT OF CAR PRICES AND PARTS IMPORTS

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): In light of the information that has been given to the minister to date with regard to two major automobile manufacturers and in light of the now public exposure of the differences in prices of automobiles manufactured and sold in Canada and the United States and the flood of automotive parts coming into Canada from the United States under the encouragement of DISC, is the government now considering calling upon the auto manufacturers to make a complete reassessment of their position in Canada, particularly as it affects the Canadian consumer?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Every word should be qualified. When the hon. member talks about a "flood of parts" imported into Canada, he should look at the answer I gave yesterday or the day before on that subject. Our exports to the United States at the moment are as good as they were at this time last year, at which time they were excellent, and they are not as good as they will be if automobile sales trends continue. There is nothing wrong with the present situation with respect to trade in auto parts.

With respect to prices, the other aspect of the question raised by the hon. member, I have already indicated to the House that a very thorough analysis is now being made. I personally believe that the gap in prices between the cost of production of automobiles in Canada and in the United States will always exist. The question is how wide a gap is tolerable, and I hope to give answers to that in the very near future.

UNITED STATES DISC PROGRAM—INFORMATION SUPPLIED TO MINISTER BY AUTOMOBILE MANUFACTURERS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that in reply to questions by myself in the past month in the House the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce assured us that on the basis of his information automotive manufacturers had not applied for DISC, and in view of the fact it has now been revealed that as long ago as last fall the Ford Motor Company and General Motors Corporation applied for DISC, could the minister inform the House whether or not he was misinformed by the companies in the past about their intentions with regard to DISC or was he relying on some other source of information which perhaps was not reliable?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): As I said this morning in answer to the first question, I formed my own impressions. Whether they were right or wrong, whether it was my fault or the fault of the people who gave me the information, I will let hon. members judge.

Mr. Broadbent: Notwithstanding the minister's assurances that he will do something in the future to somehow improve the situation, would he be a little more specific in the following way: would he assure the House that within the next week or ten days he will request the heads of the automotive companies in Canada to come to Ottawa for a meeting with him to explain their intentions concerning the DISC legislation? Will he point out to them that their profits are running in excess of $150 million a year over and above what they get for similar automobiles in the United States, and would he also point out that they have had very substantial benefits and that they owe Canadian workers and consumers—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is not a question. The hon. member is now making a speech.

UNITED STATES DISC PROGRAM—LAST COMMUNICATION BY MINISTER WITH FORD OFFICIALS

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question follows the one just asked. Have the minister or his officials contacted the Ford officials since the information was released that they have been using the DISC program as far back as December, and when did he last speak with the Ford officials?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I spoke to Ford officials at 9.10 this morning, or about that time.

[Later:]

Mr. Hales: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question follows the minister's statement that he spoke to Ford officials this morning. Did they confirm that they have been using the DISC program since last December?

Mr. Pepin: Yes, Mr. Speaker, that was confirmed.

Mr. Fairweather: What a fantastic breakthrough.

Mr. Hales: Is the minister in a position to say that he misinformed the House or was given the wrong information?

Mr. Pepin: I think I have already answered that question.

Inquiries of the Ministry

AUTO PARTS—ALLEGED INHIBITING OF EXPORTS TO UNITED STATES BY STRICT ENFORCEMENT OF U.S. CUSTOMS REGULATIONS

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, may I use the occasion to answer a question raised yesterday by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby. At that time he alluded to a statement by Mr. Wood, vice-president of the Canadian Automotive Parts Manufacturers Association to the effect that abnormal pressures were being used by United States customs officials on Canadian exporters of automobile parts. My officials have checked with Mr. Wood. He declares emphatically that he was quoted out of context. He says there is no indication that abnormal pressures are being applied at this time.

UNITED STATES DISC PROGRAM—BASIS FOR MINISTER'S STATEMENT THAT AUTO MANUFACTURERS NOT INTENDING TO MAKE USE THEREOF

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the minister. On March 28, as recorded at page 1203 of Hansard, the minister, in answering a question I asked him regarding DISC, said that as a result of conversations and consultations with the industry he could state that "automobile manufacturers do not plan to use the DISC facilities". I want to ask the minister specifically whether he made that statement on the basis of personal consultation with representatives of Ford Motor Company of Canada and General Motors of Canada, or between them and any of his officials? Was this statement based on hearsay, or did the minister have actual conversations with the representatives of these companies and did he receive the information he gave the House from those sources?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I think I answered that in reply to the first question asked this morning. I can only repeat that answer, if that will suit the hon. member.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. We will return to this subject later. I will allow the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands his supplementary and then try to see two or three other hon. members before returning to this subject.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, I understood the minister to make a general statement about misinformation. I am asking him specifically with respect to the representatives of the two companies, Ford and General Motors. Did he have any conversations with them or did his officials have any conversations with them, and did they state categorically at that time that they did not intend to use the facilities of DISC, as the minister told the House on March 28?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I answered that very clearly. I said what impressions I gained from speaking with these gentlemen. This is very clear. I also said in the same answer that "no assurances had been given". That was pretty clear. These were impressions I gained from personal conversations with them and these personal impressions were confirmed, I thought, by conversations my officials had with officials of the United States government, who have apparently had the same impression. That is pretty clear.

An hon. Member: It is facts we want.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. As I said a moment ago, we will return to this subject and I will recognize the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby and the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands in a few minutes. For the moment, perhaps the Chair should be allowed to recognize two or three other members, and then we will return to this very important and urgent matter.

Mr. Douglas: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I only wanted to ask a very short follow-up question.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Perhaps other hon. members also have very short questions to ask about the matter. These members will be recognized for that purpose in a few minutes. The hon. member for Lambton-Kent.

Mr. McCutcheon: Mr. Speaker, mine was a supplementary and I wonder if I could direct it to—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems that hon. members have not exhausted their supplementaries on this subject. We might devote another five minutes to it. First I will recognize the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact cabinet ministers dealing with corporations do not generally deal in impressions but rather in specific statements, did the minister at any time put the question directly to the representatives of the automobile companies concerned as to whether or not they intended to use the facilities of DISC, and what reply did he receive from them at the time such conversations were held by him or his officials?

Mr. Pepin: I can only repeat that I said no assurances had been given. I said that in answer to a question at the time. I know this is very sophisticated but maybe I can get through. There is a difference between using the DISC program to maximize profits for the United States companies involved and using the DISC program to influence the cost of goods being sent to Canada. As I say, I know this is sophisticated, but I am sure I am getting through now. It is too early in the game now to know what will be the effect on exports to Canada of the use of the DISC program by U.S. manufacturers. It may be that it will have an effect; it may be that it will not have an effect. We will watch.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Lambton-Kent.

Mr. Hales: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Lambton-Kent will have to wait a while longer because the hon. member for Wellington is rising on a question of privilege.

Mr. Hales: Mr. Speaker, my point of privilege, and I think it affects every member of the House, is that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce advised the House on March 17 that the American car manufacturers, according to information that he had received from them, would not, had not and were not using the DISC program. Now we are advised that they have been using the DISC program since December. These American car manufacturers have misled the minister or given him the wrong information. I think it behooves the minister to advise the House accordingly and require an apology from the American car manufacturers in this regard.

• (1130)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That, of course, is not a question of privilege. The hon. member for Lambton-Kent has a supplementary.

UNITED STATES DISC PROGRAM—FORMAL DISCUSSIONS WITH AUTO MANUFACTURERS—SUGGESTED REMOVAL OF EXCISE TAX ON CERTAIN OFFSHORE AUTOMOBILE IMPORTS

Mr. Mac T. McCutcheon (Lambton-Kent): Mr. Speaker, many questions have been asked but I should like the minister to clarify whether formal talks on this matter are being organized with the United States branch plants that are operating in Canada.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, in answer to a previous question I said that I would be giving all the information I have on the subject, as I usually do, in the coming days. I suggested this might take place during the budget speech. Obviously, before making these remarks I will want to have optimum information. Optimum information obviously implies a meeting between the gentlemen mentioned, the heads of the Canadian manufacturing companies, and myself in order to obtain all the information possible.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Many supplementaries are being sought. For the moment the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Lambton-Kent on his supplementary and then we will determine whether we should try for two minutes to give other members a chance to ask questions subject to returning to this matter later.

Mr. McCutcheon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the minister for clarifying the matter as far as the companies are concerned. However, my concern is for the Canadian consumer. Therefore my question is whether the government would consider dropping the 12 per cent excise tax on low and medium-value automobiles imported from offshore—I do not mean luxury cars—so that Canadian consumers as well as automobile manufacturers could get a break?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I am quite sure the Minister of Finance would be pleased to send to my hon. friend a list of all the categories of producers and people in Canada who have asked for similar advantage, that is, the exemption of the 12 per cent tax.

UNITED STATES DISC PROGRAM—INTENTION OF CAR MANUFACTURERS RESPECTING USE THEREOF AND REDUCTION OF PRICES IN CANADA

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, the minister knows there is sophistry as well as sophistication. I should like to ask the minister for specific answers to the questions I put earlier today on the need for direct discussion by him with the heads of the automobile companies on their intentions. I should like to get answers to the following questions and not impressions. Do they intend to use the DISC legislation not just to maximize their profit position but to increase the percentage of their sales in Canada in terms of American produced automobiles as opposed to Canadian produced automobiles? Let us have a specific answer to that specific question. Second, do they intend to do something soon about reducing the prices of automobiles to the Canadian consumer? Would the minister do that within the next ten days?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I will try hard, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will recognize the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands in a moment but for the time being the hon. member for Vegreville has a supplementary.

UNITED STATES DISC PROGRAM—INVESTIGATION OF EFFECTS ON INDUSTRIES IN GENERAL

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the revelation that auto manufacturers are now using the DISC program, is the minister now going to investigate actively the utilization of this program by other industries, which may be detrimental to Canadian interests?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I have already said that we have a group in the government administration doing exactly that. It is trying to get all the information possible on the effects the DISC program will have on Canada. I also said this morning that the Minister of Finance, with the government, will see what the best answer to this would be.

UNITED STATES DISC PROGRAM—INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION TO OFFSET EFFECTS

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that about a month ago the government leader in the Senate stated, in a speech in Washington, that the Canadian government had detailed legislation ready to deal with DISC if it became apparent that it was going to be widely used with respect to exports to Canada, I want to ask the minister whether such legislation has been prepared and does the government intend to introduce it? In view of the fact that apparently the United States government is now embarking on a trade war, what steps does the minister intend to take, what legislation does he intend to introduce, and how soon?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, this shows the difficulty involved in forming impressions. Reading the speech of the distinguished government representative in the Senate, my impression was that he said that there were on the legislative books in Canada a number of ways and means that could be used to counter the DISC program. That is what I think he said. It showed how well informed he was.

Mr. Douglas: If the government leader in the Senate knows what steps are to be taken, may I assume that the minister knows what steps are to be taken, and will he tell the House what those steps are, either now or on motions on Monday?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, if my hon. friend will again read the speech given by the government leader in the Senate at that time, he will find a number of ways and means that the Canadian government could use. I think Mr. Martin was specific on some of these.

FISHERIES

ATLANTIC SALMON FISHERY CLOSURES—RESPONSE OF FISHERMEN AT MEETING WITH MINISTER

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries. I have read with interest the minister's statement as presented to the New Brunswick commercial salmon fishermen in Chatham, New Brunswick, yesterday. In view of the economic impact on Atlantic Canada brought about by the closing of the commercial salmon fishery, would the minister make a brief statement on the response of the fishermen yesterday to his proposals?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I can say very briefly now that the fishermen were very interested in the scheme for compensation which the government is advancing. They are interested in monitoring the recovery of the rivers and of course they are very anxious to see us get the Danes to stop fishing off west Greenland immediately.

ATLANTIC SALMON FISHERY CLOSURES—RESTRICTIONS ON ANGLING

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Even though there may be certain provincial responsibility in the matter, can the minister state whether there will be restrictions on angling, particularly in New Brunswick?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, there are already restrictions on angling, as the hon. member knows. We intend to have conversations with the province, which is responsible for administering upstream angling licences.

[Mr. Douglas.]

ATLANTIC SALMON FISHERY CLOSURES—PROVISION OF ADDITIONAL SUPERVISORY PERSONNEL AND RESTORATION OF DEPLETED RIVERS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Fisheries whether he can assure the House that, with the provision of additional funds, additional personnel will be hired to assist the river wardens in the inspection and supervision of existing rivers? Could the minister also assure the House that a program to restore depleted rivers in eastern Canada will be undertaken?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I think I can give the House those assurances. I should also like to mention that in the use of funds for compensation we intend to employ as many fishermen as possible both for policing the rivers and helping us to help rehabilitate the runs.

ATLANTIC SALMON FISHERY CLOSURES—MEASURES TO CLEAN UP POLLUTION IN RIVERS

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Fisheries whether as a result of his visit to New Brunswick and his discussion with the fishermen there he gathered any fresh information on what measures should be taken to speed the clean-up of pollution of such rivers as the Miramichi in order to make anti-pollution measures more effective?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I told the fishermen that more than $30 million had already been spent on pollution abatement in the three rivers affected, the Saint John, the Miramichi and the Restigouche, that the annual operating costs of these facilities were in excess of $5 million a year, that this effort was having an effect already, and that the $5 million annual expenditure exceeds the present gross value of the commercial fishery in the total Atlantic area by a ratio of more than two to one.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT—DATE OF STATEMENT ON GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Revenue. When will the government be in a position to issue a statement on foreign investment?

Some hon. Members: Author!

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I intend to make a statement on this matter this coming Tuesday.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT—INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, in making this statement will the minister indicate whether he has legislation prepared and will he give some idea of when he intends to introduce it?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I understand that later today the government House leader intends to speak to the House leaders of the other parties about arrangements connected with the statement I intend to make.

[Later:]

FOREIGN INVESTMENT—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF PREPARATORY DOCUMENTS WHEN STATEMENT ON POLICY IS MADE

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Minister of National Revenue a question in relation to the question that was conveniently asked by a member of his party. On Tuesday will he merely make a statement, or will he table his report and any other documents that were supposed to be prepared before the policy could be announced?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I invite the hon. member to be in the House so he can see for himself. Next time, perhaps he might ask a question of the type that he regrets was asked by a member on the government side.

Mr. Lewis: I have been asking it for months.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister with reference to a new book which it has been announced will soon appear on the newsstands and is supposed to be laudatory of the present Prime Minister. As this book will soon be on sale at newsstands and as the author is a member of the Prime Minister's staff, can the Acting Prime Minister advise the House whether the time spent on writing this book was paid for by the Canadian taxpayers?

• (1140)

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. gentleman that the answer to that question is in the negative. This is, of course, a private venture just as I understand that laudatory book on the Leader of the Opposition was.

RAPESEED—ACTION TO OFFSET PROJECTED DECLINE IN ACREAGE

Mr. Stanley Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice in his capacity as the minister responsible for the Wheat Board. In light of the expressed intention of farmers to grow 37 per cent less rapeseed this year than last, is this action in line with the wishes of the minister? Has he indicated the acreage of rapeseed he wishes farmers to plant? Will there be a survey to see whether his wishes are carried out? If not, will there be an incentive to have what he wishes brought about?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the expression of our view this year included information that about the same amount of rapeseed as last year seemed to us to be reasonable, according to the information we had available about market prospects. I have since expressed the hope that severe reduction in acreage would not take place because I believe that market development requires a continuity of supply to keep pressure on in the marketplace. I have made this clear to producers.

Mr. Korchinski: Does the minister intend to provide some incentive, if surveys indicate that this level will not be met?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, the basic incentive is provided by the price available for rapeseed. That price seems to be relatively attractive when compared with the price of other grains. There is some hesitancy no doubt at this time concerning the move to lower erucic acid rapeseed. We will be trying to reassure growers that they ought not to hesitate for that reason.

UNITED STATES DISC PROGRAM—REPRESENTATIONS TO MINISTER BY CANADIAN AUTO WORKERS INTERNATIONAL REPRESENTATIVE CONCERNING EFFECTS

Mr. E. F. Whelan (Essex): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce on a former subject. Has the international representative of the Canadian auto workers, Dennis McDerment, ever made representations to the minister concerning the effect that the DISC program might have on Canadian auto workers if put into effect by the American companies which are in competition with Canadian companies, inasmuch as the Canadian auto workers' brothers who belong to the same international union are employed by the American companies and I understand are in favour of the DISC program?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, in a previous meeting with Mr. McDerment the concentration was really on the two formal safeguards. I do not recall whether he mentioned the DISC program also in those conversations. I will check and see what record was kept.

UNITED STATES DISC PROGRAM—SUGGESTED INCREASE IN SAFEGUARDS UNDER CANADA-U.S. AUTO PACT

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the obvious disappointment of the minister at what seems to be a very clear betrayal of his confidence by the automobile companies, will he indicate whether he is now prepared to shift away from the sort of quiet diplomacy he has engaged in with the automobile companies and increase the safeguards under the Canada-U.S. auto agreement?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Time will tell, Mr. Speaker.

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—SUGGESTED EXTENSION TO END OF JUNE

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the length and severity of the winter, has the government decided to extend the time for eligibility for forgiveness under the local initiatives program from May 31 to the end of June?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this subject is under active consideration and I expect that the responsible minister will be making a statement soon.

UNITED STATES DISC PROGRAM—SUGGESTED REQUIREMENT THAT EXPORTS TO CANADA BE IDENTIFIED

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to that asked by the hon. member for Essex-Windsor of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the expressed view that there is no United States government requirement to use the DISC name in any export transactions, is the government considering the possibility of developing or formulating a disclosure requirement with respect to United States DISC exports to Canada?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry but the question is too complex for me to deal with this morning. I will inquire into it further.

POSSIBLE USE OF AIRBORNE TANKERS TO MOVE OIL FROM WELLHEADS TO DEEPWATER PORTS

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Is the government giving serious consideration to the use of airborne oil tankers for the movement of oil from wellheads to deepwater ports?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, in view of the generality of the question I can say that the answer is yes, but perhaps the hon. member may have some specific idea or concept in mind.

POST OFFICE

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON PROGRESS OF CONTRACT NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNIONS

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the President of the Treasury Board. Is he in a position to make a progress report to the House on the contract talks taking place with the postal unions inasmuch as the contract expired more than one month ago?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I can only say that the talks are continuing. There was a slight deferral caused by some disagreement within one of the unions in the council of postal unions. Hopefully, this is being repaired.

Mr. Mazankowski: Can the President of the Treasury Board advise the House whether an offer involving wage and job security has been presented by the Treasury Board?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, for the reasons I indicated relating to the current, temporary interruption, no such proposal has been made.

TRADE

UNITED STATES DISC PROGRAM—PROVISION OF INFORMATION BY PRESIDENT NIXON OR SECRETARY ROGERS ON IMPLEMENTATION DURING VISIT TO OTTAWA

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct to the Acting Prime Minister a question related to the questions asked of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Since it is obvious that at the very time conversations were going on between the Prime Minister and the President of the United States and between the Acting Prime Minister in his capacity as Secretary of State for External Affairs and Secretary of State Rogers the President and the Secretary of State must have known about the developments under DISC, was this matter brought forward by either of these gentlemen in their discussions with the Prime Minister or the Secretary of State for External Affairs? Did any discussion take place? If they did not raise the subject, did the Secretary of State for External Affairs or the Prime Minister raise it, or have they both been deceived and betrayed by them as well?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the discussions between the President and the Prime Minister about trade consisted of a decision to review our respective positions with a view to resuming negotiations. This was the position I also took with Secretary of State Rogers. There was no detailed discussion of particular questions because both the Prime Minister and the President were anxious not to complicate the decisions by getting into a discussion of details. These were to be handled, and I think will be handled most competently, by my colleague, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Nystrom: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will first recognize the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre on a supplementary, then the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville and, before calling orders of the day, the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe.

Mr. Benjamin: May I ask the minister whether the President informed the Prime Minister or Secretary of State Rogers informed him in any way at all of developments under DISC or of United States efforts to solve their trade problems?

Mr. Sharp: No, Mr. Speaker.

UNITED STATES DISC PROGRAM—ACTION TO PREVENT UNDERCUTTING OF CANADIAN BY AMERICAN GOODS IN OTHER COUNTRIES

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Can he tell us what action he is taking or is contemplating to prevent the undercutting of Canadian goods by American goods in third countries with which both the United States and Canada trade? What action is he contemplating along this line?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry, but the question will either have to be repeated or clarified because I could not understand it.

Mr. Nystrom: Is the minister contemplating action or taking action to prevent the undercutting of Canadian goods by American goods in countries with which both Canada and the United States trade?

Mr. Pepin: I presume the hon. member means the effect of the DISC program on third country exports. I can only repeat what I said earlier this morning, that we have identified DISC as damaging to Canadian exports bilaterally and in third countries and that we shall announce in due course what we intend to do about it.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CRIMINAL LAW AMENDMENT ACT, 1972

AMENDMENTS TO CRIMINAL CODE, CRIMINAL RECORDS ACT, NATIONAL DEFENCE ACT, PAROLE ACT AND VISITING FORCES ACT

The House resumed, from Thursday, April 27, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lang that Bill C-2, to amend the Criminal Code and to make related amendments to the Criminal Code 1967 Amendment Act, the Criminal Records Act, the National Defence Act, the Parole Act and the Visiting Forces Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, when the House adjourned last night, I was saying a few words about a couple of clauses in the new amendments to the Criminal Code. I said that a lot of women across this country were disappointed at the slow progress the government has been making in implementing the recommendations of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women.

However, I think it is necessary that when steps in this direction are taken they should be noticed. The amendments before us do contain two or three amendments which will be appreciated by women as implementations of the recommendations of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women.

Before returning to this subject, I wish to express personal satisfaction that the clause providing for corporal punishment is being deleted. I realize it has become fashionable around the country to indicate that because there is a great deal of violence around in real life, on television and in the other media, the only thing which will defeat violence is violence. The minister must have been under some pressure not to propose this particular amendment repealing the clause on corporal punishment. I am glad he is doing so, and I trust he will have the courage later in the year to resist the pressure not to abolish capital punishment. I am sure from everything we have seen that continuing capital punishment would in no way do away with murder in this country or anywhere else. I see some people shaking their heads in disbelief. I am waiting to see the facts and figures produced.

I repeat, I am glad to see that the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women with regard to vagrancy has been followed. There was discrimination against women under this section. The Commission did not recommend that there should be penalties in the Code for soliciting, but I am glad to see this offence put on a basis which does not discriminate as between women and men.

The other thing I want to mention is the satisfaction a lot of women and a great many men will feel in relation to the amendment dealing with women and jury service. This is an acceptance of recommendation No. 141 of the report by the royal commission. This recommendation is to the effect that it be made mandatory for women to be called to serve on juries on the same terms as men. I wish to take this occasion to pay tribute to the long and persistent campaign waged by Senator Muriel Fergusson in the Senate to get this matter regulated and remove discrimination. In her later efforts in the Senate she was assisted by Senator Thérèse Casgrain who added this campaign to her many other campaigns to raise the status of women to that of full persons in every field. It was interesting to me to find out that on February 3, 1971, Senator Casgrain drew attention, during a debate in the Senate, to the fact that in Quebec and Newfoundland women were not called for jury duty. They still are not called, as I understand it, and will not be until the legislation before us comes into effect. She was pushing for the implementation of the recommendation of the royal commission.

Then, Senator Fergusson came along later and supported Senator Casgrain. She had, of course, been pushing for this herself for many years. She referred to the experience in New Brunswick which resulted in the passing of a law making women eligible to sit on juries but not under the same terms and conditions as men. She pointed out that only in British Columbia, Nova Scotia and the Territories do women serve on juries under the same conditions as men. It is an interesting sidelight on Canadian psychology that in 1951 a bill was introduced into the Nova Scotia legislature which would have limited jury service to males. It is noteworthy that women had never been prohibited from serving on juries, but they had never been called. In 1951, someone got the bright idea that it would be a good thing to prevent women from ever serving as jurors. However, such a fuss was raised that the bill had to be withdrawn. Women now are called and serve on juries in Nova Scotia on the same basis as men.

Various comments have been made by judges at various times in connection with the campaign carried on by Senator Fergusson. One judge was of the opinion that women should not be permitted to serve on juries in the Northwest Territories because of alleged emotional instability and other factors. But the Senator's efforts were encouraged by other judges who had seen women serving on juries and who said that women were in every way as competent to serve on juries as were men. Senator Fergusson pointed out that in 1957, Canada ratified the United Nations Convention of the Political Rights of Women. In ratifying this convention, we, in Canada, undertook to bring Canadian legislation into conformity with the United Nations convention on the political rights of women and jury duty is one of those rights, yet we have allowed all that time to go by between 1957 and 1972, without bringing Canada into line with the United Nations convention which we ratified in 1957.

Then, of course, we have the Canadian Bill of Rights, which was passed in 1960 and provides that there should not be discrimination on the ground of sex, among various other things, in regard to a number of human rights and fundamental freedoms, including, and I quote, "the right of the individual to equality before the law and the protection of the law". Denying women the right to serve on juries on the same terms as men is denying them equality before the law.

It is interesting to note that apparently one of the reasons the federal government hesitated to pass this legislation giving women the same right to serve on juries as men was that some people expressed the opinion to the government that this was strictly a provincial right. I think the federal government is now satisfied that it need not be so timid and that the federal government itself has a perfect right to take action in this matter. Consequently, I congratulate the Minister of Justice for going ahead and at long last taking the step, which has been long overdue, of making it mandatory that jury service be open to women and that women will now be called to serve on the same basis as men.

I welcome these amendments to the Criminal Code, though I would have liked to see other matters included as well. For example, there is no reason in the world why the government could not have dealt with the subject of abortion, one of the other rights women should have. However, the government has dealt with vagrancy, with abolition of corporal punishment, the right of women to serve on juries, and a number of other matters having to do with sentencing.

There is one other area in which I should like to see our practice go further. I should like to see the provision of halfway houses for women coming from penal institutions widened. I think they are a good thing. I am not at all sure whether the Solicitor General (Mr. Goyer) was discriminating when he announced a program to put inmates of penitentiaries in private homes. He mentioned only the homes of old age pensioners, but I personally do not think this would be wise. I think the program should be extended to any group of people willing to take those who are given leave from penal institutions to stay in their private home.

As I say, I do not know whether the minister was discriminating and restricting the program only to men. If so, I think women should be included as well. There should be some outlet for those confined in our institutions of punishment of various kinds in order to give them the opportunity of leading a normal life, but on a protected basis for the first little while. Halfway houses would be one way of doing this, but a more intimate and better way would be to find a family willing to receive these people as equals. I repeat, I should like to see this practice extended. I do not think it would be necessary to pass legislation in this regard, though the minister would know whether or not that is the case. In any event, I think this program should be widened.

We in our party are glad to be able to congratulate the minister and to support these amendments to the Criminal Code, which we think are steps in the right direction.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to take much of the time of the House, because I know the minister and his colleagues would like to get this bill through second reading and into the committee for study. There is just one aspect of the minister's proposals that I should like to comment on, and I refer to the proposed removal of corporal punishment.

There has been a great difference of opinion about this matter both in this House and elsewhere for many years. I recall sitting on a committee of this House in 1954 which was considering the subjects of capital punishment, corporal punishment, gambling and lotteries. It used to be known, though perhaps somewhat inappropriately, as the "claptrap and strap committee". However, apart from the rather jocular name that was applied to it, the committee did do a lot of serious work. The members of the House who have not read the reports of that committee on those particular subjects would find them well worth reading.

Although I have never considered myself a sadist, I do have grave doubts about removing corporal punishment from the Criminal Code at the present time. Indeed, I think the minister has some doubts, too, since in presenting the bill to the House last night he said, as I recall it, that he felt corporal punishment should be removed from the Criminal Code but perhaps it should not be removed in some other areas or under some other circumstances, which is some indication that there is doubt. Certainly, I am one of those who has some doubt about such removal. Corporal punishment is very seldom used today, being reserved for particularly aggravating or special cases, such as cases of rape, cases where torture is inflicted on innocent victims, and that sort of thing. It is used only in the rarest of circumstances, and I think its use should be retained as a threat to those who will commit that sort of crime.

As hon. members will recall, a few years ago the question of capital punishment came before this House and, of course, it will be coming before the House again next fall for review if the House is sitting at that time. At the time it was suspended, we were told that capital punishment made no difference to the commission of the crime of murder, that it was not a deterrent. As the hon. member who has just preceded me mentioned, all of the statistics in this regard have not yet been collated, so there does seem to be some doubt about them. However, one thing that is quite clear is that there has been a considerable increase in the number of crimes of murder, particularly of the gangland variety, since capital punishment was removed in all but special cases. In fact, I think we can safely say that capital punishment has been removed in all cases, except in theory; the cabinet has seen to that. The same argument is put forward in the case of corporal punishment. It is said corporal punishment does not deter crime, that it is mediaeval. Perhaps it is, but not all customs and habits of mediaeval days were bad. Human nature does not change.

Some of the people who strongly advocate the complete removal of corporal punishment from the Criminal Code are among the finest people in the country. For example, I think of the minister, some of my friends to my left, members of my own party and others throughout the country. However, everyone tends to interpret these problems in terms of their own feelings. I am sure that the minister would be the last person ever to merit the use of corporal punishment. Certainly, he and many other members of the House, particularly the previous speaker, our lady member from Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis), would never dream of committing and could probably never imagine anybody else committing, some of the offences you hear about.

It is assumed that everybody in Canada is a reasonable person. Someone put it very well when he said that man may be the only animal with the ability to use logic, but man is by no means a logical animal. We are much more often governed by our own emotions and wishes. I am sure there are many social workers, clergymen and others—I will not refer to them as "do-gooders" because that implies some sort of motivation—who are fine people in themselves, who cannot conceive that there are others who are not motivated in the same way as they. They cannot accept the fact that there are people who are sub-normal, or who have a very low degree of intelligence. These are the people who cannot understand logic, common sense or sweet reason. There are also people who have, in psychological terms, psychopathic personalities. They have no sense of responsibility or morality in the broad sense of the words, and reason has no effect on them.

Some years ago before I came to this House I acted as Crown Attorney for two years. I used to hold the same view as the minister and perhaps the hon. lady, but I now know that at any particular time in any society there are gangs of animals which come before the Magistrate's Court charged with committing some violent offence, either singly or in groups. There is no use putting them on probation, telling them to report to a Sunday school teacher or probation officer once a week. They leave the court roaring with laughter and making rude jokes about the whole thing. I know it is difficult for some people in this House who never have had any dealings with these animals to understand this, but it is true whether one likes it or not. It is as simple as that. Certainly, corporal punishment should not be used indiscriminately in respect of any offence, but it should be used in the most extreme cases such as gang rapes and that sort of thing. That sort of thing does take place, even though we like to pretend it does not. I think it should be retained for use in these very severe cases, particularly in view of the increase in violent crime in this country, which has been unwittingly encouraged by those who would like to see it eliminated, as we all would.

I suggest to the minister there is another reason for the retention of corporal punishment, and this may sound rather strange, even contradictory, in view of what I have just said. It is still my view that as long as reform institutions remain what they are today, probably the worst thing you can do is send a fairly young, first offender to one of these institutions. As we all know, they just learn worse habits or new methods of using the bad habits they already have. In certain instances, and of course this is up to the official trying the case, the very moderate use of corporal punishment might well be a better substitute. When you send boys of 16 or 17 to one of these institutions for the first time, some come out with what these gangs refer to as a service chevron. This is almost the reverse of a good conduct medal. Such an individual chalks up another chevron when returned to his element of society for each term spent in custody. If such an individual received some type of corporal punishment, and I agree that the method used could be improved, he would not come back bragging about it.

Corporal punishment should be retained in a somewhat severe form in respect of aggravated cases, the type to which I have referred, and perhaps in a much milder form for the young first offender in respect of whom no real purpose is served by sending him to an institution.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, this is the sort of legislation which is really better discussed in committee because of its detail. There are 76 clauses in the bill and it is almost impossible to distil any single principle. There are a number of principles involved, but I do want to make a few remarks to indicate our support for most, if not all, the provisions of the bill, and to indicate our desire to see it enacted into law as soon as possible.

Let me point out something to the House and to the minister. Perhaps he knows this and does not need it pointed out, but I will point it out anyway. Although these changes are important and, generally speaking, are in the right direction, they do not meet the need for fundamental reform of the criminal law of this country. There is much more to be done and these changes are concerned only with incidental matters. We must make our criminal law modern, up to date, compassionate and remedial. We have so far not succeeded in using the criminal law for the purpose which justifies it, including changing the attitude and conditions of those who tend to criminal acts.

The members of the law Reform Commission, which was created by parliament, have now been appointed, with Mr. Justice Hartt as chairman. I believe it is admirably qualified to suggest fundamental changes to his House and I certainly hope it will do so. I am thinking of the field of law that applies to insanity in criminal cases. In this regard we still observe the M'Naghten rules enunciated, if I recall rightly in 1848, although the wording in the code is not identical to the rules, when there was no real understanding of mental conditions and so on such as we have today. This is a field in respect of which I hope the Law Reform Commission will make suggestions.

Perhaps I should not deal with detail, but one cannot discuss principles without reference to some particular provisions. May I comment on Clause 4 of the bill which deals with appeals in respect of convictions for contempt of court. It always seemed to me an extraordinary thing that a single judge could sentence someone to a rather serious punishment for contempt of court, and yet only the question of punishment could be considered on appeal. We live in an era in which some people believe in confrontation. We live in an era when courts sometimes use intemperate and harsh language, and we have seen recent examples fo this. I support this part for use in dealing with persons who have made some angry remark in the heat of the moment, perhaps provoked by the language or attitude of the court itself, because that ought to be reviewable by a higher court. I am very pleased to see that clause 4 provides that where a court, judge, justice or magistrate summarily convicts a person for contempt of court, whether committed in the face of the court or otherwise, an appeal exists from that conviction for contempt of court.

I also welcome the provisions of clause 6, and the following clauses which deal with the question of hijacking. I am not going to make any elaboration on this particular matter, as it is a technical one, but this particular provision follows the international rule. I should like to take advantage of the opportunity by saying it is an example of the development of the international community, and that our criminal law must sometimes take note of the fact that we are living in a so-called global village. Laws which are made in this country and other countries for the security of people against hijacking and acts of violence of that sort, have to take on some international aspects. This particular provision has our support for that reason.

Another clause I think deserves commendation, and this has been referred to by the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert) and I think also the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis), relates to the repeal of those provisions dealing with vagrancy and prostitution. The removal of these particular provisions from the Criminal Code is long overdue. Prostitution has been a part of life for a very long time. The criminal law has totally failed to deal with it in any sort of way. As the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway said, our law has been applied in a way that is grossly discriminatory on the basis of sex with regard to this particular offence. We welcome the removal of that from the Criminal Code.

I was almost tempted to enter into a private conversation with the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), but I will not do that. His comments are interesting. Perhaps he will make them later.

Another provision I was delighted to see is the one related to a conviction for a driving offence Now, the suspension of driving privileges does not have to be an absolute suspension, but can be a suspension limited to certain times and places. I have often had people come to me whose livelihoods depended on their being able to drive and who have been subject to a mandatory suspension of their licences. The penalty there has been tremendously enhanced, not only as far as the individual is concerned, but often his family. In effect, their whole livelihood has been taken away in addition to the penalty normally and directly imposed for the commission of the offence. This will be a great relief to many families. It deserves to be commended.

I do not feel equally satisfied with the amendment proposed in clause 22. This increases the penalty for assault on a peace officer or police officer from two to five years. This is going in the wrong direction. We all know that in this age of confrontation, there is a need to protect our peace officers and others from interference and obstruction in the course of duty. There is a serious problem involved in connection with this field, but it is a delusion and a mistake to think that the problem can or should be dealt with by increasing the severity of sentence. That goes against the direction in which we should be looking. People in association with police officers who are conscious of the difficulties in their own job think the severe penalty acts as a deterrent. They are wrong and this parliament should not accept that approach because it just does not work.

I rejoice, as do others in this House, at the clause in the bill which repeals sections of the act which deal with the added penalty of whipping in addition to other punishment. I quite agree with the minister and others in this House that this has a brutalizing influence. Expert criminologists say it has no effect on deterrence and, indeed, a sentence of whipping tends to aggravate the criminal tendencies of anyone so sentenced and creates a resentment that is later borne out by the commission of other offences.

Another clause that should be very carefully considered by the committee is clause 62 which deals with a stay of proceedings. As I understand it, this enables counsel instructed by the Attorney General to direct a stay of proceedings in summary cases. I believe this device has been abused, particularly in the courts of British Columbia, with regard to indictable offences. It enables a charge to be partially, but not totally, withdrawn and left over the head of an accused with the right to recommence the proceedings at some future date. If the Crown or prosecuting authorities do not have adequate evidence to proceed against someone, the charge should be withdrawn, not suspended and left hanging over the head of the individual. The extension of this provision of the right to direct a stay of proceedings from the field of indictable offences into the field of summary offences merely extends the possibility of abuse. This particular provision, and the use of pressure tactics on the part of prosecuting authorities, is not suitable.

It is not necessary to go into a lengthy discussion at this stage. No doubt all of these clauses will be subject to careful review by the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. I want to summarize by saying we welcome these changes. Most, if not all, go in the right direction. We look forward to a more fundamental review of our criminal law so it will become more modern, compassionate and effective in the future.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I take up the theme referred to by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) that this is sort of a mini omnibus bill, since it touches on many aspects of the criminal law. Maybe there is a good case for the development of an evolution of the law. I do not share entirely his optimistic note that there has to be a greater degree of compassion. I place a greater emphasis somewhere else. I want to take violent exception to those people who seem to believe that a reassertion of the fundamental principle which in some circles, is referred to in a derogatory manner as law and order, is necessarily bad. The first principle that must be observed is that the citizen has the right not to be offended by his neighbour. If that is a maintenance of law and order, I am in favour of law and order in those terms. Some individuals, for social, economic or other reasons, choose to set aside the law and justify either the taking of property or the assault on other persons. In this day of confrontation, there are many people who will say such actions are fully justified.

What a spectacle we have in the streets, even in front of this building and in many other places, where individuals must run the risk of assaults and other actions from people who frankly say they are the only judges of their conduct, regardless of what it may be. I thoroughly reject this idea. I go back to the fundamental principle that each individual has the right not to be offended by his neighbour and that it is in the public interest that citizens shall live peacefully and at rest from the anxiety and worry of assault on them, on their property and on their other rights. Unfortunately, human nature does not always permit this, whether because of acquisitive instincts or other instincts I cannot say. The reasons for crime are legion. But the ordinary citizen is always the recipient, the one who takes the shock and has to suffer. How often do we hear that the criminal is an unfortunate person. We pat him on the head and tell him to be a good boy in the future. But what about the family that he has abused in some way? What about the poor person from whom he has stolen and who finds himself or herself deprived of property?

I will put this to the minister and to other hon. members, and it is unfortunate that some of them are not here. In my city of Edmonton in the past year the reported cases of rape have tripled or quadrupled, and the police say that only one third of the cases are reported.

Mr. Béchard: Would the whip cure that?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I can assure the hon. member that in violent cases it certainly would. Does the hon. member think that rape by three or four men of some young or older woman does not call for that type of punishment? Some people say that this is wrong, that it brutalizes. I say, what does it do to the victim?

Mr. Gilbert: It is degrading.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I would like to see the hon. member who has said that go to some of our mental hospitals and see what happens to the victim of one of these gang rapes. He says it is degrading to that person.

Mr. Gilbert: Do you think you will make it better by what you are suggesting?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): There is much greater fear—at least that is my judgment—of performing in this way if at the end of the road there could be corporal punishment. But they say that we should have concern for the individual, for the four or five men who brutalize and ruin a young woman who is much weaker. This is one of the most despicable crimes that we can have in the world; yet we turn around and pat the criminals on the head. We want to exercise compassion for these people. I say that we should exercise compassion for the victim. Let us have some concern for the ordinary citizen. I say that it is the citizen who should be protected.

I can hear comments at the back. As soon as you start talking about this insistence upon the safety of the individual, about law and order, you are ridiculed as though you wished to run some sort of a fascist state. It is not so. The other way is a form of mob rule. It is the principle that the mob can impose its will upon the individual or upon the government. I thoroughly disagree with that.

Certainly, there are changes necessary, changes that I would have liked to have seen in the matter of curbing other crime. Our major metropolitan centres have become more and more the locale for crimes of violence. There is increased use of guns in Toronto today. We hear of people standing on the street, a car pulling up, and immediately there is fire from an automatic weapon. It is a gangland crime. The city of Montreal is replete with such crimes. The easiest thing in many of our major cities today is to get hold of a gun or a knife and to use them. I say that the carrying and the use of an offensive weapon for an unlawful purpose should be considered a much more serious crime than it is today. If I go into the streets with a loaded gun in my pocket or in my vehicle, I should face a far more severe punishment than that which is presently on the statute books. We should eliminate as much as possible the use and the carrying of offensive weapons for unlawful purposes. I am sorry that the bill does not provide for this.

The hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) spoke about appeals against a sentence for the offence of contempt of court. I do not see why, just because this is an era of confrontation, we should have our courts opened up to all sorts of disruptive practices and we should give licence to individuals to take such action. Remember that the right of appeal can be abused. I think that if we have faith in our judiciary, then a degree of trust must be placed in them with regard to the maintenance of proper proceedings. I know that the question of contempt of court may be a difficult one, but I do not think it is right to say that there must be a right of appeal because today is the age of confrontation. There seems to be an implicit approval of some of the things that are said and done in the courts. I grant you that sometimes a lawyer may pass rather ascerbic comments about the court and do so with some justification, but they are not the ones about whom hon. members complain. What they are complaining about is those certain individuals who decide for themselves on the spur of the moment what shall be the standard of law as it shall apply to them, not to the other man. They say to a court, "Fine; I shall behave as I see fit."

• (1240)

Mr. Brewin: You are certainly knocking down a straw man there.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I suggest to the hon. member for Greenwood that the door has already been opened, and we see far too much of it. I suppose it is unfortunate that he has not had enough exposure to that type of performance in a court in order to realize what it is.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Hon. members to my left behind me sit like crows on a fence, cawing away. I hope they will take the opportunity to say something about these particular subjects.

The minister may have given some clarification on the next point I am going to raise but, if so, I missed it. This concerns the continuous abdication of responsibility under the Criminal Code, involving those sections which govern the breathalyzer test. The Crown still has not met its obligation to the public to provide a type of container to hold a sample of breath to be given to the individual concerned so as to provide him with a possible defence. The breathalyzer test has been imposed for two years or more. Cases on this point have gone to the courts, and I am not satisfied that the courts have been right in their decisions. In this instance, the individual has had his rights restricted, not by parliament or by statute, but by the failure of administrative action. Is there any guarantee that the government, the law enforcement agency on which there is an obligation by statute to provide something for the possible defence of the individual, will now act? It has failed to do so for more than two years. Is this state of affairs to continue for another three or five years? Is there anything going to be done about it and, if not, why not? If nothing is going to be done to provide such a container, then let the government be honest and say parliament should remove that possible defence from the individual. It is the height of hypocrisy to maintain such a provision in the Criminal Code and yet totally disregard it.

[Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West).]

Clause 18 allows a court to suspend a driving licence for certain periods of time. This may include only certain days of the week or certain parts of a day. In principle, I agree that in certain cases this would be all right, but it will place some courts in a rather difficult position. The vehicle and highway traffic acts of many provinces not only authorize but direct ministers of highways and ministers of transport to revoke a driver's licence, and these acts contain ancillary provisions with regard to a driver's insurance.

Under the provisions of this bill, a magistrate will have authority to suspend a driving licence intermittently. He will have authority to agree with the submission of a defendent that it would be more realistic to prohibit him for driving a vehicle, say, after the hour of five p.m. in the afternoon and before the hour of eight a.m. in the morning. But it must be remembered that the provincial minister of highways or provincial minister of transport is the person who has issued that individual's driving licence, and if the provincial act makes it mandatory upon the minister to suspend his licence for eight months or a year, then we will be faced with a conflict of law. If all the provinces want to get together with the government of Canada and make their highway codes conform with the Criminal Code then all will be fine, but I do not think that is happening at the present time.

I just wish to touch on one last point in connection with the suspension of a driver's licence. This was also referred to by the hon. member for Greenwood. The amended Criminal Code will allow a court to be selective regarding the time of suspension of a driver's licence, out of compassion for the individual concerned, and out of compassion for his family. I would like the court to have some compassion for the poor victim of an accident. While it may be very hard on the individual or on the family of the individual who loses his licence, and while this may place his job in jeopardy, we must also remember the family of the injured or killed victim.

Here, I am thinking of one particular case, that of the younger son in a family, a man with a very brilliant future, who was killed as the result of a very blatant case of impaired driving. There is no doubt that the driver and his family may be subject to some difficulties as a result of the suspension of his licence for, say, a couple of years. But that will not in any way alleviate the heartbreak of the parents of the young man who was killed, nor will it alleviate the heartbreak of the young man's fiancée, who was also injured in the accident. Nor does it compensate society in any way for the loss of the skills of that young man and of his future contribution to society. These are all things that must be taken into account.

This bill is going to committee, Mr. Speaker. I hope that in committee it will receive a lot of study. I hope to have an opportunity to participate in that study, and after the committee has made its recommendations I will reconsider my views with regard to certain clauses of it.

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I sometimes feel that these debates tend to be reserved for people with law degrees. However, although lawyers are intimately associated with law, citizens are equally associated with it since because of it we have all the problems of court cases and associated public concern. I agree with the previous speaker that in order to live in a civilized society there has to be some concern with the law, but it must be a just law strongly supported by the population or it will be challenged and ultimately ignored.

I think since ancient times society has been concerned with the dichotomy of what is good for the individual versus what is good for society. I think there is always the simplistic approach that if the law is repressive enough it will provide a strong enough deterrent to remove crime or at least make it less common. There are those who argue that if we would only bring back the lash there would be fewer crimes of violence but I do not think there is any statistical proof of this. Some people can argue quite effectively for the return of the noose as well, and the same kind of outlook suggests that if strikes were banned there would be no labour disputes.

With great respect to my hon. friend, I think his point of view tends to be simplistic. I know that he is well read, but I wonder if he has perused the great work written by the Attorney General of the United States, Ramsey Clarke, called "Crime in America". In this book he was concerned with the contempt in which a large group of young people held the courts in that country. They were considered to be repressive institutions, used to stifle legitimate dissent. When this occurs there can only be contempt for court. Although we have come close, I think, in this country we yet have to see an incident similar to the Bobby Seal case in the United States. However, if the feeling grows that the law is unjust to certain groups in our society we may see it here, although I am assured that we have court techniques to deal with this kind of thing. The good of the individual versus the good of society has been of concern to man for centuries. I think the side you take in this particular argument, whether you are going to be permissive or repressive, depends on whether you feel that all people are fundamentally bad and if you smack them that is going to make them good or if you feel that people tend to be good and want to do the right thing.

In the time remaining, Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak about a number of items that I would like to see in the Criminal Code which are not there. The minister, since he is a responsible minister in a government led by a Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) who, during the recent constitutional conference with the provinces has proposed that the right of counsel be entrenched in the constitution, will be interested. It seems rather anomalous that while the right to counsel has been proposed by the Prime Minister as part and parcel of Canada's constitution as a just and enlightened measure, there is no mention of it in the proposed Criminal Code amendments. I would, therefore, be interested to know on what basis the minister, who is shepherding this bill through the House, decided to ignore this feature. I hope he will be able to enlighten us.

Many constituents seek to employ their member of parliament or MPP in the role of lawyer, not because they are cheapskates but because they cannot afford counsel and thus may be denied justice in the civil or criminal courts. There are many people languishing in our prisons because they have been denied their civil rights, because they could not afford counsel. I would be interested to know from the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) why this provision has been omitted. Is consideration being given to making the right to counsel explicit in the Criminal Code, as has been proposed by the Prime Minister for our constitution?

Perhaps I could call it one o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being one o'clock I do now leave the chair.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

POWER

EFFECTS OF JAMES BAY HYDROELECTRIC PROJECT

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Leave having been granted to the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken) to move the adjournment of the House pursuant to Standing Order 26 for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the federal involvement in the James Bay hydroelectric development project of the province of Quebec, particularly (a) interference with and relocation of Indians; (b) altering the course of navigable waters protected under the Navigable Waters Protection Act, and (c) effects upon the total Canadian environment.

The hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken), seconded by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), moves:

That this House do now adjourn.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I consider it a matter of extreme urgency that the federal government develop and state publicly a policy concerning the James Bay hydroelectric development project. If decisions have been made, it is equally urgent that they be declared immediately. The urgency has become even more apparent this week in view of indications that the provincial government is moving towards completion of its project plans, and in view of the shameful situation in which a group of Canadians, the James Bay committee, has felt it necessary to approach an American consumer advocate to support their protests.

The government of Quebec is proceeding with its plans and has undertaken the construction of roads, bridges and other preparatory works to the point of no return. The Prime Minister of Quebec has declared the project decision to be irreversible. By delaying its decision on the federal responsibility, the federal government is being fair neither to the province of Quebec nor to the Canadian people. The federal government is gradually being backed into a corner. It will either have to abdicate its responsibilities under the constitution because the job has gone too far to stop or cause a major upheaval in provincial plans in the future.

We have seen in the past several months a major failure in policy development on the part of this government. It has been apparent for over a year that decisions of major proportion would have to be made. If the government, by chance, had overlooked this fact, it has been reminded of it day by day and week by week as a result of questions asked in this House. Every single question, Mr. Speaker, has been passed off, has been answered in vague terms, indicating that neither any of the ministers of the government nor the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) himself knew what to say.

The project itself is of major proportion. The size of territory to be developed is 200,000 square miles containing 10 energy rivers and 6,000 Indian people who hunt and fish. The energy potential of this area is of the order of 85 billion to 97 billion KWH per year; this amount of energy is approximately three times the output of Churchill Falls. Total cost estimates range from $5 to $7 billion of which 60 to 70 per cent is expected to come from outside Quebec. Diversion of rivers will leave the lower 90 miles and 81 miles of the Nottaway and Broadback rivers dry. At least 50 miles of the Opinaca, 20 miles of the Eastmain and 230 miles of the Great Whale river will be dry or have a greatly reduced flow.

There are three major areas of direct federal responsibility in the proposals to develop the James Bay project: (a) interference with and relocation of Indians who are residents of the area; (b) altering the course of navigable waters protected under the Navigable Waters Protection Act; (c) effect upon the total Canadian environment. There are also other areas of federal concern. Export of the power produced is one of them. And of even more concern is the effect of the required financing on the Canadian dollar. On none of these matters has the federal government expressed an opinion.

I turn now to the environmental problems. A federal-provincial task force has looked at the situation and has issued a preliminary report. This report is far from reassuring. The report indicates, according to evidence given in the Committee on Resources, Public Works that "no catastrophic effects" would be apparent resulting from the carrying out of the project. Mr. Speaker, what is catastrophic? Perhaps the task force had in mind certain predictions that the weight of the accumulated water on one-quarter of the surface of the Province of Quebec would cause breaks in the earth's crust and result in earthquakes and possible alteration in the rotation of the earth. This would be catastrophic, and the task force has decided this will not happen. But almost anything short of that can.

Some of the other environmental dangers have been outlined as climatic repercussions—a longer winter—alteration of water flows and currents in James Bay; possible destruction of shoreline vegetation and drowning of forested areas. I understand that areas to be flooded will not be first stripped of trees. There are dangers to waterfowl and wildlife. Yet, there is still no indication of the manner in which the extent of these dangers is to be evaluated. The task force was admittedly a preliminary manoeuvre, but it did not study these factors in depth.

The Minister of the Environment (Mr. Davis), in common with other ministers who have been questioned in the House, has given us no idea how he proposes to deal with these problems, of how he intends to deal with any threats to the environment. Hydro Quebec has apparently made some fairly complete studies of the project but no information has been made available; indeed, as far as we know, results have not been conveyed, even to the Department of the Environment. I stand to be corrected if such is not the case. In any event, the studies by Hydro Quebec have not surfaced for reviewing by the general public.

It is not necessary to view the James Bay hydro development in a negative way. It is a tremendous undertaking and undoubtedly it possesses great possibilities in the area of development, the exploitation of mineral and forest products, the on-site construction of mills, the realization of gigantic power potential and, temporarily at least, major employment prospects. Sadly, the federal government has not even responded to these positive factors with any enthusiasm. It has failed to respond at all. If this project is to succeed it must go ahead on the basis of sufficient study of the dangers involved and the chances which are being taken. Herein lies the shortcoming of the federal position. The federal government has failed to carry out needed research and has given no indication whether such research in depth will, in fact, be undertaken. Perhaps it intends to accept and act upon the work done by Hydro Quebec. We have not been told there is to be an examination of the James Bay project department by department, or as a concentrated effort shared by all the departments concerned.

The problems of the native population are so serious as to be difficult for them to comprehend. They are caught between a provincial government which states it is determined to proceed with the plan and the federal government which is supposed to be protecting their interests but does not appear to be doing so. They are in danger of being uprooted from their homes, and, what is even worse, of finding their style of life completely altered because of environmental changes. One of my hon. friends will be dealing with this aspect, and I shall not expand on it further.

Under our constitution, the federal parliament and government have been assigned responsibility for the protection of navigable waters. Federal legislation requires that any work which would interfere with or alter navigable waters must first receive approval under the provisions of the Navigable Waters Protection Act. No indication has been given us that such an application is being made or that the federal government is prepared to receive one. Nor is there any indication from the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) that his department is undertaking studies upon the basis of which an informed decision may be reached when the time comes.

Surely, it is not sufficient in an undertaking of this magnitude for the Department of Transport to sit back and say: When the Province of Quebec comes along and asks us for permission we shall give the matter some thought. These studies cannot be carried out in a few weeks or months. It may be, of course, that studies are, in fact, already under way in the Department of Transport but in spite of the many questions directed to him day after day, the minister has never told us whether any preparation is being made on the basis of which the ministry can recommend a course of action under the terms of the Navigable Waters Protection Act. My colleague for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) is fully aware of the dangers of bypassing normal requirements in this type of application, and I am sure that he will have something to say on that score.

We are falling down somewhere, Mr. Speaker, when a group of Canadians finds it necessary to turn to an American consumer advocate for protection. If the fault has been in this House, then I hope we can do something about it today. The opposition has questioned the government constantly on the subject and they must be getting tired of these questions. But perhaps that is not good enough. If the government is at fault, and I suggest it is, then it is time it rectified the fault.

This House is a place where complaints about Canadian matters shouls be aired and settled by the government and the people's elected representatives. As I have already stated, I find it rather disgraceful that our citizens have to run to Americans to ask for protection. There has been no effort whatsoever to inform the public what is going on in the federal government with regard to this matter, if anything is going on. All the ministerial statements made in this House have been mumbled platitudes in order to get past the question period without saying anything, and I must say the government has been extremely successful. There have been no statements on motions, the traditional way of keeping the people of Canada and the House informed.

That is the reason I moved this motion yesterday, in the hope that the urgency of the situation would be evident. Urgency of debate is the basis for a Standing Order 26 motion. I am most gratified that the Chair accepted the motion so that this matter can be debated. I think the time has come for a clear and unequivocal statement on this project from the government, and I hope that as a result of this debate today we will receive it.

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to have an opportunity of speaking to the motion that is currently before the House regarding the James Bay development project. I must congratulate the hon. member who just spoke for bringing the motion before the House yesterday and the Speaker for his decision to allow this rather important debate. I feel it gives the members of this House an opportunity to discuss some aspects of this proposed development.

The federal government has some jurisdiction in the area to be developed, but to date we have received very little information from the departments concerned despite numerous questions and inquiries put by various members of the House. It is a bitter disappointment, to say the least, to realize that another major project is underway without adequate studies having been made to determine what its over-all effect will be on the natives in the area, the environment generally and, of course, the Canadian economy. No serious attempt has been made to find out whether the detrimental effects of the project, when added to its cost, will outweigh the advantages to be derived. This information is required before the project gets underway, and it is a tragedy that once again resource development on an immense scale is taking place without the over-all planning that is necessary in this day and age. It appears that the environmental blunders of the past will be repeated, and the federal government must take its full share of criticism for it has given poor leadership in this regard. Apparently the tragic effects of the Bennett dam on the Athabasca and Mackenzie deltas have been forgotten, and it is felt to be politically expedient practically to ignore the present project.

Our group is not opposed to hydro development; this must come in many areas of Canada. However, we suggest that these developments should be based on a thorough study of their full impact on the residents in the area, the environment and the economy. This study has not been done as far as the James Bay project is concerned, and we are requesting more action and information from the federal departments involved.

Perhaps I should place a few general facts on the record regarding this project to show how quickly it has come up and to indicate the lack of interest on the part of federal authorities. In April 1971, the Quebec government announced its plan to develop the hydroelectric potential of the James Bay area. In July 1971, the National Assembly of Quebec enacted legislation to establish the James Bay Development Corporation with the objective of promoting the development and exploitation of natural resources in that area. It is an immense project. Its final generating capability could be as high as 12 million kilowatts. It will cost about $7 billion. The premier of Quebec claims that it will create 125,000 jobs. The decision to proceed with the project in such a rush is obviously a political one.

I have no doubt that the project is feasible on an engineering basis. It can be built. But whether the project should proceed is another matter. Engineers can estimate the cost of the project, the output of the turbines, the delivering of power to the market, etc. They never seriously consider the cost of environmental damage, the dislocation of people, the possible effect on our nation's economy, or the fact it might be another energy sell-out to the United States. For this is not the task of the engineers; they are primarily hired to plan for hydro development, and in this respect they do extremely well.

The previous speaker covered a number of topics and I should like to expand on several of them but will deal primarily with the environmental aspects of the project. May I again point out that this House has not been given full and proper information on the James Bay project by the departments involved. This is not good enough when we realize that there will be a major social impact on about 7,000 of our native people who live there. Questions have been asked of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) about what his department is doing. The answer has been that negotiations are going on between the natives and the Quebec government. This answer is not good enough. Is he actively assisting the natives who have requested his help, or is he ignoring the claims of the natives, as he has done in the northern part of our country? Other speakers will deal extensively with the rights of the natives, but may I point out to the House that the minister is obligated by law to protect the rights of the natives in this area.

I have a copy of the Quebec Boundaries Extension Act of 1912 which I understand is still in effect. It extended the boundaries of the province of Quebec to the north. This addition to the province included the Eastmain River and the area north of the Eastmain River. Part of this addition is within the project area. May I quote from this act which is entitled the Quebec Boundaries Extension Act, 1912. I quote the first part of the second section as follows:

> The limits of the province of Quebec are hereby increased so that the boundaries thereof shall include, in addition to the present territory of the said province, the territory bounded and described as follows:— Commencing at the point at the mouth of Eastmain River where it empties into James Bay, the said point being the western termination of the northern boundary of the province of Quebec as established by chapter 3 of the statutes of 1898, intituled An Act respecting the north-western, northern and north-eastern boundaries of the province of Quebec; thence northerly and easterly along the shores of Hudson Bay and Hudson Strait—

There is more to the section but it does not apply to the point I am making. This indicates that part of the James Bay project comes under this treaty.

Another part of the section indicates that as a condition of the extension of the boundaries, the government of Quebec is required to do certain things. Let me go a little further and read section 2(c) and (d). Section 2(c) provides:

> That the province of Quebec will recognize the rights of the Indian inhabitants in the territory above described to the same extent, and will obtain surrenders of such rights in the same manner, as the Government of Canada has heretofore recognized such rights and has obtained surrender thereof, and the said province shall bear and satisfy all charges and expenditure in connection with or arising out of such surrenders—

Section 2(d) provides:

> That no such surrender shall be made or obtained except with the approval of the Governor in Council—

Where does this leave the federal department of Indian affairs as far as this addition to the province of Quebec, which took place in 1912, is concerned? I suggest it means that before any of these lands can be taken away from the natives by the government, the province must obtain from the natives who live in the area the surrender of their rights.

I ask the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) this question and perhaps he will answer it when he speaks later in the debate: Has an agreement been made between the natives and the province of Quebec that the natives shall surrender their rights? If it has not, I suggest in all humility—I am not a lawyer—that it is illegal for a province to say it will move into an area and take away certain rights from the people who live there. If there has been a breach of the law in this regard, I ask the minister and those responsible in the federal government what they are doing about it. Are they protecting the rights of the 7,000 native Indians who live in the James Bay area?

I have here a number of newspaper and other articles written about the project. These people have come to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development for help but they have received nothing.

Mr. Chrétien: That is not true.

Mr. Harding: They are asking the minister to fight their case if necessary before the courts of this land in order to protect the rights of our native peoples who have been guaranteed rights under an act passed by the Parliament of Canada.

Mr. Chrétien: When have they done that?

Mr. Harding: I understand the minister has been approached.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, may I have permission to ask the hon. member a question? The hon. member has made a very direct allegation and I should like to know the date when the Indians asked the Minister of Indian Affairs to take part in this fight. He said it was made officially and I would like him to be precise.

Mr. Nielsen: July of 1971—and I will get to that later.

Mr. Harding: I do not have the specific letter before me—

Mr. Chrétien: If you don't have it, don't talk about it.

Mr. Harding: —but time and time again questions have been asked of the minister in the House and he has not answered. We have had numerous reports, including a lengthy report from the James Bay Committee, which indicate that the department has been approached, but these people have received no affirmative reply from the minister.

Mr. Chrétien: That is not true.

Mr. Harding: Whether or not they have approached the minister, the fact is that this is the law of Canada.

Mr. Chrétien: Skate away.

Mr. Harding: This is the law of Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. I remind hon. members that this is likely to be a long debate. We began the debate in a very cool and calm manner. I suggest we allow the hon. member who has the floor to speak and be heard by the Chair.

Mr. Harding: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It was not my intention to irritate the minister, but we expect answers to these questions and we expect them today. We hope that beneficial results will flow from this debate. We have had a series of environmental problems throughout the country over the past few years, some of which have been rather tragic as far as environmental effects are concerned. We have had for some time a number of federal measures on the statute books. Some of them were referred to by the previous speaker. We have the Canada Water Act and the Fisheries Act; and, of course, the Department of Indian Affairs has responsibility under a number of acts.

In the past few years we have experienced across Canada some rather serious problems simply because the federal government has not initiated the proper development surveys, nor have the provincial governments, before certain projects have been commenced. I mentioned earlier the Bennett dam on the Peace River. Let me draw to the attention of the House that only a few years ago this dam was completed and the flood waters of the Peace River were stored behind it. Apparently Canadians at that time were not very interested in the effects of the dam on the downstream area. Now, a few years later, we find in the Athabasca and Mackenzie River deltas that very severe and adverse environmental effects have taken place.

Just the other day in the committee I was questioning one of the officials of the department about the effects of the dam on the Athabasca delta. He indicated in his answers that initially, there were 750,000 pair of nesting ducks which produced about 2 million ducks. The effect of the dam has been to cut this down to about 200,000 pair of nesting ducks and the over-all production of wild duck to just over one-half million. These are not all lost but it means that in many instances they have probably gone looking for other nesting places. This is a very serious matter. It affects the whole wildlife and ecology of that vast northern area.

Even the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Davis) in a speech which he made several weeks ago outlined very ably the damage that has been done through man's neglect to take into consideration the over-all effects of damming these rivers. We are asking the very same thing about the James Bay area. What has been done?

We had a federal-provincial task force. They started in the middle of last year and produced a report on either February 2 or 3 of this year. However, the report is not based on any basic research for the simple reason they did not have time to do the research.

The report has generally indicated there will be no major dislocation as far as this project is concerned. In effect, they have given a green light to the James Bay Development Corporation to proceed. I repeat, this is based on no actual or effective research having been done on the effects which the damming of these rivers will have on not only the inhabitants of the area or the wildlife, but on the effect it will have on James Bay itself.

There have been warnings by one or two scientists who have indicated this could change the whole climate of that area. What effect will it have on the fish? For years our party has been urging that before major projects of this nature take place, full and proper ecological surveys should be made. This should be done before a project is announced, not after. Here it is 1972 and we find that this has not been done.

There is another question I wish to ask the ministers in charge. When the dams are built, about 4,000 acres will be flooded. I come from the area of the Columbia River project and I know what flooding can do. When the Duncan Dam was built, about 15 per cent of the area was cleared. It is a national disgrace to see the vast areas of the north end of Duncan Lake where there is a mass of floating debris, trees, stumps and sticks. Is the same thing going to happen in the province of Quebec? Is there provision in this agreement whereby these areas will be cleared so they will be recreational assets to the province in the future? As far as I know there is no provision for clearing.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to say a few words on the topic before the House. The James Bay development project is of major importance. Many Canadians live in that area, and have the right to live there, and according to some if that area is developed the very existence of those citizens will be jeopardized.

We must therefore seek justice; the government must protect citizens whose rights are threatened. If citizens live in that area and fulfil themselves there, it is our duty to study closely what their fate will be, especially if their right to life is being threatened. It may be that the whole situation will have to be studied before we find out whether or not those citizens' rights will be violated.

Mr. Speaker, there are collective rights which it behooves society to protect.

In our era of progress and abundance, we see the structures and institutions of peoples being totally transformed. This is accompanied by cultural, economic and social evolution. Those changes exert great influence on the political, intellectual and moral life of the community, particularly with regard to the rights and duties of the individual in the enjoyment of civil freedom and the pursuit of the common good, as well as the organization of relations between the citizens and the public authorities. The citizens of the James Bay area certainly need public powers to help them claim their rights.

Owing to the greater awareness of human conscience and dignity, efforts are being made, in various areas of the world, towards establishing a political-judicial order in which, in public life, the rights of the individual will be better protected. For instance, the guarantee of the right of free enterprise, the right to express personal opinions or profess a religion is a requisite for citizens, individually or in groups, to be able to take part in public life and the administration of public affairs in keeping with cultural, economic and social progress. Many people manifest the will to participate to a greater degree in the organization of the political and economic community, and many of these are becoming increasingly anxious to protect the rights of minorities within a nation.

Those involved are, I believe, some 4,000 citizens living in the James Bay area and they are certainly entitled to receive justice from the government, without thereby failing to carry out their obligations to the political community. Moreover, there is increasing respect for those who hold different opinions or practice a different religion. At the same time, there is more co-operation, whereby all citizens—and not only the privileged few—may truly enjoy human rights. It is evident that the citizens who live on this immense territory are its true owners and that we have a duty to preserve all their rights and privileges.

We cannot recognize that political influences which operate in some areas hinder civil and religious liberties. There are more and more victims of passions and political crimes, where the exercise of authority is diverted from the public interest for the benefit of a few cliques or for the benefit of governments themselves.

Even though a government must gain control over this territory and develop it for peaceful ends, a great number of citizens live there who have a right to our respect, because this is their own territory. When these citizens are oppressed under any consideration, justice must be done. Citizens must find moral and often legal support so that the protection of their rights can be ensured.

Individuals, families, various groups, all those who make up the civil community are aware of their inability to achieve on their own a fully human life. Often the whole community must join efforts in the pursuit of public interests. This is why they form a political community, according to various institutional patterns, but always for the common good, in which they find their full justification and their very rights.

This common good comprises the whole of social conditions and allows individual, families and groups to develop more easily and to enjoy freedom.

But the men who live within the community are many and different. They can rightfully hold various opinions. But it is the political community which, despite that fact, protects them against confusion. So there must exist an authority capable of channeling all efforts towards the people's well-being, yet acting above all as moral forces anchored in freedom and in a sense of responsibility.

Evidently, the political community and public authority rest on human nature and depend on an order set up by the Creator, although the establishment of political systems and the appointment of their leaders should be left to the citizens' discretion.

It is beyond question that the people of this large territory have fundamental rights and it would be unjust on the part of the government to fail to intervene—if only for social, moral and logical reasons—in order to study the situation as a whole so that justice may be done to those citizens.

It may well be said that this is an area belonging to Quebecers, to Canadians—and in fact there are Quebecers and other Canadians there—but what matters is to ascertain first whether the liberty and the right to life of those people will be affected by this hydroelectric project. Those 4,000 people who live there are worth much more than the ten or fifteen billion we will invest there into this project.

Human forces go far beyond those of money. There is the might of 4,000 citizens, who earn their living in this large and beautiful area that they love. Mr. Speaker, to remove them from there would have many effects: the situation may become complex, and before it becomes too complex, we are studying today the Bay James development project because, even though a government is involved, such projects cost money. We must not discuss that matter here, other than casually. Perhaps they will not even profit to the community.

It might be more profitable to let these 4,000 Canadians live in that area since they have chosen to grow up there and to die there. If we develop that area, they will be deported, just like the Acadians were. It is not natural or normal to deport citizens and take their land away from them.

We are studying today a motion about which, I understand, many hon. members are concerned. We take an interest in this motion because it implies the protection of human lives. It involves human beings, not animals; there is no price for the people living in the James Bay area or all the other people on the earth. There is no price for any human being, however humble he may be. There is nothing greater than a human being.

Mr. Speaker, once more I ask the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald), to consider seriously this situation with the government. In my opinion, he will be supported by all the hon. members, and we shall thus be able to give justice to the honourable and good citizens of that area.

Mr Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the hon. member?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): The Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, may I ask my hon. friend—and I mean my "hon. friend"—a question?

Mr. Latulippe: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. member if, in spite of the reservations he has made that the native people must of course—and I hope they are—be protected, he is prepared to state whether he is in favour or not of the development of the James Bay area?

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Speaker, I cannot say that I am against it. I have asked the departments concerned to study the situation and to deal with it fairly. I do not have enough information to decide whether I should be for or against the project. It is not for me to decide. Although my remarks are a little vague, I know that it is essential that the inhabitants of this area be treated with fairness. This has been the gist of my remarks. As to my being for or against this project, I am not the one to decide because I do not now have sufficient information on the subject.

Mr. Corbin: You are on the fence.

• (1500)

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker.

An hon. Member: In French.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): In French? Very well.

Mr. Speaker, I should like, as the first speaker on this side, to indicate that other cabinet colleagues will take part in this debate. By way of introduction, I say that this very important issue means a great deal to us.

[English]

What I would like to do, Mr. Speaker, is make a general introduction to the question, to respond as far as my own ministerial responsibilities may be affected in this regard, and then to orchestrate the response which will be made by my other colleagues on this side of the House.

Mr. Baldwin: Let's get some harmony out of it.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): My colleague, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien), will come in with the French horn. The Minister of Environment (Mr. Davis) will bring in a western music theme, and no doubt the tubas will be heard from the other side of the House.

Mr. Crouse: The big bassoon is being heard now.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): And as one of my hon. friends says, the opposition will fiddle as usual.

It is difficult to improve on the concise statements made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on February 24 in response to a question put by the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle), to be found in Hansard of that day as follows:

> Of course the establishment of hydroelectric services on a river within a province falls under the jurisdiction of that province. Still, such undertakings may have consequences in areas under the responsibility of the federal government, for instance on the Indian population, the financing method, the export of energy—if that is the intention—the establishment of means of transportation, if the provincial government waits for the federal government to build them. Now for all those reasons we are interested in certain aspects of the project and it is those aspects that the government of the province of Quebec will have to discuss with the federal government if it wants to have our co-operation.
> At present, the federal government has made no commitments.

The hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken) basically accepted that proposition, and I noted his words that the development of power wholly within a province is entirely the prerogative of that particular province. I think it is recognized that it is the constitutional prerogative of individual provinces to select priorities for resource development within provincial boundaries, so long as such development does not interfere with the over-all development of Canada and does not have an adverse effect on neighbouring provinces.

The first question, which I take it is not in debate, is as to the wisdom or otherwise of proceeding with this particular project. Perhaps the answer is to be found best in a quick review of some of the statistics with regard to the estimated demand for energy, and in particular for electricity, between now and the end of the century. The demand for electricity is expected to grow at something like 6.5 per cent per year over the next 30 years, which is a five fold increase over the demand in 1970. One staggering conclusion is that in order to produce the electricity required in the year 2000, one half of all the primary energy used in Canada will be for electric generation. This therefore means that the province of Quebec has decided, as has been the case with provincial governments across the country, that it will have to meet the load demand in the province by bringing on to stream additional sources of electric power. And of course the preference is, and this has been the practice for some time, to attempt as far as possible to do as the province of Ontario has now done, to develop the hydroelectric head first and then proceed to thermal generation.

One of the points mentioned by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka was a reference to the possibilities of export of power. The National Energy Board of course is the body within the government of Canada which has the responsibility of dealing with the removal of power, whether across provincial boundaries or from a province to a foreign country. I am advised that while the National Energy Board is maintaining a watching brief on the proposed James Bay project, it has had no direct involvement to date. In other words, there has been no direct request to the Board for any approval, formal or informal, for any export of power from the province of Quebec. Indeed, so far as I know, and I do not pretend to have read all of the releases on the subject, there has been no indication by the Quebec authorities that they will seek to remove any part of the proposed power either to the province of Ontario, the state of New York, or any other adjacent user.

What is clear is that there will be a heavy demand for power in the province of Quebec in the coming several years. For that reason it is not unlikely that the product produced by this proposed development will be used entirely within that province. In any event the National Energy Board does not express hypothetical views on projects as they are started by provinces, nor does it consider the question of export until it is the subject matter of a formal application, which in this case would presumably be three to five to seven years away from the present date.

In the event that a licence and certificate are sought in connection with the James Bay project, applications would be assessed in accordance with the provisions of the National Energy Board Act. This would involve, among other things, a determination of the surplus nature of the power marked for export, and a finding as to whether the proposed border price was just and reasonable in relation to the public interest. Therefore, as I have mentioned, the question at this point is not so much as to whether the power project should proceed, and the hon. member has not raised that point. He has put his case on three other points.

His first point is in connection with responsibilities with regard to the native peoples in the area. I can confirm that my colleague, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, will be speaking both with regard to that subject and with regard to the hon. member's second point, namely, the responsibilities of the government of Canada under the Navigable Waters Protection Act. My colleague the Minister of the Environment, is also with us this afternoon and he, in turn, will be speaking on the environment studies which have already been carried on by Environment Canada and the provincial authorities, and he will set out the viewpoint of the federal government in this particular regard.

So, in summation, Mr. Speaker, the three points which the hon. member has raised will be dealt with by my colleagues. I also affirm a point that I think he recognizes, that it is not for the federal government to say at this juncture whether we should or should not continue this project, just as we would not interfere with the province of Ontario carrying out a similar activity.

Mr. Aiken: May I ask the minister a question?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Yes, by all means.

Mr. Aiken: I would like to ask the minister if he is proposing the view that since the National Energy Board has to make the ultimate decision on the export of power and so forth, it is not within the jurisdiction or the requirements of his department to do some work, to give evidence before the Board if necessary, or give some indication of what the general view of the government is on the export of the power, or the development of power within the country? Is he therefore taking the view that his department has no responsibilities whatsoever in regard to this project except through the National Energy Board?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I was taking the viewpoint, and it is strictly the jurisdictional point, that it is not for the government of Canada to say yes or no to a particular project within a province. If the hon. member has another viewpoint, then I would be interested to hear it. There is, of course, the over-all concern and responsibility of the government of Canada, and in particular of the ministry of Energy, Mines and Resources, to keep close track of the energy resources of this country, particularly the power resources. The vast majority of these, of course, are under the immediate control of the provinces. It will be a matter of equal concern, as substantial developments come forward, to try and time these by arrangement and consultation between the federal government and the various provinces. I think the hon. member would agree with me that it is not for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to say yea or nay to a specific project within any particular province.

• (1510)

An hon. Member: He can give his opinion, though.

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): The hon. member has a question?

Mr. Penner: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the minister. He spoke about the growing demand for electric power in this country. Does the minister not agree that there is now a need in Canada for a program to conserve, even restrict or perhaps ration, the use of electric power? Is the federal government, either by itself or with the provinces, considering such a program of restriction?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I would not necessarily concede that at the moment there is a need for conservation or, as the hon. member said, restriction of the use of energy, particularly electrical energy, but I recognize the fact that over a period of time there is going to be a heavy demand on Canadian energy resources. To put it the other way, wasteful practices with regard to energy, as for example avoiding the construction of facilities which involve energy or heat loss where this is possible is definitely the kind of thing to be pursued and is being pursued by the federal government.

Again I go back to the point that I do not think it is for myself, as minister, to sit over top of Mr. George Gathercole in Ontario Hydro, and tell him how he is going to conduct hydro business in the province of Ontario.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Does the hon. member rise for the purpose of asking a question?

Mr. Crouse: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I listened with interest to the speech by the maestro as he fiddled away over there. In my opinion, he neatly dumped the question of assuming responsibility for establishing power development vis-à-vis the federal government and the provinces. The statement brought to mind the situation which presently exists in Nova Scotia, where consultations have been held for some considerable period of time about the development of electrical energy through the use of the Fundy tides. I wonder if the minister would indicate whether in his opinion this is a matter that must be entirely resolved by the provincial government or will responsibility for this development be shared equally between the province of Nova Scotia and the federal government?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): No, Mr. Speaker. As the hon. member will recall, under our constitution ownership of the seabed below the low water mark lies with the government of Canada. Undoubtedly, while the provinces that would use the resources would be Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, any participation in a tidal power project would involve the use of federal property, in this case the seabed, so naturally the federal government is directly involved. We have no direct proprietary right in the case of the Ontario Hydro properties or James Bay.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, first of all I want to say something nice about the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). I saw him as he was leaving yesterday, and he asked me if I would miss him. I said that I would but I would try to say something nice about him and that is what I am going to do now. I am going to thank him for his recitation from Desiderata the other day—I don't know what he told the caucus but he did not make them too happy. I looked up my old copy of Desiderata, and in paying tribute to the Prime Minister I would also use this as a prelude to what I am going to say and what my approach is going to be to this debate.

Speak your truth quietly and clearly and listen to others, even the dull and ignorant; they too have their story. Avoid loud and aggressive persons, they are vexatious to the spirit.

I guess we will have to put up with that. I want to say to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) that I accept his approach that the constitutional responsibility lies with a province for the steps to be taken to initiate the development of electric power. On the other hand, by our constitution, by practice and also by the statutes this parliament has passed pursuant to its right to do so, there are embodied in our laws certain restrictions on that provincial right. I am not referring to the direct right to initiate a project but a right to attach conditions to the development of the project. I think there is no easier way to look at that than to look at what happened not long ago when the National Energy Board, a child of the federal government, acting within the jurisdiction legally given to it by this parliament, said to the producers of natural gas in the province of Alberta "You may indeed produce gas, but the limitation we place upon you is that it cannot be exported". In a mixed jurisdiction, that is the way this sort of thing operates.

In making his statement, the minister indulged in a little sophistry. I think he has been standing too close to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin), who is a master of sophistry, and a little intellectual osmosis has developed. It is true that the right to initiate any project for the development of power lies exclusively within a province but subject to the right of the federal government, or institutions developed under federal jurisdiction, to place certain obstacles or conditions which must be met before a plan can proceed and before the energy which has been developed can be exported. I do not think the minister will deny that to be the fact. Any federal government which refuses to accept that proposition and refuses to act upon it if it is considered essential, is denying its responsibility under the constitution of this country.

The hon. minister referred to the importance of this subject. It is, of course, an important subject and that is borne out by the fact that two other ministers, as well as other members on the government side, are going to speak in this debate. Then, if this is so, why did we have to wait until the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken) was able to persuade the Chair that this matter was important enough that the business of the house should be interrupted for a debate? Why did the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien), the minister who has just spoken, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Davis) or the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson), each of whom has some responsibility, not speak for the government or make a statement on motions? I ask them to tell the House precisely what their position is and what the government intends to do on this issue. I think they have a duty to this House in the exercise of their collective responsibility to make known to the country from time to time where they stand on important issues, and not wait until the opposition, in pursuance of its duty, drags these statements out of them.

One has sympathy and understanding, Mr. Speaker, for the desire of the Province of Quebec or any province to develop its industries, to develop its resources and to try to provide an increase in its standard of living through any of these means. It is proper for governments to do this, and I for one would never want to do anything which would interfere with the right of the Province of Quebec, the Province of Ontario and the Province of Alberta to so proceed. I think that must be the basic point of our discussion.

Today we realize more and more that our resources are not inexhaustible. We know that steps taken by governments and corporations, private or public, in the development of these resources can lead to consequences which may not have been foreseen originally but which may have serious detrimental effects upon future generations of Canadians. If we do not draw these consequences to the attention of the government—I am speaking not only of the federal government but of provincial governments—and make known the knowledge that we have obtained, we shall be abdicating our responsibilities with respect to development projects of this kind.

My hon. friend from Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken) has objectively and reasonably put forward grounds to show that this question must be examined by parliament. I intend to deal with one aspect of the matter, that is, the responsibility of the federal government under the Navigable Waters Protection Act. I shall speak about what this government should do and what it has failed to do. While so doing I will yield to temptation and show, by illustrating what happened on another occasion, precisely how governments and the people can get into serious trouble when they neglect to abide by the provisions laid down in a particular and important piece of legislation.

I will not take up the time of the House by reciting the legislation. It is well known; it has been discussed in the House and has been the subject of questions. We know today, from answers given by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) with respect to two bridges which were constructed or are being constructed by the corporation of the province of Quebec charged with responsibility for the project, that an application has been made under the Navigable Waters Protection Act. There is another bridge with respect to which approval may not have been given. One must also consider the extent to which these bridges and other works will interfere with the free flow of the river.

I will quote a highly qualified witness to confirm the correctness of my statement regarding the necessity for complying with the Navigable Waters Protection Act in these matters. Speaking about the Moran hydroelectric development in British Columbia, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Davis), on page 9 of a news release dated March 1, 1971, said as follows:

> And what do I mean by that? Well, the Fraser River is a major salmon river. It is also navigable. It therefore comes under two federal acts, the federal Fisheries Act and the federal Navigable Waters Protection Act. Before a dam could be built at Moran, B.C. Hydro would have to get a permit from the Federal Department of Transport under the Navigable Waters Protection Act. And before it could begin construction it would also have to satisfy the federal Minister of Fisheries that there will be adequate provision for fish passages and so on.

The minister then quoted sections of the Fisheries Act. I agree with what he said: it is right, it is sensible and it is the law. The law must be complied with in every province of this country. It was not complied with a number of years ago in the case of the Peace River. May I recapitulate the facts.

In the early part of the 1950s a Swedish industrialist, Axel Wenner-Gren, applied to the British Columbia government for a permit with regard to the feasibility study and ultimate construction of a dam across the Peace River near Hudson Hope. He hoped that this would lead to exploration and development of natural resources in a large part of the trench of the Rocky Mountains. Ultimately, Mr. Bennett, Premier of British Columbia, decided that there must be development of two rivers in that province, the Columbia River and the Peace River. This proposal was objected to by the Hon. Davie Fulton who was minister of justice in the government led by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker). The proposal was rejected. Then the government changed.

In the new government the then secretary of state for external affairs, now government leader in the Senate, being determined to pull off a coup and produce Mr. Bennett at Washington for the signing of a treaty, permitted, nay, encouraged, the government of British Columbia to proceed with the power construction program involving the two rivers. He encouraged the province of British Columbia to build a dam across the Peace River without requesting the consent which was essential and should have been obtained under the Navigable Waters Protection Act.

At that time I was the only member of the House who was aware of the problem. I challenged the minister of justice of the day and finally, after much questioning, obtained an admission to the effect that the Navigable Waters Protection Act applied, that permission had to be obtained for construction and that application had to be made. At that time the Department of Public Works was responsible in the House for that legislation. For two years I pursued this question with the Liberal government and got nowhere.

Finally, the dam was constructed. Irreparable damage was suffered by the lower parts of the Peace River and particularly the Athabasca-Peace River delta, and no one can be certain as to the consequences to the Mackenzie River basin. The Minister of the Environment admits this. In a press release dated February 17, 1971, we find the following statement:

> Mr. Davis said that preliminary hydrological studies indicate that filling of the Williston reservoir, created by the construction of the Bennett dam in B.C., appears in part responsible for reduced water levels in Lake Athabasca and ecological changes in the Athabasca delta.—
> Ecologists say that a continuation of low water levels in the Athabasca delta may permanently change the vegetation and in turn the animal life. They say that it is especially necessary that high-level flood flows cover the delta not later than the spring of 1972, in order to avoid permanent ecological changes.

I thoroughly agree with that statement. I was in that area recently, and we do not know what will happen. I only hope there will not be permanent damage. The government cannot avoid its responsibilities. The waters I am talking about come squarely within the definition of navigable waters under the act. One of the last cases I was involved in before coming to this House concerned a narrow creek not wider than the aisle which separates the front benches of this House. In that case, a fisherman seeking to go from his home to Lesser Slave Lake was compelled to travel through the waters of that stream which crossed the land of a farmer. The farmer built a fence across the stream. Officials of the federal Department of Public Works in Edmonton instituted an action, secured an injunction and ultimately a judgment for damages. The farmer concerned was compelled to take down the fence.

Without doubt, the definition of navigable rivers and navigable waters as interpreted by the Exchequer Court of this country makes it clear that such rivers and waters are covered by this legislation. Nobody in the government has told us what the government's intentions are regarding the navigable waters in question. I hope, and I will give the government credit in this regard, until the contrary appears that these projects will not be allowed to proceed until the corporation of the province of Quebec charged with responsibility files plans and those plans have been examined in detail by competent and responsible engineers, so that the results which will flow from the proposed changes to the rivers will be acceptable.

That is the plea I am making. I could be much more critical, but I think this is the time for plain speaking. This is the time to urge upon the government the view of the vast majority of people in this country, namely, that when governments and powerful corporations become involved in vast public works undertakings, every precaution must be taken to ensure that the kind of irreparable damage we have experienced in the Peace River area is not perpetrated in other parts of Canada.

I urge the government to take this plea to heart. If they do not, I assure them that as long as they sit on the other side of the House they will have to deal with a determined opposition and, I am sure, with a determined people in this land.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I was in no hurry to rise but clearly the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) wants to speak after me, so I am not in the least embarrassed, quite the opposite. I do not evade committees or the House. I can face the situation as it is.

I welcome the opportunity for us to take part in this debate which is extremely important, particularly so for a certain group of Canadian citizens, the Indians of the James Bay area. In fact, it is gratifying for me to be able to clarify the matter and to give a detailed explanation of the situation of the Indians now facing this problem.

First of all, I refer to the point raised by the hon. member who spoke on behalf of the New Democratic Party. He has, concerning the Indians, an attitude which in our times is no longer acceptable, that is that we should replace them completely in all situations.

[English]

We decided a few years ago that we should not act as great white fathers to the Indians, that we would respect their wishes. I have been very much involved in this project since it began. On many occasions I have talked with ministers of the province of Quebec on behalf of the Indians, but those who speak officially for the Indians in Quebec are the Indians themselves through the band councils which have now joined together in a provincial association.

A year ago, the Association of Indians in Quebec asked me not to participate directly in this affair. They have held many discussions among themselves. Both Mr. DeLisle and Mr. Gros Louis have informed me of the progress of their strategy. They have initiated discussions on many aspects of Indian affairs with the Quebec government. They have said all along that they wanted me to wait, to be ready to intervene when the time came. I have respected this wish.

The Indians have, of course, passed resolutions, and so on. I overheard the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) talking about a resolution passed last July. It is true that a petition was signed last July, but I tell the hon. member and the House of Commons that it was only on Monday that the association sent me officially a copy of this petition and asked me to take part in the debate.

Mr. Nielsen: They asked you last July.

Mr. Chrétien: No, Sir. They passed the resolution last July but they decided not to send it to me. They decided they ought to work among themselves before making up their minds what they should do. In the meantime we have looked into the situation carefully. We recognize that it is a serious one. I said in the House when questioned this week that now the Indians have officially requested my help I am happy to offer them my assistance. They have asked me to meet them next week and I have agreed to do so.

Since the beginning of this affair I have discussed the situation three or four times with Mr. Bourassa, Premier of Quebec. I have been in touch with him this week and asked him for a meeting after the Indians meet with me next week. He said any time I want to meet him in connection with this matter he will be happy to discuss it with me. So we have been available. We are willing to help the Indians find a solution.

What will be the best solution for them? This week my assistant deputy minister, Mr. Ciaccia, had a discussion with Chief DeLisle and the representative of the Indians in the James Bay area, Chief Billy Diamond. They had a long talk on technical questions and the course to be taken. This will be followed up in the course of my meeting with the Indians next week. But I wish to repeat that I shall not decide for the Indians. I think the Indians should be left to make a choice, and I will be there to help them. They are well organized at the present time and they want a piece of the action.

Apparently members of the New Democratic Party and others are asking me to take over in a paternalistic way and stop certain things or do certain things for the Indians. I will not do that, because this government does not wish to take over responsibilities which the Indians themselves are willing to discharge.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: We are not paternalistic toward the Indian people but, as I say, we are willing to help them. There are two courses open. There is a solution which could be negotiated. The Indians would like us to help them. They have tried alone and they have not been completely satisfied. Now they say the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development can help them. Fine. I am ready to help them. I will sit down with them and I will meet the Premier of Quebec to discuss the problems of the 6,000 Indians who could be affected by this development. It is my duty to do so under the terms of section 91(24) of the British North America Act and, as usual, I shall discharge my duty—but not at the expense of the self-respect, pride and wishes of the Indians of this area.

• (1540)

The problem, Mr. Speaker, is extremely complicated because it is common knowledge that the lands in question in the James Bay area have not always belonged to the Quebec government and have not always been under its jurisdiction. These lands, formerly known as Rupert's Land, belonged to the Hudson's Bay Company and, in 1867, the Canadian government, in a petition addressed to Her Majesty, asked the Imperial government to hand over Rupert's Land to the government of Canada.

It is in 1870 that Rupert's Land was actually handed over by the Imperial government of Her Majesty to become part of the Canadian confederation. For several years, this land was administered by the federal government and in 1898, the southern part of the Rupert's Land was transferred by the federal government to the province of Quebec.

The northern part was in effect transferred in 1912 under the transfer act of that same year, in which it was stated that the interests of Indians were to be protect ed if the area came to be developed, as has been mentioned by the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Harding) who spoke for the New Democratic party.

We are quite aware of the judicial aspect of the situation in this area, and we firmly intend to protect the interests of Indians.

Does this mean, however, that in order to protect the interests of the Indians, we must act irresponsibly? The Indians recognize the complexity of this situation. They themselves are trying to discover what solution could best serve their interests.

This is why they asked me a few days ago to meet with them in order to clarify this matter, and we will meet with them next Wednesday to try and make some progress. Economic progress does not necessarily exclude the reaching of a reasonable agreement between the parties concerned.

I think the Quebec government should recognize that it is in the interest of all Quebecers to see to it that a development of this kind will not cause irreparable prejudice to Indians, and that the people who must be the first to benefit from this development should be the Indians who have been living in this territory from times immemorial.

I think it is possible to ensure that some agreement is reached which will be satisfactory to all parties concerned. Of course, the judicial situation cannot be shrugged away. It is indeed an extremely complex situation which involves various concepts. However, studies have been made on this subject by independent commissions. We are all familiar with the report of the Dorion Commission, which also recognizes that the Indian problem is important to the economic and social development of this whole area.

The task force on the environment which studied this situation last summer also came to the conclusion that the people most deeply affected would no doubt be the Indians.

Mr. Speaker, we are ready because we have been studying the situation very carefully in the last few months. Every time questions were put in the House, I replied that we were following the debate on behalf of the Indian population without directly participating in it, but if the Indians were to request us officially to intervene to safeguard their interests in this debate, we would be ready to do so.

I must say to the House that in the course of the discussions I have had—though unofficially since the Indians were opposed to my involvement in this question—with the premier of Quebec, he has been very understanding and anxious to find a solution that would be acceptable both to Amerindians of that territory as well as to the government of Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to state once more that we will help Indians to find a negotiated settlement which will be the best thing to do since legal wranglings would certainly not be the best course of action to solve this problem.

At all events, we are going to consult with the Indians and whatever the ultimate decision they ask us to make, we will support them, in accordance with our responsibility to do so under the British North America Act of 1867.

Once again, I hope that the first citizens of the country will not be used in this debate, as has too often been the case, as an all-purpose political football. I think we should show restraint, objectivity and seek out a solution that would first of all benefit the first citizens of this country. Such is certainly our aim. I can assure my hon. friends that I have no other concern and no intention of reverting to the old paternalistic attitude whereby we, white people, should at this time intervene and systematically replace the Indians of New Quebec and James Bay at the negotiation table, speak on their behalf and jointly with them and the government of Quebec, in order to protect their interests in that territory.

[English]

I should like to pay tribute to the Indians of the James Bay area and the Quebec association for their participation in the events leading up to this debate. They have had many meetings with the provincial administration on many different topics. They have acted responsibly. They told my assistant deputy minister this week that what they want is a solution. They do not want to be stubborn; they just want to reconcile their interests, which are vital, with the interests of the Canadian public in general and particularly the citizens of Quebec. I am delighted that we can talk with them and will probably be able to find a solution. I assure them that this government will be there to help them arrive at a negotiated solution. If that does not work and if the Indians decide upon other legal courses of action, we will again be there to help them as it is our responsibility to do.

On behalf of my colleague the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) I should like for a few minutes to touch upon—

• (1550)

Navigable Waters Protection Act.

I realize that up to now the government of the province of Quebec has recognized that the Department of Transport has jurisdiction in that field under federal law. And at present—as stated by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin)—there has been a request for the construction of a bridge on one of the rivers involved. Of course, plans are being worked out for the construction of other bridges on other rivers. The Department of Transport has already sent inspectors in that area so they can get an idea of the work to be done.

Of course, everytime the government of Quebec submits a request to the Department of Transport the minister has assured the House—and I can do it also—that such request will be examined on its merits and according to the letter and the spirit of the law.

This legislation is intended to protect shipping and transportation on those rivers. Naturally, until now they have been very little used by shipping. That is why to this day the Minister of Transport has not had to get very much involved in the building of bridges or wharves on those rivers since they are very little used for navigation and transportation except by Indian canoes.

I think that, in this connection, the Department of Transport has discharged its responsibilities and the Quebec government has admitted the validity of the federal Navigable Waters Protection Act. Besides, this matter has never been disputed by the Quebec authorities and heaven knows how many Quebec rivers such as the Saguenay, the Saint-Maurice, the Ottawa and some others have been the subject of developments and directives from the Department of Transport.

[English]

I do not want to take up too much of the time of this House, Mr. Speaker, but I should like to just state the position of this government. It was only on Monday of this week that the Indians asked us to participate directly in the debate. We have already said to them we will have meetings with the Indian associations and representatives of the James Bay area, and those meetings will be in Ottawa next Wednesday, Thursday and Friday. We are planning to hold meetings whenever it is convenient to them, and we have agreed on Wednesday next as the date for a meeting.

Since Monday, when I received this request, and the resolutions passed by the different bands in the past weeks and months, I got in touch once more with the Quebec government and have been assured that they are willing—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. I regret I must interrupt the hon. minister but his time has expired. He must secure the unanimous consent of the House to continue his remarks.

[English]

Is there agreement that the minister be allowed to continue his remarks?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Chrétien: I thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the hon. members for their courtesy.

I plan to meet these representatives next week and, in the days that will follow, I will be in touch with the Premier of Quebec who has already agreed to meet with me at my convenience. We are following the situation very closely, and I can assure hon. members that the interests of the Indians will be protected by this government, and that we will keep our cool. I am sure the best interests of everyone concerned will be served by finding a settlement acceptable to everyone.

I am very grateful that no one in this House so far this afternoon has taken an extreme position, denying any development or anything like that. I think this is the approach we have to follow. There are many interests which have to be considered and I want to say to the Quebec government, the Indians and members of this House, that we will make sure the interests of the 6,000 Indians living in this area will be well protected.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, it was very interesting this afternoon to listen to the statements made so far from the government side of the House. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) took a very narrow view of a situation lying entirely within the jurisdiction of his department. I listened with interest to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) who did make reference to the problems of the Indian people. Quite frankly, while he said a lot about talking to Indians, neither he nor the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources gave us any kind of assurance that this government is going to cease doing what it has been doing, namely flaunting the laws of this parliament and the constitution of Canada as they relate to the rights of the aboriginal inhabitants of this part of Canada or, indeed, of any other part.

It is small wonder that the Indians of that particular region may have thought it advisable to talk first to the government of Quebec, in light of the announced policy of the government as made clear by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) of this country, that as far as the federal government is concerned it refuses to recognize the aboriginal rights enshrined in the constitution of this country. I certainly would not want to see the minister go back to what he referred to as "any old paternalistic attitude" in his discussions with the Indians. However, I would have liked to hear him make a positive statement assuring the members of this House and the people involved that the government of Canada was prepared to protect their constitutional rights.

Mr. Chrétien: That is what I said.

Mr. Barnett: The minister made some reference to the act of 1912, and this was mentioned by my colleague the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Harding), in which this parliament validated an agreement between the government of Canada and the government of the province of Quebec. It reads:

> That the province of Quebec will recognize the rights of the Indian inhabitants in the territory above described to the same extent, and will obtain surrenders of such rights in the same manner, as the Government of Canada has heretofore recognized such rights—

Perhaps in 1912 the government was still recognizing the necessity of obtaining surrender rights from the aboriginals, although the present government is not doing so either in the province of Quebec, the Northwest Territories or, for that matter as far as I can determine, anywhere else in this country. That is the nub of the question and that is why the minister, when he speaks in his engaging way, has to hedge and go around and around in circles, saying he must wait for resolutions from the Indian people and then have meetings and discussions with them, after they have discussed things with the Assistant Deputy Minister and officers of the department.

The minister did make some reference to the fact that the territory under discussion in this resolution was not originally part of the province of Quebec. It is interesting to note that, but I should like to suggest to him that he might have gone back to the Royal Proclamation of October 7, 1763, which sets out certain boundaries. It reads:

> The Government of Quebec bounded on the Labrador coast by the river St. John, and from thence by a line drawn from the head of that river through the lake St. John, to the south end of the lake Nipissim; from whence the said line, crossing the river St. Lawrence, and the lake Champlain, in 45. Degrees of north latitude, passes along the high lands which divide the rivers that empty themselves into the said river St. Lawrence from those which fall into the sea;

Later on there was the act of 1791, which separated Lower Canada, and the Union Act of 1840 that put the pieces together again. We then moved on to the point where in 1867 the Dominion of Canada was established under the British North America Act. The point that has to be mentioned, and the minister made reference to it, is that these territories known as Rupert's Land and the Northwest Territory in 1870 were added to and became part of the new nation of Canada under the direct jurisdiction of the federal government. It is interesting to note that in the Order of Her Majesty in Council of 1870, based on the British North America Act, there is reference to a matter which I think is pertinent to the debate today. I should like to just make one or two brief references to it.

I asked the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) on a couple of occasions what the government was doing in relation to the terms and conditions under which these lands were transferred to the province of Quebec from their original territorial status so far as Canada is concerned. I also asked what position the government was taking with regard to the proposed James Bay development with particular reference to the rights of the Indian people in that region. The minister said they have been looking into the matter. When I asked the minister directly if he would participate in this debate today, he apparently decided to hide behind the skirts of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien). We have not had from the government any clear policy on this matter.

I quote as follows from term 14 of the order of 1870 of Her Majesty with regard to Rupert's Land and the Northwest Territories:

Any claims of Indians to compensation for lands required for purposes of settlement shall be disposed of by the Canadian Government in communication with the Imperial Government; and the Company shall be relieved of all responsibility in respect of them.

In other words, that was the transfer of jurisdiction to the government of Canada. In schedule (A) of an address to Her Majesty there is an explanation of what is involved here. Schedule (A) is an address to Her Majesty the Queen from the Senate and House of Commons of Canada. It is addressed to the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty and reads:

That in the event of your Majesty's Government agreeing to transfer to Canada the jurisdiction and control over the said region, the Government and Parliament of Canada will be ready to provide that the legal rights of any corporation, company, or individual within the same shall be respected, and placed under the protection of courts of competent jurisdiction.

This is the part I wish to emphasize:

And furthermore, that, upon the transference of the territories in question to the Canadian Government, the claims of the Indian tribes to compensation for lands required for purposes of settlement will be considered and settled in conformity with the equitable principles which have uniformly governed the British Crown in its dealings with the aborigines.

That raises the question of what were the equitable principles of the British Crown. These are part of our constitutional documents. In that connection one must go back to the royal proclamation of 1763. The royal proclamation in part reads:

And We do further declare it to be Our Royal Will and Pleasure, for the present as aforesaid, to reserve under our Sovereignty, Protection, and Dominion, for the use of the said Indians, all the Lands and Territories not included within the Limits of Our said Three new Governments—

One of these was the government of Quebec.

—or within the Limits of the Territory granted to the Hudson's Bay Company, as also all the Lands and Territories lying to the Westward of the Sources of the Rivers which fall into the Sea from the West and North West as aforesaid.

And We do hereby strictly forbid, on Pain of our Displeasure, all our loving Subjects from making any Purchases or Settlements whatever, or taking Possession of any of the Lands above reserved, without our especial leave and Licence for that Purpose first obtained.

And, We do further strictly enjoin and require all Persons whatever who have either wilfully or inadvertently seated themselves upon any Lands within the Countries above described, or upon any other Lands which, not having been ceded to or purchased by Us, are still reserved to the said Indians as aforesaid, forthwith to remove themselves from such settlements.

And whereas great Frauds and Abuses have been committed in purchasing Lands of the Indians, to the great Prejudice of our Interests, and to the great Dissatisfaction of the said Indians; In order, therefore, to prevent such irregularities for the future, and to the end that the Indians may be convinced of our Justice and determined Resolution to remove all reasonable Cause of Discontent, We do, with the Advice of our Privy Council strictly enjoin and require, that no private Person do presume to make any purchase from the said Indians, of any Lands reserved to the said Indians, within those parts of our Colonies where, We have thought proper to allow Settlement; but that, if at any Time any of the Said Indians should be inclined to dispose of the said Lands, the same shall be Purchased only for Us, in our Name, at some public Meeting or Assembly of the said Indians, to be held for that Purpose by the Governor or Commander in Chief of our Colony respectively within which they shall lie—

As the minister of Indian affairs has at least indirectly admitted today, under the British North America Act he has upon him the responsibility of acting as an agent of Her Majesty in connection with the treatment that is outlined in that proclamation which has been passed on. I submit it is inherent in the acts of 1898 and 1912 which enlarged the original boundaries of the province of Quebec. This is clearly a prior condition to any entry upon these lands for such purposes as hydroelectric development. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) suggested, and I freely admit it, that apart from this and some of the other federal areas of jurisdiction referred to here it is a matter for the province of Quebec.

I submit this government is not making clear that it is prepared to abide by the constitution of this country and see that the Indians enjoy the constitutional protections set out in some of the documents to which I have referred. That clarification we have not had so far today from a government spokesman. I submit that before any move is made this question must be clarified. Anything else will constitute trespass.

Unfortunately, because of my observations of federal government action in parts of Canada which still remain directly under their jurisdiction as far as land resources are concerned, I am not very hopeful that the Indians, when they have the forthcoming meetings with the minister to which he referred, will receive very much backing from him in negotiations with the province of Quebec. I am inclined to believe, in light of recent events, that some time since 1912 at least the rest of us in Canada have turned our backs upon the constitution and the statutes enacted by parliament.

What in fact is happening is that the government of Canada, and in many cases the governments of the provinces, are going blithely ahead in their own sweet way as if such documents did not exist. From my point of view, that is the nub of the question that must be debated and settled in this House of Commons prior to any participation by the federal government with the government of Quebec in the question of hydroelectric development in the James Bay region. That is why I am very happy that the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka brought this matter forward, especially in light of the continuing lack of any clearcut statement from the government, because it gives us an opportunity to seek, if we can, to persuade the government to fulfil its constitutional responsibilities.

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, first I would like to thank the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken) for moving this motion. Obviously, judging from the response from all corners of the House, there is not only a lively interest in the subject but also a good deal of thinking has been done about it in recent weeks and months. In his motion, he refers to three main areas of concern: one, interference with the relocation of Indians, and this matter has been dealt with by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien); two, altering the course of navigable waters protected under the Navigable Waters Protection Act, and this has been dealt with by several speakers this afternoon; and finally, three, the effect on the total Canadian environment. It is item number 3 to which I shall be principally directing my remarks.

I think that the essence of the concern in respect of the environment relates to timing, to ecological studies, and to environmental investigations which must be carried out before the final decision to undertake large scale development and construction is made. It is a matter of timing. We should and must do our environmental engineering first before construction begins on a large scale. This principle applies to large projects as well as small ones. It must apply to projects which fall under the responsibility of all three levels of government in this country. Indeed, it must be followed in respect of all kinds of development which has measurable impact on our environment in Canada.

In the United States, and increasingly in Canada, we are insisting on the preparation of what I might call environmental impact statements. In order to prepare proper environmental impact statements, we must first obtain the basic biological data on which they can be built. We need a good deal of background information, in other words, on the living resources in an area, how they will be affected by a particular development, and what the alternatives to that development are so that we can make sure that the best possible construction proceeds and that information is available in advance of construction, as I said earlier. We are in the process of obtaining this kind of information in respect of James Bay. "We" certainly includes the province of Quebec and it includes the federal Department of the Environment.

In order to describe the sequence which we are following in respect of a project which falls much more directly under federal jurisdiction, namely, a possible pipeline or pipelines down the Mackenzie Valley, we are currently spending in the order of $15 million on studies which will require a three year period to make sure that all of the ecological data is assembled beforehand, that environmental maps are available, that all of the necessary data which bears on wildlife, fisheries, and forestry, indeed all flora and fauna, is available before the final choice, the final selection, is made by the National Energy Board. That is the sequence which we are following in respect of that project. A similar sequence is being followed in respect of the James Bay project.

The James Bay project is unique in several respects. One, of course, is its massive scale. Another is that the province of Quebec itself requested help from the federal government in respect of the assessment of the environment. This certainly did not happen in respect of the big Bennett Dam on the Peace River, a project of great scale in western Canada, the construction of which began in the early 1960's. The consequences of that project have been considerable and they have been damaging outside of the province of British Columbia. Clearly, we would have benefited considerably in western Canada had the environmental engineering preceded the decision to go ahead and build that massive project.

As I said, the province of Quebec has asked for the help of the federal government in the assessment of environmental effects. We have been supplying expertise. We have some of the world's top biologists in the employment of Environment Canada. We have several of the world's top authorities on wildlife and on fisheries. Canada is one of the leading nations, has done a great deal of research, and knows a great deal about the nature of its resources. In the area of forestry we have a good deal of expertise as well. We have some of the world's finest meteorologists, climatologists and some very well known oceanographers. These people have been asked to help out in the assessment of the James Bay Project. The assessment is proceeding a step at a time. I might call the assessment, a six months assessment which began in the summer of 1971, phase I.

The second assessment, which will cover a period of 18 months or more, has begun this spring. The first assessment involves quick on-the-site surveys and a thoroughgoing review of the literature. A summary report entitled "A Preliminary Study of the Environmental Impacts of the James Bay Development Project in Quebec" was released in February of this year. It was, as I indicated, the result of a joint effort by experts employed by the province of Quebec and our own experts in Environment Canada. To my surprise, and I think the surprise of many people, it did not pinpoint any substantial environmental effects which might have been characterized, for example, as likely to be catastrophic. It did, however, indicate that there were a number of areas of concern, and it did say quite emphatically that because of the lack of baseline data further investigation would have to be undertaken. Those additional investigations are under way in phase II.

Phase II, which is now under way, involves investigations particularly in the areas which might be described as climatological, which involve expertise in the area of hydrography, and also will call on the knowledge of our people who have been concerned with migratory birds. They are concerned with tides and the drift of ice as well. In order to put some of this information on the record, I should like to refer back briefly to the first task force report, a report which is published and which is already available to the public, but I might also add, which is backed up by some 50 studies, all of which are available. They are available in several universities and through several departments in the province of Quebec. They are also available in a number of departmental libraries here in Ottawa. I understand they are also available in the library of the University of Toronto. There is no secrecy here. However, we are only beginning phase II. I can say definitely that, so far as the government of Canada is concerned, we have every intention of publishing all of the studies which are prepared by our experts at the conclusion of each phase or stage in these environmental investigations.

More particularly, Mr. Speaker, I might quote from the study which includes the findings of the task force. This was written at the end of Phase I, and was published in February of this year. I quote as follows:

> On the basis of limited data available, the Task Force can identify only one ecological impact of potentially alarming proportions and significance—the impact on the native population of the area.

As I said, Mr. Speaker, this matter has already been dealt with by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. The report went on to say:

Appropriate action must be taken in advance to alleviate the ensuing disturbance in their mode of life.

There do not exist enough data to permit a positive statement to where useful action in advance must also be taken. For example, intelligent planning is required so that the destruction of the downstream reaches of the rivers concerned, and of their ecologically sensitive estuary and bay areas can be minimized.

Quoting further:

Finally there are those impacts which are unavoidable and unalterable consequences of the James Bay development scheme, for example, flooding of forest-producing lands, loss of anadromous fish from one or more river channels, and some reduction in sediment and nutrients reaching sea level as a result of entrapment in upstream reservoirs.

The task force found:

There are insufficient data to support a clear-cut over-all preference between the NBR—

Meaning the Nottaway, Broadbank and Rupert proposal.

—and La Grande proposals.

Indeed, one of the terms of reference of that task force was to see which of those two major alternative schemes was preferable from an over-all environmental point of view. Apparently, the task force was unable to reach a conclusion by the spring of this year in respect to that term of reference. Again quoting:

The Task Force has found no cases of fauna or flora species that are near extinction or which are very rare and would be endangered to the point of extinction.

Again quoting:

There do not exist enough data to permit a positive statement to be made that climate in James Bay itself, or in the surrounding area, or even continentally, will or will not be measurably influenced by one or both of the hydroelectric projects now being considered.

Later, it said:

—the Task Force feels that on the geographic scale of these projects alone the effects on the ice regime and other climate-controlling factors will not be more than local.

In other words, the effects, which are likely to be minimal, would be highly localized and probably confined to the province of Quebec.

Mr. Nielsen: What is the date of that report?

Mr. Davis: The report is dated December, 1971, and it was released in early February.

The final paragraph in its conclusions section reads:

The Task Force sees that James Bay now provides, on a grand scale, an opportunity to integrate ecological research with a major engineering program in order to develop data and experience that will be needed in future resource developments in these latitudes. In this way James Bay could become a laboratory of world-wide significance.

In other words, we are embarking on something which both in scale and in consequences is in some measure unique, and considerable care is necessary in order to protect the environment.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I might refer briefly to several of the recommendations which the task force has produced, and which flow logically from the conclusions which I have already quoted. One of these recommendations is:

That the James Bay project be used as a large-scale natural laboratory for comprehensive multi-disciplinary research into environmental problems and studies of how ecological processes are modified by major developments at these latitudes.

Another recommendation is:

That priority attention be given, before construction starts, to the gathering of data of existing environmental conditions to constitute a base-line measurement against which to relate subsequent changes both temporary and permanent.

And still quoting, Mr. Speaker:

That particular attention be given to river reaches below points of diversion, the estuaries into which they flow, and the storage reservoirs upstream to insure that the transition between the existing ecological equilibrium of these areas and the ultimate new equilibrium shall be as gradual and as non-destructive as possible. This means a planned control of flows and water levels during construction, particularly including maintenance of adequate minimum flows. Effective planning and action to regulate this transition process can be expected to prevent serious consequences similar to those created by the Bennett Dam in the Athabasca Delta area in Alberta.

And still quoting:

That every effort be made to completely cut as much flooded timber lands as possible.

I might say parenthetically that I believe this is the intention of the Quebec government and of Quebec Hydro. Quoting further:

That all future environmental impact studies related to the James Bay development be centrally co-ordinated so as to insure effective communication and interaction between the different scientific teams involved, to avoid duplication of effort in some areas and lack of effort in others.—

The final conclusion I will quote is:

That the co-ordinating mechanism be designed so as to (i) reflect the inter-relationships between the various identifiable elements of the total ecosystem; (ii) provide for the conduct in parallel of both short-term and long-range research studies; and (iii) recognize the jurisdictional responsibilities of the various agencies concerned and harmonize their efforts in the common task.

From what I have already said, it must be apparent to all hon. members that there has been some considerable measure of co-operation between the province of Quebec and the federal government on this matter. This is certainly to be welcomed in view of the fact that there has been very little co-operation of this kind in the past relative to large hydroelectric projects anywhere in the country, so that in one very important sense we are breaking new ground. There has been very close and, I believe, very effective liaison between the new ministry of the environment in Quebec and Environment Canada.

We have offered our considerable expertise to that province, and Quebec Hydro has taken advantage of that offer not only in respect to Phase I studies, which I have summarized in my preceding remarks, but also in respect to Phase II, in which we will be gathering a lot of new basic data necessary to carry out a thorough environmental appraisal.

If I could return to that point of principle which I tried to outline at the beginning of my remarks, Mr. Speaker, ecological investigations must precede the decision to uproot nature, to uproot our natural surroundings. In other words, Mr. Speaker, environmental engineering must be completed before construction starts on a large scale. This is a principle which I believe the province of Quebec endorses, or certainly appears to endorse, in respect to the James Bay development. It is certainly one in which this government believes wholeheartedly.

Now, I cannot help but make a few comments of what I might term a more political nature. I sometimes wonder when I listen to members of the New Democratic Party talking about ecology, about their concern for the environment. In four cases out of five when they are expressing their concern they are also attacking a large socialistic enterprise. They are either attacking B.C. Hydro, or in recent times occasionally Manitoba Hydro, and now Quebec Hydro. They seem to find that the biggest villians in this piece are government-owned Crown corporations.

I am inclined to agree with that, partly because developments carried out by big Crown corporations are usually on a larger scale than those undertaken by private enterprise. Nevertheless, I find the cynicism of the NDP rather amusing when they rarely attack private enterprise and its callousness. I agree that it is more difficult to get at the large, Crown-owned, socialistic enterprises in this regard because they appear to be less sensitive. This has been true of British Columbia Hydro in recent years and also of Manitoba Hydro. However, there is some reason to expect, as a result of our recent experience with Quebec, that perhaps Quebec Hydro is becoming more sensitive to environmental matters.

The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) referred to our sad experience with the Bennett dam. Like him, I remember the debates in the early 1960s. I also remember putting questions to the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) when he was prime minister. In fairness, I think this House should realize that if there was fault in respect of the performance of the federal government of those days because of its lack of insistence on a licence being granted under the Navigable Waters Protection Act for that development, the fault lies both with the government headed by the right hon. member for Prince Albert and the—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the minister, but his time has expired. If there is unanimous consent of the House, he may continue.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Davis: I would like to say in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, that in retrospect the fault seems to lie with both sides of the House. However, we were not as aware in those days of the importance of the environment; we were not aware of the necessity for the federal government to take a positive stand in respect of large scale developments, even in cases where the effects were likely to be serious and carry downstream to other provinces. We must in future be much more tuned to the need to protect our environment and at the national level we must be highly sensitive to consequences which may result beyond the borders of a province in respect of developments of this kind.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, could I ask the minister a question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. Because the minister's time has expired I will have to ask the unanimous consent of the House. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Aiken: I should like to ask the minister one question for clarification. During my remarks I raised the question of studies carried out by Hydro Quebec. Is the minister in possession of these studies, are future studies to be joint projects between the minister's department and Hydro Quebec or is his department carrying out separate studies on the impact of the project?

Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, we have received copies of all the studies of an environmental character carried out by Quebec Hydro. The work that is under way at the present time falls under two headings; one is in respect of joint studies to be carried out with the province of Quebec in phase II, either with agencies of that province or with the environmental department of Quebec. The other category is in respect of initiatives of our own. For example, Environment Canada is carrying out studies with respect to migratory birds, oceanographic effects on James Bay and climatology.

[Translation]

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I am really quite pleased to participate in this debate in view of the fact that all hon. members have recognized the importance of this project for the province of Quebec and the fact that it is closely related to the interests of the country.

I want to make a few comments on what has already been said as well as on the project itself; it is my duty as a member representing a Quebec riding. Above everything else, I would like to ask all hon. members to deal with the matter as objectively and impartially as possible.

We all know that this project, the cost of which has been estimated at $6 billion and which should provide jobs for 125,000 workers, is of vital importance to the province of Quebec in the present context.

All hon. members will recognize that if the province of Quebec could improve its economic situation by means of that project, the whole of Canada would profit by it.

I listened with pleasure to the speeches of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald), of the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Davis) and of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) who successively showed clearly that the initiative proposed by the mover of this motion (Mr. Aiken) was not as necessary as the motion made it out to be. The Minister of the Environment and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development told us that negotiations have been going on for some time with the province of Quebec, which I readily approve.

I should like at the outset of my remarks to ask the federal government to comply with the Quebec government's request, as regards the services as well as the facilities the federal government can provide for the carrying out of that project.

Although the project is typically a Quebec one, I do not believe the Quebec government should be left to carry it out without relying on the participation of the federal government.

Such has been the practice in various projects in Canada and I do not believe any member ever complained of the fact that the federal government provided services for the carrying out of projects of that kind, obviously very important ones.

I also recognize there are two important aspects for Quebec in the James Bay project, namely economic development and respect of a minority.

I intended to ask some questions to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I also had discussions with some members of the Quebec government on the necessity of taking into account the 5,000 or 6,000 Indians living in that region and of assessing that project from an economic point of view.

In spite of certain concerns voiced in the House this afternoon about studies and research, it does seem, according to the statement of the Minister of Environment, that several studies are under way and some research is also being carried out. This is why intervention by the federal government is unduly feared. We recognize that it is a provincial project and that it is also important for the province of Quebec to carry it out.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has just said that there is a growing demand for electricity. I believe that this is another guarantee of the profitability of this project. And I would like to say two words on the views expressed a short while ago by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

I believe that if it became necessary for the minister to invite the Quebec government to respect the rights of Indians, he should not hesitate to do it. I also feel that it is his responsibility to make these Indians realize that we must let go of more and more traditions if we intend to keep up with economic progress.

I think that there are many reasons for these changes. Economic progress, and I would even say certain public services, were often required, thus creating difficulties for some individuals. It is not because these displacements are necessary that we should abstain from taking action. We could show you that some groups of people were put in an embarrassing situation in various Canadian regions because of progress.

The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development should indeed offer his co-operation and supervise the moving of these 5,000 to 6,000 Indians. He must make sure that Quebec government offers are reasonable, that the necessary services and certain financial guarantees are provided for their resettlement and readjustment in other regions.

I am convinced that the minister will not fail in his duty. I believe that instead of asking the federal government to intervene immediately, the Quebec government has already negotiated. The minister mentioned several times that he had broached the matter with Quebec and, on that basis, I believe both approaches are comforting.

May I also be allowed to talk of the lack of confidence we have shown not only toward the people responsible for this project, but even toward the government of Quebec. Some people are greatly worried about the financial implications of this project, and I believe that serious surveys are being conducted on this subject at the present time.

In my opinion, the Quebec government can be credited with sufficient responsibility to pursue in depth the assessment of the project. I suggest some hon. members are much too pessimistic as to the quality of assessments carried out so far.

Clearly it is also the federal government's responsibility to control all such assessments and to co-operate with the promoters of the project so that it may be completed and may benefit not only the province of Quebec but the whole of Canada.

In view of these changes and complications and of the reluctance of the group of people involved in the area, should we abandon the project? I repeat what I said before: I believe we should bring every effort to bear so that the project may be carried out with a maximum of co-ordination and comprehension. The promoters should do their utmost to make not only the people to be relocated but those interested in carrying out the project understand that acceptable solutions must be found.

I suggest that we must convince those who are to be relocated to accept the regulations and not to hinder the implementation of the project.

I should like to express a caveat to any hon. member who might be tempted to make political hay of this project, however tempting it may be for some of them to take advantage of such a debate merely to criticize the promoters of the project. It is certainly important enough to warrant objective consideration. It will therefore be recognized that the province of Quebec cannot afford any action likely to hinder implementation of the project.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind hon. ministers or members concerned that they should give their best possible attention to the realization of the James Bay project. I would urge them to co-operate, not only because this project particularly involves the province of Quebec but on account of the several other completed projects which have been a source of income. As members of Parliament, it is our responsibility to help realize this project which, in itself, is of utmost importance for the province of Quebec.

In my opinion we will make a gigantic blunder if we confine ourselves to the constitutional aspect of that problem and to a discussion about the jurisdictions involved.

Often I am told that the best referee in a hockey game is always the one who goes by the book and his own judgment in equal measure. We could do the same as far as this project is concerned. It would be a gigantic mistake to say that the Indians have such rights, that the provinces have only certain rights and that the federal government has also the responsibility to ensure that those rights are respected.

Of course, the federal government does assume some responsibilities toward the Indians. We must consider the economic interest of our country and therefore each one of us will have to show its best will toward those jurisdictions.

I am confident that these basic principles will not be overlooked by any member of this House.

