SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

TABLING OF JOINT COMMUNIQUÉ FOLLOWING MISSION TO JAPAN—STATEMENT BY MINISTER

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I should like to table under the terms of Standing Order 41 copies in both official languages of the joint statement issued last Wednesday in Tokyo by the first Canadian science and technology mission, sponsored by the Minister of State for Science and Technology, and the Japanese government.

As I indicated, this was the first Canadian science and technology mission led by the new Minister of State for Science and Technology, and it represents an important Canadian initiative. The mission was described by the Japanese themselves as the most important one in the field of science and technology ever to be received by them. They accorded the Canadian group a high degree of co-operation.

The Canadians proposed collaboration with the Japanese with respect to exchanging information and personnel and advanced suggestions for consultation to clarify joint projects. The mission was successful in obtaining Japanese acceptance of these proposals. In my view this opens up a bright prospect for future relations between Canada and Japan in the science and technology field.

During ten days of intensive discussions with their Japanese counterparts, some 40 senior Canadians from industry, government and the universities spoke with well over 1,000 persons in key positions in Japan and visited many important centres of research and development in industry, universities and government departments and agencies. This intensive and in-depth consultation was achieved by the division of the mission into compact work groups, altogether 11 in number.

In our discussions and visits we were also looking for an explanation of the Japanese economic miracle of post-war expansion.

The joint statement touches on several important points. First, it marks the beginning of discussions which are expected to lead to some formal arrangement between Canada and Japan in the area of science and technology. Canada now has such arrangements with the Soviet Union, Germany and Belgium. In the meantime, additional discussions will be taking place at an early date to identify possible joint Canadian-Japanese endeavours in the field of oceanographic research and environmental studies.

Canada and Japan separately and together have vital interests in the ocean; indeed, they are joined together by the Pacific Ocean. Both countries have agreed to consider proposals for joint projects related to new ocean technologies, such as ocean data buoys or, perhaps, the development of new kinds of underwater construction machinery, essential for harvesting the mineral riches of the ocean floor.

Our countries will exchange information in many areas—environmental technology and urban and regional planning, to mention only two. Consideration will be given to collaboration in technology assessment, the developing art of looking ahead for possible harmful effects of the applications of science.

Senior Japanese and Canadian officials expect to be meeting in the next few months and regularly thereafter to co-ordinate and promote bilateral co-operation in science and technology and its applications.

The understanding reached by Canada and Japan is that exchanges of information are expected to result in much greater flow of scientific and technical knowledge between the two countries. We have much to learn from each other and exchanges of information and of personnel will be important parts of the learning process.

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I take this opportunity to welcome the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Gillespie) back to the House from leading a Canadian scientific and technological mission to Japan. May I also thank him for making available an advance copy of the statement he has just made. I hope that future events will bear out the optimism expressed in the minister's statement and that reports of this kind will gradually take on more credibility.

I note with pleasure that this exchange is expected to lead to some formal arrangement between Canada and Japan in the area of science and technology, and that further talks will take place regarding possible Canadian-Japanese endeavours in the field of oceanographic research and environmental studies. It is recognized that the Japanese are leaders, if not pre-eminent, in these fields. It is also reassuring to note that the minister recognizes that harmful effects may possibly flow from the application of science and technology in certain fields.

This proposed exchange of information can only be successful to the degree that Canada is pre-eminent in some fields of scientific and technological application. This makes it urgent, I believe, for Canada to delineate policies in science and technology which will stimulate excellence. Therefore, in looking at the ever-broadening field of science and technology we must be increasingly selective not only with regard to possible harmful effects of technological applications but with regard to the benefits that may accrue from the money and effort expended.

I also hope that the minister will make a statement at an early date on science policy generally and on the government's position with regard to the second report of the Senate Committee on Science and Technology.

I note in closing, Mr. Speaker, that the mission also was looking for an explanation of the Japanese economic miracle. I would not be surprised if a lesser level of economic competence than shown by the Japanese would seem a miracle to this government.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, every member of the House will agree that the fullest and freest exchange of scientific knowledge and know-how among all countries will be of value not merely to Canada but to the whole world. To the extent that Canada has initiated and participated in this kind of exchange with Japan and other countries we, of course, support the initiatives taken by the government.

I note, as did the spokesman for the official opposition, that in his statement the minister said the government was looking for an explanation of the Japanese economic miracle. The growth of the Japanese economy, its increased efficiency, the rapid expansion of the Japanese gross national product and the fantastic development of Japanese manufacturing industry have been one of the wonders of the world since world war II. Yet I hope we will learn from the Japanese how to avoid some of the mistakes they have made in their headlong rush in developing an urban industrial society. We certainly do not want in Canada the kind of environmental pollution which has been experienced in major cities of Japan. I hope we can learn from the mistakes they have made.

In the near future, Mr. Speaker, I hope we shall hear something more positive from the minister than the vague generalities he gave us in his statement. The Japanese have been singularly successful in expanding their industries and employment in manufacturing. They have developed products such as automobiles, scientific instruments, photographic equipment and so on which can compete with those of any other nation in the world.

I wonder whether the minister and his advisors will be looking at the steps the Japanese government took years ago to make certain that industry in Japan is controlled by the Japanese. Will the minister be looking at the difficulties we are experiencing in that many of our most important and largest industries are controlled by companies in the United States and other countries? These companies prefer to do their basic scientific research and apply the results to the development of industrial products in their own countries. Will the minister in the near future bring forward a policy that can be discussed in the House and outside, designed to induce Canadian industry to undertake the kind of research necessary to meet the problems of the 70's and 80's? That kind of research has not been undertaken so far.

BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACT AND CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE FOR RETIREMENT OF MEMBERS OF HOUSE OF COMMONS AT AGE 65

Mr. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-173, to amend the British North America Act and the Canada Elections Act (retirement age of members of the House of Commons).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

• (1420)

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to provide for the retirement of parliamentarians at age 65. The reason is that since this parliament and other legislatures have seen fit to define age 65 as the age for retirement purposes for pension plans it seems appropriate that this should also apply to those who have made these laws.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There are ten other notices of introduction of bills of which the Chair just received notice earlier today. There is some question concerning the procedural validity of some of these bills. While at the beginning of the session when we had well over 100 similar bills proposed it was difficult for the Chair to take the time to study them and to express an opinion then as to their validity for the purpose of having them presented for first reading, I believe that later in the session, when bills are presented individually or in a group of ten as we have today, the Chair ought to have an opportunity to look at these bills and express an opinion on whether they should be received for the purpose of introduction and first reading. I had a conversation with the hon. member for Skeena. I told him I had some doubt concerning the grammatical validity of the Latin included in the title of his bill, but that is really not the reason his bill is being stood today.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

CANADA MANPOWER CENTRES—RECORDS OF UNEMPLOYED

Question No. 15—Mr. Marshall:

What records are kept at Manpower centres on the work history and educational and training qualifications of the unemployed?

Mr. Ray Perrault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): The personal information forms used by Canada Manpower Centres for registering persons seeking employment (including persons unemployed) include information on work history and educational and training qualifications.

NUMBER OF PERSONS IN RECEIPT OF OLD AGE SECURITY PAYMENTS AND GUARANTEED INCOME SUPPLEMENT

Question No. 27—Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre):

1. How many persons in Canada, by provinces, are in receipt of the Old Age Security pension?

2. Of the recipients of the Old Age Security pension, how many persons in Canada, by provinces, are in receipt of the Guaranteed Income Supplement?

3. Of those receiving the Guaranteed Income Supplement, how many persons in Canada, by provinces, are receiving the full amount?

4. What is the average amount, in Canada, and by provinces, being received as a Guaranteed Income Supplement by recipients of the Old Age Security pension?

5. Do the answers to the above questions take into consideration persons living outside of Canada who are in receipt of the Old Age Security pension and, if so, how many of such persons are there, and if they are considered as belonging to the various provinces what is the number for each province?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. Newfoundland 32,692; Prince Edward Island 12,363; Nova Scotia 72,932; New Brunswick 54,797; Quebec 420,153; Ontario 646,485; Manitoba 96,937; Saskatchewan 94,984; Alberta 118,655; British Columbia 205,-190; Northwest Territories 848; Yukon 512.

2. Newfoundland 27,471; Prince Edward Island 9,502; Nova Scotia 48,854; New Brunswick 37,001; Quebec 258,-614; Ontario 305,093; Manitoba 57,321; Saskatchewan 56,715; Alberta 69,186; British Columbia 107,255; Northwest Territories 742; Yukon 314.

3. Newfoundland 6,470; Prince Edward Island 1,361; Nova Scotia 8,975; New Brunswick 5,792; Quebec 33,237; Ontario 24,097; Manitoba 6,161; Saskatchewan 6,372; Alberta 7,981; British Columbia 10,138; Northwest Territories 173; Yukon 48.

4. Newfoundland $49; Prince Edward Island $46; Nova Scotia $47; New Brunswick $45; Quebec $47; Ontario $42; Manitoba $44; Saskatchewan $43; Alberta $45; British Columbia $43; Northwest Territories $55; Yukon $55; National $44.

N.B.—The figures given are on a monthly basis.

5. Yes. As of December 1971, the latest month for which figures are available, there were 44,841 persons in receipt of the Old Age Security pension outside of Canada. Some of these pensioners would be absent temporarily, and others on a permanent basis. Some might be receiving a Guaranteed Income Supplement, which is payable for the first six months of absence following departure from Canada, but no figures are available. The breakdown by province of last residence is as follows: Newfoundland 321; Prince Edward Island 231; Nova Scotia 1,178; New Brunswick 1,276; Quebec 9,908; Ontario 17,425; Manitoba 1,954; Saskatchewan 1,706; Alberta 2,206; British Columbia 8,613; Northwest Territories 5; Yukon 18.

N.B. The figures above are as of December 1971.

GRANTS UNDER FAMILY PLANNING PROGRAM

Question No. 65—Mrs. MacInnis:

Since the initiation of the Family Planning Program by the Minister of National Health and Welfare on May 5, 1971 (a) to what organizations were grants made and what was the amount in each case (b) what organizations have been refused grants and what was the amount of money requested in each case (c) what organizations have applications for grants still pending and what amounts of money are being requested in each case?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. Projects received and assisted in the field of family planning are as follows: National Health Grant Program: Family planning Federation of Canada, $60,000; Service de Régulation des Naissances, $25,000.

National Welfare Grant Program: Centre de Planning Familial du Québec Inc. Montréal, $500; Ministère des Affaires Sociales du Québec, $37,670; Planned Parenthood Society of Hamilton, $17,540; United Community Services of the Greater Vancouver Area, $6,597; Family Planning Federation of Canada, $40,000.

Family Planning Grant Program: Family Planning Federation of Canada, $385,000; Service de Régulation des Naissances, $40,000.

2. It is not the policy of the department to divulge the names of unsuccessful groups or individuals.

3. It is not the policy of the department to divulge the names of applicants. However, we have now one application ($25,000) being examined.

N.B.—A considerable sum of money has been allocated for the National Conference on Family Planning held in Ottawa at the end of February. Approximately 300 delegates participated. Approximately $200,000 was also allocated as grants for research in the field of family planning during the fiscal year 1970-71.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE—EMPLOYMENT OF MR. DION, BERTHIER-EN-BAS

Question No. 122—Mr. Beaudoin:

Is Mr. Dion from Berthier-en-Bas, in the constituency of Montmagny, employed by the Department of Agriculture or one of its agencies and, if so (a) what are his duties (b) what is his annual salary?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): No, (a) not applicable (b) not applicable.

POST OFFICE—COST OF COLLECTING POSTAGE DUE BY MEANS OF HONOUR SYSTEM CARDS

Question No. 134—Mr. Coates:

1. What was the cost of producing the cards informing Canadians postage was due when the Post Office Department increased the price of postage stamps from seven cents to eight cents?

2. Who produced the cards?

3. How many were produced and how many were used?

4. Of the total number mailed regarding underpayment of postage (a) how many were returned with the postage payment (b) what was the total amount received (c) how many who were contacted for such underpayment did not return the cards?

5. What was the total cost to the Post Office Department for this operation?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Postmaster General): The process of collecting postage due by means of Honour System Cards was instituted some years ago and is a continuing system. No special provisions or cards were made as a result of recent increases in postage rates. No special statistics are maintained and it would not be possible to furnish the information requested in questions 1 to 5. Incidentally, these cards are not mailed but are left by the delivering employee with the postage due item.

DISTRIBUTION OF POSTER ADVERTISING FOR ASSISTANT TO WAR VETERANS ALLOWANCE BOARD CHAIRMAN

Question No. 137—Mr. Marshall:

1. What was the distribution of Poster 72 DVA-HQ1 advertising for an Executive Assistant to the War Veterans Allowance Board Chairman?

2. Were copies sent to all Canadian Legion Branches?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Public Service Commission as follows: 1. All departments throughout Canada and Overseas. All portions of the Public Service of Canada that are separate employers. All agencies, boards and corporations. Members of Parliament. Deputy Ministers. All placement Officers in universities, institutes and colleges throughout Canada. Canada Manpower Centres. Certified Bargaining Agents. In addition, an advertisement was placed in all the major daily newspapers throughout Canada.

2. No. However, an advertisement was placed in "The Legion".

ANALYSIS OF MERCURY CONTENT IN FISH—GOUIN BASIN

Question No. 154—Mr. Matte:

1. Has any analysis been made of the mercury content in fish, especially pickerel and pike, in the Gouin Basin in Haute-Mauricie and, if so (a) on what date was such analysis made (b) for what reason (c) who requested such analysis (d) what were the exact results for each lake and river in the Basin?

2. Have any shipments of pickerel and pike from the Gouin Basin been rejected in the United States and, if so (a) who was the consignee (b) who was the shipper (c) what assurance is there that the fish really came from the Gouin Basin?

3. What would be the exact causes of the high mercury content of the pickerel and pike in this area?

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries): 1. Yes.

(a) Location	Sampling Period
Reservoir Gouin	June to September 1971
Lac Levasseur	August to September 1971
Riviere St. Maurice	June to August 1971

(b) To ensure that the commercial fish production from the area in question complies with the guidelines established by the Department of National Health and Welfare.

(c) The Inspection Branch, Fisheries Services, Department of the Environment.

(d) Lake or River	Species	Mercury Levels in PPM Low	Mean	High
Reservoir Gouin	(Pickerel)	0.23	0.82	1.63
	(Pike)	0.22	1.23	1.84
Lac Levasseur	(Pickerel)	0.54	0.71	1.01
	(Pike)	0.32	0.72	1.33
Riviere St. Maurice	(Pickerel)	0.29	0.82	1.27

2. No.

3. The contamination may be the result of mercury compounds being leached into the watershed from natural geological occurrences such as from cinnabar deposits, as is the situation in a number of other locations in Canada. There is no evidence to indicate that mercury contamination of pickerel and pike harvested from the Gouin Basin is attributable to industrial pollution.

COMMITMENTS UNDER AGRICULTURAL STABILIZATION BOARD TO OFFSET UNITED STATES 10 PER CENT SURTAX

Question No. 201—Mr. Burton:

What commitments were made by the government under the Agricultural Stabilization Board to offset difficulties during the period when the United States 10 per cent surtax was in effect?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): During the period when the United States 10 per cent surtax was in effect the Agricultural Stabilization Board: 1. Offered a special subsidy of 50 cents per bird for fowl slaughtered during an eight week period providing the number slaughtered exceeded the normal kill in the period; the subsidy to be pro rated among all producers.

2. Offered to purchase and can up to 4 million pounds of eviscerated turkeys.

3. Offered to purchase Canada No. 1 potatoes at $1.50 per hundredweight.

4. Offered $114,000 to the Canadian Horticultural Council for market promotion of fresh apples.

5. Offered a supplementary subsidy of 1½ cents per pound to blueberry producers on product delivered in the period August 16, 1971 to October 15, 1971.

INTERNATIONAL TREATY ON MARITIME POLLUTION

Question No. 237—Mr. Robinson:

Has Canada participated in a proposal for an international treaty on maritime pollution and, if so, will the federal government advise if it will sponsor a resolution revising the United Nations Charter to create a United Nations secretariat on marine pollution?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State to External Affairs): The problem of marine pollution is at present being considered in connection with the preparatory work for the UN Conference on the Human Environment which will take place in Stockholm in June this year, the Marine Pollution Conference to be sponsored by the Inter-governmental Maritime Consultative Organization in London in June 1973, and the Law of the Sea Conference which may also take place in 1973. Canada is participating in the preparatory work for these three conferences and in the course of this preparatory work the possibility of an international treaty on marine pollution has been discussed. Largely as a result of Canadian initiative, a body of principles on the prevention of marine pollution and the preservation of the marine environment has been prepared for submission to the Stockholm Conference as part of the action plan for the control of pollutants having international implications, to be considered by the Conference. The endorsement of these marine pollution principles by the Stockholm Conference should assist the elaboration of any international treaty or treaties respecting marine pollution in the post-Stockholm period.

At present, proposals relating to the establishment of an organization within the UN system responsible for matters involving the marine environment are being considered in conjunction with the broader institutional questions which will be considered at the Stockholm Conference. The Secretary-General for the Conference has developed proposals on this subject which are being studied by governments. Canadian proposals on this matter with respect to both the environment generally and the marine environment specifically are now being actively considered in the light of the Secretary-General's proposals. At this stage, however, I am unable to go into detail on the scope and content of these proposals.

OIL SPILL FROM FREIGHTER "VANLENE"—
INTRODUCTION OF REGULATIONS TO CONTROL
POTENTIAL HAZARDS—REMOVAL OF FUEL—ASSUMPTION OF COST

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in the absence from the House of the Minister of the Environment and the Minister of Transport I sent to the Prime Minister's office notice that I would be asking the Prime Minister some questions about the oil spill off Vancouver Island from the freighter Vanlene. When can we expect effective regulations under the Canada Shipping Act, and particularly under Bill C-2, with a view to controlling the potential hazards that arise in Canadian waters from vessels such as these?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition was good enough to let me know he would ask this question. I shall attempt to answer it. The two ministers will be in the House tomorrow and might be able to give more detailed information. On the attempts to control this type of thing, I can tell the Leader of the Opposition that some measures have been taken under the Canada Shipping Act. As a matter of fact, I am meeting one premier this afternoon to discuss the application of them. We do not yet know the cause of this particular disaster. Therefore it is impossible to know at this stage what could have been done to prevent it. However, a preliminary investigation has begun in Vancouver, and when we know the cause of this wreck we might be able to determine means of preventing them in the future.

Mr. Stanfield: What steps are being taken to remove from the vessel the remainder of the bunker fuel.

Mr. Trudeau: I understand that as of Friday a barge and some booms were alongside the wreck and that the operation of taking off the fuel had not begun because of bad weather but will begin any time now, if it has not begun. The apparatus is there and will begin to operate as soon as the weather permits.

Mr. Stanfield: I have one further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In reply to my first question the Prime Minister referred to a fund established in connection with oil tankers in our waters as distinct from freighters such as this ship. Has the government in fact undertaken to underwrite the clean-up cost in connection with this oil spill and, if so, what fund will take care of it?

Mr. Trudeau: Once again, we do not know the cause of the disaster and therefore we cannot yet at this date ascertain the responsibility. If it is possible, of course, to determine responsibility on someone's behalf, we will take suit in the normal fashion.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. In view of the fact the Prime Minister is meeting Premier Hatfield today to discuss the oil pollution fund, will the Prime Minister himself, or through the ministers involved, see that the whole subject is related to the fact that we in the Maritimes may be paying through this levy for some of the damage on the west coast?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would think that the question is in the form of a representation or an argument.

POSSIBLE LEGISLATION TO CONTROL OIL-CARRYING SHIPS ON PACIFIC COAST

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I address a supplementary question to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the fact this oil spill is not the only one that has taken place—there was one a few days ago in Nanoose Bay from Department of National Defence ships there—is the government contemplating any legislation that would restrict and control the type of movement of oil-carrying vessels on the Pacific coast so as to prevent the recurrence of these many, very dangerous spills that have taken place in recent months?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The House of Commons knows that we took this kind of measure as regards shipping in the Arctic zone. However, with regard to the east and west coasts nothing is contemplated at this time beyond the legislation we have already brought forward to amend the Canada Shipping Act.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister with reference to his last answer that we do have legislation, Bill C-2, covering this subject. When does the government intend to bring in regulations under that bill to tighten up security with regard to ships of this kind?

Mr. Trudeau: I am afraid I will have to defer on that question to the Minister of Transport.

Mr. Speaker: I recognize the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East for the last supplementary on this subject.

OIL SPILLS—SUGGESTED PAYMENT OF CLEAN-UP COSTS FROM GENERAL REVENUES PENDING BUILD-UP OF FUND FROM LEVY

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether or not he would now consider in cabinet the advisability of the government establishing out of general revenues the required fund for the clean-up of oil pollution so that we would not have to wait for a number of years for the levy on oil movements to build up the fund to the level indicated as adequate by the government?

• (1430)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the House knows that the government has not waited for the establishment of this fund. We have had to clean up spills in the past and we will continue to do so in the future. This levy is just a way whereby we can ensure that the large corporations which are moving oil will in some manner be able to pay for any damages which result from any accident.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

EXPLOSION OF NUCLEAR DEVICE IN ATMOSPHERE BY PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC OF CHINA—GOVERNMENT REPRESENTATIONS

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether the government of the People's Republic of China had informed the Canadian government of its intention to explode a nuclear device in the atmosphere and, if so, whether this government expressed any protest against that intention?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The answer to the question, Mr. Speaker, is no. The People's Republic of China did not notify us in advance. They do know, of course, our attitude toward explosions in the atmosphere. We are hoping the People's Republic of China will abandon its position and join with the Soviet Union and the United States in bringing an end to these tests in the atmosphere.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, the report about the explosion the other day also stated that the government of the People's Republic of China intends to explode some other kind of nuclear device in the atmosphere in the future. In view of that, is the government considering making formal representations to the government of China, through the diplomatic channels which are now open, urging that government not to continue these tests?

Mr. Sharp: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have been considering this. I do not know whether it would add to the force of the representations we have already made to them both publicly and privately, but it is a suggestion that I have in hand. I do not want to get into the position, however, where protests of this kind are routine matters that follow each time they explode one of these devices. What we are looking for is an end to the testing, not the satisfaction of protesting.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I am not asking for the satisfaction of protesting. Is the minister considering this kind of protest as a means of trying to persuade the government of the People's Republic of China to join the ban on testing in the atmosphere which has now been signed, and to participate in the discussions on the banning of all other kinds of testing?

Mr. Sharp: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I think this kind of representation would be a good deal more fruitful than a simple protest. They know our position. This is the line we have been following. We will be urging the Chinese and the French to participate in the ban on nuclear testing in the atmosphere, and to follow the Canadian position which is that all kinds of nuclear testing should be abandoned.

FAMILY ALLOWANCES—REQUEST FOR PROGRAM ADVANTAGEOUS TO FAMILIES

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister.

I would ask him whether a date has been agreed upon between officials of the Department of National Health and Welfare and their counterparts in Quebec in order to find an acceptable repatriation formula for family allowances and, if so, could he assure the House that this formula will be more acceptable to families than to provinces?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Quebec premier sent me a telegram on Friday to inform me that he proposed that our officials should meet to discuss this problem. I feel that the point made by the hon. member with regard to the importance of worrying about families rather than provinces or governments is well taken, and we will keep it in mind.

PROPOSED MACKENZIE VALLEY PIPELINE—ACCEPTANCE BY GOVERNMENT OF TRANSPORTATION CORRIDOR STUDY CONCLUSIONS

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. It is prompted by statements reportedly made by the Minister of State in Calgary over the weekend. Has the government accepted the basic general conclusions of the transportation corridor study relative to the Mackenzie River valley by Canadian National Railways and the Alberta Gas Trunk Line Company Limited?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would hope the question could be asked directly. I have suggested to hon. members previously that it is not quite in order to ask questions about statements made outside the House unless they are asked of the Prime Minister to inquire whether a statement made outside the House represents government policy. The hon. member, however, is entitled to ask the question of the minister directly.

[Mr. Lewis.]

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, I had attempted to do that, but in any case may I ask the minister directly the question I have already outlined?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, we have stated, as early as last August, that we would create a corridor for the construction of gas and oil pipelines in the north. However, we have not yet reached a final decision with regard to this corridor; when this is done we shall inform hon. members.

[English]

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the minister whether the government has been provided with a copy of the report on this subject reportedly released today by the government of the United States in Washington?

WHEAT—INQUIRY AS TO DATE OF ACREAGE PAYMENTS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I address my question to the Minister of Justice. It has to do with the matter of acreage payments being made by the government of Canada, based on the amount of money estimated to be that which a two-price system would provide. I think it was some three weeks ago that he said an announcement would be made shortly. Naturally, the farmers out west, as the spring work is approaching, are anxious to know when they are going to get the payments.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, what I indicated a few weeks ago would be announced shortly was the manner of distribution of the money, and that was announced some time ago. We are working on the exact figures and the manner of payment now. I would expect that the actual distribution, for the first time in connection with 1972, would be made some time in the month of April.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I do not quite understand the meaning of "distribution for the first time." What is the meaning of those words?

Mr. Lang: Well, Mr. Speaker, I am talking about this year's payment.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Oh, I see, Mr. Speaker. Does the date of the distribution bear any relationship to the metaphysical musings of the Prime Minister on "Encounter" yesterday, as to the possible date of an election?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

HOUSING

INCLUSION OF PRESENT PURCHASES OF PROPERTIES BY MUNICIPALITIES UNDER NEW URBAN RENEWAL COST-SHARING SCHEME

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. In view of the fact plans are being made for changes in urban renewal policy, can the minister give assurance that properties and real estate purchased by municipalities at the present time will come under the new cost-sharing scheme when the new program comes into effect?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would not want to answer that until any new proposals were in fact laid before parliament.

Does the minister intend to cover the deficit in the present budget, estimated at $750 million to $1 billion, by using the private bond market, or by use of the private banks or the Bank of Canada, generally considered to be inflationary in character?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have serious doubts about the hon. member's question. I do not think it is the kind of question that ought to be asked at this time.

POSSIBLE RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN DISCUSSIONS WITH UNITED STATES ON CANADIAN EXEMPTION FROM INTEREST EQUALIZATION TAX AND AUTO PACT NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Mac T. McCutcheon (Lambton-Kent): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Can the minister say whether there have been discussions recently with the United States government on Canada's present exemption from the interest equalization tax, and are these discussions connected in any way with the auto pact?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if there have been such discussions they would have been within the purview of my colleague, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, but none have been had at the ministerial level, to my knowledge.

POSSIBILITY OF UNITED STATES AUTOMOBILE MANUFACTURERS NOT USING DISC PROGRAM

Mr. Mac T. McCutcheon (Lambton-Kent): I thank the minister very much, Mr. Speaker. I was just following the instructions of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce in his answer on Friday. Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. On Friday the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce stated:

I understand the automobile manufacturers in the United States have no intention of using it—

The DISC program. Can the Prime Minister inform the House whether the government has in fact received any sort of formal assurance from the U.S. auto industry that they will not use DISC?

• (1440)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Certainly, Mr. Speaker, the government as a whole has not received such assurance, but the question might be referred to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. I will do that and see if anything has been given to him in the way of assurance which has not yet been brought to the attention of the cabinet.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I do not think I will be making a statement today. GOVERNMENT POSITION ON RECOMMENDATION OF JOINT COMMITTEE ON THE CONSTITUTION

Mr. D. Gordon Blair (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. In view of the recommendation made by the Joint Committee on the Constitution about the future governing of the national capital region, can the minister state whether the government is prepared to deal with this recommendation and whether it is in favour of it?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, like any House committee report we are studying the whole of the report and certainly its recommendations relating to the national capital will be studied very carefully by me. They are interesting recommendations which make a useful contribution to the debate on the subject, but before making a careful study I would not want to commit myself one way or another on them. I am glad the mistake regarding some wording in the report has been cleared up. I would think that at some appropriate time in the future the whole question of the operations of the National Capital Commission could well be studied by a House and Senate committee that would examine all the issues surrounding the National Capital Commission.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there are a number of recommendations before cabinet now dealing with the opening of some missions. We have the usual financial constraints that I know are supported by members of the opposition, but within those limits I hope we will be able to make progress.

SUGGESTED ESTABLISHMENT OF ADDITIONAL TERMINAL ELEVATORS AT PRINCE RUPERT TO RELIEVE PRESSURE ON EXISTING EXPORT FACILITIES

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, the other day I asked the right hon. Prime Minister about the operations of the Wheat Board or the Department of Finance with respect to allocating funds for an enlargement of or addition to the Canadian government grain elevator facilities in the port of Prince Rupert. May I ask the Minister of Justice whether he has any plans this year to provide funds for such an expansion or enlargement?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, with the record movements of grain going out from the west coast an attempt is being made to use the present facilities in Prince Rupert to a maximum. We are looking at a number of alternatives for increasing that capacity, including the question of whether moving clean grain will increase the over-all working capacity. In addition, my colleague the Minister of Transport has under very active consideration steps which might permit the enlargement of the capacity or the facility itself.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): In light of the latter part of the answer about increasing the capacity of that port for grain shipment, could the minister put any timetable on that? Would he be prepared to say it would be before the end of this fiscal year or before the Minister of Finance introduces his first budget?

Mr. Speaker: Apparently the matter is being considered by the minister. In the meantime the Chair will recognize the Leader of the Opposition.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

VIEW OF ACTING MINISTER OF MANPOWER AND IMMIGRATION AS TO POTENTIAL

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Acting Minister of Manpower and Immigration whether it is his view that the economy is right at potential?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That question, of course, is not in order. I am sure the hon. Leader of the Opposition knows that he cannot ask a question of that kind which is merely an invitation to express an opinion.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I am seeking the view of the government with regard to its economic policies and, with every respect, I would therefore suggest that it is proper to ask the Acting Minister of Manpower and Immigration whether it is his position that the economy is right at potential, particularly in view of the large amount of unemployment.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Of course, that is the opinion of the hon. gentleman but it is not mine. I judge from the procedural standpoint and to my mind it is clearly not in order. The hon. Leader of the Opposition may wish to rephrase the question.

Mr. Stanfield: May I ask the Acting Minister of Manpower and Immigration whether it is his view that an increased rate of private investment, which according to the government's own survey is to be about the same level as last year, should not be encouraged because it would be going beyond the potential of the economy?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not wish to be difficult and I shall allow the minister to reply to the hon. gentleman's question, but I again suggest very respectfully that when a member asks a minister whether it is his view that such and such a situation exists it is an invitation to express an opinion. I could read many precedents to the effect that this kind of question is not procedurally correct. Again I want to insist that I certainly do not want to be too difficult in this respect. The minister might be allowed to reply.

Hon. Martin P. O'Connell (Acting Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, some comments I made recently indicated that by standard or orthodox measures the economy is at full potential when it is reaching for a 6 per cent real growth rate. I was pointing out that that was still an inadequate performance in the economy even though measured by those traditional terms it appears to be at full potential. I went on to indicate certain manpower policies—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The reply given by the minister confirms my original interpretation that this kind of question and this kind of reply give rise to academic debates about theoretical situations based on statements made outside the House. That is not the kind of question and answer which we ought to accept procedurally during the question period.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I shall comply with your ruling and see if I can figure out some better way of getting at the minister's policies.

PRIOR NOTIFICATION TO DEPARTMENT OF SHUTTING DOWN OF NEWSPRINT MILL AT DALHOUSIE, N.B.— DISCUSSION WITH MANAGEMENT

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Acting Minister of Manpower and Immigration and I shall not tax his potential forecast. Was the minister's department informed of the intention of the International Paper Company to shut down its newsprint mill at Dalhousie, New Brunswick, for at least a week and possibly longer? Also, were there any discussions between the department and the management of the mill about the shutdown which will leave some 1,300 workers idle for some time?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Martin P. O'Connell (Acting Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I shall inquire and pass the information to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Lewis: May I ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Public Works who, if I am not mistaken, is also the representative for the riding in which Dalhousie is found.

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is information which ought not to be included in the question because a question can be asked of the minister only in his capacity as a member of the ministry.

Mr. Lewis: May I ask the Minister of Public Works whether his attention was drawn some weeks ago to the likelihood of difficulties developing as a result of the ice in the port at Dalhousie? Also, did he take any steps to find the necessary icebreakers to open the port so that lay-offs of longshoremen as well as the lay-offs now contemplated at the mill would be avoided?

• (1450)

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Public Works): Yes, Mr. Speaker. This matter was brought to my attention. I contacted the Minister of Transport at once and all available icebreakers are in the region—

SUGGESTED AMENDMENT OF FARM PRODUCTS MARKETING AGENCIES ACT TO CONTROL IMPORTS

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. Minister of Agriculture.

Since profitable production depends to a great extent on the volume of imports into Canada of certain farm products, and since Bill C-176 on marketing of farm products passed by Parliament in 1971 contains no provisions to influence or control imports of farm products into Canada, can the hon. minister tell us whether he intends to amend the legislation so that imported farm products may be channelled through provincial marketing boards in the same way as those produced locally?

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I stated a number of times that any commodity that is imported will, of course, be subjected to the same rules and regulations as domestic production and distribution. I should advise the hon. member, referring to his comment about export markets, that in 1971 we had an all-time high record of agricultural products exported from Canada.

DISPUTE WITH NABET—ROLE OF MINISTER—POSSIBLE GOVERNMENT GUIDELINES FOR SETTLEMENT—COST TO TAXPAYERS

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State. I wish to ask the minister whether, during the labour difficulties involving NABET and the CBC, he has had any communication or consultation with the president of the CBC or his top officials pertaining to the strike and, in particular, whether he had anything to do with arranging the meeting that is to take place tomorrow, and whether the CBC is working within federal guidelines for the settlement of that dispute?

[Translation]

Hon. As to the so-called summit meeting that will take place tomorrow, I should like to be able to take credit for it, but I must leave that credit to the management of the CBC, which initiated the meeting.

[English]

Mr. Nowlan: I am glad that credit is going where credit is due. Be that as it may, will the minister consult with the president of the CBC after the meeting and, hopefully, come into the House on Wednesday, or whenever he will be here next, and report on the status of this continuing stalemate and, in particular, give details of what the cost has been to date to the Canadian taxpayer as a result of this continuing labour dispute?

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, the other day I answered a question on this subject. PORTION OF EXCHANGE FUND HELD IN NON-TRANSFERABLE UNITED STATES SECURITIES

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. As part of the price in 1968 Canada had to agree that a portion of its holdings of United States dollars in the foreign exchange fund would be in non-transferable or non-negotiable U.S. securities. Now that the foreign exchange holdings have reached a figure of well over $5 billion, would the minister advise what portion of that fund is held in non-transferable U.S. securities and give his estimate as to the position in which this puts the fund?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have serious doubts about the question. It appears to me in any event that the question is rather technical. The hon. member is asking for very detailed information which ought normally to be sought by way of question on the order paper. Of course, the hon. member and the Minister of Finance know many things that the Speaker does not know. Maybe this is the kind of information that is at the fingertip of both the minister and the hon. member for Edmonton West. If so, I will withdraw my objection.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): All joking aside, Mr. Speaker, this is one of the difficulties that faces the Canadian nation with regard to the present piling up of United States dollars. I am asking the minister a question that should have been apparent to him right away, unless he is not doing his job.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think the hon. member's additional comment tends to indicate that I was correct in my estimation.

AIR TRANSPORT

HIJACKING OF PLANES—SUGGESTED PROHIBITION OF PAYMENT OF RANSOM BY AIRLINES

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. In order to discourage potential hijackers for gain, is the government giving consideration, among other things, to bringing in as part of the de-incentive, if I can use that expression, a provision whereby no airline will be permitted to pay ransom? Similar discussions are taking place today in the United States, and it would appear to be a very effective way of dealing with prospective hijackers.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, we certainly appreciate the right hon. member's expression of opinion. There is no immediate intention to introduce legislation along these lines. Of course, legislation dealing with the general subject is before the House at the present time.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Yorkton-Melville.

Mr. McCleave: A supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants in a moment. The hon. member for Yorkton-Melville has been waiting for a while to ask his question.

[Later:]

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): My question to the Minister of Justice is supplementary to the question asked by the right hon. member for Prince Albert. Will the government consider the introduction of an amendment when the latest omnibus bill dealing with changes to the Criminal Code is in committee that would bring about the change that the right hon. member for Prince Albert is suggesting?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, in mentioning the legislation my intention was to draw specifically to the attention of hon. members the fact that we could have a discussion about this matter at that time, either in the House or in committee, and give full consideration to it. I certainly welcome the apparent understanding of members opposite that it is important to stand strong against hijackers whenever threats for ransom are made.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I do not think a reply to a question would be the way to give a detailed account on that. A number of actions have been taken with some success along the lines of some of the recommendations of Dr. Barber.

Mr. Cliff Downey (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. It arises out of the fact that once again fertilizer manufacturers in Canada are shipping their product to the United States at prices which enable it to be delivered by truck back from the Dakotas and Montana to the prairie region for some $20 a ton cheaper than western farmers can purchase it at the plant. Is the minister aware of this situation and, if so, can he give us some assurance that in future any Canadian distributor willing to purchase off-season fertilizer production will be quoted the same price as are buyers from other countries?

I should like to ask the minister whether he proposes to announce any new policy to attack unemployment and, if so, when we may expect such an announcement?

Hon. Martin P. CONSUMER AFFAIRS

MARKETING OF IMPORTED AUTOMOBILES WITH YEAR OF MANUFACTURE UPDATED

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Can the minister tell us whether his department has concluded the inquiry which I understand it has been making into allegations by the Automobile Protective Association to the effect that certain imported cars are being marketed in Canada with their year of manufacture updated or misregistered? If the report has been completed, may I ask when it will be made public?

[Mr. Andras.]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): I appreciate the fact that the hon. member sent me notice of this question the other day. The report on our investigations has been completed. It will be released later this week. It recommends that federal and provincial authorities exercise firmer control over the updating practices used by some automobile manufacturers and distributors. Regulations under the federal Motor Vehicle Safety Act, in effect since January 1, 1971, require that the actual month and year of manufacture be marked on a compliance plate affixed to the automobile. One problem, of course, is that provincial governments have authority over the actual registration of automobiles.

My department will investigate any cases of alleged misleading advertising in the area of year-dating of imported automobiles. It will also notify the Minister of Transport of any suspected cases of tampering with the compliance plate that may come to our attention.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS ACT, 1972

AUTHORIZATION OF FISCAL PAYMENTS TO AND TAX COLLECTION AGREEMENTS WITH PROVINCES

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance) moved that Bill C-8 to authorize the making of certain fiscal payments to provinces, to authorize the entry into tax collection agreements with provinces, and to amend the Established Programs (Interim Arrangements) Act, be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question? Shall the motion carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, have you called orders of the day?

Mr. Speaker: Exactly. Is the House ready for the question?

[English]

Order, please. There seems to be some confusion. Is the hon. member rising to speak to the motion?

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member for Bellechasse rise on the order now before us, i.e. the motion for third reading of Bill C-8?

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I believe there has been a misunderstanding. I do not think the hon. member for Bellechasse understood that we had proceeded to orders of the day. It might be unfair to the hon. member not to allow him to make his speech. Perhaps with the indulgence of the House I might be allowed to recognize the hon. member.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: I believe the hon. member should be allowed to make his speech. I was under the impression that he had not realized that we have reached the orders of the day, on the third reading of Bill C-8.

With permission of the House, the hon. member will be allowed to make his speech, after which the motion will be put. Does the House agree?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, first I wish to apologize. I usually follow attentively the business of the House but at the call of the orders of the day, I was consulting my colleagues and just at that moment you called the order for third reading of the bill.

I do thank the Chair and all my colleagues for giving me this opportunity of making comments on third reading of Bill C-8.

This bill is to authorize equalization payments to provinces, out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund, for the period from April 1, 1972 to March 31, 1977 and also to amend the Established Programs (Interim Arrangements) Act.

Mr. Speaker, the Canadian confederation has existed since 1867. It was on that year that our constitution was drafted and it has been the subject of discussion ever since. All governments, whatever the parties in power, in Ottawa as well as in Quebec, have accused one another of violating The British North America Act and, in most cases, it had to do with sections dealing with sources of revenue. Yet the Confederation charter clearly established the powers, jurisdictions and responsibilities of the different levels of government.

Section 91 for instance defines the powers and responsibilities of the Canadian Parliament. I do not need to recall here section 91 as it has been often quoted in this House and all Canadians should know about the constitution of their own country.

Section 92 defines the exclusive powers of provincial legislatures and section 93 gives every province the power to legislate in matters of education.

I should like to deal briefly with this aspect of section 92 providing for certain responsibilities and certain powers in the case of provincial legislatures.

Since 1867, the central administration has always shown a tendency to increase centralization in various fields and this, whatever the party in power. This tendency is quite natural because the Canadian Parliament is responsible for the whole Canadian territory and since it sees the problems at the national level it is natural for the central government to interfere from time to time in provincial fields of jurisdiction.

This centralization increased in wartime and mainly during the 1939-45 war—the war of which like most members I have been more specially aware—while in the name of Christendom and civilization the central government took over some sources of revenue which belonged exclusively to the provinces and which were to be handed back at the end of the war.

However, the war is over even though no formal order has been signed to this effect; it seems that after 26 years the war should be officially over and we should enter a new phase.

Mr. Speaker, it has been repeated for a long time throughout the country that Quebec is not a province like the others. Quebec is different and even though the right hon. Louis St. Laurent, a former Prime Minister, once said that Quebec was no different from the other provinces, both the Canadian constitution and the Confederation charter recognized a marked difference to the effect that Quebec because of its special character and of its French culture is not like the other provinces. The Fathers of Confederation, at that time, clearly stated that difference by giving exclusive power to the provinces so that the people of Lower Canada could pursue their emancipation and live according to traditions and rights which had been recognized till then.

One will remember, Mr. Speaker, that at every federal-provincial conference, the former premier of the province of Quebec, the hon. Maurice Duplessis, suggested it was unconstitutional for the central government to levy taxes for purposes that do not come under its jurisdiction.

One will also remember that other premiers said the same thing afterwards regardless of their political affiliation, precisely to protect this aspect of the constitution and to have the rights of the province of Quebec respected.

One will also remember that Mr. Duplessis, by having the Quebec legislature pass legislation setting up provincial income tax took very positive action to assert in an unequivocal way the rights of the province of Quebec. That happened in the fifties. One will remember that at that time, a very serious conflict opposed the then premier of the province of Quebec and the right hon. Louis St. Laurent.

Hon. members will also remember the famous meeting between those two men in a Montreal hotel to discuss this problem and will recall that Mr. Duplessis won this constitutional battle when at that time the central government accepted to gradually give back to the province of Quebec its rights in the field of income tax.

Admittedly that prime minister of Quebec rendered great services not only to his province but also to the whole country because he awakened public opinion to the basic problem of provincial revenue sources.

The bill we are now discussing indeed provides for the distribution in all parts of this country, of amounts of money collected by the federal government to allow poorer provinces to benefit from certain revenues they require to meet their obligations and responsibilities.

Mr. Speaker, a provincial government wanted to take advantage of the right to borrow against its credit, as provided under section 92 which granted that right to the provinces. In 1935 and the following years, the Alberta premier carried on a famous fight to enable his province, on the basis of the right granted under section 92, to achieve its purposes. It will also be remembered that throughout that period, the Prime Minister of Canada, the right hon. Mackenzie King, had said referring to the struggle of the Alberta premier:

> If Social Credit has an opportunity of showing its mettle, it is in Alberta. William Aberhart controls the province and if the Liberal party is re-elected, Mr. Aberhart will be free to put it into practice.

What happened? Later on, to explain his idea more specifically, Mr. Mackenzie King stated, at the opening of the 1935 election campaign:

> The Liberal party believes that credit is a public matter which does not concern bankers alone, but that it is of direct concern to the common citizen. The Liberal party is in favour of setting up immediately a national bank well structured to control the issue of money in terms of public needs. Capital flow should be related to the domestic, social and industrial needs of the Canadian people.

In 1935, Mr. Mackenzie King stated that a social credit government having just been elected in Alberta, the Liberal party, in an effort to get back into power, would do its utmost to allow the constitution to be respected and the province to free itself and manage its own affairs.

I should like to quote today a sentence from his speech in order that we may determine whether Bill C-8 follows the guidelines set by the founding fathers in all areas.

Mr. Mackenzie King spoke as follows:

> Once a nation loses control over its currency and its credit, it does not matter much who in that nation makes laws. Once in control, money lenders will ruin any country. As long as control over currency and credit has not been restored to the government and acknowledged as being its most obvious and most sacred responsibility, any talk of democracy and Parliament supremacy is vain and futile. If my party is re-elected, we will assert our monetary policy in the greatest battle between high finance and the people ever witnessed by Canada.

Subsequently, Mr. Speaker, Mr. Mackenzie King was elected by the Canadian people and had an opportunity of allowing the government of Alberta to take advantage of section 92 of our constitution.

This prompted Mr. Douglas, who devised credit at the service of the community, to state in a speech that he made on November 30, 1937, and I quote:

> A war has broken out in the western provinces of Canada: Alberta is the first battlefield. Given the issues involved, this war, whatever its outcome—and I believe with all my heart that we shall be victorious—carries implications reaching far beyond those of the war of 1914-18 or any other major conflict in history.

> It has become easy for the least shrewd of observers to see that in Canada as elsewhere in Britain or the United States, so-called democratic governments are one-way streets. In other words, the bodies that we call governments have a right to exist, to be adorned with the emblems of power, up borne by wealth, supported or accepted by the press inasmuch as they put their power first to the service of international financial interests—

A mere glance at history reveals that the right hon. Mackenzie King, despite his promises, was devoted to international finance since he used legislation to prevent the province of Alberta from using its credit to its own benefit.

And two economists were invited to step in. They were Messrs. Powell and Byrne. We remember that these two men were prosecuted and jailed for having supported a thesis contrary to the one then recognized, in order to enable Alberta to enjoy its own credit. In fact, one of them said:

> This was real work of a democratic government. But the federal government, with financiers behind it, responded immediately. Less than one week after adoption of the three acts, there rose a storm which was unprecedented in the political history of the Dominion and the Prime Minister, the right hon. Mackenzie King, disavowed the three acts—

Mr. Speaker, I find it odd that hon. members are now accused of supporting theses or philosophies which do not make sense. The great leader, the god of the Liberals for years, did indeed support the theory that we are now advocating—that the credit of a nation should be at the service of this nation and minted by institutions belonging to this nation.

And if we refer to the answer given last week to a question appearing on the order paper, in which I asked information on several federal loans granted the province of Quebec over the last twelve months, we see that the loans, amounting to $65,900,000, carry an average interest rate of 7.4 per cent and are refundable over a period of 20 years. This money is available through taxes levied on the Canadian taxpayers.

I had a bank accountant make a calculation over the weekend in order to know the amount of interest the province of Quebec will have to pay, besides refunding the principal, and I got the figure of $97 million. In other words the province of Quebec will in turn have to tax Quebecers in order to get that amount of $97 million and pay interest to the federal government, although that government is empowered to provide the necessary credit to the nation through the Bank of Canada.

People find it funny when we speak about the Bank of Canada. They say that Creditistes think only in terms of the Bank of Canada and see in it the ultimate solution to all problems. Mr. Speaker, we are not providing a solution to all problems, but to those that must be solved by financial means. And hon. members will recall that in 1969, the Chamber of Commerce of the province of Quebec presented a brief to the federal government recommending the use of the Bank of Canada to help financing the public sector by means of loans to the provinces. In turn, the provinces could grant loans to the public bodies coming under their jurisdiction, that is the municipalities and school boards.

Mr. Speaker, people everywhere discuss financial questions, not only the Creditistes. However, I admit that we are throwing more light over the matter than the other parties and, besides, that we do not stop there. People will sometimes say: Only the poor people support the Social Credit party. In fact, our supporters are not solely the poor people, but poor people who understand most readily since somebody who is made to understand through his wallet is liable to keep his ears wide open.

It is a long time since people have been suffering from insufficient incomes. Despite every and all government assistance programs, commissions and committees are being formed to inquire into the economic situation in Canada and submit reports. The Economic Council of Canada as well as the special Senate committee on poverty have tabled their reports in which they state that there is inequity in terms of distribution of wealth. If such inequity exists, the problem cannot be solved by hiding it, but by coming out into the open.

This is why I refer to those loans Quebec has obtained. I do not object to Quebec obtaining assistance, on the contrary. But if, instead of borrowing money to lend afterwards and hasten the process of in debtedness, we would use the services of the Bank of Canada to finance the public sector, to cash in on our credit in order to enjoy the outcome of our labor and that of all Canadians, then we would have been of service to the people at large.

Mr. Speaker, Quebec will have reimbursed in 20 years, $97 million in interests, excluding the initial loan of $65,-900,000, making a total of $163 million. This is a deadend situation. I am mentioning this example just to emphasize that if Bill C-8 might improve the situation, it does not deal with the heart of the matter. I appreciate these are provisionnal arrangements concluded for a limited period of time. I know all that, but the fact remains, however, that while we will be living through these temporary arrangements for five years, we should strive in this House to devise the effective means that are conducive to the development of all regions of the country.

There are now three provinces which are not entitled to equalization payments. Those three provinces have to give money to the others to contribute to their development. I understand that we live in a confederative system and that the federal government has a responsibility to distribute as equitably as possible the nation's wealth. But there can be differences of opinion on the means to an end, and I think that if we established as soon as possible an income security system, each Canadian citizen would be assured of a minimum income, which would allow provinces to levy taxes from their citizens and to administer themselves under their own powers.

This is how I see things, and for this reason I wanted to make my views known so that everybody would realize that we are in good faith, just as much as any other member, when we discuss those problems. Only, we want the population to be as well-informed as possible.

Mr. Speaker, we could of course go into a lengthy discussion on education, but we have to recognize that until we change the constitution, the provinces have jurisdiction in this matter. So let us leave to them their sources of revenue in order that they may carry out their responsibilities. If the federal government needs more money to govern Canada efficiently, plain common sense dictates that the solution we are proposing, which is certainly not perfect but is just as valid as any other, be considered.

Mr. Speaker: By unanimous consent the hon. member has been allowed to make his contribution, although the question had already been put. In order to follow the proper order, the question will be put again. It is moved by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) that Bill C-8, to authorize the making of certain fiscal payments to provinces, to authorize the entry into tax collection agreements with provinces, and to amend the established programs (Interim Arrangements) Act, be read a third time.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

INCOME TAX ACT

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance) moved that Bill C-169, to amend the Income Tax Act, be read the second time and referred to Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. This motion, in its terms, is similar to or as a matter of fact identical with, one that was placed on the order paper in December of 1971 following the so-called mini-budget presented by the Minister of Finance on the night of October 14 during the adjournment proceedings of the House under Standing Order 26. There were two Notices of Motions of Ways and Means put forward on October 17. One only was proceeded with. The one presently before us appeared in Votes and Proceedings under date of February 22. Incidentally, and strangely enough, the entry under Votes and Proceedings does not indicate what type of motion or through which part the minister was trying to present the motion to the House. There was no indication whether it was being done under Standing Order 60 (1) or 41(2).

I notice, however, that in Hansard the appropriate wording has been put in the minister's mouth. The first point I wish to make is that the notice in Votes and Proceedings should be corrected. This was not done. Secondly, I would put to you that this is the first time we have had this sort of recurrence from one session of Parliament to another of a budgetary provision. I say "budgetary provision" in that it is a tax measure. There had been no prior consideration of this point because the new rules did not come in until prior to the 1970 session. So, we are in a position of de nova.

I want to ask Your Honour and all members, whether this method of proceeding was contemplated by the House when it adopted Standing Order 60. I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that this is an area which you have so felicitously described as one of those to which the committee on procedure should turn its attention. I would say that upon a straight-forward reading of Standing Order 60(1) the Minister of Finance may introduce any and every tax change he may wish to bring in, whether it is to the Income Tax Act, whether it is to the Excise Tax Act, whether it is to the Customs Tariff or otherwise, and whether it is an increase or decrease.

Under Standing Order 60 (3), it is not obligatory for the Minister of Finance at any time to bring in a budget presentation. It is only in Standing Order 60 (3) that we get this reference to the budgetary presentation. Subject to political risk, there is no other provision in this House or in the statutes or regulations which binds the minister to bring in a budget. Yet resort now is being made to a Standing Order, or to a paragraph in the Standing Orders, which allows the minister to bring in any and every tax change he so desires. That is not what was in the contemplation of the committee and it is not what was contemplated by the House, I put to you, Sir. I will agree there is a political danger in not bringing in a budget and not having, shall we say, a financial report to the House and to the nation. Actually, I believe there was a mix-up in the sequence of the paragraphs in Standing Order 60. There was obviously discussion at the time and I confess I was a member of that committee. This point did not occur to me at that time, however, nor to the others but it certainly does now and I want to raise it so that we might reconsider it.

It was always thought by the committee and the House that our previous procedure was cumbersome in that we had a budgetary presentation, the Minister of Finance then tabled notices of motion with regard to the budgetary changes. There was then a resolution in committee of the whole with regard to each of the said motions. Then, we had a bill; there was second reading and then in the committee of the whole stage the bill was considered clause by clause. Finally, there was third reading. This was adjudged to be very cumbersome. Since the motions that were tabled by the Minister of Finance at the time of the budgetary presentation were discussed during the budget debate, these represented in part the subject matter of the budget debate. They receive full discussion. They were the budgetary proposals.

If one reads the wording of paragraph 60 (3), the House is asked to give general approval to the budgetary proposals. It was then determined that it would not be necessary to go through the preliminaries of the recommendation which was the usual prior practice. It was foreseen that the minister would merely lay on the table a Notice of Ways and Means Motion in accordance with what he proposed in the budget. But now, as I have said, there is no requirement for a budget and we have come to this procedure. It is wrong in spirit. But we are not on a budgetary proposal today. This means that the Minister of Finance is able to raise his taxes up or down without any budgetary accounting. There is no need for a budget aside from, as I said, the political risk. I repeat that this is quite wrong.

The third point I want to make relates to the carry over from one session of parliament to another of a tax measure that has been proposed in the former session. Let us consider what might happen if one interprets this rule in this way. Suppose this tax measure were not proceeded with at this time and that there should intervene an election—and God forbid the same administration would be elected, particularly this one—the first thing that the new parliament could be faced with, without notice, could be the notice of ways and means motion that had been presented by the previous administration, without any accounting whatsoever. I say this is wrong, Mr. Speaker. This is not a hypothetical case, it is a true and very regrettable fact that the framing of Standing Order 60 in its present terms failed to take into account this possibility. While I will agree that one does not require the intermediate steps for all other motions that may be presented following the presentation of a budget, it certainly is not within the contemplation of this House, and never was, that tax measures should be dropped straight out of the blue on to the order paper and presented that way without the recommendation of His Excellency.

[Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West).]

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, as I understand the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), his point of order really does not go to the admissibility of the present bill but is an invitation to the House through you, Sir, and to the appropriate committee to re-examine Standing Order 60. I submit to Your Honour the hon. member has admitted that it is possible to bring in a bill affecting the ways and means of the House and of the country without going through the formality of a budget. It is clear that Standing Order 60 (1) applies to a notice of ways and means in general terms and that Standing Order 60 (3) refers to a special type of order affecting ways and means, namely an order designated for the purpose of enabling a minister of the Crown to make a budget presentation in other words, a general notice of motion is contemplated under ways and means and in addition a special type of such motion called a budgetary presentation. So, I think the hon. member has conceded that it is possible to bring in the tax bill affecting ways and means whether or not it is preceded by a budget, subject of course to what he has recognized as the necessary political considerations and the necessary accounting aspects via a minister of finance through the House to the people of the country.

This bill follows upon a statement made last October 14 by the then minister of finance during the course of an opposition day which set forth a declaration of a cut in corporate income tax of 7 per cent and a cut in personal income tax of 3 per cent, both of those cuts to apply from July 1, 1971 to December 31, 1972. The first part of those cuts was implemented by this parliament in the last session under Bill C-275 which received royal sanction on December 23. That bill authorized the cuts until the end of the 1971 calendar year. This bill extends those same cuts, already announced by the minister of finance last October 14, to the end of the year 1972. In other words, the minister of finance of the day announced the cuts. They had to be authorized by legislation, and that is the purpose of the bill before the House. The country has received adequate notice of these cuts, and I assume that the accounting procedures of the Department of National Revenue are being made in anticipation of it.

I will say no more except to say that a re-examination of Standing Order 60 may be something for the House to consider in due course, but in the terms of the present bill there is nothing in Standing Order 60 to impede its progress.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has already spoken on the point of order. We could go on for a long time if the hon. member for Edmonton West were to reply to the minister. I believe the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre wishes to contribute to the procedural argument.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I shall speak very briefly on the point. I think it is salutary for a member like the hon. member for Edmonton West to raise the point every once in a while—and I have heard him raise it before—that advantage should not be taken of the rules to the extent of bringing in budgetary changes very often without a budget presentation. I believe that is the point he was trying to make. He underlined the point, of course, that it would be politically rather stupid for a government to go any length of time without a budget presentation. I must, however, say to my good friend who sits close to me that I do not share the same anxiety that he has expressed about Standing Order 60.

I ask you, Sir, and I ask him to look at this. Standing Order 60 is made up of 11 different paragraphs. I ask you also to note that Standing Order 61, which has only one paragraph, also relates to the question of ways and means. I admit that I am playing a little numbers game here, but let me do it. This means that there are 12 items or paragraphs in the rule book regarding ways and means, 11 paragraphs of Standing Order 60 plus the one paragraph that makes up Standing Order 61. Of those 12 paragraphs, one, namely Standing Order 60 (2), is general in nature in that it provides for the designation of an order of the day for considering a ways and means motion. The other 11 fall this way: two of them, Standing Order 60 (1) and Standing Order 60 (11) under which it is possible for a minister of finance to make a tax change without a budget presentation, and the other nine; in other words, the other eight paragraphs as well as Standing Order 61, relate to the machinery for a budget presentation.

So I suggest to you, Sir, that if we drew 12 paragraphs having to do with ways and means and we applied nine of them to the process that involves a budget presentation—the speech and the six day debate—we made it pretty clear that that is what we expect to be the normal practice. I suggest that if any government went any length of time trying to rely on Standing Order 60 (1) and (11) to avoid a budget speech, the government would lose all the time it gained by the time the point of order was debated.

As I already said, I think that this is a useful viewpoint to be raised. Governments have to be reminded of what they ought to do. But I do not think that Standing Order 60 and Standing Order 61 are all that deficient. They make it possible for a change such as is proposed today to be undertaken without a six day budget debate, but the rules make it pretty clear that it is the intention of parliament that at least once a year there will be a full dress six-day debate on a budget presentation.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not think the hon. members would want me to go into detailed references on the interesting point of order raised by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert). The point he is making, I think, has been explained, and is supported to some extent by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles).

While the hon. member for Edmonton West was speaking, there was a thought going through my mind that perhaps he was not entirely right when he suggested that under the old rules there was a procedural requirement that there be a budget presentation. According to the advice or information that I have, there has never been such a requirement in the rules. There has been a practice, under the old rules, that there be a budget presentation, but there was nothing in the Standing Orders, as they existed then, requiring that a budget presentation be made.

With respect to the hon. member's suggestion that it is a new procedure to have a ways and means bill which is based on a presentation of a budget in a previous session, it has been brought to my attention that perhaps this has been done before, more particularly in the year 1962, where the index has a reference to a budget resolution passed in a previous session. This, in itself, is an indication that even in the year 1962 this procedure was followed. It has also been brought to my attention that there was a ruling by then Mr. Speaker Lambert, which is reported at page 133 of the Journals for 1962, regarding whether or not ways and means legislation should be preceded by a budget presentation. I am sure the hon. member remembers the circumstances very well.

The only motion under the old rules was one to the effect that Mr. Speaker do leave the Chair. On those occasions, no one knew whether or not there would be a budget presentation. That was the point which the hon. member for Edmonton West, in his then capacity as Speaker of the House, made.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): It is a very good precedent.

Mr. Speaker: He was perfectly right, and I agree with him.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): But there is a great distinction.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): There is a very great distinction.

Mr. Speaker: I do not want to get involved in debate with the hon. member. I agree with the ruling which he made at that time, and I say that although the rules have been changed since then the principle continues the same, and there is still no procedural requirement for a budget presentation. There was no procedural requirement then for a bill implementing the ways and means resolution to be based on a budget presentation.

I appreciate the point made by the hon. member for Edmonton West. It is the kind of difficulty which perhaps results from the drafting of the new rules as they are before us now. The hon. member for Edmonton West, and his distinguished colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, are leading members of the committee on procedure, and they do from time to time consider some of these difficulties. This is one of the difficulties which they might like to look into some day.

Having said this, I would think that I would have to rule that the bill is now before us correctly from a procedural standpoint.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I never queried that.

Hon. P. M. Mahoney (Minister of State): Mr. Speaker, this second reading speech has perhaps become somewhat redundant in view of the point of order. However, I think it would be well to summarize the reasons we are dealing with Bill C-169 today.

This bill completes the implementation of the following measures which were announced by the former minister of finance on October 14, 1971: a 7 per cent reduction in corporation income tax for the period from July 1, 1971, to December 31, 1972 and a 3 per cent reduction in individual income tax for the same period.

The reductions in tax for the last half of 1971 were implemented during the last session by Bill C-275, which received Royal Assent on December 23, 1971. The present bill implements the reductions for 1972. The reason it was necessary to split the particular budgetary presentation was that at that time we were going through a major tax reform bill, and Bill C-275, if I can use less than precise language, amended the old Income Tax Act that was in effect until December 31 last year.

The major tax reform bill that was before the House last year, Bill C-259, effected numerous changes in the income tax law, including a major re-organization of the act and a major renumbering of sections, so it was necessary that that bill be passed or dealt with by parliament before a further amending bill, covering these tax reductions for the current calendar year, was introduced. Accordingly, what would normally have been presented in one bill was necessarily split into two.

The 7 per cent corporate tax reduction has been designed to give Canadian corporations greater flexibility in responding to the challenges that have confronted them in recent months, and to encourage them to contribute to a sustained growth in job opportunities. It will help their competitive positions in both domestic and international markets.

The 3 per cent individual tax reduction will also provide an important stimulus to the private sector by sustaining and encouraging increased demand for goods and services.

These measures have already contributed in an important way, along with other expansionary measures inaugurated by the government during the past two years, to the present accelerating improvement in the performance of our economy.

As stated by the Minister of Finance on October 14, 1971, it is estimated that the corporate tax cut will reduce federal revenues by $160 million for the fiscal year 1971-72 and $175 million for the fiscal year 1972-73. The cut in personal taxes is expected to reduce federal revenues by $125 million in the fiscal year 1971-72, and by $225 million in the fiscal year 1972-73.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I trust this will not be deemed a comparison of oranges and apples. As I said earlier, we are dealing with a bill arising out of a motion originally presented by the then minister of finance on October 14, 1971.

As the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) indicated during the course of the debate on that occasion, after listening to the great applause that emanated from the government benches in response to the speech by the minister of finance, greeting it as though he were announcing something entirely new and fine, as though he were the Savior coming to the rescue of Canada, one was reminded of the very loud applause that had accompanied his disclosures in his June budget. His October 14 measures in effect were a frank and, I would say, humbling admission that he was totally wrong in June.

So, we had this rather interesting spectacle of a claque applauding any statement by the minister, even one saying in effect, "In June I was an ass; now, I am going to try to take myself out of the mess into which I got the country at that time." As a matter of fact, there could have been further proposals by the new Minister of Finance, setting aside the proposals put forward by his predecessor in October, in many ways contradicting the October proposals, and we could have had the same claque applauding from the government side. I would say that argument endorses my contention that the House rule, as it now stands, is wrong in philosophy.

An hon. Member: Right!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Without reference to it in the presentation, the Minister of Finance tables a notice regarding a tax increase or tax cut; he does not proceed with it and he gets the chop for too severe postures. This has happened before, it can happen again and likely it did in this case. The pressure was relieved by putting a new man at the helm. I can see the strategy of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and time tends to block memories.

If one were to ask members of this House, and certainly members of the press, what the circumstances were behind this particular change in the Income Tax Act, most of them would have no answer. They would have to go scurrying back to the record, but they would never get the atmosphere in the House. The presentation of this motion today and of the bill is totally anti-climatic. It is there; what are we going to do about it? That is precisely what we intend to say; what is there to get so excited about? A tax cut of 3 per cent is being applied to personal income in the 1972 tax year. That is what is going to happen now. For those people with low income who pay no tax, this is no cut at all, but it certainly has some effect on those people at the middle income level.

What is the purpose of it? Is it to regenerate expenditures from the people at the middle income level? I have not noticed that there is such a glut of commodities. There has been an underutilization of certain types of service, and certain commodities, but this tax cut will not provide that meaningful shot in the arm for Canadian industry.

Let us look at the taxpayer and his personal income. Certainly, he buys Canadian services and to the extent that he increases his purchase of imports, we bring in more imports. How much does that stimulate the Canadian economy? How does that necessarily cure the economic recession in the United States from which we get two-thirds of our imports? How does that help them? Our imports represent a small portion of their total economy, but they buy two-thirds of our exports; they gain. Our exports do not represent two-thirds of their requirements. They loom large for us, but, mean very little to them.

The total effect of this personal income tax cut is a very small shot in the arm but everybody will welcome it. The provinces are not going to be affected by it because the then minister of finance indicated that the federal treasury would absorb it entirely. I would refer hon. members to page 8690 of last year's Hansard.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, this proposal of a cut of 3 per cent of the tax payable again points up the difficulties of having an income tax system set up on the basis of an across the board personal exemption. I think the Minister of Finance would have preferred to give tax relief to lower income groups since they represent the greater number of taxpayers in Canada. To the old age pensioner, to the person who makes insufficient money to pay income tax, and there are many, this tax cut is meaningless. Unfortunately, however, the old age pensioner and the low wage earner are caught by inflation in the same way that the person earning $25,000, $35,000 or $15,000 a year is caught. The increase in the price of food, the increase in the level of rents, of laundry, of this and that applies just as much to the old age pensioner and the low income earner to the extent that they make those purchases. Since they have to concentrate on food, shelter and clothing, they have all been hit hard by inflation.

I think it is callous and cold-hearted to say that our inflation, at 5 per cent or perhaps not 5 per cent, was lower than in any other country in the western world. What does that mean as far as the Canadian taxpayer is concerned? What comfort is it to him that, say, Holland, has 8 per cent inflation or that it went to 10 per cent in Great Britain? The point is that the person on a low fixed income, such as many retired people, is not affected by that change in that foreign country. It is what happens right here in Canada that affects him. That 5 per cent sounds very good but with the cost of living index now in the mid-130's it means 6½ points. In other words, the 1961 dollar has depreciated by some 37½ points. The percentage depends upon whether you are at the upper or lower end of the scale; the higher the cost of living index goes the lower is the percentage and that looks good.

Information Canada can do jobs for Statistics Canada. I wish Statistics Canada would "level" with the people. Instead of using percentage points to indicate the cost of living, it refers to just so many points. One time you see an apple being juggled and the next time you see an orange being juggled by whoever wants to play with them when dealing with percentages as they relate to the cost of living. It would have been far preferable to have had a tax credit system. The whole system could have been much more flexible and tax cuts could have been made where they would have been more meaningful in giving tax relief.

Let me turn to the corporate tax credit. Frankly, anyone who is incorporated, whether he is a small plasterer, paperhanger, painter, truckdriver or cement finisher, is involved in corporate income tax. It is not the big companies exclusively that are affected, but anyone with the letters "Ltd." after the name of his business. There will be a 7 per cent cut on the 1972 income tax payable. I do not think that is sufficient to be meaningful.

I do not think an 18 month tax cut for incorporated businesses is a sufficient stimulus for them to enter into long-range programs. For many people, it effectively provides walking-around money. It is a small measure, not sufficient to provide the necessary initiative or incentive to enter into an expansionary program. Why should it be? The government talks about how many millions of dollars it is going to cost, but it will only last 18 months. In many instances, programs must be of a longer term.

After January 1, 1973, corporations will again be in business at the old tax levels. I think it is absolutely fool-hardy to ask any business to enter into a program of activity. Should they purchase additional inventory, instal new machinery which will have to be paid for over a longer period of time or expand their premises, something which will also have to be paid for over a longer period of time? Should they hire new workers when they will have to fire them in 1973? As I said, on January 1, 1973 we will be back at the pre-cut tax levels. What happens? Perhaps, we will be exhorted to get down on our knees and pray for some miracle to happen, always hoping that we will get over the election. You can bet your bottom dollar we will have an election before January 1, 1973. This is a clear indicator that we will have an election before January 1, 1973. After January 1, we go back to the upper levels of tax.

As I said before, it is anticlimatic to discuss these proposals. This tax cut by the government is not sufficient to promote a really meaningful stimulus. After all, if one looks at the experience in Great Britain in the past two years, he would see they have injected two modest taxcuts into the economy, but they have not had the necessary effect. This week we read that the Chancellor of the Exchequer is likely to introduce some very extensive tax cuts. It may be a question of judgment, but the British Government is the best judge. I am not going to judge and I am not going to put the question. Perhaps it would have been better if they had brought in massive tax cuts at the beginning to get the economy going. At the moment, the treasury has been bled and nothing of consequence has been done. One has to go back on these matters. The effort has to be redoubled every time, even though nothing has been gained. I do not think that is the way one has to work to expand an economy.

As far as we in the official opposition are concerned, we are not going to oppose these measures. They are fine as far as they go. I think they were a humiliating admission, in the light of all those things that had been done in the June budget and all those restrictions that had been proposed before that. Just a few months previous, the government had been imposing a surtax. In fact, this proposal represents an absolute condemnation of earlier acting out of the mouth of the ministry. A year before, the surtax had been added because it was needed. In June, it was dropped. The minister had this to say:

This change, combined with the elimination of the 3 per cent surtax, brings the effective reduction of corporation taxes from last July 1 to 10 per cent.

Isn't that setting up a beautiful Aunt Sally for nothing? In December, 1970, it was absolutely paramount to come in with a last minute budget to continue the dying 3 per cent surtax. Then, with a great fanfare, the surtax was removed in July, 1971. Why had it been put on in the first place? The economy was suffering just as much in December, 1970 when it was imposed. It was done so that the government could say "Well, we have now taken off a further 3 per cent; what good boys we are. We have taken 6 per cent off the tax payable on personal income tax since July 1." When you look at the June budget statement of the former Minister of Finance, it is replete with all the good things the government has done and how the economy is expanding. No wonder they had to make a change in the portfolio of the Minister of Finance. The former minister had lost any and all credibility as a result of the statements he made in October. Now, the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) has to take charge of implementing this tax cut.

I am very interested in knowing when we are going to get the next budget presentation. Will it be before the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) calls upon His Excellency? Are we going to get a budget presentation so that we will know that the budgetary deficit, as far as I can see at the moment, will be about $1,200 million this year? Are we going to get an explanation of that? We must remember that it is the Canadian taxpayer who has to pay every blessed cent of those expenditures, which this year are up to $18 billion. They wonder why the Canadian economy is suffering and creaking. In many instances it is not worth the candle to go off and do anything, because the tax will be so high. You will lose whatever you have made to somebody else, to somebody standing with a handout. The philosophy of the government has been to encourage the Canadian people to line up to receive handouts.

One hears people say the government should do this, the government should do that, the government should pay this, the government should pay that. How is this money raised except through taxation, taxation today and taxation tomorrow? All the more unjust is the taxation of those who have put money aside and saved it in various ways, for example, by joining pension plans. One has only to look at the Canada Pension Plan in the light of the increase in the cost of living to judge whether that plan is as good today, as it was when it was instituted. It is true that small increases to reflect the cost of living are embodied in escalator clauses. Benefits have increased. But the contributions payable have increased still more.

The same thing has happened with unemployment insurance. Benefits are increased. But the contributions go up, too. What happens when employers try to hire people? Why should people work? The difference between wages paid on so many jobs and the amount they can get from other sources is marginal.

[Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West).]

Mr. Béchard: Surely, the hon. member is not serious when he says that.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The hon. member says this is not serious. Let him come to my home city of Edmonton and I will show him.

Mr. Béchard: I was suggesting the hon. member was not serious in saying such a thing.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Serious? Ask any entrepreneur, ask anyone in the trucking business or in warehousing. They will tell you: try to get men nowadays. In so many instances, the Department of Manpower tells people to go and collect unemployment insurance benefits. I have personally heard men say: Why should we put ourselves in jeopardy by placing ourselves in jobs which will pay $150 and have to work—

Mr. Béchard: Is that the advice you give them?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): That is the wrong kind of advice.

Mr. Béchard: That is why I say the hon. member is not serious.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I say this is the sort of mentality which the government is building up all the way through. This is the reason the Canadian economy is not doing well. People have forgotten how to work. Unless we do something to increase our productivity rate and reduce cost of production per unit, we shall find our overseas markets decreasing sharply as the days go by.

The parliamentary secretary knows the situation in the pulp and paper industry. As a result of the increase in the cost of production which, for a multiplicity of reasons, has taken place, many of our markets have been lost. It has meant that along with the effect of the floating dollar, we are simply outbid. It looks good to pile our goods in warehouses and congratulate ourselves on our ability to manufacture all these things. But it is the price that matters. Every year, sales decline. How many pulp or paper mills have been forced to close down or continue on a greatly reduced scale?

Look at the state of our heavy chemical industry, another example. Unless we can sell these commodities and services we are going through an exercise in frustration; we are raking leaves, and there is no government program, no form of baling out, which will do the country any real good until we make up our minds to counter inflation by reducing the unit cost of production, and become more competitive. Unless we do this, we are simply fooling ourselves.

I want to see tax changes which will provide a meaningful incentive to bring about an increase in production at lower cost in order that we may become more competitive. As Canadian productivity increases, we shall need to place less reliance on imports. Attention is called to great increases in Canadian exports at the present time. But consider the statistics relating to imports. Imports are increasing at a faster rate. Incidentally, I have not heard so much crowing about last year's performance in the export market. It is a tough world we live in. All too often we see some little glimmer of light, a little wee candle somewhere on the horizon, and somebody suddenly blows it up into a great, powerful searchlight totally out of proportion to what is should be.

I hope hon. members will make their contributions to the debate today or during the committee stage. This bill, now embodying in legislative form a proposal which was discussed at great length back in October, at which time its deficiencies were well established, has now been before us for a long time and it would be anti-climactic to keep on arguing about it. Some people will find it of benefit. People who are non-taxable will not. I doubt very much whether the effect of the tax cuts will be of very great value to industry and the services. In total, the cuts are there, of course, but they become dispersed and, unfortunately, they cease on January 1, 1973.

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, the tax bill which is before us this afternoon is essential to the effectiveness of the measure we passed just before Christmas in relation to the same fiscal year. With the consistency for which the government is well noted, evidence is given of the same approach to economic planning both from the point of view of financial justice and from the point of view of monetary tax incentives intended to provide employment.

I wish to avoid further rhetoric and to deal, in terms of substance, with the assertions I have made in my comments up to this point. I shall be relatively brief, because I intend to speak again during the committee stage, at which time I shall be proposing an amendment.

The tax cut on personal income, will have the effect of reducing tax revenue to the government by about $225 million. It is hard to imagine a more unjust way of distributing economic benefits to the committee than an across the board tax reduction of 3 per cent in the personal income tax field. I suppose that if a more unjust way could have been found the present government would have discovered it, so I think it is reasonable to conclude that this is the worst possible method the government could come up with.

For example, consider the effects of this tax cut on a married man with two children in the $4,000 income category; in other words, someone living at the poverty level in Canada. It means that he will save $2.19. A man earning $5,000 a year, again with two dependent children, will be able to save a grand total of $9.06. Spread over the course of a year this means that he will probably save enough to buy an ice cream cone every week. If a person were in the high income category of $6,000 a year, with the same number of dependants he would save a grand total of $16.59. This is what we get from a magnanimous government, a government led by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) who a couple of weeks ago in Victoriaville, Quebec, stated that we were moving to a new age of leisure and should not be too concerned about unemployment; that since a whole new ethic was emerging we should be more concerned to establish other kinds of creative outlets for our people.

The fact is, of course, that some 20 per cent of the population are living at or below the poverty line in Canada; that for each job available in Canada there are roughly 17 people to pursue it. This kind of nonsense coming from the Prime Minister is something that is, to anyone with the remotest degree of sensitivity, at least displeasurable, if I may understate it somewhat. If our quaint Prime Minister wanted to do something to help people at that income level, those living at or below the poverty line, it seems to me that the tax cut measure before the House should have been changed substantially so as to provide, on the ground of equity, some real benefit for those in the low income category, forgetting entirely the provision of any tax benefit for upper income Canadians. The government should make sure that all the gains are made at the bottom end of the income ladder.

Keeping in mind that as a result of this bill the $4,000 income earner with two dependants will save $2.19, a man earning $20,000 will save $164.58. A man earning $50,000 a year, the man who most likely will be a contributor to and supporter of the Liberal party of Canada, will save $620.75.

Mr. Whelan: You mean, people like Pierre Berton? He supports your group and gets $100,000 a year for doing nothing.

Mr. Broadbent: The hon. member for Windsor obviously has a profound contribution to make. Would he like to say a few words?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member would have to be in his own seat. The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby has the floor.

Mr. Broadbent: If I may continue, Mr. Speaker, what about the poor individual who is ekeing out an existence on $100,000 a year, a man again very dear to the heart of the Liberal government? He will save under this tax proposal $1,515.39. He is the sort of man who attends $100 a plate dinners given by the Liberal party. I am not being frivolous, but the fact is that under these tax proposals a man living at the poverty level will save $2.19 whereas a man who is virtually in the millionaire category will save $1,515.39.

It requires no economic genius to do the kind of statistical breakdown that I have done here. This is the kind of maldistribution of tax benefit that you invariably get when you have an across the board tax reduction, in this case of 3 per cent. Inevitably with a fixed deduction across the board the rich or upper income groups will be more advantageously affected than the poor, and this is just the kind of thing that we should not have at this time in Canada. So, I suggest that on the basis of equity this proposal is totally unacceptable. On the other hand, some of our friends opposite like to argue that you cannot simply consider equity or fairness in making a tax proposal; you also have to consider the effect on the economy in terms of the generation of employment, and so on. That is a very sensible point. However, when you consider the impact of this proposal on the economy, it seems to me that the same negative conclusion is also inevitable.

The kind of injection of funds into the economy that is needed at this time, and which in fact has been needed for a long time, is much more effectively brought into being by reducing income tax at the average and below average income levels. I say that for the following, rather obvious, reasons, though perhaps not. Upper income earners, the middle class Canadians earning $15,000 or $20,000 and up, rather than spending this kind of tax deduction and injecting the money into the economy, therefore increasing demand and the likelihood of investment funds creating new job opportunities, are inclined simply to save it. They salt it away. By making sure that any tax benefit goes to the average or below average income earner, you give much more economic stimulus to the economy. This, in turn, leads to demand for more goods and services which results in increasing pressure to create more jobs. Therefore, on that ground as well I think this measure is subject to severe criticism. We should not make across-the-board tax reductions if the intention is to generate employment. The kind of tax reduction we need is selective in nature and should favour the average or below average income earner.

I should now like to say a few words about the corporate tax reduction. If the personal income tax reduction is open to serious criticism, then it is hard to know what kind of language to use with regard to the across the board 7 per cent tax reduction in the corporate sector. In my view it is sheer economic lunacy to offer this kind of across-the-board tax reduction to the corporate sector. A similar measure was brought in before Christmas, in the previous fiscal year. The point I made then and repeat now, since we are dealing with a similar kind of measure for the coming fiscal year, is that a 7 per cent tax reduction for the corporate sector across-the-board will simply give many, many corporations windfall profits, and that is all. Such reduction will not bring about greater investment. It will not mean that a higher percentage of corporate funds will be available for the creation of new jobs. There is no necessary connection between the tax reduction and the creation of new jobs.

If the government had really wanted the tax reduction for the corporate sector to lead to the creation of more jobs in the economy, it should have attached the creation of such jobs as a rider, if you will to such reduction. For instance, the government could have said to the corporations of Canada, "If you can show at the end of the current fiscal year that you have expanded your operation and employed more Canadians, you will be entitled to a 7 per cent tax reduction." Of course, there would need to be a certain minimum percentage increase in employment. If the government had said that, it would have made good economic sense. It would have been wise to say that to corporations. As I say, the government should have said, "If you expand your operation and employ more people, we will offer you a 7 per cent tax reduction in the current fiscal year." However, the government did not do that. It simply brought down an across-the-board 7 per cent tax reduction, which will simply enable many companies to increase their profits or profit margins. The increase will not be exactly 7 per cent; however, it will be substantial. That is unjust. Reducing taxes across-the-board for the corporate sector will not necessarily create more jobs.

Similarly, if the government had wanted to use a tax reduction as a means for creating more jobs, that reduction ought to have been applied to certain sectors of the economy. The government ought to have asked itself, "Which sector of the economy is most likely to employ more people?" It seems to me that of the three categories, namely, the service industry, manufacturing industry and resource industry, one category ought to have been excluded as a job producing category, that being the resource sector of the economy.

Mr. Saltsman: The resource sector has already been given substantial tax concessions.

Mr. Broadbent: As the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman) says, tax concessions given to the resource sector are totally disproportionate to the service that sector renders to the Canadian economy, as pointed out by the hon. member for Duvernay (Mr. Kierans) who is a specialist in this field and who in recent weeks and months has voiced criticisms to this effect. The effective rate of tax that the resource sector of the Canadian economy pays is equal to about 50 per cent of the rate that the manufacturing sector pays. It is important to remember that, in terms of jobs, the resource sector employs very few people per dollar invested, as compared with the manufacturing and service sectors.

May I cite an example that I used on another occasion in the House last week? You may spend $1 million or many millions of dollars putting an oil well or oil pump on the land. All it will do is go "gurgle, gurgle, gurgle" and out will come the oil, and in will go the money to the pockets of investors. Very few jobs, indeed, will accrue from that kind of investment.

An hon. Member: Most of the money will go to foreigners.

Mr. Broadbent: That goes without saying. Since the petroleum industry is about 98 per cent foreign owned, the money will leave the country. That is not the point here. I contend that instead of reducing taxes for the service sector, the manufacturing sector and the resource sector indiscriminately, we should have reduced taxes only for the manufacturing and service sectors. We ought to have said to those sectors of the economy, "You are being over-taxed vis-à-vis the resource industry and you employ more people per dollar invested than the resource sector; therefore, we will load the financial incentive, if you like, in your direction. We will provide you with financial benefits in the hope that more jobs will be created." Again, the government did not make this kind of economically sensible discriminatory decision. Instead, it offered an across-the-board tax reduction to the entire corporate sector.

I have said almost everything I wanted to say on those two points. I think the proposals for taxing personal incomes need significant revision, and I will be moving an amendment during the committee stage in this area in order to provide both some equity and some stimulus for the economy. Secondly, I think we need a change in the structure of corporate taxation in order to make those taxes directly relevant to industries which provide more jobs, and only to those kinds of industries. We will probably be moving an amendment in that area, as well.

While talking about taxes, I cannot sit down without taking a parting shot at the government. I am talking about its general tax policy, and particularly as that affects average people in contrast to the way it affects upper-income people. In recent weeks, many men and women in my constituency have come to me and pointed out that when they collect unemployment insurance and SUB benefits—and I am glad to see the hon. member for Windsor sitting opposite me; he knows this very well and I will welcome his comments on the matter later—they are now not so well off as before. For the first time in Canada's history UIC benefits are being taxed. Therefore, these people are less well off under the new system than they were under the system which preceded it. In this area, instead of there being reform, there is regression. I hasten to add that our party does not oppose, in principle, the notion of taxing income, whatever the source. What we oppose, and this is the important part, is the taxing at this time of unemployment insurance benefits by a government which taxes only one-half of capital gains.

This government has brought in a capital gains tax. Instead of taxing the full amount of the gain, it taxes only half the gain. That is the kind of typical Liberal injustice to which we object. We would have fully supported the dollar is a dollar tax reform proposal that the Carter royal commission proposed. The commission said that we should tax capital gains just as we tax any other money income. The government has not done that. It has said to the man who makes $50,000 or $10,000, or however much it is, on the stock market in Toronto or Montreal, "You will have to pay a tax on only half your gain; the other half is tax free." At the same time it has said to the unemployed in Canada who are collecting unemployment insurance, "You will have to pay income tax at full rates on that unemployment insurance benefit." That is the kind of hypocrisy which I find totally unacceptable. One day it may be totally unacceptable even to the Liberal party of Canada, although I suspect Utopia will be here before that day arrives. With those remarks I will finish, and yield the floor to a member of the Créditiste party.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment briefly at this stage on Bill C-169 which would reduce a little the income tax of individuals and corporations.

Like the hon. members who had the floor previously, Mr. Speaker, I feel this bill is a half-hearted attempt to reduce taxes. I would have hoped for a much more elaborate statement from the minister on that matter. He has indicated that the decrease of the income tax of corporations by 7 per cent was intended to give them more flexibility than at present, and that the decrease of the income tax of individuals by 3 per cent for 1972 would increase their purchasing power.

If we think a little of the effect of the tax reductions provided by Bill C-169, I feel that it will not be as favourable to the individual as the government seems to think.

First, individuals who pay $1,000 in taxes each year are rather scarce and we do not find many among lumberjacks, nearly never among miners, construction workers, service and store employees. The very few who pay $1,000 in taxes will receive a $30 annual reduction under the act.

Those, more numerous perhaps, who pay $500 in taxes will receive a reduction of $15 but those who pay about $100 will only have a $3 reduction, which is, after all, not overly generous.

As for those who don't have to pay any income tax, they will obviously not get anything out of this piece of legislation. That goes for those who live on retirement pensions, old age security or welfare allowances; this bill does not mean a thing to them.

For those who are more favoured, those whose revenues enable them to pay income tax, they at least have some reduction, but the vast majority of taxpayers stand to gain very little indeed.

The government is far more generous, however, toward corporations, large or small. Generally, they pay more taxes but this 7 per cent reduction represents rather significant sums.

On the other hand, we know that corporations can recoup the taxes they must pay by including them in their production or services costs.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, once more, we realize that the government is far more respectful of large corporations than of individuals. However, I feel that the number of the latter is much larger than that of the corporations.

I believe it would have been smarter on the part of the government to grant a much larger reduction to individuals for the year 1972. Its effect would have been felt much more, since a larger purchasing power would have been available to individuals and workers, and the corporations would have equally benefited since the individuals would have had much more money to spend to meet their needs.

Considering those facts, Mr. Speaker, of course we cannot say that we are formally opposing this bill since its effects will at any rate be better than nothing, but the fact remains that the government cannot be too proud of having introduced this legislation because, in my view, and I said so in my opening remarks, it is much too timid for the importance they want to attach to it and its effect among our people, especially among the workers in general, will be very small.

Mr. Speaker, the bill must be referred to the House committee of the whole, and I hope that the minister will be much more eloquent in committee than he has been in his statement on the motion for second reading. It may be that we will be given—at least, I hope so—information much more meaningful than what we listened to this afternoon, and then, we shall be in a better position to evaluate the impact of such a bill.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Sales Tax on Equipment

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Honey in the chair.

The Chairman: Order. It being five o'clock I now resume the chair.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie)—External Affairs—Request for representations on behalf of oppressed Ukrainians—Effectiveness of Canadian action; the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles)—Canadian National Railways—Retired employees' pensions—Request for annual escalation and change in basis of calculation—Representations by minister; the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin)—Unemployment Insurance—Payment of benefits delayed—Proposed steps—Advisability of decentralizing Montreal services.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

FINANCE

PROPOSED REMITTANCE TO MUNICIPALITIES OF SALES TAX PAID ON EQUIPMENT

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of remitting to municipalities, pursuant to section 22 of the Financial Administration Act, all consumption or sales taxes paid or payable by or to be paid or payable by such municipalities, in the five years immediately preceding January 1, 1972 and in subsequent years commencing with that date, in respect of municipal equipment, otherwise exempt from such tax, but so taxed or liable to be so taxed by reason that such equipment has been or may be applied to any use as described in paragraph (c) of subsection (4) of section 27 of the Excise Tax Act.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to rise on this occasion to speak to my private member's notice of motion appearing on the order paper as motion No. 2 dated February 23, 1972. It might be well to recall, for the sake of the record, and for those in whose interest this motion has been sponsored by myself, that this motion appeared in my name on the order paper last session as item No. 40. However, because of the large number of private members public bills and members motions, my motion No. 40 did not quite reach the top of the list before the session finished.

The motion just read by Mr. Speaker refers to a very controversial situation which has existed in the province of Saskatchewan for several years with respect to the federal Department of National Revenue's application of the sales tax to certain municipal machinery, and from my information it has been a burning question in both the provinces of Alberta and Manitoba. There seems to be a definite opinion on the part of municipal officials that the Department of National Revenue has been coming down far too hard lately upon municipalities when municipal equipment has been used to do custom work for ratepayers or do minor street repairs for a village within the outer boundaries or minor jobs for school units, which for the most part are done gratis.

Other examples can be given, such as a municipal snowplough being called in to clear the small runways that have to be provided by villages and towns in outlying areas with small hospitals so that the Saskatchewan air ambulance can land to pick up emergency cases in order to fly them into some large centre such as Regina or Saskatoon. At other times in the dead of winter a piece of municipal equipment may be called to open up a section of roadway upon which a school bus may be stalled with a busload of schoolchildren. In any event, it seems that the Department of National Revenue is far too keen on applying the federal sales tax to municipal equipment that may have been used for purposes that I have cited, even to the point that it has in some cases been called utter discrimination.

The department has at times sent investigators to municipalities in various parts of the province for the purpose of checking municipal records to discover the extent of such uses. Where these investigators decide that there has been a diversion of the use of equipment, they treat the equipment as having been sold on the date of such diversion and levy the federal sales tax on the value of the equipment at the date of the diversion. Needless to say, the councils of the municipalities which have used municipal equipment to help out a school unit or small village have been very much disturbed at this approach by the federal government.

The problem has brought forth a number of requests from municipalities to have the law clarified and more fairly applied. Mr. S. J. Safian, Q.C., legal counsel for the Saskatchewan Rural Municipal Association has put the case very strongly to the government. The Hon. Darrel V. Heald, former attorney general of Saskatchewan, on April 6, 1971, made a strong plea by letter to the former minister of finance suggesting that he and his colleague, the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Gray), should take some action to amend the law. At that time, the minister of finance in his reply took the side of the Minister of National Revenue and the bureaucrats by indicating that private contractors would be hard done by. It should be interesting to note at this point that Mr. Safian made a special investigation into these so-called complaints of private contractors and was informed by Mr. L. Ramsden, district chief of the investigations section, customs and excise, that the total complaints received from the two provinces of Manitoba and Saskatchewan did not exceed 12 in number. This included written and oral communications to the department and it was indicated that less than one half were from the province of Saskatchewan. Consequently, it would appear that this is not a serious problem or argument.

In looking into this matter closely, I find that the Department of National Revenue is applying the strictest interpretation to the exemption provisions under the Excise Tax Act. In relation to the equipment referred to, the act exempts any such equipment which has a price of over $500 and is especially designed for use directly for roadmaking, road cleaning or firefighting, but not including automobiles or ordinary trucks.

The words used in the exempting provision are far from high examples of clarity. Is a tractor equipment which is "specially designed" for roadmaking, as distinct from road maintaining? I should like to stress this, Mr. Speaker. It is just as well designed for road maintenance, and yet the Department of National Revenue has gone so far as to take the position that such equipment could not be used for road maintenance. For instance, is the Caterpillar or Champion grader patrolling the municipal roads and trimming the shoulders building up the road and therefore making the road, or is it only maintaining it? Just how ridiculous can the government officials get at times, Mr. Speaker. Every reeve and counsellor who is concerned with this subject will know that in the great majority of cases involving the use of such equipment, it would require a great deal of hair splitting to establish any difference, and the line between the two in most cases would be most difficult to draw.

To cite one more specific example of the ambiguity of some departmental decisions, there is the case where a municipal council had hoped to use their municipal road equipment for levelling a licensed airfield which was owned and operated by the municipality. The Department of National Revenue customs and excise investigation section gave the municipality a flat "no". In yet another case, the municipality was confronted with the question of the application of the federal sales tax to its equipment when used to do custom work for another rural municipality.

Here the situation is the same on a very strict interpretation of paragraph (c) subsection (4) of section 27 of the Excise Tax Act. If the equipment is used for other than permitted uses, that is roadmaking, road cleaning or fire fighting, the sales tax may be levied whether the equipment is applied to such use in the municipality which was the first purchaser of the equipment or in another municipality. This seems to be an irrational policy on the part of the Department of National Revenue. Where the use is a permitted use within the meaning of section 27 (4) of the Excise Tax Act, and where the equipment is employed in another rural municipality in a permitted use, that is roadbuilding, this consequence should not follow as a matter of commonsense.

An example in point would be where, for instance, municipality A has its own equipment working on a north-south road forming its western boundary and municipality B immediately to the west must replace a culvert, say, or repair approaches to a bridge on an east-west road very near to where the road equipment of municipality A is working. On a strict application of the act the equipment of municipality A could not be taken across the road into municipality B to make repairs without leaving itself open to levy of the federal sales tax on that equipment. Strictly speaking, municipality B would have to bring its equipment for perhaps 20 or 30 miles to make these minor repairs.

Another common discrepancy is the case of ratepayers within the municipality approaching their council with the request to plough out snow from their driveways in the winter after the municipality has purchased a new motor patrol with a snow wing in order to clear their main grid roads of snow in the winter.

Numerous requests as I said earlier, have been made to the government to amend this section of the act in question. Both the Minister of National Revenue and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) have promised to give serious consideration to remedying this particular complaint, as it so seriously affects our municipal governments according to the correspondence I have on file, but so far no action has been taken. It should be said in all fairness to the officials who have to administer this act that it is not they who determine the policy and that they are responsible only for the administration. The remedy lies with the Minister of National Revenue and the Minister of Finance and ultimately with parliament.

This afternoon I have purposely kept my comments very brief because in dealing with this subject and in discussing it with some of my colleagues on both sides of the House, I know that they would wish to support the intent of this motion. To this end, I urge most strongly these ministers, and the government of which they are part, to amend the Excise Tax Act in order to broaden the range of permitted uses for municipal equipment beyond the area of road making, road cleaning and fire fighting, and to remove the other unnecessary and anachronistic restrictions on the use of municipal equipment.

Mr. Judd Buchanan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the motion of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Southam) is related to situations where a municipality has purchased an article free of federal sales tax but subsequently diverts the article to a use which does not qualify it for tax exemption.

The Excise Tax Act provides that sales tax is not payable in respect of certain specified articles when sold to or imported by municipalities for their own use and not for sale. This exemption includes:

—equipment, at a price in excess of five hundred dollars per unit, specially designed for use directly for road making, road cleaning or fire fighting, but not including automobiles or ordinary motor trucks.

If a municipality purchases this equipment free of sales tax and then permits it be employed in work that is not for the use of the municipality, or that is not a use that qualifies for exemption, the municipality becomes liable for the sales tax. This is required by section 27(4) of the Excise Tax Act which reads as follows:

Where a motor vehicle or tractor or a machine or tool for operation by a motor vehicle or tractor

(a) has been purchased or imported by a person who is the first purchaser or importer in Canada of the article for his own use and who purchased or imported the article for a use rendering such purchase or importation exempt from tax under this Part or

(b) has been purchased as described in subsection 44(2); the following rules apply—

(c) if within five years of such purchase or importation the article is applied by the purchaser or importer to any use (other than of a casual nature) for which it could not originally have been purchased or imported by the purchaser or importer exempt from tax under this Part, the purchaser or importer shall be deemed to have sold the article at the time of its application to that use and there shall be imposed, levied and collected a consumption or sales tax of 12 per cent on the value of the article at the time of its application to that use, payable by the purchaser or importer at that time;—

The motion of the hon. member urges that any tax collected from municipalities under section 27(4) of the Excise Tax Act in the five years preceding 1972 be refunded to them, and that any tax collected under this subsection in future years also be given back. Mr. Speaker, this subsection was enacted in 1962 to cover the situation where motor vehicles and tractors, allegedly purchased for tax exempt purposes, are diverted to a taxable use shortly after having been acquired.

Diversion to a taxable use includes a sale to someone not entitled to purchase free of sales tax. The rules apply for a period of five years from the date of the first purchase, after which the vehicles concerned can be diverted to taxable use without incurring sales tax liability. Under the wording of section 27(4) diversion of equipment, purchased tax exempt by municipalities, to non-exempt use cannot be permitted without incurring sales tax liability. However, the subsection makes an exception for diversions of a "casual" nature, and in the administration of the Excise Tax Act the Department of National Revenue has recognized that diversions of a casual nature do occur. From a practical point of view, such diversions are generally overlooked and payments of sales tax are not required.

I think there was some unhappiness when the Department of National Revenue some time ago requested the payment of sales tax on equipment diverted to taxable use in certain municipalities, where the municipalities in question advertised in local newspapers that they were prepared to do private contracting work with municipal equipment. It was felt by the department that this was certainly outside the definition of "casual." Diversions of a casual nature can include such operations as excavation of dugouts, ditching outside boundaries of a road allowance, street and culvert repairs, brush clearing, snow removal and so on.

In effect the motion proposes that municipalities be permitted to employ road making and road cleaning machinery and equipment purchases free of sales tax in any manner they see fit without incurring tax liability.

It should be noted that section 27(4) refers to any person who purchases or imports the equipment in question for tax exempt purposes and is not exclusively related to municipal purchases. The proposal of the hon. member would give preferred treatment to municipalities and would, no doubt, create pressure to extend similar treatment to other persons in analagous positions, for example, provincial governments, irrigation districts, and so on.

The present sales tax exemption for road making machinery acquired by municipalities for their own use is sometimes strongly criticized by private contractors. These contractors may not purchase equipment free of sales tax and this may put them at a disadvantage when competing for work which the municipalities may decide to do with their own tax-free equipment. If this motion were accepted and municipalities were free to use tax free equipment in any way they wished, the unfair situation with respect to private contractors would be made much worse.

The Excise Tax Act exempts from sales tax a comprehensive list of articles and materials sold to or imported by municipalities for their own use and not for resale. Numerous requests have been received that a more general approach be adopted and that all municipal purchases be made exempt from sales tax. Although the motion does not refer to broadening the current exemptions through amending the Excise Tax Act, the effect of providing a remission along the lines suggested in the motion would be to extend significantly the current concessions afforded to municipalities.

It must be assumed that tax sales exemptions for municipalities exist because of the desire of the federal government to provide indirect financial assistance to local governments. Municipalities fall under the legislative jurisdiction of the provinces and it is sometimes questioned whether the federal government should come directly to their assistance. In this regard, it might be noted that the provinces provide little assistance to the municipalities by way of sales tax exemptions.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to support the motion that is before the House. I will speak briefly, not because there is not a great deal to say on the subject but because I know there are many hon. members who wish to participate in the debate. Because of the nature of the subject matter of the motion, I would hope that it will not meet the usual fate of private members' motions, but will be referred to a committee for further study.

The motion is interesting in that a Conservative member is asking that we give public enterprise, in the form of municipalities, a break, or at least that we give them the benefit of the doubt. But members of the Liberal party, with their ideological hand-up on free enterprise, are concerned about the results of acceptance of this motion. They are concerned that private contractors might not like municipalities becoming involved in private enterprise. They are so hung-up on the private enterprise system that they are not prepared to give the benefit of the doubt to municipalities.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): On a point of order—

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is the hon. member for St. Boniface rising on a question of privilege or on a point of order?

[English]

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): If the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman) means what he says, Mr. Speaker, then why is it that his party, which forms the government in Manitoba, does not alleviate the burden of the municipalities and give them a 5 per cent exemption? He speaks one way here in Ottawa, and the contrary way in Manitoba.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The hon. member should not take advantage of a point of order to ask a question. Further, this was more an expression of opinion than a question. The hon. member can seek the floor in due course and say what he has to say with respect to the motion.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Speaker, it is one of my great ambitions to hear the hon. member who has just spoken make a speech rather than an interjection.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I will speak in a minute.

Mr. Saltsman: The real point at issue is whether we are going to give municipalities some benefit of the doubt in terms of when equipment they have acquired for their own purposes may be used for another purpose. We are not talking about resale, I think that is fairly clear. Any question of a municipality buying a piece of equipment without sales tax and selling it, is a red herring. I do not know of any municipality doing this. We are talking about equipment bought for one purpose by a municipality and then, in view of its emerging needs, the council may decide to use it for another. Under the present legislation, a private contractor could say that a certain field of operation is his exclusively and that the municipality must not become involved in it. Had we adopted that philosophy at the beginning, no sewers or sidewalks would now be maintained by the municipalities. The maintenance of all those things we so carefully provided for ourselves within a city would be excluded, because they were provided by a private contractor of one kind or another.

• (1720)

I think it is wrong for the government to take this adamant position in reference to this particular section of the Excise Tax Act. I can appreciate the argument of neutrality as well as anyone else; the argument that we should not favour public enterprise over private enterprise. If this were applied equally throughout the economy, there might be some validity to the argument. The taxpayer is not neutral. Certain aspects of the private economy are not available to municipalities. When we give moneys to companies for research purposes we do not apply a yardstick to determine what those companies are going to do for the national interest and whether they are competing with any public enterprise. That money is given because some research is being carried out, although perhaps it is not going to be used in Canada at all. In the case of multinational corporations, the benefits may accrue to another country. There are many aspects of neutrality in the areas I have described.

As I have said, there are many things that could be said at this time, but in deference to other members who wish to indicate their support for the measure before us, I shall conclude my remarks.

Mr. D. R. Gundlock (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to support this motion this afternoon and I do so having had a good deal of experience as reeve, councillor, and county chairman. In these roles, I have dealt with the matters that the hon. member who put forward the motion has mentioned. I am familiar, at first hand, with the small examples, if we want to use the word "small", to which the hon. member has referred.

I have heard the hon. parliamentary secretary put forth the government side, the rules and regulations. I have dealt with these personally. One of the reasons I should like to support the motion is an answer given by the former minister of finance to a brief submitted by the Saskatchewan Attorney General, Mr. D. V. Heald as reported in the Rural Councillor of September 1, 1970. The brief made certain recommendations but the minister's reply was simply that "no amendment to the act is proposed". The matter was raised later and the minister's response to the Provincial Attorney General was to the effect that restraint of inflation was a mojor consideration in forming the policies. Mr. Speaker, I find it very hard to relate "restraint of inflation" to this sort of thing.

The hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Southam) mentioned a case concerning the clearing of an airfield in the wintertime so that an air ambulance could land. The investigating inspector suggested that perhaps the sales tax on the snowplow would have to be refunded. This sort of thing is difficult for municipalities to accept in a practical way. I suppose the parliamentary secretary would quote the section of the act to me and say that piece of equipment was not used to build a road or to clean a road. I maintain that, in a practical way, the machine was most certainly cleaning a road, whether it was a roadway for an air ambulance or a roadway for a school bus or whatever.

I think the problem really lies in the interpretation of the act. We had a very strict interpretation of it a moment ago from the parliamentary secretary. In any interpretation, not only of legal words and acts, there must be flexibility. Some years ago when I was chairman of the county of Warner in southern Alberta, we sent a snowplow 80 miles into another municipality with a bottle of medicine because it was the only machine that could be found to deliver it. The machine went through the border town of Sweet Grass where the customs and excise men were located. They heard about this grader going into another municipality and we were told we had better be more careful.

If the government is not willing to amend the act, the minister should talk to his inspectors and ask them at least to be reasonable and use some flexibility in interpreting these words. We run across this all the time. A month or two ago when we were debating the tax reform bill, I recall asking the parliamentary secretary to consider including in the list of exemptions, rock picking. I know this does not have much to do with the present motion, but the point I am trying to make is that there should be flexibility in interpreting certain laws and regulations. I mentioned rock picking because I am a farmer. It is not an expense of farming to contract rock picking simply because it is not listed as a deductible item. Land clearing and clearing bush is listed, but certainly rock picking is just as expensive a job as any other land clearing operation, but because it is not mentioned it is not allowed. The effect of the many of the provisions in the act before us depend on their interpretation.

I am not a lawyer but I have heard many times that justice must not only be done but must be seen to be done. The hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain mentioned the municipality that plows a north-south road which is a boundary road. I ask the parliamentary secretary, Mr. Speaker, can he imagine such a machine being exempt from this tax simply because it did not put the snowplow down when it may have travelled 20 miles over a road or entryway that needed cleaning? Can he imagine that sort of interpretation? I am quite sure the experts would be happy if the minister or his officials would explain these laws so that justice may appear to be done.

I mentioned the case of the airfield, and the snowplow that travelled 80 miles with a little bottle of medicine. According to law, these machines are excluded from sales tax exemption. I realize that no matter what law we have, there are ways around it. I will give an example of this. A municipal machine cannot build a ditch but the municipality has complete responsibility and control over safety on the waterways. I think we need a broader interpretation in this regard and I support the motion of the hon. member. I hope members opposite will consider this matter and accept this motion calling for an amendment to the law, and I trust the ministers concerned will accept the advice given during this private members' hour.

There are always ways to avoid taxation. I do not think municipalities are trying to avoid taxation, but they become frustrated when an inspector tells them they cannot build a driveway or diversion road because it is not on their land. We know there is an easy way around this. If it is for the benefit of the community, the owner could donate or sell the land to the municipality. Instead of nitpicking we should look at this matter closely. Any flagrant misuse of taxation policy is very noticeable. I do not think there will be any question of municipalities doing that. Taxpayers are the most important people to them and they will not let private contractors suffer at their expense. Our budget and the budgets of municipalities simply do not allow that sort of thing.

I strongly support this motion. If the House will not accept this amendment I strongly urge that the interpretation of the relevant laws be made more flexible.

[Translation]

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, I would like first to refer to the question which I addressed a little while ago to the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman) and which has remained unanswered.

[English]

First, however, I would like to congratulate the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Southam). I believe he is sincere in what he is doing. If he were not concerned with the area of municipalities he would not have presented this motion to the House. I, too, am concerned. It is for that reason I am speaking in this debate.

I did not receive an answer to the question I directed to the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman) a short while ago. I feel a member cannot belong to a political party in this House and speak against some action of the federal government when his party, which forms a provincial government, has done the same type of thing. I refer to Manitoba and the sales tax it has applied to machinery such as is referred to in the motion of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain.

We have a sales tax in Manitoba which affects the purchase by municipalities of many of the items mentioned in this debate. The sales tax in Manitoba is not the same as it is in Quebec. In Quebec there is an 8 per cent sales tax on many items but the municipality receives a 6 per cent rebate on that sales tax. That is not the case in Manitoba. When the sales tax was first implemented in Manitoba by the provincial government every property owner was receiving a $50 rebate on school taxes. This was done until the government came up with what it thought was a better idea. When they imposed a 5 per cent sales tax they eliminated the $50 rebate. We have lost the $50 rebate on school taxes but we are still faced with the 5 per cent sales tax. This applies to such items as Kleenex, toilet tissue and other necessities and it also applies to machinery. There is no rebate to the property owner. Also, we still pay a 4 per cent tax on utilities. There are problems for municipalities which represent the grassroots people. I wish to refer to an information sheet of the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities. I think it indicates the problem of the high cost of operation of municipalities. I will then refer to what I think should be done to help them. The title of this article, which appeared in CFMM Information of Thursday, February 10, 1972, is "City requires federal tax aid". I quote from the article as follows:

> With the cost of home ownership and rental already excessive, a 5.6 per cent increase in Ottawa's 1972 mill rate—meaning nearly $50 more in taxes for a home assessed at $8,000—is sad news. And there are more tax announcements to come.

> On the evidence available in the budget statement, its not the city's managers who are to be faulted. As ever, the issues raised by the operating budget lie more on the revenue than the spending side.
> A 16.6 per cent increase in spending is, indeed, a very considerable amount. Much of it is accounted for in salaries, notably the whopping 1971 arbitration awards to police and firemen. There is strong argument here for wage moderation, which has been taking hold in other sectors of the economy, in 1972 settlements. There is argument too on behalf of efforts to rationalize staff in the personnel study now nearing completion at the City Hall.
> But a 22.8 per cent increase in the municipal mill rate, explained by the changing impact of the provincial grant structure, is not tolerable at all. Yes, the time has more than come for a massive swing to unconditioned grants. Just as important, if the city—and region—are to have any room to manoeuvre in their spending plans, there must be new tax sources made available.

Now I should like to quote the following passage from the Speech from the Throne of October 8, 1970.

> Much progress has already been attained in these areas, housing and the provision of the many services necessary in an urban environment, but much more remains to be done. To solve the problems will require an ever-increasing share of the nation's financial resources; not to solve them, to permit unmanaged growth, would result in an unacceptable drain on the nation's human resources. To foster co-ordination of the activities of all levels of governments, and to contribute to sound urban growth and development, the government proposes the reorganization of its urban activities under the direction of a Minister of State for Urban Affairs and Housing. The government seeks, by making rational its efforts in these fields, and through consultation with those most directly concerned, to help Canadians reach and implement the decisions that will determine their urban future.

The municipalities of Canada have been asking for tax relief for years. They have been asking for a greater share of the nation's resources in order that they may do their job better. The Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities did succeed in getting the federal government to pay grants in lieu of taxes. They are asking, now, that sales tax on pollution control equipment be waived.

Mr. Speaker, I support any measure which would alleviate the financial problems faced by the municipalities. That the municipalities are, indeed, encountering major difficulties is evident from the report of the joint parliamentary committee on the constitution which, as hon. members know, was tabled only last week. The committee toured Canada to study the situation at first hand, interviewing people in all parts of the country. This was a wise decision and the recommendations were all the better for it. The committee undoubtedly appreciated the problems the municipalities were facing.

I should like to refer to the final report of that committee and in particular to the paragraphs which appear on page 54, chapter 21 of the report. I do not have time to mention all the recommendations made but I should like to quote at least paragraph 63 which reads:

A tri-level conference among federal, provincial and municipal governments should be called at least once a year.

In a brief note attached to this and other recommendations, the committee stated:

We agree fully that more co-operation, liaison and even harmony, is needed among all levels of government.

The meat of the recommendations is contained in chapter 22 where specific reference is again made to municipalities. I realize that these recommendations have not yet been accepted by the government, but I sincerely hope they will be given consideration. Paragraphs 64, 65, 66, 67 and 68 are all of great concern to the municipalities. I should like to quote paragraph 67:

In the light of the injustice done municipalities by their having to rely on the property tax for the bulk of their revenue, there should be a sharing of tax fields between governments that would allow municipalities direct access to other sources of revenue.

There are many other good suggestions made in this report. It should be borne in mind that the committee did not make its recommendations solely on the basis of the situation in Ottawa; they were the result of meetings held in all the provinces across Canada.

Coming more closely to the motion itself, I would point out that one would need to know a great deal about the detailed affairs of municipalities before being certain that in each case they would profit by the particular proposals which have been put forward. I believe that in the greater Winnipeg area, of which I have particular knowledge, some of them would, if adopted, lead to revenue losses in certain directions. However, the intentions of the mover of the motion are good and for this reason I do not want to make any references which might be construed as criticism in that sense. Anything which would alleviate the difficulties of the municipalities and put more funds at their disposal would meet with my approval. In the end, of course, it will be the taxpayers who will benefit, even those with low incomes, because the mill rate will be lower.

I feel that the proposal for complete exemption from all sales taxes is not a wise one. It savours too much of a booby prize in terms of what the municipalities are really seeking. A meeting is to be held here a week from today between the federal cabinet and representatives of the municipalities. It is to take place in the railway committee room and I suggest that hon. members who are concerned about these issues should attend to hear the briefs which are to be presented at 11 a.m. This is where they can be counted. We shall be able to see how many of us here are really concerned about the situation in which the municipalities find themselves.

I believe that instead of pressing for a single exemption, which does not add up to a great deal, the House should endorse the commitment of the government of Canada as expressed in the Speech from the Throne which I quoted a while ago, that is, to devote a larger share of the nation's resources to solving urban problems. This is not a responsibility of the federal government alone, of course; it is a responsibility of provincial government too.

If we had received all we were promised by my own province a few years ago, it would now be a good day for the municipalities. But the promises were never fulfilled. Taxes are still rising and no solution has yet been found. Always it is the same story: municipal problems are to be taken into consideration and an attempt made to find a solution. Then another year goes by without any result. The time has come, Mr. Speaker, when results must speak for themselves.

Municipalities which have been making improvements to benefit their citizens have paid the shot so far. What we need is intergovernmental consultation on municipal financing, with a commitment by the federal and provincial governments to give the municipalities access to more tax resources, not simply single exemptions which add up to practically nothing. With that said, once again I invite all hon. members to attend the meeting next Monday at 11 a.m. in the railway committee room.

Mr. Ian Watson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to congratulate the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Southam) for giving us the opportunity today to discuss the financial problems of municipalities. The hon. member is suggesting in his notice of motion one method in which he feels the government of Canada could assist the municipalities in their financing. I am sure he will agree that there are dangers in the method he is proposing in that although it may make sense for road cleaning and road building equipment to be owned by one municipality and used by a second municipality, the possibility of such equipment being rented out or being used in competition with private contractors is stretching things a little farther than I am prepared to accept.

The question he has opened up today is one that is certainly worthy of a lot more consideration by the government. The whole question of whether municipal equipment should be exempt from sales tax while other equipment should not be exempt I feel should also include the question whether or not sales tax should be eliminated altogether on such equipment. Inquiries I have made in my department in this regard have not convinced me that this is a realistic proposition at the moment.

The trouble lies not so much with the larger items, which are easily identifiable and can be controlled fairly easily in that they can be traced quickly and efficiently to the manufacturer, but rather it lies with the smaller items that are purchased from storekeepers or dealerships. Here the problem is much more complicated.

As the hon. member is aware, it is necessary for a municipal purchaser to supply an end use certificate for items put to municipal use which are eligible for exemption. This process is a relatively simple one, I am told, when large items such as sewer pipes are involved. But when it comes to nuts and bolts and minor items which, though eligible, are purchased from small dealerships, this end use certificate procedure becomes complicated. The Department of National Revenue, which is responsible for keeping track of these certificates, spends a large number of man hours per fiscal year checking these very small purchases. In theory, one could suggest that it might be simpler to abolish sales tax procedures completely for municipalities, and undoubtedly this would be of major assistance to most municipalities. However, the amount of additional paper work involved, especially for small items, would be enormous.

If a different method of auditing could be worked out with the provinces whereby a better and more efficient check could be made of municipal expenditures for both small and large items of equipment—again I am talking about the theoretical situation where sales tax is abolished completely—then conceivably it might be possible to consider the hon. member's proposal, at the same time maintaining the safeguards which I am sure all hon. members would agree are necessary to prevent abuse. In view of the number of municipalities in this country, I am sure the procedure would be open to abuse if the doors were thrown open completely by eliminating sales tax on all items purportedly for municipal use eventually.

The question of municipal financing is one that concerns me particularly since I represent a constituency just across the river from Montreal. It is a bedroom or dormitory-type constituency that has doubled in size as well as population in the last 10 or 12 years. Although we see particularly the growing municipalities making mistakes that we all know how to avoid, mistakes that have been made elsewhere in North America, we are still repeating these mistakes.

Municipal finances are getting into an absolutely deplorable state today. I have letters from some of my constituents complaining about taxes amounting to $800 or $850 a year on houses worth no more than $12,000 to $13,000. I am sure few members of this House have constituents who are in such a deplorable situation. Anything that would help relieve the municipalities in my area of their burden would be welcome. However, the suggestion implied in the hon. member's notice of motion, I feel, does allow for certain abuse which, on reflection, I am sure he would not want to see. However, the opportunity he has given us to discuss this matter is appreciated.

[Mr. Watson.]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business having expired, the House will revert to the business it was considering in committee.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

INCOME TAX ACT

The House resumed consideration in committee of Bill C-169, to amend the Income Tax Act—Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton)—Mr. Laniel in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: It being six o'clock, the committee will now adjourn till eight o'clock tonight.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

The Chairman: Order, please. House again in committee of the whole on Bill C-169, an act to amend the Income Tax Act.

On clause 1—Additional deduction from tax.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, I do not think there is any need for me to traverse in great detail what was said in the debate on the companion bill to this one which applied to tax in 1971. At that time I indicated that I would support some limitation in the amount of the reduction. I would think that a limit of about $60 would be right. That would represent a reduction of approximately 3 per cent on $2,000 of tax payable. A man earning $10,000 or $11,000 would pay in the neighbourhood of $2,000 in income tax. I do not have exact calculations in front of me. It seems to me, however, that we should be able to work on this basis. Bearing in mind the incomes that are earned today, I suggest that $10,000 or $11,000 a year embraces a large part of the working force.

Last December a representative of the NDP, the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby I think, moved to impose a limit of $40 in the amount of the reduction.

Mr. Jerome: The hon. member is referring to tax dollars?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Tax dollars, yes. At that time I suggested that was not enough because such a low limit eliminated a large group of people who today are known, shall we say, as the solid core of working people. After all, today it is not uncommon for a married man with one or two children to earn between $13,000 and $14,000 a year. Certainly, those who support the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby and his party in many instances come from the upper quadrant, the upper third let us say, of trade unionists and they earn that much if not more. One need only look at today's wage rates to see the sort of money they are earning.

Taxes have risen for these people to the point that they are paying approximately $2,000 in income tax. A man with a taxable income of between $8,000 and $10,000 would pay income tax of $2,000 to $2,500. For the sake of rough justice, I would agree to a limit of $60 in the amount of reduction. A limit of $40 I think is wrong and will not accomplish enough.

I also want to support such a limitation because it is in keeping with what we advocated with regard to a tax credit. A limitation in this area will do the most good. If you are giving a tax cut, give it in the area where it will be most meaningful and where it will do the greatest good. If a tax credit system had been adopted, this sort of thing would have been easy to do in this area. That was the point we tried to hammer home in our criticisms of Bill C-259, the tax reform bill of 1971.

Here is a classic example of the flat 3 per cent reduction. For the man in the higher income bracket, the 3 per cent represents quite a fair amount. Let us take the example of a man with a taxable income of $25,000. He pays an average of 33 per cent or 35 per cent across the board in tax. Let us put it at a rough amount of $8,000 in tax. He will have the benefit of $240 as a result of the 3 per cent deduction which he is to be allowed. I do not begrudge him that. He will receive $240 on a taxable income of $25,000. The amount of $240 does not mean too much to him. However, if this $240 was available to an individual earning, say, $7,000 with a taxable income of $4,000, then we would be doing what we are attempting to accomplish in this country. That is where the thrust should be.

This is in keeping with the philosophy we have enunciated in our party in respect of tax changes and tax credits. I am dealing with rough figures, but this is what I would be much more inclined to support so far as a tax credit is concerned. This is a one-shot operation. It is not as though we were setting it up over a period of years. My figures may not be exactly correct.

An hon. Member: That would not be new.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I love to hear this sage from Hamilton.

Mr. Gibson: I did not say anything.

An hon. Member: You are wrong again.

The Chairman: Order, please. The hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth on a point of order.

Mr. Gibson: Mr. Chairman, I was thinking all kinds of thoughts but I did not open my mouth on this occasion.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, I apologize to the hon. member, but he is so prone to open his mouth and let sounds come forward unthinkingly that I immediately reacted like everybody else. If somebody else made that statement, fine. As I say, these are rough estimates but that is the position I would take. I think the Minister of State attached to the Minister of Finance would not mind if we imposed a limit of $60. I know an hon. member wishes to bring forward a motion and I shall not steal his thunder. However, he will have much more chance of getting our support if he uses the figure of $60. That is all I shall say on this clause.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Chairman, I hate to upset the cheering of my colleagues who no doubt anticipate a prolonged and profound 40 minutes address. I made the essential points in debate this afternoon on second reading. I pointed out at that time that the measure before us is completely inadequate in terms of equity and fairness to taxpayers and to the average poor person and, secondly, in terms of providing money to those who would most likely spend it soon and thus stimulate the economy. Therefore, I should like to move an amendment to Bill C-169 as follows:

That clause 1 of Bill C-169, an act to amend the Income Tax Act, be amended by changing the phrase "3%" in line 11 to "6%" and by changing the period at the end of line 19 to a comma and adding immediately thereafter the following words: "or $60, whichever is the lesser.

I point out in graphic form the reasons for the amendment. I draw to your attention the present maldistribution of benefits in the bill before us. I introduced figures in the debate on second reading which clearly illustrate the maldistribution of tax benefits which this bill provides. If the House accepts this amendment we will set an upper limit of $60 on the tax benefit which will accrue. At present, if we check the effects of the government's proposal we will find that people in the upper income category will save, in absolute terms, much more money than the average income or poor person.

I have calculated, for example, that a person with two dependants earning $100,000 a year will save $1,500 in tax benefit. At the other end of the income scale, someone earning $2,000 will save a grand total of $2.25. In each case I am speaking of a person with two dependants. Someone earning $4,000 would save $16.41, someone earning $6,000 would save $32.28 and someone earning $8,000 would save $49.62. This type of maldistribution of benefit is something we should be attempting to rectify in order to make sure that those at the bottom end of the income scale receive the maximum benefit from the tax change.

Therefore, I suggest that members of the House who really want to do something at this time to give immediate benefit to low income groups should support the amendment. This will make sure that these people receive the money and it will not go needlessly to those who really do not need it.

Secondly, in terms of providing an economic stimulus to the economy—that is our concern, as it should be; it is one aspect of tax policy—by making sure that low and average income groups get the $60 we will ensure that much more of it will be injected very soon into the economy, thereby increasing demand for services and for products, which will have an immediate spin-off effect in terms of increasing the demand for labour and therefore contributing toward the reduction of our unemployment levels.

By passing the same amount of money to higher income groups, as I argued earlier this afternoon, there is much less likelihood of that income being spent in the early future and acting as a stimulus to the economy. In fact, normally it would just be lodged in a bank or invested in some stock and soon its impact in creating jobs would not be felt. Therefore, I urge that all members present give serious consideration to this amendment because in terms of equity and economic stimulus to the economy it would be much more effective than the measure proposed by the government.

The Chairman: The Chair has for consideration the amendment moved by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby. Of course, the Chair will recognize other hon. members who wish to speak to the amendment. I do not believe the amendment is out of order.

I think that essentially the hon. member has complied with the considerations which the Chair must give to an amendment of this type. The amendment is relevant to the bill. It does not propose to increase the incidence of taxation upon taxpayers. In effect, the amendment would reduce taxation. The only hesitation that the Chair has is whether the hon. member in the latter part of his amendment, by in effect limiting the reduction in taxation, seeks to change the incidence of taxation on Canadians who are required to pay taxes. I do not hold this view too strongly and I mention it only as a question with which hon. members might wish to deal. However, if there is no objection the Chair is prepared to put the motion.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Perhaps I should not interject at this point, Mr. Chairman, since you are in agreement. Let me merely point out that it is the same as the ruling that was given on December 23 last.

The Chairman: Is there any other hon. member who wishes to speak on the procedural acceptability of the amendment? Is the committee ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Amendment (Mr. Broadbent) negatived: Yeas, 19; nays, 33.

The Chairman: I declare the amendment lost. Shall clause 1 carry?

Clause agreed to.

On clause 2—Deduction in computing tax otherwise payable.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): In connection with the proposal with regard to corporations, it must be remembered that when I refer to corporations I do not disregard the individual and his wife or the two-man company which is incorporated. This provision applies to corporations all the way from the smallest to the biggest across the country. I have no inhibitions with regard to the word "corporations" as my friends to the left have. They think that anything that is named a corporation or that qualifies as a corporation should be put to death or taxed to death. They say they do not want to put it to death but they will tax it to death, and rather than kill it outright they will just strangle it. At that point my colleagues and I part company, if we ever had company, with these people.

As a matter of fact, in light of the remarks I made this afternoon and that I have made in the past I would have preferred to see a 10 per cent cut in this provision, with a longer period, because frankly the minister is indulging in this one-shot business during an election year and is thus trying to fool the people. The former minister of finance indulged in something of this kind. Perhaps I would not call it misleading of the people because I do not think he could deliberately undertake anything like that, but he certainly misled the people when he said on the night of October 14 that this, in effect, meant a 10 per cent cut in corporate income tax as of July 1. Of course, that was the most blatant misrepresentation that one could make in this House. The surtax had been increased and added to in December because it was supposed to be a worth-while tax measure to bolster government revenues and to keep the economy on an even keel. Six months later, to the accompaniment of great clapping and slapping of desks by government backbenchers, the surtax came off. Everything was fine.

Mr. Mahoney: Whoa, Marcel!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Everything was fine.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Yet within about five months—Mr. Chairman, sometimes you have to pitch your voice a little louder to get through thick ears.

Mr. Lefebvre: Especially when you don't have too much to say.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Let the hon. member get up and make a speech on taxes.

Mr. Lefebvre: If I can't make one better than you, then I won't.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I know the hon. member can't say anything, for he never speaks. We will see what he is going to do tonight. I suggest that it was totally wrong for them to speak as they did in June. This was demonstrated in October by the then minister of finance. Yet, as I said earlier today, both sets of proposals received the same amount of clatter and clapping from government backbenchers. And why, Mr. Chairman? Because it is the thing to do.

I would have much preferred meaningful action to have been taken in June in regard to this matter. As a matter of fact, in December of last year we spoke and voted against the imposition of the surtax. The government was told that its action was wrong. It was demonstrated to be wrong by the action taken six months later, and it is now shown to have been doubly wrong by this proposal of a 7 per cent reduction limited to January 1, 1973. That limitation is questionable. I fail to see how they think that anybody in business is going to make any meaningful investment on the basis of a one-shot—for one year—reduction of 7 per cent in the amount of taxable income. Mind you, I suppose we will have to say that it is better than nothing. I am not going to oppose it. I cannot propose that the amount be increased and there is no way that we can redistribute it. But while objecting to the amount and to the time limitation, we will support the proposal.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Chairman, I would like to direct a question to the minister on clause 2. It concerns the rationale for a 7 per cent across-the-board tax reduction. On what basis was this decision made? What information did the government have at its disposal from which it could assume that by deferring public moneys of this kind there would be an effective stimulation of the economy?

Mr. Mahoney: Mr. Chairman, obviously it is a question of judgment balanced against the ways and means requirements of the government. In this particular instance it was felt by the government that in the corporate sector a tax reduction in the order of $335 million over the 18-month period would have a meaningful impact on stimulating the ecomony, particularly bearing in mind that this was by no means either the first or the only measure proposed by the government to stimulate the economy. Also, bearing in mind the results that have been achieved, which seem each month to be proving out into an increasingly expanding economy, the measure seems to have been well founded.

However, to reply specifically, the figure could have been 8 per cent; it could have been 10 per cent; it could have been 5 per cent. The other figure could have been a year, six months, 18 months or two years. The balanced judgment was that this $335 million reduction over an 18-month period would provide a meaningful stimulus and, as I say, events would appear to have borne that out.

Mr. Saltsman: Originally this measure was supposed to end on January 1 of this year. Therefore we have had some experience with it. I am sure the government has had some experience of how successful the measure has been, not in a general way but in a specific way. When sums as large as the amount we are discussing are being remitted to industry, I think there should be some assessment. I am sure the department has made some assessment whereby it can demonstrate that where millions of dollars are being given to industry in fact a stimulus has been provided. What evidence has the minister that could persuade the open-minded people on this side of the House that this is a good measure and should be continued?

Mr. Mahoney: Mr. Chairman, I would not attempt to isolate the beneficial effects of this particular measure from the beneficial effects of other measures that the government has undertaken in relation to the economy over the last several months, indeed for almost two years. However, the evidence of economic performance during the latter part of 1971 and carrying on into the first two months of 1972, for which figures are presently available, would indicate that the economy has recovered rather remarkably from what was a genuine slowdown during 1970. This would also indicate that our economic performance relative to other countries with whom we are prone to compare ourselves has been indeed favourable and that this measure, as part of a package of other economic measures, has indeed been effective.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether to thank the minister for that answer or to simply scratch my head and try to figure out what he said. However, I know that he is interested in providing as much information to the House as he possibly can. Since the government has spent large sums of money on various programs—we have put $1 billion into regional aid, we have expended large sums of money on LIP, large sums of money on the Opportunities for Youth program, large sums of money on this program, and of course, on personal income tax cuts—I want to know from the minister, what method does the government have of assessing the benefit to the economy of specific programs funded by taxpayers' moneys?

Mr. Mahoney: As I indicated earlier, Mr. Chairman, I would not attempt to isolate the beneficial effects on the economy of any particular program. I simply assess them as a package. The 200,000 new jobs our economy created during the past calendar year, the relatively good price performance, the containment of inflation—in relative terms, better than our trading partners—and so on, are all evidence to me of a fairly well managed economy; and this particular measure, in so far as it was applicable during the latter half of 1971, must be regarded as one of the beneficial measures.

To attempt, on the basis of a few months' performance to pinpoint what this, that or the other measure might have done in isolation from the rest would be an impossible task. To say how many jobs were created as a result of leaving this kind of tax money at the disposal of the business community, as opposed to how many jobs were created as a result of the greatly expanded housing program that was undertaken through CMHC last year, would be an impossible task. Perhaps some historian might be able to parse it. I can only judge these things on the basis of an over-all package.

Mr. Saltsman: Is there any program in the minister's department that follows on these tax cuts? Are interviews conducted with people who are recipients of these tax cuts, and is any attempt made to determine the effectiveness of these measures? After all, we are talking about very large sums of money. It is not good enough to say that we are going to throw the money up in the air in the hope that it lands properly and has some effect. When any government spends as much money as this one has there is, of course, some value but also some waste. I think the important way of measuring a government's success or failure in the spending of money is to see how effective it has been.

I ask the minister, through you, Mr. Chairman, whether there is a follow-up program to assess the effectiveness of these tax cuts.

Mr. Mahoney: Mr. Chairman, of course we try to assess the effectiveness of all government programs. I am not aware whether any report on the program in question is available as yet, but we have knowledge of the generally improved economic performance in Canada to bear out that on balance the package of programs has created an improvement. I shall inquire whether we have the results of any assessments of this particular package of measures over the first six months of its term, that is, the last six months of 1971. If figures are available, I shall attempt to impart them to the hon. member, but I do not have any assessment at my fingertips.

Mr. Broadbent: I should like to pursue this fascinating set of questions and the equally fascinating non-answers we are getting from the minister. The minister's answers are reminiscent of those we used to get from the minister of industry, trade and commerce—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Broadbent: —on the question of money spent on scientific research and development programs. The fascinating Liberal theory at that time was that if you spend a million dollars on a science policy or any kind of research and development program, somehow something must occur that will benefit the economy and improve the level of scientific research. This is hardly a profound kind of causal analysis of what occurs in either science or the economy.

If the government has decided that by cutting a couple of hundred million dollars out of the tax load of the corporate sector of the economy there is bound to be a causal effect on unemployment, that seems to be a reasonable conclusion that any five-year old could draw. But surely intelligent economic policy was intended to get the maximum benefit per dollar spent.

I ask the minister why the government did not relate the tax benefit to actual expansion of employment, if the real intent was to stimulate the economy. I realize that stimulating the economy may not result directly in expansion of employment but perhaps in expansion of efficiency. Since the minister has already said that when this measure was brought in the government was concerned with an economy which was in need of stimulus, in need of more jobs being created, why did the government not say, "You can have your 7 per cent tax reduction if you can show at the end of the fiscal year that you have expanded your employment by a certain percentage"?

Mr. Mahoney: In the first place, Mr. Chairman, I would not wish the hon. member to feel that he has hurt my feelings at all—

Mr. Broadbent: That is impossible.

Mr. Mahoney: —by comparing me to the present Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce or to any of his predecessors. Unfortunately, sometimes the answers to simple questions tend to be complex, and sometimes the questions, while simple themselves, deal with complex matters. Perhaps in asking his question in the terms that he did, the hon. member is reflecting the same preoccupation that he has, for example, with the manufacturing and service industries to the exclusion of resource industries.

[Mr. Mahoney.]

It seems to me that a tax cut which permits a company, not necessarily itself, to create new jobs and to buy goods and services from its suppliers, thereby permitting them to create new jobs, is a valuable thing. The economy is not nearly as simple as the hon. member would seem to indicate. He is preoccupied, for example, with the relatively few people employed in mining operations. That is fine, but there are many people employed on the railways that haul the production of the mines, many people employed in the steel mills which provide the trucks, cars and so forth that haul the production of the mines. To simply relate tax cuts to direct employment would be to do a disservice to a very complex economy such as functions in Canada today. Our economy is not a simple operation and it does not lend itself to simplistic answers.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Chairman, I shall not say that the minister's answer was simplistic, but I am not sure if he implied what my simplistic solution to my own question was. I should like to catch the minister in the logic of his own reply and see if he can get out of this. If I understood correctly, he was saying that the manufacturing sector or the service sector is more labour-intensive than the resource sector, and if that is the concern there may be a case for the government applying its tax benefit only to those two sectors if they want to generate more employment. But he went on to say that the economy is more complex than that; that even if the resource sector is stimulated there will be effects because it purchases goods and services from other sectors of the economy, and he cited the railway industry and the steel industry.

Mr. Chairman, that misses the essential point. Of course they purchase goods and services from other sectors, but so does the manufacturing sector. Surely that is the point. If you have a steel industry, a textile mill or an automobile plant that in its own operation employs more people per dollar invested than the resource sector, there are spin off effects because all the goods and services they buy from other sectors means that the total employment introduced will still be greater than allowing some of the money to go into the resource sector. I should like the minister to comment on that point.

Mr. Mahoney: I do not think I can add very much to what I have already said. I feel the over-all performance of our economy has borne out the judgment of the government in this respect. I think probably the hon. member would find that a great deal of employment could be generated in the hand-made buggy-whip business, but perhaps the market for the product of that labour-intensive enterprise might not be very large.

I think Canada has to operate under the economy it has, not the one it might wish it had or that the hon. member might wish it had. Therefore we must work with the assets we have. The statistical information on the performance of our economy over the past year would indicate that it has been operating relatively well.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Chairman, since I know that the Minister of State has considerable experience with the resource industry, I should like to ask a question about the way in which a tax cut stimulates resource development. It is my understanding that there has been a tightening of world markets and the demand for many of our minerals has been declining. There have been lay-offs in the nickel industry, the iron industry and industries of that kind. Under these circumstances of low world demand, would the minister explain how a tax cut to these industries will stimulate the economy?

I do not know whether the minister is thinking of the answer he wishes to give me or whether he does not want to answer the question. However, I would appreciate a comment from the minister.

Mr. Mahoney: Mr. Chairman, I find it difficult to answer a question as to how a tax cut for any particular industry stimulates the economy. It seems evident to me that tax cuts involve an increase in the net pay-off for the entrepreneur and make it much more desirable for the entrepreneur to carry on business. I do not think it greatly matters what is his particular line of work.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Chairman, that is the point I was trying to make. It seems there is no need at the moment, certainly in some of the resource industries, to provide any stimulation because the market for the resources does not exist. What would be the point of providing stimulus to the pulp and paper industry when it is in a very tight market, or the nickel industry which is laying off people? In what way does a tax cut stimulate the economy and provide the employment that all of us are interested in providing?

The Minister of Labour has repeatedly said, and I am sure the Prime Minister has also said it on occasion, that the government are very concerned about the high level of unemployment. They want to see this situation corrected. We in this House are being asked to vote on a measure that will spend $125 million of the taxpayers' funds. We are not given any sort of indication that this kind of expenditure is justified. We are interested in providing opportunities for fuller employment. We on this side want to be convinced that the measures before us will in fact accomplish that purpose. We want a much better explanation than we have been able to obtain from the minister. I hope the minister will rise and be more persuasive than he has so far.

Mr. Mahoney: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member is indeed fortunate in being asked to vote on this particular measure at a time when the economic indicators demonstrate that the economy is performing well. Unemployment is falling; employment increased by over 200,000 jobs over the past year. In spite of his preoccupation and my concern over the 600,000 people in Canada who are unemployed, I am not the least bit unhappy about the 8¼ million who are working.

The hon. member can take great comfort from the performance of the economy over the past several months, and being asked to vote on a measure that has been in effect for eight months as a result of the budgetary statement of last October, when the economic performance bears out the wisdom of this measure in combination with others the government has adopted.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Chairman, of course I cannot ask you to judge on how well our questions are being answered. Let me say they are not being asnwered in the least. The government is asking parliament to approve vast expenditures on programs which look like nothing more than a profit maintenance system for industries in Canada, some of which may need it but most of which do not. It is not being selective. It is an election year, so you must not be selective. After all, everybody has a vote so everybody participates in the boondock.

Let us consider the benefits that have been provided under this legislation to the ordinary taxpayer. We see a very nice juggling act. There is always an equation in a tax proposition. To the extent that one group pays less tax, other groups have to pay more. To the extent that this $125 million is being given away without any indication that it will provide jobs, the taxpayers in Canada who are not in industry have to pay for it. The money that is given to them under one provision is being entirely nullified under the other provision. In this bill we have a great sleight of hand, this juxtaposition of one thing to the other.

For a long time there has been evidence that tax concessions to industry do not stimulate the economy. I would like to refer to a very important speech made by the hon. member for Duvernay. I see the members of his party laughing at him. They did not laugh when they were falling over themselves trying to encourage him to be a candidate for their party. They laugh now because he had the courage to disagree with the trained seals in his party who are prepared to watch unemployment in Canada rise without saying a thing. He at least had the courage to dissent. He has now become an object of derision to his colleagues.

The hon. member for Duvernay has had wide experience in industry. He is a former president of the Montreal stock exchange. He is not the only one who has stated that tax concessions to industry do not stimulate the economy. The basis on which industry expands, and perhaps the only basis on which it expands intelligently, is consumer demand. If there is demand for a product and industry can produce the product at a profit, it requires no more stimulation than that. You can stimulate industry all you like, but if a consumer does not have any money to purchase a product, no expansion will take place. If the world market for metals is down, talking all taxes away from the mining industry will not encourage it to produce because there is no market for its goods.

We in this House are being asked to vote a vast sum of money to make it easier for the Liberal party to prove they are the friend of business in an election year. We are not prepared to be so generous to the Liberal party. At the beginning of the discussion of this clause we asked a number of questions in the hope that the Minister of State would give us an intelligent explanation and logical reason as to how the expenditures under clause 2 will result in additional employment in Canada. All we got from the minister was pious hope and vague suggestions that the government's program is enormously successful, although it is very difficult to sort out whether it is because of this measure, another measure or something else. Surely it is an abominable thing to come to the House of Commons, which is responsible to the people of Canada for expenditures made on their behalf, and ask us to vote over $100 million on this basis.

We are talking about the party that prides itself on its business acumen. That party says it is the manager; the Liberals know how to run the country and know how business should be conducted. However, it cannot give an even half intelligent account to parliament of $125 million. This is unthinkable for anyone who has the interests of the nation at heart. We are not averse to spending money to help the economy. We are often accused of being the big-time spenders. This is the party that wants to spend all the time, so they say.

When we suggest there should be a more generous contribution to old age pensioners, or we should take a less jaundiced view of the poor in our society, the government says that we want to spend this country into poverty. However, when the Liberal party wants to lay out $125 million to industry for a program they cannot even defend, that is not charity or welfare, that is business acumen. It is not good enough. We are not convinced, and unless we get some better answers from the other side we cannot accept this proposition.

Mr. Broadbent: I should like to add a few words to those of my hon. friend. The Liberal party in Canada is made up of lawyers, junior executives and the like.

Mr. Stafford: What are you?

Mr. Broadbent: They claim that the only party in this country which has any experience of the workings of the economy is the Liberal party.

Mr. Mahoney: We have a couple of professors, too.

Mr. Broadbent: Yes, they are there as well.

Mr. Stafford: Tell us about yours.

Mr. Broadbent: The witticism of the evening! It was not even from the hon. member from Hamilton; it was the hon. member for Elgin, that distinguished jurist who is now an economist. If ever an example were needed of the business and financial sensitivity of the Liberal party, we see it here tonight. They say they will cut taxes payable by the corporate sector to the extent of —what is it, $125 million?

They say this will be a wonderful thing for the economy. But they have not presented a shred of economic analysis in support of this view. They cannot cite any economist in this country or in the western world who would support the ludicrous statement made by a minister of the Crown a few minutes ago to the effect that this money is being sensibly spent. If the minister wishes to learn something about tax policy which will stimulate the economy, he should go to Norway, to Sweden or to West Germany.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: All these countries have had growth rates in the past 15 years which exceed the growth rate here. All of them have unemployment rates not above 3 per cent. The unemployment rate in West Germany is .5 per cent. I would remind hon. members that West Germany is governed by a social democratic party. Germany has imported two million foreigners to work there because the economy is being run so efficiently.

[Mr. Saltsman.]

Japan, which was visited recently by a minister of the Crown, is by no means governed by a social democratic party but it is governed by a party which believes that economic planning is necessary, a party which believes it is important to control foreign investment and to determine which sectors of the economy should receive tax stimulus and which should not. It is a basic but sad fact of history that the party which has governed this country for most of the years since the Second World War should claim it has real insight into the management of a sophisticated, modern economy.

The only reason our economy has been relatively successful, and it has, is that there has been a powerful growth of the total North American economy, generated in the main by the country to the south of us, and there have been some fortunate spin-off effects. Unless the government smartens up and begins to use taxation policy in an entirely different way from the approach it has been taking up till now, we can expect that our economy, which is already slipping vis-à-vis those of the countries I mentioned earlier, will get much worse.

The kind of clause we see before us, which simply throws $125 million to the corporate sector in the hope that inevitably the party opposite will get a substantial donation to party funds in the forthcoming election, is an absolute disgrace.

Clause agreed to: Yeas, 39; nays, 12.

On clause 3—Reduction of refundable dividend tax on hand.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Chairman, I think we should ask the Minister of State for an explanation of clause 3. The language does not make it very clear.

Mr. Mahoney: Clause 3 is a consequential amendment which reduces the tax refundable to a private corporation on its investment income to reflect the 7 per cent reduction in its corporate tax. The hon. member will recall from his intense study of the tax reform legislation that private corporations only pay an effective tax rate of 25 per cent on their investment income. This is accomplished by having them pay the basic rate of 50 per cent under section 123 when they earn the income and then refunding 25 per cent to them under section 129 when they distribute the investment income to shareholders. Since the basic corporate tax under section 123 is being reduced by 7 per cent, the tax refundable under section 129 must also be reduced by the same percentage, that is, from 100 per cent to 93 per cent.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 4—Reduction of refundable capital gains tax on hand.

Mr. Saltsman: Could the minister provide us with an explanation of this clause as well?

Mr. Mahoney: The explanation here is precisely the explanation just given in respect of clause 3, except that we are speaking now about the tax refundable to a mutual fund corporation on its capital gains. This, again, has to reflect a reduction of 7 per cent of the tax deducted, but in the case we are now dealing with, the tax refundable has to be reduced by 8.75 per cent rather than by 7 per cent because the federal government does not retain any of its share of the corporate tax on such gains; there is a full flow-through of capital gains tax on capital gains of mutual funds through the mutual fund itself to the unit holders.

Clause agreed to.

• (2110)

On clause 5—

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Chairman, I would repeat my previous request that the minister give an explanation of this clause.

Mr. Mahoney: Mr. Chairman, this clause modifies paragraph 51 of the income tax application rules so that the 7 per cent tax reduction will properly apply to a 1972 taxation year that began before July, 1971. Paragraph 51 provides a general rule for computing a corporation's tax payable for the 1972 taxation year where that taxation year falls partly in 1971 and partly in 1972. The technical amendment in this clause was necessary so that the 7 per cent corporate tax reduction would take effect on June 30, 1971, if we were dealing with a corporation's 1972 taxation year which overlapped June 30, 1971; for example, a 12-month taxation year ending March 31, 1972.

I might say, in anticipation of a question on the next clause, that clause 6 makes precisely the same change for co-operatives which also have a special rule for the computation of their tax for the 1972 taxation year.

Clause 6 agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the bill be read the third time? Now, by leave?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Mahoney (for the Minister of Finance) moved the third reading of the bill.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to reiterate what I said either on second reading or in committee. I think we made our position quite clear on this bill and anything now said would be in addition, either by way of extended comment or by way of comment in support of referral back of any particular clause to committee, would be anti-climactic and I do not think would serve any useful purpose.

We regret that the government has seen fit to take the position it has with regard to clause 1. Nevertheless, we are caught, with the Income Tax Act as it is, with a flat exemption, and the errors that existed will be perpetuated. I am also sorry the thrust of this tax reduction in the personal income tax sector has been not concentrated upon the medium and lower income earners rather than granting a 3 per cent reduction across the board. As far as the corporation tax is concerned, I think it unfortunate that this is limited to 18 months. I do not think a one-year exemption as provided by the bill or a 3 per cent reduction is sufficient to do anything really worth while. However, it is some very light measure of relief and to that extent we support it.

We have supported the bill generally and I shall not object to its passage, though it is an extremely poor, niggardly bill.

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I should like to move:

That Bill C-169 be not now read a third time but that it be referred back to committee of the whole House for the purpose of reconsidering clause 2 thereof.

I should like to explain briefly the reasoning behind this motion which follows directly from what I said a few minutes ago.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. If the hon. member will excuse me, I think the motion should be put to the House at this time. The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), moves:

That Bill C-169 be not now read a third time but that it be referred back to committee of the whole House for the purpose of reconsidering clause 2 thereof.

Mr. Broadbent: As I was starting to say a minute ago, Mr. Speaker, the reason I am moving this motion is that the minister of the Crown has failed completely to justify the corporate tax giveaway provided in clause 2 of this bill. He has shown no reason whatsoever why the taxpayers of Canada should be subsidizing the corporate sector by this kind of tax reduction. I did try to make it clear that this party, in contrast to what the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) suggested earlier, was not at all opposed to the provision of a corporate tax reduction. In fact, we would support a corporate tax reduction at this time if the government tried to relate it to the generation of new employment.

I suggested earlier this afternoon that this might have been done in one of two ways. First, by an across-the-board tax reduction applying to all sectors of the economy, such as the service sector, manufacturing and resource sectors alike, provided that a corporation in any one of those sectors showed at the end of the fiscal year that it had increased the number of employees working for it. We would then have seen a direct benefit to the economy. Such a proposal would have been a little more complicated than what I am now suggesting, but at least there would have been some reason for making a connection between a tax benefit and employment, instead of supporting a tax cut that bore no relation whatsoever to a firm's capacity to generate new jobs.

The second approach I suggested which would warrant a tax reduction in the corporate sector would be to make the reduction exclusive to the service and manufacturing sectors of the economy. The reason for that is the one advanced by many economists and others in the country, namely, that the service and manufacturing sectors employ many more people per investment dollar than does the resource sector. Therefore, if we are to use tax policy as a means of generating employment one could at least see some plausible connection between a tax reduction at this time and the creation of employment.

It is precisely because clause 2 of the government's measure does not in any way show a plausible connection between the tax reduction and job creation that we cannot support it. This motion is therefore intended to send the bill back to committee at which time we would attempt to make the kind of amendment I have just outlined. It would be designed to reflect a serious attempt to institute a tax policy under which we could reduce taxes for industries in which jobs would result from such tax cuts, and we would not reduce taxes for the entire corporate sector at the expense of the people of this country merely to create a kind of welfare state for the corporate sector only.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of State (Mr. Mahoney) who is piloting this bill through the House surprises me. Having listened to him and to his argument, I conclude that he expects us to believe that the bill before us will keep the economy afloat. He implies that bills such as this have kept the economy on a paying basis for a number of years, that they have kept the economy growing and that, therefore, we are dealing with a major piece of legislation to end unemployment. At the same time, it has not been given the billing that the winter works program, the Opportunities for Youth program or other programs have been given.

If the minister is right in his assertion that the reduction in tax will bring about all the benefits he suggests it will, then I am surprised that this bill has not been built up more by the Liberal party. Surely it could become one of their main election planks. Here is a measure which will permit industry to expand and unemployment to decrease, and it will cost only several million dollars.

There are differences of opinion as to what the 7 per cent corporate tax reduction will cost the treasury. The former minister of finance, now Minister of National Defence (Mr. Benson) said as reported on page 8691 of Hansard for October 4, 1971:

> The expenditure programs I have described are designed and will be administered in such a way as to have the earliest possible impact. The corporate tax cut is expected to result in a reduction of federal revenues of $160 million in fiscal year 1971-72, and a reduction of $175 million in fiscal year 1972-73. The cut in personal taxes is expected to reduce federal revenues by $125 million in fiscal year 1971-72 and by $225 million in fiscal year 1972-73.

He indicated that these cuts would cost the treasury of Canada approximately $1,000 million. That kind of expenditure should be given much more prominent billing. If the government thinks this piece of legislation will accomplish what it is supposed to accomplish, one would expect the government to give it much more prominent billing.

I know that many industries in this country are asking for tax reductions. I come from a resource area. If you reduce taxes for resource industries, you will find that not one extra job will be created and not one extra pound of metal will be taken out of the ground. Inco, one of the largest mining companies in the world and certainly one of the largest in Canada, has been given its share of reduction in taxes over the past six months. During the past six months there have been massive lay-offs in that company. Many lay-offs are contemplated for the forthcoming year. Clearly, tax cuts have done nothing in that resource area. The same is true of the copper industry; there have been lay-offs there, too. Tax cuts have not produced extra employment in that industry.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Peters: Silver is a valuable commodity mined in my area. Silver mines are entitled to their share of corporate tax cuts. That industry has almost totally closed down. The fault lies largely with price of silver. Clearly, a 7 per cent tax cut in that area will not produce jobs. The same is true of the forest products industry, another large resource industry. For six months we have been dangling this carrot in front of that industry. Yet it is safe to say that there have been few periods in Canada's history when there have been more bankruptcies in that basic industry than in the past six months, particularly in northern Ontario and northern Quebec where we need many jobs.

The minister suggested that tax cuts have been used as a carrot, so to speak, to bring about employment in resource industries and induce expansion generally in the industrial sector. If this method works, if tax cuts will bring about increased production of certain commodities, I would agree with him. He suggested that if you reduce the cost of producing a certain commodity, more of that commodity will be produced. I agree with him. Nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, the government's policy does not work. It has not worked in the industries I have mentioned. It has not worked in iron, and I will bet it has not worked in oil although I am not sure about the oil industry. I have heard members representing oil industry constituencies crying of the need for larger contracts with the United States. That shows that sales perhaps are not as great as anticipated. The carrot technique is not helping these industries.

Other factors have influenced considerably our failure to make sales. The hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman) referred to some factors. Since we have not sold as much as we expected to sell, I suggest that the government has put the cart before the horse. For instance, in the last 18 months over half a million people in Canada have not had enough money to buy anything except the bare necessities of life. They have been getting unemployment insurance, welfare and subsistence allowances. People like that are not in the market to buy. Therefore, the subsidies which the government is making available in the form of corporate tax cuts will not produce the results that are hoped for.

Anyone looking at the rest of the world will find that Canada's position is unenviable. Too much of our gross national product is derived from raw resource materials. These must be sold on international markets and we are finding it increasingly difficult to sell our raw materials at competitive prices on world markets. One must include not only products such as I have already mentioned but also agricultural products. Certainly, we are selling a great deal of wheat on international markets. But Mr. Speaker, having talked to agricultural producers, I understand that the Wheat Board is selling our wheat for less than its cost of production. Clearly, reducing corporate taxes will not help that industry and will not produce jobs in other resource industries.

In some industries we have been fortunate. I suggest, however, that the $125 million the treasury saved in the past six months would have been better spent if used to find markets for Canadian goods. People I have talked to say they are interested in seeing government money assist in the development of new industry. They want to see the government participate in and operate certain industries. People are fed up with seeing $100 million spent in this field and $100 million in that on stopgap programs that bring no lasting result.

We had a stopgap program in respect of winter works. I am sure if we had sat down and thoroughly discussed it, we could have come up with a much more productive program. We spent $150 million on that program with no lasting results. If we had spent $150 million for the benefit of certain industries in some of the disadvantaged areas in Canada, we would have helped a large number of people and this would have had a cumulative effect. It would have provided jobs for many more who would be directly involved in the particular industry being subsidized.

To those members who say this provision is an inducement to industry, I say that unless they can show that it has produced more jobs in the direction in which it was aimed they will find that the loss to the Canadian taxpayer in respect of the companies which in my opinion did not need any tax concession will far outweight the few industries which will obtain legitimate benefit from this measure and in the end produce employment for people in their industries and the service industries surrounding them.

In respect of the 3 per cent reduction that is allowed the general public, it would seem there are many better ways to provide a fair and reasonable tax concession. People who write to me are interested in the personal exemption being raised to a reasonable level. The amount of $2,500 for a single person and $4,500 for a married person has been suggested. Some of my colleagues have suggested that the amounts be $2,000 and $4,000. We presented amendments to this effect when the income tax changes were before us. In this case, however, the concession in respect of the personal exemption is negligible at the low end of the scale. Any hon. member who has looked at his tax form for last year will know that 3 per cent at the level of his stipend will be quite advantageous to him. When one is paying income tax of $5,000, 3 per cent is quite an important factor. The average worker, however, who pays less than $300 will find that 3 per cent of that amount is not much help to him and is not much of a concession by the government. We give to those who have and wave at those who do not.

It seems to me that the government is giving a concession which will really not produce the result the minister suggests. The government has had six months in which to operate this piece of legislation: I believe it was implemented under the budget which was introduced last October. It has been in effect since then and, obviously, if you give a concession of 7 per cent on the tax a corporation has to pay it represents a large amount of money for a large number of companies. I suggest that if this is so, the results of that program should be evident and should be the subject of a calculation as to the number of jobs it has produced and its ability to keep companies in operation.

I think of some companies which recently have gone out of business. One is the company across the river. The 7 per cent did not keep it in business. Then there is the pulp mill in Timiskaming. It did not keep it in business. It did not make it any easier for the Spruce Falls company to keep its employees all year; they are suffering lay-offs at the present time. I believe every member here can think of a corporation in his area, particularly the large United States corporations, from which we did not derive any benefit because of the tax reduction which we provided but who have been adversely affected by outside influences which the minister ought to be looking into rather than making tax concessions. I believe the government could have distributed this thousand million dollars in a way that jobs were created and companies encouraged to go into production in a variety of fields. Rather than that, we are giving hand-outs to those who do not need them.

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I shall speak for only two minutes simply to indicate that this bill is a piece of ludicrous nonsense and that the Liberal government is about six months behind the times. This bill implements and embodies the budget measures announced last October by the late minister of finance who has now gone to a better resting place. When the Liberal government was in a panic in respect of the unemployment situation, it knew it was in a desperate position and had to do something. The government announced that it intended to introduce these tax cuts, a 7 per cent tax cut for corporations and a 3 per cent tax cut for individuals. They even embodie some inequities.

I want to draw to the attention of the House that when that measure was announced last October we had something of a levelling-off and in some cases even a drop in corporation profits. This no longer is the case. Today there is a sharp increase in corporation profits. The pattern today is for a sharp rise in corporation profits in 1972. These corporations will have the benefit of these tax cuts in a year when profits are rising sharply. I predict this will have an adverse effect on the economy before the year is out. The corporations will even have the benefit of capital gains during the year. There will be tax benefits accruing to these corporations. I believe, as this bill demonstrates, that the government is behind the times and the Canadian people know it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. Is the House ready for the question.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Division

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The question is on the amendment to the motion. All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—REQUEST FOR REPRESENTATIONS ON BEHALF OF OPPRESSED UKRAINIANS—EFFECTIVENESS OF CANADIAN ACTION

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, on March 2 I asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) what action he and the government contemplated following presentation to him by the Ukrainian Canadian Committee of a very important petition. This group of highly responsible and thoughtful Canadians had alleged widespread arrests of Ukrainian intellectuals by the governing authorities of the Soviet Union. I asked if the minister or the government had made any representations to the Soviet government concerning this very serious allegation. I also asked if the government of Canada planned to seek an investigation by any international body concerned with human rights and fundamental freedoms.

Whether the minister's reply brought satisfaction to the Ukrainian Canadian Committee or not, I cannot say. I can only observe that it impressed me as something less than convincing. The minister's observation that he had had a discussion with the committee was not news. That they had left the matter with him was also a subject in the common domain. But when on a supplemental I asked if the minister's non-reply indicated that the government had not found an effective way of dealing with the problem, he moved on to talk, not about Ukrainian intellectuals but the reuniting of Jewish families who were being oppressed throughout the world.

Why the sudden change of subject? Why the reluctance to advise the Ukrainian Canadian Committee and the House about the follow-through on this grave allegation? I have always welcomed the diminution of cold war tensions and increased contacts between the governments and people of countries once estranged. But if the era of good will does not allow for exchange of views and inquiries such as this, what does it mean? What is its value?

I hope that we shall get some forthright replies. I hope that Moscow and Ottawa will not just proclaim closer contacts, but use them. The minister often tells us, sometimes self-righteously it seems to me, that we are dedicated to the pursuit of freedom and liberty for all. Here is a chance to do more than preach. Let us take up these matters seriously and seek a reply from the Soviet Union. If we demur from asking, our inflow of information will naturally be limited. In the absence of information we cannot begin to be helpful on the issue.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) did not hesitate to make gratuitous and reprehensible public comments about the United States when he was in Russia. Perhaps his government and its ministers will in this instance not hesitate to make use of our cordial diplomatic contacts with the Soviet Union to pursue full and serious inquiries on the matter brought so forcefully and so sincerely to the minister's attention.

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the government fully sympathizes with the views expressed on this issue by many Canadians. However, given the precepts of international law regarding intervention in the internal affairs of another state, direct representations to the Soviet authorities or to any international body might only provoke a negative reaction from the Soviet authorities and could very easily bring about results opposite to those desired.

During his visit to the Soviet Union, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) nevertheless raised similar and related matters with Mr. Kosygin on humanitarian and compassionate grounds. During Mr. Kosygin's visit to Ottawa, these issues were raised again both by the Prime Minister and by the Committee on External Affairs and National Defence of this House. I am confident that the Soviet authorities are now fully aware of our position.

The persistent and quiet diplomatic means we have used in relation to these issues have produced some results. As the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) has stated in this House, the Canadian government has been more effective in reuniting Jewish families than any other government in the world. As far as the arrested Ukrainian intellectuals are concerned, it would seem appropriate under the circumstances to use such techniques as we have found successful on related matters.

Sensitive issues between states can be broached only in an atmosphere of mutual confidence and trust if negative reactions are to be avoided. The government believes that Canada has to a certain extent been successful in achieving such an atmosphere vis-à-vis the Soviet Union.

[Translation]

And the government of Canada, Mr. Speaker, intends indeed to keep on using advanced methods, be they suggested by the private or public sector, to assist in the solution of problems such as those raised by the hon. member for Hillsborough.

[English]

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—RETIRED EMPLOYEES' PENSIONS—REQUEST FOR ANNUAL ESCALATION AND CHANGE IN BASIS OF CALCULATION—REPRESENTATIONS BY MINISTER

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday, February 29, as reported at page 360 of Hansard, I put this question to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson):

In view of mounting concern with respect to Canadian National pensions, including both the need for the pensions of those already retired to be escalated annually, and the need to calculate Canadian national pensions on the basis of a factor of 2 per cent per year of service, will the minister make renewed representations to the Canadian National concerning these two matters?

The reply of the minister was that he would be glad to do so, whereupon I asked him a supplementary question in connection with how he was getting along with the Canadian Pacific Railway in regard to pensions. I received no answer to that question so perhaps we will deal with the CPR on another occasion.

Then on Friday, March 10, as reported in Hansard at page 713, I put another question to the Minister of Transport in these terms:

In view of the fact that Air Canada is now computing the pensions of all its employees on the basis of 2 per cent for each year of service, will the minister ask Canadian National Railways when it will take similar action and raise the basis of its pension plan from 1½ per cent to 2 per cent?

The minister was good enough to reply that he would direct this question to the Canadian National and that he would pass the reply to me when it was received. There really is not much more I want to place before the House tonight by way of argument than the points set out in the questions I have read from the record. There is a great deal of feeling among Canadian National employees and pensioners concerning the pension situation. There are many improvements which they feel should be made, but the two main ones are those I suggested in my question of February 29, namely, the need to provide for the escalation of the pensions of those already retired to take place every year instead of just once, as has been the case thus far, and the need to put the basis for the calculating of Canadian National pensions on a 2 per cent factor, as is the case with so many other pension plans.

In my question of March 10 I made an allusion, which I think is terribly important in this whole situation, to the fact that Air Canada, which is owned by Canadian National Railways, does have a pension plan under which its employees get 2 per cent credit for each year of service. It does seem quite inconsistent, when Air Canada provides a 2 per cent factor, for the Canadian National, which as I say owns Air Canada, to provide only a 1½ per cent factor for the calculation of its pensions.

So, Mr. Speaker, I raise these two questions again tonight, an annual escalation and the establishing of a 2 per cent factor, because they are of intense concern to the people affected and because they feel, as I do, that it is time for action on both of these issues.

Mr. Ian Watson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I wish to respond to the matter raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) on behalf of my colleague the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Duquet) who is unable to be here tonight.

All hon. members are aware of the continuing efforts that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has made and is making, as well as the work of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, to bring about changes which would better the position of Canadian National pensioners. Members of all political parties in this House have over the past number of years made very strong representations to the Minister of Transport on behalf of these pensioners. I have a volume of correspondence in my own files on this subject. I also have a number of CN pensioners in my constituency and I, along with other hon. members of the House, have made strong representations to the minister and they have been passed on to the CNR.

Some progress has been achieved as a result of these efforts. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) made a statement about a year ago at this time of year and informed the House of certain major contributions made by CNR in this respect. The statement made approximately one year ago covered a wide range of CNR pensioners, their widows and survivors. The measures which were announced implemented most of the recommendations of the standing committee's report.

I agree, however, that there is need for further consideration on the part of CNR. Certainly there is no lack of sympathy on my part and on the part of the minister. If we cannot budge the CNR except by some form of legislation, I hope that some day the minister will consider that as a final resort. I am speaking as an individual Member of Parliament in that regard and not for the minister.

The minister has assured me, as he has assured the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, that he is making the strongest representations to the CNR and he has asked me, in my capacity as speaking for his parliamentary secretary, to inform the hon. member that he is continuing his discussions with the CNR and that he will give every possible consideration to the representations which the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre made to him on February 29 and on March 10.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE—DELAY IN PAYMENT OF BENEFITS—POSSIBLE DECENTRALIZATION OF SERVICES FROM MONTREAL

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, on March 7, I put the following question to the Prime Minister:

> Since this situation is becoming increasingly worse because a great number of unemployed must wait five, six or even ten weeks, especially in Quebec, before drawing their first cheque of unemployment insurance benefits, can the Prime Minister tell us whether his government intends to improve those conditions in the very near future?

And the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of manpower and Immigration (Mr. Perrault) who was answering for the Unemployment Insurance Commission, stated, and I quote:

> If there are cases of what is alleged to be an inordinate delay these will be investigated immediately,—

Mr. Speaker, in my opinion the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration has misled the House by his prepostorous comments.

Since January I am swamped by a flow of unemployment insurance cases. I am aware that this new legislation was very poorly explained to the public. I understand, and the Parliamentary Secretary should understand it also, that this is not the proper time to make inquiries to see what is wrong. It is time rather to seek a settlement of this most unfortunate situation.

In my view, there are three main reasons for those delays. Everywhere, on television, on radio and in newspapers, everyone was told: You will receive weekly unemployment insurance benefits of $100 the new plan is completely improved, the government is going modern, it is thinking of you, and other things along those lines.

Such announcements put the people to sleep, and when they wake up they realize that they have had a bad dream.

I would now like to call the attention of the House to a telegram that I received from the provincial member of the constituency of Wolfe, on March 15, 1972, and I quote:

> My Dear Léonel:
> Re: Raymond Béliveau Stratford
> Received nothing for 16 weeks STOP Henri Poulin Garthby. Mr. Poulin stopped work in early December and has not received anything since last week STOP Family man, children, great hardship, brought before the court for non-payment of bills . . .
> Those are but a few of the numerous cases that exist in the riding, people who should receive unemployment benefits STOP I tried to help them by making representations on behalf of these people but to no avail STOP I hope that you may be able to see to it that the fine talk about unemployment benefits one hears on television is implemented so that these people will receive what they are entitled to. Thank you for your co-operation.
> René Lavoie, member for Wolfe

Similar cases, Mr. Speaker, around Sherbrooke are a common occurrence, they come up every day, even three, four, five and even ten times a day.

The answer that thousands of unemployed receive when cheques are delayed indefinitely, is this: Sir, we are waiting to hear from Montreal. Sir, your file has been lost. Sir, we have mislaid your file. Sir, we think you are not entitled to unemployment benefits.

Mr. Speaker, I should like the hon. parliamentary secretary to the Minister to tell us if that is what those people will use to buy food, fuel oil and survive this winter.

It is a great pity that the unemployed do not receive their benefits and have to go to welfare offices to beg for their pittance in order to survive, because that is too complicated in Montreal and machines are not doing the required work, etc.

Mr. Speaker, on Thursday March 16 I asked the minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Mackasey) the following question:

> A few days ago, in the minister's absence, due to circumstances beyond his control I am sure, I pointed out to his parliamentary secretary that a very difficult situation had developed in the Unemployment Insurance regional office in Sherbrooke, namely that the number of employees had been increased by about 25 or 30 per cent on the same premises, and that service to the unemployed was thus greatly reduced, since many of them had been waiting eight or ten weeks now to get their unemployment insurance cheques. Is the inquiry over now and can the hon. minister tell us whether something is being done in order to improve that situation?