Mr. Speaker, before concluding my remarks, I should like to quote from what was said by a university professor about James Bay. His lecture was entitled, Can the Province of Quebec afford to do without this project? I quote:

> Considering the number and complexity of the tasks which await us, considering the huge sums of money—billions of dollars—involved in the hydro-electric, industrial and human development of this territory, some people have asked whether Quebec could commit itself fully to this bold course, whether we can afford such a grandiose policy.

Of course, this will entail rather heavy expenditures. There is some concern over the control of investment in Canada, over the extent to which the federal government can appropriate money for this project. It should be well recognized that the government of Quebec is not that eager to borrow from the United States or elsewhere the money that will be needed.

Surely, the federal government should consider the possibility of making available to the province of Quebec financial assistance which would enable it to realize this project and that would be Canadian investment.

Instead of worrying about the fact that the government of Quebec is borrowing money abroad, some thought should be given from time to time to the assistance that could be offered by the federal government, not only to Quebec but to other provinces as well for projects of public interest. I quote again:

> I suggest that this problem should be considered from another angle. Statistics showing the increasing number of people old enough to work indicate that if unemployment in Quebec is to be reduced from 8 per cent on the average in 1971 to 4.5 per cent as it was in 1966, jobs must be created for 75,000 newcomers on the labour market, for each year during the next ten years. In order to create one new job in industry or construction, an investment of $50,000 is needed today. If half the new jobs are to be opened in these two directly productive fields, as compared to jobs in the administrative and service fields, which in the end are supported by the two others, an investment of nearly $2 billion a year will have to be made for new activities in industry and construction.
> The question should not be: "Can we afford to invest $1, $2, $3 or $4 billion a year in the James Bay development project?" but: "Can we allow ourselves not to do it, and what would the alternative be?"

Is it not really the aim which all hon. members should be seeking too? I leave it to them.

Mr. Speaker, I wanted to make these few comments in order to state that I was in favor of the James Bay development project, and especially to urge, in a very special way, the federal government to co-operate willingly, as far as possible, as the responsible ministers have done it. Therefore, I urge them to continue in the same direction, and as a member from a riding which is located in the province involved, I take the liberty to urge all other members from other provinces to co-operate to the realization of this project, not only for the benefit of Quebec but for the benefit of Canada as a whole. They can count, from now on, on my co-operation and that of all Quebec members, as if it were a project introduced by another province and in which the interest of the whole country was at stake.

James Bay Power Project

[English]

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, before commencing my remarks, I should like to make an observation with respect to the order in which speakers have been recognized recently in this debate. The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) spoke, after which the Chair recognized the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett). Subsequently, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Davis) stood up, at which time I was seen but not recognized by the Chair. Then, the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) stood up and was recognized. It seems to me, Sir, that there should be a fairer recognition of hon. members on the basis of numerical strength in the House than is suggested by that distribution.

• (1650)

Mr. Nielsen: In any event, the motion which has been brought before the House is of interest. I think the debate has been largely academic, because whatever we say here will not make the slightest difference to the direction the government is taking or to the direction the government of Quebec is taking. It will not make the slightest difference to the claims of the Indian people to which I intend largely to confine my remarks. I say this because the project is going ahead. Roads and bridges are already under construction. Some are almost completed. We are told by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development that negotiations are being conducted. But there does not seem to be very much sense in conducting negotiations for the return of a cow after the animal has been killed and eaten.

The Minister of the Environment (Mr. Davis) says that ecological studies are being carried out. But surely, to be useful, these studies ought to have been made long before the project was ever started. With respect to the treatment of these studies by the Indian people themselves, the report to which the minister referred at some length was actually burned, together with a great many other reports, by the people at Ruperts House late in February shortly after release for publication. The minister quoted at length from the study of December, and one of the recommendations contained in it, in addition to those he read, appear in a report which was printed in the Montreal Star of February 24. I quote:

> An element in the book burning is that the people resent a statement in the ecology report—a perfunctory, throw-away statement—that people here depend on white people and that do not depend on trapping and hunting "as much as some people think."

If this is a gauge of the calibre of the study being conducted by both governments, and which the minister cites as his authority for saying that this ecological survey is being carried out, if this is a measure of the concern felt for the rights of the native people affected by this project, then I suggest the report is not of much use, anyway.

The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development has chosen to make a great distinction between representations which he receives officially and representations which he receives otherwise. He continually makes this distinction. He is resting his oars on it now. The native brotherhoods which have been set up across the country are being used by the minister as a political buffer between the actions of his department and the legitimate requests of the native people. I would remind him that he has responsibility under the Indian Act to consider not only the representations of provincial and territorial brotherhoods; he has a duty to consider the representations made to him by individual band councils, indeed, by individual Indians in this country. So when he stands in his place and sheds crocodile tears because he has not received any representations of an official nature, I do not feel much sympathy for him. Indeed, I condemn him for abdicating his responsibility under the Indian Act to do something positive.

I ask the minister this: What is the use of standing in this House today and telling us he has refrained from intervening in this affair because of a fear of being paternalistic, because he has been asked by the Quebec Association of Indians to wait until they call him, when all the time the project is moving inexorably ahead? He is not disclosing the full facts when he says he has received no representations of an official character. If he confines that statement to representations he has received from the Quebec Association, he can hang his hat on that very slender peg. But he received, in July, a petition directed to him by 33 Indian chiefs. I have a copy of it here and the minister is welcome to see it, though I am sure he must have it in his department.

Mr. Chrétien: I should like to make one point if I may; I do not think the hon. member would like to misinform the House. I recognize that this resolution was passed last July, but it was not transmitted to me until last Monday. Of course, they pass resolutions in many different regions on different dates, but those resolutions were not transmitted to me until last Monday.

Mr. Nielsen: This is not a resolution, Mr. Speaker, it is a petition which was forwarded to the minister. It reads:

> We, the representatives of the Cree bands which will be affected by the James Bay project or any other project, oppose those projects because we believe that only the beavers have the right to build dams in our territory and we request the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to use his legal jurisdiction to stop any attempt of intrusion on our rightful owned territory by the government of the Province of Quebec or any other authority.

At the foot of that document, there appear the signatures of 33 chiefs of the area.

Mr. Chrétien: It was sent to me last Monday.

Mr. Nielsen: The minister may have received it officially last Monday, if he wishes to hang his hat on that slender peg, but he cannot tell us he was unaware of the upheaval this project has been causing and the resentment it has aroused in the region affected, a resentment which is almost universally felt by representatives of the Indian people and certainly by the combined band councils. Granted, the minister may not have received representations from the Quebec brotherhood, officially, until last Monday, but he cannot say he was not aware of the problems which are confronting these people, that he was not aware of their concern for their rights in the land which is affected by this project. Nor can he tell us he is not charged directly with responsibility, as minister, to intervene to ensure that the legal rights of the Indians in this area, founded upon the documentation which has been read into the record by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett), are protected.

The minister tells us, in his holier-than-thou attitude, that we should not use these people as a political football, thus hoping to excuse his inaction in discharging his responsibilities towards them. He says he hopes members will not take extreme positions. But I suggest to him it is not playing politics to direct criticism at him and his department where criticism is justly deserved, and it is not taking an extreme position to criticize the minister for failing to discharge his responsibilities as clearly set forth in the documents already placed on record and in the Indian Act. It does not do very much good for the Indian people, whose land rights are affected, for the mininster to "snow" the House with platitudes about not wanting to be paternalistic to the native people affected and not wanting to intervene. These people had the right to expect his help, and to expect his intervention, to protect their rights from the very outset, but they did not get it. In this regard, the minister has absolutely abdicated his responsibilities under the act.

What good, I ask, will holding a meeting with the government of the province of Quebec do now? What good will it do now that the authority has already been granted for the project to proceed? What good will it do in areas affected by construction of roads and bridges already under way over lands to which these people have a legal right? His duty was to do something before the authority was granted to get the project under way. His clear duty under the act was to do something before the project, or any part of it, got under way. His clear duty under the act was to ensure that the rights of these people were secured and that their bargaining position would thereby be secured. Their bargaining position at the moment, and in any negotiations that follow, have to be seriously weakened by his inaction.

These people cannot now say, "Retain for us some of these traditional hunting and fishing rights from which we and our ancestors have made our living for over 100 years". All they can say now is: "You have taken away our land rights, overrun our lands; you are going to destroy our traditional hunting and fishing grounds and take away our lands from us from which we have gained our livelihood for centuries; we therefore need compensation". All they can negotiate for now is compensation, and that from a very weak position because of the inaction of the minister and his abandonment of his clear duty under the Indian Act.

The combined chiefs who sent the minister the petition should have been heard. The minister spoke recently in committee about this great dialogue that is going on between him and his departmental officials respecting the formulation of policies affecting the native people of Canada. It is dialogue that is one way, dialogue that the minister and the government of which he is a part construe as meaning the setting and the formulation of unilateral policies, policies formed without consultation with the Indian people, as clearly substantiated by the report of the subcommittee of the cabinet considering the funding of native associations which was submitted to the interdepartmental committee in June of 1971. No part of that very complex and extensive document making all sorts of recommendations, a document which, I might add, has been approved by the cabinet, has been discussed with the Indian associations. That is the government's idea of dialogue.

Mr. McCutcheon: That is not dialogue, it is monologue.

Mr. Nielsen: Exactly, it is monologue. The minister said in his statement before the committee respecting his so-called new northern development policy that the prime concern of him and his officials was to make sure that the native peoples are involved not only in policy making—which they are not—but also in matters such as the James Bay project.

I am informed that of the jobs which were available last summer—I think the premier of Quebec said that the over-all project would create something between 100,000 and 125,000 new jobs—a very small fraction of 100 native people were hired on the project. That information comes from individuals on the spot. I might also inform the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Davis) that I am told that none of the areas that it is intended to flood by the dams and rivers to be constructed in this project are going to be denuded of timber, of growing trees. This will effectively destroy a good deal of the viability of the land so far as it has the capacity to support the needs of the Indian people of the area.

With respect to the minister's defence of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) concerning the applications made under the Navigable Waters Protection Act for construction of bridges, again it is my understanding that the bridge at Mattagami was two-thirds completed before any application was made for permission to build it, and before federal approval was obtained. The only hope that the Indian people who are affected by this project have at this stage, now that they have been sold down the river, as it were, by the minister, is to negotiate for some form of compensation. What can be negotiated? In my view, the only negotiations possible are in the area of the establishment of an industry that will replace that which has been taken from them, namely the way they have made their living in the past. I suggest, perhaps, their participation in industries such as tourism, fish and duck camps, perhaps in boatbuilding, woodworking, canoe making. It will not be much good to come up with a settlement involving dollars that they will put in the bank; that will not keep the Indian people of the area alive.

The action of the minister, or rather his lack of action in my view, in this matter has been deplorable. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development have bobbed, ducked and weaved all over the place on this question. It is only now that the resolution of the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken) is before the House that they have come up with some examples. I am really surprised by this. I know that the representatives of the Indian people of this area have been seeing the minister this week, and I expected him to come into the House with a positive statement outlining what he is going to do on their behalf. I am really surprised that he or some member of the government has not come to the House and informed the House exactly what the government intends to do on behalf of these people. I suggest he has not done this because it is a matter of embarrassment to him.

My suggestion to the minister, being as politically gentle as I can, is that the reason he has not intervened in the past—for he had a clear responsibility to do so—is his fear of embarrassing the Liberal government of the province of Quebec. There is no way that this Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development wanted to get into a hassle with the premier of the province of Quebec. This is why he has abdicated his responsibility and thrown these Indian people to the wolves, as it were.

There is another aspect of this matter—

Mr. Osler: Did you get that from a tapped line?

Mr. Nielsen: I cannot hear the hon. member. If he would get to his feet and address the House, perhaps he would be more successful.

Mr. Osler: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wish to remind the hon. member for Yukon that he has one minute left to finish his speech. If questions are asked and he allows them, his speech will end in one minute in any event.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, Mr. Speaker, the House has been most generous with other hon. members and I hope that I am being sufficiently entertaining to receive the same courtesy from the House. Therefore, I am prepared to entertain a question.

Mr. Osler: It is not a very serious question. I was wondering whether the hon. member got that information over one of the tapped lines he is so fond of talking about in this House. I am referring to his authoritative statement about the minister's relationship with the premier of Quebec. Did he learn that from one of the tapped telephone lines that he talks about so authoritatively, without bringing forward any evidence that such is the case?

• (1710)

Mr. Nielsen: I think the hon. member is tapped. There is one other very serious aspect of this matter—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's time has expired. He can continue only with the unanimous consent of the House.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has the unanimous consent of the House to pursue his remarks.

Mr. Nielsen: I thank hon. members for their courtesy, Mr. Speaker. The other serious aspect—I will be brief—is the conflict of interest with which the minister is confronted here. He is the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and as such he has direct responsibility to care for the best interests of the people coming under his jurisdiction, namely, the Indian and Eskimo people of Canada.

On March 15, as reported in a Montreal newspaper, he approved of the James Bay project. I do not have the quotation immediately available, but he did approve of the James Bay project on that date. Shortly thereafter he said in the House of Commons that he did not morally approve of the project. I will read that quotation in a moment. On March 29 the minister stated in the House, as recorded at page 1265 of Hansard for that date:

Mr. Speaker, I have no moral approval to give on this proposal. I repeat once again that I follow very carefully the talks taking place between the Indians and the Quebec government on the James Bay proposal. In due course, at the Indians' request, I shall be glad to participate in the discussions.

Not only is there a conflict between his statement of March 15 in Montreal and this statement, but he said again on April 24 that he did not have to establish Indian priorities in Quebec. It is his clear responsibility to do so, yet he is telling members of the House that he has no such responsibility. As a minister of the Crown he is coming down on the side of approval of this project, yet at the same time he has a responsibility to take action under the Indian Act to maintain the integrity and security of the rights of these Indian people. These are the rights of the people involved in the James Bay project. So there is here a clear conflict of interest.

I am not alone in this view. This opinion has been expressed in the press and by others concerned with Indian affairs. It seems to me the government is confronted, in respect of this project, with a clear requirement to decide whether the Minister of Indian Affairs should continue to act while the government is taking a stand to approve a project which is directly to the disadvantage of the Indian people involved.

Mr. Len Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to take up too much time in this very interesting debate. I commend the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken) for raising the topic. I am tempted in some ways to perhaps take out my tomahawk on this issue, but I will save that for later.

When speaking on this question I suppose it could be said that if the Indian people had adopted a different immigration policy many of these problems would not have arisen. On the other hand, I am reminded of my good friend Gus Gottfriedsen, chief of the Kamloops band. The reservation there is across the river from Kamloops, and when he looks across the river he says, "I see the white men building cement basements. I guess they intend to stay here for a while."

This topic has been a very lively one in all parts of the country, especially in my constituency. I suppose there are a number of reasons for that. There is a very large Indian population in the province of British Columbia, 50,000 or so, and there are 12 or more reservations in my constituency. We have been faced in the Kamloops-Cariboo area with a situation which involves similar principles. There was an attempt some years ago to divert water from the Shuswap River to the Okanagan River. It was being made on very narrow grounds—actually, on a purely physical basis. In a report by the provincial government it was stated that it was physically possible to move water from point A to point B. The government did not consider any of the environmental consequences.

I understood from the remarks of the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Davis) that he feels it is regrettable that many of the projects developed in the past were carried out without consideration of the total environmental picture, the environmental consequences and what might happen if you divert water, in this instance, from the Shuswap River to the Okanagan River. The members of various governments which made these decisions did not consider what might happen if you dam a river or a series of rivers. They did not consider the ecological consequences.

I am pleased that the people in my constituency, particularly those in the Kamloops-Shuswap area, got up on their hind legs and fought very hard against the proposal to divert water from the Shuswap River into the Okanagan River. As a result of the fight they put up, we were able to obtain what is called the Okanagan basin water agreement, signed by the province of British Columbia and the federal government. The resulting study will be one of the most comprehensive, in respect of water, ever carried out in this country. I think this is the best way to proceed in respect of such a project.

Environmental and ecological consequences must be evaluated before decisions are made. I regret that in the case of the James Bay project the ecological and environmental parameters were not investigated before the decision was made. That is very regrettable. As we go down the trail from here I hope that with a very enlightened Minister of the Environment, a very enlightened parliament and Department of the Environment situations such as this will not occur. I hope we will be much better informed about our environment and ecology, which involves birds, bees and animals of all kinds, before this type of decision is made.

Let me deal for a moment with the report on the James Bay project, entitled "A preliminary study of the environmental impacts of the James Bay development project".

Mr. Nielsen: How about the land rights of Indian people?

Mr. Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): I will get to that. I should like to quote a few paragraphs from this report which I think are significant and represent the kind of thinking that should take place before the project proceeds. The report reads in part:

Any intervention in the environment, if it modifies any one resource, agent or process, is bound to have an effect at every strata of the ecosystem, through the close interactions between resources, agents and processes. Prior to any intervention it is necessary to determine at least the orders of magnitude and significance of the impacts and to evaluate the relative vulnerability or compatibility of the site with respect to the anticipated development. In this context the terms "magnitude" and "significance" are not necessarily synonymous.

If the specialists' views and recommendations had been heeded, many of the environmental consequences of the Great Aswan High Dam—some of which have been described as disastrous—could have been avoided; but none of these specialists had "the strength or the influence to be heard at governmental or policy levels . . . while the integrating forces of human society in Africa and elsewhere come apart in the face of single-tracked ramrod solutions that erode, then erase, our environment"

That is a significant statement. Another significant paragraph reads as follows:

If man is to become an intelligent resource manager, he will need to take the proper steps, indicated by ecologists and other environmental specialists, to restore nature to a new state of equilibrium at least as diversified and productive as before.

• (1720)

I should like to turn to some of the conclusions outlined in this report which bother me very much. The first conclusion reads:

On the basis of limited data available, the Task Force can identify only one ecological impact of potentially alarming proportions and significance—the impact on the native population of the area. Appropriate action must be taken in advance to alleviate the ensuing disturbance in their mode of life.

It continues:

The hydroelectric development project will affect about 6,000 people (approximately 90% Indians), distributed along the coast and inland in the following settlements:

I will leave it at that, and quote from another paragraph with which I should like to take issue.

Indians in the area are, economically and politically, strongly dependent on white man's society. Fishing, hunting and trapping are still important social and economic activities in the life of the region, but the Indians are no longer as economically dependent on them as some people think.

I should like to challenge that statement. I disagree with it and I will deal with it a little more fully at some later date. I am going to be participating in the meetings when the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) meets the people of Quebec. I should like to examine all of the facts before I take out my tomahawk in this particular case.

There are three points I should like to make in the summation of my remarks. As I said before, it is regrettable that projects like this in James Bay commence without studies being made well ahead of the decisions. Decisions should be based on good, sound studies rather than trying to justify them by studies later. Second, it is my hope that a satisfactory solution to this problem can be worked out between the Indian people in the James Bay area and the government of the province of Quebec. I hope that as a result of these dealings with the province of Quebec, a new and better life can be found for these Indians, if this is their wish. However, it is imperative that they be adequately consulted and their wishes respected.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): The last point is, I hope we will see some further discussion on the question of aboriginal rights. The question of aboriginal rights is involved in this whole decision. As we go further down the trail, I hope we will get a report from Mr. Barber, the commissioner who was appointed to look into incidents in which treaties have been abrogated. I hope Mr. Barber can come up with some suggestions whereby grievances can be finally settled.

Mr. Nielsen: What a hope.

Mr. Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): I was very encouraged by some of the remarks made by the Minister of Indian Affairs. I have said before, and I say again, that I have a great deal of confidence in this minister.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): He has done a lot of things, taken some pretty hard decisions and has a very tough role. In many respects, the Minister of Indian Affairs is somewhat like the Minister of Finance. The people always say none of them is really good.

The situation of the Indians in this country is very serious. It requires a lot of cool thinking and study. One of the most important things that has been happening in the past few years is that the Indian people are being consulted on what kind of life they want. This is sometimes awkward and sometimes very difficult, but I believe this minister is sincere. I know he is sincere in his efforts to try to bring about a better relationship. For verification of that statement, one need only look at the amount of money that has been spent and the number of organizations that have sprung up in the past three years. This never happened before. I disagree with the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) who said that these organizations are being used as a political buffer. I say to the hon. member that I am surprised. This indicates the hon. member does not know the Indian organizations very well. If he is out of touch, he should have a little chat with them to see whether they like being called a political buffer or political whipping boy for the Minister of Indian Affairs.

Mr. Nielsen: I said the minister is using them in that way.

Mr. Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): That is a lot of baloney. It just is not the case. We have some very competent Indian leaders on the scene today who are supporting the rights of Indian people. I think the Minister of Indian Affairs is correct when he says he should not intervene in these situations until he is asked to do so by the Indian organizations and the Indian people involved.

Mr. Alkenbrack: You have contradicted yourself.

Mr. Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): I have not. It is a good principle. For too long, the Indian people have been patted on the head by governments and people. They have been told "Nice little Indians; go back to the reserve and be good boys". This minister has not been doing that under any circumstances.

Mr. Nielsen: He sold James Bay land down the river.

Mr. Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): That is not so. Right from the beginning when he took office, he said "I am too young to be the great white father to so many people".

In closing, I want to offer any assistance I can give to the people of Quebec and the people of James Bay. I have made this offer before to some of the people, but they have not requested any assistance. As I said before, I am going to be participating in the meetings between the minister and the Indian people of Quebec. I hope that a satisfactory solution can be found.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. member a question?

James Bay Power Project

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) would like to ask a question of the hon. member for Kamloops-Cariboo. He can allow the hon. member to do so if he wishes. Apparently the hon. member indicates he will receive a question.

Mr. Nielsen: The hon. member is too kind. Does the hon. member agree that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development has a clear responsibility under the terms of the Indian Act in a case like James Bay to secure the integrity of the land rights of the Indian people of that area before the commencement of the project, and then sit down to negotiate the terms upon which the project can go ahead? Does the hon. member agree with that?

Mr. Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister of Indian Affairs made the position of the government very clear when he said the interests of the Indians will be protected by this government.

Mr. Nielsen: Do you agree with that statement or not?

Mr. Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): The approach being taken, where the minister is not pre-empting his duty to the Indians and the responsibility they want to take upon themselves, is good. As I said before, it has too long been the case that successive governments have been treating the Indian people as children. That is not the attitude of this minister. I think he is taking the proper course.

Mr. Nielsen: Their land rights are gone.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters). Order, please. I am not sure whether the hon. member for Kamloops-Cariboo has terminated his remarks. In fairness to him, if he has more to say, he should be allowed to do so before I call on the hon. member for Timiskaming.

Mr. Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, I quote the story of my good friend Gus Gottfriedsen: The white man is here to stay.

• (1730)

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to take part in this discussion. I have listened very carefully to the speeches made and I think I have learned something from them. I would like to say to the previous speaker that he belongs to a government that has negated its position by not bringing this matter before the Parliament of Canada a long time ago and leaving it to the opposition to do so. To you, Mr. Speaker, goes part of the credit for your wisdom in allowing this debate.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. According to the rules, hon. members are not allowed to praise the Speaker's wisdom.

Mr. Peters: I thought that if the statement was affirmative it would be permissible. During the last election in the province of Quebec the idea was born of establishing 100,000 jobs for the people of the province. In looking for ways in which this might be accomplished, the decision was taken to start the James Bay power development project. This was done in a totally political atmosphere. No study was undertaken by the provincial government. As a matter of fact, the project had not been discussed to any great extent.

You will remember, Mr. Speaker, that Mr. Kierans, an engineer from Sudbury, put forward the idea of developing the Grand Canal which was a diversion from Hudson Bay and which would have taken in the Rupert River, the Harricanaw River, the Moose River, probably the Matagami River, the East Quebec River and a number of other rivers flowing into the James Bay area. This project was also supported federally by the Liberal government. One of the candidates in my area spoke about running barges up from Ottawa to New Liskeard. Freight was to be floated back and forth and industries would thus be established. Suddenly we found that the provincial government would receive the benefits.

Before the hon. member for Kamloops-Cariboo (Mr. Marchand) leaves, I would like to say that I am not very proud of the representation that he has made. He has been more interested in supporting the position of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) than in speaking for the people who need to be represented here. I know some of the Indian people in that area. They have been in the bush for years. They have been trapping and they have made a livelihood from that way of life. Their way of life, in my opinion, has not prepared them in any way to question the power of the Quebec government, which in any case does not brook questioning from anyone. They have not been able to speak for themselves. They have been in need of strong representation and they have looked to the government to protect their interests.

My colleagues have drawn attention to the legal requirements of the treaties. The Indians for many years have been protected by the federal government under agreement. When the government gave to Quebec jurisdiction over the land in that area, we retained certain land rights on behalf of the Indians. The Indians themselves are not capable of putting up the kind of fight that is necessary. Here I am not referring to the Caughnawaga reservation where the Indians have been dealing with the government for a long time, or to the Six Nations reserve in Brantford which has been dealing with the government for a long time. I am referring to the nomadic people in the area who have not had much to do with governments, and the little experiences they have had with white people have been bad.

The hon. member for Kamloops-Cariboo has the right and the ability to speak on behalf of the Indian people and in my opinion it is his obligation to speak for them. In my opinion he should have supported the position that has been taken by many other people in the province of Quebec, namely, that the rights of the Indians must be protected. This has not been done, and I condemn the minister for not doing it on behalf of the Indians. The very least that the federal government, in particular the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, could have done was provide a legal precedent by applying to the Supreme Court of Canada for a decision regarding the land rights of Indians and what would be a reasonable settlement.

During this summer a $60 million project for building roads in that area is going forward. Under no circumstances does Quebec own that land. Anybody else would be protected by expropriation rights and would have the right to go to court. But a man who has been living from trapping, a man who has been only peripherally involved with white people, has no such right. All that the Indians have received from the white people has been bad, such as alcohol, dealings with the Hudson's Bay Company, and so forth. The Indians' way of life has not enabled them to deal with white men and to oppose the Quebec government, which has given no consideration to their rights.

If the hon. member for Kamloops-Cariboo is to represent the Indian people, and it is his right and responsibility to do so because he has a greater advantage than the rest of us, he will have to say that the minister has not done a good job. Instead, he supports the minister. The project has already been started; the bulldozers and developers have moved in.

Mr. Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): Don't just pick on me.

Mr. Peters: I am not just picking on the hon. member. I, too, have an obligation toward the Indians because I represent five Indian reservations. All I am saying is that the hon. member is fortunate in having an advantage that I do not have. I am sure that because of his background he is able to go into these areas and talk to people who would resent my doing so. He is able to talk to the Indians who would violently resent the minister. They do not resent the hon. member because of his special birthright. Therefore, I say he has the obligation, and certainly the ability and the right, to act in a special way to ensure that those rights are not negotiated away.

The Indians' rights must be protected in a special way. That is why the Queen said she had a responsibility toward the people living on these lands. Just because it is the province of Quebec that is involved does not give this government the right to waive the treaties which give the Indians special rights. These are God-given rights until they themselves ask that they be revoked or modified.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Peters: An article in the Montreal Star of March 27 reads as follows:

> The province began negotiating when a commission of inquiry under Judge Henri Dorion established that the native people have "real and incontestable territorial rights" over huge tracts of northern Quebec, including the James Bay area.
> The provincial government, in what the association lawyers describe as a "sign of good faith", has already agreed—

It goes on to say that they waived the 8 per cent sales tax in the area. Big deal! They did say that they gave some concessions, but what are they to these 7,000 people who are not represented by any really unified force? To be fair to the minister I should point out that he has done a good job in helping the Indians to develop the ability to participate in meetings and to discuss their problems. This minister should be given full credit for that, but I suggest that he knows as well as I do that the Indians have not yet fully developed this ability.

James Bay Power Project

Four years ago the minister set up a meeting in Sudbury at which the chiefs sat around the table. Each one said, "I will pass because I want to hear what everybody else has to say". So 25 chiefs sat around the table and no one said anything until they came back to the first one who spoke. They all decided to wait until someone else had spoken, and no one got around to speaking. The people did not understand. The chiefs of the bands had never talked to each other before.

• (1740)

Mr. Chrétien: That was four years ago.

Mr. Peters: That is right, and I give the minister full credit for having developed this policy. But it took us 200 or 300 years to do that. Now, how can we suddenly expect the Indians to stand on their own feet in our councils without our backing? The minister should not wait until they come to ask him. He is supposed to protect their interests. If he and his department leave it up to the Bourassa government, which is only interested in creating jobs for Quebec voters, the Indians will have nothing left to negotiate in a few years.

The Minister of the Environment (Mr. Davis) today took another tack. He indicated he was very concerned that the department had not been able to ascertain a number of things that should be ascertained in advance of construction. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) showed a great weakness in his argument when he said we have not really discussed hydroelectric power as an energy resource, and that we do not know what our actual needs are. If we develop the power at James Bay, we may find that the province of Quebec cannot afford to make a $10 billion expenditure in that field, because power may be generated more cheaply through other means. I well remember an argument which took place in Saskatchewan a number of years ago, when it was pointed out that hydro power in that province was not the cheapest form of power, and that power could be produced more cheaply there through the use of thermo plants.

The Minister of the Environment indicated that his department had completed only a preliminary study, and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development showed a great weakness in his ability to negotiate for the Indian people. I point out that these Indians are not like those in Fort George, Prince Rupert or any of the reserves. They live spread out over the entire area. I am sure many of them only know who their band chief is, and quite often that is the only relationship they have with their band. Some of them live permanently on reserves, but a very large number of them spend most of their time hunting and travelling around the territory in which their hunting grounds are traditionally located.

Mr. Nielsen: And secured for them.

Mr. Peters: Yes, and secured for them. Despite what this House has been told, they are not in a position to negotiate. They will have to be protected by do-gooders. The James Bay Committee met in Montreal in March of this year. Most of the members of that committee are do-gooders. They have pointed out some very interesting things concerning the attitude of the developers of the area. I quote from their report as follows:

> The Development Corporation has gone ahead and started the construction of a road network without first seeking or obtaining the permission of the native peoples who live on the land. This contradicts public statements of the Corporation proclaiming concern about them.

The premise there was:

> The inhabitants of the area will be the first to benefit from its development.

This statement was made by the president of the James Bay Development Corporation on January 18, 1972.

> This statement reveals an assumption which F. H. Knelman has interpreted thus:
> Our "progress" and our values are . . . not open to question or doubt, and we have the divine right of developers to confer these upon native peoples whether they want it or not.

The report also includes some of the irrational statements that developers make, and which could apply in this case, such as:

> The program—as proposed—has to be enacted now.
> The program will be enacted in any event. You can't stop progress.
> The program is needed to fill the demand that will be created by the program.
> No one opposes the program. It will benefit the majority, and harm no one.
>
> Data used to estimate effects of the program are the only valid, pertinent data available.
> Since there is no proof that the development will damage the environment, we can safely assume it will not.
>
> All effects of the program have been considered.
> The program, as presented, represents the sum total of the development contemplated for this particular resource.
> All applicable alternatives have been considered.

That is the attitude of the developers. Obviously, that is the attitude of the Quebec government. You know, Mr. Speaker, the Quebec government was embarrassed by the Hamilton Falls project in Labrador. This did a great deal to hurt their prestige. They did not like it one little bit. Now, they think they have to do something to counteract that.

I plead with the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I consider him to be a very progressive minister. He is a person who has thought out some of the problems of the Indians. This is something I do not say about his department. Some of the officials are as archaic as some of the treaties they are abusing. In my opinion, the minister is progressive but his departmental people are not. They are cowards. They won't really make any decision on anything that might get them into trouble or make work for them.

Mr. Nielsen: You are just saying that because the minister used to be a member of the NDP.

Mr. Peters: I didn't know that. Well, there is a saving grace in everyone. I suggest that the minister should not rest on his laurels, on his ability to provide a new environment in which the Indian population will be able to negotiate. I ask the minister to give serious consideration to the claims of the Indian people to the territorial lands given to them by treaty. I consider those treaties to be sacred, held in trust by the federal government, not to be negotiated with provinces, not to be negotiated with developers but only to be negotiated with the Indian people.

We have a law in this country which provides that if people are not competent to enter into a legal agreement, then a legal agreement cannot be negotiated. It is my opinion that the Indian people are not competent to assess the value of what they possess. The native peoples are looking at their land in terms of their livelihood, in terms of their background, in terms of the use to which they put it. This is land that may be worth far more than any other type of land in 50 years time. Water may become our richest resource on this continent. It is something that, in its pure form, will be very precious. If this minister allows the Indians, in their ignorance of the potential of the land, in their inability to deal with the courts of the land, to lose their land, he will have failed in his duty. If he gives up the duty that has been entrusted to him by the people of Canada, and by the parliament of Canada, to protect this land which has been left as a heritage for the Indians by the Queen who negotiated the treaties in good faith, then he will have done nothing for democracy, nothing for the native peoples of this country, and he will be forever remembered as the one who sold out their heritage for a mess of potage.

The minister is a young man. I am sure he will be here for quite some time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bell: But not as a minister.

Mr. Peters: I hope he is around for a long time, but I do not want him sitting in this House in two or three years time, and saying to himself and the people of Canada that if he had to do it over again he would do what he was supposed to do in the first place, that he would provide the protection to the Indian people that it was his obligation to provide, that he would provide it whether they asked for it or not, that he would make money available to them to protect their rights, rights which another government would have stolen from them because of their ignorance and because of his unwillingness to defend them.

• (1750)

Mr. Speaker, I may be unfair to the nature of the Indian people, but in my part of the country many of them are like children when it comes to dealing with the white man's problems. We have seen them in the courts, we have seen them trying to buy cars, we have seen them dealing in the white man's society in a less than competent manner. Knowing that, I cannot stand here and say that the minister should wait until they all get together and decide to come to him for protection. Mr. Speaker, he has an obligation to protect the Indian population in the James Bay area now. Anything less will be a sell-out of the rights which those Indians deserve in a fair and just society.

Mr. Ian Watson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to join other members of this House in expressing gratitude to the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken) for affording us this opportunity to discuss a most important question and one with which we are all likely to become more and more concerned during the next year or two.

When the Quebec Prime Minister introduced in the National Assembly Bill 50 on the development of the James Bay area, the main argument used by his opponents—the technocrats of the Parti Québecois and of Quebec Hydro who led the opposition against Bill 50 in the National Assembly—was that it would be more profitable for Quebec to develop atomic energy than the hydroelectric potential of the James Bay area.

Given the increasing cost of building and maintaining atomic plants and the problem of controlling the pollution which those plants might cause, I believe that economically the hydroelectric project is to be prefered to atomic plants because of the touristic and mining advantages which will result from this project.

However, I was most concerned to find that during the debate on Bill 50 no mention was made of the Cree people who are the only residents in the area involved. Mr. Speaker, I would like now to deal with this subject.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, under certain circumstances I am convinced that this project could benefit the people of the area. In theory, it can supply jobs that the growing population along the coast of James Bay and the interior need. Until recently, wildlife resources in the area were adequate to provide a livelihood but this is no longer true.

When I was chairman of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development I visited the James Bay and Hudson Bay areas in the autumn of 1970 along with three other members of the committee. Meetings were held with the Cree peoples at Miskassini Post, East Main and Fort George and many things were discussed. The question of language seemed to bother the local people more than anything else. We put forward the proposition that the children learn both English and French in school, asserting that jobs in the hydroelectric industry or the mining industry would require a knowledge of French whereas the tourist industry and the prospecting industry would require English. They indicated that they would be interested in learning both languages but were insistent on their right to choose the language of instruction for their children. It should be remembered that the language of all these people at home and at work is still Cree.

In our discussions, the prospect of hydro development did not invoke any adverse reaction from the public audience. About a year later the project was officially announced and no doubt there will be additional reaction as more and more activity appears on the scene. In theory at least, in this kind of scheme we should be able to provide the type of development where the people would play a major role. However, judging by past experience, can we really hope that the Cree peoples of the James Bay region will have an important role to play? Certainly there is nothing in our recent history to justify that hope.

The Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development recommended that the education branch of the department should tackle innovative education for young Indians in the James Bay area because of the additional language problem there which is not faced by Indians elsewhere in Canada. The Department of Natural Resources of the province of Quebec wishes to have French as the working language of the area. This conflicts with the Anglican heritage of the Cree peoples, whose language remains basically Cree but whose exposure through religion has been to English, so there is some prejudice in favour of English rather than French.

Given this conflict of interest, the committee recommended that the department devote its initial energies to the inauguration of new teaching methods that would enable the younger people in the region to master both the English and French languages. That is asking a lot, considering that we in the rest of Canada are not able to do this. So far as I know, the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development has not moved toward implementation of this particular recommendation.

We also urged, in our education committee report, a new approach to vocational training. One of the deficiencies in vocational training, whether in Indian schools or white schools in northern Canada, is that vocational courses supplied to youngsters and students simply do not reflect the industrial needs of the area. For instance, mining courses are not available where mines exist. We feel it is only common sense for the kinds of courses offered to students to reflect the kind of job opportunities that are likely to be offered in the area.

I am not aware yet of any innovation in our program which would permit, in the James Bay area and Hudson Bay areas, Cree youngsters to acquire the type of education and, later, the type of vocational education which is necessary if they are to play an important role in the hydroelectric developments projected there. If, on the other hand, everything that should be done were to be done, if we were to do everything to permit the Cree peoples of this area to play the major role which should be theirs in any hydroelectric development after the construction period is over, I am confident that the support of the indigenous peoples for this project would be increased. If that support were not guaranteed, at least there is a very high likelihood that the project would be approved by the Indian peoples living in the area.

Quebec, in its approach to the peoples of the area through the provincial department of natural resources, has not given us too much ground for encouragement.

The Minister of Natural Resources of Quebec has made the mistakes of paternalistic actions in New Quebec as our federal ministers responsible for the Indians have been making since the beginning of the twentieth century.

[English]

We are making the same mistakes all over again. Quite frankly, since the announcement of the James Bay project there has been nothing in the approach of the department of natural resources of the province of Quebec which would indicate a change of heart or a more enlightened approach to the job. There is nothing to show that anything more has been done to prepare the indigenous peoples for the new kind of development which is proposed.

It is all very well to talk about settling with our Indian peoples in the area and negotiating with them. Whether these negotiations succeed or not, I am convinced that the Indian peoples could decide on legal measures which would effectively block the project for years. I would say to Premier Bourassa that this is a very real possibility. The Indian peoples of these areas are not simple people who have recently come out of the woods and who are unaware of the ways of the white man. I could name Chief Diamond of Rupert House and Chief Kanatewat of Fort George as two extremely capable and competent chiefs. If they are at all representative of the calibre of the chiefs of this area, those people will adopt a very energetic and hard position on whatever is being negotiated.

I am confident that with the advice of legal people now assisting them, and their lawyers are among the best in the country, the chiefs will adopt the kind of legal position that will protect their peoples now and in the future. I therefore warn the minister and the authorities in Quebec responsible for this project that the possibility of legal measures holding up operations in the James Bay area in the next year or two are very great. Indeed, this is likely.

Putting aside for the moment legalities and the question of whether legal positions will be adopted, I submit that there is little evidence to show that the kind of enlightened approach that is necessary if the peoples of the area are to be brought into the modern world is being adopted in the circumstances. These new approaches are not evident and they ought to be evident, Mr. Speaker.

For the past few minutes I have dealt with Indian affairs. Now, I wish to touch briefly on other aspects of the project. The Minister of the Environment (Mr. Davis) indicated that environmental impact statements are now being insisted on in connection with major projects in this country and elsewhere in the world. Such environmental impact statements would involve the work of top biologists, laboratory people, forestry people, meteorologists, climatologists, etc. I wonder—I admit that perhaps I did not hear the minister referring to this subject matter and that there may have been a reference to it—whether there is any plan to produce scale models of this entire project, either in some computerized form or physically, in order that we may determine clearly and without doubt that in the long run this project will not adversely affect climate, the ecology of the rivers and James Bay and Hudson Bay in a way that will have far reaching effects on the continent and even, perhaps, on the world.

Another fear I harbour has been stimulated somewhat by a paper I received from a local STOP group—Society to Overcome Pollution—of my riding. This group, under the chairmanship of Mrs. Evelyn Retallack, prepared an excellent study of the James Bay project and was kind enough to let me have a copy of it. While I do not agree with everything in the report, it does contain one subject that no other speaker today has covered. The warning in that particular part of the report warrants further study by the department headed by the Minister of the Environment. Mr. Sylvestre, formerly with the department of lands and forests of Quebec, has warned that in the area south of James Bay there is a potential earthquake and landslide zone. Montreal, he says, is located on a fault running along the St. Lawrence River. He goes on to point out that the Canadian Underwriters Association now has refused to give automatic earthquake insurance to people in the Montreal area. Man and His World was specifically refused earthquake insurance. Mr. Sylvestre goes on to say:

> The 50,000 square miles to be flooded and the billions of tons of water in new weight this land must bear, presents very strong dangers for the residents of all of North America south of the project.
> Oxford geographer Gordon Rattray Taylor in his book "Doomsday Book" deeply explores the correlation between seemingly natural catastrophes and man, the engineer, as earthquake maker. Pressure changes are known to shift the crust of the earth causing earthquakes in the process. Through intensive scientific and technical research, such earthquakes as the one in India in 1967 and the one in Rhodesia in 1963 can be traced to the filling of the reservoirs created by the Koyna Dam in India and the Kariba Dam in Rhodesia. These areas were quite free of shocks before the dams were built. The dam at Monteynard in the French Alps cause a series of tremors culminating in a shock of several points on the Richter scale. The artificial lake of Kremasta in Greece caused earth slides and fractures—480 homes collapsed and 1,200 were seriously damaged.
> The possibility that man might be disturbing the earth's crustal forces only dawned on scientists in 1945 when Dr. Carder pointed out what was happening at Boulder Dam, Colorado. There had been no shocks in this area for 15 years before the dam was built. Lake Mead, formed by the dam, began to fill in 1935. The first shock came in 1936. During 1937 more than 100 shocks were felt. When the lake reached its full depth the shocks reached a maximum with further bursts in several years when the lake was particularly full.
> In view of this it has been suggested that the disastrous earthquake which hit Iran and Turkey in 1957 and in 1966 were caused by changes in the level of the Caspian Sea. The water level had fallen six feet as a result of the industrialization of the lower Volga Valley.

He goes on to mention the slides in the St. Jean-Vianney area in Quebec. I think the point is fairly made that the addition of this extra weight caused by billions of tons of water on a 50,000-square mile area, an earthquake-prone area, might quite conceivably have a disastrous result. It may well be that as a result of geological and other research it will be determined that the structure along the St. Lawrence River bears no relation to that around James Bay and that land pressures there could not conceivably affect the St. Lawrence valley. But no word of such a finding has come from the minister, and I would suggest that at least this is an essential question for study in connection with our environmental approach to this project.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. I am afraid I must interrupt the hon. member; his time has expired.

Mr. Watson: I wonder if I might have unanimous consent to complete my remarks?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): The hon. member's time in fact expired two minutes ago, but if there is unanimous consent he may proceed.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Watson: A further point which I feel should be mentioned is this: at some stage the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) should indicate the effects on the national economy of attempting to handle the James Bay project and the two Mackenzie pipelines for gas and oil, from the point of view of the almost intolerable pressure which will be placed upon the Canadian dollar. Undoubtedly if this were the result, Canadian ability to compete in world trade would be seriously impaired.

Even if there is an assurance forthcoming that in the long run the ecological effects of this project will be minimal, that no serious danger of earthquakes will be involved and that the financing will not throw our economy out of balance, and leaving aside the legal aspects of the Indian peoples' position, we will still be left with the special problem of ensuring that the indigenous peoples of this area receive a decent deal. I am thinking in terms of a deal which will enable them to face the future not only with confidence but with competence, the competence which an adequate system of education could give them and which is not being given them now. An enlightened approach must be forthcoming from the education branch of the federal Department of Indian Affairs, the department of natural resources and the department of education in Quebec.

Mr. David Anderson (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken) for using this rule relating to emergency debates intelligently, perhaps for the first time in my memory; and you, Mr. Speaker, for recognizing that fact. Many phony efforts have been made to use this rule and at last the hon. gentleman has come up with an intelligent one. I wish him well.

When this issue came to the fore in February, parliament was not in session but a press release was issued dealing with a joint federal-provincial report on the environmental impact of the project. That report dramatically illustrated the inadequacy of Canadian procedures for handling environmental problems.

I intend to focus my remarks on the final points made by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka. I think the joint federal-provincial report made it clear that instead of a full evaluation of environmental damage and costs being made at the time the engineering and economic studies were carried out, the report was made after the decision to proceed with the James Bay development had been taken. Thus, it came too late to be of use in evaluating the project.

This is "cart before the horse" decision-making. I think it is the wrong way to go about major developments involving an alteration in the environment. Instead, there should have been studies made of all the factors involved, economic, engineering, social and environmental before proceeding to any decision as to whether construction should begin. Only in this way can a proposal such as the James Bay project be properly evaluated.

I should like to refer to the situation created in connection with the Bennett dam in British Columbia, where costly remedial construction is now being undertaken to rectify the environmental problems ignored when the decision to build the dam was taken. The situation in James Bay might be compared to the situation which has now arisen in northern British Columbia. I would have thought that the Bennett dam would have been an object lesson on the dangers of this nineteenth century approach, but apparently the lesson has not been learned. What I would like to see instead of our present ramshackle, hit-or-miss procedures is something akin to the United States legislation, the environmental policy act of 1969 which despite its defects would make an excellent model for Canadian legislation. It is the model for a private member's bill of mine which I am sure the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka would be happy to second. I would present it to him with that in mind because I think it is a bi-partisan sort of approach.

What we should have is a systematic, interdisciplinary approach to these major engineering undertakings, one that will ensure that the natural and social sciences, environmental design arts and the planning and decision-making are properly integrated. We need a recommendation or a report on any major undertaking that might significantly affect the quality of the human environment, and a detailed study by the responsible federal or provincial, or joint federal and provincial, authorities should be made.

Such a report should include the environmental impact of proposed action. It should include any adverse environmental effects that cannot be avoided should the proposal be implemented. It should also include alternatives to the proposed action. It should include the relationship between local, short-term use of the environment and area and the maintenance, the enhancement as it were, of what you might call long-term productivity. Finally, it should include a statement on the irreversible and irretrievable commitment of resources that would be involved if the proposed action should be implemented. I realize that this sounds rather technical in form but I think hon. members are quite capable, without further elaboration, of understanding how it could be applied to the James Bay project and how, if such report had been prepared prior to any decision to proceed, we would have been a great deal better off than we are now.

It is my view that once such reports are prepared they should be made public and they should then be subjected to public scrutiny. Unfortunately, this House has not seen fit to re-establish what was an excellent committee of the House, the special committee on environmental pollution, on which the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Harding), the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka as well, I may say modestly, as myself did some excellent work. The House has not seen fit to re-establish that committee, a failure for which I think the government House leader is directly responsible. It is most unfortunate that he has taken this retrogressive step.

It is my view that with such a committee the members of this House would be able to examine projects such as this, report upon them and perhaps come up with a decent assessment of any damage that might be done, along the lines that I have suggested. We do not have any legislation such as the legislation I referred to, which is basically American. Neither, unfortunately and most regrettably, do we have the committee I have just mentioned. Therefore, I feel it is incumbent upon the Minister of the Environment in particular to make sure that my private member's bill, which I earlier said would, I am sure, be supported by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka as well as the hon. member for Kootenay West, lays the foundation for his bringing forward soon some government legislation that will achieve these objectives and permit the making of environmental impact studies such as the one I have suggested, allow the publication of such statements and the holding of public hearings of interested parties who would be able to make their views known.

It is late on a Friday afternoon and I have no wish to prolong the debate. However, I hope that my plea, though it falls on a rather thinly attended House, will not fall on deaf ears and that before long we will have procedures in this House as well as in legislation to allow us better to deal with the sort of problem we are faced with this afternoon.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Pursuant to Standing Order 26(13), I am satisfied that the debate has been concluded and I therefore declare the motion carried.

At 6.26 p.m. the House adjourned pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, May 1, 1972

The House met at 2 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

TIME OF STATEMENT ON POLICY OF GOVERNMENT RESPECTING FOREIGN INVESTMENT IN CANADA

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions with the House leaders on the other side and we have agreed that the House should revert to motions at 5 p.m. on Tuesday, May 2, for the purpose of hearing a statement from the Minister of National Revenue. I believe that is agreeable to the other parties.

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed and so ordered by the House?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is so ordered.

DEPARTMENT OF INDUSTRY, TRADE AND COMMERCE ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING ACQUISITION OF CUSTOMS DOCUMENTS BY MINISTER AND DEPARTMENTAL OFFICERS

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-196, to amend the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT MAKING INSULT TO CANADIAN OR PROVINCIAL FLAGS AN OFFENCE

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Renfrew North) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-197, to amend the Criminal Code (Canadian and Provincial Flags).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Hopkins: The purpose of this bill, Mr. Speaker, is to make it an offence to insult in any way the Canadian or a provincial flag.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT MAKING INSULT TO FLAG OF FOREIGN COUNTRY LAWFULLY REPRESENTED IN CANADA AN OFFENCE

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Renfrew North) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-198, to amend the Criminal Code (Foreign Flags).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to make it an offence to in any way insult the flag of a foreign country lawfully represented in Canada.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

COST OF PROGRAMS "S.O.S. SOLEIL" AND "VIVA MEXICO-VIVA CANADA"

Question No. 175—Mr. Caouette:

1. What were the production costs of the programs "S.O.S. Soleil" and "Viva Mexico-Viva Canada"?

2. Were the expenses incurred shared by the Governments of Jamaica and Mexico or were all expenses paid solely by the Government of Canada?

3. If these programs were meant as cultural exchanges, what criteria were meant as cultural exchanges, what criteria were used to determine the representative nature of the Canadian artists involved?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: 1. The CBC is not usually required to disclose the cost of a particular program. It should be noted however that the production costs of "Viva Mexico-Viva Canada" and "S.O.S. Soleil", which were shown in the "Beaux Dimanches" series, were well within the average figure for a one and a half hour variety show.

2. No governments were involved. However, it was at the express request of the Mexican and Jamaican boards of tourism and due to the working conditions they offered that these productions were made. Actually, under these conditions this type of program costs less to produce outside Canada than it would as a studio production.

3. These programs were not part of cultural exchanges. Availability of the performers is the chief criterion in making programs of this kind.

It should be noted that "Viva Mexico-Viva Canada" has just been sold to la Communauté des télévisions francophones, which embraces France, Belgium, Switzerland, Luxembourg and Monaco.

DREE PROGRAMS—BANKRUPTCY SAFEGUARDS

Question No. 227—Mr. Robinson:

Are safeguards taken to avoid bankruptcies in the programs of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion and, if so, what are they?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Yes. Incentive assistance is offered to an applicant only if evaluation by trained professional staff indicates that the proposed project is likely to succeed. Conditions laid down in an offer of assistance are designed in part to ensure that the chances of long-term viability are good. No payment in respect of our offer of incentive assistance is made until an audit and an on-site inspection is made to determine that these conditions are being met. Final payment is made only after a final audit to determine that they have been met during the relevant control period following the point in time when commercial production is achieved. Throughout the process, officers of the Department are available to assist the company with advice that may be helpful in overcoming any difficulties being encountered.

GOVERNMENT PUBLICATIONS

Question No. 308—Mr. Robinson:

Will the government consider tendering the publication of its books, reports and other publications in order to avoid losses and make a profit on government publications?

Hon. Martin P. O'Connell (Minister of Labour): The government has announced a policy on co-publishing with Canadian publishers. The techniques of implementing the policy are still being developed.

GOVERNMENT PUBLICATIONS

Question No. 309—Mr. Robinson:

Has the government considered tendering the publication of its books, reports and other publications in order to maintain a viable Canadian book industry?

Hon. Martin P. O'Connell (Minister of Labour): The government has announced a policy on co-publishing with Canadian publishers. The techniques of implementing the policy are still being developed.

[Mr. Pelletier.]

CANADIAN OBSERVER TO OAS

Question No. 346—Mr. Robinson:

1. Who will fill the post of permanent observer to the Organization of American States, when will this individual commence his duties and where will he perform them?

2. What is the estimated annual cost of the Canadian permanent observer mission for the Organization of American States?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. The Canadian Permanent Observer to the Organization of American States, who will have the rank of Ambassador, will be named in the near future. He will commence his duties as soon as he has been formally accredited to the Organization. He will perform his duties through the offices of the Canadian Permanent Observer Mission which has been established as a channel of communication with the OAS headquarters in Washington.

2. The operating costs of the Permanent Observer Mission for 1972-73 have been estimated at $187,000. In future years, the costs and the size of the Mission will reflect the degree of Canadian interest in the Organization of American States and the inter-American organizations that are affiliated with it.

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM

Question No. 440—Mr. Orlikow:

1. How much of the $50 million for grants to municipalities and their agencies in the program announced by the Minister of Finance in the House on October 14, 1971, has been allocated?

2. What is the allocation, by province, of money under this program?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. The $50 million for grants to municipalities and their agencies in the program announced by the Minister of Finance in the House on October 14, 1971, has been allocated.

2. As of March 14, 1972, the allocation by province under the program was:

	$ Municipal
Newfoundland	3,312,039
Nova Scotia	2,620,640
Prince Edward Island	522,707
New Brunswick	2,576,686
Quebec	24,069,219
Ontario	7,729,497
Manitoba	1,937,847
Saskatchewan	1,409,231
Alberta	3,714,612
Northwest Territories	442,131
British Columbia	4,328,213
Yukon Territory	115,550

DEPARTMENT OF SOLICITOR GENERAL—SECURITY PLANNING AND RESEARCH GROUP

Question No. 475—Mr. Diefenbaker:

1. Who are the members of the Special Planning and Research group attached to the Solicitor General's Department?

2. What is the authority or area of responsibility of the said group?

3. In what manner is the choice made of the members of the said group?

4. Who is the head or senior member thereof?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Solicitor General): 1. As of April 1, 1972 the staff of the Security Planning and Research Group in the Department of the Solicitor General consisted of the following employees: P. Banning, H. Black, R. Bourne, B. Cantin, L. Cloutier, W. Dabros, R. Gaudet, S. Hoffman, L. Paquette, P. Wallace.

2. As stated in the House of Commons on September 21, 1971, the functions of the Security Planning and Research Group are: (a) to study the nature, origin and causes of subversive and revolutionary action, its objectives and techniques as well as the measures necessary to protect Canadians from internal threats; (b) to compile and analyze information collected on subversive and revolutionary groups and their activities, to estimate the nature and scope of internal threats to Canadians and to plan for measures to counter these threats; (c) to advise the Solicitor General on these matters.

3. By secondment and by Public Service Commission competition.

4. R. Bourne.

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION LOANS

Question No. 482—Mr. Thomson:

What percentage of Farm Credit Corporation loans were in arrears in each province in the years 1969, 1970 and 1971?

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): The Farm Credit Corporation advises that as of the end of the fiscal years the amount remaining in arrears as a percentage of the amount due during the year was as follows:

	1969-70 per cent	1970-71 per cent	1971-72 per cent
British Columbia	15.5	15.3	14.9
Alberta	19.3	22.0	21.0
Saskatchewan	11.6	18.9	21.1
Manitoba	14.0	22.3	24.7
Ontario	7.8	7.8	7.0
Quebec	3.8	4.1	4.5
New Brunswick	4.9	4.7	6.2
Nova Scotia	10.2	7.9	7.5
Prince Edward Island	11.3	11.6	14.3
Newfoundland	7.8	11.3	13.9

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

ABITIBI CONSTITUENCY—LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM

Question No. 256—Mr. Laprise:

1. What projects have been approved in the constituency of Abitibi under the Local Initiatives Program and what is the nature of each project?

2. Which projects in the constituency of Abitibi have been rejected and for what specific reason was each one rejected?

Return tabled.

DISC Program and Canadian Economy

RESEARCH STUDIES ON PIPELINE FROM ARCTIC

Question No. 315—Mr. Robinson:

1. What research studies on the Arctic does the government support at the present time?

2. Do the research results thus far indicate the feasibility of a pipeline being constructed from the Arctic to the South?

3. To what extent is permafrost still a problem, does the research indicate that it can be overcome and, if so, by what means?

4. To what extent would a pipeline from the North irreparably damage the ecology, terrain and wildlife, according to the research?

Return tabled.

EXPERIMENTAL FARM STATIONS—TENDERS CALLED FOR CHEMICAL FERTILIZERS

Question No. 378—Mr. Beaudoin:

1. Have federal Experimental Farm Stations called for tenders for chemical fertilizers since January 1970 and, if so, on how many occasions?

2. For each tender call (a) what are the names and addresses of the companies who submitted tenders (b) what was the amount of each tender (c) who received the contract and for what reasons?

Return tabled.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I have had question No. 293 on the order paper since March 8. It is a very simple question to the Solicitor General with regard to the establishment of a committee to plan the RCMP centennial and asking for the names and addresses of the members of the committee. The question being that simple, it surely should not take almost two months to obtain the answer.

Mr. Cullen: In view of the fact the hon. member was looking at the Solicitor General rather than the speaker, I think the question will probably be answered soon.

MOTIONS TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

TRADE

IMPACT OF UNITED STATES DISC PROGRAM ON CANADIAN AUTOMOBILE INDUSTRY AND CANADIAN ECONOMY IN GENERAL

Mr. Mac T. McCutcheon (Lambton-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to move under Standing Order 26 that the House do now adjourn for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration. This matter concerns reports that American automobile and automobile parts manufacturers are using the DISC plan to export motor vehicles and parts into the Canadian market contrary to the Canada-United States auto pact and to the prejudice of the manufacture of these goods in Canada, the failure of the government as the primary source of knowledge and responsibility in the matter to inform the House and public whether these reports are true, and the serious impact on the Canadian automobile industry in particular and the Canadian economy in general that must follow if these reports are true. If leave is given, I propose to move the motion, seconded by the hon. member for Kent-Essex (Mr. Danforth).

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has received notice of the proposed motion and at the same time similar notices were received from the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby and the hon. member for Brant. Perhaps the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby might be allowed to indicate the nature of his motion, and the Chair could then make a ruling in relation to the three notices of motions of which notice has been received under the terms of Standing Order 26.

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), to move the adjournment of the House under Standing Order 26 for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the recently revealed threat to our manufacturing industry, especially the automobile sector, by the disclosure that United States corporations, many of them having branch plants in Canada, have been using the tax deferral program of the United States government for many months, which breaches the spirit and the letter of GATT as well as of the Canada-U.S. automotive agreement, and critically endangers our national economy.

Mr. Speaker: As I indicated a moment ago, the Chair has received notices of motions proposed by the hon. member for Lambton-Kent, the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby, and the hon. member for Brant. Obviously the matter proposed for discussion by hon. members is one of national interest and importance and it is of concern to members of the House as evidenced by the many questions asked last week.

There are many other factors which the Chair has to bear in mind in considering a proposed motion to adjourn the House. The Chair must be conscious of the provisions of Standing Order 26 and of other practices of the House which determine the manner in which certain questions should be brought forward for debate and the time when such debates can take place. With this in mind it should be noted that two of the notices received are, to some extent at least, in the form of a proposed censure of the government.

I refer in particular to the notice received from the hon. member for Lambton-Kent which proposes to discuss "the failure of the government, as the primary source of knowledge and responsibility in the matter, to inform the House and public whether these reports are true." This would indicate that what is sought by the hon. member is a debate on a motion of censure of the government. I suggest to hon. members that the provisions of Standing Order 26 cannot be invoked for this purpose.

Section 5 of Standing Order 26 specifies that Mr. Speaker shall have regard to the probability of the matter being brought before the House within reasonable time by other means. I remind hon. members that since a motion under Standing Order 26 was submitted and granted early Thursday afternoon, a budget presentation has been announced for next week. The House has also been advised earlier today by the President of the Privy Council that the Minister of National Revenue will make a presentation to the House in relation to foreign ownership at five o'clock tomorrow afternoon. I would hope that at least in the case of the budget debate hon. members will have within a reasonable time an opportunity to express views in relation to the matter alluded to in the motions which are now before us. Between now and the close of the current supply period there remain about 40 sitting days. If it is to be assumed that 12 of these days will be used for supply purposes and another six and one-half sittings for the budget debate, it seems to me that ample opportunities will be presented for discussion of matters such as Canada-United States economic relations.

• (1420)

In view of all the circumstances and taking into account the procedural requirements set out in Standing Order 26, the Chair cannot see its way clear to granting these motions at this time.

[Mr. McCutcheon.]

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

UNITED STATES DISC PROGRAM—MEASURES TO OFFSET EFFECTS—DIRECT REPRESENTATIONS BY GOVERNMENT—RESUMPTION OF GENERAL NEGOTIATIONS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. Some eight months ago in reply to a question I put to the Prime Minister on the subject of DISC the Prime Minister said that "when there is an actual threat we will come forward with an actual measure." Now that there is a threat, and has been for some three months, I would like to ask the Acting Prime Minister what actual measure the government proposes to take?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce said on Friday, the government is now hoping to have discussions with the automobile companies to find out whether there is a threat and the nature of it. He then said he would hope to participate in the budget debate and give at that time an account of the government's views. He may at that time, of course, indicate what further measures the government may feel are necessary.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I gather we are going to have continued assessment rather than measures. I would like to ask the Acting Prime Minister this question. Now that Mr. Connally seems to have made an end run around the position taken by the government of Canada, does the Prime Minister or a minister of this government propose to take up directly with the United States the application of DISC, particularly as it affects Canada—not notes but direct contact?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, there have been many direct contacts on this subject. I have raised the matter myself on a number of occasions with my United States counterpart, and I know that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce has done so with his counterpart in the United States administration. In addition to the notes, which I am sure the Leader of the Opposition agrees are essential first steps, we have had many personal contacts with the United States administration. Unfortunately we were not able to persuade them not to proceed with the DISC legislation, and unfortunately some companies are now taking advantage of it. But we are not at all sure yet—and I think it would be desirable to look before we leap in a matter of this kind—as to the actual effects it will have upon the Canadian economy.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I hope the government will soon learn to be able to distinguish between negligence and prudence.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That is as good as some of the sayings of the Prime Minister.

Mr. Stanfield: I would like to ask the Acting Prime Minister whether any approach has been made or is under way to resume the discussions with the United States administration regarding the differences that exist between the two countries? Is it just a matter of each side continuing to review its position in an academic way, or now that we are faced with this disaster is the government seeking to reopen the discussions in a meaningful way?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, the position remains as the Prime Minister expressed it, namely, that each side is reviewing its position. We have not yet resumed negotiations. I do think it is very desirable that we should protect our own position in these matters and that we should not assume, as the Leader of the Opposition does when he throws words around, disaster on the one hand or that we have not anything to be concerned about on the other hand. As far as the government is concerned, we are trying to show reasonable prudence and we are not going to be pushed, as the hon. gentleman would apparently like to see, into a war with the United States on the economic front.

Mr. Muir: Where is that fantastic breakthrough?

UNITED STATES DISC PROGRAM—EFFECT ON AUTO PACT WITH CANADA AND ON GATT—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the fact that President Nixon during his recent address in this chamber asserted that he desired "a pattern of economic interaction which is beneficial to both countries", does the government consider that the recent revelation that many United States corporations with subsidiaries in Canada are using DISCS in contravention of both the auto pact and GATT to be an example of what the President was talking about or does the government consider such action a breach of trust?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we have asserted and we continue to assert that the DISC proposals are contrary to the international undertakings of the United States not only toward Canada but toward the world in general.

Mr. Broadbent: Thank you for that very clear and positive answer. As the United States DISC legislation violates the preamble and Article I, Section (b), of the Canada-U.S. automotive agreement and will shift production away from Canada to the United States, does the government consider that the United States will be able to achieve by DISC the changes in automotive trade that they desire without having to alter in the slightest detail the actual wording of the Canada-U.S. auto agreement?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have some serious doubts as to the form of the question. The hon. member is really asking the minister to express an opinion on behalf of the government. Perhaps the question might be rephrased by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby; otherwise I will recognize the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings.

Mr. Broadbent: I will reword it, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the action by the auto companies in setting up DISCS and trading on that basis clearly contravenes the auto pact, does the government intend to take action other than writing formal notes of protest to the United States and similar action which the Acting Prime Minister has told the House has already been carried out without effect, or does the government intend to take some other steps to stop this complete undermining of the auto pact?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member that if it is found necessary to take countervailing action against the DISC we will do so, but I am sure the hon. gentleman would agree that if the predictions that have been made on the basis of the very successful operation of the automobile agreement to date prove to be true and that we continue to benefit very substantially and to see our exports to the United States continue to rise, then I think it would be very doubtful whether we should take action of that kind.

UNITED STATES DISC PROGRAM—EFFECTS ON EMPLOYMENT IN CANADIAN AUTOMOBILE INDUSTRY

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Acting Prime Minister. When does the government expect that the use which the American automobile companies are now making of the DISC program will begin to affect employment in the Canadian automobile industry adversely?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the answer to that is never.

[Later:]

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary to my first question to the Acting Prime Minister, arising from the answer he gave. Is it the belief of the government that the use of the DISC program by American automotive companies will not in any way shift employment in that industry from Canada to the United States?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, so far we have no evidence that it will do so.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Sharp: That is the purpose of the inquiries that are now going on. If it were to be shown that the DISC program, to which we have expressed our very strong opposition both in GATT and to the United States government, were nevertheless to have the effect that the hon. gentleman has suggested, the Canadian government would not hesitate to take the necessary measures.

POSSIBLE DELETION OF REFERENCE TO CANADA-UNITED STATES AUTO PACT IN SPEECH BY PRESIDENT NIXON TO MEMBERS OF HOUSE AND SENATE

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, mention was made of the speech given by the President of the United States in this chamber. In view of the fact Mr. Peter Desbarats has stated that there were indications that the President's speech was written in part by Mr. Ivan Head, one of the principal script writers for the Prime Minister, could the minister tell the House whether the question of the automobile agreement was to be included in the President's speech but was removed at the request of Mr. Head?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think that is about as improbable as that speeches by the Leader of the Opposition would have been written by President Kennedy.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Head is writing poetry in prose.

POSSIBILITY OF USE OF DISC MAKING GENERAL NEGOTIATIONS MORE DIFFICULT

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Acting Prime Minister concerning the Prime Minister's statement to the House a little while ago. When questioned about the progress of the Canada-U.S. auto agreement the Prime Minister indicated that both sides were reviewing their packages. May I therefore ask the Acting Prime Minister whether the recent discovery by the government that the auto companies have made applications under DISC and seem to have contravened some understanding will in fact make negotiations concerning these packages more difficult?

• (1430)

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not see how it can help to make them any easier.

UNITED STATES DISC PROGRAM—INTENTIONS OF CANADIAN AUTOMOBILE COMPANIES—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Acting Prime Minister on the same subject. As the government has announced its intention to canvass Canadian subsidiaries of American automobile companies in order to ascertain their intentions, will the Acting Prime Minister indicate to the House whether a statement to the House on this subject will be made at an early date since many contracts for 1973 production models are already being allocated?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I cannot add to what the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce said on Friday. He will be in the House tomorrow and questions of this kind can be put to him directly and with greater satisfaction.

UNITED STATES DISC PROGRAM—REVEALING OF NAMES OF AMERICAN COMPANIES MAKING USE THEREOF

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Acting Prime Minister. Since it was revealed last Friday that United States firms participating in the DISC program are entitled to secrecy under United States rules concerning that program, is the government considering any representations or any particular technique as a result of which those United States firms operating under the DISC program and exporting goods to Canada might be revealed to Canadian importers?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I cannot answer that question directly. Certainly one of the very serious problems that arises in taking any sort of action against companies that are taking advantage of DISC is that we must know whether or not they are.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Fraser Valley West on a last supplementary and then the hon. member for Annapolis Valley.

Mr. Rose: Inasmuch as the minister indicated a moment ago that it is very difficult to ascertain the number of jobs lost to Canadians as a result of the DISC program, does the minister not think that the companies exporting to Canada should be required to reverse any DISC participation so that our government can make a basic assessment of the number of Canadian jobs lost?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest that the hon. member's supplementary is an argument.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

DISPUTE WITH NABET—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON NEGOTIATIONS IN LIGHT OF PRESIDENT'S RESIGNATION

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State. In view of the announced resignation of the president of the CBC, would the minister make a report on current labour difficulties within the corporation and say whether the resignation is in any way related to those difficulties?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): There is no relation whatever between the resignation of the CBC president and the labour management difficulties experienced by that corporation.

As for a report to the House regarding the state of negotiations, I think such a request should be directed to the Minister of Labour.

[English]

Mr. Nowlan: Can the minister tell us the effective date of the resignation? In the search for a successor, will the minister assure the House, and thereby relieve the minds of Canadians from coast to coast, that the Pickersgillian precedent will not be followed and that no Secretary of State, past or present, will be selected for this post?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That, of course, is a representation rather than a question.

Mr. Bell: We want Judy.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I agree that the last part of the question was a representation, but the first half of the question concerning the effective date of the resignation is relevant, especially in view of the state of negotiations within the CBC and for the state of this parliament.

Mr. Speaker: I agree that the first part of the question is in order. Perhaps the minister might like to reply to that part of the hon. gentleman's question.

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: August 1, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. E. B. Osler (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Secretary of State. What steps does the minister intend to take on behalf of the House and the Canadian people to convey the nation's general feeling of profound thankfulness to the CBC now that the CBC television series, "Jalna" has finally ground to a halt?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MANPOWER

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—SUGGESTED EXTENSION OF DEADLINE

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Notice of it has been given. Will the deadline for LIP forgiveness eligibility be extended? If so, to what date?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his usual courtesy in giving me notice. In reviewing the LIP program, both private and municipal projects, it seems obvious that certain projects should be extended beyond May 31 because of circumstances beyond their control such as lack of material, slow processing, and so on. Therefore it is anticipated that certain projects, without need of extra funds, will be extended until the middle of June.

YOUTH

MEASURES TO ASSIST NON-STUDENTS AND UNIVERSITY GRADUATES TO FIND JOBS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the heavy emphasis on students in the government's job employment programs, can the minister say whether the government has any measures available for non-student young people who are having difficulty finding jobs?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think the success of the Opportunities for Youth program last summer is an indication that the program will meet with even greater success this year. This will go a long way to alleviating that particular type of problem.

Mr. Nystrom: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We have moved from one subject to another. I cannot accept that the hon. member's supplementary was actually a supplementary to the previous question. I will return to the hon. member in a short while, and also recognize the hon. member for St. John's East.

Mr. Nystrom: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I specifically asked about non-student young people and the Minister of Manpower and Immigration thought I was referring to students. Perhaps he would answer the question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will be recognized and the minister also for that purpose in a few moments.

[Later:]

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the heavy emphasis in summer employment programs on the employment of students, can the minister say whether there are any programs in the mill for the employment of non-student young people? I ask this because they are having difficulty finding jobs.

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, I apologize for having misunderstood the original question. The obvious assistance that will be given to non-students is through the anticipated reduction in unemployment figures from now on through the summer months as employment in secondary manufacturing improves. There is no particular program comtemplated at the present time.

Mr. Nystrom: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since graduates are now finding difficulty obtaining permanent jobs, can the minister say whether he has any programs in mind to help university graduates find permanent jobs?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, many of these graduates are finding employment at a considerably faster rate now, than they were at this time last year.

INCOME TAX

SUGGESTED INCREASE IN EXEMPTION FOR RETIRED PERSONS OR GRANTING OF TAX CREDITS IN BUDGET

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the many urgent appeals being received from senior citizens for the alleviation of their situation, is the minister giving consideration either to increasing the income tax exemption levels for retired persons or granting tax credits in the budget he will be bringing down next Monday evening.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have noted the hon. member's representation.

HISTORIC SITES

NATURE OF INSCRIPTION ON NEW PLAQUE AT BONANZA CREEK

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Has the minister rewritten the history of the gold rush on the Klondike, and is this new interpretation of the history to be placed on a new plaque substituted for the original plaque at the discovery site on Bonanza Creek?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I really think that question ought to be put on the order paper. If there is extreme urgency about this obviously important matter, it can be considered at the time of adjournment.

Mr. Dinsdale: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, this is another example of the government downgrading western traditions.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Dinsdale: I think it is a matter of great urgency.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

YOUTH

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—SUGGESTED PROVISION OF ADDITIONAL FUNDS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State. In view of the many excellent projects under the Opportunities for Youth program which have had to be rejected because of budget limitations, is the government giving consideration to providing additional funds for the Opportunities for Youth program?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Yes, Mr. Speaker, but no decision has been made yet.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED ASSISTANCE TO CO-OPERATIVE, PRINCE RUPERT, TO ESTABLISH FISH PROCESSING PLANT

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Will he or somebody in the government take a second look at the proposal of the Pacific North Coast Indian Co-operative in Prince Rupert for the establishment of a fish processing plant there and announce whether government assistance will be provided to that co-operative?

• (1440)

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, we are now considering the situation of the Indian fishermen on the northwestern coast of British Columbia. As for a concrete proposal, I must talk with the Minister of the Environment before a decision is made.

[English]

Mr. Howard (Skeena): I wish to ask the minister whether the fact that the government recently made a grant of $700,000 for the establishment of a fish processing plant in Hay River is an indication that it is going to have a change of heart with regard to the Prince Rupert proposal?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That question is not in order.

DISCUSSION OF TREATY RIGHTS BY MINISTER WITH NORTHWEST TERRITORIES NATIVES IN LIGHT OF MACKENZIE HIGHWAY PROJECT

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development related to the announcement by the Prime Minister in Edmonton of what he called the new Mackenzie highway on which construction commenced last year, as the minister will recall. Now that the highway is under construction and in view of the reports that have been made to the minister by the Indian people of the Northwest Territories Indian Brotherhood and the National Brotherhood, is it the minister's intention to sit down now and have talks with regard to the treaty rights of these Indian people?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I have already met with the Northwest Territories Indians, and I have told them that I was prepared to talk with them about a solution to problems concerning treaties 8 and 11. I have also invited them, as an alternative, to meet with the Commissioner of Indian claims.

As regards the Mackenzie highway which will be extended from Fort Simpson to Inuvik, of course, this is a request which has been put to me several times in every Indian village along the Mackenzie river.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: In view of the statement by the minister that he has already had talks with the Indian people, can he inform the House whether negotiations are now going on between his department and the brotherhood with regard to their land rights and whether it is the government's intention to withhold further construction until these negotiations are concluded?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, no negotiations are going on at the present time. I made some proposals to the Indians of that area and it seems they are not quite prepared yet to discuss the settlement of problems relating to these two treaties. Now, as far as the highway construction is concerned, it is obvious that far from jeopardizing the solution to the Indians' problem in that area, these works will help the Indians by bringing an end to their isolation.

[English]

Mr. Mac T. McCutcheon (Lambton-Kent): May I direct a supplementary question to the Acting Prime Minister. As the Prime Minister is not in the House today, is it possible that he is working on the new John George Diefenbaker highway to Tuktoyaktuk?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I hope the supplementary of the hon. member for Red Deer is not supplementary to that of the hon. member for Lambton-Kent.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

PROPOSED MACKENZIE VALLEY PIPELINE—RELATIONSHIP TO HIGHWAY PROJECT

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is related to the questions asked by the hon. member for Yukon of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In view of the statement in the House the other day by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources that the National Energy Board would not entertain applications for a pipeline down the Mackenzie Valley until this season's feasibility studies have been completed, and in view of the fact the Prime Minister in his statement said he intended to collect part of the cost from the oil companies, will the minister inform the House whether there is any correlation between these two aspects of the Mackenzie highway project at this stage?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, it is quite obvious that if a road is built along the Mackenzie River and if the government some day allows some companies to build any pipelines in that area, it would only be normal and fair to try to recover the road construction costs from the companies that will build the said pipelines. There is nothing contradictory in that position.

[English]

PROPOSED MACKENZIE VALLEY PIPELINE—FEASIBILITY OF CONSTRUCTION

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): A supplementary question. The whole point in my previous question had to do with the feasibility of pipelines down the Mackenzie Valley. Does this mean the construction of pipelines is feasible and the reports are in the minister's hands?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, it has been recognized that it was possible to build a road from Fort Simpson to Inuvik, which would help put an end to the isolation experienced by the Indians of this area.

[English]

[Later:]

Mr. Thompson: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Red Deer has a point of order and he will be recognized for that purpose, but we should try to proceed in an orderly fashion and get on with the question period.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Speaker, my point of order is that I asked about the feasibility of a pipeline down the Mackenzie Valley and I received an answer about Indians. My question is whether there is a feasibility report that states that a pipeline can be constructed.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, this question at this time is quite hypothetical and premature. We hav not yet started negotiating with the companies concerned nor have we decided whether a pipeline will be built or not, but we certainly hope that one will be built.

[English]

Perhaps I might speak in English to help the hon. member. We have not made a decision about a pipeline. We made a decision about a road. That road will help to end the isolation of the Indians living along the Mackenzie.

MACKENZIE VALLEY HIGHWAY PROJECT—PERCENTAGE OF COST TO BE MET BY OIL COMPANIES

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development or the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the Prime Minister's statement at Edson, Alberta, to the effect that the pipeline companies would be the primary beneficiary of this highway and in view of his statement that: "the government intends to recover some of the highway construction costs from the pipeline companies", what percentage of the cost, which the Prime Minister said would be between $70 million and $100 million, will be met by the pipeline companies and how does the government intend to recover these costs?

[Later:]

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I stated—

[English]

Mr. Douglas: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since the government, according to the minister, has made a decision about a road and the Prime Minister has announced that the pipeline companies are going to cover part of the cost of this highway, I want to ask the minister whether the Prime Minister made this statement without any agreement from the pipeline companies that they will contribute to the cost of the road and without the government having any idea how it proposes to recover these costs?

Mr. Chrétien: It is very simple, Mr. Speaker. When the companies come to see the government to obtain permission to build a pipeline, it will be at that time we will ask them to pay some of the cost of the road.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Bell: There go the Edmonton votes.

Mr. Hees: There goes a three-day trip down the drain. Big brother will be awful mad when he gets back.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Davenport.

AIR TRANSPORT

AGREEMENT ON EXTENSION OF SERVICE BETWEEN CANADA AND ITALY

Mr. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Can the minister say whether agreement was reached last week to extend air services between Canada and Italy?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker. Negotiations were concluded.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Sharp: This may not be a matter of importance to the members of the opposition but I know how important it is to my hon. friend and it is also important for Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, there were negotiations last week and an agreement has been reached ad referendum to the two governments for the extension of air services between Canada and Italy, including direct service from Toronto, and at the other end of the line we will receive extensive benefits in Milan and beyond.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

NEGOTIATIONS BETWEEN CANADA AND PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC OF CHINA

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I can direct a supplementary question to the Acting Prime Minister about a much more important and valuable air route.

• (1450)

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Perhaps I might rephrase that, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the Acting Prime Minister whether he has any information to give to the House about a much more valuable and important exchange of air routes, namely, between Canada and the People's Republic of China, which seems to be a high priority question?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is considered important by the Italian community in Toronto that there should be direct service between Italy and Toronto.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Sharp: May I also reassure the hon. member on the other question that negotiations between Canada and China are now proceeding and that progress is being made.

GRAIN

REQUEST FROM GRAIN EXCHANGE FOR APPOINTMENT OF GOVERNMENT SUPERVISOR OF FUTURES TRADING

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. Has the government received a request from the Winnipeg Grain Exchange to appoint a government overseer to supervise trading in grain futures, and is it the intention to do so?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, there have been some discussions concerning the question of futures and the control of futures. For most of the proposals legislation would be required, and further consideration is being given to the question.

FLOODS

CARROT RIVER, SASKATCHEWAN—REPORT ON EXTENT—REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. Has he yet received a report on the extent of the flooding of the Carrot River, and has there been any request for federal assistance?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): No, Mr. Speaker. We have had some preliminary information given to us but we have not had an extensive report on the damage and there has been no request for any assistance.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

CLOTHING—MANDATORY CARE LABELLING BY MANUFACTURERS AND DISTRIBUTORS

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, coming up from pipelines to people I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the fact the United States Federal Trade Commission is now requiring care labels to be sewn into clothing which consumers purchase, and in view of the further fact that the Consumers Association of Canada tried in vain to get such legislation in Canada last session, has the government now decided that, where manufacturers and distributors are concerned, mandatory care labelling is more effective than moral suasion?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will take the hon. member's representation into account and give it full consideration.

Mrs. MacInnis: May I ask the minister when we may expect legislation to make care labelling mandatory?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, the packaging and labelling act regulations are due to be promulgated in the near future and our commitment is that we will consult with all concerned before promulgation.

SUGGESTED COMMITTEE EXAMINATION OF PACKAGING AND LABELLING REGULATIONS BEFORE PROMULGATION

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, in view of the importance of these regulations and the fact that the act was passed about a year and a half ago, would the minister indicate whether there will be an opportunity for a committee of the House to examine the regulations, which are going to be very important to the implementation of the act, before they actually become law and are operative?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): I will give that consideration too, Mr. Speaker.

TRADE

UNITED STATES DISC PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR INFORMATION ON IMPACT ON CANADIAN EXPORTS TO OTHER COUNTRIES

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. During the throne speech debate he said that his senior officials were making a detailed examination, with the assistance of knowledgeable people in the business community, of the likely impact of DISC on our exports to third markets. May I ask the minister whether he can tell the House if he has learned anything?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in view of the commitment of my colleague the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, I will leave him to deal with the question during the budget debate, as he said he would.

FINANCE

PAYMENT OF INTEREST TO CLAIMANTS OF DORMANT BANK ACCOUNTS NOW WITH BANK OF CANADA

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, while I am on my feet, I gave an undertaking to the hon. member for Assiniboia—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I gather that the minister has responded to the question asked by the Leader of the Opposition. I also understand that he wants to be recognized on another matter, and he is now being recognized for that purpose.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I undertook to give the hon. member for Assiniboia an answer to the question that he put to me on April 27.

Accounts dormant in chartered banks and Quebec savings banks for nine years are published by the Department of Finance in the Canada Gazette. The most recent list was published in a supplement to the Gazette dated April 15 and the accounts totalled in excess of $1.4 million.

Accounts dormant for ten years are transferred to the Bank of Canada at the end of ten years as unclaimed balances. Those transferred to the Bank of Canada which bore interest on the books of the banks continue to bear interest for a period of 20 more years, as provided for in section 94(3) of the Bank Act and section 82(3) of the Quebec Savings Banks Act, at the rate of 1½ per cent per annum simple interest.

NATIONAL SECURITY

ACTIVITIES OF SPECIAL PLANNING AND RESEARCH GROUP—INQUIRY AS TO REPORT ON POSSIBLE FURTHER FLQ DISTURBANCE IN FALL OF 1971

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. It arises out of the long overdue answer given today to the question I asked regarding the special planning and research group attached to the Solicitor General's department. Can he say how often this group meets and whether it makes reports to him from time to time concerning threats to the internal security of this country?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I assume that, being good civil servants, they meet from nine o'clock in the morning until five o'clock in the afternoon, that they do their job according to their terms of reference as approved by the Treasury Board. Also, being good civil servants, once their assgnment has been duly completed, they report to the deputy minister who, in turn, reports to the minister. I do not find anything strange or mysterious about that.

[English]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I did not say there was anything unusual; I asked for information. I now ask the minister whether it was from this group that he secured information, as a result of what happened in this group and the information that it gave him, to the effect that an even more serious outbreak by the FLQ and associates would have taken place last fall?

[Translation]

Mr. Goyer: Mr. Speaker, as I have indicated, if the right hon. member really had such great respect for the House, he would also extend it to the parliamentary committees. I answered that question fully before the parliamentary committee when estimates of my department were being studied a few days ago; if the right hon. member will refer to the minutes of proceedings published by the secretariat of the parliamentary committees, he will find plenty of material to satisfy his wish for information.

[English]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I ask the minister where the cock and bull story he gave the people of Canada came from that Canada was in a more serious position last fall so far as a potential revolution was concerned than it had been in 1970?

PUBLIC WORKS

RECONSIDERATION OF PROPOSED NORTHUMBERLAND CAUSEWAY

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Public Works. Noting the promising largesse of the Prime Minister these days, can the minister advise whether the government is now giving consideration to reviewing its repudiation of its commitment to build the Northumberland causeway?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, this project, like many others, is always under review.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Dubé: However, at the present time the people of that island province are appreciating and enjoying what has replaced that project, namely, considerable federal assistance under the department of my colleague the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

Mr. Macquarrie: May I ask the minister whether he is indicating that the government of Prince Edward Island has accepted the development plan as a replacement for the promised causeway?

[Mr. Goyer.]

Mr. Dubé: No, Mr. Speaker. Good governments are always trying to get more projects approved, but I think the people of the island are enjoying that program.

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In regard to the continued interest of the government of Prince Edward Island in this project and the recent proposals in regard to which they have contacted the department, can the minister report whether any assistance has been given the government of Prince Edward Island to further the possible implementation of this project?

• (1500)

Mr. Dubé: Not lately by my department, Mr. Speaker.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, my question is of national interest and I appreciate the fact that the Chair has at last recognized me.

I should like to ask the Solicitor General whether he would ask the RCMP to make an inquiry into the mysterious disappearance of the Social Credit party: not one of its members is in the House today.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): There is one right in front of you.

INFORMATION CANADA

SIGNIFICANCE OF DEPARTURE OF JEAN-LOUIS GAGNON

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State and concerns the disappearance of one Jean-Louis Gagnon. In view of the fact he is leaving the country for a very sensitive post in Paris with UNESCO, and in view of the fact there has been no announcement of his replacement, does this mean that Information Canada is being closed up?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have serious doubts as to the form of that question. Before calling orders of the day the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Selkirk.

POLLUTION

DATE OF PUBLICATION OF REGULATIONS UNDER NORTHERN INLAND WATERS ACT

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. It is of some urgency in light of recent oil finds in the Arctic. Can the minister tell the House when it is expected that the drafting of regulations to make the Northern Inland Waters Act an effective piece of legislation will be completed since they were promised for 1971?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Unless I am mistaken, Mr. Speaker, the regulations have been drafted and published, but I shall look into the matter and advise the hon. member accordingly.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CRIMINAL LAW AMENDMENT ACT, 1972

AMENDMENTS TO CRIMINAL CODE, CRIMINAL RECORDS ACT, NATIONAL DEFENCE ACT, PAROLE ACT AND VISITING FORCES ACT

The House resumed, from Friday, April 28, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lang that Bill C-2, to amend the Criminal Code and to make related amendments to the Criminal Code 1971 Amendment Act, the Criminal Records Act, the National Defence Act, the Parole Act and the Visiting Forces Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, it is very difficult to continue a debate on a serious matter such as this with the hubbub that usually accompanies the completion of the question period. This problem is not unique to a particular member, since it occurs every day. Probably if I am departing from the Chamber at this time I am as responsible as any other hon. member for some of the noise. I do note, however, that frequently I am, by merely getting to my feet, able to effectively clear the House in short order. I see I have accomplished that today.

I think the Chair will recognize that it is very difficult to take up a continuing story and tie it in with the beginning of the remarks I made just before one o'clock last Friday. For the benefit of those who tuned in late, I feel I should summarize some of those remarks. This is necessary to get people more or less up to date on the remarks I made earlier and to put things into proper context.

• (1510)

On Friday last, following the remarks of the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) and the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt), I made some remarks in opposition and in contradiction to their position regarding the retention of the lash. I support that part of the legislation which removes corporal punishment from the Criminal Code. Following the same philosophy, I also oppose the use of the thumbscrew and the rack, on the grounds that indulgence in this kind of brutalization in our institutions does not do a great deal for our attempt to move toward a more civilized reaction to the kind of transgressions which formerly brought about such violence.

I hasten to add that I appreciate and share the repugnance of many people when they learn through the news media of some particular brutal type of crime, such as gang rape, which results in the destruction of the lives of many innocent people. I am not convinced there would be fewer of these crimes if we resorted to more extreme forms of physical punishment. If I were convinced of the deterrent effect, I might take a different view. I recall from my history lessons that once upon a time people were hanged for stealing a loaf of bread, but that kind of punishment has now been abandoned, perhaps on the ground that it did not prevent thievery. I support the motion to change our Criminal Code in respect of what has been traditional in what we called our prison system and which we now refer to as our corrective or rehabilitative institutions.

I appreciate there have been certain views circulated in respect of prison guards and policemen regarding the five-year ban on capital punishment and that there has been a loophole clause which would allow the extreme form of punishment to be applied to capital crimes against police officers, prison guards and officials. I share the concern of the guards and the police officers about the fact that there is no ultimate penalty so they have no protection, or at least less protection than they might have otherwise. There are many arguments pro and con on this matter, but I do not think anyone knows for sure which are right. I would prefer to find myself on the side which suggests that capital punishment is really no deterrent to murder, and that capital crimes would be no less prevalent as a result of a return to capital punishment.

I admit that if I were a policeman and in the position in which three police officers found themselves in the bush near Moncton not more than three weeks ago when they were sent out to arrest an armed man who was suspected of escaping custody, and having been shot at twice from very close range with a shotgun, I would feel perhaps a little bit less responsible about the way in which I apprehended that particular suspect. I can appreciate their feelings, and if I were in that position I think I should be moved to take no chances. I will say nothing else about that matter.

I reiterate and re-emphasize my feeling that a lot of the people who are putting forward the suggestion that we adopt a more repressive kind of punishment for certain individuals are not looking for justice but rather for vengeance. Our courts and our thoughtful social institution personnel should not be concerned with this kind of vengeance. I do not believe that the brutality of corporal punishment in our institutions will have a civilizing effect or will even be a deterrent to these particular wrongdoers, whether they have been convicted of rape or murder. These crimes, for the most part, are not premeditated but are crimes of passion.

I suggested there were three oversights in these amendments to the Criminal Code, and I went into them in some detail. I was disappointed that, although the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) met with representatives at the provincial conference regarding the enshrining of the concept of the right to counsel in our constitution, this amending bill is silent on that subject. I do not think I need say more about that. The fact that it is, I think, speaks for itself. I hope the minister will be moved, when he is considering further amendments to the Criminal Code, to look after this oversight and see that the right to counsel is entrenched, not only in the constitution if we ever ultimately accept one for Canada, but also in the Criminal Code. Many people are being denied their civil rights because they cannot afford counsel to represent them adequately in the courts. If they cannot have this kind of support there will be many occasions on which justice really is not done.

I could go into a long, detailed discussion about my particular views concerning the right to that kind of a voice that is denied people on the ground of their economic situation. I think this is a familiar subject to most people. After all, we have had the Company of Young Canadians, and various other federal programs designed to give a voice to the voiceless. In my opinion, one of the best ways to give a voice to the voiceless is through a public defender system which would provide legal aid, which in most cases now amounts to charity, and would provide a right to counsel before the courts for people who are accused of breaking the laws of our country.

A second subject on which I should like to speak today, and upon which this particular bill is silent is amendments to the habitual criminal section which I believe is section 660 of the Criminal Code. I had hoped that because of representations, I believe by sincere and responsible members of all parties, changes in this section would have been contemplated by the minister. Perhaps the minister is at the moment contemplating a review of this particular section 660 which relates to the habitual criminal, or as it is more commonly known in the correction institutions, the "bitch" section. The reason I make this particular representation is that from time to time I have received letters from various inmates of federal institutions and have also visited those institutions. However, since I refuse to ask the Solicitor General (Mr. Goyer) for permission to enter a federal institution, I have not darkened the doors of one lately. Anyway, we are still allowed to receive mail from these institutions. This habitual criminal section has been used primarily by only two provinces, British Columbia and Ontario.

The first complaint about this particular section is that a great number of petty criminals, nuisance criminals if you like, are faced with indeterminate or indefinite sentences. There would seem to be an attempt to prescribe an indefinite sentence rather than have the punishment tailored to the crime or have the rehabilitation, if you are looking at the prison system from that point of view, fit the individual. I am afraid it has not worked out in that way in all cases. I am sure it has in a number of cases. A number of people who are serving indeterminate sentences are doing so because they have been convicted of minor, petty or nuisance crimes. I am not saying this is applied exclusively to these people, but there are certainly a great number of them. The result is that those people who have been found guilty of much more serious crimes to person and property have an opportunity which is denied one on a shorter sentence. They are able to enjoy the kind of parole opportunities and temporary absence opportunities which are accorded to prisoners. I believe this is a source of serious irritation or hostility among those people who have been convicted of less serious crimes to person and property. Right alongside them, they often find persons convicted of a serious crime who have been subject to a more equitable and more enlightened parole system, as well as temporary absence opportunities. That is the basic criticism. I understand the Parliamentary Secretary to the Solicitor General (Mr. Hogarth) has made representations on the same subject as a result of his visits. I am not sure his representations would parallel mine and I am aware that he is certainly capable of making a submission on his own behalf. I mention this fact, however, to indicate that there is an expression of concern which extends beyond the voice of one particular member.

There is one further topic in respect of which I wish to indulge myself briefly. It concerns the matter of compensation to victims of crime. Frequently, we learn from news sources that people are amazed that members of society would stand around and watch, without lending a helping hand, while some particular individual is besieged and perhaps harmed physically by the methods used by criminals. One reason I believe goes far beyond the question of not wishing to become involved. There is a real concern on the part of the general public that if a member of the general public were to assist in such a circumstance and should be physically injured himself his own family might suffer as well. The citizen's arrest or the idea of assisting the police I believe has a long tradition in British common law, but is frequently ignored. This tradition I believe is followed more frequently in smaller communities where each person knows everyone as neighbours or friends. However, it is frequently ignored in a city crowd. I believe representations have been made over the years on this subject. I think particularly of the case of a fireman who came to the aid of someone who needed him, whose injury involved a substantial loss of pay.

I notice that the British Columbia legislature recently passed a measure to assist in the compensation of crime victims. So, I put this forward as a little representation for the consideration of the minister. It seems I am always making representations to the minister. I made them in respect of immigration and the lack of reciprocity. Before he could get around to doing something about it, two and a half years later he is not the minister responsible for that department. However, he has listened most attentively. I am sure he has heard these representations and will hear them again. I look forward to him adding this subject to the very progressive bill we have before us.

Mr. E. B. Osler (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make just one or two short comments. I am very glad to see that at last measures are being taken which, as a non-lawyer, I can only hope will be effective in getting right under the skin of these cancerous individuals who through some warped logic of their own decide it is profitable and fruitful to hijack an aircraft or try to ransom the people on board an aircraft. As I said, I am not a lawyer, but I am very glad to see that the definition of a peace officer includes the pilot of an aircraft when that aircraft is on the ground and when the pilot has taken command of it for the purpose of flying it somewhere. It is my understanding that sometimes the trickiest phase of one of these take-over bids occurs on the ground when peace officers are present.

It is my understanding from talking with pilots that they are very apprehensive about not being in command of the situation until the moment when they want to turn it over to policemen. They have usually had an opportunity of evaluating the mental state of the person who has attempted to hijack the aircraft and they are probably adjusted as much as they can be to the situation. Sometimes, in their opinion, more harm than good can be done by having an over-zealous police force come in with loaded guns and try to solve the situation in a manner with which the pilots probably do not agree. So, I am glad to see that the aircraft will be left in charge of the pilot until such time as he would normally hand it over.

I also have one comment to make about the fact that if a person is found guilty of the indictable offence of hijacking he is subject to life imprisonment. As I understand it, life imprisonment is nothing of the sort. In many cases, it is probably a good thing to allow a person who has been sentenced to life to have his case reviewed, and to be freed after a certain number of years if he has shown signs of penance and a change of heart. However, it seems very difficult to reconcile oneself to the idea that anyone who has hijacked an aircraft should be let out into society again. I cannot understand what kind of egotistical nut could ever think that it was either funny, progressive, amusing or of any value to anyone whatsoever to put the lives of 100 to 200 people in jeopardy. Therefore, I feel that when this bill goes to committee the penalty of life imprisonment should be considered very carefully.

Perhaps psychiatric evidence should be sought to ensure that a person released after a number of years will not be so stupid or so insane as to do the same thing again. It is tragic enough when a man makes another mistake or kills a man after having been let out of prison, but it is about 5,000 per cent more tragic if he hijacks an aircraft and puts the lives of several hundred people in jeopardy. So, I commend the government for having brought these features into the bill. I suggest that when the bill goes to the committee, the committee should ask the Airline Pilots Association to come before it and to give its opinion of the bill. Personally, I would ask the committee to take another good, hard look at the practical result of a sentence of life imprisonment so far as this legislation is concerned.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, this omnibus bill is one that permits a wide range of discussion, comprising as it does a multitude of changes in the criminal law. I congratulate the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) on the manner in which this whole question has been brought before the House and the degree to which an opportunity is afforded to consider in general, with particular reference to the sections contained therein, the whole problem of the criminal law.

It is on that subject that I intend to speak shortly. I will then refer to two or three matters, all of which have been dealt with before in the debate but on which I will give a somewhat different viewpoint than those already expressed during the course of the debate. I will say immediately that during my years in university and law school, the general feeling was that if only people could live in affluence, most if not all of the problems of mankind would be solved. In the last 50 years, despite the inexcusable poverty which still exists, we in Canada have gone far to bring about one of the highest levels of living in the world. In North America, with reference to the United States and Canada, economic well being beyond imagination at the beginning of this century may well have dulled and even drained away the courage, initiative and vigour of the people. In achieving economic prosperity—and I am speaking about levels of prosperity—are we in danger of losing the spiritual values which nations no less than individuals need to survive?

I was particularly impressed with the speech on the subject by my hon. friend, the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave), who has made a profound study not only of this bill but of criminology in general. It reveals the progress in the House to which he has greatly contributed.

We find that lawlessness has become almost a way of life. Crime is rampant and on the increase in Canada, in the United States and in Great Britain. Why has this come about? Why in Canada last year should almost 5 per cent of our total population find themselves convicted of some offence under the Criminal Code? It is a frightening picture to see that one million Canadians were convicted of criminal offences, and I am not speaking about automobile offences other than manslaughter and that type of offence. The question is being asked: what should be done? Should there be more severe penalties? Has there been too great freedom in the last two or three years in the granting of parole in our country? It was under my administration that the Parole Board was set up, but I was concerned recently when several of those who committed one of the most dastardly offences, that of kidnapping, found themselves released after serving a very short portion of their sentences. That type of thing encourages violence. The violence of a few becomes a contagious disease within our country and other freedom loving countries. One of the reasons is that acts of violence are continually played up in the press, on radio and on television.

There is a movement within our country, as in other western Nations, of an underground nature, the members of which masquerade above ground as crusaders for permissiveness, participate in campaigns for peace, and against the war in Viet Nam. Their leaders claim that what they are doing is an exercise in freedom of speech, when in fact it is often criminal and contrary to several sections of the Criminal Code. Violence begets violence, and unless measures are taken to punish this kind of wrongdoing those who advocate, support and engage in violence will destroy the basis of our democratic society and pave the way for absolute tyranny.

Today we find the youth of our country criticized. I do not join in that. There are 2 or 3 per cent that preach revolution, while the rest want to bring about change by democratic means. Those who pretend that they believe in passive resistance or disobedience as practised by Ghandi, are actually practising revolution and advocating changes in our country on the basis of revolution.

I have stood for the right of the individual to have freedom of speech throughout my life, both at the bar and in the House of Commons. And I have stood for the right of the individual to have that freedom and to advocate the need for change. I believe that impatience, coupled with the will to change, are both needed to bring about orderly progress, but an uncontrolled will to change, practised without restraint, is a menace to freedom. Mob rule is the antithesis of freedom and dare not be condoned if freedom is to be maintained or even to survive. With those few general remarks, Mr. Speaker, I now come to the bill itself.

The hon. gentleman who preceded me dealt with the question of piracy in the air. I brought this matter before the House on March 20 when I asked the minister, as recorded at page 959 of Hansard:

In order to discourage potential hijackers for gain, is the government giving consideration, among other things, to bringing in as part of the de-incentive, if I can use that expression, a provision whereby no airline will be permitted to pay ransom?

The answer was:

There is no immediate intention to introduce legislation along these lines.

I think it should be done, Mr. Speaker. In large measure hijacking is designed to bring about extortion by way of ransom. If the right to extort is denied by law, the incentive to commit hijacking is greatly reduced. I again ask the minister whether he will not give consideration to a further amendment along the line I have suggested here, to the end that we strike at the vital basis for hijacking and kidnapping, except in a very few cases.

There is a strong feeling in certain areas of our country, and among very thoughtful people, that capital punishment should be re-instated. I realize that statistics are always available to prove whatever the person who produces them is endeavouring to prove. But when it is stated that the murder rate is increasing, I do not share that view. What I see is this: that when capital punishment was in effect, if there was any possibility of bringing in a verdict for manslaughter, juries did so. Since the changes have been made in the law removing capital punishment from capital murder, juries today do not have the same qualms about convicting that they used to have. Anyone who has acted both for the Crown and defence knows that if there was a reasonable ground for a jury to find that the accused was not guilty of murder but of the lesser offence of manslaughter, the jury almost invariably took the opportunity of reducing the charge. Everyone is entitled to his or her view of capital punishment.

Mr. Speaker, I appeared for the defence many times. Although my experience in criminal law was restricted to about 5 per cent of my total practice at the bar, I defended quite a large number charged with murder. Some wonder why I have such a feeling of concern over the imposition of the death penalty. I ask those who wonder how would you feel if you defended a man charged with murder, who was as innocent as any hon. member in this House at this very moment, who was convicted, whose appeal was dismissed, who was executed; and six months later the star witness for the Crown admitted that he, himself, had committed the murder and blamed it on the accused? That experience will never be effaced from my memory. The man was so sure he could not be executed that he said to the executioner when he came along to perform the supreme penalty of the law, "You can't hang me; God won't let you." I ask hon. gentlemen to bear that experience in mind when they conclude that those of us who stand against the re-imposition of capital punishment have views that are based on emotion but not on actual experience.

All over the free world capital punishment is disappearing, because we are living in a changing world. My great grandfather saw a boy hanged in Upper Canada for picking pockets in 1837. I think the boy was 17 years of age and everybody gathered for the public execution. Those Scottish people in North York turned up in large numbers. There was a great celebration, and during the ceremonies of the execution four of them had their pockets picked, which just indicates the argument that the fear of capital punishment will greatly reduce the number of offences is not completely tenable, or indeed tenable at all.

I think the record shows that in the United States there has been not one execution in the last three years. Capital punishment has been abolished within the United Kingdom, excepting within those limits which all of us know.

So far as the imposition of the lash is concerned, anyone who has ever seen a man who has been lashed would never advocate the heinous cruelty connected with that operation. It demoralizes not only the individual lashed but also those who have to carry out the penalty.

Next there is the question of common assault and increasing the penalty from a potential two years to five years. I think that is going too far. Common assault can be tried by a justice of the peace. To place in the hands of a justice of the peace the summary right to impose a sentence of from two to five years, is to me inexcusable and unjustified.

The increase in penalties for assault of police officers is, I think, justified on the basis of what too frequently happens today when police officers become a subject of contempt, largely as a consequence of some people referring to them as "pigs". Too often the Canadian who believes in law enforcement fails to give to those same police officers that respect, regard and help which they deserve. Those are just three or four matters to which I wanted to allude.

I wish now to go on to another matter which is not comprised in the bill itself in any way. I am concerned about the fact that we discriminate against the Indian in the administration of law. For many years I was a proponent and advocate of the Bill of Rights which was looked upon in some circles with a certain amount of derision. Many law professors said that it would never be effective. It came into effect in 1960, and for seven long years thereafter various professors and inferior court judges across this country stated that it was in effect a grandiloquent declaration of human rights but would never be effective to protect the rights of the individual.

Then came the Joe Drybones case—a wonderful name that Indian bore. Drybones was found guilty of being drunk in his shack on his reserve. It was an offence under the Indian Act. He was found guilty but he said "You cannot do this to me" and the prosecuting authority said "We have". He appealed and the appeal was allowed. The present Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) had nothing to do with the matter of which I am about to speak, but it has always shocked me that the government of Canada had its counsel argue for a day and a half in the Supreme Court of Canada that the Bill of Rights was not effective and ought not to be declared to be effective. That is what was done by the present government. Pretending to believe in human rights and human freedom, it has its counsel argue in the Supreme Court of Canada with vehemence that the Bill of Rights was a danger to Canada in that it subjected parliament to the surveillance of the courts. The Supreme Court of Canada held, however, regardless of the arguments advanced by the Crown and under the direction of this government now in office, that the Bill of Rights was superior to every law ever passed in Canada since 1867, and where any portion of the statute passed contravened in whole or in part the provisions of the Bill of Rights, to that extent it was a nullity.

Now, a word about the Indians. I always feel a sense of guilt when I see the Indians across our country, who have a right to go into a beer parlour and buy liquor, who have a right to secure liquor from the regular sales outlet, but have no right to have liquor on the reserve. Where are they to consume it? If they consume it on the way home so that they will not break the law on the reserve, they are subject to being charged under the various liquor acts. The fine is usually $50 minimum with the alternative of 30 days in jail. They cannot pay the fine so poverty becomes their passport to prison. That is wrong, Mr. Speaker. In his desire to bring about changes that will ensure human liberty, I would like the Minister of Justice to communicate with the Attorneys General of the various provinces in order to arrive at a plan which will do away with this stigmatization of the Indian.

I visit jails and I see there individuals; decent, responsible, respectable Indians who are unable to pay the fine and are incarcerated because they dared break a provincial law while having been placed in a position where they have no alternative but to break it. If the Minister of Justice were to bring together the various Attorneys General from across the country, I think arrangements could be made to remove this example of discrimination. When it takes place it causes me to have a feeling of revulsion that all who hate injustice would necessarily share. I am not going to speak of what I have done but on more than one occasion, not knowing the individual at all, I have paid his fine so that he would not be incarcerated. That is how strongly I feel on this matter and I hope that the minister, in the spirit in which I advance it, will do his part toward eradicating one of the most serious examples of injustice to an individual which arises because of his colour and by virtue of the fact that he resides on a reservation.

Mr. Speaker, I do not want to detain the House, but I thought that these few observations might at least start a line of thought that would be beneficial to all of us in that it would ensure justice to all.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Douglas A. Hogarth (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, it will certainly be forever a great honour to me to remember that I followed the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) in a debate on criminal law. I remember the occasion when I first saw him in the courts. I think the right hon. member will recall the case of Regina versus Cathro and Chow Bew. I was just a young lawyer, and I noticed that he made all his notes on the back of a cigarette package. I was very impressed with his address to the jury on that occasion so for the next four cases I made my notes on the back of a cigarette package and lost every one of them. He happened to win.

An hon. Member: You should give up smoking.

Mr. Hogarth: Perhaps I can be allowed, however, to correct the right hon. member on an observation that he made in regard to the law proposed by this bill. He suggested that the law is going to be changed so that common assault becomes punishable by five years in prison. I would draw the right hon. member's attention to the provisions of clause 21 of the bill. All that has happened to common assault is that it will be made a summary conviction offence, on which I will comment further in a minute. It is assault causing bodily harm, an indictable offence, where the penalty has been increased to five years. I think this was as a result of a case in the British Columbia Court of Appeal. The Court was limited in the length of the sentence that could be imposed on a particular individual in relation to what they felt was a particularly vicious assault causing bodily harm.

While the field of criminal law is extremely difficult in a modern society, it is especially difficult in Canada where there are different moral standards throughout the country and certainly a conflict between urban and rural societies. The crime rate is up and society is expressing more and more concern. It is difficult to resist the hard line taken by some people. The Chief Justice of British Columbia is alleged to have said "If there is going to be shooting, there will surely be hanging." It is difficult for society to accept the proposition that society's best protection lies in good, sound, modern penology which, in turn, rests on the principles of rehabilitation. We need a police force which is supported by good laws; we need good penology services and we need a good parole service.

We are moving too slowly in the direction of advanced penology in Canada. Although our theories in some instances have not proved too sound, we have made some progress in this area. Nevertheless, we have many years of lag to make up. I notice that the right hon. gentleman pointed out that not until 1958 was our parole board first established. One would think that in a country as modern as Canada such a board would have been established in 1928. Without doubt, harsh measures such as corporal punishment or the noose do not deter violence. Certainly, crimes of violence are on the rise; I doubt very much if we can attribute those to the lack of harsh sentences imposed. I think statistics shortly will reveal that although all crimes of violence are increasing, the crime of homicide, for which in some instances capital punishment has been provided, is showing the slowest rise.

So, it would not appear that the noose is a deterrent with regard to offences of that nature. Certainly, public executions are absurd. I understand that public executions were stopped because they became too much of an attraction. Thousands of people would stream to the execution. Instead of executing a man publicly, in recent years the authorities hanged the man in the middle of the night in the privacy and secrecy of a prison. Recently I read a description of a public execution in London, Ontario. That was a disgrace to those times. People had little humanity. Society today would not tolerate such a spectacle. Hanging is not necessary. It is offensive to our basic principles of rehabilitation. I hope with all my heart that all hon. members, in the debate soon to come, will see their way clearly to taking the enlightened point of view.

The actions of the parole board in the case mentioned perhaps could be criticized. Nevertheless, we must remember that the parole board, by and large, hears about 17,000 applications per year and it has done extremely well in discharging its duties. Hopefully, we can extend the parole system beyond its present limits and, by increasing the staff, try to make sure that errors of that sort do not occur. I submit that the behaviour of the inmate during the whole course of imprisonment ought to be the determining factor of his parole. That behaviour pattern could be obtained from an analysis of his day to day conduct. We must also remember, and the minister responsible must take this point of view, that the parole board's function is quasi-judicial. It is not for the politician, it is not for the member of parliament, or for the minister under whose direction the parole board comes, to interfere in any way with the workings of that board or in the manner in which parole is given. If that interference should ever occur, Mr. Speaker, parole would depend upon whom you know, and not on behaviour. As such, the concept will be reprehensible to us all, and I do not think any member of this House would entertain it. By and large, the parole board of this country has done a good job. As I say, I recognize some mistakes it has made. The board will be presenting its estimates before the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs tomorrow, and any hon. member who wants to examine a member of the board may do so. Hon. members may examine the board and see exactly what the present situation is and how past mistakes may have arisen or may have been corrected.

I had occasion not long ago to visit the members of the Optimum Club in the maximum security institution in British Columbia, the B.C. Penitentiary. The Optimum Club consists of a group of men, some of whom are serving life sentences of imprisonment—we call them lifers—following conviction under habitual criminal proceedings. The hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose) told us of some of the problems that arise among such sentenced habitual criminals. The problem, really, stems from a change in the judicial interpretation of the law. Some years ago there was a rash of prosecutions under the habitual criminal section and men who had a record of a long string of minor, petty offences were sentenced under the habitual criminal section. Perhaps I am exaggerating the case somewhat. At any rate, those who had been convicted of a long string of minor, petty offences were found to be habitual criminals and were sentenced accordingly.

[Mr. Hogarth.]

Today, of course, they are in jail, well knowing that the judicial interpretation of the law which sent them to jail has been changed. Now, only those with a long history of more violent offences are charged as habitual criminals. The members of the club know that if they were to come before the courts today, it is unlikely that they would be convicted of anything more serious than the prime offence, as we call it, which brought about the habitual criminal proceedings. As the hon. member for Fraser Valley West mentioned, I have referred this matter to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) and am pleased to note that he is to send the matter to the Law Reform Commission, to be taken up in due course in its deliberations.

So far as habitual criminal proceedings are concerned, may I suggest that the accused be subjected to those proceedings only after he has finished serving his sentence for the prime offence. Only then, after he has finished his sentence for robbery, or whatever he was charged with, should habitual criminal proceedings be undertaken. After that sentence is finished I suggest that he should be placed on life long parole, instead of in a maximum security institution, for a man on lifetime parole would know that if at any time he transgressed the law or the conditions of his parole, he could find himself back in prison. I suggest that would be a better way of treating habitual criminals than incarcerating them, as we now do. Actually, our present habitual criminal proceedings were one of the prime causes of a riot in a British Columbia prison at Oakalla. Some time ago, a number of prisoners charged as habitual criminals were imprisoned in Oakalla. Knowing that they faced a life of perpetual imprisonment if convicted their morale sank so low that they started a riot while awaiting trial.

I want the Minister of Justice, particularly, to pay more attention to what is being said at the grass roots level by those who must administer our bail reform act. I notice that Mr. Stewart McMorran, a name well known to the Minister of Justice and to any Canadian criminal lawyer, has suggested that, in the police courts of Vancouver, the new bail reform act is not working. I think the whole matter of bail reform should be investigated. We must look at this again, or else there will be trouble brewing not only for the minister, but, as well, for the police and authorities who must administer the act.

This bill, an omnibus bill, certainly contains many provisions, some good and some bad. I see, for instance, if I may talk about indemnities for a bondsman, that we are still to prevent professional bondsmen from operating in our cities and communities. This, I suggest, ought to be reviewed. After all, a man charged may be in Montreal, and he may have come, in these days, from Winnipeg, Calgary or any other city in Canada. When charged he may find himself in Montreal; also, the reverse may be true. That man may not be able to get bail because he has no friends in Montreal. From my experience, it is difficult to put up property as bail; if the property is much more than a half mile away, so to speak, there are great difficulties. I hope that provision will be made for professional bondsmen. I see nothing wrong with this. Professional bondsmen have been excluded under our criminal law because, under the old common law concept, a man's friends were the ones who would get him back to court if he was reluctant to face justice. I think in modern society that basic concept has become outworn. A professional bondsman, after he has been thoroughly investigated, ought to be acceptable. I hope this bill will include provisions to that effect.

The provisions with respect to soliciting for purposes of prostitution are somewhat obscure. It is interesting to note that prostitution never was an offence. I do not think that prostitution has ever been an offence in the history of the common law or our statute law. Incidentally, offences pertaining to prostitution have. We now come to the part dealing with soliciting and I quote:

• (1600)

Every person who solicits any person in a public place for the purpose of prostitution—

I do not know what it means to solicit for the purpose of prostitution. Does it mean that someone is going to try to induce someone to become a prostitute? However, it appears some dressing up has to be done with that clause. Why not go the whole way and say that any person who is found with a prostitute is also guilty of an offence? Why not be honest about this, and say that if prostitution is against the law in any way, those who use prostitutes are also committing an offence. But oh, no, this is a very masculine society. I should not say that because this provision now applies to both men and women. I will comment on that in a minute. Nonetheless, the predominant use of prostitutes is by men. If we are going to deal with prostitution in any way, shape or form, those who participate should be just as guilty as those who are prostitutes.

Today is a day of come-uppance. During the course of the debate on the omnibus bill when we amended the section of the Criminal Code dealing with indecency, I drew to the attention of the justice committee and the solicitors who were present from the Department of Justice that if we were going to permit gross indecency in private, we would have to amend the law pertaining to male prostitutes. I was assured that the law, as it then read in the Criminal Code, was quite satisfactory. It gives me great pleasure to draw to Your Honour's attention the fact that clause 14 of this bill now does exactly what I said should have been done three years ago, after several judges in this country pointed out to the Crown the essence of their stupidity.

An hon. Member: Law officers are never wrong.

Mr. Hogarth: That is the trouble. Perhaps now that we have had a little more experience, we can draw their attention to a few places in this bill where changes should be made rather than go through the whole exercise again in the next parliament.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Have you got any views as to good government?

Mr. Hogarth: I have a lot of views about that. I am concerned. The repeal of the law pertaining to vagrancy is discomforting. Common law offences relating to vagrancy were codified in our Criminal Code as early as the 1898 version. The trouble with the offence of vagrancy is there is one catch-all section which deals with the person who has no apparent means of support. Section 175(1) reads:

Every one commits vagrancy who

(a) not having any apparent means of support is found wandering abroad or trespassing and does not, when required, justify his presence in the place where he is found;

That section was of tremendous use in law enforcement. When someone was found in a dark alley hiding behind a telephone pole or a garage and watching a dwelling house, a policeman could take that man into the police station and legitimately ask him what he was doing. This section does not apply now, other than the one Part dealing with a dwelling house and, I should specifically put the case in a warehouse district to get it more clearly established. Such a person can now stay there, drift into the darkness and rob the warehouse in the next block. The time has come for some policemen to obey the law, although I do not suggest that they do not now do that. We have good law enforcement people. However, in order to make sure the policemen are protected when they act, there should be a section enabling them to remove people when circumstances indicate they are obviously on the verge of committing an offence. We better look at that carefully when the bill is in committee.

I am glad the law officers of the Crown have advised the minister to go as far as including the offence of canoeing while impaired. Our impaired driving sections have been applied to vessels. Assuming a canoe is a vessel, I can visualize someone cruising down the river while his ability to paddle is impaired by alcohol.

There will be a particularly good debate on this. The breathaliser section, under which the Canadian public were promised the accused would receive a sample of his breath, is in this bill. A sample of breath can be taken by the police but, of course, nothing whatsoever has been done to provide a suitable container to give the accused a sample of his breath. It is just put in there for political window dressing to fool the Canadian public into thinking we are great reformers, thinking only of their interest. Everyone knew this at the time that section was put in the bill, and I drew to the attention of the committee the fact that there was no such thing as a container in which a sample of a person's breath could be retained for the purpose of measuring the alcohol content. I understand there is still not one available. Now, the same provision is included in the section covering the offence of canoeing while impaired. This nonsense should stop until such time as we get a proper container. Perhaps I am prejudging the case. Maybe the minister has one in his pocket which he will bring to the committee. I look forward to being the first to test it.

Mr. Alexander: We may wipe out that clause if he does not bring in that container.

Mr. Hogarth: The right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) referred to common assault. Common assault was previously one of the few offences which could be proceeded with either by way of summary conviction or indictment. Impaired driving and dangerous driving are the others. The value of having this as an indictable offence was that it often came in handy in jury trials. If a jury wanted to convict a man of an offence, but not manslaughter, assault causing bodily harm, wounding or maiming, the judge could direct them that common assault was an included offence in the indictment. It is now a summary conviction offence. It cannot be included in a proceeding with an indictable offence. Often the jury compromised on a verdict and the man was dealt with much more lightly than he would have been in the first instance.

With regard to the offence in clause 27 on page 18 of the bill, having in one's possession a motor vehicle with the serial number obliterated, the onus should be on the Crown to prove the accused knew it was obliterated. It should not be left the way it is now.

I am concerned about the provision in clause 38 which appears on page 24 of the bill. This provision permits a justice, acting under that part of the Criminal Code, to remand an accused, and I quote:

for a period not exceeding thirty days without having heard the evidence of a duly qualified medical practitioner where he is satisfied that compelling circumstances exist for so doing and that such a medical practitioner is not readily available to examine the accused and give evidence;

With the greatest of respect, medical practitioners are the last persons who like to appear in court. I am afraid that where you have an accused who may appear to be a little dull, but certainly has all his marbles if I may use that expression, remanding him for 30 days will be a good excuse for police officers who prosecute in rural communities to imprison him when he otherwise would have been brought to trial. The medical facilities in this country are adequate and the provision that the remand must be on the evidence of a medical practitioner should be retained. In any event, we look forward to hearing the minister with regard to that particular clause and the reason for the change.

Finally, I wish to speak about the concept of conditional discharge which appears at page 33 of the bill. This will now be possible under section 662.1 of the code. It is grossly inconsistent. I am not in favour of the conditional discharge concept. The British had a conditional discharge some years ago, but they repealed it. It is no longer in their law. We are rather far behind in law reform and will have to go through that period of experience before eventually throwing it out. It is incongruous. I quote:

Where an accused, other than a corporation—

Why they should be exempt is beyond me. In any event, if he pleads guilty or is found guilty of an offence, the court may, instead of convicting him, place him on probation. In short, he is on probation for an offence of which he was never convicted, and that is surely nonsense. When an accused pleads guilty, or is found guilty, then he is convicted. That is precisely what has happened to him. I would much prefer that the minister consider that a magistrate or a judge has the right, having heard all the evidence against the accused, to decide that it is not in the interests of the community in which the accused lives—or in the interests of justice, if I may put it in that way—to convict him. He has heard all the evidence but he makes no finding. In cases of guilty pleas perhaps exceptions could be made or some qualifications attached.

• (1610)

A prime example of what I mean is women who have reached the menopause period of their lives and the strain is such that they sometimes become shoplifters. This situation is well known in the courts, and certainly these women should not be convicted of such an offence. They pick a load of groceries and walk off with it because they are mentally deranged. This sort of thing has happened to many women. Similarly, there are men who should not be convicted of certain offences, depending on the individual case. In such cases, I suggest the magistrate should have the right to say that it is not in the interests of justice that the case proceed and that he will enter a stay of proceedings. The attorney general has this right. In any proceeding his agent, the Crown prosecutor, may tell the clerk of the court without leave that he wants to enter a stay of proceedings in a certain case, and then that case is over, unless he wants to proceed with it at a later date.

[Mr. Hogarth.]

We are now making provision for this in the bill with regard to summary conviction offences. This is the sort of thing a court should be allowed to do because then there is no conviction. Perhaps there should be special provision made in the case of a guilty plea where a magistrate has the power to hear representations from the accused or his representative to set aside the guilty plea and to enter a stay of proceedings. In that way, we would be able to circumvent the absolute garbage we find in the bill that would result in placing on probation an accused who pleads guilty without convicting him. I suggest this is a matter we should look into during the committee hearings. I am a little surprised we have not sought to benefit from the English experience and dress the bill up properly in the first instance.