To which the Minister replied as follows:

Mr. Speaker, I must admit that the allegation regarding any slowness in the unemployment insurance office in Sherbrooke has not come to my attention, but I will look at it as soon as possible and report to the hon. gentleman.

There again, Mr. Speaker, I believe that this government's left hand does not know what its right hand is doing. The parliamentary secretary told me he would look into the matter and ten days later there are still unemployed people waiting for their cheques and no inquiry has been initiated as yet.

That is why I say that this is not the time for inquiries, but for improvements, for telling the truth about the Unemployment Insurance Act and refraining from "electioneering", promising Canadians pie in the sky.

Before a legislation is enacted, I suggest it should be seen to that administrative services required to meet demands under the legislation be set up.

[English]

Mr. Ray Perrault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the kindest thing that can be said about the hon. member's remarks is that they are short on facts and long on emotional appeal not based on fact. The hon. member, despite the comments in the House the other day, has yet to contact me personally in respect of any of these so-called delay cases. Unfortunately he was not in the House the other evening, March 14, when we undertook an investigation of the situation at Sherbrooke at the instigation of one hon. member. We were advised by the Unemployment Insurance Commission that between January 24 and March 14 the hon. member had submitted to the Sherbrooke office a grand total of 132 cases, not 450. In any event, as of March 10, 1972, the Sherbrooke office was in the process of answering only 19 cases submitted by the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin). This hon. member had been interested in the list he had at that time at the local office.

I hope some hon. members will not try to seize upon this issue of alleged delays in unemployment insurance benefits in order to make some sort of political capital out of it—

Mr. Beaudoin: You do this, rather than me.

Mr. Perrault: —because that is trafficking in human misery. There were some delays identified in January and February because of systems problems. These amounted to about 5,000 cases. These cases have long ago been corrected. We have no significant backlog in unemployment insurance operations in this country.

There will always be some cases delayed initially because information is not available from the claimant or his employer, or there are administrative errors; but this amounts to less than 2 per cent of new claims and less than two-tenths of one per cent of current claims. There is constant monitoring going on throughout the system and in all offices to ensure that claims are processed as speedily as possible, and there are quality assurance controls to keep the number of errors to an absolute minimum. Even though people complain of computers, there have been no major breakdowns in our five computer systems and no major delays caused by equipment breakdowns. Our greatest difficulty has been with the manual pay system which was designed as a short-term, interim system in the introduction of the new act.

Finally, one should look at the good points of the program. The benefits paid in December, 1971, were 70 per cent higher than in 1970; the number of weeks paid were 13 per cent higher and the average weekly payments were 50 per cent higher. In the month of January, for example, $130 million was paid out to the unemployed people of Canada from coast to coast, thousands in the province of Quebec, most of them paid on time. In January of 1971, $85 million was paid out and in 1972 fewer people were unemployed than in 1971.

Let us not forget, Mr. Speaker, that there are human beings working in the unemployment insurance and when we hear these statements about callous, indifferent unemployment insurance staff we are attacking a substantial number of people in the work force of this country who are doing a dedicated job and working overtime every week in order to give service to this hon. member's constituents and thousands of other people in the country. I resent very much the kind of attack made in the House tonight about people who are 16 weeks late receiving payments. Let the hon. member bring his list to the House instead of standing up every day attacking unemployment insurance and making this inaccurate, emotional appeal.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.34 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. KNOWLES (WINNIPEG NORTH CENTRE)—INCORRECT ANSWER TO WRITTEN QUESTION NO. 27

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise briefly on a question of privilege. In the answer to my written question No. 27, which appears in yesterday's Hansard at page 949, there is a rather substantial error. The number of persons listed as receiving the full amount of the guaranteed income supplement is shown as a little over 110,000, whereas the figure should be over 484,000. The department has admitted to me that there is a mistake and has assured me that a corrected reply will be forthcoming in a day or two. I trust, therefore, that anyone interested in these statistics will wait for the corrected reply.

ANNOUNCEMENT OF IMPLEMENTATION OF LIVESTOCK DIVERSION PROGRAM FOR POTATOES IN PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, because of the interest that has been shown in the House in this matter, I wish to announce that the Agricultural Stabilization Board will implement tomorrow the livestock diversion program recently developed for potatoes in Prince Edward Island. In accordance with the concept of the advance payment, and as I indicated earlier in the House, those who do not wish to participate in this program can obtain possession of potatoes committed to the board by repayment of the advance. The Agricultural Stabilization Board will keep a close watch on supplies and prices, and the extent of the livestock feed program will depend upon the level of producer participation and price reaction.

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) for his statement and to congratulate him on acquiescing to the requests of the Prince Edward Island Federation of Agriculture, the potato committee and other interested bodies. I hope, with him, that the program he has announced will prove to be beneficial both to potato growers and to livestock feeders in Prince Edward Island and that any potatoes not diverted but bought back will also be to the advantage of the growers.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, as I understand the program undertaken by the government on behalf of potato growers, the government is taking a new approach to that followed up to now. In fact, it is a sort of combination cash payment and storage program, giving the producer the option of either taking his product out or leaving it in. As far as we are concerned, we will be prepared to assess the program when it is finished to see if it has really worked to the advantage and met the needs of the producers. In fact, in the final paragraph of his statement the minister said they will keep a close watch on the program to see how it works out.

On the order: Introduction of Bills.

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of bills.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Stand.

Mr. Speaker: There are ten private bills which were placed on the order paper yesterday for introduction. It was indicated by the Chair yesterday that an opportunity should be provided to study the bills from the procedural standpoint. By agreement with the hon. members concerned, no decision will be made at this time and the bills will be allowed to stand.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

POSSIBLE FURTHER FEDERAL STIMULUS AND TAX CUTS—STATEMENT ON TAX POLICY OR BUDGET BEFORE EASTER RECESS

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In light of the pre-budget submission of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce that the economy needs further stimulation in 1972 and immediate personal and corporate tax cuts to increase demand and reduce unemployment, can the minister inform the House whether the government agrees that further federal stimulus is required and whether the government is contemplating immediate action to reduce taxes?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I met yesterday with a committee of the council of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce. They presented me with their views on fiscal policy, monetary policy and taxation. Any response the government would make to that brief would be announced in the appropriate way at the appropriate time.

Mr. MacLean: Is it the position of the government that present government intentions in the private sector are inadequate and, if so, is the government going to develop immediately a special tax incentive to encourage expansion of business plant investment?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Hon. members know that from time to time I have taken exception procedurally to questions drafted in this way. When hon. members ask whether such and such is the position of the government I have the impression that perhaps hon. members are seeking an expression of opinion. I would suggest that hon. members might try to draft questions in another form. Perhaps the hon. member's question might be replied to briefly by the minister.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has really rephrased his question, and I would have to respond to it in the same way.

Mr. MacLean: Can the Minister of Finance inform the House whether it is his intention to make a definitive statement on government policy with regard to taxation, as requested by the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, either by itself or in the form of a budget presentation before the Easter recess?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Not before the Easter recess, Mr. Speaker.

INQUIRY AS TO PRESENTATION OF BUDGET BEFORE ELECTION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. I wonder whether the minister might be able to inform the House whether there will be a budget before the election is called, or does the government intend to conceal its financial position until late fall or not reveal it at all?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not know when the election is going to be called, and I do not know whether I should consider the 1962-63 precedent of the right hon. gentleman.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Apparently the minister has forgotten that we were defeated in the House and therefore we could not do anything unconstitutional. I now ask him, can he give an undertaking to the House that the country will not be denied a financial statement through a budget before the government goes to the country?

[Mr. MacLean.]

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I will just give the right hon. gentleman the undertaking that I will be fair with the country and the House at the appropriate time.

INCREASING FOREIGN INVESTMENT IN ENERGY AND RESOURCE INDUSTRIES—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question.

An hon. Member: Don't bother. He is reading a book.

Mr. Lewis: In view of the statistics released yesterday by Statistics Canada that foreign investment in this country, mainly from the United States, reached an all-time high last year and was directed mainly to the energy and resource industries which are now about 80 per cent foreign-owned and controlled, would the Prime Minister inform the House whether such a continuing expansion of foreign ownership is consistent with the government's policy in this area at this time?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the government has as yet enunciated no policy limiting expansion in that area with the exception of the uranium industry, as the member knows.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT—DATE OF POLICY STATEMENT—DISCUSSION WITH PRESIDENT NIXON ON FORTHCOMING VISIT TO OTTAWA

Mr. David Lewis (York South): May I then ask the Prime Minister whether he can now tell us when parliament and the country may expect the announcement of government policy on this issue?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as I have often said it is unsafe to name a date, but it is probably safe to say it will be before his own party reaches a policy on this matter.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: My party, Mr. Speaker, reached a policy quite some time ago.

An hon. Member: Which side of the waffle?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Now that we have had this exchange, perhaps we might allow the hon. member to ask his supplementary question.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister whether he will announce the policy on foreign ownership before the visit of the President of the United States to Ottawa on April 12, if I remember correctly, and, whether or not the announcement is made, can he say whether the question is on the agenda for discussion with the President of the United States?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the first part of the question I cannot answer for the reason I stated previously, that I would not talk about a date. Therefore the date of the President's visit is known but the date of our announcement is not known. With regard to whether we will talk about it or not, I might answer by saying the agenda has not been fixed between the two countries yet.

UNITED STATES DISC PROGRAM—MEASURES TO COUNTER EFFECTS ON CANADIAN COMPANIES—DISCUSSION WITH PRESIDENT NIXON DURING FORTHCOMING VISIT TO OTTAWA

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): I have a question for the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. Can the Prime Minister give us some indication of the government's thinking in respect of the implementation of the DISC program, and will the Prime Minister give the House and the Canadian people some indication of the procedures and methods whereby the government will try to offset any adverse effects from this program?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce has answered this question at least five times and there is nothing I can add to his answer.

Mr. Alexander: Then may I ask another supplementary. Is it the intention of the government to place this matter before the President of the United States? Acknowledging that the Prime Minister has indicated that the schedule has not been drawn up, is it the government's intention to place this very important question before the President?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, for the reason I just gave the agenda is not set between the two countries, but if the subject is placed on the agenda I will take the view that has been taken by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

USE OF DISC PROGRAM BY UNITED STATES AUTO PARTS MANUFACTURERS—ACTION TO COUNTERACT EFFECTS—SHUTDOWN OF DUPLATE CORPORATION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Is the minister aware that a number of United States parts producers with branch plants in Canada have already set up DISCs in the United States and, if so, has he taken any specific action to counteract the negative effect of this?

• (1420)

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of that and I would appreciate it if the hon. member would provide me with the information, if he has any.

Mr. Broadbent: I will be glad to do so, Mr. Speaker. Second, has the minister investigated the possibility that the recent transfer and announced shutdown of the Duplate Corporation in Windsor, Ontario, is possibly due to the fact that the Chrysler Corporation has now decided to produce its own windshield glass in the United States instead of purchasing it from Canada?

Mr. Pepin: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am aware of that fact, but in many other instances that I could quote the opposite has taken place. Companies in the United States have decided to use parts made in Canada. So this is not a frozen situation; it keeps moving all the time, sometimes in the Canadian interest and at other times against Canadian interests.

POLLUTION

LEVY ON OIL TANKER SHIPMENTS TO PROVIDE CONTINGENCY FUND IN CASE OF SPILLS—RESULT OF DISCUSSIONS WITH NEW BRUNSWICK PREMIER

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Would he report to the House, to the people of the Maritimes and to the oil interests on the result of his conversations yesterday with Premier Hatfield of New Brunswick?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, may I say as briefly as I can that the discussions both yesterday and this morning were, I believe, beneficial to both sides in terms of creating a greater awareness of the difficulties that we both face in this matter. There was an undertaking on my part as a result of the representations made to me this morning to propose certain alternatives which will be conveyed to Premier Hatfield by the weekend. These alternatives will maintain the objectives of the federal government but may result in some changes in the application that will accommodate his objectives as well.

Mr. Forrestall: May I ask the minister when he will tell the people of Nova Scotia about his plans, or will Premier Regan have to learn about them later? Would the minister undertake, rather than waiting for questions to be asked of him this afternoon, to inform the House at the same time as he informs Premier Hatfield of New Brunswick as to the method or procedure which the minister will propose as an alternative to the present system, because of the implications that are involved?

Mr. Jamieson: Any proposals that were made to any one province would, I assume, under normal circumstances be of national application. Under those circumstances I would see no reason for not making them available at the appropriate time but would wish to consult with Premier Hatfield on whether they would or would not cause any impediment to his own negotiations.

Mr. Forrestall: Am I to understand that the minister would not be prepared to make a statement in the House with respect to these matters prior to or at approximately the same time as he conveys these alternatives to the premier of New Brunswick?

Mr. Jamieson: No, Mr. Speaker, and I am sorry if I have misled the hon. member. What I meant to convey was that we would be making certain proposals to the premier. Incidentally, these will probably result in a further set of meetings early next week in Ottawa. Until the proposals are accepted, they are simply that, and he may have to use these in his negotiations with private interests. Only if there is agreement would it seem logical to me to put these forward in public form.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Dauphin. Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Forrestall: No, Mr. Speaker, I do not know how to use points of order. I want to ask a supplementary question, but if I have to I will make it a question of privilege. I want to know what—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair has recognized the hon. member for Dauphin. If the hon. member says he has a point of order I will listen to him and decide if there is a breach of the Standing Orders of the House.

Mr. Forrestall: I will do it on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. If the implication in the responses of the Minister of Transport is that the question of oil levies imposed with respect to pollution is a matter of concern only to a very narrow region of Canada, then the implication to Nova Scotians, to the House of Commons and indeed to those interested in the industrial complex surrounding the minister's procedure with respect to the collection of these levies is not a fair one. I think he should rectify it and at least give some consideration to other parts of Canada.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Dauphin.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT—INDICATION BY UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE COMMISSION CHAIRMAN OF SIX PER CENT RATE FOR 1972—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the statement by the chairman of the Unemployment Insurance Commission indicating that the commission was basing its estimates on a 6 per cent unemployment rate for 1972, can the Prime Minister inform the House whether the figure of 6 per cent is the estimate of the government as a whole?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

APPLICATION BY DOMINION AIRCRAFT CORPORATION FOR GUARANTEE OF BANK LOAN TO PRODUCE PLANE

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Has his department received an application from the Dominion Aircraft Corporation of Vancouver for a government guarantee of a bank loan of some $3 million to enable this Canadian-owned corporation to produce a STOL aircraft, the Skytrader 800, thus providing jobs for between 400 and 500 persons in the lower mainland of British Columbia? Has such an application been received, has it been acceded to, or has it been rejected?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I have previously answered that question in reply to the hon. member for Peace River. I said at the time that indeed an application had been received for a general adjustment assistance program some five or six months ago, and it had been rejected on the basis that the company had no manufacturing capacity in Canada. The company came back two or three weeks ago, this time suggesting that an R. & D. program under PAIT might apply, and this is in the process of being analysed now.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact this company has firm orders for some 23 airplanes, and orders held in abeyance for an additional 17 aircraft, would the minister consider this worthy of review to see whether or not this application—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's supplementary question is obviously a representation to the minister.

AIRCRAFT—INQUIRY AS TO STATEMENT ON ASSISTANCE AND FINANCIAL COMMITMENT BY GOVERNMENT

Mr. Robert P. Kaplan (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, this question is also directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. After the interesting statement he made in the finance committee this morning about the future of the aircraft industry, I would like to ask the minister whether we may expect a major statement about assistance to the industry, when the statement will be made, and will a substantial commitment to the industry be made?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, if my hon. friend has in mind the decision concerning the DCH7 STOL program with de Havilland, a decision is expected very soon indeed. Already certain amounts of money have been spent on that in previous years, and the question is now one of confirming or otherwise the future of this research and development program.

POTATOES—DIVERSION PROGRAM FOR PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND—PRICE LEVEL—POSSIBLE EXPORT SALES

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. While welcoming the minister's announcement this afternoon relative to the diversion of potatoes for feed stock in Prince Edward Island may I say that his statement perhaps raised more questions than it answered. Can he indicate what level of price will be sought with regard to the sale of these potatoes? Also, can he indicate whether or not the Stabilization Board now has exhausted all attempts at any sales of these potatoes so far as export markets are concerned, something he did refer to last week?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the second part of the question is no. There are some prospects that are being explored, not with the Stabilization Board as being the primary seller but being involved with companies that are in that business. So far as the first part of the question is concerned, the price will be low enough so that the potatoes can be used for livestock feed economically.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): When will the minister or his officials be in a position to indicate the exact price? Also, can he indicate whether or not, because of the continuing interest in possible exports and if reefer cars become available, the people presently holding contracts with the board and not wishing to sell for feed stock will be able to hold for that purpose?

Mr. Olson: They can hold for that purpose or any other purpose, the reason primarily being that they expect to get some further value out of selling their potatoes in the present market which, in Prince Edward Island, is substantially at the moment over the advance price level. I would think that the price of the potatoes for livestock feed probably would be around 15 cents per hundredweight, but I am not sure of the exact figure.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): A supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will be allowed a last supplementary but we do have to try to get on with other members' questions.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): In order that Prince Edward Island producers may take advantage of the present higher price, I wonder if the Minister of Agriculture has conferred with the Minister of Transport to see if some further improvement can be made in the supply of reefer cars inasmuch as the CNR estimated they were still 100 short last week?

Mr. Olson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, and there has been a significant improvement even this week.

SHOES—MEASURES TO COUNTERACT BAD EFFECTS OF IMPORTS

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Last week, when I called the minister's attention to the fact that excessive footwear imports could hurt Canadian producers, he replied that he was discussing this problem with the authorities of the Quebec Industry and Commerce Department.

Can he now tell the House what stage these discussions have reached?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, we are making considerable progress, as I indicated in my brief statement this morning when I presented the estimates of my department to the committee.

The gist of our program is to co-ordinate in the best possible way all federal and provincial assistance plans so as to make a larger contribution to the efficiency of this industry, both in productivity and in marketing.

I intend to make a very orderly statement of our efforts in the next few weeks, but a good part of our program is already being implemented. For instance, there are officials of my department now touring industrial plants with consultants and they are explaining these programs—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the minister.

Mr. Beaudoin: I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

The minister apparently wants to announce just what is going on.

Can he state whether the discussions between the federal government and Quebec authorities will finally result in control or reduction of the volume of footwear imports into this country?

Mr. Pepin: I could not guarantee that, Mr. Speaker. However, one thing is essential, that Canadian consumers should not bear the brunt of the operation and therefore the industry itself must absolutely operate at a profit, achieve efficiency in both production and distribution. That is the aim of our present efforts. I believe the population of Canada will agree with this.

TRANSPORT

ATLANTIC PROVINCES—LEVEL OF INTRAREGIONAL SUBSIDY—GENERAL TRANSPORTATION POLICY

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Can the minister inform the House whether the intraregional transportation subsidy within the Atlantic region will be reduced from its present level of 17½ per cent to 15 per cent on April 1?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I understand that for very good reasons the hon. gentleman was not in the House on the day I made a speech. If he had been I do not think his response outside would have been quite as critical. I announced at that time that in fact the intraregional subsidy is not going to be reduced on April 1.

Mr. Coates: I thank the minister and I am sorry that I missed his speech. In view of the fact the subsidy is not going to be reduced, is the minister going to make some other announcement in respect of a transportation policy for the Atlantic provinces in keeping with those recommendations proposed to him by the four Atlantic premiers?

Mr. Jamieson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. In the speech to which the hon. gentleman has referred I did try to indicate what progress has been made on various matters recommended by the premiers. I might suggest to the hon. member that if he would read the speech he would find some of the answers there. Within a day or two we will also be tabling the second report of the federal-provincial committee, which makes other recommendations, and I indicated that I would be prepared to implement those as well.

JAMES BAY HYDROELECTRIC DEVELOPMENT—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON TERMS AND CONDITIONS FOR BUILDING OF STRUCTURES ACROSS NAVIGABLE WATERS

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Last week I posed a question to the Minister of the Environment concerning the so-called James Bay project. It was near the end of the question period and the Minister of Transport interjected and time ran out. May I now ask the Minister of Transport whether he would make a statement on motions prior to the Easter recess to indicate to the House under what terms and conditions the provisions of the Navigable Waters Protection Act would apply to dams, roads, bridges, etc. going across navigable waters? I realize it would not be possible to do so during the oral question period, but I would hope the minister would make a statement on motions prior to the Easter recess.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): I will look into that, Mr. Speaker. If that is not possible in the compact nature of a statement on motions, I shall have all the information as well as the appropriate officers present when my estimates are considered.

JAMES BAY HYDROELECTRIC DEVELOPMENT—CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCE OF ONTARIO

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Transport, Mr. Speaker. Has the minister consulted with the province of Ontario in respect of the James Bay project and their interest in it?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Not personally, Mr. Speaker, but perhaps some of my colleagues have.

AIR TRANSPORT

LOSS OF DEPOSITS BY CUSTOMERS OF CHARTER FLIGHT INFORMATION SERVICES

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): May I direct a question to the Minister of Transport, Mr. Speaker. Last week I asked the minister for information concerning the business failure of an air charter firm in Toronto known as Charter Flight Information Services whereby many customers lost their deposits. The minister said he would look into the matter and report to the House.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the answer is fairly lengthy but I shall be glad to send a written reply to my hon. friend. I can say it appears that this was a matter that involved a travel agency which of itself does not come under federal jurisdiction. After the hon. member has seen the written reply I shall do my best to answer any further questions he may have.

OIL

MEANS OF TRANSPORTATION FROM ALASKA—IMMINENCE OF UNITED STATES DECISION—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the large report issued yesterday in the United States concerning the oil pipeline alternative, and in view of the fact the United States government seems to be moving inexorably toward a decision very soon, is the government of Canada in a position to make a statement on its alternatives on this very important subject?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would add nothing to what we have previously said, that we have let the Washington government know that there is an alternative. Beyond that we have not gone out of our way to seek any presentation of alternatives, but the alternative is there.

Mr. Aiken: A great deal of interest is being evidenced in the discussions that the Prime Minister and the President will have. Does the Prime Minister expect that this subject and the subject of the Great Lakes clean-up may be brought to some conclusion during the President's visit?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, there again, the agenda is not set. I would hope that we are more liable to talk about the Great Lakes than we are about the pipeline.

POSSIBLE JOINT CANADIAN-AMERICAN COMPANY TO BUILD MACKENZIE VALLEY PIPELINE

Mr. Raymond Rock (Lachine): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Are there any plans to form a joint Canadian-American company which would build an oil pipeline, and will this possibility be discussed with President Nixon next month?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, unless the Americans have such a plan that they want to discuss with me.

POLLUTION

STEPS TO ALLEVIATE CONTAMINATION OF HUMBER RIVER BY RAW SEWAGE

Mr. Walter Deakon (High Park): I have a question for the Minister of the Environment, Mr. Speaker, but in his absence perhaps the parliamentary secretary would take it as notice. In view of the excessive dumping of raw sewage by the boroughs of North York and York near the Humber River, will the government take steps to alleviate this pollution and thereby eliminate the hazards to the residents of the area?

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the problem. This is a matter that would normally fall within the jurisdiction of the province of Ontario. However, I shall look into it and if there is contravention of any federal act or regulation we will consider action.

FINANCE

POSSIBLE REDEMPTION OF THREE PER CENT PERPETUAL BONDS

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance concerning a matter about which I wrote him on March 7. Can the minister tell the House whether the government has any immediate plans to redeem the 3 per cent perpetual bonds which are presently so clearly out of line with current bond issues and are causing considerable hardship to investors?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is the kind of question which normally should be placed on the order paper. I suggest to the hon. member that questions such as this one should be placed on the order paper. The hon. member for Hamilton West.

Mr. Alexander: May I direct a question—

Mr. Speaker: I apologize to the hon. member for Hamilton West. The hon. member for Central Nova is rising on a point of order.

Mr. MacKay: My point of order is simply this, Mr. Speaker. This is the second time I have written to the minister on the matter and I have yet to receive a reply. That is why I raise the question at this time.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): If that is the case I apologize, Mr. Speaker, but I wanted to make sure that the hon. member got the most carefully drafted reply possible.

POST OFFICE

POSITION OF NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNIONS ON NEW CONTRACT

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): My question is for the President of the Treasury Board, Mr. Speaker. I asked the minister last Tuesday about the negotiations being carried on with the postal unions. In view of the fact the contract is just about to expire, can the President of the Treasury Board give some indication today as to what is going on and, hopefully, indicate whether he is even more optimistic now of an early settlement than he was last Tuesday?

• (1440)

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I would refer this question to my colleague, the Postmaster General, who is better informed about this matter than I am.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I believe the Postmaster General heard the question and there is no need for me to be repetitious. Can the Postmaster General give some indication of the present status of the negotiations, and is he even more optimistic at this date of an early settlement than was the President of the Treasury Board last Tuesday?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have some doubts about the second part of the question.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, let us forget the second part.

Mr. Speaker: The second part is somewhat academic. Perhaps the minister might like to reply to the first part of the question.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I do not feel that it would be in the public interest to make any comment on these negotiations now being held in camera.

Concerning my optimism, I may say that I am always in a good mood, and I hope that a solution will be found as soon as possible.

GRAIN

SUGGESTED ESTABLISHMENT OF ADDITIONAL TERMINAL ELEVATORS AT PRINCE RUPERT TO RELIEVE PRESSURE ON EXISTING EXPORT FACILITIES

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I inquired of the minister in charge of the Wheat Board about terminal grain facilities at Prince Rupert. The minister said that the Minister of Transport had the possible enlargement of those facilities under active consideration. Can the Minister of Transport set out some timetable as to when he hopes to make an announcement regarding the building of additional facilities at Prince Rupert as well as all the other questions relating to this matter?

An hon. Member: Before the election.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to be absolutely precise, but would the hon. member be satisfied if I were to make a general statement of the type he is asking about in 48 hours?

Mr. Howard (Skeena): On motions?

TAXATION

POSSIBLE REMOVAL OF MASSEY-FERGUSON OFFICES FROM CANADA BECAUSE OF NEW INCOME TAX ACT

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Has the minister or his department had any discussion with Massey-Ferguson concerning the fact that the company may locate its offices outside Canada because of the provisions of the new tax legislation?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker. There has been correspondence; there has been no discussion with me personally, although there have been discussions with my office, yes.

Mr. Murta: Is the government contemplating bringing in amendments to the tax legislation pertaining to Canadian companies that operate internationally?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, that is the sort of thing which, if any change were contemplated, would be announced in the appropriate way.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question in the sense that it has to do with a Canadian firm locating outside our country.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will be recognized. I doubt that his question is a supplementary, although it may be a related question. Even if it is not either a related or supplementary question, the hon. member is recognized at this moment for the purpose of asking his question.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Speaker, this shows that athletic persistence in the back row does pay off eventually.

INDUSTRY

ACTION TO AVOID CLOSING OF SKIL CORPORATION PLANT, RICHMOND, B.C.

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Is he aware of a recurring problem that started about two years ago involving the Skil Corporation plant in Richmond. The plant was going to close two years ago. I believe they delayed closure and now they are contemplating it again. Is he aware of these plans and of the possible loss of 150 jobs? If so, what is he doing about it?

[Mr. Howard (Skeena).]

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, my seatmate is aware of this matter but I am not. I will consult with him and with my department and try to inform myself better on this subject. Was there a question attached to the request for information?

TRANSFER OF PRODUCTION TO UNITED STATES FOLLOWING PRESIDENT NIXON'S ECONOMIC MEASURES

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, can the minister tell the House whether the government has taken any steps to monitor the transfer of production, and consequently of jobs, that may have occurred in Canada since President Nixon's August 15 announcement? Would he make this information, if he has it, available to the House?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, we took a certain number of measures to counter the August 15 announcement by the President. One was the employment support program, on which I reported this morning in the committee. That helped to maintain about 28,000 jobs in Canada. I thought that was a pretty good reaction to those measures. I would not be able to assess in detail what has been the effect on investment intentions in the minds of manufacturers as a result of the August 15 measures, and I do not think anybody can do that.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

STEPS TO DEAL WITH BACKLOG OF PENSION APPLICATIONS

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Veterans Affairs. In view of the tremendous backlog of pension applications and delays extending for quite a number of months—I realize we are getting the best co-operation and courtesy from the minister's officials—has the minister had an opportunity since taking over his new portfolio to ascertain if there is some manner in which these officials can be assisted to expedite claims a little faster?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we now have a backlog of between 6,000 and 7,000 cases. We are doing the best we can with them. I am going to discuss with my deputy and other officials tomorrow whether there is any means by which we can hurry these claims along. I think it would be difficult to bring in new and untrained people on a temporary commission, but we will see what we can do.

HOUSING

REHABILITATION OF EXISTING HOMES—INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATION RESPECTING LOANS

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. Did the minister announce in Vancouver recently, or over the weekend, a policy of government loans for the rehabilitation of existing housing stocks? If so, will he be introducing legislation to this effect in the House soon?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that the second part of the question, or only the second question, is in order and the minister will be allowed to reply to it. Possibly the hon. member will get information relating to the first part of his question in this way.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I did mention that we had an experimental program in Vancouver that was established by my predecessor in the Strathcona housing area. There was an experimental program of loans and grants to home owners to rehabilitate their homes. I said we were learning a great deal from that program.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is the kind of question and answer about which there are procedural difficulties. The hon. member may ask his question directly. When he asks it as the hon. member did and obtains the sort of reply the minister gave, then the debate is over what was said outside the House. In that respect that type of question and answer is irregular.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, I hope I am phrasing my supplementary question in the proper manner. Is it proposed to introduce legislation in the House to expand and extend the provision for loans for the rehabilitation of existing housing?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, I think that legislation will be introduced in due course, as predicted in the Speech from the Throne, and when introduced it will reveal what it deals with.

BANKRUPTCY ACT

REGULATION ALLOWING BANKRUPTS TO USE SERVICES OF DEPARTMENTAL EMPLOYEES—REQUESTED EXTENSION TO FARMERS

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, since the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs is not in the House, I would like to ask his parliamentary secretary a question.

At noon we received from his department a bulletin announcing that in the future people who become insolvent will be able to seek assistance from officials of the Bankruptcy Branch to have them administer their bankruptcy.

Could the parliamentary secretary tell the House whether those who administer their own property —farmers for instance—will be able to take advantage of this new regulation?

Mr. Speaker: If the minister can answer briefly, he may do so, but normally such a question should be put on the order paper or debated at the time of adjournment.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

LARGER INCREASE IN FOOD COSTS IN PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND— REFERENCE TO PRICES AND INCOMES COMMISSION

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Is the minister aware of a recent study by Statistics Canada of the consumer index that reveals that the increase in foodstuff costs in Prince Edward Island is almost double or triple that of the other Maritimes centres? If he is aware of such a rapid increase in food costs in Prince Edward Island, is he referring this matter to the Prices and Incomes Commission for study?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, yes, I am aware of it and the Prices and Incomes Commission no doubt, in the general context of its mandate, is giving attention to such matters.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Thunder Bay.

CANADA LABOUR CODE

INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF NEW BILL

Mr. B. Keith Penner (Thunder Bay): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour. Can the minister tell the House how soon we may expect the revised bill to amend the Canada Labour Code, including provisions for technological change?

Hon. Martin P. O'Connell (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I hope we shall see it soon.

TRADE

POSSIBLE RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN DISCUSSIONS WITH UNITED STATES ON CANADIAN EXEMPTION FROM INTEREST EQUALIZATION TAX AND AUTO PACT NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Mac T. McCutcheon (Lambton-Kent): Mr. Speaker, on Friday last the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce was asked this question:

> Have there been discussions with the United States government in regard to Canada's present exemption from the interest equalization tax, and are these discussions connected with the discussions concerning the auto pact?

He replied that the question should be directed to the Minister of Finance. Yesterday I directed the question to the Minister of Finance and in his reply the hon. gentleman stated that the subject came within the purview of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. My question is this: does anybody over there know what is going on, because I should like an answer to the question?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): On behalf of myself, the Minister of Finance, the officials of my department and officials of the Department of Finance I wish to say emphatically that no such discussions took place.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

DATE OF RESUMPTION OF SITTINGS FOLLOWING EASTER RECESS

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend has just inquired whether anyone over there knows what is going on. This is a related question, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member might ask his supplementary.

Mr. Nowlan: A supplementary, Your Honour. You will notice that the President of the Privy Council is not in the chamber today. He is campaigning this week in Nova Scotia.

An hon. Member: Where is the Leader of the Opposition?

Mr. Nowlan: I should like to ask the acting leader of the House—I understand him to be the Minister of Agriculture—whether he can amplify or clarify the answer given by the President of the Privy Council on March 10 concerning the date upon which we shall be returning after the Easter recess. The hon. gentleman stated it would not be earlier than April 10, but possibly later. I should like to ask specifically whether the House will be in session after April 10 and whether it will be in session when the President of the United States comes here?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): I will take the question as notice. The President of the Privy Council will have to consider the kind of answer he would like to give tomorrow.

Mr. Nowlan: He will be away all this week.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if I might draw to the attention of the hon. member for Annapolis Valley the whereabouts of his six colleagues from Newfoundland.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I hope we do not become involved in provincial politics.

Mr. Nowlan: On the same misguided point of order, Mr. Speaker, may I say that at least in Newfoundland an election has been called, while here there is complete confusion, indecision and vacillation about what the Prime Minister intends to do.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Mr. Pepin.]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

TIME ALLOTMENT FOR SPEECHES IN SUPPLY DEBATE

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre rising on a point of order?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Yes, Mr. Speaker. My point of order relates to the arrangements for speeches in today's debate. I think you will find there is agreement among representatives of the parties that the first or principal speakers of all the parties shall be allowed 20 minutes and all other speakers 15 minutes, and that there shall be no extra time for anyone.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is so ordered.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, a few moments ago I attempted to direct a short supplementary question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I know the hon. member tried to ask a supplementary, but there are members who tried to ask not only supplementaries but first questions and did not have an opportunity to do so. If the question period were to be extended it might give opportunities to hon. members who rise on a number of occasions but who do not even get close to a supplementary.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): On the same point of order—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member rises on another point of order?

Some hon. Members: On the same point!

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, it strikes me there are times when some hon. members can ask many supplementaries and other times when an hon. member cannot even be allowed to ask one.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—REQUEST FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF ENVIRONMENTAL COUNCIL, NATIONAL STANDARDS GOVERNING ALL POLLUTANTS AND LOANS TO MUNICIPALITIES

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West) moved:

This House expresses the view that in order to protect and preserve our environment, immediate national standards for environmental quality must be set for air, water and land, it being clear that these standards must be set for all pollutants, that they must be enforced by the federal authorities, that low-cost loans must be available to municipalities and to certain industries to ensure no further delay in the building of sewage treatment plants and plant clean-up, and that an Environmental Council of Canada should be established without delay.

He said: Mr. Speaker, at the outset I should like to say I have been informed that the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Davis) is ill and cannot attend the House today. We regret this, and we trust his recovery will not be long delayed.

I wish to say at the very beginning of my remarks that many more areas of concern could have been included in the motion, for there has been major neglect of environmental problems in every part of Canada over the years. Some progress has been made in this field, but on the whole the record of the federal government has been anything but good. The government had the opportunity to give real leadership in meeting the many environmental dangers facing the nation, but it has failed to meet the challenge. Instead of a national and unified approach to this Canada-wide question, we find that in the field of jurisdiction, environmental standards, control and enforcement there is more fragmentation than ever before.

At a time when the United Nations is calling for a common international outlook and direction, and stressing the need for a unified approach, this government has decided to forgo national standards. It has deliberately passed legislation which may well result in a hodge-podge of different standards from one end of Canada to the other. This short-sighted approach can only result in further delays in effectively meeting the environmental hazards confronting us.

Canada needs an integrated environmental policy. The foundation for such a policy has not been set by this government. The earth as a habitable place for human beings is in serious danger. It is evident that pollution is both widespread and serious. Resource extraction is proceeding at a ruinous rate and our earth is being rapidly overpopulated. All of this amounts to a global situation from whose effects Canada is not exempt. It is obvious that pollution, resource extraction and population are all part of the same picture. Any environmental policy, to be successful, must adopt an integrated approach to the over-all solution.

Our earth can be likened to a spaceship. It is a craft of limited carrying capacity for human beings. The basic elements supportive to life through evolution have developed into systems which constantly recirculate. Complex life-support systems have evolved in which the air, water, nutrients and energy supplies for the inhabitants of earth are normally maintained. Man is so utterly dependent on these natural processes that the policies he devises to govern his actions must ensure their maintenance if he is to survive. Unfortunately this is not being done, and in many parts of the globe there is increasing evidence that man is seriously and dangerously upsetting the balance of nature.

Most of the resources on earth are indefinitely renewable through natural cycles, but some are not. For the continuous provision of high-grade mineral supplies we will have to devise artificial cycles for recovery and re-use. For the exhaustible fossil fuels, such as coal and oil, we are developing the alternative of nuclear power, but we must take care that byproducts of heat and radiation do not defeat our purposes by destroying the natural cycles not under our control.

Other sources of energy must be researched and tested, for it is estimated that our resources of oil and natural gas will be pretty well used up within the next 70 or 80 years. This is a pretty sobering thought, especially when you see our present government letting these valuable energy resources go mainly to foreign corporations at fire sale prices. The lack of adequate surveys by government to protect and ensure that future Canadian needs are adequately met in all these fields is most disturbing. The over-all Canadian public interest has not been protected by this government.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Chair has a little difficulty hearing the hon. member who has the floor. I would ask hon. members who are carrying on conversations to do so behind the curtains. The Chair would like to hear the hon. member.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Harding: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This was amply demonstrated in the field of mineral fuels, which is one of our non-renewable resources. Here, we find that for the period 1965 to 1968, out of a total of $795 million in book profit, only 5.7 per cent, or $45 million, was classed as taxable income. This disgraceful tax sellout is certainly a source for additional government revenue which might well be used to assist in the clean-up of our environment.

Another disturbing aspect of the environmental problems facing us is the effect which pollution has had on a number of species of wildlife and fish, which are very much a part of our environment. Some species have already been wiped out and an increasing number of species have been reduced to the danger level. This is a clear-cut warning to mankind that many of our activities are adversely affecting the very food chains on which human life on this planet depends. This is the reason that scientists on a world-wide scale are calling for a halt to the destructive pollution of our environment which is presently taking place.

There is one more major point, Mr. Speaker, I would like to deal with briefly before mentioning some of the major environmental problems specifically facing us in Canada. No environmental policy can be effective unless population growth is taken into consideration. Many environmentalists class this as the number one problem facing us in the world today.

The human population of the earth in 1971 is expanding at the rate of 2 per cent each year. This growth rate means that the earth must provide every year for the resources required to support 70 million new individuals. This means providing new food, power, fuel, air, water, minerals, space, doctors, hospitals, teachers, schools, transportation, industrial plants, and countless other cultural resources for a population three and one half times that of the current population of Canada each year. Already there is misery and want in many of the underdeveloped countries of the world. It is estimated that within the next 30 years the world population could double, and instead of 3.6 billion people on this earth we would then have roughly seven billion people. This means more industry, more resource use, more pollution. The strain on our environment and resources will be immense. It appears doubtful, with this staggering increase in population facing us whether we could ever appreciably increase the standard of living of those people now living in many of the underdeveloped countries in the world.

For this reason, Mr. Speaker, every country in the world, including our own, should develop a population policy. I feel Canada should initiate, through the United Nations, international conferences to promote the stabilization of the earth's population. Canada's own population must eventually be stabilized based on the carrying capacity of our environment. Investigations in relation to our per capita needs for all resources should be commenced without delay. I might add that major research on all human settlement problems is also needed immediately. This includes, of course, the increasing number of problems which we are meeting in our rapidly growing urban centres, which currently are the source of most of our severe environmental problems. Long range planning and action on these urban matters cannot be long delayed. There are many other aspects of population growth, but time does not permit me to deal too extensively with them.

Our motion indicates, Mr. Speaker, that our party is interested in the setting of national standards for environmental quality of air, water and land. These standards must be based on the biology of the receiving environment, and not on the purely arbitrary limits of what is technologically possible. If the ecological balance of natural populations or organisms is substantially altered by current technology, then I feel the offending process must be prohibited. National standards must be enforced by the federal authorities and adequate penalties must be set up to ensure compliance with the law. The setting of national standards will force a major clean-up of pollution problems throughout the nation. There is no doubt it will be costly, and for this reason the federal government should be prepared to provide vast sums of money for the over-all clean-up which must come. Low cost loans must be available to all municipalities and to some industries so that they can get on with the job of sewage treatment plants and plant clean-up without any further delay.

A pollution control fund should be established to help tackle some of the most serious and pressing problems facing us. In this category would come the clean-up of the Great Lakes system and other pollution problems which have arisen mainly due to a lack of knowledge and research over the years. The costs of pollution control, however, must be met primarily by the offending party. In some cases subsidies might be necessary, but if so the cost must be made public so the true cost of technology may be assessed. Those who break pollution laws must be liable for the full cost of clean-up, and governments should take steps to ensure that non-recyclable, throw-away consumer products should eventually be phased out by law.

Our party has spoken out on numerous occasions urging the establishment of an Environmental Council of Canada. The function of the council would be to report on environmental affairs and to give guidance to both the government and the general public on all environmental problems. It would be a non-political organization, with adequate facilities to do a thorough job in the whole field of the environment. The establishment of such a council is long overdue and would be welcomed by Canadians generally.

I indicated earlier that our group is not impressed with the record of this government's attempt to deal with our environmental problems in general. It has been a piecemeal approach at best. A number of departments still jealously guard the right to establish regulations and to dictate policy regardless of the consequences. These ministers cannot do a proper job of protecting our environment if they are constantly in conflict with the commercial and economic aspects of their own departments.

For this reason one over-all Department of the Environment should have been established and should not have been placed in conflict with any economic activity coming under its direct jurisdiction. This is one of the weaknesses of the present Department of the Environment; it has fisheries and forestry under its control. Conflicts of interest do arise. It does not control the whole field of environmental problems and for this reason will often be ineffective in solving pollution problems.

Already in this House we find that we cannot obtain full information from the various ministers on certain important environmental developments. For example, let us look at a major problem in the environmental field in Canada today. I refer to the TAPS versus the Mackenzie River pipeline routes. The public is being kept in the dark. Here we find that several departments are involved, yet no clear-cut policy or clear-cut statement has been made on the floor of this House as to what is going on in relation to the pipeline or as to what Canadians can expect to come out of it.

Only yesterday, a report indicated that the Americans had released a very voluminous survey which had been made of the TAPS pipeline and the Mackenzie River route. Apparently the United States has far more information, as do the general public in that country, than we in Canada. I think we in Canada are entitled to know just what is going on. What discussions are taking place? What discussions have taken place? If it is envisaged that a pipeline will come down the Mackenzie River corridor, Canadians should know. Is the pipeline being discussed in terms of a common carrier? Who will set the route? Who is going to own the pipeline? What will be the starting point of this pipeline and, when additional finds of oil are made in the Canadian north, will there be room in the pipeline to bring these resources down to the Canadian market? Some members opposite indicate that they have this knowledge. It is not general knowledge throughout Canada, and it is certainly not within the general knowledge of the members of this House.

We are interested in finding out how this pipeline will affect the natives in the north. What plans have been made to make certain that the livelihood of these people, which will be affected by any construction of this type, will be protected? What is being done along these lines? We are also interested in having released the ecological surveys which have been made to indicate whether it is safe for the pipeline to be built. We in the New Democratic Party are very anxious to see this type of information released to this House at the earliest opportunity.

We have opposed the so-called west coast tanker route from Valdez, Alaska, to Cherry Point in the State of Washington. We think it would be disastrous if an oil tanker route were to be established along the west coast. It would be only a matter of time until a major oil spill occurred. We will then see multiplied on an immense scale the disaster which occurred within the past two or three days on the southern shore of Vancouver Island when a ship went aground and many miles of the west coast of Vancouver Island were fouled by the oil which rolled up on the shore.

I would like to make one more point about what we feel has been a lack of policy on the part of this government. We find that the large James Bay project is going ahead. The Quebec government has moved in, surveys have been made and some work has been done. Where does the federal government fit into this picture? This project is part of the over-all environmental problems of this nation but federally we stand on the sidelines because we failed to amend the Navigable Waters Protection Act. We were ineffective in moving into this area and in demanding that proper ecological surveys be made before the project was allowed to proceed. This is something we should have done in the interest of all Canadians, our environment and our resources. Any Crown corporation should justify the building of dams on any river in Canada. This is what we ask. This is what we are going to press for, and we hope to see amendments of this nature brought forward by this government.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the motion that is before the House. I think it is obvious that any member concerned with the environment will have to support it. I hope the government will take note once again that the members of this House are vitally concerned about the lack of action in the past two or three years. It is a shame that we have to keep coming back time and again to this subject of the environment. In reply, publicly or in the House, the government says that several pieces of legislation have been passed and surely that is good enough; surely, we cannot be expected to do more. What is wrong with the government's action is twofold.

There are two basic shortcomings in the legislation that we presently have. The first is that the laws have not been passed in a planned or co-ordinated fashion. There seems to be no over-all plan into which the pieces of legislation fit. In other words, they meet a situation or a complaint in some sort of token fashion, but do not form part of a larger plan.

The second failure is that the government has not followed up what legislation it has by regulations and positive action. In these two areas, the government has suggested they have dealt with the situation. One of the failings of the present government is that it feels all that is necessary is to pass laws, get the stuff through the House. The government wants to get bills passed, accepting as few amendments as possible, so there will be some indication on the books that the government is concerned. However, that is not enough. It is not the kind of legislation we would like.

Time and again the government refers to pieces of legislation such as the creation of the Department of the Environment, the Canada Water Act and the Clean Air Act, but if you look at the results you find these acts have been completely ineffective up to the present time. When you analyse them, you find they are mainly permissive legislation and in some cases pure token legislation. To a large extent, the goals of an efficient economy and a healthy environment are not contradictory. However, the cost of restoring the health of many sectors of our environment is likely to be very high and the federal government, as the major source of financial power and the broadest forum of Canadian concern for national issues, must demonstrate more leadership in this area than it has in the past.

The government has only been successful in the areas of least resistance. It has hesitated to enter into critical areas for fear of tramping on provincial toes. This, of course, is something about which I am sensitive, coming from the province of Ontario which has a Conservative government and which, like all provincial governments, is very sensitive about its own powers and jurisdiction. In every case in which there has been a move by the federal government, co-operation has been received from the provinces. When proposals are made and plans put forward to the effect that on the Canadian scene we intend to do something about the environment, the provinces co-operate. Time and time again they have co-operated.

The problem is particularly prevalent in respect of the Canada Water Act and the Clean Air Act which supposedly were intended to be the greatest innovative pollution measures in Canada. They have ended up as mere pieces of rhetoric because they hinge on agreements with the provinces before any real positive action can result. As anyone knows, it is no easy matter to bring together a federal government and ten provinces in order to reach agreement. If we look at the various acts, we find there have been no positive results. The so-called national standards in the Clean Air Act apply only in two cases. They apply to any federal premises and can be enforced in the provinces only if the provinces agree.

The Canada Water Act also hinges on federal-provincial agreements. However, on many occasions I have felt extremely sorry that we have been unable to make the Canada Water Act work. From the beginning I felt, as did many others, that it was based on an entirely erroneous premise, and that the whole act would not be effective. If we look at the province of Ontario as the prime example, we find the province already is divided into areas for pollution control. It already has units dealing with pollution control. It has municipal agreements. It has river basin agreements and it has area and regional agreements. This is a pattern which is now completely set up in the province of Ontario. That province has been engaged in this work for 15 years under the Ontario Water Resources Act, but the federal government came along with the Canada Water Act and said that so far as it was concerned it intended to divide up the area in another way.

So far as the Canada Water Act is concerned, the federal government has said it intends to insist that the matter be handled on a water basin or regional area basis. This has not worked out. There have been a number of agreements with the provinces which show some promise of future activity, but in large part there have been only studies. Studies are fine. However, the problem in respect of the program is that for the first three or four years of its existence most of the time has been spent on studies. Then, when the results of the studies are made known the government is not satisfied with them, finds they did not turn out the way they wished or decides that the studies themselves are ambiguous. Difficult decisions must be made, and yet these decisions have not been made.

Another so-called piece of pollution legislation consists of the amendments to the Canada Shipping Act regarding coastal pollution. Although this act applies to all Canadian waters, it will not be as effective off the west coast of Canada as off the east coast. There are inequities and gaps in the adoption of the regulations under this Act. My colleague, the hon. member for Halifax-Dartmouth East (Mr. Forrestall) intends to deal with this aspect later in this debate, because this is a matter which has concerned him very much, as well as others, and he has been asking questions almost daily on this particular subject.

Another thing I lay at the doorstep of this government as a failure is its inability to make hard decisions. If we look just at the great environmental issues we face at the moment, we will see that this is true. There is a great project for hydro-electric development in the James Bay area proposed by the government of Quebec. There is federal involvement because the closing of navigable waters must be approved by the federal government. There is federal involvement in respect of Indian affairs, environmental affairs and so on. Yet at the moment we have been left completely in the dark concerning where the federal government stands in respect of this project. I recognize that this is not an easy matter with which to deal. The federal government must decide now or shortly whether or not it will agree to this project.

Daily we have been asking, over a period of months now, about the federal involvement in this project and have received no answers. The only inkling we received was in a statement by Premier Bourassa of the province of Quebec. He stated he had been talking to the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau) about this problem recently. That came out in a news report, but the Prime Minister of Canada has not acknowledged in the House that he has even discussed or considered it. For months we have had nothing but evasive answers. We have not even had an indication that the federal government intends to take the situation seriously and say it is in favour of the project, that it is against the project or that it intends to impose certain conditions. The Prime Minister has not made his position abundantly clear to either the House or to the premier of Quebec.

There is also a decision to be made in respect of the carriage of Arctic gas and oil from Alaska to the mainland of the United States. It must either cross or come close to Canadian soil in such a way that there will be environmental danger. Yesterday the United States government indicated that a study of this project had been made. A four volume report was tabled at two o'clock yesterday, and the summary we have received is to the effect that the general report indicates there are dangers involved in both routes but that perhaps the overland route is the one that would be most satisfactory to the United States.

This report deals only with the United States. It must decide what is most advantageous for it. The report refers to security—security of the oil passage and security in respect of being able to get that oil regardless of hostile acts from within this country. This is one of the things they are thinking about. I do not know why this aspect has never been considered before. However, a good deal of the report covers the question of security of the oil lines. There seems to be some concern about whether the oil can be moved from Alaska to the United States without any interference from us. I have not seen any evidence that the government of Canada intends to hold public hearings, establish a parliamentary committee to look into the matter, or make a decision.

The special committee on pollution was anxious last year to look into this subject and some hearings were held but nothing final was produced because the committee did not go on a tour as they desired. Perhaps it would have been a good thing to do. In any case, no studies have been made by Canada. When on earth are we going to start, because the Americans are ready to make a decision? They are ready to grant a shipping line permit because that is the easiest and the quickest route, but so far as Canada is concerned it is probably the most dangerous. We do not know whether they are going to make such a decision within days or weeks, but certainly they are going to make it without any indication from this country as to how we feel about it. The decision will be made by the United States strictly on the basis of what they feel will be in the interest of their own security.

There is also the matter of the Great Lakes clean-up. Unfortunately, this work has been stalled, and yet this is a gigantic problem involving two federal governments, one provincial and eight states as well as several other governing bodies. But we have had no decision on that. I was very heartened today during the question period when I asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) a question about the decisions, announcements or agreements that may be made when President Nixon comes here next month regarding the pipeline problem or the Great Lakes problem, and he intimated—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but, in accordance with the special order made today, I must advise him that his time has expired.

[Translation]

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I agree with the motion of the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Harding) which reads as follows:

This House expresses the view that in order to protect and preserve our environment, immediate national standards for environmental quality must be set for air, water and land, it being clear that these standards must be set for all pollutants, that they must be enforced by the federal authorities, that low-cost loans must be available to municipalities and to certain industries to ensure no further delay in the building of sewage treatment plants and plant clean-up, and that an Environmental Council of Canada should be established without delay.

Mr. Speaker, this motion covers so much ground that it is next to impossible to discuss every aspect of it. Still, I should like to call the attention of the House to that part of it which reads as follows:

—that low-cost loans must be available to municipalities and to certain industries to ensure no further delay in the building of sewage treatment plants and plant clean-up—

Mr. Speaker, the essence of the motion is contained in those lines. I feel that it is imperative that we solve the financial problems of the municipalities to ensure sewage treatment.

Setting up an environmental council, adopting standards and passing laws will be useless if industries and municipalities remain in their present sad situation. We have always said, and I repeat it, that the problem is financial.

Let us hear all the speeches to be made this afternoon and evening, and we will always come to the same conclusion: we are facing a tremendous financial problem. Thus, I would like to draw your attention to a newspaper article published in October 1968 in La Presse and entitled: "Some companies will be unable to survive pollution control". This is what it said:

The federal Minister of Resources, Mr. J. J. Greene, has declared yesterday that some Canadian firms will be compelled to close down because of the government progran on pollution control.

The Minister explained during an interview that pollution was now everybody's problem, but that pollution previously caused by certain industries was their direct responsibility.

The business community must consider the steps that are required to fight pollution as part of the production costs which, needless to say, will ultimately be borne by the population.

Mr. Greene said that Canadians would have to be prepared to accept these additional charges and slightly higher prices as being the cost of living in a healthy atmosphere.

Certain industries may perhaps not be able to pay the cost of pollution abatement measures and will then have to shut down.

"But the federal government understands this point and I think that the public must be prepared to pay for this economic dislocation", said he.

Mr. Speaker, the minister was then suggesting that we should be prepared to pay the cost of pollution abatement, and that certain industries might not be able to foot the bill. He also admitted that the problem was of a financial nature.

In February 1970, I received a letter from Mr. Fowler, President of the Canadian Pulp and Paper Association. This letter related to the federal budget and pollution abatement.

First of all, Mr. Fowler called the minister's attention to the problems for factories which must all tackle the job of not polluting the water and treating it.

And I quote:

... the pulp and paper industry solicits that your next budget include the following provisions:

1. Elimination of federal sales tax on construction materials, equipment and supplies purchased for the purpose of depollution.

2. Easing of regulations concerning amortization so that capital expenses directly related to depollution may be amortized over the period most favourable for the firm (the amount to be amortized could be considered as an expense or amortized over any period chosen.)

3. Federal grants equivalent to one third of capital cost of work carried out to bring existing industrial plants in line with any regulations set up concerning depollution (the government could also allow, instead of such grants, amortization calculated on a broad evaluation of the capital expenditure, having the same financial effect for most companies.)

The above provisions would, in our opinion, facilitate the implementation of depollution called for by various legislation and regulations, among them the Canada Water Act.

I could go on for the rest of the day quoting texts, newspaper articles or statistical data supporting the fact that the problem of pollution must be dealt with, and promptly. I know that the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Davis) is aware of the problem and I urge him to give careful consideration, as a possible solution, to low interest loans to municipalities or industries which urgently need these loans and apply for them.

I am surprised to see that a party to my left is supporting this measure and this is gratifying. It proves that all the Social Credit party's interventions to this end have not been in vain. Not so long ago, we were being called all kinds of names when we mentioned interest-free or low interest loans.

I think that municipalities should be entitled to such loans, at least with regard to sewage disposal, and that companies should be able to obtain low interest loans with a much longer write-off period, or even enjoy some tax exemptions.

We will obviously not be talking in terms of thousands of dollars since the problem is of such magnitude that it will require enormous expenses. The main problem is to determine what the federal government is able to do. A brief dated October 26, 1965, by the Canadian institute for the control of water pollution, stated and I quote:

(13) Legislation and tax procedures at the federal, provincial or regional levels should be established and amended so as to insure the most economical and efficient financing of the development, operation and improvement of the facilities for the treatment of sewage waters.

I agree on this point, but towns are facing an even more pressing problem. Industries make profits from which they can deduct tax payments. Actually, most of them are prosperous. But municipalities do not possess the same financial means as a large industry. After all, the damages resulting from unchecked municipal pollution are paid by Canadians.

How can you hope that municipalities like Brompton-ville, Richmond, Windsor, Asbestos, which are all in my riding, can abide by the government's criteria while their budgets show a deficit year after year? How do you expect the resident of Brompton or Windsor to pay higher taxes for pollution control facilities? Actually, these facilities have been totally outrun by budgets 50 per cent of which is earmarked for debt servicing.

The federal government in co-operation with the provincial government should immediately grant interest free loans to municipalities to enable them to deal with pollution, particularly sewage waters which are discharged into waterways that are frighteningly becoming polluted. The more we hesitate, the more tax money we will have to pay.

I would like that the problem prevailing in the Eastern Townships be considered. In the St-Francois river which runs through my riding at the level of Drummondville, the water does not run any more; it is so polluted by the sewage poured into it by some 120 villages and towns in Quebec that it just rolls down.

A study made by the Quebec Water Board showed that close to 270,000 people live on the banks of the St-François or its tributaries. The river is polluted at East Angus, Sherbrooke, Bromptonville, Windsor and Drummondville. Those towns should stop pouring their waste water into that river and, to that end, the federal government, in co-operation with the Quebec government, should grant those municipalities interest-free loans in order to put an end to such pollution, which is intolerable in 1972.

[English]

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Harding) for giving me this opportunity to say a few words about the environment, about Environment Canada, about our federal programs and the manner in which these federal initiatives are co-ordinated effectively with those of the provinces.

His motion expresses the view that, "in order to protect and preserve our environment, immediate national standards for environmental quality must be set for air, water and land." I want to stay close to the main point that he is endeavouring to make. Mr. Speaker, we have been in the process of setting not only national standards but also national objectives.

When I mention objectives I am, for example, talking about the quality of the water out in the middle of a lake, or about the quality of large masses of air over a city. Standards, by contrast, apply to the point of effluence, of pollutants from their source. To repeat, Mr. Speaker, we have already announced a series of national air quality objectives. We have also been announcing a series of standards, which we are working out in close concert with the industries concerned.

We have by no means covered all the industries with which we must work and for which national standards must be set. But in answer to that part of the motion which says that Canada must preserve its environment by setting immediate national standards for environmental quality for air, water and land, I have to say that we are already in the process of doing this. It may take longer to do this job than the hon. member would like to admit. However, we have been working closely with half a dozen major industries.

In two cases we have already announced what these new standards are. These are standards which the industry concerned knows it can meet. They are standards where we have good working examples of pollution abatement procedures being adequate to meet all reasonable tests. They are also economic standards because we can point to plants or mills which are in effect making money and which have installed the necessary clean-up equipment and procedures, and are operating them in an economic way.

The hon. member says that these standards must be set for all pollutants. I will have to agree with him on that. However, it will take us time to work reasonably with the industries concerned to develop a description of the latest working technology. We intend to cover all pollutants, and we will be working with all polluting industries with a view to cleaning up their effluents.

The hon. member also says that these standards must be enforced by federal authorities. Mr. Speaker, he knows very well that the federal authority in many of these fields is not all inclusive. For example, he knows the provinces have specific power over property, and power over the location of many industries. He knows that the provinces have the only powers to deal effectively with local pollution which, in its detrimental influence, does not extend to surroundings which are outside a province, or which does not affect fish, navigation or human health, which are matters of federal concern. There are big areas of jurisdiction in this country which rest exclusively with the provinces.

In those areas, for instance in municipal affairs, in respect to industries located entirely within a province and whose pollutant effects do not go outside the province, it is really the provincial authority that must deal with them. However, having said this, Mr. Speaker, it is our intention, and we have been fairly successful to this point, to develop standards which the provinces will adopt, standards which the provinces will in fact copy, and which they will enforce. Even in areas of exclusively provincial or local jurisdiction we will not have pollution havens which will serve to attract certain "dirty" industries, or will permit some firms to get away with practices which would not be allowed in areas of federal jurisdiction or where the provinces adopt federal standards.

I think the hon. member would also be prepared to admit that where the federal standards are improved upon by a given province or municipality, the federal government should have no reluctance in immediately endorsing enthusiastically those higher standards. It may be that standards are not always uniform across the country. But certainly the national government must be able to set national standards which are uniform in so far as the force and effect of federal laws are concerned and to ensure that those are also standards which are met or exceeded in the provinces and by provincial administrations.

It is proposed in this resolution that low cost loans must be made available to municipalities and to certain industries to ensure no further delay in clean-up. I should certainly like the hon. member to list the "certain industries" to which he would give this preferential treatment. This would be a very interesting exercise, especially so far as the New Democratic Party is concerned. If we are to be selective, what industries should receive financial assistance from the government? In other words, what industries should receive a subsidy from the federal taxpayer in order to clean up?

Our basic policy is that the polluter must pay, that the industry in question will have to pay to clean up those wastes which it is now discarding into the environment. This is not an operation involving taxpayers' money or subsidies. It is a requirement which will be imposed upon industry. Admittedly industries often need time in order to bring their plants up to our new standards, in order to instal the latest equipment and use the latest processes which are described in our standards.

In regard to municipalities, the hon. member knows that, in effect, grants have been made to municipalities across Canada for a long time. Most municipalities in Canada have received loans from the federal government, one-quarter of which are forgiveable. If payments are kept up and the plant is in place, then one-quarter of the loan is forgiven at the end of the period. In effect, the municipality in question has received the equivalent of a grant of 25 per cent. Literally hundreds of millions of dollars have been lent to Canadian municipalities over the last decade for this purpose, for the purpose of environmental control, for the purpose of building sewage collection systems and in more recent years the purpose of building primary, secondary and tertiary sewage treatment plants. The Canadian taxpayer, through the federal government, has been helping every municipality that itself had a will to improve its own environment.

Some provinces have seen fit to assist this process. Some, such as Ontario, have made grants to look after those municipalities where the per capita cost is exceptionally high. This is the kind of assistance I mean, but there again we have federal assistance and provincial assistance making it easier for municipalities, certainly those faced with particular problems and high costs, to instal the necessary collection and treatment facilities.

The final point which the hon. member makes is that we should set up an environmental council of Canada. As he knows, this is a big step. We are taking a most important step right away; we are setting up an environmental council of Canada which is appointed by the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Davis) and will act in an advisory capacity to him. It is not, at least as initially conceived, a council similar to the Economic Council of Canada which has its own staff, its own civil service so to speak, its own terms of reference and works at its own pace and in its own way. The environmental council which we have in mind and the members of which will be appointed in the next few weeks, will be advisory to the minister. This is a big step; it is a good step and an essential step forward. However, it is only one of a sequence of steps. I might add that I am not personally convinced that we need yet another separate council with its own independent staff, answerable to no one and whose advice is not necessarily practical under the circumstances.

In the few minutes remaining, Mr. Speaker, I wish to take issue with the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken) who said that we really have no philosophy. Essentially, the Department of the Environment is concerned with the preservation of living things, the preservation of wildlife, our fisheries, our forests, our flora and fauna—nature, in other words. This is the mission of ecologists. Indeed, the ecologists are primarily concerned with the inter-relationship of all living things, one to the other, particularly with their environments of water, air and soil and particularly again in their relationships with the human animal and what he is doing to them and to his surroundings.

In the Department of the Environment we have many of the biologists who are concerned with the fisheries, who are concerned with the wildlife of this country, who are concerned with forestry. We also have the engineers who are concerned with our waterways, oceanographers who are concerned with ocean currents, the meteorologists who have been sampling air, who are knowledgeable about climatic conditions in this country, about ice movements, about the general backdrop from an air point of view and indeed about inter-relationships between air and water on both our coasts. So, we have the biological competence, the knowhow in this department to endeavour to deal with the impact of industry, of man's building activities on his living environment. It is in that context that we are developing our philosophy of how not only to protect our environment but to improve it as time goes by.

I have made reference to improving the environment and this is entirely possible. It has certainly been possible in the very big field of forestry. Our forests are certainly the biggest wild mass in Canada. They can be healthier if they are harvested. They can produce three or four times as much fibre as they do today. We can have industrialization and we can have a healthier environment and a healthier forest basically because the old, decaying insect-ridden forest which is commonplace in the so-called natural environment will progressively disappear in all but the wilderness and national park areas. In their place will be crops of younger, healthier, fast growing trees. This is a healthier environment, the kind of clean environment that we can have with more industry, and more employment for the people of this country as well.

That is also possible in the fisheries. Somewhat like hunting and somewhat like the ancient practices of the so-called commons, fisheries had been open to everyone. The rush was on and the first in reaped the greatest reward. In time, with the continued invasion of more and more fishermen, the resource itself was in jeopardy. Inevitably, over-fishing occurred; there were too many fishermen, too many boats chasing the remaining fish. Fishing became one of those "bottom-rung-of-the-ladder" type of activities the world over.

Now, we are introducing a degree of order into chaos. Off our shores where other nations are also fishing, we have entered into agreements to reduce our total pressure on the resource. We will share it. Admittedly, we will get 50 per cent or more, but we will share the resource with other countries so long as, collectively, we stay within the total catch. Individually, we will get our share. Once shares are decided on, it will be possible not only to reduce the amount of fishing effort but, as well, to make the fishery much more economical or economically viable. We will be able to withdraw vessels from the fishery or reduce the number of vessels in the fishery, and thus produce much higher incomes for the fishermen left in the fishery. Also, in time, we can build fishing stocks to a level more akin to those which existed before man began to fish what were formerly extensive fisheries both on our Atlantic coast and the west coast of Canada.

I know that there are many other matters to which I ought to refer. I have said that the polluter must pay. We will, however, give him time to clean up. When he is building a new plant, he must meet the new standards immediately. In cases where there are old, existing plants, he may need some years in order to instal the necessary equipment and processing facilities. That obviously applies to the pulp and paper industry across Canada. There are approximately 150 mills in this country, many of them large, and some of them the largest of their kind in the world. They are not all modern, not all up to date, not all in the best of locations. If we were to force them to solve their pollution problem, or at least meet our new standards for new plants, overnight, many would close down. Certainly, in present circumstances where employment is so important and, indeed, probably the most important matter facing the government of Canada today, we will need to go slowly and put jobs ahead of pollution abatement. We will have to be frank about this and admit this to the country. Time will solve our problems. We shall certainly encourage those mills, one at a time, to meet those reasonable standards which the industry, in the main, agrees are adequate, appropriate, and not too onerous in the circumstances.

I might say in that connection that the United States, for example, is adopting our new standards without change for the pulp and paper industry. Undoubtedly, they will be adopting some of our other standards. We also have established standards for chlor-alkali plants which were discharging mercury. Their effluent has been recycled, the mercury has been recovered, and it no longer finds its way into our rivers and streams. There are other examples one could mention. We are proud when we see other countries following our lead. We, in turn, are learning from them and taking heart from some successes they have scored on the pollution front.

I could enumerate eight different pieces of legislation we have passed in the last two years which deal in a substantial way with pollution. I could list some of the really big developments which I am sure Canadians down through the years will boast about. For instance, who would have thought half a dozen years ago that there would be a firm agreement with the United States for cleaning up the Great Lakes. That agreement has been achieved. I am confident that it will be signed shortly. It incorporates our national objectives for water and will make Lake Erie a lake in which fish can survive and abound. Lake Erie will become a lake that is fit to swim in and its water will be drunk by human beings without any fear of ill effects. That is a massive agreement, a multi-billion dollar agreement, and its scope is impressive. As I say, it is an agreement which will result in the cleaning up of the great water system which drains the industrial heartland of North America. It will result in the cleaning up of that system by the mid 1970's. Mind you, we will be looking for further improvements down through the years. However, Mr. Speaker, that agreement by itself is a tremendous accomplishment.

[Mr. Davis.]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the minister, but his time has expired.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I was pleased to listen to the minister and hear what he had to say about the abatement of pollution. Also, I am pleased to support the motion introduced by the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Harding). Certainly, it is high time for Canada to set national standards for the quality of air, water and land.

The minister told us that grants have been given to municipalities for the building of sewage disposal units, etc. This has been done through Central Mortgage and Housing. The amount of funds made available has been small in relation to the need. I am certain that in his motion the hon. member for Kootenay West suggests a program far more expansive than the one operated through Central Mortgage and Housing. The minister is quite right, however, in saying that 25 per cent of loans or funds made available for sewage disposal units, etc., are written off or forgiven if the municipalities meet certain conditions.

The present motion is not unlike one moved by the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) in 1970. At that time the question of pollution was debated. The minister was quite right in saying that a number of pieces of legislation pertaining to pollution have been passed in the last couple of years. However, so far no standards have been laid down. The minister also suggested that there are national objectives or national goals in this area. If there are such objectives, standards, goals or what have you, they are not apparent to Canadian manufacturing firms, Canadian industry generally and to Canadians using our lakes and rivers, our land and air. If there are such objectives and standards, surely they should be made clear to industry across Canada.

In addition, the government's intentions in making sure that these goals are reached should be made clear. It is all very well to say industry is not using land properly and that there shall be penalties. I think the onus today is on the government. It must do a little more in this area. I can think of the difficulties associated with operating mines in the Kenmore district of Alberta. It was suggested that land was being ruined in the area. What have the federal and provincial governments done to assist that industry to repair any damage done to the environment?

I can remember, too, going to Hilton mines in Pontiac county, near Ottawa, a couple of years ago and seeing the huge piles of waste rock heaped up from the iron ore mines. Let me tell the House that the Hilton mines people undertook some expensive research. They wanted to know how much it would cost to flatten out and seed with grass the piles of rock and dust heaped up outside the mine. The experts who were hired said that it would cost $300 per acre. The mining people told the researchers that was too expensive and that they had better come up with some cheaper way of doing it, or forget the whole thing. That experience is not encouraging. That industry should be encouraged to reclaim and repair the sort of damage that is done when open pit mining is undertaking for the recovery of iron ore or coal. Certainly, the government should lay down standards for enabling industry to determine more easily what must be done.

It is interesting to note that this motion was moved by a member of the NDP. Members of this House, and particularly of the NDP, have been quick to condemn the Conservative party. They say that it is opposed to advancement and change. The true hallmark of the conservative is that he accepts change based on experience. That is his philosophy. He is not afraid to look back at his mistakes and correct them. If previous governments had done that, perhaps we should not be facing our present difficulties regarding pollution. Mr. Speaker, compare the philosophy of the true conservative with that of the socialist. The socialist, apparently, believes in Utopia. A conservative believes he is the caretaker of the environment on behalf of future generations; he is only here for a limited time and he must take care of our water, air and land so that those who come after him may be able to enjoy it. In order to make this possible one must be prepared to look back and accept change based on experience. I sometimes believe that, over the years, liberal philosophy can be expressed in the question: what will make the biggest buck and the fastest buck in the way most acceptable to industry? Bearing in mind the number of years during which we have had to live with a Liberal government in Ottawa, is it any wonder that pollution is as great as it is today?

The creation of the Department of the Environment was a major step forward. On this side of the House we all regarded it with a great deal of interest. We wondered whether or not the relevant legislation would have teeth in it, whether as guardians of the tax dollar we would be supplied with sufficient information to enable us to judge whether or not the new department was fulfilling a useful service. I was disappointed when the minister told us that the environmental council which is to be set up would report to the department. Such a system will not allow an outside body to check whether the department is acting in an appropriate manner or not, whether it is really cleaning up pollution or whether it is covering up major pollution somewhere or other on the ground that certain industries are involved, or for reasons of good neighbourliness and so forth.

I would much prefer to see an environmental council operated on the lines of the Economic Council and issuing a public report. It could be established on the basis of a mixture of the principles applying to the Economic Council and the Auditor General; it could be, in essence, the auditor of our treatment of the environment; it could audit the management of the environment by the government of the day, and make its report impartially, notwithstanding the effects which the report might have on the government. In this way, it could provide a most useful service. I should like to see the Department of the Environment given increased responsibilities. In my opinion, the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act and the Navigable Waters Protection Act should be placed within the purview of the new department.

Most of our immediate concern arises from the nature of our urban environment. I sometimes wonder how we shall be able to control pollution in large urban areas if we continue to allow cities to sprawl over adjacent territory without limit to their growth. Growing cities do not appear to concern themselves greatly over pollution. All one has to do is drive around the major cities of Canada today to realize the extent to which urban sprawl is increasing. The more rapidly cities expand, the less their administrators appear to care about the difficulties of sewage disposal and waste disposal in general.

In the debate which took place last year on this subject the hon. member for Hamilton West listed the percentage of various material which goes into waste. The hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Anderson) referred to the situation in Hong Kong. Reading his speech one can readily understand the difference between the efforts made in Hong Kong to dispose effectively of waste products and those made by various major cities in Canada. There is no doubt, in my view, that cities have been allowed to abuse land surrounding the city area. Standards should certainly be set for municipalities to meet, and, if necessary, grants far larger than have been made in the past should be made available to help them reach those standards. It was said a few years ago that the City of Montreal had installed sewage treatment plants sufficient to handle only about 11 per cent of its raw sewage. This is a shockingly low figure, though I do not wish to single out Montreal as the only example. Other major cities are almost as bad.

We must accelerate existing programs and we can only do this if the government has the courage to lay down specific standards which must be met. In other words, for example, no raw sewage should be dumped into our rivers and waters. If we were as emphatic in making that statement as we are in saying other things, if, for instance, we said that by 1975 no city should be dumping raw sewage into rivers and lakes, then we would see action. Requests for grants would be made to the government and the government would be obliged to come through. But the federal government appears hesitant to take action. It says, among other things, that much of this responsibility lies with the provinces. This may be true to some extent. Nevertheless, over-all authority rests with the federal government, which is responsible for Canada as a whole and the federal government must be prepared to take action to end some of the abuses which have been taking place at the expense of our land, water and air.

So far, the government has taken only what might be called minor initiatives in the area of pollution abatement. Basically it has shown no real leadership. The minister, in his closing remarks, suggested that fish would once again abound in Lake Erie and that after the pact was signed with the United States all the waterways along the Great Lakes system would be cleaned up. But unless a definite commitment is made as to the standard of purification to be met no such result will follow, although the program may have a good appearance for political purposes. Incidentally, there has been a record catch of fish in Lake Erie this year. Results have been far better than last year.

An hon. Member: Smelts and perch.

Mr. Horner: I suppose that in 1975 a spokesman for the government will point out that catches have improved and claim it is the result of the clean-up program. This will not necessarily be the case. The minister gave the impression that no fish could now survive in the lake. For the record,

I might mention that certain species do and can survive. We are looking for more action and less verbiage; better standards, and better defined public goals by which industry and the rest of us must abide.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, the House and the country certainly owe a debt of gratitude to the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Harding) for having taken the opportunity today to put forward a motion relating to our environment, thus permitting parliament, at least on this one day, to concentrate its interest upon so important an area. However, because of the way in which parliament functions, because it is controlled by government, and because there is a dictatorship existent in the structure of government activity, not much may come of the complaints which are raised and the propositions which are put forward. None the less, I believe the hon. member for Kootenay West, in taking this opportunity, deserves our applause and the applause of the people in the land. Not one single item is of greater concern to us than the question of the environment, our ecology and living things on the land, in the waters and in the air. Since they are the basis of life, if we do not concern ourselves about them in a serious way we injure the prospect of life on earth continuing beyond a certain point in time.

I listened with a great deal of interest to what the minister said, because after all he is the minister charged with the responsibility for dealing with environmental matters. I should like to extend a word of congratulation to his speech writers. They worked with such care and precision that so far they have prevented the minister from saying anything today on this subject except in general terms, and then not the full truth. When the Department of the Environment was established, and when preceding it a number of other pieces of legislation were announced in speeches from the throne of earlier years, members of parliament had great hopes that we were embarking upon a concrete plan of action to deal with environmental problems, the ecology, and to do something worth while to preserve life in Canada and on shores close to Canada, and thus hopefully influence the situation throughout the world.

For example, as the minister has mentioned we have the Canada Water Act which conceived of the establishment of water management control areas, or river basin boards, or some such bodies as that. I do not know how many have since been established. Has one such water management control area been established, even though the Canada Water Act has been on the statute books for over two years now? I doubt whether any have been set up, but perhaps one has. When the bill was being dealt with by the House, we attempted to establish in the legislation national standards for water quality throughout the nation, so an objective could be set. However, the Liberal party objected to that concept and refused to put into effect national standards.

Then we also had the Clean Air Act. As far as I know, the only activity under that act is that some studies are being conducted into the extent to which our air is being polluted. But in terms of activity and action there has been nothing.

Then, we had the Fisheries Act which again corrected some abuses of the past. This act sought to prevent pollution in the future rather than simply penalize people for pollution after the fact, as had been the case previously. However, when the minister announced the promulgation of the pulp and paper effluent regulations early last November, we found the regulations did not apply to a single, solitary hardboard mill in Canada.

Mr. Davis: The regulations apply to mills under construction.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Yes. Being too precise, the minister did not listen to what I said. I said they do not apply to a single, solitary hardboard mill in existence in Canada today.

Mr. Davis: Standards are exceeded by half a dozen of them.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): None whatever. Even if the regulations were to have some effect in the future, and were applied to pulp and paper mills that will be built, or even applied to present day mills on a negotiated basis, the minister is flying in the face of his own arguments. At one time he said to industry: "We want you to keep your effluent within the plant gates". Now, through these regulations, he is telling them: "It is all right to pump your effluent out into water courses, into lakes, streams and salt water. Before your effluent is declared toxic", says the minister now, "there must be a fish kill of 20 per cent", albeit under controlled conditions. That is the way I read these regulations, and if I am wrong perhaps the minister will declare otherwise. As I interpret the regulations, when the fish kill reaches 20 per cent of the fish existing under controlled conditions, the effluent is classified as toxic and the mill is then in contravention of the regulations. If the percentage is only 19 per cent, then the mill can go ahead and kill that number of fish.

Then, we had the Arctic Waters Pollution Control Act which applied to a 100 nautical mile zone around the Arctic archipelago. I understand this to be the finest legislation in the world so far as controlling pollution by oil tankers is concerned. The only part of it that does not ring true is that it applies to an area where there are no oil tankers operating or it is unlikely that they will be operating.

However, off our east and west coasts where oil tankers move through the waters practically every day of the week, there is no such stringent requirement. I am sure practically every day of the week somewhere in the world an oil tanker sinks, or runs aground, or runs into bad weather, capsizes, breaks up and spills oil into the ocean. This is another instance of having some fine words in legislation which itself has no practical application. In other words, we have laws without teeth. We have laws written in fine terms, which are carefully drawn and on the surface are supposed to help preserve our environment and protect our ecology. But the value of these laws has either been emasculated by inaction on the part of the government or eviscerated by regulations such as the pulp and paper mill effluent regulations. Under the sponsorship of the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Davis) we have in Canada pollution control by press release only, certainly not by direct activity.

Let me give the House a few examples of what I mean in the few minutes available to me. At one stage the minister pointed out that he wanted industry to keep its effluent within the plant gates, that none of it must go outside. Technically that is possible, he said. Then, the minister comes along with regulations and says to the pulp and paper industry, his friends: "I really did not mean what I said. We will permit you to continue pumping your effluent into water courses across the land, to kill fish and destroy the ecology; the regulations say you can". We have the Arctic waters pollution control legislation, the finest in the world, with no application to Canada in those areas where oil tankers operate; it applies only to those areas where very few people and no oil tankers are likely to move.

Today, we can find the ship Vanlene aground on the rocks of Barkley Sound off the coast of Vancouver Island. This is a ship that missed its mark by at least 100 miles, that did not even have a Canadian pilot aboard to bring it into Canadian waters. I understand that it had defective compasses. So far, this ship has discharged 30,000 gallons of bunker oil into the ocean off the west coast of the island. The owners of the vessel obviously were sloppy and careless about its management, not really caring what happened, a sloppiness and carelessness matched only, so far, by the attitude taken to the situation by the Department of Transport.

At this very moment we have at the scene fisheries department officials, department of defence officials and Department of Transport officials standing around on decks of ships watching the current of the water moving this oil spill up on to the beaches of Vancouver Island and Long Beach, being unable effectively to clean it up. They have an oil licker, I understand that is the technical term. This is a cleaning-up mechanism developed by the Department of Transport, it is true, yet it is inoperative because it will not work when waves are over one and a half feet in height, which is always the case off the west coast of Vancouver Island. The oil licker does not operate because bunker oil, in that temperature of water, turns into something approaching elastic. All the oil licker does is to try to stretch this piece of rubbery substance into the tanks and barges which are said to be there. There has been no action whatsoever. There has been carelessness on the part of the Canada Shipping Act officials and the government. In spite of our pilotage requirements, there was no pilot on the ship. There have also been careless activities in terms of trying to clean up that oil.

Hope Enviro Control Ltd. of Victoria developed a type of oil slick removal equipment that operates on a whirlpool basis. A propeller is placed under the water which creates a whirlpool. This moves the oil on top of the water as well as the sawdust and pulls it into the centre of the whirlpool. It operates with a worm gear. This company approached the Department of Transport to see whether it could try out this piece of equipment on this oil spill. They received a casual response from Norm Siegsworth, the director of that clean-up. He told them to go ahead. However, they were not permitted to use Department of Transport barges or equipment which are there at the moment and are not being used. Why does the government not give this outfit a try? Maybe they can help solve the problem. The herring spawning beds in that area of the coast have already been ruined, as well as the sea lion beds, because of this particular ship running onto the rocks. The situation can only deteriorate unless something worthwhile is done.

I want to spend two minutes talking about the proposed oil tanker route down the west coast. The first thing we should do with the trans-Alaska system from Valdez Bay to Cherry Point, Washington is make the Arctic waters pollution control legislation the finest law in the world. This is what the government says. It should be applicable to the west coast and the east coast. If American tankers are going to carry oil from Valdez Bay down the west coast to Washington, they should keep their ships 100 nautical miles off shore or we should insist that they meet the very stringent regulations we set down in the Arctic Waters Pollution Control Act. I will not go into detail, but this legislation covers safety equipment, double hulls, crews, navigational equipment and everything else.

We should not be in such a rush to accommodate the oil interests which want to build a pipeline down the Mackenzie Valley. We should look carefully at preserving the ecology in the Arctic and the Mackenzie Valley. The research which the government has done so far does not relate to the preservation of the ecology, but to the extent to which a pipeline down the Mackenzie Valley will injure the ecology. The government says it is only concerned about doing as little injury as possible. I believe they are approaching the problem from the wrong point of view. In any event, this matter has not concerned the government so far. The government has completely ignored the matter of the sovereign rights of the native Indian and Eskimo people in the north who still have aboriginal rights in that territory. These people are far more concerned about their inheritance and the ecology of that area than the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Davis) will ever be if he lives to be 150 years old.

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I wish to congratulate the mover of the motion. I listened with a good deal of interest to his carefully prepared statement. The motion is cast in general terms. It refers to national standards and suggests the federal government should have the responsibility to move in this direction. It is not my intention today to talk in terms of what is possible by setting national standards and working in this broad way.