I am extremely proud to be in a parliament where we are moving toward the abolition of corporal punishment. I must say to the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert) that no member has done more than he to insist that the government get down to this question. I remember debating a private member's bill that he introduced on this subject a couple of years ago. Other hon. members have also supported this proposal. Corporal punishment is a most demoralizing thing to men in prison when you are trying to convince them that the "Catch 22" of crime is a change of attitude toward their fellow man and society. The way out of jail for them is a change of attitude. It is the only way out, and if they do not change their attitude in prison then it will not be long before they are back again.

Just what is it that happens when you put a man in a room, take the skin off his back with the cat-o-nine tails, then take him back to his cell, as they used to—though I do not know what is the procedure now—and throw salt water on the wounds? The attitude the other prisoners have to that sort of treatment is: "That is the way that society treats the likes of us". They identify very closely in the prison subculture. This is why seeing this type of nonsense eliminated gives me great pleasure, and is a reward to the hon. member to whom I have referred for his insistence. Your Honour will note that in the justice committee the other day the Solicitor General (Mr. Goyer) said that corporal punishment would never be used in prisons so long as he was minister. Prison wardens or custodial officers are finding that they can get along without its use, that they do not need it any more. Isolation is one of the remedies being substituted for corporal punishment.

I am looking forward to the bill going to committee and, hopefully, getting the law officers of the crown to change their views here and there on the bill where perhaps they are wrong. I am looking forward to participating with other hon. members in the deliberations of the committee on what will be a very interesting experience in the criminal law.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I was, as I am sure were others, very interested to listen to the remarks of the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Hogarth), especially to his careful and incisive analysis of the poor wording in some of the clauses of the bill, which presumably reflects his opinion of the poor advice given by law officers of the Crown. It is not very often that we get hon. gentlemen so closely attached to the government itself giving an indication that perhaps the consideration and advice given by law officers, who I take to be the lawyers in the Department of Justice who do the drafting and give legal advice to the Crown, has been poor.

We all know that the hon. member has tremendous ability and mentality to be able to see through a lot of this bad advice, and I am sure we will all remember this in future if and when the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) gets up on a major point and indicates that he got advice from the law officers of the Crown regarding a certain way to proceed. It puts the thing in proper perspective and probably indicates that, on a number of occasions in the past when hon. gentlemen in government have risen to endorse their position by resting upon the sanctity of the law officers of the Crown, they have been given bad advice and have accepted it. So far as the operation of government is concerned, this is probably a bad thing. However, I do not want to go too far in that direction, except to say that it was interesting to hear some hon. member opposite finally admit in this House that bad advice is sometimes given, and perhaps has been given in the case of this particular bill.

I suppose we cannot very well, and should not, approach any bill relating to the criminal law of the country by looking at the criminal law alone to see what it is that the government proposes to change, to add or to take away. We have at the same time to look at the effect that the law has on individuals who appear before the courts charged with some offence against the law, and see what might be the outcome for the individual. In other words, not only should we be considering the rights of individuals and property offended against; we must also look at the possibility of rehabilitation, so-called, of the individual who offends against the law. There is a companion attitude that we have to take in this connection. This has been reflected in the comments of many hon. members who have wondered about the effectiveness of the law as it is applied to individuals who offend the law, and as to whether or not there will be remedial or preventative steps taken, so far as that same individual or some other individual is concerned, to prevent infractions of the law in the future.

I do not say this from having made a study of it, not being involved in the legal profession in any way, but it appears that the Criminal Code is concerned almost exclusively with offences against people and property, whether they be ones of individual injury, such as might be the case in an assault, or ones of theft, in the case of break and entry or something of that sort. That is about all that is of concern to the Criminal Code itself. There is a companion part which would seem to be based on the theory of deterrence. In other words, we seek to create an offence and bring some punishment to bear upon anyone who is convicted of committing that offence, the theory being that if the punishment is severe enough it will deter that person from committing that or similar offences in the future, or if it becomes public knowledge that the punishment is severe there will be a spin-off effect deterring other people from committing an offence against the law. In other words, if we make the punishment severe enough this will stop crime. I do not think that is true to the extent we seem to think it is.

It has been stated on many occasions, and I think this is an over-simplification, that we have an 80 per cent recidivism rate in our federal penal institutions. In other words, as I understand it, 80 per cent of the people who are in federal prisons today have been in jail before at some time during their lives, some once, some innumerable times, some in provincial jails and others only in federal institutions. If the theory of deterrence, upon which the criminal law in part is based, were fully effective, then presumably in theory a person might commit only one offence and then be deterred by the severity of the punishment from committing any further offences, and others, knowing what punishment is likely to be handed out, would not commit an offence in the first place. That is pretty false reasoning and should not have, to the extent it does, any place in the development of criminal law. We should not try to develop criminal offences, a criminal code and criminal law with that concept in mind. We should have some other type of concept in mind, namely what can we do to assist the individual who offends against the law in order that he will not repeat his actions?

What can we do to establish social concepts or an attitude about offences against persons and property so that those who have not committed any offence will not do so because they consciously desire not to rather than because of fear of punishment? In a number of instances, the side notes in the bill use the word "punishment" to indicate what will be visited upon an individual if he is convicted of theft, or whatever the offence may be. Reference is made to the terms of punishment and injury to the individual who has injured somebody else. It reflects the concept of retribution and revenge, which is different from the question of deterrence, although that is wrapped up with it.

I think probably we still have a carryover within our general attitude about these matters which reflects a bit of the past and carries with it a concept of punishment, which history has shown to be not acceptable. We still say to ourselves that even though we do not have any vengeful feelings, we intend to punish somebody or wreak vengeance upon him for something he has done to somebody else. In the process of doing this, we hope to deter that person and others from comitting offences in the future.

Apropos of that, I should like to make a comment about the law relating to murder. For almost five years now we have had a law which provides that if a person is convicted of murdering a police officer or a penitentiary guard, I think those are the two classes, that is capital murder and the person convicted of committing such an offence will be hanged. In all other cases, the individual will not be hanged. I have expressed my views as to whether or not that type of penalty is a deterrent to a person committing that offence, and hope to have the opportunity to do so again when this subject comes up again for discussion. To the extent that people feel the threat of hanging is a deterrent to individuals to commit murder of a police officer or a prison guard, the whole concept is being negated by the government itself. If parliament has said that in these cases where someone has murdered a police officer or a penitentiary guard that person shall be hanged, I do not think the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) or anybody else has the right to thumb his nose at the law of the land as expressed by parliament. The government should not say it does not care what parliament has said or what the law is because the government is supreme.

I do not know how many cases there have been in the past few years, and four or five come to mind quickly, where a police officer has been murdered and an individual convicted, the sentence imposed by the court but set aside primarily because of the attitude of the Prime Minister. To the extent that you accept the idea that capital punishment is a deterrent, this action on the part of the government entices people to commit murder of police officers and penitentiary guards. If the deterrent concept has any value whatsoever, the government has removed that value because those who are involved in circumstances, for whatever reason, leading to the murder of a policeman or penitentiary guard do not think in terms of automatically being hanged since the government continues to commute their sentences. The deterrent to that extent is removed. I do not think it should be considered in the first place because I do not buy the idea, but so long as it is in existence it should be respected. I hope the minister is not shaking his head in disagreement with the force of what I have said. When such a person as the Prime Minister brings the law of the land into disrepute by ignoring and thumbing his nose at it, he entices others to do the same thing.

The criminal law also rests on the concept of establishing the punishment to fit the crime rather than taking into account the individual who may be charged with the commission of an offence. This situation is changing. The courts, in some instances, are becoming more enlightened and concerned about the individual and less concerned about making the punishment fit the crime. The hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Hogarth) referred in general to the case of a woman reaching the age of menopause, being emotionally disturbed by that process and engaging in shoplifting. He suggests this should not be considered an offence, in the normal sense of the word, against the criminal law.

As I understood him, he said that in many cases the Crown prosecutor will simply ask the court clerk to enter a stay of proceedings, in other words not proceed further with the case, because there is a recognition of the possibility of an individual technically committing an offence of theft or whatever the charge for shoplifting is. This situation is changing. A different sort of attitude is developing. We have the opinions of psychiatrists, for what they may be worth, and quite frankly I do not think much of them in many of these cases; but in many respects these opinions are being heeded by the courts. However, we still have the general problem of fitting the punishment to the crime. The operation of the Parole Board is supposed to alleviate the force of the law as it is vented upon someone who has committed an offence. In theory, the Parole Board is supposed to look at these individuals who are in jail and say they do not have to serve their time in jail but can part of it outside. This shows a concept of concern for the individual.

I quite frankly think that the Parole Board, while it operates in this area of lessening the impact of the punishment in terms of time spent in jail, none the less is a highly conservative structure. It may be highly conservative because of the nature of the Parole Act which set up the board, but none the less it is conservative. Of course, one must be selective in this procedure and this is where the decision-making comes into it. But I advance the idea that in many instances the very best time at which to give a person a parole is on the day he is sentenced by the court, especially in cases where a person has been convicted of a crime arising out of an emotional involvement. A person may be emotionally unbalanced at the time of committing a murder because his or her spouse has been involved in some extramarital relations with someone else and has been discovered in that act. In such situations, the result is usually an offence of murder and the likelihood is that the individual involved will not again run into a similar circumstance. It is not a deliberate act or an act of a criminal nature such as a bank robbery. For a person of that type to have to spend 5, 6 or 7 years in jail, or some period of that nature, before some favourable consideration may be given to him by the Parole Board is really stretching the point. To the extent that we want to buy the idea of balancing out the punishment concept by the use of the Parole Board, I think the Parole Board could operate in this area and be a little more generous in its consideration of these cases.

Another matter with which I think we must concern ourselves arises when we come to the matter of the punishment fitting the crime versus the punishment so-called—and I place that in quotation marks—fitting the individual. This comes into focus when we talk about the disparity in sentencing. We know of instances where a person who commits an offence in one jurisdiction may receive a pretty severe sentence from one judge or one court, either because that judge has an apoplectic view about that type of crime or a certain concept of punishment and deterrence, or because of local situations which might exist which may influence the court or judge either consciously or unconsciously. On the other hand, a person in similar circumstances in another part of the country may commit an identical offence and receive either a suspended or very light sentence, or a stay of proceedings, or whatever result the court or Crown may wish to secure.

Inasmuch as the Parliament of Canada is reviewing the criminal law for all of Canada, I do not think we should permit such wide disparities to exist in various parts of the country that one person may receive a ten-year sentence for the theft of $201, while another person may receive a one-year sentence for the theft of $50, $60, $70 or $100 in some other part of the land. Surely, there ought to be an attempt to bring sentencing into some balance, so that all persons have a relatively equal chance to obtain the same consideration in a court no matter in what part of the country they may happen to be. I do not know whether or not this can be accomplished by the process of drawing people into the courts who are in the probationary field or people who may want to help others over a rough period. We do not know whether or not that sort of approach would work. I do not believe we have had sufficient experience in Canada to say it would, but certainly it would be far better to try a procedure of that sort than to allow the sentencing procedure to operate as it has in the past.

If I may, I should also like to mention the question of writs of assistance which are not really a part of the criminal law as such. There is no provision for them within the Criminal Code. However, they are, in effect, search warrants given to peace officers. Two, three or four laws of parliament such as the Narcotic Control Act, the Customs and Excise Act and the Food and Drug Act provide for writs of assistance to peace officers. Writs of assistance are probably not well known outside this House or outside of people who have been on the receiving end of them. Basically they give a police officer the right to enter premises, to break in doors, to search premises and arrest people at any time of the night or day. In other words, a writ of assistance is a blanket sort of search warrant to break into premises, search for whatever is wanted and arrest people without having a warrant, simply on the grounds of suspicion.

Writs of assistance are considered by the Bar Association to be offensive and against the concept of the rights of individuals. I spoke with the former Minister of Justice about this matter when writs of assistance were used by police officers to invade the premises of a number of people in a very small community in northern British Columbia last year. We raised the matter on another occasion when the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) was Prime Minister when writs of assistance were used to invade the homes of thousands of people of Chinese origin in this country who saw their papers and everything of a documentary nature seized. When I spoke to the previous Minister of Justice about this, he said he would be removing it but the only thing that has been removed has been the former Minister of Justice. I would certainly think, at a time when some kind of an over-all approach to criminal law is being taken in this bill, although it is not as wide and all-encompassing as we would have liked to see it, there should be a new approach taken to writs of assistance because of the fact they offend against the rights of individuals and in many cases are misused.

The habitual criminal sections, on which I would like to comment, should be removed from the criminal law because, even though there has been a variance in the interpretation and application of the provision over the years, they offend against our fundamental rights in two ways: one, they impose a second sentence on a person for something for which a court has already convicted and sentenced him, and second, they impose a sentence on the individual because of the belief that in the future he may commit some criminal offence. As the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Hogarth) said, this section was used extensively. It was used in Vancouver by Stewart McMorran, who was at that time Crown prosecutor and who saw an excellent opportunity from his point of view to lodge all drug addicts in penitentiaries in the lower mainland for the rest of their lives. Some 15 years ago or so, he took occasion to proceed against nearly every drug addict who had been convicted of three indictable offences since the age of 18, most of them for possession of narcotics, through the use of the habitual section. Dozens of them were classified as habitual criminals and lodged in jails for the rest of their natural lives.

I do not support the idea advanced by the hon. member for New Westminster that once a person has concluded the sentence for an offence for which he was convicted he should then be on parole for the rest of his life. If you apply the same reasoning to everybody who has been convicted of any offence, every such person could be on parole for the rest of his life. Presumably this would empty the jails. In any event, it still carries with it the concept of the imposition of additional punishment on an individual for something for which he has served his sentence, and also imposition of punishment into the future for an offence that he might commit. This is crystal ball gazing and is just as offensive as the provision in the bill presently before us.

There is a provision in the bill relating to the Criminal Records Act. Inasmuch as we have opened it up, I would advance another thought with respect to it, one that we advanced when the criminal records bill was before the House a few years ago. Under the act at present a person who receives a pardon under the Criminal Records Act is free from questioning by an employer as to whether or not he has been convicted of a criminal offence for which he has or has not been pardoned. This is only applicable in those employer-employee relationships that come under federal parliamentary jurisdiction. It does not apply to companies operating purely within the provincial field. So any employer who comes under provincial jurisdiction, not the federal labour code, may seek to ask any person who has been given a pardon whether in fact he has been pardoned and whether in fact he has been convicted of a criminal offence. That sort of query offends against the moral force of the Criminal Records Act. Inasmuch as we are dealing in the field of criminal law, which parliament has the right to do under the constitution, we should not hide behind the BNA Act which prohibits us from intruding into employer-employee relationships in the provincial field. If it is valid to say to companies operating under the federal jurisdiction that the state has given a person this pardon and the employers cannot inquire as to whether or not he has a pardon, we should say the same thing to all companies operating under provincial jurisdiction and give to the individual to whom the state has already given the pardon the full benefit of protection throughout his time of potential employment.

May I conclude by commenting, as did the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), on the law as it applies to the Indian people. We are in agreement that perhaps the law itself is not so much discriminatory as is the attitude of some courts, some sections of our society and perhaps some members of the police force as well. The Prince Albert penitentiary with which the right hon. member is familiar—at least from the outside, I do not think he has been inside the institution to visit it—contains a population 50 per cent of which is Indian. I heard some statistics the other day, related to me by an individual who said that they had been compiled by someone else, which showed that of the 20,000 people in jail in Canada today—obviously this includes provincial jails as well—60 per cent are Indian or of Indian descent. It is a shocking state of affairs when one considers that the population of Indians as related to the total in Canada is somewhere in the neighbourhood of one per cent or one and a half per cent.

Surely, there is something wrong in the attitude towards the Indian people when we see this great preponderance in terms of percentage end up in our jails. Surely, it cannot be entirely the fault of a group of people classified as Indians that a high percentage of them have greater criminal tendencies than the rest of the population. Surely, that cannot be the inference drawn from these statistics. It is certainly not my thought, and I am sure that anybody who looks at this in a reasonable way would reach the same conclusion. One must also conclude, by the same token, that there is something wrong with the system, the attitude, the administration of justice, and the imposition of punishment by the courts on Indian people who appear before them. As I stated, the Prince Albert penitentiary is half filled with people of Indian ancestry. There is a feeling among many Indian people that the law discriminates against them, and I think it has proven to be the case in some instances.

In the Cariboo area of British Columbia a few years ago, I have forgotten the precise circumstances relating to the situation, an Indian girl had been attacked by some so-called white men. I think she died as a result, although I may be mistaken. As the result of the attack that took place—and I think rape was involved and a variety of pretty heinous activities—the individuals were convicted and received an insignificant sentence, one of them a fine and a couple of years in jail or something like that. We all know that if that situation had been reversed, if it had been a couple of Indian boys who had engaged in the same activities with a white girl, there would have been one hell of a hue and cry for a hanging to take place. But it did not.

I know of an occurrence which took place in another part of British Columbia 15 years ago when a chap was with a young Indian girl. I suppose there was drinking involved, I am not sure of that, but in any event he proceeded to attack her physically. He put the boots to her, and as a result she rolled down some stairs in a rooming house; in effect, he killed her in the process of assaulting her with his boots. He got four years, Mr. Speaker. Just reverse that situation and imagine the result if that had been an Indian lad who did that to a white girl! There would not have been any four years involved. There would have been a hue and cry for a hanging of that individual, or a long sentence at the very least, with lashes.

The Fred Quilt affair, I submit, is another case in point. These are ones I know of because they relate to my own province, but you can duplicate this situation in other provinces. Here is another case in point where there is, to be overly generous about it, a convinced attitude on the part of the Indian people in British Columbia that a crime had been committed by a member of the RCMP, and it had been whitewashed. The extremely generous would say that, but this is a situation which took place. This confirms once more that Indian people are discriminated against in their relations with the law. Just a few years ago we had a federally appointed commission on the law and the Indians. It came up with a number of opinions, views and recommendations on courses of action that should be taken. For a few years, we persistently asked what the government was going to do with respect to that report, and the answer we always got from the government benches was, "It has nothing to do with us. It is not our responsibility. Under the constitution, the administration of justice comes under the provinces." They completely wiped their hands of the whole system. They completely ignored the validity of the points made by that commission.

Is it any wonder that there is an attitude that, yes, the law discriminates against the Indians? Is it any wonder an attitude exists that, yes, the white man discriminates against the Indians, since they are on the receiving end every time they come up against the law? It is a shameful commentary if in this day and age we have to stand up in this House of Commons, and admit that such things do exist. It is a very shameful thing for people in parliament to have to admit, but it is a fact. This situation does exist and it needs correcting, as do many of the other abuses that prevail with respect to the application of criminal law against individuals who have committed offences against persons or property but who are not given the other side of the coin, namely, help from society which will rehabilitate the individual who commits the offence.

I doubt that these matters will be cleared up when the bill gets before the committee. I hope they will be cleared up, but I doubt it very much. We know that this is not the bill of the current Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang). He did not conceive it. He did not develop it. It is an inheritance, a legacy from his predecessor. I do not say this unkindly, but this is the normal case with such legislation. But I do hope that he, being a person learned in the law, being a human sort of person with his feelings about people, would take to heart not only what I have said but what members of his own party and other parties have said, so that when he appears before the committee he will not simply be trying to defend the wording of the bill before us, he will not simply be trying to adjust a few words here and there to meet some insignificant objections to the bill, but rather will approach it from the point of view of trying to do something worth while for the total population.

Mr. D. Gordon Blair (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, it is a great pleasure for me to take part in this debate because I had the unique privilege of acting as the counsel to the joint parliamentary committee which studied capital and corporate punishment and lotteries during three sessions of the parliament in 1954, 1955 and 1956. It is a great pleasure for me also to note the presence in the House this afternoon of the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) who made such a notable contribution to the work of that committee. I am sure the hon. member must look back over his long public career, at the many things he has done, and know that there is a reward for perseverance.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blair: That report, which was submitted in 1956, recommended that corporal punishment be removed from the Criminal Code as a punishment given by the courts, and in this year of grace, 1972, this is being done. The hon. member for Vancouver East will be remembered by all who followed the work of that committee as one who made a tremendous contribution, based upon his long and earnest study of penal reform. I would like to think that we in this House might call this the Winch bill because it owes so much to the contribution he made to it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blair: There are not many people left in parliament who participated in the long deliberations of that committee. In the other place, the Hon. Senator Hayden and the Hon. Senator Fergusson are still active.

I believe that the committee approached its work in a sceptical way, a scepticism I might say that was shared by its counsel. It was only after three years of careful and painstaking investigation and study that the committee reached its conclusions, and made the major recommendation that corporal punishment be abolished as a judicial sentence. I would like to comment on this report in greater detail, Mr. Speaker, but perhaps I might be permitted to call it five o'clock now.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Egmont—Consumer Affairs—Larger increase in food costs in Prince Edward Island—Reference to Prices and Incomes Commission; the hon. member for Skeena—Indian Affairs—Request for tabling of Stanbury-Fields report; the hon. member for Central Nova—Transport—Updating of year of manufacture of foreign automobiles—Action to end practice.

It being five o'clock, the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely notices of motions and public bills.

Suggested Centre for World Problems Study

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PROPOSAL TO ESTABLISH CENTRE TO CO-ORDINATE STUDIES OF WORLD PROBLEMS

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider, in furtherance of the objectives of the United Nations, the establishment and operation in Canada of a world centre to program and administer co-operation between and co-ordination of the efforts of experts and institutions in their studies of compelling world issues respecting (a) international relations and peace (e.g. problems of peace-keeping, arms control and disarmament, human rights and intercultural communications) (b) global problems of development (e.g. the use of natural resources, international trade and problems of developing economies, transfers of science and technology, population problems and concerns of youth) (c) the environment and, in particular, the impact of science and technology on the environment.

• (1700)

He said: Mr. Speaker, the motion is self-explanatory and I do not plan to use all the time allotted to me because I would like to hear the views of other hon. members of this House. I also hope that there might be unanimous consent to dispose of this motion, either by referring it to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence or by passing it.

The concept of a world university does not originate with me but has been suggested on a number of occasions by the largest volunteer organization in this country, the Canadian Home and School and Parent-Teacher Federation. This is a very important association concerned with the greatest activity that takes place in this country, apart from government, the business of education. Since 1965, the Canadian Home and School Association, through a special committee, has given a great deal of attention to the concept of an educational institution which would help to alleviate much of the misunderstanding and dissension that creates at times almost impossible barriers against the solution of international problems. I can recall correspondence with the association as far back as 1967 to the effect that it would be a most appropriate gesture in that centennial year if we could establish a world university so that our celebrations would not merely be self-indulgent but would make a contribution to the larger constituency and larger neighbourhood of the world itself.

I think it is fair to say that in 1967 and shortly afterwards, the possibility of using the Expo site for a world university was discussed. It is a little ironical that the matter was never given serious consideration, and that in recent years the city of Toronto has indicated a strong interest in establishing a world university there. Perhaps this just illustrates the continuing conflict and competition between Toronto and Montreal; the compromise might be to locate such a university in Prince Edward Island, but I shall refrain from that kind of parochial comment.

The basic concept is well worth consideration because there are any number of initiatives that a country like Canada should take in the interests of international co-operation. We have taken some excellent initiatives in the past, and undoubtedly one of the most important has been the recognition of Mainland China and the impact of that decision at the United Nations and in the United States of America. There are others of which we have been most neglectful, such as our recent peacekeeping attempt and humanitarian attempts with respect to the civil war in Nigeria and our approach on questions related to development in the third world. While we have made many excellent speeches on this second matter, there has been little evidence that we are prepared to take this kind of development seriously.

One thing is clear: we have to gear our response to the challenge of international co-operation to the resources we have available, both material and intellectual. It is naïve to suggest that we can only respond to the call for international co-operation on a plane of basic self-interest because the whole question of self-interest can be defined in many ways. It is my view that Canadians have had and continue to have very deep interest in events that transpire beyond our borders. Only last night, when observing the National News I was intrigued to note that our public broadcasting system featured six or eight news items from other parts of the world before turning its attention to domestic activities. This means that there is a very real interest, and a sense of responsibility in this country, about what is happening abroad. It is not necessary to list those who have contributed time and talent to a host of international agencies. We do this not only from a humanitarian concern but because we realize that we do not live in some kind of isolated existence. I think it was Barbara Ward or Buckminster Fuller who said that we are really together in this fragile spaceship, earth, and that what happens halfway around the globe will have a challenging effect on our country.

The purpose of this motion is to establish that we believe that international co-operation is not some kind of abstract goal, but that it is a very real tool toward the resolution of real problems facing the international community. We are saying through this motion that Canada wants to go on record as offering a mechanism for the international study and resolution of problems that affect all citizens of the world. It is really not appropriate for national communities or countries of the world to develop totally independent approaches to international problems and then hope for some miraculous capacity for independent solutions to blend into one common resolution of the problem.

I think we have already seen how this kind of isolated approach to complex international issues makes it difficult to find some kind of consensus. If the problem is a common one, as is pollution, for the entire developed world, then common priorities and critical procedures must be developed. Within a month or two the first world conference on the environment will be held in Stockholm; but one conference in a fairly formal setting with papers being presented will not move us much closer to the problems that are rapidly developing in the environmental field unless we have a continuing framework within which these issues can be faced and resolved or positions put forward whereby the responsible agencies of government can give them full consideration. I believe the common priorities and critical procedures must be developed. Common information must be available and common resources must be mustered in the battle. Narrow national solutions will remain just that, narrow and limited in scope and effectiveness. I think it is clear that narrow solutions are no longer acceptable or even feasible from a political or economic or even environmental point of view. We have to develop new procedures and new opportunities for the resolution of these problems.

As recently as a few days ago, Mr. John E. Ricketts who has been giving leadership to the international committee of the Canadian Home and School and Parent-Teacher Federation, upon being notified of the motion placed on the order paper, sent the following letter to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp):

> Knowing that this federation has been actively promoting the idea of a world university, preferably but not necessarily in Canada, since 1965—

He goes on to commend the motion that I have proposed, and then continues:

> In view of the communications we have exchanged with your department in recent years, you will know that this federation warmly supports the motion, and hopes that the government will act on it.
> U Thant's 1969 suggestion for a United Nations international university comes before the General Assembly for the third time—and probably for the decisive vote—this fall. The aim of UN U would be to work with existing universities in all countries to unite the world's academic resources in co-operative search, in a non-political setting, for solutions to world problems.

• (1710)

> All UN member nations, and the university community at large, were invited to express views on the idea. Our last information was that most of the emerging nations have indicated strong approval, but that Japan is the only advanced industrial nation to have done so.
> The threats to world existence—from pollution, misuse of natural resources, weapons of mass destruction—have never been more obvious. This Federation again urges the Government to give full support to the proposed United Nations University.

I think it is clear from Mr. Ricketts' latest letter that this will be a crucial and deciding vote later this year. Of course, I am speaking of the vote concerning the matter of the United Nations University. It is sad, even tragic, that the government has not yet indicated its position on the proposal that has been before the United Nations for the past three years. Although United Nations officials to whom we have talked would welcome enthusiastically the support by our country for this concept, that does not mean that we must necessarily become involved in the matter of the location of that United Nations University.

Of course, my motion expresses the hope that Canada may provide the site. I am in favour of that possibility not only because I am Canadian, and in that sense I may be said to express a parochial point of view, but, as well, for another reason. Having visited people in other countries and travelled extensively, I have found people receptive to the idea that Canada can play the role of host country in such an important experiment. The experiment is important in so many ways, Mr. Speaker. I am thinking of the number of areas which have been touched on by those who have considered this question. It is important, surely, because it involves the question of arms proliferation and arms control. Today, the disarmament conference in Geneva is one where nations work diligently to bring about arms reduction. But, Mr. Speaker, what of an international disarmament strategy? What is our position there? What of a program that goes further than disarming the present arsenals and looks to the prevention of the buildup of further arsenals. These are the types of wide ranging and creative studies that a centre of this nature could pursue with a scholarly and impartial tone.

In addition to examining problems immediately relating to disarmament, which may be more political than we suspect, the university should also look at long term problems relating to disarmament. The experiment is also important in that it would examine questions of the environment that I referred to a moment ago. We could thereby prepare and formulate an international strategy for the solution or resolution of certain aspects of the international pollution problem. In addition, there is a series of related subject matters involving economics which needs to be considered in that context. Surely, these could be considered, since they involve such matters as the utilization of natural resources.

I suggest, also, that we could thereby consider the whole problem of international trade stability. The question of international trade stability has been of paramount importance to Canadians and their trading partners. We know only too well from our experience of the last eight months just how important that stability is. These problems become pretty significant in a crisis when we must deal with them on a short term basis and provide solutions that do little except meet in part the present, basic problem.

It is ironic that at present a United Nations conference on trade and development is being held in Santiago, Chile. We have sent a delegation to Chile; its mandate is not clear. There has been almost no discussion in this country of what we are to do to meet our responsibility to 80 per cent of the world's population which is struggling to find a role for itself. Increasingly, we have imported less from developing countries and more from developed countries. We seem to be moving away from a position that might offer real trading possibilities for developing countries of the world. Surely, the time has come for us to realize that we need more than short term, stopgap answers. We must plan better and deal with these questions more adequately. In my opinion, these studies could best be undertaken in a world university.

Even at the present we are considering seriously, or ought to be considering, what changes should be made in the charter of the United Nations, in order to make that charter more effective. There has been little discussion in this country about a review of the charter. All the same, that charter review is urgently needed.

When we talk about the world university, we are not talking about a typical, degree-granting institution. We are thinking more of a centre, or a series of centres, in which problems of vital importance for the existence and survival of mankind can be examined. It would not be, as U

Thant suggested, a university in the conventional sense. It would involve a flexible system enabling better co-operation among countries and the better integration of ideas and information. We need, as Mr. Ricketts suggested, a vehicle that will unite the world's academic resources; a vehicle which will complement our own work in this field. Canada's strategic and international position, which in some ways, may be said to be somewhat acute, makes the undertaking of this initiative, in my view, fundamentally important.

Let us examine the reasons as to why this is so. Considering the growing use of resources without plan or rationale throughout the world, Canada's own wealthy position in the world with regard to its own resources may become a source of real difficulty and hostility within the international community. I am thinking not only in terms of fuel resources, and minerals, but in terms of that resource which is perhaps most important to us all, water. We will need to maintain the stewardship of that water in some international context; otherwise, we may find ourselves in great jeopardy. Also, bearing in mind the continuing reliance of Canada on international trade, it is clear that every unresolved problem could be the source of some major trade crisis in future for this country. Canada's own commitment to arms control makes our involvement in the research and resolution of arms control strategies fundamental.

It is even important for us to concern ourselves with an international youth policy. I submit that since our population is basically youthful, our own involvement in international programs concerning youth will be a worth-while and necessary initiative.

So, in essence, Mr. Speaker, the establishment of this centre, of this world university, would be a major step in the resolution of many of our own fundamental problems.

Mr. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald) for introducing the notice of motion before the House and for giving the House an opportunity to debate this most important matter. Unfortunately, people have a tendency to forget the horrors of war when they are not immediately involved in or threatened by war. However, if we are to do something about war and maintain peace, we must act before we are on the threshold of conflict.

In his notice of motion the hon. member suggests that, to further United Nations' objectives, we should establish in Canada a world centre to administer and co-ordinate studies in three area, namely, (a) international relations and peace; (b) global problems of development; and, (c) the environment. Mr. Speaker, I did not interpret this notice of motion as recommending a world university, as suggested by the hon. member who introduced this notice of motion. According to my interpretation, the notice of motion recommends the establishment of an international research centre for peace, development, and the environment, and I will discuss it in that sense.

Since the notice of motion is divided into three sections, I will discuss it accordingly. May I say, first, that I fully support the proposal in part (a) of the motion. It is a sad fact that, in this country and throughout the world, we spend millions, even billions, of dollars on military research, and almost nothing on research related to peace. In Canada there is the Canadian Peace Research Institute, which attempts to study these questions; but that is a private body with a small budget and it receives very little government support. The Canadian Peace Research Institute was established in 1960, and was the first peace research institute established in the world. Actually, it was the first body to use the term, "peace research". At present, the Canadian Peace Research Institute has eight full-time employees in its office at Dundas, Ontario, and six in its Oakville office. Of these people, only eight are full-time researchers. The rest are office staff.

The chairman of the Canadian Peace Research Institute is Norman Alcock. He has been the main force behind it since its inception, although Alan and Hannah Newcombe have also been very prominent in its operations and have done a lot in the peace research area. At the present time, the only government help the Canadian Peace Research Institute receives is a grant from the Canada Council and a small grant from UNESCO. These are the only public grants it receives.

Some of the matters being studied by the Canadian Peace Research Institute are of the type I would like to see on a much broader basis by a government supported peace research institute, as seems to be suggested in part (a) of the hon. member's motion. Some of the projects that have been studied by the Canadian Peace Research Institute are studies on UN voting patterns and voting blocs, the prediction of war, attitudes on war-peace questions, the economic consequences of disarmament, peaceful nuclear explosions and disarmament, peace-keeping operations, and militarism, a survey on world trends. There are many others, but these are some of the studies being made by the institute in an attempt to understand the causes of conflict and the possible solutions to them.

There are other peace research institutes in the world, but they are very few. Some are privately financed and some are publicly financed. The most prominent one is in Sweden which, by the way, came about as a result of the influence of the privately sponsored Canadian institute. The Canadian institute came first. It prompted the establishment of the Swedish institute which is called the Swedish International Peace Research Institute. The government of Sweden gives the institute a grant of $1 million per year. The institute reports directly to parliament, but is not under the control of the government. It is free to study any matter it wishes relating to peace and war.

There is also an institute in Norway which is called the International Peace Research Institute of Oslo. This institute also receives government support, but not to the same extent as the one in Sweden. In Denmark, there is the Centre for Conflict Resolution which is also government supported. In West Germany, in the last fiscal year, the government provided $750,000 for peace research in universities.

In Holland there is the National Institute for study of Peace Questions. This institute receives a grant of $1 million per year for the government. The government of Holland also provides grants for peace research which takes place in universities. There are other institutes of lesser importance.

The United States, which in many respects is one of the most powerful countries in the world, has no publicly financed peace research institute, although some research is going on in the universities. There is some research in the universities of Japan. On the whole, there is very little peace research being carried out in the world. It is interesting to note that with the commencement of the new university term next September, there will be a PhD course in peace research at Carleton University under the direction of John Sigler. This course should provide some interesting research and material, but it will be on a very small basis.

Let us compare this weak performance, not only in Canada but in the whole world, with research on military and related matters. In Canada, the government has provided in the estimates for 1972-73 a budget of $46 million under the title of defence research. There is another $5 million allocated for emergency measures. It seems strange that we provide $5 million for emergency measures, but hardly anything for peace research which might prevent those being used. If we look at the grants the Department of National Defence provides to private associations in Canada, we see they provide grants of $665,000. For such things as military studies at Canadian universities, they provide $280,000 and $70,000 in grants to rifle associations. There are grants to other types of cadet leagues and so on.

There may be real value in this type of funding by the federal government, but if we can allocate that much money to defence and military research, why can we not do a little more for peace research? According to the estimates, the Department of External Affairs gives major grants to three groups in Canada; $50,000 to the Canadian Institute of International Affairs; $27,000 to the UN Association in Canada and $2,500 to the Atlantic Council of Canada. These are good things, Mr. Speaker, but why can the government not give more money to a group such as the Canadian Peace Research Institute or for the establishment of a government peace research institute in Canada? The record of this government with regard to external aid is much better. I will discuss that later.

The government has already set up the Canadian International Development Research Centre which deals with the points in part (b) of the hon. member's motion. The amount of money allocated for that centre this year is $8 million. I will not deal with what is put forward in the hon. member's motion in that regard, because I think we already have that. If the governments of the world are sincere in their statements that their first priority is peace and their armies are only a means of security if aggression is committed, then surely they should spend a great deal more money on peace research and preventive measures. Governments should put their money where their talk is. If I were not in the House of Commons, I could put that much stronger.

At the present time, the behaviour of world governments is something like that of a man who spends a lot of money on fire insurance, but very little to prevent fires or like governments that spend a lot on medical treatment, but little on preventative medicine. If we are sincerely concerned about peace in the world, we should know much more about the causes of war and the best means to reduce and eliminate these causes. Those persons who accept wars and world wars as inevitable and, consequently, state we can do nothing about them, are without imagination, foresight or courage. If their attitudes were to prevail, we would never conquer any pestilence, plague or evil. Fortunately, the spirit of man continually pushes forward and great cures and discoveries have been made.

One of the great disappointments of history is that while man has made great leaps forward in science, technology and medicine, there has not been much progress in human relationships, social dynamics, the reduction of violence and the reduction of war. Since 1945, the end of World War II, there have been 113 wars in the world, mostly in the third world. I can document those 113 wars if hon. members want me to do so.

I should like to refer to a document on this point. I have in my hand one of the bulletins put out by the Peace Research Institute which points out that in the 27 years since 1945 there have been 113 conflicts in the world. About half of these were of significant size, duration and intensity, there was slightly more than one every five months and any one of them was capable of provoking a holocaust. Some of these conflicts have been quite large. The tonnage of bombs dropped in the Korean war exceeded the tonnage dropped by all the allies in the Pacific theatre of World War II, and in Viet Nam the tonnage of bombs dropped has been greater than in all theatres of World War II. In addition, the Viet Nam war has lasted considerably longer than either World War I or World War II.

It is interesting to note that weapons deliveries to third world countries in recent years grew twice as fast as the gross national product of those countries. Many of us were shocked when we saw the budget figures for India and Pakistan at the time of the recent war which took place between them. These figures showed that in both countries the amount of money spent on defence and military equipment was more than 50 per cent of the budget.

I should also like to refer to another point made in this research extract. It is pointed out that the world now has a nuclear non-proliferation treaty which seeks to confine nuclear weapons to the big five nations. However, it points out that since 1945 all the killing in the wars I have referred to has been done by conventional weapons. In spite of this, the proliferation of conventional weapons, their spread from the few big countries which manufacture most of them to the many small countries who fight most of the wars, has continued unchecked and almost unnoticed.

Since the end of the war, the number of independent nations in the world has gone from 55 to 140. Only 13 of these manufacture armaments in any variety or quantity, yet 95 per cent of the conflicts since 1945 have been in the poorer countries. If the arms trade had not existed, those wars would either not have occurred or would have been fought with primitive weapons and therefore with much less destructiveness. My purpose in putting forward these facts is to make this point as strongly as I can: if we are sincere in saying that we want to reduce world conflict, we should get off our butts and do something about it. Let us dedicate at least as much of our money to peace as we do to war.

What I have said so far related mainly to the first part of the hon. member's motion which suggests that we set up a world centre to co-ordinate and administer studies with respect to international relations and peace, and especially the problems of peace keeping, arms control and disarmament, human rights, and so on. With regard to part (b) of the motion, as I stated earlier the government has already taken action in this regard and has set up the International Development Research Centre. The budget for the centre provided by the government this year is $8 million. In addition to that, this year the government's budget for CIDA, the Canadian International Development Agency, is $483 million. I think that is significant. The government is doing a very good job regarding international development and I think international development has a lot to do with the reduction of world tension. However, that alone is not enough.

With respect to part (c) of the motion which deals with environmental problems, similarly I think the government has made considerable progress. It has set up the Department of the Environment. It has a research section and many studies are being conducted by the department. In addition, the Canadian government is taking a leadership role at the Stockholm conference. It is possible that the Stockholm conference will recommend that a more permanent structure be set up for dealing with world environment problems, and if that is the case I fully support such a proposal.

I do not think the government can be criticized in regard to sections (b) and (c) of the motion since it has made considerable effort in these areas. With regard to part (a), peace research, if we are serious and are not to be hypocritical about this, I think we must spend a lot more money in this area.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, first I want to indicate my support for the motion put forward today by the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald). Basically and essentially it says that we should support the establishment of a world university. Such a proposal is being considered by the United Nations. As the hon. member for Egmont said, to date Canada has not taken a position on the matter. This fact concerns me. If we do take a position and support it in principle, it does not mean necessarily that we will suddenly establish a university in Canada and then have to outline the details and technicalities of such a university. Rather, it is a question of giving support in principle. Apparently the only industrialized country that has indicated its support for the idea is Japan. Many other countries in the developing world support the idea as one in which they are interested.

This seems to me the type of motion that should receive the support of all parties in the House. The hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand) has indicated his support, and I hope we will not see this resolution talked out as so many of them are. It is for this reason that I do not intend to speak at length and shall make only a few points. I appeal to the government to allow us, before the hour is up, to pass the motion and I ask that the government, through the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp), take a definite stand on the question and support it in principle.

The hon. member for Egmont outlined a number of matters that a world university would have to deal with, such as international relations, peace keeping, nuclear disarmament, non-proliferation of arms, and so on. Then he talked about the problem of development in the third world. We are also concerned about environmental problems and problems of science and technology. We in Canada have a great deal at stake in this regard. We must first of all realize that we are a global village, that what happens on the other side of the world has a great impact upon us in Canada. We must interest ourselves in the other peoples of the world and create a better understanding of their feelings, wishes and aspirations. We cannot go back to the old days when each country was isolated from others, formed its own policies and simply hoped for the best.

In light of today's world, international politics and the use of weaponry, national boundaries no longer exist. Neither do they exist in the field of pollution, science and technology. We must accept the fact that the institutions of man are lagging far behind. This is one of the many reasons that so many people in the world feel upset and restless at the type of institutions which man creates.

Another point I must make is that in debates such as this we always hear wonderful speeches containing platitudes about people and what they want do do, but action never seems to be taken. Hon. members on all sides suggest solutions for understanding one another better, yet out of the other side of their mouth they continue talking about the same old policies. For example, in the United States the President is talking of international co-operation, about how the big powers must begin to understand one another. At the same time, he is ordering bombing attacks on North Viet Nam. This type of hypocrisy in the world must cease. Hopefully, a world university would make a contribution toward ending this kind of hypocritical attitude on the part of some of the big powers.

War is big business. We spend billions of dollars every year on scientific research and development of armaments. Countries on each side of the world are trying to develop more sophisticated ways of killing, maiming and injuring others; they are developing more sophisticated napalm bombs to drop on women and children in various parts of the world. There is this tremendous emphasis in our society, yet we do very little to foster peace or international development.

We in Canada could do a great deal in that direction if we really wanted to. We have the defence production agreement with the United States. Certain products under that agreement go the United States military complex and find their way into Viet Nam. In that way our country is indirectly involved in the war in Viet Nam. We should not be a party to such things; we should be spending the money going into that agreement on peace research, research into international pollution and environmental problems, promoting world trade, and so on.

We in Canada belong to NORAD. We spend a great deal of money every year on NORAD, but where does it get us? Even some military experts in the United States say NORAD is obsolete and nothing but a waste of money. Why do we not terminate that arrangement and immediately divert the money into projects such as a world university and international development?

We participate in NATO. I question the usefulness of NATO. I say Canada should get out of NATO and concentrate more on international organizations such as the United Nations. I want to make it very clear that this is the direction in which I want Canada to go. Unless we do some of these things, all the speeches we make in this chamber are useless. We talk like nice guys but continue putting money into weaponry to continue the bombing of people in Viet Nam. Unless Canada takes action and gets out of NORAD and NATO by terminating the defence sharing agreements, all our words will be meaningless.

We also carry out research at Suffield, Alberta, in chemical and biological warfare. What is the purpose of this but to develop more sophisticated ways of killing people? This type of research should be terminated. If we really want to put our muscle where our words and our mouths are, we should be doing the things I have mentioned. I know that to many members of the House this may sound like a radical and irresponsible way to go. I do not think it is. I think Canada as a middle power must take a stand such as this. We are a respected nation throughout the world and could provide a great deal more leadership than we are now.

We had an example of our leadership in the recognition of the People's Republic of China. I think we made a contribution there. But that is only a small step in the direction of things we could be doing if Canada became more aggressive and independent in foreign affairs policy, doing something real for the international community.

There are other matters I could mention about a world university and why we should move in that direction. We in Canada, besides considering world problems have a number of parochial matters at stake. Canada has resources that we and other countries want and may need. What will our long-term policy be respecting non-renewable resources? These are questions that could be studied at a world university.

The resource of water was mentioned earlier in this debate. We must consider the question of international trade now that Great Britain and three other countries are joining the European Common Market. We now have Europe, the United States, the eastern and Japanese blocs. Where does Canada fit into this type of trade complex? And what is our future? These are a few of the parochial questions in which Canada is tremendously interested and which could be studied by a world university. For these reasons I support the motion before us.

In a few words I should like to caution some hon. members about one or two situations that may develop if we are not careful. We have a number of institutions around the world studying topics such as I have mentioned, including peace keeping, disarmament, etc. The results of many of these studies have had little impact upon the powers that be; they seem to be very aloof. If we do establish a world university we will have to make it our purpose that such a world centre has real impact on the powers that be: it must have relevance to the powers that be, and links with the decision-making people in world society. Such a university should have relevance to and impact upon the peoples of all countries of the world.

Too often under our foreign aid and international development programs we do not consult the people in the developing countries. We consult only the leaders of these people and we make decisions according to the benefits that may accrue to some multinational corporation or to the departments of external affairs and trade and commerce. We tend to ignore the little guy of the third world. It is this person whom we must not ignore; it is this person whom we must consult and help.

With that in mind, I certainly support this motion and our party supports it. This is a worth-while project to put our money into. I appeal to the cabinet and government backbenchers not to talk it out, but to help us on this side, and members such as the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce, pressure our Secretary of State for External Affairs into taking a decisive stand for once, putting the muscle of Canada into an approach that is worth while and which, I am quite sure, will count in a real way on the world scene.

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, this motion by the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald), so far as I am able to understand it, seems to be directed toward the establishment of a centre which would draw together but duplicate the work being done in committees and institutions of the UN and other international bodies. Each of the three great issues—we do not deny for one moment that they are great issues—is the subject of continual examination. It would seem by his motion that the hon. member wants to have all these activities come together into one centre to be established in Canada.

While the co-ordination and co-operation among the many bodies now existing could undoubtedly be improved so that the ultimate results of their studies and deliberations would be more fruitful, I suggest that yet another body is not necessarily the way to do this. It would result in more duplication of the work of others already in the field, and for a long time would not even do that very well.

The hon. member's motion specifies three great issues which are worthy of further research and co-ordination. However, it seems to me that basically the motion is calling for research into what can provide the political, economic and social elements of the peace which the vast majority of the world's people desire. This basic question, probably the greatest, is also the subject of study and research in many countries, Canada included. The UN General Assembly recognized the need for co-ordination in this field in December, 1971, when it passed, by a large majority, resolution 2817. That resolution notes the work done in the field of peace research by national and international institutions, by the UN educational, scientific and cultural organization and the UN institute for training and research.

The United Nation's Secretary General is instructed by the resolution to prepare biennially, and he has already begun to do so, an informative report on scientific works produced by national, international, governmental and non-governmental, public and private institutions in the field of peace research. Therefore, with the co-operation of Canada, since our delegation co-sponsored this resolution, some of the very basic work which the hon. member would have his world centre undertake has already commenced at our existing world centre, the United Nations. I suggest our efforts should concentrate on making more effective the machinery we have already, machinery into which is built an immense amount of experience and expertise, rather than start all over again.

The fact that these three great global issues still defy solution is due not to lack of knowledge and the exchange of information but, rather, to the competing policies and philosophies of the world's states. A Canadian government-financed research centre, however well organized and staffed could—

An hon. Member: Author?

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I think I can say it without reading it for your benefit. Such a centre could not very well eliminate all this rivalry. The rival powers could still preclude the possibility of translating the studies of the centre into effective action. It has been said that the United Nations is an accurate reflection of an imperfect world. It is that imperfect world which hinders the furtherance of the objectives of the United Nations. That imperfect world, not the lack of studies and co-ordination, also delays significant action to alleviate the hon. member's three issues of international relations and peace, global problems of development and the impact of science and technology on the environment.

Few subjects can have come under such a degree of interdisciplinary and international scrutiny and discussion as disarmament and arms control. Individually and collectively, scientists, scholars, statesmen and soldiers have grappled with the problem of reducing armaments while maintaining international security. The problem has been one of main concern at the United Nations and in various special negotiating bodies, in particular the disarmament conference in Geneva in which Canada participates. While no one can deny that these discussions include their share of empty verbiage, they also stimulate ideas, assessments and proposals based on substantial international thought and research.

Last year, for instance, the United Nations produced a major report on the economic and social consequences of the arms race. This report was prepared by a group of scientists and scholars from western, Soviet and non-aligned countries, including a distinguished Canadian professor. A Canadian was also a member of a similar team which drew up a United Nations' report on chemical and biological warfare in 1969.

A glance through the annual report of the disarmament conference in Geneva shows that this body's work, though essentially political, also benefits from solid technical study and analysis. Some of the topics dealt with in recent background working papers include many things, such as employment of ocean-bottom seismographs to improve present detection capability for seismic events and possibly to increase the capability of identifying explosions from natural events as well, aspects of the definition of toxins and a method to determine, in numerical terms, the usefulness of particular seismic discriminations to the political decision problems posed by nuclear test ban control with or without obligatory inspections.

Canada has contributed fully to the technical background of the Geneva discussions. For instance, in 1971 the Canadian delegation submitted papers on atmospheric sensing and verification of a ban on development, production and stockpiling of chemical weapons, and seismological detection and identification of underground nuclear explosion.

In Canada, studies and analyses of arms and disarmament problems are carried on in the normal course of their work by officials of the departments of external affairs and national defence. They are able to keep in touch with thinking in other countries through the usual diplomatic channels and through international conferences, particularly the disarmament committee in Geneva. Moreover, Canadian universities are devoting increasing attention to arms control and disarmament as part of their international relations or strategic studies programs, and are being encouraged in doing so by federal government grants.

Specialists in these fields from the academic world and the public service are continually exchanging views and ideas both through informal contact at home and abroad and at more formal gatherings such as the seminars organized from time to time by the Canadian Institute of International Affairs. This institute has in recent years made a major effort to stimulate research and publication in this general field, and other private organizations take a serious interest in the question of disarmament.

In short, in the field of disarmament there is no lack of interest or activity by highly qualified people who remain well aware of each other's work though their activities are not always co-ordinated through a formal structure. They are making an invaluable, indeed essential contribution toward the eventual slowing down and termination of the arms race. The slowness of progress in this field is not the result of anybody's failure or inability to keep informed but, rather, of an insufficient will on the part of a number of world states to seek resolution of their differences by peaceful means.

I would also like to speak on another matter pertaining to the hon. member's motion. The motion provides an opportunity to focus on a great task which confronts Canada and the other developed and developing nations of the world. Acknowledgement of one part of this problem of importance to all Canadians formed the climax of President Nixon's recent visit. I would bring to the attention of the hon. member that the signing of the Great Lakes water control agreement to begin to restore the Great Lakes did not have to await the formation of a new research and co-ordination centre. Drawing on the studies and recommendations of the International Joint Commission and other bodies, procedures for effective action have been formulated.

The Great Lakes problem is a complicated and expensive one to solve. The impact of science and technology, especially the deleterious effects which these advances have had on environment throughout the world, also will be complicated and expensive to solve. The handling of the relatively local situation in the Great Lakes is compounded by the authorities of several jurisdictions. It is not difficult to project this to the national, hemispheric or global stage to realize that here is a world wide matter which requires maximum co-ordination and co-operation so that the complementary and competing needs and desires of the world's peoples can be met to the maximum degree possible. The achievement of this requires, also, utilization of a vast wealth of data, special studies, highly professional skills and so on.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. The hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business has now expired.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CRIMINAL LAW AMENDMENT ACT, 1972

AMENDMENTS TO CRIMINAL CODE, CRIMINAL RECORDS ACT, NATIONAL DEFENCE ACT, PAROLE ACT AND VISITING FORCES ACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lang that Bill C-2, to amend the Criminal Code and to make related amendments to the Criminal Code 1967 Amendment Act, the Criminal Records Act, the National Defence Act, the Parole Act and the Visiting Forces Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mr. D. Gordon Blair (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, just before private members' hour I had an opportunity to pay my respectful tribute to the work in the field of penal reform of the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch). I would also like to recall to the House the contributions made by other hon. members, most notably the late Don Brown, the former member for Essex West. That hon. member, with Senator Hayden, was joint chairman of the Senate and House of Commons committee which considered this subject in the 1950s.

A former prime minister, the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) this afternoon indicated how difficult it is to discuss rationally the question of crime and punishment. He made it perfectly clear that those who oppose corporal punishment do not do so out of any false sentiment. The hon. member for Prince Albert and others who oppose the imposition of corporal punishment do so for the simple reason that this form of punishment has not and will not do any good.

Many people in our society linger under the impression that what is important in restraining and deterring crime is the severity of punishment, but we know from history that this is not so. The records of the nineteenth century tell us of little children having been hanged for theft, of men and women having been brutally whipped for committing very small offences. In general, the early part of the nineteenth century was characterized both in Europe and in North America by great violence, and these severe punishments, far from deterring the commission of crime perhaps escalated it.

Over many years society has found out that the real deterrent to crime has been the certainty of apprehension and of conviction at trial. This is a lesson which it is difficult for many people to accept, because it is much easier to believe that there is a quick and simple solution to crime, that we have it within our power to do something which is relatively easy and inexpensive in order to prevent the commission of crime. But in fact, as every member of the House knows, the control of crime in modern society will cost money and the devotion of a great deal of governmental effort.

To control crime we need better policemen, more respect for police forces, better rapport between the police and the public, an attack on some of the basic social causes of crime, better courts, more facilities, more judges and—I hesitate to say it—perhaps even more lawyers. The whole process of trial should not be so drawn out and subject to all kinds of unusual accidents and hazards. The total process should be carried on rationally in the interests of defending society and also of protecting the rights of those charged. I can recall that when the report of the committee was prepared in 1956, a senior senator on the committee remarked to me that it marked "the end of an illusion", the illusion that there is an easy way out, a simple way of dealing with serious crime.

I should like to make one or two comments on the merits of the longstanding discussion on corporal punishment in this country. I commend, for the consideration of hon. members, the report of the joint Senate and House of Commons committee representing, as I said earlier, three years of work during the course of which the committee heard expert evidence on the subject not only from Canada but from Great Britain, the United States and elsewhere. I think at that time the committee's investigation constituted something of a novelty in our parliament and still stands as a great accomplishment in terms of parliamentary inquiry.

One thing the committee noted immediately was that corporal punishment had become a very rare event; it was applied only in a minute percentage of the cases where it could have been applied. In much less than 1 per cent of the cases where corporal punishment could have been imposed was it actually applied in the middle 1950s, and we know that its use as a punishment since that time has become increasingly rarer. We might ask ourselves why this should be. In asking that question we are faced with the formidable answer that the collective judgment of those who are most concerned with the administration of justice, be they police, courts, penal officials, in fact experts of every kind, is that it is a useless punishment. This is why corporal punishment is rare. Its imposition has not been reduced because of any sentimental impulse on the part of people charged with the administration of justice, but simply because long experience has taught them that it has done no good.

The hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) said in this House last Friday that the retention of corporal punishment was necessary to deter the commission of violent crime. He thereby committed the illogical indiscretion of failing to explain why violent crime had occurred even when this type of punishment remained in the Criminal Code. It is a punishment that has almost grown out of date because of the judgment of people that it is useless. In 1956, the committee noted that in most countries corporal punishment had been abandoned and that before it had been abandoned it had ceased to be used. The committee commented as follows:

> In this respect, Canada would appear to be in line with other democratic countries which abandoned corporal punishment after its use had steadily decreased over a considerable period of time.

Another feature of the discussion on corporal punishment is the suggestion that it might have special utility for young offenders. This suggestion was made last Friday by the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt) and it has been repeated on many occasions in the course of discussions on this subject. It has been suggested that a quick spanking or caring would have more effect on a young offender than his being put in prison or being subjected to other types of treatment. The committee anticipated the argument of the hon. member for Oxford because at one stage its report states:

> Several witnesses suggested corporal punishment might be particularly effective against this type of offender—

They had been speaking about leather-jacketed hooligans.

> —because it would humiliate him in the eyes of his companions and take away the false glamour attached to a person who had been unaffected by lesser punishments.

However, the committee then noted the reservation which was expressed even by those who advocated this course of action. I quote again from the report at page 44, where people advocating this kind of treatment for young offenders stated:

> Some form of pre-sentence investigation and report was suggested which would take into account physical, mental, emotional, environmental, and other relevant factors in the background of the offender. This was considered to be necessary, particularly in the case of young offenders who had not proven amenable to other methods of correction and who might be so constituted as to suffer grave harm from the infliction of corporal punishment.

Wherever the committee pursued the arguments for the retention of corporal punishment it came to the conclusion, after serious investigation of the available evidence and the opinions of experts from all over the world, that those arguments would not bear up. Perhaps it would be most helpful if I were to quote one of its general conclusions. This passage is taken from page 45 of the report:

Generally, in relation to all types of offenders, those favouring abolition argue that corporal punishment could produce no quick cure and was apt to do positive harm. The rarity of the sentence in Canada meant that its imposition was inconsistent and inequitable, a factor recognized by representatives of the police. Its imposition, under present conditions, depended upon the views of particular judges and, perhaps, also the swings of public opinion; and sometimes bore little relation to the nature of offences or offenders. It was considered a degrading punishment; and, since it was more likely to arouse feelings of resentment and revenge, it was urged that public humiliation of offenders could not be a proper foundation for their reform. To bring out the best in young offenders, better methods of treatment could be employed and, to protect society from recidivists and sexual offenders, isolation and segregation could be used to greater effect. Although no specific evidence was produced, the opinion was expressed that corporal punishment might adversely affect prison officials either by bringing out sadistic impulses or discouraging the application of positive reformative measures.

Thereafter, the committee considered in detail the pointed question as to whether or not corporal punishment deterred the commission of further offences by persons to whom it was applied. At one stage in the committee's investigation, on its behalf I personally investigated the cases of approximately 20 people who had been subjected to corporal punishment. I interviewed them all. My distinct recollection of this experience was that corporal punishment could not be said to have done the least bit of good for any of those men. In fact, I could well remember, many years after the event, that in describing what had happened to them their eyes blazed and the hair on the back of their neck raised. I remembered how bitter they became.

I accept entirely the view of the committee that corporal punishment, far from deterring the commission of further crimes by people to whom it is applied, is much more likely to create a situation in their minds which will make reform more difficult and a continuing criminal career more likely. The committee also considered in great detail whether there was any evidence that the presence or absence of corporal punishment in general had any effect in restraining the commission of crime. Although the view of many people may be that severe punishment such as corporal punishment might have this effect, certainly it does not stand up under investigation and the committee concluded that corporal punishment does not exercise any unique deterrent effect in addition to that provided by other methods of punishment.

Mr. Speaker, my purpose in going through the committee's report is to indicate that this matter has been seriously considered by parliament, and that a very superior parliamentary committee representing both Houses many years ago found that corporal punishment as a judicial sentence did no good and recommended its abolition. I think that if we accept the recommendations contained in the bill before us, and abolish corporal punishment, we will accomplish a great legal reform.

I should like to mention that there is a difference between the recommendations of the committee of which I have been speaking and the bill. The committee recommended the abolition of corporal punishment as a judicial sentence, but it did not recommend its abolition as a punishment in our penal institutions. The reason was that at that time the Commissioner of Penitentiaries and his staff considered it necessary to retain this form of punishment as an ultimate sanction in the preserving of discipline in penitentiaries. The committee, although accepting that view, was of the opinion that it should be used only rarely, in special circumstances and under conditions of complete control. The committee recommended, for example, that it should not be used except with the express permission of the Commissioner of Penitentiaries.

The result has been that over the years the use of corporal punishment as a method of discipline in our penitentiaries has decreased. As the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert) pointed out in his address last Friday, the former commissioner of penitentiaries, when giving evidence to the justice committee a year or two ago, expressed the view that it was no longer necessary as a disciplinary sanction in penitentiaries. Therefore, the recommendation contained in this bill, that corporal punishment be abolished both in the judicial sense and as a form of punishment in our penitentiaries, seems to be supported by the evidence and the experience both in the courts and in the penal system.

Mr. Speaker, at the beginning of this address I said that society is concerned with the rise in crimes of violence and violence in general. Not unnaturally, people in society seek to find quick solutions to these problems; they seek easy answers for violence and crime. But I suggest that there are no easy answers. Certainly, the least effective of the answers suggested is that of severe punishment, such as corporal punishment, because it has no good effect. We do ourselves credit in facing up to this reality, and perhaps we can lead the people of this country to a better understanding of the fundamentals of our society. If we are to have less crime and less violence, the social causes of crime must be attacked and, as a country, we must be prepared to spend far more money and devote much better people to the control of crime in our police forces, in our judicial systems and in our treatment systems.

Mr. Speaker, I have spoken of only one aspect of this bill but I have listened with great interests to the comments of hon. members on all the other subjects, including aerial hijacking about which I have had deep concern. I hope that this bill will shortly be referred to the committee so that it can be considered in detail, brought back to the House and enacted into law.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, the House is now dealing with Bill C-2, to amend the Criminal Code and to make related amendments to the Criminal Code 1967 Amendment Act, the Criminal Records Act, the National Defence Act, the Parole Act and the Visiting Forces Act.

Mr. Speaker, no human need is more essential than that of individual security, no desire more instinctive than that of being free from fear. If one does not feel secure at home or in the street, if one is threatened—by an agent of a police state or by a criminal or even by discriminatory economic forces—one is not safe any more. In that sense, the legendary freedom of the Canadian people is eroded more and more every day.

Social disorders, bludgeon laws, undue union thrusts, violence, increased discrimination, the frustration felt by more and more citizens in the presence of the enormous wealth of this country, such are the characteristics of a situation that is painful to describe when one knows that our ancestors always stood with such conviction for freedom.

In the face of those modern problems, to provide protection which is the basis of freedom and security is the first duty of a government in the judicial field. Now, today, more and more people question the judicial power. To quote but one example, I say that the too great influence of party politics and money in the administration of justice have been the cause of a greater and greater lack of confidence of the people in the judicial power, which is something very serious.

The appointment of judges is often a matter of politics. The same can be said of the bail system, which often enables the rich to come off well and causes the poor to rot behind the slow administrative process of justice.

Finally, to be free as well as secure, one must have some financial security, which, unfortunately, is the case of fewer and fewer Canadians.

This explains the feelings of frustration, of dissent, of violence, which are not only modern social phenomena, but mostly the result of a provoking economic policy which leads us to obvious social injustice. That is why we must strive after a policy of fair distribution and try to eliminate those understandable feelings of frustration.

Mr. Speaker, there is a great deal to say about the whole concept of justice. Let us say right away that an incomplete and partial revision of the Criminal Code, as proposed in the bill before us, does not necessarily mean a reform of justice. We shall have to consider it at length and go much further.

By the way, does the minister know where we are heading with this minor reform? The criminal law must be a changing and evolutive tool of social order, and I am disappointed when I realize that instead of going all out in that direction, that goal, the government is satisfied with minor reforms, except for clause 24, which abolishes the additional punishment of whipping.

This is a very good measure which comes, once again, too late.

Bill C-2 is a kind of omnibus bill, dealing with several matters, such as the breathalyzer false alarms, conditional discharges, and so on.

Mr. Speaker, I shall try to deal with some of these points and make a constructive criticism.

Insofar as conditional discharges are concerned, I shall refer to new clauses 545 and 662.1 of the bill. In short, the government proposes to broaden, once more, the Parole Act, in order to make it more flexible and workable.

The concept of the public interest is also invoked in those two sections and it is stated that parole will be granted in cases other than those previously provided for where the interests of the accused are not contrary to those of the public.

That is a new concept in this act on parole, but no definition of public interest is given, which can lead us to asking ourselves questions.

In this connection, I shall bring up a point at this time. On the one hand, the government broadens the act on parole to include other categories of accused while, on the other hand, the same government does not set up any mechanism for the control, the probation or the rehabilitation of the accused discharged either conditionally or unconditionally.

Mr. Speaker, I have statistics on this in my office, but off-hand one can surely say that every parole officer must deal with at least 20 to 30 criminals. Surely then he cannot deal with each prisoner to whom parole is granted, either conditionally or unconditionally, on an individual, human and personalized basis.

And so, Mr. Speaker, we read the type of news recently published in the Gazette to the effect that the crime rate is increasing in Canada, that experience with parole is more or less satisfactory, more often than not, unfortunate, and that a system of control, of review, should be adopted in that field.

Who makes up that Parole Board? Competent people, people who are interested in that field? It does not comprise more than ten members who simply travel across Canada, through areas they know more or less, and who often make decisions that are contrary to that of the judge, so that in many cases the work accomplished by the Parole Board renders that of the judge useless. And so the lack of planning and co-ordination becomes evident.

Mr. Speaker, if the government wants to broaden the law on parole, it will have to set up, in due course, a control or probation mechanism for each prisoner, to allow for his case being followed.

I have personally visited some prisons and the Social Welfare Court in Montreal. I have met some judges, I have talked with them and I have attended hearings. What I have seen is absolutely incredible, indeed it is an indescribable chaos. There are some people who are endeavouring to administer justice as best they can in spite of the bureaucracy, inadequate legislation and the lack of a rehabilitation system, as a result of which the same judge constantly sees the same individuals from one generation to another. This shows, Mr. Speaker, how our crime prevention system is inadequate.

To give you another quite typical example, I have always wondered why the parole legislation could not apply to young delinquents. For a criminal who has been condemned eight or ten times, I have data published in Hansard in reply to a question of mine to the Minister of Justice. After being condemned more than 20 times, some criminals re-apply for parole and the Board grants their request. They are hardened criminals; I should say professional criminals.

However, a young delinquent, after his first or second offence, is not eligible for parole. Nevertheless, if there is someone who would have some chance of being rehabilitated, of straightening up, of becoming respectful of social order, it is that young man. But instead of that, he is jailed with other young people, sometimes even with hardened criminals and when he is freed, he is at least twice as bad as before.

Mr. Speaker, those prisons or detention centres are practically crime schools and it is sad to note that no immediate or realistic step is taken.

Parole is granted to a hardened, professional criminal, while a young first offender will rot in a detention centre with homosexuals, criminals guilty of assault and battery, burglary, attempted rape, etc. When he is freed, this youngster is briefed about ways to commit crimes. He has been living in this. No one cared to rehabilitate him in a very personal way. Finally, we make a criminal out of him.

I will remind the House of an unfortunate incident which took place in Hull. A criminal, whose name I cannot remember, killed a policeman sometime ago, in the city of Hull. This same criminal had been taken under probation by the brother of the policeman who was killed. This indicates how difficult it is to rehabilitate a hardened criminal, even when he is given very special and personal care.

So, what do we do with our young offenders? If it is so hard with hardened criminals, what are we waiting for to help these youngsters who, very often, appear before the Welfare court judge, precisely because they have not lived in a good family circle, because their parents lacked money, or for any other kinds of reasons? What do we do? Absolutely nothing. Petty reforms with a lot of publicity, and that is all!

It seems that we lack logic. If we are truly concerned with justice in Canada, we must tackle this problem without delay.

Mr. Speaker, even if we have fair laws, the best judges, the best judicial system in the world, if the people who enforce the law—I mean the police forces, among others—do not enjoy the confidence of the authorities and are put, by the political power, in positions such that they can give even give rise to violence, in short, if morale among our police forces is low, it is useless to think that justice will be improved in Canada, no matter what legislation is introduced.

• (2040)

And that relates to the problem of capital punishment.

A few years ago, in Victoriaville, officer Collard was called to the scene of a crime with another policeman in order to arrest the perpetrators of a burglary. Not only did the bandits escape but they fired at the policemen. In fact, officer Collard lost 12 months of work, because of the wounds received on that occasion. The bandit was jailed, he applied for parole and our very intelligent and very brilliant Parole Board granted the parole without imposing any control nor appointing any probation officer. The same man, a little later, commits another burglary in Sainte-Thérèse-de-Blainville and kills another policeman.

Then, policemen will be told, enforce the law, get closer to the people, go out and risk your life.

Mr. Speaker, on the one hand, our police forces are asked to risk their lives for the welfare of society, while at the same time nothing is done to administer justice properly. What is the use of chasing a criminal if, once he is arrested, he is immediately released without probation or control? What is the use of police forces if justice is not administered logically, in spite of the amounts spent to track down criminals?

Mr. Speaker, I believe that that is a basic problem.

A policeman in Drummondville, in the riding of the Minister of Industry, Trade, and Commerce (Mr. Pepin), who is not here at present, is crippled for life; he uses a wheelchair and he cannot work. Why? Because he went to the scene of a crime, tried to arrest the criminal and was fired upon. The criminal was caught a little later and released under the rules governing the famous Parole Board.

An hon. Member: That is part of the job.

Mr. Fortin: Why should this or that police officer or police corps be required to show concern, courage and good will in their work when justice is not administered efficiently.

This does not necessarily mean that capital punishment should be requested in all cases involving criminal law. It means that the time has come for the administration of justice to be logical. If it is worth while to allot money to the tracking down of criminals and to their rehabilitation, to the application of laws, to the maintenance of police services which are becoming more and more expensive to operate, it is certainly worth while to tackle this problem and follow up on the convicts afterwards. Every possible means to rehabilitate them should be taken, if the majority wishes so. But at least let us take these steps rather than fail in our task as happened with the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) and the Solicitor General (Mr. Goyer) with respect to the National Parole Board. The Solicitor General, I suggest, acts something like a clown. When during one week-end he releases prisoners who all do return to jail, he says: My program is an excellent one. During the following week-end, some of those he has released fail to come back and then he says: The Board's program is not that good; they are to be blamed. When results are good, he gets the credit; when they are not, he blames the Board. But whatever the outcome, the Solicitor General is never available. He is satisfied with the publicity made around his successful week-ends. When there is failure, he sinks his head in the sand like an ostrich and dares not face the problem.

Mr. Speaker, it follows that the population is asking questions about the administration of justice. In fact, people want politics to be divorced from the administration of justice in Canada. Canadians would like to see some measure of responsibility in the enforcement of laws and some respect for the Criminal Code.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for High Park (Mr. Deakon) seeks the floor.

Mr. Deakon: Will the hon. member accept a question?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member has asked whether the hon. member who has the floor will receive a question.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: But, of course, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Deakon: Mr. Speaker, can the hon. member tell the House the percentage of those who have been released on parole or on visits and who have not returned, or have done something wrong while out? What is the percentage compared with those who have returned?

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I don't have these figures on hand, and rather than quote a figure of which I am not sure, I prefer to send this information to the hon. member who is asking the question. If he is genuinely interested, I shall send him the documents that the Solicitor General distributes to all members. However, the statistics are there to prove the point.

There is no doubt that in the case of some criminal offenders, it is worthwhile to try everything to rehabilitate them. I would even be inclined to believe, Mr. Speaker, that in most cases, since they are human beings who may have made one, two or three mistakes in their lifetime, we have the duty to respect not only the law but also the individuals. But, this means also that the government is not afraid of assuming their responsibilities and taking all available means to protect society.

Actually, the background of all those problems is the same. When you go to the Welfare Court—and I invite my colleagues to do so—and meet young delinquents, you realize that most of them are there precisely because the family environment was either totally lacking—they are children who grew up in the streets—or rotten to the core. When the family, for financial, marital or other reasons cannot assume its responsibilities toward a child, more often than not he will become a delinquent.

Furthermore, the system of rehabilitation of young delinquents is inadequate and practically inexistant, first because of a shortage of probation officers and second because the Parole Act cannot be applied to these young people. For several similar reasons, the centre eventually becomes a school of crime.

When the family and society have failed to rehabilitate a young delinquent, should we convict him, when we all share the guilt for that situation?

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the problem of young delinquents is now the most urgent in the field of administration of justice in Canada and that it is inacceptable that today nothing is being done about it. Even the co-operation which should take place between provincial and federal governments has become inexistent.

I should like to say something else about the bill: there is to be in the near future a review of the abolition of capital punishment.

The hon. Minister of Justice has promised repeatedly that a debate would be held in the House on this issue, giving all hon. members an opportunity to speak for or against capital punishment. Mr. Speaker, I personally carried out a survey in my riding. I sent out 17,885 copies of a questionnaire to families, asking them: "Are you for or against, give me your opinion."

Frankly, the response from those people was extraordinary. Indeed I should appreciate our having an opportunity in this House to tell the government what the people of Lotbinière think of this issue, of social order and justice in general. For that, Mr. Speaker, the minister will have to stop promising a debate on capital punishment and grant it. Let the government stop putting it off indefinitely and give hon. members an opportunity to express the views of their constituents in this House.

All my colleagues have made similar inquiries and, needless to say, Mr. Speaker, opinions differ. How can it be otherwise? But precisely because this is a very important subject on which opinions differ, we must hold this debate in the House of Commons and deal with this issue immediately.

• (2050)

Mr. Speaker, I should like to conclude my remarks by stating that it is an undeniable fact recognized by all members that criminality or the crime rate in Canada is increasing.

There is a second thing that must be said: the cost of the administration of justice in Canada is soaring.

There is a third thing that must also be said: movements of violence, frustration, dissent are increasingly serious in Canada, are also increasing.

Lastly, Mr. Speaker, the crime rate among the young is rising alarmingly and distressingly.

These are four facts that, if related, point to a common source, a common problem. When you ask the government to establish more intelligent and more adequate rehabilitation systems, when you ask it to provide more adequate structures and equipment for the administration of justice, the government replies that it lacks money.

Actually, if rehabilitation is not more advanced in Canada, Mr. Speaker, it is because we have no money. If there are so many criminals in Canada, it is simply because wealth and poverty live side by side, and that such flagrant injustice causes people to revolt, commit crimes, and so on and so forth—

This past week-end, the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Benson) announced that members of the Canadian Armed Forces would be instructed in riot prevention and control methods. This, Mr. Speaker, is another problem of modern times. All of this results from the fact that there exists in Canada—we shall have to recognize this one of these days—a basic economic problem; it is not because our Bill of Rights and all our other legislation say that "all Canadians are equal", or that it is written in our Criminal code that "all citizens are equal and will be treated as equals before the law" that we must believe that they actually are. For they are not, Mr. Speaker, and to believe otherwise is to delude oneself!

We all know that poverty and unemployment prevail in all parts of Canada. We all know that many families who depend on social welfare hand-outs cannot make ends meet with their meager monthly allowances.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, if the Canadian family—the basic unit of our society—is deprived of the necessary financial means of survival, it will continue to break up more and more as it has done over the past 10 years, which will unavoidably result in an increased criminal index, in spite of the considerable amounts of money we may invest in the rehabilitation of criminals and the administration of justice.

Mr. Speaker, this reminds me of some sort of poultice on a wooden leg. Instead of dealing with the problems which generate criminals who, because of their utmost poverty and destitution, are induced into stealing, rebelling and joining protest or violence groups, the government will rather tackle the sequels of the problems such as the rise in the crime rate. Then, what do they do to reduce this rate? Criminals are let out on bail and without being rehabilitated so much so that poverty and frustration continue to increase in our society. In final analysis, the crime rate is rising and those criminals freed on bail continue to be criminals.

I wish to refer my colleagues to answers given by the former Minister of Justice to questions which I had put on the Order Paper and they will then realize as I said before, how this can be so ridiculous.

Criminals of the type we find in Kingston's penitentiary, Mr. Speaker, have been convicted more than 20 times and have been paroled after their twenty-first conviction.

In other words, the Parole Board is sheer window-dressing on the part of the government which hopes to conceal his inability to correct the situation concerning the administration of justice. It is more or less a means of politely getting rid of criminals while keeping a good front under the prextext of respecting the human being.

There being no probation and control methods, criminals are left to fend for themselves. It follows that the crime rate goes on increasing in Canada and the situation keeps on worsening.

Mr. Speaker, in short now is the time to keep politics out of justice and to have all citizens treated equally before the law. The bail system should be entirely revamped, as I said at the beginning of my remarks. Imprisonment does not last very long for the well-to-do and they finally get away with it. However, the penniless must wait because of the slowness of the administrative process because they have no money to put up for bail.

In the field of justice, money is becoming an important factor. If it is true that all Canadians are equal and can enjoy freedom and security, the government should start by setting up some sensible and modern financial machinery to meet the probems of a modern society through distributive justice.

Secondly, the government should set up at all costs a rehabilitation and probation system for all criminals likely to be rehabilitated.

Last but not least, the government should take steps as soon as possible to rehabilitate juvenile delinquents who are perhaps the most neglected and who most need our attention.

In fact, those people cannot make themselves heard and it is our duty as members of Parliament to defend them.

I urge the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) to look into this problem and to take the steps required to put some order in this system.

[Mr. Fortin.]

In conclusion, I would point out that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Ouellet) made not only an offensive but a dishonest remark about Créditiste members.

The same member over the last three years, has risen in his seat exactly 14 times, and he now takes the liberty of making derogatory and dishonest remarks about his colleagues. I think that if his constituents knew that over a period of three years, even as parliamentary secretary, he spoke only 14 times, while the Créditiste members spoke on average more than twice a day, they would realize that government members are more interested in indulging in petty politics than in actually governing the country.

Once again tonight, he is conspicuous by his absence as usual. That is why he did not manage to speak more than 14 times in three years.

Mr. Gilles Marceau (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I do not think it would be approriate to deal at length with the bill now before us.

As a member of the legal profession and of the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, I simply want to state a few general principles which seem to underlie this legislation.

The bill before us purports to strike a balance between the maintenance of order and the fair treatment to be meted out to offenders. We should avoid a treatment that is imbued with a spirit of revenge. It should instead be characterized by the wish to rehabilitate the accused. Still, that balance is difficult to achieve, since the principles involved are to my mind of equal importance.

I must admit that this bill arouses both fear and hope in me.

It arouses fear because it seems to grant exceptional importance to those who break the law, or who are willing to do so. Of course, I do not claim that those who have made one or two errors are not entitled to some compassion and justice. But I have noticed that often the funds spent on their rehabilitation are so considerable that those who respect the law, who make it their duty to be citizens respectful of the freedom of others, are at times deprived of the money they would need to further assist the society in which they live.

I remember that not so long ago, in the case of a local initiative, I had strongly recommended the launching of two projects: Cinébec and the Conseil des parents. But these two projects have been turned down. Sometime, certain people in my riding—and I think that this is the same in others—say: You are spending $10,000 in order to try and rehabilitate a convict, and when some people submit respectable and honest projects, you refuse to grant them the required credits.

I think that it is time, if we want society to find again its fundamental values, as well as the wealth that has made it into what it is now, that policies tend toward greater assistance, for those who work modestly but honestly in our society. Those are the middle-class people, who see their taxes rising all the time. Those are also the aged who receive only $135 or $255 a month those who in fact are the backbone of society, and who are too often neglected because of the wrong-doings of some people towards whom I do not want to be unjust because they are not always entirely responsible for their actions. Nevertheless they have violated the law and have acted towards society in such a way as to surely deserve some punishment.

Just the same, Mr. Speaker, I think that priorities should be set up sometimes. And I must say that the bill now being considered—this may be a source of hope for me, as I said earlier—includes excellent provisions which, in my opinion, are bound to be satisfactory to us.

For instance, when it is provided that a suicide attempt is no longer an offence under the law, I think that this is quite normal, and should have been enacted many years ago. In fact, people committing such an offence are obviously sick in their minds, and putting them in jail will never offer a solution to their problems. I think that anybody will agree on that.

Added to all this, there is a very good provision with which I am genuinely pleased. In my profession, I have often had to defend people charged with driving a car while under the influence of liquor. Their driving permits were taken away from them, and could no longer earn their living.

Today, the law has become more lenient because it considers that not only the one who infringes the law must be penalized in a certain way, but also that we must not deprive the family of its sole breadwinner. As a matter of fact, being deprived of his driving licence, the accused lost his job and was no longer able to earn his own living and that of his family. This provision of the law that allows an intermittent sentence is, in my view, a great improvement, and I think it will be well received by all the right-thinking people.

There is also the question of the National Parole Board. And on this point, I would be tempted to agree with the comments made by the hon. member who spoke before me. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that we would not have to vote on the re-establishment of capital punishment if the National Parole Board was playing its role better. I believe it must be recognized—and I should like my criticism to be constructive—that all too often those who benefit most from this Board are the most hardened criminals. I have personally had the opportunity to defend cases where in my opinion the accused were worthy of consideration. They were first offenders soliciting parole to whom this privilege was denied. I knew on the other hand that hardened criminals, with heavy records, were able, by means unknown but deplored, to obtain parole and thereby returned to society where they committed new crimes which brought them back to jail.

I believe the Parole Board, which is an essential agency, should be restructured and that it should really fulfill the purpose for which it was created, parole being limited to cases where there is a real likelihood of rehabilitation.

The matter of capital punishment will, in my opinion, be much less serious and it should be easier for us to arrive at a decision in this regard.

Mr. Speaker, the Parole Board might be one of the most important problems but I trust that its efficiency will be improved in the not too distant future.

Mr. Speaker, I think that this bill which has been in preparation for nearly a year provides some solutions. For instance, I was favourably impressed by the comments of my friend the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Hogarth) this afternoon on the clause that provides that a judge after a trial or an admission of guilt can refrain from imposing a fine or a sentence of imprisonment on an individual who has pleaded guilty or has been declared guilty.

In my opinion, it is wrong to have the bill not prevent the individual from being convicted because if the person concerned does not deserve a conviction, I cannot see why he would deserve having a criminal record when one considers its importance and implications. In spite of the fact that the new Criminal Records Act provides for the destruction of a reocrd after a period of five years, during that time the record of an individual may be a millstone around his neck which limits his possibilities for employment and often excludes him from taking any active part in society.

I should have liked—I shall discuss this matter in committee—the bill to go still farther, because, some highly technical offences appear to have been committed. I remember, for instance, the case of this man who now has a criminal record because during a hunting season, he had kept in his locked car a loaded gun with both locks in the "safety" position. I find it highly ridiculous that this man's life be affected by a criminal record which may limit his activity and prevent him from playing an important part in society.

This bill, Mr. Speaker, puts an end to the use of the lash. I think that everybody agrees that corporal punishment is not a human way of making those people guilty of errors pay their debt to society. I think it is pointless to discuss it any further; we are happy for it. It does indicate that the government has made a step further, making a move for which the minister should be commended.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to conclude these comments by saying: that this bill which is immensely important, must not lead us to forget that the Criminal Code, as it is, needs to be overhauled and I hope that the Law Reform Commission of Canada will enter into action as soon as possible, in order to propose a law better adjusted to our modern needs and written, I hope, in a clearer language.

People are often complaining and rightly so that the words used are often incomprehensible and that, in a certain way, they lead to injustice. I hope that the Law Reform Commission will accomplish its work in a competent and fair manner and that it will look for ways to improve the Criminal Code so that it will meet the present needs.

Mr. Speaker, as I was saying a while ago, I hope that this proposed legislation which is excellent and which meets with my approval will not restrict the money put at the disposal of other honest and thoughtful citizens who are playing an active role in society and within the framework of the Youth Opportunities Program. I would hope that those who have submitted projects will not for ever be refused the money needed for the realization of their projects because it has been used for people other than those who really need it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, as a lawyer I feel it necessary to become involved in this debate. On the other hand, I do not wish to be repetitious because my colleague, the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave) has put before the House the position our party feels it should take. I think he should be commended for the argument he elaborated and placed before the House, because it showed a considerable amount of thought and a contemporary thinking. In all fairness to the government, I believe it is moving in the right direction in this regard also. I also find it extremely important to relate our social ills to crime because it seems to me they have been related for some time.

I believe it would be wrong for us to think that the bill which is before us amending several sections of the Criminal Code, the Parole Act, and so on, is a panacea for what one could call domestic tranquility, in terms of violence. I wish to place on record some thoughts I have garnered as a result of being in possession of an extremely important report tabled in 1969 by a commission in the United States.

In order to give some credibility to the statement I have just made, in terms of not being able to separate the two matters to which I referred, violence and our social ills, I recommend that members who were on the justice committee and those who would like to be enlightened, like my hon. friend on the left who always interjects—I hope he will give us an opportunity to hear his words of wisdom—acquire this report entitled, "The final report of the National Commission on the Causes and Prevention of Violence". The title indicates that some thought went into the inquiry because it also states it was to establish justice and to ensure domestic tranquility. I think this is the sort of thing we are all concerned about—domestic tranquility and the establishment of justice.

I hope hon. members will understand what I am hoping to point out when I refer to this question. I shall not dwell on it too long but shall merely give some concrete examples of why I have been able to come to the conclusion that we should not look on this bill as a panacea. I recommend this report to all members who do not have a copy of it. Hon. members who were part of the Canadian delegation met many of our colleagues in the United States and it would be very simple to write them and ask for a copy of this book. I believe it is extremely important to read what is stated in the book on page 27, as follows:

> Much has been written about inner-city slums where crime and delinquency are bred. Social scientists have analyzed slum conditions and their causal link to crime and violence, writers and artists have dramatized the sordidness and the frustrations of life in the inner cities, and a number of Commissions prior to this one have produced comprehensive reports on this subject. In its 1967 report the Crime Commission described the linkage between violent crime and slum conditions in large cities as "one of the most fully documented facts about crime".

To interject briefly, may I say that what I mean by violence and crime as referred to in this report is primarily homicide, rape, assault and robbery. It continues:

> Referring to numerous studies conducted over a period of years, the commission found that violent crime, its offenders and its victims are found most often in urban areas characterized by: low income, physical deterioration, dependency, racial and ethnic concentrations, broken homes, working mothers, low levels of education and vocational skills, high unemployment, high proportions of single males, overcrowded and substandard housing, low rates of home ownership or single family dwellings, mixed land use, high population density.

I think my point is well taken: it is very difficult to separate the reasons for a person's social behaviour from the reasons for the social ills which exist today. I give the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) some credit. He is new on the job, and most of this work was done by his predecessor, whom I also wish to compliment. A bill such as this does not enable us to get mean easily.

Mr. Olson: You are never mean anyway.

Mr. Alexander: Sometimes I get carried away because I cannot understand how this government can ignore the problems and frustrations of people. However, since I am not supposed to be mean this evening, and I said I would not be mean, I give credit to the former minister of justice—perhaps I am taking this out of context—who said that the law shall never again stand still. Those are significant words. I hope it will never again stand still, because if it does we will unquestionably be faced with confrontation from those who believe that the administration of justice has no meaning for them and even this place has no meaning for them. I hope that the present Minister of Justice has taken a page from the former minister of justice when he stated:

> In our day we can far less afford the delays which we have suffered in the past. It is more dangerous and less defensible to leave our legal system, our whole belief in the working of freedom, vulnerable to those who have a case against a particular rule when we have to agree with their case and should move to change the rule.

In other words, we are faced with change, not change for the sake of change but change which is necessary because of the contemporary way of thinking and the circumstances in which we live which lead to so much frustration. One thing about which I am pleased is that the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, of which I am a member, is a highly respected committee. I think all hon. members will agree with this. We come from all parts of the country. Certainly we have different ideas, but among our group are to be found many lawyers. They do not pussyfoot when it comes to bills. We do not argue and we do not fight.

Mr. Benjamin: There are too many lawyers.

Mr. Alexander: Thank God you are not on the committee. I do not know whether there are too many lawyers in the House of Commons. With all due respect, those lawyers who are members of the official opposition are good lawyers. Those on the other side of the House are also good lawyers. The hon. member's party has one to whom I give some credit, the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert).

Mr. Benjamin: There is an exception to every rule.

Mr. Alexander: The exception is you. I do not know whether there are too many lawyers, but what I am trying to say is that we have a high calibre of lawyer on the committee. They are intelligent and, generally speaking, non-partisan when dealing with bills such as this. When the Minister of Justice says that he hopes we will give this bill speedy passage and will bring before the committee amendments of some consequence, he can be sure the bill will receive that treatment. I have a feeling that the minister means what he says. If he is anything like the former minister of justice, we will get along quite well.

Here we have an omnibus bill amending the Criminal Code, the Criminal Code 1967 Amendment Act, the Criminal Records Act, the National Defence Act, the Parole Act and the Visiting Forces Act. In dealing with all these acts the government is attempting to remove certain offences and punishments. This is a commendable attitude because obviously certain offences should not be included in the Criminal Code, such as attempted suicide. It is high time we removed it. Generally speaking, we are dealing with social behaviour in contemporary society and occasions when governments should move in to deter conduct which Canadians as a whole find offensive and not in keeping with the type of society in which we would like to live.

As I understand it, there are some 75 clauses of significant magnitude affecting the acts to which I have just referred. Hopefully, when we are through with this bill it will become more meaningful. Hopefully, it will exhibit a need for change to rid our criminal law of an archaic climate, a law which is riddled with anomalies, one which for some time has had no new approaches and has not been responsive to the changing needs of our society.

I gave the former minister of justice credit for having indicated some time ago that the law will never again stand still. We are moving in the right direction in deliberating on this bill. As I said, this amendment will not be the panacea which we seek. The problems that all members of parliament face are difficult. However, there is a study that is being undertaken now. Perhaps we are moving too quickly with this bill, but on further deliberation I do not think we are because there are certain things that this bill will achieve and we cannot afford to wait for the conclusions of the law reform commission under the chairmahship of Mr. Justice E. Hartt. I refer to the removal from the Criminal Code of corporal punishment. It should have been removed some time ago. I think it is barbaric. It seems to me an attempt to seek vengeance upon the accused. I cannot see how corporal punishment could be a deterrent.

Today we have to face the crimes of skyjacking and air piracy which are reprehensible crimes. Surely we have to deal with them immediately and cannot afford to wait for what I am sure will be commendable conclusions and recommendations of the law reform commission. The law reform commission, in a publication entitled "Research Program I," has given some indication of the problems with which they are faced. I want to put it on the record. Perhaps hon. members do not know what they are attempting to do, what they are faced with and what their conclusions may be when they have finished their deliberations. I shall read from it quite extensively, though not to the point of boredom, for the benefit of hon. members who have not had an opportunity of looking at this issue. At page 12, under the heading "Aims and purposes of the criminal law" it reads:

At present there is confusion and controversy about the functions of the criminal law. Thus, the commission will study on a continuing basis the purposes to be served by the criminal law in our Canadian society. In particular, we will be concerned with: identifying the types of conduct which should be made subject to the criminal law; analysing the objectives to be attained by the imposition of criminal sanctions; finding alternative techniques for regulating conduct without resorting to the criminal law; studying the effectiveness of the adversary system; and examining the existing classification of offences and the jurisdiction of the courts.

The most important statement that I take out of this is that here is the law reform commission, which is headed by one of Canada's leading jurists, indicating that at present the criminal law is in an area of confusion and controversy about its functions. Under the heading, "General principles of criminal law" it reads:

The commission will study the general principles common to most offences with a view to their clarification and codification. Many of these principles are not now contained in the Criminal Code but are developed through statutory interpretation and judge-made law. As a result, there is uncertainty about some of the fundamental issues of criminal law. The study will include in the initial stages: the mental elements of the offence; strict responsibility; ignorance and mistake of fact and law; mental illness; intoxication; compulsion and necessity; extra-territorial extent of the criminal law; and corporate criminal culpability.

Another part of the program which the commission will delve into is described as, "The attainment of equality before the law." It reads:

The commission will study the impact of the criminal law on specialized groups within society to determine whether it is operating equitably. Special studies will be undertaken into the problems of the native offender and poverty and the criminal law.

That is a commendable program and I will deal with it a little later. Under the heading, "Prohibited and regulated conduct" it reads:

The commission will study offences now contained or that should be contained in the Criminal Code with a view to the enactment of a comprehensive code reflecting contemporary values.

I would like to so pause there, Mr. Speaker. It is too bad this type of commission has not been operating for five years so that we could have the benefit of its wisdom. I think we are a little premature in introducing this bill when we know that we now have a law reform commission which will be studying in depth this area of criminal law. But because of the necessity for passing a number of important clauses of the bill, we must move ahead with it. I continue to quote:

Some of the questions to be explored for each offence are: whether the conduct should be prohibited by law; whether the criminal process is the best technique for controlling that conduct; whether the physical and mental elements of the offence have been defined with sufficient certainty and in a rational and understandable manner; and whether the penalty set out in the statute for the offence is realistic. The matters to be studied and reported on at an early stage are: homicide; sexual misconduct; obscenity; contempt; conspiracy; and dishonest acquisition of property.

Mr. Speaker, what we are doing now is certainly a step in the right direction, but the problem is extremely complex, calling for more than the standing committee on justice to delve into this bill. It calls for expertise and for hearings to be held around the country, something which I understand the law reform commission will be doing so that it may have the advice not only of jurists and administrators but of other persons who are affected by the criminal law.

One of the matters the commission will be looking at is homicide. Right now, homicide and the penalty for homicide constitute a burning question. I was not here five years ago when capital punishment was debated with deep conviction by members on all sides of the House. I understand there was a free vote taken on the issue. But as I have thought of the matter over the years, particularly since becoming a member of this House knowing that we would again have to face the issue, I have always wondered whether capital punishment in fact is a deterrent and whether it is morally right.

What disturbs me is not so much the answers to those two questions but the answer to this one: Can we make a mistake? Here I am really in a quandary. I know what the pressures are. If somebody says to me, "Let us bring back capital punishment because these are the statistics," I will reply, "Everybody knows what can be done with statistics." But what is unfortunate with respect to the law as it stands is that it was supposed to have been a five-year experiment and has turned out not to be an experiment at all.

Apparently members of this House, on a free vote, decided that capital punishment should be abolished except in the case of the murder of a prison guard or policeman. What has been the result? Policemen have been slain, and I have always been asked the question, "What goes on? I thought you chaps passed a law five years ago providing capital punishment for the murder of a policeman." I really did not know the answer myself but I knew there was an answer to the question. Then I found out that the answer was that when parliament passed this law it never did away with the prerogative of the cabinet to commute the death sentence. This is what the average person does not realize. He forgets that the cabinet has power to commute the death sentence. The result is that we have a law that is not a law.

I am not trying to be partisan this evening, but here we have a cabinet going against the wishes of the elected representatives of the people who wanted a five-year experiment. That is why we are in the present quandary. That is why the Canadian people are so upset. That is why they do not know what the law really is. They apparently believe that if a policeman or guard is slain, then the killer should face the maximum penalty.

There was a debate of some significance on this question five years ago. Why in heaven's name have we not followed the law? Had we done so we might now have the solution to a very burning question, a determination of the pros and cons regarding the abolition of capital punishment. The government has left the Canadian people in a dilemma. The government should have had the compassion either to wipe out the law or abide by the law as it stands. I can live with and accept the law as it stands now and, as I said before, I have to reach a happy balance between it and those who are involved with the protection of lives and property, our policemen and prison guards. As the law stands now, they will say this is discrimination. Perhaps it is. But I have to answer the question that the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) this afternoon told us to ask ourselves: What if we make a mistake?

I will be very frank, Mr. Speaker. Apparently most lawyers around here have been involved as counsel in about 20 murder cases, and many give the impression that they are the greatest counsel that ever lived. I took part in only one murder trial and I do not particularly want to be involved in any more. The pressure that was exerted on me was enormous, not only with respect to my capabilities as a lawyer but because I thought that if the jury was not of a high calibre, and because of my inadequacies in going through the appeal procedure, this man might hang. I was bothered then and still am. As far as I am concerned, let somebody else who has the fortitude and strength, and who can go to bed when the case is over and forget about it, conduct murder trials. I see the hon. member for High Park (Mr. Deakon) looking at me. He knows what I am talking about. I can live with this law because it is provided that the government will move in the right direction and do what it is told to do, forget about commuting sentences.

Mr. Speaker, all countries are concerned about this problem. I shall put just a few statistics on the record. In several major countries the death penalty has been abolished by law: Argentina, Australia—Queensland and New South Wales—Brazil, Great Britain, Colombia, Costa Rica, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, West Germany, Finland, Greenland, Iceland, Italy, Mexico—25 of 29 states—Norway, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Portugal, Sweden, Switzerland and many of the states in the United States of America. That is why we shall have to deal with this problem. I may have to change my mind six months from now, and I want help in this regard. I am not concerned about whether it is morally right or whether there is a deterrent; what bothers me is that a court and a jury may make a mistake and send an innocent man to the gallows.

In New Zealand, capital punishment was abolished in 1941. In 1951, it was reinstated and in 1956 the death penalty was again abolished although it was not formally removed from the statutes until 1961. The minister of justice for New Zealand made this statement during the course of parliamentary debates in 1961:

When we realize that the penalty for murder has changed three times in the period I have been reviewing—in 1935, in 1950 and 1957—with no effect on the figures; then surely it is plain to us that executing murderers does not achieve anything.

Be that as it may, Mr. Speaker, that is the problem we are faced with. There was one particular program within the objectives of the law reform commission that struck home. I want to spend a few minutes on it because I think it is extremely important. I refer to the attainment of equality before the courts. Most judges are impartial, have a sense of responsibility and accept the fact that this country is a multicultural society with people of different races, creeds, colours and religion contributing to the quality of our life. But there are still some judges who for some reason or other make derogatory statements not only to the detriment of the accused but to the detriment of the group to which the accused belongs.

Mr. Speaker, I thought I was making a pretty good speech, but when I hear the noise in this House I wonder. I do not want members to stop talking while I am making a speech, but to just tone it down a little.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: When I thought about this question, I thought we would never have respect for the law until those who are affected by the system in which we live believe they have equality before the courts. A few years ago the right hon. gentleman brought in the Canadian Bill of Rights. We are in a changing society now, the frustrated and the alienated, those who believe that this system cannot help them—

Mr. Benjamin: Change the system.

Mr. Alexander: We don't have to change the system to make it more meaningful and responsible to the people we represent. I do not know how the hon. member ever got into this place. I don't know what he advocates, but I think this system is a good one and until somebody can show us a better one I am for it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: If the hon. member has a system whereby equality of opportunity is given, a system whereby—

Mr. Benjamin: We are still trying to get that.

Mr. Alexander: —the individual can bring all his background into our Canadian life and freedom and be given an opportunity to pursue his legitimate goals, I wish he would stand up and tell us. If he does not have a system, he is supposed to tell the people, "We are changing the system in a meaningful way by making it more responsive to the needs of the people we represent". That is all we have to do.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: Let me go back to what I was saying because I have a point to make. The hon. member is trying to get me confused, Mr. Speaker, but nobody will confuse me. He is not getting anywhere. I am taking more time than I said I would, Mr. Speaker, but I want to read part I of the Canadian Bill of Rights which reads as follows:

> It is hereby recognized and declared that in Canada there have existed and shall continue to exist without discrimination by reason of race, national origin, colour, religion or sex, the following human rights and following freedoms, namely:
> (a) The right of the individual to life, liberty, security of the person and enjoyment of property and the right not to be deprived thereof except by due process of law;
> (b) The right of the individual to equality before the law and the protection of the law.

That is the statement which I want to pursue for a few moments. When I see the problems of the blacks in Nova Scotia who have indicated that they do not have equality before the law—these are allegations which have been reported—when I read of the problems that my brothers, the Indians, the Metis and Eskimos have, the people of colour who have problems and do not believe that they have equality before the law, I believe it is enough to make us all concerned; it is enough to make us say that perhaps our judges should take a course in human relations: there is no reason why not.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: They take a continuing course in law and sentencing and perhaps they should take a course in human relations. No man should be pointed at in a derogatory way because of his race, creed or colour. This is 1972. I hope the Minister of Justice will take this question under advisement. Perhaps they need me to teach the course; I do not know. I want it to be known that we on this side of the House and members on the other side will not stand for that nonsense. There has been too much of it in the past and I do not intend to let wrongs go unchallenged. We in the Conservative party will not sit with folded hands and let injustices come to pass. I am speaking for Canadians, period. When I see the kind of nonsense to which I have referred, I am sickened. In future, those who read Hansard will know that the members of the House uphold justice and the idea that individuals must have equal rights, opportunity and equality before the law.

• (2150)

As I said earlier, we cannot criticize the government for introducing this bill. We must wait until the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) brings down his budget one week from today, on May 8: we can blaze away then. In this bill the government has met certain responsibilities. I think it has made a legitimate attempt to improve the efficacy of our criminal law. When the bill comes before the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs it will be treated with all necessary despatch. The hon. member for Halifax-East Hants has already put that thought on record.

Mr. Colin D. Gibson (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak briefly on this bill. I was also pleased to listen to the fine speech made by the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander). There are times in one's political life when one feels close to brother members of parliament. This sense of closeness transcends ideologies. The present occasion is an example of that sort of spirit which has arisen in the House because, Mr. Speaker, those who believe in the rule of law cannot oppose these amendments to the Criminal Code.

The bill covers everything that happens to an accused from the time he is arrested until he is convicted and punished. The whole bill is a compromise between humanity, in some parts, and growing severity in others. It shows more humanity in crimes such as common assault where previously a person could be convicted of an indictable offence. It will no longer be possible to treat common assault as an indictable offence. A charge of common assault usually arises when someone loses his cool and makes a fool of himself. A man like that will be treated with compassion.

At the same time, the bill deals more severely with assault occasioning bodily harm, the maximum sentence for which is to be increased to five years. Under the code as it is at present, cases involving extreme violence were inadequately dealt with. The maximum sentence of two years was inadequate. I think a better balance has been struck in the law, lesser penalties will be meted out for lesser offences and more severe penalties for more severe offences.

I am glad that it will be possible for one to appeal a conviction for contempt of court. It was manifestly unjust, I think, that previously a judge had the power to convict a criminal or even counsel and that the law did not give either of them the right to appeal. This appeal provision is a major step forward in our law and all will recognize it as modern and humanitarian.

The question of public mischief is dealt with. I agree with the maximum sentence of five years. The offence may also be dealt with on summary conviction. That provision is good. A court can deal with people of low intelligence by way of summary conviction. On the other hand, of course, serious cases can be proceeded with by way of indictment. All in all, I think that justice will be done as it should be done.

There is in the bill a provision that concerns jurors. It overcomes previous weaknesses in the law. Previously, a judge was not empowered to dismiss a juror unless he was satisfied that it was impossible for the juror to continue serving. He might have been suffering a great deal of pain and might not have been discharged. Now it is provided that if in the opinion of the judge there is good reason for the juror not to continue serving, the juror may be discharged and his services dispensed with.

The bill is full of humanitarian reforms. In places it patches the law; in others it makes humane provision with respect to records, whether convictions will be allowed to stand, and whether a conditional discharge will be allowed. The entire subject of the bill will be dealt with in committee. I am proud to be a member of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs which will review these matters in detail.

I cannot refrain from speaking about the wording of section 309, printed at page 18 of the bill, dealing with possession of housebreaking instruments under suspicious circumstances. I will not go into details now, but it seems to me that under this section the court is saddled with three burdens of proof whereas one burden is usually enough. First, there is the overriding burden of proof resting on the Crown, which must prove the case beyond a reasonable doubt. Then an onus is cast on an accused, who must deal with the matter. Then an onus seems to be cast on the Crown. I think these burdens of proof should be spelled out in more detail.

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I want to speak about two aspects of the legislation before the House which have concerned me particularly since 1967. Earlier today reference was made to the leadership given by the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) to the movement for abolishing corporal punishment and to the work that the parliamentary committee did in the mid-1950s. It has taken remarkably long for those concerned with the furtherance of justice to implement previous recommendations and bring about the abolishment of corporal punishment.

The term corporal punishment is often misunderstood. When people talk about corporal punishment they think they are talking about hanging. It has nothing to do with hanging. Corporal punishment means the use of the whip or strap, an instrument of punishment previously in common use. It was imposed after criminals had been convicted of certain offences and sent to federal institutions. In recent years this form of punishment has been used less and less. Now, in introducing this law reform, the minister is merely making regular what has become standard and accepted practice. To be honest, let me say that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang), by including this measure in the bill is taking a greater risk than if he had introduced it two or three years ago. A growing number of people in this country think it is useful to retain this anachronistic and revengeful form of punishment known as corporal punishment.

I see my time is running out, Mr. Speaker. Later in this debate I shall say why it is important to abolish corporal punishment once and for all. May I call it ten o'clock?

[Mr. Gibson.]

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS—LARGER INCREASE IN FOOD COSTS IN PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND—REFERENCE TO PRICES AND INCOMES COMMISSION

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): In baseball, Mr. Speaker, after three strikes you're out. I hope that does not apply to me, for this is the third time I have spoken today.

In bringing this matter to the attention of the House I am raising something that has been the concern of hon. members representing Prince Edward Island, and of the Premier of Prince Edward Island for the past few months. The matter was initially raised in correspondence among members of this House representing Prince Edward Island constituencies, the Premier of Prince Edward Island and Statistics Canada.

I think all Canadians in the last two or three years have been alarmed by rapidly rising food costs. From time to time the complaints of housewives, the most important body in the country, reach the ears of representatives in legislative chambers. We heard such complaints four years ago when the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Basford) chaired, with Senator Croll, that important committee investigating the alarming and rapid increase in food costs.

In talking about the subject of high food costs I want to focus strictly on the situation as it pertains to Prince Edward Island. I want to do this because I think a myth has grown in this country which suggests that it is cheaper to live in places like Prince Edward Island and other areas with a relatively low standard of living and low income. When federal wage scales are set or when federal estimates are made on the amount of expenditures necessary to establish comparable levels of equality of income, it is often concluded that a person can live more cheaply in a place such as Prince Edward Island or the Maritimes generally than in Toronto, Montreal or Vancouver.

One might almost call this the Judy LaMarsh myth. Perhaps it is not fair to refer to the hon. lady because she is no longer a member of this chamber. I remember a famous occasion when she was speaking in Ontario. She said that an old age pensioner could live much more cheaply in Prince Edward Island than in Ontario. I hope the hon. lady is listening, and others who still cherish that myth. I have facts to indicate that in one of the most vital areas in terms of consumer costs, food, this is unfortunately not the case.

An hon. Member: What about rents?

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): The hon. member has suggested rents. I hope we will have an opportunity to discuss that subject on another occasion. It is also an important and related question. There is also the matter of transportation and fuel costs. However, this evening I am focusing on food costs. I have received figures from Statistics Canada which go into some detail. I think it is important to place them on the record. In January, 1969, starting with the $1 figure in Charlottetown, Saint John and Halifax, the criteria was established as to how much $1 would buy. Running through to the end of 1969, food costs showed an increase in those three Maritime centres that was roughly comparable. In December, 1969, food costs had risen to 103.8 in Charlottetown, 104 in Saint John and 104.8 in Halifax.

To the end of 1970 there was a very slight increase in Charlottetown to 104.4. There was a decrease in Saint John to 100.1, and in Halifax to 99.6. I now come to the alarming part. In 1971 there was a rapid rise in food costs in Charlottetown from 105.8 in January to 111.3 in December of that year. In Saint John there was an increase from 100.6 to 106.4 and in Halifax from 99.8 to 103.8. One can see the alarming rate of increase that took place in Charlottetown in the year 1971. While there was a similar increase in the other Maritime centres, it was obviously not as big. In 1972 the cost jumped from 111.7 in January to 113.5 in February, and 113.9 in March—almost 114. In Saint John the figure went from 106.3 in January to 108.2 in March, and in Halifax from 104.8 in January to 105.4 in March. This rapid rise in costs has to be treated very seriously. I think that on a statistical basis people are aware of the way in which they are paying a great deal more for their food.

The answers are not simple but they are at least clear. The issue of transportation has to be the basic one. The issue of transportation to and from the Island has been one that successive governments since confederation have avoided. As a result, almost all the commodities on the island originating from mainland Canada cost more. Almost all the commodities, basic foodstuffs that we sell and which leave the Island, must be sold at lower prices to make up for the difference in transportation costs. How long will islanders continue to be in a seller's market when they choose to purchase their needs, and in a buyer's market when they need to sell their produce?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. I regret that the time of the hon. member has expired.

Mr. Judd Buchanan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member has indicated, Statistics Canada has looked into the situation in Prince Edward Island and found that the trend of food prices in Charlottetown and Halifax has been sharply different in the two places since 1969. It appears clear that an anomalous situation exists there.

As suggested by the hon. member, it may well be that part of this problem arises from transportation costs, and the extra costs involved are certainly a factor in food prices. However, the most important factor may well be the degree of retail competition in different areas. The large retail chains are heavily dependent on traffic in the large urban centres and competition is usually very keen.

In contrast, the attitude of merchants in smaller centres is frequently somewhat more relaxed. This does not imply that any conspiracy is involved, but merely that they are not forced by the market situation to compete as vigorously as they are in the larger centres. This would seem to be part of the problem in Charlottetown. The so-called food price war which began in 1970 did not, it seems, extend to Charlottetown nor, let us be candid, to a great many other parts of Canada.

Food prices, as the hon. member has mentioned, are the most visible of the prices paid by ordinary consumers and also have the greatest impact on public attitudes toward inflation. It would provide a more balanced view of the situation if account could be taken of the prices of a much wider range of goods and services. Although we do not have any precise information on the subject, it is probable that some of the disadvantages to the outlying areas in terms of food prices are counterbalanced by lower accommodation and service costs.

We should probably focus more attention on the over-all standard of living in different regions. It would seem that we should be striving for greater equality in standards of living and that we should accept disparities in particular price levels provided that similar groups of people in different areas have roughly equivalent living standards which they are able to enjoy.

INDIAN AFFAIRS—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF STANBURY-FIELDS REPORT

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, about five years ago the federal government commissioned two University of British Columbia professors, Professor Stanbury and Professor Fields, to make a study of taxation in the broadest possible sense as it related to Indian people in that province. As far as I can gather, the federal government paid the whole shot for that study; it was a federal government examination and survey.

The Stanbury-Fields report, as it became known, was subsequently concluded and presented to the federal government. On a number of occasions I have moved motions in the House asking that that report be made public; in other words, be tabled. At first when these motions of mine were put forward a few years ago, the government objected to them on the ground that the report was of a confidential nature and could not be disclosed. In fact, I think the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Laing) was minister of Indian affairs at the time I first raised the question. At any rate, the federal government indicated it could not disclose this report because it was confidential. But we persisted in our requests.

A couple of years ago this government acquiesced and said in effect, "We have examined the report. We do not consider it to be confidential, so we will agree to table it subject to permission of the province of British Columbia." The province of B.C. subsequently denied that permission and the report was not tabled. I submit that inasmuch as it was a federal report related to a subject matter coming exclusively within the jurisdiction of the Parliament of Canada, namely, Indian people, and inasmuch as it was financed entirely out of federal revenue, the province of British Columbia has no position whatsoever in this matter, permission should not have been asked for nor should the denial of the province have been heeded at that time.

That report makes some very interesting disclosures about the position of Indian people, the amount of taxes they pay and the fact that they are cheated regarding their land tax position, in that reserve land is leased to the province of British Columbia. They are being cheated by the provincial government and I suggest that is the reason the province does not want the report tabled.

I suggest that the House did pass a motion to the effect that this report be tabled and I now seek permission to table four chapters of it, being the part I have been able to obtain. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to a motion this House passed, I ask permission to table chapters 7, 9, 10 and 11 of the Stanbury-Fields report.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. While I do not have the rule book before me, if I am correct this document can only be tabled at the time of motions. The Chair cannot accept the hon. member's suggestion.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I doubt that it is your prerogative to make that decision. No one in the House has objected and I assume that unanimous consent has been given because of lack of objection. Unanimous consent having been given to table the report, this should certainly obviate any feelings you may have about the rules in respect of motions.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. I think the hon. member is asking the Chair to do something that does not follow the usual practice for tabling documents. The hon. member knows the rules which apply at this time of night. I do not think the Chair has any right to accept the suggestions. In order to be fair, let me refer to the rule that papers can be laid before the House by the provisions of an act of parliament, an order of the House, an address to the Crown, a command of the Crown or by Standing Order of the House. At this time of night we do not follow the practice of tabling documents. One might also suggest that there is no quorum, therefore unanimous consent cannot be given. In any event, I think my ruling should stand and I cannot accept the tabling of this document at this time.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Am I correct in assuming that you refuse to put the question to the House seeking unanimous consent? Surely if unanimous consent is given in respect of an order of the House that has already been issued for the tabling of this document, it should be received.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): In addition to what I have said, we have not a quorum and the hon. member knows the special rules which apply at this time of night.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): If we do not have a quorum, I think you should adjourn the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): I think the hon. member should co-operate with the Chair and let the ruling stand.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): I take it I may raise this matter tomorrow on motions.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): If the hon. member intends to treat the matter as a motion, he will have to do so before motions are called tomorrow.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): If I raise the matter on motions, that is true, unless Your Honour suggests I do it by way of a question of privilege, in which case I can give two hours' notice in accordance with the rules. If that is your wish, I will do that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): The hon. member knows the rules. He can raise the matter on a question of privilege if he wishes, but my decisions stands and I regret that I cannot do otherwise than deny the request.

Mr. Judd Buchanan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in 1967 the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development engaged the services of Professor D. B. Fields of the faculty of commerce and business administration, University of British Columbia, to undertake a study and quantitative assessment of the status of Indians as taxpayers in the province of British Columbia. His associate in the study was Mr. W. T. Stanbury, at that time a PhD candidate in economics at the University of California, Berkley, and the department of economics, University of British Columbia. Hence the name of the report. The terms of reference of the study, as reported in Hansard for Wednesday April 23, 1969, at page 7843 were as follows:

> The project shall consist of a study and quantitative assessment of the financial significance of the special status of Indians as taxpayers in the province of British Columbia and without limiting its scope in any way shall include a general analysis of present and potential taxes levied on Indians, the nature and cost of services rendered to Indians at present and future trends, the growing significance of taxes paid by non-Indian leaseholders of Indian lands, the tax implications of an increase in business activities on Indian reserves, and significant changes in income and spending patterns of Indians including their potential to pay income tax if they were subject thereto.

The nature of the study meant, of course, obtaining data from various departments of the provincial government, municipalities and federal tax authorities as well as from public documents. In 1968 a report with the findings of Professor Fields and Mr. Stanbury was submitted. It is well known, as reported in Hansard, that some of the material contained in the report was considered to be of a confidential nature and accordingly could not be released. The Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development undertook to have an edited version prepared which would take appropriate account of personal references to individuals and the confidentiality of material.

The government was prepared to make such a version available, subject to obtaining the concurrence of the province of British Columbia. However, unfortunately that province has not granted concurrence and consequently it has not been possible to have the report made public.

TRANSPORT—UPDATING OF YEAR OF MANUFACTURE OF FOREIGN AUTOMOBILES—ACTION TO END PRACTICE.

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, on March 28 last I raised a question with the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) regarding the updating of certain automobiles, mainly imported automobiles. This is a topic which has excited a considerable amount of interest across the nation and one to which I believe the government should direct its attention. I realize there is a dual responsibility here and that probably the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andras) has just as keen an interest in the matter as his colleague the Minister of Transport.

The question has many ramifications. As I say, it has excited a great deal of interest across the nation. Apart from the fact that the Department of Transport certainly has a legitimate interest in this topic as a result of the Motor Vehicle Safety Act, the department I think should be prepared to answer a few questions and take a more direct interest in what is going on. For example, I should like to know how many people within the Department of Transport deal directly with questions concerning automobile safety.

I should also like to know how many complaints are registered annually with the department on this subject, and what sanctions are available through the Department of Transport to enforce regulations pertaining to auto safety and registration procedures. There is a real problem here so far as consumers are concerned because at this time, due to Canada's status as what has been called a dumping ground for unsafe and misregistered vehicles, any vehicle, I am informed, may be arbitrarily registered by the auto maker in any year desired, with full government approval. The only problem is that no one bothers to tell the consumer about this. Then he buys a new 1972 Datsun, Toyota or Volvo, for example, he may find much to his surprise that what he really bought is last year's model.

Most customers only discover the error when they return to their dealer the next year and find that their car has depreciated perhaps by two years, with a depreciation factor of 50 per cent rather than the expected 30 per cent. By this the motorist learns to his sorrow that he has paid more for his insurance, that his car's rusting is normal rather than premature, and that most sales contracts have a clause which prohibits him from doing much about it.

Aside from financial loss suffered, these redated automobiles pose a serious safety hazard. Certain 1971 and 1972 models advertised as incorporating the latest federally-controlled safety devices may in fact be substandard in construction, because the Canada Motor Vehicle Safety Act is effective only for vehicles manufactured after January, 1971, and normally any car registered as a 1972 vehicle would incorporate the features specified in the Canada Motor Vehicle Safety Act. However, this is not always the case and the motorist loses a great deal financially and so far as his personal well-being is concerned.

There is another point which is of concern. I suppose the import tax collected on foreign automobiles is predicated to some extent on the year they were manufactured. If there is some uncertainty as to the status of the vehicles allowed into the country and the fact that they may be updated, as it sometimes appears may well be the case, then I think the amount of import tax collected would be affected. If such is the case, I urge the government to look into this aspect of the matter.

There is another problem involving registration. I should like to quote from a submission made by a responsible consumer group in which the following statement appears:

Mr. Karl Barths, president of Volkswagen Canada Limited, recently told two members of the APA executive staff that Volkswagen had a serious problem in the early sixties with the now famous "grey market" selling of Volkswagens. Old Volkswagens were updated and sold to unsuspecting American motorists. This fraud was quickly ended, however, when Volkswagen of America improved its serial numbering system in 1965 so that anyone could determine when the car was built.

If that could be done at the initiative of the Americans, surely the Canadian government could double-check to see whether something like that could not be done here. I realize that time is a factor and I would conclude by suggesting that there are certain things that the Department of Transport and the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs could do. I make the suggestion because there are few things that interest the average Canadian as much as his automobile, and if he feels that something is phony about the way imported cars are being sold in the country, or for that matter any car, it will have a detrimental effect on the industry as a whole.

It seems to me that the import car industry in particular should be forced to set up machinery for a just rebate system for dealers who are left with old unsold models; that all car serial numbers should be filed with federal and provincial departments of consumer affairs and that complete reimbursement for all valid consumer claims, equal to the monetary difference between the real and the fictional age of the vehicle, should be instituted.

Recently the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs held a press conference in Montreal at which he dealt with this problem. That is why I said at the beginning of my remarks that this is really a dual responsibility, but a governmental responsibility nevertheless. At that press conference a certain amount of attention was paid to the proposition that assistance would be available to consumers who wished to institute suits as a result of grievances which they suffered at the hands of dealers of imported cars. I would like to know what has been done in this regard, how many suits have been instituted, whether the government is really concerned about the problem or whether this is just a convenient way to dispose of it.

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, following a question asked in this House on March 28 by the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) concerning current regulations on motor vehicle safety, I indicated in a written reply tabled on April 26 that any vehicle manufactured or imported in Canada after January 1, 1971, had to bear a label showing the month and year of manufacture.

The Minister of Transport feels he has a duty to ensure that vehicles meet requirements concerning the conformity label prescribed by the regulations on motor vehicle safety, and a signed declaration for each vehicle is required of all importers.

Moreover, the records of manufacturers and importers are examined, and vehicles are inspected at customs offices in ports of entry as well as at the importers'. Whenever a complaint is received from the public, an investigation is made, and finally, the operations of manufacturers in Canada are under constant supervision.

One must also take into account the fact that any person who violates the Motor Vehicle Safety Act is liable, on summary conviction, to a fine ranging from $1,000 to $10,000 or, on conviction by way of indictment, to a fine from $5,000 to $200,000, whether the offence is committed by a private person or a corporation.

The hon. member must be aware of the press release that was issued by the hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) on April 24, and I guess he will be able to look into it if he has not done so yet, because he will find there all the information he wants about the subject matter we are dealing with tonight.

[English]

I also have taken note of other points of interest brought forward by the hon. member. I shall inform the minister of them in order to provide the hon. member with all necessary information.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.28 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. LAMBERT (BELLECHASSE)—OBJECTION TO QUESTION ASKED BY LIBERAL MEMBER

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege.

Yesterday, during the question period, the hon. member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) put a question of truly national interest to stress facetiously the absence of Social Credit members who, generally, are present in this House in a proportion which can be advantageously compared with that of a certain number of Liberal members.

I realize that when you are used to seeing someone in his seat and then one day he is absent, you may wonder why. But to ask whether the RCMP should be advised, I think that is going too far. It might also be slightly malicious, which is not in keeping with the dignity of our parliamentary system.

As far as I am concerned, I think that I can state, Mr. Speaker, that in the course of the present parliament, I have always made it a point to participate in the proceedings of the House, and, on several occasions, I could have asked for the adjournment of the House for lack of a quorum, which was not due to members of my party.

In conclusion, I should like to say that we understand the nature of our role in this House and that we fulfil it normally. Moreover, I believe that questions such as were asked by the hon. member for Papineau tend to reflect on a member's privilege and are contrary to the tradition of this House.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Bellechasse gave notice to the Chair of his question of privilege. I agree that perhaps it is not always cricket to mention the absence of fellow members of parliament. The hon. member may have a grievance on that basis but I do not think that this grievance can be brought to the attention of the House as a question of privilege.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

RAILWAY ACT

PROVISION FOR MANDATORY PUBLIC HEARINGS ON APPLICATIONS TO REMOVE STATION AGENTS OR CARETAKERS

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-199, to amend the Railway Act (deviations, changes and removal).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Skoberg: Mr. Speaker, at the present time section 120 of the Railway Act does not provide for a mandatory public hearing to be held when railway companies make application to remove any regular station agent, caretaker-agent or caretaker. This amendment would provide for the requirement of a public hearing. At the same time there is no requirement for the type of service that must be provided by the railway's personal contact. This amendment would spell out the services to be included by such company representative if permission has been granted for the removal of a regular station agent, caretaker-agent or caretaker. All that this proposed bill would do—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Standing Order 68(2) permits a very brief explanation. I believe this is what the hon. member has now done. Is it the pleasure of the House that the hon. member shall have leave to introduce the said bill?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

On the order: Government Notices of Motions.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. My colleague, the hon. member for Moose Jaw, wished to raise a motion under Standing Order 43 but he missed the opportunity. I wonder whether we could have the unanimous consent of the House to revert to motions?

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member would not mind having the matter stand until tomorrow, and I will look in his direction when we reach the item "motions" in our proceedings.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

TRADE

UNITED STATES DISC PROGRAM—INFORMATION RESPECTING EFFECTS ON CANADIAN ECONOMY AND AMERICAN COMPANIES MAKING USE THEREOF

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Can the minister tell the House whether he has met with the heads of the United States owned automobile or other plants in Canada, and would he now give the House what facts or assurances—not impressions—he has received from any of these gentlemen with regard to the effect of DISC upon the Canadian economy, on the operation of Canadian plants and on Canadian jobs?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I do not see why this question should be asked every day. I was very clear the other day on that subject. I said that I would take part in the budget debate and that I would meet the Canadian presidents of automobile plants before and would report on that subject.

Mr. Hees: That won't do.

Mr. Stanfield: I have no alternative but to accept that, Mr. Speaker, but perhaps I could obtain some help from the Prime Minister who is frequently helpful. Does he accept the view of the Secretary of State for External Affairs expressed in the House yesterday that it is very much in the interests of the United States government to inform the government of Canada of the extent to which United States corporations are making use of the DISC legislation so that the Canadian government can assess its effects on the Canadian economy? Is this the Prime Minister's view and, if so, has the government of Canada already made or does it intend immediately to make a formal request to the United States government for this information?

Mr. Pepin: There seems to have been reluctance on the part of the United States Treasury and possibly on the part of U.S. companies to provide this information. We are looking at ways and means by which we can identify exporters to Canada who are using the DISC program.

Mr. Stanfield: I appreciate the co-operation of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce but he did not answer the question that I directed to the Prime Minister. My question was whether the view expressed yesterday by the Secretary of State for External Affairs in his capacity as Acting Prime Minister is the view of the government, namely that it is in the interests of the United States government—I am not talking about United States companies but about the United States government—to provide this information to the government of Canada. If this is the view of the Prime Minister, as it was the view expressed yesterday by the Acting Prime Minister, does the government of Canada intend formally to request this information, not from the heads of firms—that is a different proposition—but from the United States administration itself?

[Mr. Speaker.]

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the government stands by what was said in the House on this matter by the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Mr. Stanfield: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the Prime Minister intend to act upon this view expressed by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and does the government of Canada intend formally to request that the United States government supply the government of Canada with this information? Or is it just all talk?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs will be pleased to continue the talk tomorrow when he is in the House.

UNITED STATES DISC PROGRAM—BASIS FOR STATEMENT BY MINISTER THAT ONLY MINOR DISEQUILIBRIUM IN CANADIAN AUTO EXPORTS WILL RESULT

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce arising out of the statement he made outside the House on Friday to the effect that the use of DISC would cause only a minor disequilibrium in our trade in autos with the United States to the extent of one-half of one per cent. What was this estimate based on? Did he get this information from the automobile companies, and would he give us the source of his information?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I said at that time outside the House that it was difficult to assess at this moment what the effects of the use of DISC on exports to Canada by the automobile makers would be. That, I said, would be one of the questions I would raise. When I talked about one-half of one per cent advantage on sales, this was an opinion given me by a distinguished member of that industry, a figure which was meant to demonstrate that the effect would not be as colossal as was implied here by the opposition on Friday.

Mr. Douglas: Since the impression that the minister got on a previous occasion about the use of DISC proved to be erroneous, will the minister now give the House the results of a definite study with reference to what the effects of DISC will be? Has the minister had any conversations with the automobile company representatives to ascertain what will be the true state of affairs with reference to the effect on the Canadian economy of the setting up of DISC corporations?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I just said a few seconds ago that this was one of the questions I would raise with them and on which I would be reporting to the House when I make the said speech.

UNITED STATES DISC PROGRAM—INFORMATION ON USE

Mr. S. Perry Ryan (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Has the government asked all United States based firms that export goods into Canada or are parent companies of subsidiaries in Canada to disclose their policies toward DISC and, if so, is the government now gathering such information required to prepare a Canadian response?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, this is the information that we are assembling at this time. Some companies, subsidiaries of U.S. firms in Canada, are themselves volunteering this information. Some of them are rather precise. Others do not know exactly how the United States parent company is going to use the DISC program, the DISC advantages. Some of them presumably will use it elsewhere than in Canada presumably, while some might use it in Canada. This is the kind of information we are tying to get now.

• (1420)

Mr. Ryan: Is the government preparing disclosure legislation to require all importers of American goods to reveal their position with regard to DISC?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I said just a few seconds ago that we are looking at ways to identify exporters who use DISC.

Mr. Ryan: I am talking about importers.

UNITED STATES DISC PROGRAM—SUGGESTED CUSTOMS REGULATION TO COMPEL AMERICAN EXPORTERS TO DISCLOSE USE

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, as it is not just American firms with subsidiaries in Canada that are a threat to the Canadian economy but also American firms in competition with Canadian-owned firms, would the minister commit himself to the House now to state in his participation in the budget debate whether the government of Canada will introduce a customs regulation making it mandatory that all firms exporting into Canada from the United States state whether they are doing so under the auspices of DISC?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I said a few seconds ago that we are looking into that.

Mr. Stanfield: The trouble is you have been looking at it for six months.

COURT JUDGMENT ENABLING PRIVATE BRITISH COLUMBIA RAILWAY TO LINK WITH U.S. CARRIER TO MOVE COAL—SUGGESTED EARLY AMENDMENT OF RAILWAY ACT

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport arising out of a judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada reversing a decision of the Canadian Transport Commission which dismissed an application to connect a British Columbia private railway with an American railway for the purpose of transporting coal and presumably other products to the west coast for export to Japan. Has the minister had a chance to consider this judgment and is he contemplating amendments to the Railway Act which would clearly give the Canadian Transport Commission authority to take Canada's public interest into account on such applications?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have not yet had an opportunity to read the judgment and I understand it is quite a complex document. In fact, I have had two conflicting assessments of what it means. I would ask the hon. member for a little time in order to get advice and to study it. Of course, until that is done the second part of his question is in a sense hypothetical.

Mr. Lewis: Perhaps the minister ought to get non-lawyers to read it; then he might get one instead of two opinions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: I say that as a lawyer. I might lose my union card but I will take a chance. If I understand the report correctly, the Supreme Court of Canada has ordered the CTC to reconsider its decision. In view of the fact that the CTC might feel impelled to do so without delay and in view of the fact that what is at stake is that jobs of Canadian railway men will be transferred to an American railway across the line, would the minister undertake to prepare and introduce amendments to the act without delay in order to take care of this situation before it is too late?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, I hope that my answer will not be regarded as irrelevant or off the point. At the moment, in view of the legal nature of this matter and the responsibilities of the CTC under the law, I would prefer to let that take its course in the sense that it is required to do by law. I might say as a general principle, however, and one that is removed from the case, that I want to see the maximum amount of Canadian products moved over Canadian rails. In that context I would be glad to consider any legislative or other changes that might achieve this objective.

Mr. Lewis: I have a further short supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister, if he feels he is in a position to do so, undertake to make a statement to the House on this matter within the next few days?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, I will take the hon. member's suggestion and get a layman's view as well, but just as soon as this complex judgment has been distilled to the point that I think I understand it thoroughly I will be glad to try to convey that understanding to hon. members.

AGRICULTURE

POSSIBLE PROGRAM TO ENCOURAGE MILK PRODUCERS TO RAISE CATTLE FOR BUTCHERING—DISCUSSION BETWEEN OTTAWA AND QUEBEC

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture.

Would he tell the House if there were discussions between Ottawa and Quebec with regard to the establishment of a program to encourage dairy producers to transform part of their operations and to raise cattle for beef.

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): No, Mr. Speaker. I do not think there have been any discussions between the province and officials of my department.

FISHERIES

ATLANTIC SALMON—DANISH POSITION RESPECTING RULES CONCERNING DECLINING SPECIES IN LIGHT OF REFUSAL TO STOP HIGH SEAS FISHING

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Fisheries. In view of press reports that the Danish government will refuse to agree to Canada's proposal at the meeting of the International Commission for the North Atlantic Fisheries, of ICNAF, in Washington later this month, which calls for an immediate halt to high seas salmon fishing, does this mean that the Danes are no longer subscribing to the international rules of ICNAF concerning declining species? Also, what further steps is the minister contemplating to secure international agreement on salmon conservation?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): I think, Mr. Speaker, that the Danish representatives will be speaking for that country at the forthcoming meeting in Washington later this month. I do not think they will necessarily be taking the same rigid position as the hon. member was indicating.

Mr. Crouse: Since, according to figures from the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce that have been tabled, in 1971 we imported $34.7 million worth of cheese, hams, bacon, fresh and frozen fish and canned, smoked salmon from Denmark—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has the floor for the purpose of asking a question, not for the purpose of conveying information.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, I must lay the basis for my question—and since we exported to that country only $22 million worth of goods, has the minister given any thought to using financial persuasion in seeking agreement to a ban on salmon fishing in international waters when our government officials meet with the Danish officials in Washington?

[Mr. Jamieson.]

Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, this approach naturally appeals to many people. However, it is not one on which I have made a recommendation.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister aware that some New Brunswick fishermen affected by the salmon ban have applied for a local initiatives grant so they can import Atlantic salmon from Greenland in order not to go out of business?

ATLANTIC SALMON—REASSESSMENT OF CANADIAN STAND IN LIGHT OF DANISH POSITION

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the hard line taken by the Danish government on the upcoming ICNAF meeting in Washington, I ask the minister specifically whether Canada is now reassessing its position in light of the hard line taken by the Danish authorities?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, we assessed our position very carefully last year and the year before. We are taking the same position again this year, as the hon. member knows, and that is that there should be no fishing for salmon on the high seas whatsoever.

Mr. McGrath: Is Canada prepared to lay its membership in ICNAF on the line if the Danes refuse to change their hard line? In other words, are we prepared to withdraw from ICNAF if we fail to get agreement on a ban on salmon fishing on the high seas?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will no doubt recognize that the question is hypothetical.

ATLANTIC SALMON—SUGGESTED BOYCOTT OF DANISH PRODUCTS BY CANADIAN CONSUMERS

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since all of the $30 million worth of produce imported from Denmark can be produced in Canada, is the minister prepared to recommend to Canadian consumers that they boycott all Danish produce?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I think Canadian consumers are capable of making this decision for themselves.

Mr. McGrath: Come off it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We must move on. I will recognize the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings for the moment for a last supplementary on this subject.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the minister. Would the minister consider going to Washington and learning from Secretary of the Treasury Connally just how to put effective pressure on a smaller country when he wants to get something done?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Winnipeg North.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport—

Mr. Hees: Look at the way Connally works. There is Connally, and here is our government, and our government is scared.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: The government members have tears in their eyes. They are scared to death. Connally is not scared.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Winnipeg North has the floor.

STE. SCHOLASTIQUE—ALLEGED DIVERSION OF FEDERAL GRANTS TO ROAD CONSTRUCTION IN MONTREAL

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Has he inquired into the charge made by a member of the National Assembly of Quebec that half of the federal grants for Ste. Scholastique airport are being diverted by the provincial government of Quebec for highway construction in Montreal?

• (1430)

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have taken notice of the comment. I only read about it in the papers, as I assume the hon. member did. I have asked my officials to give me a full report.

Mr. Orlikow: Will the minister have inquiries made to see whether some of that money is being diverted into projects more associated with the olympics than with the airport?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

FLOODS

POSSIBLE DECLARATION OF ARMLEY-RIDGEDALE REGION, SASKATCHEWAN, AS DISASTER AREA—INVESTIGATION OF AND COMPENSATION FOR LOSSES

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. It has to do with the situation that prevails in the Armley-Ridgedale area in northwestern Saskatchewan where 50,000 acres of farmland are virtually under water. The emergency organization at Tisdale has asked for a declaration that the area be declared a disaster area. I ask the minister whether his department has made any investigation yet into the losses, which apparently will be very large, of the farmers who occupy that very productive area?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we have made some inquiries respecting that part of the loss that is related to crop losses because in quite a large part of that area harvesting last fall was impossible. As far as we can ascertain, that crop has been destroyed. However, we have been advised that the Saskatchewan crop insurance administration has not paid these claims to date. I am not sure of the reason why they have not paid them. As far as we are concerned, we will continue our participation. With regard to the other part of the question, that is, damage other than crop losses, that will come through channels other than the Department of Agriculture to the Canadian government. I have not received that either.

Mr. Diefenbaker: In addition to the losses mentioned by the minister, of course there are other tremendous losses which resulted from the disaster. Has the government of the province of Saskatchewan been in touch with the government of Canada with a view to having this area declared a disaster area to the end that the government of Canada, in addition to compensation for the losses resulting from damage to crops that were not harvested last fall, will make available payments to those in that area who have suffered very large losses?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, as I tried to make clear, and obviously I did not, losses other than crop losses would, I suspect, be dealt with by the government of Saskatchewan. There are some precedents for the federal government participating in compensation for flood damage, whether it is to farmland or other damage. However, I will have to make some inquiries to see whether that has come forward to other departments of the government.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Thank you.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REASON FOR DROP IN RESERVE FORCES STRENGTH—STEPS TO REVERSE TREND

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. In light of the alarming 22 per cent drop in Canada's armed forces reserves, has the minister taken steps to identify the cause of this decrease as well as steps to reverse the trend? Perhaps he might indicate if he has been able to identify the reason.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Normally this kind of very general information ought to be given by the minister to the House by way of a statement on motions. If the minister can reply briefly to the hon. member's question, he will be recognized for that purpose.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I answered that question when I appeared before the defence committee last week. My hon. friend was not there.

AGRICULTURE

SMALL FARM ASSISTANCE PROGRAM—POSITION OF NEGOTIATIONS WITH NEW BRUNSWICK

Mr. Guy Crossman (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Minister of Agriculture whether negotiations have been going on between himself and the government of the province of New Brunswick concerning the small farms development program. What progress, if any, has been made to date, or is there the customary dragging of feet on the part of the government of New Brunswick?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether it is a customary dragging of feet. There has been an unacceptably long time lag in these negotiations. I can report on the positive side, however, that further discussions did in fact take place last week, and we hope we have moved much closer to a division of administrative responsibilities that will be acceptable to New Brunswick and Canada.

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Agriculture. May I ask the minister whether his answer regarding discussions applies to all the other provinces?

Mr. Olson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, but to a greater or lesser degree for other provinces. I say that because some provinces are now almost on the verge of signing an agreement and others are a long way from it.

DECREASE IN NUMBER OF FARMS BETWEEN 1966 AND 1971—PROGRAMS TO STOP OR REVERSE TREND

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is also for the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the startling revelation in the census that the number of farms in Canada dropped by 15 per cent between 1966 and 1971—a very serious situation—can the minister say whether he is now contemplating any new programs that will stop that trend or hopefully reverse it in certain areas?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the very significant upturn in incomes of farmers between 1970 and 1971 will, I think, have a profound effect on this.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

AIR TRANSPORT

AGREEMENT BETWEEN CANADA AND ITALY—MOVING OF OFFICES FROM MONTREAL TO TORONTO

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport.

Following the answer given yesterday by the Secretary of State for External Affairs with regard to the agreement between Italy and Canada concerning flights between Milan, Montreal and Toronto, would the minister tell the House if the government intends to sign similar agreements with other airlines and thus deprive Montreal of its monopoly over transatlantic flights?

[English]

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, in the first instance, it is not chartered overseas flights that are involved. Charter flights are outside of bilaterals. On the question of negotiating bilaterals with other countries I can say that a number of other countries have made overtures to us and vice versa. These talks will be continuing over a period of weeks and months. We usually deal with one country at a time and the Italian negotiations were the most recent.

[Translation]

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary.

Could the minister tell me if the government has given consideration to the economic effects of such an agreement on the metropolitan region should the companies now involved move their headquarters from Montreal to Toronto?

[English]

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, in a sense this is hypothetical in terms of future bilaterals. I can only point out that the negotiations were designed to add extra points for these airlines rather than to switch from existing locations to another location. In other words, so far as I am aware the Alitalia airline would probably use both Montreal and Toronto. That was the whole name of the exercise.

PRICES AND INCOMES COMMISSION

COMPLETION OF INTERIM AND FINAL REPORTS—CONTINGENCY PRICE AND WAGE CONTROL PLAN IN VIEW OF POSSIBLE INCREASE IN INFLATION

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. In view of the Prime Minister's statement late last week to the effect that a small contingency group will be staying on to wind up the work of the Prices and Incomes Commission and undertake contingency planning, can the Prime Minister inform the House when the editing and translating of the series of reports and the final report of the PIC will be completed and, in particular, whether a contingency plan is being prepared for the implementation of price and wage controls in view of a possible increase in inflation?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the first part of the question, I believe I had occasion to tell the House that the report was expected toward the end of June. Of course it is impossible to say exactly when; it might be a bit before or a bit beyond. This is one of the reasons why a small group is being kept on to continue the editing. With regard to the second part of the question, the answer is the same as has been given on previous occasions. The government has all kinds of contingency plans in the eventuality of a sudden upsurge of inflation, and if any announcement has to be made it will be made.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): In view of recent predictions by the chairman of the commission that we are or shortly will be facing a new burst of inflation, can the Prime Minister inform the House whether plans are now being developed for a new initiative to involve both labour and industry in a joint program to hold the line on prices and wages and therefore on consumer costs?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the opinion of the chairman of the commission is one, of course, which we consider with great attention. As to the plans themselves I repeat, if there are any to be made known they will be made known.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

STEPS TO PROTECT FRASER RIVER VALLEY FROM FLOOD THREAT

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. Having regard to the depth of mountain snow in the area and the potential heavy run-off in the Fraser River Valley, can the minister indicate whether the steps so far taken by the various authorities concerned, federal, provincial and local, are sufficient in his opinion to protect the valley from this flood threat?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): The flood threat at this stage is not exceptional. While there is a heavy snowpack, the run-off depends very much on the conditions of temperature, wind and so on over the next six weeks to two months. The situation is being carefully watched and, of course, the diking program in the lower Fraser Valley is proceeding on schedule.

POST OFFICE

CONTRACT NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNIONS—PRESENTATION OF FORMAL OFFER BY GOVERNMENT

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, may I direct this question to the Postmaster General. In light of the admission last week by the President of the Treasury Board that the government has not yet made a formal offer in the present contract talks and the growing unrest in the unions, as indicated by the demonstration on Parliament Hill, can the Postmaster General inform the House when an offer will be made to ease the growing tension?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Postmaster General): Soon, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Dinsdale: Have the negotiations which were broken off last week been resumed, or does the Postmaster General intend to wait until there is a repetition of the 1970 rotating strikes?

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): They resumed yesterday, Mr. Speaker.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT

SUGGESTED AMENDMENT TO REMOVE ENTITLEMENT TO VACATION PAY AS GROUND FOR REFUSING BENEFITS

Mr. Colin D. Gibson (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour. Will the minister consider bringing down an amendment to the Unemployment Insurance Act to ensure that entitlement to vacation pay will no longer be a ground for refusal to pay unemployment insurance benefits?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Labour is not on the roster for duty here today. As for the basic question the hon. member has asked, the matter has been under consideration for some time. If and when the regulations are to be amended, an announcement will be made in the usual manner.

IMMIGRATION

INQUIRY AS TO WHITE PAPER AND LEGISLATION TO REMOVE DELAYS IN HEARING APPEALS

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Can he advise the House whether he has been able to make more progress than his predecessor in retrieving and publishing the long-promised white paper on immigration? Can he also say whether we can expect to see before long the necessary changes to the Immigration Appeal Board Act brought down to relieve the intolerable situation now facing immigrants who have appeals in process?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I do not anticipate any early introduction of legislation in this area. However, we have been reviewing the administrative practices and the regulations to determine whether in some way we may be able, by these means, to facilitate or speed up the appeal procedure and thus remove some of the hardship unintentionally caused to many people who would make very wonderful Canadians.

Inquiries of the Ministry

IMPLEMENTATION OF SEDGWICK REPORT RECOMMENDATIONS CONCERNING APPEALS

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): In light of the fact that the government retained the services of Mr. Joseph Sedgwick, Q.C., who submitted a significant report with respect to the problems surrounding immigration appeals, and in light of the fact that there are countless thousands of appeals pending, can the minister advise the House what has become of this report and whether the government has moved to accept any of its recommendations? Has there been a move on the part of the government to accept any of the recommendations submitted by Mr. Sedgwick and, if so, which ones?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I could hardly be expected to announce which ones have been accepted. Let me say that Mr. Sedgwick is a highly respected Canadian and I have read his report with a great deal of interest. I am sure the whole House shares my opinion that the country should never stray from a small "l" liberal policy in the area of immigration. If so, some of us would not be here.

PROVISION OF CANADIAN CITIZENSHIP TO CHILDREN BORN OF CANADIAN WOMEN OUTSIDE COUNTRY

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): In view of the fact there is not to be a white paper issued in connection with changes in immigration regulations and, consequently, no new legislation in the near future, would the minister assure the House that he will take steps to have the law as it now stands changed immediately to provide that a child born to a Canadian woman outside this country would have the same automatic right to Canadian citizenship as a child fathered by a Canadian male has now?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I heartily endorse the concept. I think this is an unintentional form of discrimination of which nobody in this House is proud, and when the act regarding citizenship is brought forward for amendment at the appropriate time by the appropriate minister I am sure it will reflect a more enlightened approach.

RESEARCH

PROGRESS IN DEVELOPMENT OF FUR FARM CENTRE

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Agriculture. On October 29, 1970, on November 17, 1970 and again on October 18, 1971, I questioned the minister on what progress was being made in the establishment of a fur farm research unit as a component of the national research centre. Can the minister now give the House the information made available to him as a result of his inquiries?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): The answer is about the same as I gave earlier to the hon. member. Establishment of a fur farm research unit within the green belt farm has been under planning for a long time and is still being planned, but I cannot give the hon. member a specific date by which all of it will be built and operational.

OLD AGE SECURITY—INVESTIGATION OF LOSS OF PENSIONERS' CHEQUES IN TORONTO—ISSUANCE OF DUPLICATES

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare, but in his absence I should like to direct it to his very capable parliamentary secretary. It is my understanding that a number of old age security cheques have been lost in the Toronto region recently. I wonder whether an investigation has been conducted and what steps will be taken to correct this situation?

[Translation]

Mr. André Ouellet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Yes, Mr. Speaker, an investigation is under way in this connection. Like in the case of the Creditistes, we did manage to find some.

Moreover, I want to assure the House that new cheques will be issued and sent to all those who have not received the first one.

As for the other investigation, it is a lost cause. It seems to us that Social Credit is going—

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

REQUEST THAT ARRANGEMENTS BE MADE FOR TELEVISING OF GAMES IN NATIONAL HOCKEY LEAGUE FINAL SERIES

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State I should like to direct my question to the Prime Minister. With reference to the NABET strike and the disruption it is causing to CBC television programs and with particular reference to the fact that people in isolated areas who only have the one service are the only ones being deprived of the opportunity of viewing the National Hockey League final series, can the Prime Minister tell us whether any consultations have taken place between the government and the CBC in an effort to have the CBC pick up these games from the United States network and televise them in Canada as was done during the final stages of the regular season? If not, will the Prime Minister look into that possibility?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I will be pleased to transmit the hon. member's representation to the minister concerned.

GRAIN

RAPESEED—SUGGESTED LEGISLATION TO CORRECT INEQUITIES IN PRICING SYSTEM AND OFFSET ACREAGE DECLINE

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. In view of the very serious decline in rapeseed acreage this year as indicated by growers' intentions respecting planting at this point, amounting to a reduction of some 25 per cent, will the minister give consideration to bringing down legislation to correct the inequities that now exist in the pricing system on the part of the grain exchange and the grain companies so that this product will be more attractive and acreage under rapeseed will not further decline?

• (1450)

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): I should think the hon. member would know that the present position and price levels for rapeseed have indeed made it attractive compared with other grains, and that considerations on the part of farmers are likely in other directions, including cultivation practices and so on. Certainly the question of the best kind of market is still important and is continuing to receive the consideration it deserves.

Mr. Gleave: I concede that there may be a difference of opinion as to causes, but will the minister hold some meetings and have certain organizations appear before the Standing Committee on Agriculture in order that a proper assessment of the situation can be made and we can get the sort of relationship in planting which should exist in respect of various crops?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, this question was fairly thoroughly canvassed last year. I may have some further comment on it when an expected bill is before the House. It has been my fairly clear position that at some point when the producers have had a long enough time to study the report on the rapeseed market there should be a plebiscite on the question of their choice regarding marketing systems. I still think that is the way we should proceed.

REQUEST THAT WHEAT BOARD OFFICIALS APPEAR BEFORE COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE FOR CONSIDERATION OF ANNUAL REPORT

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question along the same line to the minister. Now that the annual report of the Canadian Wheat Board has been tabled, will he assist the committee on agriculture by having the Canadian Wheat Board officials appear before it to go over their annual report?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): I think that may be a worth-while suggestion, Mr. Speaker.

BARLEY—SUGGESTED INCREASE IN INITIAL PRICE TO PROVIDE GREATER INCENTIVE TO PLANT

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, in light of the fact that barley is at present under the Wheat Board and that farmers have indicated through surveys a drop of something like 17 per cent in seeding intentions, does the minister intend to increase the ante, so to speak, or the initial price for barley in order to provide a greater incentive?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the government indicated in the March 1 announcement that the initial price for barley will go up by 5 cents on August 1. This was specifically designed to encourage additional barley plantings.

Mr. Speaker: I have to bring to the attention of hon. members that the question period ends in two minutes. Perhaps we should try to limit supplementary questions before the end of the question period. The hon. member for Mackenzie on a supplementary question.

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Speaker, in light of the fact that the minister perhaps did not understand my question, I should like to make it clear. I wanted to know whether the minister will further increase the ante over and above the 5 cent increase.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, very serious consideration was given to the appropriate levels of initial prices for wheat and for barley both during discussions with the Canadian Wheat Board and with representatives of producers' organizations before the decision was taken on March 1. I see no reason to change it at this point.

ACTION ON COMPLAINTS RESPECTING GRAIN DOORS AT WESTERN DELIVERY POINTS

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. In view of numerous complaints concerning grain doors at western delivery points, is the minister prepared to state what action has been taken or is going to be taken in this matter?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, after meeting with elevator agents in northern Saskatchewan some time ago and having this matter brought to my attention, I in turn brought it to the attention of the appropriate authorities, the railway companies and the Wheat Board. They are giving consideration to the problem and methods of trying to improve the situation for elevator agents.

Mr. Knight: In view of the meetings concerning northern Saskatchewan delivery points and the number of complaints that have come from southern Saskatchewan delivery points, can the minister state whether the railway companies have indicated what kind of changes there may be?

Mr. Lang: Not yet, Mr. Speaker, but I believe the problem in connection with grain doors in northern Saskatchewan is the same as the one in southern Saskatchewan.

FISHERIES

SWORDFISH—NEGOTIATIONS WITH WASHINGTON RESPECTING RESTORATION OF MARKET

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment and Fisheries. L the matter of re-entry of swordfish in the United States market still being pursued and, if so, when can we expect the mercury count and common sense to attain more satisfactory levels in Washington?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, this decision rests with the United States Food and Drug Administration. As far as I know that authority has not changed its mind and is still insisting that all fish, including swordfish, which enter the United States have less than one-half of one part per million of mercury in them.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Speaker, I should like to know whether the minister can assure us that attempts are being made to persuade this august body to change its mind?

Mr. Davis: Yes, Mr. Speaker, attempts are being made. In addition, we are endeavouring to convince the health authorities in a number of countries that mercury levels should be set more realistically.

POLLUTION

INTENTION OF GOVERNMENT RESPECTING PROCLAMATION OF ARCTIC WATERS POLLUTION PREVENTION ACT

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of the Environment. In view of the increasing danger of pollution of our Arctic waters by reason of the recent further discoveries of gas and oil in the area, why is it that the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act, passed in June, 1970, has not yet been proclaimed, and is it the intention of the government to bring that legislation passed by parliament almost two years ago into force?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, that question was asked the other day of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and he promised to give an answer to the House shortly.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CRIMINAL LAW AMENDMENT ACT, 1972

AMENDMENTS TO CRIMINAL CODE, CRIMINAL RECORDS ACT, NATIONAL DEFENCE ACT, PAROLE ACT AND VISITING FORCES ACT

The House resumed, from Monday, May 1, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lang that Bill C-2, to amend the Criminal Code and to make related amendments to the Criminal Code 1971 Amendment Act, the Criminal Records Act, the National Defence Act, the Parole Act and the Visiting Forces Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): At the conclusion of the debate last night, I was making a few general remarks in respect of one specific aspect of this bill having to do with the abolition of corporal punishment. I want to refer to that again in a few minutes.

At the outset this afternoon I should like to respond in a general way to the bill we have before us and the developing trend in terms of the Criminal Code which I observe as a layman. I suppose for many people the mysteries of the Criminal Code are such that those not directly involved with peacekeeping and police protection, or judicial and legal affairs, are not considered to be sufficiently informed to grapple with the intricacies of the law as spelled out in the Criminal Code.

Quite frankly, I think that attitude in the past has greatly hampered the understanding, the effective use and the drafting of Criminal law. It is very significant that in recent years more and more people who are not professionally trained in the law, but who are concerned with the functioning of society, generally feel committed to examining the issues as they are put before us and passing judgment on them.

The minister, in his opening remarks last Thursday, referred to the increasing acceptance of the distinction between morality and the law. I think this will be a very important factor in changes which are made in the law in years to come. After all, and I think more people agree with this in a pluralistic society, it is not possible to impose one uniform moral code on a country any more than it would be possible to require all members of a country to adhere to a certain religious group. We believe that in a free society there must be a certain freedom of choice, as well as some responsibility, in relation to the moral framework within which society operates. What is being increasingly attempted by law, particularly in respect of the Criminal Code, is to lay down minimal standards of behaviour, if you like, beyond which we definitely infringe upon the rights and freedoms of our fellow members in society.

Having said that, I realize this will create increasing difficulties for lawmakers and create increasing difficulties in terms of law enforcement. I think we have seen some of these difficulties, because it is one thing to conceptualize an approach to the law in legislative chambers such as this and quite another thing to implement it, particularly during times of very rapid social change. One has to look only very cursorily at the provisions in this bill to realize some attempt is being made at accommodation of the rapid technological changes. There is no question about the fact that the improper handling of such things as skidoos and water skis is dangerous.

Quite frankly, if we are to become involved in the regulation or control of modern means of transportation in our society and create criminal offences in relation thereto, we are creating for ourselves much difficulty in terms of the implementation of such a law. But perhaps to be more specific, we can direct our attention to that part of this responsibility which has to do with increasing jurisdictional discretion, particularly in respect of sentencing. I think we can see only too clearly how many men have become the victims of the judicial system which has been established, simply because it was not sufficiently flexible to accommodate the individual human situation. At present there are many people in our jails and penitentiaries, not necessarily totally because of their deliberate antisocial or criminal behaviour but because at some stage they came up against an inflexible law which did not permit taking into account the particular dilemma in which they found themselves.

We are now saying that those who deal with these problems in the courtroom should, in fact, be able to examine more directly and more fairly the merits of a particular case, and how a particular person should be dealt with. Having said that, and quite frankly congratulating the minister and his officials for introducing these changes in the law, I think we must be prepared to follow through with the next step. I believe we increasingly realize that it is not enough just to establish a better framework in which sentencing procedures can take place, we must be sure that the individuals who administer this system fully understand the implications of these changes.

I think that here the minister will have a substantial job to do, either himself or through his officials, in terms of a program of education. We know that across the country today there is a very great disparity in terms of judicial competence between those who are prepared to listen, one might say with the inner ear, to the specific case being tried at any particular moment and those who seek only to follow an anachronistic system of hard and fast rules in respect of a whole category of misdemeanours. That surely is not a system which can rehabilitate broken and difficult human beings. Further, it is not a system which will offer any eventual protection to society in respect of future similar behaviour. This whole procedure will have to extend right from the time of the police detection or surveillance through to the time of arrest, sentence and imprisonment itself.

I think the Solicitor General (Mr. Goyer) could indicate the difficulties he has encountered in trying to provide a more humane framework in our penitentiary system. I believe he has found, in a number of instances, that the policies and reforms put forward somehow become dissipated when they reach the point of being brought into effect. I believe we should look very carefully at the whole integration of the judicial activity as it extends from the police stage through to the courts and penitentiaries. While we may have the best intentions in the world in respect of improving vastly the procedures laid down within the law, unless the men and women who administer it at the local level understand these changes and can implement them effectively, we will really not correct the situation but will create fear and uncertainty in the minds of those presently administering the law. I would argue that in a situation of uncertainty and fear we may achieve the very opposite to what is intended. I think we have seen some evidence of this in this country in the form of a real reactionary backlash.

From speaking to individuals involved at the institutional level in these reforms or changes which are being made, I have found there seemed to be a good deal of fear and uncertainty, as well as very great misunderstanding, concerning what we are about. I would argue very strongly that having put the foundation in place, as the minister is attempting to do with this legislation, he should regard this as but the beginning of the process. I think some of my colleagues mentioned the need for training programs in human relations, and in respect of the whole complex way in which our society operates, because the whole nature of criminal actions themselves has to a degree changed. I think that to the degree we have changed our attitude concerning what our places of incarceration should be, we must be very careful about how we are to get the greatest return from these institutions.

Quite frankly, I believe one of the greatest wastes of federal expenditure which occurs year after year is the amount of money we spend to maintain men in federal penitentiaries. Now, it can be argued that this money is spent to protect society. In what way does it protect society when we know that almost three-quarters of the individuals presently behind bars upon release will commit further crimes? Does that mean we are dealing with thousands of incorrigibles who in no way can be rehabilitated? I do not think any student of penology today can for a moment accept that as a realistic answer, because we know there have been experiments in other countries and to a small degree in this country, which have indicated that the rate of recidivism can be effectively altered if the whole approach to incarceration is drastically changed. What are we getting for the thousands and millions of dollars spent to maintain men in institutions? We are getting individuals who are being more effectively schooled in anti-social and criminal behaviour. If one wanted to point to the big waste in government expenditure, one could point to the ongoing activity of maintaining the status quo or, indeed, if you like increasing the number of people who will again enter our society and victimize innocent citizens. It is not necessary and it does not have to be that way, but we must begin to take action on this problem. I think the place to start is in the kind of legislation that the minister has placed before us at present.

It is perhaps not often that one can congratulate this government, particularly from this side of the House, and indeed one must do it in a cautious manner, but I think that what we have here are excellent steps in the right direction. Inasmuch as the legislation removes certain anachronisms from the law and replaces them with specific descriptions of some new and more relevant laws, it is worthy of praise from both sides of the House. As I said last night, reform of the law, particularly with respect to the removal of corporal punishment, is significant in that it finally affirms our society's distaste for the use of brutal methods in areas where psychology and rehabilitative treatment could be and should be the order of the day.

It might be of note to point out in passing that the United Kingdom abandoned the crudities of corporal punishment as far back as 1948. It is interesting, and perhaps just a little sad, that it has taken this country almost a quarter of a century to accept and implement a reform so obviously necessary and so clearly needed. To those who argue that there is still some validity in retaining corporal punishment, I would cite, a study that was done twelve years after the implementation of legislation abolishing corporal punishment in Great Britain as a result of which the Home Secretary in the British parliament in 1960 concluded that corporal punishment was not an essentially effective deterrent. The statistics revealed that the abolition of corporal punishment did not result in any increase in the crime rate for those offences for which it was previously imposed. There are many other statements to which I could refer but I will not take the time of the House now on that matter.

However, I should like to point out that this matter has occupied my attention in a formal way for the past four years. On march 18, 1968, I introduced for the first time—and Your Honour will recall it because you were in the Chair on that occasion—a bill for the abolition of corporal punishment, in which I pointed out that it was obviously a relic of the dark ages and yet in some cases still used. It is interesting to note that later that same day I asked the then minister of justice, now the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), whether or not he would move to include such a provision in the amendments to the Criminal Code which were at that time before the House. He indicated that he was interested in the substance of the bill but doubted whether it could be accepted at that time. Three justice ministers later we have finally included this provision in the Criminal Code, and for this I think all hon. members should be grateful.

Let me turn now to another matter of importance in this legislation, namely the matter of airline hijacking. Discussions with the Canadian Airline Pilots Association indicate that they share with all parties in the House a very real desire for the orderly and rapid passage of this bill. The elements of this bill having to do with hijacking have been called for by all parties for some time now. I think it is perhaps an unfortunate example of the cumbersome bureaucracy of the government, particularly of this government, that it has taken so long for real action to be forthcoming. Unfortunately, we did not have action on this at the time when we could have, because a meeting was held in this country almost a year ago at which agreement was reached on the substance of this issue.

Unfortunately, we have lumped this important issue of skyjacking together with other reforms which perhaps will be controversial and over which there may be much discussion in committee. I am not sure why the government in this instance, realizing the contemporary necessity of getting on with the business of having effective legislation with regard to hijacking, should use the ploy of lumping legislation on this matter over which there is little dispute in the House with other issues on which there could be quite a long discussion. There are clauses of this bill, specifically clauses 25, 26, 27 and 32, which seem to me, as a layman at least, to shift the burden of proof to the suspect in such a way that I wonder whether or not they will really be acceptable either as a precedent or an exception to the rule of British justice. Nevertheless, the much needed tightening of the law with respect to hijacking will be held up until agreement can be reached on all other clauses of the bill.

I want to refer again for a few moments to the matter of corporal punishment, and I referred to this last night, because it would seem there are some who still believe that there is some efficacy and usefulness in retaining this vestige of the past. Particularly today, when there is a certain reactionary mood in the country, nothing, I think, is more symbolic of the early punitive aim of the law than detention and the lash. Those who still advocate their continued use obviously believe that the role of a prison is primarily to punish. It is precisely that view of a prison that is responsible for the alarming rate of recidivism that we have in this country today. Yet, while this principle of reform is excellent and very important, it is important to note that the principle should not stop here.

We are saying, and the minister is saying, that if symbolic punishment exemplified by the means of the whip is no longer acceptable in our federal institutions or as a sentence from the courts, then surely we must say that punishment as a criterion and goal for our federal institutions is as well no longer acceptable. What we have to say is that any institution that oppresses, dehumanizes, brutalizes and torments the inmate is in itself a form of corporal punishment perhaps far more hideous than a whack with a cat-o-nine-tails. What we have to establish is that as long as prison exists to confine as opposed to broaden, to punish rather than to reform and to torment rather than educate, we are administering corporal punishment of the worst variety to almost every single inmate. I think that the government has opened the door, through abolition of corporal punishment, to the recognition of the need to reform our entire penal system.

Of course, I realize that there are never many votes to be gained on the issue of penal reform. It touches far too few of our citizens; it is not a major issue, and so it is probable that this government, like so many in the past, will do little. Nevertheless, the task remains undone and barely begun unless we are prepared to go further along the road of major penal reform. I happen to believe that the deterrent for those who would perform criminal and violent acts, inasmuch as a deterrent exists at all, is the assumption that a person will be detected. I think that any degree of investigation into this area will bring us to the same conclusion. But I think also that there is something totally misplaced in the minds of those who try to judge this in a rational way when they assume that people who commit these criminal acts are acting rationally in the first place. In most cases, if the act is one of a particularly repugnant nature, we are obviously dealing with an irrational act and with a person who, to some degree or other, is acting in a way which we would certainly not describe as normal.

We are concerned, then, about two things. We are concerned that this person should be prevented from performing this act again, and therefore we remove him from society for a time. But tied to that psychology has been the concept of punishment. Now, we are saying that the time has come to regard the recognition of a second, and perhaps even more important priority, and that is the long term interest of society and the individual. We must ensure by all possible means that when an individual comes back into society, he comes back as a different individual. This makes obvious sense, both for his own welfare and for the rehabilitation of his own dignity. Also, it makes sense in terms of society as a whole, because if we release on a daily or weekly basis people into our society who are still sick, who are still on the verge of some kind of violent or criminal act, in what way have we provided protection for the innocent in our society? We have not, and therefore we must admit that to that extent we have failed. I think we must realize that in the change that is being made with respect to corporal punishment we are making a fundamental change with respect to the whole concept of punishment, rehabilitation and protection of society. I hope that many will consider this bill in terms of the improvements that we will be making to society in general.

Before I take my seat, I should like to refer to one final matter dealt with in the legislation which I think is quite important, both in itself and by implication. It has to do with the recognition of the right of men and women to participate in jury duty in this country. I think it has been one of the continuing sex anomalies that, at least until this bill was presented, it has not been possible in all cases for women to participate in jury duty. We have continued to embrace, through that anachronism, a kind of second class citizenship for the feminine members of society. I think that the minister and his officials should be congratulated for taking the step they have. Also included in the bill is the change regarding soliciting, which recognizes that the converse of women soliciting for men can be equally true.

I mention these two changes simply to point out that this is but the tip of an iceberg. Increasingly, reports are being placed before us which indicate that in our society there has been a definite, perhaps altogether too subtle at times, discrimination against women. I think that we should treat each and every piece of legislation that is brought before this House with great care so as to make sure that we recognize each individual in his own right and do not discriminate, be it on the basis of race, class, religion or sex.

I trust that we shall have many further opportunities to discuss this legislation, and in particular the provisions I mentioned having to do with some presumption of guilt which I hope will be elaborated upon by the minister when he appears before the committee.

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words on the bill as a layman, not a person with legal talent but rather as one who becomes concerned with the type of treatment many people in our society are receiving today. All too often we in this House and those in the courts of the land pass and deal with legislation when all we are doing is using our direct judgment of the moment. Unless some realistic and humane consideration is given the legislation that we pass, then nothing is going to be resolved so far as the amendments before us are concerned. If we are to be consistent in this House of Commons we should give consideration to those people who, in the last resort, will make the final judgment on those who are covered by the legislation.

It appears to me that all too often those who have to make that final decision let their bigotry get the best of them. All of us remember what happened in Toronto not long ago when a justice of the peace deliberately let his bigotry get the better of him and some people suffered in the process. No doubt the minister will look at this situation and will carefully scrutinize those who in future are appointed to a position where they make a final judgment on others, to ensure that they are themselves able and capable of appreciating the social consequences of any sentence they may impose.

My colleague, the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert), dealt at length with the various sections of the bill and I have no intention of recovering that ground at this time as a layman. Let me deal, as did the speaker before me, with some of the provisions in the hijacking section. I believe the time has long passed when these provisions should have been brought in, even if it were necessary to bring them in as separate amendments a year or two ago. Even if some amendments are made to the present provisions in the bill dealing with hijacking, we still have to ratify both the Hague and the Montreal conventions following approval of the Criminal Code amendments. It seems to me we spend a lot of time in this House spinning our wheels, so to say, not getting very far with the very specific legislation required to deal with a situation that has come upon us within a very short space of time. I have listened to the observations of those who are in the position of making this kind of decision and who suggest that in the very immediate future they will be taking some action concerning the situation confronting us. I am wondering whether the "very immediate future" means in one month, two months, one year or two years.

We all realize the serious situation regarding the kind of hijacking that has been going on during the last while, and if the minister is really concerned about this, surely some immediate action could be taken to alleviate the problem confronting the Canadian Air Line Pilots Association, the travelling public, and others who face the dilemma of whether to travel by air in view of the frightening situation that exists. As I have said, even with the passage of the bill we still have to ratify The Hague and the Montreal conventions. I hope the minister will keep in constant touch with his colleague, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson), so that this matter can be taken care of as soon as this bill gets through the committee and comes back to the House, with whatever amendment may be made to it.

The hon. member who preceded me spoke of some prison situations, and in the short time that I have been a member of parliament I have had the opportunity, along with some of my colleagues, to visit both the Prince Albert penitentiary and the new Millhaven penitentiary. The latter visit did not turn out too well, since the minister decided that as members of parliament we should not perhaps go there to see what is going on behind the scenes and we were asked to leave the premises.

However, at the Prince Albert penitentiary we talked to the inmates and found all too often that the only concern of the people running the institution was to make sure the inmates were subjected to the utmost confinement. They were positive that that was the way to bring rehabilitation to the inmates. They were not concerned about rehabilitative measures that embraced technical schools and the technical courses which are available in some penitentiaries. Instead of that, they tried to ensure that the prisoners were confined to their cells for the majority of their time. Not surprisingly this only makes the prisoners bitter, and when they are released at the end of their term they vent their bitterness on society for dealing with them in this unjust way.

Even though the Millhaven penitentiary is nice and shiny, with all modern conveniences, if no real consideration is given to how prisoners in penitentiaries are treated, then what can we expect as far as law enforcement is concerned? I am sure we all recognize that our police forces try to do a good job, but when they are confronted with people who have become better as a result of serving a term in a penitentiary how can they cope with them? With my limited knowledge, I am still of the opinion that those people involved with welfare committees, those who do not have anything, believe that the law of this land deals with them unjustly and that we in this House of Commons must become concerned if we want people to respect the law.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that the people who say that the law is applied in two ways have a case. I am sure the minister has run into the situation, as we all have, where people with money and position seem to be able to get away with murder, while all too often people on welfare receive the full effect of the laws passed in this House. It would appear that if you have money you can hire someone to get you off the hook. I hope that the minister realizes it is not good enough to have the best legislation in the world; we still need the realistic and human touch of those who mete out the sentences under the legislation.

I would like to suggest to the Minister that, in addition to the submissions made by the Canadian Airline Pilots Association, in addition to the submissions made by the poor people's associations and the welfare groups and others who feel they are being dealt with unjustly, when appointments are made to the various positions he give consideration to the social sciences involved in those positions, which many people now consider to be most important.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the minister speaks now, that will close debate. The hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang).

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the debate in this House on Bill C-2 would lead one to believe that we should have a fruitful discussion in committee as we move toward the passage of these new measures into law. The committee will be a more appropriate place for me to deal in detail with some of the comments of individual members on particular clauses or aspects of the bill, including such matters as the present status of the breathalyzer.

I should like to join with the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis) in her remarks of appreciation to Senator Fergusson for the lead she took in the other place in connection with the provision of clauses which would put women in the same position as men for jury duty. It was an oversight on my part not to give credit to Senator Fergusson in this regard, and I appreciate the reminder.

Members on both sides have generally spoken in favour of the changes in regard to corporal punishment. I was somewhat astonished, not by the opposite point of view being taken by a member but by the tone taken by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert). As I say, I can understand an attempt to make an analytical argument in favour of the deterrent effect of corporal punishment, but I was slightly astonished at his tone which seemed to suggest that by wanting corporal punishment removed the rest of us were on the side of crime. This, I think, is an unnecessary and inflammatory position to take.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: It is even more unusual when taken with the fact that almost all members who spoke on both sides of the House have made clear their support for finally moving into a position of removing corporal punishment.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Especially his own colleagues.

Mr. Lang: I should make one further clarification, Mr. Speaker. There was a reference made to some slightly ambiguous words which I used in connection with there perhaps being a case for corporal punishment. I did make it clear in my words, as did the Solicitor General (Mr. Goyer), that this does not apply in the penal system in general. I was simply reserving the position for the head of a family and his role in this regard where the atmosphere is rather different from that in a penal institution. That is precisely the contrast I would draw—if corporal punishment may be imposed in the atmosphere of the family, presumably with love, I might take a different view of it in other settings.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): There is no right of appeal there!

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I could not end the debate without commenting on the many things said by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), who spoke against both corporal punishment and capital punishment and surveyed the general need in our law to impose order through effective enforcement and also the need for general flexibility and the movement of the law toward a reasonable stance. I think these remarks completely fit in with the distinguished legal career of the right hon. gentleman, and I should like to applaud them at this time.

In the course of subsequent remarks there was some confusion concerning the clause dealing with common assault. To some extent the Parliamentary Secretary to the Solicitor General (Mr. Hogarth) has corrected one impression in this regard, namely that we are now indeed increasing the penalty in regard to common assault and turning it into a summary conviction offence. There is a further point which should be clarified in regard to increasing penalties. For assault causing bodily harm, the option is given to the accused to choose the method of trial rather than being forced to go before a magistrate.

I should say one further thing when dealing with specific sections in relation to what the Parliamentary Secretary to the Solicitor General said. By previous amendments to section 589 of the Criminal Code, it is open to a court to sentence an accused to a lesser offence, even if that be a summary conviction offence and even when the accused is before the court on an indictable offence. I think I should say that simply to set the record straight.

Many of the other subjects to which hon. members referred are under serious study both by the Law Reform Commission and by the department as we seek the material for the next omnibus Criminal Code amendments. As I have said, Mr. Speaker, I think it is important for us to continue to proceed quickly in response to clearly forming opinion about the changes needed in our criminal law to make it ever more responsive to generally understood and reasonable approaches to the law. We must always seek additional ways to ensure that the law treats all persons as fairly as possible, rich and poor alike. That means removal of discrimination whether it be in the letter of the law itself or in the attitude of judges and others who operate within the legal system.

These are the objectives we must pursue. We must not assume that they are easy to attain, but by keeping them in sight we might hope to make progress toward them.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

PROTECTION OF PRIVACY BILL

AMENDMENTS TO CRIMINAL CODE, CROWN LIABILITY ACT AND OFFICIAL SECRETS ACT

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice) moved that Bill C-6, to amend the Criminal Code, the Crown Liability Act and the Official Secrets Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

• (1540)

He said: Mr. Speaker, the legislation before the House proposes the addition of a new part to the Criminal Code, specifically, Part IV.1 "Invasion of Privacy". The form of the legislative is prohibitory; that is, certain conduct is prohibited and described as criminal, its purpose being to protect rights of privacy against invasion.

The particular right of privacy which is recognized and protected is the right of individuals to communicate with each other where the circumstances are such that it is reasonable for them to expect that the communication will not be intercepted by others. The only kind of interception which is prohibited is that done wilfully by means of an electromagnetic, acoustic, mechanical or other device.

Over the last few years there has been an increasing body of evidence of the technological advances made in surveillance techniques. It has become possible for almost anyone to penetrate the privacy of offices and homes, to watch and listen to people in public places and to listen in on their communications by telephone, telegraph and radio. All of these things can be done without detection, without evidence that the invasion has taken place; and it can be accomplished through the use of electronic gadgetry which is not too expensive and which is becoming increasingly available.

Privacy must mean the right to be let alone, to live one's own life with a minimum degree of interference. The extent to which an individual gives up that privacy by communicating with others or associating with others in society must remain a matter in respect of which he has freedom of choice. Of course, it is not an absolute right, because being in society requires acceptance of some responsibilities by him and intercourse with his fellow citizens. Each individual requires individual privacy to nourish his individual creativity, to preserve his personality balance and develop his individuality. There are parallel needs in group activity and in the growth and development of each individual and group in society. There is a constant search for the proper balance between the needs for privacy and for disclosure.

In order to achieve the greatest freedom for an individual in society, there must be a proper balance with respect to the gathering and disclosure of information by government. A small area of secrecy for government is necessary to preserve the integrity of secret information and the privacy of internal policy-making processes, but those processes must be made public when the need for secrecy has gone. In any event, there must be sufficient publicity of government matters so that the people will be able to form proper judgments in political matters based on the facts. It is in this context that I propose this legislation which recognizes in individuals the right of privacy and which will protect an invasion of those rights.

A study of electronic surveillance and invasion of privacy was commenced in the Department of Justice some years ago to further work which had been done by committees of the Canadian Bar Association. This subject was debated at the 1968 Annual Convention of the Canadian Bar Association, at the conclusion of which the resolution adopted was presented to the then minister of justice.

There have been a number of private members' bills going back for seven or eight years which proposed legislation dealing with this subject matter. Some of those private members' bills were referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, together with a general direction that the committee consider and report on the subject matter of electronic eavesdropping on November 25, 1968. That same order of reference directed the committee to recommend legislative action. The order of reference was continued by further order on November 21, 1969. The committee reported to the House on March 11, 1970. During the course of its deliberation it heard evidence from a number of witnesses and considered a number of submissions made in writing.

I think it would not be inappropriate for me to say that the committee deserves commendation for the work which it did and I should like, too, to say that the many people who made submissions to the committee and subsequently to my department or those who appeared for the purpose of giving evidence should be recognized as having made responsible contributions to the democratic process.

The legislation which is now proposed is almost identical to the bill which was introduced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), my predecessor as minister of justice, on June 28, 1971. An opportunity has been granted to the hon. members of this House and to all citizens of our country to consider the proposals and to make known their views with respect to these proposals. A good number of them have been considered in the Department of Justice, and I imagine that all of the members here have had full opportunity to consult with their constituents about these proposals.

The bill before the House would make it an offence, for the first time, wilfully to intercept a private communication by means of electromagnetic, acoustic, mechanical, or other devices. A private communication is any oral communication, or telecommunication, made under circumstances in which it is reasonable for the originator thereof to expect that it will not be intercepted by any person other than the person intended by the originator to receive it. Intercept means to listen to, record, or acquire a communication, or acquire its substance, meaning or purport. An offender would be liable to imprisonment for five years.

It would also be an offence to possess, sell, or purchase any electromagnetic, acoustic, mechanical or other device, or any component thereof, knowing that the design thereof renders it primarily useful for surreptitious interception of private communications. Conviction for this offence could bring imprisonment of up to two years.

A third new offence would be with respect to the disclosure of any information obtained by a person by means of an unlawful interception; or by disclosure, without proper authority, of information obtained lawfully. A sentence of up to two years imprisonment is provided for this offence.

The two basic exceptions to the general prohibition against interception of private communications would be in cases, first, where the interception or seizure is directed towards prevention or detection of espionage, sabotage, or any other subversive activity directed against Canada, or detrimental to the security of Canada, and where such interception or seizure is necessary in the public interest; or second, where an authorization has been obtained from a judge of a superior court of criminal jurisdiction in aid of a criminal investigation.

Provision is also made in the bill for certain other exceptions. Interceptions would be excused where a person intercepts with the consent of only one of the parties to a communication, or where the interception is necessarily incidental to the ordinary duties of a person engaged in providing a telephone, telegraph or other communication service to the public.

Before a judge grants an authorization to intercept a private communication, he must be satisfied that (a) other investigative procedures have been tried and have failed; (b) other investigative procedures are unlikely to succeed; or (c) the urgency of the matter is such that it would be impractical to carry out the investigation of the offence using only other investigative procedures.

Any application for an authorization must be in writing and signed by a peace officer or public officer specially designated for that purpose by the Solicitor General of Canada or an attorney general of a province. Authorization can only be granted in respect of indictable offences, and the interception so authorized will not be valid for more than 30 days. There is, however, provision for renewal if the judge is satisfied by further evidence that it is necessary.

Provision is made for an emergency permit to intercept for a period not in excess of 36 hours if an attorney general or the Solicitor General of Canada or a peace officer or public officer designated in writing by him is satisfied that circumstances exist that would justify the giving of an authorization for the interception of a private communication and that the situation requires that the interception commence before an authorization could, with reasonable diligence, be obtained. However, under such emergency procedure, an application for an authorization or approval would have to be made as quickly as possible.

Consideration was given by the Standing Committee to whether the authorization to intercept communications should be granted by a judge, a responsible minister, or by some combination of the two. Testimony before the committee was divided on this issue. As I have noted, the proposed legislation is that an application would have to be made to a judge of a superior court for an authorization. It is suggested that a judge is able to consider the application from a position of impartiality and thus bring to these procedures an assurance that they are not used freely and without control by law enforcement officers.

On the other hand, it is said that this is not the proper role for a judicial officer, because the application is ex parte, and he is not in a position to judge in the usual sense; that an attorney general is politically responsible for his conduct and can be subject to questioning should any controversy arise about the manner in which he has discharged his responsibility. The proponents of this view point out this is not so in the case of a judge who cannot be questioned and is obliged to remain silent in the event some criticism is levelled; he must remain as a judicial person, impartial and unable to engage in controversy or explanations.

The bill proposes a new approach to the law relating to admissibility of evidence which has been illegally obtained. At the present time, the test of admissibility of evidence in criminal proceedings is whether the evidence is relevant to the issue before the court and no regard is had for the question of how the evidence was obtained. The Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs recommended a change in the existing law in so far as it related to the unauthorized interception of private communications. However, the committee went on to recommend that any evidence discovered or derived from an inadmissible statement could be received in evidence.

This is the approach which has been taken in the proposed legislation. There are competing points of view and on each side of this question there are arguments, many of which have been forcefully presented both to the standing committee during its deliberations and afterwards to the Minister of Justice when this legislation was first proposed to the last session of this House. I feel sure that both sides of the question will be examined again by the Standing Committee, but in the meantime I believe I should set out here some of the salient points on the two sides.

The provisions of section 178.16(1) amount to a rule of evidence applicable to all criminal proceedings and to all civil proceedings and other matters whatsoever respecting which the Parliament of Canada has jurisdiction. Arguments which have been advanced by those people who favour the introduction of this rule are of two types. The first relates to participation by the government and the courts in illegal conduct. It is said that by acquiring and using evidence illegally obtained, the whole law enforcement and judicial process becomes tarnished and that respect for it diminishes. On the other hand, it is argued that a law which permits a preliminary finding of illegality in the manner of obtaining evidence to stop consideration of facts otherwise admissible and germane to the issue of truth likewise brings disrespect for the administration of justice.

But the principal argument advanced in the United States in favour of the exclusionary rule, where it has been in effect for more than 50 years, is that it will deter law enforcement officials from illegal behaviour and will have the long-term effect of encouraging greater conformity by invoking the moral and educational force of the law.

The arguments advanced against the adoption of the exclusionary rule appear to be based on the premise that the true function of the administration of justice is to establish truth in matters coming before the courts and that a court should not be refused access to facts relevant to the search for truth. This is not to be confused with the confession rule because there evidence is refused on the theory it might not be true. The civilized conduct of criminal trials must not be confined by mechanical or artificial rules. The inquiry which must be made here is whether the exclusionary rule is merely apparent rejection of approval of illegal conduct without effect or whether it is necessary control. A detailed examination of this question can be made before the standing committee, but I would like to note that until just recently there was no provision in the United States that the federal government is liable for damages for illegal interception by its employees. When the exclusionary rule was invoked there and implemented, the deterrent effect of tortious liability was not available. The legislation I propose does contain amendments by which the federal government would be vicariously liable. The opponents of the rule argue that the United States experience is clear evidence that the rule is not effective as a deterrent force.

In the legislation I propose, there are three ways by which unlawful or unauthorized interception should be deterred. In the first instance, the conduct is criminal bringing with it the sanctions I have mentioned. Second, the individual wrongdoer is liable in damages, both actual and punitive. This liability extends to the federal government for damages flowing from the illegal acts of its employees. The third deterrent force proposed is the exclusionary rule, but its opponents argue that the other two sanctions are sufficient. It is on that question we no doubt will have further comment. Before an intercepted private communication could be used in a trial, notice of the intention to use it, together with a transcript of the contents, would have to be given to the accused person.

A disclosure of the existence of a private communication or the contents thereof would be prohibited except where the disclosure is made in the course of giving evidence under oath, in connection with duties related to a criminal investigation, in the course of normal operation of a telecommunication system, or where a disclosure to a peace officer is intended to be in the interest of the administration of justice.

The bill would also amend the Crown Liability Act to provide that where a servant of the federal Crown commits an offence under the provisions of the act, the federal government would be liable for all loss or damage caused by his actions. Provision is also made for the recovery of punitive damages in an amount not exceeding $5,000.

Another safeguard proposed is that there be a full reporting system. The Solicitor General of Canada would be required to prepare and lay before parliament each year a detailed report relating to applications made, authorizations granted and refused and interceptions carried out. Details would also be required on emergency permits. The attorney general of each province would be required to prepare and publish a similar report. The purpose of these provisions is to bring to the public notice of what activities have taken place in the past year.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted to ask the minister a question. With reference to the temporary permits granted by an attorney general of a province and the other authorizations in the province which are instigated by him, to whom is his report made? Is it made to the legislature or to the Solicitor General of Canada and tabled in the House of Commons at the same time the Solicitor General makes his own report?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, the bill in its present form is silent as to how the report should be made public. It simply requires it. In that sense, it leaves it up to the individual attorney general to satisfy the requirement. I think it could be satisfied in any of these ways, including tabling in the legislature by the attorney general, making it public without tabling or by returning it to the solicitor general for tabling here. We think any of those ways would be satisfactory. It is a political accountability in action, and the furtherance of a discharge of responsibility which I mentioned earlier that the government should inform the people of the manner in which their business is being conducted.

The proposed legislation recognizes a right of privacy. Its purpose is to protect that right from invasion involving modern technological surveillance techniques. I believe it does accomplish this purpose, while maintaining the balance between the rights of an individual and the rights of all individuals as protected by the state.

Again, as with the legislation amending the Criminal Code with which we have just dealt, I anticipate useful comments by members opposite in the House and in committee. I look forward to the adoption of this legislation. We have long recognized the need for a move in the field of protection of privacy. Most of us also recognize the need to balance this with adequate power for enforcement officers to perform enforcement functions for the protection of us all. This legislation, which seeks to find that balance, is important. I think it will make a useful contribution to the law and I commend it to hon. members.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the members of the House, I want to thank the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) for the full statement he has made on the purposes of Bill C-6. The subject matter of this bill has percolated through the parliamentary process over several years. I think mention should be made of a measure introduced at one time by the hon. Mr. Justice Larry Pennell of the Supreme Court of Ontario. If one examines the report embodied in Votes and Proceedings of Wednesday, March 11, 1970 one will find there were measures presented by the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Mather), the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters), the present Minister of Communications (Mr. Stanbury)—I hope I have identified Mr. Stanbury correctly—and the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow). Thus, because it has received good support, I believe the passage of the bill before us will be easier than had the subject been freshly introduced.

• (1600)

One of the provisions in this bill represents a signal victory for the parliamentary committee system over the government. Another provision leaves much to be desired—I shall draw attention to both these aspects as my short speech progresses.

First, as to the purposes of Bill C-6. As I say, there are really three main provisions. Wire tapping becomes illegal, though it can still be done under certain circumstances under an element of judicial control. There is provision, in the second place, for civil liability to be accepted by the Crown. This is interesting, because when the question of wire tapping as a James Bond tactic is raised, the Crown looks innocent and says such things do not happen. Now, it says: they do not go on, but we shall assume liability and responsibility should they go on and should damages be awarded. This is in harmony with some of the Alice in Wonderland aspects of modern society. The third point is that wire tapping becomes legal if it relates to the security of the country. It is the provision of the law in the absence of adequate safeguards that I shall be challenging later in my speech, and also when the measure goes into committee. I shall try to make at least a suggestion which might be considered by other hon. members, by ministers and by the government, and if this formula for safeguards is not sufficient, I hope someone will come up with an acceptable formula for safeguards with respect to the third element.

It might be noticed that though the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) is piloting this measure through the House and presumably before the committee, it will be his colleague on the legal side of government, the Solicitor General (Mr. Goyer), who will be receiving reports. I mentioned earlier that there was a victory for the parliamentary committee system implied in one provision which is contained in Bill C-6. This was the element of judicial control. The predecessor of the present Minister of Justice had made a case for control by the Minister of Justice himself. To do the minister justice, and he always does himself justice when he makes his arguments, he was making a case on the grounds that, while the Minister of Justice is a political animal he is also an accountable animal, whereas a judge of the Supreme Court is not. In short, that if abuses spring up with regard to permission to operate wire taps, the Minister of Justice would be embarrassed if these abuses were sufficient to cause a public outcry, and this in itself would be a deterrent to abuses of the system. However, the committee felt, on reflection and on balance of opinion that it would be better to make these wire taps subject to judicial control.

This particular point is made at page 563 of the same issue of Votes and Proceedings as I alluded to earlier, under the heading "The Choice between a Responsible Minister and a Court".

> Testimony before the Committee has been divided on the issue of whether the authorization to intercept communications should be granted by a judge, by a Minister, or by some combination of the two. In the United Kingdom, authorization is granted by a Minister, without, however, any political or public visibility. In the United States, authorization is granted by a judge upon application by a prosecuting attorney, with political and public visibility. Having considered the alternatives, a majority of the Committee has decided to recommend that the decision to apply for authority to intercept communications should be made by a responsible Minister of the Crown, based upon a request to the Minister by law enforcement agencies. The responsibility for the decision as to whether or not the request for authorization to intercept communications should be granted should be vested in a judge of a superior court of criminal jurisdiction.

This is the decision the government has taken, and I think it is a wise one. It will undoubtedly save a lot of flak when this measure is considered in committee. If the bill has any defects, they are as follows: it does not deal with the vast amount of technological data which has been assembled, or is being assembled on most of us in Canada, and it does not deal with the question of governmental surveillance. These details have been noted by others, so I do not press them particularly, though I would note a speech made by one of the leading bureaucrats, a former member of the Parliamentary Press Gallery, Mr. Richard Gwyn, delivered to the 47th Annual Couchiching Conference at Geneva Park in August, 1971. Mr. Gwyn, who is a director of the Communications Department's socio-economic planning branch, stated that the government collects far more date than it needs on individuals and that the handling of this data was often sloppy. There was, he said, "a vast wash of information about individuals floating about Ottawa". Later he stated, according to the report which appeared in the Globe and Mail on August 7, 1971:

> It cannot be safely said that computers are only tools in the hands of human beings who make the decisions. I am more convinced of the possibility that machines do change our environment and do change the nature of decisions, limit the nature of the changes, emphasize some and deemphasize others that we are able to make.

Computers, he went on to say, would demolish the usual safeguard of inefficiency in the manual handling of files. He added:

> Government inefficiency has always been one of the great protectors of civil liberties. Civil servants will not give up their data banks to each other.

So, with the advent of increased efficiency we lose some of the protection we enjoy against governments. This illustrates the point I am making that we are still not dealing with the subject from the point of view of the vast amount of technology which directly affects citizens and what can be done to protect the right of individual privacy from wrongful use of such data. This point has been pursued vigorously, so far without success, by the civil liberties section of the Canadian Bar Association. For example, in September, 1970, in Halifax, it adopted section 1, on the right of a citizen to privacy, which provided that the individual should, by law, have some control over information passed on about him by credit agents and other bodies. That group also sought regulation of private detective agencies, credit bodies and other groups which keep files on individuals.

One of the strong points made by the civil liberties section was the right of a citizen to inspect any file compiled on him, to challenge incorrect information and require that it be corrected, and to sue any person who supplied false information. In that respect, our law is still deficient and we are still, each and every last one of us, at the mercy of sleuths who may not do an efficient job and may incorrectly report some circumstance about us, which is compiled somewhere and which may be to our detriment at some future date.

There is considerable sophistication in the communications world today. I was intrigued by seven or eight recent developments in this field. They were considered at a meeting organized by the Council of Europe in Brussels, Belgium, about a year or so ago. Some eight of them appealed to me as examples of the sophisticated devices that can and perhaps do operate in Canada and elsewhere. One of these was the harmonica bug which can be placed in your telephone and relay conversations over thousands of miles. The bug is activated by the simple process of the eavesdropper dialing the victim's phone number and blowing a predetermined note on the harmonica. This prevents the phone from ringing and enables that bug in that phone to pick up and transmit any conversations in the room. This is fascinating.

Then, there is the bumper beeper. We have all seen these used in the chases that take place in the plethora of detective programs on television, so I will not bother going into that. There is a third one, however, a development for tracking individuals by radar. It is said, however, that this may have some entertainment value but not likely to have much detecting value, since the doppler system, as it is called, can distinguish women from men by the swing of their buttocks. I simply mention this as a bit of a novelty, and I would not want to give away any of the secrets of the attractiveness of the female sex, as obviously the doppler system has a great deal to do with it. I invite members interested in that point to pursue it further in textbooks on physics.

There is another device which can turn ordinary windowpanes into snooping devices by using a laser beam to monitor vibrations on the glass from sound waves inside the room. There is another device so intricate that even in very large buildings such as this, it can determine, on which side of the building an individual is walking by the tilt of the building. You do not have to be in the leaning tower of Pisa to know the tilt of a building. There is another highly sensitive thermal detector which can discover where a person has been sitting in a room simply by measuring the infinitesimal degree of difference in heat. One could pursue this subject much further, but I have only two more points to make in this regard.

There is a machine now being tested on animals which sends signals to electrodes implanted in the brain which can have an effect on the animal's behaviour. This can also be done to human beings. Finally, as we find out in this wonderland of electronic marvels and abilities to snoop and pry from one end of the universe to the other, there is a complete catalogue in which it is recorded that 10 reels containing 1,500 yards of tape punched by microscopic laser beam can store information on every man, woman and child, some two billion of them in the world. This is the world in which we live. Most of us are not aware of these ramifications, yet some people use these devices. In winding up on this point, I should simply refer hon. members to some of the evidence given to the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs when it studied the subject-matter of this bill.

There is one aspect of Bill C-6 with which I disagree very strongly. It is to be found in the changes to the Official Secrets Act brought about by Bill C-6. One of the provisions permits the Solicitor General of Canada to issue a warrant authorizing the interception or seizure of any communication if he is satisfied by evidence on oath that the purpose of such interception or seizure is related to the prevention or detection of espionage, sabotage or any other subversive activity directed against Canada or detrimental to the security of Canada, and that such interception or seizure is necessary in the public interest. There is a further procedure outlined in respect of the use of the warrant which requires a report by the Commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police to the Solicitor General, but that is all the safeguard there is.

We are left with the rather tremendous and delicate problem of deciding what is in the national interest of Canada, and how far people dealing with the security of the state should be required to go to account for their actions. I suggest the section goes too far, and that it should be possible to include some safeguards. Perhaps I could buttress my case for saying that the section goes too far by quoting the Solicitor General (Mr. Goyer) when he spoke to the Canadian Association of Chiefs of Police on September 2, 1971, in Calgary, Alberta. He stated:

> The next point I want to make concerns the need for a much greater degree of open public discussion about police policy. Not only must you explain your role to the public, but the public must also let you know what it thinks the role of the police should be. I am not advocating that police operational activities be discussed in a public forum but, what I do believe where matters of policy are concerned, is that we must take a much more careful look at the expression: "It is not in the public interest to disclose this information", before we make use of it.

That philosophy is really opposed to the philosophy in the bill as it relates to the Official Secrets Act. We need much more than a simple report by the Commissioner of the RCMP to the Solicitor General regarding the responsibility for using communications interceptors, that is wiretaps, bugs and the like, to deal with possible injury to the state. I believe justification of the use of these electronic devices should not be left to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and the Solicitor General's office. I believe there should be at least some responsible members of the public engaged in deciding if there has been any abuse of this method. The suggestion I make—and I am not firmly wedded to it but believe it is at least a point for discussion—is that the report of these activities should be made to a group of senior and responsible statesmen of this country who would be nominated by the Prime Minister, the Leader of the Opposition and the leaders of the other political parties. I think of persons say of the calibre of M. J. Coldwell or Mr. St. Laurent, although perhaps his age would prohibit him taking part in this exercise. I have in mind people of that calibre, who are trusted and who are great Canadians, who would examine how the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and the Solicitor General have used the methods of bugging and wiretaps in connection with the defence of the realm and the protection of the public security.

Such a group could make its report on whether or not it is considered proper use has been made of these devices. I do not think it is sufficient to have files compiled in some room to which only a few people have access or have reports made in places where only a few people may ever have the courage to stand up and say to the police that these powers should not be used. I think that if powers are given and not checked, the likely result is that there will be a greater use of these powers rather than a limited or judicious use of these powers. That is why I suggest the Minister of Justice, when this bill reaches the committee, make some provision for safeguards along the lines I have suggested. If that were done, I believe I could very cheerfully welcome the utmost despatch in dealing with this measure, most of which is good. Most of it reflects the hard work of parliamentary committees and individual members of parliament who have been interested in this topic over the years. Now, we need the finishing touch so that we are not giving carte blanche in respect of the official secrets portion of the bill. If we do this, we will have come up with a pretty good measure in this age of communications.

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, the problems of wiretapping and electronic surveillance have been surfacing in Canada for the past 15 years, but more especially in the last five years when we have seen a variety of sophisticated instruments and methods used to invade the privacy of individuals. The hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave) indicated some of the most sophisticated methods which are being used. I would remind you, Mr. Speaker, of three simple illustrations which bring home the importance of this matter. When you learn that car dealers are bugging conversations between a customer and a salesman you have an indication of how important this matter has become. When you learn that the bugging of the conversations of an individual with a criminal record in Toronto lead to an inquiry against two Toronto magistrates, this again stresses the importance. When you learn that the Redpath Sugar Company of Toronto employed a firm which is noted for its union busting and that a member of the Toronto police force aided and abetted that firm in respect of bugging, this indicates we have reached a serious state.

In view of the fact there is now virtually no legislation limiting electronic surveillance, this legislation is an improvement over the present situation. Some legislation is better than none. Yet the bill presents serious problems which worry Canadians who believe in a free and open society based on democratic institutions and the rule of law. The law as it stood was totally inadequate. The federal act incorporating the Bell Telephone Company makes it an offence for anyone to interfere with any of the company's property or the working of its lines or to intercept any message transmitted thereon. The Ontario Telephone Act makes it an offence to divulge the contents of a conversation heard by means of wiretapping, except when lawfully authorized or directed. We have had similar complaints concerning wiretapping in British Columbia and Saskatchewan. All these incidents have proven that the present provisions of the law are inadequate, that the enforcement is sporadic and half-hearted and that the penalties are insufficient. In fact, the police have been breaking the law which they were bound to uphold and enforce.

One wonders whether this legislation would make actions by the police which were de facto in the past de jure now. The new law is at least clear in three aspects. First, all electronic surveillance in the private sector will be completely illegal. Second, the possession, sale and purchase of electronic equipment by unauthorized persons which render it primarily useful for surreptitious interception of private communication is illegal. The third aspect concerns the liability of the Crown with regard to the legal interception by servants of the Crown. These are welcome features of the legislation. The enhancement of private profit cannot justify such intrusions on the personal privacy of individuals. The concerns about the bill are found in the areas of the authorization to the police to wiretap, the issuing of the authorization by judges, the question of the admissibility of the evidence obtained, the amendments to the Crown Liability Act for compensation regarding unlawful wiretaps, the amendments to the Official Secrets Act concerning alleged espionage, sabotage and subversive activities. These areas give me and many others in Canada serious concern.

The authorization to the police to wiretap, provided certain criteria have been satisfied for the judge issuing the permit, brings the entire problem of the personal privacy in a democratic country into sharp focus. This underlines the problems arising from the tyranny of technology. Personal privacy is central to man's dignity and liberty. To deny him this may be to undermine his very humanity and to erode his belief in democratic institutions and the judicial process. In the words of Mr. Justice Field of the United States:

> —Of all the rights of the citizen, few are of greater importance or more essential to his peace and happiness than the right of personal security and that involves, not merely protection of his person from assault but exemption of his private affairs—from the inspection and scrutiny of others. Without the enjoyment of this right, all others would lose their value.

That idea was repeated in a speech by Professor Edward Ryan at the Couchiching Conference of August 5, 1971. He set forth the view of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs concerning this important problem. He said it was stated in the Justice Committee that:

> The right to privacy, far from being a mere individual claim, is itself a public interest of the highest order, in which may be found the wellsprings of individual creativity and group expression which are at the heart of popular government. They cannot be allowed to be imperilled. No more fundamental laws to our ideals is possible than that posed by the possession and potential abuse of overly wide governmental powers in this area.

From those statements arise such questions as: should the police be reduced to snooping on the members of our society, and have the police made out a case that police snooping is necessary and effective to combat crime? It has been said, first, that the police should be as well equipped as the criminals, and secondly, that crime is on the increase. The new bill deals with the problem of whether the police should be as well equipped as the criminal. Private surveillance is illegal, as is the possession, sale and purchase of unauthorized electronic equipment.

The second assertion that crime is on the increase does not necessarily jibe with the facts. The fact is that more crime is reported today than in the past, and therefore it does not follow that more crime is being committed. The assertion that police wiretapping and electronic surveillance is necessary to combat crime should be reviewed on the basis of facts. The self-conferred right to wiretap by the police has had no appreciable effect on crime detection. The evidence discloses that wiretapping is used by the police for the purpose of aiding in investigating and seldom if ever for the purpose of collecting evidence. The following was stated in the brief of the Canadian Civil Liberties Association which was presented to the standing committee:

> In a learned law review article, Brown and Peer made the following observation, generally supported by experts in the field:
> "Wiretapping is of very little use in connection with ordinary felonies and crimes of violence. There is lacking in this sporadic sort of crime the pattern of continuity necessary for effective wiretap operation by the police officers."

No less an authority than Ramsay Clark, U.S. president Johnson's last attorney, has voiced his misgivings as follows:

> In several cities where organized crime is most severe, police and prosecution have in the past used wiretap without inhibition. It has not been effective. Organized crime still flourishes in these communities. In other cities where there has never been organized crime, police have never used wiretap. The massive programs required to end organized crime have no place for wiretap. It is too slow, too costly, too ineffective ... Organized crime cannot exist where criminal justice agencies are not at least neutralized and probably corrupted to some degree ... The F.B.I. used electronic surveillance in the organized crime area from at least the late 1950's until July 1965 ... So far as is known not one conviction resulted from any of these bugs ... In 1967 and 1968, without the use of any electronic surveillance, F.B.I. convictions of organized crime and racketeering figures were several times higher than during any year before 1965. The bugs weren't necessary.

With regard to organized crime in Canada, we had a Royal Commission studying crime in Ontario in 1961. In their report they stated that organized crime was virtually non-existent. In 1969, the Canadian Association of Chiefs of Police stated that organized crime was in its infancy. Is it necessary to give these wide powers with regard to wiretapping and electronic surveillance? The bill provides that the permit shall be granted by a judge. The problem arises as to whether the authorization should be given by a judge or by the responsible minister; in other words, should it be granted by a judicial authority or a political authority. The problems with which we have been confronted in having the judicial authority grant the permits are that the application for the permit must be made ex parte, in other words by one person. The application is heard in camera by the judge, and it is determined by a statutory declaration made by a police officer or by the officer designated to be in charge of these applications. The application will relate to indictable offences, which indicates the seriousness of the offence. The report will be confidential. In other words, any of the determinations made by the judge will not result in any reported cases.

Experience in the United States, and more especially in the state of New York, has indicated that many of the applicants for wiretapping permits have gone judge shopping; in other words, they have gone to judges who are easy to satisfy with regard to material that is presented to them. We find that these criteria are not in keeping with the concepts of Canadian justice. When we think of Canadian justice, we think of all parties being represented in court; we think of the adversary system; we think of examination and cross-examination, and we think of legal argument and judgment. All these factors are missing when a police officer makes an application to a judge on an ex parte basis. It may be that the permits that will be issued will become pro forma in the same way as the writs of assistance and warrants which have now become pro forma in their exercise. It has been pointed out that even injunctions, and more especially those relating to union matters, are obtained by way of an ex parte application. I would think that even the experience concerning injunctions would make us acutely aware of the dangers that may be present.

It has been said by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) that there is some protection in the annual report which would be required to be furnished and tabled by the Solicitor General (Mr. Goyer) setting forth the number of applications and the types of offences as well as the permits that have been issued. But I think that we should keep in mind that we will have a problem not only with the requirement that the Solicitor General issue a report but also with regard to the attorneys general of the different provinces. My colleague, the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas), asked the minister whether it was the duty of an attorney general to table such a report in the provincial legislature, or to make it available to the Solicitor General so that it may be tabled here in the House of Commons. The Minister of Justice said quite rightly that the provisions with regard to this matter were silent. It seems to me that we will have difficulties in assembling the evidence concerning the issuance of permits and in analysing and determining whether these permits should have been issued in the first place, how many were issued for particular offences, and so forth. I think it is right that we should have a political accounting by the Solicitor General, but I think it should be a political accounting on a better basis than the one required in the act. The authorization issued by the judge must be for an indictable offence. This is contrary to the recommendation which was made by the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs which indicated that only extremely serious crimes should be covered by this act. The Committee set forth 18 to 19 serious crimes, most of which carried penalties of over ten years. The question then arises: Why has the Minister of Justice overridden the recommendation of the Justice Committee? It seems to me that we will have a wide, permissive system which may well be Orwellian in nature and concept.

The bill also provides for a private communication, intercepted without authorization, to be not admissible as evidence but that information or things disclosed as a result of unauthorized interception may be admitted as evidence. In other words, the direct evidence is inadmissible, but the derived evidence may be admissible. We are departing from the usual rule, which states that all relevant evidence is admissible, regardless how it is obtained. It has been suggested that the rule should be that the evidence should be admitted only if it does not offend the fundamental concepts inherent in our ideas of ordered liberty under the law. We should consider whether it is reasonable evidence, whether it is just evidence and whether it is in accordance with the Bill of Rights before it is admitted as evidence in court. Surely, there could be a voir dire to determine this issue.

The most frightening parts of the bill deal with the amendments to the Official Secrets Act. All of the safeguards relating to police wiretapping disappear. The amendments set forth in the bill give the Solicitor General of Canada the right to issue a warrant authorizing interception of seizure of any communication if he is satisfied by evidence on oath that the purpose of such interception or seizure is related to the prevention or detection of espionage, sabotage or any other subversive activity directed against Canada or detrimental to the security of Canada, and that such interception or seizure is necessary in the public interest. It will be seen from this provision that all that is to happen is that the Solicitor General may issue a warrant to the police. There is no authorization required or safeguard, as there is concerning wiretapping and electronic surveillance by the police.

One of the other features is that the Commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police shall, from time to time, make a report to the Solicitor General of Canada with respect to each warrant issued pursuant to subsection (2) of the section setting forth particulars of the manner in which the warrant is used and the results, if any, obtained from such use. In other words, there are none of the safeguards regarding authorization, and the report is made only to the Solicitor General.

From this we can only draw the conclusion that the RCMP have the right to do anything that we cannot prevent them from doing. There has been lumped together home grown political radicalism with espionage, with no political visibility or public accounting. Is it any wonder that many of us have well-grounded fears with regard to the provisions amending the Official Secrets Act? When we think of the activities of the RCMP on university campuses when investigating young students who may have radical ideas, when we think of the actions of some of the members of the police in the FLQ crisis in Quebec, we wonder what is going to happen and how these provisions will be used or abused when the police deal with political suspects or any applicant who may apply for Canadian citizenship.

We find these amendments to the Official Secrets Act reprehensible, repugnant and almost worthy of a police state. Surely, questions of espionage and sabotage can be kept distinct from home grown political radicalism instead of being lumped together. Surely, the police should not be given the right to use wiretapping methods and electronic surveillance of people whose only activity may be that of political radicalism.

For these reasons, having read clause 1 of the bill which declares that the bill is to be named the Protection of Privacy Act, it can only be described as a euphemism rather than a bill, one that tends to meet some of the problems we have been facing in this age of technological advance. This makes one realize how necessary it is to study the bill in depth and to bring to the attention of the Minister of Justice and the members of the Justice Committee the necessity for legislation that protects the rights and privacy of the individual, but does not permit the erosion of these rights by the intrusion of the state. I hope that when the bill gets to committee we will study these matters in depth and produce a bill that is worthy of acceptance and enforcement.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, the fact that we have before us today a bill moved by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) is proof that the system of parliamentary government that we have works and that the backbench member of parliament, both on the government and on the opposition side, can play an extremely useful role. When I came to the House ten years ago and joined with members of other parties in asking questions about wiretapping, my questions were met with indifference, or silence, disbelief, indeed with denials that such a form of surveillance in fact existed.

I am not going to take the time today to put on the record the questions that I have asked almost each year since I came here about the activities, particularly of the RCMP, in this field. However, I am sure that in years to come students of the question will do so; they will look through Hansard at the questions asked and statements made on wiretapping over the course of many years. They will discover that until very recently ministers of justice and solicitors general have either denied that such activities took place or replied to questions posed about specific cases, in connection with which there was a good deal of evidence, with the stock answer that one often gets from the government, namely that it is not in the public interest to reveal the information requested.

Since that time ten years ago, and particularly in the last five or six years, there have been repeated documented cases of wiretapping. I am not now talking about wiretapping by private individuals or by private investigators, about which the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert) has spoken and which under the provisions of this act will be made an offence. The fact is that if wiretapping is carried on by the police, as has been done on an extensive scale and if there are no new laws prohibiting it, no regulations stating under what conditions it may be used if required and no penalties for misuse, then obviously, Mr. Speaker, not just the police will be involved in wiretapping but private individuals will be involved.

There is no doubt that we have a good deal of industrial espionage in Canada, though possibly on a smaller scale than it is known in the United States. This is carried on by companies which want to know what their competitors are doing, companies which want to get the jump on their competitors. Wiretapping is one of the most efficient methods of industrial espionage. There is ample evidence that private investigators, many of whom have police experience, have been involved in wiretapping but there are no laws prohibiting it. My colleague, the hon. member for Broadview spoke of an incident in Toronto several years ago when two magistrates got into very serious trouble and, if my memory serves me correctly, were removed from office. I make no comment on whether they were involved in activities which could have led to their removal from office, but the fact is that there was a hearing as a result of evidence obtained through wiretapping. That wiretapping was initiated, not because of any question about the magistrates involved but as a result of police action, if I remember correctly, against people involved in an illegal betting operation. In the process, two magistrates who should have been above suspicion were dragged into the case.

Some years ago in British Columbia there was a case where the evidence led to the establishment of a Royal Commission. A room occupied by some union representatives had been rigged so that their conversations could be recorded by people interested in what they were discussing. Recently in Toronto a police officer was dismissed because he was found to have been co-operating with a company which specializes in union busting, by rigging the offices of the oil workers union and of a steel union. These are the kind of activities that take place.

Some years ago in the city of Saskatoon an alderman charged that the only telephone available to people held in the city jail had been so worked upon by the police that they could listen to any conversation. I am not a lawyer, Mr. Speaker, but just imagine the position in which those people found themselves. As I understand it, under our law a person is presumed innocent until proven guilty in a court of law. Surely, Mr. Speaker, if there is one type of conversation that ought to be completely private it is conversation between a person accused of a crime, not yet convicted, not yet tried, and his lawyer. Yet the Saskatoon police had so arranged matters that they could listen to the telephone conversations of anybody in the jail.

The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that wiretapping is a very common occurrence in this country. I cannot vouch from personal knowledge, but I have been told by someone very close to the investigations carried on by various government agencies, including the RCMP, into the Seafarers' International Union and Hal Banks that everybody involved or everybody who worked in any position of responsibility in that union had his telephone conversations monitored by the RCMP through wiretapping. In these circumstances, Mr. Speaker, with the former lack of knowledge, the former insistence on the part of ministers of justice, solicitors general and provincial attorneys general that wiretapping was not a common occurrence in Canada, if it occurred at all, it is not surprising that it became apparent to the people of Canada that regulations and legislation were necessary. I welcome the agreement of this government to bring forward legislation which, if it will not prohibit wiretapping, will at least regulate it.

The question which I intend to pursue later this evening is whether, in fact, this law meets the requirements of the problem.

The House will now revert to motions. The hon. Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Gray).

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

STATEMENT ON FOREIGN INVESTMENT POLICY

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I should like at this time to announce to the House the government's decision to review foreign takeovers of Canadian business. I wish also to table a background document on the general subject of foreign investment. In order to make it immediately clear as to the legislative steps the government wishes to take, I shall also be tabling a draft bill which will read exactly the same as the legislation to be introduced formally later this week.

While Canada has generally welcomed foreign investment over the years, we have adopted a number of measures to foster and protect the national interest. Foreign investment in banks and other key financial institutions has been limited by law. Our broadcasting facilities, newspapers and magazines are subject to specific laws which effectively keep them under Canadian control. During the past decade we established voluntary guidelines for good corporate behaviour by foreign businesses operating in this country. This government has also set up the Canada Development Corporation to help develop and maintain strong Canadian controlled businesses. The tax reform of last year contained several measures deliberately designed to encourage Canadians to invest in their own country rather than abroad, and to encourage the growth of Canadian controlled business. And the government has announced its intentions concerning the production and trade of uranium.

[Mr. Orlikow.]

Parliament will now be asked to add an important new measure to these policies. Foreign companies seeking to buy out or take over an existing Canadian business above a certain size will be required to demonstrate that the purchase will result in significant benefit to Canada. The government is introducing legislation to establish a review process under the authority of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin). In general terms the purpose will be to examine proposals for takeovers of Canadian businesses, to approve those that, on balance, will be of significant benefit to Canada, to negotiate with the proposed acquirer in those cases where he can reasonably be expected to make a greater contribution to Canadian development, and to refuse to allow those takeovers that would not bring significant benefit to Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, foreign investment plays an important role in Canadian development, but it brings with it costs as well as benefits. While there are a variety of opinions among Canadians about the balance of benefits and costs of foreign direct investment, there is certainly no disagreement that foreign investment should work in the interests of this country.

[English]

Takeovers are the form of foreign investment least likely to add significant benefits to the Canadian economy. The extent of foreign control of a number of industries in Canada is large enough to make the acquisition of more Canadian businesses a matter of concern to the government and to Canadians generally. If takeovers created only problems it would be a simple matter to deal with them—they could all be blocked. But takeovers can be of benefit to Canada, and it was this fact that persuaded the government that as a general policy a review process is preferable to other approaches such as the designation of additional key sectors or mandatory Canadian shareholdings. This decision, of course, does not rule out entirely the possibility that other approaches might be required at some time in the future.

[Translation]

A takeover review process is more flexible in its ability to take into account both the benefits and costs of a foreign acquisition. Through its operation, it would permit the negotiating of greater benefits for Canada and increase the level of economic activity in Canada. Most other industrialized countries, even with lower levels of foreign ownership and control, have some kind of mechanism to ensure that foreign takeovers are in their national interest. Our review process will be familiar to the international business and investing community.

[English]

In order to clarify the government's intentions, Mr. Speaker, I shall now briefly describe the review process and how it will be administered. A foreign investor—and that includes any enterprise which is foreign controlled—will be required to file notice of any proposed takeover of a businesss with assets valued at more than $250,000 or with gross revenues exceeding $3 million. Investors will be required to provide relevant information with the notice. The investor may also take the initiative to make specific commitments to the government concerning undertakings which would bring benefits to Canada.

The government will then consider the proposed acquisition, taking into consideration these five factors: the effect of the acquisition on the level and nature of economic activity and employment in Canada; the degree and significance of participation by Canadians; the effect of the acquisition on productivity, industrial efficiency, technological development, product innovation and product variety in Canada; the effect of the acquisition on competition within any industry or industries in Canada; and the compatibility of the acquisition with Canadian industrial and economic policies.

The assessment of the proposed transaction will be made by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, who will make the appropriate recommendation to the Cabinet.

If the takeover is clearly of benefit to Canada, the government could then formally allow the acquisition. If, on the other hand, the minister is unable to recommend this course, he would take steps to negotiate with the investor with a view to increasing the benefits to Canada. This negotiation might then result in additional undertakings which would permit the government to allow the acquisition. But if the government still considered that the takeover would bring no significant benefit to Canada, it would not be allowed. This decision would be taken only after a thorough examination, including the opportunity to make full representations. The process is designed to ensure that the government will make its decisions with a minimum of delay.

Written undertakings by the purchaser will be binding and the government will be authorized to take action in the courts to ensure that they are observed. There will be appropriate penalties for failing to file notice of a proposed transaction.

The legislation will not, of course, apply to takeovers by Canadians—that is, acquisition of control of firms in Canada by Canadian citizens ordinarily resident in Canada, by landed immigrants who have lived here for six years or less, or by firms which they control. Some companies have a very large number of shareholders, some Canadian, some foreign. Such companies would be able to apply for an advance ruling in order to determine their status as a Canadian-controlled company or otherwise.

With regard to control, it is proposed that the acquisition of less than 5 per cent of the voting shares of a corporation whose shares are publicly traded will not by itself be considered to constitute control, nor will the acquisition of less than 20 per cent of the voting shares of a corporation whose shares are not traded publicly. There will be a presumption that ownership of voting shares above those levels will constitute control, but this presumption can be rebutted. Acquisition of more than 50 per cent of voting shares will automatically be considered acquisition of control, as will a takeover through the purchase of substantially all the property used in carrying on a business.

The Canadian Economy

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we shall encourage international organizations to pursue the study of the multinational enterprise and foreign direct investment with a view to cooperative international action. To this end we shall be examining whether specific Canadian initiatives might be appropriate.

[English]

Our objective as Canadians—which is to exercise greater control over our domestic environment—cannot be achieved by exclusive reliance on a takeover review process. As part of its response to this issue, the government will continue to develop positive policies to encourage Canadians to participate more fully in the development of their country, and to encourage the growth of Canadian sources of capital, technology and management. Our policy is designed to ensure that this country continues to develop as rapidly as possible in a way which is consistent with Canadian needs and aspirations and which safeguards our vital interest.

In accordance with Standing Order 41(2), I should like to table the document and the draft bill to which I referred in my statement.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, this is not a fantastic breakthrough.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Is this what the government took so many months to produce? Is this what the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said the cabinet spent days and days considering? Is this the reason the government has kept the whole country in a state of confusion for three years?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, my friends opposite should not get too worked up yet. Is this the reason the government kept everyone in a state of confusion, to produce this? This persuades me to paraphrase the Prime Minister and say with friends like this government, who has time to worry about Mr. Connally?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Now for the alternative.

Mr. Stanfield: There is no question about the importance of increasing Canadian participation in the Canadian economy. I do not reject, in principle, the idea of monitoring the takeovers of Canadian firms. I will make it very clear that my main concern about this proposal is that it does not do anything to increase Canadian participation or Canadian ownership.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: I do not object to a monitoring process, provided it is guided by clear and satisfactory guidelines.

Despite all the time that has been taken by this government to produce this document, there is no provision for provincial consultation, either in connection with decisions or in connection with guidelines.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Surely, we all realize that if there is going to be any effective approach in this country toward increasing Canadian participation and toward Canadian ownership, it has to be a joint federal-provincial effort.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: This policy ignores any provincial involvement. Therefore, it is not only a slow start, but it is a bad start. It is going to lead to bad feeling.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: I notice a lot of smirks from members opposite. I say again that a policy designed to monitor or regulate investment in this country must, at the very minimum, increase the sense of national unity rather than divide or weaken it. Surely, that is the basic consideration.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: It is surely clear that the restriction of foreign takeovers in itself in no way ensures even the survival, let alone the expansion, of Canadian companies faced with sharp competition from industries in other countries, as well as from subsidiaries of foreign corporations here at home. It cannot be emphasized too much that this policy does not ensure the continuation, let alone the expansion, of Canadian companies in the teeth of competition that they face. Furthermore, no effort has been made to increase the Canadian presence in existing subsidiaries in Canada. For example, there is no suggestion that a certain proportion of the directors of all companies in Canada ought to be Canadian citizens.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: There is no provision for full disclosure by subsidiaries of foreign corporations. There is no suggestion that there may be certain key sectors of the economy, even with the entry of new capital into areas of the economy, where regulation should be considered. Above all, if we are going to increase Canadian participation in the Canadian economy, we need positive measures, measures designed to enable Canadians to participate in the development of Canadian industry and measures to enable Canadian industries to thrive. After all, that is the only effective method of making sure that we control our own economy to meet our own aspirations and create the jobs that we need in this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: We must have policies aimed at ensuring that Canadian industries, big and small, have access to capital for expansion and markets for the sale of their products and their services.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: When the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) is asked what we are going to do about this, he says we are going to institutionalize our arrangements with the common market. When he is asked what that means, he says he will do the same as we do in our relations with the United States. All the problems of Canadian industries operating in the climate that exists in the world were dealt with by the minister today in one paragraph of his statement.

In terms of the real needs of Canada, this is a weak document. We need policies that will encourage Canadians to invest in their own country. We need policies that will encourage the kind of capital growth in Canada that will, in turn, ensure jobs for Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: I cannot overemphasize that the kind of policy the minister presented today does not in any way promote increased participation by Canadians in the Canadian economy. It does not promote this in any way. I look forward to the budget. I hope it is a more meaningful document than this.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: In a country with a massively growing labour force and intolerably high unemployment, the minister's statement is not enough. In a country where domestic projections are running far behind what is required to eat into unemployment, this is not enough. In a country with so much of its entrepreneurial talent left to linger in frustration because it cannot be connected with a pool of domestic venture capital, this kind of statement is not enough. We want more Canadian participation in, and ownership of, the Canadian economy. Today's statement is tragically short of what is required. The minister's statement would not even make a good leak.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: All the government has done has been to institutionalize what it has already been doing Where is the spirit of imagination and initiative in what the government has presented? Where is the sense of orientation to the need for jobs and careers? Where do we see the government spelling out a means of developing investment in our own economy by Canadians? Have we become so stale, stultified and safety conscious in the circles of tenuously held power as to be virtually impotent to do something ourselves about our own destiny? Surely, there is a positive side to the investment and ownership picture. Surely, there are principles which must guide our approach in regulating foreign investment—there are practices which must be explored, and the best of them pursued to promote domestic investment and ownership.

• (1720)

An hon. Member: We are waiting.

Mr. Stanfield: The hon. member says he is waiting. Mr. Speaker, the Canadian people have been waiting for months and years to get this document, and look what it is.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Surely, there are many moves which could be made. In concert with the provinces, the federal government could assist schools of business and business organizations to develop and maintain a resource of entrepreneural and management talent. Financial assistance could be offered to new firms in key sectors of the economy to help them import technology and management contracts. Revisions in the Bank Act could be considered in order to encourage the development of a merchant banking system which could provide venture capital.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Incentives could be offered to encourage greater employee participation in the ownership of companies.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: There is a whole range of ideas waiting to be tested. But, first of all, we must be in the right frame of mind to think about them. And we must get ourselves into the right frame of reference in order to do something about them. I believe the right frame of mind is not the kind of introspective philosophizing which has characterized the mood of the present government. The right frame of reference is not the kind of ad hoc experimentation and harrassment in which this government has indulged. I do believe there is in this country a real hunger for planned action. I believe Canadians wish to compete and participate more than they want to restrict. This government is not giving them the opportunity. It is not giving them the opportunity today. Fortunately, there is a real prospect of Canadians having, in the not very distant future, a government which will give them that opportunity.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, no wonder the government was reluctant to present this policy. It knew that its policy added up to one big zero as far as control of the Canadian economy is concerned. We have been told by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and we were told by the minister who spoke this afternoon, that what the government intended to present was a policy on foreign investment. This is nothing of the sort. It is a hoax. It is a tragedy for Canada. It does not deal with foreign investment. It does not deal with foreign control. It deals with nothing which is of consequence in relation to regaining control over Canada's economy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: Right across this country there are thousands of Canadians growing increasingly concerned about the domination of our economy from abroad, particularly from the United States, and thousands of Canadians across this country have been awaiting a statement from the government which would hold out some hope that we might regain control over our economy and bring it back into the hands of Canada and Canadians. What has been presented today ought to make even this government ashamed of its lack of imagination and its lack of courage. I cannot but conclude that members of the government were not ready to do anything decisive about the 95 corporations which provide them with the financing so necessary to them at election time.

Some hon Members: Shame!

Mr. Lewis: The fact is that the document which has been tabled by the minister and which is a carefully edited version of the one published in the Canadian Forum, as far as I have been able to ascertain in the brief time available to me, points out that the areas to be covered, if anything effective is to be done, must not only include surveillance of takeovers of Canadian firms. It must also include what is called in the report—and I do not know why plain English could not have been used—"new enterprises established from an external base". As to the definition, I suspect it means what is stated in the brackets—foreign companies making direct investment in Canada for the first time. Or, I would add, foreign companies making direct investment in Canada for the second, the third, or the fourth or the fifth time. Or new licencing and franchising arrangements, or major new investments by existing foreign controlled companies. Or existing foreign controlled companies, even if they are not planning major new investments.

All these areas must at least be touched on in any policy to deal with foreign investment. To deal only with foreign take-overs is a betrayal of what we had all waited for and expected. In the Canadian Forum edition of the Gray report I have not been able to find this passage in the report tabled during the brief examination I have had time to make. What the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Gray) is reported to have said in the original edition I have not found. I hope it is here, but I have not found it.

There are at least three reasons for screening the expansion of existing foreign controlled firms. First, they constitute a large and growing segment of the Canadian manufacturing and resource industries. A foreign ownership policy which ignores this fact could be ineffective as a means of increasing domestic control of the national economic environment. Second, existing foreign controlled corporations could be used to circumvent the screening agency. If a would-be foreign entrant wants to avoid screening he might be able to make an arrangement with a foreign firm presently in Canada, either one that it owns or one belonging to another foreigner, to undertake the new project, perhaps in an entirely unrelated industry.

Lastly, the bargaining strength of the agency might be reduced if applicants can point to existing competitors who are not subject to the various constraints on behaviour by virtue of having entered prior to the policy coming into force.

On another page that report said in a single sentence what I have been trying to emphasize, that the failure to screen expansion into new industries could lead to easy circumvention of the screening process. The fact is that the policy announced by the minister has nothing to do with the expansion of existing firms into new areas and new industries. It has nothing to do with direct foreign investment coming into Canada and it does nothing to increase Canadian ownership in any of the areas with which we are concerned.

Furthermore, it is not a screening agency such as was suggested in the task force report of 1968 which proposed a monitoring or screening agency that would be responsible to a new ministry. We do not have that. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) is going to be in charge of the screening agency. Just how reliable is his relationship with corporations in this country, and just how reliable he is in respect of screening them, we have been given evidence of in the last few days. For months he told us that United States-owned corporations in the automobile and automotive parts industry in this country had given him the impression that they did not intend to use DISC; then he suddenly found that in fact they had been using it all the time they had been talking to him.

I am not talking about the minister himself, but I have a suspicion that his department has always been in league with big business corporations in this country and is the last department in the world that can be trusted to deal with the kind of issue with which we are confronted in this policy. The proposal was for a separate screening agency. The minister grins at me. Let me remind this man who is now to be the great defender of Canada's economic independence—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: Bang your desks as you usually do when there is no reason for it. Let me read a short extract from a speech this minister made in Houston, Texas, on September 29, 1971. He said that our economy is capital-intensive and our economic needs of the 1970s suggest there will be heavy demand for investment funds. He said they would be considering this situation in their session that afternoon and then mentioned a few reasons why they should look very carefully to Canada as a country for investment. He then set out the fact that our tax system is not as bad as in other places, that we have a suitable economic and political climate, and so on. I cannot take the time to read it all, but this is perhaps the reason there is nothing in this policy to control or limit direct foreign investment.

The Liberal party remains the continentalist party it has always been, and will continue in the future to sell-out Canada economically to United States corporations as it has in the past. The kind of charade that is being played this afternoon is not going to fool any Canadian who is concerned about the future independence not only economically but politically of this country.

This government has assisted foreign-controlled firms to expand their operations in Canada. Most of the incentive grants given by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion have gone to foreign-controlled corporations. In the minister's carefully edited report I find the statement that this policy is to continue and foreign-controlled corporations are to continue to receive grants. So on the one hand we are going to limit foreign takeovers, and on the other hand we are going to hand out hundreds of millions of dollars to existing subsidiaries of United States corporations in order that they can expand their operations in Canada and their control over the Canadian economy with the taxpayers' money.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Lewis: If this does not expose the absolutely unending hypocrisy of this government, I do not know what does. One could take much longer on this subject than you will permit me, Mr. Speaker, but I merely want to say that as one Canadian I am disappointed in this policy. I think it is a tragic "no policy" in an area which needs treatment seriously. There is in Canada a great deal of available capital for investment by Canadians. This policy ought to have dealt with all the areas I have indicated and the report ought to have indicated positive proposals for increasing control of the Canadian economy by Canadians. That cannot be done unless we have the imagination and the courage to take over a large part of the economy which is now owned by foreign corporations and make sure, especially in the resource industries, that we are not, down the line, handed over further to United States corporations so that neither economic nor political independence will be possible for future generations of Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the minister for sending me a copy of his statement a few hours ago in order that we might have a good opportunity to study it.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, following publication of the report which was tabled in the House today, I can make at least one assertion—that the federal Liberal party fund is in a much better position than it was this morning. In fact, this statement is intended to pacify foreign investors who had been a bit touchy and nervous ever since the appearance of the smoke screen which the government has been raising in Canada for the past few years concerning foreign control of our investment. Today, following this statement, those gentlemen will certainly be able to sleep peacefully without being disturbed, for the government has just reassured them by publishing a meaningless report designed only to serve electoral purposes.

It is designed, first, to fill the election fund, and secondly, to raise a smoke screen in order to make the Canadian voters believe that foreign control is going to be checked, that it is going to be investigated and subjugated forever.

Mr. Speaker, the election fund is filling up and propaganda is going full blast for the next election, as the government has succeeded in raising a smoke screen around the so-called foreign investment control policy.

• (1740)

But the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) has lately agreed once again to grant $750,000 to a Swedish firm in New Brunswick to compete with a Canadian furniture manufacturing company.

Mr. Speaker, we have nothing against foreign investors. We should not blame those people whose arm we have twisted and whom we have asked to come and invest in our country. We are blaming, however, our past and present governments which have made of Canada an economic colony.

As regards the study which the government has tabled today, we have been expecting it for a long time. It was shrouded in mystery; we were led to believe that the government was going to produce a mighty eagle which would keep in check foreign control of our economy, but it has been established today in the House that the government's labours have only produced a still-born sparrow.

As stated by the previous speakers, the minister's statement demonstrates that the government is afraid of tackling the problem of foreign financial control, that it has no solution to put forward or that it is afraid of doing so because that solution is quite disappointing.

Before today, the government was satisfied to study in cabinet the problem of foreign control. Accordingly to this statement, we will be able to discuss foreign control in this House, because we are only allowed to study the problem. The statement was divided into four parts.

The objective is to set up a takeover review process and also to establish an agency within which a secretary appointed by the governor in council will play a major role. We are not even told whether this secretary, who will be appointed and whose role will be most important, will be a Canadian.

The statement also provides so called guarantees to those who buy Canadian companies or to investors, who will be heard. Indeed, it provides guarantees to investors and to those who will be planning to buy Canadian companies in so far as they will have the opportunity of being heard by the minister or by the secretary.

Investors will also be compelled to keep the minister informed of their transaction projects. That is all we shall be able to do; this will be another kind of board without any power, another bill without any teeth in it, another legislation which will not mean anything but which will enable liberal candidates to indulge in another snare and delusion, to make a lot of fuss about it and which will also give the liberal party the funds it could not get before because today a foreign investor can sleep like a log.

Mr. Speaker, no solution has been presented that could put Canadians in a position to regain control over the economy. Foreigners have taken over our economy as a result of credits that were granted to Canada by foreign banks.

Nowhere in the proposed bill is there a reference to the part that the Bank of Canada could play to enable the Canadian economy to develop on its own, thanks to Canadian instead of foreign credits.

Mr. Speaker, I do not blame foreign investors but only our governments of the past which had no financial policy and which would beg foreign and international bankers on their knees for money to invest in our country for the purpose of developing Canada.

Mr. Speaker, the members of the Social Credit Party will certainly have the opportunity of examining this matter again in the House, and their policy respecting control over foreign ownership is very well known both by the government and the people of Canada.

There is wealth in Canada, there is a potential, there are engineers and technicians; but there are also the Bank of Canada and the federal government which will not allow the Canadian credit to serve the Canadian economy.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: It being after five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business—

An hon. Member: Six o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent that we dispense with private members' business and call it six o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is agreed.

At 5.50 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

PROTECTION OF PRIVACY BILL

AMENDMENTS TO CRIMINAL CODE, CROWN LIABILITY ACT AND OFFICIAL SECRETS ACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lang that Bill C-6, to amend the Criminal Code, the Crown Liability Act and the Official Secrets Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, in the few minutes available to me before five o'clock when we debated this bill I tried to make several points. First of all, I said that in recent years there has been a good deal more wiretapping and electronic surveillance by the police than previously, and second, that until very recently government spokesmen were, to say the least, loth to admit that such activities took place. I suppose they and the police thought that if they did not admit that such activities took place, the public would not know they were taking place.

I said just before five o'clock that I would not put on the record proof of what I had been saying. However, let me put on the record of Hansard the reply to a question which I put to the government in 1963. Hon. members can find the question and the answer on page 3903 of Hansard for October 23, 1963. The question was as follows:

> Has any department of the government (including the RCMP) equipment which is used for the tapping of telephone wires and, if so (a) what departments (b) for what purpose, and under what authority is this equipment used?

The answer given by the then secretary of state, Hon. J. W. Pickersgill, was as follows:

> The policy of this government, and of previous governments, has been to decline to answer questions of this order as being contrary to the public interest, and there is no intention of changing this policy.

• (2010)

This policy is illustrated by the answer made to a similar question on February 26, 1962. See debates of the House of Commons, 1962 session, volume II at page 1245.

I suppose the point of that last paragraph is that the then secretary of state wanted to prove, as he could quite well do, that his view was precisely the same as that held by the former Conservative government as illustrated by the answer given in February, 1962, when a Conservative government was in office.

The principles in this bill, as well as the bill itself, have been given a good deal of study by some very knowledgeable people who by no stretch of the imagination could be classified as politically partisan. Professor Edward Ryan of the University of Western Ontario delivered a speech, in which he analysed the basic principles of this bill, at the Couchiching conference on August 5, 1971. He commended the principles of the bill and pointed out that for the first time we would be passing legislation that would make wiretapping and electronic eavesdropping a criminal offence.

Professor Ryan went on to analyse the provisions of the bill. Having read his analysis, I who am partisan can only say that like so much of the legislation that has been brought forward by this Liberal government the bill purports to prohibit the use of electronic eavesdropping and wiretapping devices, while at the same time giving permission to the police to continue to do precisely what they have been able to do in the absence of legislation.

I should like to summarize what Professor Ryan said, to illustrate what I mean. Professor Ryan pointed out that the justice committee of this House, which discussed the question and heard evidence over a considerable period of time, recommended in its report that police interception of communications be authorized only for extremely serious crimes which were to be individually named in the legislation. Eighteen of the 19 crimes suggested by the committee carried penalties in excess of ten years. The general rule was that these methods of electronic surveillance should be capable of employment for the investigation, prevention and detection of criminal acts that threaten serious bodily harm or death to the individual, or serious loss or damage to property, involve the corruption of public officials, narcotics trafficking, espionage or sabotage on behalf of a foreign power, or acts which create grave threats to the national security arising from sources within Canada. Control of syndicated crime was also seen as a legitimate ground for authorized interception of communications.

What is provided in this bill? The government proposes to permit the police to intercept communications electronically in cases where they have reasonable grounds to believe an indictable offence has been committed or any such offence is alleged or suspected. No objective grounds are set out. All that the police have to do is to say; "We think an offence will be committed". The Canadian Civil Liberties Association, in a letter which was sent to the former minister of justice, pointed out as follows:

> But indictable offences include a very wide range of illegal acts—from serious violence to petty theft. The offences which can be prosecuted by indictment include such diverse matters as income tax evasion, possession of marijuana, theft over or under $50, impaired driving, etc.

From those few illustrations members of the House are able to see that the police can, if they so desire, get permission to eavesdrop electronically on virtually anyone since the offences referred to can be of a relatively trivial nature. I submit that the right of privacy is an inherent right or every citizen of Canada and that the reasons for interference by the police with that right, if we are serious in our statements that people do have the right of privacy, must be serious. Yet in this bill the government is proposing that for any indictable offence the police shall be given the right to ask for permission to carry on wiretapping. Professor Ryan takes the view that the government is asking for overly wide powers in regard to interception of communications. As I have pointed out, a criminal offence can be relatively minor in character; it can be theft of less than $50. I suggest that this bill should return to the principles enunciated, after very careful consideration, by the justice committee.

There is a second matter that I think is very serious. The bill will permit the police to obtain permission to carry on wiretapping activities on making application to a judge. The justice committee when it dealt with this question spent a good deal of time discussing whether the authority to be given to the police to conduct this sort of activity should be given by a judge, by the Minister of Justice or by provincial attorneys general. The committee, by a narrow majority, I understand, chose to recommend that the person giving this kind of authority to the police should be a judge.

Professor Ryan takes the view, with which I completely agree, that this is a mistake. It is said by those who favour giving judges the authority—and the minister has enshrined this argument within the bill—that a judge is impartial, that a judge is not subject to pressure. I might add, neither is a judge accountable to the public. I think that when we are drafting legislation that legalizes a serious invasion of the privacy of ordinary citizens we ought to demand accountability.

Mr. Speaker, a minister of justice or a provincial attorney general can make a mistake, but they can be called to public account by the provincial legislature, by parliament or even by the media. But who will call a judge to account? When we think of judges, courts and trials we usually think of an open hearing where all the evidence is presented by the prosecutor, the accused has the opportunity of being there to hear the evidence and the opportunity to cross-examine and to present a defence to the accusation. Something else altogether is proposed here. This proposal is akin to an ex parte injunction which is held in great contempt by trade unions and working people.

In a labour dispute someone representing a company appears before a judge and maintains that the company is being harmed by the union or its members through picketing. Usually the workers are not even there. The judge, without hearing the other side of the argument grants an ex parte injunction prohibiting the use of pickets. The same situation could arise here. Someone representing the police could appear before a judge and apply for permission to conduct electronic surveillance. The hearing would probably be held in camera with no one there to assess the importance or truth of the allegation and whether the request was valid or not, and the judge could issue the injunction. Surely that is completely contrary to the concept of open hearings with the right of the defence to present a case. Surely we ought not to approve it.

There is another matter that Professor Ryan dealt with in some detail, Mr. Speaker. In New York state there has been experience which shows what happens when this kind of system is followed. The police very quickly learn that some judges are more sympathetic to their cause, and give them permission, than others; so they do what Professor Ryan calls "judge shopping": they look for the judge who is likely to give them permission to do the things they want to do. Who will question the decision once a judge has given permission to carry on this very questionable, although sometimes necessary action?

I say very seriously, Mr. Speaker, that the right to give the police permission to conduct wiretapping should be vested in the Minister of Justice federally, and with the attorneys general provincially. They should be required by law to make regular reports on the number of applications for wiretapping and the number they have approved, without, possibly, giving the names of the people involved and the reason permission was given. Without such a safeguard, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that to a large extent this bill will be completely ineffective because its loopholes are so wide that a truck could be driven through them.

As I said earlier, under this law the police will be permitted to do as much wiretapping as they have up to now without any legislation. That being the case, I think this provision in the bill ought to be amended. When the committee meets, I hope it will permit representations to be made by interested and knowledgeable associations and individuals. I hope, too, that the committee will see its way clear to amend this provision in the legislation to provide that the agency responsible shall not be a judge but, rather, the appropriate minister of the federal and provincial governments.

There are clauses in this bill which deal with the right of the police to conduct electronic surveillance where it is believed that espionage or insurrection is planned. No one would question the very serious effects that such plans might have on this country and on our democratic rights. On the other hand, we must be extremely careful that such powers are not misused and abused. Need I remind members of the House of the events of October, 1970—of the more than 400 people who were apprehended in Quebec under the provisions of the War Measures Act? Need I remind members of the House that a very small number, a handful, were actually charged and even fewer were convicted?

Obviously, a large number of people were apprehended and held for a time when they were either not guilty or the government did not believe it had enough evidence to make a charge stick in court. Without again debating the events of October, 1970, I think we should learn a lesson from them and be careful that the powers given to the police and the government under the clauses of this bill which deal with the Official Secrets Act, and so on, are not abused.

Mr. Speaker, I have no concrete suggestions to make at this time. However, I hope the committee will deal with this matter extremely carefully in light of experience gained over the years as a result of actions of not just this government but earlier governments—experience which goes back, in my city, as far as 1919. At that time the father of the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis) was charged for printing in a newspaper two verses from Isaiah. I think we ought to be extremely careful and take whatever steps we can to guarantee that this kind of excess will not recur.

I do not want to prolong this debate unnecessarily, Mr. Speaker. We shall not oppose the bill at this stage. However, I say to the minister that I for one am gravely apprehensive about what the bill will do. I think my colleagues share my apprehension. We are afraid the bill will do exactly what the government says it will do. It will restrict and curtail the rights of people in this country. It will affect private citizens and the police. It will give the authorities the right to interfere with, to intercept and to listen to private conversations between ordinary citizens in this country.

• (2030)

I wish, Mr. Speaker, I could support this bill wholeheartedly. I wish I thought this bill will do those things which the minister talked about. I think the illustrations given by Professor Ryan and the letter written by the Civil Liberties Association to the former minister of justice show that citizens of this country more experienced and knowledgeable about this matter than I am gravely doubt the wisdom of the approach the government is taking in the bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. Is the house ready for the question?

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I had not intended participating in this debate. I thought I would wait until the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs had had an opportunity to examine the bill and recommend changes to it and express my views at the report stage. The more I read this bill, the more I am profoundly disturbed about some of its provisions. I was particularly disturbed after listening to the speech of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) this afternoon. Therefore, I crave the indulgence of the House for a few minutes so that I may make some preliminary remarks about the legislation in the hope that the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, made up of some of the best legal brains in the House—

Mr. Alexander: Hear, hear!

Mr. Douglas: —will carefully examine the bill and reconsider some of the provisions which give me and my colleagues cause for deep concern. I am sure every hon. member of the House endorses the principle of the bill. Its purpose is to guarantee to every Canadian citizen privacy and protection against wiretapping and eavesdropping through the use of electronic devices.

In a complex, congested society such as ours we all feel the need to preserve our privacy. Men and women have the right to privacy in their own homes; they have the right not to allow interlopers to invade their homes. We have the right to receive our mail freely and not have it intercepted and perused by unauthorized persons. In the same way, surely we have the right to carry on conversations with our friends, loved ones or business associates over the telephone without the conversations being intercepted and perhaps recorded for an ulterior purpose. Therefore, I am sure that all members of the House and most people of this country agree that legislation making wiretapping and electronic eavesdropping illegal and making the selling, possession or use of these devices a criminal offence ought to be wholeheartedly supported by every right thinking Canadian.

What causes us concern is the definite exceptions to the prohibition against wiretapping and electronic eavesdropping. Let me enumerate a few exceptions. First, the Solicitor General, on his own behalf, through a peace officer or a person designated by him, may go to a judge of the superior court and ask for authorization to bug somebody's telephone, to eavesdrop in a person's home or in any other place where the person may be carrying on a private conversation.

The Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs will need to ascertain the criteria which the judge must use in deciding whether he will approve or deny such authorization. In some circumstances that will not be difficult. If the person whose conversations are to be intercepted has a criminal record or is known to be associated with a gang of narcotics smugglers, say, it will not be difficult for the judge to approve the application. But there will be border line cases. The evidence placed before the judge will be only the evidence presented by the peace officer or person designated by the Solicitor General. He will hear only such information as those who want to apprehend the person, charge him and see him convicted, want to place before him. This means that the privacy of many innocent persons could be invaded.

Even worse, the Solicitor General may, without the judge's authorization, issue a temporary permit for 36 hours for the interception of conversations of persons on whom he wants his officers to spy. In that case there will be no judicial scrutiny of any application for interception, because the judge, jury and executioner will be the Solicitor General and he alone will decide whether for 36 hours your telephone, Mr. Speaker, mine or somebody else's is to be tapped. He alone will decide whether a bugging device is to be attached to a person's car, home or conference room. This is a tremendous responsibility for parliament to give to any man, even though he be Solicitor General of this country.

The attorneys general of the provinces also are exempt from the prohibitions against wiretapping and eavesdropping. They are to be given the same powers as the Solicitor General. They, too, through a peace officer designated by them can apply to a judge for authorization to eavesdrop. They, too, may grant temporary permits without first going to a judge. They may do this entirely at their own discretion and on their own initiative. The attorney general of a province may have the home of any citizen bugged and any business premise wiretapped. He and he alone has the right to decide whether electronic eavesdropping will be carried out.

One of the problems parliament has always had with the Criminal Code is that while parliament passed the Criminal Code and amends it from time to time, except for those matters which are solely under federal jurisdiction, the administration of the Criminal Code lies within the jurisdiction of the attorneys general of the provinces. While Parliament can pass legislation dealing with the criminal law of Canada, it has no power to call to account those who administer that law except in respect of items which come solely within federal jurisdiction. Therefore, Parliament has to be very careful about the kind of power it gives to attorneys general.