I listened with some interest to the remarks of the last member who spoke. Before proceeding to the particular theme which will be my subject today, I am tempted to make one or two comments on what he said. First, I do not think the cause of ecology is satisfied by extremist statements. It is very well for the hon. member who just spoke to talk about the damage to the sea lion and herring beds. The Minister of the Environment (Mr. Davis) assured me that competent environmental officials who are very concerned have looked at this and there is no evidence of damage. The hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett) made a statement to the effect that there is no evidence of damage. The case for ecology is sound and serious. The damage from spilling of oil is obvious to all Canadians. However, that case is not helped if we exaggerate and say things that cannot be backed up by facts.

I should like to deal now with a more specific situation in the National Capital Region. In a previous session of this parliament, I introduced a bill to create a National Capital Region Pollution Control Authority. It was my hope that we could start by demonstrating what was possible within this one particular area where the responsibility and interest of the federal authority is perhaps a little greater than it may be in some other parts of Canada, however great the problem is in all areas.

When I spoke in the Throne Speech debate at the beginning of this parliament in 1968, it was my hope that the government would give some priority in its policies and measures to reducing the scandalous pollution of the waters of this region. I say scandalous because there is no other way we can describe what we have done. I say "we" in the collective sense as Canadians. These must have been magnificent waterways when the first explorers viewed this country. When the pilings for the MacDonald-Cartier Bridge were put in a matter of a few years ago, 30 feet of sawdust was found at the bottom of the Ottawa River. This had been deposited by a previous generation which had exploited the resources of this country for their own good and sufficient reasons. However, the heritage they left us was to be carried by such magnificent waters as the Ottawa.

I remember a former deputy minister of fisheries, the late Mr. Bates telling me that at one time there were 30 salmon inspectors engaged on the Ottawa River between here and Montreal. Freshwater salmon disappeared from that water approximately 80 years ago. This fishery was killed by the timber trade, the pollution by sawdust which was dumped into the river and the bark of the logs drifting down the streams. I am proud to note that some very substantial measures have been taken by this government to deal with the problem.

Let us look at the Ottawa River for a start. On the Quebec side of the river, the government of Canada has entered into agreements with La Communauté Outaouaise, the regional municipality on the other side of the Ottawa, created by the Province of Quebec, to make grants which have made it possible for the first time for sewage treatment facilities to be developed. There is now a concern about and a measure of attack on the problem. I am sure that hon. members noted the announcement of the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Basford) with regard to the purchase of the E.B. Eddy mill. The federal government has purchased 44 acres of this site. The old groundwood and sulphite mills are to disappear. Over a period of 10 years, the mill will be phased out of its present location and relocated. Careful effort has been made to preserve jobs. This is a problem in this matter because there is a delicate balance between the economic aspect and the moving of the whole industry, a balance between the cost of relocation which makes it difficult for industry to provide employment and the absolutely imperative concern to protect the environment.

[Mr. Francis.]

I note that this particular mill is being cleaned up. It was daily discharging industrial wastes into the Ottawa River which was equivalent to the sewage waste of a community of 1½ million people. In this particular phase, it is the money of the federal authority that is being used. Similarly, on the Ottawa side of the river, grants have been made for sewage treatment plants. There was a recent announcement of a grant of approximately one-third of the cost to the Regional Municipality of Ottawa-Carleton. The same formula that had been developed in connection with the regional community on the Hull side was used. Something like one third of $35 million, the estimated cost for municipal sewage treatment works, was provided to add to the capacity of the Green Creek plant to double it from 40 million gallons to 80 million gallons, to add phosphate treatment facilities, to expand the Watts Creek treatment plant and to maintain tertiary phosphate treatment. There was also a grant of $1½ million made by the federal government to the Regional Municipality of Ottawa-Carleton to assist in interest charges of capital costs in advance of need. These are steps in the right direction. But this is only a partial attack on the problem and is not sufficient.

The Minister of the Environment, who responded for the government in the House today, has tried for a long time to work out an agreement under the Canada Water Act with the provinces of Ontario and Quebec respecting the Ottawa River. A study was made of the Ottawa over a period of time. A careful measurement was taken of the extent of pollution at different points. The results are now being assessed. It is abundantly clear that the cost of cleaning up this river will run into hundreds of millions of dollars. The pulp mills are the prime offenders. Under the constitutional division of responsibility in Canada, the provinces have primary responsibility in this area. But, I say now to members of the House and to the people of Canada that the government is prepared to do more and has been prepared to do more.

The federal government was prepared to support a total plan of pollution control in the national capital region on the Ontario side of the river. I call upon those hon. members representing this community in the provincial legislature, the overwhelming majority of whom are supporters of the Ontario government, not to be silent on this matter. The federal government is prepared to put forward many pollution control measures and the province must share in the responsibility. The municipalities here as in other parts of Canada have limited capacity to carry these burdens. The province of Ontario is dragging its feet on pollution control in the Ottawa area.

I hope that those who try to go swimming at the beaches of the Rideau or Ottawa River this summer, and read the conflicting medical reports about whether 120 parts per million contamination is or is not enough to close up the beaches, will remember that in any case the pollution is far too great. What has taken place in this national capital region is a scandalous pollution of a tremendous water resource. I ask those members in the provincial legislature of the province of Ontario who represent this area to do their duty to the people who elected them and make vigorous representations to have the government of the province of Ontario do more than it has done.

I also call on one or two other ministers to do something. I note with a great deal of satisfaction the transfer of the Rideau Canal from the Department of Transport to the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development which is more concerned with national parks. I hope this will represent a change of attitude and philosophy, as I am sure it will. I hope those responsible for looking after the Rideau Canal will be less concerned about mechanizing the locks and getting a maximum number of boats from point A to point B, and more concerned about the quality of the water in the Rideau Canal. I hope they will take some measures to enforce the standards that are absolutely essential on these magnificent pleasure waterways which are so much a feature to be enjoyed by those who spend any time in this region.

The measures to be taken to clean up the national capital region have just been started. I am proud of what has been done. There is the aid to sewage treatment facilities both on the Quebec and on the Ottawa side. The National Capital Commission has explicitly stated that it will aid control over pollution in the area within its authority. I commend those responsible for the initiative they have taken, because I think this is a magnificent example of what can and should be done. However, I call on those representing the provincial authorities to bear in mind that the war on pollution has to be won, it is true, by setting national standards and doing the things the mover of this motion has in mind. But I think a very practical and concrete demonstration of what is possible to other regional municipalities across Canada should start in our own backyard.

May I end on one note? Among the other measures on which I have not touched today are those loans for sewage treatment projects which have been made through the instrument of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to municipalities across Canada. I am informed that since 1961, the beginning of the program, something in the order of $500 million has been approved in 2,000 loans. There is a good deal more to be done here, but the loans which have as an essential feature abatement of part of the capital cost of facilities if constructed within approved principles and within an approved period of time, are an essential part of the clean-up program. This represents, I am told, something in the order of $180 million in respect of the cost of cleaning up the Great Lakes. This is part of the picture, but it is not enough. It must be substantially expanded. I hope we will see some initiative in this field.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the hon. member who has just preceded me for recognizing that, indeed, recognition of the problem of pollution in our rivers and other waters started in 1961 with a major drive to have the type of sewage treatment plants that would bring about some correction of the situation which was very much apparent. I am sure all members realize the problem is a very broad one which must involve our interest and concern. However, I hope the statements I make today will not be so narrow as to leave hon. members with the impression I am right up to my neck in a fight for my political life, as is the member who preceded me. I wish rather to deal with a couple of fairly narrow issues. One deals with the impact of the oil levies for the purpose of building up a maritime oil pollution fund, and the other deals with the foundering off Vancouver Island of the freighter Vanlene.

Perhaps I might preface my remarks with one or two general comments. First, the reputable movers of oil in the world have no hesitation about paying for their own mistakes. This should be made very clear. While they have no hesitation in that regard, they do have some very serious reservations about paying for the mistakes of others. The second general observation—and I commend this to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) and others—is that the practice of large oil tankers coming into our coastal waters, when perhaps one ship is all the company owns, is a practice at which, in the light of the devastation which might occur, we must look very closely.

We regret a number of omissions on the part of the House, as well as on the part of industry, in Bill C-2 which gave us in essence the amendment to the Canada Shipping Act with which I would like to deal in the next ten or 12 minutes. The Canada Shipping Act, which deals mainly with coastal pollution problems, has already been very clearly proven relatively ineffective on the west coast and therefore could not be very applicable or useful should a major oil spill occur in any of our waters. The amendment, on the other hand, applies to all waters, the west coast included, but it will not be as effective on the west coast for perhaps a very narrow reason, namely, that not nearly as much oil is moved in and out of Canada on that coast as there is on the east coast. Bill C-2 recognized the necessity of raising a fund from which costs for cleaning up spills could be drawn. A levy of some 15 cents per ton of oil shipped in and out of Canadian ports was imposed on February 15 of this year under the act for the purpose of building up the maritime pollution prevention fund to the level which was indicated by the minister of some $25 million to $30 million for the purpose of cleaning up any oil spills.

Another point that I could mention in connection with this by way of background is that most of the oil arriving on the west coast will be outside the 12-mile limit. This entire act applies to specified Canadian waters and says nothing about movement from international to national waters. If the Americans, for example, went ahead with their west coast tanker project, these tankers would be moving outside the 12-mile limit in international waters so there would be nothing really that we could do. To say that we have effective means of control out to 100 miles is absolute nonsense given the realities and practicalities of the Pacific Ocean in that area. There is not a man in this House, nor a person on the west coast of Canada, who is not aware of the tremendous disaster that would occur should there be a spill anywhere out to 100 miles or indeed out to 200 or 300 miles from the Canadian Coast should tankers use the proposed route to the northern part of the U.S. where it would be proposed to process any oil out of the Prudhoe slopes.

On the other hand, on the east coast, traffic is moving in international waters right within the contiguous and immediately adjacent areas. I have only to cite the example of the St. Lawrence River itself. Here we have a very clear jurisdiction over those things which would put teeth into this type of an act and which would have the effect of being preventive. An oil levy for the purposes of preventing pollution is nonsense. It prevents nothing, and it provides solely a fund from which money might be derived for the purpose of cleaning up spills once they have taken place. Its relationship to prevention still confounds me, although it was alluded to many times by the minister in the course of the debate some months ago when we dealt with this measure.

The act itself is a poorly drafted, inconsistent and inadequate piece of legislation that falls far short of achieving any meaningful protection of our marine environment. The legislative inconsistencies surrounding the manner in which levies are collected for the maritime pollution prevention fund have contributed not only to the indefinite postponement of the expansion of the continental oil companies terminals in New Brunswick and its related industrial complex at Lorneville in New Brunswick but are a major factor that currently jeopardises major industrial expansion surrounding the oil industry in the Strait of Canso area of Nova Scotia.

These levies are collected each time a tanker leaves or enters a Canadian port, and have the effect of adding 15 cents to the cost of each ton of oil for each movement. For trans-shipment purposes, this is a minimum of 30 cents a ton. Where processing is involved, this could reach up to 45 cents and indeed 60 cents a ton, and when you are talking about five to seven barrels of crude per ton, depending on its weight, you begin to talk about 10 cents, 12 cents or 14 cents a barrel. When you start adding administration costs and overheads, you get perilously close to the point where users of gas and oil could be facing an increase of as much as one cent a gallon, this is not to mention greases and other products of crude oil.

To illustrate the inability of this fund to adequately protect our environment, we need only look at the current dispute surrounding the payment of costs to clean up the oil spill created when the Pan-American freighter Vanlene ran aground last Tuesday off the coast of Vancouver Island. The Vanlene was a freighter carrying some 37,500 gallons of bunker oil, although there is some confusion about the figure. I suspect it was considerably more than that. In any event, since the Vanlene was not classified as an oil tanker, no levies were charged against the oil carried as ballast, and hence no contribution was made to the pollution prevention fund. I wonder about that. I think anybody involved in the oil movement on the east coast certainly wonders about that.

The clean-up costs for the Vanlene will be borne by east coast oil shippers who contribute to the fund each time one of their tankers enters or leaves a Canadian port. Quite obviously, the Maritime pollution prevention fund is driving industry away from the Maritimes and is doing very little to protect our marine environment from other incidents of this nature.

It is interesting to note that when questioned in the House on March 20 how the clean-up of the Vanlene would be paid for, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) replied:

> The government has paid for clean-ups in the past and probably will do so in the future.

If this is so, then why not have the pollution fund guaranteed by the federal government, thus permitting a substantially longer period to build up the level required by the minister and at the same time substantially reduce the per ton assessment against these movements?

I wish to come back to the Vanlene for a minute. The hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Anderson)—and we regret his absence from the House in recent weeks—is reported in the Sunday Colonist of March 19 as saying that there is no way in which we will be able to handle the resulting spill from a large oil tanker. There is no equipment designed for such an operation. A Department of Transport spokesman said that in addition to adverse weather conditions, the operation is hampered by lack of experience. They have not had to combat a spill of this type before. Clean-up costs, he said, will be in excess of one half million dollars. It seems to me that most of the machinery and manpower is recruited from private companies. It took three days to get a net around this ship.

What has happened to these fine contingency plans that we were assured were in existence? It is obvious that in the case of an oil spill anywhere in Canada our ability to do something about it is quite meaningless. There is still no co-ordinated national contingency plan to combat major oil spills, and I submit that this has been amply demonstrated on the west coast in the last week.

On July 8, 1971, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) revealed details of an interim contingency plan for coping with oil and toxic material spills, to be in effect until a national contingency plan is developed. This national plan has not yet been completed. The minister appears to be only taking credit for the work done by those who worked on the oil spill of the Arrow in Chedabucto Bay in Nova Scotia.

I have two points to make. The method of collecting levies on the east and west coast, where there is a substantial amount of oil moving in and out, is unfair because it poses the prospect of doubling, tripling and even quadrupling assessments on the shipment of the same oil. There is something wrong in principle about that. The result is that it may drive away potential industrial development on the east coast, both in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia.

In the first instance of the sort since the sinking of the Arrow in Chedabucto Bay, we have had a demonstration of our total inability to cope with major oil spills. This is not only regrettable but in a sense must be immoral inasmuch as we have been constantly assured by government that we do have contingency plans to meet any emergency that arises. I point out that in the latest case it took three days to get a boom placed around the sunken ship.

It is to be hoped that the Minister of Transport, in his conversations with the Premier of New Brunswick, will tackle the first point that I have made with respect to the levies on the movement of oil and reduce those levies substantially so that they will not interfere with potential industrial development. He could have the government fund the present plan, and spread it over a considerably longer period of time to reach the total of $25 million or $30 million that he feels is required for the purpose of combating oil spills.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Speaker: Before recognizing the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra (Mr. Deachman) I wish to bring to the attention of hon. members that, pursuant to Standing Order 40, the following matters will be considered at the time of adjournment this evening: the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald)—National Defence; the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Kaplan)—Industry; the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose)—Public Service.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Harding:

This House expresses the view that in order to protect and preserve our environment, immediate national standards for environmental quality must be set for air, water and land, it being clear that these standards must be set for all pollutants, that they must be enforced by the federal authorities, that low-cost loans must be available to municipalities and to certain industries to ensure no further delay in the building of sewage treatment plants and plant clean-up, and that an Environmental Council of Canada should be established without delay.

Mr. Grant Deachman (Vancouver-Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I wish to draw attention in greater detail to some of the legislation enacted by this parliament since 1968 in respect of pollution. The Minister of the Environment (Mr. Davis) has referred to some of the acts in a general way, but I wish to deal with them a little more specifically because I believe this will assist to bring to debate into focus.

Since 1968 parliament has passed the Canada Water Act which prevents the emission of sewage and industrial pollutants and protects whole river systems such as the Fraser in British Columbia, the Saskatchewan on the prairies, and the Ottawa River, which was mentioned by the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis) a few moments ago. That act provides for the imposition of fines of up to $5,000 per day for polluters of such river systems and streams. If we are to clean up some of our major waterways we will tackle the job under the authority provided by that act.

We in this parliament also passed the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act. This was a remarkable event in that we drew a 100 mile base line to protect Arctic waters from pollution by vessels attempting to navigate those waters, and to protect them from pollution by man on the edge of the Arctic seas. In this case our right to pass such legislation was challenged. Hon. members who recall the voyage of the Manhattan will recall the misgivings that we had as to whether or not Canadians even had jurisdiction over the territory in the north that we had long considered to belong to Canada. That act was passed, and to date has remained unchallenged by other countries. Year by year its provisions become more real in protecting Arctic waters.

I also wish to refer to the Canada Shipping Act, mentioned briefly by the previous speaker, which imposes what are probably the stiffest anti-pollution requirements in the world on ships entering Canadian waters. This measure is now being challenged by the oil companies because of the provision to impose a levy of 15 cents a ton on oil cargo moving in and out of Canadian ports. The oil companies would like us to believe that this levy of 15 cents a ton is the make or break limit for them. I do not really believe that is so. I believe there is more profit to be made in the oil business than will ever be wrecked by that 15 cents a ton levy. I believe that the application of a law as stiff as this is a beginning in bringing control to offshore waters so that they will not be polluted by the oil industry. Despite the pleas of the Premier of New Brunswick and others, I do not think this levy will wreck Canadian business. As the minister points out, it is only one half of one per cent of the value of the oil.

Mr. Forrestall: One half of one per cent? You're kidding!

Mr. Davis: That is right. Don't you think the oil industry can afford it?

Mr. Deachman: I hear the incredulous voice of the hon. gentleman opposite wondering if this is only one half of one per cent. Perhaps he will want to reflect on the remarks he made earlier, and join with those of us who think that the 15 cent per ton levy is not a bad place to start.

Mr. Forrestall: It isn't the 15 cents I object to, but the 30 cents and the 45 cents.

Mr. Deachman: All we know is that the Premier of New Brunswick is down here pleading on behalf of the oil companies to get that lifted. I am pleading on behalf of the people whose livelihoods may be wrecked by oil pollution.

Mr. Forrestall: It isn't the oil companies that will pay for it, it is the consumers.

Mr. Deachman: What are we to do with the fisherman who is affected? Will we write him off?

Mr. Forrestall: Surely to goodness—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. The hon. member is not paying very much attention to the Chair. In addition, he is disturbing the hon. member who has the floor. I would remind him to address his remarks to the Chair.

Mr. Deachman: The hon. member gets his figures up to 30 cents by talking about oil that is brought in and taken out again. That is not really what people in the oil business are doing.

I also want to mention the Northern Inland Waters Act which protects the waters of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories in the same way that provincial water acts protect waters in the provinces. We also passed the Territorial Sea and Fishing Zone Act by which we extended fishing zones to the 12 mile limit, including on the west coast Dixon Entrance, Hecate Strait and Queen Charlotte Sound. I also want to refer to the passage of the amendments to the Fisheries Act which have strengthened regulations respecting the deposit of sewage and waste in waters frequented by fish.

I want to refer to amendments to the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act which provide stringent safety and anti-pollution controls for offshore drilling operations, thus preventing oil drilling in the Gulf of Georgia and thereby avoiding a disaster such as they suffered at Santa Barbara in the United States. This is a matter of grave concern on the west coast. The Gulf of Georgia is a little inland sea, one of the best areas in the world for navigation in inland waters, for sport and commercial fishing and recreation, but it could all be destroyed by a disaster such as that which happened at Santa Barbara.

I want also to refer to the Motor Vehicle Safety Act which requires new automobiles to be fitted with a device to reduce exhaust emission and to lower noise levels. I want also to refer to the Clean Air Act which we have just passed and which gives the federal government the authority to establish clean air standards across the country. There are other ways in which the battle against pollution has been carried forward by this government under existing legislation. We reduced the level of phosphates in detergents under the Pesticides Control Act which provides severe restrictions on the use of DDT and other pesticides. Incentives have been offered to industries buying air and water anti-pollution devices so that there is now no excuse for them not cutting down on pollution from their plants.

The government has also provided loans to municipalities through Central Mortgage and Housing for sewage treatment plants. At the Iona Island plant in the city of Vancouver much of the work was financed by a very large loan from Central Mortgage and Housing. This plant has made a great deal of difference to the residents of English Bay and to the parks in the area.

Mr. Speaker, these are just some of the acts of parliament which have been passed by this government since 1968 in the war on pollution. I think we can take a great deal of credit in this House for what has been done and for the legislation which has passed through this Chamber in the fight against pollution across Canada.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, the motion before us today moved by the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Harding) is a very important one which affects all of us regardless of our financial position and, in many ways, regardless of where we live in Canada. Pollution, problems of the environment, the ecology, are today international problems; they are severe problems which we cannot escape. This is an issue that all of us are going to have to face up to and put more money into than we have in the past.

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger).]

Even in my constituency, which is primarily rural and not industrialized, more and more people are becoming concerned about the general question of the environment. In the last few months I have had people coming to see me and have had letters regarding air pollution and pollution of the water. In January, a gentleman came to see me who was concerned about the fact that his cattle would not drink water from the Qu'Appelle River because cities had dumped sewage into it. More people are becoming aware of the problem because they hear about it in the news every day and they read about the effect pollution is having on our water and air.

Mr. Speaker, I think the general question of pollution is another example of the evolution of social policy lagging behind technology. In the last 20 or 30 years there has been a technological revolution but our social policies and institutions have not kept pace. In man's early days he had little impact on the environment. There were a few streams polluted here and there, a few manmade deserts, but for the most part nature was able to replenish itself. Streams were able to cleanse themselves. Nature sustained man and remained in control. This is not the case today when man is controlling nature. In the last 60 or 70 years we have had radical changes in the quantitative way of life of mankind and we now find that we are overwhelming nature.

This is primarily the problem that we are discussing today. We are the first generation with the power to establish its own destiny, its own environment. We have the power to destroy it with nuclear weapons, biological weapons and so on. Many of the long term effects of such weapons are not known. We have created for ourselves an environmental nightmare. Many people in the world breathe smog and eat food polluted with pesticides. Rivers and lakes are so polluted that fish can no longer live in them. Many of our non-renewable resources are being exhausted without any long term plans for future generations.

When I was reading some material in preparation for these remarks, Mr. Speaker, I came across a few terrifying facts. Each year man is adding some 140 billion tons of carbon dioxide to the atmosphere; sewage production in North America averages 120 gallons per person per day which goes into the waterways. As we know most pollutants end up in the ocean and ecologists are warning us about the long term effects on plankton and life in the ocean which produces about 70 per cent of the earth's oxygen; some 7 million tons of pesticides are added to the atmosphere each year; pollution from fuel may double by the year 1980. We know how much smog there is now in some of the large cities and perhaps in eight or ten years urban dwellers will have to wear gas masks in order that they may breathe oxygen.

I think it is very clear that the problem before us transcends political boundaries and economic advantage. We must move before it is too late and find some long term solutions to the problem plaguing our environment.

I think we must do two basic things, Mr. Speaker. First of all, we must pump hundreds of millions of dollars into research on pollution control. This is something that we have let slide for too many years. We have started to move in that direction with the creation of the Department of the Environment, but I suggest we are moving too slowly. We should have a department and a program with teeth and money.

Secondly, we must pass much stiffer anti-pollution laws with national standards for air, water and land pollution. We should not be soft with industries that are polluting. I realize that in order to do these things we must trample on some toes because we live in a capitalist society which is concerned about making a profit, and it may not be profitable for some companies to invest in pollution control equipment. But that is a social choice, a social decision which we must make collectively as a society, as a country. That is the type of planning that must be emphasized in Canada and the whole world today, because in this field mankind is lagging.

Besides, how can we really measure in dollars and cents the cost of the destruction of our environment and the long term effects that destruction will have on mankind and animal life. Many of those effects we do not understand today. In Canada, many policies in this field ought to be introduced, the first and foremost of those being national pollution standards for air, water and land. These pollution standards must be enforced vigorously, otherwise they will not be effective. We must also develop some rational plan regarding our non-renewable resources. Today, we are more interested in exploiting these resources, in selling them to a foreign country, than in conserving them. Many people are warning us that it will not be many years before we shall have run out of many of our non-renewable resources. In Canada we take no heed of such warnings. Instead, we offer bigger tax concessions to oil, gas and mining companies. That must be changed. That is why I am concerned about matters like the continental energy policy and talks going on between Canada and the United States regarding trade.

There must be more research into pollution caused by automobile exhaust systems. Such pollution affects the cities of this country. Automobile exhausts are one of the largest sources of pollution in Canada. There must be more research into public transportation, so that people may commute from one part of a city or country to another without using automobiles. There must also be more research and planning with regard to recycling and preserving minerals. We must preserve them instead of just dumping them and losing them forever. Also, as the hon. member for Kootenay West suggested a number of times, we must establish an environmental council of Canada, which will advise on and study problems connected with pollution. The council will recommend solutions that we, as Canadians, ought to follow. We should establish a pollution control fund as well that would provide substantial amounts of money to abate the problems of pollution.

Request for Environmental Council

I suggest that loans and funds in this area should be made available to municipalities of the country, to enable them to instal sewage treatment systems. Here, again, is an area we must be concerned about. Sewage, as we know, is one of the major causes of pollution in our rivers, streams and lakes. Much research into sewage aspects of pollution is being undertaken in Sweden. There, they are talking about recycling waste products and about installing systems that will use about one sixteenth the quantity of water that we use for disposing of sewage. Much less pollution is expected to be the result. As I say, we can do many things like that. Loans and grants must be made available to municipalities. It is useless blaming municipalities for our pollution if we do not give them funds to correct the situation.

In addition, the Department of the Environment must co-ordinate these activities. That department must be given teeth. I am not being unfair, I think, when I say that until now, that department has been a disappointment. It does not seem to know where it is going. It does not wield enough authority. It has no long term plans and is not providing us with much information regarding its activities. I hope I have made clear what our country should be doing regarding the abatement of pollution. Not one of us knows how many years are left for mankind. We must begin implementing some solutions very quickly, because time is running out.

Before closing, may I say a word about the world population explosion and the rate of population increase. Today, the world population is increasing by 70 million people each year. For 1800 years, up until 1830, the world population doubled about every 200 years. In 1830 the world population was approximately 1 billion people. Between 1830 and 1930, the world population doubled, to 2 billion. Between 1930 and 1960 the world population increased by another billion people, to 3 billion. Between 1960 and 1970, world population went up to 3.6 billion, and we expect it to double again by the year 2,000. Over 7 billion people will then be living on our planet. This concerns me greatly. We live in a country that is sparsely populated, if one excludes some of our larger cities. The population problem affects the world in general and Canada, through the United Nations, can supply more leadership in this area than is being supplied at present.

I have tried to speak of problems that I think should be examined immediately. We are just learning about environmental pollution. Some ramifications of pollution are not known and we will need to spend hundreds of millions of dollars in research and development to overcome the problem. Also, we will need to introduce much stiffer laws than those on the statute books today. This question is one that concerns us all. It cuts across party lines and boundaries because, no matter where we live, the problems of pollution have become critical and need to be solved.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I want to deal with the subject of the environment from three points of view in the short time at my disposal. First, I shall deal with it from the national point of view; second, I shall mention the international situation and third, I want to deal with some matters of particular concern to my own constituents in the field of the environment.

First, speaking from the national point of view, may I say that the time has come—and I think my opinion is shared by the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and of the House of Commons on the Constitution of Canada—to assert our national concern with the entire subject of pollution. I notice that in his speech this afternoon the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Davis) once more brought forward that old chestnut that is brought out when various aspects of environmental control are discussed—the constitution. In discussing the old problem involving the constitution he mentioned areas under federal and areas under provincial jurisdiction.

I am looking at the recently tabled report of the constitution committee. At page 91, three sections are devoted to the question of pollution control. Recommendation 100 is as follows:

Control over the pollution of air and water should be a matter of concurrent jurisdiction between the Provincial Legislatures and the Federal Parliament, and, as in section 95 of the British North America Act, the powers of the Federal Parliament should be paramount.

Recommendation 101 reads as follows:

The concurrency of jurisdiction over air and water pollution would necessitate both Federal-Provincial and Province-to-Province planning and coordination or programs.

The report then goes on to endorse the work of the Resource Ministers Council as a means of continuing consultation on matters of renewable resources. There is discussion in great detail regarding the present constitutional set-up involving the control of pollution, and the existing confusion is clearly shown.

Provincial jurisdiction stems from property and civil rights, municipal institutions, local works and undertakings and matters of a local and private nature within a province. Federal jurisdiction is based upon the criminal law, navigation and shipping, coastal and inland fisheries and the regulation of trade and commerce. There is, here, an immense possibility of jurisdictions overlapping. There are obvious difficulties in determining constitutional and political accountability.

It seems to me that the recommendation of the committee on the constitution is of the utmost importance. In recent years a totally new challenge has been developing in line with the growing global crisis relating to the environment. Man has learned that the world's resources are finite and that there is also ever increasing consumption which may threaten, in the long run, our physical and psychological survival.

Despite the statement the minister made today, I did not feel he was expressing a sense of urgency. It is true this may have been because he was not feeling very well himself. But I believe there is a growing militant, popularly based anti-pollution campaign in progress and for the sake of political expediency, if for no other reason, all of us should pay attention to this movement.

I noticed that the Canadian Wildlife Federation said the other day that 65 species of Canadian wildlife are endangered by human activities. I noticed, also, that Dr. McKenna of the York-Finch Hospital in Toronto said that air pollution contributes up to 50 per cent of all ailments afflicting man. A former Secretary-General of the United Nations, U Thant, said we had ten years in which to act before we smothered in our own waste. So I urge the federal government to use overriding power to deal with this threat, and to set national standards. I am not saying the provinces do not bear a measure of responsibility but I am asserting that the overriding concern is federal.

I undertook to deal with the international aspects of this matter. I know the minister had only 20 minutes in which to speak. I am sorry, though, that he did not use part of that time to deal with the question of the Stockholm conference on the environment which is to take place in June. The whole question of pollution cannot be solved locally, provincially or even nationally. It has become an international concern. For the first time the world community is organizing to try to deal with these international dangers affecting the welfare of humanity. I am sorry the minister is not in the House at the moment and that he did not have time to tell us what initiatives the Canadian government is prepared to put forward at this conference.

I should now like to spend a few minutes dealing with problems in my own constituency. We in the Beaches-Woodbine-Greenwood area of Toronto along the eastern lakefront are deeply concerned about pollution. Local organizations have gone into the facts, made reports and communicated them to elected representatives and to governments. They are actively participating in the battle against pollution. I had occasion the other day to send a questionnaire to my constituents. I asked about a problem which faces one particular area, namely, the smell which emanates from a local sewage disposal plant. I put this question:

The east end (of Toronto) has a problem of air pollution including odours from Ashbridge Bay. Agree or disagree?

Five hundred and thirty-eight people answered the question. Five hundred and fourteen agreed, and 24 disagreed. I suppose the 24 who disagreed are not as sensitive to odours as those who agreed. This was gone into by an organization called ForWard Nine. They conducted an inquiry they called Operation Sniff, the purpose of which was to determine the extent and pervasiveness of the odours coming from this plant. After the study they presented a factual report. I shall spare the House the details, but they were very expressive in their language about this menace to the quality of life in an otherwise excellent residential area.

We are affected not only by air pollution; we are affected by water pollution. The condition of Lake Ontario is not as bad as that of its sister Great Lake, Erie, but fish life is decreasing and bathing is becoming more restricted. We enjoy access to a beautiful recreation area, yet very few people venture to swim there because of the pollution which they fear they will encounter. Again, this is a matter of international concern. We all know that the International Joint Commission has recently negotiated, and I believe entered into, an agreement providing for a tremendous international plan to clean up the Great Lakes.

I was disappointed that the minister in his rather soothing remarks today failed to deal with the fact that, as I understand it, the President of the United States has vetoed the financial measures necessary for the plan recommended by the IJC. I wish the minister had told us something about this project, which would have had tremendous beneficial impact upon the lives of people living around the Great Lakes—a very substantial section of the Canadian population, I might add. We have a duty to maintain our heritage of fresh water in the Great Lakes. The minister should tell us, if he can, why the President vetoed this project, whether his veto is likely to be withdrawn and what the Canadian government is doing in an attempt to get a different answer.

There is one other aspect of this question with which I should like to deal. A lot of the air pollution we experience arises from the burning of garbage. It is the view of experts, and my own view too, that the solution lies in recycling garbage and using it for industrial purposes. We are planning an experimental plant in the area of Toronto. It will be a municipal plant but to some extent it will have to be supported financially by the Department of the Environment. I plead with the minister to give sympathetic consideration to schemes of this sort. If it can be shown that they work they could constitute a major contribution to the ending of air pollution.

I do not know whether my time is about to expire but I should like to refer to a speech which the minister made on March 16, 1971. I thought I had the Hansard report with me but I cannot immediately locate it. However, it was reported in the press at the time that the government would aid city garbage disposal. The press report reads:

> Jack Davis, Minister of the Environment designate, told the Commons committee on fisheries and forestry that many cities cause air pollution by burning their garbage and once the proposed clean air act is passed the federal government will be in a position to help. The federal government likely will conduct research into ways of disposing of solid wastes without burning them, he said. Knowledge from such studies will be of great help to cities such as Toronto—

Somewhere else the minister said the government would be ready to assist in the financing of experimental projects in this field, to show what could be done to transform the waste of modern civilization into something useful instead of having it burned and thus put into the atmosphere as a pollutant and health hazard to people living in the cities.

As I have said, this subject has international, national and constitutional implications. It also has extremely important local implications. When the minister took on this job more than than a year ago I wished him good luck. I hope that all energy and vigour will be put into the enforcement of regulations. It is easy to set up standards. It is relatively easy to make reports and speeches on the subject. What is difficult and will require a tremendous amount of social, legal and governmental effort is the adequate enforcement of regulations that are made.

I know the minister was not feeling very well today and was able to be in the House for only a short time, but I commend to him the fact that people all over the country are concerned that the work of his department be fully effective so we can be saved from the scourge of the pollution of our environment.

[Translation]

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Environment): Mr. Speaker, as I listened this afternoon to the speeches of other hon. members, especially that of the mover of the motion (Mr. Harding), I noted that mention was made of almost every pollution problem under the sun and that there was no particular discourse on the text of the motion. That may have been a useful exercise, since we have already had, during the debate on various legislative proposals made by the government and adopted by this House, the opportunity of making a detailed study of those excellent measures, and it would be superfluous to come back to them today.

The previous speaker deplored the fact that the Minister of Environment (Mr. Davis) did not have enough time to speak about the important question of the United Nations Conference on Human Environment which is to be held in Stockholm from June 5 to June 15, 1972.

Mr. Speaker, I have indirectly been involved in preparations for this conference, especially since September when the minister asked me to attend to a national advisory committee in conjuction with the conference. I may be able to give information that might satisfy the hon. member who brought up the matter.

We have indeed set up an advisory committee of 50 members, on which the provincial governments are represented especially through their deputy ministers responsible for pollution and the quality of the environment. This committee also includes representatives of various spheres of national interest, for instance, industry, the natives of the country, the Indians, the Inuits as well as representatives of various citizens' groups which deal in matters pertaining to the environment, and those of the scientific community in general.

To carry out productive work, the number of members obviously had to be limited. Otherwise, we should have spent whole sessions just trying to conciliate different opinions. We feel we have been successful in setting up a committee representative of vast national interests.

So far, we have held two meetings, at the beginning of December and early this year and we intend to hold a third one next week.

The advisory committee's terms of reference are to suggest means whereby the participation of the people of Canada in the preparation of the Stockholm conference may be brought about, and particularly to incite the submission of suggestions as to the position to be adopted by the Canadian government.

We did not merely hold sessions of the committee, which includes some 50 members, Mr. Speaker. We solicited and obtained the committee's agreement to hold public hearings in all Canadian provinces, to which representatives of all sectors of the nation concerned with and interested in environment issues are invited.

These public hearings will begin in Vancouver on April 5 and the last one will be held in Winnipeg around May 5. During that period, we shall visit all the provinces, including the northern territories.

I should like to point out also that as regards the preparation of the Stockholm conference, Canada is among the 27 countries chosen by the UN General Assembly to be part of a committee responsible for preparing the Stockholm conference, drafting the agenda of the meeting and defining the discussion areas, for the question of environment is in itself such a vast subject that it would be ridiculous to believe that all the environment problems will be solved during the few days the conference will last. They must limit themselves to the most urgent and pressing questions.

It might be useful to recall also that the main object of the Stockholm conference is to call the attention of all nations of the world on the urgency of considering the serious question of pollution.

We are fortunate in that a Canadian, Mr. Maurice Strong, will act as secretary general at the Stockholm conference. Mr. Strong took up his duties a little more than a year ago. It was obviously a great challenge for him because people were saying here and there in the corridors of the United Nations that the Stockholm conference would be a failure. I believe it is to the credit of Mr. Strong—shared by Canada, obviously—that he not only made the conference possible but prepared it so well that one can now state that it will unquestionably begin on June 5.

One of the main tasks of the 27 nations' preparatory committee was to suggest to the secretariat of the conference, in Geneva, methods, plans and proporals which were sent last week to all members of the United Nations so they may consider them and state their position.

The public opinion soundings which the Canadian government intends to hold in the country will be part of the data which the Canadian delegation will bring to Stockholm on June 5.

I must say that it is in all seriousness and with an open mind that the Canadian government intends to sound out the public. It is not some form of window dressing, as it has been commonly stated in the English press. We really want to know what Canadians think because we feel that they are deeply concerned about the matter. We know that they will be in a position to contribute greatly to the development of our official position in Stockholm.

Mr. Speaker, I could speak at length on the Stockholm conference. To windup my comments, I wish to remind hon. members that it would be ridiculous on the part of the government to strengthen its position when only a few months separate us from direct consultation with the people. Canada should adopt a basically resilient position which she should probably maintain to the end. A great deal of compromise will have to take place, even though we could count on certain concessions at Stockholm. However, the Canadian government has certainly in mind that there should be a concensus on the adoption of measures, of recommendation and, if possible, of a universal declaration concerning human environment that would likely be ratified by all nations that are conscious of the serious problem of pollution.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to touch briefly on a subject that has been raised in this House by the hon. member for

Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) who is unfortunately absent at this time and which has given rise to several questions in the last few days.

Reference has been made—

[English]

Reference was made in this debate to the 15 cents a ton levy on oil for the creation of a pollution clean-up fund of approximately $25 million. I say this with some reservation, but if I heard the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) correctly he referred to the amendments to the Canada Shipping Act as a bad piece of legislation, or at least he did not think a great deal of it. It is possible that he was present at the detailed study of this bill by the special committee on pollution, but I do not remember seeing him there.

It seems to me that there was not much contribution to that exercise, either in committee or in the House, by opposition members from New Brunswick. It is rather unfair, therefore, to come here today and say it is a bad piece of legislation. As one who attended all the sittings of the committee when it studied that bill, I cannot agree with the position taken by some hon. members. We studied the legislation at length and in depth.

I certainly recognize the merit of the motion now before us. The mover of the motion worked very hard on the amendments to the Canada Shipping Act. I recall that most members supported that legislation in the House. Some of them said that to vote against it would be the same as voting against motherhood. But they do not say that today. There is now a Tory government in New Brunswick: that may be the difference. The legislation has been in force for a number of months and perhaps as an afterthought they now say it is bad legislation.

Members opposite made sure they were present when Mr. K. C. Irving, his three sons and a battery of lawyers appeared before our committee to make representations on the legislation. I respect Mr. Irving as any good New Brunswicker should. I respected him enough to question him time and again on this legislation to which he was opposed. He had some personal interest in the legislation. This is fair: that is what the work of the committee is all about, to listen to people who have a personal interest in the laws which we attempt to pass in this House. All the Tory members from New Brunswick added their two-bits of questioning to the record. They then left and did not return for our many hardworking sessions in studying and dissecting the bill. And today they cry "Injustice"!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired. The hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. Flemming).

Mr. Flemming: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if any hon. member would object if I called it six o'clock.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): There would be an objection if you did not.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Hon. Hugh John Flemming (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, the motion we are considering expresses the view that in order to protect and preserve our environment, immediate national standards for environmental quality must be set for air, water and land. I submit this is an important objective which we would do well to consider carefully in the realization that most people in our country consider the subject to be of tremendous interest and concern. I would like to have seen the word "improvement" in the motion because I do not think one can change overnight a situation which has been in existence for 200 or 300 years. I believe that is too much to expect.

I believe, however, we should work toward improvement. As a consequence, I would like to have seen the word "improvement" in the motion, recognizing full well that it can only come about through people in authority such as representatives of the government of Canada and of our provinces and municipalities, as well as citizens generally taking great interest in improving the situation.

I submit that the control of pollutants in the air, in the water and in the land requires an element of greater supervision and regulation than now exists. It may be all right to say the federal authorities should exercise this control, but in my opinion you get better results are closer to the situation if you have control through the provincial and municipal authorities. When the federal machine is involved, people have to come to Ottawa to tell their story and in the process I am afraid a lot of effectiveness is lost. I suggest that if we dealt with this problem at the municipal level we would achieve better results because the municipalities are right on the spot.

The motion says that the municipalities should be assisted by loans to them and to certain industries to ensure no further delay in the building of sewage treatment plants. That seems a laudable objective. Therefore I think this House can say that the substance of the motion is logical and hon. members should have no hesitation supporting it in so far as the principle is concerned.

I think the House would do well to consider that, while hon. members might approve of the principle of working with great diligence toward all the objectives contained in the motion, these activities should of necessity be coupled with an awareness of existing situations which involve the services of many people. This adds up to jobs. I do not think we should merely say we are going to do away with something overnight when the livelihood of many people is at stake. I think it is a reasonable assumption that improvement can be affected. I think we should say that conditions which have existed for many years must be improved. We must believe that the situation, rather than deteriorating further is improving and from every point of view.

I submit that in our approach to the improvement of the environment we must be governed first by short-term objective. The short-term objective may have become critical and must be dealt with immediately by some jurisdictional authority. The longer term objective, of course, involves government, it makes no difference at what level, enunciating the policy it intends to continue from year to year with the idea of ultimately effecting improvement. I think we must take these matters into consideration when dealing with the problem in the short term and in the long term.

I have a distinct recollection of the situation that existed in my province of New Brunswick, and the general quality of water resources there when our administration was in office. At that time I took quite a bit of satisfaction, and in fact a reasonable amount of pride, in our passing legislation covering this matter. I think we were a bit ahead of our time, Mr. Speaker, because that was in the mid-1950s.

Mr. Pepin: It was a good Conservative government!

Mr. Flemming: That's just it. I know that the minister, with his intelligence and knowledge, can quickly recognize something that has merit. We passed legislation in this field and agreed to participate in the improvements of which I speak. We agreed to support the municipalities financially if they would instal sewage treatment plants and facilities of that nature. We also set up a water authority in that province. It had the duty to study the situation and recommend concrete steps that could be taken to bring about improvements.

I think we obtained some good results from that legislation. In fact, the legislation is still in operation. The Saint John River is a case in point. It is a long river. It lies partly in the state of Maine, becomes the international river between the state of Maine and New Brunswick, then it comes into New Brunswick and becomes a New Brunswick river. Three different types of authority were involved in the legislation, with all their various problems created from a jurisdictional point of view. There are many villages and towns along the Saint John River. Generally speaking, they all have sewage disposal systems. It must be remembered that one branch of the Saint John River rises in the state of Maine and villages and towns are located on its banks.

As my hon. friend from Madawaska-Victoria (Mr. Corbin) knows, there are industrial plants in his city. In fact, there is a large plant there which was guilty of causing some pollution of that river. The matter has now been rectified, but it posed a problem for some time. As I say, we made an improvement. I give this example because I think this type of approach should become more national.

I now turn to the question of the Bay of Fundy, which is in the southern part of New Brunswick, and the Gulf of St. Lawrence which is on its eastern side. Here I deal with the question of transportation. At present we have some problems connected with the spillage of oil from ships. We had the wreck of the Arrow and the pollution by oil of Chedabucto Bay. In spite of the pride that we all have in Bill C-2, which provides certain penalties and regulations, I think a little more attention might have been paid to the tax imposed on vessels which by the nature of their physical condition and age are a greater menace to navigation and a source of oil spillage than more modern, larger vessels.

It seems to me that this is a matter which should receive consideration in the future because there is no comparison between the possibility of damage due to spillage of oil from a newly constructed ship and the probability of spillage from some old wreck that somebody hires for a small amount of money in order to transport oil.

We have a regulation applying a 15 cents per ton levy on ships of over 1,000 tons. Here I am dealing with the short-term question which is an issue in New Brunswick and may become an issue in Nova Scotia before long. A large development is planned in the southern part of New Brunswick on the Bay of Fundy. Incidentally, it is my riding although it is seven or eight miles from Saint John. It is at Lorneville. As everybody knows, Mr. Speaker, the continuation of that development is very much in jeopardy.

The oil people who contemplate development have said they cannot afford the 15 cents per ton levy. They say they may have to pay this levy inward and outward and if they transport products between one place and another in the area. In other words, there is a possibility they may have to pay the levy three times and they say they cannot afford it. One may ask, what can they afford? But before dealing with that question I would like to mention the seriousness of the situation. It was only about a month ago that we journeyed to Saint John to attend one of those fund raising dinners that everybody knows about. There we saw the plans of this development.

At one end of the development was a huge thermal plant for the production of electricity, involving enormous expenditure and based to an extent on the possibility that they might get their fuel at an attractive price from the over-all development. Next was a huge wharf to be built by the Continental Oil Company, costing approximately $60 million. The Canadian National and CPR had their tracks laid out, and a good deal of space was left for further development to take place. In other words, the very thing that is provided for in various legislative enactments of this parliament is being put into operation at Lorneville at the present time. But now it is all in jeopardy and the whole project may be scrapped because the shippers say they cannot afford this levy.

I am sure that no one within sound of my voice could contemplate such a situation without regretting that it is possible. We must do everything we can to avoid it. The general manager of the project revealed that Continental Oil Company was prepared to pay a levy of five cents to seven cents a ton, but with the present levy the company would lose $200 million a year. I submit that there is evidence of lack of investigation when the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) tells us he is satisfied the government will get $25 million in the bank as a result of this levy, while the company concerned says it will lose $200 million a year on the basis of a 15-cent levy. Unless there is something wrong here, it seems to me there is plenty of latitude for the company, the federal authority and the provincial government to put their heads together and work out an agreement with which they are prepared to live.

[Mr. Flemming.]

It seems that the maximum levy was imposed and the submission is that there is no need for the maximum. There is quite a bit of criticism of the federal government. The president of Gulf Oil of Canada—I point out that the company is in Nova Scotia in case someone might think I am being partisan—Mr. "Jerry" McFee, said last week that a 15-cent per ton levy is twice as high as required and he criticized the government for failing to indicate a ceiling for the fund.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

[Translation]

Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

[English]

Mr. Corbin: I understand that there is a limitation on the time but would you allow me, Mr. Speaker, to put a question to the hon. member?

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): This can be done only by unanimous consent, and it is my understanding that no extension of time has been given by the House. I understand procedure we have adopted has even been made an order of the House.

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I assure the hon. member who has just spoken that we will be very pleased to add the word "improve" to our motion, but the main thing about which we are concerned is to make sure that the first steps are taken toward protecting and preserving the environment. There has been a great deal of talk throughout the country and a great deal of interest has been shown in the matter, but there must be a great deal more vigorous and immediate leadership from the federal government before we get anything like the amount of action that is required to preserve and protect the environment.

Our discussion on the motion has been very wide-ranging, from local pollution issues to the Stockholm conference on the environment. This reflects the fact that this is a many faceted problem and it concerns the public in many ways. However, there has been the feeling among some members that we can get along in a leisurely fashion with respect to the question of the environment. Those of us who have been digging into this subject realize that the experts are deeply concerned lest our technology whittle away, destroy and obliterate our environment to such an extent and so rapidly that in the process the human animal will be eliminated.

We are beginning to realize that we must face up to two problems, the problem of world population and the problem of world environment, and that those things must be dealt with not in some dim and distant future but right now, if we are to keep out of trouble. Canada is one of the world's few remaining treasure houses of natural resources and we are beginning to discover that other countries are realizing this fact. They have used up their own treasures, their own natural resources, to quite an extent.

We in our province are very aware that other countries have found the way to our door and are beginning to take from our shores our treasures, our minerals, our wood and other commodities.

We are afraid that our water power and other resources may be taken away entirely. This may be good from the standpoint of international trade, but from the standpoint of planning a future for those who will come after us we must make sure we do not destroy in the short run our whole heritage and the possibility of a good environment for those who follow us.

Parts of Canada are among the world's best potential holiday spots. I have been told that in my own province tourism is the second largest industry and I have no doubt that such is the case in some of the maritime provinces. We must take great care to make sure that this remains the situation. I am glad to see that some of my hon. friends know what a treasure house and holiday spot we have, and it is indeed a beautiful place.

We are anxious to see the establishment of an environmental council without delay, because we think we badly need a non-partisan body which would represent all the sections of the community. Only when we get a widely representative body of that kind will it be possible to get action on these environmental problems.

It has been pointed out today that the minister is handicapped and that he should be in charge of environment and nothing else. He has under his jurisdiction forestry and fisheries, and these often come into conflict with the environment. In our province, the big forest industries and the environment do not always march in the same happy direction and often one does not progress without the destruction of the other. The minister is in the position of being subject to sectional interests in a way that he should not be.

Our main reasons for wanting the establishment of an environmental council are so that the minister can be free of conflicts of interest, so that the council can represent the interests of the whole community, and to avoid the federal government's regrettable habit of using the taxpayers' money to pay for reports and studies and then sitting on them as though they were its own private property. If the public is to protect the environment it must know the facts, and both this government and the provincial government—at least the one with which I am familiar—have the regrettable tendency of trying to keep the facts away from the public because it might be embarrassing if the public were to use them. An environmental council would avoid that sort of thing. Those are the reasons we want this council.

Secondly, we believe firmly that national standards should be set for water and air quality and that the only place to set those standards is here in the federal parliament under the jurisdiction of the Department of the Environment. Some time ago we passed the Canada Water Act. Some of us were on that committee and discovered that all this water basin business looks beautiful, but only on paper. It has become pure rhetoric and is now a speciman for a museum: it is not real, Mr. Speaker. Not one water basin area has been set up. We pointed out that it would not work and that the only thing that would work would be to have the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Davis) armed with national water quality standards for all parts of the country. The same thing should be true for air quality under the air pollution act.

When he spoke this afternoon, the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Deachman) catalogued legislation passed by this government. It is one thing to pass legislation and it is another to have that legislation take effect. I wondered where his eyesight was when he said that this legislation was protecting all the major rivers in Canada. He knows the Fraser River as well as I do, perhaps even better. I hope the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra is not going away, though I imagine he has had a phone call. I am sorry he has to go, Mr. Speaker, because I was going to say that he can see the Fraser as well as I can and he knows that we could almost expect the second miracle of walking on the water without any danger of sinking in the places where it is so highly polluted.

I still remember fisherman Buck Suzuki of the fishermen's union pointing out that they have to use gloves when they fish for salmon in the Fraser River because of the raw sewage which endangers their health. He also indicated that he hated to think of the citizens of Vancouver and elsewhere eating fish that had been nurtured on raw human sewage. These rivers are not clean and to shut our eyes to the fact that they are in such a state of filth is to shut our eyes to reality. The only way to clean up our rivers is to provide enough low interest loans to municipalities that they can build sewage treatment plants. This must be done.

I wish the federal minister would have a good, strong discussion with the provincial minister and get him to see that the Moran dam must not be built. It will kill fish and destroy life in large stretches of the river and surrounding areas. This dam should not be built on the Fraser River if we are considering the protection of our ecology. This government alone, or even in concert with provincial and municipal governments, cannot protect and police the ecology. We must have citizen help. This afternoon one hon. member showed us the international scene and another talked about the Stockholm conference on the environment. Now I am going to turn to the small end of the telescope and use a list that was published in the "Canadian Conservationist—Winter 1972." This is what was said to the ordinary citizen under the heading "Live Econscientiously!", which is "consciously in face of the environment."

An hon. Member: How do you spell it?

Mrs. MacInnis: I shall not spell it now because it would take up all my time. The article begins with these words:

Sharing the environment means sharing the responsibility to keep it livable—today and tomorrow. We are not the earth's owners, but her guests. Conservation means doing your duty by doing your share:

Here are the points. Get ready for number one because I warn you this is going to throw you:

1. Limit your family to two children. If you want more: adopt.

I am wrong. It will not throw you gentlemen because most of you are past being able to do anything about that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. MacInnis: But it will throw your relatives. Perhaps I am being unchivalrous. I take it back in the case of many of you.

An hon. Member: Perhaps you are being inexact.

Mrs. MacInnis: "Inexact" is close. The list continues:

> 2. Don't use paper towels; use cloth ones which you can wash and use again; when writing use both sides of the paper rather than extra sheets. Refuse unnecessary paper bags in supermarkets: use shopping bags you can re-use. Return junk mail to the sender and mark it as such.

I will add my postscript here, Mr. Speaker: Tell the Postmaster General (Mr. Côté) to pass a law that will not allow junk mail such a favourable rate of postage.

An hon. Member: Especially that which goes to him.

Mrs. MacInnis: The list continues:

> Wasting paper means wasting trees and building pulp mills.
> 3. Walk and use public transport as much as possible: it's safer and reduces pollution.

They forgot to add that it reduces the corporation, too, which a lot of people in this chamber have. It also reduces the danger of heart attack and early demise. I continue:

> 4. Vote for candidates whose record shows concern for the environment.

An hon. Member: Now you have got them.

Mrs. MacInnis: Not "whose rhetoric" but "whose record shows concern for the environment." It continues:

> If you don't know where they stand on environmental issues: find out.

And don't find out by listening to them; find out by looking in Hansard. I did not read that from the list, Mr. Speaker; I contributed it myself.

> 5. Use electricity wisely. Don't buy or use electric gadgets such as electric can openers: they are a waste of materials and energy.
> 6. Use no pesticides unless absolutely necessary and then only those containing the least harmful chemicals such as pyrethrin, methoxychlor and the carbamates. Never use chlorinated hydrocarbon pesticides such as DDT, DDD, endrin, dieldrin and toxaphene.
> 7. Insist on glass instead of plastic containers: glass can be recycled, plastic cannot. Support recycling depots by taking your re-usable materials to them.
> 8. Join at least one conservation group and participate actively in its programs.
> 9. Write letters on environmental issues to newspapers and government representatives. Public opinion does work.
> Don't throw this magazine away: when you're finished with it, please give it to another interested person.

This afternoon the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra mentioned that we had put a section in the Canada Water Act to greatly reduce the amount of phosphates in detergents and eventually to eliminate them. He knows that the government would not have included that section in a month of Sundays without the flood of letters, telegrams and briefs from people all across the country. These people were armed with knowledge gained from Pollution Probe, STOP, SPOT and other organizations. This strengthened the hand of the minister and the government and enabled them to say phooey to the big soap lobbies that were prowling around.

[Mrs. MacInnis.]

Mr. Deachman: You are doing it, Grace.

Mrs. MacInnis: I am telling you how it was done; it was through volunteer citizen groups. It is they who police the environment, given the knowledge, the initiative and leadership. I suggest that it is the job of the Minister of the Environment to lead campaigns to give this knowledge and leadership to voluntary citizen groups which represent the entire community instead of just individual, interested sections. It is only people representing the whole community who can save and protect our environment.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. E. F. Whelan (Essex): Mr. Speaker, coming from an area so close to the Great Lakes and the problem of international pollution I thought I should take part in this debate. When I read the motion I thought it sounded reasonable. I thought the debate would be more constructive than it has been so far; perhaps it has and I missed it. However, after listening to members of the opposition, especially members of the New Democratic Party, I feel that the motion was probably moved for nothing more than political reasons.

• (2040)

If one were to read the record one would find that many statements made about pollution are exaggerated, unfounded or even fabricated. For instance, Mr. Speaker, hon. members have talked about a ship going aground off Vancouver Island. We are all concerned about pollution. We are interested in this matter. We have listened to different stories about this ship. Radio and television commentators and newspaper reporters have described how the ship sank and discussed the possibility of oil pollution. I think those stories were exaggerated, especially after listening to the hon. member who visited the area. I am referring to the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett), a member of the NDP whom I got to know very well on the fisheries committee. He said that he did not see any oil in the area except around the ship itself. He did not talk about the environmental damage, etc., that was supposed to have been caused. He took a constructive attitude and told us what he saw. That is not the impression one would gain from reading the newspapers.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): What the hon. member said was right at that time, but that is not the situation today.

Mr. Benjamin: The ship is now leaking, as the hon. member is.

Mr. Whelan: We have heard what has been done in the Great Lakes. How many really know what has happened in the Great Lakes? I wish to quote from an article which appeared in the Windsor Star. It was written by a noteworthy reporter and is entitled, "Extension for lakes clean-up bid". The sum of money mentioned may not seem much to some but it is a great deal in my area. They are spending $500 million on this package.

Mr. Benjamin: That is cheap.

Mr. Whelan: The article reads in part:

Federal and provincial officials met behind closed doors in Ottawa last week and agreed to continue a pact which will result in the spending of $500 million to fight water pollution from municipal sources along the lower Great Lakes.

The article goes on to say that according to sources in Ottawa there is a "99.9 per cent chance" that President Nixon will sign this agreement "when he visits Prime Minister Trudeau ... April 13 to 15." Let us talk about what has been done in the Great Lakes.

Mr. Benjamin: That shouldn't take long.

Mr. Whelan: More has been done in the Great Lakes than most people are aware of. I am speaking of cleaning up the Great Lakes, Mr. Speaker. I am not condemning anyone. What has been done by those in authority? We know that pollution in the Great Lakes has been caused mainly by our American neighbours. I was going to say, neighbours to our south, but some of them live to the north of me.

Generally speaking, the pollution began in the Great War when no one paid attention to anything except production. There have been attempts to clean up the river, especially from our side, and there have been attempts to clean up the Great Lakes. Take the city of Windsor, for instance. Every bit of its sewage now goes through some kind of treatment plant, whether primary, secondary or tertiary: not one bit of sewage from Windsor goes untreated into the Detroit River. In some of the surrounding areas plans are being made for primary and secondary treatment plants and in some areas tertiary treatment plants are being planned.

These installations have been built within the time limits set by the federal government and the municipalities doing the work will receive substantial reductions both in interest rates they must pay and in the size of loans they can obtain. Both the city and county have made good use of such funds. Also, Mr. Speaker, we do not use as much salt in our part of the country as others. One would expect us to use less because of the warmth of our climate; even so, the use of salt has been drastically curtailed. I am told we are using less in our area than ever before.

Let me talk a little about the country, Mr. Speaker. The town of Amherstburg in the last three or four years has installed a sewage treatment plant. The town of Kingsville has installed a sewage lagoon. The town of Leamington, which is practically a city, has installed a treatment plant. Essex has installed a sewage lagoon. Belle River, Harrow and some of our other smaller communities have plans on the drafting board or are in the process of letting tenders for sewage treatment facilities. Talk to the people of my area; they may not be 100 per cent satisfied but they recognize that much has been done.

Those in positions of administration and those directly aware of water pollution—for instance, the Lake Erie fishermen—know how much has been done both by federal and provincial authorities. For instance, fishermen on Lake Erie know that two years ago if they cast their nets they lost sight of them two or three feet under water. Today they can see them 15 or 20 feet beneath the surface without difficulty. Talk to the aqualung divers; they will tell you that today they can see for 30 feet when 60 feet under water, whereas before when they were 50 feet under they had to feel their way around salvage operations. Let us see what industry has done to overcome pollution. Under pressure from federal and provincial governments, firms like Chrysler, one of the largest concerns in the area, have cleaned up their operations.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): That is because the polluter must pay.

Mr. Whelan: The pollution coming from that plant is at a very low level, practically zero. They have taken advantage of new depreciation provisions applying to pollution abatement equipment.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): The polluter must pay.

Mr. Whelan: The same has happened with Ford. No more oil comes from the plant; they have changed over to natural gas, I believe. GMC has done the same. Actually, GMC has done so well in filtering effluent and in removing oil that used to come from the transmission plant that the waterways around the plant are now full of tropical fish. I do not know what is being put into the water, but the fish are propagating more quickly than biologists expected. I am pointing these things out because many people are trying to get the idea across that there is no program for fighting pollution and nobody is following up pollution problems. For years the Allied Chemical plant in my area was one of the worst polluters. That plant is not causing any more trouble because they have switched to bunker-C oil and their chemical wastes are being dumped into large settling bins.

Mr. Benjamin: You had to pay them off to do the right thing.

Mr. Whelan: That project meant 600 jobs in the area. Some of these programs that were worked out between federal and provincial authorities may have been a little late, but they were carried out.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Yes, when the minister said the polluter must pay.

Mr. Whelan: I know that pollution is damaging. However, directly or indirectly the government has helped to curb the sort of pollution I have mentioned. I have heard hon. members suggest that the federal government should administer more of these anti-pollution programs and should be given more authority in this area. I am inclined to think that the federal people should be given more authority. We talk about great distances in this country as if everybody in Ottawa was far away from everybody else. I do not think that viewpoint is right, especially when we can in a relatively short time cross this nation by aircraft or reach somebody by telephone in a few minutes.

When we reflect that in this modern age we can cross this nation and back in less than 24 hours it is difficult to realize the need for having so many different offices in various parts of the country all with authority to deal with one phase or another of this subject. One of the main obstacles we encounter in Canada is that each province wants to run its own little show, to decide what it is willing to do about pollution, what steps it will take to induce industry to establish itself in the area, and so on. I am inclined to be a federalist, Mr. Speaker, believing we could control our environment better if the authority to do so were in the hands of the federal government. When I think of what we did in respect of our fisheries under the present constitution, the way we handed over those fisheries rights to the provinces, some by letter and some by order in council, and the way these are being administered in the different provinces, I realize this sort of opting out by the government leaves a lot to be desired.

A few months ago I attended a conference on the environment held in Bonn, West Germany. Before I went there I thought we were far behind other nations in the world, but after attending this conference in which representatives of some 22 other nations took part I formed the opinion that we were far ahead of many other countries. This parliament and this government have nothing to be ashamed of when it comes to what has been done in the last four years to control pollution. As late as this evening I received a letter from my local Pollution Probe group—a very active and responsible group of people.

We very much hope that an agreement will be reached soon between the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the President of the United States which will eliminate some of the air pollution coming from the south across the river. Groups such as the one I have mentioned have done tremendous work in suggesting legislation and following up the legislation which has been handed to them for use. It is possible that we, as federal members, have been negligent in not assisting them with our advice in the past. However, with the limited facilities available to us in Ottawa it is hard to do more than carry on our duties in our offices on Parliament Hill.

As to pollution of the Great Lakes, I have a stack of books and reports on this subject; I could fill a wheelbarrow with them. I think it is time an agreement was signed. It is time the Americans did something to clean up the pollution on their side so that more could be done on the Canadian side.

[Translation]

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I am deeply concerned by the problem of pollution mentioned in the motion proposed by the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Harding).

We are a hundred per cent in favour of this plan, and we and many others would like to see something done and to see the causes of the pollution which we now experience in this country eradicated.

Mr. Speaker, pollution has become one of the most urgent issues of our day. In fact, it is a threat to our survival and that of generations to come.

In face of those facts, we all agree that means have to be found to solve this problem.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that under the present system we have considered so far that it was more important to preserve the financial system than to protect mankind. Yet, this financial system, which is becoming stronger by the day, deprives citizens of the means to build purification plants to protect us from pollution, which is becoming more and more serious every day.

In the face of this, we must say that the causes of this problem are not new. We must admit that we have been hearing about pollution for several years, but also that the problem has not been solved, even though we have found solutions to it.

We have had experts make studies in order to find means to eliminate pollution. And the solution lies in building treatment plants of different types. We have everything required to do so. We have the know-how. Nobody doubts that we could find the skills required to draw up plans, to solve these problems in every municipality.

Mr. Speaker, we have not solved the problem yet. A mere handful of plants have been built. At what cost? With funds borrowed at interest rates of up to 9 or 10 per cent. I know municipalities which borrowed at 10 per cent interest to build waste treatment plants. Being already in debt, they took on additional burdens. The federal government therefore was able to help them. We know the contributions the government made to assist them, but they are inadequate.

Most municipalities have not been able to avail themselves of federal or provincial assistance.

Mr. Speaker, the fact remains that we are facing a tremendous pollution problem. All citizens agree that it is becoming more serious every day. It has become increasingly serious for the people, and for animal life in the water, in the air and on land. Because of that pollution, animals are dying, especially fish. We find many fish along the banks of our rivers and lakes, the victims of pollution, while we should be doing everything possible to protect our natural resources.

Mr. Speaker, we must find the means of remedying the situation. At the present time, the government wastes money right and left, spending on local initiatives and opportunities for youth projects.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Latulippe: Millions of dollars are spent on those programs, 90 per cent of which are wasted.

Some hon. Members: That is not so.

Mr. Latulippe: We could have invested that money, created assets and protected the people.

We could have protected the lives of our citizens. All available funds, the action of youth and their studies can be used to fight against water pollution. We can make them continue their studies and draw up plans. We can encourage them to assist municipalities. With those funds we could lead our young people so that they may do something practical and useful instead of wasting our money for all kinds of silly undertakings.

Mr. Béchard: Does the hon. member mean that Quebecers and Canadians are spendthrifts?

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Speaker, I do not want money to be wasted. At the present time, I am sure that money is wasted right and left, thus giving no return nor creating any asset in the country. We are destroying the country instead of building it. We must build rather than destroy. Then, all the money, all the resources that we can make available to citizens must be used to build.

I would draw the attention of this government on the necessity of protecting the people because we do not have the right to waste their money on futile causes, when there are so many useful things to do.

I agree with some hon. members. Once all these big problems have been solved, we may waste as much money as we have, if there is any left to waste, which, in my opinion, is not going to happen very soon. All those funds must be used to protect the people and give them what they are entitled to.

Mr. Corbin: Everybody will go to the Créditiste paradise!

Mr. Latulippe: I know that we cannot solve everything, but I commend the motioner for having urged the government to give the municipalities and the public bodies money at low interest rates so that they may build something, so that they may at last have some means in order to remedy the problem of water pollution.

It is very difficult to solve the problem of pollution, because the system itself is polluted, We must first clean the economy which is totally polluted.

Mr. Béchard: Especially the Créditistes from Quebec. Tell us about what happened on March 19.

Mr. Latulippe: I do not know what the hon. member is saying, I can make nothing of what he says. In any case, he speaks so often and about such useless things that one cannot understand what he says.

Mr. Speaker, we should express our opinion and decide once and for all to protect our human capital. This is human capital, the most valuable we have because there is no price for a human being. There is no price either for animals which we need to survive. There is no price for that.

Mr. Béchard: Everyone agrees with that.

Mr. Latulippe: I live on the shore of Lake Megantic in a town with a population of 8,000. From Lake Megantic to Quebec City there are some thirty municipalities and towns which discharge all their waste in the Rivière de la Chaudière, then into the St. Lawrence River. There are no more eatable fish in the Rivière de la Chaudière. Everything is polluted, including the St. Lawrence River. The water no longer flows into the river; it is so polluted, it rolls down.

Mr. Béchard: Is it Créditiste country?

Mr. Latulippe: Be they from Créditiste or Liberal areas, people have the right to live. Liberals have the same right as Créditistes, and Créditistes the same as Liberals or Progressive Conservatives. This right is universal, Mr. Speaker. I point out to hon. members that our sole obligation is to be intelligent enough to respect ourselves and to eradicate pollution, whether it comes from people or things.

We should work in that direction instead of wasting our activity, our time, our energies and our money on useless purposes. Let us do something useful. Let us build instead of tearing down. We owe it to ourselves first of all to build the most urgent and most important things, those that afford protection to the human race. The point is to protect ourselves and mankind. To succeed, we must take exceptional measures.

It is easy for the government to loan interest-free money to municipalities, as it does to foreign countries. There is good to be done in foreign countries—I admit it—but our country also requires large developments and we can finance them all through interest-free loans maturing in 60 or 70 years. If we can do it for strangers, we must be able to do it at home also; in fact, we can find the means to finance any plan, provided it is workable and materially feasible.

Now, it is materially feasible to build treatment plants, since the engineers are there and we have all the necessary materials. Many people are prepared to work; however, the funds are wanting, they are not available to the citizens in need of them.

The solution to the problem would be to put investment funds at the service of citizens. We must realize that a de facto situation exists and that we should therefore take the necessary means to eliminate the automatic pollution that we are experiencing today. I say automatic because everything is polluted altogether. The first step we must take is to decontaminate our waters. Thereafter, we shall endeavour to purify the air. Afterwards, we might be able to live decently.

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. Is the parliamentary secretary rising on a question of privilege or on a point of order?

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the hon. member for Compton whether he would allow me a question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The hon. member may ask his question, but he must have the permission of the hon. member for Compton. The hon. member for Compton still has 30 seconds to answer it.

Mr. Latulippe: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Béchard: The hon. member said a moment ago that it was easy to build water treatment plants, that engineers were available, and so forth. Is he aware that the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation makes loans to municipalities at a very reasonable rate, and that further it pays a rebate of 25 per cent—which is rather substantial—of the total of the loan plus interests? Is he aware of that?

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Speaker, I am certainly aware of that, as much as the hon. member is, but that assistance is not yet favourable enough to allow municipalities to resort to it because they are already heavily in debt, which prevents them from incurring new debts. Then other means have to be used to assist those municipalities.

Mr. Pepin: What means?

[English]

Mr. Gaétan-J. Serré (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, being concerned, as I am, about pollution I welcome this opportunity to say a few words on the subject. First, I should like to say that the way this motion has been put before us smacks once more of NDP political opportunism. To pretend that the federal government has done nothing in the field of pollution is pure fantasy. During the Throne Speech debate at the beginning of the second session of this twenty-eighth Parliament, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) pledged that the total resources of his government would be brought into play to prevent the advancing menace of pollution in our country. These words have not remained dead. Since then a ministry of the environment had been created to cope with the rising problems and a number of important and extremely effective pieces of anti-pollution legislation have been passed, such as the Canada Water Act, the Motor Vehicle Safety Act, the Territorial Sea and Fishing Zones Act, the Arctic Waters Pollution Act and the Canada Clean Air Act. I could go on and on.

Furthermore, before blaming the federal government for not acting one should remember that the federal government does not have complete jurisdiction in the environmental field. The provinces have a great deal to do in that field, but some are not doing their job. They are reticent indeed to stand up to the big companies with regard to setting up pollution standards and taking legal action against those infringing regulations as to standards. Is the federal government to blame for provincial inaction?

What about municipalities which dump raw sewage in nearby rivers? Of course, mechanisms are already in place, as the hon. member mentioned a while ago, to assist municipalities to build newer and more efficient facilities. However, some are not taking advantage of this. Is the federal government to blame for this inaction?

When I consider the government's realization and the inaction of other levels of government, I cannot help but be surprised at and in disagreement with the motion of the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Harding). I do not mean that I do not care about pollution: on the contrary. I represent an area of Canada which is probably one of the most affected by this problem. Indeed, in Sudbury, "pollution city Canada" as it is often referred to, the damage done by industrial wastes to every aspect of the environment is so obvious and staggering that anyone contemplating a clean-up would hardly know where to start.

For 3,200 square miles around downtown Sudbury, vegetation has been seriously injured or destroyed by poisonous sulphur-dioxide fumes from the giant Inco and Falconbridge operations. Not only air pollution but water pollution represent a great threat in my area. Much of the Vermillion River watershed in the area has been polluted for years. The nearby resort areas at Massey on the Spanish River are strangled by the stench and waste from a pulp mill at Espanola. Also, many of our beautiful lakes in the area are quickly becoming polluted. Soil pollution is also a major concern. The three million tons of sulphur-dioxide discharged annually has thinned natural vegetation. Because of that the first layer of soil is almost all eroded. In consequence, the area in and around Sudbury looks as though it had been transplanted from the moon. As a matter of fact, the American astronauts came to practise in the Sudbury area last year. As I have said before in this chamber, the situation in the Nickel Belt area has become alarming. The provincial government, which has jurisdiction over mining companies, has been remiss in its duty in not forcing the companies there to take preventive measures long ago.

Heavier fines should be imposed on all polluters. I mean all polluters, not only the mining companies but the municipalities which do not properly dispose of their wastes, and the individual who throws trash on the road or anywhere else. All levels of our society should be penalized if they allow pollution; it is fast becoming a question of life or death.

Measures have recently been taken by the provincial authorities with regard to air pollution in Sudbury. Last year they installed a monitor on Ash Street in Sudbury. What a joke! If the wind happens to blow the smoke that way, which it seldom does, we are told that the pollution index is going up; and if it goes up too much the company will be asked to cut down on its operations. We need more monitors. We need them at least in the four corners of the area. Why are they not there, Mr. Speaker? It is because they know very well that most of the time the index would be beyond the acceptable level.

Although the Sudbury area is badly hit by both air and water pollution, the outskirts and the rest of northern Ontario is still fairly free of contamination. It is still beautiful country. That is why I feel that preventive measures should be taken immediately. I have asked before, and I repeat my plea, that a research and control centre be established in Sudbury at Laurentian University.

An hon. Member: Right away.

Mr. Serré: Yes, tomorrow. Such a centre could carry out research on pollution control, which would assist the companies. It could also co-ordinate the efforts of all levels of government and all interested groups. It would help bring back and keep this vast region of northern Ontario as a tourist paradise and a healthy place for our children.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, a healthy environment concerns the federal, provincial and municipal governments, as well as each individual.

I am happy to have had this opportunity of dealing briefly with this crucial problem which my fellow citizens of the great constituency of Nickel Belt consider to be problem No 1.

In conclusion, I once more urge all my fellow citizens, municipal authorities and above all provincial authorities to stop merely discussing the damages wrought by pollution and to follow the example set by the federal government, i.e., finally resort to action.

[English]

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I want to become involved in this debate primarily because, as many hon. members know, I represent a significant constituency, Hamilton West, which of late has been plagued with a profound concern about pollution. Earlier I listened to the minister. As I reflected on what he said I wondered whether it was the same Minister of the Environment and Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Davis) who in January, 1970, said:

> I don't believe all that I read about dying lakes and sickening seas. Most of it is poppycock-written by novices who are reaching for headlines—

In the Speech from the Throne debate in the same year the minister said:

> The evidence of past failure to rehabilitate our water resources is there for all to see—befouled water, despoiled beaches, rotting marine vegetation, and diminished fishing.

That is the same man, holier than thou, who spoke today. This is one minister for whom I have a great deal of respect because I believe he is sincere. At the same time, I have my doubts when I reflect on the statement he made in January, 1970. Now that we have a Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Basford), I believe this is the time when it is absolutely incumbent upon us to become involved in tri-level conferences in order to receive some input and acquire direction concerning where we are going.

I know we have passed many bills, some of which have been improved because of the tenacious attitude of opposition members. It is not necessary for me to mention all of them. They include the Canada Shipping Act, the Navigable Waters Protection Act, the National Harbours Board Act, the National Parks Act and the Canada Water Act. What I wish to concentrate on is an anomaly which exists in the city of Hamilton, a city governed by an act which was passed in 1912. This is what has brought the attitude of the city of Hamilton, its citizens, the city council, the province of Ontario and the federal government into focus.

Here we have an act which as a result of legislation gives us three individuals, two appointed by the federal government and one appointed by the city council, who have the right to look into the problems regarding Hamilton harbour in terms of future development. But suddenly it seems to me we have found that here we have an act which is archaic and fit for the horse-and-buggy days. It has been disregarded so far as the federal government is concerned. What concerns me is the fact that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) is interested in seeing that there are more commissioners appointed to the Hamilton Harbour Commission without giving any indication as to whether this act is to be updated and brought into focus in terms of being meaningful legislation for the 1970s and the future.

I think such an attitude on the part of the minister leaves a great deal to be desired. We have a situation in which the city of Hamilton, its council and its citizens are very concerned about who has jurisdiction over development and land use. It is in this area, as a result of having an archaic act, that there are men—and I say this with a great deal of respect—who are more interested in their duties in respect of the harbour commission than in exercising reason as citizens of Hamilton. These men have perhaps missed the boat. This may be the reason there is now a great conflict before the Supreme Court of Ontario. If the Minister of Transport intends to bring in an amendment to this act, I will not give my consent to an increase in the number of commissioners until he gives me some indication that simultaneously there will be an amendment or amendments to the act to make it more meaningful in terms of the development of Hamilton.

I think we must arrive at a balance between industrial development and the protection of our environment. This act does not seem to fit the bill at the present time. I am very concerned about why this government believes it has done all it can. The moment we say to the government that what it has done is good, though questionable, and more must be done particularly in respect of standards which should be set, members of the government indicate that the opposition, particularly the NDP and our party, is not sincere in its motives.

Surely air and water must be preserved and protected from misuse and abuse. Air and water are our most precious natural resources. In the past ten years we have found an excitement among people, ranging from children of kindergarten age to high-powered lobbyists, who point the finger at us and tell us to take whatever action is necessary. This is what we are saying in the motion. Earlier I brought in a motion in respect of the disposal of solid waste. We are now considering a similar motion.

We must continually remind ourselves and the government that it is necessary to focus attention on the problem of pollution and give it very high priority, because unquestionably if we do not we cannot be saved. That is not simple rhetoric; it is fact which has been researched and brought before the nation and the world. As we bring more people into Canada, particularly into Ontario, we find that population and industrialization increase. This means of course, an increased demand on our water and air resources. This also means that manpower is required for our industries, and the industries provide employment. Therefore, we find industry and population contributing together to air and water pollution.

The demands on air and water and the amount of waste discharged have grown simultaneously. It is not necessary to remind you, Mr. Speaker, of the home-heating, the automobile transportation and the industrial manufacturing which is accelerating the pollution of the air and water which we find so necessary in terms of our daily lives. I wonder whether it is fair to say that as a result of the increase in population there are more demands on industry in order to provide necessary goods and services.

I wonder whether it is fair to say that the polluter must pay. I wonder whether we should be looking for an approach which calls for incentives whereby the responsibility is shared. When we say that the polluter must pay, it seems to me that indirectly the cost will be passed on to the consumer who ultimately is the taxpayer. I think this should be a shared responsibility. When we say that the polluter must pay, I believe we are abdicating a certain responsibility. We might consider how the province of Ontario is growing and the density of the population. There are about 18 persons per square mile. In the urban industrialized areas the population increases dramatically. As I understand it, there are 5,000 people per square mile in Sault Ste. Marie, 6,000 people per square mile in Hamilton and 2,000 people per square mile in the city of Toronto. Here in Ontario there are 4,000 major industrial sources and at least 10,000 minor industrial sources of air pollution.

This is why I say we must be very concerned about our urban growth. A member on the other side asked whether an hon. member did not know there is a 25 per cent forgiveness under NHA. I think the member knows this. However, we are saying that if there is any sincerity on the part of the government, perhaps the forgiveness aspect of the bill should be increased.

I have had a bill on the order paper for some time. What I am trying to point out in it, without going too deeply into the matter, is that right now the act confines loans made to municipalities to trunk sewage collector systems and central treatment plants. My bill proposes that we not only look into this area but also permit loans for trunk water mains and trunk storm sewage collectors. Surely if the government is sincere in its attitude toward pollution they will agree that my bill makes sense. It makes even more sense when you consider that for a considerable length of time there has been only a 25 per cent forgiveness provision.

In the bill that I have proposed—perhaps there is some difficulty in this regard because it gets into spending power—there is provision for increasing the forgiveness amount from 25 per cent to 50 per cent and at the same time for providing a 100 per cent forgiveness if the projects carried out under NHA are carried out in the wintertime under the winter works program. We know that there is a 25 per cent forgiveness, but perhaps it is time we did more. I am concerned that in the areas which need attention—I am talking about our urban areas—the attention does not seem to be directed to the problems of the cities. I wonder why not. Surely we are all aware of the fact that section 92 of the BNA Act is not the end-all. We are no longer concerned with the constitutional hang-up in this regard because we have a Minister of State for Urban Affairs.

Mr. Rose: But he is busy running the campaign.

Mr. Alexander: All I say in conclusion is that the motion before the House is certainly worthy of our considered attention. It is a motion brought forward sincerely, one that comes as a result of a growing concern about pollution problems which have gone unattended. I hope the many suggestions that have been placed before the government this evening will be given considerable attention. Government members can give me the whole list of bills that have been passed, but I suggest they have still missed the boat by not setting any standards and by including an archaic act such as the Hamilton Harbour Commissioners Act which was passed in 1912 and amended in 1951 and in 1957.

Since the government is not taking any action to assist the municipalities further in this respect, which is within the government's power, by increasing the forgiveness powers in the act I say that the government is not sincere when it indicates that it is concerned about pollution. I have mentioned several areas where improvements can be made and I hope the government will take action. I repeat that if the minister brings in any amendments to the Hamilton Harbour Commissioners Act which relate only to an increase for the commissioners sitting on the board, then I will do my best to see that the bill does not get third reading because I believe it will have missed the boat. What we need is a bill expressing the feelings of the people of the city of Hamilton with regard to industrial growth and the protection of the environment.

Mr. Maurice Dupras (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, I feel under a moral obligation to take part in the debate on the motion of the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Harding) for several reasons, one of them being that a major part of the constituency I have the honour to represent in the House has tourism as its main industry.

The raw material of the tourist industry is environment, rivers, mountains and lakes.

After hearing the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis) speak with such eloquence, praising the beauties of her province, I felt I also could stress the beauty of my constituency in "la belle province" of Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, I truly believe that we all recognize ourselves to be trustees of ecology, of our environment. We share joint responsibility to protect it. We must ensure that our descendants—

[English]

An hon. Member: What are you going to do about it?

Mr. Dupras: Listen and you will find out.

An hon. Member: Get on with it.

[Translation]

Mr. Dupras: —that our descendants will inherit as healthy an environment as we received.

The Canadian government, jointly with the provinces and the United States government, has already taken steps in order to protect the ecology. Those who have studied the problem of pollution and are familiar with it know very well that this is not a problem which can be solved by one government alone, be it municipal, provincial, or federal. Co-operation of all governments concerned is required to find a solution in order to protect the patrimony which we inherited from our forefathers.

Let us examine, Mr. Speaker, what some countries have done to protect the ecology—and I am thinking in particular of some European countries like Switzerland, for instance, which banned the use of snowmobiles. I do not think we are prepared to go to such extremes and ban use of a machine which is a source of wealth for a large segment of the population of Quebec and other parts of the country.

Switzerland has also prohibited use of motor boats on most lakes because they felt that the water of those lakes was worth protecting, and that the worst pollution of lake waters is caused precisely by motor boats.

At the same time, Switzerland does not allow use of calcium or salt to melt snow on highways. They maintain—and rightly so—that calcium or salt tend to pollute rivers.