When we give power to a minister of the Crown who is a member of this parliament, we can call him to account. When we give power to the Solicitor General or the Minister of Justice, we have at least the right to question them, bring them before a committee of the House and make them give an accounting of the manner in which they have exercised that power. However, when we give power to an attorney general we have no such authority.

If anyone wants an example of this type of power can do, he has only to go back to October, November and December of 1970. This parliament passed the Public Order (Temporary Measures) Act. It not only gave sweeping powers to the solicitor general and minister of justice but it gave those powers to the attorneys general of the provinces. That legislation permitted arrest without charge and detainment without trial. It made no provision for guaranteeing that persons arrested would be allowed to communicate with legal counsel or with their families.

The then minister of justice, I think quite conscientiously, said that these basic liberties would be observed. But, Mr. Speaker, they were not observed. Nearly 500 persons were arrested without charge and detained without trial. There were proven cases of police brutality. These were fully investigated by the Civil Liberties Association. When day after day we asked the minister of justice about it, like Pilate he washed his hands and said, "Direct your questions to the minister of justice of the province of Quebec. Parliament gave him this power." The Minister of Justice said the Quebec minister of justice was not accountable to him and that that minister was exercising the powers which Parliament had given to him. Parliament had no control over what he did with those powers, even if he abused them. That experience ought to make every member of this House very hesitant about the kind of power we give to ministers over whom we have no control and whom we cannot call to account.

What we are doing here is saying that an attorney general of a province has the same power as the Solicitor General. He has the authority himself, through one of his intermediaries, to go to a judge and ask for authorization to tap a telephone or bug a home, office or conference room. Even more serious, he has the authority to do this on his own, without authorization from the court, for a period of 36 hours. No one should tell me the attorney general has to issue a report at the end of the year. How are you to going to force him to report?

When I asked the Minister of Justice this afternoon how he is going to guarantee a report, the minister said the legislation is silent on that point. I suspect the government will also be silent on it. There is no way you can make a provincial attorney general issue a report or bring him to account. All he has to do at the end of the year is say there were "X" number of temporary permits issued in his province for the purpose of bugging telephones or eaves dropping in places where persons were gathered to carry on private conversations.

I am not prepared to give these kinds of powers to a minister in this House; therefore I am much less prepared to give such powers to a minister outside this House over whom the House has no control and no authority whatsoever. If I am here in years to come and ask the Solicitor General a question such as I have referred to, I do not propose to have him answer that the matter is under the jurisdiction of the minister of such and such a province and I will have to ask him, because the Solicitor General has no authority over what the provincial minister does under the legislation.

I think the most serious exception to this prohibition against wiretapping and electronic eavesdropping is contained in clause 5 of the bill, amending the Official Secrets Act which, without the authorization of a court and for no limited period of time, allows the solicitor General at his discretion to order invasion of the privacy of any citizen of Canada where he is satisfied that such action is necessary for, and I quote, the——detection of espionage, sabotage or any other subversive activity directed against Canada or detrimental to the security of Canada—

I recognize that very rigorous powers are necessary when we are dealing with espionage and sabotage, but we have had enought experience in this country to know what strange interpretations can be put on the words "subversive activity" and even more on the vague and nebulous phrase "detrimental to the security of Canada". Under these phrases we have seen university student groups and trade union groups investigated. Under this kind of phrase, candidates for FRAP in the Montreal civic elections in the fall of 1970 were thrown into jail. It depends entirely on the point of view as to what constitutes subversive activity and what is detrimental to the security of Canada. There have been attorneys general, solicitors general and ministers of justice who looked upon any group which was seeking, even by democratic means, to bring about fundamental changes in our society as carrying on subversive activities and being detrimental to the security of Canada.

This bill gives sweeping power to a minister who entirely on his own initiative and entirely at his own discretion can bug your telephone, Mr. Speaker, mine or that of any other person whom he thinks is likely to be guilty of subversive activity or doing or saying something which is detrimental to the security of Canada.

Our experience of the way in which governments interpret the security of Canada does not give me ground for much confidence in this legislation. I think of civil servants who have been dismissed, and the only ground given for their dismissal was that they were security risks—nothing more. No evidence was forthcoming; they were not allowed to face their accusers or hear the accusations made against them; they were not allowed legal counsel; they were not permitted to examine the evidence upon which they had been condemned.

This makes me apprehensive when I read clauses like five and six in this part of the bill. I think of what some agencies of government have done, of individuals who have been denied entry into Canada or who have been deported from Canada for security reasons. No evidence was forthcoming. There was no way of finding out whether it was hearsay evidence, whether it was gossip, whether some malicious neighbour had reported on them adversely. I believe a recent edition of Macleans told the story of a Canadian who had served in the last war, lived here for many years but had been unable to obtain Canadian citizenship.

I recall the case of a British couple living in Burnaby who came here in 1948. Both the husband and the wife had served in the British army. To the best of my knowledge they are good citizens, active in civic affairs, but they were denied Canadian citizenship and they cannot find out why. I could not find out why. No one would even say that they were security risks. They were simply told it was not in the public interest that their application be approved. When governments can hide behind excuses of this kind, merely saying that someone is a security risk or has been carrying on subversive activities, which sometimes means he has joined an association of unemployed, I read these provisions with apprehension and trepidation.

All of us in this House support the principle of the bill before us. We approve the idea of preventing any invasion of the privacy of Canadian citizens by means of electronic devices of one kind or another. What disturbs me is that the exceptions are so sweeping that they are open to abuse. The bill contains nothing like the safeguards it ought to contain if we are to have confidence that these sweeping powers, which are being given not only to a minister of this government but to the attorneys general of all the provinces, will not be abused.

I realize, of course, that the Minister of Justice and the Solicitor General (Mr. Goyer) will argue that it is necessary for us to accept these sweeping powers and these possible invasions of our privacy in order to safeguard the country against criminal elements. But I remember the words of Edmund Burke, who said: "Necessity has been the excuse for every infringement of human freedom. It is the argument of tyrants; it is the creed of slaves." Let no one for one moment think I am suggesting the Minister of Justice is a tyrant. I both know him and like him too well for that. What I am saying is that tyranny always begins by persuading us to surrender some of our civil liberties in order to protect our larger freedoms. But after this process has continued long enough we find we have lost those larger freedoms.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Douglas: We cannot protect freedom by undermining freedom. It is an old saying, but it is still true, that the price of liberty is eternal vigilance. Unless we question these small and insidious encroachments upon our civil liberties, we shall find that the very basis of freedom and democracy upon which this country is built has been destroyed. I once heard an old friend of mine, Aneurin Bevan, making a speech in which he said: "In Germany, democracy died by the headsman's axe; in Great Britain it could die of pernicious anaemia." That is true. When a country becomes complacent and indifferent to the liberties it enjoys, it is only a matter of time before it loses them.

Like many other members of this House, I have been in countries where hotel rooms were bugged and conference rooms were fitted with electronic devices enabling others to listen to our conversations. I know, as do other hon. members, how in such surroundings fear corrodes human relationships so that men no longer possess the vitality and the outgoing spirit which characterizes a free people. It is because I fear we may take a step in this direction that I intervene in the debate tonight.

I express the hope that the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs will examine this legislation very carefully. They will have the support of all members of the House in every party, I am sure, in promoting the principle of protecting the Canadian people against all invasions of their privacy by electronic means. But I plead with members of that committee to look very carefully at the sweeping powers which the government proposes to give to certain ministers, with a view to determining how those powers can be restrained and the freedom of Canadians safeguarded. If the committee members do this, they will earn our gratitude. If they fail to do so, Mr. Speaker, Bill C-6 will encounter a stormy passage when it returns to the House of Commons.

Mr. Douglas A. Hogarth (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, like the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) I did not originally intend to speak in the debate tonight. May I say, though, with the greatest respect, that I believe he has, in a way, distorted what the bill before us is seeking to accomplish.

• (2100)

As I understand the present law, the fact is that anybody at any time may use an electronic eavesdropping device for the purpose of interfering with the very private and proper communications of other people. In the vein of the hon. member's speech, he suggests that this bill restricts our civil liberties. With the greatest respect, with some of the reservations used this bill does more to entrench them and to make sure that privacy of communication, to the extent allowed by the bill, is permitted to exist. I thing it ill behooves the hon. member to suggest that this is an infringement of liberties. It is an entrenchment of liberties, not an encroachment upon them. In short, we are determining that the unlawful interception of private communications shall no longer be tolerated except as permitted by this measure.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): It is the exceptions to which I object.

Mr. Hogarth: The hon. member has said that he is concerned about the exceptions, and I agree. I will deal with that matter right now. This question came before the justice committee some two years ago. I do not think I disclose any private conversations or communications which have been intercepted by electronic devices when I say that we have discussed this matter extensively. Many of us on this side of the House are deeply concerned about the reservations given in this bill to the solicitor general and the attorneys general of the province in matters of national security and emergencies.

I wish to assure the hon. member of my certainty that the justice committee, which has always acted in very much a non-partisan manner, would be most open to any suggestion he might put forward to correct the provisions of this bill and, hopefully, appreciate all the problems involved—and believe me , they do not all appear quite as superficially or as black and white civil liberties or tyranny as the hon. member has put it.

We are in a sense faced with this problem. We have in this nation and in every nation in the world advanced means of communication. We have laser beams, satellites and telephone systems that can get us instantly in touch with any part of the nation. As much as these have been used and are being used for the great benefit of mankind in 99.9 per cent of the cases, they are also being used to the detriment of mankind. For instance, they are being used by the purveyors of narcotic drugs. The hon. member should have been before the justice committee this afternoon and heard the appalling evidence of the commissioner of the RCMP who advised us of the increase in the number of heroin addicts in Canada. We know that purveyors of heroin are involved in a syndicated process of selling the drug, unfortunately mostly to our youth, and they use the telephone more than any other means of communication.

In the interests of the enforcement of law and the destruction of this nefarious activity, we must be allowed to use all modern scientific techniques to intercept these communications and use them in courts of law. With great respect, I think that the provisions for applying to a judge in the instances provided, where there is a long-term investigation, just as one applies for a search warrant today and has for centuries, are perfectly reasonable. These principles will apply for the purpose of using these modern techniques in the interests of enforcing the law.

There is always an eternal balance between what society requires for law enforcement and what should be the rights of the individual to preserve his privacy. The answer to that problem depends upon the times in which we live and the activities taking place in our society. I do not believe that this bill, in so far as the normal police application to a judge for a warrant to proceed to intercept communications is concerned, goes beyond that which is necessary in our society today.

Having regard to emergency provisions—it is in this respect that the hon. member was so concerned—there is a reservation in this bill, in section 171.15. If the hon. member really thinks this matter through, I am sure he will recognize that there are circumstances in which you cannot make an application to a judge because there is not time. The evidence is coming immediately; the knowledge of the officers is such that they must move immediately. I would ask the hon. member to come before the justice committee and give us solutions to that problem .

I think this provision in the main will be used more by the attorneys general of the provinces than by the Solicitor General. I would ask the hon. member to give the justice committee the solution to an emergency situation where there is not time to prepare the affidavit which is required under this bill and where there is not time to confer on whether an application should be made on a Tuesday morning or a Wednesday morning, the police knowing that they must move immediately and that the evidence is extremely important. Perhaps the investigation has to do with the importation of 50 or 60 pounds of heroin through the port of Nanaimo. The local police know it is coming in at two o'clock in the morning and the details will be telephoned at eleven o'clock that night. Where do the police go? They cannot go to a Supreme Court judge in British Columbia, because there is not one in Nanaimo. But they can get the attorney general on the phone and he can give the emergency order that is contemplated by this bill. I ask the hon. member, inasmuch as I appreciate the counter point of view—I really do because I am not sure I am happy about the whole concept of "emergency" as it appears in this bill—to come before the justice committee and give us a solution to these emergency problems. I know the committee will listen to him.

Those of us who have participated in cases in criminal courts which have involved the admissibility of taped evidence, evidence obtained by electronic devices, have been impressed with something this bill has omitted, that is, the fantastic impact that taped evidence has on a jury during the course of the case. It is one thing to hear a witness describe what the accused said to Mr. Jones or what he overheard the accused say on the telephone but it is another to hear in the courtroom his actual voice on the tape. It has tremendous weight with any jury. I suggest that all hon. members when considering this bill bear in mind that this type of evidence is much stronger than the usual viva voce evidence you get in a courtroom.

As I understand the law as it is now, a transcript of what is said on the tape can be prepared and given to the jury so there can be no doubt about what was on the tape when it was played back in the courtroom. This is extremely powerful evidence and is another matter we must consider in committee when we are going through the details of this bill.

In short, it is extremely difficult for an accused person who has made a statement of confession, so to speak, on the telephone, which has been taped and the tape introduced in evidence, to in any way deny that he said it or that it was taken out of context, as opposed to a witness who said he overheard him say it in a beer parlour or something like this. The witness can be cross-examined by experienced counsel and his evidence weakened, perhaps, and the tapes cannot. We should not forget this point when we consider this bill, because this practice strengthens the law and I do not minimize the extent to which it does strengthen it.

Another very interesting aspect of this bill is that it is introducing the United States evidentiary concept. It is almost exclusively a United States concept that evidence illegally obtained cannot be admitted in a courtroom. Under the British concept, evidence that is illegally obtained—that is, if stolen goods are found without a search warrant or in certain instances the evidence has been obtained by trespass or something of that nature—the evidence none the less is admissible. Certainly in the United States rule, for instance in the Miranda and Escobedo case, where evidence is illegally obtained it is ruled that it cannot be introduced in court.

One of the criticisms which might be directed against this bill, although I am inclined to favour the government's decision to include it, is that the slightest technicality in the application to the judge, such as the time expiring at twelve o'clock and the tape was made at 12.05, means the evidence is inadmissible. Everybody knows what was said on the telephone or on the tape and everybody knows that the accused is guilty, but technically it cannot be proven.

If I have the opportunity to sit on the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs I will suggest there be flexibility in that provision so that the judge has the right to say that it was merely a technical deviation from the authorization allowed in the application made before him. I think this is a matter to which the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs might give its attention.

I would not want to think that the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) was left with the impression that we on this side of the House are oblivious to the special powers that have been reserved here for the Solicitor General, particularly in respect of the Official Secrets Act. But in this country we are faced with the very fundamental fact that there are forces which would like to be at work to destroy this institution and even prevent the hon. member and myself speaking here tonight. They would prevent my telling the hon. minister from so-and-so exactly what I feel.

Because I speak in this manner I do not wish to leave the impression that I am paranoid about this. I do not think everyone behind the bush who expresses a violent contrary opinion against the government would overthrow the government. However, the fact is that I honestly believe it is the duty of the government not to prosecute such people but to constantly keep watch on what is happening and be able to constantly inform and take action if necessary when such activities reach the level where social order is to be disturbed by violence. I do not mean by hotheaded youngsters talking about what they would do to the government but a concerted effort to destroy and undermine what we respect as our social order.

Many of those who are violently opposed to some aspect of our society do not use violent means to express their opposition. I think there are many people in this country who appear to be violent but are not. But there are those who very carefully use many institutions in our country for the purpose of expressing some rather nefarious things, and I think the government must keep track of what is going on. This cannot be done through the normal channel of an application made to a judge, because no crime is being committed. It can only be done in the interest of national security. I think the time comes when we must show confidence in the people who are endowed with the responsibility of carrying out this function.

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I rise to take part in this debate basically to express the view of a layman on this issue. I have listened to the opinions expressed by those with legal minds who have spoken in the debate. I was particularly interested in the remarks of the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert), the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) and the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas). However, I wish to express the few concerns I have regarding this legislation.

Those of us who are from the country have had for a long time our own system of wiretapping, although it is not as serious as that being discussed this evening. This is called the party line. What we are discussing tonight reaches the fundamental freedoms and fundamental liberties of this nation. In this country, as in other countries, there has been a long history of trying to reach a balance, as the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Hogarth) mentioned, in terms of civil liberties of the individual as against any kind of subversive activity.

The hon. member for New Westminster pointed out a number of matters. He said that under the present law anyone can wiretap. May I point out to him that if this is so, surely in changing the law as we are now by amendment we should ensure that the actions of the government involving a kind of wiretapping do not infringe on the civil liberties of citizens. We should be extremely careful of the manner in which—this is the opinion I wish to express to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs—we word any kind of legislation pertaining to such devices as wiretapping.

The hon. member said that as society moves along there must be some kind of eternal balance in terms of questions concerning civil liberties. I might point out that all societies have changed. Can one say, for example, that there was a balance in terms of the actions of men such as Robespierre? I feel that there should be serious consideration given by the hon. member to the part of the legislation which deals with the Official Secrets Act. This provision appears in clause 16(2):

> The Solicitor General of Canada may issue a warrant authorizing the interception or seizure of any communication if he is satisfied by evidence on oath that
> (a) the purpose of such interception or seizure is related to the prevention or detection of espionage, sabotage or any other subversive activity directed against Canada or detrimental to the security of Canada; and
> (b) such interception or seizure is necessary in the public interest.

The concept of public interest has been considered throughout the century regardless of the type of government and who sits in power. The judgment of what is in the public interest is very important in terms of what is suggested here. I would hope that the members of the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs will seriously examine this part of the legislation. The bill goes on to provide:

> A warrant issued pursuant to subsection (2) shall specify
> (a) the type of communication to be intercepted or seized;
> (b) the person or persons who may make the interception or seizure; and
>
> (c) the length of time for which the warrant is in force.
>
> The Commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police shall from time to time make a report to the Solicitor General of Canada with respect to each warrant issued pursuant to subsection (2) setting forth particulars of the manner in which the warrant was used and the results, if any, obtained from such use.

There are some real questions as to what is a subversive activity directed against Canada or detrimental to the security of Canada. I assume that members across the way believe as we do in the protection of civil liberties, but who defines that grey area of subversiveness? Who defines the activities of people who discuss politics or form political groups? Who defines what is a subversive activity and what is against the public interest? Can we interpret as subversive certain comments or actions of such groups as Action Canada? I suggest that this government would undoubtedly not allow itself to use such powers—at least I hope not—but this kind of legislation lays itself open to the interpretation of others who may sit on the government benches.

I recall, when I was a university student, the actions and the writings in student newspapers concerning the role of the RCMP in terms of investigation. Just who did they investigate? Did they investigate anyone who they felt had radical ideas? To that age group, sometimes what are considered radical ideas are really conservative ideas. The hon. member for New Westminster spoke about keeping the right balance. One wonders whether, under this legislation, what is out of balance with the thoughts of our society is subversive. That is the key. This might apply not only to people on the left but to those on the right in the interpretation of governments. So we must be careful in our interpretation.

I remember the time when a young mountie taking a training course in Regina showed me a history book which they used to teach new recruits the history of the development of the RCMP. He referred to the comments in the history book regarding the Regina riot in the 1930s during the great depression, and the riot in Estevan during the 1930s when three coal miners were shot and killed. The history book gave a simplistic judgment of the causes and effects of those riots and stated that they were the result of communist activity. It was a complete whitewash.

I submit that this is the kind of attitude in our society that can lead to the misue of power under this kind of legislation. I call on the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, and on my good friend the hon. member for Hamilton West, to examine this legislation carefully.

Mr. Alexander: Why are you friendly to me tonight?

Mr. Knight: Other aspects of the legislation are good, but this particular aspect calls for serious examination of its implications, especially with regard to how political radicalism is defined. I remember that when I was younger I used to listen to the debates in the House of Commons.

Mr. Alexander: How old are you now, sir?

Mr. Knight: I remember, also, reading the statements of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) when he was expounding the theories of the Social Credit party. At that time this was the kind of radicalism that developed in Alberta. Thank goodness it did not spread further. That is the kind of thing we have to watch and be aware of in the future. I hope the committee will examine this legislation very seriously.

I have been somewhat surprised and confused by the lack of statements from representatives of the Social Credit party. Today we have heard from them a speech concerning the Gray report and we have heard from them much talk about subversiveness. I wonder whether they feel that this legislation is either too weak or too strong. I think they should express their point of view on it.

Essentially we get back to a very simple issue. The purpose of the interpretation of seizure is related to the detection of espionage, sabotage or any other subversive activity directed against Canada or detrimental to the security of Canada. We must ask ourselves whether seizure is necessary in the public interest. I hope the committee will seriously re-examine that aspect of the legislation.

[Translation]

Mr. Yves Forest (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I wish to participate briefly in this debate to indicate my support of Bill C-6 entitled "An Act to amend the Criminal Code, the Crown Liability Act and the Official Secrets Act" which is intended to respect and protect the privacy of individuals.

Even though this subject has been discussed on several occasions in recent years, through notices of motions or private bills, this is the first time that parliament is called upon to examine a bill concerning intrusion upon privacy with the help of electromagnetic, acoustic, mechanical or other devices. I think the government and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) are to be congratulated for introducing a practical, concrete and realistic legislation which might remedy this situation in today's world.

Unfortunately Mr. Speaker, I was no longer a member, in 1968-69, of the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs as private bills were then examined and experts were called upon on this subject. I had then other duties but I had been a member of this committee until 1968, to my deep satisfaction. I think the bill before us is taking into account most of the recommendations which had been made by the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs in its report which was tabled in the House.

Nowadays, the right to privacy is a strict matter as we are living in an era of advanced electronics and technology and wiretapping has reached an unheard-of degree of sophistication about which we do not yet know every aspect.

The right to privacy had not yet been firmly entrenched as it is a new legal concept now being introduced as against those traditional rights of freedom of speech, religion, press, association and meeting. However, I still think it is a privilege which is closely related to fundamental rights and which must fulfil an increasing role in our society.

It runs contrary to our concept of justice and democracy that an individual should be spied upon by the state or by anybody without there being well-defined and controlled restrictions. And yet, such is the present situation where no legislation specifies under which circumstances and conditions wire-tapping can be used.

In order to protect individual freedom, this bill provides for three new criminal offences: first, the interception of private communications with a device or piece of equipment defined as an electromagnetic device, or others; second, the fact of disclosing private communications intercepted with a device as described in the bill; and third, the fact of possessing, selling or buying such devices. I think this list of offences covers just about any situation which can occur in the area of wire-tapping.

However, if the right of the individual to privacy is to be protected, society must also protect itself, for there is no doubt that those who want to attack this country, to endanger national security, or to sabotage our democratic institutions—i.e., criminals, gangsters, anarchists, and other people of that type—also have those devices available to them and do not hesitate to use them for illegal purposes in order to fulfill their ambitions or to work out their resentment.

It was also necessary, therefore, to allow police forces and police authorities to use modern refined electronic techniques in order to preserve national security, fight criminals and check the activities of subversive organizations.

I feel, Mr. Speaker, that this bill as presented reconciles the right to privacy, which cannot be absolute, with the need for society to ensure its own security.

In order that the police forces may not misuse the privilege they have to infringe upon the basic right of privacy, an application must be made to a judge of a superior court of criminal jurisdiction who, following the representations made to him by the officers designated by an authorized person, will be responsible to determining the conditions and the period of time, which may not exceed 30 days, under which the interception might be carried out. Such authorization could be renewed, but only for major reasons that must be again specified.

In urgent cases, an officer could use the same means, but he should subsequently obtain the authorization from a judge of a superior court.

I submit that it was right to defer to a superior court judge the decision to authorize or not the interceptions by means of wiretapping and not to rely, for instance, solely on the minister to take such a decision, without any control of a political or a judicial character, as customary elsewhere in certain countries including, I think, the United Kingdom.

The Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs has drawn a list of various major crimes and has suggested that this method could be authorized. But the bill does not reflect this suggestion and interception will be allowed in the case of an offence as defined in the act and I quote:

> 178.1 —"offence" means an offence created by an Act of the Parliament of Canada for which an offender may be prosecuted by indictment—

Finally, everything will at the judge's discretion.

But the act does not mention this control only. By amending the Crown Liability Act, a further control is established: the setting up of a compensation system for unlawful invasion of privacy by a Crown official. The damages, which may be compensated to a maximum of $5,000, may be paid by the Crown; they might even be paid by the officer at fault.

Mr. Speaker, no doubt that as a result of the introduction of this bill, the provinces will follow suit either by modifying it or proposing another piece of legislation also aimed at protecting those who fall victims to illegal acts carried out by provincial officials in right of the Crown and providing legal means for victims to seek damages or some other kind of compensation.

Mr. Speaker, considering the provisions of the bill such as the notice of intention given to the party concerned to the effect that an intercepted private communication will be adduced in evidence and taking into account other restrictions provided in the legislation, I think that the guarantees are sufficient for the protection of individual rights.

As regards the public, it will be necessary, in view of the reports which the solicitor general and the provincial attorneys general will have to prepare, to determine to what extent these methods are used for the detection of criminals and other such aims.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that the bill provides for the establishment of a mechanism capable of protecting the average citizen who really has nothing to fear from such a bill, as well as society which needs to be protected now more than ever before.

Mr. Speaker, in concluding my remarks, I am pleased to support the bill and I hope that it will be passed by the House.

Mr. Albert Béchard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I listened carefully to the remarks of previous speakers and I want to thank them for their constructive suggestions.

We have gone through this stage of the procedure with a speed which clearly shows, Mr. Speaker, that all members are anxious to see this bill go through the next stage, and then become part of our statutes.

This measure is part of the long series of reforms undertaken by the present government in order to ensure a greater respect of individual freedom and privacy.

One can easily understand the concerns voiced by the four members of the New Democratic Party, and I am sure that their distinguished representative on the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs will be able to obtain from the minister the answers to their objections, with a view to clarifying the situation for the benefit of his colleagues, of all the other members of this House, and the general public, in order to give them a better understanding of this bill.

Mr. Speaker, that is what I wanted to say to close this debate. I want to thank once more the House for its co-operation.

FARM CREDIT ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING LOANS AND POWERS AND CAPITAL OF CORPORATION

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture) moved that Bill C-5, to amend the Farm Credit Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

• (2140)

He said: Mr. Speaker, Bill C-5 contains many important amendments to the Farm Credit Act. The general objective of the amendments is to enhance the ability of the Farm Credit Corporation to meet what I think are demonstrated, long-term credit needs for the development of viable farm businesses, and to provide the corporation with the powers necessary to carry out such other duties or functions as may be assigned to it in relation to the administration of those programs.

One of the most important to us now is, of course, the small farms development program. This program has been authorized by the House under the vote that has been presented to hon. members and passed. It seems to us, however, that it would be useful to have a provision in the statutory authority whereby the Farm Credit Corporation, because of the number of offices and the experienced field personnel, has authority to perform these functions.

Mr. Speaker, there are two main areas of these amendments. The first is the updating, bringing into 1972 and the years ahead, of the requirements of certain limitations that were put in, quite appropriately, at the time. I refer to such things as the maximum amount of loans which has not been changed since 1964, I believe, and certainly since then there has been an increase in land value and the size of farm units. We intend to change that provision.

There are other factors within the bill about which I wish to speak in some detail. One is the restrictions that were placed on farmers with respect to the amounts or the method and procedures they were required to use in relation to a loan taken under the FCC and one taken under the Farm Improvement Loans Act. Hon. members will know that experience has shown that even in certain areas where this seemed to be necessary, it is not required; so that restriction or limitation is being repealed. The other main area of these amendments is to provide for new concepts and functions that the FCC will be administering in the agricultural sector of Canada.

With those few introductory remarks I should like to get down—

An hon. Member: Explain!

Mr. Olson: I intend to explain some of these in detail and even to explain what I have said in more detail. Hon. members will realize that the powers of the corporation are being changed. The present powers of the corporation are those required to fulfil its objectives and purposes, which are to make, to administer and supervise farm loans. That is about as far as the powers granted to the corporation in the past would go. The corporation has a staff experienced in farm appraisals and farm land transactions deployed throughout the agricultural areas of Canada. We think that with this background the amendment will permit the minister to utilize this source of expert knowledge through the assignment of responsibility for other administrative programs. The first one that we have in mind is the land transfer program of the small farm development plan.

The second main change, Mr. Speaker, is authorized capital. The Minister of Finance is authorized at the present time to subscribe $56 million to the capital of the corporation and to lend the corporation 25 times this capital, or $1.4 billion. An estimated $245 million will be left unexpended as of March 31, 1972, so an increase of $10 million, permitting the borrowing of an additional $250 million, will provide for the future lending program of the corporation for some time. Hon. members will realize that this is $495 million in total. When that requirement is met or if it is met in four or five years or however long it takes, we will be back to parliament with further amendments.

An hon. Member: You will not be back.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member says that I will not be back. By that time I will have been around for 20 years, almost as long as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). Maybe that is long enough, but I am pretty sure that my colleagues will be over here.

An hon. Member: Which colleagues?

Mr. Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): He will be the first one back.

Mr. Olson: In addition to the specific purposes for which loans may be made, the act authorizes loans for any purpose which is necessary—I underline the word "necessary" because that is in the act at the present time—to the efficient operation of the mortgaged farm. This provision has been interpreted rather restrictively because of the word "necessary". The revised wording will replace it with the two words "will facilitate", so that loans may be made for any reasonable purpose related to the acquisition, operation, maintenance or development of the farm business. We have some cases which we would like to explain in more detail to the standing committee, when this bill goes there, relative to the significant difference between "necessary" and "will facilitate" and what it may mean in the practical application of the act.

A further point, Mr. Speaker, is that in one of the amendments we will change the requirement so that loans will be made to Canadian citizens or to landed immigrants within the meaning of the Immigration Act. From then on it is intended that loans will be made to assist only persons who are Canadian citizens or who intend to be permanently domiciled in Canada. At the present time, as hon. members know, it is legally possible to make loans to other than Canadian citizens or landed immigrants. We believe they should be primarily, or perhaps even exclusively for the benefit of Canadian citizens and landed immigrants.

Another major change is with respect to the maximum amount of loans. This matter is dealt with in clause 4. Hon. members know that the present loan limits for individual farm operators, which are $40,000 maximum under part II and $55,000 under part III, were established in 1964. Limits for multiple owner operations, that is, from $80,000 for two and up to $100,000 for more than two under part II, were established when the bill was amended in 1968. The amendment in this bill provides for a maximum of $100,000 to any farmer alone or jointly with others or in respect of a single farming enterprise. The size of individual farm units is increasing steadily, labour is being replaced in many cases by capital and the purchasing power of the dollar has decreased a little during recent years—

An hon. Member: He did not even smile.

Mr. Olson: —so that mortgage credit in amounts and for the terms required is not available from other sources. Thus, the limits for individual farm operators that were set in 1964 are now in our view inadequate for meeting the needs of many farmers, particularly those who wish to take advantage of more advanced technology and mechanization. Such farmers incur many costs.

• (2150)

The principle of relating loan ceilings to the number of farm operators rather than to the size of the business has proven in practice to be inequitable for individual farmers employing hired labour or people other than those with an equity in the farm unit. The principle has also proved inequitable, I suggest, in situations where the farmer operating his farm is assisted by sons or daughters of minor age, compared to two or more owner operators in a farming operation or a form of partnership. We want to correct that situation.

There is to be another change. It deals with secondary, non-farm enterprise. Perhaps it might be better to describe it as dealing with non-agricultural enterprise, although it deals with farms or is related to farms. Although the act authorizes the corporation to provide credit for the development on the mortgaged land of a secondary enterprise not being an agricultural enterprise, the corporation is not permitted to take the ability of the farm to produce non-farm revenue into consideration in establishing the appraised value of the farm to determine the upper limit of the loan.

This amendment will permit such values to be taken into consideration and will permit loans to be given which are more in keeping with the property's actual potential for carrying and servicing the debt and all the amortization charges associated with the loan. It will also make it possible for many small farmers to make better use of their resources without being entirely dependent on agriculture.

There is to be another major change as well. The change I am about to refer to is not a mere updating of the law but is a major change. Loans on land will be subject to the life interests of those who want to remain there. This amendment authorizes the corporation to lend on the security of farmlands with respect to which a right to use the buildings—particularly the home, although it can be broader than that—is retained by any person for a period not exceeding his lifetime or the lifetime of his spouse.

Situations can arise, particularly under plans such as the small farm development plan, where a retiring farmer selling his farm will be able to retain, if he wishes, the use of the buildings for a period not exceeding his lifetime or the lifetime of his spouse. The purchaser of such a farm who is eligible to borrow may wish to finance the purchase through a loan from the corporation. If this bill passes, such a provision can be incorporated in the terms and conditions of the loan.

We also intend to change the minimum age of borrowers. The present act does not permit the making of loans to farmers under the age of 21 years. This provision is specifically written into the act as it is at present. There is evidence of a general inclination to lower the legal age from 21. This has been done, actually, in a number of provinces. With the minimum age removed from the act, the corporation will be guided by the applicable provincial laws which set the minimum age at which persons can contract for mortgage loans. Therefore, anyone who is of legal age in a province and who is entitled to enter into contracts under provincial law will be able to enter into contracts with the Farm Credit Corporation in that province.

Provision is to be made for joint loans. Situations arise where it is reasonable to make joint loans between individual farmers, between an individual farmer and a qualified farming corporation, for example, which could be a family farm corporation, or between qualified farming corporations although the act does not specifically authorize the making of such loans under the particular circumstances. The amendments in this bill will permit the making of such loans, in reasonable circumstances, both under part II and part III of the act. One farmer may also allow part of his land to be mortgaged as additional security for a loan for another farmer. This is usually done, of course, in the case of a father who wants to put up security for his son. This provision does not limit his eligibility for a loan on his own behalf under part II of the act. The same provision will now apply with respect to loans made under part III.

May I now mention briefly the matter of the relationship between the eligibility of part III borrowers and the Farm Improvement Loans Act. Section 33 provides that if the indebtedness of a part III borrower exceeds 75 per cent of the appraised value of his land, he must obtain approval of the corporation before being eligible for a farm improvement loan. As I said, our experience has indicated that this requirement is unnecessary and it is therefore being withdrawn.

Those are the main features of the amendments to the Farm Credit Act, Mr. Speaker. There are other features, of course, and I am sure that they will come up during our discussion. One of them is the adjustment of interest rates on loans that have been made.

Mr. Benjamin: I will bet they are up.

Mr. Olson: Yes, that matter will come up. I do not know what the hon. member is trying to do, but I am not in an argumentative mood. I know that the farmers of Canada are anxiously waiting for this bill to pass and I will certainly not be party to any discussion tonight or at any other time which will delay its passage for one moment. I know hon. members opposite have said around the country that Bill C-5 is a good bill and that we should proceed with it as rapidly as possible. I fully concur. On the other hand, some hon. members have been saying around the country that the government is not really serious about getting this bill passed right away and that it is merely election bait.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Olson: I want to demonstrate my sincerity by saying that we should pass this bill as quickly as possible so that our farmers can benefit from its improvements. I return to the matter of the adjustment of interest rates. The Farm Credit Corporation, the Department of Finance and the Department of Agriculture have been seized of this problem for a long time. As hon. members know, interest rates charged by the Farm Credit Corporation have declined from a high of 8¾ per cent to 7 per cent. Some farmers have outstanding loans at higher than current rates; the interest rate paid is more than 7 per cent.

We have looked at many alternative ways of dealing with this problem. We have looked at the example set by CMHC in connection with house mortgages. That organization reviews mortgages every five years and as interest rates move up and down they are adjusted accordingly. That option may be open to us. Another option may be allowing farmers to refinance loans. We would not need to amend the act for that to be done. It could be done now. If we amend the act, we must be careful that we do not buy debts. In other words, allowances must be made for further development of a farm. This matter raises some problems.

Could I call it ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker? I will finish my remarks tomorrow.

Mr. Benjamin: We want to hear more.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—INTENTION OF UNITED STATES RESPECTING RENEWAL OF LEASE OF AIR FORCE BASE, GOOSE BAY

Mr. Ambrose Hubert Peddle (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, on April 26, I asked the following question of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Benson):

• (2200)

Has the United States government indicated to Canada any intention of phasing down its base operation at Goose Bay or has it indicated its intention to maintain operations as at present?

This is basically the same question I have been directing at intervals for almost two years now to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) and the Minister of National Defence. I receive the same cryptic answer each and every time—"Negotiations are continuing." On January 21, 1971, the Secretary of State for External Affairs said in this House, as recorded at page 2616 of Hansard:

It is not the intention of the U.S. government to declare Goose Bay surplus to U.S. requirements. They intend to retain the base."

On the same day, January 21, 1971, the same minister announced publicly that negotiations had commenced between Canada and the United States for renewal of the base lease which expires on December 5 this year. I have repeatedly questioned the minister during the past 13 months. The answer has always been, "Negotiations are continuing". Yet, Mr. Speaker, there was a statement made in Washington on March 15 of this year by Major General Joseph R. DeLuca, United States Air Force budget director, to the effect that the Goose Bay air force base is to be phased down.

It can be readily recognized that there has been uncertainty among the residents of this area ever since it first became known that the lease was being renegotiated. That uncertainty is even greater now because of the statement made in Washington and the uncertain future that faces these people. They have been suspended, or I could say paralyzed and they are very right in demanding some assurance from their government as to what the future holds for them.

There are approximately 8,000 people in the Goose Bay-Happy Valley area. Many have spent their lifetime there. The American government has no right to treat them this way, and the Canadian government has no right to allow the American government to do it. The base is the economic lifeline of this area. If the Americans are planning to withdraw, Canada should be ready to move in and follow up the recommendation made more than two years ago by the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, namely, that its strategic position on the north Atlantic makes it an ideal location for a reopening of defence operations there.

I do not have time to repeat all the arguments which I presented to this House 14 months ago. I am just demanding that the government give some assurance to these people. If the spokesman for the government is planning to stand in his place and give an extended version of the previous answer, that negotiations are continuing, I suggest that he save his breath and go home now. I am not interested in international negotiations. At the same time, I do not expect the government to blurt out details of negotiations that have not been concluded. However, the people of Goose Bay and Happy Valley are interested in their future and the government should recognize the fact that they deserve an answer and an assurance in this regard.

The spokesman for the Secretary of State for External Affairs might say that his business is to be concerned with the intricacy of negotiations. The Minister of National Defence might say his business is the defence of our country. However, I would point out that hon. members opposite who form the government must have an interest in people. The future is suspended for 8,000 people in my constituency. No one is telling them anything. I hope I will receive more in the way of an answer than I have as a result of my probings in the past 14 months.

Mr. J.-R. Comtois (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, it is appreciated that the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Peddle) has a natural concern for the future of operations at the base at Goose Bay because this base represents a very substantial element within his constituency. The agreement covering the leasing to the United States Air Force of certain facilities at Goose Bay was entered into on December 5, 1952. This agreement was for a term of 20 years and is due for renewal by December 5 this year.

The hon. member is aware, as we are, that the United States is exercising certain economies in its defence budget. In recent testimony before the United States Senate Committee on Appropriations, a military official informed the committee as follows:

The Strategic Air Command basing structure will be modified during fiscal year 1973. McConnel Air Force base, Kansas, is being transferred to SAC from Tactical Air Command. Glasgo Air Force base, Montana, will be reactivated as a contractor-operated installation assigned to SAC. Goose Air base, Nfld. is programmed to phase down.

In recent weeks the member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador has addressed questions to both the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) and the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Benson) concerning the future of Goose Bay and the United States involvement there. He has been informed on each occasion, and as recently as April 26, as reported at page 1651 of Hansard, that negotiations are under way on the future of United States operations at the base and that when additional information is available it will be provided to him.

Like most governments today, the U.S. government is concerned about costs, and in this particular instance about the cost which the operation of the base at Goose Bay represents. They therefore are exploring with us the possibility of adjustments to the present arrangements which might reduce the costs. Service to service discussions are continuing but it will probably be a little time yet before the outcome is known.

HEALTH—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON PROPOSALS TO COMBAT ESCALATING CARE COSTS

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, on April 20, 1972, I asked the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) whether in view of the deep concern over the Minister's statement that we could not afford the bill for health care, and the statement that there was a scandalous waste in Canadian health services, he would make a statement to the House so that parliament might know what the real facts were.

That there has been a galloping increase in health care costs from 1963 to the present there is no argument. In 1959, the total health bill amounted to $1,290 million. Ten years later, in 1969, the total health bill was $4 billion. Medical services now cost about $200 per person per day, and it is estimated that in ten years time the cost will be more than $600 per person. If anything is needed to demonstrate the incompetence of governments to operate business successfully it is, surely, this admission of almost complete failure to operate efficiently in the health care field.

An attempt is now being made to operate on the basis of about half the number of general practitioners needed, making it impossible for general practitioners to undertake health care in the preventative field in the way they might otherwise do, or in the very early stages of sickness so as to prevent the development of more serious diseases which lead to periods of hospitalization at $50 or $60 per bed per day, often in ultramodern surroundings which are quickly outdated. Many patients could be cared for in motel-type rooms on each side of a central corridor, without elevators and elaborate equipment. This would be efficient and would place the patient's comfort and safety first and at less cost, according to some experts in the field.

The minister states, and I agree with him, that it is difficult sometimes to get a doctor, and people are neglected and die needlessly. Who is responsible for this situation but the present government which imported about half the doctors needed in the last ten years? Who is responsible for the present government not living up to the principles laid down in the Hall royal commission report? Who brought in full medicare? It was not the provinces, it was the federal government and it must accept responsibility for the failure to provide the necessary medical manpower.

I have repeatedly asked the minister to operate medical schools during the summer semester. He states he is willing to co-operate with the provinces, and a couple of years ago he indicated this was almost ready to take place. What has happened since that time? Speaking in Napanee, in an attempt to answer a question regarding medical care he said his department had undertaken a number of studies and analyses of medical manpower. These studies show that there is need for an increase in number and an improvement in the status of general practitioners.

Furthermore, what about the 600 qualified students who were ready to enter the field of medicine last fall but were turned away from our universities? In that year we took over 1,000, many from other countries with a much lower standard than ours and with a need much worse than ours. The minister states that millions of Canadians, mostly the poor, cannot get a doctor and die needlessly. I ask the minister whether this was not the very reason the government brought in medicare, so that this 30 per cent of the population could get the treatment they needed. This indicates a complete failure to cope with the situation, and it is getting worse.

Approximately 95 per cent of the health dollar today is spent on curing diseases and only 5 per cent on preventing it. The minister states he wants to put the lid on health costs and cut the amount given to the provinces, yet he admits we are short of doctors, particularly general practitioners. He will not provide the funds necessary to obtain doctors. This is the key to the situation. Why does the minister not consider running medical schools the year around, since nearly all a doctor's education is now provided for by the state, paying the student doctor a living wage so these individuals would be out earlier, trained and earning a good income, paying income tax and paying back the loan, which is tax deductible, with the stipulation that the regional areas without doctors would be looked after first?

[Mr. Rynard.]

What has happened to the nurses being trained to take some of this 20 per cent load off the general practitioner? How many hundreds are being trained, and on what basis? Are they on a fee treatment basis or are they on salary? When do they become doctor's assistants, and what is the difference in the training and qualification between the nurse on her own and the doctor's assistant?

The government has indicated, and I disagree entirely, that doctors indiscriminately admit patients. I believe that the doctor considers conscientiously all the facts and uses his skills in deciding whether or not to hospitalize a patient. Every case is different, home surroundings are different, yet the bureaucrats behind desks want to run the doctor's conscience.

I originally asked the minister to make a statement to the House on what the needs are and the solutions to meet them. After all, we have had no clearcut statement in this regard. The very suggestion of a deterrent fee is obnoxious because it hits the poor the hardest. This was the reason for medicare. The public has a right to know what national health care is doing, how it is run and what the proposals are that will not cut the quality of care they received before medicare was brought in.

These proposals must improve the situation. How we can do this with health costs increasing by 13 per cent and the gross national product by 9 per cent? The critics hint at too many operations, too many expensive procedures. If this is true it should be drawn to the doctor's attention, or does the computerized world get out of touch?

In any event, I hope the minister will make a statement covering what is new and what he proposes to do in leadership and legislation to meet the present health crisis that he talks about.

[Translation]

Mr. André Ouellet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I doubt that in the few minutes allotted to me I can answer all the questions of the hon. member.

I strongly reject the charges which the member seems to lay against the government and I must tell him that the problem raised is not new.

The considerably increased costs of medical care concern not only the government but also the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro), especially so in recent years. This is why he suggested at the federal-provincial conference in November 1968 the establishment of a special committee which would be asked to study the matter.

The committee established in January 1969 has published a substantial report in three volumes. That report, submitted at the conference held by the ministers of health in December 1969, included in all 350 recommendations.

The hon. member should know that the prime responsibility for health services is a provincial one. He should therefore recognize that most of the recommendations made by this committee should be implemented by the provinces.

As for this government, it has introduced, at the last federal-provincial conference, a new financing arrangement. We have realized that personal care, in Canada, is among the most costly in the world. So, this government has proposed to the provinces a new formula to enable them better to administer health services and to reduce costs considerably.

We believe that nothing should prevent us from providing more Canadians with the best care, and this, as soon as possible and at reduced cost. This government has not only suggested a more appropriate formula than that introduced a few years ago, but has even suggested that a special fund of $640 million be set up to finance the whole restructuring of the care distribution system, in accordance with the particular needs of each province.

GRAIN—ACTION ON COMPLAINT ABOUT GRAIN DOORS AT WESTERN DELIVERY POINTS

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I asked a question in the House of Commons today about the very pressing necessity in terms of the transportation of grain from western Canada to our customers overseas. The problem pertains to grain doors on boxcars and their inadequacy. I pointed out that this matter was brought to my attention by the Estlin, Gray, Riceton and Bechard area of my constituency.

The only answer I received from the minister was the comment that the problem exists in northern Saskatchewan as well. I suggest, with all due respect, that that answer is not good enough. I should like to read into the record a letter I received from the Gray pool committee and the others involved. This is a letter sent to Mr. R. G. Hodge, assistant superintendent, Canadian National Railways, Regina:

> We wish to bring to your attention the urgent necessity of grain doors at the four shipping points of Estlin, Gray, Riceton and Bechard.
> From the information that comes to us we have found out that it is not just a local situation.
>
> With the amount of grain there will be to move right away we feel that extraordinary measures should be taken to remedy the situation as soon as possible.
>
> This letter is written as a result of a joint pool committee meeting of the above points held April 27, 1972.
> Yours truly,
>
> Leroy Moats,
> Secretary, Gray Pool Committee.
> copies to:
> Hon. Otto Lang
> Mr. Bill Knight, M.P.
> Cy McDonald
> Mr. A. Milistone
> Allen Blakeney, Premier of Saskatchewan
>
> Leader Post, Regina.

• (2020)

This whole question has been on the minds of the agents of elevator companies for a long time, yet no answer is forthcoming. The question relates to the problem of a type of cardboard grain door presently being used. The minister in charge of the Wheat Board (Mr. Lang) suggested on previous occasions that he had met with private interests to discuss the problem of these grain doors. I wonder if he has taken the opportunity to meet representatives of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool Association which represents most of the grain agents in the province of Saskatchewan. I doubt it.

With regard to this whole question of grain doors, it has been brought to my attention that a new type of grain door has been patented by an agent in the constituency of Fraser Valley West in the Burnaby region. This gentleman patented a door made out of plywood surrounded by rubber so that it can fit very easily into a boxcar. It is far more efficient than the door now being used.

Each time we direct a question to the minister in charge of the Wheat Board concerning transportation we are asked to direct the question to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson), particularly on days when he is not here. Then when we direct our questions to the Minister of Transport we are at times referred back to the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. The all important question is: Who is in charge of transport? Frequently the answers we receive are that the matter is under active consideration or that the minister is consulting those involved. The buck is passed continually between the two cabinet ministers. The question is whether there is a minister in the House who happens to be a minister of action.

In this whole area of transportation I have asked questions of the Minister of Transport regarding the leasing of boxcars from the United States for the movement of grain. He told me that he had been in contact with the CNR and will be in contact with the CPR in future. I have asked him questions regarding the priority of the railroads in terms of the $5 million allocated to buy flatcars at a time when there was a hue and cry in the west to buy hopper cars for the movement of grain.

We are not getting answers to these questions from the representatives of government departments concerned. I hope that this evening we will receive a direct and comprehensive answer to this very important problem of grain doors for boxcars, for the purpose of improving the shipment of grain to our markets. It may seem to those who are not familiar with the movement of grain that this is not an important matter, but to the farmers who are moving their grain it is an extremely important question to which I hope we will receive tonight a direct and comprehensive answer—a better answer than we received this afternoon.

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, following the question which the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Knight) raised in the House this afternoon, the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board obtained the following information from the two railway companies regarding the current position of grain doors in the province of Saskatchewan. Canadian National Railways informed the minister that except for those lines west of North Battleford, west of Kindersley and west of Biggar, all railway grain stations in Saskatchewan are supplied with wooden grain doors. Occasionally the supply of wooden grain doors is depleted at individual stations, and in this event paper doors are substituted until such time as the supply of wooden doors is replenished.

On the Canadian Pacific Railway, problems have arisen in the past due to deterioration of the standard wooden door posts because of the repeated nailing of grain doors to the cars. To alleviate this situation Canadian Pacific began a process of replacing the wooden posts with nailable steel posts. In 1970, 2,900 cars were so converted. A further 3,272 cars were converted during 1971, and in the current yer 2,828 more are scheduled for conversion. Therefore at the end of 1972, 9,000 cars will have been converted. The nailable steel posts have been extremely successful and have brought commendation from the grain trade. In addition, a further 3,500 cars have been modified by the application of plywood at the doorways and this has proved very successful.

In December last these upgraded cars constituted more than one-third of all Canadian Pacific cars unloaded at Thunder Bay and Vancouver and this porportion is expected to increase as more modified cars enter grain service. I hope that the information given in this answer will be to the satisfaction of the hon. member.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.28 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRIVILEGE

MR. NYSTROM—ATTENDANCE OF MINISTER OF REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION AND DEPUTY BEFORE STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I wish to raise a question of privilege concerning the Standing Committee on Regional Development. The facts are as follows: Last Thursday the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion was questioned in the standing committee on some very important matters concerning the estimates of his department. As the minister was unable to provide the answers, he undertook to give them at an early meeting of the committee. The chairman of the committee proposed May 5 as the date for the minister's appearance. Last Monday the steering committee of the Standing Committee on Regional Development was informed that the minister could not be available until May 18 and that his deputy would appear as a witness on May 4. Yesterday the members of the committee were informed in writing that the latter meeting had been cancelled because the deputy minister could not attend.

• (1410)

It is clear that under the circumstances the Standing Committee on Regional Development is prevented from dealing properly with the task assigned to it by the House, namely, to examine the proposed expenditures of almost half a billion dollars, because both the minister and his deputy have declared themselves unavailable as witnesses at a reasonably early time. The matter is extremely urgent as under Standing Order 58(14) the standing committee is required to consider and report these estimates back to the House not later than May 31.

My formal motion, seconded by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) will be:

> That the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections inquire forthwith and report upon the reluctance of the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion and his deputy to appear before the Standing Committee on Regional Economic Expansion and that the report of the committee with its recommendations thereon be made to the House within the next five days.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): On a point of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We can have only one question of privilege before the House at one time. The hon. member for St. Boniface will recognize that at the moment there is a matter that has been raised for the consideration of the House by way of a question of privilege.

The hon. member for Yorkton-Melville, as required by the provisions of Standing Order 17, has given the Chair the required notice, which has given me an opportunity to study, if only briefly, the precedents in relation to the applications of this Standing Order. The hon. member and the House will appreciate that the Chair is required to make a ruling on whether there is a prima facie case of privilege, at which point the motion could be put, and at which time there could be a debate based on the motion of which the hon. member has given notice.

I should like to refer the House and the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville to a ruling by the Chair reported in the official report of debates of the House for Monday, March 15, 1971, when a question and a motion much similar to those now raised were then proposed for consideration by the hon. member for Brandon-Souris. The ruling of the Chair at that time read in part as follows:

> The hon. member has raised by way of a question of privilege the fact that a minister was not in attendance in a committee of the House to answer questions which the hon. member wanted to submit to him. The hon. member suggested that the difficulty he has encountered is the result of the changes in the rules of the House of Commons. I respectfully suggest to him that this is hardly a matter which can be raised by way of a question of privilege.
> The hon. member may feel aggrieved in the sense that he did not have an opportunity to obtain the information he was seeking, but I would then think that the matter becomes a question of substance, and the only way in which a debate may be initiated in the House is by way of a substantive motion. In fact, the motion proposed by the hon. member is essentially a substantive motion and in the circumstances it should not be raised as a question of privilege.

I would also like to refer the hon. member to Standing Order 65(11) which indicates that the chairman of a standing or special committee shall maintain order in the committee, deciding all such questions subject to an appeal to the committee. That, of course, is not an appeal to the House but to the committee.

I think it is long-established practice that difficulties in discussions and debates in a committee should be settled by the committee itself, and that if there are difficulties which are to be considered by the House this should be done at the time the report of the committee is before the House for debate and consideration by the members of the House.

In addition to these points there is in my mind a question of the propriety and practicality of having the proceedings of one committee investigated by another committee of the House. I can foresee all sorts of difficulties if this were allowed and became a practice of the House.

In view of the precedents, the citation to which I have referred and the Standing Orders, I must come to the conclusion that the matter raised by the hon. member is essentially a substantive motion and that it should not be debated in the House by way of a question of privilege. My ruling is that there is no prima facie case of privilege and the hon. member's motion cannot be put at this time.

Canadian Broadcasting Corporation

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member rises on a question of privilege.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, I listened to what you said very carefully, but an implication of neglect of duty on my part as chairman of the committee has been raised and in view of that I believe I have the right to say something.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member claims that he has a question of privilege. It cannot, of course, be the same question on which there has already been a ruling. If the hon. member claims he has been aggrieved he might indicate briefly what the question of privilege is and the Chair will make a ruling. The hon. member should indicate as succinctly as possible what the question of privilege might be.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, the Standing Committee on Regional Development of which I am chairman is very progressive and has been doing a tremendous job—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: Question.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): First of all, I should like to say that we had the minister there twice and we had the deputy minister—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member should resume his seat. The hon. member is now debating the issue which perhaps shows the validity of my suggestion that this was a matter of debate. The hon. member for Yorkton-Melville wanted to bring the matter before the House under the guise of a question of privilege. I thought that this was a substantive motion which would give rise to a debate of substance. The approach taken by the hon. member indicates that I was quite right. I have already ruled that this is not a question of privilege.

[Mr. Speaker.]

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

TELEVISING OF NATIONAL HOCKEY LEAGUE FINAL SERIES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise at this time to ask for unanimous consent—

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. MacInnis: —to move a motion under Standing Order 43 concerning a matter of great interest to all members of the House and especially to the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Simpson) who raised the question yesterday. In view of the fact that many Canadians are being deprived of the opportunity of seeing the National Hockey League final series and since the CBC during the regular season switched to games from the United States, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Meadow Lake (Mr. Cadieu):

That this House seek the co-operation of the CBC and responsible agencies in providing coverage in those areas presently denied.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond. This motion is proposed to the House under the terms of Standing Order 43 and therefore requires unanimous consent. The Chair will inquire whether there is unanimity.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will recognize that there is not unanimous consent and so the motion cannot be put.

An hon. Member: Who said no?

An hon. Member: Joe Guay said no.

An hon. Member: He always says no.

An hon. Member: Who said no?

An hon. Member: Joe said no.

DISPUTE WITH NABET—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I ask the unanimous consent of the House under Standing Order 43 to move a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing importance.

My motion is somewhat broader in scope than merely the inability of certain Canadian television viewers to see this year's Stanley Cup playoff series. It concerns the cost to the public purse of the prolonged labour difficulties between NABET and the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, estimated now to be greater than the price tag of a settlement based on NABET's initial demands. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert):

That the House call on the CBC to abandon its indifference and enter forthwith into genuine negotiations with NABET, so that the current dispute can be settled without further delay or cost to the economy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: This motion is also proposed to the House under the terms of Standing Order 43 and requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity and the motion cannot be put.

An hon. Member: You are just sore, Joe.

Mr. Hees: Watch your manners, Joe.

AGRICULTURE

FERTILIZER PRICES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave under Standing Order 43 to present a motion of urgent and pressing necessity which arises out of the unfair treatment of farmers in the purchase of fertilizer and the evidence of the existence of a combine among Canadian fertilizer companies. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin):

That the question of the cost of fertilizer manufactured in Canada to farmers in the prairie region of Canada, more especially in Saskatchewan and Manitoba, be referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture for the purpose of calling witnesses and investigating comparative prices of Canadian manufactured fertilizer in the states of Montana and North Dakota compared to Saskatchewan and Manitoba and to determine if unfair trade practices or price fixing are being practised by Canadian fertilizer companies.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity and the hon. member's motion cannot be submitted to the House at this time.

POLLUTION

POSSIBLE OIL SPILLS ON WEST COAST—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, I wish to move a motion under Standing Order 43. I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Harding):

That the subject matter of the report made yesterday by a team of investigators to the Department of the Environment which states that major oil spills can be expected if giant tankers use the west coast route to carry Alaskan oil to Cherry Point refinery in Washington State, which is 12 miles from Surrey-White Rock, and which calls for international action to manage traffic in the hazardous waters near that point be referred to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence for the purpose of immediate review and definite action by Canada to end this threat to the ecology and well-being of our western shores.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the motion proposed by the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity. In the circumstances the hon. member's proposed motion cannot be put to the House.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

STEPS TAKEN TO ELIMINATE INFLAMMABLE CLOTHING FROM OUR MARKETS

Question No. 81—Mr. Rynard:

1. Are any steps being taken by the government to eliminate inflammable clothing from our markets?

2. How many cases of burns, by degree, were there in Canada in 1971 directly attributable to the combustion of inflammable clothing?

3. What was the total cost of hospitalization and other care of sufferers from such burns?

4. What safety standards are being proposed to meet this problem and how will they be enforced?

Questions

Mr. D. R. Tolmie (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in view of the lengthy answer, I wonder if hon. members will agree to have it recorded in Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: The abovementioned answer reads as follows:]

1. The Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs has taken action under the Hazardous Products Act with respect to clothing flammability as follows: (a) Effective November 2, 1971, it became an offence to sell any consumer article of any kind containing a dangerously flammable textile. A burning test procedure is used to classify textiles of this category. Briefly, a 3.5 second burning time limit has been established for a 5-inch length of material under prescribed test conditions. (b) Effective November 2, 1971, a more severe regulation was established for children's nightwear. In this instance the burning time using the same test procedure is set at a minimum of seven seconds.

2. Statistical information on the number of burn cases and their degrees attributable to specific causes such as textiles is not available in Canada at present. Accident statistics have in large measure been medically oriented. In order to make most effective use of the Hazardous Products Act, information on events leading to injuries is required along with details of offending agents. To correct this situation the Department has in recent months initiated discussions with provincial authorities and hospitals for the purpose of setting up a reporting system which will permit acquisition of such information.

3. For reasons stated in the reply to part 2 of the question, it has not been possible to obtain this information.

4. In addition to the regulations with respect to clothing listed under Part I of this question, regulations have been issued under the Hazardous Products Act which establish flammability limits for bedding and toys. Work is in progress to develop flammability regulations for a wider range of clothing, carpets and mattresses, and to continue study of the use of fire retardant treatment of textiles.

SCIENCE COUNCIL OF CANADA—DUTIES OF MR. HUNKA

Question No. 103—Mr. Fortin:

1. What are the duties of Mr. Hunka of the Science Council of Canada?

2. What is his salary?

3. Is he bilingual?

4. Has the government received any written or verbal reports regarding the discriminatory attitude of that official with respect to certain French-speaking civil servants?

5. What was Mr. Hunka's salary for each of the past five years and were his salary increases in accordance with those granted to equivalent positions?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of State for Science and Technology): In so far as the Science Council is concerned, our replies are as follows: 1. Chief of Administration.

2. In the range $18,400-$22,100 per annum.

3. No.

4. None. On the contrary, he has paid special heed to the government's policy on bilingualism and has, in large part, been responsible for the fact that the Science Council has a higher than average percentage of bilingual persons on its staff.

5. As there are no equivalent positions on the staff of the Science Council, this question is considered as 'not applicable'.

FUNDS FOR DRUG ABUSE CAMPAIGN AND ANTI-SMOKING CAMPAIGN

Question No. 342—Mr. Rynard:

1. Was the drug abuse campaign fund reduced for the fiscal year 1972-73 and, if so, for what reason?

2. Were the Department of National Health and Welfare anti-smoking program funds doubled for the fiscal year 1972-73 and, if so, for what reason?

3. What was the breakdown in spending for (a) the drug abuse program (b) the anti-smoking campaign for the fiscal year 1971-72?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. No. Funds for 1971/72 totalled $4,843,000. (This includes $520,000 Summer Students Projects). Funds approved for the Non-Medical Use of Drugs Directorate for 1972/73 total $5,330,000. (This includes $632,000 Summer Students Projects).

2. Yes. Funds for 1971/72 totalled $173,000. Funds approved for 1972/73 total $386,000. This increase of more than 100 per cent will allow for expanded research and education activities.

3. Final expenditures are not yet available for 1971/72.

COST OF REFIT OF HMCS BONAVENTURE

Question No. 384—Mr. MacRae:

What was the estimated cost of the refit of HMCS Bonaventure before its disposal?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Defence): This information may be found in the Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts of the First Session of the Twenty-eighth Parliament, including the Third Report of the said Committee which appeared in Votes and Proceedings No. 122, May 13, 1970.

CITIZENSHIP ASSISTANCE FOR PROSPECTIVE CITIZENS THROUGH POST OFFICES

Question No. 391—Mr. Robinson:

1. Will the government consider supplying local post offices with applications for citizenship so that prospective citizens will not find it necessary to take a day off work to apply?

2. Will the government consider providing staff assistance through the post office to help applicants for citizenship to complete their application forms?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): 1. The government has now under consideration a plan to make citizenship information and application forms more readily available to those who require them. This will not however eliminate the requirement for an applicant to make a personal appearance, to attest the application, and to produce supporting documentation.

2. It is considered impractical on economic grounds to make Citizenship Registration staff available in post offices or to give post office staff the training necessary to qualify them for this task.

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—ADVERTISING SERVICES

Question No. 397—Mr. Godin:

Has the Government retained the services of the Montreal actor, Jean-Pierre Masson, to record an advertisement intended to encourage citizens to use the services of the Department of Manpower and Immigration within the Local Initiatives Program and, if so (a) how many such recordings have been made by this actor and at what cost (b) for how many days and on how many radio stations have these advertisements been broadcast?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Les Productions Jean-Pierre Masson Inc. was retained to record an advertisement intended to encourage the citizens to use the services of the Department of Manpower and Immigration within the Local Initiatives Program. (a) to produce one message on tape at a total cost of $870.00 for professional fees and production costs, and (b) the tape was played on 32 Quebec radio stations for 9 days at a minimum four times per day.

ADMISSION OF MR. ERVIN EDMUND WATTS

Question No. 418—Mr. Hales:

1. Did Mr. Ervin Edmund Watts, a native of North Carolina, USA enter Canada and, if so, at what port of entry was he examined?

2. Did Mr. Watts serve time in any American prison before his entry into Canada and, if so, for what crime was he convicted?

3. Are people with criminal records allowed to enter Canada as landed immigrants?

4. Was Mr. Watts convicted and sentenced in Canada and, if so (a) for what crime (b) where was his court case held?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1, 2 and 4. The Department of Manpower and Immigration has no record of a person by the name of Ervin Edmund Watts.

3. Section 5 of the Immigration Act prohibits the admission of an individual who has been convicted of or admits to having committed a crime involving moral turpitude. However, the Immigration Act further provides that relief from this prohibition may be granted by the Governor in Council under certain circumstances where an individual is considered to have become successfully rehabilitated.

TRANSPORTATION AND ASSISTANCE TO IMMIGRANTS TO CANADA

Question No. 423—Mr. Robinson:

Did Canada subsidize travel fares and other amenities to bring immigrants to Canada in the years 1960 to 1971 and, if so, by how much in each year?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Except in the case of special refugee movements, the Government does not subsidize the costs of transoceanic travel to Canada on behalf of immigrants. However, provision is made in the budget of the Department of Manpower and Immigration for funds to assist in immigrant establishment in Canada. This includes such items as emergency food and accommodation, hospital or medical care where the newcomer is indigent and not eligible under public or private insurance programs and in unusual circumstances inland transportation from port of arrival to final destination. The table below reflects the total annual expenditures for these items during the past twelve fiscal years. The decrease in expenditures in 1965-66 was occasioned by the assumption by the Department of National Health and Welfare of responsibility for family assistance payments to immigrants which are made in lieu of family allowances. The increase in the years 1968-69 and 1969-70 reflects the costs incurred by the government in the Czechoslovakian Refugee Movement to Canada.

Fiscal Year	Total Expenditures
1959-60	1,673,639
1960-61	1,769,371
1961-62	1,180,790
1962-63	1,570,728
1963-64	1,878,723
1964-65	2,579,594
1965-66	672,747
1966-67	1,413,920
1967-68	2,863,530
1968-69	10,468,127
1969-70	4,009,581
1970-71	1,911,000

AGE REGULATIONS COVERING IMMIGRANTS TO CANADA

Question No. 424—Mr. Robinson:

Is there a difference, according to age, in the regulations for allowing immigrants to join their families already in Canada, such that the point system is not used for applicants over 60 years of age and, if so, for what reasons?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Parents and grandparents, 60 years of age and older, of citizens and permanent residents of Canada are not subject to the assessment criteria or point system set out in the Immigration Regulations. It is considered that the majority of such relatives are not likely to be intending to enter the permanent labour force and hence it is not necessary to assess them on their chances for successful establishment in this respect.

PEI—FEDERAL PAYMENTS FOR POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION 1967-71

Question No. 431—Mr. Macquarrie:

1. What were the amounts of the payments made by the federal government to Prince Edward Island for post-secondary education in the years 1967 to 1971?

2. What are the estimated payments to Prince Edward Island for post-secondary education for the years 1972, 1973 and 1974?

Questions

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): 1. 1967-68, $1,635,000; 1968-69, $2,063,000; 1969-70, $2,521,000; 1970-71, $2,995,000.

2. 1971-72, $3,408,000; 1972-73, $3,800,000; 1973-74, $4,250,000.

ALLOCATION OF FUNDS UNDER CANADA MANPOWER TRAINING ON-THE-JOB PROGRAM

Question No. 441—Mr. Orlikow:

1. How much of the new $20 million for on-the-job-training programs announced by the Minister of Finance in the House on October 14, 1971, has been allocated?

2. What is the allocation, by province, of money under this program?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. The initial $20 million provided for the Canada Manpower Training on-the-Job Program has been increased to $50 million, all of which has been committed. Funds were initially allocated by region in accordance with the distribution of unemployment. Subsequent adjustments to the allocations were made to take account of varying employer response to the program.

2. Total amounts committed in approved proposals, by province and territory are as follows:

Province or Territory	Millions $
Newfoundland	0.92
Nova Scotia	2.63
Prince Edward Island	1.36
New Brunswick	1.54
Quebec	16.85
Ontario	13.50
Manitoba	2.74
Saskatchewan	2.33
Alberta	3.06
Northwest Territories	0.31
British Columbia	4.72
Yukon Territory	0.04
Total	50.00

NEWFOUNDLAND—SPECIAL EMPLOYMENT PLAN

Question No. 477—Mr. Peddle:

1. How many man-months of work were provided in Newfoundland under the Special Employment Plan this winter?

2. What amount of money was spent in Newfoundland in this program?

3. What was the nature of the projects and where were they located?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. In view of the fact that the Special Employment Plan will not end until May 31, 1972 final and accurate figures will not be available until later. The estimated man-months employment figure from November 1, 1971 to May 31, 1972 is 32,870.

[Mr. Macquarrie.]

2. The estimated federal cost from November 1, 1971 to May 31, 1972 is $19,875,000. This figure does not include funds from non-government sources.

3. Detailed data on the location of each project is not available. The greatest number of projects were in the nature of road repair; water, sewer, hydro services; forest inventory and thinning; construction of recreational facilities; improvements and renovations of various existing services; park conservation and development programs; beach protection work; pollution control; building of new community fish holding units; health services; first aid training; and various labour and support programs.

*CONTRACT FOR THE SUPPLY OF EGGS TO CFB GAGETOWN, N.B.

Question No. 494—Mr. Fairweather:

1. Is there a contract for the supply of eggs to CFB Gagetown, New Brunswick and, if so, is the supplier complying with the regulations of the New Brunswick Egg Marketing Board?

2. In future tender applications, will it be a condition of the contract that suppliers shall comply with rules and regulations of respective provincial marketing boards?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, in answer to part one, a contract was placed with Swift Canadian Co. Ltd., of Moncton, for delivery of eggs to Canadian Forces Base, Gagetown, for the period April 1, 1972 to April 30, 1972. We understand that the supplier may not have complied with all of the regulations of the New Brunswick Egg Marketing Board.

In answer to part two, although we believe that all our suppliers should adhere to the regulations of provincial marketing boards, it is of course not the responsibility of a federal government department to administer the various rules and regulations of provincial marketing boards.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES RETIRED PERSONNEL—TAXATION ON PENSIONS

Question No. 501—Mr. Godin:

1. How many former members of the Canadian Armed Forces on pension reside in (a) Ireland (b) the United States of America (c) Australia (d) New Zealand (e) Findland (f) Sweden (g) Denmark (h) Germany (i) Netherlands (j) Trinidad-Tobago (k) the United Kingdom?

2. Are these allowances taxable and, if so (a) what was the percentage of such taxes paid for the years 1970 and 1971 (b) what will be the percentage for 1972 to 1980?

[Translation]

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Defence): 1. (a) 19; (b) 846; (c) 27; (d) 23; (e) none; (f) none; (g) one; (h) 74; (i) 19; (j) one; (k) 462.

2. These allowances are subject to Canadian Income Tax if the pensioner is not a permanent resident of the country he is living in. (a) This information is not readily available as it would entail the perusal of each pensioner's file, and the necessary expert staff to undertake the large amount of work which would be required to gather this information is not available. (b) In respect to the new tax legislation effective January 1972, annuitants who reside outside Canada will be subject to a 15 per cent withholding tax after 1 January, 1972. At the end of 1975, this will be increased to 25 per cent unless reduced by treaty. At the present time, Canada has Reciprocal Income Tax Agreements with the following countries where non-residents are not subject to Canadian withholding taxes on annuities—Ireland, United States of America, Australia, New Zealand, Finland, Sweden, Denmark, Netherlands, Trinidad-Tobago, United Kingdom and Norway.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—MEAFORD TANK RANGE

Question No. 507—Mr. Noble:

1. Has the Department of National Defence given any consideration in respect of cleaning up explosives on the Meaford Tank Range?

2. Is the government aware of any significant trespassing taking place in what is alleged to be the most dangerous area on the Range and, if so, what steps are being taken to counteract this situation?

3. Has the Government of the Province of Ontario signified any interest or made any representation to the federal government in respect of securing the Range property?

4. Has the Department of National Defence offered the Meaford Tank Range to any other department or to the provincial government?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Defence): 1. Yes. See Hansard dated 18 November, 1970, page 1278, and Hansard dated 13 December, 1971, pages 10392-3.

2. No. The Department of National Defence is not aware of any significant trespassing at Meaford Tank Range either in the heavily contaminated impact area or in the remainder of the training area. The training area will be more heavily utilized during the summer months and as a result, the military police patrols from CFB Borden will be increased in frequency. Consideration is being given to improving the current standard of boundary fence at the range.

3. Yes, as a possible site for a park.

4. Yes. See Hansard dated 30 June, 1971, page 7511. In addition the Department of Environment was requested to examine the possibility of using the Range property as a wild-life and bird sanctuary.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

ORGANIZATION OF TRIP OF SIOUX VALLEY DANCERS TO YUGOSLAVIA, 1971

Question No. 49—Mr. Macquarrie:

1. Did the Department of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Department of the Secretary of State, or the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development participate in any way in the organization or funding of the trip of the Sioux Valley Dancers of the Sioux Valley Reserve near Brandon to Yugoslavia last summer?

2. Were any representations made by this group to the Department of External Affairs as to the financial arrangements provided by the Yougoslavian Government and if so, what action was taken by the Department of External Affairs?

3. Were any representations made by the Department of External Affairs to the Yugoslavian Government regarding the financial arrangements made by the Yugoslavian Government and, if so, what was the response of the Yugoslavian Government?

Return tabled.

CLOSURE OF CANADIAN ARMED FORCES BASES

Question No. 228—Mr. Stewart (Marquette):

1. Since 1965, how many Canadian Forces Bases have been closed and where was each located?

2. In each case (a) how many Canadian Armed Forces personnel were transferred out of the area (b) what was the number of civilian personnel laid off for whom alternative satisfactory employment was not found (c) what is the present status of the land and buildings and how much money has been recovered by the federal government as a result of their disposal?

3. Does the government consider that the base consolidation and closing program has caused economic and other hardships to the areas concerned and, if so, for what reason?

Return tabled.

LOCAL INITIATIVE PROGRAM

Question No. 379—Mr. Beaudoin:

1. Under the Local Initiatives Program, what was the total amount granted to each province and how many jobs were to be created in each case?

2. Under this program, what total amount was granted to each constituency in the Province of Quebec and how many jobs were to be created in each case?

3. What are the names of the organizations that presented projects under this program in the constituency of Richmond?

4. What was the title of each project from the constituency of Richmond?

5. Were some projects rejected and, if so (a) which ones (b) how many jobs would have been created by each (c) what amount of money was requested in each case?

6. What was the total amount granted under the Local Initiatives Program in the constituency of Richmond?

Return tabled.

DEPARTMENT OF MANPOWER AND IMMIGRATION—PUBLICITY CONTRACTS

Question No. 452—Mr. Nystrom:

1. Were any contracts awarded by the Department of Manpower and Immigration for publicity and/or information in the fiscal year 1970-71 and, if so (a) what were the names and addresses of firms which received such contracts (b) what was the amount of each such contract (c) what was the specific purpose of each such contract?

2. Do the main and supplementary estimates of the Department for the fiscal year 1971-72 provide an amount to be spent on publicity and/or information and, if so (a) what amount is provided (b) what amounts have been encumbered or spent to date (c) what are the names and addresses of the private firms which have entered into such contracts (d) what is the amount of money involved in each such contract (e) what is the specific purpose of each such contract?

Return tabled.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, starred questions are placed on the order paper so as to secure an early answer. On March 28 I asked the following starred question:

1. How many Red Ensigns were in the possession of the Department of Public Works on the date the present flag came into existence?

2. How many since have been disposed of to organizations or private individuals?

3. How many are still on hand?

There can be no excuse for the government not to answer that question except that the government would be embarrassed by the answer. That is the only reason. I raise the strongest objection to this kind of treatment of the House whereby starred questions are relegated to a secondary position and members are unable to get answers.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Speaker, I have a note of the number. I can say to the House that at this point in time we are ahead of last year's schedule as far as answering questions of this kind is concerned.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, that just shows how inefficient this government is and how it covers up by endeavouring to say it is better this year than it was last year.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

TRANSPORT

SUPREME COURT JUDGMENT ENABLING CARRIAGE OF COAL BY RAIL FROM EAST KOOTENAY REGION TO ROBERTS BANK, B.C., BY UNITED STATES ROUTE

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave, seconded by the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Harding), to make a motion for the adjournment of the House for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada, by five to four, that the Canadian Transport Commission erred in its judgment when considering the application of the Kootenay and Elk Railway Company and Burlington Northern Inc. to build a railway line from the province of British Columbia to the state of Montana to haul coal from the East Kootenays to Roberts Bank, B.C. via a United States route, which could result in the loss of hundreds of jobs in Canada both on the railway and in other related services, thus making necessary the introduction of amendments to the Railway Act so that the Canadian Transport Commission can make decisions based on public interest or any other adequate reasons.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has given the Chair the required notice. As the hon. member and all hon. members know, the Standing Order requires members to give notice, which is a statement of the matter about which adjournment of the House is sought, without argument and unaccompanied. I think these statements should be as short as possible. This statement is perhaps borderline, and certainly I do not object to it basically.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

I have looked at the matter as closely as possible and with all the sympathy possible. However, I find it difficult to conceive that the Standing Order is given to the House for the purpose of adjournments to consider questions of this type. I really have to suggest to the hon. member that this is not the type of situation which is envisaged by the Standing Order. I would think it is the type of question about which a motion might be made under Standing Order 43, or about which questions might be asked which might be considered further during the adjournment proceedings, or about which bill might be introduced for debate when the appropriate time comes. But I respectfully suggest to the hon. member and to the House that the motion is not in order in that the situation referred to, which is, of course, important and of national interest, is not the kind of situation which is contemplated by the Standing Order. In the circumstances, I cannot see my way clear to make a ruling that the Standing Order applies so that a motion for the adjournment of the House could be put at this time.

• (1430)

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, notice of motion for the production of papers No. 43 is acceptable to the government subject to the usual reservations concerning confidential documents.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that notice of motion No. 43 be deemed to have been adopted?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

COPY OF CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN JOHN LAMMERS AND MINISTER OF INDIAN AFFAIRS AND NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT

Motion No. 43—Mr. Orlikow:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of all correspondence between Mr. John Lammers of Yukon Wilderness Limited and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and/or any officials in that Department.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Jerome: Would Your Honour be so kind as to call notices of motions Nos. 9 and 45?

COPY OF STUDY BY REGINALD J. ROY, MONTREAL, REGARDING "ANALYSIS OF OPERATIONAL REPORTS AND COURSES FOR THE OCCUPATIONAL TRAINING OF ADULTS PROGRAM"

Motion No. 9—Mr. Orlikow:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the study by Reginald J. Roy, Montreal, undertaken for the Department of Manpower and Immigration regarding the "Analysis of operational reports and courses for the Occupational Training of Adults Program".

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the report by Mr. Reginald Roy referred to in the motion was one of a series of ongoing studies concerning the contractual arrangements between the provinces and the department under the occupational training of adults program. It was actually one of several inputs related to the ongoing activities of the department rather than a formal document which could be tabled. Since there is no report to table, I would ask the hon. member to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Orlikow: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Motion dropped.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

LETTERS RECEIVED BY POSTMASTER GENERAL REGARDING POSTAL SERVICE

Motion No. 45—Mr. Dinsdale:

That an Order of the House do issue for copies of all letters received by the Postmaster General or any other member of the government since January 1, 1971, complaining about postal service and the replies thereto.

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, it is physically impossible to gather all this correspondence in one central location as the correspondence is spread throughout the country. The cost would be enormous. Under the circumstances, I would ask the hon. member to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Dinsdale: I can appreciate the number of complaints made against the Post Office Department. Perhaps we could be given a sample so that we might know what the problem is.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Jerome: Transfer for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining motions stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, there are outstanding in my name five motions for papers, all relating to the same subject matter. It is true they were only submitted on April 21 but there was a delay in presenting them because of the desire of the Pacific North Coast Co-operative Association whose members were awaiting a meeting with the Minister of Fisheries, a meeting which has not been held yet though he promised it would take place. The information is desired by the Pacific North Coast Co-operative Association in order that the association might prepare itself for the opportunity to appear before the Committee on Fisheries and Forestry before the end of May prior to the conclusion of the committee's examination of the estimates. In view of the urgency attached to this matter I wonder whether the parliamentary secretary would look at these motions in an attempt to have this information provided on the next day they come up for consideration.

Mr. Jerome: I do not think the hon. member gave me the numbers of the notices of motions.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): They are Nos. 52, 53, 54, 55 and 56.

Mr. Douglas: May I draw to the attention of the parliamentary secretary motion No. 42 which was placed on the order paper on March 15? It calls for the tabling of only a single document, the agreement between Panarctic Oils Limited and a United States consortium. I see no reason why it has taken such a great length of time to produce it. I would be glad if the parliamentary secretary would undertake to look into this matter.

Mr. Jerome: I shall do so, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Speaker, notice of motion No. 14 was placed on the order paper as long ago as February 22. I wonder why we cannot be given the communications which passed between the government of Canada and the United Church of Canada concerning the takeover of Ryerson Press Limited.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

YOUTH

INQUIRY AS TO POLICY STATEMENT—MEASURES TO ASSIST THOSE NOT BEING REACHED BY OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Secretary of State. In view of recent criticisms by the executive director of the Company of Young Canadians that the youth programs of the government "reach essentially those youth who already have access to resources and who are often skilled brief writers while the untouched and unorganized groups of youth remain in the main unreached," can the Secretary of State say when we may expect the long awaited policy statement on youth?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I wonder why the right hon. Leader of the Opposition should expect a statement which has never been announced.

With regard to the comments of the executive director of the Company of Young Canadians, I am convinced he would be the first to recognize that his own efforts with the Company of Young Canadians were intended to expand the work of that organization especially towards the underprivileged youths.

[English]

Mr. Stanfield: In view of this criticism, and in view of similar criticisms which have been expressed by the task force that examined the Opportunities for Youth program, I should like to ask the Secretary of State whether he intends to make any policy announcement with regard to reaching needy young Canadians who, the task force said, are not being served by that program?

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, unless I am mistaken, the Leader of the Opposition is referring to the statements made about the high rate of unemployment among young people of 18 to 25. This matter concerns primarily the Department of Manpower and Immigration.

[English]

Mr. Stanfield: I understand—

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): You understand, but you are confused.

Mr. Dinsdale: This government would confuse anybody.

Mr. Stanfield: I am not confused, Mr. Speaker. I am really intimidated today by the hon. member for St. Boniface.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: Understanding full well that responsibility for employment is not his, I should like to ask the Secretary of State whether he has any plans in his programs to reach the youths who, according to the task force, are not presently being reached. In particular, I would ask the Secretary of State whether he intends to build any criteria into the Opportunities for Youth program with a view to giving youths in this group some priority?

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, I believe I explained, in reply to other questions, our position, and the reasons why it had been adopted for the definition of criteria for the Opportunities for Youth program.

In order to reassure the Leader of the Opposition, I can tell him that, on a long-term basis, we are considering various ideas which will be brought forward in due course to reach those groups of young people who are not covered by the Opportunities for Youth program.

[English]

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—SUGGESTED APPROVAL OF GREATER NUMBER OF PRACTICAL PROJECTS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Bearing in mind the preliminary report on projects approved under this year's Opportunities for Youth program, which shows a very high percentage of projects consisting of surveys and undertakings such as videotaping, would the minister, when he looks at the criteria, give consideration to approving more useful and practical projects than the kind which have been authorized up till now?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, it will soon be revealed, when the list is completed, that the hon. member's information is inaccurate. He will have to wait; projects of the type he has described represent quite a small percentage.

[Mr. Stanfield.]

I have already stated, and the total list of projects selected will bear this out, that program analysts have selected more projects than ever which take place in rural areas and in the less prosperous districts of big cities.

• (1440)

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—REQUEST THAT REASONS FOR REFUSAL OF PROJECTS BE GIVEN

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Secretary of State.

Could he tell us for what motives those responsible for the Opportunities for Youth Program will not divulge in a frank and honest way to the promoters the reasons why their projects were rejected?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, it is simply because there are 16,000 notices of refusal to be sent out. These notices must be sent out as soon as possible to the interested parties so that they may look for work elsewhere instead of depending on the Opportunities for Youth program. Writing 16,000 individual letters, each one indicating the particular reasons for each project, would be an impossible task to accomplish in a reasonable period of time. We are now advising all those who are asking for details that, with a little patience, they will in time be informed.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order. There are five six, seven or more supplementaries sought on this subject. We will soon have to move on to the next subject, but for the moment we will have perhaps two or three further supplementaries.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, does the Secretary of State mean that in the case of the projects which are flatly rejected, the young people should give up all hope concerning the Opportunities for Youth program, because they will not know why their projects are rejected and will be unable to submit improved projects?

Mr. Pelletier: If the hon. member tried to understand, Mr. Speaker, he would have already realized that they will eventually be given, if they wish so, the detailed reasons. However, the young people let us know last year that it was useful if not essential for them to learn promptly of their rejection, in order not to entertain false hopes and to look for jobs elsewhere, when there are still some available.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I remind the hon. member for Lotbinière that we must try to move a little faster. We have already spent more than ten minutes on this subject, and we should make some progress. I shall allow a last supplementary question by the hon. member for Lotbinière, and then I shall recognize the hon. member for Charlevoix in order that he may put a question on the same subject.

Mr. Fortin: Under these circumstances, Mr. Speaker, could the Secretary of State assure us that, a little later, all the young people who have been turned down will receive a letter of explanation.

Mr. Speaker: This question has already been asked and the minister has answered it.

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—AVAILABILITY OF ADDITIONAL FUNDS

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, as the Opportunities for Youth program has created a great deal of hope among the young who have submitted projects and as one third only of the projects will be accepted owing to lack of funds, could the minister indicate to the House whether he intends to ask Treasury Board to increase the appropriations for this program so that the projects rejected can be reviewed and the minister can assure the young that when they submit serious projects under the Opportunities for Youth program the government will be able to grant them what they ask for?

Mr. Speaker: I am under the impression that this question was asked yesterday, but the minister may want to reply briefly.

Mr. Pelletier: I should only add, Mr. Speaker, that the objective suggested by the hon. member is impossible to attain as the total value of the projects submitted would require an appropriation of $238 million, which of course is beyond all reasonable limits.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order. In a short while I will return to the hon. member for Egmont and the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville who have supplementaries on this subject. We might try to complete the first round of questioning and I will recognize for that purpose the hon. member for York South.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

FOREIGN INVESTMENT—POLICY RESPECTING TAKEOVER OF COMPANIES IN PERIOD UNTIL BILL BECOMES LAW

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Revenue. In view of the fact that neither the statement he made yesterday nor the draft bill which he tabled contained any reference to a policy respecting takeovers in the interim period, and in view of the fact that the confidential memorandum dated February 14, 1972, which the minister presented to the cabinet contained several suggestions as to how to deal with the problem of interim takeovers, may I ask the minister whether the government has arrived at any policy respecting takeovers by foreign interest of Canadian firms during the period between today and the time when the bill becomes the law of Canada?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I am not certain how the hon. member is in a position to know what memoranda I may or may not have submitted to cabinet. Perhaps he would like to tell the House the source of his information. In any event, I would suggest he bring his question to the attention of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce who I believe will be in the House tomorrow.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I assumed that the Minister of National Revenue would know the answer because this undoubtedly must have been a cabinet decision. Therefore may I pose the question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Has the government considered the question and arrived at a policy respecting foreign takeovers of Canadian firms between yesterday and the date when the bill to be presented to the House becomes law?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if we had intended the legislation to be retroactive we would have said so and we have not said so.

Mr. Lewis: Of course, that is what I meant when I said that the legislation contained no reference to the question; I knew it was not retroactive. May I ask the Prime Minister whether the government has considered some alternative mechanism, whether the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce has been asked to set up some agency to monitor takeovers between now and the date on which the bill becomes law, or are such takeovers to be permitted without any screening whatever?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, we have not done what the hon. member suggests in the first part of his question, but by making our policy known to Canadians and indeed to any possible investor we hope they will be guided by it generally. The question whether anything more precise in law is needed at this time really depends on the length of time it will take to pass the legislation. Of course, we are not completely in control of the situation; it will depend on how long the opposition wants to debate this matter.

Mr. Lewis: In view of the fact that the announcement of the government's policy yesterday is likely to cause people who want to sell their firms and people who want to buy them to speed up the process rather than wait to be guided by the statement made by the minister, and in view of the fact that the bill will come into law by proclamation rather than by royal assent, do we have the assurance of the Prime Minister that the moment the bill has been passed by the two Houses of Parliament it will become law, or will there be a time delay before proclamation by the government is announced?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I can assure the House that if there is any delay it will not be substantial. It is our intention to bring the legislation into effect as soon as possible. Indeed, if we can get some co-operation from the opposition parties, we would like to pass it in one day.

STEPS TO PREVENT TAKEOVER OF CANADIAN FOOTBALL BY UNITED STATES INTERESTS

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is for the Minister of National Revenue. In view of the serious approach being taken by Montreal toward football with the building of a 70,000 seat stadium for the 1976 Olympics, what steps are being taken by the government to prevent a takeover of Canadian football by United States interests?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the government stated its legislative intentions in this general area yesterday.

Mr. Paproski: Would football be included in the area to be protected from indiscriminate foreign takeover in line with the policy announced yesterday by the government, and are we going to buy back the NHL?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

DISCLOSURE PROVISION OF CORPORATIONS ACT—SUGGESTED LOWERING OF ASSET VALUE TO FACILITATE ASSESSMENT OF PROPOSED TAKEOVERS BY FOREIGN INTERESTS

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Prime Minister. In view of the importance of disclosure in terms of assessing takeovers, does the Prime Minister intend to change the section in the Corporations Act on disclosure, which now deals only with disclosure in relation to firms with assets of $3 million, so as to bring it into line with the proposal that firms with assets of $250,000 be examined?

• (1450)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I will consider the suggestion, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Saltsman: I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. While the Prime Minister is considering that will he also consider looking at the Canada Development Corporation, which says it will not make acquisitions of firms with assets of less than $1 million, in the event it may have to be an alternative buyer and lower the level at which it is prepared to make acquisitions?

FOREIGN INVESTMENT—MEASURES TO ENCOURAGE GREATER INVESTMENT BY CANADIANS IN INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Is the government planning in the near future to introduce measures to encourage greater investment by Canadians in their country's industrial development as a means of reducing the need for foreign investment in this country? I ask this question because there was no mention of any such intention in the presentation made by the minister yesterday. If the answer is yes, will the Prime Minister briefly outline what those steps would be?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I doubt whether the outline or even the brief outline the hon. member refers to should be made during the question period, but the minister may attempt to reply briefly.

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to call the hon. member's attention to what I said in the House yesterday as part of my statement on this question:

As part of its response to this issue the government will continue to develop positive policies to encourage Canadians to participate more fully in the development of their country, and to encourage the growth of Canadian sources of capital, technology and management.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Mr. Gray.]

Mr. Hees: I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister not agree that his answer is the same meaningless gobbledygook the country has been fed for the last three years and that it means no more today than it did then, and it meant nothing then?

Mr. Gray: The hon. member must be referring to his own speeches.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think we will now go on to what I am sure will be a less controversial matter. The right hon. member for Prince Albert.

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

REMOVAL OF DOMINION COAT OF ARMS FROM PAY CHEQUES

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, we will now have something that is uncontroversial. My question is directed to the Minister of Supply and Services. He is now identified. On the pay cheques that are being issued now the Dominion coat of arms has been removed.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is this another example of the downgrading and chiselling away of our traditions?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, the pay cheques have been modernized now for several months and they represent the new symbol of Canada, the maple leaf flag.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, it is too bad Hansard does not record all the applause I get.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: In the explanation that was sent out along with some of the pay cheques it was stated that these changes were introduced to make fraudulent misuse of government cheques increasingly difficult. Did the disappearance of the coat of arms comply with the reasons for the removal thereof? A little later on it is stated that the new design was prompted by a continuing concern for improved security. I ask the minister, has the removal of the coat of arms in any way added to the security of the cheques?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That obviously is debate. If the minister can reply briefly he will be allowed to do so, but I do not think we should become involved in a debate on this matter.

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker, security was a second objective of the change in the cheques, and it was done on the recommendation of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: The mounted police made that recommendation? Is that as true as the statement made by the Prime Minister concerning the RCMP when he had to make a retreat? He made a public statement and had to back down.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. My attempts at finding a matter that is not too controversial have not been successful. I will therefore try the hon. member for Compton.

TRADE

INQUIRY RESPECTING IMPORTATION OF AUTOMOBILES FROM SOVIET UNION

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Would the hon. member ask his question?

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Would he tell us if the government has concluded agreements with the USSR in order to import more products from that country, cars especially?

[English]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, Canada has a trade agreement with the Soviet Union which is exactly the same as the trade agreements providing most-favoured-nation treatment to other countries. There is nothing specific about automobiles in it. We are trying to encourage trade in both directions.

[Translation]

AGREEMENT RESPECTING IMPORTATION OF HEAVY WATER FROM SOVIET UNION

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question.

In connection with the question just put to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, could he tell us if there is any commercial agreement regarding the importation of heavy water on behalf of certain Canadian industries?

[English]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The Soviet Union has sold to us because of the failure of a certain heavy water plant in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Sharp: It has agreed to sell heavy water to Canada to meet our pressing needs which I am afraid could not be supplied otherwise.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will be recognized for a supplementary but after the supplementary I shall try to recognize hon. members who were not seen yesterday including the hon. member for Vegreville, the hon. member for Moncton and others in the back row. For the moment the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond has a supplementary.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, since the Secretary of State for External Affairs has made a statement with reference to heavy water, I wonder whether the minister would mind giving the House a report on the atomic reactor program, a $2 billion fiasco under his government?

Mr. Speaker: This, I assume, would have to be given on motions. The hon. member for Vegreville.

GRAIN

OATS—INQUIRY AS TO FINAL PAYMENT FOR 1970-71 CROP YEAR

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, can the minister in charge of the Wheat Board advise the House whether a final payment will be made on deliveries of oats for the crop year 1970-71 having regard to the fact that the prices paid to producers were the lowest in more than 20 years for that period?

• (1500)

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, in the ordinary course, announcements about final payments are made after the Wheat Board has closed the pool, and I do not have a report in my hands from them.

Mr. Mazankowski: Could the minister advise the House why there is a credit balance of more than $4.5 million, as indicated in the report of the Canadian Wheat Board and effective as of July 31, 1971, nine months ago?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, the overlapping of the pools is a rather complicated business. It may be that there will be an early opportunity for hon. members to discuss this matter with the Canadian Wheat Board.

Mr. Mazankowski: Can the minister give the House any information on when we may expect a final payment on deliveries of oats or whether, indeed, there will be a final payment?

Mr. Lang: No, Mr. Speaker. As I indicated in answer to the first question, I cannot do that at this time.

WHEAT—NUMBER OF SHIPS WAITING TO BE LOADED AT VANCOUVER

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, thank you. My question is of national importance, particularly to the Prairies.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): It is directed to the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. Can the minister tell the House how many ships are currently waiting to be loaded with wheat in Vancouver harbour?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the Wheat Board has reported that for the month of April the industry has managed record loadings of vessels and record unloadings of boxcars at the west coast. As a result, on May 1 the only ship waiting in port was a vessel that had just arrived.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Yes, pat yourself on the back.

Mr. MacInnis: On a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Will the hon. member for Mackenzie please resume his seat. Several hon. members now wish to ask supplementary questions. They will be recognized in just a moment. I would hope that the supplementaries would be as brief as possible and also the answers. For the moment, the Chair recognizes the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond on a point of order.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, my point of order arises from the use which is being made of the question period by planting questions.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: We never used to plant them.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to hon. members that if we are going to proceed and have a question period we should try to be a little more orderly than we have been in the last few minutes. The hon. member should be given an opportunity to put his point of order, on which there will be a ruling and following which we might continue with the question period.

Mr. MacInnis: While I recognize the fact that the question asked by the hon. member of St. Boniface is urgent and of national importance—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacInnis: —the answer given by the minister goes beyond what is permitted under the rules. All that was required was an ability to count.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think that at this point we should try to go on with the very important matter which is being discussed at the moment by hon. members. If the hon. member for St. Boniface has a supplementary question he will be recognized.

[Translation]

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order.

[Mr. Guay (St. Boniface).]

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member cannot rise on the same point of order.

[Translation]

I do not think that the hon. member's point of order is acceptable. If the hon. member for St. Boniface wishes to put another point of order, I shall listen to him, but I suggest that the proceeding of the House will not be helped much by that.

[English]

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I have been sitting here as a backbencher for the last four years.

Some hon. Members: Too long.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We are running short of time. The hon. member rises on a question of privilege, and he should be allowed to state it.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, since it has been brought to your attention lately that some of us on this side have been asking questions, I asked the research people to give me an outline of the number of questions that were asked from this side of the House. I find that there have been 169 questions asked from last September to March 1 of this year by our side, including the independent members, as against 2,400-odd by the other side.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: You are not doing your job, just sitting there.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

WHEAT—POSSIBLE DIVERSION OF SHIPS FROM VANCOUVER BECAUSE OF BACKLOG

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question to the one asked by the hon. member for St. Boniface. Have ships been diverted from Vancouver because of the fact there has been a backlog there and they were not to be kept waiting?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): No, Mr. Speaker, the Wheat Board did direct some shipments which might have been loaded in Vancouver to Thunder Bay at an earlier stage, but of course the fact that speaks for itself is that loadings at Vancouver in the month of April reached an all-time record and we are now completely and currently up to date.

Mr. Diefenbaker: And $10 million in demurrage.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Athabasca on a supplementary question, and then the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre on a different question.

WHEAT, OATS AND BARLEY—ACTION TO INCREASE PRICES TO FARMERS

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to the one asked by the hon. member for Vegreville. In view of the statement in the annual report of the Wheat Board which was recently released that the final payments to farmers for wheat, oats and barley have been the lowest in the past 10 to 20 years when averaged out, would the minister indicate briefly now or in a statement on motions what action he intends to take to increase the payments to the farmers?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the final payment for wheat was by no means the lowest in the period of time to which the hon. member refers. However, I would like to draw his attention to the fact that cheques for two-price wheat have gone out to the farmers.

Mr. Diefenbaker: How much is it?

Mr. Horner: Eighty-four cents an acre.

FERTILIZER—ALLEGED REFUSAL OF CANADIAN MANUFACTURERS TO SUPPLY U.S. DEALERS BECAUSE OF LOW RESALE PRICE TO CANADIANS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Agriculture. Is he aware of reports that dealers in Canadian-made fertilizer in North Dakota and Montana have been told that they will not be supplied if they continue to sell fertilizer to Canadian farmers at the prices prevailing in those two states?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of such reports, and if the hon. member has some information that is more than hearsay I would be very interested to learn of it.

AIR CANADA

ALLEGED INADEQUACY OF PASSENGER SERVICES

Mr. Charles H. Thomas (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. It follows representations made in the House over the past few months regarding the deterioration of Air Canada passenger services. Since urgency has been emphasized in the statement of the president of the Canadian Airline Employees Association, in which he made specific charges, perhaps the parliamentary secretary to the minister could tell the House whether anyone in the department has discussed with Air Canada the adequacy or the inadequacy of its passenger services?

VIET NAM—INQUIRY AS TO REPRESENTATIONS BY CANADA TO SOVIET UNION TO END WAR

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has Canada made any representations to the Soviet Union regarding the possibility of applying pressure on North Viet Nam to end the war in Viet Nam?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker.

INFORMATION CANADA

POSSIBLE RELATIONSHIP OF ALLEGED UNSATISFACTORY SITUATION IN ORGANIZATION TO DEPARTURE OF DIRECTOR GENERAL—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO REMEDY

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour who reports for Information Canada. Having in mind the recent departure from the top position in that organization of its Director General, was that departure related in any way to the report recently made by another high official of Information Canada indicating an unsatisfactory situation in Information Canada? Second, is the minister giving consideration to making changes directed toward improving Information Canada and reducing its cost?

Hon. Martin P. O'Connell (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the new role that the Director General of Information Canada is expected to play in the foreign service has no relationship at all to the document referred to by the hon. gentleman. I want to state that very emphatically.

As to his second question, together with senior officers of Information Canada, I have been conducting a rather intensive review of its operations, objectives and goals, and we have produced a number of working papers that we are examining. We have engaged at least two expert persons, one from inside the public service and one a senior executive officer of a major Canadian publishing firm. We are going through the various operations to enable those very dedicated persons working in Information Canada to provide an even better service at reduced cost.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

DENMARK—ACTION BY CANADA IN VIEW OF DANISH POSITION ON ATLANTIC SALMON FISHERY

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It has reference to the unique and unusual situation in which one government minister advises the citizens of Canada to do what he believes the government and Canada itself cannot do, namely, boycott Danish goods. I would like to ask what the government is doing in reference to the government of Denmark to press this matter forward? Are we recalling our ambassador from Copenhagen for consultation? In short, when are we ending our mealy-mouthed diplomacy on this matter?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the representations that Canada has made to Denmark in this matter are, in my time, quite unprecedented. These are the strongest representations that have ever been made by Canada on a commercial matter to any government in the world. The evidence of this is the reaction in Denmark.

So far as the Minister of Fisheries is concerned, he said he would not advocate any change in government policy. When he was pressed on the matter he said, as a personal view, that he thought shoppers might show their displeasure with the Danish government's decision. That is his privilege as a person, and perhaps the hon. gentleman has the same view, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Macquarrie: Do I take it that the minister would agree that these representations have been quite unsuccessful?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, if they have not been successful I do not think that is a reason to stop making them.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Does he intend to consult with the Danish ambassador to Canada to determine the exact position taken by the Danish government on the eve of the ICNAF conference in Washington inasmuch as press reports indicate that the Danish government intends to persist in its course to the detriment of Canada by continuing salmon fishing on the high seas?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, unfortunately this seems to be the position of the Danish government. Indeed, some misleading information appeared in the Danish press, which the Danish government has corrected, that we had agreed to the agreement which the Danes and the Americans had worked out. As my hon. friend knows, Mr. Speaker, we are opposed to salmon fishing on the high seas by any country in the world. We believe this is a right and privilege of the countries in whose rivers the salmon spawn.

PUBLIC SERVICE

FIREFIGHTERS GROUP—POSSIBLE DIRECTION TO CONCILIATION BOARD CHAIRMAN RESPECTING REGIONAL RATES OF PAY

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the President of the Treasury Board. Has any direction been given to the chairman of the conciliation board that the government has a firm policy that there shall be regional rates of pay negotiated so far as the firefighters group in the Public Service Alliance is concerned?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. gentleman is aware that directions are not given by the government to the chairmen of conciliation boards. Representations are made to the conciliator by both parties, of which the government is one.

INQUIRY AS TO GOVERNMENT POLICY ON PAYMENT OF REGIONAL RATES IN ALL SECTORS

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of remarks made previously by the President of the Treasury Board that he is in favour of regional rates of pay, would the Prime Minister say whether it is government policy to implement regional rates of pay in all of the public service?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

FOREIGN INVESTMENT POLICY—DISCUSSION WITH PROVINCES

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister a question relating to the policy on foreign investments in Canada.

Would the Prime Minister tell this House if negotiations or consultations have taken place with the provinces in connection with this policy which will be introduced soon and, if not, whether he intends to convince the provinces of the objectives of this policy before this legislation is implemented?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have written to all the provincial premiers to inform them of this legislation when we introduced it and also of the statement we made. Even though the consultations have not yet begun they will start soon.

As for the first part of the question I would reply that this will of course depend on how fast the provinces will let us know their point of view. Even now their response seems favorable but when the discussions will go into detail we will perhaps obtain some clarification as to the legislation itself.

INDUSTRY

COAL MINING, NOVA SCOTIA—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. On April 26 the minister indicated he would consider making a statement in the House on the position of government policy regarding certain coal mining operations in Nova Scotia. Has the minister had a chance to consider the matter further, will he in fact be making a statement on the subject and, if so, when?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): I have considered it, Mr. Speaker. Without renewal of the inquiry I thought that perhaps interest had abated. However, I am prepared to give the suggestion further consideration.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Before calling orders of the day, perhaps I might revert to the first subject raised during the question period. I indicated to the hon. member for Egmont and the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville that they would be recognized later for the purpose of asking supplementary questions. They are now recognized at this point for that purpose.

YOUTH

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON FORMATION OF FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL HUMAN RESOURCES COUNCIL

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Since the Secretary of State pointed out earlier today, and at other times, that there is overlapping or divided responsibility regarding the employment of youth, and in view of the increasing problem in this regard and the recommendations of the task force report last year, and recently of the Wright Commission, with respect to a federal-provincial human resources council, are plans going ahead for the formation of such a human resources council, and when might we expect to have some word on it?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I would be pleased to take note of the question, Mr. Speaker.

EMPLOYMENT PROBLEMS—POSSIBLE REFERENCE TO COMMITTEE TO DISCUSS POLICY

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): As a further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, in view of representations made last week and questions to the Secretary of State regarding this and other matters concerning youth policy, and his agreeing to a committee of the House discussing these matters, would the government House leader consult with the Secretary of State and with the Prime Minister to see if arrangements could be made for an appropriate committee of the House to discuss these important matters?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I shall be pleased to discuss this with the House leader, Mr. Speaker.

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—POSSIBLE EXTENSION TO NON-STUDENTS—OTHER MEASURES

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Secretary of State or to the Prime Minister. In view of the heavy emphasis of summer youth employment programs on students, can the minister say whether or not he is planning any specific programs for non-student youth, or will he expand the Opportunities for Youth program to include those who are not students?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, there are already some programs for the young who are not necessarily students. There is one, which is surely known to the hon. member, or about which he can be informed, if he is not already. As for future plans, I have already stated clearly that the main concern with regard to such projects at the present time is precisely to reach the young who are not students nor members of organized groups, that is those whose needs are the greatest.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege at this time for the purpose of apologizing to the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay). I never intended to reflect on his ability to count at any time and, as he indicated, he was almost accurate when he said he had been here for four years. However, I am surprised that he should confess to the need for a research staff to count the number of questions, 400-odd, that have been asked from this side of the House.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member for Yukon rising on a point of order?

Mr. Nielsen: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Vegreville rises on a point of order.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, in response to a question posed by the hon. member for Athabasca, I believe the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board left the House with the impression that the total realized price to producers of wheat was not the lowest in ten years. I should like to draw to his attention through you, Mr. Speaker, the fact that in the annual Wheat Board report—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is merely debate. If the hon. member can show me a Standing Order under which that kind of question qualifies as a point of order, I would be pleased to see it. This is debate. The hon. member disagrees with an answer given by a minister. If the hon. member's supplementary question is permitted by way of a point of order, we could have points of order for the rest of the day. I assume many hon. members are dissatisfied with the answers given to their questions, and possibly members of the government are dissatisfied with the questions asked of them. I suggest very earnestly to hon. members that points of debate should not be raised by way of points of order.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the Wheat Board annual report is published under the auspices of the minister in charge of the Wheat Board, it is my firm opinion that the statements in the Wheat Board report should be factual, and the statement the minister made to the House today is not in accordance with the facts contained in the report.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member may be right. I cannot judge, of course; the only thing I can judge is that this is not a point of order. Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

FARM CREDIT ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING LOANS AND POWERS AND CAPITAL OF CORPORATION

The House resumed, from Tuesday, May 2, consideration of the motion of Mr. Olson that Bill C-5, to amend the Farm Credit Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, when it was time for adjournment last night I was dealing with the considerations that entered into the adjustment of interest rates on farm improvement loans to a higher rate than the current rate being charged. I want to pursue that argument briefly in the few minutes left to me. There was another major purpose of the amendments contained in Bill C-5 with which I did not deal in my remarks yesterday and I should like to comment on that now.

The amount which the corporation may lend to an individual farmer in the form of a supervised loan and that is, under Part III of the act, with land and chattel security, is substantially greater than it can lend on a standard mortgage loan under Part II, with a land mortgage only. As hon. members are well aware, the difference is from $40,000 to $55,000 at the present time and, of course, this is going to be changed. At the present time, the farm mortgaged to the corporation must be an economic unit. Some farmers may have economic units with part of the land being subject to a mortgage to some other party on reasonably favourable terms and it should not be disturbed. The lands may also be leased on a relatively long term basis from a province, for example, where there are Crown lands, or other owner. Bill C-5 proposes to authorize the corporation to lend under Part III in these circumstances, on the remainder of the farm, which can be put up as security. As I said, this is an improvement which we would like to make as a result of the practice in the field. We think it is not necessary to restrict Part III lands to a loan on the total of what may be involved in an economic unit or indeed on the total land area that the farmer may farm.

I should like, now, Mr. Speaker, to return to the comments I was making at the hour of adjournment last night with regard to interest rates. As hon. members know, the interest rates that have been charged by the Farm Credit Corporation are really quite modest in relation to the long-term mortgage rates available for the same length of time from any other source. Indeed, I think it is fair to say that when the Farm Credit Corporation rates hit their peak, that is 8¾ per cent and some of those for terms as long as 29 years, no one, no matter how good their credit rating, could borrow money for that long period of time from any commercial enterprise at anywhere near those rates, let alone money strictly for agricultural credit purposes. Although the loans are made on a long-term basis, generally from 20 to 29 years, the rates that are charged to farmers are based on the yield on intermediate term government bonds, that is on bonds maturing in five to ten years. This is substantially lower than the longer-term rate. If the rates were set on the basis of long-term bonds then, of course, they would be significantly higher than they are at the present time.

Ordinarily, on long-term mortgages, the borrower cannot repay or prepay the loan during the first five years; he is locked into an agreement on most of these long-term mortgages for at least the first five years. Farmers who borrow under the Farm Credit Act may repay or prepay without notice and without bonus at any time.

As I said earlier, we have looked at the possibility of arrangements whereby mortgages would be or could be reviewed every five years, with the rate moving up or down in accordance with the interest rate at the time of review. This arrangement might seem desirable in that it would prevent borrowers from being locked-in with a relatively higher rate throughout the lifetime of their loan. It has a disadvantage, however, in that it would add an element of uncertainty to farmers' future costs, and if increasing interest rates happened to coincide with a period when farmers' incomes were relatively low, an increase in the interest rate would add to their financial difficulties. This accentuates the danger of endeavouring to change the basis upon which interest rates are charged, based on a particular situation at any point in time. It is important, therefore, Mr. Speaker, that if at any time in the future a change is made on the basis of changing interest rates on loans to farmers, it must be made on the basis of long-term prospects and be such that it will continue to be equitable during periods of fluctuation in interest rates and in farm income.

Interest charges are clearly visible costs to farmers and it is a natural desire that they want these to be as low as possible, or at least relatively low. However, I think we have a responsibility to look beyond these highly visible costs of interest payments, to the long-term effect of reduced or subsidized rates. I say that because the availability of long-term credit to farmers at rates which are low and not subject to market influences will, and experience has shown this, be reflected very quickly in the price which farmers are called upon, and in some cases are willing, to pay for capital investment. This is particularly true of land. I have satisfied myself by looking at the figures that when we had interest rates which were subsidized, and that is of course what happened for many years when there was a statutory limit of 5 per cent, that the borrower, the actual farmer who was going to operate that land, really did not benefit as much as the seller because there was an inflation in the price of land when that was happening. Thus the advantage of low interest rates on loans from the Farm Credit Corporation would be quickly dissipated through rising costs of capital expansion and the borrower would be saddled with the continuing high capital cost which would have to be serviced through future farm income. In other words, any attempt to adjust or control interest rates through mechanisms which do not reflect the realities of the market for credit or for farm land, in my view would adversely affect the costs of capital investments for all farmers.

• (1530)

This has to be taken into account, because I think all members of the House agree that the terms and conditions of credit, and the mechanisms by which that credit is utilized in the farming sector, must be such as to be of advantage to the ongoing farm operator. He is the one who has assumed the obligation of servicing the debt from the income of his farm, in many cases for as long as 29 years. Certainly, it would not be in his interest if we were to take action that would result in undue inflation of land prices, for the advantage accrues not to the buyer but to the seller.

Mr. Horner: The government is giving the seller quite a bonus under this scheme.

Mr. Olson: I see the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) is trying to enter into a controversy with me. Last night I said that many farmers are anxiously waiting for this bill to pass quickly. I also said that I will not be party to any discussion that will delay for even one hour passage of the bill and the beneficial results this bill will bring to farmers in Canada.

Mr. Dinsdale: That's pretty weak, Bud.

Mr. Olson: The hon. member can judge how weak it is when I tell him that members of his party have gone around the country saying the bill is a good one. They also say, and they are wrong in this, that the government has merely brought the bill forward but does not intend to press ahead with it.

Mr. Horner: The minister said that last night. He is merely repeating himself.

Mr. Olson: I see two or three members on the other side who were not here last night and may not have read the excellent speech that was made. Probably, they do not know what I said.

Mr. Horner: We know, Bud. Come over here and we will pat you on the back.

Mr. Olson: I know the farmers of this country support the bill. We are obligated to make its benefits available to them as quickly as possible.

In conclusion, and in summary, may I say that the amendments to the act as proposed in this bill will, first, improve the position of farmers across Canada through the removal from the act of certain restraints on the Farm Credit Corporation, these being statutory limitations, with respect to loan limits and age limits. This, I suggest, will permit loans to be made on a more useful basis in the light of modern farm practice and organization. Second, the amendments will provide authority for the Farm Credit Corporation to carry out other governmental activities and programs. The presence of the corporation in the farming communities across Canada, and there are highly respected government officers in those communities, would mean that it is a highly suitable organization to carry out a program such as the small farm development program, either alone or in co-operation with provincial authorities in such provinces as have entered into agreement for the joint administration of such a program.

Mr. Horner: And which provinces are those?

Mr. Olson: The bill has not been passed yet. We are referring to the time when it has been passed.

Mr. Horner: And when will that be?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, farmers in all parts of Canada know that the agricultural economy is improving rapidly.

Mr. Horner: Really?

Mr. Olson: There is ground for optimism. Farmers feel that they can expand their operations, confident that difficulties of the sort experienced in the last two or three years will not recur. Let me point, for example, to the dairy industry, to the grain industry, to the beef industry, and to the hog raising industry. Indeed, conditions in every major commodity producing part of the agricultural industry have improved substantially in the last year or year and a half. In the light of this atmosphere, in the light of this optimism and confidence in the agricultural community, we must make changes in the act to enable the Farm Credit Corporation, which has performed a useful, indeed, essential service for agriculture, to meet the more modern requirements of the 1970's and fulfil its responsibilities as well as it fulfilled them in the past.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Mackenzie.

Mr. Thomson: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister a question?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I apologize to the hon. member for Mackenzie. I am not sure if the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley rose for the purpose of asking a question of the minister and if the minister was prepared to reply to that question before resuming his seat.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I was willing to reply.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that the hon. member may ask his question?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Thomson: Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the minister? He did not go into details to explain how the small farms development policy would work under this bill. Could he be more specific? Could he, perhaps, send me some written material showing how this policy will work under the bill? I want that information before speaking on this legislation.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, Bill C-5 relates to the small farms development program only in that it asks for statutory authority for the organization referred to previously to administer the small farms development program. We already have authority from this House for expenditures to be made. I have already sent the hon. member a complete explanation of the features of that program. Until the provinces agree to the division of administrative responsibility, I cannot, of course announce that division. There may be slight variations as between one province and another. We are rapidly approaching the point at which we simply will not be able to wait much longer for the provinces to reach these agreements. The farmers of this country want these programs to be established, and hope that this will happen quickly. All the information has been provided to the hon. member that is available in specific terms.

Mr. Gleave: Will the minister not ascertain whether the provinces agree to this.

Mr. Stanley Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I listened to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) last night and again today, in the vain hope of hearing him say something about amendments which would be relevant to conditions today. I hoped to see evidence of a little foresight which would take us forward into the 1970's with a new approach. I did not want to see evidence of the approach that served in the 1960's and that is rapidly not fulfilling the requirements of today. Listening to the minister, I was under the impression, and I could not help it, that he was like a man blowing up a balloon. Having exhausted himself, he puffed but the air kept coming back from the balloon. That was my impression of the minister's comments. To me it seemed that the air was coming out of the balloon, and that the balloon was exerting more pressure than the minister.

I do not subscribe to the minister's position. I do not think all farmers are breathlessly waiting for this legislation to pass. Most of the proposed amendments will ease administrative problems. They are necessary if administration is to be made easier for those charged with that responsibility. To be fair, I suppose sometimes farmers have been denied loans because lenders have interpreted the law too narrowly. All the same, I do not think the minister has a grasp of what is needed today, as was evident from the answer he gave to the question raised by the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley (Mr. Thomson).

The mystery that surrounds the small farms program is still with us, even though the minister has spoken. I suppose because his conscience is bothering him, he threw in the suggestion that this measure may be election bait. I do not see how he can bait anyone in an election on the basis of the amendments he is making to the Farm Credit Act at this time. There is nothing original or revolutionary in his ideas. They are simply ideas that came forward from the office. He was informed that in order to correct a series of problems and get around the fine print in the bill, these changes were necessary.

I wish to deal with some of the changes that are being introduced. For example, the suggestion has been made that a farmer can now borrow up to $100,000. Previously, the act stated that a combination of three farmers could borrow up to $100,000. According to the annual report, the average loan has been in the order of $28,000. If that is so, why would anyone suddenly require an additional $72,000? What the minister has done has been to make it appear as though it is a lot easier for farmers to get more money. However, many farmers do not want that kind of money. In the past, they have found that the interest they must pay has been a great burden. They will not be quick to pick up this $100,000 because they will be burdened for perhaps 30 years.

If individual farmers can borrow the $100,000, this will hasten the day when the large farms will be owned by one individual. It will certainly hasten the day when the small farmer will move off the land. In the past, the individual farmer could borrow up to $40,000. He can now borrow two and a half times that much. All the government hopes to achieve by this provision is to hasten the day when the small farmer will move off the land.

In another area, we are told that the reason for the amendment is that there are some administrative problems. It was not known in the offices how much equity a son should have or when a father and son could borrow more than $40,000. It is interesting to read the reply of Mr. Owen to a question that was raised in the Standing Committee on Agriculture. This is recorded in the seventh issue of the agriculture committee reports. He stated:

> You will appreciate that one of the problems in these levels I have given you is the question of deciding when there are two farmers and when there are not. How much equity or interest in the farm should the farmer's son have in order to be, in fact, an owner-operator, or to be participating in the business?

This is one of the reasons the changes were necessary. There again it was a question of helping the administration. I stated at one time that in some cases loans had been denied because of the difficulty, in ascertaining the equity of a farmer, but I do not believe $100,000 is the magic figure to correct that situation. The same end might have been accomplished by establishing a level of $50,000 or $60,000.

Another amendment was introduced concerning the approval requirement for a farm improvement loan. That is not a difficult problem to overcome. By answering a letter by return mail or making a phone call to the office, authorization could be granted to allow the farmer to obtain a loan. This could be done very easily. I cannot see any dealer telling a farmer that if he does not get approval today, he will not sell him a machine tomorrow. I am sure any dealer would be glad to wait for a month until authorization is received. It does not create a real problem. I suppose a lot of unnecessary work will now be eliminated, but this, in itself, is not earthshaking. This, again, is a question of administration.

I now come to the additional amount of money that is being made available. Last night the minister stated that approximately $245 million had not been lent. Last year the amount of loans was something in the order of $115 million. If loans are made at the same rate as last year, the funds available now could last for another two years. On that score, the minister did not really come forward with anything earthshaking. Under the present circumstances, we could have carried on for another couple of years.

The amendment just allows the farm credit corporation to administer the small farms development program, whatever it may be. A mystery still surrounds this particular program. I have received inquiries which I directed to the minister in the hope that I would be able to obtain some information as to how this program would work. I have not received any information and, therefore, I have not been able to provide other people with information. The minister might better serve the farmers if he introduced a piece of legislation to cover the small farm development program, set out the purpose of the bill and by what method he proposed to operate the whole scheme. Under the circumstances, there will be an item in the estimates which will allow approximately $30 million per year for the administration of this plan, whatever it may be.

This minister used the Farm Credit Act in order to throw in a few bits and pieces of administrative authorization so that he could say "Oh, yes, we have the authority. We have the farm credit corporation, and we have passed an item in the estimates." Nobody knows what this is all about. There is an item of expenditure that can be made by the government, but we do not even know whether or not the farm credit corporation is to be credited with that $30 million for this year.

The amount of money borrowed last year for the purpose of purchasing small farms was in the order of $37 million. That is all that was required. Is this $30 million to replace the $37 million that was used last year or will there be an additional $30 million? If there is to be an additional $30 million, what will be the purpose of it? In other words, we have been told very little about the way the scheme will operate; I hope that before long we shall be provided with far more detail. It is, really, improper for the minister to suggest he is about to introduce a program when, in fact, there is no program ready. We are told the program will begin as soon as the provinces agree. Will it be necessary, then, to wait until all the provinces are in agreement? The minister told us, almost in the same breath, that he could not wait very long, that he wanted to proceed. If he is at liberty to act, why did he not take action long ago? Does he intend to work out a scheme which would fit in with certain provincial schemes? Some of those schemes, I might say, are pretty hairy—I am not exactly in agreement with them, if the reports reaching me are correct.

The minister implies that we should move along as rapidly as possible, as if the whole world were waiting to see what will happen. Well, farmers may be waiting, but they are not waiting for these amendments, or for the type of legislation proposed by the minister. I do not think anything in this bill will improve the situation on the farms. We can, of course, readily agree with some of these amendments, because they are of a housekeeping character, but there is nothing which is forward-looking in the bill as a whole.

Last night the minister informed us he already has authority to refinance loans which were taken out at high rates of interest, some at a rate of 8¾ per cent. So, what has prevented him from acting earlier? If his intentions were good, he should have proceeded without waiting for these amendments to be approved.