Obviously, Mr. Speaker, we are not prepared to take such drastic measures to protect the ecology. However, we in our part of the country, where very large sums have been invested in the building and developing of resort areas, are deeply interested in the development of our pollution control program.

• (2140)

A while ago, we heard hon. members of the opposition insinuate all sorts of things with regard to the so-called failure of the federal government to act and fight against pollution, to implement measures against it. Some of those measures were mentioned, but I would like to add a few. Someone referred to the opportunities for youth projects that were carried out in my riding. Our young people made praise-worthy efforts to enlighten the people, the adults, to impress them with the fact that fighting against pollution is not solely the responsibility of our governments, but that it is also that of the consumer, the people who, if they pay attention, if they can, can protect our streams, rivers, lakes and mountains.

Under the Opportunities for Youth program, Mr. Speaker, we have seen students devote two months during the summer to enlighten the people and attempt to prepare them to assume their responsibilities and make their contribution to the protection of environment.

We have also seen local initiatives programs which specifically undertook to clean our streams and our lake shores to ensure a better and fresher environment for Canadians.

No doubt, Mr. Speaker, pollution is threatening our people and its effects on our country—which nature has richly endowed in terms of splendour, size, great number of streams and lakes—point to the vital importance of that issue.

On the other hand, our resources will be destroyed very soon if people do not watch over them and if we fail to take the appropriate steps as soon as possible.

That is probably why the provincial government wants to generate electric power on James Bay, a priority for Quebec authorities.

Mr. Speaker, I have had the opportunity of discussing the effects and costs of producing electricity through nuclear fission, and I am informed that wastes from nuclear reactors will become a most serious problem over the next 25 years because we have grown used to burying them in concrete caissons on the bottom of the ocean. Since the ocean belongs to everybody, this very seriously jeopardizes underwater forms of life. If some day one of the caissons should explode and should a large portion of the ocean be contaminated, what would happen then?

The solution to the problem lies, I think, in the development of hydroelectric projects through the use of hydroelectric energy, which produces no fall-out whatever nor any waste that could pollute the environment. The resource that are our streams should be developed further in the interest of Canadians before there is thought of selling this electric power to our neighbours. The last years of the 20th century will demonstrate the very great value of electricity, a wealth which our neighbours to the south already envy us, as they have discovered that the salvation of the ecology and the environment in North America lies in the development of hydroelectric power to produce the electricity that is sorely needed.

Those are the few remarks I intended to make during this debate, Mr. Speaker, in order to put across the views of a representative of a part of the province that depends on this integrity of the ecology, the environment, to which we attach a great deal of importance because, as I said at the beginning, the ecology or the environment is our raw material, a raw material which we have in abundance but which could very soon be depleted.

It is of such an importance, Mr. Speaker, that we must encourage the government to look into this problem and to find the proper solutions as rapidly as possible.

[English]

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I want to use the time available to me to deal with three aspects of the resolution that is before us. First, I would like to deal with the need for national standards for pollution control and the constitutional problems associated with this need. Secondly, I would like to suggest some immediate action that the federal government could take in order to diminish pollution and at the same time create a large number of jobs and assist the disadvantaged regions of the country. Thirdly, I would like to take a moment to discuss the necessity for citizen involvement in environmental control.

The need for national standards for pollution control has been argued at length by my colleagues, in this debate and in others. The most compelling argument for a paramount federal role is economic in nature. Because of the disparities in economic terms which exist between the provinces, the failure to provide a paramount federal power is to invite provinces to compete for industrial development on the basis of more relaxed pollution laws. Economically weaker provinces are unlikely to resist the temptation to entice industries to locate within their borders by lower capital costs and operating costs which might well result from less stringent anti-pollution regulations.

One need look no further than at the current reaction of the provincial governments of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick to the terms of the Maritimes claims fund for an illustration of this. Faced with the threat of the withdrawal of development funds by large corporations, the two provinces are raising the roof. Adjustments in the federal law may be necessary, but I ask myself if there would be any meaningful controls at all in those provinces if it were not for the federal presence. I think not, Mr.

Speaker, because the primary preoccupation of the governments of those provinces is the creation of jobs for their people, and they will use any means at their disposal. Unless there is a federal presence to set down the parameters within which they must operate in creating those jobs, they are likely to create pollution havens.

It is important to draw the attention of the House to the fact that the recommendation for national standards contained in this resolution is supported by a recommendation of the Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons on the Constitution, the report of which was received last week. If I may, Mr. Speaker, I shall read recommendation No. 100 which is found at page 91 of the report. The committee recommended:

> Control over the pollution of air and water should be a matter of concurrent jurisdiction between the provincial legislatures and the federal Parliament, and, as in section 95 of the British North America Act, the powers of the federal Parliament should be paramount.

That is a recommendation of a committee which was composed of members of all parties in this House and members of the Senate. There is little doubt in my mind that the federal government could succeed in gaining provincial consent for a constitutional amendment which would incorporate the substance of the committee's recommendation if the government were to begin immediately to seek such agreement. There is absolutely no excuse for the federal government not to begin seeking such an agreement on a priority basis, because our attempts to control pollution will never be effective as long as the question of who has jurisdiction remains both complicated and confusing. So long as doubt remains about who has jurisdiction, it will be used by politicians who wish to avoid acting as a means of avoiding action.

I wish to again quote from the report of the constitution committee, also at page 91, as follows:

> Federal and provincial sources in the BNA Act for pollution control are many. For example, provincial jurisdiction may stem from "property and civil rights in the province", "municipal institutions in the province", "local works and undertakings", "generally all matters of a merely local or private nature in the province". Federal jurisdiction, on the other hand, depending on the class of subject dealt with in the legislation, might arise from "the criminal law", "navigation and shipping", "sea coast and inland fisheries", and "the regulation of trade and commerce".

As my colleague from Kootenay West (Mr. Harding) has argued, ambiguities in the constitution need not prevent action. However, the fact is that they do and they will continue to do so until they are removed. Thus, it is clearly and urgently necessary that federal and provincial governments, at the same time as they bring forward legislation to clean up our environment, seek to achieve agreement for a constitutional amendment incorporating the substance of the recommendation of the joint Senate-Commons committee to which I have referred.

I might say at this point, Mr. Speaker, that when members of the government present a catalogue of legislation which has been passed by this parliament, I am not impressed. I congratulate them for doing that much and I hope the legislation is improved by members on this side of the House; however, if they were really serious about dealing with the problem of pollution adequately and ending it once and for all the major emphasis at this point would be on clearing up the ambiguities which now exist in the constitution. They would find a great deal of approval for this effort amongst provincial governments.

If I might be permitted one further comment on the committee's recommendation, I wholeheartedly endorse the recommendation that the matter of pollution be one for concurrent jurisdiction with federal paramountcy. That would allow the federal and provincial governments to legislate but when there was a conflict the federal government view would prevail. This would make it clear that any federal standards, any federal law would be paramount and provide for national minimum standard but it would allow also for the possibility of a wide degree of innovation and experimentation in the legislation designed to control pollution and enhance environmental quality. Beyond that, the committee report reads at page 92:

> —because the new pollution power would be concurrent, that necessarily greater federal-provincial and province-to-province planning and co-ordination would result. The superior financial and research capabilities of the federal government, especially in relation to the smaller provinces, can be brought into play through the concurrent power itself and through the federal spending power, if necessary.

The resolution before us also emphasizes the need for the federal government to make available low-cost loans to municipalities and to certain industries to ensure that there is no further delay in the building of sewage treatment plants and the undertaking of industrial clean-up. The advantages which would accrue to us from such a program, through enhancing the quality of our environment, by ending the dumping of raw or only partially treated effluent into our rivers and streams, for example, should be manifestly obvious.

Think of the jobs that would be created by such a program—in construction, in design, in manufacturing and in research. Why not extend the program to provide sewage treatment facilities and water for our rural communities in an effort to enhance environmental quality, in an effort to reduce the disparities in creature comfort between rural and urban life, in an effort to inject new life into such communities by making them a more attractive alternative for the location of commerce and industry to our already congested, overcrowded and polluted cities?

This approach, this demand for federal government involvement in creating that kind of infrastructure, these kinds of sewage treatment and water facilities in rural areas, has already been made by the Interlake Development Corporation in Manitoba. The provincial government and the federal government are being petitioned by communities in the area such as Arborg and the town of Winnipeg Beach. The provincial government is taking action. I see no reason why the federal government, if it is serious about cleaning up the environment and removing economic disparities, would not be talking about concurrent action. That action could be taken under DREE; it could be taken under any number of federal government departments. I should like to see that kind of action taken by the federal government post-haste.

Why not extend the kind of program envisaged in this resolution to our larger cities for the creation of means of recycling waste, for research and development into the manufacture of useful products from garbage and waste? Other countries are doing this. In some German cities garbage disposal plants are using the heat generated from the burning of garbage to produce electrical power. It is now possible to produce protein from celluloid which can be produced in turn from waste paper. It is now possible to produce motor fuel by the treatment of human and animal waste. Why are we not looking into this and why is federal money not available for research and development in this area?

Why not extend the program suggested in the resolution to encourage the development and use of such simple devices as garbage-shredders and compressors which would reduce the volume of garbage which municipalities must dispose of? Again, think not only of what such a program could do for environmental quality but think of the jobs, the useful employment it could create. Think of the export potential for the devices for environmental control which the ingenuity of the Canadian people would undoubtedly produce, if properly encouraged, as other nations move in the same direction.

But we cannot leave the problem of environmental management solely in the hands of the government. In making this, my third and final point, I am not thinking exclusively of the somewhat abstract and academic value of participatory democracy. I am also going beyond the very useful suggestion of an environmental council contained in the resolution. I am saying that I am afraid to leave any matter so important in the government's hands without providing the citizens of this country with the means of judging whether or not the government is doing a proper job.

This means that information on pollutants and polluters which is made available to governments must also be readily available to the public. It means that governments must be prepared to provide responsible citizens groups with monitoring equipment and instruction in its use so they can collect their own data and check it against data provided by industry and government. It means that governments must provide financial assistance to responsible citizen groups engaged in policing pollution so that these groups can continue to operate effectively.

To see the necessity for such provisions, those of us participating in this debate need only examine our own motivations. How many of us would be speaking if it were not for the fact that organizations such as SPEC, Pollution Probe, STOP and SPOT had brought the problem of the deteriorating quality of our environment forcibly to our attention, and if they were not in our communities prodding us into action when we show signs of slacking off? I think if each of us were to answer that question honestly there would be no doubt about the absolute necessity for equipping Canadians to judge for themselves the efficacy of their government's efforts to combat pollution.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—RENT INCREASES FOR MARRIED QUARTERS—ACTION ON COMPLAINTS

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I am grateful for the opportunity to return to a matter which I raised with the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Comtois) on Friday last concerning the recently announced changes in the rent structure of married quarters on Canadian forces bases in this country as well as some of the military housing that is provided off the bases. In recent days I think the department has been inundated with complaints about these changes, but nowhere I think is the situation more exacerbated than with respect to the Canadian forces base at Summerside, Prince Edward Island.

On Friday last, when I asked the parliamentary secretary what action might be taken with respect to the seemingly unjust proposals put forward by the Department of National Defence all he could report was that there were indeed changes being made and that some 8,000 units would have the rent reduced. What he did not say, of course, is that the remaining two-thirds will have the rent increased. Of course, he made no reference whatever to the situation off the military base itself.

One of the things that is particularly shocking about the present situation is that seemingly there was no consultation with those directly affected. The changes proposed under the new rent structure as of April 1 have to do with the establishment of a new rent structure under the aegis of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. Central Mortgage and Housing have proposed that where possible rents being charged from PMQ or bulk lease housing will be equivalent to normal rents charged in the adjacent area. One must assume, therefore, that when the rent structures were established for Canadian Forces Base Summerside, Central Mortgage and Housing entered into what most people of Prince Edward Island would regard as a bizzare equation. They compared Slemen Park with adjacent communities.

Slemen Park, I might explain, consists of the married quarters at Canadian forces base Summerside. One might call it a town in itself. It has its own store, bank, bowling alleys, swimming pool, skating rinks, schools and all the facilities and usual amenities one expects to find in a medium sized town. Instead of saying that this is a self-contained community, the Central Mortgage and Housing people compared it with rural communities close at hand. In this case one must assume that those communities were Miscouche and St. Eleanor's. These rural communities, however, are without many of the amenities of a town and therefore the people there pay a rent that is that much lower.

Then the Central Mortgage and Housing people went to Hillcrest, the bulk lease housing area within the boundaries of the town of Summerside itself. I might explain that Summerside is a town of some 10,000 people. Central Mortgage and Housing said, "How much would it cost to rent a home within the confines of Summerside itself?" What they came up with was an equation under which most people in Hillcrest would pay more, in some cases $13, $15 or $17 per month, while rents at Slemen Park might be reduced by some $20 or $30 a month, thereby creating a new differential of between $30 and $40 a month.

That in itself was serious enough, even if one forgets other forms of discrimination. Those who have established rents at Slemen Park have included in those rents the cost of utilities such as heat and light. The people of Slemen Park, of course, do not pay transport expenses to go to and from their work. Those who rent in Hillcrest, on the other hand, would pay something like $20 a month or more for heat and up to $20 a month for light. They incur transportation costs in going three miles to work and there are also extra school costs. Therefore, on the average Hillcrest families must pay an extra differential of about $70 a month.

It is particularly shocking to think that such a situation could be permitted, particularly since service people at CFB Summerside have no choice as to where they are to be located. It is true they can apply for housing at Slemen Park. However, they must accept what is offered to them when that offer is made. If they refuse, naturally they drop to the bottom of the housing list. So we have people in a captive situation.

I might add, in parenthesis, that they would not be captive if they decided to live outside the forces establishment altogether, that is, outside either PMQ or bulk lease housing areas. However, if they are to accept accommodation provided by the military, they are in a captive position. To my mind, great injustice is being perpetrated in these circumstances. I know from complaints received from other personnel living in married quarters, particularly at Chatham, New Brunswick, that a similar situation must prevail there as well.

Rents for military personnel in the past few years have increased substantially and I begin to wonder if pay increases such personnel have been granted from time to time are not being totally obliterated by rent increases. I hope, therefore, that this evening the parliamentary secretary will assure me that this matter is being fully reviewed and that there is some hope of bringing about an equitable adjustment for those who are adversely affected.

Mr. J.-R. Comtois (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, for the period April 1, 1968, to March 31, 1972, charges for married quarters were set by averaging the appraised rental values of all similar types of houses at all bases in Canada. These appraised rental values are set by CMHC, based on equivalent civilian market rentals by areas. Under this system the same charges apply to the same type of house regardless of location. In high cost areas this charge was lower than local rents. the difference being made up by occupants in married quarters in low-cost areas.

During the past four years rentals have increased greatly in urban areas while those in rural areas have remained relatively constant. With the ever widening gap in appraised rental values, the subsidy required from occupants in rural areas became too high and continuation of the averaging system beyond March, 1972, was unrealistic. By late 1971 some servicemen were refusing to accept married quarters in some low cost areas where civilian rental housing was available at lower rents.

As stated by the former minister of national defence last December, the matter has been under study to determine whether some revisions are required. The result of this study produced the recommendation that the national averaging process be discontinued and effective April 1, 1972, the charges be set on the basis of appraised value by location.

Since civilian market rentals vary by location, so do married quarters charges. This has resulted in charges for 8,200 married quarters being reduced while the rent for about 150 will remain unchanged. In areas such as Summerside, rental values are low and all married quarters occupants will receive reductions on April 1. For the remaining 16,500 the monthly charge will increase by varying amounts—for instance, in Chatham, New Brunswick, where appraisal values are high. Charges to married quarters occupants will increase in set amounts by ranks, that is, to a maximum of $15 for sergeants and below, $17 for warrant officers and captains, $20 for majors and amounts for other senior ranks up to $30 per month for colonels. Had we remained on the national averaging basis, charges for all married quarters would have gone up.

Regulations make provision for any base commander to comment on the system and to submit details of any inequity which he feels may exist. Some submissions have already been received. These will be investigated by Canadian forces headquarters.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. The hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Kaplan).

Mr. Comtois: I am almost finished, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): On a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. As the hon. member knows, he cannot, under the rules, raise a point of order at this time.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I was about to say—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): This is not the way the rules are applied. I call upon the hon. member for Don Valley.

Mr. Forrestall: On a question of privilege. Do you mean to say there is no question of privilege?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. The hon. member knows there is no such thing as a point of order or any such discussion under these special arrangements. The hon. member for Don Valley.

Mr. Forrestall: I rise on a question of privilege and ask you to make an order with respect to privilege.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): The hon. member will have to read the rules. There is no such thing as a question of privilege or point of order at this stage, after ten o'clock.

Mr. Forrestall: I will invite the Speaker to point out to me where it is stated that a member cannot raise a question of privilege.

INDUSTRY—AIRCRAFT—INQUIRY AS TO STATEMENT ON ASSISTANCE AND FINANCIAL COMMITMENT BY GOVERNMENT

Mr. Robert P. Kaplan (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, this morning in the finance committee hearing on estimates officials of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce indicated we are on the verge of hearing about a major policy relating to aircraft development in Canada. Such a policy is long overdue and I seek assurance that it will be an effective policy.

Recently I had the opportunity to visit Washington to study civil aviation. This program of visits was conceived and financed by the Donner foundation. I wish to acknowledge with thanks the opportunity provided to develop some deeper knowledge of the subject. What did I learn, Mr. Speaker? Firstly, that Canada is considered to be at the very front of STOL, that is, short take-off and landing aircraft development in the world, notwithstanding the fact that our entire industry is foreign-controlled. The Canadian branches have, in competition with each other, set the world's standard for STOL aircraft. A number of these planes are in demand and in use all over the world.

Secondly, I was able to come to the conclusion that an important future part of the aircraft industry is in STOL development. The 747 may be bigger, the Concorde may be faster, but the market for STOL craft is, in my view, far more promising. STOL aircraft appeal increasingly to noise and pollution conscious people. They are usable more conveniently in densely populated centres which are already built up and where land is expensive. Additional advantages add to their appeal elsewhere. In this developing world where infrastructural systems are not well developed and air transportation is only beginning to become popular, STOL craft are more logical and more marketable. They are a human-scale aircraft concept.

Thirdly, I confirmed that the aircraft industry is a very big business. Even in small plane technology large investments are required. But it is a big business of a special type. It seems that it cannot depend upon the private sector alone for inspiration, for financing or for marketing. The colossal bankruptcies in Britain and in France and the insolvencies in the United States demonstrate this. These three countries are in the aircraft business directly at the government level. This is true even in the United States which is so dedicated to free enterprise in other sectors.

In this situation, let us not see the Liberal government do a re-run of the Bomarc disaster with which the Conservatives smashed the Canadian industry ten years ago, sending thousands of skilled Canadian workers to United States jobs. Let us at least do what our industrial partners in other countries are doing; let us help, and help generously and quickly.

This debate does not give me the time to develop the spin-off benefits which a healthy aircraft industry will generate in our economy. Let me just assure the House that several hundred thousand jobs are related fairly directly to the industry in its present state. I should like to make one final point for the comment of the minister. The Canadian public, the Canadian investor, has never had a real chance to buy stock in a Canadian-based aircraft company. If you want any part of the Canadian action you have to buy stock in the United States or Britain. This situation should be changed. I believe there are many Canadians who would welcome the chance to share the risks of the industry, especially if the government had a commitment to it and a sensible and forthcoming policy.

For these reasons, I urge the minister to include in this policy encouragement to Canadian subsidiaries in the industry to go public in this country.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to comment at any great length in view of what my hon. friend said about the nearness of the expected announcement. If it will not concern the total restructuring of the aviation industry, it will at least have to do with a certain research and development project known as the DCH-7, having to do with the DeHavilland company.

I agree with almost everything the hon. member said: with the importance of STOL aircraft, with the fact that Canada is ahead in this particular area, the importance of attracting the private sector of the Canadian economy, the importance of government support and the spin-off advantages. The name of the game in this particular instance is to try to bring all these factors together, and this is where the difficulty lies.

One can very well claim that there is tremendous usefulness for STOL aircraft, but he has to make sure that it is put together as a system. One can say that there is a tremendous need for STOL aircraft in developing countries, but in most instances developing countries do not have the necessary finances with which to purchase these aircraft. Consequently, a financing program has to be developed. Support has to be given in some cases through aid programs, and so on.

It is the difficulty of packaging all the elements of this problem that has caused the government, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) and myself great difficulties in recent times. We all hope the conclusion of these present efforts will be at par with the spirit of enthusiasm demonstrated by the hon. member tonight.

PUBLIC SERVICE—OPERATIONAL GROUP—USE OF REGIONAL RATHER THAN NATIONAL PAY SCALES IN BARGAINING—POSSIBLE CONFLICT WITH DREE OPERATIONS

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I am fully conscious of the fact that my intervention this evening will not be of sufficient public interest and force to push the usual headlines involving wars, revolutions, rapes and murders off the front pages of Canadian newspapers. I am also conscious that my question about the principle of national pay scales in the public service will be more popular in Quebec and the Maritimes than in my own province of British Columbia, whose public servants stand to gain rather than lose by accepting the Treasury Board proposals toward regional rather than national pay rates within the public service.

After putting the question into what I believe to be a proper and rational perspective, may I now get down to the basic question. The basic question is whether or not it is to Canada's and Canadians' long-term benefit to adopt the position taken by Treasury Board in opting for regional pay rates for certain categories of the public service. That is the essential question.

The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) admitted in the House that this is the bargaining position taken by the government. He said this in reply to my question regarding current negotiations with stationary engineers in Public Works. I quote his reply:

> The answer to that, Mr. Speaker, is in the affirmative. It has been the policy of successive governments to move from a scheme of national scales of wage rates to ones which are more appropriate and more commensurate with local operating conditions.

When questioned further about the anomalous government position of pushing regional pay scales at the same time as massive spending to reduce regional disparity under DREE, which position seemed contradictory to me, I was ruled out of order as being argumentative. In his initial reply to me the minister implied that the regional pay differential had been the long-term policy of successive governments. When pressed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), he was forced to admit it had been the policy of only two successive governments, that is, since 1967.

I have been looking at the testimony of the President of the Treasury Board when he appeared before the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates. Before that committee, on March 8, the minister said in reply to a question that the distinction between regional and national pay scales was based on the mobility of the particular component. If the category tended to be highly mobile, then that mobility justified national pay scales. On the other hand, if the category was likely to remain in the community for the bulk of his working life or for a long period of time, regional rates would be more fair to both the public servant and the community in which he served.

This sounds reasonable enough on the surface, but why have regional rates been pushed on the stationary engineers in Public Works when at the same time stationary engineers in federal correctional institutions have been given national rates? That seems to be another anomaly. Surely the job is not very different. Surely stationary engineers under the Solicitor General (Mr. Goyer) are no more mobile than those who are employed by Public Works. Or is it perhaps that there is recognition of the fact that the correctional component is more militant and that the government could not risk pushing regional rates down the throats of the penitentiary branch.

There is no validity in regional rates. They have been tried in various other classifications including the railroads. They have found very few takers because essentially they are another rip-off. If the government thoroughly believes in regional rates as an established principle, then why not apply them to old age pensions, to Members of Parliament or to the forthcoming revisions in respect of family allowances? There is no more mobility among old age pensioners or people on family allowances than there is in stationery engineers. The government might see how the principle would be accepted in the Maritimes or in Quebec if the policy were extended to that ridiculous conclusion. I say, for heaven's sake stop trying to push this on to the public servants. They do not intend to buy it.

Mr. Gaston Clermont (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Treasury Board's position with respect to regional rates of pay is not contradictory to the program of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. As employer, the government is committed to paying rates which are equitable and competitive with rates being paid outside the public service for similar occupations. Where the outside pay data for occupational groups indicate significant variations from the Canadian average, and where the area of recruitment and the mobility of employees within the public service is limited, the government as employer considers it appropriate to pay regional and not national rates of pay. Paying national rates of pay in such circumstances would only serve to overpay employees in some regions and to underpay employees in other regions in relation to the rates of pay prevailing in those regions, neither of which situation from the employer's point of view is desirable or viable.

The basic objective of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is to facilitate economic expansion and social adjustment in areas of Canada requiring special measures, to improve opportunities for productive employment and the access of people to opportunities. The problem of economic disparities is best attacked on a broad economic front. If the effect of regional economic expansion is to raise the rates of compensation in areas that are now low by comparison with other parts of the country, the government as employer will ensure that its rates reflect those changes subject, of course, to collective bargaining provisions in the public service.

YOUTH

PROVISION OF SUMMER EMPLOYMENT—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, in light of recent indications that the summer youth labour force with increase by more than 100,000 to 1,300,000, and because the government's summer youth program will provide employment for only a handful of this number, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay):

That the Secretary of State immediately consult with business and industry in order to develop a concerted approach to the imminent crisis in youth unemployment.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

UPDATING OF YEAR OF MANUFACTURE OF AUTOMOBILES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. It concerns the practice of many foreign auto manufacturers of updating the age of year-end models and selling them as new. In view of the fact Canadian consumers are being duped and that existing legislation appears to sanction this practice, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. MacInnis):

That the Minister of Corporate and Consumer Affairs, in conjunction with the Minister of Transport, take immediate steps to put an end to the updating of automobiles.

Mr. Speaker: This motion is presented under the terms of Standing Order 43. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent. The hon. member's motion cannot be put at this time.

On the order: Introduction of Bills.

Mr. Speaker: Order please. After discussion the suggestion was made and I believe agreement has been reached that the motions for the introduction of a number of private bills might stand today for further consideration perhaps tomorrow or Friday. Is this agreed?

INTEGRATION OF CANADA MANPOWER CENTRES AND UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE COMMISSION OPERATIONS

Question No. 41—Mr. McBride:

Does the government intend to integrate more fully the operations of the Canada Manpower Centres and the Unemployment Insurance Commission to the end that every Manpower Centre in Canada will have at least one staff member trained in assisting claimants who experience difficulties with the Unemployment Insurance Commission?

Mr. Ray Perrault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): The Minister has arranged for the Unemployment Insurance Commission and the Department of Manpower and Immigration to examine ways of developing further co-ordination of the services provided by both organizations. This will include the matter of stationing staff.

BILINGUALISM PROGRAM

AGREEMENT BETWEEN CANADA AND THE UNITED KINGDOM FOR PENSIONERS

Question No. 118—Mr. McCutcheon:

Does Canada have a reciprocal agreement with the UK such that United Kingdom pensioners now living in Canada receive increases in the rate of pension and, if not, are discussions under way relative to establishing a formula for such arrangements and when may a decision be reached?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): In 1959, there was an Exchange of Letters between Canada and the United Kingdom on social security which was principally of value to citizens of the United Kingdom who returned to that country from Canada. In the interval, there have been a number of social security changes in Canada. At the present time, consideration is being given to replacement of the present Exchange of Letters by a more comprehensive reciprocal agreement in which the payment of increases in United Kingdom pensions to beneficiaries residing in Canada will be one of a number of factors which will have to be taken into account.

Discussions between officials of Canada and the United Kingdom commenced in 1970. While an early conclusion is desirable, negotiations of this type are by their very nature complex and protracted, and it is difficult to estimate when a revised agreement will be established.

Questions

PARRSBORO, N.S.—POSTAL FACILITIES

Question No. 135—Mr. Coates:

1. Under what arrangement will postal facilities be available to the residents of the Town of Parrsboro?

2. What will be the cost to the federal treasury on both an annual basis and over the term of the lease or contract?

3. From whom were the facilities leased?

4. How many similar arrangements are in effect in the Province of Nova Scotia at the present time and what is the annual cost to the federal government?

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Post Office Department and the Department of Public Works as follows: 1. By leasing a whole one story building at 115 Main Street.

2. $8,740 per annum; total cost for five years $43,700.

3. Chignecto Holdings Ltd., Amherst, N.S.

4. 15 at an annual cost of $158,802.25.

PROVINCIAL REPRESENTATION ON DIRECTORSHIP OF CANADA DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

Question No. 138—Mr. Marshall:

Is the Province of Newfoundland the only province in Canada without representation on the directorship of the Canadian Development Corporation and, if so, for what reason?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): No, however an effort was made to provide the Canada Development Corporation with a board of directors that would have some experience in all the major regions in Canada.

GUERILLA TRAINING CAMPS, ETC.

Question No. 216—Mr. Yewchuk:

1. By province and territory, how many guerilla training camps have been discovered by the RCMP for each of the years 1961 to 1970 inclusive?

2. By province and territory (a) how many persons were arrested by the RCMP because of (i) illegal possession of weapons (ii) conspiracies (b) how many in each category were convicted, during the years 1961 to 1970?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Solicitor General): The answer, in so far as it concerns the Department of the Solicitor General, is as follows: 1. None as far as R.C.M.P. is concerned.

2. This information can only be obtained through a review of innumerable Criminal Code files; which would produce information only in so far as the Royal Canadian Mounted Police is concerned. The cost in terms of manpower and time would be exhorbitant or prohibitive.

CANADA MANPOWER TRAINING PROGRAM

Question No. 219—Mr. Yewchuk:

1. Will the Department of Manpower and Immigration consider offering, as part of its 1972 retraining program, immersion courses in (a) computer programming (b) public administration (c) data processing (d) marketing (e) community planning (f) recreational leadership (g) home economics (h) secretarial science?

2. To date, has the Department of Manpower and Immigration in conjunction with the provinces discussed the possibility of offering these courses as part of the retraining program and if not for what reasons?

3. What criteria are used to determine what courses the Department of Manpower and Immigration will offer?

Mr. Ray. Perrault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. As part of its 1972 training program the Department of Manpower and Immigration is considering offering courses which provide skills in the areas listed in Part 1.

2. The Department has continuing dialogue with the provinces concerning the selection of courses to be purchased including those areas listed in Part 1. Training requirements are also discussed at the meetings of the Federal-Provincial Joint Committee established in each province to assess Manpower needs in accordance with Section 13 of the Adult Occupational Training Act.

3. The basic criteria used to determine the courses the Department will purchase includes the following: (1) Legislative requirements: (a) The course must provide occupational training, the purpose of which is to provide a person with skills required for an occupation or to increase his skill proficiency therein. (b) The course must not be one which provides instruction for university credit. (c) The course must not provide more than 52 weeks of full time instruction nor 1820 hrs. of part-time instruction. (d) The training must be provided in Canada. (2) Labour market requirements: (a) There must be a demand in the foreseeable future for the skills provided by the training.

SIR GEORGE WILLIAMS UNIVERSITY COMPUTER DAMAGE

Question No. 226—Mr. Robinson:

How many of the students from Caribbean countries attending Canadian universities on CIDA training awards paid by the Canadian Government took part in the Sir George Williams University computer damage?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): None.

CBC—COST OF SALARIES, ETC., 1971

Question No. 245—Mr. Orlikow:

What was the total cost to the CBC in 1971 of (a) regular wages and salaries (b) overtime paid to NABET employees?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I am informed by the CBC as follows: (a) $18,240,039; (b) $3,577,549.

CANADIAN MEMBERSHIP IN INTER-AMERICAN INSTITUTIONS

Question No. 246—Mr. Robinson:

1. Is the government considering membership in any inter-American institution other than the Pan American Health Organization, the Inter-American Development Bank and the Inter-American Institute of Agricultural Sciences?

2. Is ultimate membership in the Organization of American States contemplated in the near future?

[Mr. Yewchuk.]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. Yes, Canada is now a full member of three of the six specialized organizations of the Organization of American States; the Pan American Institute of Geography and History; The Pan American Health Organization; and the Inter-American Institute of Agricultural Sciences. In addition, Canada is already a member of the Inter-American Statistical Institute, the Inter-American Centre of Tax Administrators, the Centre for Latin American Monetary Studies and the Postal Union of the Americas and Spain. Membership in a number of other inter-American institutions, including the Inter-American Indian Institute and the Inter-American Development Bank is being considered. The recent accreditation of a Canadian Permanent Observer Mission to the OAS entitles Canada to observer status in all of the organs, agencies and entities directly dependent on the OAS.

2. Not necessarily. The purpose of establishing a formal link with the OAS as explained in the penultimate paragraph of the government's policy paper on Latin America was to "permit Canada's relations with the countries of Latin America to develop rapidly and, by improving Canadian knowledge and understanding of those countries and their regional institutions, prepare for a better-informed and more useful Canadian participation as a full member of the OAS should Canada, at some future date, opt for full participation."

ISSUANCE OF CHARGEX OR CREDIT CARDS

Question No. 258—Mr. Robinson:

Does the government have information on how many chargex or credit cards have been issued by each of the chartered banks and, if so (a) how many have been issued (b) of these, how many were solicited by the bank concerned?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): In so far as the Department of Finance is concerned this information is not available.

PROHIBITION OF UNSOLICITED CREDIT CARDS

Question No. 259—Mr. Robinson:

Will the federal government consider the advisability of requiring banks to desist from forwarding unsolicited credit cards?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): The present practice of the chartered banks is not to forward new credit cards unless they are solicited.

DETERMINATION OF BANKING POLICY FOR CHARTERED BANKS

Question No. 260—Mr. Robinson:

Does the government determine the banking policy of the chartered banks and (a) if so, through what agency (b) if not, for what reason?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): The government through the agency of the Bank of Canada determines national monetary policy. Subject to this overall influence on the scale of their operations and certain specific limitations contained in the Bank Act, chartered banks determine the particular loans and investments in which they will employ their resources.

CREATION OF ADDITIONAL BANKING INSTITUTIONS

Question No. 261—Mr. Robinson:

Will the government consider the advisability of allowing additional banking institutions to be created in order to make the banking business more competitive?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): It is the policy of the government to encourage the establishment of new banks.

INTEREST FREE DEPOSITS IN BANKS

Question No. 262—Mr. Robinson:

Does the government have information on how much money is used by banks in their business of banking upon which they do not pay any interest to the deposit holder and, if so, what is this amount?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): The returns of assets and liabilities made by banks pursuant to the Bank Act do not classify deposits on the basis of whether or not interest is payable to the depositors.

ILLEGAL IMMIGRATION

Question No. 295—Mr. Robinson:

Will the government take action to process the applications of illegal immigrants to Canada or to order them out of the country at their own expense?

Mr. Ray Perrault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): When a person who is in Canada illegally is reported to the department or otherwise apprehended appropriate action is taken under the Immigration Act as quickly as possible having regard to available resources and due processes of law. Wherever the law permits, deportation is carried out at other than public expense.

NON-IMMIGRANT REQUIREMENTS

Question No. 297—Mr. Robinson:

Will the government ensure that anyone entering Canada as a tourist deposits sufficient funds on entry to guarantee passage back to his country of origin?

Mr. Ray Perrault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Because the vast majority of the more than 38 million people who visit Canada every year leave within the prescribed time, it is not considered practical or necessary to require the taking of deposits from all visitors to protect against the relatively small number who abuse the terms of their entry. However, an individual's ability to effect his departure at his own expense is taken into consideration in the case of all visitors granted admission. If the examining officer has any doubts in this respect, the Immigration Act provides for the taking of a bond to guarantee against the expenditure of public funds on his behalf.

Questions

*LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM PROJECTS

Question No. 317—Mr. Korchinski:

1. On what date was the final project under the Local Initiatives Program approved in the Province of Saskatchewan?

2. How much money was allocated to Saskatchewan by that date?

3. Have all the provinces been informed that there are no longer any funds available and, if not, which provinces still have not used up the funds available?

4. What was the percentage of the total funds available to each province?

5. On what date was the Town of Sturgis informed that its project was rejected?

6. Have any projects been accepted in any province after the final date for receipt of applications and, if so, in which provinces were they accepted?

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I have the reply to starred question No. 317 here and am perfectly prepared to read it, but it is rather lengthy and I wonder whether hon. members would prefer that it simply be tabled in Hansard as read?

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's Note: The answer above referred to is as follows:]

1. March 8, 1972.

2. Records indicate that as of March 8, 1972, $4,224,397 has been allocated to approved projects in Saskatchewan. That figure is subject to change as adjustments are sometimes made when the contract is negotiated after final approval.

3. Provinces have not been informed that there are no longer any funds available as they are not involved in the administration or approval of projects, with the exception that they review municipal projects. The administration and approval of all projects is handled through regional offices of the Department of Manpower and Immigration.

4. As of March 17, 1972, the percentage of total funds available to each province was:

Newfoundland	6.6
Nova Scotia	7.0
Prince Edward Island	1.4
New Brunswick	6.2
Quebec	42.3
Ontario	14.8
Manitoba	3.6
Saskatchewan	2.7
Alberta	5.3
Northwest Territories	0.7
British Columbia	9.1
Yukon Territory	0.3

5. February 14, 1972.

6. No.

Inquiries of the Ministry

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

COST OF GOVERNMENT PROMOTIONAL PROGRAMS

Question No. 202—Mr. Gleave:

1. (a) What was the total cost of the advertising promotional program concerning "Assumed Mail" (b) in how many publications was the advertisement inserted?

2. (a) To date, what was the cost of the advertising program for the current issue of Canada Savings Bonds (b) how long will the advertising campaign continue and what will be the final cost?

3. (a) What was the cost of the advertising program in regard to the "New Design of Canada Cheques" (b) in how many publications was the advertisement inserted (c) what was the cost in each publication?

Return tabled.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I ask that notices of motions for the production of papers be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall all notices of motions stand?

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

FAMILY INCOME SECURITY

DATE OF PROCEEDING WITH BILL—STATUS OF NEGOTIATIONS WITH QUEBEC

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. When is it intended that the House will proceed with the family income security legislation, Bill C-170, and does the government consider this bill to be urgent legislation?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the government considers this to be very important legislation. It will be up to the government to decide when the bill will be proceeded with after discussion by the House leader with other members of the government and spokesmen for the other parties concerning when there will be available House time.

Mr. Fairweather: Mr. Speaker, what is the status of the negotiations with the provinces, particularly the province of Quebec, on the latest proposals relative to the government's plans to proceed with this legislation?

Mr. Munro: The suggested formula set out in the Prime Minister's letter to Premier Bourassa received a favourable reaction from the Quebec government, and I would expect that the negotiations that follow will come to a successful conclusion.

ENERGY

REASON FOR TEMPORARY EMBARGO ON ISSUANCE OF OIL AND GAS EXPLORATION PERMITS

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources arising out of his announcement in Calgary that he is placing a temporary embargo on the issue of oil and gas exploration permits in the Yukon and the Northwest Territories. I wish to ask the minister whether the purpose of this temporary embargo is to apply pressure on oil and gas companies to make a decision with respect to the construction of oil and gas pipelines down the Mackenzie valley, or is there some other purpose which the minister has in mind for this temporary embargo?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I should supplement the hon. member's question by indicating that it will also apply to the east and west offshore areas, including Hudson Bay. For some time my department and Indian Affairs and Northern Development have had under way discussions with representatives of the oil industry on the amendment to the oil and gas regulations under which oil and gas permits and leases are held. The consultations have now been completed and I am putting a recommendation forward to cabinet in order to amend the regulations. Since we have arrived at a conclusion of this matter it seems sensible not to issue any more permits under the old regulations but rather to put on a moratorium until the new regulations are in effect, which we anticipate will be some time this summer. It is not related in any way to the Mackenzie valley pipeline.

PROPOSED MACKENZIE VALLEY PIPELINES—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON CONDITIONS FOR GRANTING PERMISSION

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): In view of the fact several ministers of the government have indicated support for granting a right of way for the construction of both oil and gas pipelines down the Mackenzie valley, may I ask the minister whether he would undertake to make a statement at an early date regarding the conditions which would apply for the granting of such permission, particularly with reference to whether or not these pipelines would be under foreign ownership and control, whether they would be common carriers, who would set the rates for the transport of oil and gas, and other particulars which hon. members ought to have before any commitments are made?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): I would remind the hon. member that over a year ago guidelines for the construction of a northern pipeline were set out by my colleague, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. As to some of the specific details to which the hon. member has referred, I would not anticipate that we would be in a position to entertain applications with regard to the pipeline and therefore be able to define some of the criteria until about the end of the current calendar year. We are now in the process of completing studies, both environmental and economic, on the requirements which the government of Canada, through the National Energy Board, should impose on the construction of a northern pipeline. All the characteristics to which the hon. gentleman has referred have not yet been defined. As they are, certainly I will be glad to inform the House of them from time to time.

Mr. Douglas: In view of the minister's statement in Calgary that no applications for such pipelines could be considered until 1973, may I ask the minister if he would undertake to assure the House that prior to any commitments being made the House would first of all be acquainted with the ecological report being prepared by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and also with the energy report from his own department which we have been promised for the last two and a half years?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I would like to thank the hon. gentleman for assuming that I will be in office at that particular time. I would be quite happy to make certain that this particular information is made available to the House because, of course, it will be available to applicants for determining their applications.

RESEARCH ON METHODS OF OIL TRANSPORTATION TO MEET ENVIRONMENTAL PROBLEMS

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the minister. Is his department doing any research on methods of oil transportation, that is, carriage of oil, to meet the environmental problems? Is any special project under way in this regard?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): It is done on a broader basis than just by this department. It is a co-operative arrangement with the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Of course, as the hon. member knows, private industries have also been very much engaged in this area. I think I would have to get a little further detail as to which particular entity has carried out which particular research.

MANPOWER

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—ADDITIONAL FUNDS FOR QUEBEC MUNICIPAL PROJECTS

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour.

In connection with the Local Initiatives Program, was the announcement last week by Quebec Municipal Affairs Minister Maurice Tessier of a $5 million injection correct and does the Minister of Labour intend to make a statement on this shortly?

Mr. Speaker: The second part of the hon. member's question seems to be in order, and the minister may answer it. In the first part of his question, the hon. member asks for confirmation or denial of a statement made outside the House and for that reason, the question is not in order.

[English]

Hon. Martin P. O'Connell (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I will take that under consideration.

TRADE

AUTO PARTS—REPORTED U.S. DIRECTIVE TO ENFORCE REGULATIONS ON SHIPMENTS WITH SEVERITY—USE OF DISC PROGRAM BY AMERICAN AUTOMOBILE MANUFACTURERS

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister. Has the government looked into the suggestion made yesterday that the United States Secretary of the Treasury has issued a directive to customs officials telling them to enforce regulations "with considerable severity" in connection with auto parts shipments? If so, can the Prime Minister inform the House whether or not this has taken place?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have not been able to confirm whether that is in effect what has been said in the United States. I do know it was in the papers this morning. I have not been able to confirm whether that is the position of the United States government.

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Speaker, I believe the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce stated last week that the government hoped United States auto producers would not make use of DISC. Has the government received any specific assurances to that effect?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I believe the minister did deal with this supplementary question when it was first asked, and he indicated that there had been no specific promises.

GOVERNMENT PROPERTY

VANCOUVER—BRITISH COLUMBIA LEGISLATURE RESOLUTION CONCERNING CERTAIN NATIONAL DEFENCE LAND—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, on February 23 I asked the Prime Minister a question concerning the resolution passed unanimously by the legislature of British Columbia in connection with 38 acres of Jericho DND land. He said at that time that he would look into the matter and would also advise whether or not the request of the British Columbia legislature would receive attention.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of National Defence perhaps I could take notice of that inquiry, follow up the question of the remaining Jericho Beach properties and report to the right hon. member.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, after all, just a month has gone by since the question was asked. It is a matter of great importance to the people of Vancouver. They want to know whether this is going to be a big melon or pork barrel operation. Will the minister let me have an answer as to what the government intends to do—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —without putting it off again in this manner?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway.

Mrs. MacInnis: I have a question—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Surely, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I apologize to the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway. I believe the right hon. gentleman wishes to ask a supplementary, or perhaps he is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I had asked a question. I have found the minister usually very loquacious and alway willing to answer. I repeat that this is a matter of deep concern. I ask him whether any decision has been made by the government and, if not, why not?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, the reason I did not respond was that I understood the right hon. gentleman had been ruled out of order. I would just point out to him that a decision was taken several years ago and arrangements made with the city of Vancouver whereby a portion of the Jericho Beach property, that closest to the water, would be made available for public park purposes and the balance of the property would be rezoned and would be available for disposal by the Crown in consideration of the Department of National Defence moving its operations from Jericho Beach to Chilliwack. As to the actual status of this matter now, I have not been following with the same active interest in the last several weeks as I was previously matters within the responsibility of the Department of National Defence, but I will endeavour to find out the current status of the matter for the right hon. gentleman.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Please do, because it looks like a pork barrel.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): You ought to know.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

WELFARE

BRITISH COLUMBIA LEGISLATION LIMITING PROVISION OF ASSISTANCE— REQUEST FOR FEDERAL ACTION

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Last week in reply to my question the minister promised to look into British Columbia's Bill 49 which gives complete power to the provincial welfare minister to decide who shall get social assistance in the province and who shall not and which wipes out any chance of appeal. I should like to ask the minister again whether this bill violates the terms of the Canada Assistance Plan which declares that anyone in need shall be eligible for social assistance? Has he looked into the matter and determined whether this is the case?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have looked into the matter. I am still waiting for independent legal advice from an officer of the Crown as to whether, from a strictly legal point of view, this bill contravenes the Canada Assistance Plan. I hope to have that advice by the end of the week.

Mrs. MacInnis: I should like to ask what steps the minister would propose in the meantime to ensure that people in British Columbia who are in need receive social assistance?

Mr. Munro: Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, the bill has not yet been passed by the British Columbia legislature. I have had no complaints of specific cases where social assistance has been denied as a result of the recent action taken by the British Columbia government.

IMMIGRATION

COMPLAINTS BY TORONTO POLICE ABOUT DIFFICULTY IN OBTAINING DEPORTATION ORDERS

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Acting Minister of Manpower and Immigration whether he has knowledge of complaints by the Toronto police that they have to ask for extradition orders in order to deal with unwanted immigrants because it is impossible to get deportation orders from the immigration authorities?

Hon. Martin P. O'Connell (Acting Minister of Manpower and Immigration): No, Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of that situation but I shall inquire and give an answer to the hon. member.

GRAIN

PROVISION OF ALTERNATIVE DELIVERY POINTS FOR FARMERS FOLLOWING SALE OF FEDERAL GRAIN LTD. TO WHEAT POOLS

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the minister responsible for the Wheat

Board. Has the Canadian Wheat Board made any decision on an additional alternative delivery point for farmers faced with the dissappearance of their original alternative delivery point because of the sale of Federal Grain Limited to the prairie wheat pools?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I have asked the Canadian Wheat Board to give quick consideration to this situation but at the moment I do not have a reply from them.

Mr. Murta: Since this is a very urgent matter for the farmers affected, I should like to ask the minister specifically when an announcement will be made by the Wheat Board on whether farmers will be able to deliver to an alternative delivery point?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I would imagine that the Wheat Board would announce this as soon as they have made a decision.

ALBERTA FEED GRAINS COMMISSION—CO-ORDINATION OF EFFORTS AND POLICIES WITH FEDERAL AGENCY

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact the Alberta government has moved to set up a feed grains commission, can the minister tell the House whether discussions have taken place between the Alberta government and himself or the Canadian Wheat Board on how the two agencies will co-ordinate their efforts and policies?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions about the general problem of lower prices for feed grains. I am not aware of any discussion about the actual operation of the proposed commission and co-ordination. The announcement by the Alberta government does not give any details about how it will operate.

Mr. Gleave: Can the minister inform the House when or if he is going to release the study on grain handling and transportation and whether it has anything to say about the over-all efficiency of having a Canadian Wheat Board, a federal feed grain agency and a provincial feed grain agency all involved in the marketing of grain at the same time?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would think the second part of the hon. member's supplementary is argumentative.

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT RESPECTING GAMBLING—PROVINCIAL REPRESENTATIONS—GOVERNMENT INTENTION

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Justice.

Can he indicate whether he has received from certain provinces a request to amend the Criminal Code in order to allow those wishing to do so to establish within their boundaries an off-track betting system or any other gambling activities, particularly casinos? If so, can the minister tell us what the response of the government has been?

• (1430)

[English]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, there have been some requests and discussions with provincial ministers about this subject. We have indicated to them a willingness to look at the matter and to develop some early legislative solutions concerning it, without being able to give any precise dates at this time for that action.

[Translation]

Mr. Asselin: Mr. Speaker, can the Minister of Justice assure the House that legislation to amend the Criminal Code on the matters I have mentioned will be introduced during this session so that the provinces may be allowed to implement their objectives?

[English]

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I do not think it is likely that this can be done in the present session. I understand that some provinces now consider it an urgent matter although I believe they took a different view when the legislation touching on this subject was before the House only a year or two ago.

NATIONAL PARKS

POLICY RESPECTING COMMERCIALISM—NATURE OF FEDERAL PARTICIPATION IN LAKE LOUISE PROJECT

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Since the stated policy of the minister and of his predecessor has been that there should be no additional commercialism in the national parks, has that policy been changed recently, or is the Esso Lake Louise project a special case?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member had looked into the matter, he would have realized that the Lake Louise project has been in operation for many years and that commercial activities in that area have been going on for more than 40 years.

[English]

Mr. Rose: Is there any particular federal participation in the Esso Lake Louise project? If so, what is the nature of this federal participation?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, there is no direct participation from the federal government. It is a site that has been developed over several years to receive facilities. We have called for tenders on two occasions for this development and the only offer received is the one we are now considering. The final decision has not yet been taken.

[English]

Mr. Hees: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must bring to the attention of hon. members that we have gone through nearly half the question period and we are not moving very quickly. I would hope there would be a tendency on the part of hon. members to limit their supplementaries and, indeed, their questions, to make their questions shorter and the replies shorter also.

Mr. Rose: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Since a decision has not been finally reached, would the minister answer the question whether there have been federal funds expended on the project?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is hardly a point of order. Perhaps the minister might reply to the hon. member's supplementary briefly.

LAKE LOUISE PROJECT—OPPORTUNITY FOR HOUSE TO DEBATE

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The answer given by the minister just now would indicate that finality has been brought about in this connection. On the basis of the objections that have been raised as a consequence of the various meetings held in this connection, does he not have some doubts now as to whether this project should be proceeded with? If he has not, will he assure the House that this House will have the opportunity of debating this project which, if it is carried out, means the end of the whole principle of national parks for Canadians?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, we had public hearings for the first time in the history of the national parks and thus all Canadians had the opportunity to express their views. I am appearing at present before the committee of the House which is considering the estimates of my department and if hon. members, including the right hon. member for Prince Albert, wish to ask questions, I would be glad to see them in that committee.

As for myself, I say again that no decision has been taken yet, because the government felt that it would be advisable to hold public hearings before doing anything.

[English]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I now ask the minister this question. If the government finally decides to go ahead, will it give this House, not a committee, the right to determine whether this should be done?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: A committee means nothing.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Mr. Chrétien.]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I am terribly surprised to hear the right hon. member talking about a committee in the way he just did.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Not at all. A committee means nothing.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is apparently a matter of interest to hon. members and there appears to be a desire on the part of hon. members to ask supplementaries. I will recognize the hon. member for Selkirk and a few other hon. members for short supplementaries, I hope, then we will try to go to another subject.

LAKE LOUISE PROJECT—BASIS FOR EXPENDITURE IN PROVIDING SEWER AND WATER SYSTEM

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. As public hearings are still going on with respect to this project and since the minister indicated to the House that no decision has yet been taken, on what basis has the federal government spent over $1 million in providing a sewer and water system—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is argument.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair recognizes the hon. member for Crowfoot on a supplementary.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I think the hon. member should travel a bit and go there, because he will see that there are many motels in the area which have been there for many years and for which services were provided in the area.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is obviously debate. Since this is obviously a matter of interest to hon. members, the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Crowfoot.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development that has not been answered. Will a piece of legislation be put before the House which will detail the $29 million or $39 million to be spent in the national park in the area of Lake Louise?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, this Lake Louise project was submitted to the public several years ago. We invited people to make suggestions, and the only one received is that concerning the development now under discussion. We are considering the problem. We held public hearings, and the government will make a decision in due time. We would like hon. members as well as the Alberta government to express their views on that.

[English]

Mr. Horner: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please, A number of hon. members are seeking to ask supplementaries. I will come to them in a moment. At this time I will recognize the hon. member for Bellechasse.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

ESTABLISHMENT OF NEW SPECIAL AREAS—DISCUSSION WITH QUEBEC

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

Could he tell the House whether there have been discussions with the government of the province of Quebec concerning setting up new special areas within the province of Quebec and if so, whether Montmagny has been or could be considered as such?

Mr. Speaker: I would remind the hon. member that in the past the Chair has disallowed questions of hon. members as to whether one region or another will be designated. I do not feel such a question is in order. However, since the question has been put, the hon. minister may reply briefly, but I hope there will be no tendency to consider this as a precedent.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the reply will be very brief. We do have discussions under way. As concerns Montmagny, although I cannot reveal anything at the present stage, it is among the regions which are being considered.

STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

NATURE OF CABINET DIRECTIVE RESPECTING DEPARTMENTAL GUIDELINES

Mr. Douglas A. Hogarth (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Justice with respect to the implementation of the third report of the Special Committee on Statutory Instruments. Would the minister advise the House whether the cabinet directive referred to by his predecessor relating to departmental directives and guidelines has been issued and, if so, would he advise the House of the nature of that directive?

Mr. Forrestall: Put it on the order paper.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The cabinet has directed that all directives or guidelines are to be submitted to the Deputy Minister of Justice, who will advise the issuing authority whether they are in conflict with any provision of the act or the regulations to which they relate, whether they are essentially legislative in nature, whether their subject matter should be incorporated in regulations and, if so, whether there is authority to make such regulations.

HEALTH

USE OF NURSES IN CERTAIN COMMUNITIES WITH NO DOCTORS

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the serious shortage of doctors and the fact that in Canada nurses are serving the socially underprivileged where physicians are not willing to go and are considered qualified to do so, particularly in the north, but are not considered qualified to render these services to other segments of the population, has the minister any plans to relieve this serious situation by using nurses and extending their services to communities now without doctors?

• (1440)

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Yes, Mr. Speaker. We have had a program along these lines in operation for some time. We fully intend, and in fact are doing so, to direct more of our resources toward this particular objective.

NATIONAL PARKS

TRENT VALLEY—PRESENT STATUS

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a short non-controversial supplementary question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Briefly, can he advise the House when he expects to start making the long-promised Trent Valley national park a reality?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, that is already a reality.

[English]

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, if anything has been done to make this waterway a national park, it is the best kept secret from the people of the area that has ever been perpetrated.

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member is unaware, it is probably because he does not visit his riding often enough.

[English]

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I am in my area very often. I know what is going on there far better than the minister knows what is going on in his constituency. He is giving the type of answer that this government tries to get away with far too often.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Now that we have settled that matter, the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants.

Inquiries of the Ministry

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

PARTICIPATION WITH UNITED STATES IN STUDY ON POSSIBLE YEAR-ROUND OPERATION

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, my question takes us back to the great Canadian winter. It is to the Minister of Transport. Does the government plan to contribute to and participate in a proposed United States study on keeping the St. Lawrence Seaway open the year round, and has a request been made in that connection by the United States government?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as far as I am aware no official request has been received, but we have been participants in some of these studies and most recently some of our officials attended the last seminar or forum that was held on this matter.

DRUGS

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON LE DAIN COMMISSION RECOMMENDATION RESPECTING HEROIN—INQUIRY AS TO FINAL REPORT

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Health and Welfare. When will he be making a statement about the recommendation in the treatment portion of the Le Dain report to give a semi-legal status to heroin, and when does he expect the final report to be available?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the first part of the hon. member's question—

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must point out to hon. members that there are less than ten minutes remaining before the end of the question period. I will not charge to the question period the last minute or so when hon. members appeared to be enjoying themselves. I hope the question of privilege will be short.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I got the usual type of answer from the government this afternoon. The minister has just told me that they are now making plans for the Trent Valley park. Nobody in the area knows about these plans. Nobody has been consulted. The government is obviously doing nothing.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hees: It is just an election promise which means nothing whatsoever.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Chrétien: Go to your riding.

Mr. Munro: If I may conclude my answer, Mr. Speaker, I hope to clean up and make a statement to the House shortly on those aspects of the Le Dain commission report I have not already dealt with. As to the latter part of the hon. member's question, when he says final report I take it he is referring to the final report of the Le Dain commission. If that is the case, my information is that the chairman has indicated he will be presenting a further report on another component but the final report will not be ready until much later.

MANPOWER

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—GRANT TO PROCESS CHURCH OF THE FINAL JUDGMENT—REQUEST FOR REVIEW OF SALVATION ARMY APPLICATION

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Has the Prime Minister completed his investigation of the local initiatives program grant to the Process Church of the Final Judgment in Toronto? If so, is he in a position to inform the House with regard to his findings?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I did look into the matter, but I cannot add anything beyond what was said on a previous occasion in the House. The people involved in the project had the recommendation of a lot of serious people. The offices of the local initiatives program gave the grant in good faith to people who seemed to be engaged in doing some good work.

Mr. Hellyer: Will the Prime Minister also investigate or have reviewed the application of the Salvation Army in the hope that the request of this most worthy organization can be approved?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, there are many, many worthy organizations which submitted requests and which had to be turned down. As the House knows, the government allocated $150 million to these projects. Some 6,000 or 7,000 were accepted. Perhaps as many had to be turned down because of a lack of funds. We feel that the $150 million is a good start. If the people approve of this program, we will study the results and perhaps consider in future parliaments a renewal of such a program.

YOUTH

PROVISION OF SUMMER EMPLOYMENT—CONSULTATION WITH INDUSTRY AND OTHER GOVERNMENTS LEADING TO INITIATION OF JOB-CREATING PROGRAMS

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Secretary of State. It has to do with recent alarming reports that there will be some 100,000 more young people in the summer labour force this year, expanding the young labour force this summer to 1,300,000. In view of the inability of present government programs to meet this crushing job demand, can the minister inform the House whether there are ongoing consultations with industry and other levels of government in order that the government might follow the lead of companies such as Imperial Oil and the Royal Bank and initiate special job-creating programs for young people this summer?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, this kind of consultations take place every year and they do not particularly come under the responsibility of my department, but I know however that they take place. The only consultations we have had ourselves, that is to say through those people who submit their projects to us, concern the Opportunities for Youth Program.

[English]

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): In view of the fact the minister indicated earlier that some 20,000 opportunities for youth projects have now been submitted and only a fraction of these will be accepted, is there any specific program underway to consult with other agencies that might well implement some of these very worth-while projects?

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

LOCAL INITIATIVE PROGRAM—ADDITIONAL FUNDS FOR QUEBEC MUNICIPAL PROJECTS

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

The Quebec Municipal Affairs Minister having confirmed to me that an additional amount of $5 million had been granted to local initiative projects in the province, would the right hon. gentleman elaborate on the reply he gave me last Friday?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not know to which confirmation the hon. member refers. He might have received an information of which I may be unaware, but if he wishes to give me notice of his question, I would study it further.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

LAY-OFF OF CIVILIAN EMPLOYEES ON MARCH 30—ASSURANCE OF EARLY REHIRING

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the President of the Treasury Board. It has to do specifically with the 50 civilian employees to be laid off on March 30 at CFB Chatham but also the hundreds of others at national defence bases across Canada who will be laid off on March 30 because obviously the department has run out of money. Would the minister give some assurance that these people will be eligible for re-employment on or shortly after April 1? I would have directed my question to the Minister of National Defence but it is so long since he has been here that I have forgotten what he looks like.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, had the question been directed to the Minister of National Defence it would have been both useful and procedurally correct. I will bring the question to his attention.

ENERGY

PROPOSED MACKENZIE VALLEY PIPELINES—CONSIDERATION OF ENVIRONMENTAL EFFECTS BEFORE PERMIT ISSUED

Mr. David Anderson (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I have a question supplementary to an earlier question about northern pipelines. Since there is no specific responsibility on the National Energy Board to consider the environmental or social effects of any northern pipeline, nor to hold public hearings, may I ask the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources whether he intends to issue any new instructions, or at least clarifications, to the National Energy Board so that prior to considering any permit these factors will be fully taken into account?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I would point out to the hon. member that he is mistaken in his interpretation of the statute. This is one of the general public interests that the board has to take into account. Certainly the board will have additional criteria available to it for the purpose of hearings which, as I indicated earlier, would not commence until after 1972.

Mr. Anderson: While I agree with the minister that this is one of the general interests, I was talking about specific responsibility. May I ask the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development whether, in view of the fact there is no specific responsibility in this area on the National Energy Board to hold such hearings, his department, or the minister himself, will issue instructions that such hearings be held?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, under the Northwest Territories Act, we are authorized to hold hearings and we shall do so if necessary. However, we shall keep in contact at all times with the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources.

GRAIN

RE-ESTABLISHMENT OF INTERNATIONAL WHEAT AGREEMENT—SUGGESTED DISCUSSION WITH PRESIDENT NIXON DURING VISIT TO OTTAWA

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In the talks that the Prime Minister will be having with President Nixon during his visit to Canada in the middle of April, will he place high on the agenda the suggestion that the United States co-operate fully with Canada and other countries in re-establishing the international wheat agreement that was allowed to collapse in 1967?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I will certainly take that into consideration, Mr. Speaker. When I met President Nixon in Washington for the first time that item was high on the agenda and I shall consider it again this time. But as I said to the House yesterday, the agenda has not yet been finally agreed to by the two countries.

TRANSPORT

SUGGESTED INCREASE IN ASSISTANCE TO MUNICIPALITIES FROM RAILWAY GRADE CROSSING FUND

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the large number of municipal projects involving railroad grade crossings that are being held up for lack of funds, would the minister consider increasing the ceiling on assistance to municipalities through the railroad grade crossing fund?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether the hon. member is equipped with e.s.p., but I can tell him that I had a lengthy meeting on this subject this morning in preparation for the visit next week of the Federation of Mayors and Municipalities. I can say that in principle the answer is yes. We are trying to find a formula and will continue consulting with the municipalities as to what is the best one.

RAILWAY LINE RELOCATION IN URBAN CENTRES—POSSIBLE NEW POLICY

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the Minister of Transport whether his considerations involve the early announcement of a new policy on assistance for rail line relocations in many urban centres across Canada?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I spent a good part of an hour talking about Regina this morning, and I am sure that is the area in which the hon. member is most interested. This is one of the problems we are seeking to solve—the difference between a straight grade crossing and a realignment program.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

DISPUTE WITH NABET—POSITION OF NEGOTIATIONS—GOVERNMENT PROPOSALS FOR SETTLEMENT

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State. Can he inform the House whether any progress was made in the recent discussions between the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and NABET?

[Mr. Southam.]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): The only thing I can tell the House, Mr. Speaker, is that the meeting between the union officials and those of the CBC took place yesterday. I was able to talk with the CBC directors, for whom the results of that meeting were good and permitted to foresee an improvement in the situation.

[English]

Mr. Alexander: In view of the seriousness of the matter, would the Secretary of State advise whether the government has any specific proposal that it is prepared to present in order to effect an immediate settlement of this very serious dispute?

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: I beg your pardon, Mr. Speaker. Would the hon. member repeat his question? I missed three words and I am not sure that I did get it.

[English]

Mr. Alexander: Just briefly, Mr. Speaker, I was inquiring whether, in view of the seriousness of the matter, and since we all want an early settlement, the government has any specific proposal that it is prepared to present which will effect an immediate settlement of this matter.

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, I find that question astonishing. Indeed the opposition, and it means well I suppose, is always raising objections, always suspecting us of interfering in negotiations between Crown agencies, and I am surprised—

Mr. Speaker: Order please. There is obviously a debate now between the hon. minister and the hon. member.

• (1500)

Is the hon. member rising to ask a supplementary? We have just about reached the end of the question period but perhaps he might be allowed to ask a supplementary.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I am not rising on a supplementary but on a point of order. There have been successive questions regarding the various issues in contention and under negotiation, but the government seems to want to keep them out of the House and in darkness. On behalf of the people of Canada it is our right as an opposition to pursue this question in order to ascertain whether the government is moving to create a climate of positive action so this dispute can be settled.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I doubt whether that is a point of order. I would think the hon. member is debating the matter in the same way that the minister was. I think the minister was out of order and the hon. member is also out of order.

Mr. Horner: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has already ruled that there is no point of order.

Mr. Horner: Then on another point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Crowfoot on a point of order.

Mr. Horner: I know that the Speaker is annoyed with this particular point of order, but I have sat and watched question periods proceed and it seems to be Your Honour's position that there must be progress made in the question period. When a series of questions is directed to a minister on a given subject, Your Honour seems to feel that after a while the matter should be dropped and the House should proceed to another subject. The rules provide that a question must be urgent, that it should be of national importance and that it should be non-argumentative. When questions are asked on a particular subject matter the Speaker should allow them if they are urgent and of national importance, and that is all.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is obviously wrong. The practice is that supplementaries are entirely at the discretion of the Chair. That is a long-established practice.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN SPEAKER'S GALLERY OF PARLIAMENTARY DELEGATION FROM RUSSIA

Mr. Speaker: Before we call orders of the day, hon. members might want the Chair to bring to their attention the presence in the Speaker's gallery of a group of very distinguished visitors in the persons of a parliamentary delegation from the Supreme Soviet of the U.S.S.R. led by Mr. Nikolai Tikhonov, Deputy Chairman of the Council of Ministers of the U.S.S.R.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: On behalf of all hon. members I welcome these very distinguished visitors. I express the hope that they are having a pleasant and interesting visit in Canada and that they will take back with them to their country very pleasant remembrances of their visit with us. We do want to express our pleasure at having them in the House of Commons of Canada today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Horner: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Crowfoot on a point of order.

Mr. Horner: I am afraid Your Honour misunderstood the exact point I was attempting to make in my point of order. I was not dealing with the question of supplementaries but with questions being put on a given subject matter by members of the different parties in the House. It is not the duty of the Speaker to rule that progress must be made and that we must move on to another subject. If the Speaker, whether Your Honour or some future Speaker, continues to rule in this way, he will lay himself open to the charge of bailing out a minister who was being attacked on a particular subject.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Horner: I would not want to accuse Your Honour of doing that, but if you place yourself in the position of having to rule whether enough questions have been asked on a given subject matter you do lay yourself open to that charge. I would not want to see the Chair placed in that difficult position.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would suggest to the hon. member that I am quite prepared to take my responsibilities at all times.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. MacInnis: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I hope our system is not on trial at the present time. Does the hon. member rise on a question of privilege?

Mr. MacInnis: I rise on a point of order. It is not the same one.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacInnis: This is a point of order with which I believe the Chair will find no difficulty in dealing. It arises from an answer given by the Minister of National Health and Welfare to the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway, an answer which is not in accord with the facts. If the minister has the ability to find the mistake in his answer, maybe he can apoligize to the House at his next appearance.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair has called orders of the day. The point of order is not correctly taken.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

INCOME TAX ACT

The House resumed, from Monday, March 20, consideration of the motion of Mr. Mahoney (for the Minister of Finance) that Bill C-169, to amend the Income Tax Act, be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question!

Mr. Speaker: Will those in favour please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: Those against will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to, bill read the third time and passed.

Explosives Act

EXPLOSIVES ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING DEFINITIONS, PROHIBITIONS, LICENCES, INSPECTORS' POWERS, ETC.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) moved that Bill C-7, to amend the Explosives Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is the first amendment to the Explosives Act since 1954. Its purpose is two-fold. First, it is designed to tighten up the provisions of the present law, with regard to the management, control and disposition of explosives in the light of various events which have occurred both in Canada and elsewhere involving the use of explosives.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. I would invite those who wish to carry on conversations to do so behind the curtains. I know that some hon. members are interested in the comments of the minister on this important bill.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The second purpose is to modernize some of the terminology in the statute so as to take account of technical changes which have occurred in the field, and also to take account of certain legal requirements which have been found, over a period of time, to be necessary.

With respect to the desirability of increasing the strictness of the controls which presently exist, members of the House will, I imagine, require no conviction. They will be aware of the increasing use by violent elements not only in our community but in other communities in western society, of the kind of explosives controlled by the Act we are considering, sometimes in support of political goals, or occasionally, as regrettably occurred in my own city of Toronto last weekend, for ends which do not appear to be related to political purposes. Those who were members of the House during the 27th parliament will recall how close such acts of terrorism came to us—within several hundred feet of the Chamber, as a matter of fact—when a deranged person attempted to introduce explosives within these walls.

As I have said, the purpose of the amendment is to increase the degree of control which presently exists over explosives. It would be an offence to abandon an explosive or to be in possession of an explosive which had not been legally acquired. A comparison might be drawn with the amendment the House considered during the first session of this parliament, the amendment to the Criminal Code dealing with handguns and similar weapons. The government is under no illusion that the problem will be solved merely by making a change in a criminal statute, but it is possible for parliament to create a legal system whereby possession of such potentially dangerous items can be made subject to the scrutiny and control of the authorities, especially of the police. The government recognizes the concern felt by all Canadians with regard to the need for regulating the sale and use of explosives based on recent events in various parts of the country which have indicated a change in attitude toward acts of terrorism.

[Mr. Speaker.]

While the present act concerns itself mainly with public safety, the amendments place greater emphasis on the control, purchase possession and security against theft of explosives. The amendments are designed to give the government of Canada a measure of control over explosives which will be recognized by all authorities as stringent but workable. It is fashioned, not to complement existing provincial statutes, but to develop further the kinds of safeguards needed for public safety, production and use of explosives.

In order to establish more effective control over the sale, purchase and possession of explosives, it is recommended that section 4(n) of the act be amended to give the Governor in Council power to make regulations respecting the sale, purchase and possession of explosives. We intend to recommend that the sale of explosives be restricted to: 1. a person with a valid provincial licence authorizing the storage and use of explosives on a mine or quarry operating under provincial jurisdiction; 2. a person with a valid licence issued pursuant to the Explosives Act for the manufacture, sale or use of explosives; 3. a person with a valid purchase and possession permit.

Recommendations one and two will account for most of the explosives normally consumed, while recommendation number three will cover the balance of the explosives purchased, mainly by the small intermittent user. Recommendations one and two are already reasonably covered by existing federal and provincial licences while recommendation number three is entirely new. In the latter case, the purchaser will be required, pursuant to amendments to the regulations, to complete a form of application giving such personal information as name, address, social security number and so on and such general information as location, duration and intended use of the explosives purchased. Provided the licensed distributor personally knows or can positively identify the purchaser, he may then complete the transaction.

A purchase and possession permit will be valid for a specific period not exceeding 90 days, and will contain detailed requirements to be observed by the permittee for the secure storage and transportation of the explosives. For identification, the explosives will be marked with the permit number and the purchaser will be required to keep the permit available and produce it, on demand, to an inspector or peace officer.

We also intend to recommend regulations which will place the onus of responsibility for the safety and security of explosives on the person who has purchased and is in possession of them, rather than on the distributor which is presently the case.

The storage of explosives on mines and quarries is exempted under Section 2(h)(i) of the act. This section was introduced in order to avoid duplication over the use of explosives in mines and quarries by federal and provincial authorities. However, it does present problems. For example, we recently adopted a new standard for explosives magazines which should greatly increase the security against theft of explosives under federal jurisdiction, but to be effective the same standards must apply to the storage of explosives under the provincial jurisdiction as well.

Another problem we encounter with the interpretation of 2(h)(i) is that many companies who operate both a quarry where explosives are subject to provincial control, and a construction company, where the explosives are subject to federal control, feel they may transfer explosives from their quarry operation to their various construction sites. We feel that 2(h)(i) is too general and should be amended to "a place at or in a mine or quarry for the storage of explosives for the exclusive use on a mine or quarry in a province in which provision is made by the law of such province for the efficient inspection of explosives stored and used therein".

I may mention that my department controls explosives through the issuing of licences and permits. There are presently 55 manufacturers of explosives located in Canada, over 500 licensed dealers and about 1,500 magazines. Moreover, during 1970, some 800 permits were issued for the importation of explosives of all kinds, and about 400 permits for transportation by road. To perform these duties, the Explosives Division has three regional offices located in Vancouver for B.C. and Yukon, in Calgary for the Prairies and Northwest Territories, and in Halifax for the Atlantic provinces. The Ottawa office is responsible for the general administration of the act and the inspection work in Ontario and Quebec. The present Explosives Act applies to the manufacture, testing, sale, storage, importation and transportation by road and private railways.

The proposed amendments to the Explosives Act do not include any major changes to our present approach to consumer-type explosives. We feel that the present system of being able to deny authorization to any type of explosive that does not meet certain standards is the most effective means of control. We do recognize, however, that public concern has been expressed about sales distribution and transportation of some of the so-called consumer-type explosives in Canada. I shall find it very interesting when the bill reaches the committee to hear some further discussion concerning the extent to which the regime of control over consumer explosives should be changed.

More precise requirements may be made, under the authority of Section 4(f) of the present act, to advise the public of the authorization procedure and where they may obtain information concerning the list of authorized explosives. The act, as it already exists, is extremely flexible in dealing with consumer-type explosives and the above change will make the public more aware of the control being exercised. We do not know of any other country with more effective control or rigid enforcement of this type of explosive than we have in Canada. Many of the consumer-type explosives, which are commonly available in all other western countries, are prohibited in Canada.

For information, the following is a résumé of some of the consumer-type explosives which are not authorized in Canada but which are readily available in the U.S.A., Great Britain, Germany, France, and other countries: First, Cigarette loads or cigarette plugs. These small explosive charges are designed for insertion in cigarettes or cigars which will cause them to explode after the victim takes a few puffs. Second, exploding matches. These are made up to resemble ordinary book matches and are designed to explode after a certain delay, usually about the time they are in a position to light a cigarette. Third, sparkling matches. These also resemble the normal book matches but send out a shower of sparks. Fourth, tear gas pens and launchers. These resemble a pen and are supposedly for protection against muggers, but are more commonly used as offensive weapons or as practical jokes. Fifth, ammunition for miniature tie clip, cufflink or key chain pistols. This is a violent type of blank ammunition made up for use in a novelty item. Sixth, auto jokers, auto alarms and so on. These are supposedly designed as burglar alarms but are really for a practical joke. When wired to the ignition system of a car they operate with a loud screeching whistle followed by copious emission of smoke and a loud explosion. Seventh, stinks bombs. The name, I believe, is self-explanatory. Eighth, exploding golf balls. These are designed to explode and emit a cloud of smoke on impact. Ninth, Cherry bombs, M-80 Salutes, Silver Salutes, and so on. These are very violent firecrackers which annually cause serious accidents and some deaths in the United States. They are considered far too violent and contain an excessive charge of a composition we prohibit. Tenth, various throw-down or step-on torpedoes, cracking balls, etc. These are small objects designed to explode on impact. Eleventh, all other trick devices or practical jokes which employ an explosive or a pyrotechnic for their effect are prohibited in this country. Also prohibited are all indoor fireworks, except Christmas crackers, all hand-held fireworks, except sparklers, all shop goods fireworks which do not conform to our standards for testing and authorization of fireworks. According to most foreign manufacturers, these specifications are far more stringent than they encounter in their own country or in other western countries.

It is impossible to determine how many accidents we have prevented in Canada with our system of controls, but we venture to say that we have saved many lives, particularly when the record in Canada is compared with the record in the U.S.A. We are aware that because of our restrictions, some of the prohibited items are smuggled into the country, but they are not legal and they are not readily available to the general public.

This gives a general review of the proposed amendments to the act which, as I indicated, have been based primarily on a wish to tighten up the policing and control of industrial explosives and to tidy up certain aspects of the bill from a technical and legal standpoint. I shall look forward to the opportunity of hearing other hon. gentlemen on the question of this bill, and to having a very full discussion of the proposed changes and other comments when in due course it comes before the standing committee.

Mr. Cliff Downey (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, I appreciated hearing the minister's remarks. I also appreciate the concern he expressed as well as his intentions, especially when one looks around the world and sees some of the difficulties which arise in respect of explosives. However, I cannot help but think, when we look at a bill such as the one being introduced here, that the legislation must be examined in the light of the harm it could do if improperly administered as well as in light of the good it could do if it is properly administered. There are some areas in the bill with which I think we should be concerned and which should bear a good deal of scrutiny before the bill is passed.

I refer in particular to the intent of the bill which is illustrated very well in section 21 which reads:

Except as authorized by or under this Act, every person who, by himself or his agent, has in his possession, sells, offers for sale, makes, manufactures, imports or delivers to any person any explosive is guilty of an offence and is liable on summary conviction,

This means that there is an onus or personal responsibility on the individual if an explosive device so named in the bill is found in his possession. He has then automatically committed an offence. I cannot go along with the consequences of legislating absolute offences and then providing for exemption by regulation. Last year or the year before there was a bill "the Statutory Instruments Act" which was to provide appeal to any inequalities or improprieties that might be caused by regulations issued under any act. However, when a bill is drafted in the manner in which this one is, the Statutory Instruments Act would offer no protection inasmuch as the regulations under this measure would provide exemptions from the crime rather than create the offence. Consequently, unless parliament provides for exemptions in the act itself, a review by the Statutory Instruments Committee of the validity of affirmative or negative resolution would provide no protection from the provisions of this act. I think that is important. It is impossible for us to discuss this bill intelligently or what the outcome of the passage of this bill will be unless we can examine the regulations that will be made under the act. Those who have studied this bill know that anybody who has in his possession at any time after the passage of this bill an explosive device will be committing an offence and will be liable to summary conviction.

I think it is useful to point out for the benefit of the uninitiated what the definition of an explosive is under this bill. We see that the term "safety cartridge" has been deleted. A special category was provided in the old act, but under this bill it no longer appears. In effect this took care primarily of the hunters and it is in the category of sporting ammunition. Clause 1(2) defines an explosive as follows:

"explosive" means any substance that is made, manufactured or used to produce an explosion or detonation or a pyrotechnic effect, and includes gunpowder, propellant powders, blasting agents, dynamite, detonating cord, lead azide, detonators, ammunition of all descriptions, rockets, fireworks, fireworks compositions, safety flares and other signals.

It covers the whole gamut. Unless an exemption is provided in the regulations, of which we have no knowledge at present, any hunter or any agent who has ammunition in his possession is deemed to have committed an offence. I suggest that this is totally wrong. There is no reason for hunting cartridges to be included in this act. It might be useful to note that by physical and chemical definition propellant powders are not explosives, and that is what we are concerned with primarily.

[Mr. Downey.]

With regard to legislating absolute offences such as is accomplished under this act, suppose we were to apply this principle to the Fisheries Act. A provision might then state that anybody who has in his possession fishing equipment or any equipment for use in catching fish has committed an offence unless an exemption is provided in the regulations. The regulations would designate the types of fish which it would be illegal to catch. Suppose it was a crime to catch a diminishing species of fish such as, say, salmon. In such a case, an officer who was enforcing the act, and who happened to see a fisherman plying his trade, would regard the fisherman as one who was committing an offence until the fisheries officer ascertained what type of fish the fisherman was catching. Under this act the onus of proof lies with the individual and he is guilty until he proves himself innocent. Under the Fisheries Act, this would mean that the fisherman would have to prove that he was not catching the protected species of fish or else he would be committing a crime. In many cases this would be an impossible task.

Another section which we should consider is section 23.2 which has to do with the certificate of chemist. Objection can be raised to this provision which requires proof by chemist's certificate. Under this section the chemist would no longer have to appear in court as a witness, and it would be sufficient proof if a certificate were provided from a chemist saying that the substance in someone's possession is of an explosive nature, unless the one against whom charges were pressed was able to prove otherwise. Under this act the onus is on the accused to acertain the background of the chemist and his reliability in providing that certificate. I suggest that this provision bears close scrutiny because it does not seem right that we should arrest a man under this act, that we should require a certificate from a chemist who is not present to the effect that this is indeed an explosive device. It would then be up to the accused and not up to the court to ascertain the reliability or otherwise of the chemist who provided the certificate.

I think that an amendment should be made to take hunting cartridges out of the explosives category because it is not right that shotgun shells should be in the same category as nitroglycerin. I think that there are other areas in the act that need amendment. There is the one with regard to exemptions. I think we will have a great deal of difficulty with provisions dealing with explosives or explosive mixtures which are in common use.

I would like to see what regulations will be written in that regard. Here, I am thinking of the agricultural industry. Some 80 per cent to 90 per cent of the industrial blasting in this country is done with a mixture of ammonium nitrate and fuel oil. I am in the farming and ranching business, and it is not uncommon for me to have 30 tons to 40 tons of this material on hand at certain times of the year. I suggest that this is common in all parts of the country. If we are going to have regulations and restrictions covering all these substances we will run into a great deal of difficulty. We will make lawbreakers of hundreds of thousands of people, simply because of the components of the explosives that they may have stored on their premises. We need to know exactly what status each component will have.

Proposed new section 18 provides that:

Every person who enters without permission or lawful authority or is otherwise found in or about any factory or magazine or any vehicle in which an authorized explosive is being conveyed is guilty of an offence—

This means that if a person has premises in which he stores explosives, and within the meaning of the legislation this would include hunting ammunition, restrictions would have to be placed on the movements of his guests so that they would not go near those premises. Further, Mr. Speaker, I believe the provision with regard to the onus of proof is entirely wrong. The onus should be on the authorities to prove that an individual is irresponsible in his actions. It seems that in an effort to control crime and other difficulties that have occurred, in respect to blasting components, we are taking a holus bolus approach and imposing a mass of bureaucratic controls on a great number of law-abiding individuals.

I had occasion to look at the regulations that apply under the present act, and it is apparent that there are literally thousands and thousands of Canadians committing crimes under the provisions of the act without being aware of that fact. In the present case we must produce something that is realistic in terms of its enforceability, or else people will lose their respect for the law.

We already have a mass of regulations that are impossible to enforce. People in their everyday lives are actually breaking the law. When this happens disrespect is engendered for the law. I would like to refer to some of the regulations currently in force. There is one here with respect to the blending and safe handling of explosive mixtures. It refers to ammonium nitrate and fuel oil. They are supposed to be stored in different sites, but how often are diesel fuel and ammonium nitrate unknowingly blended, with the result that the person concerned is breaking the law? That regulation goes back to 1957.

In 1963 there was another regulation stipulating that no person should loiter in the vicinity of any area or structure where defence stocks of explosives are stored. Mr. Speaker, I am sure that anybody who has visited a defence base has seen somebody loitering in such an area. People are breaking the law all the time in respect to that regulation. Half the people on a defence base are civilian personnel. If a man has his hands in his pockets, is he loitering?

Then there is another regulation which says that when an explosive is contained in a package, the outer package must be destroyed or disposed of in such a manner that it cannot be re-used for any purpose. Mr. Speaker, how many children have filled a .22 box or shotgun shell box with some other substance, making a toy out of it? What about powder cans? They are great for holding screws in home workshops. But anybody who uses them that way is breaking the law. I say it is completely unrealistic to make a criminal out of a child who puts sand in a box which held .22 shells.

There are other regulations that are equally ridiculous. There is one which says that a quantity of explosives of a certain class, including fireworks, exceeding five pounds may not be carried in a vehicle that is carrying public passengers. In other words, not more than 5 pounds of hunting ammunition can be carried in a vehicle that carries public passengers. I would estimate that a box of shotgun shells weighs 2 pounds, so that in effect a person taking three boxes of shotgun shells home with him on the bus is a criminal, according to this regulation.