Let us take a look at the overall loan picture. At the present time, the total of loans taken out by farmers amounts to about $1,200,000,000. This is a terrific amount for farmers to have borrowed. As of the latest report available, the report for 1970-71, more than 70,000 farmers had taken out loans. This represents almost the total number of farmers in Saskatchewan; it equals the combined totals of all the farms in Newfoundland, Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Manitoba and British Columbia. Looked at in another way, it means that a number equivalent to all the farmers of Manitoba and half the farmers of Alberta have taken out loans. This does not necessarily mean that farmers share the optimism which the minister has expressed.

Four or five years ago there was, perhaps, greater optimism; farmers took out some 12,000 loans. Last year, only about 4,100 loans were taken out, about one-third of the number taken out five years ago. Whatever the minister may say, farmers are not rushing to take out loans. They no longer see a great future before them and this is proof of the lack of optimism felt in the industry. Last year the amount advanced by way of loans declined by 28 per cent compared with the previous year. The minister told us only a few minutes ago that there had been a great upturn in farm fortunes. The facts are these: in 1969-70, 87 per cent of the farmers were in arrears. Last year, in 1970-71, 83.9 per cent were in arrears. Obviously, optimism is not reflected in a comparable amount of money in farmers' pockets, and that is the kind of optimism they understand.

The annual report of the Farm Credit Corporation from which I took these figures has further information. Perhaps I should read it for the benefit of the minister, since apparently he did not find the time to read it himself and learn what is happening. He indicated there was great optimism in the industry. At page six, the report has this to say:

> The decline in the purchase of land to enlarge farms reflects in part the unwillingness of many farmers to expand their businesses during a period of uncertainty in the agricultural industry.

I am sure that if the minister took time to read the reports which are published by his own department he would find in them an entirely different story from the one he tells the House. Further, on page eight of the report, we find:

> Younger farmers accounted for a somewhat smaller proportion of loans than in preceding years.

If young farmers in Canada do not share the minister's optimism there is certainly not much future in agriculture. I am sure this report has been honestly compiled. If the minister would only listen to the advice given to him by his senior officials, he might make some progress. Unless he does so, he will not succeed in producing amendments which meet the requirements of the seventies.

We find that in 1971, there are 15 per cent fewer farmers than in 1966. We have failed to reverse this trend. In the last 20 years, the number of farmers has declined by half. Worst of all, the average age of farmers has risen and is continuing to rise. At the present rate, it will not be long before the average age of farmers is around 60 years.

I am somewhat concerned about recent legislation which the Province of Saskatchewan has enacted and about legislation which it proposes to enact. In my view it will hinder the operation of the Farm Credit Corporation. It may be that because of the lack of optimism in the rural areas, farmers have lost their spirit and are willing to accept next to nothing, or something which in the long run will not be in their interest, and this disturbs me. I am always mindful of the Regina manifesto.

• (1600)

If the Minister of Agriculture signs an agreement with the province, the agreement should take into account the fact that we should try by every means possible to retain possession of the land in the hands of the farmers. They should be given every opportunity to own the land. In this respect, I am concerned at the attitude of the New Democratic Party in the province of Saskatchewan which has been amply demonstrated, and I presume that, being blood brothers, the federal NDP subscribe to a similar line of thinking. I am concerned about several developments in the last couple of years having to do with legislation dealing with estate taxes, capital gains, the land bank proposal and the foreign ownership proposals for land advocated by the government of Saskatchewan. This last matter is a real mystery. There is no bill; it is simply a proposal put forward by the government and which I presume is subscribed to by the federal NDP. The proposal is that no "foreigner" may own land in the province of Saskatchewan. Within one year he has to dispose of any property he owns. Foreigner, in their interpretation of the word, means anyone who is not a resident of Saskatchewan.

I am wondering how the Farm Credit Corporation is going to operate with this type of restriction, one that I believe is unconstitutional. Surely to goodness, we are not Balkanizing Canada yet. Surely, we have not reached the point where every province is a country within its own boundaries. To suggest that a foreigner is someone who lives in another province and that he should not own land in the province of Saskatchewan is, to my way of thinking, not going to be conducive to improving the farm economy. In addition, it will depress land prices.

Many farmers have had land given to them, or have bought land after working elsewhere for many years. A farmer who did not have sufficient capital to start with went to work. Then, when he had saved enough he bought a quarter section, and then he bought another quarter section and started a farming operation. Since he became sick and tired to carrying a lunch pail, he took up residence in the province of Saskatchewan. How is the Farm Credit Corporation going to get around that situation? I am wondering whether the minister is aware of the developments taking place in the province and whether, if the proposed legislation becomes law, he will be the first to take it to the Supreme Court of Canada to test its constitutionality.

I believe we must not allow such developments to take place. We have not had a statement from the minister or from the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) on the matter. We should not even entertain such an idea in this country. I do not know what the motivation for the proposal is, other than the Regina manifesto. I do not know whether the province is concerned about estate tax, but we have to pay estate tax whether we reside in Saskatchewan or not. Anyone wishing to buy land in Saskatchewan from a non-resident will sit around for a whole year. Every day that goes by, the seller will become more and more desperate to dispose of it for next to nothing. That sort of thing is not going to be healthy for the economy. I think the minister should investigate this situation, if not the Minister of Agriculture, certainly the Minister of Justice.

I see nothing in this bill which indicates the federal government has taken into account the existence of the land bank in the province of Saskatchewan. I should like to know how this is going to jibe with his small farm development program. I am just wondering whether the minister is going to be prepared to sign an agreement with the province of Saskatchewan. I think we should know what is the position of the federal government if this type of legislation is enacted.

Mr. Olson: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Korchinski: Yes.

Mr. Olson: I am not sure I understand the hon. member, but is he suggesting that we should review provincial legislation and pass opinions on whether the province can or cannot pass legislation of this nature?

Mr. Horner: As a former Social Crediter you should know that it has been done before. Remember the Bank Act of 1937?

Mr. Olson: That is a little bit of ancient history.

Mr. Korchinski: Knowing that this legislation is proposed, I think the minister should indicate to the House how it conflicts with his small farm development program. We have not had any details of this particular program, so I do not know what is the position. But I do know what is the position of the NDP in the province of Saskatchewan.

Mr. Olson: I have already stated that we are not participating in the Saskatchewan land bank scheme.

Mr. Korchinski: Then, at least we have that from the minister.

Mr. Olson: I said that months ago.

Mr. Korchinski: May I turn now to what I believe the amendments should include at this time. The minister has not recognized the need for the next 10 years or so, despite what he said in his remarks.

Mr. Olson: I said for four or five years.

Mr. Korchinski: I would point out to him that present interest rates are a burden on the farmers. There is no incentive to stay on the farm. Interest rates have always been a concern to farmers. My recollection of the thirties is somewhat dim, but I do recall that the prime concern of the farmers at that time was the discharge of any debts they had. It was not so much the debt that they could not manage but rather the interest rate; that was what finally broke the backs of many farmers. They could not burn the mortgage. As a matter of fact, they used up the best years of their lives in trying to pay off the interest. Many farmers had such a fear of the banks that they preferred to leave their money at home. We have all read stories in the newspapers time and again about someone dying and money being found under a mattress or in a secluded place. This is the result of the fear these people have of banks. It is not a fear that the money will not be safe, but rather is a distrust which has developed because they have had to pay interest over the years and could not remove the yoke with which they had been saddled. I believe this is one thing the minister ought to consider at this time.

There is no incentive to any young farmer. Gradually, we find that the average age of farmers' keeps increasing. There is no incentive for a young farmer to remain on the farm. We must take this into account in this day and age. No consideration is being given to the people involved in farming, such as is given to those involved in industry and in labour, for example. The Opportunities for Youth Program, for example, is an incentive given by the government in order to provide work and accomplish something in that way. The LIP program, surely, is a program designed to provide jobs. Obviously, this also is an incentive for labour. Then, there are the DREE programs we hear about, involving incentives for industry to move into certain areas. We are living in the age of incentives. Everybody, except the people engaged in farming, shares in these incentives. The depressed areas we hear about receive special consideration. I am informed that when one totals the amount involved in these incentives it comes to about one-half billion dollars. I believe there should also be an incentive to remain on the farm.

I believe the farmers of our country deserve the same consideration that is given to other segments of our society. I do not believe the present situation will help preserve the family farm. I believe there was a period, when the Farm Credit Corporation was first initiated, in which this need was fulfilled, but at that time we had a pegged interest rate. Now, thanks to this government, the bottle has been uncorked and the interest rate has gone higher and higher. We find ourselves now with a rate as high as 8¾ per cent. The minister says he has the authority to refinance these loans at a lower rate, but he is not doing anything about it. Even though this authority exists, it has not been used to provide an incentive.

In respect of the land bank established by the New Democratic Party in Saskatchewan, it would seem to me that the farmer would have to pay the interest and taxes and the government would own the land. In effect the farmers would be told, "you pay the taxes and the interest and the government will end up owning the land". After making payments for years and years, the farmers would end up having nothing to show for their efforts.

I am very concerned about the Regina manifesto. I believe the government should pay the interest and let the farmer own the land. This is part of our belief. We believe in the right of ownership. We do not believe it is the state which is the ultimate, but rather that the individual is more important than the state. One way in which this principle can be maintained is by reversing the method the NDP are following in Saskatchewan. The government should pay the interest. The farmers should pay the taxes on the land and make the capital payments, but the government should pay the interest. I say this is our answer to this type of program. We believe in individual ownership. The government does not have any position because it does not know where it is. I have indicated to the minister and to the House that we should use this approach in order to keep people on the farm.

We believe that any young man who starts farming needs incentives, just as incentives are necessary in any other part of the economy. I think the time has come when a similar approach should be taken with regard to the young farmers. I wish to make several suggestions. I have several proposals about how to achieve this. We believe that up to a certain age level, the interest on the borrowing should be forgiven. This type of assistance is similar to that given other industries. If any payments are made, they should be applied to the principal. In this way, when any payment is made on the principal, the principal would be reduced so the interest would also be reduced in succeeding years. This would provide an incentive to the young farmer to pay off the principal as quickly as possible. In that way he would be in a position to own the land. At the present time, there is no such incentive. I believe this is an approach we should take. After a certain age level, the interest would be paid by the borrower but prior to that time it would be deferred. If any payments are made they would be applied to the principal, again reducing the principal and thereby reducing the interest.

Here again, the quicker the principal is paid off the lower the interest payment becomes. There is another reason for this suggestion. I think the proper approach would be to assist the young farmer to become established. Once he is established it is easier for him to pay interest. After having had the interest forgiven or deferred, he would be able to make the payments since he would have become established. This is only fair. I remember the situation when I started my own farming operation. It was easier to make payments as the years went by, after the machinery was collected and there was an equity in the farm. I also believe several other approaches should be taken.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Blair: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I might ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Korchinski: Perhaps I might be permitted to outline these proposals, and then the hon. member might wish to ask his question later.

I believe there should be an adjustment of interest rates on which loans were taken out at higher rates. The minister has authority to do this. If the loan could be refinanced, the farmer would have an opportunity to save a few dollars. There might be a situation in which the farmer would wish to add to his loan in order to make improvements to his farm. In this case, I do not believe it should be necessary for him to refinance his loan, especially at a time when the interest rate may have increased. He could avoid legal fees.

It is quite strange that under Part III any farmer at age 45 can get a loan of $100,000, while no one at age 46 would be allowed to receive $90,000 and no one at age 47 would be allowed to receive $80,000. What is so magic about the age 45? If we drew up a schedule, I believe this problem could be relieved. It is essential to try to keep these people on the farm, not only to show our faith in the young farmers but also to reverse the existing trend in many communities. Often services are no longer provided in these communities and the older people no longer want to spend much money on the farm because they have not decided how much longer they wish to stay on the farm. Consequently, the whole community dies. We believe that it is time to give the young farmers an incentive, some reason to stay on the farm and some reason to take out a loan at an earlier stage.

I believe that some of the proposals which I have put forward would go a long way toward accomplishing this goal. Accordingly, I move:

That Bill C-5 be not now read a second time but that it be resolved that in the opinion of this House the government should give consideration to the introduction of legislation to amend the Farm Credit Act by incorporating the incentive principle—already approved by this House in other legislation—to provide for partial non repayment of interest where young farmers meet performance standards, for deferred interest payments on all loans during an initial period, for equitable adjustment of interest rates for the benefit of borrowers; and, as well, to provide for open-end loans which will allow additional borrowing without refinancing costs.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The Chair is ready to accept the amendment moved by the hon. member although I might have reservations regarding its form, its wording and its length. However, precedents in the House would make it acceptable, unless hon. members have a different opinion.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I know that amendments of this nature have been moved on second reading, and I will not raise any procedural objection to this one, but I think hon. members should be well aware of the fact that their support of the amendment would do nothing but kill the bill.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Danforth: That is a political speech.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Hon. members have heard the motion put forward by the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski).

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as the effect of the amendment would be to set aside any discussion of the bill, and any action that might be taken now, I can hardly go along with the amendment. It may be that after a full discussion of this amendment

hon. members may be able to convince me that they have a case, and I may be able to consider it.

What we are considering in this bill is a proposal to increase the amount of money that can be borrowed. However, some other important programs are involved which will have to be examined as part of the bill. I hope that when and if this bill goes to committee it will receive a thorough examination. I hope, too, that we will call before the committee representatives of farm organizations, as well as the Farm Credit Corporation. Indeed, we should call before the committee officials of the Department of Manpower and Immigration, officials in charge of manpower training, and officials of ARDA or whatever organization has succeeded it. Judging from the statements which the minister has made and some of the provisions in the bill, manpower retraining forms an integral part of the proposals which the government has laid before the House last night and today. Those proposals need to be examined very carefully.

• (1630)

The previous speaker was greatly exercised about some legislation that is proposed in the province of Saskatchewan. But, Mr. Speaker, the proposals in this bill are very far reaching with respect to the future development of farms and farming communities. If we examine a proposal which deals with the consolidation of farms, the other side of the proposal must deal with the elimination of some farms. If we pass legislation dealing with the consolidation of farms and the lending of larger amounts of money, we must attempt to see what the results will be in the future.

Clause 1 of this bill will amend section 11 of the Farm Credit Act so that it will read in part:

The Corporation has all the powers necessary to carry out such duties or functions as may be assigned to it by the Governor in Council in relation to the administration of any agricultural program or as are assigned to it pursuant to any other Act of the Parliament of Canada.

Once this legislation is passed, the government can take action through orders in council. It can make very important decisions regarding complete phases of agriculture in some parts of the country, without having to lay its program before this House and defend what it proposes to do to people and for people. I am sure that the minister can advance logical arguments in support of the proposal in this bill to increase the amount of money which can be lent. Even on a compact family farm, the investment in land, cattle and machinery can be very substantial.

Every once in a while I read articles in newspapers which say how wonderful it is to have a one-man dairy farm, a one-man grain farm, or a one-man hog farm. But, Mr. Speaker, the individual concerned will be working 12 to 16 hours a day, and must have a very substantial capital investment. I am concerned with how this bill will affect the farmer and the communities in the farming regions of the country. What is needed here is companion action to increase farm income.

This afternoon questions were asked about the final pool payment on oats. Questions were asked yesterday about the price of rapeseed. Questions were also asked yesterday about the initial price of barley. In each case, those questions were not answered except by the minister saying, "We are going to continue to do what we are doing in respect of the pricing structure."

With respect to the hog subsidy which the government recently paid out, I ask was the amount of the subsidy related to the cost of production on farms in Saskatchewan, Ontario and Manitoba? The answer is no. The record shows that the payments were related to the ratio between the price which existed in central markets in the United States and the price in the Toronto market. On that basis, it was decided to pay $5 a hog.

According to a term which has become popular amongst economists, the cost of money enters into the costs of production of every commercial farm in Canada. What we are talking about here is the cost of money and the use of money. The other day in committee we had a look at what is happening to Farm Credit Corporation loans in western Canada. Here, I quote an answer given by the Chairman of the Farm Credit Corporation, Mr. Owen:

—we had in Alberta $6,106,000 of arrears, which amounted to about 25.5 per cent of the amount due during the previous 12 months; in Saskatchewan, $6,411,000, representing 23.8 per cent; in Manitoba, $2,580,000, representing 28.2 per cent.

This is the picture of a depressed industry, Mr. Speaker. Our party met with representatives of farm organizations not more than two weeks ago, and one of those representatives said to me, "When you look at figures like that, you are getting pretty close to a debt adjustment program." The Conservatives can cry if they like about the legislation which is being proposed in Saskatchewan. I suggest they could better spend their time crying about the situation in which western farmers find themselves, rather than lambasting a provincial government which is doing its best to remedy a situation which is totally unacceptable to our citizens.

Mr. Southam: We are not crying; we are just giving you some good advice.

Mr. Gleave: Any advice we get from that corner we could do without. The previous speaker was talking about legislation that will not even be dealt with at this session of that legislature. It will be studied by a committee to see how best to deal with the foreign ownership problem which is developing in our province. I would say, Mr. Speaker, that you will not find us trying to deal with foreign ownership the way the government is trying to deal with it in Canada, with a lame brain policy.

• (1640)

An hon. Member: Is that what Schreyer said?

Mr. McBride: Check with an NDP government.

Mr. Osler: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Gleave: Not really.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McBride: You know what he is going to ask.

Mr. Gleave: If it were really urgent, I could accept it but I would rather carry on.

Mr. McBride: I would not accept it either.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member should be permitted to continue his remarks.

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Speaker, this debate will last for some time, and I have no doubt that the hon. member who wishes to ask a question will have an opportunity to say something about the government policy as I am now saying what I have to say.

Mr. Osler: It was only in reference to your aside.

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Speaker, I want to get back to the main part of my remarks.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: You want to get away from what Schreyer said.

Mr. Skoberg: What would you know about what Schreyer said?

Mr. Gleave: We will not worry about what Schreyer said or what Blakeley said.

Mr. McBride: Lewis doesn't either.

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Speaker, I want to tell those people who insist on discussing provincial politics that once again, as we did in 1944, we will pioneer some of the solutions that have to be found for the farmers of this country. I am not here this afternoon to apologize for provincial NDP governments. I do not have to, because they initiated policies which are now being followed all over Canada, as for example, Medicare, with regard to car insurance and a number of other things. If hon. members opposite and to my right have nothing better to do than pick on those two provincial governments in the provinces which have suffered the most severe blast from the agricultural policies followed by this government, I am sorry for them. They will have their turn. The members from Manitoba should take note of the tax arrears in that province and the shape the farmers there are in because, Mr. Speaker, this is the road to bankruptcy. What I am saying—

Mr. Osler: Did it happen recently, in the last three years?

Mr. Gleave: The minister in charge of the Wheat Board is roaming Saskatchewan saying that this year they are going to sell $1.1 billion worth of grain.

Mr. McBride: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Speaker, that is where we were in 1967, before this government took office. All they are doing is getting back to where we were. The best thing that these gentlemen can do is be quiet because, then they do not attract so much trouble to themselves. I do not mind. I am quite willing to set the record straight as the opportunity offers.

Mr. McBride: You look great.

Mr. Cullen: You look better sitting down.

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Speaker, I want this government to do something about the income factor. I have mentioned that there has been a severe drop in the acreage of rapeseed this year. This is a major concern, and if something was being done about it we might have a little more confidence in the credit policy. If something was being done to stabilize prices, we might have a little more confidence and if something was being done about the cost we might have a little more confidence.

The fertilizer companies have been holding the farmers of western Canada to ransom for two years, and we cannot get the responsible department to do anything about it. I was amazed this afternoon, when the minister was asked about fertilizer prices, and he replied "If you will send me something other than rumours, I will be glad to look at it." Mr. Speaker, it is blazoned all over the front page of the "Union Farmer". A letter came into my hands almost a week ago which shows that fertilizer costs $19 or $20 a ton more in Manitoba and Saskatchewan than on the other side of the border. Some of that fertilizer comes from the minister's own riding of Medicine Hat, and some of it comes from Kimberley in the mountains, so I cannot understand why the minister is not aware of this.

Another thing that I cannot understand, Mr. Speaker, is why the government allows a cartel to rook the farmers of western Canada when they are trying to reach some efficiency of production, nor can I understand why the government allowed a cartel to rook the farmers of Ontario last year. Last year fertilizer cost $97 a ton in Biggar, but this year the same thing will cost at least $15 a ton more. I cannot understand the government's indifference to the real plight of the farmer.

We had a voluminous report on farm machinery and spent a lot of money on it but with what result? Some hon. members jest about Roumanian tractors. That may be a joke for some people.

An hon. Member: They will hear from their friends in Massey-Ferguson.

Mr. Gleave: I do not think this is going to turn the picture upside down. What assistance is the ordinary farmer getting who is trying to improve his efficiency and productivity in order to survive? This question cannot be ignored, because this is the man who pays the taxes and keeps the whole rural infrastructure going as do the people in the small towns. The only reason for the existence of these communities is to see that the farmer is well served and able to operate. What are we doing to help them? To say that the answer is to bring in a manpower program to get these people out of these communities begs the question. With the rate of unemployment we have, where do they go? This is the relevant question, and the Farm Credit Corporation recognizes it in a statement on the first page of its report to the effect that the lack of opportunity for employment off the farm is one of the important factors keeping people on the farm. Of course it is; they have no place else to go.

When this bill goes to committee let us not ignore this fact. Lest us not go to the farmer weeks from now and say that we have solved his problem, that we have a program. Let us not say that to the farmer unless we really have a program to which he can look forward with some hope and confidence for the future. That is the nub of the question.

• (1650)

You know, I could go on talking about the policies which have been mentioned, policies involving agricultural adjustment or development programs for Canadian agriculture. These policies are something like the grain stabilization bill which was conceived by and first saw the light of day in the Task Force on Agriculture. That is the source of these ideas. I will not spend time berating the Task Force on Agriculture. I only regret that it was not made up of men of imagination who could chart new frontiers for agriculture, instead of gathering up the old shibboleths and putting them in a bag. Now, one by one, they are emerging, and we are looking at them. As Canadians, we can do better than that. In examining this bill, let us try to do better.

One cannot quarrel too much with the criteria used for this program. The availability of non-farm employment is a criterion. According to the document in my hand, Agricultural Adjustment or Development Policy, that is to be one criterion. In other words, when the department talks about the rate of adjustment from agriculture, it means that the criterion under which farmers will get another kind of job is the availability of non-farm employment. That is elementary, my dear Watson, elementary. The key phrase should not be the availability of non-farm employment, but the availability of opportunity. Other criteria listed are, the availability of training, the difference in skills required, the age and education of the operator, the availability of capital to finance relocation, the ability to liquidate farm assets, and so on. All the same, the most important criterion is the very first listed, the availability of non-farm employment. That is the first one listed and the most important.

Let me go on for a moment. Somebody slipped, I see, and on page 6 of this document we find the statement that the policies depend for their operational efficiency on the effectiveness of the first set of programs—those designed to increase the mobility of resources and to grease the wheels of the adjustment process. As I said, someone slipped and used basic English. May I refer to other aspects mentioned in this document. On page 9, I see reference to a rural counselling service required to assist the farmer and his family make the basic decision to continue in agriculture, and so on. The document also mentions farm management services—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret interrupting the hon. member who has the floor. The hon. member would be in order if he were relating his remarks to the question of farm credit, which, as the hon. member knows, is the subject now before the House. I suggest that his remarks should not range too widely from that subject.

Mr. Gleave: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The bill deals with the subjects I have mentioned. The bill indicates that provision shall be made, after land has been sold, for an individual to remain on that land if he does not want to move away. The bill looks at that situation. May I point out, with all respect, that it looks at the situation in which the farm operator is of advanced age and chooses to remain on the farm. In that case, he may retain some buildings and a small plot of land, and let somebody else work the farm.

If I understand the bill correctly, it also provides that the farmer may operate another enterprise on the farm in addition to what is regarded as a legitimate farm enterprise. I think I am right in saying that, and all these matters are part and parcel of the bill. The minister or the department, as the case may be, were quite right in producing the document I hold in my hand. I fully expect that it will be discussed in the House and in committee. If I am wrong, I hope the minister will tell me. May I go on record as saying that I believe it will be discussed. The matters mentioned in this document are well within the scope of this bill. There is a nice chart on page 10 which shows the direction one can go if one chooses either the course of farm development or the course of non-farm employment. This document suggests the amounts of money that will become available from the Farm Credit Corporation to help to make this sort of program possible. For instance, it will help to make farm counselling possible; the corporation will help to make farm management programs possible. That, I understand, will be part of the program.

It is envisaged that programs will be developed in cooperation with the provinces if possible or, if that is not possible, at the federal level entirely; these are to be farm management or farm advisory programs and their purpose is to assist the borrower obtain a better income pattern than he achieved in previous times. That sort of thing happened immediately after the second world war under the Veterans' Land Act or the veterans land credit program. I cannot remember the right name of the act. In those cases, management and advisory programs were tied in with the lending function so that assistance could be given to the borrower. At that time, the plan worked reasonably well.

Anyone aware of what happened in economics immediately after the war knows that between 1946 and 1956, roughly, a combination of circumstances arose such as the farmers of this country have rarely enjoyed. Prices for farm products rose steadily. The price of the farmer's produce was going up, while the price of those things the farmer had to buy was stable or increasing very gradually. Those conditions, combined with a good credit program, enabled farmers to make progress. Those who returned from overseas and decided to take up farming as an occupation were able to make real progress.

This afternoon I am trying to emphasize this: if this credit program is to be effective, the circumstances which existed in the postwar years must be recreated. Prices must increase enough to enable the farmer to keep up with the cost of production. Also, the government must act with regard to the cost of production and control within reasonable or practical limits, or even workable limits, the increases in the cost of the farmer's operation. Unless that is done, I suggest that the result in X number of years will be unfortunate. That is what I have tried to emphasize this afternoon, and it is most important for us to remember that. Conditions such as I have described are more important than mere quantities of money. The effect of those conditions may or may not be more important than the effect of the document in my hand. I agree that this document will have very, very important effects. I am sure that the minister and others who worked on it within the department also regard it as an important step forward in policy. I am sure they knew what they were doing and what they were proposing. I therefore hope that we give this measure and the policies involved the thorough examination and thought which they require.

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, yesterday, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) made a very clever presentation of Bill C-5.

This legislation purports to bring major amendments to the Farm Credit Act and I would like to thank the minister for his very appropriate explanations on the principles which have led to the drafting of this measure. If we consider but one of the provisions of this bill, I can say that although we are going backwards, we are, at the same time, "progressing". I say "progressing" because we seem to realize that the family farm should be encouraged and preserved if Canadian agriculture is to improve.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is the duty of every government to take all necessary steps to ensure that the most important industry of the country, namely agriculture, enjoys excellent health. All classes of society are interested in the well-being of agriculture and in farmers earning enough to live, not necessarily like millionaires, but at least decently in a country where this objective is attainable.

Now, Mr. Speaker, one of the clauses of Bill C-5 proposes to increase the Corporation's capital from $56 million to $66 million. I think that this is an unquestionable necessity. The questionable point on which I would like to draw the attention of the Minister of Agriculture is that if we recognize that farmers need credit to develop their operations and modernize their machinery, we should also recognize that they are entitled to an income such as would enable them to repay both principal and interests.

If we refer to the brief presented in April to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and to the cabinet by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture—it should not be lies, as those people come from all parts of Canada and have met with party representatives to read this brief to them after presenting it to the cabinet—we can read, at the first paragraph—I quote:

> The present meeting comes after a year during which farmers have seen their profits go down to a disastrously low level—lower, in terms of dollars, than during any comparable year, and, in real terms, 73 per cent lower than it was 10 years ago. The forecast for 1972—let us hope that it will not come true—is for an even worse situation. The pressure due to the cost-price squeeze is becoming alarming and overwhelming to a degree never experienced before.

Authorized representatives of the farm industry throughout Canada are keeping a close check on markets and on the economic situation of agriculture, and take the trouble to come to Ottawa in order to make the government aware of a situation which could become worse unless steps are taken to correct it.

Hon. members will remember—as the minister referred to it in his comments yesterday—a highly disastrous situation which occurred in the dairy industry a few years ago. I remember being part of the group of industrial milk producers which came to Ottawa on May 15, 1967, to protest excessively low prices and to ask the government to improve its dairy policy. At that time, we had made representations, and the government had promised to introduce a long-term policy designed to improve the situation. To be quite honest, I must recognize that improvements did take place and that the situation of industrial dairy producers was much better in 1971 than in 1970. But it should not stop there.

When, in a field like the dairy industry, there is a trend toward improvement it should continue. Even yesterday I received a representation from a producer. It is all very well for the government to do its utmost to maintain prices, but the co-operation of the industry is also a requisite.

On March 29, I believe, the minister announced the new dairy policy for the year 1972-73 and, quoting from memory, I believe he mentioned that industrial milk would increase by 20 cents or more. I have here a notice sent to a producer, who forwarded it to me, which reads as follows:

On March 30 last, the federal government announced its dairy policy for the year 1972-73. The only change is an increase in the support price of powdered skim milk by 0.03 cents a pound.

In keeping with this policy and pending completion of negotiations for a new agreement now taking place with the Federalism of Industrial Milk Producers, we are increasing our basic price for BULK MILK, Grade A from $4.25 to $4.40 and Grade B from $4.12 to $4.27 per cwt.

The increase is of 15 cents only. I will be told that this is just pending completion of negotiations between producers and the Federation. However, knowing the facts I remember only too well—unfortunately—that in the past increases granted by the federal government did not always fully benefit the producers of industrial milk.

• (1710)

So, if you take the basic price of $4.25 and add the subsidy, you only get $5.50. This is what we were asking for when we made representations to the government in 1967. We got it, but production costs have gone up since then. The producers now get a better price but production costs have also increased to such an extent that the situation tends to deteriorate. I commend the members of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture for bringing this matter to the attention of the government.

In another agricultural field, we witnessed the disastrous situation faced by hog producers. I have called the attention of the Minister of Agriculture on this matter on many occasions and I admit that something has been done. But the fact remains that the Canadian Federation of Agriculture is asking the government to improve the lot of hog producers. Their resolution reads as follows:

(a) That the federal government in 1971 raise the level of support prices for hogs by 80 to 90 per cent of the five-year average and that payments be made twice a year and for all graded hogs; and

(b) That the Canadian Federation of Agriculture urge the Agricultural Stabilization Board to implement a stabilization program with holdbacks.

(c) In order to maintain a balanced supply and some stability in the hog industry, that the federal government make an extra payment of $20 per sow up to a maximum of 50 sows per producer to cover the period from July to December 1971.

[Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse).]

Having received many briefs and letters concerning this matter from producers in my constituency, I have promised them that I would avail myself of the first opportunity and bring their just claims to the attention of the government. I have here a petition requesting all their representatives to convey the mesasage to the government.

All of this to say that some sectors of agriculture were hit by a recession in 1971, and that a worse situation may be in the making for 1972. It is very nice indeed to consider increasing the borrowing ability of farmers up to $100,000, which, in some cases, may prove useful. But I think that we must take right now the necessary steps—and, if at all possible, imagine new ones—to ensure that the borrowers of today are the owners of tomorrow, and to provide them with the income which will permit them to reimburse their debt, both principal and interests.

To achieve this, half of their income should not be used to reimburse the interests on their loan. In its brief, the Canadian Federation of Agriculture has included a relevant proposal. As a member of this House, I have promised them to serve as their spokesman and, with the gist of their brief in mind, to invite the government to improve the situation in this area as well as in all the others.

In fact, the resolution reads as follows:

The Canadian Federation of Agriculture recommends the implementation of a comprehensive credit program at the federal and provincial levels in order to make available to farm operators short, middle and long term credit. This aim could be reached through a national credit co-operative system with two services: (a) a farm co-operative credit organization to help viable farm operations; (b) a credit service for rural development to help farmers who are trying to make a success of their business.

With regard to the interest rate, the Federation recommends the following, and I quote:

IT IS THEREFORE STIPULATED that the Canadian Federation of Agriculture is trying to obtain an interest rate, in respect of all loans granted by the Farm Credit Corporation or under the Veteran's Land Act, that will be established on a more stable principle and should not exceed 5 per cent.

Mr. Speaker, those are worthwhile recommendation that should be acted upon with a view to achieving the desired result, which is to enable farmers as well as egg, hog, poultry and beef producers, to meet their obligations, so as to maintain a constant balance between income possibilities and what is required of producers and distributors.

Mr. Speaker, the speech delivered last night by the Minister of Agriculture, there was something that pleased me and which will please, I think, a great number of people, because this problem is a recurring one. We had stressed it, I believe, when the Farm Credit Act was amended in 1968 or 1969. At any rate, I remember that we had drawn the attention of the Minister of Agriculture to this inadequacy in the act.

The minister said yesterday as reported on page 1843 of Hansard, and I quote:

—The amendment in this bill provides for a maximum of $100,000 to any farmer alone or jointly with others or in respect of a single farming enterprise. The size of individual farm units is increasing steadily—

I have some doubts about this, according to statistics. However, I would not give too much importance to this statement because, to be fair, one has to look fully into the situation and check whether such a statement is true or not or whether it is an actual fact.

I quote further:

—labour is being replaced in many cases by capital and the purchasing power of the dollar has decreased a little during recent years—

That merely confirms what I said a while ago, that the cost of production has increased alarmingly and that even though prices may have increased in the dairy industry, they have not done so at the same rate as production costs; this explains why many farmers cannot expand normally to achieve the level of production that would correspond to the equipment they must acquire to make up for the lack of farm labour.

We noticed that in many parts of the country when we visited it. We asked the farmers this "Why do you have so much equipment on your farm"? The answer was always the same "We cannot get enough help and must therefore use the most modern equipment to do the work at the right time of the season.

That is how farmers all across Canada ran into debt and why many of them had to give up farming because they were not getting the income needed to meet their commitments.

In another part of his speech, the hon. Minister of Agriculture said, and I quote:

The principle of relating loan ceilings to the number of farm operators rather than to the size of the business has proven in practice to be inequitable for individual farmers employing hired labour or people other than those with an equity in the farm unit. The principle has also proved inequitable, I suggest, in situations where the farmer operating his farm is assisted by sons or daughters of minor age, compared to two or more owner operators in a farming operation or a form of partnership. We want to correct that situation.

Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased with this statement and if we can really reach the goal mentioned in the statement I just read, I believe we really will have been most helpful to many farmers throughout Canada.

At any rate, I should like to say in concluding that as recently as this afternoon the Minister of Agriculture in his answer to a question stated that a small farm policy had been established for buying back and ensuring the maintenance of small farms.

Since we are often asked questions on this matter, I should like to know the full particulars of such a policy. I support the member who asked the question because it is very important for a member representing a rural constituency to be able to provide the required information that will help people find a solution to their problems as quickly as possible.

Thus the need to preserve the family farm, or the small enterprise is being recognized and even if it is not always possible to come to an agreement with departments of other governments, something will indeed have to be done. I do not like idleness. Give me action and give me progress.

Farm Credit Act

Today, Wednesday, May 3, there is a news item in the newspaper Le Devoir which somehow amazes me and I quote:

Farming in Quebec is ill mainly on account of conflicts between Ottawa and Quebec

Indeed, there have been quite a number of those conflicts between Ottawa and Quebec!

An hon. Member: —those damned conflicts—

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): I nearly said it myself—those conflicts have always been fought at the expense of the taxpayers, of the small farmers, of the small businesses.

I wish we would meet the challenge and stop creating fake conflicts. Instead, we should earnestly try and sit around a table and ask ourselves whether it is possible to initiate projects that could strengthen our agricultural industry in Quebec, in Ontario and indeed, in all the provinces and thereby bring happiness and prosperity to the farming community.

There is an excerpt from the article I started quoting and which cannot fail to disturb me:

The authors of this white paper, on the other hand, point out that almost 25,008 of the 70,000 Quebec farmers, that is 36 per cent, get permanent or temporary assistance from the Department of Social Affairs.

That is not very encouraging, and is evidence of a situation of which we cannot be proud.

I think that if we want to act positively, we must adopt legislation allowing those small enterprises to be self-sufficient. We must stop, at last, taxing citizens who are working day and night to accommodate some of our people who would rather remain idle and unproductive.

Those citizens will not accept it. They are proud people who rightfully expect their work to bring them the income they need to live decently, without having to rely on others.

• (1720)

Mr. Speaker, I think that the time has come for the government to establish a workable policy likely to assure the farming population of that which everybody wishes them for that matter, specifically, the possibility of living decently in Canada.

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, as the House continues to study Bill C-5, to amend the Farm Credit Act, I am pleased to rise to take part in the debate with the hon. members who have already stated their views.

First of all, I wish to congratulate the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) for a fine speech. Actually, I find myself in agreement with many of the views he expressed during the few minutes his speech lasted.

Since he referred to a matter of very great concern to me, specifically, the statement made by the Minister of Agriculture for the province of Quebec, Mr. Toupin, I should like to say to this hon. minister that a lot remains for him to do in his province and that, for instance, he should see to it that his credits—some $84 million—are wisely spent, instead of minding the business of other levels of government.

I for one believe that when a minister is making such out of place and preposterous statements—as said my neighbor—as did the Quebec minister of Agriculture yesterday, those statements are quite offending. This simply reveals a certain weakness and the fact that he is using excuses to justify it.

I would like now to compare—although any comparison is unsatisfactory—the Quebec and Ontario agriculture budget. The Ontario agriculture budget is $20 million lower with twice as many farmers and a production twice as high as that of Quebec and yet the Ontario Department of Agriculture employs 6,000 fewer people than the Quebec Department of Agriculture.

So if we Quebeckers want to find the reason for the difficulties faced by Quebec farmers, we should not blame only Ottawa or the farmers of other provinces. We should begin by looking around us in Quebec, find out our weaknesses and correct them.

The hon. Mr. Toupin should first improve the laws of his province instead of commenting on what is done elsewhere. He is wondering whether the overlapping jurisdictions of both governments, provided for in the constitution, is wrong. If he says it is wrong, maybe it is. Perhaps the solution would be to have only one jurisdiction. If we should have only one jurisdiction it should be at the federal level as requested by many farmers I have met.

Having said this, I should like to refer to another comment the hon. member for Bellechasse made about the dairy policy. I know I am straging somewhat from the subject but since farm credit affects the production of various farm products I believe farm loan policy can certainly be related to production, and particularly to dairy production in the province of Quebec and throughout Canada.

The hon. member referred to the increase in income of Quebec dairy producers. In fact, they were much higher than in previous years. I quite agree that there should be further improvement.

However, the hon. member, when he indicated 1971 and 1972 incomes for the dairy industry a few minutes ago, omitted to mention a factor which I consider to be quite important: the extra bonus dairy producers receive over and above the set base price. Besides the $4.25, plus the $1.25 grant, the bonus received by producers should also be taken into account.

I personally read the report and the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier) will be able to bear me out, since the Normandin Co-operative in his district paid out a bonus of $1.50 per hundredweight for the last three months of the year, over and above the base price. That is a fantastic achievement, for which full credit must be given to the Normandin Co-operative in the riding of Roberval and in the Saguenay area.

The present situation has also prevailed in other regions of Quebec where producers have actually received from their plants much more than the basic price, not taking into account the year-end refunds and the value increases also distributed by their firms.

[Mr. Lessard (Lac-Saint-Jean).]

I come back, Mr. Speaker, to Bill C-5 in order to determine more or less the objectives we are trying to pursue. This is a new step on the road of general improvement of our agricultural policy.

Mr. Speaker, the comprehensive aim of the amendments is to increase the Farm Credit Corporation's ability to meet the need for long-term credits towards the establishment of profitable agricultural enterprises and to give the corporation the necessary powers to perform such tasks or functions it might be entrusted with for the implementation of other programs.

The powers now vested in the corporation enable it to reach its aims and objectives, that is to make agricultural loans, to see to it that the law is implemented and to control agricultural credit transactions. The corporation employs a staff specializing in farm appraisal and evaluation of business transactions related to farm lands in any agricultural region of Canada.

The present amendment will enable the minister to draw upon such expert staff for the administration of whole or part of other programs such as the program of land transfers which is part of the small farms development and improvement program.

In accordance with the legislation now in force, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) is authorized to pay to the corporation an amount of $56 million which when multiplied 25 times as provided in the legislation, will enable it to obtain enough capital to make loans to farmers.

But it so happens that at the end of 1972, the funds available under this act will be reduced to $245 million, so that the present proposal to increase the operating fund of the Corporation by $10 million, that is from $56 to $66 million, will allow, through the multiplication factor of 25, for an additional amount of $250 million. We believe that through this change, there will be sufficient funds available to cover demand for the next few years.

Anyway, this House sits regularly, and if additional funds came to be required I do not think we would hesitate to increase available funds then, for the farm industry has to pursue its objectives.

The amendment to section 16, Mr. Speaker, limits the granting of loans to Canadians or landed immigrants under the Immigration Act who own farm land, and the purpose of the proposed amendment is to allow the granting of loans only to assist people who are Canadian citizens or who intend to settle permanently in Canada.

The important point, Mr. Speaker, is that of the total amounts which can be loaned to farmers.

Under the existing act, there are, in fact, three classes of farmers, to whom different maximum amounts can be loaned. Those three classes are now going to be eliminated, as far as maximum amounts are concerned, and from now on all farmers will be able to borrow up to $100,000, depending on the security they can put and on the assessment which will be made of their property and of its potential productivity.

• (1730)

There is also another interesting point to consider, Mr. Speaker. Although the Corporation is allowed under the Act to grant credits for the development of mortgaged lands owned by a secondary non-farming enterprise, the Corporation is not authorized to take into consideration any possible non-farming income derived from the farm in assessing the value of the land for the purpose of calculating the amount of the loans.

Therefore, an amendment will make it possible to take such factors into consideration in future, which means that we shall be able to increase the basis for the calculation of the amount of a loan, which is assessed at 75 per cent of the land yield. But in restricting the items which could be included in the cost benefit analysis, you obviously reduce loan possibilities and limit the maximum loans to be granted to farmers. By including other forms of income under this amendment, we shall enable farmers to qualify for larger amounts even on the basis of as restricted a unit.

There is another very important point, Mr. Speaker. In my opinion, it may be the most important of all. It is the removal of the age limit. Under the present act, one must be 21 years of age to apply to the Farm Credit Corporation for a loan. From now on, this age limit will be eliminated, and the age of majority prevailing in each province will apply. In some provinces, majority is at the age of 18, in others you reach majority at 19. In those provinces where the coming of age has not changed yet, the age limit will necessarily remain the same as is now prevailing in those provinces, that is, 21 years.

This will enable young farmers to obtain loans and to go into farming with their fathers or other people, or to invest and start in that field. This of course will not solve the problem which the young people are facing at the present time when they want to start farming. If they have no capital, it remains difficult, but through that amendment, we will surely make it easier for them and the number of young farmers who will definitely choose that calling and who will become owners will certainly increase. I am convinced of that, having met young farmers. Incidentally I would like to say to those who take a gloomy view of agriculture that after having heard all those criticisms, it is not surprising that they take such gloomy views. Recently, I attended a meeting where a group of farmers of my constituency were discussing farming problems. Unfortunately, I must admit it, the 50 or 60-year olds were rather pessimistic. However, four young men had remained silent throughout the evening. At the end of the evening, I asked them if they had no views to express, which they did. To my great surprise and satisfaction, of the four young men, aged 22 to 26, three were owners of their farms, and the fourth one worked on his father's farm. They all told me that they were very hopeful and happy to be engaged in agriculture, and that they would not change for another trade. They said "We see our relatives, our friends, who went to school and who today are stuck in the industrial society. We much prefer our trade of farmer, and we entertain great hopes for the future because we have a future to build, whereas our parents, who lived through difficult periods, recall the past and their difficulties instead, and have not, of course, many years ahead of them to build. They are rather pessimistic."

That pleased me and I can assure hon. members that they are not the only ones to see farming as a promising career in the future. Agriculture does have a future, and more and more young people will join the ranks of farmers and follow those who now live off the farm.

Here, I should warn those who take as sole basis the average age of active farmers. It is said that the average age of farm workers and farm owners in Canada is around 55 years. Obviously, such a situation is alarming, and justly so, but one forgets that, in this very special industry, often the son succeeds to the father or is presently employed by the father. The latter is the owner and he is the one who is considered when establishing the average age of the active farmer. But if we consider that his son, aged 22, 23 or 27 years, works with him in most cases and if we figure out the average age of the two persons occupied in agriculture, we soon realize that the average age is, in fact, much closer to 35 than to 55. That gives us greater confidence and allows us to consider the situation in a much more objective way.

Mr. Speaker, we hear criticisms of all kinds. Opposition members were saying earlier that the agricultural situation was disastrous. When considering statistics and various reports we can no doubt draw many conclusions. I can come to one, for instance, in reading the 1970-71 report of the Canadian Wheat Board. In Table No. 3, on page 3, dealing with the volume of grain products in the Prairies over the years, it is sure that I can come to a strange conclusion, for what it is worth, but one may that conclusion. Our colleagues opposite are drawing the very same kind of conclusion. According to a table, at the time the Conservatives were in power from 1957 to 1961 here is what happened. In 1956, the total grain production reached 1,202 million bushels. But, unfortunately, it happened that the Conservatives were in office during the seven lean years and here is what happened between 1957 and 1962: the production dropped from 1,202 million bushels to 784 million in 1957, then it went up to 824 million bushels in 1958, to 854 million bushels in 1959, to 970 million bushels in 1960, and dropped to 524 million bushels in 1961. A real record! This includes all grains. It is to be noted that there were only 260 million bushels of wheat. That happened at the time when the "Prairie experts", those who are in the opposition, who criticize the government, were in office for some time. If we consider their record, Mr. Speaker, we find it far from good!

In 1971, we have the highest figures ever reached in the last 25 years: 1,563 million bushels of grain were produced. Those are official figures.

Are conditions so bad in the Prairie provinces? Not as bad as that, but, of course, not as good as we would like them to be. I am sure the Minister of Agriculture is the first to wish the situation would be much better, and I am sure all members of the Liberal party as well as those of the opposition agree with him. Let us be realistic. To paint the situation in black as is now being done does not serve the profession in which they are engaged. Mr. Speaker, I blame them because their attitude, their constant criticisms about the agricultural situation tends to downgrade the profession in which they are engaged, as well as the people they claim to represent. As for me, I say the opposite: The situation is not perfect, but it is definitely better than the one depicted by members of the opposition.

Mr. Speaker, through the bill that we shall pass in a few days with the co-operation of all members, we shall certainly succeed in further improving the situation somewhat. It will gradually improve. We cannot expect drastic changes because too many production units are involved in farming. Various attempts were made to further help agriculture, for instance, through the Farm Products Marketing Council, and we know how difficult it was to have this legislation passed and put into our statute books. We are slowly building something and within a few years, our agriculture will be greatly improved, and we shall certainly be in a position to say that the Canadian government has introduced a long term agricultural policy, and that our farmers are considered as full-fledged citizens.

Several problems may give rise to some criticisms voiced by our friends of the opposition.

Last week Farm Credit Corporation chairman Owen appeared before the agriculture committee. Our friends opposite questioned him at length and one of our colleagues tried to emphasize the fact that farming conditions in Quebec were much better than elsewhere in Canada, quoting the fact that only 6 per cent of loans granted by the Farm Credit Corporation were in arrears, that is only 6 per cent of Quebec borrowers were behind with their reimbursement in comparison with 21, 24 and 25 per cent in the three Prairie provinces. They then drew the following conclusion: farming conditions in Quebec are clearly better than in the Prairies.

Mr. Speaker, it is a rather hasty analysis of the statistics, since in Quebec the circumstances are different; there is a Farm Credit Bureau which enables farmers to obtain credit at better terms. That is why very few Quebec farmers borrow under the terms of that federal act. Only big farmers do so in Quebec because they can then get additional amounts, greater than those granted by the province.

Quebec farmers do not have to borrow large amounts at the provincial level. Those who have large farms—and they are growing in number—borrow at the federal level. According to the statistics, $18 million were loaned last year to Quebec farmers, because there too farms are being regrouped. People need larger amounts of money and therefore turn in increasing numbers to federal sources of credit. That, in spite of our good friend, the hon. Mr. Toupin of Quebec, who would have us hand over all those amounts of money, that he might manage it and be sole judge in the matter.

Is the situation of the western farmer as critical as some would claim? I should like to quote a table published on page 37 of the report of the Farm Credit Corporation which gives the index of Canadian farm land values per acre, by province, during the last 20 years.

I shall not read the whole table, Mr. Speaker, but I shall give an idea of the increase in the value of agricultural properties.

In British Columbia, for instance, in 1951, one acre of land was worth an average of $110. In 1970, or 20 years later, it was worth $286.

In Alberta, for the same years, the figures were $112 then and $288 now.

In Saskatchewan, $117 in 1951 and $292 now.

[Mr. Lessard (Lac-Saint-Jean).]

In Manitoba, $117 also, and $233 now.

In Ontario, where a truly specific problem exists, land was worth $127 an acre in 1951 and after a fantastic leap it was worth $435 an acre in 1970.

In Quebec, from $125 there has been an increase to $249.

In New Brunswick, from $116 to $222.

In Nova Scotia, from $112 to $214.

In Prince Edward Island, from $115 to $196.

So, one can see that there is an increase in the value of the acre of land. One can see that Western farmers of course are sitting on a larger fortune than farmers in Ontario, the Maritime provinces and Quebec because their lands are much smaller which brings from our honorable colleague for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) the comment that Western farmers live in poverty and die rich. It may be true that they live in poverty,—I am not in a position to judge—but I doubt if all of them live like the poor. When considering reports and the standard of living of Westerners, one realizes that some of them are drawing very good incomes.

So I am not prepared to say that they all live in poverty. But, Mr. Speaker, one thing is certain: they die a lot richer than farmers in the Maritimes and Quebec because of a considerably higher appreciation.

Only yesterday, I read in a newspaper that Americans are presently buying land in southern Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Alberta for twice the price normally asked on the local market. Therefore, the reason why land out West is worth that much, is because it can be put into production. Besides, it is said that it has value as an investment. If such is the case, the land situation in the Prairies is not as bad as we are led to believe.

Farmers are doing a disservice to agriculture in painting everything in such dark colours, in Canada, agriculture is rather healthy and it will become healthier in as much as we work together toward its improvement. I think this is the purpose of this bill and we will certainly achieve it with the co-operation of all members.

[English]

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, one finds oneself a little bit amused by the two tables which the hon. member for Lac-Saint-Jean (M. Lessard) used in defence of his argument. One of them had a great deal to do with production. He stressed that in such and such a period of time production was so much, but that under the Liberals in recent years production was so much more. He fails to take into consideration that weather has a lot to do with production. Further, in recent years farmers have been quick to use all the advanced technology to increase production, such as more efficient use of fertilizer, better seeding methods, and better farming methods in general. This all would tend to show that in latter years production has increased.

The hon. member then quoted from another table taken from the document on farm credit and related statistics put out by the DBS. It is to be found at page 37 of that document, and deals with the value of land. But he fails to realize that inflation plays a great part in the value of land. He never took that into consideration. He suggested that land values had increased over 20 years. Shouldn't the value of land increase? Mr. Speaker, that was the only table in that book that he could have used to accurately illustrate conditions today. The hon. member was quite right when he said that all members of parliament should do what they can to aid agriculture, to help the farmers, and not just paint a black picture. I am attempting to do just that. I think that the amendment moved by the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) is a direct aid.

The hon. member for Lac-Saint-Jean also suggested that the average age of farmers today is over 53 years. I think I read somewhere that it is 58 years. It is high, Mr. Speaker. We must encourage more young farmers to enter the business. The hon. member went to a meeting and, in his own words, he said he was surprised to find that three or four young people at that meeting were in farming. I contend that this bill should be designed to encourage young people to go into farming, and the amendment moved by the hon. member for Mackenzie would do that.

The young farmer has a great deal to contribute. He has youth, energy, and the willingness to accept new ideas and changes that can help agriculture. We should make an all-out effort to encourage young farmers to stay on the land. The amendment proposes that where a young farmer under a certain age meets certain performance standards with regard to the repayment of a loan, a certain percentage of the interest would be forgiven. I think this would encourage young people to get back to the land. Under the terms of the bill a young farmer can borrow up to $100,000, but in the first year he would have to pay $8,000 interest. The amendment suggests that in certain cases payment of the interest could be deferred.

For a long time the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) was a Social Crediter. Since becoming a minister, he has forgotten about the evils of high interest rates. That is one of the things you have to forget. I point out that, under his jurisdiction, for two years the Farm Credit Corporation charged an interest rate of 8 per cent, or above that. The minister used to oppose high interest rates when he was a Social Crediter.

Mr. McKinley: But anything for power.

Mr. Horner: Yes, anything for power, as my hon. friend from Huron suggests. It is amazing what men will do for power. They forget all the concepts and ideas that they believed in for years.

This bill will do two things. It will allow the Farm Credit Corporation to make larger loans to individuals, in fact loans up to $100,000, and it will allow it to make loans to non-farmers and to farmers whose principal occupation is not farming. The minister shakes his head to indicate disagreement. I do not know who else is going to carry out this small farms program. Certainly, that is one of the criteria in the small farms program. I read that in the fancy document which was put out by the minister on March 8, 1971. Mr. Speaker, a full year has gone by since then, and he has not sold this idea to any province. But he says that even if no province accepts it, he is going to proceed with it.

I wonder what is wrong with this idea. Apparently he has permission to implement it. His estimates are passed. He has already spent money under this program. We are told that it will cost $150 million in five years.

Mr. Lessard (Lac-Saint-Jean): Seven years.

Mr. Horner: In seven years, then. The minister cannot blame the hon. member for Crowfoot for holding up this legislation.

Mr. Olson: I never tried to.

Mr. Horner: The program has been established for over a year, and no province has accepted it. What is wrong with it? I see that it is nearly six o'clock, Mr. Speaker, so perhaps on another occasion when this legislation is before us he will be able to explain why he has not been able to sell it to the provinces.

There are many things that could be changed in the Farm Credit Corporation management that would alleviate a lot of the difficulties affecting farmers across Canada. The hon. member for Lac-Saint-Jean suggests that there are too many production units in agriculture, and he says that is why there has not been any success. He agrees with the Minister of Agriculture. The minister makes a bold statement that small farmers have got to go. I have a newspaper clipping here somewhere.

Mr. Olson: I never said that.

Mr. Horner: This is the Calgary Herald of Saturday, May 8, 1971. It says, "Olson seeks to reduce number of small farms."

Mr. Olson: I never wrote the headline.

Mr. Horner: I see it is six o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. It being six o'clock, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at two o'clock.

At six o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, May 4, 1972

The House met at 2 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

STATUS OF WOMEN

TABLING OF PROGRESS REPORT ON ROYAL COMMISSION RECOMMENDATIONS—STATEMENT BY MINISTER

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 41(2) I would like to table two documents, one in English and one in French, which in reality are progress reports on the recommendations of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women.

When the report of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women was tabled in the House in 1970 there was much to be done in creating equal opportunities for and removing discrimination against women in Canadian society. The government set up an interdepartmental committee on the status of women to analyse the recommendations of the royal commission and to determine the best ways that the government should proceed with these recommendations. Mrs. Freda L. Paltiel was seconded from the Department of National Health and Welfare to be co-ordinator of the committee. This interdepartmental committee was composed of representatives from various departments and agencies. Its report was submitted to me in December, 1971. The report of the royal commission consisted of 167 recommendations, many of them falling under the jurisdiction of the federal government, some falling under the jurisdiction of the provincial governments, some joint federal and provincial and others under the jurisdiction of business and industry.

• (1410)

The federal government has taken significant action both administratively and legislatively with regard to the recommendations under its sole jurisdiction and in doing so has played a more important role in leadership. In the Status of Women in Canada 1972 booklet, reference is made to the work done by the federal government. But our work cannot stop with our many accomplishments. We must make more and more significant advances until every man and woman in this country will have equal opportunities in every field of endeavour. The booklet I am tabling is a signpost but not a resting place and we must continue to work together as Members of Parliament and as Canadians to ensure equality for all in our country.

With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I should like to draw your attention to some of the highlights of the report.

The Canada Labour (Standards) Code has attempted to remove discrimination in employment. The Women's Bureau of the Department of Labour has provided an invaluable service to women who work.

The Unemployment Insurance Act provided universality as well as better protection to women in the work force. The government has provided maternity leave under the Canada Labour (Standards) Code and maternity benefits under the Unemployment Insurance Act.

A new family planning division has been set up in the Department of National Health and Welfare to co-ordinate federal endeavours in the field of planned parenthood.

National Health and Welfare, Treasury Board, the Solicitor General and Manpower and Immigration have created senior positions for women in their departments to give advice on programs and activities with regard to women in their mandates.

The Local Initiatives Program, among other accomplishments, has established approximately 90 day-care centres across Canada. Child care allowances are now a deductible expense under the Income Tax Act.

The bill to amend the Adult Occupational Training Act which received first reading last week in the House of Commons will provide women who have worked one year at any time in their lives the opportunity to receive training as well as training allowances for the first time.

An equal employment opportunity office has been set up in the Public Service.

The cabinet has issued directive No. 44 directing deputy ministers to take steps to encourage the assignment and advancement of more women into middle and upper echelon positions.

The Family Income Security Plan, which has now passed second reading in the House of Commons, would provide increases in benefits to low-income families and assist sole support mothers.

The government has also paid special attention to the needs of native women in its supportive training programs and leadership development.

Major grants have been given to planned parenthood federation of Canada and Serena.

The federal government has also recently helped finance the Strategy for Change conference involving women's organizations from across Canada.

Women's groups across Canada, studying the report, have received, when needed, financial support.

The government actively continues to seek out competent women for appointments to boards, commissions, judgeships and other senior posts.

Finally, amendments have been introduced to the Criminal Code to include equal jury duty for men and women in criminal cases. These amendments propose also to remove the anachronistic vagrancy clause as well as whipping as a penalty, which is sex discrimination in reverse.

Mr. Speaker, I shall close my remarks by reiterating that the government does not intend to stand still. We shall strive to work towards elevating the status of women in Canada to the point where discrimination by reason of sex will be a thing of the past.

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to have this opportunity to reply to the minister's statement even though the statement is late. The report of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women was tabled, I believe, in December, 1970, and for the life of me I cannot understand why it has taken the government until May, 1972, to give us some idea of their views on it.

Mr. Stanfield: That is quick for them.

Mr. Alexander: I say with the greatest of respect that this statement perhaps indicates that we are not too far from an election because the government has now said that it has some interest in women.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: I also wonder, if the minister has had this report in his possession since December, 1971, why the Women's Liberal Association suddenly met with him yesterday and immediately after that meeting we have a statement by the government. I think more people are involved with the status of women than those in the Women's Liberal Association.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I want to go on record as saying that among the women of Canada, and I have said this before, are women of skill. We have not drawn on their skills sufficiently. It has not been recognized that among our women there is a reservoir of skills which certainly can play a meaningful role in the development of our Canadian way of life.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: May I say that for our people in 1972 Canada must not only be a land of opportunity but a land of equal opportunity, and that means equal opportunity for all individuals regardless of race, creed, colour or sex.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: I do not know why, in a statement of such importance, the minister evaded one of the most important issues facing women today, the issue of abortion. It seems to me that for one reason or other the government is deliberately avoiding facing this issue. The abortion rate is going up continually. Women are in dire financial straits. As I understand it, the government has indicated that it will set a date when abortion can be debated in the House. Why was this not mentioned in the minister's statement?

Another area I ought to mention is the LIP program. With all due respect, it seems to me that the LIP program serves the interests of women who have reached the secondary level of education. What happens to those women who have not reached that level of education and really need help but have not been helped by the LIP program since it affects those with a secondary level of education?

I am pleased to note that the government is moving in the area of fair employment practices. That is a step in the right direction. I understand that the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey) intends to bring in amendments to remove bias in employment on grounds of age, sex and marriage. This step must be taken if we are to be consistent and give everyone an equal opportunity.

I am disturbed that the minister although he boasts of the family planning division which has been set up to co-ordinate federal endeavours in the field of planned parenthood, nowhere in his statement mentions co-ordination of plans with those provinces and municipalities in which competent but overworked birth control and family planning clinics already exist. One of the more important omissions is that abortion was not placed before the minister.

I should like to say a word about another area which I think deserves immediate consideration, that involving those women who belong to the group making up Canada's first citizens. They live in deplorable conditions. They seem to be the forgotten part of our culture. I hope the government will pay sufficient attention to the needs of native women and show leadership in the development of certain programs of benefit to them, particularly in the field of health care. That is an area into which we must move because there is great necessity for such programs.

I have not read the booklet the minister tabled. We shall see what is in it. I hope the statement he made was not made for political reasons. I hope the statement was made to show the government's genuine concern about the status of women.

May I pay tribute to the woman who, I think, has had a great deal to do with the thinking of the government in these matters, Miss Sylva M. Gelber, Director of the Women's Bureau, Department of Labour. She seems to have her finger on all these problems. I believe it is an extremely difficult job for her alone to bring significant points to the attention of not only members of the House of Commons but also of the people of Canada.

• (1420)

I believe that electoral reform must come in order that more women can be candidates for membership in this august House, not because they are women but because they have compassion, understanding, experience, wisdom and expertise that this House can certainly use.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: I see that Your Honour is getting a little impatient. There is quite a bit more I could say. We will keep our eyes on the government daily in order to see whether this is a genuine move. I will close by reading a portion of a speech by Miss Sylva M. Gelber on November 10, 1971, to the Canadian Federation of University Women. After having related in some detail the summary of progress that had been made in terms of women, women's rights and legislation affecting them, she closed her speech with this extremely significant paragraph:

> From this short summary of the progress made in the enactment of legislation relating to working women, it will be seen that, at long last, the laws required to achieve the goal of equal and fair opportunity for women, are beginning to appear across the land. But the law is merely a tool; and a tool is of little value if it is not used. And even if the tool is used, it is only of value when it is properly used.

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to be able to respond on behalf of our party to the statement just made by the minister in charge of raising the status of women. I am glad the article in Chatelaine with the questionnaire appeared at this time. I cannot help feeling that it gave a little extra impetus to the production of this statement.

When the report of the royal commission was tabled it provided Canadian women at once with a bible of their rights and a blueprint as to some of the ways in which action must be taken for them to reach the promised land of equality. What does this statement disclose? It discloses that there have been several measures of real substance achieved. I have made reference to these before. The two most important have been under the aegis of the minister now in charge. They are maternity leave under the Canada Labour (Standards) Code and maternity benefits under the Unemployment Insurance Act. More recently there have been amendments to the Criminal Code with regard to women serving as jurors, the abolition of the vagrancy section and one or two other points. Within the Department of National Health and Welfare, there has been the establishment of grants for family planning across this country.

Some pious hopes have been expressed about how the government intends to encourage the appointment of more women to senior posts in the public service. However, apart from token positions where women have been so outstanding that they could not be ignored, these hopes have not been anything more than expressed. One of my colleagues has just made the rather regrettable suggestion that even at this stage there are many members—"MCPs", they might be called—not paying the attention they might at this time. On behalf of the women of Canada, I ask them to listen.

Some hon. Members: Explain "MCPs".

Mrs. MacInnis: I will not compete with the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in that department. As far as the major recommendations of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women are concerned, there has been no action or only microscopic action taken to this point. The major recommendation was for child care centres across the country. While this is obviously a shared responsibility with the provinces and municipalities, the federal government has a tremendous responsibility to fulfil.

[Translation]

Hon. members on my left could perhaps calm down a little so that I may be heard.

[English]

The only mention of this matter in the statement today is that under the LIP program the federal government has helped to establish 90 day-care centres across the country. I would point out, however, that the LIP program is due to end on the 31st of the present month, and you know, Mr. Speaker, what will happen to most of these centres when the grants end. My other comment is that the Royal Commission on the Status of Women said that there is need for 130,000 day-care places immediately. So this is one big piece of unfinished business.

Reference was made to child care allowances. The recent legislation provided for only about half the amount of income tax deductions which is essential if children are to be looked after, and even this minimal concession is hedged about with demands for receipts, the keeping of employer records, and so on. There are many whose wages are not high enough to enable them to qualify for this tax deduction. The report of the royal commission calls for a guaranteed annual income for "single support" parents as the beginning of a guaranteed income across this country for all Canadians.

In regard to the Adult Occupational Training Act, I am glad to learn that women are to be allowed to qualify. The minister told us that women would be eligible provided they had worked for one year at any time in their lives. I should like to know how many women have not worked for one year at any time in their lives.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. MacInnis: In other words, will the new act apply to housewives or not? Are they considered to have worked one year in their lives? The minister nods. That is good. I hope Hansard will report the nod.

Work on education in the field of planned parenthood has been started and there are already 66 family planning centres across Canada. I would point out, though, that according to experts in the field we need 700 of these centres to give information and advice on family planning. There is also a need for information on abortion as a second line of defence against unwanted pregnancy, as the hon. member who preceded me has indicated.

As for the Family Income Security Plan, we in this party have pointed out that it will take from one-third of our mothers even the little cheque they now receive. They will have to give it to those who are living in poverty because the government has not the courage to institute a fair tax system so as to obtain the necessary revenue from other sources.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. MacInnis: Women are sending me letters which prove they are well aware that the fair taxation potential exists. I am watching the clock, Mr. Speaker. The first speaker on this subject took six minutes, the next took seven, and I have spoken for just six minutes so far.

I am afraid the government has laboured mightily in its mountain of red tape and given birth to a very small mouse indeed compared with what is necessary. It is to be hoped that the women of this country will not relax their endeavours but push the minister and the mountain to proceed at a much faster pace toward the goal of equality for women than they have shown up to the present time. Women are grateful for what they have got but, like Oliver Twist, they intend to keep on asking for more.

[Translation]

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, the list of the government's actions with regard to the status of women is supposed to be impressive according to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Mackasey), but, as stated by previous speakers, such a list has a strong pre-election flavour.

Of course, we approve of all measures to ensure true equality between men and women in this country, but, when that day has come, there will be no need to speak about the status of women. And, as this is being done today, it is an indication that we are far from having reached that objective.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, may I quote part of a speech I made on that subject on March 9, 1971, as follows:

> However, I feel we should do a lot more to speed up the process of emancipation and progress of Canadian women. On the basis that there is to be no difference between man and woman apart from the physiological point of view, one is entitled to wonder why practically all management and legislative activities are carried out exclusively by men.
> Obviously, if the true principle of democracy were to be integrally applied in this House, half of our representatives would have to be women since the population of any country is divided somewhat equally into males and females. Fortunately, the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis) is here to save a small fragment of democracy.
> This situation would be corrected by effecting a new distribution of the Commons seats. Canada could have some 150 constituencies represented by both a male and a female member. Then the absolute equality we are seeking would thus be achieved at the parliamentary level.

Some people will laugh at this suggestion but when we see so many men apparently lost in a maze of thoughts which are more or less constructive, I wonder whether the practical way of thinking and action which characterizes women could not bring a little more efficiency to the business of this House.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT IN CAPE BRETON—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I request the unanimous consent of the House to propose a motion on a matter of the most urgent and pressing necessity. This matter concerns the results of a recent survey conducted by the Metro Alliance for Development, a Sydney, Nova Scotia-based group funded under the federal government's LIP program which, in its report of April 21, 1972, estimates that the real rate of unemployment on Cape Breton Island was in the 29 to 31 per cent range during the February-March period of this year, an increase of 5 per cent from the same period last year.

Recognizing the tragic human and economic effects of such a persisting and drastically high unemployment rate on the morale and human dignity of Cape Bretoners, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. MacInnis)—and I might add that I am sure we will have the endorsation of the government House leader, the hon. member for Cape Breton Highlands-Canso (Mr. MacEachen):

> That this House refer to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration, the recent report of an unemployment survey on Cape Breton Island, conducted by the Metro Alliance for Development, in order that the four major recommendations proposed by the report may be studied, evaluated and acted upon as soon as possible, to ameliorate this most deplorable and destructive unemployment situation.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys. Under the terms of Standing Order 43 this motion requires the unananimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity and the motion cannot be put.

DRUGS

NON-MEDICAL USE OF DRUGS DIRECTORATE—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43 I seek leave of the House to move a motion of urgent and pressing necessity. In explanation thereof may I preface it by saying it relates to the revelation by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police of a staggering increase in the availability, use and illegal possession of psychotropic drugs which took place during the time the drug abuse program of the federal government was in effect. It relates to the freezing of the budget of the non-medical use of drugs directorate and the fact that the minister has ignored the views of the British Columbia and Nova Scotia medical associations with regard to treatment—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member knows he cannot argue in support of the motion he is proposing to the House. He should indicate briefly what the motion is that he proposes for the consideration of the House.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): You anticipated me precisely, Mr. Speaker. I had just reached that point. Because of the resignation of the director of the non-medical use of drugs directorate, Dr. W. F. Craig, I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters):

That the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs be authorized to inquire into the activities of the non-medical use of drugs directorate with particular reference to the reasons for the resignation of the director-general of that directorate, Dr. W. F. Craig.

Mr. Speaker: This motion also requires the unanimous consent of the House as it has been submitted under the terms of Standing Order 43. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity. The motion cannot be put.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, may I rise on a question of privilege. I submit that the Minister of National Health and Welfare should not have been obliged to say no to that particular motion as he did.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

FOREIGN TAKEOVERS REVIEW ACT

MEASURE TO CONTROL FOREIGN TAKEOVERS OF CANADIAN COMPANIES

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-201, to provide for the review and assessment of acquisitions of control of Canadian business enterprises by certain persons.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

INDUSTRY

ACTION TO ESTABLISH PROPORTION OF SENIOR POSITIONS IN COMPANIES OPERATING IN CANADA TO BE FILLED BY CANADIANS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce regarding the participation of Canadians in companies operating in Canada. Does he intend, either directly or in co-operation with the provinces, to establish guidelines relating to the proportion of senior positions in companies operating in Canada which should be filled by Canadian citizens?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, only time will tell how the screening process will be operated, but there are many factors to be considered in making decisions, indicated in the legislation. As my hon. friend probably knows, there is an item called participation, and the question he raises would obviously come under that heading.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, the minister's answer relates only to negotiations in respect of takeovers. I am asking him whether he intends, either directly or in conjunction with the provinces, to establish a guideline regarding the proportion of senior management positions in companies operating in Canada which should be filled by Canadian citizens?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, the statement made the other day by the Minister of National Revenue contained a paragraph indicating that other ideas were being explored in this regard.

An hon. Member: Oh, let's have an answer.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I take it the answer is that the minister has no such intention. I should like to ask either the same minister or the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs whether it is the intention of the government, either directly or in association with the provinces, to establish any legislative requirements relating to the proportion of directors of companies operating in Canada who must be Canadian citizens?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we have not examined that in my department other than addressing ourselves to responsibilities and powers of corporation directors, as was indicated in the draft competition Bill C-256 which the hon. member knows does not deal with the nationality of directors.

ROLE OF INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT BANK—ACTION TO IMPLEMENT RECOMMENDATIONS OF FOREIGN OWNERSHIP TASK FORCE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance who may be in a more constructive mood. In view of the recommendation in the report of the task force on foreign ownership in Canada that the government review the role of the Industrial Development Bank regarding the venture capital situation for small companies, has the minister reviewed this legislation and does he intend to introduce an amendment with a view to carrying out the recommendations of the task force in this regard?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we are reviewing these recommendations very carefully. I am not in a position yet to tell the hon. member whether the implementation of them, if we were to decide on that, would require amendment of the legislation.

MEASURES TO PROMOTE INDUSTRIAL RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In light of the finding by Statistics Canada that the level of industrial research and development in 1972 will show little real growth since 1969, are new measures being prepared to accelerate and assist industrial research and development and, if so, when can we expect a statement to be made?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the budget of my department, contrary to those statistics, indicates that the degree of research and development done across the board in Canada with the support of my department is increasing. If my friend wants to look at my estimates he will witness that fact.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

OMISSION FROM MONTHLY REPORT OF GRANT TO McCAIN'S FOODS

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. In view of the fact the minister undertook to investigate a serious omission from his monthly report to parliament of a $6.1 million grant to McCain's Foods, and in view of the reported unavailability of the minister to appear before the standing committee until May 18, will he inform the House now why this information was not provided as required under section 16 of the Regional Development Incentives Act?

Mr. Horner: That was the third grant to McCain's and they were the bagmen in New Brunswick for the Liberal party.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Horner: They were the bagmen for the Liberal party in New Brunswick and that is the third grant they got from the Liberal party.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I don't understand—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would request hon. members—

Mr. Horner: That is true and you know it is true.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Horner: You are not denying it.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I recognize the hon. member for Regina East.

Mr. Burton: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the minister could be given the opportunity to respond to the question.

Mr. Horner: Are grants only for Liberals?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This shouting across the floor—

Mr. Ricard: Act like a minister.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Mr. Crouse.]

Mr. Horner: Is the Liberal party that broke in New Brunswick?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps we might wait—

An hon. Member: It shouldn't be.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister will be recognized for the purpose of replying to the question when the noise has subsided and the Chair has a chance to hear the reply.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, it was agreed that I would go before the committee again. In my opinion it is not fair to say that I delayed because the last time I was there it was understood that it would be the last. I intend to go back and I will be pleased to give the information requested by the hon. member.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Answer the question.

Mr. Burton: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. The minister agreed the last time we were before the committee to provide the information to the committee and indicated he thought he would be available this week to appear before that committee. What is the matter? What is he hiding for?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

YOUTH

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—RESIGNATION OF MR. BUREAU—STUDY OF CRITERIA BY HOUSE COMMITTEE

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Secretary of State.

Mr. Bernard Bureau, project officer for the Ottawa area, having resigned as a result of political interference in the selection of Opportunities for Youth projects, would the minister now be willing to submit for examination by hon. members, that is by a committee of the House, the practical criteria used in the selection of projects approved under the Opportunities for Youth program?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the criteria used in the selection of projects are those which were sent to hon. members. I am surprised the hon. member should ask that question since he has already had those criteria for two months; had he wanted to study them, he would have had every opportunity of doing so.

An hon. Member: He was not here.

REQUEST FOR INQUIRY INTO ACCUSATIONS OF POLITICAL INTERFERENCE

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question.

Due to the charges of political interference at the decision making level, would the Secretary of State undertake to have an investigation made on behalf of the House, in order to check the truth of those facts or charges?

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, the truth of those facts is quite easily summed up and requires no investigation. Out of 970 preselected projects in Quebec, 39 have been rejected as a result of consultations with members from all parties.

Two types of considerations were taken into account in those consultations: firstly, to make sure that there was no project liable to be used for partisan purposes by any party whatever, and, secondly, to secure the opinion of the people's representatives in this House on the usefulness of the projects for the community.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question.

Can the minister then explain, since he has just stated that he asked the advice of various members, why in the Richelieu constituency the only projects accepted are from Bécancour while the remainder of the constituency has been neglected, according to the member for that constituency?

INDUSTRY

CHEMICALS—MEASURES TO ASSIST—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the very great concern expressed recently by the Canadian chemical industry regarding the future potential of that industry because of conditions existing in this country and in the world, and the need for positive government action to get that industry going again, has the government any positive suggestions to put forward to help the industry and, if so, will the minister take the first opportunity on motions to outline what they are?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, we are, of course, aware of the difficulties of the chemical industry and efforts are being made to help it. I am personally aware of two important projects now being explored. The government is providing all the support it can.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, has the minister considered the very real apprehension of the industry regarding the possible effects of the DISC program on its future, and has he been able to make any positive suggestions to the industry as to what help the government can give if this does become a real problem?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, the Canadian government's reaction to the DISC program, as indicated previously by the Prime Minister, other ministers and myself, will be announced in due course.

Inquiries of the Ministry

TRADE

REPRESENTATIONS TO UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT AGAINST BURKE-HARTKE BILL

Mr. S. Perry Ryan (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In light of increasing United States' use of DISC and increasing support for extensive import quotas in the United States, particularly by the AFL-CIO, is the government going to seek assurances from the United States government that it will not support the protectionist Burke-Hartke trade bill or similar measures?

• (1450)

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Our views on the Burke-Hartke bill are well known. It is obviously the most protectionist bill in the history of the United States, so far as I can remember. It is supported unfortunately by some labour unions in the United States, and we wish that the Canadian unions would make their views known to their counterparts in the United States. Our views on that bill are very well known and one can well imagine what they are. They are extremely unfavourable.

Mr. Ryan: My supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. Is the government taking action to upgrade the role of the Canadian embassy in Washington in explaining and protecting Canadian interests at this very crucial time?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not see how we can upgrade the status of the Canadian embassy in Washington. It has always had a very high status.

UNITED STATES DISC PROGRAM—INTENTIONS OF CANADIAN AUTOMOBILE MANUFACTURERS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. As the minister knows, the United Auto Workers Union has opposed the Burke-Hartke bill to which he referred. In view of the fact the minister is meeting with the president of the Chrysler Corporation this afternoon at 3.30 p.m., would he obtain from the president of that corporation during that meeting his intentions regarding the DISC legislation?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Indeed I am meeting with these gentlemen, but I wish my friend would not publicize the hour. It is not fair.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, these gentlemen are entitled to see ministers in the way they want and at least without the press at the door.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Pepin: We are meeting with these gentlemen and, as I said, Chrysler Corporation has not to my knowledge applied for DISC company status in the United States.

Mr. Broadbent: Would the minister be in a position now to inform the House as to the intention of the General Motors Corporation in Canada vis-à-vis DISC?

Mr. Pepin: I will have to ask my hon. friend for some patience. I have said a number of times that I would be meeting these companies today and on other days of the week and that I will be reporting fully to the House at the next opportunity, which appears to be the debate on the budget.

INDUSTRY

REASON FOR EXPANSION OF OPERATIONS BY VERSATILE MANUFACTURING LIMITED IN UNITED STATES RATHER THAN MANITOBA

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the fact that Versatile Manufacturing Limited has decided to expand its operations in the United States rather than in Manitoba, can the minister inform the House whether his officers have met the officials of Versatile Manufacturing to determine whether the decision was taken as a result of the United States DISC program or because of the taxation policies of the federal government or the policies of the Manitoba government?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, Versatile has had a subsidiary in the United States for the last ten years. They have now decided to expand that operation in the United States. They have held conversations with Premier Schreyer and with officers of my department and they say that the DISC program was not taken into consideration in the upcoming expansion.

Mr. Mazankowski: Can the minister advise the House whether his officials have undertaken an investigation and have had discussions with the officers of Versatile with a view to determining whether indeed the DISC program did have an effect on the decision?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I just answered that question by saying that the company officers say that it has not had any influence. I cannot swear on their behalf that it did not, but that is the information they have provided to us.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

FORECAST OF UNEMPLOYMENT LEVELS TO END OF 1973 BY UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO INSTITUTE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. David Lewis (York South): My question is directed to the Minister of Finance, Mr. Speaker. I gave him notice of the subject matter. Can he inform the House whether his department has received as yet the quarterly unemployment forecast from the University of Toronto Institute for the Quantitative Analysis of Social and Economic Policy, dated April 26, 1972, which projects seasonally adjusted levels of unemployment in excess of 6 per cent to the end of 1973, and unemployment as high as 6.3 per cent—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member knows that the purpose of a question is not to convey information but rather to seek information. I would think that perhaps the first part of the hon. member's question, for the time being anyway, might be to the point and the minister might be allowed to reply to that part of the hon. member's question.

Mr. Lewis: I was almost finished, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member might allow the minister to reply to his question. If he seeks further information he may ask a supplementary question.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I did not know whether the hon. member was finished. I rather thought he was.

I want to thank the hon. gentleman for giving me notice of his question. Unfortunately I just received it when I came into the House. Recently my department received this forecast, which I understand is a preliminary forecast only. It is now being studied by officials in my department. I might say to the hon. member that we constantly receive the results of a variety of forecasts and we are continually analysing and comparing them with our own economic model. Whatever forecasts I give, I will give on Monday night.

Mr. Lewis: In view of the level of unemployment forecast for 1973 as I have indicated and the level of 6.3 per cent for the last quarter of this year forecast by the institute, do these forecasts vary significantly from the forecasts made in his own department regarding unemployment levels in 1972 and 1973?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, forecasting depends on the assumptions you make, and I should like to compare those assumptions with our own before giving an answer to the hon. member's question. But it is something I might deal with.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Are you assuming an election?

Mr. Lewis: May I ask the minister a question arising out of the fact that on a number of occasions he has said he is not in the business of forecasting, which I presume also applies to the department that advises him. If that is the case, what exactly is the forecasting unit numbering some 36 people in his department doing and how much is it costing the taxpayers to have a forecasting unit that does not forecast?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest that that is argument. If the hon. member is actually seeking this information, the question might be placed on the order paper.

Mr. Lewis: I have a further short supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Do I gather from the minister's answer that he has made an undertaking to the House that in his budget he will deal with forecasts of the levels of unemployment in 1972 and 1973 and that since he refused to deal with my questions now he will definitely deal with them in his budget speech? Is that an undertaking to the House?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I will talk about the art of forecasting on Monday night.

UNEMPLOYMENT IN ATLANTIC PROVINCES—ACTION IN LIGHT OF CAPITAL INVESTMENT FORECASTS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion who no doubt is familiar with the alarm expressed by APEC regarding the unemployment outlook in the Atlantic provinces. Is he aware of the disappointing capital investment forecasts to which APEC has drawn attention, and does he propose to take any action in this regard?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): I think that the House will be glad to learn that Michelin is expanding, as it has announced today, and is going to create about 1,200 new jobs.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Later:]

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary to a previous question with respect to the 1,200 jobs referred to by the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Two years ago he referred to 1,200 miners being employed in a colliery that will not be open for another two years. Are those the same 1,200 he is talking about now?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

AIRPORTS

PICKERING TOWNSHIP SITE—SUGGESTED APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSION OF INQUIRY—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. I know he will not make a false statement, like the Minister of Supply and Services—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Withdraw!

Mr. Diefenbaker: —who went outside the House yesterday and said he was wrong.

Some hon. Members: Withdraw!

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I was not going to rise on a question of privilege but in view of the interruption of that inconnu in the back seat I want to say this. Yesterday the Minister of Supply and Services said the Royal Canadian Mounted Police had suggested the removal of the Canadian coat of arms—

Mr. Sharp: He never said that.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —in the interests of security. That statement was false, because he went outside the chamber to appear on television and said he was not referring to that when he answered the question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Minister of Transport about the situation in connection with the Pickering airport. Has he received a request from John J. Robinette, counsel for the People or Planes Committee, suggesting that as the location of this airport is a very controversial one and "the first and basic question which arises in the minds of most people is whether a second airport in the vicinity of Toronto is needed at the present time," and suggesting the setting up—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —the appointment of a commission—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, they are ringing bells. They will be wringing their hands in a few months.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: In that letter, he suggested that a commissioner be appointed under the Inquiries Act, "to inquire into and to report upon the question" as to whether such a second airport is now needed. Has he received such a request and what action, if any, is going to be taken thereon?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I received the request and it is presently being considered.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The right hon. member for Prince Albert on a supplementary.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I like this.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: The louder they howl, Mr. Speaker, the more you realize they are here only for a short time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I come back to the second part of the question. The minister is usually very facile and very truthful in his answers. Is any action going to be taken thereon, or is it going to be considered?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, the only answer I can give to the right hon. gentleman who is well known for longevity in more ways than one, including the length of his questions—I had a job getting the kernel out of this one—

Mr. Ricard: Was it sweet?

Mr. Jamieson: I can only report that I received the letter yesterday or the day before, certainly early this week or late last week, and I have not had an opportunity to look at it in detail but I will be discussing it with my officials. I can assure the right hon. gentleman of one thing, namely, that there will be a reply to the letter.

HOUSING

MODIFICATION OF CMHC BUILDING STANDARDS—DISCUSSION WITH PROVINCES—AVAILABILITY OF HOUSING TO LOW-INCOME FAMILIES

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a question of the Minister of State for Urban Affairs?

In view of recent news reports, would the hon. minister confirm or deny that his department is presently discussing with the provinces the matter of amending the building regulations administered by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation in order to reduce interest rates and enable more low income families to buy houses?

[English]

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as I have confirmed in the House, there are discussions going on with the provinces which I expect will lead to amendments to the National Housing Act designed to assist low-income people to buy houses.

TRADE

UNITED STATES DISC PROGRAM—SUGGESTED APPEARANCE BEFORE COMMITTEE OF UNION AND COMPANY OFFICIALS INVOLVED

Mr. E. F. Whelan (Essex): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary to a previous question. Because of the urgency of the matter I would like to ask the President of the Privy Council if he would consider recommending to the House that the proper committee hear the union officials and company officials who are involved in the DISC program?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to consider the suggestion and discuss it with my colleague, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

TRANSPORT

NEWFOUNDLAND FERRY SERVICE—INQUIRY AS TO REPLACEMENT VESSEL FOR THE "PATRICK MORRIS"

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. What progress has he made or is he able to announce that he has succeeded in obtaining a suitable additional vessel for the Newfoundland route in replacement for the Patrick Morris so that the possibility of having to transfer the John Hamilton Grey to that service will be eliminated?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think the second part of the question is not correct in the sense that this would not be the way in which we would proceed except in an absolute emergency. In other words, I have assured Prince Edward Island that the John Hamilton Grey will continue in that service on the same basis as last year. With respect to the first part of the question, there are people from my department and others now searching the market, and there is a reasonable prospect that we will get a rail car ferry as opposed to a roll-on, roll-off for the Newfoundland gulf service.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

MACKENZIE VALLEY HIGHWAY PROJECT—INQUIRY AS TO LETTING CONTRACTS AND CONDUCTING SURVEYS—POSSIBLE SURVEY BY ROYAL CANADIAN ENGINEERS

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. What government department—I presume either Indian Affairs or Public Works—will be letting the contracts for the proposed new highway up the Mackenzie River valley, and what detailed surveys, if any, of the route have been carried out?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Subject to verification with my colleague, Mr. Speaker, I believe the surveys are going to be conducted under the direction of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if any consideration has been given to placing the Royal Canadian Engineers in charge of this project?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I do not believe consideration has been given to that. I will gladly make the suggestion to the Minister of National Defence.

Has the National Capital Commission made a contract, or is it considering the making of a contract, with the Pinkerton Agency, a subsidiary of an American firm, for providing the services in the national capital area now provided by the Canadian Corps of Commissionaires?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I shall have to make inquiries along that line.

[English]

—so that Canadians will have a national holiday, multicultural and bilingual, to symbolize national unity?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe the hon. member will be pleased to hear that the government intends to introduce shortly a bill concerning civic holidays—in a very few days, I repeat—and I am pleased to see that the applause raised by the question of the hon. member makes us expect that this bill will very quickly be passed by the House.

HEALTH

EPIDEMIC OF INFLUENZA AT REPULSE BAY—NUMBER OF DEATHS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have an urgent question that I have been trying to ask for two days of the Minister of National Health and Welfare concerning an influenza-type disease that has already stricken a third of the population at Repulse Bay and caused two deaths in that community. Would the minister inform the House whether there have been any further deaths as a result of this epidemic and what his department is doing to check the spread of the disease and alleviate the suffering that is apparently going on?

• (1510)

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Yes, Mr. Speaker, when we found out about the outbreak—I think it is influenza according to our latest information—we sent three doctors into the area and one nurse. One of them is the director of our epidemiology section. We have done a house to house survey in the area. Not knowing specifically what strain it was, we ordered a special vaccine from Washington. I expect to have a complete report later this afternoon when one of the doctors returns to Ottawa. I hope very much, as I know the hon. member does, that we have the situation under control.

Mr. Nielsen: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker. The minister overlooked informing the House whether there had been any further deaths in addition to the two already reported.

Mr. Munro: Mr. Speaker, I am only aware of the two that were reported. I understand that one had a heart condition, which was undoubtedly exacerbated by contracting influenza, and there was the other one to which the hon. member referred. They are the only ones I am aware of.

SUGGESTED SUMMER OPERATION OF MEDICAL SCHOOLS TO OFFSET SHORTAGE OF DOCTORS—DISCUSSION OF SHARING OF COST WITH PROVINCES

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the increasing need for general practitioners now acknowledged by the minister himself, has the minister held discussions with the provinces in order to share the necessary financing required to operate medical schools through the summer semester?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, it is not just a question of more doctors and the expense that is involved in training more doctors. Many recommendations are included in the joint study undertaken by the federal and provincial governments to find solutions, to alleviate the problem. One of the solutions is to develop paramedical personnel who can do just as well a lot of the routine work that doctors do, without the heavy expenditure of public moneys for their training.

Mr. Rynard: I should like to ask the minister if he would refer to the speech he made in Napanee in which he said that we were short of general practitioners.

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): I have a supplementary to the previous question. In view of the high rate of unemployment among general PhDs, I wonder if the minister would consider adopting a program whereby a PhD could convert his degree to an MD?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, I am not able to, but I hope within the next few weeks.

[English]

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I would advise the hon. member that it is not the function of my department to police the manner in which the law is being applied in this particular area. BRIDGES

RICHMOND, B.C.—ACCESS SYSTEM TO HUDON STREET BRIDGE—DINSMORE BRIDGE ALIGNMENT—GOVERNMENT DECISION

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Has his department yet made a decision on a road plan with the municipality of Richmond in British Columbia for the access system to the Hudon Street bridge and Dinsmore bridge alignment to Sea Island?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the answer is yes to the extent that we have rearranged the design and have submitted it to the Richmond town or city council. The only thing I am not certain about is whether we have total approval from the council as to the design.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I doubt very much whether the question should have been allowed in the first instance. There may be an element of national interest and urgency which escapes the Chair, but the question having been allowed perhaps the hon. member might ask a brief supplementary.

[Mr. Howard (Skeena).]

Mr. Aiken: Will the department now release the municipality from the restriction on release of the plan so that it may be discussed generally by the citizens?

Mr. Jamieson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. If such restrictions exist, and they may for some purpose of which I am not aware, I will look into it and be glad to do that.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

DENMARK—DENIAL THAT DANISH FISHING CAUSE OF DEPLETION OF ATLANTIC SALMON STOCKS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In light of the statement made by the counsellor of the Danish Embassy in Ottawa that there exists no scientific evidence that Danish fishing for Atlantic salmon is the cause of the recent decline of the salmon population in the spawining rivers, can the minister advise if he shares the contrary view expressed by the Minister of Fisheries and if this view is being presented to the government of Denmark either through the embassy in Ottawa or in Copenhagen?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, quite obviously, unless I shared the view and unless the whole of the government shared the views of the Minister of Fisheries, we would not have a very good case. We do have a good case. We believe there is fishing for salmon on the high seas that does affect the catch of salmon throughout the world and the survival of that species. This is the point of view we have urged upon the Danish government and why we believe they should co-operate with us.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There are two minutes left before the end of the question period and perhaps we should try to limit supplementaries.

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister if he has conveyed to the government of Denmark the invitation issued by the Minister of Fisheries to the people of Canada to avoid the purchase of Danish goods?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, as I said yesterday, the Minister of Fisheries was expressing a personal view. He prefaced it by saying that he did not advocate any change in Canadian government policy. If my hon. friend would like to emulate the Minister of Fisheries in this sort of appeal, we would have no objection.

Does the minister share the view expressed by the spokesman for the Danish Embassy as to the importance of an immediate and effective clean-up of pollution in Canadian salmon rivers on the Atlantic coast?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker. My colleague the Minister of Fisheries spoke equally strongly on that question. I hope we will have the co-operation of the provinces in cleaning up those streams.

INTENTION OF GOVERNMENT RESPECTING PROCLAMATION OF ARCTIC WATERS POLLUTION PREVENTION ACT

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, the other day I asked the Minister of the Environment to tell us why it is that the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act had not yet been proclaimed after almost two years and he said that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development would be making a statement. I wonder whether the minister is ready to do that now?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, only the legislation applying to inland waters of Northwest Territories has been proclaimed. The Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act has not been proclaimed as yet because if we did so now, without having first settled all aspects of the problem, we should have to close down the port of Churchill. I do not believe the people in Manitoba would be happy about that.

TRANSPORT

PROPOSED LINKING OF KOOTENAY AND ELK RAILWAY TO U.S. LINE—AMENDMENT OF RAILWAY ACT TO ENABLE TRANSPORT COMMISSION TO CONSIDER PUBLIC INTEREST

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that the Kootenay and Elk Railway Company looks upon the recent Supreme Court decision as a green light to proceed with its proposed railway to join up with the Burlington-Northern, can the minister tell the House whether he has decided to bring in amendments to the Railway Act which would give the Canadian Transport Commission the authority to take Canada's public interest into account when deciding upon applications such as that made by the Kootenay and Elk Railway?

• (1520)

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I believe I answered that question a few days ago in response to a question asked by the leader of the hon. gentleman's party. The whole question of that judgment is now being examined. It is a very lengthy document, and I am still waiting for word as to just what the actual, legal interpretation is.

Mr. Harding: In view of the urgency of this matter, can the minister indicate when he is likely to make the decision known to the House?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure that the two issues are that closely related. In other words, I understand that there is ample room for appeal or some further action with regard to the decision of the Supreme Court. That may take some considerable time. I would take it that—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We have reached the end of the question period. I feel sorry for a number of hon. members in the back rows who have not had an opportunity to ask their questions. I invite hon. members in the front rows to reflect on the situation of hon. members in the back rows—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: —who from day to day find it difficult to obtain what I consider to be their fair share of questioning time in the question period. I might perhaps be permitted to recognize quickly the hon. member for Sainte-Marie for a brief question before calling orders of the day.

AIRPORTS

STE. SCHOLASTIQUE—ALLEGED DIVERSION OF FEDERAL GRANTS—USE FOR OTHER PURPOSES

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I was getting discouraged, as I have a question for the hon. Minister of Transport. It concerns the Ste. Scholastique airport, and particularly the serious accusations brought forward by the Liberal member for Argenteuil in the national assembly of Quebec to the effect that the major part of the $40 million grant for assistance to municipalities in that area has been diverted and used for other purposes.

Could the Minister of Transport clarify the matter and tell us to what extent this allegation is accurate?

Mr. Speaker: I am under the impression that this question was put yesterday—

[English]

If I am wrong, perhaps the minister might reply briefly to the hon. member's question.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have made some inquiries. At the moment we are simply going on the news report, not having seen any transcript of what was said. Speaking in terms of federal allocations for the Ste. Scholastique airport I might say that to the best of our knowledge and ability these have been spent for the projects for which they were designated.

[Translation]

STE. SCHOLASTIQUE—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION OF INCREASED CONSTRUCTION COSTS

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a supplementary question.

Since the minister was not in the House yesterday, he was unable to answer the question put to him. I should like to ask him another one, namely whether he intends to report to the House in the near future or to make a statement concerning the increase in the construction costs and the expenditures for the Ste. Scholastique airport, which will go beyond the estimates of $180 million?

[English]

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): No, Mr. Speaker, other than to say that the published report to that effect is not correct. The budget estimates have not been exceeded by anything like that amount and are quite within the normal differences that one would expect on a project of this size.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I notice the hon. member for Lisgar, the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville and the hon. member for Selkirk, among others in the back row, who are still waiting for an opportunity to ask their questions. Perhaps we might consult tomorrow and try to give them an opportunity to ask their questions early in the question period.

Mr. Rowland: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I did not raise it earlier because I did not want to disrupt the question period. I should like to raise it while the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce is still in the House because it is related to his reply to a question asked by the hon. member for Vegreville, I believe. The minister implied, whether intentionally or otherwise, that Premier Schreyer had indicated that the move of Versatile Manufacturing Limited to North Dakota was in no way due to DISC. I think Premier Schreyer said precisely the reverse, and I wonder whether the minister would care to correct the record.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Again, this is the same type of question which was asked yesterday by way of a point of order. I suggest to hon. members that it is not in order to seek to obtain information in this manner by way of a point of order. I would have hoped that the question could have been asked during the question period, if there had been time to recognize the hon. member. I appreciate very well that he cannot be held responsible for not being recognized. Perhaps the minister might give that information tomorrow during the question period.

[Mr. Speaker.]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. MacLean: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the government House leader the usual question about what business the government plans to place before parliament in the coming week. Perhaps he would be good enough to be particularly specific about the business for tomorrow and also about the business for Tuesday and Wednesday on the assumption, which I hope is correct, that the budget debate will not be resumed until Thursday.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, today we will continue with Bill C-5. Tomorrow, whether that bill is completed today or not, we will begin with Bill C-195, the adult occupational training act, and return to the farm credit bill if Bill C-195 is completed tomorrow, followed by Bill C-7, the explosives act. For next week, I should like to designate the business tomorrow and would indicate to my hon. friend that it is proposed to resume the adjourned budget debate on Thursday, May 11. In that connection, Mr. Speaker, may I suggest that under Standing Order 60 an order of the day be designated, so that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) can present the budget statement at eight o'clock and also in order that the House may indicate, through a special order, that the debate on whatever government business is before the House on the afternoon of next Monday shall be adjourned so that we may begin consideration of the order of the day at eight o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: Before I put the question, I will recognize the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre who rises on a supplementary.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary with reference to the business of the House. In view of the urgency indicated yesterday by the Prime Minister with respect to the foreign takeover review bill, can the government House leader say when it is intended to call the debate on the second reading of that bill?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I had considered calling it for tomorrow, but I have deferred that decision in order to give members of the House an opportunity to examine more fully the profoundity of that bill.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, since that does not take any time at all, can the minister say whether the bill will be called next week?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I cannot give that assurance at the moment.

Mr. Stanfield: The Prime Minister is not in any hurry to get that bill through.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member for Edmonton Centre rising on a point of order?

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, I have requested a number of times more copies of Bill C-7. We have experienced difficulty in obtaining this bill from the distribution office. I wonder whether it would be possible to get a few extra copies?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member knows that that question ought to be asked in a different way, by communicating either with the Clerk's office or with officials of the House. The hon. member's request has been noted.

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder if it would be out of order for me to ask a question of the Minister of National Health and Welfare in order to clear the air. In view of rumours—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member seeks to ask a question by raising a point of order. Again, I suggest to hon. members that if the hon. member for Simcoe North is given that opportunity by the House a number of hon. members who have not even had an opportunity to ask a first question today should be given the same opportunity and privilege. I will inquire whether the House agrees to the hon. member asking a supplementary question.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Speaker, I apologize to the House. It has just come to my attention that there is a rumour circulating to the effect that Director General Craig of the non-medical use of drugs directorate has resigned. I wonder if the minister could make a statement to clear the air.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I inquired whether there was unanimous consent to pursue the question period more than ten minutes after it had expired and there is not consent. Is the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville rising on a point of order?

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I rise to seek your guidance. The Minister of Regional Economic Expansion will not be here tomorrow and, as you know, we are trying to get him to appear before the Standing Committee on Regional Economic Expansion. I wonder if he will appear today, on Monday or Tuesday, or as soon as possible?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Before calling orders of the day may I, as suggested by the government House leader, inquire whether an order shall be made for the consideration of the budget business at eight o'clock next Monday. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is so ordered. Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

FARM CREDIT ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING LOANS AND POWERS AND CAPITAL OF CORPORATION

The House resumed, from Wednesday, May 3, consideration of the motion of Mr. Olson that Bill C-5, to amend the Farm Credit Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture and the amendment of Mr. Korchinski (p. 1872).

• (1530)

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I rise to continue my remarks on Bill C-5. Clause 1 of the bill gives the Farm Credit Corporation carte blanche to carry out every wish of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) by order in council. This has to do with the implementation of the so-called small farm adjustment program.

I stated last evening that I read an article in the May 8, 1971 edition of the Calgary Herald headed "Olson seeks to reduce the number of small farms". This is the whole aim of this program. Under this legislation, the Farm Credit Corporation will be handed the job of proceeding with the eradication of many of the small farms. The minister shakes his head in a negative manner. I wish to quote from the article briefly:

> Agriculture minister Bud Olson is trying to sell to farm organizations and the provinces a sweeping plan to reduce the number of farms in Canada.

I underline the word "reduce". There is nothing clearer than that. The article continues:

> Already, the plan has run into opposition from the provinces and farm organizations.

The plan has been in existence for over a year, and no province has accepted this legislation. The Standing Committee on Agriculture has not held up the plan. Why has it not been accepted? It is basically because farmers do not like a plan that will eradicate many of them. The article continues:

> It would also leave the country with a more efficient agriculture industry, something Ottawa wants badly.

There have been some denials of that interpretation. We wonder how far this is going. It is interesting to note that the minister in charge of this program is a former member of the social credit party. His parliamentary secretary, who spoke yesterday, is also a former social crediter. He said yesterday, as recorded at page 1880 of Hansard, and I quote:

> We cannot expect drastic changes because too many production units are involved in farming.

There it is. He, too, thinks there should be a reduction in the number of farmers. When looking at the arrears on loans made by the Farm Credit Corporation, I asked the manager of that corporation if he could relate those people who are in arrears to the size of their operation. I asked if most of them fell within a particular segment of the industry and whether he could categorize them. He said there were people in arrears with large, small and middle size farms, and that no pattern was evolving. If there is no pattern evolving in the arrears on loans made by the Farm Credit Corporation, how can it be predicted that if we got rid of all or most of the small farmers we would have a more efficient agriculture industry? We wonder where the idea for this plan came from.

When researching the problem of solving that question, I came across Volume 5 No. 5 of the "Canadian Farm Economics" published by the Department of Agriculture in December, 1970. If one considers that this program was introduced on March 8, 1971, the date chronologically falls in the right area. This article was written by two people in the Department of Agriculture at that time. This article, which appears at page 13, is headed "Adjustment Policy". That is exactly what this program is called. It points out that a certain percentage of commercial farms have the potential to become viable and a certain percentage of farms lack that potential. The article reads:

Hence the need for accelerating the transfer of people out of agriculture, provided that people want to leave agriculture, and provided that there are off-farm opportunities for them.

The program deals with exactly that. I go back to the newspaper clipping from the Calgary Herald of May 8:

—two major programs—a land transfer plan and counselling services. The farmer's first contact with the program would come through a special adjustment counsellor. He would help a farm family sort out the opportunities both on and off the farm.

If the farmer decides to stay, a farm management specialist would step in to help him develop a sound commercial farm. If necessary, the help would include credit to help buy more land. The farmer who decides to leave would either get training for a new job, or simply go into early retirement.

This is what it is all about, get the farmer out of farming. It is interesting to note the number of difficulties and changes of opinion. I have a newspaper article which appeared in the April 15, 1972 edition of the Montreal Gazette. It is headed "A Chance for Youth, Small farming need not fade from our scene". I will not read the entire article. I agree with that concept. I repeat, Mr. Owen, the manager of the Farm Credit Corporation, when asked about the arrears situation, could not identify that particular problem as related only to the small farmer.

I wish to read from page 5 of, "Federal Farm Credit and Related Statistics", published by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics with regard to arrears and difficulties in agriculture. I noticed that the Minister of Agriculture said things were getting better. What does the manager for the Farm Credit Corporation have to say?

About three million dollars were loaned for housing, down from ten million three years earlier. With more difficult economic conditions, expenditures for farm housing tend to be postponed more than loans for other purposes.

In other words, he recognizes that the past few years have been difficult for agriculture.

The amendment put forward by the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) suggests two things. Those suggestions correspond with those made in the article headed "A Chance for Youth". They correspond with what the hon. member for Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Lessard) said yesterday, namely, that the average age of farmers is 55 and we should be encouraging young people to become interested in farming. There will be a special forgiveness clause for a young man getting into agriculture and a postponement of the payment of interest on loans taken out. In my opinion, this will help many of the agricultural conditions.

The hon. member for Lac-Saint-Jean quoted from one table in this publication. It appears at page 37 and is with regard to the increase in farm values over the past 20 years. He caught my interjection that farmers live poor and die rich. What I meant by that was that a farmer works and contributes to the value of his property. He improves the property, that is the fences and buildings. Naturally, over a period of 20 years, the property should increase in value. It is only natural to think that, as a result of these improvements and inflation, the land value will increase over a period of 20 years.

The hon. member referred to only one table in a publication that is filled with statistics. It is the only table that projects any increase in prosperity in the agricultural scene whatsoever. What will happen to that increased value in 20 years, now that this government has implemented a capital gains tax? There may be a similar increase in land value in the next 20 years, but with a capital gains tax what will happen to this land, some of which may be owned by the Farm Credit Corporation? With a capital gains tax, what will happen if a father attempts to pass the farm on to his son? He would also like to pass on the debt, but that would be very difficult.

Agriculture is in a very difficult situation today. The minister suggested that things are pretty good. Table 37, which appears at page 62 of this publication, outlines gross and net incomes of farmers by province. I am not going to read the figures for every province, only the total for Canada. From 1961 to 1966, the average was $1,462,000,000. In 1967, the figure was $1,475,000,000. In 1968, it was $1,700,000,000—I am rounding these figures off—and in 1970 it was $1,200,000,000, or, more accurately, $1,233,000,000. These figures give us an idea as to the extent to which farm income has declined. Is it any wonder farmers are in difficulty?

What has been the situation in connection with arrears in loan repayment? The hon. member for Mackenzie put on record yesterday some figures which had been presented as evidence before the committee, showing that the farmers of Alberta were in arrears last year in the repayment of loans to the extent of 21 per cent. In 1970, the figure was 15 per cent. So, there has been an increase in the amount of arrears in one year by something like 25 per cent. Alberta is a prosperous province. The cattle industry is supposed to be doing well. Why should there have been such a marked increase in the amount of arrears on loans? The same pattern appears in the case of Saskatchewan and in the case of Manitoba. If conditions had been so great, why has difficulty arisen in connection with repayment?

One can look at other tables in this publication. On page 58 we find table No. 32 consisting of indexes of farm prices of agricultural products and prices of goods and services used by farmers. There has been a generally downward trend in farm prices since 1966. In that year, the index of farm prices stood at 307,—in 1970 it was 296. It is slowly declining. What has happened to the cost of the services and goods the farmer must use? In 1966, the index stood at 343. In 1970, it was 412. So, on the one hand, the farmer has to meet ever increasing costs, while on the other the prices he receives for his products have failed to rise correspondingly. It is all very well to say that some kind of subsidy is required. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) made a statement, reported, I believe, in the Calgary Albertan of February 3—this was after the great speech he made in Montreal announcing that hog raisers would benefit by $5 million.

Mr. Olson: Hear, hear!

Mr. Horner: I note that someone here is listening. I always appreciate that. The Prime Minister said this: "It is becoming less and less acceptable for the consumer to bear the cost of the farmers inefficiency." Well, the Prime Minister has made many memorable statements, but this is one which no farmer should ever forget. It is comparable with the question he asked in Winnipeg: "Why should I sell your wheat?"

Mr. Olson: That was not quoted correctly, either.

Mr. Horner: That was an astonishing statement to make—that it was becoming less and less acceptable for the consumer to bear the cost of the farmers inefficiency. How does the farmer compare with other producers in terms of efficiency? Table 31 of the book from which I have already quoted outlines the situation, under the heading "Output per person employed in agriculture". In 1961, the basic index figure is set at 100. By 1969, it has risen to 166.7. Compare this with productivity per person employed in commercial non-agricultural industries. Again, in 1961, the index figure was 100. By 1966, output per person had risen to 121. So the farmer is obviously not so inefficient. The only conclusion one can reach is that his performance has been above par compared with that of the rest of the economy. The government, however, fails to recognize this fact.

I turn, now, to another aspect of this subject. Why do the loan accounts of small farmers in the three prairie provinces show larger arrears than is the case in any other part of Canada? Where are the small farmers? According to table 28 there are 130,000 small farmers in Canada, whose holdings have a capital value of less than $20,000. Nearly 41,000 of these farms are in Quebec. I listened with interest to the hon. member from the Social Credit party who spoke yesterday. He did not really expand on this subject, but I wonder whether the farmers in Quebec really believe that if there were 40,000 fewer of them the rest would be better off. I doubt it. The hon. member for Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Lessard) told the House it was not fair to say that 7.5 per cent of the farmers in his province were in arrears, because only 6 per cent of the farmers in Quebec received loans to begin with—no one really borrowed. This is not, in fact, the case.

In 1970 5,700 loans were made in the Province of Quebec and, in 1971, another 5,700 were made. That is a substantial number of loans in one province. The farmers there are borrowing money, too, but for one reason or another the agriculture industry is less profitable on the prairies than it is in the rest of Canada. This is the only conclusion I can draw. One must take land prices and land ownership into consideration. According to one of these tables between 88 per cent and 90 per cent of the farmers in Quebec and Ontario own their own land, whereas in the prairie provinces the figure is close to 60 per cent. The others are renting the land they farm. It is only natural, I suppose, that the Farm Credit Corporation would make most of their loans in areas where land is being rented. I should like to think that this is so, and, in fact, this has been the case. About two-thirds of the loans are made in the prairie provinces, but one must remember that two-thirds of the production comes from there—including the prairie provinces and Ontario.

Mr. Olson: And Ontario?

Mr. Horner: And Ontario. Why have difficulties over repayment arisen? It is well known that the prairie provinces are major grain growers. We have excelled in our ability to grow grain. The sad thing is that the final, realized price for wheat last year was the lowest in the last ten years; the final realized price for barley last year was the second lowest in the last ten years. And when one takes into consideration the fact that barley production was subsidized to the tune of $11 million by the government—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Horner: The minister pounds his desk.

Mr. Mazankowski: Not by choice.

Mr. Horner: As my hon. friend from Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) said, the minister did not really take this action by choice. We on this side of the House know that if the great stabilization bill had passed the $11 million would have come out of farmers pockets.

Mr. Olson: There would have been $40 million more.

Mr. Horner: It would have been about $40 million less. If the minister would like to debate this subject with me at any time, I will take him on in any hall and in front of any cameras and microphones in Canada. He cannot be the winner of that argument because the figures will prove him wrong.

Mr. Olson: I will take the hon. member on right here.

Mr. Horner: Well, bring in the bill again.

Mr. Olson: The farmers will not let you go through all that again.

Mr. Horner: I went back through the records for 22 years. I could not find a year in which farmers received less per bushel for oats than they did last year. I felt I should not be required to go back more than 22 years to make my point. The least for wheat, the least for barley, the least for oats. Is it any wonder that the farmers in the three prairie provinces who are major grain growers are in arrears in repaying their loans? It is no wonder that the arrears continue to grow rather than diminish. The arrears amount to $6 million in Saskatchewan, $6 million in Alberta and $2-3/4 million in the province of Manitoba, mainly because less money is loaned there.

• (1550)

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Horner: After I am through. Let us take a look at where these non-viable farms are which are causing some of the trouble, and which represent the reason for bringing in the great small farms adjustment program. In another table at page 60 of this same publication, we see the percentage of viable farms varies from province to province. In the province of Quebec, only 30.3 per cent are viable compared to 55 per cent in the province of British Columbia, 51 per cent in the province of Alberta, 50 per cent in the province of Saskatchewan and so on. The next comparable figure to Quebec is 35.7 per cent. One could read figures at length from this book to prove beyond a shadow of a doubt that the farmers on the prairies under today's situation are in a much worse position than they have been in any other period of years one might mention.

Mr. Olson: 1972.

Mr. Horner: The minister is boasting about 1972. In his speech he said that conditions are improving up. They have to be improving because they had been down so low. We have to improve our record because arrears on loans are increasing. If the minister is suggesting that incomes will be higher or better in 1972, I say to him and through him to the manager of the Farm Credit Corporation, that I hope the manager of the Farm Credit Corporation will not foreclose any more mortgages than should be necessary. I want to see the farmer have every possible break. I know that at page 8 of the small farms adjustment program, it is suggested that the government will get into the land business. It nails down four points as follows: a listing service to provide relevant information to prospective buyers and sellers; incentive grants to encourage prospective vendors to sell; special credit facilities to encourage prospective purchasers to buy and, finally, the authority to enter the market directly and purchase and resell farms as the need arises.

So, we will have the federal government competing with the Saskatchewan government in that regard. I hope they do not force land prices to rise to such an extent in that province that the farmer cannot pay, so then these wealthy governments will reap their money from the taxpayers and spend it in a glorious way. Surely, this bill is a glaring example of what the government is not doing. It is creating a situation in which the age limit is being reduced from 24 to 18. It may be 19 in some provinces, 18 in others and 21 in others, but only 2 per cent of loans made by the Farm Credit Corporation have been made to farmers under age 25. Therefore, I do not believe the reduction will mean that there will be very many more loans. Then, they have increased the amount that may be borrowed from $40,000 for a single individual to $100,000. If a person cannot meet the payments on $40,000, why should we assume he would be able to meet the payments on $100,000. The rejuvenated Social Crediter has forgotten about the high interest rates charged for Farm Credit Corporation loans, which have been better than 8 per cent for two years.

I listened to the minister on Tuesday evening. He balanced the problem. He asked whether we should refinance, whether we could do it this way or another way. He came to no conclusion. The minister did not have an answer. He said we could do as Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation does and adjust the interest rates every five years. This bill, however, does not include such a provision. I read over again what he said yesterday. He went back over the same problem and came to no conclusion. The bill glaringly omits dealing with the obvious problem that 13,000 loans were made by the Farm Credit Corporation at interest rates above 8 per cent. The government or the Farm Credit Corporation, if my memory serves me right, do not intend to give the farmers an opportunity to refinance even five years from now.

I am firmly convinced that when inflation hits in Canada it will be at the rate it is in Brazil, but I did not know that the minister was prepared to point this out. He said on Tuesday night that next year interest rates will be back up to 8 per cent, 9 per cent or 10 per cent, and that really he might be doing the farmers some harm if he gave them an opportunity to adjust interest rates in five years. Why do we not have a clause which would allow the interest rate to be adjusted every five years as is the case with Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation? When you borrow money to buy a home, the mortgage always contains a clause in respect of refinancing. However, this minister does not want this because he believes interest rates will be higher and we had better remain where we are at 8¾ per cent.

At one time the minister campaigned across Alberta saying that a 2 per cent interest rate was all that was necessary. The position of the Social Credit party was that 2 per cent on loans was all that was necessary, and that high interest rates represented an evil. Now, the minister will not even allow the farmers the right to refinance, and he holds the rate tightly at 8¾ per cent. Then, in a recent speech as reported in the Regina Leader Post of March 13, 1972 the minister said:

> Free trade is a great thing when it works, but unfortunately there aren't enough constraints within the free trade system for us to accept that this is the way marketing will be.

In that speech he stated that there must be restraint built into the marketing system, and he now shows the country what he calls a marketing system. It is something like the small farm adjustment program. No one knows what is in it. The hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) questioned the manager of the Farm Credit Corporation when he appeared before the committee. He was dealing with one particular aspect, I believe the special credit section, and the manager of the Farm Credit Corporation said that he believed it had been dropped. On another point, the manager said that he was not sure but he believed that had also been dropped.

So, we do not know what clause 1 of the bill really means when it says that the corporation has all the powers necessary to carry out such duties or functions as may be assigned to it by the Governor in Council. We do not really know what that clause means. No wonder the minister has not sold this program to any province. No province has signed the terms of the small farm program because they do not understand what this means. Perhaps the minister had adjusted the program too often. When he finds that his program has failed to gather support, he brings out another one such as the systems marketing project, or something like that. Perhaps I used the wrong title.

• (1600)

Mr. Olson: Project 75.

Mr. Horner: Project 75. There must be some advertising agency dreaming up these titles. In any event, what does Project 75 or a system marketing project mean? The interpretation I put on this is that a federal government employee will follow the product from the time it is first produced until it gets to the consumer to make sure everybody gets the best deal, a square deal, an up and up deal and everything else.

Mr. Olson: That is a wrong conclusion again.

Mr. Horner: The minister says I have come to a wrong conclusion. I wish he would explain these programs. There is one devious thing I have noticed about the members of this government, and the Minister of Agriculture is no exception in this regard, they all by-pass the normal procedures of Parliament in respect of most of their important legislation.

The government wants clause 1 accepted, so that they will never have to come back to Parliament. They can do things by order in council, designating a farm corporation and handle this thing and that thing in that way. The government will never have to produce a bill again. Perhaps this is necessary because the government has so much trouble drafting bills which meet with approval. The minister in charge of the Wheat Board (Mr. Lang) followed this practice with Operation Lift, and we have seen what it has done in respect of farm credit programs. The Government includes $1 items in the estimates and the estimates have to be passed by May 30 no matter in what state the examination of them is in the committee. Parliament has to pass them, and the member has to scurry around to find out what are the exact interpretations.

The people of this country, whether they be farmers or otherwise, are deeply concerned, frustrated, angered and annoyed at what is happening. Can you blame them? I do not think you can. We want more information as to what the government intends to do with Project 75, with the small farms adjustment program, with interest rates and now with the Farm Credit Corporation.

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I listened with a great deal of interest to the remarks of the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner), and I should like to compliment him on some of the issues he brought forward. I do not wish to deviate from the debate, but I was interested to hear the hon. member challenge the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson), to a debate in respect of the Farm Income Stabilization Plan and the benefits thereof. He suggested the minister would not win, and I think he is correct. However, I suggest the hon. member would not win either, after the stand his party took in respect of that bill last fall.

Mr. Horner: I make you the same challenge.

Farm Credit Act

Mr. Knight: When one examines the bill and the amendment, one finds it much like the sugar coating on a bitter pill. In dealing with the amendment, I suggest that the question of interest rates is one that is always before the farmer. This is a very important aspect, as the hon. Minister of Agriculture should know, being a former Social Credit member. The amendment refers to providing for partial repayment of interest when a young farmer meets performance standards. It appears that the Tory party, in moving this amendment, intends to introduce a kind of selectivity to the program. This is the very kind of selectivity they attacked last week in respect of the Family Income Security Plan.

What is a performance standard? Is there going to be some kind of bureaucracy set up to go out and examine farms to see who is up to date in performance standards? Who is to make the judgment? Is the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) going to make the judgment as to performance standards? I should hope not. That part of this amendment is selective, and is at variance with statements by members of the Conservative party in this House last week concerning other bills. This amendment to include a performance standard brings in a certain element of selectivity.

If you look at this bill in terms of its different amendments to the Farm Credit Corporation Act, you will see some changes which may possibly bring it up to date, especially those relating to the amount allowed as the borrowing level. If you look at the bill you will see certain changes suggested which, on the surface, do not appear to be of great concern.

I suggest it is the underlying motive behind the changes which is important to the farmers of Canada. I need only refer to part 1, the amendment to Section 11 of the Farm Credit Corporation Act, which gives the corporation all the powers necessary to carry out such duties or functions as may be assigned to it by the governor in council in relation to the administration of any agricultural program, or is assigned to it pursuant to any other act of the Parliament of Canada. What is the significance of that amendment, and what lies behind it? This amendment allows the government to bring in a small farm consolidation plan which it does not have to have approved by the House of Commons. This is what is behind the amendment, and it should be questioned very seriously in committee.

There are other amendments of concern, such as the one in clause 3 which would enable the corporation to make a loan under the act where in its opinion the uses of the proceeds of the loan would facilitate the efficient operation of the farm mortgaged. Under the present act, the corporation must be of the opinion that the loan is necessary for the efficient operation of the farm to be mortgaged. That sounds like nothing more than a play on words by the government. I hope the Minister of Agriculture will take the opportunity of explaining in this House and In the committee the over-all meaning of that clause.

If you carry on with an examination of the clauses you will see there are some changes which may have some merit. Let me refer to clause 2 which proposes to amend the legislation as it relates to corporations. The explanation is that this amendment will provide that loans may be made under the act only to individuals who are Canadian citizens or landed immigrants. However, it would also provide that loans may be made to farm corporations only if they are controlled by shareholders who are Canadian citizens. The real question that arises as a result of this amendment to the Farm Credit Act is who is going to be allowed to borrow funds to buy farm land, and whether or not those loans will be allowed to such non-farmers, if I may use that phrase sarcastically, as the National Grain Company and other elements of the grain business.

The report of the task force in respect of the farm adjustment resources mobility plan suggests there should be consistency in allowing loans for that kind of corporate farming, not a father and son arrangement or an arrangement between two brothers who incorporate, but corporate farming on the basis of land owned by large multinational corporations which allow the land to be farmed by employees. The fundamental question is whether the family farm, as a viable economic unit, will be preserved.

There are other changes on which I should like to comment. There is the provision which states that the total of outstanding loans made to a farmer under the act shall not exceed $100,000. If the Minister of Agriculture speaks again, he will perhaps explain section 17(1) in terms of its effect on any ventures in co-operative farming and whether or not the limit of $100,000 in terms of our modern society is sufficient. I wonder whether perhaps some changes should not be made to that limit when there are three, four or five farmers involved in a co-operative venture. Possibly the minister will explain that.

We see a change regarding the valuing of land according to productivity. It seems to me that these changes do not merit too much discussion. All these amendments to the Farm Credit Corporation Act, as I have stated before, essentially act as an umbrella and as an opportunity for this government to bring in for the coming seven years the small farm consolidation plan. When we questioned the chairman of the Farm Credit Corporation in the Standing Committee on Agriculture, he did not give us the details of the plan. But the amendment to section 11 allows the Minister of Agriculture to bring in the small farm consolidation plan. I wonder how many individuals have been called in by the Department of Agriculture when they were preparing the small farm consolidation plan. Undoubtedly, the minister has received some good advice from the public relations people regarding the manner in which he should bring this plan forward. If we look at the description of the farm adjustment and resource mobility plan, we will see that there is reason to fear the effects of the small farm consolidation plan.

The Farm Credit Corporation was set up in the beginning to assist farmers in borrowing sums of money in order to maintain a viable economic unit. But once the amendment to section 11 is passed, if it is passed, the scope of the Farm Credit Corporation will be fundamentally changed. It will deal with the socio-political aspects of farming under the amended legislation and it will deal with the nature of the lives of the people affected by in the small farm consolidation plan. When that plan is in operation, I wonder how many bureaucrats the Department of Agriculture will have to hire to implement the plan and to talk to the farmer who will have to move to the cities. When one looks at the unemployment figures one realizes that there is very little that the farmer can do in the city. How many sociologists, psychologists and new members of the Department of Agriculture will have to be hired to facilitate farmers in adjusting to a new way of life? Where does all this fit into the role of the Farm Credit Corporation as it was established originally?

Under this legislation the land transfer system, the concept of amalgamating several small farms into one large one, is taken into account. The small farm adjustment program does not take into consideration the economic and social effects it might have on the agricultural economy in Canada, both in the east and in the west. No real imagination is used with regard to the collateral needed in order to go into farming. There is no projection of the idea that young people who grew up on farms, for example in the province of Saskatchewan, who have had to go into the cities and take jobs there because, as a result of the policies of the federal government, farming brought them no income, would now like to return to farming. The province of Saskatchewan has made a number of moves in this direction, controversial though they may be. The first move was to bring in the system of land transfers to assist these young farmers in farming.

The whole concept of the small farms consolidation plan had its source in the task force report. Let there be no question about that. Last fall, the grain income stabilization policy came from the same source. The amendment to section 11 of the Farm Credit Corporation Act carries out the recommendations of the task force. The farm adjustment and resource mobility plan contains some fundamental aspects of importance to many people whom we in the House of Commons represent, including the constituents of the Minister of Agriculture in Medicine Hat. It concentrates on increasing the mobility of the land resource, enabling some farmers to increase the size of their farming operations and enabling others to get their assets out of farm real estate so that they can take advantage of non-farm income, employment or retirement opportunities. It involves a package of four programs. These are: a listing service to provide the relevant information to prospective buyers and seller; incentive grants to encourage prospective vendors to sell; special credit facilities to encourage prospective purchasers to buy; and, finally, authority to enter the market directly to purchase and resell farms as the needs arise.

I wonder if the Minister of Agriculture took into consideration the real significance of such a proposal, and the fact that it will not be put on the statute books of Canada but can only be implemented by the passing of the amendment to section 11. I think that is important. It may be good for the Department of Agriculture, in terms of a good public relations job to introduce the program in this way, but it is detrimental to the people involved if they are not allowed to have an open, formal discussion of the suggestions of the Department of Agriculture.

What is the direction of this policy? I think that is a fundamental question. When one sits in the Standing Committee on Agriculture and discusses the problems which farmers face in Canada, one finds that the officials of the Department of Agriculture, perhaps unconsciously and unknowingly, continually discuss the problems of farmers and people in farming communities from what I would call a restricted point of view, in the same way as we examine Farm Credit Corporation loans. Let them examine the problems in depth. There is never an examination of the whole question of an incomes policy and the costs of production. As was mentioned by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave), the government has had possession of the Barber royal commission report on the price of farm machinery, but has taken no action on it. At the same time organizations such as the Canadian Federation of Agriculture have made representations on an incomes program that would ensure a reasonable return to farmers, that would help keep them on the land, and that would facilitate and encourage young farmers to get into farming because they know they will get a reasonable return on the labour and capital they invest.

• (1620)

But within the department we have the Canadian Grain Commission, the Farm Credit Corporation, the Deputy Minister and others discussing this whole matter in a restricted manner, in terms of farmers and of farm units, without touching the whole question of an incomes policy. When we examine this we see it is nothing more than economic talk without social consequences, just as we have seen in the task force report on agriculture. That task force report has become the gospel of the Department of Agriculture, and the minister and the officials are the disciples. What is needed, as I have already suggested, is the development of an incomes policy for the farmers of Canada.

In this connection I need only refer to the brief which the Canadian Federation of Agriculture submitted when it met with the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Minister of Agriculture, as follows:

> We meet with you today following a year when the farmers' realized income fell to a new, disastrous low—the lowest in dollar terms for as long as comparisons make any sense; in real terms to 73 per cent of what it was ten years previously. The forecast for 1972, which we sincerely hope events will disprove, signals a further decline. The cost price squeeze has achieved a new, startling and damaging intensity.
> This must be stopped. This is the clear message from grain producers, from livestock producers, from egg and poultry producers, from milk producers, from producers of horticultural products.

The brief went on to state something related to a farm income policy which the minister should take into consideration and that would be far more beneficial than his small farm consolidation plan. I quote:

> Whereas it is necessary in the interests of the nation as a whole to maintain an efficient and viable agricultural industry;—

I might point out that one in five firms employing people who are not farmers depends on the primary products it gets from agriculture.

> Whereas the revenues obtainable from the market place are currently insufficient for the survival of primary food or agricultural production;
> Therefore it is imperative that supplementary income payments shall be paid by governments on all products which are necessarily required from the agricultural sector, in amounts when coupled with such revenues received from the markets, that will in total maintain solvency for the industry.

That is the kind of farm income policy that the government should be considering. I have already shown the kind of attitude that members of the government seem to have developed. They follow the charts up and down in terms of farmers and economically viable units, whereas if they had any real concern their attack on the problem should deal with the income of farmers and their costs of production. There are some alarming figures which indicate what has been happening. Other hon. members have referred to the amounts of arrears of farmers in the different provinces in respect of Farm Credit Corporation loans. In the province I represent, in 1971-72 the amount of those arrears totalled 21.1 per cent, up from 18.9 per cent in 1970-71, and from 11.6 per cent in 1969-70. Those are critical and telling figures respecting the income problems of farmers.

There are other telling figures which relate to clause 11 of this bill which will allow the minister and the Farm Credit Corporation to implement a small farm consolidation plan without incorporating it in legislation. The 1971 census of agriculture shows that the number of farms in 1971 was 15 per cent fewer than the number of farms in existence in 1966, a mere five years ago. In 1966 in the province of Saskatchewan there were 85,686 farms. In 1971, there were 76,970 farms, a downward variation of 10 per cent.

When the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) spoke on this bill he lambasted the provincial government of Saskatchewan for trying to tackle this problem, a problem which has not been tackled by the federal government. It is the first province in the Dominion of Canada which has gone so far as to suggest a land bank commission and a land transfer system to allow more young farmers to get on the land. Considering that, Mr. Speaker, we should not pay any attention to the nonsense the hon. member uttered. Further, the government of the province of Saskatchewan is the first government in Canada to be prepared to took into the whole problem of foreign ownership of farm land. Representing the constituency of Assiniboia, I well realize the problems in connection with farm land being bought up by American buyers. This brings me back to the amendment which was moved by the hon. member for Mackenzie.

I have already said that I am quite concerned about the manner in which a concept of performance standards, of some kind of means test for young farmers, is introduced by that amendment. For that reason I wish to move a subamendment, seconded by the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley (Mr. Thomson) as follows:

> That the amendment be amended by deleting therefrom the words "where young farmers meet performance standards," and by substituting therefor the words "for young farmers,"

If accepted, the amendment would then read:

> That Bill C-5 be not now read a second time but that it be resolved that in the opinion of this House the government should give consideration to the introduction of legislation to amend the Farm Credit Act by incorporating the incentive principle—already approved by this House in other legislation—to provide for partial non-repayment of interest for young farmers, for deferred interest payments on all loans during an initial period, for equitable adjustment of interest rates for the benefit of borrowers; and, as well, to provide for open-end loans which will allow additional borrowing without refinancing costs.

That would take out the means test which the Tory party has suggested.

Hon. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. Does the hon. member want to speak to the amendment or—

[English]

At this time the Chair is considering the amendment moved by the hon. member. After reading all the precedents that have existed in this House, and also in the United Kingdom, the Chair can find no precedent for the acceptance of an amendment to a reasoned amendment moved on second reading of a bill. On the other hand, looking at the wording of the amendment moved by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Knight) and its impact on the amendment which has been proposed, at first glance the Chair would be ready to accept it. Unless hon. members would like to express their views as to the acceptability of the change made by this subamendment, I would be ready to put the motion.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): It is moved by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Knight):

That the amendment be amended by deleting therefrom the words "where young farmers meet performance standards," and by substituting therefor the words "for young farmers,".

[Translation]

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Speaker, the measure now before us, Bill C-5, will apply to a great extent to a large number of people in my riding, therefore, I ought to state clearly my position in this regard.

First of all, I would like to mention that this measure, which affects a large number of Canadians, is worth being examined, reviewed and corrected, so that farmers get as much as possible out of it; and my hon. friend from Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) introduced an amendment designed to ecourage young farmers to this end.

If we are to expect that one day farmers as well as agricluture will continue to develop in the country, it is fair to assume that unless enough people are available to take over in this sector, it will be impossible to expect any improvement in our farmers' condition.

The hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) would like us to agree with him completely, to believe him without question and to pass as soon as possible the measure now before us.

However, the past behaviour of the minister leads us to be extremely cautious, because his attitude toward farmers invites us to ask ourselves questions. One must not forget, Mr. Speaker, that it is the present Minister of Agriculture who reduced by $10 million in 1970 the budget of the Canadian Wheat Board. One must not forget that it is this same minister who penalized milk producers for overproduction.

[Mr. Knight.]

Therefore, for all those reasons, Mr. Speaker, I deem it my duty to urge the House to proceed very carefully and to scrutinize in every detail the measure now before us. I am sure we all want farmers to get the best terms possible. As a matter of fact, when we were in power, we gave proof of what I am now saying.

One must recognize also that this government also took measures in order to improve the farmer's lot. There is much more to be done however, and it is up to both government levels to co-operate.

The main reason for my taking part in the debate this afternoon is perhaps more precisely related to that co-operation between the provincial and federal governments in the agricultural field.

One knows that according to section 95 of the Constitution, the jurisdiction in agricultural matters is divided between the provinces and the federal government. I was somewhat shocked yesterday by the diatribe which the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Lessard) aimed at the Quebec Minister of Agriculture, the hon. Mr. Toupin.

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): He deserved an answer.

Mr. Ricard: I need not say here that I do not hold a brief for him. I am not known as a staunch supporter of the Quebec Minister of Agriculture, but I see in him and in his successors a contracting party to the jurisdiction in the agricultural field.

First of all, the attack the Parliamentary Secretary made against the Minister of Agriculture for the province of Quebec was groundless, for he accused him of statements he never made. In fact, he mistook this for a committee report on the state of agriculture in Quebec. In fact, Mr. Speaker,—

Mr. Lessard (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. The Parliamentary Secretary on a question of privilege.

Mr. Lessard (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe just stated that I attributed to the Minister of Agriculture for the province of Quebec statements which are groundless. I am afraid I was sitting in front of my TV set when I very distinctly heard the said minister, the hon. Normand Toupin, state that, because of the federal government policy, it was impossible for the Quebec Department of Agriculture to establish a global policy. That is why I rose yesterday to set the record straight.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. The Chair finds it very difficult however to recognize that the question of privilege raised by the parliamentary secretary is well taken. If an hon. member should use this device every time his views or his interpretation differ from those of another hon. member, the House would be constantly debating questions of privilege or points of order. I think this is more a debate or an argument which can better be clarified at a later stage in this debate.

• (1640)

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Speaker, I would like to proceed with my comments by adding that the sharp criticism which the hon. parliamentary secretary directed against his government and probably against his minister when Bill C-176 was being debated has led him to adopt a more conciliatory attitude and that his statement surely purports to cover up this criticism. Unless he was asked by some ministers to make these comments—

Mr. Lessard (Lac-Saint-Jean): This is absolutely false.

Mr. Ricard: —since the higher authorities are unable to muster enough courage to criticize a liberal provincial minister.

At all events, I have noted that the hon. parliamentary secretary has attacked a provincial minister who is party to an agreement for setting up a general agricultural policy that would be viable and profitable to the industry; it is an attack that does no credit to the hon. parliamentary secretary.

In fact, what does that report call for? And I shall ask my hon. friends opposite from the province of Quebec whether they are in disagreement with the report submitted by Mr. Toupin to his Quebec cabinet colleagues. Here are the main general goals:

1) Integration of the agricultural sector in the general economy;

2) Effort to bring farm incomes into line with those of employees in other sectors of the economy;

3) Regionalization and diversification of resources;

4) Mobility and redistribution of resources;

5) Increase in Quebec's self-sufficiency on the agricultural plane;

6) Improved management of the offers of agricultural products and more balanced sharing of markets;

7) Maintaining of a socio-economic infrastructure in rural communities;

8) Increased programs for research and technological and vocational training.

This is what the Quebec Agriculture Minister, following the approach initiated by his predecessor, hon. Clément Vincent, wants to obtain for the farmers of his province. And it is amazing to see a federal representative from the province of Quebec, who happens to be Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture, indulging in an outburst against the provincial Minister of Agriculture.

His predecessor the hon. member for Richelieu (Mr. Côté) would never have thought indeed of making such statements since they only add fuel to the fire and because it is a well known fact that there are differences of opinions, as well as of interests between the two levels of government and that they can only be settled through goodwill, understanding and co-operation. This is why the arrogant attitude shown by the parliamentary secretary is unbecoming to a member from the province of Quebec representing the farming people.

I beg his colleagues for the province of Quebec to behave in such a way that his words may not undermine good feelings between the two levels of government because, there again, the first people to suffer would be the farmers and such is not the purpose of our being elected. In the circumstances, the parliamentary secretary should be the first to promote the interests of the farmers instead of sowing the seeds of discord at those two levels of government.

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The parliamentary secretary is rising on a question of privilege.

Mr. Lessard (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe has now resumed his seat. He apparently wanted to impute intentions to me when he said that I was against the policy outlined in the white paper of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson).

It was not at all the reason for my intervention yesterday. It is about the Quebec Minister of Agriculture's statements regarding his inability to bring in a policy because of the federal jurisdiction. I have the support of all my colleagues in that connection.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. I would ask the parliamentary secretary to resume his seat.

The Parliamentary Secretary's question is not one of privilege under Standing Orders and the procedure of the House. As I said earlier it is more a matter of debate and I do think that hon. members will be able at a later stage to express their views thereon.

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, as my hon. colleague from Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) pointed out yesterday, this bill includes certain aspects with which we agree.

Granted, it is now easier to obtain the credit required to develop Canadian agriculture. Still, we must, as members of the opposition, point out what I would call the silences, the absences, the oversights with regard to introducing real reforms intended to solve at long last the problems of agriculture in Canada.

Some time ago, the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) himself tacitly recognized the existence of problems, and even recognized the absolute necessity of not staying put and of solving, from the ground up, the basic problems of the agricultural industry.

Again as the hon. member for Bellechasse said yesterday, Mr. Speaker, it is all very well to give the farmers greater credit facilities, but we must consider above all the means of making farming profitable to the man who devotes himself to it.

We must assure to producers a fair income comparable to the average income of those in other professions.

Mr. Speaker, when we have to face such facts and a government recognizes its deficiencies, we wonder why it does not bring in some amendments to solve all those problems. I agree that it is easy to criticize, to make suggestions.

Mr. Speaker, the government gets some real assistance in that field, especially from all Canadian farming unions, among others, the Canadian Federation of Agriculture as well as the CFU in Quebec.

• (1650)

Mr. Speaker, it would seem that the views of those who live the day to day problems of agriculture should be considered when legislation is drafted.

May I quote a few suggestions contained in the brief which the Canadian Federation of Agriculture submitted last April 10. It says:

An adequate adjustment and development program should ensure——here follows a list of different things such a program should ensure—

That governments set up, in co-operation with representatives of agricultural associations, a land purchase program that would enable farmers aged 55 and over who wish to retire, to sell their property which could probably be used to consolidate adjacent farm land surrendered to the Crown or transferred to development organizations for further development or distribution.

That a land transfer program allow present farmers to acquire the additional land that will become available and that the greatest possible number of people be encouraged to remain in the rural community.

Mr. Speaker, we are faced with a problem of migration from the farms, especially in some regions of Quebec, and I have not yet gone through the statistical data of last year's federal census. But at first glance, and according to reports received last week, I noticed, for example, that in the Champlain riding which I am honoured to represent in this House, there was a decrease of 7,000 people. Champlain being mostly a rural riding, it shows once again that the state of agriculture compels a great number of producers to abandon the industry.

The price support policy is not, in my view, a way of ensuring better food for the people. This, I think, is forgetting about the most essential problem, that of feeding individuals.

Here is another point that the Canadian Federation of Agriculture stressed, and I quote:

That support be given to those federal policies aimed at improving the opportunities offered by agriculture and providing other possibilities for those who wish to leave this industry for other sectors of work.

Indeed, many people are facing enormous difficulties; these are concrete problems that we experience daily.

The quotation goes on:

That the Canadian government be urged to establish a retirement plan to help the farmers who want to leave their farms but whose income is not sufficient to meet their needs.

Such is the situation of dairy producers, for example, in Quebec, who have worked for 10, 15, 20, 25 or 30 years to produce a food that is essential to life, that is milk and its by-products. These people come to the end of their working life and do not have enough money for an honorable retirement. That is a shameful situation in a country as rich as ours. I go on with the quotation:

That every effort be made to avoid the creation of new structures or new departments duplicating present federal or provincial departments.

The Canadian Federation of Agriculture is referring to the famous conflict mentioned earlier by the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Ricard), and I am referring to the harsh words spoken yesterday against the Quebec

[Mr. Matte.]

Minister of Agriculture by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Lessard).

Mr. Speaker, it is useless to cover one's face, and to shut one's eyes; one must admit that there is a conflit, that the orientation now given by the Quebec government to agriculture does not agree with that of the federal government.

We are dealing with a problem and it is not by accusing the Quebec government of mismanagement of public affairs that we shall come to a solution. It is obvious that in a country as large as ours, where you find areas as different as Quebec and the western plains, the role of the federal government is then that of a coordinating body. The federal government should aim at a better distribution of the goods and farm products in all parts of Canada. That should be the major objective of any federal government rather than attempting to interfere in areas which may appear to be within its jurisdiction under the Constitution, but which in fact, for all practical purposes, because of the duplication of departments and agencies, lead to injustice.

This may be one of the main reasons why the Quebec farmers think—and they may be wrong—that the Western farmers have a better deal.

The fact that they think so, Mr. Chairman, is detrimental to the very existence of our country. The federal government should make every effort, through appropriate coordination to avoid such conflicting views.

In order to emphasize this point, I should like to read into the record a letter which a Quebec farmer sent to the newspaper Terre de chez nous in which he described one of the problems I have just mentioned. I quote:

QUEBEC FARMERS PAY MORE THAN FOREIGNERS FOR THEIR GRAIN

Why must livestock breeders in Eastern Canada pay more for their grain than Westerners? The federal government has refused until now to comply with a request by minister Toupin supported by the UCC, which would force the Canadian Wheat Board to adjust rates so that livestock breeders in the East and in the West be treated as equals.

Even foreign countries that import feed grains from Canada pay less than we do. Are we going to put up with such injustice much longer? First of all a Minister of Agriculture for Eastern Canada should be appointed. There was some mention of this in Mr. Pearson's time but it did not materialize.

Mr. Trudeau has announced that a five-dollar subsidy would be paid to hog producers, but this payment applies only to hogs that are sold slaughtered, whereas in Quebec a large proportion of hogs are sold live at auction. This deprives many producers of a substantial income to which they should be entitled. Let us hope that the federal government will comply with UCC's requests and make all hogs eligible for this subsidy.

Mr. Speaker, this letter from a farmer—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the House must now proceed with consideration of private members' business.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles)—Income Tax—Suggested increase in exemption for retired persons or granting of tax credits in budget; the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk)—Indian Affairs—Request for statement on action to protect rights in relation to James Bay hydroelectric project; the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Burton)—Manpower—Local initiatives program—Funds allocated, amounts spent, applications received, by provinces.

[English]

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, private bills, notices of motions (papers) and public bills.

As no private bills are listed on today's order paper, the House will proceed to the consideration of notices of motions (papers).

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think there is disposition among the members of the House to stand those items which precede motion No. 8, standing in the name of the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), it being resumption of the debate on that measure. I believe the records will verify that at the conclusion of the debate during the last private members hour, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Perrault) was in the midst of his speech. Possibly he might conclude his remarks.

• (1700)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Hon. members have heard the proposal of the parliamentary secretary that motions 2, 3, 6, 36 and 38 be stood and that the House proceed with Motion No. 8 on the understanding that the hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (mr. Perrault) will conclude the debate. Is this agreed?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Conclude his speech, surely.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Conclude his speech.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

MANPOWER

REQUEST FOR COPY OF STUDY OF MANPOWER UTILIZATION OF THE MANITOBA GARMENT INDUSTRY

The House resumed, from Thursday, April 20, consideration of the motion of Mr. Orlikow:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the study by Summerour and Associates Inc., Atlanta, Georgia, undertaken for the Department of Manpower and Immigration regarding the "Analysis of the Manpower Utilization of the Manitoba Garment Industry".

Mr. Ray Perrault (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration): In effect, Mr. Speaker, this request for the tabling of a report in relation to the Manitoba garment industry expresses the concern of the mover of the motion with respect to the present position of the textile and clothing industry in the great province of Manitoba. This is the largest manufacturing industry in Manitoba, and the Department of Manpower and Immigration has made special efforts, both through immigration and through training in industry to meet the employment demands of that industry. As I stated earlier, between April 1, 1967, and June 1, 1969 alone, the cost of such special measures approached $300,000, a not inconsiderable sum of money. This is the background for our consideration of the motion under discussion.

In 1969, the Department of Manpower felt that additional efforts were warranted. It invited the industry and the Manitoba department of industry and commerce to join with it in a study to determine the extent and causes of the high labour turnover in the industry. It was the view of the federal government that the relatively high labour turnover and the chronic labour shortage should be made the subject of an investigation. This view won the support of the then government of Manitoba and of all those concerned with the industry—the companies involved and the trade union movement. So a committee was formed representing the two levels of government and the industry. It was known as "The clothing committee." The industry itself arranged for some 20 firms to participate in the study, and more than 200 present and former employees agreed to be interviewed in depth.

This is the crux of the matter. Certain terms and conditions were agreed upon at the time the clothing committee was established. An understanding was reached involving both levels of government, the industry and the workers. It was an understanding that any information supplied would remain confidential as between those involved. I do not think the hon. member who moved the motion before us is aware of this background. On the basis of this assurance, this guarantee, workers and employers provided full, frank, and, in some cases, extremely subjective opinions on questions of staff training and working conditions. Most of the interviewing was carried out by officers of the Department of Manpower and Immigration.

The firm of Summerour and Associates, one with a world reputation in this particular field, was retained to provide technical advice on the structure of the study, to assist in the analysis of data and to recommend training and selection techniques for the resolution of difficulties which might be identified. The consultants fee was shared between the province and the Department of Manpower and Immigration, and the total cost was $7,050. It was a condition of the contract that all results, including the final report, would be confidential to the clothing committee and its corporate members.

What has been the outcome? What improvements have been noted since the production of the report? The expansion of the Manitoba garment industry has been such that it has not been necessary to invoke the provision of the displaced textile workers adjustment assistance regulations. In other words, there is work for practically any displaced person who wants it in the textile industry of Manitoba and in the garment industry of Manitoba. The value of production has increased by more than one third since that study was carried out; exports have more than tripled and are now estimated to reach at least $16 million a year. Recently, a new plant has been opened, one of the most modern and efficient in the world. This reflects great credit on the workers of Manitoba. It reflects great credit on that province and on the industry there. It says a great deal for the initiative which all have taken collectively.

The industry is a highly competitive one, and the fact that a Canadian province, situated where it is, could become so highly successful is, as I say, a credit to that province and to Canada. The expansion has taken place primarily into high quantity and high quality lines. This has resulted in a demand for increased skills at all levels. It is this growing demand, rather than turnover of staff, which is creating the current shortages in certain occupations. Some orders with respect to workers needed for occupations where labour is not available in Canada are being directed to our offices abroad, but this is only done when the Canada Manpower Centre is convinced that working conditions in the plant concerned are acceptable by general Canadian standards, that Canadian workers cannot be recruited in sufficient numbers and that suitable employment will be available to anyone recruited in this way. Naturally, all people so recruited must meet all other admission standards under our immigration regulations.

The following are some of the steps taken by the industry to improve worker opportunities since the clothing committee undertook this study in depth of the garment industry of Manitoba: one, establishment of personnel departments or the assignment of this function to a particular individual; two, establishment of good selection standards; proper applicant interviews and in-plant training systems to help employees maintain productivity; three, general improvement of work areas; establishment of adequate rest and recreation areas; provision of in-plant music; generally improved personnel relations; four, organization of a personnel management course in co-operation with University of Manitoba; five, organization of a management improvement course in co-operation with Department of Manpower and Immigration; six, establishment of an industry school for sewing machine operators to provide vestibule training for new entrants.

I should like to say a few words, now, about the positive thrust of manpower and immigration activities which these efforts reflect. Our department employs the services of an aggressive, enthusuastic staff of 255 men and women serving Manitoba. Operating from 12 urban areas. staff members visit and serve people in a total of 114 communities. In the year 1971-72, they found work for almost 36,000 Manitobans. I was sorry to hear the leader of the New Democratic party attacking the Department of Manpower in the House the other day for failing, acocording to him, to provide the right jobs to people who have been trained to fill them. The record of success in many provinces has been an excellent one. The figure of 36,000 I have mentioned amounts to an increase of some 8,000 over the previous year. In the same period the employed labour force grew from 349,000 to 359,000. So Manpower and Immigration found work for about 80 per cent of this increase.

During the same period the number registering for employment dropped by 4,000 in spite of the growth in the labour force. This illustrates the success achieved in increasing job opportunities during a difficult economic period. In the same fiscal year 1971-72, the department purchased 757,270 training days from the province on behalf of clients. This was at a cost of $3,712,000 for training and $6,472,000 for allowances. A further 80,000 training days were purchased from employers under training in industry contracts and this cost an additional $807,000. The word should not be "cost". The word should be "investment". Some people are critical of the program of the department of manpower but those members of parliament in all parties here realize the value of it. If we can turn out additional number of people with skills, such as unemployed people and, yes, taxpaying citizens, we will attain something in this department and these achievements are being reached every day. All in all, about 10,000 persons acquired improved or new skills as a result of these expenditures. During the winter just past, another 3,000 trainees were placed under the Canada manpower on-the-job training program at a further cost of some $3 million, while 201 projects under the local initiative program found work for 3,000 more at a cost of some $5,365,000.

The garment industry, which is under discussion in this particular debate, has received its share of trainees under these programs as suitable firms were identified and over 1,400 persons have received training as operators since 1968 by training in industry, while a further 670 persons found employment this winter under training on the job.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, may I say that a number of recommendations made by the clothing committee which I discussed earlier were made to enable the industry to introduce programs and policies. I have just given some examples of how many firms have implemented these policies and these recommendations to reduce turnover through improved training and personnel policies. Should severe labour difficulties again arise in the sector, should the Department of Manpower and Immigration again consider it advisable to assist in such recruiting or training measures, its participation will be directed toward programs undertaken on behalf of those employers adopting the recommendations from the clothing committee. Because of the nature of the study; the type of information sought and received; and the commitments made to participants, neither the industrial nor the provincial representatives to the clothing committee, representing the government of Manitoba, will agree to the publication of this report. We concur in this stand.

In brief, if the House were to approve this motion it would result in the government breaching a contractual agreement with a provincial government and a major Canadian industry. It would violate a promise to the working people of Manitoba who participated in the study and were given an assurance that what they said would be held in confidence. We will never betray that trust given to us by the workers of Manitoba. This could cause them painful embarrassment in many cases because I assure you some of them were very frank in some of their comments. It would destroy the usefulness of an effective economic tool which conceivably could be used to employ a lot of other Canadian workers in the future. In other words, this is a technique which has been highly successful in removing many of the problems from the garment industry in Manitoba. It is a technique which can be used in other provinces. If we were to break trust with the workers of Manitoba it would no longer be possible for this government to go to any workers in any part of Canada and say, "Place your trust in us, tell us all your problems", because at some future date all their remarks may be placed on some public record to their severe embarrassment and even perhaps to their economic danger.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the wish of the House that the question be put at this time.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Carried.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On division.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is negatived on division.

Motion (Mr. Orlikow) negatived.

POST OFFICE

REQUEST FOR COPIES OF LETTERS COMPLAINING ABOUT SERVICE

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris) moved:

That an order of the House do issue for copies of all letters received by the Postmaster General or any other members of the government since January 1, 1971, complaining about postal services and the replies thereto.

He said: Mr. Speaker, when this motion came up for consideration yesterday, the parliamentary secretary declined to accept it on the ground that it was physically impossible to gather all this correspondence in one central location as the correspondence is spread throughout the country. He also said that the cost would be enormous and asked under the circumstances that the hon. member withdraw his motion. I raised slight opposition to the interpretation of my motion because I do not believe it is quite accurate in terms of the wording of the motion before us today in which I ask for copies of all letters received by the Postmaster General or any other member of the government since January 1, 1971, complaining about postal service and the replies thereto. Actually my motion was quite specific. I was not talking about complaints which came into the local post offices across the country. Rather I was attempting to zero in specifically on complaints which came to the Postmaster General or to the other members of the government. Therefore, I cannot understand why the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Jerome) talked about gathering all correspondence in one central location and stated that the correspondence is spread throughout the country.

I believe Ottawa is the seat of government, and any one who would be affected by the motion I have before the House would be located in Ottawa. This, I believe, would considerably narrow the terms of the notice of motion at least from the standpoint of the interpretation placed on it by the parliamentary secretary. Therefore, once again I should like to ask the government if it would give us copies—this covers only a period of a year—of the letters of complaint received. If that should be too large a task, as I suggested in my remarks yesterday, perhaps we should be given a sampling of the mail since I imagine much of it would be repetitious. It perhaps could be broken down into groups of topics. In this way the government could give us some idea of how the public feels about the rather disastrous deterioration in the mail service over the past three or four years in Canada.

I should like to mention some of the topics which come to my attention. I am sure all hon. members can verify this. One of the most active areas of correspondence, and even in this regard there is considerable delay, is that related to complaints we receive from our constituencies concerning the decline in the quality of postal service, which used to be one of the best to be found anywhere in the world, while at the same time skyrocketing costs in the past four years have increased the cost for class A mail by 100 per cent. Nobody in these days of runaway inflation objects to the idea that an increase in costs demands an increase in the price of stamps and so forth.

The real complaint arises from the fact that while the cost of mail service is increasing the quality continues to decline. Perhaps the major complaint concerns the inexplicable delays in mail delivery from time to time. There are occasions when a letter within a large city will take as long as three or four days to travel from one point in the city to another. There have been examples of a piece of first class mail from Vancouver taking as long as two weeks to be delivered at a point in eastern Canada. On other occasions, the mail fails to arrive at all. I brought to the attention of the minister through correspondence the question of mail travelling from Canada to the United States failing to reach its destination. One of the explanations given is that when the five-day week occurs during holiday periods, such as over Christmas and New Year's, there is an unusually long delay because the two successive long weekends bring mail delivery almost to a standstill in many parts of Canada.

Because of this problem, the postmaster has been musing out loud that perhaps the six-day mail delivery should be restored to the urban parts of Canada as it was restored in the rural parts. I want to seize this opportunity once again to emphasize that members of the official opposition and of other opposition groups would have no hesitation at all in recommending to the Postmaster General (Mr. Côté) and the government that the six-day mail delivery system should be restored. We are all completely dependent upon mail services. The business life of Canada is particularly dependent upon it as it is the basic, fundamental means of communication. Surely, a government which places such emphasis on technological innovations in the communications field, such as a satellite which, at a cost of some $90 million, is going to be placed in synchronous orbit with the earth some time next fall, and a government which ventures off into this sophisticated and rarified atmosphere of modern communications in Canada, could give us mail service which is somewhat better than the old pony and cart days. Sometimes I think the mail service today is slower than it was before the advent of trains and all the other modern means of transportation.

Basic to this is obviously the restoration of six-day mail delivery. Instead of wondering whether it should be restored, I urge the Postmaster General to re-institute this service immediately and he will receive the gratitude and plaudits not only of members of the opposition who have been advocating this but the public of Canada. I am sure such a move would help to restore the level of morale among the employees of the Post Office Department who, over the past few years, have been venting their spleens against the maladministration of the Post Office Department by rotating strikes, working to rule and other techniques of that kind.

If the parliamentary secretary to the responsible minister could give me some samples of this sort of complaint and representation from every part of Canada, we might really have a cross-section of public opinion on this problem of delays of mail delivery and non-delivery. I have received complaints from my own constituency, and other colleagues in the House have passed along complaints from their constituencies. I am sure the pattern is repeated in every part of Canada. It is for this reason I am anxious to have a sampling of the protests from the public outlining this particular problem.

There is one area in respect of increasing costs of postal services I should like to emphasize today. Here again, I am sure the protest has been loud and long from the public. Not only do I refer to the general increase in the cost of postal services, such as the 100 per cent increase in respect of first class mail, I have in mind a specific area about which I should like to get further background information. I refer to the briefs, representations and protests that must have come from charitable organizations in Canada which have depended on a special postal rate in order to realize success in their appeal for funds. I could mention many groups.

At the time the Post Office Act was amended to remove this special postal privilege there were voluminous protests from groups such as the War Amps of Canada, the tuberculosis Christmas seal drive and so forth, all of which depend upon a nominal postal charge to communicate in a massive way with the people of Canada. Protests were made at the time the subject was debated in the House. The Postmaster General indicated he would give very serious consideration to these representations and, if he found that real injustice had been caused by this rather arbitrary adjustment upwards in postal rates, he would take the necessary action. I am sure it has been long since demonstrated that real hardship was created by this substantial increase in the rates which had formerly been given to charitable groups.

I know, for example, that War Amputees are having difficulty carrying out the mass mailing of automobile licensing tags. They have tried to find alternative methods of delivery through private facilities. In some cities this is possible, but in the more isolated parts of Canada it is impossible to get the service they had formerly. In larger cities where distribution has been carried out by other than the postal service, this represents a substantial decrease in the revenue of the Post Office Department because it has been found that private entrepreneurs can distribute these items at a nominal cost and still realize a sufficiently large profit.

I am sure that one of the reasons the Post Office Department in recent years has been showing increasing deficits is that they have lost revenue of this type. Because of the interruption of services due to rotating strikes, and so forth, they have lost to private carriers the business that was carried out almost exclusively by the Post Office Department. It is business they will never recapture because private operators are able to supply the service at a considerably lower cost than the Post Office Department.

Here are some of the facts concerning the deficit picture as shown in a parliamentary return. There has been in recent years a substantial increase in the deficit. From 1961-62 to 1967-68, first-class mail realized a profit. The highest profit was $30.3 million in 1970-71. Even with the increase in the first-class postal rate, there has been a deficit in recent years. For example, in 1971-72 the deficit was listed as $15.1 million. Fourth-class mail showed a modest profit until 1966-67. This is mail the distribution of which requires a minimum of effort, minimum handling, such as the mailing of literature, and so on, by charitable organizations which work on a mass mailing basis. As I say, fourth-class mail showed a profit until 1966-67, but since then there has been a deficit for each year.

When we go to other classes of mail we find the same picture. The deficit is closely related to the declining service, resulting in a loss of business which used to be handled by the Post Office Department. This amounts to running so as to stand in the same place. The department hardly maintains the same position, because in order to meet the deficit resulting from loss of revenue due to declining service there has to be an increase in the cost of postal service, which results in further loss of business. Obviously, it is a losing game.

I should like to receive further background information. I can well understand that the Post Office Department has become so inefficient that, as the parliamentary secretary indicated, voluminous protests are coming in from all parts of Canada. However, I am willing to take a reasonable position on this matter and suggest that the government deals with just a sampling of the protests that have been received.

There is another area of Post Office problems that I am sure has generated many letters of protest. I refer to the failure of the government to come to grips with the complaints of its own employees. In 1969 I received from the Fort William—Port Arthur and District Labour Council a letter which outlined some of their problems in this respect. Another letter came from this group, dated March 30, 1972, which makes complaints about the working conditions at the Thunder Bay post office. I am sure hon. members representing these areas have received copies of these letters, because the correspondence mentions that they were sent copies.

Obviously, labour relations present serious problems to the Post Office Department. The most recent negotiations took place in 1970. They went on for month after month without settlement, and eventually—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member may continue with the uanimous consent of the House.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Dinsdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and through you I thank the members of the House for their courtesy. I shall not trespass unduly on the time allowed but will try to bring this part of my statement to a conclusion and leave the matter there for the time being. As I was saying, labour relations within the Post Office Department have been most unsatisfactory for the past two or three years. In the most recent negotiations in 1970, no action was taken to improve the salary situation until the employees engaged in a period of rotating strikes which caused considerable disruption to the postal service of Canada, along with all the other problems that I have outlined briefly this afternoon.

We are in the same situation in 1972. The contract has run out. It is now a month since the employees have had a contract. It was admitted in the House the other day by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) that no specific offer had been made to the postal union members, notwithstanding the fact that they are operating without a contract. It appears that the same delay and procrastination will result in a repetition of what occurred in 1970. The government will not be prodded into taking positive action until the employees are forced to protest, perhaps in the form of rotating strikes, in order to bring to the attention of the government and the Postmaster General (Mr. Côté) the difficulties under which they are working.

I have received a few letters from several local labour councils on the matter. Again, I do not want to be unreasonable but I am sure that from all parts of Canada similar complaints must be reaching the Postmaster General. Therefore, I think it is a reasonable request that some of these letters be made available so that members of the opposition might have an idea of the broad spectrum of public opinion on the deteriorating efficiency of the Post Office Department. I repeat what I said at the outset of my remarks, that we are not asking for correspondence received from isolated districts. This is a reasonable demand, Mr. Speaker. I hope the government will provide members of the opposition with the information necessary to carry out an intelligent appraisal of the problem.

Mr. Jack Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, it is a sad commentary on the disastrous deterioration on the front benches of the official opposition when we see them bring forward a silly motion like this, what I would have described as a tongue-in-cheek motion, asking the government to produce the kind of criticism, comments and letters which the hon. member seeks. To give him his due, he tried to protect his motion by saying in effect, "That isn't what I have said and it isn't really what I am looking for."

The situation, Mr. Speaker, is that other hon. members of this House have on the order paper motions for the production of papers which were put forward sincerely in the hope that they would have an opportunity to debate and vote on them. These motions seek papers that hon. members are genuinely interested in having produced, but today we have this motion for the production of letters which the hon. member seems to think are as important as other motions which have appeared on the order paper.

When President Johnson left the White House he gave an address in which he outlined the three great problems facing the United States: first was the war in Viet Nam, second was the race relations problem, and third, dealing more with the financial area and the question of efficiency, was the Post Office. It is recognized throughout the world that there are problems in this area. To suggest that we have a poor post office system is not in accordance with the facts. If the hon. member is so critical of the post office staff, I suggest he should attempt to learn what the post office does on the positive side and not be content to rely on the few letters of complaint that he receives.

Mr. Dinsdale: They are voluminous, according to the parliamentary secretary.

Mr. Cullen: If the hon. member did a little research and asked people to write about the good service which the post office provides, he would find the correspondence to be much more voluminous than the few complaints he has received. Part of the problem is that he has not undertaken enough study to know what the Canadian Post Office does. No less a person than Peter Harrison, commenting on a CBC radio program on December 17 last, gave the other side of the picture. Apparently he did considerably more research than the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) when preparing his motion. I think his radio comments bear repeating.

Mr. Dinsdale: We cannot get any information from the government in order to know.

Mr. Cullen: There is no shortage of information available. Apparently Mr. Harrison was able to get full information, and he is not even a member of this House. In his radio talk he said:

It seems to me that the Canadian postal service is always being maligned by people who haven't got the slightest idea of how mail is handled or how it's paid for. The closest they've been to a mail handling operation is when they bought a stamp, and supposedly that gives them the right to spout absolute nonsense at the drop of letter.

Let's have a look at the Canadian postal service for a minute. From the latest figures for 1970, the government spent approximately $532,000,000 on postal service. Revenues were only $432,000,000. Therefore there was a deficit of about $100,000,000.

When the hon. member was quoting statistics he did not bother to point out how much the postal workers were making from 1962 to 1967. Their low wages gave the Post Office Department a better profit picture then than it has now. Mr. Speaker, I think we should be paying these people what they deserve, without trying to make a profit at their expense. Mr. Harrison pointed out:

Labour costs were $311,000,000 and the post office handled five billion—I repeat five billion—pieces of mail. There are about 10,000 post offices in the country and about 44,000 postal employees, 16,000 of those are letter carriers. An interesting point to note is that out of 10,000 post offices 65 of them account for approximately 80 per cent of total revenues. The rest only contribute 20 per cent, but are kept open because the Post Office Department is a service-oriented organization and everyone has the right to a mail service.

If we listen to the hon. member, Mr. Speaker, I believe he is suggesting that we should close down all these other post offices, forget about service and concentrate on making a profit so that the Post Office Department can end up in the black. I do not think his party would advocate that the people served by these other post offices should be deprived of service, albeit they are not paying in full for it. I continue the quotation:

As for the deficit, that comes out of the taxpayer's pocket in the form of a subsidy.—

The two complaints most often heard are the high postage rates and the speed of service. Canada has the cheapest postal service in the world on an hourly earning basis. That is, we handle more mail cheaper than any other country and do it at a lower postage rate. That's why we have a deficit. People who complain about high postage rates don't know what they're talking about. There were almost no rate adjustments between 1930 and 1968, and no organization can afford to pay today's prices for services at yesterday's revenues. We don't expect private industries to do it, so why expect the Post Office to do it?

Raising the postage rates puts the burden of supporting a postal service directly on the individuals or businesses that use it, and if the rates are not increased the deficit will increase and this puts the burden on all taxpayers whether or not they use the service. It's about $12 per family in Canada now and, frankly, how many people do you know who use an extra $12 worth of stamps in a year? At an extra penny apiece that's 1,200 stamps. The average individual in Canada only buys 28 to 30 cents worth per year. So it boils down to "How do you like your poison?—a penny or two on each stamp or extra dollars on your tax bill!" Think about that one before jumping on the postal department again.

As far as speed of service is concerned, it's getting better all the time. The Post Office Department has been breaking its back to organize what is essentially a labour-intensive, out-moded method of mail handling into a streamlined service. The program is designed to reduce the number of times that a piece of mail has to be handled and to mechanize operations wherever possible. A one-day assured mail service has been inaugurated between major Canadian cities and its success rate in meeting the one-day time limit is between 90 to 98 per cent. That's better than any other government department that I can think of—

I do not know whether I can use the word that he uses here, Mr. Speaker, but he says that it is a "blank" sight better than a lot of private industries.

A new postal code has been devised so that mail can be machine-sorted much faster but that effort will be stymied unless of course the public takes five minutes to memorize their code. All of this has happened in the past year and it required a lot of effort on the part of all postal employees. What do they get for it? A kick in the rear instead of a pat on the shoulder for a job well done. If people are really in such a hurry to get their mail, or to send it out, perhaps they should or could send in constructive suggestions to the Post Office Department on what to do when there is an ice storm, all aircraft are grounded and the mail doesn't move. I'm sure the department would be happy to receive them instead of the usual "Ah, Ah! My letter didn't arrive in 24 hours." Let's give the Post Office Department a little time to improve further and if you have to take out your frustrations on something why not try the revenue department on the slowness of income tax returns?

That is a positive view expressed by Peter Harrison, who is hardly known as a friend of the government. It is not the kind of ill-informed criticism of the Post Office that we get from those who do not take the time or effort to make constructive criticism of a department that is doing a fantastic job under difficult circumstances.

• (1750)

Mr. Rod Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen) would make an admirable lawyer for the defence. I will not argue with some of the statistics that he quoted in defence of the Post Office Department. On this side of the House it is our purpose to draw attention to things that sometimes do not work very well, and hopefully I can do this in a constructive fashion to satisfy the hon. member.

I should like to speak for a moment about a newspaper in my constituency, the Kindersley Clarion, which serves not only the town of Kindersley but the surrounding small villages and farming area. People use it to advertise social events and business or commercial enterprises of interest to people in the area. It is a weekly paper published on Wednesday night or Thursday morning. In order to be of any use to the people in the district in regard to weekend events, it has to be in the mail by Friday.

As I understand it, communities east and west of Kindersley receive the newspaper at the proper time. When it moves off the route to communities north and west, for example Hanley, then it frequently arrives late—and if it does not arrive by Friday it is not of much use. Since there is only one paper serving an area such as this, obviously the people want to get it. When we consider the distances involved, it could be delivered by pony express which is not even going too fast. This is the kind of service that we would like to see improved.

I have written to the Postmaster General (Mr. Côté) about this matter but have not had a reply from him. I am not really interested in why the paper arrives late at these places, but I want something done about it. As I understand it, the mail formerly sorted at Rosetown has to go to Saskatoon and then come back to these communities. It seems to me that if this is an improved service, a new venture by the Post Office, they should look again at the speed with which the mail moves. When it formerly had to go to Rosetown and come back by another line, it moved fairly rapidly—but that is not the case now.

It has been suggested to me that these little newspapers do not arrive in Calgary until the following Monday or Tuesday. This is much too slow, I receive it in the House of Commons on Monday or Tuesday, and if the Post Office can deliver it here they should be able to deliver it to Calgary which is much closer. I look to the hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton to see that the mail is delivered in a better fashion. I am no technician with regard to Post Office facilities but I have great respect for most individual postmen. If we are going to introduce changes such as I have indicated, I think they should give the same service as was given previously, and not less. This, I contend, is what we are trying to achieve.

Mr. Murray McBride (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I listened with much interest this afternoon to the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley (Mr. Thomson), the hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen) and the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) when they spoke of complaints concerning the postal service.

I want to take a few minutes to say that the people I represent are extremely concerned that there be an efficient postal service and that it be continuous and reliable. One of the genuine threats that concerns me and the people of the Ottawa valley is that of labour disputes which, under certain circumstances, might lead to strike action by those responsible for mail delivery. This, of course, places an undue hardship upon people who conduct their business through the mail and those who receive old age pension or family allowance cheques. This concern of many people was mentioned by the hon. member for Brandon-Souris at the end of his speech and I think it is very valid. All of us must encourage the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) and others to negotiate in good faith with Post Office employees and attempt to head off any breakdown in the mail service.

I think it is worthy of comment that the mail service has been expanded and improved in some areas in recent years. In two towns that I represent, Arnprior and Perth, house to house delivery has been inaugurated in recent months, with the general approval and appreciation of residents.

From time to time when I look at the economic balance sheet of the Canada Post Office and notice the deficits and the steps taken in recent years to bring some semblance of balance to the department, I wonder if there might not be some advantage in turning mail delivery over to private enterprise. It is true we have a parallel with the bell Telephone Company which has almost a monopoly in their type of communication. It is also true that many people feel that Bell has increased rates exorbitantly. But many of us wonder if it would not be worth while to consider turning postal deliveries over to such an enterprise and setting up a system that could be administered efficiently.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hour set aside for private members' business has expired. It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

[Translation]

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

FARM CREDIT ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING LOANS AND POWERS AND CAPITAL OF CORPORATION

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Olson that bill C-5, to amend the Farm Credit Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture, the amendment of Mr. Korchinski (p. 1872) and the subamendment of Mr. Knight (p. 1903).

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Just before recess, Mr. Speaker, I indicated how all these conflicts of jurisdiction between the federal and the provincial governments may prove a great obstacle to the development of Canadian agriculture. When we talk about these problems, we should not minimize them, as the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Lessard) did.

For indeed one can read, in some farm papers in the province of Quebec for instance, many such headings as the following: "The Catholic Farmers' Union and the feed problem: Ottawa recognizes the unfairness of the situation but fails to correct it." This appeared in the February 9 issue of Terre de Chez nous, page 4.

In the same issue of this newspaper one can read and I quote:

> The assistance measures to producers announced by Prime Minister Trudeau have been received rather cooly by the people first concerned in Quebec.

On May 3, 1972, Le Devoir printed an article entitled "Quebec agriculture suffers mainly from conflicts between Ottawa and Quebec". This newspaper was referring to the comprehensive farm development plan introduced by the Quebec government.

It is obvious that there is a conflict. Let us not ignore it but rather let us find the true solution.

As I said earlier in my remarks, the farm organizations are at least in a position to supply parts of the solution and more attention should be paid to them. As a matter of fact, the Canadian Federation of Agriculture recommended that a special effort be made to avoid the establishment of new structures or of a new department overlapping the present federal and provincial departments.

The problem is real, Mr. Speaker, when it comes to these conflicts.

The governments should establish a policy and procedures to enable young people to improve their skills in farming techniques. And after they have proven their ability and honesty they should be given the possibility of diversifying their production and purchasing viable family farms.

Many young people are prepared to devote themselves to agriculture but this should be made much easier for them. Thanks to the amendments to the bill some real gaps in the act will be filled and I commend the minister for that.

But we should go a little further, and a telegram received this afternoon from the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, concerning Bill C-5, recommends that loans to co-operatives or to family farms or other operations should be granted up to $250,000. Moreover, the Canadian Federation of Agriculture also states in its telegram from Mr. Munro, that it would like the interest rate on these loans to be set at 5 per cent. These are measures likely to really help the farmer.

When the government is willing to improve even more legisltion in this area, it will have, as my colleague from Bellechasse emphasized it yesterday, to introduce such legislation as to provide an adequate income to the producer. In order to get a sufficient income, it will be necessary for all Canadian producers to really come to a mutual agreement in order to promote all endeavours in every region in Canada.

• (2010)

Mr. Léopold Corriveau (Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, as the House is proceeding with its study of Bill C-5 entitled: "An Act to amend the Farm Credit Act", it is with pleasure that I am taking the floor to participate in the debate with members who have already expressed their views.

As I represent an agricultural constituency, it is very important that the House takes the decision of introducing these amendments as soon as possible.

These amendments aim mainly at increasing the ability of the Farm Credit Corporation to meet the needs of some long-term credits to build up viable farm operations, and endowing it with the necessary power it requires to carry out the tasks and functions that may be assigned to it in the administration of other programs.

The powers now enjoyed by the corporation enable it to fulfill its aim and objectives—granting farm loans, implementing the act and controlling farm credit transactions. These amendments will allow the minister to use all or part of this expert staff to administer other programs such as the land transfer program, which is part of the small farm development program.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) is allowed to subscribe an amount of $56 million to the capital of the corporation, and to lend the latter 25 times as much as its capital—i.e., $1.4 billion.

As well as the specific purposes for which loans can be granted, the act allows a loan to be made for any purpose necessary for the efficient operation of the mortgaged farm. This provision of the act has been given a rather narrow interpretation because of the word "necessary". In the revised text, the phrase "that will facilitate" is substituted for the word "necessary", so that it will be possible to grant loans for any justifiable purpose related to the buying, operation, maintenance, or development of a farm.

The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) understood that it was urgent to introduce those amendments in order to allow certain farmers to expand their farms and to establish young farmers there—be they their sons, relatives, or other people interested in agriculture.

The present ceilings on loans to individual farmers are $40,000 under PartII, and $55,000 under Part III of the act. The proposed amendments sets at $100,000 the maximum amount that can be lent to any farmer, alone or jointly with others, or in respect of a single farming enterprise. It was felt that with the years, the present maximum had become inadequate insofar as the amount of $40,000 was minimal when one knows that nowadays a farmer owns an enterprise which requires a huge investment.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Agriculture and the government of Canada have understood the needs of Canadian farmers.

The size of individual farms keeps increasing as agriculture turns from a labour-intensive to a capital-intensive industry, while the purchasing power of the dollar has been diminishing in the past few years. There is no other source of farm mortgage credit for specific amounts or periods of time. The limits set on loans granted private farmers in 1964 are therefore too low to meet the needs of many of them, especially those who want to take advantage of modern techniques.

We see therefore that the government is anxious to help the farmers to settle down on farms and make them profitable. That is why that change will allow our farmers to streamline their operations and earn a decent living off the farm.

The idea of tying in the ceiling on loans with the number of farmers rather than with the size of the operation has proved unfair to private farmers who hire hands or get help from their sons who are minors, compared with those who work the farm on a co-operative or partnership basis.

Although this legislation would authorize the corporation to make loans for the development of mortgaged lands including a secondary non-farming enterprise, it is not authorized to take into account the non-farming income producing capacity of the land when it is being estimated for the purpose of determining the amount of the loan. The present amendment will take into consideration such evaluations so that the amount of the loan would be in keeping with the actual mortgageable value of the property. It will also enable a good many farmers to better utilize their resources without depending entirely on agriculture.

The amendment before us authorizes the corporation to make loans on the security of farm lands in respect of which a third party retains the use of any buildings, provided such use does not exceed his lifetime nor the lifetime of his spouse.

This amendment would enable the farmer who retires to remain with his spouse on the piece of land where he has lived for many years, instead of being compelled to move into a neighbouring village or an unknown region, as was the case previously.

Special situations may arise in connection with programs such as the development of small farms, where a farmer who retires and sells his property can, if he so wishes, retain the use of his buildings for a period of time not exceeding his lifetime or that of his spouse. The buyer of such a farm who is eligible for a loan might wish to finance his purchase through a corporation's loan.

For the time being, the legislation does not authorize the corporation to make loans to farmers under 21 years of age. It seems that the age of majority tends nowadays to be lowered as has already been the case in some provinces. By deleting any mention as to minimum age, the corporation will be guided by provincial legislation spelling out the minimum age when a person can apply for a mortgage loan.

This will allow farmers, whatever province they live in, to establish themselves on a farm at an early age. It will all depend on the age the province will have set for majority. It is well known that now the province of Quebec has set the age of majority at 18, whereas in other provinces it is 21.

Mr. Speaker, I repeat that the Minister of Agriculture and the federal government are anxious to assist young farmers in their establishment.

• (2020)

In some cases it is reasonable to grant collective loans to individual farmers, to a farmer or to one or more qualified farm corporations, although the act does not specifically authorize such loans in those special circumstances. The amendment will allow the granting of such loans in reasonable circumstances, under Part II of the legislation.

A farmer can mortgage part of his land as collateral security for a loan granted to another farmer, which generally involves a father putting up security for his son. This would not limit his entitlement to a loan in his own name under Part II of the legislation. The same provision will henceforth apply to loans granted under Part III.

Mr. Speaker, section 33 provides that if the debt of the borrower under Part II exceeds 75 per cent of the appraisal value of his farm land, he must obtain the approval of the Corporation before being eligible for a farm improvement loan. Experience has shown that this requirement was useless. The section has been amended to allow the father to put up security for his son, in order to establish him on an economic farm.

The proposed amendments will improve the Farm Credit Act, so that it may meet present agricultural needs.

The consultations held with farmers who are members of the appeals courts of the Farm Credit Corporation in each province have given rise to suggestions which in addition to the proposed general amendments were examined with the advisory committee made up of farmers representing the Canadian farm orgnizations. Furthermore, the Corporation has extended consultations with the branches of the Department of Agriculture, and particularly with the Economic Branch.

Mr. Speaker, surveys have been made in order to find out exactly what Canadian farmers want and I think that their problems have been considered, and that we have tried to bring, through new amendments, a contribution and an instrument in addition to what was already available to them from the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. Speaker, I think that the amendments contained in Bill C-5 should be taken under consideration by all hon. members. The Canadian farmers are waiting for these changes in order to make their farm operations more profitable. Through all these amendments, this government can truly control the situation, help people who want to settle on farms, make the latter profitable.

It is known that presently Canadian farms are no longer operated with manual labour. They have become industries due to investment their owners have to make to compete on markets and they are provided with a new tool to operate economic units.

[English]

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to participate in this debate on Bill C-5, an act to amend the Farm Credit Act. I suppose the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) would say the opposition's criticism is that the amendments do not go far enough. Before I take on the minister, though, may I say I am very glad to see that the Waffle ranks in the New Democratic Party have been reconciled with maple syrup, or have been reconciled to the benefits of farm credit for the younger farmers of the land. I say this because when the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave) commented on the amendment which my hon. friend for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) proposed yesterday to give further encouragement to younger farmers, the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar told us, as reported in Hansard on page 1872, "I can hardly go along with the amendment, but perhaps after full discussion I might be able to consider it."

I was glad the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Knight) earlier today moved a subamendment to a reasoned amendment. Frankly, while you, sir, were in the chair, with all honour to the position you hold, you set parliamentary precedent by accepting a subamendment to a reasoned amendment. The reasoned amendment was so well considered that I could not understand how Your Honour could accept the subamendment. The fact that you did is no reflection on the Chair but is a reflection on the Waffle-maple syrup movement in the NDP trying to reconcile reality with politics and the fact that they are now joining us in seeking to help the young farmers of this land, not only to the benefit of the minister and of other Canadians but to the benefit of all those in western Canada. I was very glad to hear this subamendment so that my friend from Assiniboia could finally join the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar and they could march hand in hand down this chamber and show Mr. Watkins and Mr. Lewis how to get things done on the farm.

• (2030)

However, I agree with three-quarters of what was said by the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Corriveau). He speaks with experience in farming in la belle province which I cannot match because I come from another part of the country, a belle province called Nouvelle-Écosse. While we do not have farms quite as large as our hearts, in some cases our minds are even larger. Therefore I can reconcile anything my good friend from comté de Frontenac said tonight because I am in complete agreement with what he said about the younger farmer. He also supports the amendment moved by the hon. member for Mackenzie in which we of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition are asking these amendments go further than the Minister of Agriculture at the moment has gone.

Mr. Olson: You mean you want to kill the bill.

Mr. Nowlan: I am coming to that. However, before I come to the Minister of Agriculture, that lonely député from the flatlands of Canada which is the heartland of Canada, I want to talk about my friend from the belle comté de Frontenac because he agrees with what we say on this side, which is that the younger farmer must be encouraged and given some incentive to put his back to the plow and produce returns for all Canadians. I know my friend from the comté de Frontenac would agree with deferred interest on long-term loans and with an equitable adjustment of interest rates. The Minister of Agriculture mentioned this in his speech the other evening. Why should a young or even an old farmer be penalized under one of the few interest laws of Canada which nails him to a contract from which he cannot escape?

If a person makes a contract with Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation or takes out a mortgage with his friend the mortgagor, after five years he can start to adjust the interest rate if he finds he is in a downward market, interestwise. I hope the Minister of Agriculture does not try to poke fun at the seriousness of my statements, because the minister in the last part of his speech said that he felt confined, constricted and almost mentally castrated because he could not do anything with the section on frozen interest rates of Farm Credit Corporations loans.

I say that if there is any one meaningful amendment which ought to be brought in by this minister, it would be an amendment providing an escape clause for farmers who have built themselves into a long-term contract. If these farmers were dealing in the commercial market or in the housing market under Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation they could escape the frozen high interest rate, but under the present Farm Credit Corporation infrastructure they cannot escape from their long-term contract with a readjustment.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Nowlan: You are taking away my valuable time.

Mr. Olson: Is the hon. member not aware that the Farm Credit Corporation has always had a provision by which any loan can be paid without notice or bonus, so no one is locked into a contract. The situation is contrary to the comment of the hon. member that the only way it can move is up, unless it is paid off.

[Mr. Nowlan.]

Mr. Nowlan: I am aware of what the minister says, but the fact is that if you start to renegotiate you must pay a bonus or penalty in renegotiating the loan, with all the legalistic fees incumbent upon any mortgage. At one time I practised as a lawyer in the city of Vancouver and was involved in land mortgage work. Frankly, this is one part of the priesthood of law that I cannot quite reconcile. I do not believe I would be able to do so even if I were not a member of the opposition.

If I were a member of the government I would have second thoughts about doing CMHC work and/or Farm Credit Corporation work because the poor mortgagee, the citizen of Canada under the CMHC Act, or the poor farmer of Canada under the Farm Credit Corporation Act, is paying through the nose for the legalistic services for what he has already paid. As a lawyer, I say that this minister, who is not a lawyer and who supposedly has had good legal advice, has not done one thing to correct the abuse in respect of the mortgage laws of Canada.

I am digressing, Mr. Speaker. There are serious questions involved in these amendments. Quite frankly, so far as those of us from Atlantic Canada, especially Nova Scotia, are concerned these amendments are just catching up with the practice in farm financing which we have in Nova Scotia. The Farm Credit Corporation is not the number one reservoir for funds. In fact, it is almost the court of last resort. If we needed any justification to consider amendments to the Farm Credit Corporation Act so that it could be more meaningful and contribute more constructively to the problems of farm financing, we would merely have to take partially the minister's word and more particularly the more detailed report of Federal Farm Credit and Related Statistics published in 1971, in which at page 5, among other things it says:

> Lending in 1970-71 dropped 28 per cent from the previous year from $158 million to $116.5 million and continued a trend started two years earlier resulting from economic conditions, higher interest rates and higher land prices. The average size of loan, however, was somewhat larger and a higher proportion of funds was used to refinance existing loans.

I shall stop there and continue in my own language. We are to have higher loans and higher financial charges with which to finance the farm. That is what the hon. member for Mackenzie wishes to avoid in respect of the farmers of this land. The report continues with these words at page 5. If anyone has any doubt about the validity of the amendments—and they do not go far enough—this is what the Farm Credit Corporation has to say about its own act:

> There was a further reduction in the proportion of loans used for land purchases. In 1970-71, one-third of the funds was used to purchase land, compared with 42 per cent a year earlier. About three million dollars were loaned for housing, down from ten million three years earlier. With more difficult economic conditions—

What else do we want other than more loans and more financing when economic conditions become difficult? But what happens? Now everything is down, including loans for those who need it; and the value of the farm is down. The minister's statistics show that it goes up, but the real value goes down.

An hon. Member: Funny money.

Mr. Nowlan: My friend from Moncton says "Funny money". I did not hear the 2 per cent speech of the Minister of Agriculture. In fact, someone said earlier tonight that there was a program called Project '75. I should like to ask this minister, with all the kindness I can muster with my Irish hat, why we do not have a Project '72, letting the interest go down? This may just happen to help the farmers of this land more than all the amendments made to the Farm Credit Act.

• (2040)

An hon. Member: What about the good parts?

Mr. Nowlan: I will come to the good qualities of the minister later. I should like to refer to a very meaningful paragraph in this pamphlet which says that with some difficult economic conditions, expenditures for farm housing tend to be postponed more than loans for other purposes. About two-thirds of the loans went to the provinces of Alberta, Saskatchewan and Ontario, where about two-thirds of the commercial farms are located and two-thirds of farm products are produced. It says that in line with the general trend, the number of loans to incorporated farm borrowers declined 18 per cent in 1970-71, with a decline in volume of loans of about 25 per cent. The average size loan to incorporated farms declined by $4,400 and amounted to $26,500 per member compared to an average of $28,400 for all farms.

I could continue to read much more, but the point of this paragraph and many others in this very interesting and revealing pamphlet is that some people somewhere decided that the Farm Credit Corporation was not fulfilling the purpose for which it was conceived. I know the minister is sincerely concerned about the problems of agriculture in this land, but from time to time I differ with him on how to solve, resolve and tackle them.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nowlan: The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Lessard), for whom I have great personal endearment, should not interrupt my speech, because if he does I shall recall a speech he would like to recant today. When he goes back to la belle province this weekend he may talk to one of his political kindred souls who may say to him he had better get down to Liberal philosophy in Quebec rather than follow the Social Credit philosophy in which he at one time believed.

As I started to say earlier, we in Nova Scotia realized the difficulties many years ago. The Nova Scotia farm loan board was the first body to be involved in farm financing. It is my understanding that as long as you can show evidence of some potential of performance you can get $100,000 from this board. This is what we are talking about regarding this national act. This is a sad reflection on the psychology, philosophy and mentality of those within the federal Department of Agriculture. At long last we are catching up with the little province of Nova Scotia in adopting a maximum level for individual farmers of $100,000 per farm. That is in fact what the important amendments before us attempt to do.

The amendments suggest that we should not worry just about the individual farmer, we should try to develop something that seems to have gone out of fashion in this permissive society. This is a society in which we are supposed to be born in a cradle, rocked in a cradle and spilled from the cradle into the grave without having to produce anything, showing no initiative or enthusiasm and requiring no incentive. The members of this party believe in something else. I question sometimes some of the things hon. members believe in, and they very often question what I have to say. I have no compunction about questioning what they say and they have none in questioning what I say.

We belong to the Progressive Conservative party which at the moment, but only for the moment, happens to be Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. The members of this party have one thing in common: we belong to one of the most independent breeds you can find. I know the Minister of Agriculture would love to be part of that breed because he is independent, as indicated by his exercise of independence in moving from the far left to the middle right. He did not move to the far right but to the middle, comfortable and easy right.

This Minister of Agriculture was pointed out to me, as a new member when I first came here, as a man with parliamentary acumen. It was easy for him to walk from the far left to the easy middle right and not take up the challenge of the opposition. This helped to dilute some of my respect for him, though I give him credit for sagacity and parliamentary sense. It is much more difficult to move from the far left to the government side of the House than it is to move from the far left to the seats of the mighty. Pierre Burton wrote a book entitled "The Comfortable Pew", but there is nothing more comfortable than the easy and comfortable seats on the other side of this institution.

It was a disappointment to me when this Minister of Agriculture, who does have a lot to offer in this Parliament of Canada, moved from the soft seats of the Créditistes to the easy seats of the establishment rather than take up the challenge of the opposition. This minister has not accepted the challenge to make changes. We want to change the Farm Credit Act to make it meaningful to the young farmers of Canada. It must become meaningful if there is to be any life left on the farmlands of this country. Let us give the Minister of Agriculture all the benefit of the doubt in respect of these Farm Credit Act amendments, because I believe in his sincerity. I question some of his purposes but I do not question his sincerity.

One of the fundamental problems in any debate in this chamber concerning this topic is that we are confined by Bill C-5 and its amendments to the Farm Credit Act. This measure was supposed to provide easier access to the credit pools of the Farm Credit Corporation, particularly for farmers who need financing. What is the sense of debating this bill in isolation, when at the last session of Parliament we passed something called a tax reform bill which instituted certain tax changes and penalized the productive farmer? When we look at the details of the basic herd as defined in that change, which is a rather complicated equation to anyone from the east or the west, we find a different situation.

Some hon. Members: What about apples?

Mr. Nowlan: I am not talking about apples; I am talking about the nuts and bolts that make this society work. If there was ever a piece of legislation that indicated the complete futility of this government, I suggest it is the one before us—because we have the Farm Credit Act amendments today, we had tax reform yesterday, and the farmer will be left on dry land tomorrow.

An hon. Member: And the minister had his funny money before that.

Mr. Nowlan: My friends may think I am trying to be funny.

An hon. Member: You don't have to try; you are funny.

Mr. Nowlan: My friend suggests I do not have to try. I can be funny when I want to be, and I can also be serious. If the hon. member does not get the seriousness of my message, he will get it next election day.

• (2050)

He will not be re-elected just because he comes from the beautiful, bountiful province of Ontario which so far has not instituted succession duties. There are some members in this chamber who come from Alberta, the succession duty haven, and there are many other members in this chamber who come from other provinces whose respective provincial governments are walking right into the vacuum left by this federal administration and the so-called tax reform bill which is nothing more than tax conformity which will detract, deform and potentially destroy farming in this land if both the provincial and federal governments do not do something.

What good is it to get a 2 per cent mortgage under the farm credit legislation after the family has contributed to increasing the value of the farm? The housewife often becomes the bookkeeper and the four or five children are active participants in the growth of the farm, but at the end of it they have to pay a capital gains tax which we all say philosophically is just.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nowlan: I like the clapping and I agree with those who clap. Not only do we have the capital gains tax but this government does not have the common sense that God gave the geese to fly over this land, to integrate federal tax reform with the provincial tax laws. So the government of Canada can be the knight in shining armour, not the King for Assiniboia—he is not a bad fellow but he has a lot to learn, if he gets a chance to learn.

The point I am trying to make is, why should the federal government be the knight in shining armour and say to the public of Canada, "We think that succession duties may have a retrograde, adverse, negative influence on the social and economic development of the land, so we will withdraw and leave this field. But because we want to be just and we live under the umbrella of the just society"—whatever that may mean—"we will institute a capital gains tax"? They could not get many economists or philosophers to debate the capital gains tax. I regret that this party did not take a strong stand with regard to the capital gains tax as it applies to the farmers of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nowlan: The only time I hear these timid lions roar is when an opposition member speaks. They roar because they do not dare speak.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nowlan: I am sad because we did not take a stronger stand with regard to the capital gains tax as it applies to farmlands and the transition of the farmland from the farmer to his son or blood relatives. We all chickened out. The fact that the capital gains tax was left in a vacuum enabled each individual province to come in with its own succession duty act.

There is nothing the Minister of Agriculture can do, no matter how well intentioned he may be, to help restore agriculture as a vocation and as a challenge to the young people of Canada unless he can get together with his provincial counterparts, not only ministers of agriculture but ministers of finance, and discuss with them the tax laws so that something can be done to redress the grievances that cloud the lands of this country. They prohibit, restrict and work against young people who wish to work on the farm, work which is so necessary for the development of this land.

I say to you that we can have all the amendments to the farm credit legislation in the world, but how can we develop farming if the federal government pounces, with the capital gains tax, on the sons and daughters who helped make the land productive and on the other hand provinces such as Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and other smaller and poorer provinces in the country try to grasp any tax dollar, not fully assessing the long-term effect which the short-term grasp will have?

It will have a very detrimental effect. I know some farmers in the Annapolis Valley who are thinking of moving and setting up dummy corporations in Alberta to avoid succession duties which will mean the final termination of long-term farming in my province. I am not so sure about what is going on in other provinces. All I know is that so far as the Farm Credit Corporation is concerned, in my province over a period of ten years there have been 484 loans, 388 under part II and 96 under part III, which is the part which gives some incentive to the young farmers, for a total of $8,351,000, which is a pittance.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nowlan: I agree with whatever you say, but this ia a pittance and smaller than a pebble in a great, big pond in the totality of farm credit loans. It shows in a graphic way how inadequate Farm Credit Corporation financing is for those of us who live in Nova Scotia—and that province, with all due respect, is a little more productive, farmwise, than some Atlantic provinces. When you compare that sum with the total for the whole of Canada, $1,550,642,000 over a ten year period, it is a pittance.

There is something further that I would like to ask concerning where we are going in the farm world. What is the direction of the national policy, not only regarding the federal Department of Agriculture but the Department of Finance and the various provincial finance departments? When both succession duties and the capital gains tax are imposed on farmers there starts a flow, not only of people from the country to the city but a flow of capital because those left on the farms move into the cities and take their share of the estate with them. Because of succession duties and debts after the farmer's death, one child stays on the farm while the other children move into the city with their share of the inheritance. This compounds the problem of migration from rural areas to the city and I do not believe it is in the interests of the country. You have people and pocketbooks, in effect, moving from rural areas to city because of the conflicting and paradoxical tax laws.

I now come to the small farm adjustment program. It is probably a well intentioned piece of legislation prepared by the Minister of Agriculture and his department, but is it not ironical that the minister is developing a program to take the marginal farmer out of the mainstream so that larger farms can become more economic and more efficient? What happens to those who work in a marginal unit? Are they to be added to the welfare rolls in the cities? We already have fantastic migration from country to city which is most likely inevitable; but the minister, in his well intentioned manner, is developing a program which will accelerate the process. It will not dilute it or cure it. The minister is inadvertently—this is the kindest word I can use—accelerating the process.

Mr. Olson: That is not right.

Mr. Nowlan: Has there been any survey made by his department, by Statistics Canada or by any other organ of the federal government to assess what will happen to the workers now working on this "X" number of marginal farms in Canada? I only have to look at the book I referred to earlier, Federal Farm Credit and Related Statistics, which was published in 1971. I refer, as the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) did the other night, to the interesting table that gives the value of farms across the country. The minister described how the small farms adjustment plan would apply primarily to farms with a value of between $3,000 and $20,000. In my own province there are over 6,000 farms in that category, and in the province of Quebec over 40,000. There are like numbers in other provinces.

I hope the minister will reply to my question. Has there been any study done by his department, by Statistics Canada or by the Department of Manpower and Immigration to show what will be the effect of eliminating these marginal farms and the workers on them? It just so happens, perhaps through an accident of history or perhaps due to a fact of circumstance, that the reality of the situation is that on those farms there are a great many good citizens of Canada who have a marginal chance to participate in the full mainstream of Canada. What will happen to them? Are they going to end up—

Mr. Olson: It is a development program, not an adjustment program.

Mr. Nowlan: I suggest to the Minister of Agriculture that he read a series of essays by Paul Goodwin, an American sociologist. I am not so anti-American as some on the government side who may say that there is not an author in the United States who is worth reading. He wrote a series of essays, Mr. Speaker, for the Massey lectures, subsidized by the CBC and published in a book entitled, "The Moral Beauty of America." He points out that we in the western civilization who think we have all the answers and believe that our guidelines should be based on technology and efficiency should use the old railway crossing guide of stop, look and listen, because this may not be true. This may not be all for the good.

It may not be for the Minister of Agriculture and myself, who may be very temporary in this world, to stop all this. It is our children who will fully assess what I say tonight and what will be the result of our policies, perhaps inadvertently. I do not say that this legislation is deliberately designed to give a bad result. If it was so designed I would be far happier because I could point out that it was misguided. But I do not feel any confidence in the design; I do not feel any confidence in the plan.

I say to the Minister of Agriculture that this is something that is not within his scope, but he plays a part in it. Paul Goodwin has said that a case can be made out to keep the small family farm even if programs must be brought in to help stimulate it or, depending on your semantics, to subsidize it, rather than transfer that problem of production into the city where slabs of cement will confront the person from the farm so that he will have no recourse, because of his lack of training, but to go on welfare and add to the dilemma on that side of the coin.

Without going into the whole matter of the ecology and environment, I say we had better stop, look and listen to see just what our policies are doing. Mr. Speaker, I thought you were about to rise to call me to order because my time is running out. Before I sit down I want to quote from a very eminent North American. However, before giving this quotation I wish to say seriously that there are two subsidiary problems here concerning credit to the farmer, or lack of credit. There is the completely demoralizing effect that the combination of capital gains tax and succession duties has on the progressive, viable farmer today. As a result, he does not know where he is heading. Yet to give credit to the Minister of Agriculture, on the other side of the totem pole, on the lower side of the scale he has a program that he hopes will help to develop and assist the marginal farmer.

I suggest that you cannot talk about farm credit in isolation. You have to talk about making the marginal unit viable. You also have to talk about the most productive units in the country. From my part of the world we do not contribute, in net dollars or in percentage terms, the largest proportion of farm production but in our way we produce what we feel is a rather respectable share. Let us consider how succession duties will affect us. At page 37 of the booklet to which I referred earlier there is a table showing farmland values per acre, by province, over a 20-year period from 1951 to 1970. In Nova Scotia the value per acre started off in 1951 at $112, rose over the next three years to $114, by 1968 had risen to $190, in 1969 to $204 and in 1970 to $214. The value, in terms of dollars, may have gone up because of inflation and certain other problems, but the individual farmer still has only 30 to 35 acres per farm, or in some cases 100 to 150 acres per farm. I think the Minister of Agriculture begins to appreciate the problem but I do not think the government as a whole appreciates the effect of the double whammy of capital gains and succession duties on these farms.

There are many other things I could say, Mr. Speaker, but I would like to conclude by quoting something said by a very eminent North American who has his own difficulties tonight. He was in this chamber less than a month ago. It is President Nixon who said it. This statement is to be found in "Rural Canada 1970: Prospects and Problems." I was most interested that President Nixon, who is not noted for his rural philosophy or rural beginnings, should say this. Probably it was prepared for him by a speechwriter, but he had enough conviction in it to express the words. They are to be found at page 84 of the book as follows:

> We will carry our concern with the quality of life in America to the farm as well as the suburb, to the village as well as the city.

I expect he was paraphrasing another eminent Anglo-Saxon, Winston Churchill.

> What rural America most needs is a new kind of assistance. It needs to be dealt with, not as a separate nation, but as part of an over-all growth policy for all America. We must create a new rural environment that will not only stem the migration to urban centres but reverse it.

I would like to put in summary what I have tried to say tonight. I hope I have a chance to repeat it in more detail at other times during the life of this and other Parliaments. This House of Commons is the repository of the common denominator of Canada. People think we are a pale reflection of the personalities of Canada, but we are the repository of the common denominator of Canada because at the moment we are the representatives of Canada. Those who succeed us will demonstrate all the failures and foibles and all the perfections that we in this chamber have shown. But if there is anything to be remembered when debating any farm bill it is that we should not debate farm credit in isolation, we should not debate apples in isolation, we should not debate wheat in isolation.

Mr. Nystrom: Oranges?

Mr. Nowlan: We do not have oranges, as far as I know; but the fact that the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) mentioned them relfects his knowledge of the farming community of Canada—he knows nothing about it. We do not have oranges, Mr. Speaker. We have enough problems in this country with the crops we produce, let alone products we import from abroad. We bring tomatoes from Mexico, oranges from Florida and California; but we do not have enough coming from the West Indies, where we should have a viable trade. I come from eastern Canada where the natural flow is north and south and I do not understand why we cannot do something about trade in that direction.

To return to the serious matter I was discussing before I was diverted by the ranting of the elephant without horns, if anything serious is to be taken from what I have said tonight—and I hope there will—then in this chamber we must stop debating policies of isolation. We must decide, if there is a national farm policy, whether it is integrated with the provincial policies in farming or in finance.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Mr. Ross Whicher (Bruce): Mr. Speaker, it is a great pleasure to have the opportunity to speak on Bill C-5, an act to amend the Farm Credit Act. First of all, I should like to compliment the chairman and staff of the Farm Credit Corporation. In my opinion they have done an excellent job across Canada over the years, and I know they will continue to do the job to the best of their ability by looking after our farmers under the legislation passed by Parliament.

Mr. Alexander: What about a little praise for the Minister of Agriculture?

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan) and I heard the interjection of the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander). I appreciate, of course, that niether of those hon. members has ever had anything to do with the Farm Credit Corporation and put through any of those—

An hon. Member: High class mortgage loans.

Mr. Alexander: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

An hon. Member: He is objecting to cheap feed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) seeks the floor on a point of order.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I just want to set the record straight. My good friend has indicated that I have had nothing to do with the Farm Credit Corporation. I want him to know that during the Diefenbaker years I was one who used to process a lot of mortgages—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: How much were you paid?

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, I am not surprised at what has happened. I knew it would happen as soon as I stood up. The last speech was rather dull and I knew—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whicher: I am somewhat amused, however, that the hon. member for Annapolis Valley did not say there had not been a substantial number of loans go through his law firm in the past. You know, Mr. Speaker, we cannot have this conflict of interest. I know that my good friend from Hamilton West stood up, and rightfully so, and said that at no time did he have anything to do with mortgage loans going through the Farm Credit Corporation, but the other hon. member has not said that.

An hon. Member: He was living in British Columbia.

Mr. Nowlan: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan) rises on a question of privilege.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) was trying to bait me. He has succeeded. In the practice I carried on in Nova Scotia there was no such thing as Farm Credit Corporation loans going through the small office I ran. However, I moved to British Columbia and joined a large law firm in which at that time the former minister of labour, now Lieutenant Governor of British Columbia, was one of the senior partners. Because of the British Columbia complexion of that minister of labour in the former Pearson government, Farm Credit Corporation loans went through that office; but I had nothing to do with them in my practice of trial law, working with people and not the easy—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, now we get down to the bill—

Mr. Hees: You had better start all over again.

Mr. Whicher: I was only trying to give the hon. member an opportunity to express to the people of Canada what was obvious to me, that he would not take advantage of the farmers of Canada and put these loans through his office at the rates lawyers charge in Canada. He and the hon. member for Hamilton West happen to belong to that fraternity, and even though I know they do not make any money out of farmers I do know, on the other hand, that they are not poor. I know farmers rates go up substantially because of the legal rates charged, and I issue that challenge to either of them—

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Hamilton West rises on a question of privilege.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I do not mind the hon. member giving a speech, but surely he should have some knowledge of what this act is all about. If he has not, I will start now and set it down for the edification of all hon. members. We who are lawyers know that the fee schedule under the Farm Credit Corporation is away below tariff with respect to any county in which lawyers practise.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Alexander: That is for the edification of the hon. member for Bruce who does not know—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Alexander: The hon. member is misleading—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I must say, with respect to the hon. member—

Mr. Alexander: —those—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Hamilton West knows that when the Chair asks him to resume his seat, he should do so.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I think all hon. members should follow that rule.

Mr. Whicher: I appreciate the remarks made by the hon. member for Hamilton West. I know too, Mr. Speaker, that all of us have to take the word of hon. members of this House. However, while we have to take it, the farmers of Canada do not have to believe what he said a few minutes ago. They know that one of the reasons why costs are so high—

An hon. Member: They know.

Mr. Whicher: —is that legal costs in Canada are high. Mr. Speaker, in paying my compliments to the Farm Credit Corporation and the staff which supervises all farm loans across Canada, I want to emphasize that in my experience I have found them to be very knowledgeable in every way. I do not know what the agricultural industry in Canada would have done without the Farm Credit Corporation, when we consider the thousands of loans that are administered to help the dairy farmer, the cattle farmer and the vegetable farmer. I say that they have done an excellent job.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whicher: Every now and again we have to modernize, Mr. Speaker, and this is exactly what the government is doing now through the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson). In the past, loans have been for "X" number of dollars, but through inflation and higher costs it is obvious that loans have to be increased. In previous years loans were given to farmers at about 30 years of age, but the act has reduced this age to be in accordance with the provincial laws.

Mr. Speaker, I listened all afternoon and all yesterday afternoon to members of the opposition talking on this bill. I listened with interest to the previous speaker, the hon. member for Annapolis Valley. Hon. members opposite have been opposed to this bill. Where does the Federation of Agriculture stand on this bill? Where does the National Farmers Union stand on this bill? It is for it almost 100 per cent. The only people who are against the bill are those in the opposition.

• (2120)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whicher: Few will deny that agriculture has not had a fair deal in the last 25 years. The lack of a fair deal can be blamed not only on the present government, not only on the preceding government but on all governments, Conservative and Liberal, which have been in office since the last war. I do not think any member of the House can hold his head high and say that we have done a good job for agriculture. Nonetheless I remind you, Mr. Speaker, that there has been a turn-around in the agricultural industry and conditions are not nearly as bad as they were three or four years ago. When I hear my western friends—and I have many on the other side—criticizing the government about lack of grain sales, I simply ask: When did they sell more grain than was sold last year by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) who is responsible for the Wheat Board?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whicher: The answer is, never in the history of Canada.

Mr. Nowlan: And never at lower prices.

Mr. Whicher: My hon. friend from Annapolis Valley shows his ignorance. As a lawyer he is a professional, but as a farmer he is an amateur. He suggests the wheat was sold at low prices. Would we have sold more if we had sold grain at prices other than world prices? Surely my hon. friend from Annapolis Valley is not suggesting that we should sell grain at prices lower than world prices? He is not suggesting that we should sell grain at prices higher than world prices; of course not. We must meet the conditions of the market and that is exactly what the minister from Saskatoon-Humboldt did. Actually, he was given the salesman of the year award for his sales.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nowlan: By whom?

Mr. Whicher: This award was not given by the people of Canada, but by western farmers, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whicher: I remember criticizing the Minister of Agriculture during the past two years with respect to the government's dairy policy. I criticized the government over the sale of cattle because the price was not as high as it should be. I criticized the government because tobacco sales were not as they should be. Yet I say to you tonight, Mr. Speaker, that the government has done an excellent job. The price of cattle is an example of that; it is almost at its highest level in the history of Canada. If we are to condemn the government for certain things it has done, let us at the same time give credit where credit is due; and it is due in connection with this bill.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whicher: It has done a good job in the dairy industry, too. I remember, when first starting in the dairy business in 1947, that the price of fluid milk in Ontario was $3.75 per hundredweight. What is the price today? I will not ask the hon. member for Annapolis Valley, because he would not know the answer. The price has doubled.

Mr. Nowlan: Oh!

Mr. Whicher: It has doubled in price.

Mr. Nowlan: Oh!

[Mr. Whicher.]

Mr. Whicher: Yes, it has doubled in price, Mr. Speaker. And the legal fees of my hon. friend for Annapolis Valley have gone up tenfold in that time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whicher: I criticized the government in the last year or so because the price of hogs was in my opinion deplorable. I was one of those who criticized the Minister of Agriculture over this. I can now say to him that I apologize to some extent because he is the man responsible for the present that the government has given to the farmers and hog producers of Canada; he is responsible for the $25 million subsidy to the hog producers, which they need and deserve.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whicher: To my hon. friends from the west who are conversant with the grain industry—I see some in this chamber—I simply put this question: When was there a two-price system for grain in this country before this government introduced such a system?

An hon. Member: Never.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, that system was introduced by this government. It was introduced under our Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the Prime Minister whom the opposition condemns. Yet you fellows never had it so good.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nowlan: It is not a two-price system; it is a two-sided coin.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, we all agree that much could be done to improve agriculture. We agree, for example, that hog prices are not as high as they should be, that dairy prices are not as high as they should be and that grain prices are not as high as they should be. Last fall, several months ago, we introduced a bill into this House that had taken between 18 months and two years to prepare. It was Bill C-176. The farmers of Canada asked for that bill.

An hon. Member: The farmers of Ontario.

Mr. Whicher: it was introduced in order to bring about effective national marketing in the whole of Canada. It was to give the farmers of Canada an opportunity to sell their products, to run their show, to curtail production if necessary, and so on. After all, General Motors does not continue producing thousands of cars after it has sold a certain number. Massey-Ferguson does not attempt to supply thousands of tractors after the market is saturated.

Mr. Nowlan: How many agencies are there, Ross?

Mr. Whicher: The point is that under Bill C-176, the bill bringing in a national marketing plan, this government offered the farmers of Canada an opportunity to run their own show, that is, to produce them, manufacture them where necessary and sell them. What was the only party in Canada that was against national marketing? The Conservative party was that party. That was the only party against the legislation, even though the National Farmers Union and the Federation of Agriculture supported it.

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Whicher: The fact is that the only party in this House that was against this legislation was the Conservative party.

Mr. Nowlan: They had the wisdom to try to change the bill.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, they were against it even though the Conservative party of Ontario, their strongest base, supported the bill. They were against it even though every major organized farm group in Canada supported it. They were against that bill because they thought they had a political animal in their hands.

Mr. Nowlan: We were critics. We fought a reasonable battle.

Mr. Whicher: Now they have a tiger by the tail, a real tiger.

Mr. Nowlan: How many farmers are for it? How many farmers have an agency, Ross?

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, it is not a case of how many agencies there are now, but how many agencies there will be in future. A chairman has been appointed and several board members have been appointed. We are going to look after this program we know perfectly well that the hon. member's party cannot do it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whicher: This afternoon, Mr. Speaker, I listened to the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner), one of the chief agricultural experts in this House. I have listened to him for a long time. It is too bad that my hon. friend has not been listening to him because he would have learned something. He spoke about the forgiveness clause introduced by the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski), and the postponement of interest.

• (2130)

I also listened to the previous speaker. He said it is too bad the farmers of Canada have to pay 8 or 8¼ per cent interest. There is not a single member, whether he be Liberal, Conservative, New Democrat or Creditiste, who does not agree that the interest rate for farmers is too high. We also agree that interest is too high for housing, business and everything else. The government of Canada must borrow this money and someone must pay the interest.

I was somewhat amused when listening to the hon. member for Mackenzie yesterday afternoon. He brought in an amendment suggesting that interest should be postponed or reduced. I was amused by the hon. member for Crowfoot and, indeed, the hon. member for Annapolis Valley when he suggested the interest rate should be reduced. One of the things the Conservative party has done is stick up for the views of the Auditor General of Canada. At every opportunity they have castigated the government because they feel the government has not been fair to the Auditor General.

I refer to that part of the last report of the Auditor General of Canada which deals with the Farm Credit Corporation. This is the man the Conservatives have been sticking up for over the past two or three years and trying to shove needles into the present government. This is what he said:

> It has been pointed out previously that the statutory lending rate of 5 per cent on loans to farmers has not provided sufficient income to cover the interest paid on borrowings from Canada and administrative expenses. Although the statutory rate was abolished with effect from November 15, 1968, annual losses will continue to be incurred with respect to outstanding loans totalling $746 million at March 31, 1971, which still bear interest at the statutory rate of 5 per cent. Since 1963 these losses have been recovered from annual parliamentary appropriations provided for the purpose in order to present further depletion of the reserve for losses. However, this policy does not provide for the building up of the reserve to an amount equivalent to the capital of the corporation as is contemplated by the Farm Credit Act.

This report says it is not right that the farmers of Canada should be subsidized by the other taxpayers of Canada under our legislation. This criticism is by the Auditor General of Canada whom the Conservative party endorses at every possible opportunity.

In conclusion, there is no one in this assembly, particularly those who come from agricultural areas such as myself, who feels that the farm areas have had a square deal in the past. There is no one who does not feel that the interest rate on farm credit loans should be lowered. On the other hand, we have to face the facts of life. The fact is that the average farmer does not want to be subsidized; he just wants a square deal.

In my opinion, Bill C-5 gives the farmer a square deal, an opportunity to borrow money when he cannot borrow it anywhere else, an opportunity to get into business and an opportunity to be able to pay it back under reasonable terms. For this reason I intend to support this bill. I do not intend to support the amendment of the hon. member for Mackenzie because there is too much socialism involved in it. He is asking us to cut down on the expense. We cannot do this, and the average farmer does not want it to be done. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I intend to support this bill presented by the Minister of Agriculture because it is a very good measure. Under no circumstances, can I support the amendment of the hon. member for Mackenzie.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak very briefly on this bill to amend the Farm Credit Act because I believe that improvements to the act can greatly assist our farmers, particularly our young farmers starting on their careers. Yesterday the spokesman for the official opposition, the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) proposed an amendment which I intend to support and which I hope every member of this House, on reconsideration, will decide to support. I shall read that amendment:

> —that it be resolved that in the opinion of this House the government should give consideration to the introduction of legislation to amend the Farm Credit Act by incorporating the incentive principle—already approved by this House in other legislation—to provide for partial non payment of interest where young farmers meet performance standards, for deferred interest payments on all loans during an initial period, for equitable adjustment of interest rates for the benefit of borrowers; and, as well, to provide for open-end loans which will allow additional borrowing without refinancing costs.

I believe that the measures outlined in the amendment will make it possible for the government to treat the farmers of this country in the same manner as industry is treated, enabling them to obtain the capital they need to carry out their day to day operations. I believe it is only fair that this should be done because today farming is very much an industry. It is an industry which requires capital on the most generous terms possible to permit successful farming operations to be carried out.

As we all know, industries receive forgivable loans based on satisfactory performance in order to enable them to get started. I believe that our young farmers should receive the same treatment. New industries are permitted to defer payment of interest on loans during the initial period. This is also done to enable new industries starting up to get into operation, grow, expand, be successful and employ people. I believe that our young farmers should receive the same kind of accommodation. I also believe that it makes economic good sense to provide open-end loans to permit additional borrowing without incurring refinancing costs.

It is because I feel so strongly that the measures outlined in the amendment which I mentioned a few moments ago will do the kind of job for our farmers, particularly young farmers starting out on their careers, that I very strongly urge all members of this House to support the amendment which has been proposed by the official opposition, and by so doing join with the party to which I belong in helping the farmers of this country to operate in the future in a more profitable and effective manner.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (2140)

Mr. Rod Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, I have read with considerable interest the amendments which are proposed to the Farm Credit Act. A number of members have commented on their experience of the working of the Farm Credit Act. My experience has probably been somewhat different from theirs because I once had occasion to take out a loan on some farmland. It is now repaid.

I should like to make some observations about the Farm Credit Act based on my experience. I am aware that some of the officials concerned are with us this evening, but were they not present I would say the same things. I have found the officials of the corporation to be, generally, educated people aware of the problems of farming. I have found them to be fair minded. I do not think they would knowingly help a farmer into trouble by arranging a loan which they felt he would be in no position to repay. I believe most of them would do their best to work out a package which a farmer could handle. This would be my general observation in connection with the corporation officials I have spoken to and those with whom I have become acquainted in Ottawa.

I should like to make one reservation, though, and I would call the minister's attention to it. During the period 1966 to 1968 when we were selling a lot of grain to China, Russia and other places, not only were farmers affected by the enthusiasm which those sales generated in western Canada and in Canada as a whole, but FCC officials were, it is possible, also carried away by it as a result of which they granted loans to buy land at prices which have proved very awkward for farmers to manage. The officials might say that they did not lend as much money on this land as did some private corporations. I have in mind certain insurance companies which lent money in amounts and on terms which have placed many farmers in a difficult position.

I draw attention to this aspect because I believe we may witness a similar situation in the future. Logically, the price of land has to increase, but I believe we should be careful about how much money we pour into the land market. More attention should be paid to the productive value of the land, bearing in mind good years and bad years. I do not think it does anyone a service to lend $100,000 in circumstances where the borrower has no means of paying it back. I draw this to the attention of the farm credit administration with the best intent in the world. I know what the circumstances are. My initial experience of attempting to borrow money was that I could not get any. And after I was in a position to borrow, I had trouble paying the money back. I think one can go too far both ways; one should treat these matters very carefully.

I should like to make one or two observations in connection with a question which I directed to the Farm Credit Corporation through the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) a few days ago. I asked what percentage of farm credit loans are presently in arreas compared with the years 1969, 1970 and 1971. As I recall, we have seen a jump in Saskatchewan, for example, from 11 per cent to about 21 per cent. In some of the other western provinces there has been a jump from 14 per cent to about 24 per cent. This indicates that at least a portion of our agricultual industry is in trouble. The Farm Credit Corporation should not be blamed for this. There may have been the odd bad loan, but the situation really has to do with the agricultural policy of the government plus other factors such as lack of markets in the rest of the world.

I cannot help thinking that had we been more aware of the importance of marketing we might not today be in this awkward situation in western Canada. For example, had the Canada Grain Act been introduced ten years ago we might have retained some of the markets we lost to Australia and Russia, the first countries to introduce the protein grading system. Where were we at the time? Take the case of Syria and certain other grain importing countries. We did not sell any grain to those countries between 1952 or 1953 and a relatively short time ago. In effect, we neglected one aspect of our agriculture, and despite the best efforts of those administering the act we are now considering, failure to take into account the whole picture means that the farmer who is caught in the middle finds himself in acute trouble.

Consider, for example, the final payment on grain which might in certain circumstances bring $8,000 to an individual farmer. When this payment drops to roughly one-sixth of that sum, or down to nothing, it is a good indication of the trouble we are in. This is what has happened to the grain community in the part of the world from which I come. This is the kind of payment upon which many people depend. When it drops to nothing, the consequences can be imagined.

We recognize that farming has changed. I do not wish to quote a lot of statistics; much has been done along these lines already. It used to be, in my part of the country, that if a man wished to rent a farm he rented one third of the crop. Today, with the advent of quotas and government subsidies, the man who owns the land might as well say, "Give me $1,000 a quarter and all the other problems are yours." We see a change from one type of tenure to another.

• (2150)

In Saskatchewan there is a great deal of pressure to establish a land bank. I wish to speak about this matter for a moment because it is related to a clause in the bill pertaining to the small farm development project which the Farm Credit Corporation is to administer. As I understand the discussion between the federal government and the provincial governments, particularly the government of Saskatchewan there has been some argument in this regard. I also understand the proposed small farm loans administration would be in the hands of the Farm Credit Corporation, the counselling and farm management policies which formerly were in the hands of the provincial governments. If this should be done without the co-operation of the provincial governments, we would have a duplication of such facilities. I am concerned about this. I feel that the federal and provincial governments should not compete to give farmers, at least in my province, the logical advice they ought to receive, particularly the small farmer who in most cases would be a beginner.

The provincial government is to establish a land bank or rental scheme for the younger farmer establishing himself on the farm. I believe there could be some conflict here. My suggestion to the province of Saskatchewan, to the federal government and to the other provincial governments which might be involved in similar small farm programs with the federal government, is that we should not have competing views in this area. I suggest to the minister that he should not give up easily in his attempts to work out a solution with the provincial governments.

I suppose, being an opposition member and being politically allied to the Saskatchewan government, in this case I could argue that the federal minister is wrong; but I do not wish to do that. I believe only the farmers would be the losers. I suppose the taxpayers in Saskatchewan and federally would also be the losers. While I am not aware of what might be going on in other provinces, I would think some of the discussions would be in similar vein. So I suggest that the minister continue his efforts to find a solution with the provinces, rather than insist upon establishing a program which would do some of the things I have mentioned.

I am also a little worried about the $100,000 loan maximum provided in the bill. I am aware that the price of farmland is going up, but I wonder about adding fuel to the fire. As I indicated earlier, it would seem to me that we have occasionally helped farmers pay more for land than they logically should have paid, particularly when one considers the return from such land. Some farmers now are in a position in which they are hardly able to pay the interest, let alone anything on the capital, not to mention operating expenses.

Some individuals attempt to solve their problems with the help of someone whom they believe is in the know and has more technical knowledge in respect of farm credit and farm management than they have. When we consider the desire of many individuals, not merely farm boys, to have a farm of their onw and establish a business where over their lifetime hopefully they can make a go of it economically and add to the well-being of mankind, I think we should be a little careful. It has been suggested to me by some thinkers in the agricultural policy field that if we allow farmers loans of $100,000 this will increase the price of land. I believe this is true even under the old loan ceiling.

If we approve this extension, I believe the Farm Credit Corporation should exercise judgment in respect of how much it will allow an individual to borrow. Sometimes I think some of the suggestions we have made to help individuals have not reflected on the people who borrow the money. Too often they have resulted in a higher income for those who sell the land. While I believe the farmer or person who owns land has a reasonable claim to a fair and equitable price, I do not believe we should encourage this by subsidization, if you like. I suggest we should exercise a little judgment in this regard.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it ten o'clock?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member may call it ten o'clock if there is unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

INCOME TAX—SUGGESTED INCREASE IN EXEMPTION FOR RETIRED PERSONS OR GRANTING OF TAX CREDITS IN BUDGET

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, on Monday, May 1, as reported in Hansard at page 1764, I put a question to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) in the following terms:

In view of the many urgent appeals being received from senior citizens for the alleviation of their situation, is the minister giving consideration either to increasing the income tax exemption levels for retired persons or granting tax credits in the budget he will be bringing down next Monday evening.

The answer of the minister was one I might have expected.

He said:

Mr. Speaker, I have noted the hon. member's representation.

I realize it is against the traditions of Parliament for a Minister of Finance to indicate in advance of bringing down a budget what provisions that budget will contain. Nevertheless, it is also one of our traditions that we have the right to press upon the minister changes to which he should be giving active consideration. Therefore I urge very strongly upon the new Minister of Finance that in this his first budget he show some consideration for our older and retired people.

It is a fact that what our retired people need most is an increase in their pensions. They also need a provision for their pensions to be escalated annually at least to the extent of the rise in the cost of living. I realize that these are matters which come under the aegis of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro). Nevertheless, the Minister of Finance, when he brings his tax proposals before the House, has it in his power to do something to relieve the position of many of our senior citizens. What he can do is raise the income tax exemption level for retired persons or, in my view better still, provide them with tax exemptions so that retired persons whose incomes are modest will not have to pay income tax on those moderate incomes.

As all hon. members are aware, because I believe all of them are receiving such letters, a number of organizations as well as individuals are writing, suggesting that the income tax exemption level for those 65 years of age and over should be $3,000 for single persons and $4,500 for married couples, with a provision for these levels to be escalated annually. This suggestion comes in particular from various associations of superannuated women teachers and superannuated teachers generally as well as from other groups and individuals.

The government can say, of course, that in this year, 1972, certain changes have been put into effect, namely, that the age at which a special exemption is allowed has been fixed at 65 rather than at 70 as it used to be. It can also point out that the amount allowed as an extra exemption for retired people has been raised from $500 to $650. But in light of the needs of our senior citizens and in light of the fact that costs continue to rise, I suggest that for these people on fixed incomes there is a rationale and a case for their being given special income tax treatment.

I hope, therefore, that the noting of my representation, which the minister indicated the other day, will result in active consideration of the claims of our senior citizens. I have observed in editorial comments in various newspapers, over the radio and on television that it is being suggested that whatever else the minister is able to do next Monday night, he ought not to forget our retired people.

I hope the parliamentary secretary will realize tonight that he has a chance to make a name for himself and a chance to be reported across this country if he will even say that he personally, as one who is close to the Minister of Finance, will press him, when he brings down his budget next Monday night, to make tax changes that will alleviate the plight of many of our senior citizens.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

Mr. Judd Buchanan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has pointed out that during the oral question period on Monday, May 1, he inquired whether or not the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) was considering including certain items in his forthcoming budget. At that time the minister took note of the member's representation and, as the hon. member has indicated, he feels strongly about this area.

It is certainly well within the rights of the hon. member to urge strongly upon the minister certain action in this area. However, I know the hon. member will appreciate that because of traditional budget secrecy nothing further can be said at this time about what is or is not included in the budget which will be brought down by the Minister of Finance next Monday evening.

INDIAN AFFAIRS—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON ACTION TO PROTECT RIGHTS IN RELATION TO JAMES BAY HYDROELECTRIC PROJECT

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I want to take a few minutes of the time of the House tonight to speak on behalf of 5,000 or 6,000 Cree Indians who live in the James Bay area, the area which will be affected by the proposed hydroelectric power development.

My remarks tonight arise out of a question which I put to the minister on April 26. I asked whether he would outline the position of the government. I asked how he intends to participate in the action which the Indian people themselves have initiated. The minister's reply was that his officials had met with representatives of the Quebec Indian Association the day before and that he would announce his policy after considering the proposal of the Indian people.

Another factor which has led me to make a few comments is that the minister has been somewhat devious in dealing with this matter. On April 26 he said he had received a proposal from the Indians the day before, which was April 25. In the debate in the House of Commons on April 28 he said he had not heard about the proposal until just a day or so prior to that debate. Also, he has said repeatedly that he had not received any request from the Indian people for assistance and that he does not want to be paternalistic and interfere in their affairs.

I think those statements are somewhat misleading. Perhaps this was unintentional, but unless the minister does not read the papers and his mail, he should have known that there was a good deal of opposition to his project based on the fact that these Indians have been hunting, trapping and fishing in the area for 300 or more years and that flooding the entire area would wipe out forever their ability to earn a livelihood. There was no statement by anyone on how they would be compensated or what alternatives they would have, should the old way of life be made impossible on a permanent basis, which would occur through flooding as a result of the construction of dams.

On April 22, the Montreal Star—I am sure that the minister read that newspaper—quoted David Diamond's brief as follows:

> I really can't understand them ... those who would destroy other people in order to suit their own selfish ends.

The reference is to the possible destruction of the way of living of the Indian people in this area through flooding which might occur, an area covering 4,000 square miles of forest and valleys. I want to encourage the minister to state his policy. In his discussion on April 28 in the House he said he would have meetings for three days this week—yesterday, today and tomorrow. I would think he would have something to add which might be useful in establishing what the policy is and in allaying the fears of the Indian population in that area.

I think that when the minister said he did not want to be paternalistic he was merely passing the buck. The facts are that the law requires that prior to surrender of any Indian lands an order must be obtained from the governor in council, which means that before any Indian lands are surrendered the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development must give his approval. The Indian people have indicated that they want him to exercise his authority as the guardian of their lands, ensure that such lands will not be surrendered until they are satisfied that their land rights have been fully discussed with people of authority, and assure them of a method of earning a living.

Not too long ago the Indian people indicated their intention to proceed by way of the courts to stop this construction. The minister has indicated that since a request was made to him directly for assistance, he will do everything in his power to assist the Indian people. Since the minister ran out of the chamber a few minutes ago, I would like to know from his parliamentary secretary if the minister will assist the Indians with the legal costs if they continue their proceedings in the courts.

So far my comments have been somewhat critical of the minister for his failure to act on behalf of the Indians. The question is: What alternative could he offer them? The first thought that comes to mind is that some jobs could be given to Indian people during the construction, but we know this is really of no value because we must look at the matter from a long-term point of view. Construction, at best, will last only two or three years.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

Mr. Allen B. Sulatycky (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the question that the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk) asked the minister on April 26, I wish to state that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) added substantially to his previous replies during the debate which took place in the House on Friday, April 28. The minister said on that occasion: "Now that the Indians have officially requested my help I am happy to offer them my assistance. They have asked me to meet them next week and I have agreed to do so."

Most hon. members know that the Indian chiefs from the James Bay area and representatives of the Indians of the Quebec Association are in Ottawa at the time I am speaking and are meeting both today and tomorrow with the minister and his officials. It is appropriate at this stage to mention two of the recommendations in the preliminary study of the environmental impacts of the James Bay development project, prepared by the joint federal-provincial task force. The report, published in February, 1972, recommended:

> That intensive studies be undertaken of the major ecological problem of the impact of the project on the native population of the territory. These studies should examine the effects upon the Indian mode of life caused by both the changes in the natural environment (e.g. hunting, fishing and trapping potential, travel routes, etc.) and of the abrupt superimposition of an alien culture and technology. The object of these studies should be to improve and protect the lot of the Indians, whether they choose to maintain their traditional way of life or to shift to the industrial community. Present efforts to encourage the active participation of the Indians themselves in such studies should be intensified in order to draw upon their innate understanding of the forces of nature.

Another recommendation was:

> That programs be instituted providing full and open discussions with representatives of the native community on the planning of the regional development and on the education and training needs of both Indians and whites that will lead to a reasonable harmonizing of their two cultures.

These recommendations and other subjects will be raised during the discussions between the Indians concerned and the minister. The judicial aspects of the situation will also be reviewed. The minister stated last Friday, and many times previously, that we firmly intend to protect the interests of the Indians. I am sure that when his discussions with the James Bay chiefs and the executive of the association are completed the minister will be pleased to make a further statement.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.15 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. RICHARDSON—ACCURACY OF ANSWER RESPECTING NEW PAY CHEQUES

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I wish to rise on a matter of personal privilege. Yesterday when I was not in the House—

Mr. Diefenbaker: When you were behind the curtain.

Mr. Richardson: —the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), as reported in Hansard on page 1891, said that a statement I made was false. Mr. Speaker, I simply wish to confirm to the House that both of the answers I gave on Wednesday were accurate in every respect.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Richardson: The use of the maple leaf symbol on our cheque forms was, of course, a decision of the government of Canada. A secondary objective was to achieve greater security and in that respect, as I clearly stated, my department was advised by the RCMP.

I do not wish to take the time of the House, Mr. Speaker, to restate exactly what I said on Wednesday but I would, Sir, be proud to do so in exactly the same words which I used. If the statements I made were not true I would not have made them in this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Withdraw!

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I point to page 1860 of Hansard where the statement made by the hon. gentleman to which I alluded is found. It is very clear. I read from page 1860:

> In the explanation that was sent out along with some of the pay cheques it was stated that these changes were introduced to make fraudulent misuse of government cheques increasingly difficult. Did the disappearance of the coat of arms comply with the reasons for the removal thereof? A little later on it is stated that the new design was prompted by a continuing concern for improved security. I ask the minister, has the removal of the coat of arms in any way added to the security of the cheques?

• (1110)

Your Honour said:

> Order please. That obviously is debate. If the minister can reply briefly he will be allowed to do so, but I do not think we should become involved in a debate on this matter.

Then the minister replied:

> Mr. Speaker, security was a second objective of the change in the cheques, and it was done on the recommendation of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Then I said:

> The mounted police made that recommendation? Is that as true as the statement made by the Prime Minister concerning the RCMP when he had to make a retreat?

Mr. Trudeau: That is nothing but a red herring.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The Prime Minister interrupts and applauds that smart statement on the part of the minister. He applauded it.

Mr. Hees: He certainly did.

Mr. Diefenbaker: He applauded it.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister has risen on a question of privilege and according to tradition the right hon. gentleman is allowed to comment on the question of privilege raised by the Minister of Supply and Services. We should not, however, become involved in debate on the matter.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I mentioned a moment ago that the Prime Minister went into ecstasies that the answer was so smart and put the responsibility on the shoulders of the RCMP. Every newspaper in Canada that I have read pointed out that this is what the minister said and meant. There is no question about it. Having made that statement, the minister suddenly decided he had got himself into difficulties. He rushed out to the television cameras to explain the unexplainable and pretended he had not said it.

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I doubt that much can be gained by continuing this matter. I do not want to prevent the minister from commenting further—would the minister kindly resume his seat. I suggest we could become involved in a long debate in trying to determine exactly what the minister said and how that statement might be interpreted. I doubt very much that anything can be gained by pursuing the matter further by way of question of privilege. We have obviously entered upon a debate which could be prolonged, and I do not think that would be of much assistance in the conduct of the affairs of the House.

Mr. Richardson: I agree with you, Mr. Speaker, that we cannot go further with the debate. I simply ask you, Sir, to rule on the one matter that is before the House this morning, the question of privilege concerning the statement made by the right hon. member that a statement I had made in the House was false. The record clearly shows that it was not false.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I respectfully suggest to the minister that this can hardly be a question of privilege. The matter of what has been said or the interpretation of statements made by members in the House cannot be raised by way of a question of privilege. We regularly, from day to day in debate, hear hon. members claiming that statements made by other hon. members are incorrect. How far we can go in saying that such statements are incorrect is difficult to determine. But no hon. member can accuse another hon. member of uttering a deliberate falsehood. I did not understand that the right hon. gentleman had made such a statement. He said that the statement made was false. The minister has given his explanation and I would have to rule that the matter at that point becomes debate. I suggest that I ought not to be called upon to make a ruling on the question of privilege. If I were called on, I would have to say that, according to well established practice, this is debate and the matter is not a question of privilege.

MANPOWER

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—ANNOUNCEMENT OF PROVISION OF ADDITIONAL FUNDS TO EXTEND CERTAIN PROJECTS TO SEPTEMBER 30

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I have a very short statement to read concerning the Local Initiatives Program, a program which has clearly demonstrated its effectiveness in reaching pockets of unemployment in geographic areas and among groups of the population not touched by more traditional programs. In addition, because of the community initiative and government response implicit in the concept of the Local Initiatives Program, many of the projects have not only created jobs but provided important and beneficial services to the community as a whole. It is anticipated, therefore, that it would be beneficial to extend certain projects beyond May 31, based on criteria that emphasize these beneficial services to the community rather than solely their effect on unemployment.

[Mr. Richardson.]

I am, therefore, pleased to announce that the government has decided to make available an additional $30 million for this program.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mackasey: This will allow for the extension to September 30 of those successful projects which have not only proved themselves worth while in terms of job creation but have provided a needed local service or contributed significantly to the quality of life in the community. The most worth-while and effective projects will be selected during the next few days and project co-ordinators will be advised.

While by definition all projects approved were good and worth while, some 1,200 have demonstrated that they have made a particular contribution and it is these that will be selected on the basis of visits by the program monitors.

The criteria which the department will be applying in selecting or rejecting projects are basically these: First, projects providing an essential community service which would disappear if the project terminated, such as day-care centres, help to senior citizens and the like. Second, projects reaching unemployed in particularly difficult geographical areas and which have demonstrated an ability to help return to the active labour force those who have not been able to find work for a long time, including older workers and members of native populations. Third, projects which have a reasonable expectation that they may achieve an alternative source of funds in the near future or because they have developed some revenue producing ability.

Likely to be excluded are those that have completed the purpose for which they were established or those that were fully seasonal in nature, as well as most construction projects.

Excluded from this group will be those projects to which I referred in the House on May 1. They are mainly projects of a construction nature which were provided with an extension of time until June 16 to ensure their completion.

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, for a good number of Canadians, at least the people involved in 1,200 projects, Santa Claus is going to come twice this year. In that regard and on behalf of our party I have to say that we are quite happy for those people who will be reselected for a continuation of the LIP program. The minister stated on page 2: "While by definition all projects approved were good and worth while, some 1,200 have demonstrated that they have made a particular contribution." I am sure he does not mean to indicate that the remaining projects have not demonstrated a particular contribution. In terms of the people who will receive a second incentive from the government in the way of a renewed LIP grant, we welcome the statement. Nevertheless, we have to make certain observations.

The minister indicated in his statement that the project co-ordinators will be selecting the various projects. He also indicated that a good number will be rejected and a very small number will be accepted for further grants. Last October, seven months ago, the government decided out of panic as a result of the release of the unemployment statistics that some program had to be introduced. They were finally convinced we were going to be in for a serious winter unemployment problem. All the directors of the various departments were issued orders by the government to dust out their drawers, bring their programs forward and the government would throw in some money. What they threw together was the LIP program.

Of all the people who applied, and mainly from the communities which were the most structured in terms of formal organizations, a very small number were selected for approval. They were selected by the government's appointees. Today the minister is admitting that these same project co-ordinators have set themselves up as some great omnipotent body and they have decided that of the projects which were selected a few have made a particular contribution and they will be refunded. What has happened to all the projects which were rejected between October and the deadline for accepting projects in January? All those Canadians, thousands of them, community leaders, church leaders, Lions clubs, community councils, municipalities, who submitted projects have automatically been eliminated from any further consideration by the government. This is unfair. Certainly the projects which were submitted in October, November, December and January and were rejected should be given some consideration. Those people were encouraged and activated. Their informal leaders were given some hope. The government rejected them in January and they have rejected them automatically again. This is a very serious matter. I say there are thousands of Canadians across this country today who are frustrated by the haphazard way in which the government has gone about project selection, and again we are seeing a continuance of it.

The government today is admitting once again that it has been able to make a significant impression on unemployment. They applied a band-aid in October with their Local Initiatives Program. We welcomed that because we realized there was a need for some sort of short-term program. Today we are getting another band-aid applied to the band-aid they applied in October. This is exactly what it is. There is no indication of any long-term program which can be built on and which will result in the recurrence of employment opportunities in another year. The government has a responsibility to the Canadian people to come through with much more than this type of short-term, ad hoc program. Certainly, on the eve of Monday, May 8, we are looking forward to the unveiling of a much more comprehensive government program which will take care of unemployment in a significant way. This action is not going to resolve the problem. It will result in a tremendous amount of bad feeling among Canadians across this country who have been automatically eliminated from the program as a result of the restrictiveness announced by the minister today.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, it is obviously impossible not to welcome even the little that the minister has announced. But I wish to say to the hon. gentleman and to the government that it is difficult to think of anything less that could have been done.

I understand that there are about 3,800 private programs approved under LIP and about 1,800 municipal programs, making a total of 5,600. Apparently the government has already decided that only about 1,200 of them are to be extended to September 30.

The original Local Initiatives Program as an answer to the unemployment problem was obviously ridiculous, obviously nothing. The present answer to the unemployment problem this summer is even less than that: 1,200 projects will probably provide less than 10,000 jobs at a time when there are well over 600,000 unemployed and the University of Toronto Institute, to which I referred yesterday, has forecast unemployment rates of over 6 per cent, seasonally adjusted, throughout this year and 1972. Therefore I want to make it very clear that while my colleagues and I are glad that at least 10,000 more Canadians will be able to have three or four months' work with pay, we cannot help but condemn the government for its lack of imagination in dealing with a problem so pervasive throughout the country.

If the Local Initiatives Program was of hardly any help at all in solving unemployment, it was imaginative and it still is imaginative to the extent that it has enabled local people to decide on their own programs and to participate in a meaningful way in doing something for the community in which they live. But many communities have been left out. Many applications have been refused. Many municipalities have not had what they believe they should have had; many of the provinces have not had what they believe they should have had.

Instead of extending the entire program for a few months to give the government time to think of a permanent program of this kind to involve young people and others in an ongoing way in providing not only work for themselves but service to the communities in which they live, the government has come down with what is typical of this government—and I say this with regret—something more about which they can boast on the election hustings either this summer or whenever the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) decides to call an election. Therefore I suggest to the minister that this is totally unacceptable as a solution, even in the narrow range of LIP. There are about 4,000 or more projects now under way that will have to be dumped on May 31. The criteria proposed by the minister in his statement are, to me, almost incomprehensible. I do not know what he is talking about in any one of the three criteria. I do not know what they mean in the language he has used, and to the extent that they have meaning it seems to me that they are the wrong criteria on which to base the program.

The people involved in LIP have co-ordinated themselves into a committee and there was a meeting in Toronto last night. Some of these people visited Ottawa today and met with members of parliament. They have pleaded that their programs be extended and that the program be made a permanent part of government action involving local people. I think it is shameful that the minister has not been able to announce more than this minuscule of a program.

Local Initiatives Program

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to learn this morning of the decision taken regarding local initiative programs.

It will be remembered that I rose many a time in the House to urge that as many projects as possible be accepted, and also to ask the President of the Treasury Board and the Prime Minister to grant extra amounts to the minister in charge of the local initiatives program. We were repeatedly told that we should not entertain too much hope in this regard. This morning, I see that we are in May, that all nature is abloom again and that even in this field we have the pleasure of hearing that it has at last been decided to do something.

I should just like to say that this program, in my opinion, has increased the purchasing power of Canadians while achieving—as I hope—in most cases implementation of work Canadians had long hoped for but were unable to carry out for lack of the necessary funds.

I would however urge the hon. minister, if his health is now restored, as I hope, to follow more closely the decisions made and the future selection of programs already submitted but not approved, giving special consideration to projects submitted by highly responsible agencies concerned with bringing about improvement of public services in their community, such as community halls and public works to assist villages and municipalities in effectively controlling pollution.

I remember one specific project, submitted by a slaughtering co-operative, whose sewers flow into a river, thereby contributing to the pollution of the water. This project was especially intended for works likely to stop the direct flow of sewage into the river. The St-Anselme municipal authorities were strongly in favour of this project, if I may be permitted to give you the name of the interested people.

I hope that, following the experience of the recent months and in view of the popular response, the minister will be in a better position to give this program an appropriate direction. I also hope that it will be continued so that these organizations will now be able to provide those long awaited services for the people.

On concluding my remarks, I would like to say that I am in favour of this decision and that I am quite satisfied about it. I shall be more so when the projects are finalized and if they are the answer to the hopes and wishes I have just mentioned. I shall then express my satisfaction. Such is my way of co-operating when good decisions are being taken and when the country is administered and afforded possibilities which are expected by all.

[Mr. Lewis.]

PROPOSED CARRIAGE OF KOOTENAY COAL OVER U.S. RAILWAY LINE—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I have a matter of extreme urgency which concerns thousands of railway and other employees in Canada. I therefore move, under Standing Order 43, seconded by the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Harding):

That in the opinion of this House, the government should give immediate consideration to the introduction of necessary amendments to the Railway Act or other acts so that the Canadian Transport Commission can make decisions based on public interest or on any other adequate reason, specifically to prevent the movement of coal from the east Kootenays to the Pacific coast via United States rail routes which will result in major economic loss to Canada, involving the loss of thousands of Canadian jobs.

Mr. Speaker: This motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: The motion cannot be put.

YOUTH

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—RESIGNATION OF CERTAIN OFFICIALS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I seek leave of the House to move a motion concerning a matter which is obviously urgent and of national interest.

This urgent and pressing matter arises from the resignations of more than eight directors of the Opportunities for Youth program, which is so much more serious since they all resigned as one man.

What makes it even more urgent is that they all acted in reaction to one thing, namely, political interference.

In the interest of the public which has a right to know through its elected representatives how are spent—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is aware, I am sure, of the provisions of the Standing Orders. He cannot present any argument in support of his motion. In fact, following a very brief explanation, he must merely state the motion that he wants put to the House, after which the Chair will determine whether or not there is unanimous consent.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I was coming to that.

I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise):

That the House ask the Secretary of State to report on the reasons which motivated the resignation of those federal employees and on the veracity of the charges made by them with regard to political interference in the approval of those projects.

Mr. Speaker: Under Standing Order 43, that motion requires unanimous consent of the House. Is the House unanimous?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACT, 1949

AMENDMENT OF TERM 17 OF TERMS OF UNION OF NEWFOUNDLAND WITH CANADA

On the order: Government Notices of Motions:

May 3, 1972—The Minister of Transport:

That a humble Address be presented to Her Majesty the Queen in the following words:

To the Queen's most Excellent Majesty:

Most Gracious Sovereign:

We Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of Canada in Parliament assembled, humbly approach Your Majesty praying that You may graciously be pleased to cause a measure to be laid before the Parliament of the United Kingdom to be expressed as follows:

An Act to amend the British North America Act, 1949

Whereas Canada has requested, and consented to, the enactment of the following provisions, and the Senate and House of Commons of Canada in Parliament assembled have submitted an Address to Her Majesty praying that Her Majesty may graciously be pleased to cause a measure to be laid before the Parliament of the United Kingdom for that purpose:

Be it therefore enacted by the Queen's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

Terms of Union of Newfoundland with Canada amended

1. Term 17 of the Terms of Union of Newfoundland with Canada set out in the Schedule to the British North America Act, 1949 is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"17. (1) In lieu of section ninety-three of the British North America Act, 1867, the following Term shall apply in respect of the Province of Newfoundland:

In and for the Province of Newfoundland the Legislature shall have exclusive authority to make laws in relation to education, but the Legislature will not have authority to make laws prejudicially affecting any right or privilege with respect to denominational schools, common (amalgamated) schools, or denominational colleges, that any class or classes of persons had by law in Newfoundland at the date of Union, or any like right or privilege with respect to such schools or colleges that any other class or classes of persons have had by law in Newfoundland after the date of Union as members of a religious denomination or one of a group of religious denominations that, by or under the Schools Act of Newfoundland, is or at any time has been recognized as being organized for educational purposes, and out of public funds of the British North America Act

Province of Newfoundland provided for education,

(a) all such schools shall receive their share of such funds in accordance with scales determined on a non-discriminatory basis from time to time by the Legislature for all schools then being conducted under authority of the Legislature; and

(b) all such colleges shall receive their share of any grant from time to time voted for all colleges then being conducted under authority of the Legislature, such grant being distributed on a non-discriminatory basis.