There are other restrictions with respect to the hauling of explosives. One regulation states that after the operation of unloading from any vehicle is commenced it should not cease and should be completed as expeditiously as possible. I think that the present limit of a load on such a vehicle is about 10,000 pounds. If workers stopped unloading half way through in order to get a cup of coffee they would be breaking the law.

The same regulation provides that vehicles used for the transportation of explosives:

—shall be inspected daily to ascertain that

(i) the fire extinguishers are filled and in working order,

(ii) the electric wiring is completely insulated and firmly secured,

(iii) the fuel tank and feed lines have no leaks,

(iv) the chassis, engine, pan and bottom of the body are clean and free from surplus oil and grease,

(v) the brakes and steering apparatus are in good condition, and

(vi) the spare tire and wheel are in a fixed position—

It also provides that:

—explosives shall not be loaded onto or into a motor vehicle unless the vehicle has been fully serviced with respect to supplies of fuel, oil and air;

From that I would gather that anybody hauling explosives has committed an offence if he has not checked the tires, has not seen to it that they are up to a certain pressure, has not filled the gas tank with fuel, and has not checked the oil. This is utterly ridiculous. To try to enforce regulations like this would mean utter disrespect for the law. To pass the bill in its present form, providing that it is an offence to possess explosives unless there is a remission by regulation, would be a backward step, one that will only get us into trouble.

I can understand what the minister is trying to achieve. He referred to the recent blast in Toronto, and I know that at the time the War Measures Act was invoked there were some explosions in various cities in Quebec. Let us look at the world scene. The troublespot where this act might have some bearing at the present time, I think we would have to agree, would be Ireland where blasts occur every day. The regulations pertaining to explosives and guns in Ireland have been in effect for about 60 years. Under these regulations only a few people can possess guns, and explosives are out of the question. It is illegal to possess guns, illegal to possess explosives—it is illegal to belong to the IRA. What has this accomplished in the way of peace? Absolutely nothing. These regulations have imposed a host of restrictions on ordinary law-abiding citizens because of the criminal element and the people who are making the trouble in that country. The law in this regard has no effect at all on crime and insurrection.

Passage of this bill before us would mean that the ordinary law-abiding man who likes to go hunting on Sunday would have so many restrictions that he would just wonder if it was worth the effort. There is no evidence that these restrictions have done any good in other countries where they have been in effect for many years. It is probably some bureaucratic zealot with a hang-up about firearms and explosives who created this monstrosity which confronts us today.

In commenting on this bill the Ottawa Citizen of March 2, stated:

> The minister said that the new law will place a heavy obligation on all lawful users of explosives—

The article went on to comment on the terrorist tactics at which this bill is aimed. I think the introduction to this bill suggests that we trust the government and have faith in them to provide suitable regulations which will look after all these law-abiding people who may be potential users of explosives. I would like to bring forward another matter in regard to trusting the principles and motives of the government.

In the last year we have all been involved in a great debate on marketing boards. I am referring to Bill C-176. Some provincial marketing board groups appeared before the committee to say that this was a good thing and that we must have faith that it would be administered properly. I can remember particularly that it was emphasized time and time again that the provinces would have full control over these boards, that there would be no difference, that the federal authority would be the co-ordinating authority and all that. I was surprised last week to see an article in the Farm and Country magazine of March 14, which stated, under the heading "Will C-176 Strip Broiler Board of Its Powers:

> The government wants more. "I cannot contemplate the federal government agreeing to an agency only powered to co-ordinate interprovincial movement," said Charles Phillips, Canada Department of Agriculture marketing director-general.
> Philips told the recent Toronto meeting of the Ontario Commodity Council that provincial marketing boards must relinquish enough power to let the federal agency fully administer the national plan. He noted there may be some need to federally regulate intra-provincial movement.

In other words, now that the bill has been passed, the attitude is different. The government is now saying that they must have the power to override the provincial authorities. This is the same government we are dealing with in regard to the explosives bill. When we see what has happened to the marketing board legislation, how can we close our eyes and let this bill go through when the provisions creating offences are in such absolute terms? Any remission of the offence has to be through regulations. How can we go along with that type of thinking in light of our past experience with a government which has broken faith? That is what concerns me today. Before this bill passes, we need to have suitable measures built into it to take care of those individuals; we need to have a look at the regulations and see where the man in the street stands.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to move an amendment at this time, seconded by the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner):

> That all the words after "That" be left out and the following substituted therefor:
> "this House, affirming the principle that the criminal law of Canada extends only to anti-social acts and repudiating the principle of Bill C-7 that crimes include innocent acts as well as anti-social acts save only those acts exempted by regulation in the government's discretion, refers the subject matter of Bill C-7 to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs."

[Mr. Downey.]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. Looking at the amendment moved by the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Downey) the Chair has some hesitation about the form of it. The amendment seems to do two things: it is a reasoned amendment partly opposing the bill and at the same time referring the subject matter of the bill to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. To my mind, the amendment would have to be one or the other. By his amendment the hon. member could oppose the bill or any part of the bill and leave it at that or choose to refuse the second reading of the bill and at the same time refer the subject matter of the bill to a standing committee. Before making a definite decision, I would be ready to hear comments from hon. members interested in the procedural acceptability of the amendment. I shall then make a decision.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, the principles involved in amendments on second reading I think are well known. I would refer the Chair to the Fourth Edition of Beauchesne, section 386(3) which reads:

> The House cannot, under the guise of referring the subject matter to a committee, refer also certain provisions of the bill itself.

It seems to me that since the amendment put forward by the hon. member refers to both the terms of the bill and the regulations, it offends that aspect of the commonly accepted procedures of the House. I suggest that the amendment as put by the hon. member is not a reasoned amendment, as that term has been understood and accepted within the provisions of the customs and procedures of the House over the years. Therefore, I would seek to reinforce the hesitation which Your Honour expressed and say that in its present form the amendment is not acceptable.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The argument just made by the minister confirms the hesitation of the Chair. May I read part of the citation to which the minister referred. The last part of citation 386(3) on page 278 of Beauchesne's reads:

> The House cannot both refuse to give the second reading and refer some provisions of the Bill to a committee. It shall have to make its choice.

The amendment referred to was ruled out of order. Therefore, for the reasons expressed, I cannot accept the amendment in its present form.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I am particularly interested in this bill, both for what it says and for what it does not say. With some clauses I agree entirely. I agree that some clauses dealing with explosives are good. Other clauses are not so good, for the government has tried to do by the back door what it cannot do by the front door. That is normal practice for this government. If the government really intends to go after people like the members of the FLQ, it should say so, and go after them under the Criminal Code, perhaps, instead of playing about with what appears to be an innocuous explosives bill.

I have bought and used more explosives in a month than the FLQ has used in all its existence, and I did this over many years. I know that some quarries, mining companies and prospectors have taken liberties. They have done so only because inspection was not enforced. The government did not enforce the regulations already in existence and was lax in handling problems involving explosives. If this government or country thinks you can eliminate the illicit use of explosives simply by passing this bill, I can only say that the problem of explosives is not being astutely handled. One of these days someone will take a carload of common, ordinary farm fertilizer, dump in enough fuel oil to make it adhesive, put in some kind of primer, and he will make a reasonably big bang pretty cheaply. Most explosives fit into that category. An explosive in itself is not bad; it is only bad when improperly used.

I do not object to regulations requiring us to take every kind of precaution possible in the manufacturing of explosives. We want people handling explosives to know exactly what the results of misuse will be. However, there must be uniformity in legislation. I have worked with people who have handled explosives for long periods of time and their nerves have become very bad. One chap lit a fuse that was supposed to be 18 inches long; when he lit it, it was only 5 inches long. He lit it, jumped off the car, heard the big explosion and the people around there were back on the car in seconds. That was a mistake, and the man made it because his nerves were bad. He had been handling explosives for too long. If the government had not insisted on pretty severe safety restrictions applying to the manufacture of fuses, and if it had not insisted on certain minimum safety requirements, people like that would be in much greater trouble. Therefore, I agree that the government has a responsibility in this field.

I agree that regulations regarding the transporting of explosives should be enforced. Such regulations really will not make much difference, when you consider some of the other substances being transported. For instance, a carload of dynamite being hauled on the highway is not nearly as explosive as a carload of gasoline, and not half as explosive as a carload of liquid propane, or bottles of liquid air or oxygen. The explosive power of many substances is far greater than that of substances we normally use as explosives. For instance, the army hauls high explosives on the highways, and the trucks carry no markings. The army has moved—yes, Mr. Speaker,—even atomic weapons up and down the highway, mostly at night. Nobody has known about it and the trucks were not marked. That is how they moved atomic weapons to North Bay. They were moved in secret, with as little fanfare as possible, and the trucks were not marked. Yet, we make it a point of introducing highly restrictive legislation affecting explosives.

Why is the government doing this? Obviously, it wants to convince the public that it stands for law and order. It is saying, "Let's get rid of all illegal explosives; let's cut out the possibility of bombings taking place; let us cut down on the murders which take place." In short, the government is saying, "We really stand for law and order; we are tough, and we are going to do something about it." That, Mr. Speaker, is a lot of tommyrot.

I hope that if we pass this explosives bill the civil servants working in the minister's department understand how explosives can be used. I hope some of them understand the legitimate purposes for which explosives can be used. As I say, there must be inspection. Explosives must be examined carefully. I am not arguing that we should move explosives up and down the road as though they were cords of wood. Every precaution possible should be taken to make sure that people do not run afoul of explosions. On the other hand, we must make it possible for people handling explosives legitimately to have ready access to explosives. Under the old act we excluded explosive cartridges. In the present bill we include in the definition of explosives, propellant powders, ammunition of all descriptions, rockets, fireworks, safety flares and so on. Why are those things in there? I have not heard of cartridges exploding accidentally, save in wartime. Millions of cartridges every day are being filled in Canada in home workshops and basements, and there is absolutely no danger of their exploding. Why should cartridges be included, unless the minister is trying to do something that is not related to explosions?

Why are flares included? Why are we to make it mandatory that storage places are to be built so many feet from any building, that the temperature is to be kept at a certain level, that certain kinds of locks are to be placed on warehouse doors, and so on? Why are the various parts of certain explosives to be separated by so many feet and contained in cement block buildings, and so on? Why must we do that with safety flares? When Canadian Tire decided to sell safety flares, commonly known as fusees, I thought it was a good idea. You can buy three safety flares in a small package. If you are stalled on the road, you put them in front and behind your vehicle. These flares prevent accidents, and I think they are a good idea. Now, the minister decides that there must be the same kind of regulations governing fusees as govern dynamite, cordite, driftite, stopcite, forcite, gelatin and other explosive substances. These little safety flares are to be put in that category. This means that Canadian Tire and other stores in Canada selling these flares will need to keep them in reinforced units specially built for that purpose. The fusees will be kept in these buildings, and it will be hardly worth while selling them. Anybody who wants to buy them will need a licence; and, of course, the people selling them will need a licence.

I would need a four foot sign on the back of my car with flashing lights in seven colours if I were carrying explosives. Well, I would not need a fuse if I were going to all that trouble to create an explosion. The regulations can be that ridiculous. If we were to do exactly what the minister said he wants to do, obviously we should have two kinds of acts, one to handle explosives and the other to limit the use of a number of commodities. I listened to the minister outline those commodities. I suppose this law will put most of the joke shops out of business. I never bought these commodities because I always thought they were stupid. I do not have that kind of a sense of humour. When my car goes bang, it usually means I have to pay $35 for a new muffler and that is no joke. I do not intend to attach a contraption that will produce that kind of a result. If the minister is going to provide protection to those who use explosives in mines, quarries, construction companies and other legitimate users, he will not fool around with the type of thing you put in your hand and which goes bang when shaking hands with another fellow. That, apparently, is the purpose of this act.

We could raise the constitutional problem. We do not have a constitution like that of the United States which permits everyone in that country to have a gun. When the Criminal Code was before us, the Canadian public decided they were not in favour of a total restriction of firearms in this country. I am not going to participate in accomplishing the same thing through the back door by including in this act safety cartridges, ammunition for guns and shotgun shells. It is quite true that under one act a person may have a gun, but under another act he is not permitted to have ammunition for that gun. That is fine for collectors because sometimes they are odd people. Some want ammunition, some do not. Some collectors only buy ammunition and no guns. They consider that a collection.

When dealing with another piece of legislation, the government stated that approximately 35 per cent of the population in Canada lived in four major urban centres. If that is true, I agree that in most cases a person may not have any desire to own a gun or to purchase ammunition. If he did, he could go to the police station, buy a gun, get a permit to buy ammunition and another permit to transport the ammunition down a highway. He could make all those special requests because it would be for a very special purpose. However, the exact opposite is true in my part of the country. Almost everyone owns a gun and almost everyone goes hunting. The other day I talked to a chap who had been working too hard. I suggested that it would be very easy for him to go to Spain for a holiday. This fellow was not poor. He could afford to go to Spain or some other part of Europe. He said he would rather go hunting. A large percentage of the people in northern Canada consider going hunting with their companions to be an ideal vacation.

The minister stated that a person selling ammunition would have to have a licence, and would have to meet stringent requirements in order to retain explosives. The minister will say that is not true. Probably that is what he thinks. However, I am not sure what some of his subordinates think. I do not believe the minister is sure either. Every time we have a problem with a piece of legislation, and I am thinking now of the Unemployment Insurance Act, the government says "you people passed the act". Then, they say this provision is not in the act, it is in the regulations. Damn near everything in this country is done by regulation, not legislation.

I suppose the regulations will limit the ability of a small service station operator in my area who had to pull political strings to sell ammunition. This is in a remote area where fishing and hunting is of prime importance. This service station operator had to get a licence to sell hunting and fishing licences. He probably has a dozen cartons of shotgun shells, not more than a case of 22 shells, probably eight or 10 boxes of ammunition in the common sizes of 303, 306, 308, 30/30, the common types of ammunition for hunting in that area. Under the regulations made under this act, he will no longer be allowed to have these.

I cannot think of any offence that has occurred where it would have been an advantage to restrict sales of ordinary ammunition. I am sure that in most robberies and other offences that type, small arms, sidearms, revolvers, Lugers and similar types of equipment are used. Most people that I know do not stock Luger ammunition, 9 mm ammunition and center fire cartridges for 38's. They do not stock that kind of ammunition because they do not have permits to sell it. I suggest this kind of ammunition is obtained from another source that is readily available to the element that has a use for it. If so, we should discuss that openly and come to some conclusion on it.

I strongly urge the minister not to include clause 2 in the bill. This includes a definition of explosives, ammunition of all descriptions, fireworks, safety flares and so on. I am well aware that some of these have a danger. Safety flares may have a danger, but I do not know what it is. They may burn the house down. I can remember as a young boy stealing torpedoes or thunder claps from the railroad. I put them on the railroad track, the train ran over them and made one hell of a noise.

Mr. Alexander: You didn't do that.

Mr. Peters: Yes. That happened when I was only seven or eight years of age. I agree with the minister and his officials that the railway company has an obligation, not so much for my sake and the trouble I may cause, but for its own safety. Why should they let children louse up their safety and signal systems by leaving these in an unlocked shack along the railway track? That is like Kresge's putting all their small junk and candies on a low counter for children to steal. It is an unreasonable temptation. The people who should do something about this are those who cause the temptation. The banks do not put sample money on the counter because they know it is not advantageous. The railways should display the same caution.

I can tell you some things that may happen. Before safety flares were generally available, many policemen got them from railway workers, and these flares were used to good advantage. We are not requesting that the railways tighten their control over flares, but we are saying that they should be placed in the same position as anybody else with regard to handling explosives.

Although we may not stop this bill from going through, I have news for the minister. I do not give a damn what he does about ammunition in northern Ontario; if we do not get it any place else we will get it from United States tourists, just as we get fishing tackle. They will bring it in and none of it will return with them. If that happens, the control now possible through the orderly sale of ammunition in a store will be totally destroyed and the minister will be caused trouble that he never expected.

I am sure the minister is aware that if a person has a .38 or Luger which is registered with the police, such a gun would seldom be used for an illegal purpose. The same is true of ammunition. I have always been concerned, partly because of my ignorance, about the growing spread of the use of handguns today. I say "because of my ignorance" because I do not really know anything about the subject. I am always concerned when I see a pailful of weights in my garage taken from cars and which my son has collected to make bullets. I know he will be using a lot of powder and youngsters are always pushing guns to their limit. Anything we do to restrict the legitimate, reasonable and orderly sale of ammunition I suggest will further the market for reloading cartridges to push a gun beyond the safety factor.

Manufacturers of shells have their own equipment to test the maximum explosive effect a given gun can withstand. The homeloader makes this test by trial and error, and when he exceeds the maximum the error may be a costly one. So, let us not bow to those who talk about law and order without thinking just what law and order may entail. Let us not complicate a simple act that seeks to regulate the use of explosives for legitimate purposes by putting in all this junk to which the minister has referred. I suggest we leave the act as it was, and that safety cartridges be excluded from its provisions. I also suggest we exclude flares and some of the more harmless fireworks. I was not badly brought up but my mother and father let me play with five cent firecrackers or sparklers on certain occasions, and I do not think it hurt me. We would be taking away some of the joys of being young were we to prohibit young folk from playing with fireworks simply because they could be dangerous in extreme cases.

Is the minister going to say that under this act and regulations no one under the age of 15 is allowed to buy firecracker devices, or is he going to say that those who go to great expense to buy the necessary equipment to maintain explosives in top shape are to come within the act? One of the problems created in provinces where it is not mandatory to keep explosives in proper shape is that when the dynamite deteriorates, or the glycerine inside the cartridge exudes to the surface, it becomes highly dangerous. As a result, these cartridges should be properly disposed of. I am sure some of the dynamite used by the FLQ was dynamite discarded by quarry companies as unfit for use. Nevertheless, in its deteriorated state it can be highly effective when used for other purposes. Therefore, I am glad the minister is tightening up the provisions regarding the disposal of explosives obtained legitimately.

I shall be interested to hear from the officials about particular abuses which have taken place and to what extent they intend the act to go. Without this information I will not be able to support the legislation, for the simple reason that I know that it will lend itself to a multitude of abuses. Law and order officers will try to eliminate use of guns in Canada by placing restrictions on the sale of ammunition. This will mean each little service station and country store in my area, many of them 50 or 75 miles from any municipality, will be prohibited from carrying on its shelves ammunition for use by hunters in the area. These restrictions will be enforced by zealous, stupid people—most of the law and order officers fit into that category—who do not face a problem but try to solve it by subterfuge, and this usually creates more problems than it solves.

I am very much in favour of the changes that have been made in the provisions governing the use of explosives. My only objection is to the use of this bill for an ulterior purpose, one that lends itself to great discrimination against 75 per cent of the people in this country who on occasion like to go hunting for pleasure and for game.

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, the bill before us is intended to give citizens and society more protection against the hazards inherent in explosives. However, if we analyse the reasons which prompted the government to introduce such legislation, I think it in order to question some clauses of this bill; although they put much more teeth in the present act and make the use of explosives much stricter, they might not in fact make it all that much easier to reach our objective.

I agree almost completely with the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) on the points on which he dwelled in his speech, Mr. Speaker, for it is not indeed by being more stringent about the manufacture and the use of explosives that a social problem will be solved.

That some individuals totally lacking in human decency should have used explosives for unavowable or extremely wicked purposes must not make us lose our senses and pass laws that are so strict that finally, those who would normally benefit from their advantages might really become their victims.

I should like to stress a few specific points. It is true, as the member for Timiskaming pointed out, that the reforms proposed by the bill might lead to endless abuse. I may be told that regulations to be set up will decrease of or remove those abuses.

Mr. Speaker, we have already had striking examples. May I mention one related to the infamous events of October 1970 in Quebec where, through the War Measures Act, efforts were made to arrest a handful of people, about ten at the most. The act that was applied was far too strict, all out of proportion to the objective, and I wonder if the changes proposed here might not lead to similar abuse.

Some 500 or 600 persons were arrested under the War Measures Act, for absolutely nothing, Mr. Speaker, thus denying the freedom of thousands of individuals because of an act that was too strict, too severe, too specific.

In this case, the object is indeed extremely worthy: to keep shady characters, commonly known as terrorists, from having easy access to explosives. We are all aware, Mr. Speaker, that we must not make things too easy for that type of bandits who could spread terror in the land if getting explosives is a cinch.

But, Mr. Speaker, it is well known that it is not through stricter administration of the law for the majority of people, that this kind of persons will be rehabilitated. All sorts of laws can be enacted to prohibit thefts, but we know that thefts are constantly on the increase. I would even suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the stricter the laws and the more they infringe on personal freedom, the more provocative and explosive they will tend to be.

This is why I am wondering to what extent it was useful to amend this act. Here is another example of possible misuse. Clause 18 of the bill reads as follows:

Every person who enters without permission or lawful authority or is otherwise found in or about any factory or magazine or any vehicle in which an authorized explosive is being conveyed—

I am aware, Mr. Speaker, that this is intended to prevent those who would steal dynamite and who would be found, at a given time, "about" a place where dynamite could be had. I understand that. This example, however, shows all the possible abuses that can occur, and someone who would happen to be strolling not very far from a truck loaded with explosives, or a magazine, or an explosive factory, could be arrested. I do not suggest that this will inevitably happen, but that the amendment before us creates this possibility, Mr. Speaker. Here is part of clause 18 as amended:

—is guilty of an offence and is liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding one thousand dollars and he may be forthwith removed therefrom by any constable or by any person employed at the factory or magazine or the operator of the vehicle, as the case may be.

Once again, Mr. Speaker, the objective is very commendable but we will never sufficiently understand that it is not through strict laws, not by harshness that we will correct the individuals who have attained such a degree of lunacy that the only solution they have is terrorism. We should find ways of correcting society itself since the people who are causing so much trouble are products of our society.

Even if we build double and triple concrete walls around magazines, if we make explosives almost inaccessible for those who in good faith need them for useful and even essential works, all this will never prevent lunatics or cheaters from getting dynamite anyhow. Agitators will at all times be able to organize interception of vehicles transporting explosives, entering building sites and taking possession of explosives, which is what happened in Quebec. Notwithstanding the watchmen, when there are people ready to hold up banks in full daylight, terrorists—if any—will find some way or other to go around a legislation, however strict it may be.

That is why I say that, even with amendments, Bill C-7 now before us will, in my opinion, bring about no improvement and will complicate the life of some Canadians who will henceforth be caught in an inextricable web of difficulties.

For instance, I am sure the regulations will provide for this. In fact, clause 3 indicates that section 5 will be repealed, and I quote:

Except as authorized under this Act and subject to such exemptions as may be provided by regulation, no person shall

(a) make or manufacture explosives either wholly or in part except in a licensed factory;

Mr. Speaker, you know as well as I do that in chemistry laboratories, whether at the CEGEP or at university level, explosives are manufactured, which means that teachers in the CEGEPs and students in CEGEPS and universities could be arrested on the grounds that their chemical experiments result in manufacture of explosives. Evidently, I am sure the regulations provide for such cases, but I wonder whether an explicit amendment could not do away with that ambiguity.

So, if a time came when we would stop all chemical experiments under the pretext that one or two terrorists might get their hands on a few sticks of dynamite, Mr. Speaker, that would be exagerated. And if our society has produced such crackpots, Mr. Speaker, it is because there are shortcomings in our society. But none of these stem from the Explosives Act which is already quite strict, and of course I agree that it should be because we cannot be allowed to play with such things. As everyone knows, the Explosives Act is being amended because there have been terrorist activities in Quebec in the past. Acts of terrorism will be prevented only through elimination of all the faults of our society which produces such crackpots.

We should bring in legislation promoting the freedom, emancipation and fulfilment of the individual. We should pass legislation which would make Canadians so happy and so free that they would never consider doing wrong. As for those who would misbehave because of some mental deficiency they would be shut in.

Surely, when every Canadian will enjoy a minimum standard of living and will be guaranteed maximum individual freedom, there will be no more terrorists left in the country.

Before amending the legislation to make it more stringent, before erecting concrete walls to prevent terrorism, we should further consider other legislation promoting individual emancipation and fulfilment. This is what Canadians need and this is what they are asking for. And the reason why today a certain segment of the population, no matter how small, sees no other means than terrorism or destruction to achieve its objectives is that there are cracks, there are gaps, in this country's legislation.

Mr. Speaker, we know that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has taken a stand on this issue and that he is opposed, for instance, to making compulsory the carrying of an identification card.

I feel, Mr. Speaker, that it would be far more logical and far more effective, before we pass legislation to make access to explosives more difficult, to pass legislation which would make it easier for people to prove their identity on any occasion, in order to protect the individual.

Some people will say: No, on the contrary, this would trespass on freedom. People who have nothing to hide are never afraid to say who they are. It might be more important, therefore, to consider passing legislation giving every Canadian the means to prove his identity effectively on any occasion, rather than legislation which advocates building concrete walls around powder-magazines or which will prevent the farmer on a concession road in the constituency of Champlain, for instance, to accomplish certain useful tasks because of the complexities of the legislation.

I think that while we are trying to stop a very small group, we are not going to stop them at all. You can be sure that if some people have it in their heads to go and steal explosives, they will find ways to do so no matter how strict the law is. You will not stop this, but at the same time you create difficulties for quite a number of people.

So, Mr. Speaker, I will conclude my remarks by saying that if the minister proposes amendments which will improve certain clauses of this bill, I will support those amendments right away; but if the amendments are not adequate, or if no changes are made, I will have to oppose this bill.

We support the freedom of the individual so much that it is not our role I think to make access to progress, work and so on, difficult for most people, simply in an effort to curb harmful acts, because it is well known that these harmful acts will be committed anyway if we keep the same hotheads. And to correct those hotheads, we shall have to devise other legislation that will offer better safeguards for freedom.

[English]

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in this debate on Bill C-7, I must begin by saying I agree wholeheartedly with much of what the previous speaker said in respect of his concern and his views about this piece of legislation. First of all, I believe this legislation should receive a very thorough examination in the committee because it touches upon the very freedoms of the individual which all of us cherish so much. One really should ask oneself why such an act is necessary and why the government is bringing it forward. In this particular case, I believe most members will come to the conclusion it is partly or mostly because of the uprising in Quebec of October 1970. Then, of course, in considering whether or not this piece of legislation would halt or forever prohibit similar uprisings in the future, one can only come to the conclusion that it would not. In fact, I would be led to believe that if another uprising were to take place, the next would be much better organized and much better planned.

One learns by experience, no matter in what field he is. He may be a demolition expert, an expert at making bombs or an expert in terrorist tactics. Certainly, the next uprising may be carried out by the same people or may be led by the same people. One can be sure that it would be better planned, better organized and perhaps much more extensive because the leaders would have a far larger following before the uprising is initiated. So if you follow common logic, and I think that is the only thing to do, this bill does nothing to stop a well planned, organized uprising or insurrection against the state, against the municipal government or against any authority.

Would this act prohibit a well planned, well organized uprising? No, it would not. Similar legislation is not doing it in Ireland, as somebody suggested. Makarios of Cyprus recently had a large amount of arms and ammunition in his possession. He had them shipped in from Czechoslovakia. I understand that since then he has turned them over to the authorities. Arms and ammunition can be acquired from other countries. Quebec has a particularly rugged coastline and any amount of ammunition, arms and dynamite could be smuggled into the province by a well organized group of people who wanted to terrorize the authorities. So, this act comes too late. What is it attempting to accomplish and what will be its harmful effects?

Actually, this bill will make life more complicated for the average Joe who perhaps likes to do a little hunting on his weekends or in his time off. Hunting is becoming one of Canada's biggest pastimes, aside from skiing and taking part in spectator sports such as football and hockey. Many people find a great deal of pleasure in hunting. We have large areas in Canada which lend themselves to hunting. There are a number of gun clubs, hunting clubs and sports clubs which encourage the development of this sport. This bill will only make it more difficult for them. Also, in many of our schools across Canada a great interest in rockets is developing. It might interest the House to know that one such rocket club is operating in my constituency. They are having a showing of their rockets on April 1; they have invited me to attend and I have accepted. This group of young high school boys is under the guidance of a teacher. Last winter they enjoyed building and launching their rockets and they are pretty proud of their achievement. Clause 3 of the bill would cause a great deal of trouble for them. It reads in part:

(a) make or manufacture explosives either wholly or in part except in a licenced factory.

I have yet to go to the demonstration, but I believe that it would fall within the terms of that provision.

We really should analyse our society. Back in October, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) asked if we were a bunch of runny-nosed, weak-kneed kids who could not manage our society. I believe the government and the minister should analyse that question, because it is the duty of the elected bodies to make laws to protect society. What have we done in that regard? This House has passed the Criminal Code, which provided capital punishment only for the murder of policemen and prison guards. The government has even neglected to enforce the wishes of the House with regard to society. As an hon. member near me suggests, 37 policemen have been murdered cold-bloodedly since 1961, with no repercussions from society.

What are the repercussions from such an attitude? We find law officers who are inclined to take the law into their own hands. They shoot first and ask questions after, particularly if they see someone coming at them with a gun. I do not blame them, this is natural. Let us look at the effect this attitude has had on our citizens. There is a growing fear in Canada that too many citizens are acquiring guns, pistols and the like to protect themselves and their homes. Does this not mean that society or its governing bodies have failed to provide the security which the citizens want? That is how I understand it.

This bill does not help the ordinary citizen; it does not bring him a greater degree of security. In fact, it creates a situation where crooks and murderers can acquire weapons while ordinary citizens cannot. The policeman is not inclined to defend them because his life is not protected. So, security is not provided to the individuals in our society. I think this is terrible. To go back to the October 1970 uprising in the province of Quebec, let me point out that the greatest fear at that time was that army depots and arsenals would be robbed, that guns would be stolen or ammunition and dynamite taken from the army. This will still be possible after this legislation is passed. These people will still be able to acquire all the ammunition and arms they want. This bill does not prevent them from doing so, but it does make it very difficult for a law abiding citizen to live within the law.

Any time a piece of legislation is passed, we know that seven out of ten people will be breaking that law unconsciously. This is a terrible weapon in the hands of some over-zealous policeman, municipal or federal, and it encourages him to crack down on an innocent person. This is wrong. We must ensure that our police force operates in a fair and just manner. Policemen should not interpret the law, but they should ascertain the facts and allow the courts to do the judging. Recently, the Canadian Weekly magazine of March 18 contained an article on Canada's toughest cop. I read the article and it amazed me that the photograph of such a man would appear on the front page of a weekend magazine which goes into every home. Are we proud to have such cops in Canada? I do not think I was when I read the article. However, we have them, and we are proud of them, because we need them since governments have failed to enact laws and society to obey them. The government has failed to enforce the laws that this House has passed.

I understand the feeling of compassion that many people have and their desire to see the criminal rehabilitated. On the other hand, there should be no leniency and no compassion for the cold-blooded murderers, the hired killers, the Mafia killers who operate in Canada and elsewhere, and the murderers who take part in insurrections against the state. Let us not forget the question the Prime Minister asked: what we are, a bunch of weak-kneed, runny-nosed kids? He went on to say that we were bleeding hearts. I think the Prime Minister is great. He can rise to occasions requiring hardness and coldness, but he fails to last, to continue the degree of hardness and coldness that society calls on the Prime Minister to accept as his responsibility. I think he should accept that responsibility. He should remain cool and calm. But when there is deliberate murder—call it first degree murder or second degree murder, call it capital murder or anything you like—this impairs the security of the individual in our society.

In my opinion, this legislation is an acknowledgement of the fact that in Canada there is less and less security, and the freedoms of the individual are being threatened. In introducing this legislation, the minister said, in effect, that we must try to make society secure. But is he making it secure? Not at all, Mr. Speaker. He is taking away some of the freedoms, and making things more hazardous for the individual. Under proposed new section 18, if you are in the neighbourhood of a factory or magazine, and in this context magazine means a premises for storing dynamite, and you are there without permission, even if you are there unknowingly, then a policeman may arrest you on suspicion that you are attempting to steal something from the magazine or factory. In that case, you are immediately deemed guilty and must prove your innocence.

We in this country have long believed that a person is innocent until proven guilty, although that principle has been chipped away in various pieces of legislation. Under this proposed new section, a person is deemed guilty the minute he is apprehended by any law enforcement officer. This is contrary to my opinion of how a free society should operate. A government that fails to ensure security within society has failed to accept its full responsibility and should not be allowed to govern any longer. If my interpretation of the minister's introductory remarks is correct, and the people of Canada believe as I do, they will dismiss the government in the next election.

Mr. D. Gordon Blair (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I was surprised as I listened to some of the speakers for the official opposition. One would have thought that that party, which historically has stood for law and order and the great civic virtues of responsibility, would welcome legislation like this which has the characteristic of bringing up to date a type of regulatory procedure which has been in the statutes for a long time. But one is led to believe, by the speeches made by the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) and his colleague who preceded him, that they are against the regulation of explosives, that they rather favour the idea of people not being regulated regarding the importation, acquisition and transportation of explosives in Canada.

I think that the arguments we have heard are those which might be made against any criminal legislation. It can be said that there will always be thieves, there will always be robbers, there will always be people who commit violent assaults. If the logic we have just heard from the hon. member for Crowfoot is applied, then why have laws against thieves, against robbers, against people who commit assaults? We are told that this kind of law may not apply to the Mafia, and that seasoned felons or thugs will violate it. That may be so, but it does impose a type of control on them, and it achieves a degree of protection for society which every outward sign indicates we need more and more as years go by.

My immediate purpose in rising in this debate is to deal with a rather minor complication which the development of technology and scientific interest has brought upon us. There are many young people in this country who are interested in rocketry. Probably they are potential spacemen. I was surprised at the beginning of this year to receive a communication from a group of high school students in my constituency telling me that their rocketry group got tangled up in governmental red tape. They wished to construct a rocket. They set about finding out where one went to get a permit for this purpose, and what law applied. Mr. Speaker, I was advised by these young people that they found in this city, in this region, they were passed around from one agency to another. Finally, their local police force gave them some kind of a permit. They have addressed a question to me which I hope will be answered in the debate on this measure. Where does one go in Canada to get a permit to construct rockets? To whom do school children, who are interested in this subject, go to get permission? Or do they indeed need permission for this purpose?

I think that the discussion which we are having will not only perform a valuable function in bringing the law up to date but may also serve the equally valuable purpose of informing the public as to what the law is and who administers the law. My brief contribution, Mr. Speaker, will conclude with my expression of the hope that in the committee information will be given about the application of this law to the growing interest of young people in the science of rocketry.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I wish to associate myself with the remarks set forth initially by my colleague from Timiskaming. I support his contention that basically what is being sought to be done here by this bill is to try to put together, under one set of confinements and constrictions, two things which really do not belong together. The idea that a case of 80 per cent powder is the equivalent of a box of .22 shells and should be licensed and controlled in the same way, does not stand up.

I want to expand a bit on that from the point of view of a rural member, from the point of view of a person who lives in an area where it is pretty common practice to have rifles in every household, a common practice to see people drive down the street in a pick-up truck with two or three rifles hanging on the rack at the back of the cab, especially during the hunting season in the fall of the year. In such an area, it is common practice to go into a hardware store or even a service station and buy shells for rifles and shotguns. The possession of a box of shells is considered in the same way as possession of foodstuffs or any other commodity used in the course of everyday living in a rural area as distinct from living in the city.

I should like to raise a question which has bothered me somewhat, whilst admitting ignorance of the fine points of constitutional law. I have wondered about the constitutional authority of the Parliament of Canada to enact legislation, which was done in the Explosives Act as far back as 1954 and which we are seeking to continue, which overrides the constitutional right of a province to exercise legislative authority over matters of commerce and trade within that province. Under the Explosives Act and the bill before us, we are seeking to make this law apply to all federal government departments, with the exception of the Department of National Defence, and I wonder about that, and to every province. It would override the right of a province under the British North America Act to engage in and legislate in the area of trade and of licences. I raise this not so much to question the necessity of establishing controls on explosives such as gelignite, dynamite and the other types of explosive powders and substances, but rather in the context of the intent of this legislation to impose those same restrictions upon the sale, purchase and possession of everyday things like .22 shells and cartridges, .306 shells, 410 shotgun shells and all the ordinary ammunition that people buy every day of the week without any criminal intent whatsoever. I raise the constitutionality of this measure in that context.

Section 3 of the act now says that the Explosives Act shall apply to Her Majesty in right of Canada, and to each province, regardless of what that province may wish in terms of its own legislation. It is true that the British North America Act gives the Parliament of Canada the right to enact legislation relating to criminal law. It may be that, having passed the Explosives Act in the first place, and by declaring in section 3 thereof that the provisions of that act override the constitutional rights of the provinces in the areas of civil rights and commerce, criminal law is established. The act set up certain requirements and certain penalties if those requirements are not met.

I wondered as well about the provision that a peace officer may arrest without warrant any person he finds offending against the act or whom he has reason to believe is likely to offend against the act. It has always been my view that the right of a police officer to arrest without warrant can lead to abuses. Balanced with that, of course, is the obvious necessity where explosives are concerned, when someone is found to be in illegal possession of explosives and is thought to be about to commit a criminal act with them, for police officers to have some powers. I only say that such wide-open authority can lead to abuses of privileges and rights in some cases by police officers when operating under the Explosives Act.

Because of the serious view taken of illegal possession of explosives for illegal purposes, illegal manufacturing of them, illegal storing of them, it would seem to me that the penalty provisions in the bill might be more realistic. I understand that upon first conviction there is a fine of $500 or three months in jail or both, and upon second and subsequent convictions there is a fine of $1,000 and/or six months in jail. If the possession of explosives is such a serious matter, and I submit that it is because people have been murdered through their illegal use as apparently was the case in Toronto recently, is the penalty provided sufficient? If that is the case, if the government looks seriously upon the possession of explosives and wants to set up a great number of restrictions, as it is rightly doing as far as one class of explosive is concerned, surely it should provide more meaningful penalties, especially when lives are at stake. It is true that murder carries with it another penalty, but none the less there is the possibility of extensive damage and injury to persons and property. I wonder at the penalties being out of balance with the serious view that the government takes of explosives themselves.

In our society we have precious little freedom left. Every day that goes by, the Parliament of Canada, some provincial legislature, some regional district or municipal council or some school board or other body with authority to enact bylaws impinges on the rights and freedoms of the people of this land. The activities of this multiplicity of bodies confine and restrict our freedom. Our freedom to live our own lives untrammelled and unfettered by restrictions has been taken away. We can no longer do that today. Attitudes and concepts changed over the years.

I was born and grew up for the first few years of my life in a hard rock mining community, and it was common practice for people who worked underground to bring home two or three sticks of 20 per cent dynamite powder in their lunch buckets. They saved them up. They kept them in the basement or up on a shelf. When they went out in the bush, they used the powder to blow stumps or for prospecting. We used to get C.M.&S. Company to finance prospectors so that people could stake and work mineral claims. As kids, we had pretty free access to the powder magazine. Anyone could walk in and out. We often took some powder. We never took a whole container, because we thought that too dangerous. Nevertheless, we often took three, four or five blasting caps from the powder magazine. The magazine was unlocked. There was no lock on the door so far as I can remember, and the kids used to wander all over the place. We would walk to the rock dump, throw these blasting caps down and hear them exploding.

Mr. Francis: I hope the hon. member does not approve of this now?

Mr. Howard (Skeena): I have improved a little bit. I no longer use that type of explosive approach.

Mr. Francis: I said approve, not improve.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): I am trying to say that we showed a respectful attitude to explosives. I do not know anyone in Kimberley who was injured by blasting caps. When you grow up with explosives, you soon learn what you can and cannot do, that explosives are dangerous if improperly used, and that certain precautions must be observed. On the other hand, when you grow up in a community in which miners bring home bits of dynamite in lunch buckets, you learn to understand explosives. One learns to adopt a certain attitude to explosives, and this attitude is not learned in other places.

The attitude to explosives of those Canadians who live in metropolitan and urban areas is different from the attitude of those who live in rural areas. People living in rural areas, in farming communities, will tell you of farmers using explosives for all manner of purposes on the farm. They will tell you of farmers combining a certain type of fertilizer with diesel fuels and a detonator—I do not know what they use as a detonator; I think four of five sticks of dynamite would serve—and blasting holes in the ground for holding water. That is pretty common. You never hear of that in the city, but that is pretty common in rural areas. Also, people in the rural areas like to make their own cartridges. They make them in basements, sheds or garages. They weigh the powder carefully, pack it into cartridges and make their own shells. Under this bill, such people will be deemed to be operating a factory and will need to be licensed and controlled by the minister or whoever will make and enforce these particular regulations.

It seems to me that it is unwise to foist the concepts of city dwellers regarding explosives on country folk. Different considerations are involved as between rural and urban areas. I doubt whether those who drew the bill or any members of cabinet know anything about making homemade cartridges. The people who make their own cartridges make them for their own use. They go out hunting. They make them instead of buying cartridges by mail order from the Timothy Eaton Company, Simpsons-Sears or the hardware store in town. If the bill in its present form is passed, all that will change. All these freedoms of people in the rural areas will be impinged upon and taken away. They will be forced to obtain licenses if they want to own a gun for hunting. They need a hunting license, of course, and they will need a license with which to buy shells for the gun. Of course, the person selling the shells will also need a license. Therefore, these restrictions and confinements just do not make sense, especially to people in rural areas.

Whether these arguments will be acceptable to the minister and the department I do not know. I hope they are. I hope, when we consider the bill in committee, some of these ideas will be considered. If there are to be restrictions on explosives, let them be justifiable restrictions, yes. But for heaven sake do not expand them and make rules and regulations applying to the relatively innocent purchase of ordinary cartridges and rifles used for hunting or for self protection. I think it is unwise to restrict greatly by legislation people who simply want to live their lives as best they can and go about their innocent business without intending to hurt anybody.

Criminals, or people with criminal intent, Mr. Speaker, will find ways of circumventing the rules, no matter how strict they are. People with criminal intent will find a way to obtain explosives, just as they have in the past. They will obtain cartridges, just as they have in the past. They will obtain small arms, machine guns and all the other weaponry necessary for the carrying out of their criminal acts, just as they are now doing and as they have done in the past. Regardless of the severity of restrictions, they will still go about their way. Those of a dissenting point of view will still find ways, if they desire, of expressing their dissent or disagreement, either with explosives or any other substances, no matter how strict the rules are.

We must all be deeply concerned about the fractures in our society. There must be deep understanding and feeling, and a desire to correct matters, so that violence does not appeal to those who want to correct present circumstances that they cannot support. We ought to try to change our social ethics and establish some other form of value system in our society. We must establish different mechanisms or meaningful channels for enabling people to express their frustrations, so that someone in authority can listen to those frustrations and take corrective action. The more we oppress, the more the state seeks to legislate, control, confine, restrict and deny freedoms, the more people who are dissatisfied will find a way to rupture the existing order and break out. I am very much afraid this could easily be the case if this legislation becomes law in its present form. This is the feature the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) mentioned.

The drafting of regulations, the administration and enforcement of those regulations, which are in fact law, is done by people within the public service structure. Many of them really do not know what life is all about. Many of them do not know what it is like to live in a rural area. By starting with the ivory tower approach, and by applying the full powers of this law to the possession of a box of .22 shells, we will create more trouble for society than we can conceive at this time. I am not sure that that is the intention of the legislation or the minister. My remarks may have been critical. In a sense, they were designed to get across a point of view that I hope will be accepted by the minister. When we proceed further with the bill, these views should be reflected in the law so that it will be beneficial to the whole of society, not damaging.

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I would like to associate myself to a large extent with the remarks of the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard). I thought that many of his observations were accurate. One of the things that has occurred to me, and which I have observed over the years, has been the proliferation of quasi-criminal statutes which, in my opinion, could have been implemented in the Criminal Code. If this had been done, it would have resulted in a greater amount of freedom for the individual.

I agree that people in the industrial and mining environment, and in rural areas, live in a different way from those in urban areas, many of whom have had no occasion to use explosives for sporting, recreational or any other purpose. However, this is certainly not the case in large areas of Canada. Within my own experience, I have known many people who worked for the railroad. They have had in their possession railroad fusees, torpedoes and other devices which have gunpowder in them and which would probably fall under the definition of explosives. If there were an over-zealous inspector who was anxious to impress everyone with his own authority, there could be a very unsatisfactory situation.

Let us look at the definition of inspector which is found on page 2 under clause 1(3). An inspector could turn into a very officious individual if he wished to develop the full extent of his considerable powers set out in the definition. Under the present proposal, he could go into an individual's vehicle or factory. He could invade the privacy of an ordinary individual ostensibly in the process of trying to enforce this act. In my opinion, this is a real danger. I know from personal experience that when officials are given the power to act like policemen, they often abuse their discretion, just as many police officers adopt the philosophy that convictions mean promotions or advancement. I would like to see the government take a very close look at this office which is being created under the terms of Bill C-7.

In attempting to promote a very worthwhile object, that is controlling the indiscriminate use of explosives, the ultimate objective of which I presume is to curtail violence, the government may be over-reacting. As far as I know, there has not been a great number of prosecutions under the existing piece of legislation which is being amended. I cannot help but think that in many respects the government is over-reacting. If people wish to commit violent acts or protest by committing illegal acts, the possibilities are endless. Surely far more or at least as much harm could be done by the use of poisons as by explosives. We hope this will never occur, but just as gunpowder and explosive devices are very easy to obtain, the mind boggles at what revolutionaries could do with poison. Herbicides, pesticides and insecticides are poisons. Whole reservoirs could be poisoned. Very noxious poisons could be introduced into restaurants or commonly used beverages. This affords just as much opportunity to commit acts of anarchy as does the use of explosives. The only thing is this has not happened so far. We hope that it never does. To react to the point where ordinary use of explosives is hampered for those people who have good cause to use them in their every-day lives, as pointed out by the hon. member for Skeena, is certainly an over-reaction.

When one gets officials who are over-zealous, amazingly absurd things can happen. I can foresee, under the new definition of explosives in clause 1 of this bill, where some over-zealous inspector or other official can come down hard on the local Kingsmen Club's fireworks display. Children's Hallowe'en celebrations could technically be in violation of this type of statutory prohibition. This is absolutely absurd. I hope specific steps will be taken to change the definitions and some of the clauses as well. It is a strange situation when we make available remedies for expedient enforcement, and then find that those people who are enforcing them do not have either the training or common sense to discriminate between what is in fact an illegitimate or premeditated breach of the law or an inadvertant or harmless breach.

As I said a few moments ago, we find police officers who think that convictions mean promotions. This is officially denied by police inspectors and those in charge. However, I know better. I know there are very few warnings given in comparison to the number of prosecutions. That is a bad and needless practice. Someone will not have more respect for the law if he is the victim of what might be called a cheap charge. It disturbs me greatly to see an act which is made more severe on an indiscriminate basis and purports to give an inspector, as defined in clause 1(3) of this bill, the type of powers he has.

If the government does not see fit to specifically limit the powers of an inspector, I hope it will make very clear as a matter of policy that it frowns upon cheap charges. If miners, railway men or anyone else who has a legitimate excuse for having in his possession any type of material or device which technically falls under the definition of explosives, and officials proceed to take action, I hope that, as a matter of policy, the government will make very clear that this is something it does not sanction. If many of these instances occur, instead of being a cause for commendation or advancement, those persons who take advantage of their position to enforce and interpret these regulations strictly should be demoted. If that were the case the idea would get across pretty quickly that, although the people charged with enforcing the law have the means to deal expediently with genuine law breakers who menace society, if they in any way abused their powers they would either be censored or demoted, instead of, as is all too common, not being reprimanded at all for acting in this way.

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, owing to parliamentary duties I have not been able to be here to listen to the speeches given this afternoon on Bill C-7. However, I think it is fair to say that there is certainly a difference of opinion about its contents, an honest difference of opinion as expressed by members from different parties. I should like to take this opportunity to express my opinion on the bill.

I agree in principle with the provisions of the bill. According to the explanatory note, the general purpose of these amendments to the Explosives Act is to provide for greater control over explosives, especially in those areas relating to the purchase, possession and transportation thereof. It appears there is a difference in approach taken by members who represent urban ridings compared with those who represent rural ridings. The members in country ridings are fearful of the regulations that are to be imposed upon people in country areas who use cartridges and so on.

The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair) said that the bill appears to adopt a law and order approach, and probably it does. The problem with law and order approaches these days is that many people construe the term "law and order" as a Spiro Agnew approach whereby violence is met with violence. We have had dramatic demonstrations of this in the United States, such as the one at Kent University, and other places, where dissident groups demonstrated. Many people, more especially democratically minded people, become excited and grow fearsome of this law and order approach. I would hope that when we talk about a law and order approach we are talking of strengthening democratic institutions, of giving the people the right to dissent, but at the same time giving them the right peacefully to demonstrate in support of the ideas they hope to express. Because in the final analysis, democracy depends upon persuasion. I do not think it depends on persuasion by means of violence, otherwise we fall into the dictatorship trap. Democracy depends upon peaceful persuasion, and I would hope that we embrace that concept when we talk of law and order.

We have seen instances in Canada of disorder. A recent incident took place in Toronto during the visit of Premier Kosygin when a group of people attempted to demonstrate, not in a peaceful manner but in a violent manner. They demonstrated not only against his visit but against the things for which they thought he stood. These people are perfectly entitled to their views on what Premier Kosygin stands for, and I would be the last to deny them the right to demonstrate. But in so demonstrating, I think they must employ peaceful means. We had another example of this when Premier Kosygin visited Ottawa and was attacked by a person on Parliament Hill. This could have led to an international incident. These are the types of actions that I do not think fall within the democratic process of rightful dissent, and I think we should take steps to curtail such expressions.

In the 1970 crisis in Quebec, commonly referred to as the FLQ crisis, there was evidence that members of the FLQ had obtained explosives by means of criminal acts and other methods. This again created a fear among many people in the country that the members of the FLQ were not acting in accordance with law and order. It was felt that they would have done far better if they had used the democratic process and attempted to persuade others of the validity of their cause.

Many members who come from country ridings have had wide experience with the use of explosives, more especially guns and ammunition, but I would hope that they would see the necessity for controlling guns and ammunition. At the moment, you need a licence to obtain certain guns, and perhaps when this bill is passed and the regulations published certain steps will have to be taken before a person can obtain ammunition. I would hope that within the areas of their responsibility they would accept these restrictions in order to control violence of the kind we have in Canada today.

As a person of Irish parentage I take no comfort from what is happening in Ireland today. When I hear of the bombings and explosions which take place there, it makes me speak out for some control of explosive materials. I therefore find I must express myself in favour of the principle of this bill. The hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) said he felt the day may come when there will be a change in the social values held by people and we are able to control explosives in a far better way than that prescribed in Bill C-7. I hope the day does come when we take that approach.

I am reminded of the approach taken by English policemen—or, as they call them in England, "bobbies"—to the use of guns and the carrying of guns. The hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) said that some officers in Canada measure their hopes for success and promotion on the number of convictions they obtain, that sometimes they lay charges that are cheap in nature to obtain convictions. I wonder whether, if we took the English approach to the carrying of guns by police officers, the police officers here would adopt a totally different attitude, which would lead people in the community to do the same.

I think we are impressed by the violence exhibited in the country to the south of us. It may be the climate of the times which had brought about the use of so many guns and other weaponry in the United States. I hope that we in Canada will take a sensible approach to this gun problem and that in future our policemen, members of the RCMP and other forces, will not carry guns. In this way something might be done to lessen the violence which exists in our own country today. This would be in keeping with the thinking of my hon. friend from Skeena who is usually very progressive in his views. He has taken what is known as a hard line in connection with ammunition because of his experiences as a young man in a small country town. He thought if he could control the use of explosives, then surely other like-minded men and women could do the same.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): You obviously were not listening.

Mr. Gilbert: I should like to think so myself, but I do not believe the facts permit us to reach that conclusion. I would think that a large number of the violent acts which are permitted today are directly attributable to the ease with which guns and ammunition may be obtained, so I would hope steps could be taken to deal with this. My hon. friend from Skeena said criminals would find a way to obtain guns and ammunition in any case. They probably would. But I respectfully submit that we as citizens have a duty to make it difficult for them to find a way. This is why there have to be regulations concerning guns and ammunition. A social responsibility rests on members from rural ridings. If people who live there want guns and ammunition, they could follow certain procedures which are for the benefit of the community as a whole.

The definitions clause is extremely wide. I note that it embraces rockets, firecrackers and so forth. It is coincidental that the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) should have received a letter recently concerning firecrackers. Our first test will be on May 24, and no doubt a day or two afterwards we shall read in the newspapers that young people have lost their lives, their sight or their limbs as a result of firecracker explosions and burns. Complaints and representations will be made by parents and others in all parts of the country, followed, no doubt, by undertakings that the authorities will take certain action, but no total prohibition is likely to result. The bill before us will impose some measure of control over firecrackers. The hon. member for Central Nova suggested that a group of Kiwanis might be prohibited from holding a display of firecrackers. I hope such a day will never come. We have learned from experience that firecrackers, to be safe, must be placed in the hands of responsible people. I should like to read a letter which has been received by my hon. friend from Oshawa-Whitby on this subject.

Dear Mr. Broadbent:

The members of the Duke of Edinburgh Home and School Association of Oshawa asked me to write you to ask that you support us in the following proposal: That firecrackers be banned in Canada.

We understand that the Explosives Act is now in the House of Commons for amendment. Perhaps this request is too late for this year, but we would like action started now so that by next year this problem will not exist.

We are not asking that all fireworks be banned, just the ten cents package kind that have no display value. These kind are easily attained by children and are the cause of 95 per cent of all firecracker burns.

Three provinces have banned them already. Could Ontario be next? Eventually Canada!

All fireworks are imported so it wouldn't be a hardship for any Canadian maker.

Mrs. Margaret McBurney, a Toronto mother, whose son was injured by firecrackers last year, has started this movement. She is now being supported by several other associations. The Home and School Association in this area would like to add their wholehearted support. We are in the process now of getting support from Ontario County Council of Home and School and eventually support from the province of Ontario.

We feel certain that this is a worthy cause. There are statistics available through the Ontario Safety League. We would be glad to send you further information if desired.

May we ask that you voice an opinion on our behalf when the Explosives Act is read again?

Sincerely,

Mrs. Mary Turpin, Vice-President,

Duke of Edinburgh Home and School Association

I believe the contents of this letter should be studied carefully and that action should, perhaps, be taken along the lines suggested. It would be difficult, I suppose, simply to ban firecrackers of the "ten cent package kind". We should probably need to legislate with respect to firecrackers in general and, perhaps, to adopt regulations controlling the manufacture of certain types, more especially, defining who may buy them, who may sell them and who may use them.

These are some of the approaches I should like to see taken in connection with the bill before us. I have a certain confidence that the minister who has introduced the measure will show qualities of maturity and wisdom, that he will retain the principle of the bill while accommodating some of the suggestions which have been put forward by hon. members who have spoken against the legislation.

Explosives Act

Mr. Mac T. McCutcheon (Lambton-Kent): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the bill seems to be fairly stated in the explanatory note, namely, to ensure stricter control over the use of explosives. Presumably the need for greater control is justified on the grounds that private citizens have made increased use of explosives in order to carry out anti-social acts at the political or at the criminal level. With this concept I agree wholeheartedly. I support the principle thus outlined.

I have some few reservations, and I hope to put them on record in the time remaining to me. It can be said that Bill C-7 is designed to achieve its purpose by tightening up and extending the control presently exercised by the federal government over explosives within the area already occupied by the central administration. In addition, it appears that controls are extended into an area which, in my opinion, has been considered one which was subject to provincial legislation. A further aspect to be considered is the possibility of interference with personal liberty. Such interference can be considered upon two levels, interference at the regulatory stage and interference at the prosecution stage.

In this connection, as I read the act it would appear to be capable of some abuse. In respect of our regulatory control of explosives, the most important is the new power given to the governor in council to make regulations respecting the purchase and possession of explosives. With the present power over sale, these additions would give the governor in council complete power and control over explosives in the hands of the seller, the buyer and the possessor. In the old act, and extended in this legislation, there are provisions covering manufacturing, testing, storage and importation. This proposed regulatory power is matched by a proposed new offence. Clause 3 Section 5 is to be amended as follows:

Except as authorized under this Act and subject to such exemptions as may be provided by regulation, no person shall

(d) have in his possession any explosive;

Mr. Speaker: I have to interrupt the hon. member. I try to give as much leeway as possible in considering this bill, but I must remind hon. members that when they make statements in connection with the bill the rules do not permit a detailed consideration of the individual clauses of the bill. I hope the hon. member, as much as possible, will limit his contribution to the general intent, purport and principle of the bill.

Mr. McCutcheon: I thank you, Mr. Speaker, and apologize for mentioning a section of the bill. I did it merely to point out the provision that no person shall have in his possession any explosive. This in my opinion is a typical example of bureaucratic over-kill. Very few criminal offences have been caused in this country by registered firearms or properly and legally purchased explosives. So I say we should not crucify the respectable sportsman, the buff who collects guns and the people who engage in skeet and trap shooting. Many of these people load their own shells. They do so because they are able to make a more precise load at probably a third of the normal cost. I suggest that a close surveillance of explosives in the hands of construction people, and in the hands of people engaged in mining and quarrying as well, is quite in order. I would support that. But to compare a box of .22 calibre shells with a case of dynamite or a jug of nitro-glycerine is, to say the least, ludicrous. Under this bill they are all in the same bag.

I would suggest further that if those who drafted this legislation believe that it will be an immediate panacea for the improvement of law and order in this country, I think they are engaging in wishful thinking. In my opinion nothing could be much further from the truth. In this bill I believe we are making it more difficult for our law-abiding citizens. Crooks do not obey the laws. Crooks do not use registered guns nor do they follow proper channels in order to obtain explosives. I am particularly concerned because I do not know what the regulations made under this bill will be. On my farm we have stored about 5 tons of ammonium nitrate. In another place diesel fuel is stored. According to the best information I can obtain, those are the ingredients of a very potent explosive. This legislation would appear to be an example of bureaucratic red tape. Will my men be prohibited from driving home with a truck loaded with ammonium nitrate?

In my opinion the lumping of a box of .22 calibre shells, a case of dynamite and a jug of nitro-glycerine under the same heading is completely ludicrous. I will, however, support the most stringent regulations to provide for an exact accounting of explosives and registration of fire-arms. One of my prize possessions is a muzzle-loading shotgun that my great-great grandfather brought out to this country from Ireland. I have spent considerable money on it. It is sound and safe. It has been tested. Occasionally I like to load and fire it. I would hesitate to go through all the red tape that is inherent in this bill so that I could fire my great-great grandfather's muzzle-loading shotgun. Under this bill this would be illegal unless the regulations provide some relief.

Mr. Speaker, I notice it is six o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: It being six o'clock this House stands adjourned until two o'clock tomorrow.

At six o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

PRIVILEGE

MR. MATTE—ALLEGED INACCURATE ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS ON LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, my colleagues and I have repeatedly, over the past few weeks, sought clarification of the confusion related to the Local Initiatives Program.

The replies to my oral questions seem to be absolutely contradictory to facts and they mislead the House.

When questioned by the hon. member for Portneuf (Mr. Godin) on February 28 last, the parliamentary secretary stated that on February 25 there were still $4,000,000 to distribute. The Minister of Labour, on March 2, gave a vague reply to a question on the same subject posed by my colleague from Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert).

As for the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), he replied that he would take under advisement the questions put by the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Latulippe) and myself as to the possibility of increasing or transferring funds. Nothing further was done about that.

Nor have I been able, in spite of several questions, to determine when funds available for Quebec were used up.

Mr. Speaker, such a procedure is a direct infringement on our rights and privileges as representatives of the people.

It is inacceptable that we should be unable to give accurate information to some 700 Quebec municipalities which have been misinformed and frustrated, and all the more since the statements of the Quebec minister in charge contradict allegations of officials of the Department of Manpower and Immigration.

We therefore demand an official statement from the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) or the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Mackasey) in this connection.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member gave notice of the matter he has just brought to the attention of the House.

The hon. member knows that, under Standing Order 17, he must advise the Chair not only of his intention to raise a question of privilege but also of the subject of the question.

To some extent, his notice may not have been in order. In any event, the matter he just brought up is more in the nature of a grievance than a question of privilege. His presentation was not followed by a motion.

Under those circumstances, I doubt that it would be in order to deal with the matter further as a question of privilege.

HARBOURS

PRINCE RUPERT—INCLUSION AS NATIONAL HARBOURS BOARD PORT—STATEMENT BY MINISTER

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I wish to announce to the House that the port of Prince Rupert will become the tenth National Harbours Board port.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jamieson: Two recommendations to the Governor in Council that will have an important bearing on the future of Prince Rupert have been accepted. One recommendation extends the limits of Prince Rupert harbour and transfers the administration, management and control of the harbour to the National Harbours Board. The other confirms the acceptance by Canada of the transfer by the province of British Columbia of the administration, control and benefit of certain Crown lands at Prince Rupert for the purpose of operating a national harbour.

• (1410)

I am looking forward to inviting representatives of the community to serve as members of the Port of Prince Rupert Authority, which will be created at the earliest possible opportunity.

I will also ask the National Harbours Board to invite proposals that will lead to the establishment of a major modern grain transshipment facility at Prince Rupert. This is in anticipation of a larger proportion of grain shipments to China and Russia and the Pacific rim countries being directed over the northern route, thus relieving congestion in the Fraser River canyon and elsewhere.

The National Harbours Board will also undertake studies related to its own possible involvement in such facilities. I want to emphasize that the federal government is seeking to further the development of the port of Prince Rupert in conjunction with the development of other ports, such as the port of Vancouver. The objective is to provide both greater capacity and greater flexibility, and to improve access to the Pacific.

Prince Rupert Harbour

The National Harbours Board will continue to support and pursue other initiatives that anticipate the development of bulk handling and general cargo facilities in the port of Prince Rupert. Provision has been made in the board's 1972-73 estimates for a $5 million expenditure at this port.

I think the House will also be interested in knowing that the National Harbours Board has opened a business office in Winnipeg to serve western Canadian requirements. The growth in grain, bulk commodity and general cargo movements is such that full co-ordination of transportation and transshipment facilities is essential. It is anticipated that the new office will contribute to the establishing of more efficient traffic flows through the ports of Vancouver, Prince Rupert, Churchill and Thunder Bay.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, we on this side of the House welcome this announcement, but we wonder why it has taken so long—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Horner: —to recognize Prince Rupert. We are fully aware that the Prime Minister made a trip to the Pacific rim countries some years ago and more or less suggested that trade should pick up with that area. Prince Rupert is far closer to Japan and China than is Vancouver and therefore it is the natural port from which to ship to those countries.

We will reserve our final judgment on the government and the expenditure until we see how the government goes about it. A few years ago funds were allotted to the department for the development of the port of Vancouver under the National Harbours Board, but the board did not use all of the allotted moneys for that port. Whether the $5 million for Prince Rupert will be spent in the right manner is hard to determine at this time. There are only two wharves at Prince Rupert, only one of which handles grain. Also, there is the so-called surge problem at the port. We hope that some money will be allocated to correct this problem, and we certainly hope that the grain handling facilities will be enlarged.

The minister suggests that bulk handling and general cargo facilities should be improved. We certainly agree they should be because ships must be able to come into Prince Rupert with a cargo and also leave the port with a cargo. Part of the difficulty has been in getting ships with cargoes to come to Prince Rupert. Access by rail to Edmonton and the northern parts of the prairie region is far shorter from Prince Rupert and therefore we have always looked upon Prince Rupert as a valuable port which should be developed.

We welcome this initial step by the government and we will watch the expenditures carefully to make certain that this port proves to be the tremendous asset it could be, particularly to the grain economy in the northern parts of the Prairies as well as the whole prairie region.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I will refrain from mentioning the difficulties which we had in trying to get the grain storage facilities at Prince Rupert doubled between 1958 and 1962.

[Mr. Jamieson.]

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Howard (Skeena): We have been awaiting this announcement not just for months, as might appear to be the case, but ever since 1919 when the late Mackenzie King visited Prince Rupert and made these commitments. Seriously, Mr. Speaker, this matter has been in the minds of everybody in Prince Rupert and the surrounding area for a long period of time, and certainly this is a welcome announcement on the part of the minister. We look forward to the establishment of the port authority itself, the involvement of the National Harbours Board, and the development of the port for obvious reasons that are clear to everyone, namely, shipments in and out of the port of Prince Rupert, particularly of grain, thus helping to relieve the pressure on other ports and other parts of the country.

Up until now Mr. Bill Raithie, a member for the National Harbours Board, has acted as liaison between the federal government and the provincial government with respect to the transfer of land. I would hope, with all respect to Mr. Raithie, that he would have a minimum of involvement in whatever happens in the city of Prince Rupert from the National Harbours Board point of view. He is chairman of the Vancouver Port Authority, and I believe that his interests are mainly directed there and that he should not have too much involvement with Prince Rupert for that reason.

In the establishment of the Port of Prince Rupert authority I hope the minister would go beyond the boundaries of the city and include persons from the organized community of Port Edward.

I do not know what the minister means by a major, modern grain transshipment facility at Prince Rupert. At the present time there is a storage capacity there of 2¼ million bushels, or a little less. I would suggest that he, the National Harbours Board, or whoever is going to do this work, should be thinking at least in terms of a storage capacity of 10 million bushels and the installation of a tipple system so that boxcars can move in loaded with clearn grain and be unloaded rapidly with a minimum of difficulty, thus making maximum use of the port.

This will also mean, I hope, increased use of the Canadian National facilities running in and out of the port of Prince Rupert. If that is the case—in fact, even without increased use of Canadian National facilities—I think that Canadian National, in conjunction with the province of British Columbia if they can work out an agreement or by itself if they cannot, should move into the installation of snowsheds along the lower reaches of the Skeena River. At this time of year and earlier in the winter there are periods of a week, ten days and sometimes up to two weeks when there is no rail movement in and out of that area because of snow slides. Snowsheds would help to alleviate that problem.

I would not like to see this port when it is developed, used simply as an exit port for raw materials or nearly raw materials. The more we continue to export raw materials out of the nation the more we export jobs with them and the more we provide jobs to people in manufacturing industries in other countries. I would rather see us expand our own manufacturing industries, process raw materials into useable goods, and export useable goods rather then export our natural wealth in the form of raw materials.

I am sure the people of Prince Rupert would endorse the concepts I am now expressing and would want me to express their appreciation to the minister for his announcement. We look forward to further action in the future.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

ANNOUNCEMENT OF RETENTION OF CANADIAN FORCES BASE AT SUMMERSIDE IN PRESENT ROLE

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it seems to be my day for making announcements. Hon. members will recall that in 1969 it was announced by the government that the Canadian Forces Base at Summerside, Prince Edward Island, was having its life extended as a military base to the end of 1973 in order to provide time during which it might be determined whether alternative uses could be found for the base. This effort has been going on for quite some time, and I think it is generally known that it has not been possible to obtain enough in the way of alternative uses to take the place of the base. So, as one who worked on that committee, and on behalf of my colleague, the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Benson), I wish to inform the House that Canadian Forces Base Summerside, Prince Edward Island, will continue in its present operational role.

It will be recalled that Canadian Forces Base Summerside was one of several defence bases that were recommended for closure under an armed forces base consolidation plan that was worked out some years ago. In December, 1969, an extension of its operation was granted until April of this year to permit a study of the economic impact that closure would have on the local community and the province. A thorough investigation of the alternatives has clearly demonstrated that the base should be confirmed in its present role.

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, the announcement made by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) on behalf of his colleague the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Benson) is most welcome. I especially appreciate it as the base to which he refers is in my constituency. I am delighted that this decision has been made not only because of the high operational quality that has been maintained there from a defence point of view, the high morale that has existed and the higher than average level of competency that has been demonstrated by the personnel but because, and in some ways more important, this base is a very important economic factor in the life of Prince Edward Island and in the future of the town of Summerside. On all these scores the announcement is indeed very welcome not only for its own value but also because it removes the doubt which clouded the economic future of that area since the suggestion was first made that the base might not continue.

Opportunities for Youth Program

In closing and on a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted to say that I am delighted that the Premier of Prince Edward Island is in Your Honour's gallery at the moment to hear this important announcement directly.

YOUTH

STATEMENT BY SECRETARY OF STATE ON 1972 OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I would like to give a progress report to the House on the response of young people to this year's Opportunities for Youth program.

On January 13, I announced that the budget for the 1972 program was $33,978,000 and that this money would fund jobs and activities for about 29,000 young men and women. Another 1,860 non-paying activities will also be created by the program. At the same time, I advised that the deadline for project applications was midnight, March 8. In other words, Mr. Speaker, applicants had almost two months to prepare their submissions. They were advised and helped in filling their application forms by 75 program field officers who were deployed across the country meeting young people at high schools, on college and university campuses, and conferring with municipal authorities and representatives of various public organizations.

Program officers and officials of the department assured that there was an adequate supply of application forms. Some 200,000 English and 100,000 French forms were available from various government outlets and from program workers. The program was extensively promoted in the print and broadcasting media.

As we anticipated, the younger generation's interest in the program has remained at a high level. Once again, they have shown their resourcefulness by the quality and variety of their proposals.

Canadian youth in all parts of the country submitted some 19,102 projects to the Opportunities for Youth Program head-quarters here in Ottawa. These applications are now being coded and processed. The spread of projects by region is as follows: Atlantic provinces, 3,189 or 17 per cent; Quebec, 6,688 or 35 per cent; Ontario, 4,046 or 21 per cent; Prairie provinces, 2,912 or 15 per cent; British Columbia, 2,104 or 11 per cent, and national, 173 or roughly one per cent. Project proposals average $11,949 each and would include an average of 10 participants. This is close to what program planners consider the ideal project size which should cost between $10,000 and $15,000 and employ between eight and 12 people.

In my January 13 press conference I said that we hoped to be able to put more stress on assisting students from disadvantaged environments. I think that with the very strong response we have received from the Atlantic provinces, Quebec and the rural sections of the Prairie provinces—60 per cent of the prairie applications came from rural areas—with this kind of response, I repeat, it should be easier to meet the objective of putting funds where they are needed most.

A special effort was also made this year to enhance the participation of women in projects. To date, 40 per cent of jobs proposed have been for women. Present analysis also indicates that 30 per cent of would-be participants are secondary or high school students, 63 per cent are post-secondary and seven per cent are non-students.

[English]

The largest groups of proposed projects involve recreational activities, 25 per cent, and social services, 20 per cent. Other estimates of projects are cultural, 16 per cent; environmental, 14 per cent; research, 11 per cent; information, 11 per cent, and miscellaneous, 2 per cent.

We are of course pleased by the strong response that the program has received in its second year. This response shows that the government was right when it decided to increase the program's budget by about $10 million this year. These additional resources should allow us to fund about 3,000 projects and participants should, on the whole, earn somewhat more than they received on the average last year. In other words, we foresee an average allocation of about $1,100 this year per participant compared with $900 last year. Unfortunately, many worthwhile projects will be rejected. But it was never intended that this program should be a total answer to summer employment for students. As in the past, a very large proportion of employment will be supplied by the private sector of the economy. And of course Opportunities for Youth is not the only federal program designed to promote useful summer activities and employment. In addition to our own department's efforts to support about 100 hostels across the country and other programs to promote travel and exchanges of young people, special efforts are being made by the Public Service Commission, the Department of National Defence, the Department of National Health and Welfare and the Department of Manpower to encourage student activities and employment under the general heading of Summer '72 programs. The over-all expenditure for the Summer '72 effort will be in the order of $85 million.

I would like now to say a word about the schedule for processing the applications received by the Opportunities for Youth program administration. All provincial governments have been consulted on their regional priorities and their views will be taken into account during the selection process. Officers of the department for which I am responsible and a staff of over 230 at the program's headquarters will participate in the selection. Processing will be computerized and selection will be based on such factors as conformity to the program's criteria, the numbers of jobs per project, the employment needs of participants and the ratio between male and female participants, geographical distribution, recommendations from people in the community, specialist consultants, provincial priorities and the budgets allocated by region and sub-region.

It is expected that public announcements of accepted projects will be made from April 17 to 27. Each group of participants will be advised by letter of the approval of their projects. Throughout the summer, 100 field officers will be posted in the various regions to provide support for the project workers, maintain contact with other community groups and offer resource assistance to projects.

I would ask applicants to bear with us while each submission is studied. We are aware that young people are anxious to know the results. First decisions should be announced by April 17. Groups are requested not to expect answers before that date.

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, we are grateful for the minister's statement, particularly with regard to the progress report on this year's Opportunities for Youth program. There is no doubt that the Opportunities for Youth program both last year and this year is enjoying tremendous popularity with the young people of this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): The obvious rate of submissions, close to 20,000, is indication enough of the popularity of the program. It also indicates, and this was not mentioned in the minister's statement, the tremendous need of young people for employment this year.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I find it passing strange that the minister would even dare comment on the employment possibilities of Opportunities for Youth without at once acknowledging the tremendous need and growing gap in terms of jobs for students and other young people during this present year. The minister talked about the possibility of employment this summer for approximately 30,000 young people under Opportunities for Youth; yet we know the summer labour force is going to increase by some 100,000 this year to a total of approximately 1,300,000. I see no acknowledgement in the minister's statement in this regard.

While I think all hon. members and many Canadians will rejoice in the opportunities that young people will have to develop their talents and skills creatively under Opportunities for Youth, we must not let this divert us from a basic concern about the need for employment by young people during this present year. We know only too well that during the past two years the rate of unemployment for those in the 14 to 24 age group has been running at more than twice the national level. This is simply not an acceptable figure for a modern country like Canada. Just the other day, a York University sociologist said:

> Inadequate federal economic policy theories have given Canada the highest rate of youth unemployment in the industrialized western world—

That sociologist is not a particular friend of members on this side of the House. He was the chairman of the government's own committee on youth, Mr. David Hunter. It is well past time that this government acknowledged, if its total answer to the swelling ranks of unemployed youth is one program or a series of travelling opportunities, that this is not sufficient to meet the needs of this country. We ask, what answers and what action is the government prepared to put forward?

In his statement the minister was limited to saying: "Unfortunately many worth-while projects will be rejected. But it was never intended that this program should be a total answer to summer employment for students." That understatement is the masterpiece of the minister's career because it acknowledges the almost total failure of this government to realize what its basic responsibilities are with regard to youth and their importance to this country.

It is near the end of March and we are talking about a progress report on this year's Opportunities for Youth program. We were told last fall we would have a thoroughgoing evaluation of last summer's activities which would give us some clear idea as to the strategy and goals for this year's program. Where is that report? We got a gloss of it in December. We were again told in December that we would have the report shortly. We have been left to read in the usual fashion what the government is up to, through leaked reports in the daily press which tell us that the goals of meeting the youth unemployment crisis are being failed by this government.

There is a complete lack of recognition and co-ordination. Only yesterday afternoon I sought the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion in these terms:

> That the Secretary of State immediately consult with business and industry in order to develop a concerted approach to the imminent crisis in youth unemployment.

Unfortunately, some hon. members saw fit not to consent.

We have heard that somewhere in the minister's vast department some industrial referral centre is trying to deal with the five out of six projects that will not be accepted under the Opportunities for Youth; yet we have heard no specific mention or acknowledgement of this program. Basically, we are getting non-answers from an overworked minister with regard to the youth unemployment crisis. It seems to me at least that this minister is just not capable any longer of handling this tremendously important problem. It is time the government acknowledged that it has a basic responsibility to co-ordinate not only its own activities, but to suggest and allow for co-ordination of activities in other levels of government and in the private sector.

In the statement today we were not even told about the subjective parts of the selection process. Will there be any kind of negotiation as there was last year with regard to project submissions? What will be the criteria in subjective selection of projects? Will the final answer be that five out of six project groups will receive a form letter, as was the case last year, with reasons that are not clear as to why their project is not acceptable? That kind of answer is unacceptable to the members of this House and the people of this country.

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, all of us on this side of the House are getting tired of the government periodically and triumphantly trotting out temporary measures to deal with our now chronic problem of massive unemployment in this country. Opportunities for Youth, while it contains the germ of a good idea, that of providing young people with opportunities to conceive, plan and execute projects which they believe are interesting, challenging and socially worth while, is in the end simply another patch like the Local Initiatives Program on a system based on a dying, decaying economic philosophy.

These programs do not go even a small part of the way toward meeting the real needs of this country and its people, young or old. This country needs a government dedicated to the creation of full employment. Only full employment will provide real opportunities for youth, real opportunities for young adults, real opportunities for the middle-aged, real opportunities for the elderly, and avoid programs which are essentially government subsidies to an already, for the most part, privileged group. Opportunities for Youth is essentially a middle-class program for middle-class youth, an attempt to buy off an extremely able, highly articulate segment of our society who know, when discontented, how to apply pressure so it hurts.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rowland: It is this group that the government is attempting to buy off with Opportunities for Youth; it is attempting to buy them off and divert their attention from correcting the real social ills to which they would otherwise be devoting their attention.

I am fed up to the back teeth with middle-class programs for middle-class kids when there are no corresponding programs for the other 85 per cent of the population. Leaving aside other age groups, what does this program do for the 75 per cent of the young people who are not in universities or community colleges?

Where did the minister say his 75 field workers spent their time? Was it among the 70 per cent of the young people who might have some difficulty in setting down their ideas for worth-while projects in a manner which would impress someone sitting behind a desk in Ottawa evaluating those submissions? No. The minister told us with evident pride that the field workers spent their time "meeting young people at high schools, on college and university campuses and conferring with municipal officials and representatives of various public organizations".

I ask hon. members, are these the people who need assistance in making preparations? They are already where they are because they have demonstrated some facility in communication. When is this government going to do something really meaningful to assist the disadvantaged in this country? I have given up hope.

The ultimate perversion is that some former employees of the Opportunities for Youth program of last year set themselves up in business writing submissions for people who wish to apply this year. As one former employee of Opportunities for Youth said:

> We are producing a generation of professional grants-men, kids from universities with long training in how to deal with this era of public grant giving.

I have nothing at all against doing something for college and university students—far from it—but not to the exclusion of everyone else and not with a program which does not even meet the needs of that group of society. Last year I was willing to put up with mistakes in the conception and execution of Opportunities for Youth because it was a new program, all too rapidly thrown together. This year I am not, not after a year's experience and certainly not after the promised evaluations of last year's program turned out to be cooked information and the independent evaluation has either been stolen or lost. If I sound churlish, Mr. Speaker, it is because I am disappointed, and I make no bones about it.

[Translation]

Mr. Romuald Rodrigue (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Secertary of State (Mr. Pelletier) for being kind enough to forward a copy of his statement to us.

As he indicated, the record number of 19,000 projects submitted by student groups is proof enough that young Canadians are interested in participating in Canadian community life.

On many occasions in this House, I emphasized this wish for participation on the part of our young people, who are receptive and ready to contribute their full share to the Canadian community.

The Opportunities for Youth program will certainly be helpful to a great number of them. The only hitch is that it will be impossible to accept all the projects submitted.

I hope that the group in charge of assessing and examining the projects will be objective in the selection, so that last year's errors are not repeated.

During the past few weeks, I have had a look at some of the projects submitted from my constituency. I am quite impressed with their originality and seriousness of design. This is why I should be disappointed if some serious projects were rejected. The project screening group has an important task to perform and I hope that it will approach it very earnestly.

I thank the minister for submitting this first report to the House and I invite him once more to keep us informed in this respect.

MANPOWER

QUEBEC MUNICIPAL PROJECTS UNDER LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM— REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take this opportunity to raise an urgent matter of national interest, under Standing Order 43.

When raising a question of privilege a moment ago, my colleague for Champlain (Mr. Matte) has pointed out an important problem about which Canadians have been misled, especially Quebeckers, with regard to 700 municipalities. As for the Local Initiatives Program, the problems should be solved.

I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte):

That the minister responsible for the administration of the Local Initiatives Program make a statement on motions to explain to the House the conflicting statements made by federal and provincial representatives about allegedly approved projects and the sum of $5 million which is supposed to be earmarked for that program, in order to elucidate the matter thoroughly.

[Mr. Rowland.]

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion moved by the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) under Standing Order 43 which requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is no unanimous consent, therefore the motion cannot be put.

On the order: Introduction of bills.

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of bills.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Stand.

Mr. Speaker: I have to refer at this point to the ten bills which were mentioned yesterday and the day before. The Chair indicated then that there was agreement that these bills be stood until tomorrow for consideration from a procedural standpoint.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

AMENDMENT TO REMOVE DEFINITION OF "POLITICAL PARTY" FOR PURPOSES OF REPRESENTATION IN HOUSE OF COMMONS

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-174, to amend the Canada Elections Act.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, this bill is designed to facilitate competition in the light of the existing monopolistic position enjoyed by the old parties. It should encourage freedom of choice and fresh ideas in the democratic process.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

TRADE

AUTO PARTS—REPORTED U.S. DIRECTIVE TO ENFORCE REGULATIONS ON SHIPMENTS WITH SEVERITY

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. It concerns his ever-popular Texas friend, "Two-gun" Connolly. Yesterday I addressed this question to the Prime Minister but he did not know the answer. Perhaps the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce will today. Has the government looked into the suggestion that the United States Secretary of the Treasury has issued a directive to customs officials telling them to enforce regulations with considerable severity in connection with auto parts shipments? If so, can the minister inform the House whether this has happened?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I said yesterday in the committee on my estimates, and I repeat it today, even more emphatically because the department has had occasion to check further, that there is no appearance of United States customs officers concentrating their attention, or an unwillingness to be friendly, on the Canadian auto parts exporters. The tightening up of customs implementation in the United States is not recent; it goes back at least two years. It is not concentrated on Canada. It is widely applied to all countries of the world. It is not concentrated on the automobile sector and, within that sector, it is not concentrated upon automobile parts. In other words, it is general. It applies to all countries and sectors and not to Canadian auto parts makers in particular.

Mr. Nesbitt: Has the minister made any specific representations to the United States government concerning this matter? Also, since I have an uneasy feeling that the minister has not exactly answered my original question, may I ask him to tell us what steps he has taken to ascertain that there has been no singling out of the auto parts industry in this regard?

Mr. Pepin: I thought I was emphatic enough. We gathered all the information we could get from all sources. We consulted with a number of people and the result of our inquiry is the one I have indicated. It is very difficult to ask somebody to go to confession unless it can be demonstrated that he has sinned.

MANPOWER

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—POSSIBLE INCREASE IN FUNDS—FURTHER PROGRAM AFTER MAY 31

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Acting Minister of Manpower and Immigration with regard to LIP. The question arises out of reports suggesting that the provision of half a billion dollars more is contemplated for this manpower program. I want to ask the minister whether the government is considering increasing expenditures under this manpower program by half a billion dollars and also whether the House will be given an evaluation of LIP in the next day or two explaining what has been happening with regard to it?