(2) In this Term, "Schools Act of Newfoundland" means The Schools Act, 1969, being the Act No. 68 of 1969 (Statutes of Newfoundland), as amended from time to time, or any Act substituted therefor as amended from time to time."

Coming into force of amendment

2. For greater certainty, the provisions of Term 50 of the Terms of Union of Newfoundland with Canada set out in the Schedule to the British North America Act, 1949, in so far as those provisions relate to the approval and coming into force of the said Terms, do not apply to or in respect of the amendment set out in section 1 of this Act.

Short title and citation

3. This Act may be cited as the British North America Act, 1972; and the British North America Acts, 1867 to 1965, and this Act may be cited together as the British North America Acts, 1867 to 1972.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Section 2 of Standing Order 21 this notice of motion is transferred to and ordered for consideration under government orders at the next sitting of the House.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

DRUGS

GOVERNMENT INTENTIONS CONCERNING NON-MEDICAL USE OF DRUGS DIRECTORATE FOLLOWING RESIGNATION OF DIRECTOR

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the announced resignation of Dr. William Craig, head of the federal directorate on the non-medical use of drugs, can he indicate whether the government intends to continue to support this program and whether the government is reconsidering the allocation of sufficient funds to carry out this necessary work?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The answer to the first question, is yes, Mr. Speaker. On the matter of funds, I have not discussed this with the Minister of National Health and Welfare in recent days and I would have to refer to him for an answer.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, would the Prime Minister indicate whether we can expect a statement on motions either from the Prime Minister or the Minister of National Health and Welfare clarifying the whole situation, and in particular the future of any programs designed to combat drug abuse?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the minister will always be pleased to answer questions addressed to him on subjects within the jurisdiction of his department. I know he was prepared to do so yesterday but I believe he did not have any questions on this subject. I am sure he is prepared to do so in any event.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

POSSIBILITY OF FURTHER MEASURES TO DEAL WITH FOREIGN INVESTMENT

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce is reported in one of the morning newspapers to have stated to some journalists that there were other measures to deal with foreign ownership and foreign investment which the government would eventually bring in. May I ask him what measures he had in mind?

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the question might be asked directly. The hon. member knows the rule about referring to statements made by a minister outside the House. Having said that, we can assume that the question has been asked directly.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I was asking the minister whether he would tell the House what other measures in respect of foreign ownership and foreign investment the government is contemplating, if it is contemplating any, and when we may expect such measures to be announced?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I was not really adding anything to what was said by the Minister of National Revenue when he made his announcement. Yesterday, for example, when the Leader of the Opposition asked me whether we were contemplating moves having to do with participation in Canadian industry I said there was, among the five factors to be used in deciding on takeovers under the bill which has been introduced, one called "participation". When a takeover is being studied by my department the degree of participation by Canadians in that particular instance would be a consideration taken into account in determining whether the takeover was an allowable one or not.

Mr. Lewis: From that I gather the minister was not saying anything to the press.

UNITED STATES DISC PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON MEETING OF MINISTER AND HEADS OF AUTOMOBILE COMPANIES

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce whether he has met with the heads of the automobile firms regarding DISC and the problems deriving from it, which heads of which firms he has met and when we may expect a statement from him on that subject?

[Mr. Mazankowski.]

• (1140)

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I did meet with all four of the main automobile manufacturers in Canada and the information that was gathered is presently being assembled and will be the main part of my contribution to the budget debate.

Mr. Hees: There is a real clear-cut answer!

Mr. Lewis: I hope the information now being examined is more reliable than the information the minister had earlier.

MONITORING UNIT TO EXERCISE SURVEILLANCE OVER FOREIGN TAKEOVERS UNTIL BILL BECOMES LAW

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister this question: Would he inform the House whether he has set up or is contemplating setting up a monitoring unit of some sort to have some surveillance over foreign takeovers that might take place during the interim period until the bill which was introduced yesterday becomes law?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, as the Prime Minister said the other day, the law will not be retroactive, but I expect that people who intend to proceed to important takeovers in the meantime or in the interim period will keep me informed.

Mr. Lewis: I have a further supplementary, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the minister whether he has given thought concerning how he will act and what will happen in the case of takeover negotiations that have been completed when the law comes into force but completion has not yet been formalized? Will the law apply to such situations, or what exactly will he do with that kind of situation?

Mr. Speaker: I would think the hon. member is asking for a legal interpretation. At least, that is my interpretation of the hon. member's question. The hon. member for Halifax-Dartmouth East on a supplementary.

FOREIGN OWNERSHIP—SUGGESTED DEFERMENT OF TRANSFER OF CANADIAN SHIPS TO FOREIGN REGISTRY UNTIL REVIEW POSSIBLE WHEN BILL BECOMES LAW

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. I wonder whether in one very specific area, particularly in light of the concern expressed by Leonard McLaughlin, President of the Seafarers International Union in a telegram to the minister, he would give some consideration to deferring the transfer of Canadian ships to foreign registry until such time as there is a process or procedure within his new legislation for reviewing the laws in respect of Canada's flagships, particularly in the tugboat industry on the east coast. Will he give some consideration to that?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): If I understand the question well, the idea would be to start implementing the future bill in anticipation of what it would include and that is not our intention.

UNITED STATES DISC PROGRAM—PROVISION OF INFORMATION SUPPLIED BY HEADS OF AUTOMOBILE COMPANIES

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the fact there will be no possibility of the minister making any statement in the budget debate until Thursday or Friday of next week, how can he possibly justify keeping from the House and country important information about the extent to which automobile companies in the United States are using DISC?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Leader of the Opposition will agree with me, I am sure, that this is argument, not a question.

DIFFERENTIAL IN CAR PRICES IN FAVOUR OF UNITED STATES PURCHASERS—DISCUSSION WITH HEADS OF AUTOMOBILE COMPANIES

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce whether he discussed with the heads of the automobile companies, when he met them the fact that Canadian automobiles produced in Canada are now being sold for substantially less in the United States than in Canada and what they propose to do about it?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am not trying to be difficult. It is just that it is a very complicated matter. On the subject of the use of DISC, for example, the four companies are in a different situation—

Mr. Stanfield: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, may I suggest it would be appropriate for the minister to make a statement on motions on this subject with full disclosure.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps we might return to this subject in a moment. Obviously there are a number of supplementaries. I will recognize the hon. member for Winnipeg North for a further supplementary, then the hon. member for Lotbinière and then return to supplementaries on this subject.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, it might be helpful—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Winnipeg North.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I have no further supplementary. I would like the minister to answer the question I asked.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Pepin: The question asked concerns the differential between the price of automobiles in Canada and the United States at the present time and how one accounts for that. This is exactly what I intend to present to the House next week. I will be indicating what the difference is, what the justifications are, and will be expressing a view on how justified the justification is.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Obviously a number of supplementaries are sought. I think they should be allowed in a short while, but in fairness the Chair will go to a representative of the party to my extreme left.

YOUTH

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR INQUIRY INTO RESIGNATION OF CERTAIN OFFICIALS—VERIFICATION OF LIST OF PROJECTS

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, in view of the resignation of eight officials of the Opportunities for Youth program and their allegations of political interference, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister.

Is it the intention of the Prime Minister to check this information for correctness so as to reassure parliament and the people as to the integrity of this program?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I think I can reassure the people, Mr. Speaker. If there was any political interference, I think that the programs would not be spread as they are over all parts of the country.

As to the minister's attitude, I can also answer for it. It consists precisely in preventing any political interference from people who intended to use this program as a vehicle for their own ideologies.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question.

The Prime Minister's comments are quite reassuring. Nevertheless, could he tell us whether it is true that four lists of projects were submitted, that is one to the Quebec premier, another to the members, another to the Prime Minister's office and one to the RCMP before those projects were approved? Is it true?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the minister has always recognized that all the parties concerned were consulted. I suppose that it could mean the Quebec government and in some security matters the RCMP. But I do not agree that there were lists as suggested by the hon. member.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will now recognize members with supplementaries on the previous subject. I believe the hon. member for Winnipeg North has a further supplementary.

Inquiries of the Ministry

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

DIFFERENTIAL IN CAR PRICES IN FAVOUR OF UNITED STATES PURCHASERS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce this question. When he makes that famous speech during the budget debate, will he indicate to the House why the assurance given for many years by the President of the Treasury Board that the difference in prices between Canadian and United States autos would disappear in time has not been realized?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Lachine on a supplementary.

UNEMPLOYMENT—ALLEGED ATTITUDE OF GOVERNMENT IN PAST AS CAUSE

Mr. Raymond Rock (Lachine): Mr. Speaker, this is a supplementary to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of his statement which appeared in today's Gazette entitled "Ownership Bill to Get Tougher as Times Better"—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Will the hon. member ask the question directly. It is preferable to do it in this way rather than use an article or statement made outside the House.

Mr. Rock: I have to quote his words before asking the question, if I may be permitted to do so.

Mr. Speaker: That is irregular, but other questions have also been irregular on occasion.

Mr. Rock: In view of his statement in the Gazette, is the minister admitting that the government's past anti-attitude toward foreign investment caused much of the unemployment today?

• (1150)

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I do not really think this is an actual quotation. It is a fabricated quote from things I said.

Mr. Hees: Misquoted again!

Mr. Pepin: My position on this from the beginning has been very clear. The governments decision was a wise and prudent one. I have emphasized that. I have also emphasized that we were exercising the normal qualities of politicians when we made that decision. We were conscious of the views of the provinces. We were aware of the views of industry in Canada—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker is on his feet.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We have to try to make some progress. The Chair will recognize one or two further supplementaries on this subject and return to the matter later if there is time. Obviously we should not get involved in debate. If there is more and more debate there will be less and less questioning and answering. The hon. member for Lachine.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Rock: Was the governments anti-foreign attitude part of the plan to fight inflation by causing unemployment?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That of course is debate.

INDUSTRY

FURTHER INCENTIVE GRANT TO MICHELIN TIRE—DUTY-FREE ACCESS PERIOD—IMPACT OF GRANT ON EMPLOYMENT IN OTHER COMPANIES

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a new question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce which he may be able to cover in his five-hour speech next week. In view of the fact the federal government has announced another $8 million grant to the Michelin Tire Corporation, is the minister in a position to inform the House whether or not the date has been set for the three-year period in which that corporation is to have duty-free access to the tire market in Canada?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that this comes under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Finance I would not like to invade his area of jurisdiction. He will answer the question on the next occasion.

Mr. Broadbent: In view of the fact that the tire industry elsewhere in Canada outside the province of Nova Scotia is at present operating below capacity, have the minister and his officials considered the impact on unemployment elsewhere in Canada caused by making this grant?

Mr. Pepin: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I well understand what the hon. member is talking about. There are in this area developments that are shaping up, which everybody hopes will come to a conclusion that will be meaningful to the Canadian economy.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member may ask one last supplementary on this subject and then we will go to another subject.

Mr. Broadbent: Is the minister aware of the fact that at least three presidents or vice-presidents of tire corporations in the province of Ontario have indicated complete disagreement with the statement he has just made?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The right hon. member for Prince Albert.

FLOODS

POSSIBLE DECLARATION OF TISDALE-ARMLEY REGION, SASKATCHEWAN, AS DISASTER AREA—PROVISION OF COMPENSATION FOR LOSSES

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. It is in connection with previous questions I have asked regarding the large region in the Tisdale-Armley area of Saskatchewan that has been inundated as a consequence of floods. Has the government of Saskatchewan declared the region in question to be a disaster area, and has it made any request yet to the government of Canada to make a contribution to meet the very heavy losses that are being suffered and will be suffered in harvesting in these areas?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I do not think a request has been made to the federal government to participate in the assistance program although there was one carried out last winter of up to $2,000 per farmer or $20 per acre. In addition, I understand that the claims for crop insurance are now being processed and we have reason to believe that the indemnity in most cases will be paid in full.

Mr. Diefenbaker: In addition to crop insurance payments that will be made with respect to crops that were not harvested last fall or were not threshed, what about the tremendous losses these people have suffered in a 50,000-acre area for which there is no compensation under crop insurance? What is going to be done about them? Is the government of Canada going to give any assistance to these people, or can it do so before being requested by the government of Saskatchewan?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I think it would be a departure from the normal policy of waiting for the province to make a request if we were to attempt to set up a direct assistance program circumventing the provincial government. As I said the other day, there is a precedent in regard to losses other than crop losses. If the Saskatchewan government feels it is beyond its capacity to cope with the matter it can make an application to the federal government.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, if the Saskatchewan government does what one expects it will, namely, make a request for assistance, and considering the investigation that has already been made by officials of the federal Department of Agriculture, will the government of Canada give consideration to making payments to these farmers who will not be covered by crop insurance and the like?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, the federal government always gives consideration to requests that come from the provinces in this respect, but I can give no undertaking beyond that because we have not seen the nature of the damage or the kind of the program the province would wish to use.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps we have reached the moment when the Chair should try to give effect to the undertaking it made yesterday to recognize some of the backbenchers, some of the frontbenchers in the back rows. I will begin with the hon. member for Lisgar.

INCOME TAX

EVALUATION BY INTERDEPARTMENTAL COMMITTEE OF APPLICATION OF NEW ACT TO AGRICULTURE—OPPORTUNITY FOR SUBMISSIONS

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of Finance is not in the House I will direct my question to the Minister of State. In view of the fact the government has announced that a specific group will be set up to evaluate agricultural taxation policy as it pertains to the new tax changes, will this body be receiving submissions from interested groups across Canada, and when and how will the taxation changes that come about be made public?

Hon. P. M. Mahoney (Minister of State): Mr. Speaker, the particular group to which the hon. member is alluding is an interdepartmental committee consisting of officials from the Department of Agriculture, Department of Finance and Department of National Revenue. Persons wishing to communicate views or opinions to them may do so through myself, the Minister of Finance, or any of the other ministers concerned. As to the method by which the tax changes, if any, recommended by that committee come into effect, that of course is a matter for parliament to deal with at the time.

AGRICULTURE

FERTILIZER—INVESTIGATION OF ALLEGED EXCESSIVE PRICES IN MANITOBA AND SASKATCHEWAN

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. It arises out of a question directed to him a few days ago when he was asked about the prices of fertilizer in Manitoba and Saskatchewan in relation to the prices in states south of the border and the possibility of a combine or cartel operating in this field. The minister replied that if there was something more than rumour he would look into it. I called his attention to some evidence. Is he giving it consideration, and is he prepared to look into the excessive prices charged for fertilizer in those two provinces?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member attempted to provide some evidence. However, it was not very useful because, so far as I can recall, it was simply some comments that had been made in a paper. If we could have some invoices and other things like that of a substantive nature it would be helpful.

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Speaker, will the minister give an undertaking that if I do provide him with invoices he will conduct an investigation?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's supplementary is obviously hypothetical.

MANPOWER

BILL UNDER STUDY BY U.S. CONGRESS—POSSIBLE REPERCUSSIONS ON RESIDENTS OF SOUTHEASTERN QUEBEC WORKING IN UNITED STATES

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Since the American Congress is now considering Bill S-1488 which, if passed, will affect at least 8,500 southeastern Quebec workers, may I ask the minister whether he is aware of this bill and if officials from his department will be sent for an on-the-spot study on the impact of this bill on Canadian workers in southeastern Quebec?

• (1200)

[English]

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I must be honest and say that I am not fully familiar with the bill which obviously originated in the other place, but I will look at it today and report back to the hon. member on Monday.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Huron.

Mr. McKinley: Mr. Speaker, I have a question—

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I apologize to the hon. member for Huron. Perhaps we might return to him in a moment, but first the hon. member for Bellechasse has a supplementary.

[Translation]

The hon. member for Bellechasse on a supplementary.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question.

In view of the importance of the matter, may I ask the Minister of Labour, once he has made inquiries, to make a statement to the House so that interested parties may be told as soon as possible.

[English]

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, I shall take up that matter with the Minister of Labour.

AGRICULTURE

SUGAR BEETS—REQUEST FOR EARLY MEETING BETWEEN MINISTER AND REPRESENTATIVES OF INDUSTRY

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. I understand that the Ontario Sugar Beet Marketing Board and representatives of farm organizations will be meeting with the Standing Committee on Agriculture next Tuesday. They did not have a chance to see the minister the last time they were in Ottawa, so I wonder whether he would make himself available for that meeting to hear their representations or is he going to meet with them separately next week?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I should like to meet with them as soon as possible. I cannot be at the committee meeting on Tuesday, but certainly I would hope to find a mutually convenient opportunity very soon.

VETERAN'S AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR LIGHTING OF MEMORIAL IN POINT PLEASANT PARK, HALIFAX

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Veterans Affairs. As we approach the commemoration of the battle of the Atlantic this coming weekend, would the minister give some consideration to accepting responsibility, as a gift on the part of the Canadian people, for the lighting of the national memorial in Point Pleasant Park, Halifax?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we will give consideration to that proposal.

Mr. Bell: Get a few more ships, too, for the navy.

MANPOWER

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—PERSONNEL MAKING DECISIONS ON EXTENSION OF PROGRAMS—REQUEST FOR CONSULTATION WITH THOSE INVOLVED

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration regarding his statement earlier today. Who will make the decisions as to which LIP projects will be extended, and can the minister assure the House that the local people involved will be consulted regarding the projects?

Mr. Stanfield: Let's not get into that.

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the 5,000-odd programs that are already in existence, many of which will be phased out at the end of May, have been visited by representatives of the department and evaluated to the extent of 92 per cent. A committee, which is independent of the minister for obvious reasons, has evaluated the projects submitted from the very beginning and it is expected that this committee, based on its studies, will select the 1,200 particular projects. The concept is not the effect it will have on unemployment—that would be very simple as the criteria would be merely that the project should be labour-intensive—but rather the effect that the programs have on the quality of life in many parts of this country, particularly those projects, for instance, that render direct assistance to senior citizens—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for St. John's East on a supplementary.

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCES ON EXTENSION

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. In view of the fact that a number of provinces have had to supplement LIP programs in order to ensure their completion or by providing additional services, may I ask the minister if there has been any consultation with the provinces on the existing program or on the program which he announced today?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, there has been no consultation with the provinces on the concept of providing additional funds. A week or so ago, I mentioned that I would be extending certain projects at the request of many of the provinces and many municipalities, projects that began late because of climatic or other reasons, until at least the middle of June. These programs to which I have referred are temporary in nature, and the provinces are aware of them. If there are any particular projects that the provinces would refuse permission to extend on constitutional grounds, then I would have to respect the views of the provinces.

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

RECENT APPOINTMENT OF SCOTSMAN TO JOB IN CAPE BRETON—SUGGESTED REPLACEMENT BY CANADIAN

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Having in mind the 29 to 31 per cent rate of unemployment in Cape Breton and the action of AECL in not advertising a position and hiring a man without experience from Scotland, will the minister take steps to correct the situation and assure the House that the government's first concern is for the Canadian unemployed?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I would have to make a further inquiry into this. I would have to acknowledge an hereditary bias toward hiring people from Scotland, but not over people from Nova Scotia.

Mr. MacInnis: Question. When the minister makes the inquiry I can assure him that he will get the exact answer I have mentioned here. Will the minister assure the House that he will take steps to ensure that this position will be reopened and made available to the many Canadians who are qualified?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, not knowing the exact details and AECL of course being autonomous in terms of administration I would not like to upset that particular custom.

Inquiries of the Ministry

TRANSPORT

PROPOSED LINKING OF KOOTENAY AND ELK RAILWAY TO U.S. LINE—REQUEST FOR ACTION TO PREVENT MOVEMENT OF COAL TO U.S. PORTS

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. In view of the statement made in the judgment handed down by Mr. Justice Hall in the case of the Kootenay and Elk Railway Company and the Burlington-Northern versus the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to the effect that:

the whole scheme would appear to be a classic case of a foreign conglomerate in concert with related Canadian companies so manipulating the enterprise that the export of Canadian jobs would be the result—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We are running short of time and the hon. member will have noticed that a number of his colleagues to his right and in front are anxious to ask questions. The hon. member should not make a speech.

Mr. Skoberg: Mr. Speaker, I had to preface my question so that you would understand what it was. May I ask the Minister of National Revenue if any action is being taken to review that decision in order to stop the movement of that coal and other resources to possible U.S. coast ports?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I have not had a chance to review the court decision in question. I will be happy to do so and see if it raises any implications for matters under the jurisdiction of the Department of National Revenue.

PROPOSED LINKING OF KOOTENAY AND ELK RAILWAY TO U.S. LINE—SUGGESTED SURVEY TO DETERMINE LOSS TO ECONOMY IF CONSTRUCTED

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): I have a supplementary for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, Mr. Speaker. In view of the serious threat to Canadian jobs and to the economy in general if the Kootenay and Elk Railway is built to syphon off a large portion of the coal for haulage by United States railways, will the minister have his department conduct an immediate survey to indicate the loss to the economy which would result if such a line were built?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I will see what I can do.

STRATEGIC ARMS LIMITATION—REPORTED AGREEMENT BETWEEN UNITED STATES AND SOVIET UNION—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT

Mr. Murray McBride (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is on a subject of vital international importance and I would direct it to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Some hon. Members: Author, author!

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. McBride: In view of news reports today that the U.S.A. and U.S.S.R. have reached agreement on strategic arms limitation after the prolonged SALT talks, will the minister be in a position to report any agreement reached in this House at an early date?

Mr. Paul St. Pierre (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the report for the moment is just that, a news report. We hope the optimistic tone of the report will be confirmed by events.

WOOL—SUGGESTED SUBSIDY TO ENCOURAGE PRODUCTION

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture and repeats a question I put some time ago that was taken notice of by his parliamentary secretary. In light of current reports from the textile trade and needle industry that because of the increased demand for woollen fabrics the cost of this commodity will increase by 20 per cent this year, will the minister consider revising his policy and provide a wool subsidy to encourage the production of wool in Canada rather than having it imported to meet this increased demand?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, a wool deficiency payment, of course, does not make any contribution to that at all, but we are very concerned about the sheep producers in Canada setting up better marketing structures so they can benefit from a very substantial and satisfactory lamb market.

TRADE

SUGGESTED RECALL OF TRADE COMMISSIONERS TO DISCUSS LOSS OF EXPORT MARKETS

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the serious decline in Canadian exports, in March to Britain, Japan, West Germany, Norway, Italy, Venezuela, Belgium, Luxembourg—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the hon. member knows that this kind of question is irregular. Hon. members cannot ask questions which attempt to convey information to the House. The question should be asked without all these details.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, I listed the countries to give an indication of the very basis of my question. In view of this decline in exports, has the minister given any thought to recalling our trade commissioners presently in those countries to Ottawa in order to discuss our sagging exports of newsprint, aluminium, copper and automobiles and hopefully find ways of correcting our lost trading position?

[Mr. McBride.]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1210)

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I will send the hon. member a copy of the speech I will make this weekend on the subject of exports. On the subject of recalling trade commissioners, may I remind my hon. friend that this was done a number of weeks ago. We brought them back from Europe and other parts of the world, and we will bring them back from the United States in September. So what he suggests has already been done.

Mr. Stanfield: But will the government produce results?

PUBLIC SERVICE

CAPE BRETON—REPLACEMENT OF ELIGIBILITY LIST FOR UNILINGUAL POSITIONS BY ONE FOR BILINGUAL POSITIONS

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Treasury Board who seems congenial today and quiet. It deals with an eligibility list that was set up in December, 1971, for forthcoming vacancies in the public service in Cape Breton. Since these eligibility lists are usually good for one year, as we all know, and since I have been informed that this list will be void after June 15, 1972, and positions will be filled from a previous list calling for bilingualism, would the minister be good enough to advise me what reply can be given to the many applicants who have already qualified in the last competition which required only unilingualism on the part of applicants?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am not familiar with the particular circumstances of this case. I will inquire and provide an answer to the hon. member.

ENERGY

GENTILLY AND DOUGLAS POINT POWER PLANTS—CLOSURE AS RESULT OF SHORTAGE OF HEAVY WATER—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO INCREASE SUPPLY

Mr. Rod Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of reports that the Gentilly and Douglas Point atomic energy plants will be closed down because of the shortage of heavy water, will the minister say how long these plants will be closed and what he is doing to acquire more adequate supplies of heavy water?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I would confirm that this was announced some weeks ago. The Gentilly, Rolphton and also the Douglas Point plants will be successively closed down for the purpose of bringing into operation the third reactor at Pickering. I might say that it is now coming on stream and operating as well as the other two, which are operating better than any nuclear reactor in operation anywhere in the world.

The answer with regard to heavy water supply is that Atomic Energy of Canada has been active in the purchase of supplies abroad. We have noted that capacity is going up in the Port Hawkesbury plant. We hope to get the Glace Bay plant into operation as soon as possible. We must recognize that there will be a hiatus for a year or more until we have full domestic production. We hope, however, to get the closed plants back into operation as soon as possible. In part, the close-down—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder if the minister would like to revert to motions to complete the statement.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

FOREIGN OWNERSHIP BILL—POSITION OF PROVINCIAL PREMIERS

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue with respect to the bill he introduced the other day. Has he had any formal statements from the respective premiers throughout the country as to their attitude toward it? If so, will he be making a statement in this regard?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, so far I am only aware of the comments they have made to the press. No formal, written statement has reached me. Perhaps some statements are on the way to the Prime Minister. Certainly we intend to seek the views of the provincial premiers in due course about the policy that we have announced.

Mr. Alexander: I am pleased to note, from the latter part of the minister's answer, that the government will be seeking the attitudes of the premiers in this regard. Can the minister advise us when these meetings will take place? Will he make an announcement in that regard to the House?

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, dates have not yet been set for such meetings. I would be happy to convey this information to the House in some appropriate fashion once these dates have been worked out.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED NEED FOR INCREASED PENSIONS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Does he expect to be in a position this month, or soon, to make a statement with regard to a government decision to increase veterans pensions and allowances in order to restore their purchasing power to former levels?

Mr. Woolliams: Don't you know an election is coming up, Angus?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we are hearing quite a number of representations from various veterans organizations. Historically, it has been our habit to review these matters and make adjustments every two years. This policy would ordinarily have the effect of an adjustment being made in 1973.

An hon. Member: Is not 1972 a good year?

Mr. Laing: However, there are a number of pressing—

Mr. Stanfield: Considerations?

Mr. Laing: —matters that have been brought forward by a number of groups, and we have told them that we will discuss these with them. We are going to refer this matter to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs so they can be heard.

PUBLIC SERVICE

TRANSLATORS—ALLEGED FAILURE TO PAY RETROACTIVE INCREASES WITHIN 90 DAYS—POSSIBLE CORRECTIVE ACTION

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question either to the President of the Treasury Board or to the Minister of Supply and Services. My question arises out of a contract that was signed in December, 1971, between Treasury Board and public servants in the translation group. Since the retroactive pay increases that were arrived at in that agreement were supposed to reach the employees within 90 days, and since many of them have not received these payments, and many of those received have been in error, what steps are to be taken to correct this situation?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, there are a couple of issues involved, I think. One is the policy with relation to payment within 90 days, and the other is the correction of errors. I should like any information the hon. member has about errors because I have not heard anything. In relation to payment within 90 days, may I say that now that we have been pressing for a rather more rapid conclusion of collective bargaining agreements following or, indeed, in some cases preceding termination of contracts, the problem of retroactive pay and consequent adjustments to be made within 90 days will, hopefully, become a lot easier to deal with.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MacLean: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could ask the government House leader if he will make a statement, either now or before the House rises today, about the business for Monday afternoon, Tuesday and Wednesday of next week.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I will be in touch with the House leaders on the other side of the House later.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

ADULT OCCUPATIONAL TRAINING ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING ELIGIBILITY REQUIREMENTS TO RECEIVE ALLOWANCES, AUTHORIZATION OF CONTRACTS WITH EMPLOYERS

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Manpower and Immigration) moved that Bill C-195, to amend the Adult Occupational Training Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

He said: Mr. Speaker, may I say at the outset that Bill C-195 by no stretch of the imagination can be represented as a major overhaul of the legislation adopted in 1967 upon which the Department of Manpower is founded. Nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, it has become obvious from discussions with the provinces and other interested groups involved with the labour movement, with employers' groups, and so on, that certain sections of the original act are badly in need of amending. Therefore, the perennial problem that faced me as minister, when I assumed responsibility for this portfolio, was deciding whether I should completely revamp the existing legislation or, possibly with the co-operation of the House, bring in one or two amendments affecting certain sections of the act and therefore make the act much more meaningful.

Although I will limit my remarks as much as possible to the bill before us and not talk about the general subject matter of manpower, something I intend to do next week when the opportunity presents itself in the budget debate, may I at this time pay tribute to the former deputy minister, Mr. Couillard who has left the department he has been with since 1967, and who was responsible for building up and making effective the Department of Manpower.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, it is not too often that public servants are recognized for their contribution to Canadian society. Mr. Couillard was a better than average assistant deputy minister. The new deputy minister is a former commissioner-in-chief of the Unemployment Insurance Commission, thus establishing a link and co-ordination in anticipation of a tighter and closer relationship between the Unemployment Insurance Commission and the Department of Manpower in future years.

• (1220)

What Bill C-195 is intended to do, Mr. Speaker, is remove what has become known in Manpower circles as the three year rule. As members who were present in 1967 and participated in the debate of the day know, the three year rule had a very logical purpose. It was, of course, designed to direct priority attention in programs at the disposal of the Department of Manpower to the older worker and for other logical reasons as well as age. Because of the fact that an older man or woman was limited to one skill that had become redundant, it was felt by incorporating the three year rule that priority in training would be given to a mature worker who may not have had an opportunity to receive an adequate education or proper training as a young man. It has, of course, achieved that objective.

The statistics which will be available at the committee stage will indicate that the priority of programs administered by the Department of Manpower, in co-operation with the provinces or by the provinces in co-operation with the Department of Manpower, whichever way you want to put it, have worked in this direction. A review of the unemployed, of which we are all very conscious, has indicated certain basic characteristics emerging. All too frequently, the unemployed in particular parts of this country are people without training and below average education. Unfortunately, younger people who have dropped out of school and have never had an opportunity of fulfilling that particular criteria have very great difficulty in proving that they have amassed the required three year attachment to the work force.

It is proposed in this amendment to the Adult Occupational Training Act that the three year rule be eliminated. We do not want to exclude, as the act now unintentionally does, younger workers and women who may wish to return to the work force, but who need upgrading, training and assistance, not only through courses, but in the form of financial aid while taking these courses. I know certain members opposite have a particular interest in this subject.

I want to bring to the attention of the House that in recent months, since I have become Minister of Manpower, although I have been limited in my activities, the provinces have been consulted to perhaps a greater degree than ever before. I happen to have a concept of what the Department of Manpower should be doing. I would like to get into this next week, as I mentioned. The provinces have been unanimous in their request that this particular feature of the existing act be dropped because of the unintentional discrimination it causes against the younger worker and women coming into the work force.

I hope for speedy passage of this bill, not only because of the discrimination it is causing at the moment and the frustration which it is causing many young people, but frankly because of the strong representations that have been made to the department by my provincial counterparts across Canada. There will and must be certain criteria as to age. We have suggested in the bill that, after the elimination of the three year concept, to become eligible the trainee must be at least one year older than the school leaving age within the province. That is for very obvious reasons. It is not only for maturity, but we do not want to unintentionally encourage young people from completing the basic education that is available in their particular province. As those who have read the bill know, it is proposed that the trainee must be one year older than the school leaving age in his or her province. He must also have been out of the regular school system for one year before coming eligible for training. Again, this is for the same reason.

We certainly do not intend to reverse our priorities completely and forget about the older workers. Many still have the problem of the lack of basic education, or having reached the advanced age of 48, 49 or 50 finding that their skill, which in previous years permitted them to work in security until the age of retirement, has suddenly become obsolete or redundant and they find themselves a statistic among the unemployed. I think the change will do much to remove the unintentional discrimination that has been directed toward women in the work force. The three year work rule made it extremely difficult for the department to help upgrade a widow or a woman who, for one reason or another, must return to work to support her children, a chronically ill husband or someone else in her family by providing such simple courses as shorthand, typing, dictation and other work of this nature. It is this type of case of which members are aware, and on which they have made representations at one time or another.

We have suggested in the bill a little more flexibility in the training allowance that will be provided to certain categories of Canadians. We are now trying to bring into manpower training a single individual with absolutely no financial responsibilities, usually a youngster who is living at home and has little or no financial obligation due to the fact he is living at home and has understanding parents. I approve of the suggestion of the department that we provide a little more flexibility, which in some cases will mean less in the way of a training allowance, so that we can provide more in the way of a training allowance to other cases, depending on the particular circumstances of the individual and his or her family.

There are other changes proposed in the bill, changes which are, I believe, in the final analysis, of equal importance. In time they may become more important. I draw the attention of hon. members to the impediment in the existing legislation which makes it impossible to provide on-the-job training as a permanent feature of the act. Hon. members know that during the winter months when we were faced with unusually high unemployment the provinces extended the fullest co-operation after a series of meetings held perhaps too late in the season. Anyway, they were held. Many rules, regulations and acts were bypassed or dispensed with by the provinces; things were permitted, because of the needs of the situation, which otherwise might not have been permitted.

One of the areas concerned was on-the-job training. The original sum of money provided for this program, $20 million, was immediately seized upon by employers. Many people were provided with work training on the job at a pace which is pleasantly surprising. Consequently, the sum of money available was increased to $50 million, all of which has been allocated. This does not necessarily mean that it will all be spent, but it is all intended to be spent. If there is any pick-up it will probably be because some employers are unable to live up to their commitments—they may have been over anxious, thinking in terms of hiring 10 or 12 people when their capacity for training can accommodate only six or seven. In general, though, it can be accepted by the House that all of the $50 million allocated to this program has been absorbed.

It has always been my intention and my belief, even when I was Minister of Labour and fairly close to the same people, that more emphasis must be placed in future on on-the-job training.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mackasey: The question of what would be best for the working force of the country is a subject which has been debated in this House in a fairly non-partisan way on many occasions. It has been very upsetting to all of us, no matter where we sit, to find large blocks of workers being laid off as an almost daily occurrence, and their skills made obsolete because they have been replaced by machines. It is obvious that many of these people, with their basic skills and sense of responsibility, could be trained on the job to man the new machines which so often pose a problem for all concerned in this technological age when what were formerly labour-intensive industries are becoming capital intensive. The act did not permit the department to enter into proper on-the-job training programs; the amendments proposed would make this possible in the future. They will also make it possible for the department to enter into contracts with groups of employers.

I will cite one example of what I have in mind; it has particular application to the Halifax, Saint John, Montreal, Toronto and Hamilton areas. The waterfronts are becoming automated at an increasingly rapid pace with the advent of containerization. The employers in their wisdom, particularly in the three ports of Montreal, Trois Rivières and Quebec, have, with the co-operation of the unions, initiated a program designed to convert the unskilled longshoreman to the type of individual who can master the automated equipment which is now being installed on the waterfront, such as special trucks, overhead cranes and the other complicated gear needed to handle containers. Longshoremen are acquiring new skills and this has been possible through an enlightened approach on the part of management and labour. This bill, if the amendments are agreed to, will permit the department to enter into contracts with groups of employers rather than with a single employer. The characteristic organization of the waterfront is such that employers are grouped together into associations and their employees are common to them in the same way as construction workers are common, in a pool, to the construction industry. The proposed change would go a long way to accelerating training in industry.

The other change, which is a minor one, is intended to simplify financial arrangements with the provinces. As most hon. members know, the Department of Manpower is a delicate department in the sense that it is sometimes difficult to define the borderline between its responsibilities and the jurisdiction of the provinces. It is a tribute to the officials, both at the federal level and in the provinces, that the department has been able to get along for five months with so little friction developing between the governments. It is obvious, though, that there must be more consultation with the provinces and that increased priority must be given in future to the thrust the provinces themselves are developing and to the purposes the provinces themselves have in mind. After all, Canada is a huge country and, to take one example, mobility within the Atlantic provinces is just as great a proposition as mobility within, say, Denmark or some of the smaller European countries which have adopted sophisticated manpower programs.

In conclusion, I wish to assure the House that I intend to make a much fuller statement on manpower next week when the opportunity is provided to me. I shall deal particularly with the realtionship between manpower, the Unemployment Insurance Commission and labour. As I say, I intend to speak at greater length next week on the new views I have formed as to the way manpower should be going in the next five years in the light of, I hope, an emerging industrial policy for this country.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): In what debate?

Mr. Mackasey: In the budget debate.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Are we going to hear from all of you?

Mr. Mackasey: You are going to hear from this person. I do not take up too much time in the House, and I hope I may have an opportunity during the debate I mentioned. If not, the estimates are not completed and we can go into the estimates a little more intensively than I have. To set a good example, perhaps, I have stuck very closely to the bill before us. I recommend to the House the amendments contained therein. At the same time, I emphasize that this should not be misconstrued as a major overhaul of a piece of legislation which needs a thorough revision in the near future.

Mr. Nystrom: Would the minister reply to a question?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair has, recognized the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate. If there is unanimous consent and the minister is prepared to receive a question, the hon. member may ask one. Is there such consent?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Agreed.

• (1240)

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I have a brief question. There has been some concern about the role of the farmer's wife, housewives on farms. Do they qualify for manpower training allowance under this act?

Mr. Mackasay: Mr. Speaker, I will answer that in my usual direct fashion by saying that when we get to the committee stage the whole question of women in the work force will, I am sure, be thoroughly discussed. Certainly, I know the hon. lady in the hon. member's party will want to ask some basic questions about the definition of one year training and whether or not work done in the home by the farmer's wife, for example, could be defined accordingly by regulation. I shall be prepared to answer this in depth when we get to committee stage.

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I want to join with the minister in paying tribute to his former deputy. I know from personal experience, having had a couple of years experience in this party working in manpower, that there are a number of officials in his department who deserve special commendation. I trust that as a result of having a new minister the morale of the department will begin to pick up, and that there will not be the continuous flow of restrictive memoranda that characterized the previous minister's involvement in the department.

I always get a little feeling of excitement when talking about anything to do with manpower, or human resource development, or even, if you want to tread on forbidden territory, educating people. The federal government has for the past several decades been very careful not to talk about education, since it falls within provincial jurisdiction. Nevertheless, anything to do with human resource development, manpower or education excites me. I am one of those who firmly feel that there is a positive correlation between human resource development and economic development. There have been thousands of studies, investigations and commissions over decades showing that in countries with a high level of skills and human resource development there is usually a high level of productivity and economic development. Therefore, I feel there is no way that we in this nation can go wrong by spending government funds in the area of resource development, provided this is properly allocated and controlled in order to get greatest benefit.

We welcome the recommendation contained in the bill regarding the three-year labour force requirement being removed. We welcome more flexibility in allocation of training allowances. The only thing that a lot of Canadians are wondering about is this. Why has it taken this government—and it is true of other governments as well—since 1967 to bring in such a very simple amendment that would give greater opportunity to our young people to find their way into training programs? Certainly, that is a question that has bothered me, and it bothers many Canadians that things that are so obvious right from the word go take a period of five years to reach the stage of legislative approval by this parliament.

The brevity of my remarks is in no way related to my feelings on this issue. May I simply say this is a positive move on the part of the government and will result in a fairer opportunity for young Canadians to find their way into manpower training programs.

The in-industry or the on-the-job training program to which the minister alluded, and for which we will now receive legislative approval, has not surprised me by its effectiveness. I am not at all surprised that it has worked out so well this winter. We feel that legislative approval for a continuation of the program will be of some benefit to a great number of Canadians, especially if the program is anticipatory. By that I mean that we do not wait until we get into a slump before taking action. The first to suffer in large industry which hits a slump are the people who are normally on training programs with the company involved. Theirs are the first heads to fall. I think, speaking generally, the government should have a responsibility for anticipating where cutbacks will take place and to find programs that will complement industrial programs. In other words, I am talking about prevention rather than cure. I suggest the government take heed of this in future.

I have one observation to make about the in-industry program concerning what I think will be the most serious response that the minister will receive from the provinces. Even though the minister might say that this is something of a motherhood bill and will receive, I anticipate, the approval of members of the House, it will generate a lot of response from the various provinces and there is one aspect that has to be considered when talking about in-industry training. Something that has bothered our party, and which ought to bother every member of the House, has been the continual emphasis in government programs during the last several years on the designation of special areas, from the regional economic expansion programs to this bill itself. The rural parts of the nation, the more unstructured parts as far as industry is concerned, have been unable to take advantage of government programs.

We had an example of this today in the minister's announcement of the extension of the local initiatives program. The Opportunities for Youth program is another example. These programs have a tendency to discriminate against those people far removed from the centre of industrial activity, those who are isolated in terms of rural communities, those who are—I hesitate to say out of touch, but those who are not as tuned in to government communications systems as others and therefore are not able to find a way of taking advantage of government programs.

One of the most serious gaps that I see in the in-industry training program is the lack of opportunity for those in the unstructured, unsophisticated communities of Canada to take advantage of the program. How can you expect those in the small towns of northern Ontario, where you have a high unemployment rate, to find their way into government on-the-job training programs? The same can be said of those in the Gaspé peninsula or along the north shore of Quebec, small towns where in the wintertime there are pockets of 50 per cent unemployment, or in Nova Scotia, a large part of New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, the province I represent, the northern parts of the prairie provinces and many areas in inland British Columbia, areas where there is high unemployment. Areas of highest unemployment also have the least sophisticated business communities. Many businesses are very small operations employing half a dozen people. But that is the economic fibre of rural Canada.

Therefore, the minister must take great care to see that the benefits of this program do not flow only to those living in two or three regions of Canada which have very sophisticated and structured business operations. I think of Toronto and Montreal as examples. These areas have the capacity to take full advantage of the program, and so they should. Let them milk every nickel they can from the programs. But other communities in Canada, not just the rural communities comprising a handful of people, many middle sized towns and cities, will be unable to take advantage of the program.

The minister must ensure a fair amount of flexibility in deciding what constitutes on-the-job training. There must be detailed consultation with the provinces so that those provinces without the highly sophisticated business structures are nevertheless able to receive a per capita response under the program. I just draw that to the minister's attention, reluctant as I am to agree to give him the power that he will have if the bill is approved to enter into an agreement with any group or employer. Rather than continue along these lines, I will use the next seven, eight or nine minutes to make three or four suggestions of a more general nature. Perhaps they can be incorporated into government programs of one sort or another.

The minister has already admitted that he regrets it has taken so long for the three year labour force requirement to be eliminated from this legislation. He has also admitted in committee that he agrees there is a limitation in manpower legislation which permits only 52 weeks of training under manpower training programs. I am aware of many examples of people reaching the end of their 52 week period, wanting another two, three or four weeks to complete their training programs, but their training period has been terminated. This has resulted in a panic situation. If my colleague the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall) were here, he could give a graphic illustration of two cases of this kind which occurred in the past few years. Thanks to the co-operation of members of the department who are experts in this field, and perhaps I should not refer to the fact that I can see them before me, the problem has been resolved. I do not know whether other members have met with this same success in their areas.

These restrictions are incompatible with any educational foundation or manpower training scheme. There is no way you can expect to bring people into programs, expose them to 52 weeks of training and then bring down the guillotine. We must make sure this restriction is eliminated, and I appeal to the minister to have his officials begin immediately drafting legislation that will amend this stipulation or requirement. I have become aware of cases this year which are pitiful examples of how this regulation wreaks hardship on people. It is much like the previous three year requirement which resulted in people not being able to take basic training programs, even though the result of not doing so was being laid off from previous jobs.

I have not thought out my second recommendation clearly enough to make it specific, but there should be some group or body in the minister's department which has the power to hear appeals. Perhaps the minister will want to think about this, and I pass it along as a suggestion. I do not think specific regulations in respect of manpower training programs should be used as the final determination regarding a person receiving manpower training. In any field of education, manpower training or resource development, there must be a fair measure of flexibility. A Canadian constituent should have the right to challenge the decision of a manpower group or office as far as receiving training is concerned. He should have the right to challenge the decision in respect of allowances.

Today, the minister introduced a measure of flexibility when he said that people who live at home with their parents can, under this bill, receive a small allowance of $20 per week. I think I am right in saying that. Up to now, such a person could not receive an allowance. Such a person should not only receive an allowance but should be in a position to appeal a decision of the department. In many cases where a young person lives at home, he may need more than a person living away because of the financial circumstances of that family. Somewhere along the line there must be a way of setting up an appeal procedure so that a person can suggest, on the basis of certain facts, that he should receive thus and so in order to assist him to get into a training program.

Another example is the case of an individual who might not be able to get into a training program because he has not got the basic requirements, not having reached a certain educational level. That person may have a tremendous potential as a mechanic, as some kind of operator or in a specific skill. He is a natural, the type of flower born to blush unseen, but may never have had the opportunity to get a basic education. He should have the right to point out to the department that he has this potential. I am sure the minister has seen many of these people who have a tremendous potential or inherent capability which has never been developed through schooling, on-the-job training or anything like that. This type of person should not be restricted through a narrow interpretation of any manpower training program regulation. He should be able to appeal any such decision.

My third point involves the need for the minister to take a very close look at the integration, or lack of it, of the type of training received through manpower programs and the economic need. We have completed a graphic comparison between various training programs and the number of people in them as they correlate with unemployment. The minister understands what I am saying. There is a plus or positive correlation between the number of people in training programs on the one hand, and the level of unemployment on the other. During the winter months when unemployment reaches about 600,000 people, we have about 70,000 to 85,000 people in training programs. Perhaps the number reaches 100,000 at times. During the summer period, when the level of unemployment is substantially reduced, and I am not talking about seasonally adjusted but actual numbers, the number in training programs might drop to 25,000 or 30,000. I suggest there is a tendency for the government to offset the impact on employment statistics by engaging people in training programs. I do not think that is good enough. I have heard the minister say, and he has been quoted in this vein, that he does not believe a person should be put into a training program just to take him off the unemployment list.

I know of many people who have taken training programs year after year when there was no chance in the world that once they had completed the program they would find themselves in an occupation, trade or profession. This is a waste of money and a waste of time for the individual. I have heard people say, and this is a standing joke, that three years ago they took this program, last year they took a different program, they are taking a LIP program this summer and next winter they intend to take some kind of skill training program. This becomes a farce, and the people involved recognize it as such and laugh. They recognize it is a shifting of impact, and that it does not train the human resource muscle to fit our economy. The minister must look more closely at this aspect and set up some kind of procedure to assist relevancy in respect of training programs and the needs of the country.

My final point, and I am glad to be able to make this before we adjourn because I know the hon. member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys (Mr. Muir) wants to elaborate on this, is that there is a significant number of Canadians who cannot take advantage of these programs or provincial educational programs because they have not reached the necessary level of education. They cannot get into universities, trade schools or upgrading schools, and they cannot take advantage of any type of training program because they have not reached a certain level of educational capability. This is usually the result of background circumstances and it bothers me to a great extent.

There are a great number of Canadians, mostly poor, many in rural areas, and particularly in Atlantic regions, who could become part of the labour force with proper training. There has to be some way to help these Canadians better themselves through training programs and I suggest they are not being reached today by our present manpower training programs.

I will conclude with that remark, as I know my colleague will want to elaborate on that point later on this afternoon.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I did not have the pleasure of knowing the former deputy minister of the Department of Manpower and Immigration, but I am familiar with the present deputy minister. He has had quite an introduction into the area of unemployment and manpower training through his close association with the Unemployment Insurance Commission, and thus has the necessary background that will assist him in breaking new ground in this department. Having experience with the type of situation which existed respecting the number of applications made to the Unemployment Insurance Commission will stand him in good stead in the work that he and his minister will be doing in introducing this new program.

Looking at this bill to amend the Adult Occupational Training Act we realize we could spend a lot of time on the various amendments that it proposes, and could go into the background of the problems that have arisen. We have seen some of them personally, and others have been brought to our attention. But this being a Friday, it is really not the day to do that. There is also the fact that some amendments proposed in the bill are ones with which we agree, particularly the one reducing the time period from three years to one year, which was recommended years ago by our party when the original statute was introduced.

Our main area of concern does not lie with how the amendments will be applied, but rather with the question of whether too much is being left to be done by regulation. All of us appreciate the fact that manpower and unemployment are closely interrelated. I believe the minister himself will agree that there must be a close working relationship between the Unemployment Insurance Commission and those people who apply through the UIC for manpower training. This is necessary if we are to bring about any meaningful improvement to the over-all structure.

The responsibility for co-ordinating these two departments will probably rest with the present minister, who is answerable for the Unemployment Insurance Commission. This will give him an opportunity to consolidate unemployment insurance efforts with manpower upgrading. This was probably the reason behind the switch which was made not too long ago, in which the present Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Mackasey) retained responsibility for the Unemployment Insurance Commission. I am sure all of us appreciate the fact that when people do go to Unemployment Insurance Commission offices invariably they have to apply for manpower training. Invariably, they have to apply to obtain some information regarding the adult upgrading program. If they can do all this in one fell swoop, the effect can only be beneficial for the country and will result in a better co-ordinated program.

Further, Mr. Speaker, all of us agree that being trained is not the entire answer, particularly if the government is completely insensitive to the provision of job opportunities. The previous speaker mentioned this aspect of the matter. This is really where the government must be involved. It must be involved to the extent that there will be a program development associated with the type of job opportunities that are and should be available in Canada.

When speaking on this question I can refer to the "Eighth Annual Review of the Economic Council of Canada" which states:

> Manpower policy is conceived of in Canada largely as a policy affecting the supply side of the labour market. In Sweden, however, "manpower policy" is far more comprehensive in scope in that it controls many expenditure programs affecting the level and location of employment and thus operates on the demand side of the market too.

Again dealing with the type of policy that is being used and the type of board that has been developed in Sweden, the review points out:

> For example, the Swedish Labour Market Board (which includes government, employer, and union members, and operates autonomously as a statutory body) plays a prominent role in industrial location policy and administers an investment fund on the basis of contracyclical government policy.

If we are sincere in our talk about adult occupational training, we should determine that we must give some authority to the Department of Manpower and Immigration with respect to making the decisions as to where industries should locate in Canada. Does it make sense to have a department spend millions and millions of dollars trying to upgrade and retrain people if, after their retraining, those people have to be sent from one end of the country to another to fill job opportunities there? I suggest the government has a responsibility to involve this department in industry location decisions, because really manpower is the basis of the success of any country.

No doubt all of us have heard complaints about people who have taken manpower upgrading courses simply to have something to do. It is difficult for any manpower officer to question the intent of an individual who applies for an upgrading course, but it is true that people who have applied for such courses have told less than the truth to the manpower officer concerned. At the same time, there are many thousands of other people without employment who could benefit from such upgrading courses. This is one area on which we must express our concern.

A few moments ago, I mentioned the situation that pertains in Sweden, and now I turn to clause 6 of the bill with which one of my colleagues will be dealing at greater length. It specifically excludes people who are represented by recognized trade organizations and trade unions. Surely, it is a two way street. If workers are going to be employed by groups of employers, then the same principle should apply. Reference to this is found on page 3, after the third section. Possibly the minister will look at this very closely to see why the organizations themselves do not become involved in the type of discussion referred to on that page.

• (1420)

The Economic Council of Canada review contains the statement that manpower policy is largely a policy affecting the supply side of labour, and refers to the fact that we must spend some time in determining what we hope to achieve. Training on the job is an added benefit that the minister has included in the bill. I am sure it is something that he, his department and his deputy minister have studied. They will realize that we have poured millions of dollars into it, and more people should have benefited.

At page 104, dealing with manpower policy, there is this statement in the Economic Council of Canada's eighth annual review:

> In striking contrast to several other countries, less than 5 per cent of total Canadian federal adult occupational training expenditures (excluding apprenticeship) is directed to training-in-industry. In the United States, about 80 per cent of federal training expenditures go to programs involving training and "work experience" in industry. In Britain, moreover, the Industrial Training Act of 1964 provides for a redistribution of funds among firms within a number of industries for training to be undertaken by industry itself.
> The heavy—in fact, almost exclusive—emphasis on institutional training in Canada is difficult to understand when experts generally agree that, for many occupations and for many individuals, training-in-industry appears to be preferable.

The charts on the following page of the report show that of the total amount spent on training in Canada, only 3.9 per cent was for training in industry, while in the United States 76.8 per cent was spent in this area. The same thing applies to other countries like Sweden which spend a considerable amount of their resources on training-in-industry rather than the type of training we have provided. The occupational upgrading that is provided is invariably in a classroom setting, and once the individual leaves there everything he touches is foreign to him to the extent that many times he is not of much use to an employer. This is an area about which all of us are concerned as, no doubt, is the minister. I am sure he will be looking at the situation and, hopefully, will be trying to divert more money to training on the job or in industry as the case may be.

For comparison purposes, Mr. Speaker, and referring to the cost of relocating people who have been trained or those who are making application for job opportunities, I would point out that in 1965-66 the national employment service placed 960,995 people in jobs at a cost of $22.95 per placement. In 1970-71, Manpower placed only 722,832 people in jobs at a cost of $232.70 per placement. This did not include the money spent on manpower training. This is exactly what I am getting at, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased that the minister has included on-the-job training in the legislation, but the contrast between what was spent in 1965-66 and what is spent now per job placement illustrates the increase in spending in an effort to cope with the problem. I heartily agree with the minister when he says that he is pleased to see this point covered in his bill, and it is one area that we in this party support since it will bring about a saving to the Canadian taxpayer.

What one is questioning really is whether the best value is being received for the tax dollar or whether we are just keeping people off the labour force survey by putting them into some kind of occupation training or upgrading course. I am sure many members realize that this has happened because some people are not interested in training to upgrade themselves but just want to have something to do at a certain time of the year.

The previous speaker mentioned the 52 week maximum period. I am sure all of us know cases where trainees have not completed their courses because the final term of the course could not be completed within the 52 week period. I was pleased to learn that the former minister, as stated in a letter to me dated January 20, 1972, was willing to vary this requirement. The last paragraph of that letter reads:

> I have advised officials of the manpower division that I am prepared to authorize extensions of training for individuals who have been ill during their training period or who have been unable to achieve normal progress in their training program. These extensions would only be authorized following consultation between the Canada Manpower Centre and the training authorities.

There are some, however, Mr. Speaker, who are still unable to complete the course and there is no use denying that the amount of money spent on them has gone forever, as are the benefits they could have provided to society. In this area, I believe the minister could give more discretionary power to the local manpower officials. They are on the spot and know whether a particular applicant really wishes to pass the course or is just trying to pass the time. This aspect has bothered many people across the country, including some who have tried to complete their training within the 52 week period which is provided in the present act and which remains in the act.

I have a few comments on the amendments before us, Mr. Speaker, and no doubt we will get into some of these matters in depth when the amendments reach committee. Section 4(1) of the present act provides:

> Where an adult who has not attended school on a regular basis for at least 12 months informs a manpower officer—

Section 4(1) of Bill C-195 reads:

> Where an adult who, at any time since attaining the regular leaving age in the province in which he resides has not attended school on a regular basis for any period of at least 12 months informs a manpower officer—

It seems strange indeed that the stipulation "any period" should be included with that 12 month period. That makes me wonder if we are not trying to hit something with a baseball bat that does not exist, at least as far as abuses are concerned. Perhaps we can go into this in committee.

• (1430)

May I congratulate the minister and the department for making changes in another area about which we were concerned. The waiting period has now been redefined and is to be one year instead of three years. We are glad, because we were concerned about the matter. The hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) asked the minister earlier if wives of farmers are to be included in those eligible for training, and the minister replied that this will be considered in committee. What bothers me consistently about programs such as the one we are considering is this: much depends on the regulations and, invariably, when considering certain legislation or amendments, as we are now doing, we are asked to pass that legislation without knowing exactly what the regulations are to be. Actually, we do not know very much about the regulations until we see them. Therefore, we are being asked to pass legislation, the effect of which we do not really know. The minister and the Department of Manpower and Immigration are obligated to explain fully just who will be included and who will be excluded from the provisions of this bill. That can be done in committee.

We remember what happened in connection with unemployment insurance. We raised questions concerning severance pay and holiday pay, and are still waiting for answers. We are considering a most important amendment, and do not know exactly what the regulations will provide. Because we do not know what the regulations will provide, we could be subjected to a barrage of questions and criticism for passing a bill in good faith after debate in this House. I suggest, therefore, that we will need to examine closely the amendments which will be introduced in committee.

The minister should realize, I think, that on-the-job and in-plant training could be more valuable for certain employees than vocational training made available in institutions. In this regard the employers of this country have an obligation to fulfil, just as have the employees who take part in training programs. We must also make sure that people are placed in jobs for which they have been trained, so that they may use the practical knowledge they have acquired. Everyone knows that industry in this country is becoming highly automated and that technological changes are being introduced. We must make certain that changes in training programs will be in keeping with changes in industry. New skills cannot always, in my opinion, be taught at vocational training schools. Some can be better acquired through on-the-job training. Employees right in the plant can find out what methods are used. By so doing they can continue to serve the employer with whom they have trained and, if they meet the necessary requirements, serve him better.

[Translation]

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to congratulate the minister who is sponsoring Bill C-195, to amend the Adult Occupational Act, now before us.

The continuance and improvement of this program is a laudable initiative, and I rejoice at the thought that from now on the three-year period which in the past was required before people could become eligible for an occupational training course will be reduced to one year.

I imagine that of all hon. members who have no income other than their parliamentary allowance, not one could afford to wait for three years before getting paid.

However, this is more or less what we used to ask of young people under the previous act. We used to ask them to wait for three years before they could qualify and become eligible to receive a few cents, just enough to survive until they got a job.

Although our general education system has been improved, it is obvious that all young people still cannot aim for a profession. The chance to study big books and to attend places of higher learning regularly is not given to everybody, and this bill is designed to assist all other people who still have skills.

In this life, we need good lawyers, good doctors, good accountants, but we also need butchers, bakers, carpenters, and electricians. In other words, we need a very large team which, though it may not seem so, is very important—a team of people who accomplish tasks which are indispensable to the smooth running of our society.

Although this bill appears on the whole to be very effective, it should not lead us to believe that every problem will be immediately solved. We are getting ready, we are making plans and we want to help young people and persons of all ages to retrain and be prepared to perform new tasks, but after reviewing the events that took place in our country these last few years, I am asking the following question: Will the minister's appropriations be as great as his intended generosity?

My question relates to the fact that I know some people in my riding who have actually qualified for training courses, who have attended them for a certain period of time and, suddenly, have been forced to wait another year before resuming the second part of these two-year courses. When these people complained to the Manpower Centre or to the Quebec office, they were repeatedly told for a week that this delay was due to lack of facilities and space. The following week, these same persons called up other officials of the manpower centre and, this time, they were given another explanation to the effect that the interruption of the courses was primarily due to lack of funds, the budget having been exceeded. I think that this explanation has worn thin, Mr. Speaker.

Other ministers have proposed other programs; municipalities and citizens groups have also submitted projects to the government and it often happens that they are rejected due to lack of money.

The Opportunities for Youth program has come back this year amidst an unprecedented publicity campaign and we know that of the 19,000 projects that are submitted, the minister will only retain 3,000 and reject the remaining 16,000 because of lack of funds.

Today, the minister is brimming with good intentions; he has come to us with a clear and definite bill. But how will it be implemented? With regard to the Opportunities for Youth program, one project out of six only was approved, on the average. Therefore, can the minister assure the House that everyone that qualifies under the act will be accepted? Will the minister have to deal with the same problems as his colleagues who introduced the Local Initiative Program and the Opportunities for Youth program? Is the bill before us, Mr. Speaker, going to be accepted throughout the country, for all provinces and all regions of this country? Or will this legislation only apply to some special, designated, Liberal, Social Credit, or Conservative areas? One may ask all those questions, Mr. Speaker, as a result of the way legislation is accepted in this country at the present time, and applied in several fields. Unhappily, such situation occurs on too many occasions. Now, there is a provision of this bill which really makes me laugh, that is section 6, page 2, which reads as follows:

• (1440)

(1) The Minister may enter into a contract with

(a) any employer operating or undertaking to operate an occupational training course for the training of adults employed by the employer, or

(b) a group or association of such employers, to provide for the payment by the Minister to that employer, group or association, as the case may be, of the costs incurred, as specified in the contract, by the employer, group or association in providing such training.

(2) The Minister may enter into a contract with

(a) any employer who has arranged for the training of adults employed by him in an occupational training course that is not operated by the employer, or

(b) any group or association of such employers, to provide for the payment to that employer, group or association, as the case may be, of the costs incurred, as specified in the contract, by the employer, group or association in providing such training.

Despite the clear wording of the legislation, I wonder whether employers will take this provision seriously, after the bad experience they underwent last winter. And I will take the liberty, at this stage, to quote a letter which I received on March 24, 1972:

I quote:

Mr. Roland Godin,
M. P. for Portneuf,
Parliament Building, Ottawa.

Dear Sir:

Following the outcome of my request for training and employment to the manpower centre, I submit my opinion to you uncritically, as you will certainly and very shortly be able to convey it to the people, departments, members of Parliament or officials who will be able to act on it.

I submitted a request for training pursuant to the requirements of the manpower centre, which consisted in a program based on twelve months of training and liable to result in about 55 per cent of the performance necessary for the candidate to continue his job. Without giving up the basic purpose of my proposal, I accepted, having no other alternative, the eight weeks that I was offered, in view of my employee requirements to be able to expand my business.

I infer from this that the federal government or the manpower centre is really working to create jobs, but if I consider the outcome of my proposal, I wonder whether securing continuing jobs while creating jobs through training programs would not be a better solution to the present unemployment problem.

How can 16 per cent of 55 per cent of required training secure a future for the candidate selected? What positive contribution can 16 per cent of a minimum of training make to the expansion of my business?

This case relates to a man who repairs and sells television sets. In fact, this businessman simply wanted to train electronics technicians. He feels it is really ridiculous that the manpower centre should dare believe that people will get appropriate training within eight weeks in such an important field as electronics.

I now continue my quotation:

Until I get proof to the contrary, I must conclude to a lack of seriousness in such decisions because 16 per cent is far from enough to meet the very objective of this training program set up by the government.

I have working for me a number of candidates to the manpower training program who deserve better job security and whose open minds, initiative and general ability should be encouraged. As for me, please believe that I will do my utmost to keep those employees.

By this letter surely you will admit the seriousness and agressiveness of my business since the start and no less can be expected from those involved.

In another area, I would point out that other industrialists in my riding where approached last fall, that is to say in early January, when the government implemented a similar program. Officials of the Quebec manpower centre visited Loretteville and Saint-Emile where you can still find a fair group of glove and shoe manufacturers.

At that time they were proposed a program similar to that presented today. Long questionnaires were completed with the help of experts from the Manpower Centre.

Mr. Speaker, the proposed program was to last 26 weeks and all projects were to be submitted before March 31. However, for those who had made applications in January, answers were sent out in the afternoon of March 29 only, which was Holy Thursday. Those manufacturers who had jobs to offer were told that their programs had been accepted, even though the legislation stipulated that first they had to apply to manpower centres to get workers. Therefore, in waiting until Holy Thursday to inform the workers of the Loretteville and St. Emile area, the government was getting rid of them easily since the Quebec City manpower centre was closed on both Good Friday and the next day. These people had to wait until the next Monday to give an answer. So, in many cases, those manufacturers who were in a position to take in 30, 40, 50 or 60 workers finally hired only 5 or 10. Finally, the whole project went down the drain, especially when one considers that one manufacturer could have hired 50 people instead of the 5 that he actually did hire.

Mr. Speaker, this is an unfortunate situation, even if this bill is good. But to return once again to our manufacturers. When working for the federal government, especially in the Income Tax Division, even the most intelligent man in the world may behave stupidly simply because he walks around with a copy of the act in his pocket. Should he fail this year, he can always turn to the past four years to pick the pockets of Canadians and run away with what he can find. But for the businessman, the shoe and glove manufacturer at that, it is a completely different story. He must hire travelling salesmen who must look after the orders. They have to buy leather for their industry and all kinds of materials essential to them and that must be done months in advance.

Whenever Manpower Centre employees discuss with manufacturers, they realize that they are not dealing with tax officials, that they are not dealing with people looking backward. The manufacturer is a man who has to look forward and take care of his business. If he did not, he would soon have to close shop. Those who are still in business are those who looked after their undertaking and I should like the government to give them full co-operation. Those people have done their utmost to make our country what it is today.

In concluding, Mr. Speaker, I should like the minister to give us the assurance that his budget will be important enough to come up to everything he is offering at the present time and I am wondering whether it would not be beneficial for the Canadian people to have a revision made in manpower centres in order to know what agents will assist manufacturers in cases such as this one.

And whenever a person is refused admission to a certain course, I should like manpower centre officials to be in agreement with one another so as to give the same answer every day. If the answer differs, it is too bad for people lose confidence in such programs.

It is for that reason that many citizens show dissatisfaction and I believe they are right, because we lied to them too often. Moreover, it is about time we helped them in every possible way and especially made financial means available to them.

So I hope that the minister will not miss the opportunity to explain such needs to all his colleagues, particularly the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) who after all is the last one to sign his name.

[English]

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I wish to spend a few minutes discussing a particular aspect of the amending bill which the minister has placed before us. I refer particularly to the subject matter of Sections 5 and 6 of the act to which the minister's bill proposes certain modifications.

I think it is clear that with regard to the authority which is conferred upon the minister, the act may be divided into two parts. First, there is authority to enter into agreements with the public authority, the province, to spend public funds of the government of Canada; second, to enter into agreements with private authorities such as industrial corporations. From my understanding with regard to entering into agreements with the public authority for the expenditure of money for manpower training, the individual taking the training either has to be referred to and approved by a manpower officer or has been approved in effect through the legislation of the respective provinces under their various training programs. This makes it clear there is a direct dealing, either by the federal or provincial authority, with the individual involved in a training program. It is my understanding that this relationship between the individual and the manpower office of the federal government or a parallel office under an apprenticeship training program of a province is one which must exist. However, clause 6, which gives the minister authority to enter into an agreement with an employer or a group of employers, makes no reference at all to the individual concerned—to whether he ought, or ought not, to be undertaking a training program. This is an essential difference and one which should be borne in mind in terms of two aspects of the bill as they are set forth in clauses 4 and 5 together and in clause 6.

I am not quarrelling with the principle that the minister should have authority to enter into agreements with employers or employer groups. I understand there are two aspects of the program. There are occupational training courses which are operated by an employer within his own premises and, second, there are situations in which an employer can arrange to send an employee to an institution for training and be reimbursed for costs so incurred. It seems to me there is an essential element missing from the minister's proposals, and that its absence warrants some changes being made in the bill when it reaches the committee stage. I suggest that, to the extent that the new arrangements for entering into contracts with private employers fails to provide for direct contact with individual trainees, an important safeguard is missing, even if one considers the matter from the point of view of protecting the public purse alone. In addition to being satisfied that the employer concerned has consulted the government of the province in which the trainee is located before a contract can be entered into, there should, in my view, also be a provision that the minister must be satisfied that the employer has entered into consultation with the certified bargaining agent of the employee before he can enter into a contract. In my opinion, the minister should consider adding to the new clause 6(3), after the part which states that the minister must be satisfied that the employer has consulted with the government of the province, something along these lines: "and with any certified bargaining agent or agents of the employees of the employer, or the group or association, as the case may be."

I am not putting this idea forward out of a vacuum, as it were. I am advancing it partly because the proposed new clause 6 would remove the prohibition against entering into contracts in which the minister agrees to pay an employer the cost of on-the-job training in skills only useful to that employer. The minister will recall that there is a provision in the present section 6 of the act which gives general authority to enter into an agreement, subject to a subsection which states:

> The minister shall not enter into a contract with an employer described in subsection (1) with respect to training of adults employed by that employer, that is, training on the job, or in skills useful only to that employer unless he is satisfied that such training is necessary because of technological or economic changes affecting that employer which would otherwise result in loss of employment by the adult being trained in the course.

This is not an inconsequential matter if one thinks in terms of safeguarding tax money provided by the citizens of Canada for training programs which directly involve individual private employers and which is connected presumably with their attempt to improve the efficiency of their operations. The safeguard is also important as a means of discouraging employers from simply using the mechanism provided by this act in order to enhance their own private positions as a result of the expenditure of public funds. Perhaps no more effective safeguard could be provided than to require that the minister must be satisfied in all cases where a trade union is certified that the union has been consulted.

The proposal in this legislation, if I understand it correctly, is designed to make possible a more permanent application of some of the features of the on-the-job training program. This has given rise to some concern in the ranks of certain trade unions, because these arrangements have been used in such a way as to interfere with terms which have been negotiated as part of union agreements.

• (1500)

In some cases in Canada—this is a matter that can be gone into in depth in committee more effectively than one can discuss it in a speech on the floor of the House—very detailed contracts, agreements or memoranda of agreement have been worked out plant by plant with some employers which provide for on-the-job training of employees as a matter of course. As part of the collective agreement it has been deemed to be to the mutual advantage of employer and employee that the employer, without any assistance from the public purse, has a continuing program of training for his employees for upgrading their skills, so the employer always has available a work force which is expert in the skills which it performs in the plant.

In some cases these agreements in their genesis go back over a number of years. As a result of experience during the course of time, they have been upgraded and improved. To my knowledge, during the past winter, through the on-the-job training program and without any knowledge whatever coming either from the employer or the officials in the minister's department, the employers in effect, started to interfere with what was and has been accepted as being normal practice in the plant under memoranda of agreement between trade union and employer.

I suggest to the minister that, quite apart from anything in the legislation, as a matter of administrative practice—I am sure that under the act which set up his department the minister has this authority—it should be routine for the management of a local manpower office to advise and consult with established trade unions who are certified as the bargaining agents for employees in the particular plants or activities carried on by employers in their area of operation.

Apart from any legislative requirement for consultation by the employer, manpower offices should be a source of information. There should be a two-way flow of information between manower offices and local offices of trade unions lying within their area of operation. This has not always been universal practice across the country and has led to unnecessary misunderstanding and confusion about what has been actually going on in regard to the work force of the area concerned. I suggest that this question could best be dealt with in detail in committee, but I put the matter forward now in the hope that the minister and his advisers will give the situation very serious consideration and that opportunity will be given during the course of the committee proceedings to call experienced administrators in the trade union field to deal with the matter.

Even as a result of certain arrangements worked out in the past whereby employees have gone to training schools outside the employer's premises, in the opinion of some of those who are most familiar with the details of operation in the industry some of the courses offered have been less than useful vis-à-vis the amount of federal funds expended upon them. In the view of some of these people whom I know, the employer in effect has unnecessarily leaned on the public purse in order to provide a poorer kind of training than that which has been traditionally provided on the job without any supplement from the public purse be it federal or provincial.

This is another aspect of the matter which I think should be considered and is another reason provision for consultation should be made between the agents of the people involved and the employer before the minister is given the authority, as proposed in the bill, to enter into contracts.

Mr. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, I wish to raise only one point regarding this bill but it is a very important point. It is not clear to me whether the bill or the regulations to be made thereunder cover the point. I fully approve of all the evident measures put forward in the bill and congratulate the minister for them. I am particularly pleased at the provision removing the requirement of three years in the work force and that regarding the eligibility of women who work in the home as housewives.

My point concerns those individuals who live in bilingual areas in Canada, such as Montreal, Ottawa, Moncton, Sudbury, Cornwall and so on, and who cannot find work due to the fact that they cannot speak the other official language. As a representative from Montreal I have found in the past few years that many well trained Canadians have been laid off from work for one cause or another and are unable to find other work because they do not speak the other language. For example, I have met many English-speaking stenographers and secretaries who are most competent and are looking for work, but when they go to the personnel office or employment agency they are asked whether they can also speak French. Very often, although these people have had some training in the second language it is insufficient to permit them to work in that language and this is the principal reason they cannot obtain employment.

I have been arguing for several years now that our manpower retraining program and retraining allowances should apply to people such as this, whether it be a French-speaking person in Ottawa who cannot find work because he does not have sufficient knowledge of English, or an English-speaking person in Montreal who cannot find work because he does not speak French. I maintain that our manpower retraining program should give these people courses in the other language so they can become qualified for work, just as other people need training in the art of carpentry, electronics and other trades.

As the House knows, courses are given under the manpower retraining program for completion of high school and many people take grades 9, 10 and 11. If we agree it is necessary to be educated to grades 9, 10 and 11 in order to find work, we should agree to train people in the second language if that is necessary for them to find work. In areas such as Montreal and other bilingual districts, such is not now the case.

I am pleased to back the government's program which has been to promote bilingualism in those areas of Canada where it is necessary. At the same time, I believe that when people are affected by these requirements in their work we should help them, under the manpower retraining program, to acquire proficiency in the other language with which they are not familiar.

One of the anomalies of our programs is that under the immigration program we help people to acquire a working knowledge of the French and English languages. A person who comes to Canada as an immigrant can take a French or English course through the Manpower and Immigration Department and is paid a training allowance while taking the course. People coming from countries such as England, Ireland or the United States, being English-speaking can under the Department of Manpower and Immigration program take training courses in the French language while receiving a living allowance. But an English-speaking person born in Montreal, a Canadian citizen, cannot go to the Department of Manpower and Immigration and take the same course.

I have argued that if the government is going to provide courses to immigrants so they can learn the official languages of this country for purposes of employment, we should do the same thing for our native born Canadian citizens. Perhaps the minister in replying can cover this point. I should hope that as a result of these amendments or the regulations to be passed in relation thereto, language retraining programs will be included as a course one can obtain under the adult occupational training program. If this were allowed I think we would solve many of our employment problems in areas where bilingual capability is needed.

This is the only point I wish to raise in respect of the bill, and to me it is extremely important. My constituency is in Montreal. Seventy-five per cent of the population is English-speaking, yet they live in a city where 80 per cent of the population is French-speaking. The 75 per cent English-speaking figure includes immigrants from many parts of the world. We have many British people, Italians, Greeks, Germans, and so on. Once they become citizens and require employment, they must have the capability of working in both languages.

One of the objections raised by the government is that evening language courses are given by the school commission of Montreal and the people to whom I have referred can take them. The courses under the school commission are not as good as those provided by the Department of Manpower and Immigration. They are not nearly as intensive, and they are conducted in the evening. There is no retraining or training allowance attached to them. I argue that if the government carries out retraining programs and pays training allowances in order that people can finish high school, learn a trade and so on, the government should do the same in respect of language training when such training is directly related to ability to work in the cities where these people live. I hope I have made my point, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have the opportunity to say a few words on this bill introduced by the minister. In his opening remarks the minister said, and I think I quote him accurately, that by no stretch of the imagination could this bill be regarded as a major overhaul of the legislation. I agree with him in that regard. He also said there had been consultations with the provinces regarding the bill. I wonder whether during these consultations the minister considered the fact that when the time period is reduced from three years to one year there will be a tremendous need for additional space.

The time period should always have been one year and should never have been changed by this government. When the time stipulation was increased to three years in the labour force, senior members of the Salvation Army and other groups condemned this action by the government. In my own area the participation rate in trades training schools is very high and I doubt that more people can be handled under the program. I hope this situation will be improved by the construction of a new school.

I am pleased to see the minister in his position as Minister of Manpower. I know he will be a pleasant change from his stone-faced and stone-hearted predecessor who never came down from his ivory tower, never knew how to smile and, I assume, never knew what it was to be unemployed. He had no compassion whatsoever for the unemployed or those who required assistance. This is typical of many members on the government benches; they do not seem to realize these problems. I cannot say that about the present minister, who has always been most co-operative and willing to work with all members of the House. I speak from experience. I have found him to be that way and I look forward to his bringing in further changes in the future. I think I have said enough nice things about the minister for the moment and now it is time to criticize him a little.

Like the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate—I should say the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan) because the former hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate now occupies a well-padded position which I hope he continues to occupy. As I was about to say, like the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate I commend the previous deputy minister for doing such a good job. I congratulate the new deputy minister and hope he will weigh his statements and not make them off the top of his head. I have in mind, particularly, statements in reference to problems of unemployment insurance and benefits.

I realize this subject is not related to the bill before us, but I hope the new deputy minister will not continue to blame all the difficulties on the applicants rather than the drafters of certain measures. I hope he will not speak as wildly in future as he has in the past, without knowing the facts. Those of us who have been members for some time are aware that 10 or 12 people would call each day complaining about not receiving unemployment insurance benefits. The fact was that they had not received benefits for weeks and sometimes months.

Bill C-195 is a pathetic attempt to improve the operations of the Manpower training program. It does right a few wrongs and accomplishes a few housekeeping chores, but it leaves the bulk of the program as ineffective as it is now. As I understand it, there are five basic changes proposed in Bill C-195. First, the bill proposes to remove the current restrictions which require people to serve three years in the labour force or to be supporting dependants in order to receive an allowance. In future, people who have been out of school a total of 12 months, not necessarily uninterrupted, will be eligible to receive an allowance. Second, the bill provides that provincial training costs to be paid by the federal government will be specified in advance through a contract. Currently, the federal government merely picks up the tab in arrears.

Third, the bill would allow the federal government to enter into a contract for a training course with a group or association of employers rather than merely one employer. Fourth, the bill proposes to do away with the restrictions against on-the-job training, as the Economic Council of Canada, the Progressive Conservative party and many other critics have long been advocating. Finally, the bill would allow the payment of less than the specified amounts for allowances to persons without dependants.

Really, the only two important changes are those concerning the removal of restrictions on allowances and on in-industry training programs. These changes are long overdue. For the rest, the bill is a great disappointment. These changes are not sufficient to improve the program substantially. Low income, poorly educated Canadians, particularly in rural areas and in the outlying districts of Canada, will be no better off when this bill is passed than they are now. Many reputable groups have complained that the manpower training program has important limitations which restrict the role of the program in reducing poverty. The report of the Special Senate Committee on poverty emphasized the inadequacy of the program's effect on poverty. I quote from that report at page 150:

> The federal manpower programs, like other national economic development programs, have ... only limited relevance to the poverty question. They are not and cannot be evaluated in terms of the direct contribution they make to poverty reduction or elimination.

Similarly, the report of the federal task force on agriculture in 1969 complained as follows:

> The role (of manpower training programs) in reducing the numbers of farm poor ... appears limited. The best hope is that manpower programs will provide good non-farm alternatives to younger operators, to the sons of marginal farmers and to other rural youth who are ill equipped to become modern farmers. ... But it is unrealistic to look for any great impact in the ranks of the middle-aged who make up a high percentage of the farm poverty sector today.
> Even to reach younger operators poses problems. For example most training courses require at least grade 10 standing.

In contrast to these realistic appraisals of the impact of the manpower training program on poverty, we have the self-congratulatory pose adopted by the former minister of manpower—I emphasize that this is the former minister and not the present minister—who said in his report on the 1970 operations of the Canada Manpower training program that it——is one of the major federal programs directed toward the alleviation of poverty by helping the poor develop their skills and thus improve their income and employment prospects. Its impact is directly centred on the poor.

However, in typical Liberal fashion the minister fails to quote figures to support his flowing rhetoric, for this same report does not in any way demonstrate how the program is achieving such a laudable aim. Although the then minister pointed out that 60 per cent of all trainees and 94 per cent of female family-head trainees in 1970 were living at or below the poverty line when put on a course, there is no reference to the proportion removed from poverty as a result of the training they received from the course.

There are some serious hindrances in the Adult Occupational Training Act which cripple any anti-poverty initiative the manpower training program might otherwise have. First of all, the underlying principles of the manpower training programs are not oriented toward disadvantaged groups. The Canadian government's strategy in the field of manpower policy is primarily a growth strategy—this was stated by the Economic Council of Canada in its eighth annual review—with the objectives of equity and stabilization clearly being secondary. This strong emphasis on growth and efficiency provides a sharp contrast with the manpower strategy of other countries, notably the United States.

In the United States, training programs are much more heavily oriented to serving disadvantaged groups. Most programs which draw on federal funds in the United States require that all or a large majority of trainees come from the disadvantaged population, meaning that they are poor and have one or more serious handicaps in finding and keeping satisfactory jobs.

Another criticism concerning the principles underlying the operations of the manpower training program has been voiced by the Special Senate Committee on Poverty. Their report charges that the federal manpower program is oriented toward providing a service to employers and not toward meeting the needs of the individual worker. Such orientation conflicts to some extent with the purposes of the Adult Occupational Training Act, as stated on March 3, 1967, by the then minister of manpower and immigration who said, as recorded at page 13738 of Hansard of March 3, 1967:

We want to provide a second chance to the people who need it most. These are the men and women who missed the chance to acquire a skill during their youth or whose skill has been made obsolete by technological change.

The Special Senate Committee on Poverty charges that "what was intended as a 'people-oriented' program has become an 'economy-oriented' program". In addition to this problem arising from the principles of the manpower training program there is a second problem that hinders the effectiveness of the program in fighting poverty. This problem is that the regulations governing the application of the act provide that a potential applicant for a place in an occupational training program must have "a specific vocational goal".

This regulation is particularly discriminatory when applied to poor people in Canada. Persons without a basic education are not usually aware of the variety of occupational opportunities available to those with job skills. Why was this stipulation not removed from the Adult Occupational Training Act through Bill C-195, if the Minister of Manpower is truly interested in helping the disadvantaged, and I think he is?

There is a third way in which the Adult Occupational Training Act is at fault. The act provides that no occupational training course may exceed 52 weeks duration of full-time introduction. The result of this provision is that no person requiring more than one year's academic upgrading is eligible for occupational training under the act. Because almost all vocational skill programs in Canada today require a grade 10 education as a prerequisite—here I refer to trades such as welding, carpentry, the electrical trades and plumbing—and because most academic upgrading courses can raise a student's functioning equivalent grade level by about three grades in 52 weeks, very few persons with an educational attainment below grade 7 can gain entry into "basic training for skills development" occupational training courses. Some of these persons do gain entrance to manpower programs but usually this happens in error or because there is a sympathetic manpower counsellor. In fact, in the 1968-69 training courses only 13.2 per cent of all the trainees had had six years or less schooling when they entered the course.

This 52-week limitation on programs is all the more important when we consider the direct correlation between a low level of schooling and a high degree of unemployment. In May, 1971, persons with less than a grade 8 education had an unemployment rate of 7.4 per cent compared to only 5.1 per cent for persons with a post-secondary education.

• (1530)

In the Atlantic region, persons with less than a grade 8 education had a 10.4 per cent unemployment rate in May, 1971, while those with a post-secondary education had a rate of only 6.2 per cent. Consider Cape Breton Island, where the educational level of a portion of the population is comparatively low and the unemployment rate comparatively high; in fact, figures of 20 per cent to 25 per cent have been given by non-partisan groups.

Only within recent days have we received a report from an association called the Cape Breton Alliance for Development which is comprised of the clergy, labour, unions, boards of trade and people in other fields with no political affiliation. This group conducted a survey on the island as a result of a grant under the Local Initiatives Program and came up with the figure of 29.31 per cent unemployment on Cape Breton Island. This is a tragedy, Mr. Speaker. There are those within the government who may say that these people do not know what they are talking about, but I think they did their job very sincerely. They suggested measures for reducing unemployment.

I placed a motion before the House under Standing Order 43 in order to discuss this matter, but it was not accepted by the government. I was sorry that the government House leader, who also represents in this House a portion of Cape Breton, did not rise to assist me in getting his colleagues to allow the motion to come before the House so that the contents of the report could be sent to the committee for consideration.

The removal from the Adult Occupational Training Act of the 52-week limitation on training is an essential step toward helping the low income, poorly educated unemployed toward meaningful training and employment. The Progressive Conservative party has pledged that it will abolish this time limit on these programs. In addition to these three faults there is a fourth problem with the manpower training program that has become more crucial since the new Income Tax Act made training allowances taxable. This problem concerns unemployment insurance as it relates to the manpower training program.

Currently, a person employed in insurable employment who is being trained under an occupational training course will not be eligible for unemployment insurance while in receipt of a training allowance, but will retain his benefit and contribution rights. The qualifying period will be extended to include any period during which he is being trained under an occupational training program and is in receipt of a training allowance. Similarly, his benefit period, which normally runs for a maximum of 52 weeks from the week of the claim, will be extended to a maximum of 156 weeks.

With these stipulations I do not quibble. However, I would argue that trainees should have unemployment insurance premiums deducted from their allowances for the entire duration of their courses. I discussed this matter with the minister and he was very sympathetic to my point of view. I hope he will be giving more consideration to the problem. In that way, Mr. Speaker, these people would build up credits and could qualify for unemployment insurance benefits if they were unable to secure employment upon completion of their courses. When they complete their courses, particularly in the schools of Cape Breton Island, under the present administration they have no hope of finding a job, given the figures I quoted a few moments ago. If they had some benefits to fall back on they would be in better shape, particularly if they found it necessary to move away from the island. I hope this will not be the case, because we get a little tired or exporting our brains to Upper Canada. I see the minister smiling.

The case to be made for such a step is very straightforward. The federal government, by removing the three-year labour restriction in the act has recognized the hardships now imposed by the act on young people with little work experience who are unable to secure jobs. It took them a long time to recognize that, Mr. Speaker. For ages we have been telling them that there should never have been a three-year period, it should have been only one year. When young men and women come out of school feeling that they have to kill time around the streets for three years before they can get training, it is very discouraging. They become depressed and disillusioned. They cannot find the employment they seek and neither can they get training because, until this bill was introduced, they had to be three years on the labour market. Thank goodness that provision is to be changed.

These young people are unable to accumulate enough unemployment insurance credits before they take a training course to qualify for UIC benefits after the course if they are still unsuccessful in their job seeking. I thought the minister might have taken care of that problem in this bill. His refusal to incorporate such a change in Bill C-195 is puzzling. On April 20, 1972, he promised to consider the matter and reply to my question the following day. I am sorry the minister has such a short memory that he had forgotten his promise when he introduced the bill six days later, on April 26.

If trainees are to pay income tax on their allowances, they should be able to make unemployment insurance contributions and collect benefits if they need them at the conclusion of the training. This is already being done in the case of students at the Coast Guard College at Point Edward. If unemployment insurance is to be truly universal as the government apparently intended, it should also apply to manpower trainees. It would also be fair, I maintain, for the federal government to be consistent with arrangements in private business and industry and to pay half the cost of unemployment insurance premiums in its capacity as the temporary employer of the trainees. These are not the only ways in which the manpower training program could be improved if it is to function adequately to aid the hard core unemployed and the poor, but these four faults of the Adult Occupational Training Act could easily have been rectified in Bill C-195.

There are a number of other points I should like to draw to the attention of the minister. One is the question of hairdressing courses. I have dealt with this matter at the provincial or regional level and have been informed that there has been a cutback in training people in hairdressing, particularly on Cape Breton Island, because it is felt there will be too many hairdressers. This may be so, but not everyone trained there will stay; they may go to Ontario, Quebec or other parts of Canada. However, if they had this skill it would stand them in good stead, for when they move along voluntarily or even if they are forced to move because of the inadequate economic policies of this government, such training should provide them with employment. I hope the minister will look into the problem and ascertain if there is any reason for a cutback in this regard.

Schools in Sydney and the surrounding area were told that no more applicants for hairdressing courses would be accepted. At the same time, the school in Halifax enrolled 15 students. It seems unusual to suggest that people in Halifax have more hair on their heads than the people of Cape Breton and need to look after it better. I do not know what the answer is, and I hope the minister will look into the matter.

I wish to raise another important point. Young lads interested in becoming trained morticians have come to me seeking help. Not everyone wants to be a mortician, but the job has to be done. Regrettably, in my province—I do not know if it happens in other provinces—people who are in business as morticians employ young men to do all the heavy work, lifting and on-the-job training, so to speak, for a small fee. When these young men want more money—and, after all, most of them are on call 24 hours a day—they are politely told by the proprietor of the establishment, "We cannot pay you any more. We can soon get other young men to take your place."

Usually these young men want more money so they can enrol in the appropriate school and obtain a licence as embalmers. I hope the minister and his officials will consider helping young lads like these. This field of training ought to be included in the bill. There would not be a heavy drain on the treasury because I am sure not too many young men have entered this profession. Few members of the House, so far as I am aware, are members of the profession. However, it is an honourable profession and we should prepare young people to enter it. Actually, they would come in handy in burying this government after the next election which is no doubt to take place in a few months.

I agree with the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand) who suggested that provision for language training should be included in the bill. I think that is an excellent idea for the simple reason that I supported the official languages bill. It has great merit. But I also agree with the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair) and others who have said that the official languages program is moving too quickly. Hon. members of other parties have suggested that the program is being force-fed to the public service and as a result B and B—bilingualism and biculturalism—has for those people become another sort of B and B—loss of bread and butter. Some public servants cannot continue filling jobs which require the use of both languages.

In Cape Breton, particularly, I understand that there are to be four or five vacancies in the public service. An eligibility list was drawn up and came into effect in December. On June 15 next that list is to be eliminated. Those who have been tested in connection with public service vacancies and who have passed their examinations are no longer to be eligible. We know that these lists are valid for one year and, as I said, the current list is to be eliminated on June 15. The competition in that case required employees to be unilingual and speak English only. I understand that public servants to fill those vacancies are to be selected from the previous list which required public servants to be bilingual. I think 23 applicants previously qualified for these jobs. Today I asked the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) what I, as the member representing the area, am to say to the people who will be discriminated against and who will not get the jobs even though they were previously considered eligible.

I am pleased to note that widows are covered by the bill. Often, in the area I come from and in the area in which the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) resides, men become disabled and die, sometimes after long illness contracted in the coal mines, in the steel plant or in the fishing industry. Perhaps the man catches tuberculosis; sometimes he contracts silicosis. The compensation board in Halifax does not recognize silicosis as an illness coming under its jurisdiction. Often, because the man concerned cannot obtain compensation from the board, the wife or widow as the case may be must go out and work. There is great hardship in these cases. I am glad the minister has broadened the scope of the bill and made changes encompassing widows. He is to be commended for that.

I could mention a few other points but will relinquish the floor to other hon. members who wish to put their thoughts on record and persuade the minister to make changes. In discussing the bill, the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Mackasey) is reported to have termed the total package as a series of efforts to improve what is already perhaps the world's finest manpower program. I do not agree, Mr. Speaker, and I am sure many other hon. members do not agree with that statement. None the less, I commend the minister for what he is doing, and in the short time during which he will remain minister I look forward to changes which may be introduced in legislation of this type. The minister is a man with whom one can discuss problems. He will give you a really good hearing and act, if action can be taken. It is unfortunate that other members of the cabinet have not learned a lesson from the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Mr. Dinsdale: There you are, Bryce; there's a compliment for you.

Mr. Rod Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Mackasey) hopes to finish this afternoon the discussion on this stage of the bill. Although we will not delay it, I do not think debate on this stage will be finished by four o'clock.

May I mention briefly one or two items of interest to Canadian workers. These may affect future training in certain fields. I draw to the minister's attention the fact that earlier this week, at an oil seminar, it was suggested that if an oil pipeline is constructed down the Mackenzie valley, 6,000 workmen will be required to build it. Many of those workers will need special skills. Since much of this pipeline is to be built far from our cities in the south, it is hoped that some of the work can be done by people indigenous to the northern area. These people will need to be trained. Perhaps they can benefit from on the job training. I call this matter to the minister's attention because we ought to look ahead to employing such people.

Such a pipeline, if built, would be a big project in Canada. It would be too bad if through lack of trained manpower in Canada workers from another country were employed on the building of the pipeline. I suggest to the minister that it might be wise if he were to begin considering this problem. Even if the Mackenzie valley pipeline is not built, obviously other pipelines will be built in our north country. Special skills will be required. Workmen will be living and working in extreme cold. They will need special skills if they are to work under such conditions. I suggest to the minister that we ought to look ahead and anticipate what will be required in this respect.

While considering the Mackenzie valley pipeline, let us remember that if the pipeline is built, about one million tons of steel pipe will be needed. Someone must make the pipe. We hope that Canadian factories will make a good proportion of it.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not know whether the hon. member feels that what he is saying is related to the principle of the bill before us. Personally, I have some doubt.

• (1550)

Mr. Thomson: May I carry on for just a minute, Mr. Speaker? We shall require a considerable amount of training for work in the mills which manufacture pipe. This is the point I wish to make. I also draw to the attention of the minister that building a pipeline as extensive as this will require expansion of the industry in Canada. It will also require expansion of training in Canada. This is the reason I raise the matter. I merely mentioned the one million tons of steel pipe required to emphasize the size of the project and the size of the labour force required in the steel industry, which is of special interest to hon. members. It would be unfortunate if we had to import the pipe because we did not have enough productive capacity or skilled labour to deal with this or similar projects. This is my point, and I leave it at that.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, let me begin by saying that I welcome some of the changes proposed in this bill to amend the Adult Occupational Training Act. The former minister of manpower who introduced this bill will remember the debate at that time, in which I participated. We took very strong exception to the provision the bill proposes to amend, namely, that a person had to be in the labour force for three years before qualifying for manpower training under the provisions of the act.

We pointed out that that provision would keep out of the manpower training program precisely the people who need the training most. I refer to relatively young people who have finished school but do not have the qualifications necessary to begin work. Although they do not have the training necessary, they are told they cannot receive the benefits of the program until they have been away from school and in the labour force for three years.

I do not intend to quote from Hansard, but I remember pointing out to the then minister that a person 18 or 19 years of age who had finished high school, was living at home and for whom it would be relatively simple and quite economical to provide training in our institutions was being told he had to wait for three years, by which time he would in all likelihood be married and meeting his living expenses while undergoing training would be a great hardship. I remember the arguments with which this point was met and the explanation as to why it should not be done. Therefore, we welcome the amendments proposed in this bill.

This is one of the few opportunities which we have in parliament to deal with the very real difficulties which we face in the whole field of employment and manpower training. To a large extent it is pointless and, indeed, cruel to be conducting such an elaborate and expensive manpower training program while at the same time accepting the fact, although the government does not admit it, that we shall continue to have large-scale unemployment in this country.

The minister is pointing out that we have only a few minutes left in this debate. I do not know why that is so. In any event, I hope the minister will take the opportunity, if not today then on a future occasion, to explain to the people of this country what earthly sense there is in spending several hundred million dollars on manpower training each year, when for the past two years we have had 6 per cent or more unemployment per month, on a seasonally adjusted basis.

As the leader of our party pointed out yesterday, projections made by the University of Toronto Institute for the Quantitative Analysis of Social and Economic Policy released a few days ago indicate that for the balance of 1972 and into 1973 we will be faced with the problem of having more than 6 per cent of the labour force unemployed. What sense is there in spending several hundred million dollars and keeping 100,000 or 200,000 people in training programs when there are over 600,000 people unemployed at the present time? I know there are political advantages to the government; it can say there are only 630,000 people unemployed today rather than having to admit that between 100,000 and 200,000 people in training programs will be added to the number of unemployed.

What jobs will these people be able to get when they have finished the training program? I wonder whether the minister and his department have conducted any surveys as to the number of people who have completed manpower training programs and have been unable to find jobs in the fields in which they were trained. Also, have any surveys been conducted to determine the number of people who have taken manpower training programs, not just once but two or three times? Attending manpower training courses becomes a way of life for some people rather than a method of getting better training in order to find a job. As long as we do not have a policy of full employment, manpower training to a large extent is a sham and a delusion. That is the first point to which we should address ourselves. Second, we need to ask ourselves—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member. Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. MacLean: Mr. Speaker, I presume that at this time the House leader will want to announce the business for Monday afternoon, Tuesday and Wednesday.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I thought the hon. member was rising on the same point of order which I assume the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan) is going to bring to the attention of the House. For the moment I will recognize the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, my suggestion may be out of order, but in the interest of progress and co-operation it might be a good idea to allow this bill to proceed to second reading now and then go to committee, so that we can get our teeth into it there if other hon. members have suggestions and observations to make on it.

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak to the point of order. I would be very glad to waive the customary winding up speech by the minister, particularly since the hon. member who now has the floor represents a party that is supposed to be vitally concerned and is, I am sure, anxious to see this bill passed as quickly as possible; unless, of course, I am misrepresenting the view of the hon. member who just spoke.

• (1600)

Mr. Muir: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could try to act as devil's advocate. If we could all agree to allow the hon. member to finish his remarks, we might then co-operate with the minister in giving the bill second reading as quickly as possible.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I understand that my hon. friend from Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) will be able to conclude his remarks in ten or 15 minutes. Perhaps the minister needs only ten minutes or so in which to close the debate, and on that understanding we might take that much time out of private members' hour.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, in the few minutes so far available to me I was discussing the purpose of such a large program as this unless we are committed to a policy of full employment. I turn now to a second question. My feeling is that we are to a large extent concentrating our training programs on the wrong people. I have the impression that students who have to a large extent finished their high school education can, given conditions of relatively full employment, find jobs themselves, at least if some encouragement to industry is forthcoming by the government to provide on-the-job training.

The people we are neglecting completely in our present programs are those who for historical and cultural reasons have never really fitted into our work economy. I refer, for example, to the Indian and the Métis people. I refer to large numbers of citizens in the centre core of every city in Canada who for various reasons have never found regular, gainful employment. In large numbers of families one finds second and third generations living essentially on welfare. I suggest to the minister, whom I believe to be one of the better ministers of the government, one of the more imaginative ministers and certainly one of the most concerned ministers, that his department should give special attention to the difficulties of those who have never been able to fit in to our work-oriented society, with a view to providing training for them.

We have often heard the suggestion that the government should be the employer of last resort. Proposals have frequently been made that the government should assume the responsibility of providing a job in the public service for every person for whom private industry could not find work. I suggest that the minister consider the idea that governments should become the employer of first resort for the hard-core unemployed. This is not a criticism of private employers, but we cannot expect private employers to hire large numbers of individuals who do not possess any skills and who have not received any training. Private employers are in business to make a profit, and one cannot fault them for doing so.

The minister and his department might well consider training those whose names are now largely to be found on the welfare rolls of this country at municipal, provincial and, indeed, the federal level in the case of the Indian people. They could then begin employment in government jobs. I am sure there are many poor people, both white and Indian, who would with some training work in hospitals as orderlies, nursing aids, and so on. I am sure there are many among the native people who could do work looking after the forests in the northern regions of Canada.

I suggest, too, that there are many Canadians, particularly women, who could benefit from training programs which, while not necessarily providing them with an opportunity to work, would help them make a better life for themselves. For example, many women, particularly in low income families, could make the few dollars which their families get in the way of earnings or welfare go a lot further if they knew more about the nutritional value of foods and more about cooking. There must be a large number of women who could make a better life for their families and themselves if they were able to sew, make their own clothes, and so on. In short, I believe the department should take a fresh look at the whole purpose of the manpower training program.

Lastly, I wish to say that I heartily approve the first steps about which the minister talked today toward the provision of a greatly extended program of manpower training on-the-job instead of concentrating almost all our effort on manpower training through the provision of courses in schools and community colleges. I am sure the minister has read even more carefully than I have the observations made by the Economic Council of Canada in connection with manpower training and policy in its eighth annual report. The view expressed by the council should cause all of us a good deal of concern. For example, it is pointed out that in the fiscal year 1969-70 only 3.9 per cent of the money spent by the federal government on manpower training in Canada was for training in industry, whereas in the United States 76.8 per cent was used to provide on-the-job training.

The council further points out that the Canadian adult training program represents, in comparative terms, a very substantial undertaking second only to that of Sweden. Further, the overwhelming proportion of our effort has been directed toward training not directly related to acquiring industrial skills; there has been heavy emphasis on institutional rather than on industrial training. The council states, and I am sure the minister knows this to be true from his experience, that to a large extent real training can only be carried out on the job itself where workers have an opportunity to become familiar with the physical plant and the materials used in circumstances in which they are involved with other personnel operating the equipment which is actually in use.

• (1610)

I should like to quote some examples given by the study commissioned in the United States. According to the survey—

—it probably "doesn't pay for schools to invest in locomotives, earth-moving machinery, big computers, etc., especially since instructional equipment is used only a few hours a day".

In other words, this observer is saying, and I completely agree, that the most effective job training that there can be is training on-the-job, in the plant, in the factory, in the workshop.

I am not suggesting that we should put a stop to our present program, that we should close down our manpower training centres or that things can be done overnight. But I am urging the minister, to the best of my ability, to look carefully at those things we have accomplished and at those we have not accomplished. I suggest a large number of things we have done have not worked well. I am not saying that they have failed, but they have not worked as well as they might and the money expended on them could have been put to better use.

I suggest we take a serious look at the overwhelming preponderance of spending on institutions—not that we cease doing what we are doing now but that in years to come we turn more to co-operation with industry and labour in our manpower training programs on the job in industry. I further suggest the department take a serious look at my proposal, which I admit is not an original one, that we begin to look at the problem faced by the hard core of people who are at the bottom of the economic and social ladder in this country, those who have been unable to find work and have existed in pretty miserable circumstances on welfare. We should devise programs of training to bring these people into the economic, social and working life of Canada so they can begin to benefit from this great country which has not done what it should have done for these people.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. I appreciate there is a special arrangement, but to keep the record straight I must inform hon. members that if the minister speaks now he will close the debate.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, my first remarks are to thank the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan) for his courtesy and his appreciation of the urgency of the matter at hand. May I also thank the hon. member who has a very important private member's bill which he has waited a considerable period of time to introduce. I can picture him seething a little over in the corner, having been through the experience on previous occasions.

I am caught in the dilemma of, on the one hand, being very apprehensive and concerned for the undeniable rights of the private member and, at the same time, being quite conscious of my responsibility to answer many of the intelligent questions that have been raised during this debate. If I do not cover them all in five minutes—because I dare not go beyond that—I hope that when we reach the committee stage we will deal with them in a more specific manner.

As I said at the outset, I thought I had made it clear that I was not introducing what I regarded as the end-all, or a major overhaul of all the legislation of the Department of Manpower but, rather, I had concentrated immediately upon two points that all parties, my provincial counterparts and all responsible groups in the country concerned with the problem of manpower, had zeroed in on, namely, the need for on-the-job training and, second, the need to eliminate the three-year rule. I think the three-year rule served a very useful purpose and was a logical addition to the legislation at the time the bill was first formulated. Its purpose then was to direct priority to our senior workers in the work force, those who had lost their skill or had found their skill redundant or obsolete and needed a second skill in order to enable them to finish out their working days.

Times have changed and as the picture of the people who are unemployed has become clearer it has become obvious that those who are really suffering as a result of unemployment at the moment have definite characteristics. They are young, they are undereducated, they are quite often single. In too many instances they have not been part of the work force for long and therefore are unable to meet the three-year requirement. I think we all recognized this, and it has indeed been a tragedy.

All too frequently people become statistics. But they are not statistics; people are flesh and blood and have feelings. There is a tendency at times of high unemployment for the smug majority—the smug majority being those who are lucky to have work—to forget that the unemployed and those on welfare are more than statistics, that they are people who given the opportunity would work rather than remain unemployed, at least with very few exceptions.

What I have attempted to do today, as I made very clear at the outset, is at least to rectify at once one anomaly in the present act that is causing a certain amount of discrimination, unintentionally, against young people, both men and women, and at the same time remove the legal impediment against a permanent on-the-job training program after consultation with the provinces and, of course, the trade unions. This bill will do both these things. It will remove the impediment against young people who need training and it will permit the Department of Manpower to re-establish within the department our priorities in such a way as to give added impetus to on-the-job training, something that we have been unable to do under the present act.

The hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett) a little earlier talked about the need to consult the trade unions. Earlier in my speech I said that I hope to be able next week to talk at length in the budget debate, since I am no longer minister of labour, about some of the responsibilities that the trade unions have to meet their moral and legal obligations to the unfortunate unemployed of this country, especially in the apprenticeship field and the concept of the closed shop.

Much of the impediment to retraining on the job and off the job and to our young people learning a skill arises from the archaic practices of the trade union movement itself. So while it is necessary and obligatory, and very much in line with my own philosophy, in introducing on-the-job training to take into consideration the views of the trade union movement, I am sure that the overwhelming majority of its leaders must and will assume that their co-operation will be needed over the next decade if we are to meet the kind of challenge that this country, with more and more capital-intensive industries, needs to meet.

The Department of Manpower is going through a period of very severe, in-depth appraisal at the present moment. The new deputy minister has already set up a task force to work on unemployment insurance to see how we can best co-ordinate the two items and render the best service to the same client, the unemployed or even the employed Canadian. The hon. member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys (Mr. Muir) said some kind things about the export of brains from the Maritimes. My father came from Halifax, so I will give the hon. member no argument in that regard. I hope it is hereditary.

• (1620)

Next week I should like to discuss with him his concept of unemployment, but I must remind him that at the present moment a person on the job or taking a course, as they call it, who is eligible for unemployment insurance can postpone his unemployment insurance and re-enter the cycle at the appropriate place when his course is completed, or he can while he is on the course receive a training allowance supplemented by unemployment insurance so he does not suffer financially by taking the course rather than remaining at home untrained but on unemployment insurance.

Mr. Speaker, I will just look back quickly to see if there is anything of real urgency that cannot be answered in depth at the committee stage. I will not even pass comment on the number of hairdressers in the Atlantic provinces, but probably this accounts for the very well groomed look of most of the members from that part of the country. Perhaps this is where the Minister of Manpower should be going for his haircuts.

In any event, let me say that the passage of this bill, which I hope will be completed very early next week, will go a long way to bringing an end to the unintentional discrimination in the old legislation. This is something I am sure all parties endorse and I hope all parties, realizing the importance of the need to end this type of unfortunate and unintentional discrimination against certain groups of Canadians, will give us extraordinary co-operation next week in order that the bill may pass the committee stage and third reading.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, if I may respond to a question asked earlier by the hon. member for Malpeque in respect of the business for next week, we will call the farm credit bill on Monday, followed by the CNR expenditures bill.

Mr. MacLean: I presume that order will be followed on Tuesday and Wednesday?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, if we do not finish it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): It being four o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, public bills, notices of motions and private bills.

[Mr. Mackasey.]

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

PARLIAMENT HILL

MEASURE RESPECTING USE OF THESE DESCRIPTIVE WORDS

Mr. D. Gordon Blair (Grenville-Carleton) moved the second reading of and concurrence in the amendments made by the Senate to Bill C-78, respecting the use of the expression "Parliament Hill".

Mr. Clermont: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Before the House agreed to continue the debate on Bill C-195, to amend the Adult Occupational Training Act, it seems that we had agreed that two public bills could be examined this afternoon, that is Bill C-78, respecting the use of the expression "Parliament Hill", which was introduced by the former member for—

[English]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That is what the Speaker just called en français.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. I should like—

Mr. Clermont: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Even though the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has the reputation of being an authority on procedure in the House, I have risen on a point of order and if he will just wait patiently one minute he will know the reason for my intervention. There was a possibility that Bill C-78, introduced by the former hon. member for Ottawa-Centre (Mr. McIlraith) who is now in the Senate, and also Bill C-17, to amend the Motor Vehicle Safety Act (seat belts), introduced by the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Mather), might be passed today on second reading.

Here is my point of order, Mr. Speaker: Could it not be ruled that only Bill C-78 be dealt with, after which the House would adjourn?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[English]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I say that was implied when we agreed half an hour ago to eat into private members' hour in order to clean up the bill of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Mackasey). It was understood then that we would leave enough time to deal with Bill C-78 which has now been called, but the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Mather) realized that his bill would have to be dealt with on another occasion.

Mr. D. Gordon Blair (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, it might be of assistance to hon. members if I were to offer a word of explanation to the amendments which have been presented to us. Hon. members will recall that this bill was passed unanimously because it was the clear intention of the House to provide protection against the commercial exploitation of the words "Parliament Hill".

Subsequently in the other place it was discovered that some complications existed which were not known to this House when the bill was passed. It has been discovered, among other things, that the place where the legislature of the province of Quebec is located is described in the Statutes of Quebec as "Parliament Hill", or "Colline Parlementaire". Therefore, the bill has been amended so it will not apply to the use of the words "Parliament Hill" in reference to the site of the legislature of the province of Quebec or of any other province.

Perhaps it is unnecessary for me to go into the details of the amendments which have been made, except to say that an addition has been made in paragraph (a) of clause 1, limiting that paragraph to the national capital region. So that all we would legislate, were this amendment to be adopted, would be a prohibition of the description or designation of a property in the capital region as "Parliament Hill", except for the actual Parliament Hill upon which our parliament is located.

The other amendment which has been made is to paragraph (c) of clause 1. It has the effect of clarifying the language we adopted in originally passing this bill in the House. This clause now reads as a prohibition against using the words "Parliament Hill" in combination in association with a commercial establishment providing service.

• (1630)

I might say I have had the privilege of having a discussion with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) who originally seconded this bill in the House at second reading stage. I believe both he and I are in agreement that had we had the preparation of these amendments we might have chosen perhaps different language and a different formulation. However, I have looked very carefully into the effect of these proposed amendments and I am persuaded that the effect of the amendments is not to weaken the original bill.

The meaning of the main amendment is to permit the use of the phrase "Parliament Hill" as a description of a site outside the capital region so long as it is not a commercial site. In other words, the amendment presented and the bill in its amended form do not weaken the original intention of this House in respect of protecting the use of the words "Parliament Hill" from commercial exploitation. I hope that with that explanation it will be found possible to concur in the amendments made in the other place.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair) was kind enough to point out, I had the honour of seconding the motion for second reading of this bill when it was moved in this House by one of our former colleagues who has now gone to another place.

An hon. Member: He has passed over.

Mr. Bell: He has gone to the other place.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The interest in that other place here in this place seems quite active. At any rate, I thought it was a good bill and I must say I do not like what the Senate has done to it. It seems to me if there was a need to protect the right of the people in Quebec City to refer to the location of the Quebec National Assembly as Parliament Hill and if there was a need to protect the right of the people in Edmonton to refer to the location of the provincial capital of Alberta as Parliament Hill—and I understand these are the only two cases in this country where it applies—this could have been done in a better way. Indeed I think this could and should be done in a way that would not seem to leave a loophole for the term "Parliament Hill" to be used in other connections.

On the assumption that some people read Hansard and may wonder what this is all about, I believe, it is necessary to place on the record the wording of clause 1 of the bill which is being amended by the motion now before us. That clause before it was amended by the Senate read as follows:

> Notwithstanding anything contained in any act of Parliament or regulation thereunder, no person shall use the words "Parliament Hill" in combination
> (a) to describe or designate a property, place, site or location other than the area of ground in the city of Ottawa bounded by Wellington Street, the Rideau Canal, the Ottawa River and Bank Street,
> (b) to identify any goods, merchandise, wares or articles for commercial use or sale, or
> (c) in association with a commercial service rendering establishment.

The Senate has proposed as its first amendment a change in the wording of paragraph (a) which I just read, so that paragraph (a) as amended would read as follows:

> (a) to describe or designate a property, place, site or location in the national capital region other than the area of ground in the city of Ottawa bounded by Wellington Street, the Rideau Canal, the Ottawa River and Bank Street,

There is more in this clause but I will come to that in a moment. What bothers me about this change is that we seem in paragraph (a) of clause 1 to be saying that the prohibition against using the phrase "Parliament Hill" to describe a property applies only in the national capital region. In other words, nobody can do it in the national capital region. Nobody can call anything else "Parliament Hill" in this immediate area, but out in the Ottawa valley where my friend hails from, or in Brandon, or in Saint John, in Moncton or in Halifax there is no prohibition against using the phrase "Parliament Hill" to designate a property.

If all we wanted to protect was the right of provincial legislatures or the members of provincial legislatures to use the term "Parliament Hill" in relation to their locations, I think this could be done much more easily by amending clause 3 of the bill. Clause 3 now reads:

> This act shall not be construed to limit in any way the powers, privileges, rights and immunities of both Houses of Parliament and of their members.

I would think there could be added to clause 3 these words: "or of the provincial legislative assemblies and their members". Out of a desire to protect the right of provincial bodies to use the phrase "Parliament Hill", and in fact out of a desire to protect that for just two locations,

Quebec City and Edmonton, we have been given wording that would provide carte blanche. It says in effect that the phrase "Parliament Hill" can be used without offending this law anywhere in Canada except in the national capital region.

Someone in the other place suggested that some of the Senators were making too much out of this issue, and I do not want him to say we are doing the same thing here. I recognize that in practical terms no hotel in Smiths Falls or in Manitou, Manitoba, or in Swift Current, Saskatchewan, is likely to want to use the name "Parliament Hill", but if we are legislating to protect the use of this phrase I think we should do it for the whole of Canada and not just for the national capital region. I recognize also that the learned member for Grenville-Carleton has applied his legal talents to the other change being made in the bill, namely, in paragraph (c) of clause 1, and that he is satisfied that because we will now use as the wording for paragraph (c) the language, "in association with a commercial establishment providing services" that we will be protected against a hotel, a restaurant or a pool hall taking that name anywhere in Canada.

I also know that my hon. friend from Grenville-Carleton is not the only person learned in the law and that lawyers have a way of finding loopholes. I would be afraid that some lawyer defending some outfit which wanted to use this name would make something out of the fact that in paragraph 1(a) Parliament said you cannot use the phrase "Parliament Hill" but the only place in which you cannot use it to describe a property is the national capital region.

I think Their Honours, who are supposed to be capable of sober second thought and of looking things over, did a clumsy job on this thing. I have no objection to their desire to protect the rights of the National Assembly of Quebec who sit in Quebec City, or the rights of the members of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta who sit in Edmonton, but it seems to me that it could have been done in a much neater way. The wording we now have seems to suggest that we are making a law prohibiting the use of the phrase "Parliament Hill" on the understanding that that prohibition applies only in this national capital region.

I think Mr. McIlraith's bill, since we can call him by his name now that he is no longer a member of this House, was a good one and I was happy to second it. It was passed unanimously. I wish Their Honours had taken a little more time and had come up with a less clumsy way of coping with the problem that was presented to them.

Our procedure for handling amendments made by the other place is very awkward; there is really no chance to move an amendment or a subamendment. We are dealing with this with Mr. Speaker in the chair, not in committee of the whole. We are stuck with it unless we want to have a conference of managers of the two Houses. That would be making too much of a fuss; it would be carrying the thing a bit far, so I suppose all I can do is record my opposition and at least say "On division" to the passing of this amendment. As between the bill as it stood and the bill as it came back from the Senate, I would rather have it as it stood, although I would have been quite happy to accept an amendment to clause 3 along the lines I indicated.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

In any case, I hope it is clear from what has been said on the pages of the Hansard of this House that we mean what Mr. McIlraith meant when he brought in the bill—that we want to protect the use of the phrase "Parliament Hill" against commercial exploitation not only in the national capital region but anywhere in Canada.

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think the debate this afternoon has been particularly interesting. I followed the remarks of my colleague, the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair) and my good friend the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) very closely. I must confess that I am quite impressed with the argument of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. He points out that the effect of the amendment before us is to limit clause 1(a) to the national capital region. This raises a broader question as to possible designation of any number of other areas outside the national capital region, which is clearly contrary to the expressed intent of this bill. It also raises the second question of whether there are limitations, in any geographic sense, imposed in paragraphs (b) and (c). My lay opinion of the wording would be to say no to that, but there may well be a question raised about it.

There are times, Mr. Speaker, when all of us, with the best intentions in the world, rise very sincerely to protect the symbols of our nation. There is the question of the protection, for example, of "O Canada" and at other times in this place we have had debates to prevent its use as a commercial. The measures to designate and develop Canada Day fall in the same category of the preservation of symbols.

There are times, however, Mr. Speaker, when we have to keep a sense of humour about things. For instance, clause 1(b) prohibits the use of the words "'Parliament Hill' to identify any goods, merchandise, wares or articles for commercial use or sale". I presume that leaves us in the position where we can allow the use of "Parliament Sauce" to continue, but there could be no "Parliament Hill Sauce" ever designated, promoted or otherwise offered for sale in Canada. There is a real question of whether we are doing things in such a way that it is on occasion going beyond the limits of what is in fact practicable and enforceable. The penalty provided is that an offence is "punishable on summary conviction".

Mr. Speaker, it is with some reluctance that I shall vote for the bill, not because I do not agree with its general purpose but because I have reservations, as expressed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, about whether the amendments that have been proposed will really achieve the purpose in mind. On balance, I am going to support the bill—I can hardly do otherwise—but I cannot help but strongly express the wish that there were a procedure for consultation more frequently used between the other place and this House when there is a difference of opinion in respect of a bill and when amendments are offered. I understood such a provision exists but has fallen into disuse. In the period that I have been in this House I cannot recall its ever being implemented.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It is clumsy.

Mr. Francis: Well, maybe a clumsy procedure is better than bad legislation. I regret that there was not an opportunity for joint consultation between members of the other place and members of this House.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I ask the hon. member a question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Would the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis) accept a question?

Mr. Francis: Certainly.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis) indicated that he would be supporting the bill, as we all did at second reading. Is he also supporting the Senate amendments?

Mr. Francis: Mr. Speaker, I am going to support the amendments out of a very practical consideration that the alternative to not supporting them is probably to jeopardize the bill itself.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Not with George over in the Senate now.

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I had a few words to say on behalf of our party when this bill was at the second reading stage, and therefore I should like to say a few words now. I am not surprised that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) might be a little biased in his judgment of things that come from the other place, but I am a little surprised that my hon. friend who has just spoken seems to have the same attitude.

I tend to agree with the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair) that these amendments are, over-all, an improvement. I see them as meeting the objection that was raised, and with that I think we all agree, that we are not limiting the right of other legislatures or areas to use the term "Parliament Hill".

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We should have said that.

Mr. MacLean: I think it could have been said in a neater way; I agree with the hon. member on that. However, as I read the bill as amended it means that three things cannot be done under it. One is to name any site in the national capital region or any place or establishment as "Parliament Hill"; secondly, that name cannot be used anywhere in Canada or in the federal jurisdiction for goods, merchandise, wares or articles for commercial use or for sale and, thirdly, the bill prohibits the use of the name in association with a commercial establishment providing services anywhere in Canada.

As I understand the bill as amended by the Senate, the only loophole would be the possibility that it permits the use of the name "Parliament Hill" outside the national capital region by some organization that is not commercial and does not supply services. There may be an organization that might use the words "Parliament Hill" but I think the likelihood of that is not very great and I would support the amendment.

Mr. Blair: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Blair: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order but I freely confess it is not a good point of order. I wonder if I might have the indulgence of the House to make one comment which I failed to make earlier.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

• (1650)

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): An honest request deserves unanimous consent.

Mr. Blair: In view of the excellent analysis of the legislation made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, I think a few words should be offered for the sake of the record in order to explain the apparent awkwardness of the amendments which were made in the other place.

As I understand the traditions of parliament, it has been the universal custom for this House and the other place not in any way to attempt to interfere with the definition or prescription of the immunities and privileges of provincial legislatures. There is considerable law on this question. Reference has been made to the leading case of Fielding v. Thomas, 1893, in which it was held that "provincial legislatures have power to pass acts for defining their own powers, immunities and privileges," and so on. I think, out of deference to this longstanding tradition, members of the other place decided not to refer specifically to the legislatures or sites of the legislatures of provinces in the way in which the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre suggested might be done.

I offer these comments as a historical footnote so that there may be something on record to show the reason for the wording with which we have been confronted in this debate.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, I support this bill and I think the hon. member for Malpeque (Mr. MacLean) has given good reasons for supporting it. You must accept the purpose for which this bill was brought in. If you start to mess around with it you are likely to get into trouble, and that is what happened in the other place. They tried to make it somewhat more inclusive than it was intended to be.

When the bill was previously before the House on second reading, I raised one or two questions and was told, quite rightly, that the bill had only one purpose and that my questions were not related to that purpose. This bill has been introduced for one particular purpose. If we accept that, I do not think we will be reluctant to pass it. No doubt one thousand questions could be raised about its applicability to provincial jurisdictions, about whether it ought to apply to phrases other than "Parliament Hill" and so on. For instance, someone might open a beer parlour in the Chateau Laurier and call it "Room 16". Would we be against that? This bill has a narrow purpose and in that context I support it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order, indeed on a question of privilege. I deplore the suggestion that "Room 16" is a beer parlour.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On division.

Motion agreed to, amendments read the second time and concurred in.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Five o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

At 5 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.