Hon. Martin P. O'Connell (Acting Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, consideration is always being given to the manpower programs but not in the terms that have been expressed to us by the hon. member.

With respect to the second part of the question, we do hope to publish quite soon, hopefully before the end of this month, a list of all projects, numbers employed and the funding of each project. This could form the basis for the beginning of an evaluation by hon. members themselves.

Mr. Lewis: In view of the announcement made earlier with regard to another program, may I ask the acting minister whether thought is being given to announcing a program beyond May 31 to deal with the unemployment of those people who are not now or do not admit to being young? Is any plan being worked out to continue a worthwhile program beyond May 31 in view of the fact that unemployment will not be reduced to adequate levels—no one suggests it will—within the next two or three months?

Mr. O'Connell: Mr. Speaker, I cannot answer in language precise enough to satisfy the hon. member opposite, but I can say that the employment picture following May 31 is very much the government's preoccupation. Certainly we know of plans for student employment and we do expect that in the period beginning last month and extending into June well over 700,000 new jobs will be created by the economy's own expansion. We are watching very carefully the phasing out of the special employment programs in relation to the total economic picture. We have the matter very much under consideration, though perhaps not in the precise manner referred to by the hon. gentleman. He will have to wait till later for a better answer.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, the point of my question—and I say this only to make my supplementary clear—was whether an announcement would be made in time. May I therefore ask the minister whether I am to understand that this consideration is a continuous exercise and that we may expect an announcement of a plan long before May 31 so that the necessary preparations, arrangements and consultations can take place?

Mr. O'Connell: Mr. Speaker, I do want to assure the hon. member that if there is such a plan I am sure we will make every effort to announce it sufficiently in advance of its implementation to enable everyone to get into position.

PENITENTIARIES

SUGGESTED PLACING OF INMATES IN HOMES OF OLDER PEOPLE FOR PURPOSE OF REHABILITATION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General who, in the city of Edmonton within the past two days, made an announcement concerning a plan of his department, under the head of rehabilitation of prisoners in penitentiaries, to place them in the homes of older people across Canada. In consequence of that announcement, which should have been made in the House rather than outside, consternation has come into the hearts of many of our old people.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: My hon. friends may laugh, but I have learned not only from the radio but from personal conversations with people in my office that people are asking whether or not this policy is a form of restoration of impressment. What is the nature of this plan which to many seems like a crackpot one? Would the minister please explain?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, this was only a project I mentioned, and which has not been finalized yet. This project is on a completely voluntary basis on either side, which means we want to meet two basic needs: first, the fact that retired people are often idle, although they are prepared to serve their community; second the fact that they often need extra income.

On the other hand, prisoners who are not a serious threat to society could stay in the homes of those retired people and find there, maybe for the first time in their lives, a warm, friendly, and productive atmosphere. It is, therefore, on a purely voluntary basis on either side that this program could be implemented, and I only made those remarks in Edmonton in order to suggest this idea.

Now, if the right hon. member does not like my making an announcement—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[English]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the minister has not answered why he contemptuously disregarded the House in not making his announcement here. Second, I want to ask him whether he has not had protests made to his office today from hospitals in this city to the effect that our old people are very deeply disturbed by this? Has he not had any such word?

[Translation]

Mr. Goyer: Mr. Speaker, my words must have been misinterpreted, and I know that some people thought that they would lose their pensions if they did not welcome a prisoner into their homes. This is completely wrong, of course, as the right hon. member must be aware.

As for an announcement in this House as to whether the program has been finalized, it will certainly be made. I simply wanted to exchange a few ideas with the people in western Canada, who seemed to me to be very receptive to such ideas.

[English]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I observe that the making of the announcement outside the House is applauded by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. The explanation given by the minister is worthless. I ask him now to answer the question I asked him a moment ago. Has he not received complaints about the number of elderly people who have found themselves in the emergency departments of hospitals in this city in consequence of his statement made outside the House, a statement which for egregious nonsense has never been exceeded?

[Translation]

Mr. Goyer: Mr. Speaker, I have no knowledge of this. But I fail to see why this would worry people sick, or why the right hon. member would worry himself sick over this idea.

[English]

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Solicitor General in connection with the plan to station prisoners in the homes of elderly people. Will consideration be given to maintaining the diet of prisoners while they are stationed in the homes of pensioners, or is the government considering increasing the incomes of pensioners in order to enable them to eat as well as the prisoners?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We will try another subject.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

FOREIGN INVESTMENT—ANNOUNCEMENT OF POLICY PRIOR TO PRESIDENT NIXON'S VISIT

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister. Is it the intention of the government to announce its policy on foreign investment in Canada before the arrival of President Nixon on April 13 so that the policy can be explained to and discussed with him during his visit here, especially in view of the fact that the rewriting of the background study has now been completed and the need for completing this task was cited by the government as the reason for holding up the announcement of its policy?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether a statement can be made before the President arrives but I can assure the House that the presence of the President in Canada will be really quite irrelevant to the decision by Canada on its policy.

Mr. Hees: In view of the uncertainty on the government's part, is it the intention of the Prime Minister to have Mr. Nixon announce this policy while he is here as the latest episode in his exciting series of fantastic breakthroughs?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question as asked is irregular.

JAMES BAY HYDROELECTRIC DEVELOPMENT—ACTION TO SETTLE INDIAN AND ENVIRONMENTAL PROBLEMS

Mr. Raymond Rock (Lachine): Mr. Speaker, my question was for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development but in his absence I will direct it to the acting minister. James Bay area in order that the province can proceed as quickly as possible with the hydro development and create jobs?

• (1500)

Mr. Allan B. JAMES BAY HYDROELECTRIC DEVELOPMENT—FEDERAL POSITION ON REPRESENTATIONS OF ESKIMOS TO QUEBEC GOVERNMENT

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the parliamentary secretary. Has the government agreed to the request of the Northern Quebec Eskimo Association to assist them to make formal presentations in discussions with the government of Quebec on the James Bay project? If so, has the government discussed this with the Quebec government?

Mr. Allan B. Sulatycky (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, representatives of the Northern Quebec Eskimos met the minister yesterday and he is considering their representations.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

BANGLA DESH—SUGGESTED SENDING OF CANADIAN DOCTORS TO PERFORM ABORTIONS ON RAPED WOMEN—FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the urgent call for help from an United States doctor who is performing abortions on Bangla Desh women raped by Pakistani soldiers, and since time is running out for these 20,000 women who are casualties of the war in a very real and grim sense in that they are dishonoured and cannot return home, will the Canadian government make known to the government of Bangla Desh its willingness to send Canadian doctors who offer their services, at least one of whom has already done so?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. lady for her suggestion. Mr. Gérin-Lajoie is either in Dacca today or will be there shortly and I will pass along her suggestion to him.

Mrs. MacInnis: Will the government give consideration to making known to the Canadian Medical Association an offer of financial assistance to doctors willing to give such immediate aid to Bangla Desh.

Mr. Sharp: I will take that suggestion under consideration.

Inquiries of the Ministry

HOUSING

LOW-INCOME UNITS—NEED FOR INCREASED SAFETY AND SANITATION STANDARDS

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. It arises out of a recent tragedy in a low-income housing unit. Will steps be taken by the government to upgrade safety and sanitation standards in low-income housing and will departmental studies on these topics be made available to interested members?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, any houses built with Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation financing or assistance must meet the standards for construction, safety and otherwise set by the corporation. Those are constantly under review with the National Research Council to try to ensure they are as adequate as possible.

REQUEST FOR IMPROVED ACCOMMODATION FOR MÉTIS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. In view of the very shocking exposé which appeared in the last two issues of the Globe and Mail regarding the Métis people in Canada and the shocking conditions in which they live, particularly in respect of housing, is the minister aware of this and can he advise the House of any immediate plan he has in order to alleviate this very intolerable situation?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, a meeting was held with senior officials of the association by my parliamentary secretary some weeks ago at which a very substantial grant was made to a number of Métis groups for the purpose of improving existing housing. A number of grants have been made to assist them in training officers to apply for and promote housing projects among the Métis people. I could go on. It is a matter of very lively concern within Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and within my ministry.

Mr. Alexander: I understand there has been an application for a grant of some $18 million, if I am not mistaken, for housing. Is this one of the areas in which the minister has given approval and, if not, can we expect immediate approval of this application as requested by the Metis people?

Mr. Basford: I would have to examine the article to which the hon. member refers, which I have not read.

MOBILE HOMES—AVAILABILITY OF FINANCING BY CENTRAL MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, could the minister inform the House if Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation is considering making financing available to mobile homes?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, they already meet certain lending requirements of the corporation where they comply with existing regulations.

POSITION OF ACCELERATED PROGRAM FOR LOANS

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, would the minister inform the House whether the program of accelerating loans by CMHC that was announced on October 14 by the Minister of Finance has been carried out to the full extent of the amount of $113 million which was allocated and, if not, why not?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): It has been accelerated to the degree that we had applicants to accelerate it.

SHOES—STUDY RELATING TO COMPANIES THAT HAVE CEASED OPERATIONS

Hon. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Does the minister intend to table in the House a study showing the number of shoe factories that have closed down in the last ten years because of massive imports of footwear, and in this case what amounts have Canadians been able to save every year?

Mr. Speaker: The minister will probably be able to reply to the first question. As to the second question it is of a statistical nature and consequently, the minister would be unable to reply for the time being.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): No, Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to elaborate on past events. I suppose that the economy has benefited from the closing of some of these plants and that the contrary happened in other cases. At any rate, we intend to contribute as much as possible, in co-operation, particularly with the governments of Quebec and Ontario, and to see that the footwear industry in general becomes more productive and efficient and better adapted to our domestic and foreign markets. To this end, a whole series of measures are being taken of which I will inform the hon. member at the first opportunity.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NORTHERN IRELAND—POSSIBLE ASSISTANCE BY CANADA IN SETTLING DISPUTE

Mr. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the continuing and increasing violence in Northern Ireland, would the Canadian government consider holding discussions with the British and Irish governments to explore possible areas in which Canada might be helpful in settling this serious dispute or in providing some other type of assistance?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, we did have the foreign minister of Ireland here in Canada at which time we received representations from him. We have had consultations with the British government, but I do not think it would be wise, unless we are asked to do so by the governments concerned to interfere in this very serious problem.

SCREENING OUT OF UNILINGUAL EMPLOYEE FROM COMPETITION AFTER REFUSAL OF LANGUAGE TRAINING

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Communications. Can the minister explain why a certain employee, grade EL-5, was screened out of a competition because he was not bilingual after having been refused language training on four separate occasions on the ground that it would not be necessary for advancement?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that this question, referring to an individual case, normally should be placed on the order paper. If there is urgency, the hon. member knows it can always be considered at the time of adjournment.

• (1510)

Mr. Alkenbrack: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Did I hear voices from the other side asking me to name this person?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps it might be better if the hon. member gave notice of his intention to raise the matter at the time of adjournment. It can be considered and debated at that time.

TRADE

AUTO PARTS—ALLEGED HARASSMENT OF CANADIAN SHIPMENTS AT UNITED STATES BORDER—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a question of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce arising out of his answers earlier this afternoon with regard to the treatment of Canadian auto parts exports to the United States at the border. I heard the minister say emphatically that there was no particular attitude toward our auto parts. Has he received communications from Canadian auto parts manufacturers complaining about what they call harassment at the border? If so, has he investigated their particular complaints and informed them of the results of his investigation?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Yes, Mr. Speaker, there have been some complaints and this is exactly the point on which I was reporting. It cannot be said that what the U.S. customs officers are doing is against the rules and regulations. I have said that they were implementing these customs rules and regulations in a tighter way than they have in the past. But there is no way we could say that what is taking place now is contrary to the customs rules and regulations.

Inquiries of the Ministry

AUTO PARTS—TIMING OF ALLEGED TIGHTENING OF CUSTOMS REGULATIONS BY UNITED STATES—OPERATIONS OF UNITED STATES MANUFACTURERS UNDER DISC

Mr. David Lewis (York South): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member may ask a further supplementary question and then the Chair will recognize the hon. member for York-Sunbury.

Mr. Lewis: It may be that the rules are not being violated and therefore this makes it difficult for the minister, but would the minister inform the House whether this tightening up of regulations so far as automotive parts are concerned has taken place in recent weeks and months as the manufacturers have claimed rather than for the past three years. Second, did their communication also draw the minister's attention to the fact that some major auto parts manufacturers in the United States have begun to set up export corporations under DISC and, if so, has he made any representations on that?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I can only say that the tighter application of the rules and regulations is not concentrated on the auto parts makers, on automobiles, or on Canada, and that their decision to do so is not recent. I can only repeat these four points. It is impossible to make a case for that section of the trade in particular.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I apologize if I interrupted the minister but I thought he had completed his reply. However, there is a second part to the question which he may be allowed to answer.

Mr. Pepin: Regarding DISC, there is no way of knowing the names of those 100-odd companies which have apparently manifested their intention to form DISC companies in the United States. The information I have from Canadian auto parts manufacturers—and it is only hearsay—is that there are a few of them applying, but one cannot say that there is a rush on the U.S. side by auto parts manufacturers to create DISC companies.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

POSSIBLE TAKE-OVER OF COLONEL BELCHER HOSPITAL, CALGARY—PROTECTION OF PRIORITY OF TREATMENT FOR VETERANS

Mr. J. Chester MacRae (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Are there any negotiations presently taking place between the Department of Veterans Affairs and the Alberta government with regard to a take-over by the Alberta Hospital Commission of the Colonel Belcher veterans hospital in Calgary, and what guarantees are being sought to protect the veterans interest in priority of treatment?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we have a policy in this regard and we have been open to suggestions from all the provinces. However, I have no knowledge of any active discussions going on with Alberta at present.

GRAIN

POSITION OF SHIPMENTS TO WEST COAST—PLANS FOR IMPROVEMENT IN RAIL HANDLING—EFFECT OF OPENING OF SEAWAY

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the minister responsible for the Wheat Board. I should like to ask him how far behind we are in our commitments to shipments on the west coast, whether any plan has been formulated with the railways, how they have stepped up their shipments to the west coast, and how the opening of the seaway, which is delayed this year, will affect the situation?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the number of ships waiting at Vancouver remains fairly high. The problem of continuing difficulties in the Rocky Mountains for both railroads is contributing to this. The railways have enough cars and equipment committed to the movement of grain so that if the rail lines are operating they can gain on the commitments the Wheat Board has on the west coast. They are attempting to switch cars from one line to another. For instance, the CNR has tried using the PGE and in each case they have run into some special difficulties. At the moment, we are simply facing the difficulties of the great snowfall and the slides which are occurring there.

POSSIBLE DIVERSION OF CARS TO THUNDER BAY UPON OPENING OF SEAWAY

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): May I ask whether these cars, which are obviously stalled by the snow on the west coast, will all be diverted to the Thunder Bay area when the seaway is opened in a week or two?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): No, Mr. Speaker, the objective will be to have enough cars in the movement to Vancouver to reach and maintain unloads in the order of 800 cars a day on a five-day week basis, while at the same time achieving unloads in the lakehead region of 1,700, 1,800 or 1,900 cars, which of course are fantastic new record levels.

Mr. Korchinski: May I ask if these cars will be diverted to Thunder Bay and are these ships going to be waiting in the meantime while we are diverting these cars to Thunder Bay?

Mr. Lang: As I pointed out, it is not a matter of the diversion of cars. There will be cars in the movement to handle both record volumes.

[Mr. Laing.]

NUMBER OF SHIPS WAITING AT VANCOUVER— PAYMENT OF DEMURRAGE CHARGES

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, the minister has said that there are quite a number of ships in Vancouver waiting to be loaded. Could he give us the approximate number? Second—and the answer would interest the farmers particularly—in view of the tremendously increasing and mounting cost of demurrage, are the charges for demurrage going to be taken on by the government of Canada as a whole or will demurrage be charged to the western farmers as an expense for marketing?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): I do not have a report as of today on the ships waiting, but I believe the number is in the order of twenties. The cost of demurrage depends, in fact, upon the total arrangement between the charterer and the purchaser of the cargo and the Canadian Wheat Board, and in many cases the burden does rest upon the Canadian Wheat Board.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is a fuzzy answer. I asked in particular whether it is a fact that the large cost of demurrage, which some say has amounted to $1 million over the past few months, will ultimately be charged to the expenses of marketing by the Wheat Board and thereby deducted from the final payment made to the western producer? It is as simple as that.

Mr. Lang: The government of Canada does not make a practice of entering into arrangements covering the risk of doing business for any particular industry. Of course, the government of Canada has taken steps to do a good deal to improve the income position of the prairie farmers, and two price wheat is—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: So the farmer has to pay.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to point out to hon. members that there are some 15 or 20 members waiting for the opportunity to ask questions. For the moment, I will recognize the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre.

SUGGESTED ESTABLISHMENT OF ADDITIONAL TERMINAL ELEVATORS AT PRINCE RUPERT

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board? Has the minister or the Canadian Wheat Board had any discussions or made any recommendations to the government for the construction of an additional National Harbours Board terminal at Prince Rupert? What, if any, proposals have been presented to the government for the enlargement of the harbour and port facilities at Prince Rupert?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): There have been general discussions about the need for additional facilities, and with the persistently large movement of grain at present more and more people are accepting the fact that these additional facilities are needed. As my colleague, the Minister of Transport, indicated today, invitations to the trade are being sent out to come forward with proposals for the extension of these facilities. Considering the way this industry operates, this would be the most satisfactory way of adding facilities.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Grey-Simcoe and return to the hon. member for a supplementary later.

AGRICULTURE

LAMB—REQUEST FOR INCREASED TARIFF OR SUBSIDY FOR WOOL

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the fact that Canada produces less than 50 per cent of its lamb consumption, due to a great extent to the import duty of only half a cent per pound compared with beef products which enjoy 3 cents per pound duty, will the minister give consideration to this hard-pressed industry by creating an incentive for Canadian producers by increasing the import tariff or by the subsidization of wool?

Mr. Speaker: I trust the minister can reply briefly to this question. It appears to the Chair to be more in the form of a representation or submission.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): I can reply very briefly, Mr. Speaker. Some time ago we initiated some discussions leading to better marketing procedures and structures so that the lamb producers themselves can obtain a much higher share than they are now from a good, strong Canadian market.

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the many submissions that members are receiving from sheep breeders and producers, is the government going to reinstate the stabilization board payments on wool for sheep producers?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I have replied a number of times in the House that there is far more money in increased returns for the producers from enhancing the market structure.

PROGRAM TO ASSIST SMALL FARMERS—POSSIBLE RE-OPENING OF NEGOTIATIONS WITH PROVINCES

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the request by the Manitoba Minister of Agriculture that the minister meet with the provinces in order to reopen negotiations on the farm adjustment program which he had put to them previously and which they have not accepted, is the minister planning to meet with them before proceeding unilaterally?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, several days ago I sent an invitation to each of the provinces to try to negotiate an administrative arrangement for that program, and I do not believe we have heard from Manitoba yet.

PENSIONS

ALLEGED THREAT OF LOSS OF ALLOWANCES OF BLIND PERSONS WORKING ON LIP PROJECTS

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Is he in a position to do anything for those blind people who are being encouraged to work under LIP projects with respect to protection of their positions vis-à-vis blind allowances and other pensions, which we are now learning they are in danger of losing? I think the minister has had some representations from the Halifax area with respect to this matter.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I will check the representations to which the hon. member has referred. I might advise though that I do not see a problem in terms of blind people's allowances. That really is under the Canada Assistance Plan. There is a cost-sharing arrangement with the provinces. It is administered by the provinces and there is a needs test. I would think that representations of that kind should be made to the particular province concerned.

MANPOWER

POSSIBLE CLOSING OF POINT EDWARD VOCATIONAL TRAINING CENTRE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I have been waiting to pose this question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, but regrettably because of his illness he has not returned to the House so I will pose it to the acting minister. I realize he is quite capable but I would ask him to take notice of the question because I would not expect him to have the answer today. In light of the recent report submitted to the joint planning committee of the Province of Nova Scotia and the Department of Regional Economic Expansion recommending that the Point Edward Vocational Training Centre be closed, and in view of the inconvenience this would mean for future trainees from Cape Breton and the effect it would have on the economy of Cape Breton, would the minister report back to the House that so far as the federal government is concerned such a move will not take place, thus relieving the anxiety that this report has created?

Hon. Martin P. O'Connell (Acting Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to think about that question. My first impression is that the Department of Manpower and Immigration would not be the department determining the question of the continuation of that centre; it would be some other department. But I am going to study the question put to me by the hon. member.

Mr. Muir: Mr. Speaker, may I say that, in view of the fact it was a joint committee that prepared this report, I would think the federal government must have some say in the matter.

PENITENTIARIES

ALLEGED LACK OF PSYCHIATRIC CARE AT STONEY MOUNTAIN

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. It relates to the fact that a high percentage of prison inmates require psychiatric assistance in varying degrees. Is it correct that psychiatric care for the hundreds of inmates in Stoney Mountain Penitentiary in Manitoba is provided by a single psychiatrist who is over 75 years of age and who appears at the penitentiary on two half days a week? Further, if this is the case is the government taking steps to correct what is clearly an unsupportable situation?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I will inquire on this specific subject but we certainly experience great difficulties in hiring psychiatrists. This is why, to meet this situation, we are multiplying the number of psychologists in our institutions.

[English]

Mr. Rowland: When the Solicitor General obtains this information, would he be prepared to make a statement on motions indicating just what action has been taken?

[Translation]

Mr. Goyer: No, Mr. Speaker, I do not see the necessity for it but I will keep the hon. member informed.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

AGRICULTURAL WORKERS—REQUEST FOR MEASURES TO ENABLE FARMERS TO HIRE WORKERS—POSSIBLE EXTENSION OF APPRENTICESHIP PROGRAM

Mr. Cliff Downey (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, I would direct my question to the Acting Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the alternatives offered by the provisions of the Unemployment Insurance Act and various welfare measures to those who normally accept farm labour, is the minister considering any measure that would relieve the situation so that farmers can hire labour at a price they can afford? Further, is there any consideration being given to extending the agricultural workers apprenticeship program which I understand expired last Friday?

[Mr. O'Connell.]

Hon. Martin P. O'Connell (Acting Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for that question. I will have to take it as notice.

PROPOSED FLOODING OF SKAGIT RIVER VALLEY—CANADIAN REPRESENTATIONS AT SEATTLE HEARING

Mr. Jerry Pringle (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of the Environment. Is the government of Canada making representations at the hearing to be held in Seattle on Friday, March 31, concerning the raising of the Ross Dam which would result in the flooding of the upper Skagit Valley in British Columbia?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Yes, Mr. Speaker, that was the purpose of a press release which I issued today. In effect it contains a statement of the Canadian position which I expect will be tabled at the hearing.

POST OFFICE

REQUEST FOR RECOGNITION OF AQUATIC SPORTS BY ISSUANCE OF STAMP

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Postmaster General. In view of Canada's outstanding record in the field of international competition in aquatic sports, is the government planning to recognize this contribution by issuing a special stamp and, if so, will such a stamp be issued in time for the international competitions in Winnipeg on April 8 and 9?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Postmaster General): In what year?

Mr. Dinsdale: This year.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Dinsdale: Ten o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: We have just about reached the end of the question period. The hon. member for Kootenay West had a supplementary to the previous question and he will be recognized for that purpose.

POWER

PROPOSED FLOODING OF SKAGIT RIVER VALLEY—TRANSMISSION OF CANADIAN POSITION TO WASHINGTON

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the statement made today by the Minister of the Environment that he sees the International Joint Commission Report on the Skagit Valley as confirming the Canadian view that the flooding of the upper Skagit Valley in Canada should not take place, I would ask the minister whether this Canadian view has been officially transmitted to the appropriate department in Washington?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the statement made by the Minister of the Environment is of course concurred in by the Canadian government, and therefore the Canadian government's position is now well known.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to apologize to a number of hon. members who stood religiously and gallantly during the question period, in particular the hon. member for Egmont, the hon. member for Brant and the hon. member for Joliette. I have tried to make a mental note of the fact that they were not recognized today and I would hope an effort could be made to give them priority tomorrow.

Mr. Benjamin: My apologies, Mr. Speaker, but I believe you indicated earlier that you would return to me for a further supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: I am quite prepared to do so. In fairness, if the House allows the Chair to do so, we will return to the hon. member for a further supplementary, and then I believe the hon. member for Malpeque has a point of order.

GRAIN

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON CONSTRUCTION OF PUBLICLY OWNED TERMINAL FACILITIES AT PRINCE RUPERT

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): I thank you and the House for your patience, Mr. Speaker. I wish to ask the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board whether it has been decided that it will be government policy not to construct publicly owned grain terminal facilities at Prince Rupert, and is he attempting to persuade the private grain trade to do so? Also, what decisions have been passed on to the Minister of Public Works in terms of construction of other facilities at the Port of Prince Rupert?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, my colleague the Minister of Transport indicated that we were prepared to look at direct government involvement in additional facilities but that the first step would be to invite the grain trade to instal such facilities. It has been our experience that this is the most satisfactory technique, because the trade which owns the collection facilities inside the prairie region makes the best use of terminal facilities. This has been one of the difficulties with the existing Prince Rupert facility over the years, and one of the reasons it has not been used as fully as it might in lower periods of export.

WEEKLY STATEMENT—LENGTH OF EASTER RECESS

Mr. MacLean: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the government House Leader if he could indicate what business the government proposes to place before the House tomorrow and for next week up until the Easter recess?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow I should like to call Bill C-170, an act respecting the payment of benefits for children. Following that we would call the Explosives Act—

An hon. Member: Speak up!

Mr. MacEachen: —and the hijacking and piracy amendments to the Criminal Code.

Mr. MacLean: Mr. Speaker, could the government House leader indicate when he expects that parliament will be recalled, that is, how long the Easter recess will be?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I have indicated already that we would be coming back not earlier than April 10. I shall probably put a motion on the order paper later this week or early next week indicating the exact time, but certainly it will not be earlier than April 10 and probably a little later.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate have passed Bill S-3, an act to change the names of the Territorial Court of the Yukon Territory and the Territorial Court of the Northwest Territories, to which the concurrence of this House is desired.

Mr. MacLean: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I believe there is a general understanding that if the time limitation in rule 58(13) were to obtain while the first four party spokesmen delivered their speeches, namely the mover and whoever replies for the government and the representatives of the other two parties, perhaps all speeches following could be limited to 15 minutes if that would meet with general agreement.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Yes, Mr. Speaker, we agree to this. We should like to make the usual amendment that no one will seek to speak overtime.

Mr. Francis: Mr. Speaker, I believe that if the chief speaker for the government could participate later he would have a longer period; is that not so?

• (1540)

Mr. MacLean: What I said, Mr. Speaker, was that rule 58(13) would apply and I believe that is the case.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure there is no difficulty about this point. Hon. members have heard the suggestion made by the hon. member for Malpeque concurred in by other hon.

members. Is it the pleasure of the House to make this an order of the House?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is agreed and so ordered.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—NON-CONFIDENCE MOTION—ALLEGED FAILURE OF GOVERNMENT TO INCREASE PENSIONS BY SAME PERCENTAGE AS INCREASE IN CONSUMER PRICE INDEX

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North) moved:

That this House condemns the government's failure to contribute to pensions, allowances and other benefits granted or administered by the government a yearly percentage increase corresponding to the percentage increase in the Consumer Price Index for Canada.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in April of 1972 old age pensions or guaranteed incomes will be increased from $135 to $137.70 for a single person and from $255 to $260 for a married couple. This represents an increase of nine cents per day for a single person or less than 17 cents a day for a married couple. This only applies to those getting the maximum guaranteed income.

At the end of January, 1972, there were 672,960 individual old age pensioners getting the maximum supplement, and 110,176 old age pension couples receiving the maximum supplement. In other words, just less than 45 per cent of all old age pensioners were getting the full supplement and the full benefit of the 2 per cent cost of living escalator.

If the Liberal government had lived up to its promise in 1968 of a "just society" and given the old age pensioners and those on guaranteed income supplement an amount equivalent to the annual rise in the cost of living, the old age pension would have gone from $75 per month to $89.85 today—this shows how the pensioner has been gypped—and the guaranteed income supplement would have gone from $30 to $58.81. In 1972, individual recipients of the old age security pension would be receiving $9.85 more a month or $118.20 more per year than they actually do now. That is this magnanimous government. Similarly, in 1972 all recipients of the guaranteed income supplement would be receiving $58.51 instead of the present level of $55, or putting it another way, this would mean over the year a difference of $42.12 to recipients of the maximum guaranteed income supplement. The total cost of this program from January 1, 1968, to December 31, 1971, would have amounted to $230 million. The money was there, Mr. Speaker, because on December 31, 1971, there was a balance of $636 million in the old age security fund.

Now, I intend to deal with those people for a few minutes and show how they get by, because it is apparent that some members of the government think these pensioners live in luxury. The average rent for a bachelor apartment in any of our cities or towns today is $125 a month whilst a one bedroom apartment, runs at an average of $150 per month. I have checked those figures. I leave it to the reasoning and common sense of members of this House to decide how these people live. Just how do they get by? In a city of approximately 22,000 people, typical of old Ontario, there are 15 single units renting at $37 a month and 12 units for married couples. These are subsidized, but to qualify one must have an income of $175 a month or less. I also checked these figures. Hundreds of applications are on record for low-cost housing. In that city, Mr. Speaker, there were 2,349 old age pensioners and over 1,500 of them were getting the guaranteed income supplement. I do not think I need dwell further on the bind in which those people found themselves. When you consider that, on the average, they have to spend 28 per cent of income on food and 25 per cent on shelter, you wonder how they live and by how much they must tighten their belts.

I have brought this motion forward today because of the cynical attitude taken by the government towards all government pensioners. What rhyme or reason is there for denying people their rights? What sort of government is it that will compensate people with dollars constantly eroded by inflation?

Mr. Dinsdale: There is no compassion.

Mr. Rynard: What justice is there in denying old age pensioners a pension that they have paid for over the years? They paid for this pension in hard dollars, Mr. Speaker. Some were earning between $32 and $35 a week when paying into the old age pension fund. First, they paid 2 per cent, then 3 per cent, then 4 per cent of their taxable income into this fund, up to a maximum of $240 a year per person. Mr. Speaker, $961 million was raised from income tax in 1970 for the old age pensioners. Seven hundred million dollars was raised from federal sales taxes and around $250 million from the 3 per cent corporation tax. Every solitary old person contributed to these taxes; every one of them paid into the old age pension fund. By what right does anyone take away what belongs to them?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rynard: This payment is not charity. It has been paid for in taxes and there is at present a surplus of over $600 million in the fund. As I said, the older people paid into the fund in hard dollars. Yet each year the dollar purchases less. The former minister of finance, who is now Minister of National Defence (Mr. Benson), estimated that there would be over $2 billion available for 1970-71. He only paid out $1,905 million; what did he do with the balance of $95 million?

We cheat those on fixed incomes when we pay them in cheapened dollars. I wonder how much has been taken out of the OHSIP fund in the form of taxes on doctor's incomes; to what extent have medical services been taxed? When we tax the inflated incomes of certain doctors, we are placing a tax on sickness. As I said, we cheat those on fixed incomes when we pay them in cheapened dollars. Do not forget, Mr. Speaker, that inflation yields more revenue for the government through higher salaries.

Nevertheless, the government has frozen the old age pension. They now call our pensioners the "Trudeau rich". I do not know who invented that label. There are about 510,000 of them in this country; I am speaking of pensioners with incomes of between $130 and $400 a month. During the past year their purchasing power declined by between $76 and $80.

If the government has been able to do this and get away with it, one wonders what else it can get away with. May I read from an editorial that appeared not long ago in the Globe and Mail. It reads:

> Old-age pensions are not charity. They are not hand-outs by a compassionate Government to the destitute old. They are annuities returned to persons past 65 for investments, both direct and indirect, which the Government has compelled them to make year after year. The explanatory papers attached to Finance Minister Edgar Benson's budget speech made this clear. The country, which is at present making out its income tax returns, needs no reminder.
> Each individual, as he works his way through his difficult tax return, will find that he is paying a 4 per cent tax on his taxable income, to a maximum of $240 per person per year, which is specifically earmarked for old-age security.

The article refers to a $600 million surplus in the fund, mentions the mothers allowance and blind persons allowance, and then reads:

> But the basic old-age pensions were bought and paid for by the people who are collecting them.
> They are collecting them, however, in money which year after year buys less and less.

The fact has not had the impact in this House that it ought to have had. Some wage earners who paid into the pension fund earned $35 a week in hard dollars. Now, some of our people are earning up to eight times as much; others, of course, are not earning quite that much. We said to the old age pensioner, if the cost of living goes up by more than 2 per cent, the old age security pension will be escalated by 2 per cent per year, maximum. Mr. Speaker, I believe Your Honour was a legal light. How would an agreement stand up in court if it provided for an increase of 2 per cent in pensions if the cost of living went up by more than 2 per cent, but not a nickel extra if it went up by less than 2 per cent? Would that not be considered as a one-sided agreement? Yet the cost of living has been rising at 4 and 5 per cent per year, and the buying power of our older people has been shrinking by about 3 per cent per year. Prices go up but pensions do not match that rise. Is that not unfair? Taking the hard earned dollars of working people who paid into the fund in hard cash and paying them with inflated dollars is also unfair. One could go on enumerating grievances.

As I said, if the government could do this in the case of pensioners, one wonders what it could do with bonds or securities of any kind. The government has broken its agreement. Mr. Speaker, perpetual bonds issued in 1935 are now worth only 40 cents on the dollar. This indicates how much their worth has shrunk. If that does not bring about distrust of government, I do not know what will. Is that the sort of honesty the government is preaching to the people of Canada? I say to the government that it creates deep distrust in the minds of Canadians by reneging on old agreements and by refusing to give the old age pensioner his rightful due. The government knows full well that rents and the cost of shelter went up last year by 7 per cent and that food went up by 7 per cent. Knowing all this, why does the government deny our older people justice? The government takes the view that if the rate of inflation is 2 per cent per year or more, the pension of the pensioner will increase by 2 per cent. However, if the rate of inflation is under 2 per cent, the pensioner gets no increase. That is a pretty one-sided contract.

May I say a few words about family allowances? I expect hon. members recall that family allowances first came on the scene in 1945 when the average weekly wage in Canada was $32.50. Now, the average weekly wage has multiplied by four times to $132.72. That was the 1970 level, and represents an increase of approximately 400 per cent. Family allowances, on the other hand, have increased by only 15 per cent since 1945. How are family allowances to be dealt with? A family with one child between one and 11 years of age is to get $180, and $240 if the child is between 12 and 17. These amounts are not as great as they should be. They are at about 75 per cent of the level that would be fair.

The joke here is that they are shortchanging the family 25 per cent. There is no cost of living allowance written in, nor any escalator clause. That remains fixed. All you have to do is look around at the money that is being brought into circulation. The money supply in this country was increased by 30 percent in January and 40 percent in February. This means only one thing. We are going to have runaway inflation. It may take a few months to catch up, but it will catch up. There is no escalator clause. This party would like to see such a clause put in the family allowance scheme.

Knowing how cynically this government refused the old age pension adjustments, it is important that we do not let this government get away with anything. The same holds true for pensioners in other areas. They see the salaries of their counterparts being driven up by the fires of inflation away beyond what they ever received. They also see themselves limited to an escalator clause which is away below the inflationary figure of just under 5 percent.

I now want to deal briefly with veterans affairs. First, there is a lack of an escalator clause in pensions paid to veterans to compensate for the increase in the cost of living. This House dealt with the Hong Kong veteran. I had the privilege of examining some of those veterans. Their pension increase was long overdue because of the inhumane way they had been treated. However, do hon. members know that we have not done a solitary thing for the fellow who fought in other areas of war, those who fought in Europe, were manacled and chained in Europe, went on forced marches and starved. We have never done one solitary thing about their problems.

Mr. Francis: Can I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Rynard: Yes, when I am through. If you want to ask a question, go ahead and we will see what it is.

Mr. Francis: Mr. Speaker, I respect the position of the hon. member, but does he not agree there was an exceptional incapacity allowance introduced which would apply to those cases he described, those who suffered hardship while prisoners? In fact, a number are now receiving the exceptional incapacity allowance.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): How many?

Mr. Rynard: As far as I know, Mr. Speaker, it is rather difficult to comply with that rule. I have never seen any who have been able to do that. If the hon. member has records of such cases, I would like to hear about them. I brought such cases before the medical appeal board, but nothing was done. If he has such cases, I would like to hear about them so that I can make use of them.

I want to ask the hon. member what we are doing about the fellow who shows up with an illness 15 or 20 years later that it is said is not connected with any war service or war injury. What is this government doing about that? Not one solitary thing. If he has a record of any cases of that type being dealt with, I would like to know about them. In the United States such veterans are looked after, but the government says we treat our veterans better than any other country.

The United States accepts cases of psychosomatic illness which do not show up for a period of 20 years, but had their roots in the malnutrition and hardships the veterans underwent when fighting in the war. As a matter of fact, the War Claims Commission recognized those injuries and awarded special per capita grants from money confiscated from enemy aliens. The Canada Pension Commission pays no attention to this.

Then, we have the case of the extremely disabled veteran. The Trudeau gouvernment has ignored these veterans. Twenty Liberal members of Parliament sat on the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs. Possibly the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis) was one of those. This committee recommended a $3,500 pension but the Trudeau government kept it at $2,400. Why? In committee, they were in favour of this, but in the House they were against it. This is not the first time they have done this. I can state another time when this was done. I can name the members. In fact, I see some of them here. We can compare this treatment with that given the United States veteran who receives $5,400. If any member thinks that veterans are treated better in Canada, let him get up and say so and give his authority for making that statement. In committee, the members were in favour of an increase, but in the House they were against it. Do you know all that would have cost? The hon. member for Ottawa West and I have been good friends for a long time, but even the Globe and Mail could not stand that and wrote an editorial on it. They stated that the total cost to the government would only have been $750,000. Consider the $10 million the government is spending on Information Canada.

Mr. Hees: Yes, $10 million a year.

Mr. Rynard: The operating cost of the office of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has increased from approximately $75,000, 10 years ago to over $1 million.

An hon. Member: $17 million on the Bonaventure.

Mr. Rynard: Yes. We could keep on talking all afternoon.

Mr. Hees: How about the hydrofoil?

[Mr. Francis.]

Mr. Rynard: Yes, there is also the hydrofoil and $750,000 was refused these people. We can go right back to the defence department. The defence department at the same time refused to guarantee that the cost of four unnecessary destroyers would not exceed $252 million.

Since World War I, 10,000 Canadian veterans have been living in the United Kingdom. I saw some of those people in Hammersmith Hospital. They are in strained circumstances, yet the Canadian government demands that these people return to Canada and live here for one year. I ask the hon. member for Ottawa West how he proposes to transport these people. Some of them are in bed, paralysed. In spite of this, the government says that they must return here before they can receive a pension. Have you ever heard of such foolishness? Bring the veteran back? Shame. Even though some of these veterans are bedridden and paralysed, they must live in Canada for one year before they qualify and can take their veterans allowance with them. How do they make the trip? The prisoner of war suffered psychosomatic stress and malnutration and this is presumptive evidence of his illness being caused by war service.

In conclusion, I wish to make a few comments about foolish things we have done, such as the 2 per cent cost of living escalator. One member of this House, who used to be an honoured member of the government and a deputy premier, stated here the other day that the $150 million being spent on the Local Initiatives Program was costing countless wasteful tax dollars. He asked the question about the LIP grant being given to satanists. Satan used to be a bad word when I was growing up, but now I do not know. A grant of $25,000 was given to satanists of the Progress Church of the Final Judgment in Toronto, yet the Salvation Army, which has had long experience in handling these things, was refused a grant. Oh, Mr. Speaker, it is tiresome when you go over the list of their sins. But, you know, one of the things that does bother you is they go around the country and make statements about how many people they have taken off the tax rolls.

• (1600)

Mr. Dinsdale: How many have they put in the poor house?

Mr. Rynard: It is an amazing thing. Let me give you the figures. In 1970 there were 9,195,000 on the tax rolls. In 1972 there were 9,436,000 taxpayers. Where are the 750,000 they have taken off? Why, they have added nearly 300,000 more to the tax rolls.

Oh, Mr. Speaker, I could go on at length, but I think I have probably made the point of the callousness of what they have been doing, the injustice of the whole thing, the cheating of people, taking away what was theirs. It is a government which has failed to control inflation. From 1967 to 1970 the cost of living rose by almost 14 per cent, 13.9 per cent to be exact. The 2 per cent mini-escalator clause would allow a 6.15 per cent increase. Putting it into plain words they are cheating the pensioners of this country by 7.8 per cent. That is right there, in hard, cold figures and you cannot get around it. And this is a government which had $150 million to spend on programs which were sometimes downright harmful. A long list of them was cited this afternoon. It would take all the afternoon to tell about their sins of commission, their waste and extravagance, inflation in government spending. You know, sometimes I wonder, and I have some good friends over on the other side, good friends, I look over at them there and, you know, I cannot understand it. I do not know whether they leave their consciences at the chamber door and go to pick them up when they go out. How in the world can they justify decreasing old age pensions by approximately 3 per cent per year while raising their own salaries by 50 per cent?

Mr. Whicher: How did you vote?

Mr. Rynard: How did I vote? I want to tell you I did not vote for it. How did you vote?

Mr. Whicher: How did your party vote?

Mr. Rynard: You did not ask me that. You asked me how I voted.

Mr. Whicher: You know what would have happened if you had not voted for it over there.

Mr. Hees: Come on, Ross. Stand up and tell us how you voted.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member who has the floor should address his remarks to the Chair, as should other members.

Mr. Rynard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an irritating subject to the Government and when people, as I have suggested, may have left their consciences outside, they are hard to get along with.

Perhaps, though, on a different note, I could appeal to those fellows over there. They are nice guys. Maybe I could appeal to them and leave these words of Shakespeare with them:

> The quality of mercy is not strain'd,
> It droppeth as the gentle rain from heaven
> Upon the place beneath. It is twice bless'd;
> It blesses him that gives and him that takes,
> 'Tis mightiest in the mightiest . . .
> It is an attribute to God himself;
> And earthly power doth then show likest God's,
> When mercy seasons justice.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the motion before us this afternoon is one which asks for the very least that anyone could request in the field of old age and other pensions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I believe, at least I assume, that the motion does include other pensions and allowances as well, not just old age pensions. I assume it includes veterans disability pensions and war veterans allowances; that it includes the pensions of retired public servants, and that these, in turn, would include pensions of retired members of the Armed Forces and of the RCMP. I assume it includes pensions drawn under the Canada Pension Plan and any other pensions and allowances which come under the responsibility of the federal government.

The motion is one that clearly requests that an escalator clause be attached to all these pensions and that in all cases the percentage provided in that escalator clause shall be equal to the actual increase in the cost of living. This means that old age pensioners drawing the guaranteed income supplement, and who now get a 2 per cent increase a year, would get a 5 or 6 per cent increase in line with the increase in the cost of living. It also implies that pensioners who are drawing only the basic $80 old age security benefit would receive an increase and that it would amount to between 5 or 6 per cent, reflecting the current increase in the cost of living.

I gather the motion implies that the increases which take place annually in the pensions of retired civil servants and others associated with them would also be the equivalent of the actual cost of living increase, not just the 2 per cent they now receive under the law. I take it that the proposal would also apply to benefits under the Canada Pension Plan where the escalator is again limited by law to 2 per cent. I would hope, also, that the motion would be regarded as covering certain other pensioners, for example, those of the Canadian National—they do not come directly under the government but they work for a Crown corporation. Once we get into that area we also think of Canadian Pacific employees and others. I trust I am not doing an injustice to the motion when I say that what it asks for is that all pension arrangements should contain an escalator clause and that the escalation should not be limited to 2 per cent but that it be equivalent to the actual rise in the cost of living.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): As I indicated a few moments ago, this is the least which could be asked for in this chamber, and I think every Member of the House of Commons should stand up at 9.45 tonight and vote for this motion.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Up to this moment I have enjoyed the applause from my good friends to the right, the members of the official opposition party. I am afraid I shall now have to say one or two things which they may not want to applaud. I hope the applause may come from the other side, from the supporters of the Liberal party, but we shall wait and see.

Mr. Dinsdale: Quit while you're ahead.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I always welcome a debate on pensions. I always welcome any plea made by any hon. member in any quarter of the House for an improvement in the lot of our senior citizens and retired people. But I have to say I am bitterly disappointed, today, because the Progressive Conservative party has not gone far enough. This motion today is in line with the kind of thing the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) has been saying as he has gone about the country during the last few weeks, namely that the federal government is not doing enough for old age pensioners. But when he gets down to something precise, he says exactly the same as that put forward in this motion, namely that the pensions of our retired citizens should be increased, not just by 2 per cent but by the full amount of the increase in the cost of living. That means an increase of 5 or 6 per cent. It means that those now drawing $80 a month will get another $4 or $5. It means that those now drawing $135 a month will get another $6.75. It means for those on war veterans allowance, who are receiving, if single, $121 a month, an increase in the order of $6.

I say that is not good enough, Mr. Speaker. It is a delusion to create the impression that simply by adding to pensions in step with the increase in the cost of living you have done your duty by the senior citizens and pensioners of this country. What is sorely needed and is long overdue is an upward adjustment in the basic rates of all these pensions. Shame on the Liberals for doing nothing, but shame on the Progressive Conservatives for asking only for a 5 or 6 per cent increase in the present $80 pension! The pension should be raised to $150 a month. Veterans should not be on an allowance, if single, of $121 a month, or $201 a month, if married; those allowances should be at least $150 a month single and $300 a month for a married veteran.

I could go on down the list. Pensions of all kinds presently being paid under the auspices of the government need to be reviewed, and the question asked: Are they of a reasonable amount in light of today's production, today's cost of living and today's standard of living? When you talk merely of increasing pensions in relation to the cost of living, Mr. Speaker, all you are doing is permitting older people to continue to enjoy whatever standard of living we gave them when we fixed their pension. The fact is that when we fixed their pensions we put them into the poverty bracket, and all you do by raising pensions in step with the increase of the cost of living is to keep those pensioners within the same poverty bracket. That in itself is bad enough. But, in addition to that, by increasing pensions simply by that amount we are saying to our retired citizens: "This is a wonderful age. Production is going up, standards of living are going up, people are living more affluent lives, but you older folks are not to share in those things; you have to stay with the 'keep body and soul together' pattern rather than share in the increase in our country's standard of living".

What we should be asking for today is for the raising of the basic amounts of all pensions. Before I get to the end of my time—and I am keeping my eye on the clock, Mr. Speaker—I shall be moving an amendment to this effect. I do not intend to move it at this moment but I might read it so that hon. members will know what is coming. When I reach the end of my twenty minutes, I shall move that the motion be amended by adding thereto, immediately after the word "Canada", the following words:

—and its failure to raise to adequate levels the basic amounts of all such pensions, allowances and benefits.

If my amendment were accepted, the motion as amended would then read:

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

That this House condemns the government's failure to contribute to pensions, allowances and other benefits granted or administered by the government a yearly percentage increase corresponding to the percentage increase in the Consumer Price Index for Canada, and its failure to raise to adequate levels the basic amounts of all such pensions, allowances and benefits.

I should have liked to recast the motion and to put the question of raising the basic amounts first, then calling for the full scale escalation clause, but I was afraid I would get into procedural trouble if I did that. However, the result is the same if I put my amendment at the end of the main motion. What I want this House to face up to this afternoon is not only the shame of the government for failing to do anything for the pensioners of this country, but to the inadequacy of the proposal that has come from the official opposition which asks merely for an increase equal to the increase in the cost of living.

Our position is that our old age pensioners today should have as a very minimum a pension of $150 a month; that that $150 a month should then be escalated year by year as the cost of living goes up. Starting from that level, an increase of 5 or 6 per cent would mean something. But 5 or 6 per cent of the present $80 a month, or even of the $135 that the guaranteed income supplement pensioners receive, is hopelessly inadequate. We also contend that veterans allowances and war disability pensions should be reviewed. I was pleased with the answer I got from the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Laing) the other day to the effect that consideration is being given to the representations that have been made by War Amputations of Canada for an increase in the basic rate of war disability pensions, and I hope the minister meant what he said.

The fact of the matter is that the basic rate of the war disability pension, which was set just after World War I at a certain wage standard in the Public Service, has fallen behind that standard. I also draw attention to the fact that the war veterans allowance today for a single person is only $121 a month, or $201 a month for a married veteran. Certainly, that is not good enough, even if other income up to $161 single and $271 married is permitted. Neither is it good enough just to ask for those amounts to be increased by the extent to which the cost of living has risen. I insist that those figures should be at least $150 for a single veteran and $300 for one who is married. As hon. members know, I believe we should do even better and provide a guaranteed income at an adequate level to all veterans at age 55.

I have already referred to the pensions of retired public servants. I am still excited over the fact that we finally won for them the principle of an increase in their pension after those affected have retired. I think the initial step taken by the government in 1970, providing for a considerable amount of retroactivity, was a good one; I said so then and I say so again today. But in the meantime we have had a substantial rise in the cost of living which has outdistanced the 2 per cent increases that these people have received. Salaries have gone up, to the extent that today future pensions are going to be larger than the amount many former public servants drew as salary. This is why it is time the basic amounts of pensions that people are receiving today should be reviewed. It is also time, as I have said, for the escalation rate to be raised from 2 per cent to the actual rate of increase taking place.

In the case of the Canada Pension Plan I think there, too, the 2 per cent ceiling has to be reviewed and revised. I concede that some time ago the government did put on the records of this House the appropriate notices so that this matter could be discussed by the federal and provincial governments. I hope that those discussions will be actively carried forward, because a great deal has happened to our economy since the Canada Pension Plan was introduced—and I was one of those who supported it, there is no question of that—which requires the plan's benefits to be jacked up. Here again it is not going to be enough just to ask for the amount of escalation that is proposed in the motion before the House today; we must review the basic rates.

I could go on and mention again the Canadian National pensions and Canadian Pacific pensions, as well as industrial pensions generally. I repeat the plea that I have made many a time on the floor of this House that we amend the Pension Benefits Standards Act to require industrial pensions to meet the standards we are talking about today.

The point I am trying to make at this time is that though welcoming, as I do, the motion set down this afternoon by the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard), I feel the real problem that not only this parliament but society has to face is this: It is no longer good enough to treat our older people as objects of charity. It is no longer good enough simply to say to them: "We have given you a certain level of pension and we shall maintain you at that level by increasing your pension to the extent the cost of living increases". The time has come when basic rates have to be adjusted, and they will have to be readjusted every four or five years.

The plain fact is that if we have a humane and decent civilization our older people have just as much right to share in the rising standard of living as those involved in producing it. A further point I have made on other occasions, and will make it again as I get the opportunity, is that we must now be thinking about lowering the pensionable age. At least we should be providing that full old age security and Canada Pension Plan benefits should be available to our people at age 60 on one condition only, namely, that they leave the labour market. This would mean a great deal to these people. Many people at that age with the other savings or pensions they have would retire if given that opportunity, and this would do something to create jobs for the younger people. There is no question but that our attempt to raise the living standards of our people in the older age brackets would call for the production of more goods and services. Those who oppose us would like to knock down our idea by saying this would cost too much. What it will cost is more production and this would mean putting more people to work in order to produce the goods. A good and decent pension program would not only do something for our older people but would also have an advantageous effect on our economy as a whole and make things better for all people including our younger people who are sorely in need of jobs today.

I see my time is running out. There are one or two points I should like to make before I move the amendment I have already read. There is only one set of statistics to which I want to refer. It is the same set of statistics the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard) used in the opening part of his speech. His figures contained one error. This, however, was not his fault. He quoted a figure from page 949 of Hansard for March 20 which was part of a set of answers to questions of mine. The figure he quoted happens to be wrong. I drew attention to it as a matter of privilege on March 21 and I have been assured by the department that it will be corrected some time soon. I should like therefore, to refer to the figures put on Hansard of March 20 with the correction to which I have referred. The figures show that 1,756,548 Canadians are drawing old age security. That presumably just about equals the number of Canadians who are over 65, counting all but those who do not have sufficient residence to qualify for the pension.

Of that number 978,068 qualify for some portion of the guaranteed income supplement. That figure is 55 per cent of the total. In other words, more than half of the people of Canada who are over 65 years of age are so poor and so needy that they now receive some portion of the guaranteed income supplement. I shall go on further. The hon. member for Simcoe North gave a figure of 110,805. That is the wrong figure which will be corrected in a few days. It should be 484,394. That is the number of people receiving the full amount. I think it is a disgrace and we should bow our heads in shame, for that figure represents 27 per cent of the people of Canada who are over age 65. Remember that in order to qualify for the full amount of the guaranteed income supplement one can have nothing else. One might have $2 or something like that, but for all practical purposes he can have nothing else. That means that of the people who today in this tremendous and wonderful land reach age 65, more than one in every four reach it in a state of destitution. They have nothing. They are able to qualify not only for old age security which presently is $80 a month, but are able to qualify for the full amount of the guaranteed income supplement.

If anything ever demonstrated the need for a massive increase in what we are doing for pensioners these figures do it. I see my time is running out and therefore perhaps I should move my amendment before I am called upon to sit down. I want to say again that I welcome this motion even though I have been critical and have expressed some disappointment at my friends in the Progressive Conservative party for asking for so little. We shall vote for the motion because it is the least that should be done, but I hope other members of the House will join with us tonight in voting for our amendment. It says not only do we want escalation according to the cost of living but we want the basic amounts of all pensions across the board to be reviewed and raised to adequate levels. As an example of what we mean by the motion, we are asking that the basic amount of the old age pension be raised right now to not less than $150 a month.

Therefore, I have pleasure in moving, seconded by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas):

That the motion be amended by adding thereto, immediately after the word "Canada", the following words:

"and its failure to raise to adequate levels the basic amounts of all such pensions, allowances and benefits".

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I think it is my duty to take part in the debate on the motion now before the House which reads:

That this House condemns the government's failure to contribute to pensions, allowances and other benefits granted or administered by the government a yearly percentage increase corresponding to the percentage increase in the Consumer Price Index for Canada.

I would begin my comments by mentioning two typical examples which will enable us to understand the problem.

A senior citizen of 65 came to my office in Victoriaville recently. He is severely ill and is receiving an old pension of $135 a month. He pays $70 for rent per month, which is reasonable, but he is left with only $65 a month for food, clothing and drugs.

This senior citizen is trying by every means to obtain supplementary assistance from provincial departments but to no avail, since he is told by officials that his case is the responsibility, not of the provincial government, but of the federal government from which he receives an old age pension. Anyway, every endeavour this citizen has made has been doomed to failure. In addition, he is unable to buy the necessary drugs to cure his sickness.

This a health matter of health but he is unable to buy them. The prevailing system prevents him from obtaining these drugs.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that if we do not urgently take effective steps to solve this problem we are all somewhat responsible for this citizen's predicament and even for his death, because if we refuse, as a society, to increase this aid we will all have contributed to someone's misfortune and perhaps to his death.

This case is not unique. My hon. friends are well aware that hundreds of cases like this exist in Canada but that the resources to satisfy the needs of these people are non-existent.

Let us consider another case, Mr. Speaker, that of two people who each receive a maximum pension, including the guaranteed income supplement. It gives them a total income of $255. In order to get that maximum amount, their marginal income must be minimum. In other words, after paying a reasonable rent of $70 a month, they are left with $185 a month or $46 a week, which makes $23 per person, to buy food, clothes, drugs and essential items.

If their television set—their only enjoyment—breaks down, they do not have enough to have it repaired. The same goes for essential appliances such as their refrigerator, their stove, etc.

What will we do for them, Mr. Speaker? Will we stop talking about them once and for all and take action? I am very pleased to have this debate today since it will allow us all to ask ourselves that question.

The main objective of the motion before us today is to have pensions paid to those in need, to the needy, escalated in the same proportion as the increase in the cost of living.

Mr. Speaker, I have here a clipping from the newspaper La Presse of Tuesday, March 21, 1972, entitled "Trend in recent months points to renewed inflation".

Two conclusions may be drawn. First, the fight against inflation by the government in the past four years has been conducted at the expense of the low income people and has certainly not solved the problem. Just the opposite. Second, this fight has contributed directly to the increase in the seasonally-adjusted rate of unemployment and neither unemployment nor inflation have been stopped.

The conclusion was drawn that the fight against inflation has been a monumental failure and finally, the conclusion can also be drawn that those benefiting from federal social welfare programs—which will cost this year, if I am right, $619 million according to the booklet "How your tax dollar is spent" published under the authority of the Treasury Board—will not be in a position tomorrow to meet another increase in the cost of living.

According to this newspaper report, the index of beef prices has gone up. Well, that is a product necessary for elderly and poor people. We are told that the index of general consumer prices has increased, and also that the price of eggs has increased, although most egg producers are going bankrupt because of the new program. It also says that pork prices are up.

All these developments apply to both the rich and the poor in our society. For the well-to-do, there is no great difficulty in adjusting to increased cost of living and inflation, but those who have no resources, no source of extra income because they are disabled or old, are the first victims of the increase in the cost of living. And what is being done for these people? Are we merely going to talk about it? Will we do something about it, some day.

What is most expensive now? Clothes, food, shelter and finally drugs. Well, those four items I have just mentioned are those which have most consistently increased in price during the past four years. This responsible article in La Presse states that the rise in prices will continue and accelerate until it gets out of control, which, as a matter of fact, is what is now happening.

Mr. Speaker, it is high time to see to this problem. The old, the poor, the disabled need shelter, food, clothes and drugs and you will agree with me, Mr. Speaker, that the assistance meted out to them, $135 for old age pension, with a maximum of $255 for two, is ludicrous.

Unemployment, increasingly frequent closing down of factories are all problems resulting from economic deficiencies. Today's unemployment in Canada, resulting from anti-inflation measures and creating cost of living problems, is not a consequence of saturated consumer demand or of exhaustion of production resources, but solely of nondistribution of products and services. There is no scarcity of products in Canada, Mr. Speaker. In the west, there is a wheat surplus problem. In Quebec, there are milk, butter and egg surpluses, surpluses of everything. The problem in Quebec is one of overproduction, according to learned government experts. In the Maritimes, there again they have surpluses of everything. How is it that at the very time when there are surpluses of everything in Canada, poverty is increasing while unemployment and the cost of living continue to rise?

Mr. Speaker, to realize fully the need for an increase in old age security pensions to a reasonable level, in keeping with the cost of living, several factors should be taken into consideration. There is something I should like to mention, on the occasion of this speech, to stress the necessity of increasing old age pensions.

Canada draws its wealth from four main sources: the soil, subsoil, forests and waters. Our subsoil is so rich, Mr. Speaker, that it would be quicker to list the minerals that we do not find in it than those we do find. Therefore, the problem is not there.

Our soil is so rich that, as I said earlier, there are surpluses everywhere, in the west, in the east, in the Maritimes and in the central provinces. There is also a surplus of wheat, milk, fish, etc.

Our forests are so rich that they could be classed into two main categories: hardwoods and softwoods. The problem may be there. We have so much softwood, Mr. Speaker, that we do not know what to do with it. The main industries in that field are shutting down and laying off workers. So, the problem is not there since we have too much softwood. What about hardwood? Our stock is so plentiful that over the past 99 years we did not even have the courage to ensure the regrowth of our forests. We had so much of it that we gave it to the Americans, to foreigners, under extended 99-year leases. Again the problem does not lie there either. But where is it since we have so many resources? In our oceans, in our fisheries? Well, if we listen to the minister and study government statistics, we find out that here again we have surpluses.

In Denmark, a wee little country with a very high standard of living, at least favourably comparable with ours, they can count on one single resource: their subsoil. We on the other hand have at least four important groups of resources.

Japan has become the third commercial power in the world with a population of 122 million inhabitants living in 12 small cities. We Canadians have 22 million people thinly spread over one of the largest country in the world and so many resources that we do not know how to cope with them, yet we tolerate some one million unemployed.

We tolerate the fact that three families out of five are poor, according to the conclusions of the Croll report on poverty.

We have just begun implementing a tax reform establishing the poverty level at $3,000. On the other hand, we are not providing $3,000 a year for our old people to enable them to live decently. If we believe that the poverty level is at $3,000, let us give at least that strict minimum to the older people. I am almost ashamed to ask such a thing. That would not solve their problem, but their pension would almost be double what it is now.

Mr. Speaker, we must stop wasting our riches, stop deceiving citizens with hopes of creating employment. According to the brochure "How your tax dollar is spent", millions and millions are spent to create employment. Creating employment has become a mania. And as the government says: Let us create jobs or offers grants to create jobs, it adds in the same breath: We have too much wheat; let us set quotas. We have too many products in the east, let us establish ceilings. As a matter of fact, we have too much of everything. That is why there are so many things on the shelves of the department stores. While investing millions of dollars to create employment, the government says: Starve, for there are too many products.

Mr. Speaker, that shows that the problem lies nowhere but in a fair allocation of riches in Canada. Some may find that funny, but older and disabled people do not.

And, as I said in an earlier speech, the Unemployment Insurance Act itself—and do consider the sincerity of my remarks—is fine. Weekly benefits range up to $100, which shows that the government recognizes the impossibility of living with less in Canada. This legislation is fine in itself, but when we put it in the social and economic context in which we are compelled to live, we must conclude that it is more profitable to work nine months a year and to draw social welfare benefits or to be unemployed for the rest of the year than to work 12 months a year. We have reached the point where unemployment directly competes with work. And, meanwhile, poverty and wealth keep on increasing in Canada and there is no contact between the rich and the poor.

Mr. Speaker, our surplus production should be fairly distributed among all Canadians. Social Credit advocates a program whose purpose is to fill at all times the gap between prices of products offered to the consumers and the money in the hands of the consumers who want to get those products which they made. Such a system therefore rules out both inflation and deflation. It automatically and mathematically maintains balance between production and purchasing power. It puts money at the service of the people and forces them to assume their role, that is disposing of the production to the satisfaction of the consumer inasmuch as natural and industrial resources allow.

The Social Credit party is very funny but I can assure the House that the system that has been defended for 100 years is no longer funny. The Social Credit party is also a dedicated protector of ownership, of private enterprise. Any private enterprise has a social function to fulfill, which will inevitably be accomplished through a financial system consistent with the Creditiste proposals which advocate justice in distribution.

So, I say to the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) that he will never come through with a just society in Canada unless he examines the proposals regarding justice in distribution. People are fooling themselves if they do not consider distribution of wealth. What is justice? It is fair distribution or equal consideration for all Canadians. This is exactly what we are asking for.

Any individual has the triple right to life, liberty, pursuit of happiness in a free country with decent standards. This is why, Mr. Speaker, we are asking for this system. The guarantee of such a right rests on the undeniable possibility of producing today all the things necessary to their achievement by using only a fraction of the human potential.

However, in the system that has been protected for 100 years—and you will see how this can be ridiculous—yesterday's production is bought today with tomorrow's money.

This is why most Canadians are in debt up to their neck for over $17 billion. We say, as far as today's production goes, let us buy it today and pay it today to bring this never-ending indebtedness to an end.

Mr. Speaker, we are deceiving ourselves if we believe that getting deeper into debt is the way out of our indebtedness. Anyone interested can obtain the pamphlet offered by the federal government and read at page 24 that Canada's public debt stands at $46 billion—not counting private indebtedness—and that this debt eats up 14 cents of each tax dollar paid by Canadians. This year alone, it will cost us $2,160 million in interests.

That is the financial system we are protecting. For whom? For our senior citizens? No, Mr. Speaker. For the disabled? No, Mr. Speaker. For the have nots? No, Mr. Speaker. When those people reach old age they do not face the problems which plague our senior citizens.

I would like to conclude with this: to understand the potentialities of the monetary system proposed by the Social Credit Party, let us not forget that the world is now in an era of affluence and that if we have poverty it is not because there are rich people but because this affluence is not equally distributed. Therefore, no need at all to strip the rich from their wealth and give it to the poor; let us simply put some technique into the monetary system and stop repeating that money is made for man. What we should do is put money to the service of man.

Mr. Speaker, we have two choices: Either we keep on degrading people or we take the steps required to encourage individuals to build and develop their country. Either we keep on protecting high finance with our citizens as slaves or we keep high finance down and we put money to the service of the Canadian people.

I will conclude by asking two questions. Why are we so afraid in this House of a monetary reform? Why are we prepared to reform anything except our monetary system?

I would like someone to reply, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

[English]

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with a good deal of interest to the spokesmen for the opposition parties on the other side of the House, in particular to the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard) who, I think, very properly has brought a well-founded resolution before the House concerning the problem of pension adjustments in a period of inflation. This is a problem which all western societies have to face now.

Indeed the record of Canada in regard to price controls in this period of, shall we say, price stability, according to recent studies has been as good as that of any of the 14 western European nations examined. But our record is not good enough. The government, with its responsibilities, has the very difficult problem of trying to create a delicate balance between price stability and employment. So far as pensions are concerned, the problem is particularly acute. It is difficult to maintain the degree of price stability that we would all like to see because, in view of the record of our major trading partners, we generally have to stay in step with them or else pressures show up in our balance of payments, in our foreign exchange rates, and so on. But in spite of the great difficulty in maintaining a temperate degree of price stability, the problem of adjustment of pensions has to be faced. It can be faced in two ways: either in terms of an automatic escalation formula, for which the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has fought as have other members of this House or it can be faced by discretionary adjustments over a period of time. This has been the procedure in the case of the Department of Veterans Affairs.

Before discussing in more detail the adjustments for pensions, war veterans allowance and war pensions, I should like to make a few general remarks about the kind of statement we have heard today. My hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre, who is in the House at present, accused the opposition party that moved the motion of not promising enough and he did a magnificent job of outpromising them. He said that pensions should not merely be escalated for the cost of living but that the old age pension should be brought up to the basic level of $150 a month and the age limit lowered to 60 years. I think this is a fair summary of one of his recommendations. Mr. Speaker, we have gone through this debate at other times in this House. If it were only as simple as that. If the only thing to be done was for members of this House to be kind and generous and pass the motion, then pensions would flow on unhindered. If life were that simple it would be very nice.

The fact is that sums of this magnitude are very consequential. I have made some calculation and it would take something in the order of $1¼ billion to increase the pension of everyone over the age of 65 to $150 a month. This is regardless of whether or not they get the supplement. I may be out in my calculations but I think that is approximately correct. Reducing the age from 65 to 60 would substantially increase the cost. I know that my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre says that costs do not matter but he knows that increased expenditures of that amount are inflationary unless drastic measures are taken to compensate with revenue from other sources. It is not enough to give everybody what they would like. Then, why stop at $150? If we were to approve it, the hon. member would raise his sights. The fact is that these proposals in themselves are inflationary. It is like trying to solve the problem of putting out the fire by throwing gasoline on it. To those pensioners suffering from the increase in the cost of living, it is no compensation to promise measures which cannot be enacted consistent with even that degree of price stability which we have today.

As I indicated, Mr. Speaker, the Department of Veterans Affairs has been concerned about the problem and over a period of time has undertaken to adjust those pension rates which fall within its jurisdiction. Hon. members will recall that on March 17, in reply to a question from the hon. member from Winnipeg North Centre, the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Laing) stated that consideration is being given to representations by the War Amputations of Canada asking for an increase in basic rates of pensions. He further stated that, while basic rates of war veterans allowance are not presently under review, "an action taken in one place might have consequences in another". The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is smiling, but this is precisely the exchange that took place.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I hope it is true.

Mr. Francis: I should add that the minister met with representatives of the association a few weeks ago. For some years it has been the practice of the government to review basic rates of both pensions and war veterans allowances once in about every two years, and to make any adjustments that might appear warranted.

Pursuant to this policy, basic rates of pension were raised by 11.1 per cent, effective September 1, 1964. Two years later, on September 1, 1966, the rates were again increased by 15 per cent. Just 16 months later, on January 1, 1968, the pension rates were raised by 15.2 per cent. Finally, just a year ago, on April 1, 1971, the basic rates of pension were again raised by 10 per cent. At the present time a 100 per cent pensioner, married and with one child, receives a pension of $4,920 a year. In addition, he may receive an exceptional incapacity allowance of up to $2,400 per annum under the provisions of last year's amendments to the Pension Act—I want to come back to this in a moment—and a further amount of up to $3,000 a year in attendance allowance. All these amounts are exempt from income tax. Furthermore, I have already indicated that the matter of basic rates of pension is under review again.

Summarizing the situation on disability pensions, I would point out that, considering only the basic rates and ignoring all the other supplementary payments, pension rates during the ten years between 1961 and 1971 have risen by 67 per cent, while consumer prices rose by only half as much, 33 per cent.

The position with respect to basic rates of war veterans allowance is very similar. On September 1, 1964 they were increased by 11.9 per cent. Exactly two years later on September 1, 1966, they went up by 11.7 per cent. A year ago, on April 1, 1971, these basic rates were raised by 15 per cent. Taking together the increases of the ten-year period from April 1, 1961 to April 1, 1971, the rise in basic rates of war veterans allowance has also been more than double the rise in consumer prices.

In the financial estimates for the year 1972-73, a sum of $232,550,000 has been requested for the payment of disability pensions and pensions to survivors, and a further $78½ million for the payment of war veterans allowance. In addition, a sum of $8¾ million is being provided under the assistance fund regulations, to give supplementary financial help to those individual cases whose needs may not be fully met through the war veterans allowance program. Some people will say there is no sum of money that will fully compensate those who have risked their health or their lives in the defence of their country, and I would not deny this argument for a moment. The fact remains, however, that both disability pensioners and recipients of war veterans allowance are very much better off financially as a result of the adjustments over a period of time.

I can only say this, Mr. Speaker, that as to the future, the government intends to keep faith with these veterans. Under the policy already established, a review of rates under both plans would be made and if changes appeared to be required, legislation would be introduced in order to authorize any adjustments.

I want to say a word or two about the exceptional incapacity allowance. My good friend who moved this motion—we are quite good personal friends and I have known him for some ten years—asked the question this afternoon when he was talking about what the government had done for prisoners in other theatres than Hong Kong, and then he said that nothing whatsoever had been done. I asked about payment of the exceptional incapacity allowance. The initial review of the cases under the new legislation was completed in early January this year, and awards were made to over 1,000 pensioners, a number of whom were former prisoners of war. I do not exactly know the numbers at the moment, but there are certainly many among them. The amounts awarded vary between $800 and $2,400 per year. A 100 per cent pensioner who did not receive the award that he wanted in the first screening or was dissatisfied with the award made, may apply to have his case reconsidered.

Mr. Speaker, I am sure there are many people for whom the measures that have been taken are not enough, but I can only say that the measures that have been undertaken are in the right direction. I had the honour of chairing a committee which made recommendations on the basis of which I believe the legislation was drafted which came into this House. It is true that the initial recommendations of the committee were for higher ceilings, but we achieved a major breakthrough in the principle involving exceptional incapacity allowances. Those recommendations were designed to deal with the kind of thing which the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard) has talked about.

I should like to put on our Hansard record part of a news release. The release is dated today and is by the Minister of Veterans Affairs. It relates to three amendments to the War Veterans and Civilian War Allowances regulations. Hon. members may have noted that the first of these relates to the cost of living increase affecting Old Age Security and guaranteed income supplement. This will benefit some 46,500 veterans and dependents. It means that these cost of living adjustments are now exempt as income. This matter the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre raised with the minister not long ago.

As I say, the benefit represents an increase for a single recipient of $2.70 a month and for a married recipient, if both partners in the marriage are drawing the guaranteed income supplement, of $5.10 a month. The new regulation comes into effect on April 1.

The second amendment removes the four-month restriction that previously applied to full time employment if earnings from such employment were to be considered as exempt income. A single recipient will now benefit by an exemption of $800 on his earned income regardless of the duration of his employment and a married recipient will be entitled to a $1,200 exemption. The result of this change will be that those who are able to take advantage of this provision can now earn a total income, if single, of $2,732 annually or, if married, of $4,452 annually.

The minister announced today a third amendment which covers that small group of veterans who want to leave Canada and live outside Canada. Under existing legislation, they are obliged to apply for old age security benefits and the guaranteed income supplement, and these may, in some cases, make them ineligible for veterans allowances entitlements. At present, if they leave Canada, they lose their old age security and supplement in certain circumstances. They are not eligible outside Canada to receive war veterans allowances. The department is now—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. I regret that the hon. member's time has expired.

Mr. Francis: Mr. Speaker, may I complete my sentence?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Francis: This amendment now permits those people, prior to departure from Canada, to replace income received through old age security with war veterans allowances and civilian war allowances, which may still be paid outside Canada. Thus they can leave Canada and take with them these allowances. They will not be deprived of benefits outside Canada.

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, may I begin by commending my colleague for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard) for bringing forward his most valuable motion, a motion which has brought about this debate on a matter of concern and compassion. He opened by making a fine statement that was full of feeling and showed himself to be a man of concern and compassion.

It is interesting to note, Sir, that our proceedings today began with a statement from one minister. He talked about employment opportunities and other programs concerning youth. The programs are not very satisfactory, but they are all that we have today. There is something significant about the concern of the hon. member. I am sure all hon. members here have had experiences similar to mine in dealing with the great problems that face us and that face, in particular, the two groups to whom we have referred. We know of the lack of jobs for many. This lack affects especially the young, and those who are well educated and well trained.

I am sure every one of us here has a dossier on young people trying to find employment. Day in and day out I am sure every one of us hears of the anxiety of our older citizens. At a time when tranquility, security and confidence should be theirs, they are fraught with anxiety, poverty and fear. Surely, these are appalling and shameful conditions. Someone said that the war on poverty may never have got under way and that the war on inflation was a failure. That war, however, found two victims, the unemployed man and the pensioner. In a great country as rich as Canada—and we can produce all sorts of statistics to show our national riches and national greatness—far, far too many people are living in poverty. We did not need the Senate Committee to demonstrate to us that which we already know. Many thousands of Canadians face insecurity and inadequacy in this great land. Living costs are accelerating all the time. Rents are going up; all costs are rising and the value of the dollar is shrinking, ever shrinking. For most of the people we have in mind today, there are no great unions, no powerful pressure lobbies, no pressure groups; those people are the victims, the silent, sad victims of a grossly mismanaged economy.

If we heed all the portents and read the report of the Governor of the Bank of Canada, we will see that this group is in for even more hardship, because that report shows that our failure in the war on inflation will soon bring its baleful results. As the parliamentary secretary suggested, those people about whom we are concerned have too often become footballs and their plight has too often been an area of neglect. It was one of the great indications of public disfavour when a former Liberal government fell after it had revealed a unique and cold lack of compassion. At that time the six buck slogan helped to bring to an end a government which had lost compassion and concern for the poor of this country.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Their last basic increase was only 42 cents.

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Speaker, the leader of the party of which I am proud to be a member does not possess outstanding abilities in the field of dramatic arts—except when he is at an NDP party.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Macquarrie: Although the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) may radiate less charisma than certain other leaders, it is obvious, as he has demonstrated, that he possesses much more concern than some others.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Macquarrie: He has made commitments to the people of this country. One of those is within the parameters of the motion we are discussing today. It was my hope, and I am sure it was the hope of the hon. member who moved the motion and moved it so well, to see every hon. member of the House giving his support to it. I had hoped the parliamentary secretary would say, "On an opposition day a motion has been moved which I and my colleagues and all other members in the House will support, so that word may go out to the poor and aged that the House of Commons is prepared to stand together on this one important subject." Of course, this step is not sufficient, but it would be one step, at least, and it would show that we are united and unanimous in supporting this just idea; for this is the minimum that we ought to do and it ought to have been done long ago for the people of this country. No pensioner should ever have been allowed to fall behind because of the outrageous neglect to include a proper escalator provision affecting pensions in a time of terrible and rising costs. No pensioner should have been denied such simple justice. Certainly, the parliamentary secretary, when he produced his statistics, could have indicated that pensioners would not be denied justice. That would have raised the status of this House in the eyes of the people of Canada, because all would have seen that we believe in justice.

I listened to the parliamentary secretary's statistics, and they were interesting. I was reminded of the statistics my colleague, the hon. member for Malpeque (Mr. MacLean) mentioned. I remember his referring to a man who drowned in a lake, the average depth of which was 12 inches. Of course, there are all sorts of statistics that can be produced if one wants to go about the country self-righteously saying to the pensioners and the poor, "You never had it so good". Anyone who says that is putting a great strain on his own credibility.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Speaker, there are hundreds of thousands of unfortunate Canadians today, and if you tell them they never had it so good, you will get a reaction that is far from positive, let me assure you.

• (1710)

This resolution covers many people; the old, those who require security most. Instead of that, they are expressing frustration and insecurity. It concerns the veterans. They are getting older and their job opportunities are diminishing. The costs of their daily needs are increasing. I say to the parliamentary secretary that he can put forward statistics all day and all night, but I know that thousands and thousands of these people are not getting enough. They must and should get more. Let us not monkey around with statistics.

If I had time, and I do not have time today, I could point out that there are countries in the world which do a far better job for their veterans than this country. One simple indicator is that the basic rate for veterans pensions in the United States is $5,400, almost $2,000 more than Canada's basic rate of $3,504. Let the government spokesman stick out his chest over that. Time and again we run across the problems of the widow with a young dependant who is not yet through university. The other day I received a call about a fine young man with just one more year to go to obtain his University degree, but his student allowance is to be cut off. Where does the widow turn? Some hon. members who spoke before me mentioned former civil servants and other groups who are bottled in and suppressed in an economic pressure tank. Something must be done for them.

One problem that has troubled many of us, again in connection with veterans, is the heavy backlog which faces the Canada Pension Commission. I think this is a fine group of civil servants, but they cannot cope with 1,000 applications a month and do justice to them. For months the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall) has been appealing for additional help for the Canada Pension Commission to get through the backlog. As these veterans wait, they are not getting any richer or any younger. They are not getting action. Some of them are dying. This is the kind of thing a government of compassion would do.

There is no shortage of personnel when the government wants to expand the office of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). Surely, a few can be found to assist the Canada Pension Commission. This is a very serious question in every part of the country, including my own. The parliamentary secretary may represent an area where everybody is content with what they get and happy when told that they are getting more than ever before. However, I have received statistics from what should be called the Dominion Bureau of Statistics but what is now called Statistics Canada. These indicate that in the city of Charlottetown, a place for which for many years it was difficult to get precise statistics, the cost of living has increased from January 1969 by 11.3 points in comparison with 6.4 for Saint John and 3.8 for Halifax.

When we ask why Prince Edward Island is excluded from the increase in feed grain subsidies, no one even bothers to give us a reply. When we talk about the transportation problems which increase the cost of living, we discover that there were 29 increases in freight rates in eight years. There is a lack of sensitivity, a lack of compassion and a lack of concern. Surely, it is the government's role in a society like ours to be the friend of those who need friends, those who suffer from the economic system most.

We talk about regional disparities, but surely disparity between groups of citizens must also be looked after as a number one priority of the government. I call upon those who momentarily occupy the seats of office in this country to take note of the wise, thoughtful suggestions contained in this motion and the compassion restraint and moderate tones with which the very eloquent, dedicated member who moved it suggested they be accomplished. The government should transcend politics for once and allow the old, the dispossessed, the poor and the struggling to see the House of Commons at its best.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, we have made our position perfectly clear with regard to this motion. We intend to vote for it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. MacInnis: We realize that its intent is to help the old people of this country and those retired people on pension. To this extent, we favour it. However, we want to point out that between the intent and the effect there is a big difference. To merely put an escalator clause in effect at this time would do very little to rescue the elderly people from the strait jacket in which they find themselves. Nothing can rescue them from that except a revision of the basic pension.

My colleague, who more than any other man has the right to be called "the pensions advocate of the House of Commons", has already outlined the three elements which are essential in determining a basic pension. First, it should be set in relation to the cost of living. Second, it should be set in relation to the productivity of the country and, third, in relation to the standard of living prevailing in the country at the time. The escalator clause is the final feature which is necessary on top of such a basic pension. It makes sense.

I wish to refer to a letter which I recently received from an old age pensioner in Vancouver. I quote:

We got notice recently of a projected raise of 2 per cent but which will not take effect for us till May 1st, 1972. The raise mentioned was not only ridiculously low but why mention it so far ahead when they are nearly 30 per cent behind in the cost of living index now.

I suggest to the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis) that the elderly people in this country are not being taken in by his dextrous use of figures with regard to the cost of living and the escalator clause. The hon. member said there were a number of occasions when there had been a raise in the basic pension. Yes, the old age pension in particular has been raised on those occasions when it became politically dangerous not to do so, but never has the old age pension been set in relation to those factors I have mentioned. I challenge members on the government side to tell us what studies were made into any of those factors in setting the basic old age pension at any time in its history.

The hon. member for Ottawa West also referred to the fact of the government adopting the policy of discretionary adjustments. I think he may have been referring to veterans' pensions at that time. The party to which I belong is not at all enamoured of the way discretionary adjustments work in the hands of the government. We want a fair basic pension as a matter of right, one which cannot be tampered with or denied. That is the only kind of pension that is any good to the retired people of this country.

Our position on this matter is that at the present time pensions should be fixed at $150 a month or $1,800 a year for a single person. That is still well below the poverty line worked out in 1969 according to the Bureau of Statistics. At that time the poverty line for a single person was set at $1,894 and for two persons at $3,157. If that was true in 1969, then, judging by the way in which the cost of living has risen since that time, the figure of $150 is too low. Our only reason for proposing it is that we felt we had better ask for a figure at least in the same stratosphere as that which the government might accept.

Spokesmen for the government tell us the country cannot afford an increase at this time. The best and quickest answer to that assertion was given by the hon. member for Simcoe-North (Mr. Rynard) when he told the House that at the end of 1971 there were $639 million in the old age security fund. He added that this money had been contributed by the elderly people of this country and that to leave it where it was, undistributed, while making excuses for not paying decent basic pensions at a reasonable amount, was cheating them. Yes, it is cheating them and deceiving them as well. As long as we have this sum of $639 million in the fund, we have no possible justification for saying we cannot afford an increase.

The old people are not stupid. They do not believe the nation cannot afford an increase. Expenditures in connection with the Bonaventure, the Avro Arrow and other things were mentioned this afternoon. I want to say, as did the hon. member for Simcoe North, that no difficulty was encountered when it came to raising the pensions substantially of members of the House of Commons and of the Senate. I voted against that particular measure and I have the distinction of belonging to the only party in this House which voted against it. I think this is well worth recalling when we are considering whether or not we can afford the kind of action I am urging.

In the next two or three minutes I want to let the old people speak for themselves and give their own views about living on an old age pension at this time. I have no doubt that members in all parts of the House can produce similar letters. Here is one from St. Léonard in the Province of Quebec:

Dear Mrs. MacInnis:

I wrote you last June about my pension troubles down here in our Belle Province. At that time I told you that my wife and I were getting $135 per month between us in my old age pension and supplements plus $14 per month from Quebec, between us, for medicines. My wife is only 64, so she gets no pension. She needs new glasses and her spinal brace fixed. I attend the hospital every month for blood tests and a check-up as I suffer from heart trouble and hardening of the arteries in my legs. We were getting $149 per month. In August, 1971 my $14 from Quebec was stopped. They said we were getting too much. I was getting my medicines at the hospital at cost price but on January 1, 1972 they stopped it on the grounds that the government was not helping them enough to meet the cost. Medicine now costs me an average of $14 per month. I wrote to Mr. Munro in Ottawa. He referred me to Quebec, so I wrote to Mr. Castonguay. He referred my letter to the local office in Montreal and they sent me and my doctor more forms to fill up. But that is months ago and I guess they are still studying them yet. I have been to see them as I had my bottom teeth out in February, 1971 and I need new glasses, which they say they will help me pay for. But I am still waiting, both for teeth and glasses.

Enclosed is a letter I received from the welfare office. I wish you could read it out to Mr. Trudeau and ask him whether this is his idea of a just society.

I shall be very glad to read it to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). He may find it in Hansard. This was the response from the authorities in the Province of Quebec:

Your needs were established as follows: food, clothing, personal necessities, $76; cost of room, $50; for a total sum of $126 per month. As your income from the old age pension is $135 monthly, you have an exceedent of $9 per month for your ordinary needs. However, if you need medication exceeding $9 a month for you and your wife, or a set of artificial teeth, take an appointment with your social security agent at your local office as soon as possible.

Instead of getting annoyed and saying that the Quebec authorities are failing to provide adequate supplementary benefits, and that sort of thing, I shall say that we, in this federal parliament, are squarely responsible for not having provided an old age pension which would have covered this man's needs adequately, and for not having reduced the pensionable age to 60 so that his poor wife could have adequate treatment for her dental and medical needs. The way we treat the old people is disgusting. Like the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Rowland), I am getting fed up with a government which sits smugly opposite and talks about how much better it is here than in Timbuctoo or other far off regions of the earth and does nothing to take the money which has accumulated in its coffers on trust for these people and use it to give them a decent pension.

Here is a short letter from Montreal:

We live on a basic pension of $80. We had an increase of $42 a few years ago.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Forty-two cents.

Mrs. MacInnis: Forty-two cents.

The cost of living is continuously increasing. Rents have increased as well, due to taxes. Of course, Trudeau is a millionaire. He does not know what it is to eat only one meal a day. I am sure he has never put his foot inside a food store. After we have paid the rent, light and phone there is not enough left for food, so we cannot afford more than one meal a day.

These are conditions which are duplicated many thousands of times over. The old people of Canada are sick and tired of inquiries, committees, task forces and white papers. They want a chance to live their last few years in a modicum of decency and dignity.

I want to read a letter, now, from my home city—it happens to be in the riding of the hon. member opposite: for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Deachman):

> The powers that be would be well-advised to hire a few old pensioners to steer things straight as there are a lot of brains among them lying dormant. Nobody pays them any attention, but they raised, fed and took care of you people without too much help other than their own make-do. Now we are old and have done our work, and in most cases we made a pretty good job of it. What do we get? The brush-off. How can any two people live and get the right care on $250 per month? We don't drink, smoke, drive a car or go anywhere for pleasure. Sure, we own our own home, but we have to provide fuel and food and sundry supplies such as transportation, drugs, clothes, glasses, hearing aids, etc, with no reserve money saved up for emergencies. Then we must keep our home in repair and replacements up to working order, attending to garden, lawns, taxes, painting and general upkeep on no extra money.
> An average pensioner couple such as we are cannot possibly do all this on less than $350 to $400 per month, but this is what we would be obliged to do if we rented, and bought the other commodities over and above rent.
> The 11 per cent sales tax prevents us buying building and upkeep materials, so we do without and more or less let the property run down, not even protecting our investment up to a saleable condition. I do not think it would be an impossible job for the government to pay this extra pension.

Wait until they learn about that $639 million in the old age security fund. They will certainly not have any doubts then as to whether it is possible for the government to pay higher pensions. I read again:

> The causes for being in these circumstances now is the result of past government actions as outlined above and government today is still on the same track of procrastinating to the detriment of the many by so few.

The days of procrastinating on the part of this government are coming to a close. No matter when the election is called, I want to warn the government that there are well organized pensioners across this country who know the facts, who know there is money for all the things for which the government wants to find money, who are determined, if the government will not give them a fair break, to retire the government on pensions which unfortunately are far too adequate when compared with the pensions received by the old age pensioners who are now suffering in the cities and across the countryside of Canada.

Mr. André Ouellet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I cannot tolerate that the situation of the Canadian people be made as appalling as some opposition members would like us to believe.

The weakness of the non-confidence motion introduced today lies in a series of most important omissions. Mr. Speaker, it is unfair to have the Canadian people believe that this government does not deal with poverty in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, it is unfair to have the Canadian people believe that this government does not look after older people. It is unfair also to have the Canadian people believe that this government does not care for the underprivileged.

This government has published a white paper on income security for Canadians. The opposition members should be aware of that paper. It should be their Bible, so to speak, their bedside book, and having heard what some opposition members had to say this afternoon, I feel they must get acquainted with it. I intend to send it to them because I think that either they pretend to know it or, simply, they do not.

It must be stressed that the income security programs in Canada can be applied and remain useful only under a flourishing economy and price stability. Unless the system affords most employable individuals an opportunity to exercise their basic skills profitably, the national resources required for funding income security will fall short and our country will be deprived of the necessary means to help those who cannot contribute, wholly or partially, to the endeavours of the working population.

Now the government's white paper lays particular emphasis on the considerable number of income security programs which are based at present on a continuous improvement of economic growth during the last 50 years.

Our objectives are twofold: first a guaranteed income, and then the maintenance of income.

The guaranteed income reduces insecurity, temporarily alleviates financial difficulties and prevents or decreases poverty for most citizens who may expect to be part of the active population.

On the other hand, the maintenance of income is intended more directly for poor people because they cannot be part of the active population for various reasons beyond their will.

The white paper studies priorities in the light of modern problems. One of these is the existence of several important groups of people who lack resources and opportunities compared with most of their fellow citizens. Among these we find, naturally, the aged, who were discussed today, female heads of families with dependent children, the disabled and the working poor. I must say that the situation is particularly serious for female heads of families.

Now, simultaneously, some income protection programs are being increasingly criticized because they are universal. Still, they benefit all Canadians regardless of income and, in some cases, considerable amounts of money are paid to people of amply sufficient means.

Mr. Speaker, here is the challenge the government must now meet in its program: it must formulate a new income security policy that would allow assistance to those in greatest need of it, while respecting what other programs are intended to stimulate the economic development on which our present social welfare system is based.

Mr. Speaker, we must now concentrate our efforts on the fight against poverty. All hon. members will surely agree with me that this must be done in such a way as to allow the greatest possible concentration of available resources in aid to those whose income is the lowest. In every possible instance, selective payments, based on income, must be substituted for universal payments which do not take into account the real income of the recipient.

Moreover, social insurance programs should be extended to areas of prevention or reduction of poverty. The result should therefore be a more stable income basis for families and individuals, and in particular for older people with low income.

Government research on the ways to reach the objectives of this new policy has been very complete and has taken into consideration the opinions and the views of various groups, especially the criticism against existing programs.

The arguments in favour of a single guaranteed income system that would replace all existing income security programs have been studied in depth. Very few programs now carried out can be eliminated without causing grave prejudices to a number of people. The old age security pensions as well as the veterans pensions cannot be put aside at present. Furthermore, we think that a complete plan with adequate payments would be extremely burdensome. Nevertheless in the white paper the Canadian government has made proposals to extend a selective form of guaranteed income.

In our opinion the best way to offset the drawbacks of the existing system is not to replace our programs by a comprehensive guaranteed income plan, as some opposition members have suggested. It seems to us that the best way to do this is to review the guidelines for income security, to reassess the priorities and the scope of our plans and to find a kind of plan which will best enable us to achieve our main goals.

Our century, Mr. Speaker, has rapidly become the century dedicated to the well-being of the individuals. And it seems curious to me that today, through the motion that has been introduced, members opposite pretend not to realize that the government is bringing the utmost attention to this.

• (1740)

For the past ten years, in fact, the federal and the provincial governments have implemented a whole set of welfare measures to ensure a minimum of security for Canadians and for older citizens in particular.

The progress made indicates a real revolution in comparison with the previous situation. Let us remember the darker days of the economic crisis of 1927, when citizens had to fight alone to secure their daily subsistence.

It used to be that you had to ensure your security and subsistence for your old age. Now, governments take care of that for the citizens.

Programs such as medicare, hospitalization insurance and unemployment insurance protect the citizens against the prohibitive costs of illness or loss of a job. Other programs including family allowances, social welfare, old age security pension and its supplement, aim at guaranteeing income security.

The best part of these social measures is borne by the federal government which earmarks one quarter of its yearly estimates for social security; in other words, 25 cents of every tax dollar is allocated to social security.

Welfare programs have been so expanded and diversified that they require constant updating and adaptation to modern changes. Indeed, the hon. members who moved this motion today intended to question some of our measures. I do not blame them for that, but I think it is strange that they do not take the opportunity of pointing out what the present government is doing precisely to help our senior citizens and those who are most underprivileged in Canada.

The federal government's white paper in particular made a great deal of the fact that we have to fight poverty. It is in this spirit that the government implemented its welfare measures. It is really inacceptable that in a society as affluent as ours, compared with several other countries of the world, there should still be people who lack the basic necessities.

No government is working with more energy toward eradicating social injustice and inequality in Canada than the government led by our Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). The just society is not only a slogan. It is made more and more real everyday to the benefit of large families, elderly people and invalids.

Canada, which is recognized as having probably the best welfare system in the world, constantly tries to keep abreast of social progress.

I can say that from the cradle to the grave, the Canadian citizen can reckon on government's assistance to provide him with financial security.

And I do not think any class of society matters more in the eyes of the present government than those people who have to leave the mainstream of active life when they reach retirement age. More than anyone else, those people are entitled to a modicum of comfort and security.

Since today's world is centered on youth, it is often difficult to integrate the aged into the modern community. Though we must assist the young generation, we should not for all that neglect those who, through their work and devotion, have contributed to build the present.

Through the old age security plan, every senior citizen is entitled to a basic pension of $80 a month. Over the past few years, this plan has undergone major changes. The age of eligibility for a pension has been gradually reduced by the government from 70 to 65. Basic benefits have gone from $75 to $80 a month.

However, knowing that this income would not be sufficient for the needs of the elderly, considering the rise in the cost of living, the Canadian government initiated another old age security plan, the guaranteed income supplement. Added to the initial pension, and subject to a means test, this supplementary pension, which amounted originally to $31.83 a month for single persons and $63.66 for aged couples, has increased to $55 and $65 respectively.

These changes now enable a pensioner to draw a minimum monthly income of $135 instead of $113.61.

At the present time, 1,750,000 citizens receive a basic monthly pension of $80. It is estimated that some 470,000 individuals will draw the full amount of the guaranteed income supplement and that 550,000 others will receive partial benefits. This means that about 60 per cent of people over 65 will benefit from that program.

I think I should point out, Mr. Speaker, that at the present time the recipients of the old age pension alone or of the old age pension combined with the guaranteed income supplement already obtain tremendous assistance from the Canadian government. Their minimum income will be greatly increased when they begin to receive benefits under the Quebec or the Canada pension plan.

I would like to say in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, that one million aged couples are directly receiving a guaranteed annual income of $3,060 from the federal government. It can be considered as a minimum protection but is undoubtedly a complete reversal of the conditions a few years ago. I believe that we can look to the future with optimism because, as retired persons will be receiving benefits under their pension plan and the government will be continuing to improve its pension plan, our senior citizens will certainly be drawing better incomes as they deserve.

Mr. F. J. Bigg (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to support this motion. I was questioned by the Postmaster General (Mr. Côté) who spoke from his seat a few moments ago while the hon. lady from Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis) was speaking. He asked whether I was a socialist because I applauded the hon. lady for supporting this motion. One does not have to be a socialist to have regard for the old folk. Surely every Canadian has regard for the old folk. As a member of the Conservative party for the last 14 years, I am very proud that our party has been foremost in thinking about the welfare of the older people. I am only sorry that the income of our older people has never been brought up to the level at which I think it should be. This does not make me a socialist.

Mr. Speaker, I wish you would discipline the Postmaster General, who insists on interrupting my speech. He apparently has nothing to contribute to the debate, but still insists on interrupting.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): Why don't you answer me?

Mr. Bigg: I do not think it is necessary.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I suggest that hon. members should give the hon. member for Pembina (Mr. Bigg) the opportunity of making his speech and in due course they could in turn ask questions. Obsiously, the hon. member who has the floor has the privilege of making his remarks without being interrupted; he is not even obliged to answer questions when they are directed at him when he has the floor.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): On a point or order, Mr. Speaker.

In my opinion, the hon. member has talked about a question which I asked him; I can assure him that that question will not appear in Hansard. However, I would ask him to tell me what answer he gave to my question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): I must admit that the point of order raised by the minister is unfounded and, in my opinion, the best thing to do is to let the hon. member begin his remarks at least. During his speech, the hon. member could decide whether he will allow the minister to ask him a question.

The hon. member for Pembina.

[English]

Mr. Bigg: Mr. Speaker, I can understand the minister's desire to cut short my speech, because in the 15 minutes at my disposal what I say will not necessarily be complimentary of the government.

I was speaking of the necessity of raising the old age pension for our senior citizens. I point out that this has nothing to do, I hope, with party politics. The question is whether our senior citizens are entitled not only to the gratitude of the Canadian people but to be paid the money which they have already put into the fund. I think the point has been clearly established that in fact we are not giving them anything; we are merely custodians of a very large fund which has been put aside to look after them in their old age. They are entitled to this money and I suggest that now is a good time to give them that to which they are fully entitled.

Not only old age pensioners are referred to in this motion; there is also the question of federal government pensions. I am affected personally in this regard and hope I will be allowed to comment on the subject. There is no fairness, and there never has been, in the way federal government pensions are handled. Anyone who has served the federal government, and through it the people of Canada, should have equitable treatment. If I had time to go into cases I would explain my own case.

Hon. members might be surprised to know that one could work in the civil service during peacetime, take a job during wartime, for example in the mounted police so that one was not subject to military service, go back to the civil service after the war, and all this service would count for pension purposes. However, in my case and in the case of several others this was not the situation. The lobby on this matter is very small and I have hesitated to raise it. I do so now because it is well worth looking into. I should like to know when this question will be considered without the necessity of lobbying.

Four, five or six people are affected in this manner. When you ask the government to look into these matters they say it is impossible to go back beyond a certain date; if your pension has not been calculated to a certain date it is impossible to go back beyond that date. I do not think that is justifiable. I think it is unfair. Adjustments have been made in respect of pensions, but what kind of adjustments? Pensions are usually adjusted on a percentage basis; therefore, if you are receiving $10,000 and there is a 10 per cent increase, you will receive an extra $1,000 a year. But if your pension is $40 a month, you get an increase of $4 a month which certainly does not lift you above the poverty level.

This kind of thing is unfair. This is not a question of petty politics at all. I am asking for equity and I hope that all parties in the House and all governments are interested in seeing that there is equity. It is no excuse for a government to say that equity cannot be given. Of course it can, and this House has the power to give it. If this House knows that inequitable treatment is given to civil servants, members of the mounted police or members of the armed forces, it is not only right but it is our duty to see that the inequity is eliminated. I should like to see justice done in this respect—and not only because I am personally involved.

Perhaps I have been delinquent in not taking up the case of the four or five people who are not able to stand in the House and speak. I am privileged to speak for myself, but I am not doing only that: I am begging that these matters be considered. They are well known to the authorities, to the civil service and to the mounted police. It is well known in every corner of Canada that people unfortunate enough to have retired 20 or 30 years ago receive a miserable pension which means they are living well below the poverty level. They are not in a position to come here and beg. I think it is my duty to raise this question. We have an army of civil servants in this country numbering hundreds of thousands. They should be interested. I beg them to look into this matter and bring forward recommendations so that these inequities can be corrected.

A few days ago we heard in the House about the magnificent treatment we are giving our veterans. I am happy at the steps that have been taken so far but I remind the House that it took us 26 years to do something for the Hong Kong veterans. Again, I take a personal interest in the Hong Kong veterans because I was there when the Winnipeg Grenadiers arrived in Winnipeg on their return from Hong Kong. I have sat in the veterans affairs committee and heard people ask what proof we have that these veterans are sick—because they have no wounds, no bullet holes! I carried off that train men who weighed 85 pounds and who when they joined the army weighed 185 pounds. What more proof do you need?

It took us 26 years to give them equity. It is suggested that we should be satisfied because we made it possible for them to receive a 50 per cent pension. I do not think we should be particularly proud of that, not after 26 years. It should be a 100 per cent pension for everyone who wants it, and certainly for everyone who needs it. These men have made heroic efforts to remain fully employed. Those boys who came back from Hong Kong were carried off in our arms, like babies, some of them blind. They made a wonderful recovery and I venture to say that for a great many of them the record is magnificent. They have gone back to Canadian public life, to the firms for which they worked, to the woods and to their farms, and to the best of their ability they have been 100 per cent productive. But they have done it with broken bodies.

It turns my stomach to hear anyone in the House or in the media say we have done a magnificent job of rewarding these people. I heard one hon. member here—I will not mention his name—point out that some of these fellows are getting $13,700 a year. That is a lie. He took the worst cases, people who are paraplegic, blind and without hope, added together the cost of their hospitalization and the miserable pittance their wives are receiving—wives who have spent 26 years nursing these hulks of humanity—and said we gave them $13,700 a year. This is about half what we get. And we call it magnificent! I do not want to call it a disgrace, and I know there is a bottom to the public purse—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I must interrupt the hon. member. It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until 8 p.m.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Bigg: Mr. Speaker, before six o'clock I was speaking about the Hong Kong veterans and the need that many of these men still have in spite of recent improvements to veterans legislation. In 1971 we in the veterans affairs committee were satisfied that we had finally given the old section 70, the benefit of the doubt provision, a new look. We have been assured that the benefit of the doubt will in fact be given to veterans. I am not at all worried about veterans abusing this section, particularly the Hong Kong boys who have done all they can for themselves. I believe the next move is up to us. Having got them to the 50 per cent level, it is up to us to consider the possibility of their needing a 100 per cent pension.

Over the years the compensation given to soldiers has been the same. The bench-mark has been the wage level of a labourer. We have never taken into account the special skills that a man had. Take the case of a professional pianist. He is not compensated at the level of his ability to play the piano. If he loses a hand, or both hands, he is compensated strictly at the labouring level. In the year 1972 we are still paying our veterans at the labouring level, but in effect we are not paying the full average wage of a labourer in Canada. I suggest that the level is now $5,000 or $6,000, the wage that is paid to the ordinary manual labourer, the cleaner on the Hill, the person who works with his muscles.

I know the taxpayer's pocket is not bottomless but I think we should live up to the agreement we intended to carry out in the first place, namely, to compensate our veterans according to their physical disability. If only that principle were followed I am sure the present level of veterans pensions would be shown to be far below the level of that which should be expected of a generous country such as ours. I do not want to draw comparisons with other countries, but I believe we are capable of giving our veterans a higher level of compensation. One may ask where we will get the money. It is a question of priority. I cannot think of a higher priority than paying adequate pensions to the people who defended our country and enabled us for the past 25 or 26 years to enjoy the second highest standard of living in the world.

Many veterans become unemployable as they get on in years. They are incapable of maintaining themselves at a reasonable level of health. This is where section 70 should apply, particularly in respect of prisoners of war and men who have psychosomatic problems. As a modern nation we realize that psychosomatic problems can be just as damaging as physical wounds caused by gunshot.

We have made great strides in improving veterans legislation. I am proud of the strides we have made but I do not think we can sit back and say we have done all we can. Until we use the benefit of the doubt rule completely and take the soldier's word that he is suffering because of what happened to him during war, we cannot be completely fair. From personal experience I know that the best soldiers very rarely went sick. They do not have documents to prove every time they were sick. Most of the time they never went sick even if they had pneumonia or flu. I have seen in the front line men covered with boils, a very terrible and dangerous condition which can lead to complications. These men stayed in the front line and fought. They should have been hospitalized, but they would not leave their buddies. They have no documentation to prove that they were sick, but the result of their neglect of their bodies for our sake followed into the post-war years. Some of the Hong Kong veterans—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret having to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, having been advised of what many members of the opposition had to say about pensions this afternoon, I thought it would be helpful if I dealt with the policy considerations underlying the proposals already adopted by the government and the proposals that we have formulated for the future approval of this House. When I read what many members of the opposition have to say about pensions and how they would treat them, there seems to be a continuing determination not to resolve the philosophy that they ultimately wish to adopt in this whole area. I am referring, of course, to their remarks with regard to the guaranteed annual income while at the same time talking about increasing universal payments to everyone irrespective of income. In its simplest terms, this seems to me to point up a contradiction and a failure to come to grips with the policy that can best be adopted to help those in need of assistance.

As many hon. members know, the reasoning behind our income security proposals to date has been based on three techniques designed to assist people, to provide for their security and to prevent them from living in circumstances of deprivation. First, of course, is our social insurance scheme. I am referring particularly, in the income security context of pensions today, to the Canada Pension Plan. This is contributed to by people in the work force for protection upon their retirement as well as the premature death of the breadwinner. We have orphan benefits and survivor benefits of this kind. These programs assure Canadians of additional protection.

I do not think anyone would argue that no matter what technique we move to in the future, whether it be toward the guaranteed annual income or the annual income technique such as in the guaranteed income supplement, we will always require social insurance schemes like the Canada Pension Plan. This plan provides protection for those in the work force who are earning wages which mean they are well above the poverty level, but they must have the protection that in the unfortunate eventuality of the premature death of the breadwinner or the retirement of the wage earner they will not have to use up all their savings and then fall into poverty. They will always have this protection. Whether we have a guaranteed income or anything else for those in the lower income group, we will always require the Canada Pension Plan. Therefore I think we can safely put that policy on the shelf in terms of any tinkering around with it, but certainly we should consider improving it and recognize the necessity that it be continued.

The next technique we have for income security is the demogrant, the universal payment that we all know—the old age security, the $80 a month that many members of the opposition have spoken of today, and family allowances. The third technique we have in terms of dealing with income maintenance and income support programs is to combine these programs with social services. We are doing that under the Canada Assistance Plan. These are the three main elements. There is the social insurance that we have had in the past and will need in the future, the demogrant of old age security and FISP, and then social services.

I should like to deal with demogrants. As a government, we have obviously decided that in terms of bringing money to those who need it in waging a successful campaign against poverty we must change from making universal payments to everyone, irrespective of income, to a selective technique. We must have an income test—I call it a guaranteed income technique—applied to what was previously our universal demogrant program of old age security and family allowance. We are doing that now and we have done it with respect to our aged with some very beneficial results. These are the three main areas. Social insurance we are going to improve, demogrants we are changing to a more selective technique to get more hundreds of millions of dollars to those who need it, and a strengthening of services to those in need, under the Canada Assistance Plan.

Before getting down to specifics about what we are doing in each of these categories I should like to refer to the NDP position relative to pensions for our senior citizens. If I am correct, this afternoon the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) referred to the universal aspect of this question. Perhaps the New Democratic Party will have an opportunity to reply later this evening. However, it would seem that the hon. member would do away with the guaranteed income supplement as a technique to deal with our senior citizens. He would seem to say that we should follow the old age security route, the $80 a month that is paid to each of our senior citizens, and increase that to $150 a month applied across the board to some 1,700,000 Canadians. No matter whether they were in destitute circumstances or were millionaires, they would each get $150 a month.

When you start making universal payments to everybody, for each $10 increase in old age security it costs an additional $200 million per year; that is, raising it from $80 to $90 adds $200 million, from $80 to $100 adds $400 million, and so on. It is easy to figure out what it would cost in one year to raise the old age security from $80 a month to $150 a month for everyone in this country who is entitled to it. If we brought in the necessary measures in terms of taxing people in order to obtain that additional revenue—we would presumably have to tax to get it because we are already running a deficit, as opposition members constantly remind us—what would be the position of hon. members opposite? Would they favour, in one fell swoop for this category of persons, an allocation of upward of $1½ billion in one year, fully realizing that there are in this country many people other than our senior citizens who are in dire need? That does not seem to be a practical approach, especially since many people who argue that we should make universal payments talk at the same time about the guaranteed annual income.

I know that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) did not specifically refer to this in his speech this afternoon; I do not think he got around to the guaranteed annual income. Nevertheless, many people argue, in favour of universal payments being made regardless of income—and of course when you talk about $150 a month you are talking about an attractive package—and argue at the same time in favour of a guaranteed annual income. I ask, what do they mean when they talk about a guaranteed annual income in this country? That is a technique that one uses in order to bring into play the principle of selectivity so that you provide resources to those most in need. In essence, that is what the guaranteed income is, and in that case you apply an income test. You can arrive at it through a negative income tax or you can pay it out universally and get back what you have overpaid through the tax system, or you can apply an income test before the income is paid out, which in essence is what we do with the guaranteed income supplement.

Whichever way you go about it, and disregarding for a moment what you mean when you talk about a guaranteed annual income, there is no doubt at all that you will do this through a selective method because you will also determine in some way how to provide resources to people who need them most. So there is a blatant contradiction in the argument of people who advocate universal payments on the one hand and the guaranteed annual income on the other. I think such people should be forced to reconcile their positions. Which road do they want to travel?

I would seriously argue, and I do not think anyone who thinks about this will disagree with me, that we just do not have the resources to adopt the universal technique and cope adequately with poverty in this country. The white paper on income security that I brought out some time ago indicated that if we were to adopt the guaranteed annual income technique for all Canadians and provide them with an income even at the poverty levels recommended by the Economic Council, the cost would be between $1.5 billion and $2.5 billion over and above what we are now spending.

Furthermore, roughly 30 per cent of the federal budget at present is being spent in this entire field. I point that out and ask those who talk in terms of universal payments and guaranteed annual income to come to grips with facts, because how can one reconcile the positions they have taken? Would they, for instance, recommend that upward of $1.5 billion of additional funds be spent on senior citizens and recommend as well that between $1.5 billion and $2.5 billion be applied to other Canadians who need assistance? It seems to me that we are talking about staggering amounts of money.

One must remember, also, that the government is faced with criticism emanating from the Economic Council, various commissions and Senate committees which have gone into the question of poverty. Time after time we hear it said that a very great part of our resources is going into our income security system but that the money is not reaching those who need it most. People talk in terms of universal payments without at the same time explaining where we are to get the money. They talk about universal payments without at the same time indicating how they are prepared to reconcile that position with the guaranteed income technique.

Having said that, I should like to say that in this whole area, and especially in the area of the senior citizen, the government's record is one of which we can be justly proud. In 1957 the old age security pension was $56 a month. The Diefenbaker administration took over in 1957. That administration lasted to 1963. It raised the $56 to $65 per month. That represented an increase of $9 over a period of about six years.

When the Liberal government took over in 1963 the pension was $65 per month payable at age 70. We increased that amount considerably and brought in the guaranteed income supplement. In 1966 we introduced into the system an additional $30 per month through the guaranteed income supplement and brought in for the first time—no government up to that time had done this—the cost of living escalator of 2 per cent a year which was to be paid on top of the pension. Approximately one year ago we brought in the second biggest increase in the history of Canada in the guaranteed income supplement. We brought that $105 figure up to $135 for a single person and up to $255 per month for married senior citizens over the age of 65.

I might add that during this whole period we gradually lowered the eligible age from 70 to 65. I am advised, and I concur in this advice having done some research into income security systems for senior citizens in all other countries of the free world, that no plan of any country in the free world provides the protection for senior citizens that our plan provides for our senior citizens.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Munro: I have not referred to the strengthening of services that we provide for our senior citizens through the Canada Assistance Plan. Many hon. members may be aware that under cost-sharing arrangement whereby we share 50-50 with provinces the costs of certain services we also share costs with respect to the provision of many ancillary services for our senior citizens. Some of the provinces are providing drugs for our senior citizens, especially those on GIS. We are paying half those costs.

Many social and rehabilitative agencies throughout the country have been set up to help our senior citizens and we share in the cost of that service. We help in that area, to say nothing of the help we provide with hospitalization and medical care coverage. In that area we pay roughly 50 per cent of the cost to the provinces. Many of our senior citizens who are on GIS are supplied by certain provinces with hospitalization cards, with no premium required. I am talking about the provinces which cover their half of the costs through collecting premiums. As I say, we pay for half of these services. All these supplementary services are being made available to our senior citizens. I do not think any country does better than Canada in terms of assisting senior citizens. I have not mentioned the many millions of dollars—and these expenditures are increasing each year—spent on housing through Central Mortgage and Housing. In that way we are providing homes for our senior citizens throughout this country.

So when you look at the whole complex of policies designed to assist our senior citizens, I think the Canadian government and the people of Canada can justifiably be proud. We have evolved policies; we have shown originality in that field. Although we are spending in excess of $2 billion a year on our senior citizens, the money is well spent. Our older people are guaranteed a minimum income floor, and supplementary services made available through the Canada Assistance Plan are improving each year.

I also want to talk about the escalator aspect. When we gave all those receiving the guaranteed income supplement the right to an automatic 2 per cent escalation in pension payments, we achieved a breakthrough. Some members of the opposition thought so too. When people talk about people receiving $80 a month they are talking about those who receive only the old age security pension. If somebody receiving the old age security also qualifies for all or part of the guaranteed income supplement, the 2 per cent escalation applies to the whole amount, to the OAS portion as well as to the guaranteed income supplement portion. Approximately two-thirds or our senior citizens are receiving all or part of the guaranteed income supplement, thus two-thirds of them are receiving the 2 per cent escalation.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Is it not 55 per cent?

Mr. Munro: Upward of two-thirds are receiving it. My figures indicate that almost one million citizens are receiving the guaranteed income supplement.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The minister tabled figures on Monday showing that proportion to be 55 per cent.

Mr. Munro: We can argue about the figures later. When we talk about people not benefiting from an escalation feature tied in with the cost of living, I hope we realize that upward of one million Canadians who are receiving the guaranteed income supplement are receiving the escalation. The reason we arrived at the 2 per cent figure when it was brought in in 1966 is that when we looked at the history of the previous ten years we saw that the average cost of living increase was 1.5 per cent. I would also point out that if the cost of living should go up by more than 2 per cent in any particular year and the increase is only 2 per cent, if the cost of living increase should be less than 2 per cent in the succeeding year that short fall can be applied to pick up the overage from the previous year. It is proving to have the tendency to keep reasonably in line with increases in the cost of living.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We have been waiting a long while for a gap.

Mr. Munro: I point out that in addition to this complex of policies for our senior citizens we have the Canada Pension Plan that was brought in by a Liberal government. We have recommended many changes that will improve considerably the protection of our people under the Canada Pension Plan which in many ways will be over and above the policies I have spoken of tonight. I wish to refer to some of them. We are talking about increasing the retirement benefits substantially for people covered by the Canada Pension Plan. One way of doing this is by raising the earnings ceilings.

We are talking about providing a benefit for the wife of a disabled pensioner, about providing benefits for the children of disabled pensioners, and a substantial improvement in the widow's pension. We are talking about substantial improvements across the board. It is a governmental declaration of intent. We are now meeting with the provinces with regard to improvements in the Canada Pension Plan. I hope that in the foreseeable future we can also come forward with meaningful changes in this area.

I wish to point out one other thing this government has recently done with regard to assistance for our senior citizens. As many members will recall, there was a special $500 exemption for those over 70 years of age. We increased that to $650 and lowered the age qualification for the exemption to 65 years of age in the recent tax changes. This means, in effect, that up to one million Canadians who are receiving all or part of the guaranteed income supplement because of their income bracket will not pay any tax at all. That accounts for a substantial number of the upward of one million Canadians who we removed from the tax rolls entirely as a result of the proposals of the former minister of finance.

There have been tremendous changes and improvements over the past few years to our guaranteed income supplement. This is protection for our aged. When you take that in conjunction with the Canada Pension Plan and the improvements that have been recommended, add to that the additional resources both human and financial that have gone into services for our senior citizens under the Canada Assistance Plan, and the financial policies in terms of removing a tremendous number of our senior citizens from the tax rolls, I think it is a record of which the government can be justly proud and for which we should make no apologies to this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Pension Increases

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, over the years the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) has sat in this House I have developed considerable affection for him. But that will not cause me to be diverted from the subject before us this evening. I listened to the minister bring forward a long series of red herrings such as the universal approach to old age pensions, the guaranteed annual income and various other benefits. However, none of these is the subject of this debate. The resolution which we are discussing reads as follows:

That this House condemns the government's failure to contribute to pensions, allowances and other benefits granted or administered by the government a yearly percentage increase corresponding to the percentage increase in the consumer price index for Canada.

What is referred to in the resolution is a very important and basic principle. When a government makes a commitment to individuals, that commitment should be honoured in the real value in which it was made and should not be discharged in debased coinage. That is what happens in a period of inflation. If you think about it for even a few moments you will realize that almost all government commitments are made in terms of absolute dollars. The result is that a commitment to pay a pension at any level, or any other commitment that is stated in dollars, has a decreasing value as inflation decreases the value of the dollar. Although the government may be adhering to the letter of its own law, it is not adhering to the spirit of the law.

The results in a period of inflation are as follows. Not only are the government's commitments to individuals almost invariably measured in an absolute number of dollars, but government receipts or expected receipts are almost always calculated in terms of percentage of income. What is the result of this? On the government's receipts side of the ledger, a period of inflation has the effect that basic exemptions in taxation are measured in absolute dollars. As inflation continues, the real value of those exemptions goes down, so that in terms of real value the tax burden imposed on individuals or corporations increases in absolute purchasing power without the legislation being changed at all. The government's take of the gross national product automatically increases.

On the other side of the ledger, the paying out side, the government discharges its commitments in what is in effect debased coinage at a much lower real value than that which existed when the commitment was made. The government benefits from this in a bookkeeping way because in a period of inflation the government's tax receipts go up but its commitments to pay out do not go up in the same proportion. It is in a position of affluence, so to speak.

The trouble with governments over the years, particularly this one and perhaps even more the previous one, has been that in a period of inflation or what may be called buoyancy they are well off as far as receipts are concerned. With regard to what they have to pay out, they become prodigal. They think of setting up more boards and studies and hiring more and more civil servants who are put to work at jobs that are ever decreasing in importance and benefit ratio to cost as far as the country as a whole is concerned. In those periods the overhead to be borne by government increases at a tremendous rate.

Then we encounter a period in which this trend disappears; the government is hard up and is forced to run a deficit to stimulate the economy. Surely this is a time when we ought to do our national business in a more scientific manner.

In present circumstances, every government has a vested interest in inflation for the reasons I have stated. If the value of the dollar decreases, it can discharge its obligations in cheap money. Surely this is wrong in principle. I am reminded of the story told about a medieval weaver who had a lot of cloth to sell. In those days the measure of a yard was the distance between the king's nose and his thumb when the arm was extended. It so happened that the heir apparent was a runt, so the weaver tried to kill the king in order that he could settle his obligations in short yards of cloth. This is the way in which this government and governments before it have operated. I think we ought to do better than that.

The resolution suggests, therefore, that when a government enters upon an obligation it should discharge that obligation in terms of the real value at the time it was made, and not in cheap dollars. The present practice of governments making commitments prior to a period of inflation and then discharging them as inflation decreases the value of the dollar is really an example of Indian-giving. The administration brags about the goodies it handed out and soon afterward people find that the value of those goodies has shrunk to 80 per cent of what it was originally. The administration then brings it back to perhaps 90 per cent of the original value and then brags about its performance again.

Who suffers when the government pays off its obligations in cheap money? One such group includes the aged, because a lot of the aged are poor. The aged in Canada account for an appallingly large proportion of the poor. Thirty-two per cent of all families whose heads are aged between 65 and 69 are poor. Forty-nine per cent of all unattached individuals aged between 65 and 69 are poor. Sixty-seven per cent of all unattached individuals over the age of 70 are poor. These figures for 1969 are supplied by Statistics Canada.

Another group which suffers in these circumstances includes the veterans of our country. In 1919, when the basic value in real terms of veterans pensions was set, it was decided that it should be the equivalent of the wages of an unskilled worker in the civil service. Recently, members of our armed forces received a deserved raise in pay. Their pay was brought up to parity with that of the civil service. The pay of a private soldier was increased, retroactive to October 1, 1971, to $5,760 per year. Mr. Speaker, the basic rate of pension for a single pensioner is only $3,504. The differential is $2,256.

The Woods committee on veterans pensions recommended that the amount fixed for a 100 per cent pension should continue to be directly related to the earning power of a man in the class of an untrained labourer as determined by the average wage for this type of employment in the public service. The Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs approved this recommendation in its report to the House of Commons on June 22, 1970. A sampling of public service pay scales indicates that the average basic pay of such employees as of October, 1971, was $4,551. So the basic pay of a veteran has fallen away behind this figure. I believe it is $3,504 at the present time.

This is a further illustration of the erosion over the years, due to a decrease in the value of the dollar, of a basic value which was established originally. When the disparity is made up, it is never made up entirely. In any case the adjustment is always made late and the value of the new scale begins to decrease almost immediately. Bearing these points in mind, I have great pleasure in supporting the motion criticizing the government for failing to recognize the principle, which is justice, nothing more.

Mr. D. W. Groos (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to take part in this debate, even briefly. I do not think anyone in this chamber is unaffected by the appeals we receive through the mail and personally from our constituents and others who live in this wonderful land but who are not sufficiently endowed with its worldly goods.

Responsibility for dividing the wealth of the nation rests upon the government, particularly with respect to the wealth which accrues to the treasury through taxation. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) has this evening presented to us the case for the government. The division he has outlined is a sensible one and one I can support—a division of resources between various programs which are directed mainly to those who are in greatest need. This, however, is but one point of view, I would suggest. I believe there are others which would bear investigation and I intend to come to them in a few moments. Before doing so I should like to refer to comments of previous speakers concerning veterans in general and Hong Kong veterans in particular.

In the case of Hong Kong veterans, Mr. Speaker, you will recall it was only a matter of a few months ago that this House agreed that the Hong Kong veterans were to be given special treatment in view of their disabilities and the treatment they suffered while prisoners of war. They have now been awarded a sufficiently large percentage of pension to ensure that their widows are given protection when they pass on. The widows of their comrades who have already passed on are, I believe, now better looked after than they were before. I think this has been a very great achievement which was not the result of the efforts of any one member of the House but of general agreement among all members of the veterans affairs committee. I think this has been a real step forward.

I was also pleased to receive in the mail this evening additional evidence of another step forward taken by the veterans affairs committee in the form of the decision in the first appeal presented to the Pension Appeals Board recently set up by the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Laing). I am glad to say we are now seeing how the benefit of the doubt clause is being applied to those for whom it was designed.

As mentioned earlier by my hon. friend opposite, too many veterans are inadequately documented. Possibly the worst documented group, as I have told the House previously, are the veterans who served overseas. The best documented veteran in the world is the man who did not leave Canada or get far from his Canadian base. Therefore, my sympathies lie entirely with the badly documented veteran who saw service overseas, and I am very pleased that he now has the benefit of the additional protection that has been given him by this parliament. I think this has been another very great step forward taken by the House.

I should now like to come back to a final matter in connection with veterans affairs before I pass on, in the very few moments I have left, to the question of pensions generally. I wish to bring to the attention of the Minister of Veterans Affairs as forcefully as I can—I think this lies within the ambit of this debate—the fact that domiciliary care for veterans is very much a federal problem. If provinces choose not to provide domiciliary care facilities for their older citizens, certainly for veterans, then I think this government—indeed, any government—as well as this House and the country have a responsibility to provide them. Recognizing this, I hope it will be one of the steps the new Minister of Veterans Affairs will take during his term of office. I also hope it will be one of the matters to which the veterans affairs committee will apply itself very diligently in the weeks ahead.

The matter is becoming a very pressing one. Veterans of the Second World War are requiring domiciliary care. They cannot get it from the provincial establishments and they cannot afford to obtain it privately. So where are they to go? That is a question which at the moment is unanswered and it can only be answered by this House.

In conclusion I wish to speak about pensions generally. I think we are all receiving letters from our constituents who find it a problem to make ends meet in these days of inflation. I should like to read one of these letters to the House. It arrived today and is written by someone who lives in Victoria whom I will not name. He writes:

—I wish to draw your attention to the situation of retired civil servants who are restricted to an annual pension increase of only 2 per cent at a time when those presently employed are being awarded 7 per cent, 8 per cent and even more each year.

If MPs. can claim $8,000 per year, and if employed personnel can prove a need for increases on their present high salaries, surely the need is much more obvious for those of us who reached retirement age when salaries were much lower.

The following is the most moving, Mr. Speaker:

As the present trend continues, each year reduces our standard of living and makes the prospect of growing old rather terrifying, which is hard to understand in this richly endowed land of ours.

If nothing better can be done, surely our Pensions should at least be tied onto a cost of living bonus, or failing this an increase in the old age pension somewhat better than 42 cents.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Groos: Mr. Speaker, my time is short and I do not want to be cut off having not made my particular point, which is this. In my view the question of pensions is one which should be tied in, not to the cost of living index, because I do not think that is really adequate, but to the current pay of the position a person held when he retired. As I said to the minister earlier, this is another point of view. Expensive though it may be, it will be a cost on private enterprise or on government enterprise. I think it essential that this step be undertaken, otherwise we shall continue receiving letters of the kind I just put on the record, the contents of which in my view are very justified.

I have a great feeling for elderly people, a large number of whom live in my riding. We are all growing older. I can understand what this correspondent means when he says that the prospect of growing old is rather terrifying. I can quite see his point about the effect inflation has had upon the income he tried to establish for himself for his retirement years.

There are many other letters I could read, and if I have time I should just like to read one other which demonstrates the point I have been trying to make, on the spur of the moment, perhaps not as adequately as I might have made it had I had time to prepare my speech. However, I have at least done my best.

Mr. Dinsdale: You have done very well indeed.

Mr. Groos: The letter reads as follows:

I am a widow and receive the old age pension, $80 per month, but not the supplement.

Obviously, this letter comes from a lady who tried to set her house in order before she and her husband retired.

Had my husband, who, unfortunately, did not live to receive a pension, and I not worked extremely hard and saved so that in our older years we would have enough to get by and not be dependent on anyone for help, I am afraid life would have been very difficult indeed. With the cost of living going up as it does each year, and living on a fixed income, I am finding it increasingly hard to manage. Actually it is necessary to deprive myself of many necessary things in order to keep my independence and not be a burden on anyone.

This is someone I respect and admire.

Is it not possible to give the 65s and over some consideration so that we who are living on a fixed income can again have pride of place in the community.

I know my time is up, Mr. Speaker, because I can see you giving me the eye.

Mr. Rose: Continue.

Mr. Groos: Therefore, I shall have to sit down in spite of the invitation from my hon. friend on the opposite side of the House to continue. I know the rules of this debate: my time is limited to 15 minutes. On the other hand I hope the words I have spoken will fall upon the receptive ears of the ministers concerned.

• (2100)

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say, first of all, I was very much impressed by the speech of the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Groos). I only wish the exigencies of our parliamentary procedure would enable him to put his vote where his convictions obviously lie, that is, in favour of the motion and the amendment, because I believe he made a most eloquent and moving plea for precisely what is in those documents. I shall not blame him if he yields to the general practice in this place of voting according to party, but certainly his remarks would be even more impressive if he joined those who support the motion and the amendment because they are clearly in line with what he said.

I did not have the opportunity to hear the whole of the speech of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro), but I heard enough of it to note the tone of extreme complacency about the record of the government in this field. The minister said that he thinks the Canadian government has reason to be proud of what it has done for the old age pensioners. He said that the Canadian people have reason to be proud. I note that the minister is not in the House now, but perhaps he will read the record of this debate. I wish to give him some news. The government may be proud, but the people of Canada are not proud of the record in respect of what we have been able to do for our old age pensioners. They are disappointed. In fact, I am prepared to assert that nothing else the government has done or has failed to do has created more disillusionment in this country than its treatment of the old age pensioners.

I took the trouble to make a survey of opinion in my riding. I asked two questions which are relevant to this debate. A number of other questions were asked as well. I asked whether government old age pensions and old age assistance are to low. This is a very simple question. There were 562 answers to the question. There were 514 affirmative answers and 48 negative answers. So out of a sampling of nearly 600, the number of persons who believe old age pensions are too low is in the ratio of five to one. Then I thought that perhaps the people who answered this question might be interested because they themselves might be recipients of old age security or assistance. I asked if that was the case, and it turned out that only 90 persons were in that group and 411 were not.

If this sampling of opinion is sound, and I believe it is, I say that the vast majority of the Canadian people wish us to do more for our old age pensioners. Then I asked another question. These questions were under a number of headings. I asked: "How do you rate the performance of the federal Trudeau government in the following areas". The three choices I gave were "very good," "satisfactory" and "poor." Then I listed each area of performance of the federal government. In the area of security for senior citizens, 33 answered "very good", 158 answered "satisfactory" and 342 said "poor". I might say that some included other adjectives; some said "lousy" and some said "disgraceful". They expressed themselves very clearly in that way although they were not asked to do so in the questionnaire.

This sampling in my own constituency indicated that the performance of the government in that field has been poor. I suggest that the minister, instead of basking in the sort of complacency he exhibited today, should seek the opinion of his constituents and find out whether the performance of the government in this field is as good as he made it out to be.

I would have been perfectly content so far as this debate is concerned to have said that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) expressed, as he has on a number of other occasions, precisely, eloquently and clearly the position I take on behalf of my constituents in respect of the old age pension and other forms of security. But, and I recognize that what I say may be purely repetitive, there are too many in my constituency who are deeply and personally concerned with this matter to make it adequate for me to say merely that I repeat and accept the views of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, although I do wholeheartedly accept those views. There are too many people in my constituency who have worked hard all their lives, who have struggled to build their homes, who have struggled to bring up their families, who have contributed to this country and who find under the present situation that they are strained, that they are pressured, and in some cases are even starved because of the situation in which they now find themselves.

I should like to say I agree with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre in what I understood him to say, that is, we in this party believe a very minimum that should be done at this time is that which is set out in the motion we are debating. That motion asks that all pensions include an escalator clause corresponding to the increase in the cost of living. I would say that is indeed the very minimum we could ask for. Every time the cost of living increases and the escalator clause we have of 2 per cent does not equal the increasing cost of living, we are taking something away from the old age pensions that the Canadian people have promised to the older people of this country. We are depriving them of something to which, in my view, they are entitled. I do not think we should be satisfied with that sort of performance; I think it is inconsistent with the clear promises of the parliament, the party and the government which originally produced the plan, and it is unworthy of the Canadian people.

I accept the motion and I accept the amendment that has been moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. It deals with the failure of the government to raise to adequate levels the basic amount of all personal pensions, allowances and benefits. I share with my colleague surprise that the official opposition in its motion paid no heed to this particular problem. I share with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre the belief that an increase to $150 a month for a single person and $300 a month for a married couple is not one dollar too much. I believe this country can afford it. The minister said it represents a colossal figure and extra taxation at a time of deficit. I remind the minister and members of the House that for 500,000 people who are receiving the full supplement at the moment the increase is only from $135 to $150 per person.

I also repeat, because it bears repeating, that those 500,000 people, because the supplement is so small, arrive at a position of complete destitution. For another 500,000 there is an increase from an average of about $125 to $150, and only for 700,000 is there an increase from $80 to $150. It seems to me that this is not only justice, this is not only the carrying out of contractual moral obligations to our older people; it would be a fillip to the economy. The effect of this would be expansionary at a time when we need expansion, and where could expansion be more justly and properly devoted than to relieving the hardships of the older people of this country?

I think it was in 1970 that the government froze the pensions of some 500,000 old age pensioners who did not receive the guaranteed income supplement at $80 a month. This increased pensions at that level by 42 cents a month. The government has done very little else that has done more to discredit them with the people of this country than that increase of 42 cents a month. This increase did not even reflect the increase in the cost of living up to that time. As for the cost of living which has risen and will rise in the future, no increase has been or will be made in that amount.

I say that this is contrary to the principle of universality adopted in 1950. The contract of the government has been broken. The principle for old age pensions as adopted was that pensions should escalate with the cost of living. That legislation and its continuance constitutes, in my view, a breach of faith. Ministers of government such as Miss LaMarsh, then minister of national health and welfare, Mr. Pearson, then prime minister, and Mr. Benson, then minister of finance, have stated from time to time that all future old age pensions should automatically be increased according to the increase in the cost of living. This pledge to our older people has been broken. I urge that old age pensions are not a matter of charity but a matter of right. Payments into the old age pension fund are partly out of the general revenue, it is true, but much of the amount is raised by the pensioners themselves through income tax and sales tax.

When this legislation was introduced, and since that time, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) stated that the effect of the government's legislation was to take from the rich and pay to the poor. I suggest that that is not a fair description of what has happened. In fact, there has been a redistribution of poverty. Forty per cent of all those who receive the old age pension get no guaranteed income supplement and have no increase at all. Perhaps 10 per cent of them have substantial means but the other 30 per cent, amounting to half a million people, have incomes of between $3,500 and $4,000 a year. Are these the rich from whom more is to be taken in order to benefit the other people? I suggest that this is a complete mistake.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has repeated many times in the House that this party stands for a basic pension for all people over 65 years of $150 without any means or income test. We in this party do not propose to go back on that part of our policy. In fact, we wish to go forward and reduce the age at which old age pensions would be paid, thus distributing income at this time. I conclude by saying that we are anticipating an election fairly soon and I say to the government that they will be the ones to suffer if they allow the election to come on without changing their attitude, without adopting either the motion put forward by the official opposition or accepting the amendment of this party.

Mr. Ross Whicher (Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to say something about the motion put forward by the official opposition. What the motion means, of course, is very simple to everyone in the House of Commons tonight, namely, that all Canadians on pensions are not getting enough money, particularly our senior citizens who are commonly called old age pensioners and those who spent a long time in the army and are now entitled to the war veterans allowance.

Other hon. members who have taken part in the debate referred to those who are fortunate enough to be on the Canada Pension Plan, who receive widows allowances, family allowances, and so on. I do not think there is a single member in the House of Commons who would not agree that pensioners, whether they be old age pensioners, veteran pensioners or any other pensioners, should obtain more money. All of us accept that fact. When I look back over the years, and one does not have to go back too far, I realize that old age pensions in Canada were initiated on a means test at $20 a month. I remember when it was increased to $40 a month for pensioners who had reached the age of 70. That was within the last 25 years or thereabouts.

In those days our older people were the ones who, like our senior citizens of today, had helped to make Canada great. They were pleased and proud of the fact that what they had done in life was appreciated by the taxpayers of Canada and they were most happy to accept the $40 a month, which of course is a mere pittance when we think of what is being done today. I remember sitting in the Ontario legislature when the hon. Walter Harris sat on the government side as minister of finance in the House of Commons and on that budget night raised the old age pension given to persons at the age of 70 from $40 to $46 a month. I remember the sneers that greeted the statement of the minister of finance which were expressed in the press throughout Canada and by members of the opposition who said that he was simply not giving enough. On looking back, most people would agree with them.

What happened that members of the opposition, and indeed members of my own party, as my hon. friend to the left suggested, agreed that that was not enough? You may remember that we had an election. Our Conservative friends to the left—I certainly regard them as my friends—immediately raised the old age pension to the magnificent sum of $55 a month, and before they called another election they raised it to $65 a month for all Canadians, for the wealthy and the poor, at age 70. There were many of us—I was one of them and I am sure there are many such people on my side of the House—who agreed that it was nice to get a pension increase. It was a large sum, but let us look at the situation today. Hon. friends to my left are talking about a heaven; they are not talking about the old age pension as it is today or as it was yesterday. They have suggested that we have a heaven on earth but they have not suggested the figure that would be appropriate to the situation in Canada today.

I say with all sincerity, Mr. Speaker, that if the government of Canada offered the old age pensioners $200 a month, the very next day hon. members to my left would be up in the House of Commons asking for $250 a month.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whicher: My hon. friends to the left clap. Through you, Mr. Speaker, I say to them that we all want old age pensioners to get $250 a month, but we are realistic. We think of the sons and daughters of our senior citizens who have to pay taxes to raise huge sums of money so that the government of Canada can pay it out to our senior citizens. What is the situation now? What has changed from the time the Conservative party formed the government of Canada? Members of the Conservative party are the very people who had the gall to stand up here today and say we are not giving enough to the pensioners, yet they sat here under the Conservative government led by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), a government which gave pensioners the magnificent sum of $65 per month on which they had to pay income tax—

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Whicher: —and that was at the age of 70.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Whicher: Let us look calmly at this for a moment because I do not want to hurt my hon. friends to the left; I only want to tell them what is going on in the world. They gave the old age pensioner $65 a month at age 70, and today those in need in Canada at age 65, not 70, are getting $135 a month absolutely tax free.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whicher: Of course we want to give them more, Mr. Speaker. There is not one member of the Conservative party who does not want to give them more and there is not one member of the Liberal party who does not want to give them more. But give us a chance. We raised the pension from $112 to $135 this year. Next month, in April, it is going from $135 to $137, and the year after that when we are again returned to power we will raise it again.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whicher: If hon. friends to my left want to be fair, and I know most of them are fair, they would say, "Let us raise it to $200. We know that when we were in power we gave them $65, and you people have done a good job by giving them $135." They would point out that this year the government of Canada, from the taxes paid by the ordinary citizen, is turning over $2,270 million to our senior citizens. Not bad, Mr. Speaker, I say. Of course, this money should go to them, because who made Canada great? I will tell you who made it great. It was our fathers and mothers and our grandfathers and grandmothers. It was the same people who made Canada great when the Conservatives were in power, yet they gave them only $65 a month at age 70. The Conservatives' argument that we are not giving enough will simply not be swallowed by our senior citizens. They will remember what the Conservatives gave them and they will tell the Conservatives, "You did not give us enough."

There are other things that we have given our senior citizens, that we have given my father and mother, my father-in-law and my mother-in-law. It wasn't until the year 1959 that we had a hospitalization insurance plan in Canada and it wasn't until a few years ago that we had a medicare plan in Canada. Let us look at things and how they really stand today with regard to hospitalization and medicare. This year the government of Canada is turning over to the provinces—quite rightly, and we say it with pride in our voices—$660 million in medicare payments and $950 million under the hospitalization plan. Some 15 years ago we did not turn over one cent for these purposes.

Where is this money going? It is not just going to the people who are 21 years of age and under. It is not just going to the people who are 35 years of age and under. For example, some of it is going to the senior citizens in the province of Ontario who as of January 1, 1972, just 60 days ago, do not have to pay one nickel for hospitalization or medical services.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hales: That is if a man doesn't make over $2,500.

Mr. Whicher: If he is getting $135 a month he is not making $3,500, and he does not pay one nickel. I will tell you who promised that to them: it was the Tory party of the province of Ontario. There are many things we could discuss tonight, Mr. Speaker. I could emphasize once more that not enough has been done for our senior citizens. We all know that. We all want to do more for our fathers and mothers. In that respect we agree with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) who if he had lived at the time of our Lord would have been the thirteenth disciple because he wants to give everything away. But you cannot give everything away. You have got to speak about reality. You have to remember that our sons and daughters are the people who have to pay the taxes. You have to remember that our sons and daughters want to give us much as they can, but there comes a time when they can only give so much and the people in Canada who work hard become tired of paying taxes.

I haven't the slightest doubt that when the next budget comes down every opposition member, including the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, will stand up and say that the government is charging the people of Canada too much in taxes.

An hon. Member: Pitiful!

Mr. Whicher: Somebody to my left says "Pitiful," but it is not pitiful for the senior citizens of Canada who have the highest old age pensions of any country in the world. I agree it is not enough but it is the highest anywhere.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whicher: I want to close by comparing the old age pension system here with the system in the United States of America, the wealthiest country in the world. For comparison I will take someone who lives in the great city of Detroit, a city of two or three million people, and someone who lives in a smaller but still great city, the city of Windsor in Canada. What happens to a man in Detroit who reaches the age of 65, who has no money and does not come under the American social security plan? I remind hon. members that 5 per cent of all Americans do not come under that plan. He goes on relief from the city of Detroit and from the state of Michigan. But a man aged 65 who has a wife and who lives in Windsor faces a different prospect. As of today he draws $255 a month and next month he will draw $260. I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that we should be proud of that accomplishment.

• (2130)

Anyone can criticize. Anyone can say "too little, too late". This afternoon I heard my hon. friend say, "I did not vote for the wage increase of Members of Parliament." Of course, he has the right to say that. But I ask you, Mr. Speaker, how did his party vote on that issue, and why was he not here to vote—

An hon. Member: That was not the question.

Mr. Whicher: If we are going to talk politics, let's put all the cards on the table.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whicher: I want to see the joker, and I saw one this afternoon.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I regret having to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): No.

Mr. Gleave: Would the hon. member permit a question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): There is not unanimous consent. The hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta).

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, it looks as though I have the honour of ending the debate tonight. Coming in after a rousing, arm-waving speech such as was just delivered by the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher), I am inclined to wonder what there is left to say. He seemed to paint a picture of a Utopia that does exist, so we need not do anything about it.

An hon. Member: He was factual.

Mr. Murta: I for one do not believe this to be true. I believe that the hon. member for Bruce may have overstated his case. I think that one of the greatest injustices that has occurred in the so-called just society that we have heard so much about since 1968 is that our old age pensioners have been treated so callously by this government. I think this is a fact that virtually everybody in the House realizes. The beating that inflation has dealt to retired people living on pensions is causing monumental problems to say the least. If any group of citizens ever had good reason to complain, I sincerely believe it is our senior citizens. Not only has our entire population seen their dollar shrink with inflation, but they have seen the standard of living of employed people going up. This is due not only to increased wages but to improved pension benefits for employees.

Mr. Speaker, an employee who retired in 1956 has suffered a 30 per cent loss in the purchasing power of his pension dollar while his younger counterpart has received a 35 per cent increase in the same period. In the various levels of government, federal, provincial and municipal, pensions for retired civil servants have increased by as much as 40 per cent to replace the loss in purchasing power. This makes it difficult for the federal government, at whose doorstep the responsibility for inflation is ultimately laid, to explain to the Canadian people, especially old age pensioners, why federal retirees get pension increases whilst nothing is done to replace the loss of purchasing power for the rest of the Canadian population.

I have some amazing facts that show just where Canada's poor people stand in terms of age. These are 1969 figures issued by Statistics Canada and show that aged people account for an appallingly large portion of Canada's poor. Where the head of the family is aged between 65 and 69, 32.8 per cent are poor; where the head of the family is aged 70 and over, 46.7 per cent are poor; 49 per cent of all unattached individuals aged 65 to 69 are poor, and an amazing 67.1 per cent of all unattached individuals aged 70 and over are below the poverty line. At the end of 1970, a monthly pension of $79.58 was payable to everyone age 65 and over who meets the residence requirements. A monthly supplement of $31.83 was payable to each pensioner who has no other source of income, and a partial supplement was payable to those with other incomes of less than $64 a month.

The white paper and subsequent legislation at the end of 1970 changed these arrangements. Effective April, 1971, old age security pensions were to be frozen at $80 with no annual cost of living increase, and the guaranteed income supplement was to range up to $55, single, or $95 for a married couple with an annual increase on a fiscal year basis instead of calendar year basis, as previously, of up to 2 per cent for cost of living increases. Calculations of the 2 per cent annual increase were to be made on the combined OAS and GIS total, not just on the GIS payment itself.

This means that people getting the old age pension plus the maximum guaranteed income supplement will be getting, starting April, 1972, $137.70 per month, single, and $260.10 for a married couple. This represents an increase of $2.70 per month, $32.40 per year, or less than nine cents per day for a single person, or an increase of $5.10 per month, $61.20 per year or less than 17 cents per day for a married couple. These annual increases of $2.70 per month, single, and $5.10 per month for a married couple do not accrue to everyone but only those getting the maximum GIS.

At the end of January, 1972, 672,960 old age pensioners were getting the maximum supplement and 110,176 old age pensioner couples were receiving the maximum supplement. This means that only 44.5 per cent of all old age pensioners at this time were getting the full supplement and, therefore, the full benefit of the 2 per cent cost of living escalator.

Taking it one step further, what if the Liberal government had in fact embarked on a just society in 1968 as it promised and, in line with such a goal, had arranged for old age security pensions and guaranteed income supplements to be increased yearly at a rate corresponding to the annual rise in the cost of living which the Progressive Conservative party has advocated in the past and which we are talking about in this debate? I contend that if such a plan had been instituted, the $75 OAS monthly pension and the GIS monthly payment of $30 in 1967 would have risen on January 1, 1968, by 3.6 per cent to $77.70 and $31.08 respectively. By January, 1972, the cumulative effect of these annual raises would have brought the OAS pension to $89.85 a month and the GIS to $58.81.

What does this mean in dollars and cents, in bread and butter terms for Canada's pensioners? I agree with the hon. member for Bruce who said that all members of the House are concerned about this matter. In 1972, Mr. Speaker, all recipients of the old age security pension would be receiving $9.85 more a month, or $118.20 per year, than they now receive. The cost of embarking on such a program would not have been prohibitive. You cannot talk about pie in the sky, as some members of the House tend to, because you must remember that the money must come from somewhere. Someone must pay and that someone is the taxpayer of Canada.

I contend that from January, 1968, to December, 1971, the revised old age security program would have cost altogether about $230 million, a load that the old age security fund could easily have borne. On December 31, 1971, the balance in the old age security fund was $636.1 million. In 1972, the cost would have been another $49 million or $50 million and the guaranteed income supplement changes would have only cost an extra $46 million in the four-year period between January, 1968, and December, 1971. There is no doubt that such a scheme if implemented would have benefited Canada's old people tremendously over that period.

I have tried to point out that the problem certainly is not insoluble. If an escalating factor of the kind I have talked about were added to the old age pension—and I think I have talked in realistic terms—the old age pensioners of whom we have spoken today would benefit greatly. This kind of escalation should not be given as a privilege, Mr. Speaker, but as a right. We must introduce legislation to give people this right. It is a right that should not be denied to anyone living in Canada.

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, this evening I speak in support of the amendment to the motion. I listened to the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) with interest. I closed my eyes for a few moments and thought I heard, as he was speaking, the ghostly voice of the late Mackenzie King. In no sense of the word has the government dealt with the problems of the old age pensioners with merit. As one travels around Assiniboia one finds small communities in which people live in squalid conditions. They are old age pensioners. I think that the amendment deserves the support of the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. It being 9.45 p.m., it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 58(10), to interrupt the proceedings and forthwith put every question necessary to dispose of supplementary estimates (B), interim supply and any bill or bills based thereon. The question is on the amendment to the motion.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Knowles, Winnipeg North Centre) which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (B)

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board) moved:

That the supplementary estimates (B) of sums required for the service of Canada for the year ending March 31, 1972, presented to the House March 7, 1972, be concurred in.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On division.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Drury thereupon moved that Bill C-175, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending March 31, 1972, be read the first time and printed.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the said bill be read the second time?

Some hon. Members: Now.

Mr. Drury thereupon moved that Bill C-175, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending March 31, 1972, be read a second time and referred to the committee of the whole.

Mr. MacLean: Mr. Speaker, I presume the President of the Treasury Board is prepared to give the House assurance that the bill is in the standard form?

Mr. Drury: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, considered in committee and reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the said bill be read the third time? By leave, now?

Some hon. Members: By leave, now.

Mr. Drury moved the third reading of the bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

INTERIM SUPPLY

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board) moved:

That this House do concur in interim supply, as follows:

That a sum not exceeding $2,399,125,993.20 being the aggregate of—

(a) Three-twelfths of the total of all of the items set forth in the estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1973, laid before the House of Commons on February 23, 1972, $2,224,679,688.75.

(b) An additional eight-twelfths of the total amount of Consumer and Corporate Affairs item 25, relating to the Prices and Incomes Commission, (Schedule A) of the said estimates. $312,666.64.

(c) An additional five-twelfths of the total amount of Finance item 20, relating to the Department of Insurance, and Treasury Board item 10 (Schedule B) of the said estimates, $26,150,416.65.

(d) An additional three-twelfths of the total amount of Energy Mines and Resources item 25, relating to the Atomic Energy Control Board, Manpower and Immigration item 10, Transport items 40, 50 and 85 and Treasury Board item 5 (Schedule C) of the said estimates, $86,819,000.00.

(e) An additional two-twelfths of the total amount of Finance item 5 and Manpower and Immigration item 5 (Schedule D) of the said estimates. $51,113,000.00.

(f) An additional one-twelfth of the total amount of External Affairs item L40, relating to the Canadian International Development Agency, Indian Affairs and Northern Development item L60, Post Office item 5, Privy Council item 1, Secretary of State item 70, relating to the National Arts Centre Corporation, Supply and Services item 10, and Transport items 65, relating to the Atlantic Pilotage Authority, 90, relating to the Laurentian Pilotage Authority, and 115, relating to the Pacific Pilotage Authority, (Schedule E) of the said estimates, $10,051,221.16.

be granted to Her Majesty on account of the fiscal year ending March 31, 1973.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Drury thereupon moved that Bill No. C-176, for granting Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending March 31, 1973, be read the first time and printed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

• (2220)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the said bill be read the second time?

Some hon. Members: Now.

Mr. Drury thereupon moved that Bill C-176, for granting Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending March 31, 1973, be read the second time and referred to the committee of the whole.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Honey in the chair.

On clause 2—$2,399,125,993.20 granted for 1972-73.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I may put a question to the President of the Treasury Board? Since this is interim supply, does the minister give the usual undertaking that the passing of this bill does not interfere with our rights to discuss these items?

Mr. Drury: This is clearly understood, Mr. Chairman.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 3 and 4 agreed to.

On clause 5—Power to raise loan of $3,000,000,000 for public works and general purposes.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order.

May I ask the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) whether he can assure us that in the near future we shall have the opportunity of discussing the $3 billion loan mentioned in clause 5, at an unknown interest rate?

[English]

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, I am not sure that a final determination of the interest rate has been made in respect of this loan, but I suggest to the hon. gentleman that his question would be answerable in the committee studying the matter.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Lotbinière on a point of order.

Mr. Fortin: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

I should like to ask the President of the Treasury Board, who apparently did not understand my question, when precisely shall we have an opportunity of discussing that matter? I understand that will be in committee, but in view of the current situation, when will this debate take place?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, I believe I did understand the question, but I do not know exactly when committees will be sitting, specifically the Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs committee.

[English]

Mr. Bell: On another point of order, Mr. Chairman, I see that under clause 5 the limit is $3 billion which the Minister of Public Works cannot exceed. We all know that this is an election year. Would the President of the Treasury Board guarantee that the Minister of Public Works will not go over $3 billion?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Chairman: Order, please!

Clause agreed to.

Clause 6 agreed to.

Schedules A to E inclusive agreed to.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Preamble agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Drury moved the third reading of the bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being after ten o'clock, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 10.27 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

MINISTER'S STATEMENTS ON USHER REPORT—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion under Standing Order 43, the subject matter of which has to do with the derogatory statements made of and concerning a professional public servant which, unless challenged, will be a precedent, making public servants defenceless and undermining the fundamental concept of ministerial responsibility and the traditional relationship between ministerial heads of departments and their employees, both professional and otherwise, of the civil service. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster (Mr. Bell):

That the subject matter of the public statements made by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development pertaining to the report entitled, "The Bankslanders: Economy and Ecology of a Frontier Trapping Community," and in particular the minister's disparaging references to the professional competence of Dr. Peter Usher, a geographer employed in the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, be immediately referred to the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development, or other appropriate committee.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The right hon. gentleman's motion is proposed to the House under the terms of Standing Order 43. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Turned down by the Liberals again.

Mr. Speaker: There is no unanimous consent. The motion cannot be put.

HOUSING

LOW-INCOME HOUSING REPORT—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to seek unanimous consent to move a motion under Standing Order 43 arising out of the serious allegations about the operations of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation in this week's leak and the need for hon. members to have the document in question before the tabling of the CMHC capital budget as well as its annual report. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That an order of this House be issued for a copy of a study prepared for the CMHC task force on low-income housing entitled "The Adequacy and Production of Low-Income Housing" by Melvin Charney in collaboration with Serge Carreau and Colin Davidson.

Mr. Speaker: This motion proposed under Standing Order 43 requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent and the motion cannot be put.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT, 1971

On the order: Introduction of Bills.

Mr. Speaker: As has been indicated previously, some of the private members' public bills before us are questionable from the point of view of the Chair in relation to procedure. It is the feeling of the Chair that in some instances some of these bills might infringe on the financial initiative of the Crown. It is the feeling of the Chair that this is a very important rule, indeed, a paramount rule, and unless the House is prepared to recognize that the rule does not continue to exist an effort should be made by hon. members, by the House and certainly by the Chair on behalf of hon. members, to see that we do not change this long-established practice that bills, motions and resolutions which tend to infringe on the financial initiative of the Crown be not allowed to proceed unless they are preceded, of course, by a recommendation from His Excellency. This is basically and generally the objection I have to a number of these bills.

Out of the ten to which reference has already been made three might be allowed to proceed without argument. I have reference to the one standing in the name of the hon. member for Brant, on which the Chair is prepared to put the motion, the one standing in the name of the hon. member for Moose Jaw and a third one in the name of the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway. Although there are some reservations, the Chair is quite prepared to give the benefit of the doubt in these three instances and to put the motions.

In the case of the other seven bills presented for introduction by hon. members I would think there are possible difficulties and I would be prepared to hear arguments on each one of them as it is proposed. I would suggest that in order to save time, because this might be a protracted procedure, I will reserve my ruling and perhaps give it to the House later today or on Monday. For the moment the Chair will put the first motion in the name of the hon. member for Brant.

AMENDMENT TO EXCLUDE SICK LEAVE PAY FROM EARNINGS

Mr. Howard, Skeena (for Mr. Blackburn) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-177, to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the hon. member shall have leave to introduce this bill?

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): This is a simple bill. It seeks to correct one of the chaotic abuses that have resulted from the operations of the Unemployment Insurance Commission since the introduction of the new legislation on the first of this year. It provides that sick leave pay shall not be classified as earnings for the purpose of receiving benefits.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT RESPECTING INVOLVEMENT IN LABOUR DISPUTES

Mr. Knowles, Winnipeg North Centre (for Mr. Skoberg) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-178, to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act (labour disputes).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, when the new unemployment insurance measure was before the committee last year it was the feeling of many of us that the provisions regarding involvement in a labour dispute went too far. It included people who were really not directly involved. The purpose of this bill is to correct that mistake.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

[Mr. Speaker.]

AMENDMENT RESPECTING BENEFIT PERIOD DURING PREGNANCY

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-179, to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act (maternity benefits).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mrs. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to rectify a provision in the Unemployment Insurance Act which gives a woman a certain definite number of weeks before and after her confinement when she is covered by unemployment insurance. This amendment would permit elasticity in choosing the number of weeks before and after confinement.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT RESPECTING WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION PAYMENTS

On the order: Introduction of Bills.

Mr. Gilbert—Bill intituled: "An Act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971".

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Howard, for Mr. Gilbert, seconded by Mr. Knowles, move for leave to introduce a bill intituled "An Act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971".

As I have indicated, and I repeat, there may be some question from a procedural standpoint relating to the possible infringement upon the financial initiative of the government in reference to this and subsequent bills. I would be pleased to hear argument if hon. members would care to express their views on this particular point.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, if I may comment, I think the fact there are a number of bills on the order paper relating to the Unemployment Insurance Act reflects what almost everybody in the country knows has been a confused and chaotic situation this last winter with interminable delays in the payment of benefits to claimants.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member knows that he cannot argue the bill itself. I would hope we would limit the discussion to the strictly procedural aspect.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I am just saying that in that context this bill attempts to correct those abuses and that the argument relating to this bill procedurally probably has some application to the others as well because they seek to correct the same situation.

When the Unemployment Insurance Act was amended and the new act came into existence one of its provisions also sought to amend the Income Tax Act so as to declare that workmen's compensation payments to injured workmen would be liable to tax. Previous to that time such payments had never been liable to tax. The purpose of the bill is to change the existing situation.

With respect to the financial initiative of the Crown, the bill does not actually infringe upon that financial initiative and does not seek to authorize the expenditure of public funds in that regard. It just seeks to return the situation to that which previously obtained. If there is a procedural doubt in Your Honour's mind, then we say that the particular rule, if it applies to this bill, is archaic in any event. This amendment affords an opportunity for the government, which is responsible for all the confusion over the Unemployment Insurance Act and the delays and difficulties that people are experiencing with it, to correct that situation. If there is some doubt in Your Honour's mind about the procedural acceptability of the bill, then it falls upon the government to say that they will agree to permit the introduction of these bills in an attempt to overcome the confusion and delay that exist at this time. I do not think that in this instance the government should insist on our following an archaic rule to the letter, nor in the case of the other bills, because it was government mismanagement which brought about the difficulties in the first place.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Are there any further arguments on this bill?

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, there is one word I should like to add. During recent debates, of which there have been many, on income tax matters, it was frequently ruled by the Chair, usually when we were in Committee of the Whole, that provided amendments that relieved individuals of taxation did not directly impose a tax on someone else, those amendments were in order. We had a few such rulings during the debate on the income tax bill in the previous session, and there has been a similar ruling earlier this week on a bill before us in this session. I suggest that the effect of this measure is to relieve certain persons of taxation. It does not impose a tax anywhere else and, therefore, on that ground it should be considered as being within the prerogative of a private member.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will take the matter under advisement. The next bill is in the name of the hon. member for Fraser Valley West.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): May I introduce the next bill on behalf of the hon. member for Fraser Valley West, Mr. Speaker.

AMENDMENT RESPECTING BENEFITS RECEIVED BY INDIANS ON RESERVES

On the order: Introduction of Bills.

Mr. Rose—Bill intituled: "An Act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act (Indian reserve rights)".

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Howard, for Mr. Rose, seconded by Mr. Knowles, moves for leave to introduce a bill intituled "An Act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act (Indian reserve rights)". Shall the hon. member have leave to introduce the said bill?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have, of course, the same reservations about this bill as I had about the previous one. If there are any arguments that the hon. member for Skeena wishes to advance in support of the procedural acceptability of the bill, the Chair will hear them.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, when you asked, "shall the hon. member have leave to introduce the bill", I hoped that Your Honour had reviewed the situation with respect to this measure. It is somewhat different. Basically, what is involved here procedurally is this: the Indian Act declares that income received by an Indian on a reserve is not liable to taxation. An Indian does not pay tax on income he receives on a reserve. The amendment is a very simple one. It provides that unemployment insurance benefits payable to an Indian who is a claimant under the Unemployment Insurance Act and is ordinarily resident on a reserve shall also fall within that same protection and that such income shall not be liable to taxation. It merely seeks to correct an error made when the new Unemployment Insurance Act was passed by parliament and to carry into law the traditional, historic right of native Indians not to have their incomes on Indian reserves taxed or liable to taxation. It seeks to clarify the situation by providing that unemployment insurance benefits, although ordinarily liable to be taxed, shall not be taxed when paid to an Indian who is ordinarily resident on an Indian reserve.

Mr. Speaker: If there is no further comment on the procedural aspect of the bill, perhaps hon. members may wish to let the matter stand. The bill that follows is in the name of the hon. member for Kootenay West.

AMENDMENT RESPECTING TAXATION OF BENEFITS AT SOURCE

On the order: Introduction of Bills.

Mr. Harding—Bill intituled: "An Act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971 (no tax at source)".

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Harding, seconded by Mr. Knowles, moves for leave to introduce a bill intituled "An Act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971 (no tax at source)".

I again bring to the attention of hon. members that there is some procedural difficulty. I will hear argument if hon. members have arguments in relation to this bill different from those which have already been proposed.

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I feel that the legislation is in order. Actually there is no real change. The amendment will allow the whole benefit payment rather than reducing it by making an income tax deduction at source. It does not change the intent of the act to consider benefit as income. It merely suggests that payment be made at the end of the year instead of on a weekly basis. We feel that in many cases the workman will be receiving back some of his income and he will need it at the time he receives his cheque rather than several months after the end of the year.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, will you permit me for a moment to underline what the hon. member has said. Your Honour did ask that any arguments in relation to this bill should be distinctive, that is, they should be different from the arguments we have advanced generally.

I suggest that the proposal in this bill really does not infringe upon the financial initiative of the Crown at all. The taxability of Unemployment Insurance benefits remains intact. The only difference is that the individual will not have to compute and pay that tax until the end of the year rather than on a weekly basis when the Unemployment Insurance benefit is received.

The fact of the matter is that the Unemployment Insurance benefit that that worker is receiving is less than his normal pay. There is no telling what will be his total position for the calendar year. It may be that at the end of the year he will get back the amount which was deducted from his benefit. On the other hand, if he has done well, returned to work and his income is high, he will have to pay. Perhaps I am getting a bit into an argument on the substance of the bill, but I am simply trying to make the point that in terms of dollars and cents and in terms of what the treasury has to gain or lose, there will be no change as a result of this bill. It is only a matter of convenience to the unemployed worker.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has listened with interest to the views expressed by both hon. members and will take their argument under consideration.

AMENDMENT RESPECTING HOLIDAY PAY

On the order: Introduction of Bills.

Mr. Peters—Bill Intituled: "An Act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971 (holiday pay)".

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, the same argument which applied to the bill Your Honour allowed respecting sick leave pay applies to this bill. In the case of all these bills it seems to me that the only argument that can be advanced against them is that these matters are the responsibility of the Crown and that we are infringing on the Crown in relation to them.

The bill that amended the Unemployment Insurance Act established some new rules and provided for changes in the original act. However, in the original act and in other pieces of legislation severance pay and bonuses accumulated over a period of time in our opinion were not intended to be included as earnings and certainly not calculated over the period when those sums of money would not normally be available.

When holiday pay legislation was originally passed in the province of Ontario there was a time element placed on it. The worker received stamps in his book. He could not cash those stamps until July 2 of the year following the earning of those stamps. They were specifically collected by the worker to provide for a holiday period. The amount was not considered as earnings. It was part of the pay schedule. This was not the intention of the legislation but it was the intention of the regulations.

We are not now asking for a payment from the Crown. We are not redistributing the money the Crown has raised. All we are doing is exempting something which does not belong in the calculations of benefits under the Unemployment Insurance Act.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

I presume that Your Honour's objection to these bills stems from the situation that the moneys are not now in a fund directly linked with the Unemployment Insurance Commission but are included in general revenue and that in a technical sense all moneys paid for unemployment insurance through the collection made by the Department of National Revenue become moneys of the Crown. I suggest this is a technicality. There is a lot of bookkeeping in the process and the situation has really not changed since the unemployment insurance fund lost its old form and became a revolving fund. The moneys paid for holiday pay will make no difference as far as the tax structure of the nation is concerned and the question of whether this involves a change in taxation should not enter into our consideration because I believe there is a difference between moneys collected to pay for unemployment insurance benefits, or expenditures made on behalf of the unemployment insurance fund, and taxes which flow into general revenue. If this is not the case, the country will be very surprised to find that unemployment insurance is a welfare measure operated by the consolidated revenue fund rather than an unemployment insurance fund. I do not think even the government has that intention.

Mr. Speaker: The bill will stand.

AMENDMENT RESPECTING RETIREMENT BENEFIT

On the order: Introduction of Bills.

Mr. Peters—Bill intituled: "An Act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971 (retirement benefit)".

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, this bill was placed on the order paper more for clarification and interpretation than probably a change. In looking at the Unemployment Insurance Act which we passed recently there is by a simple reading of that act a three-week retirement period for persons who have either made an application under the Canada Pension Plan or have reached the age of 70.

This has been interpreted to mean that a person who is already on a major claim that has paid 20 weeks benefits is entitled to three weeks. But if he is drawing benefits when he reaches 70 the interpretation has been to discontinue the payments. This is a clarification indicating that those three weeks to which he is entitled will be paid to him after he has reached his seventieth birthday.

Mr. Speaker: The bill will stand.

AMENDMENT RESPECTING BENEFITS AT TIME OF RETIREMENT

On the order: Introduction of Bills.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre)—Bill intituled: "An Act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act (benefits at time of retirement)".

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the bill is simple. I realize I am not introducing the bill at this point, but the purpose leads into the procedural question. The purpose of this bill is to provide that section 31 of the Unemployment Insurance Act shall not apply until the year 1977.

Section 31 of the Act is the section which denies people unemployment insurance benefits except for a three-week period if they are 70 years of age or over or have applied for benefit under the Canada Pension Plan. I suppose Your Honour looks at this and says it means that certain persons will be drawing benefits, if this bill goes through, which they would not otherwise draw during this transitional period. That was the purpose of my putting it this way—just to provide a transitional period. Your Honour may feel that if they were drawing money which they would not otherwise draw, it would have to come out of the treasury.

May I remind you that the present structure of the new Unemployment Insurance Act is one in connection with which there is no federal contribution. Charges are levied against employers and employees. Under the old act there was a tripartite basis for the making of contributions. Under the new one, there is only a bipartite arrangement. I know there are certain points at which the government comes into the picture, but the basic structure is one in which only employers and employees pay.

There is a similar situation with respect to the Canada Pension Plan. Some private members' bills touching the Canada Pension Plan have been allowed on the basis of this same argument, namely, that the Canada Pension Plan is financed entirely by employers and employees without any government contribution being made thereto. It is on this basis that I contend that the bill we are considering does not infringe the financial prerogative of the Crown.

Then there is the point which my hon. friend from Timiskaming raised, namely, that there does not presently exist an unemployment insurance fund, that the money goes in and out of consolidated revenue. But in terms of bookkeeping I suggest that if this bill were allowed, and if it cost any additional money, it would result in an increase in the amount which employers and employees would have to pay. On this basis I contend it is not a bill which infringes the financial prerogative of the Crown.

There is one other point I wish to make. Your Honour might find it unusual, coming from me, but the argument is a sound one anyway. There is another place in this building. It still exists, despite years and years of efforts on my part to get rid of it.

An hon. Member: Like you.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): In that place a gentleman from Saskatchewan—he is Hon. Hamilton McDonald—has introduced a bill which goes further than mine does. He wants to abolish section 31 completely. That bill has been introduced and given first reading in the other place.

If my bill infringes the financial initiative of the Crown because it postpones the application of section 31 for five years, then the other certainly does so to an even greater extent. Not only are private members of the other place denied the right to introduce bills trespassing on the financial initiative of the Crown, but that prohibition applies to the Senate as a whole; that body cannot deal with, or pass, what we call in general terms a money bill. There was an instance a year or two ago of a government bill which was passed in the Senate. When it came over here we discovered it was a money bill, and after a point of order had been raised Your Honour ruled that it could not be proceeded with as a bill from the Senate; it had to be introduced by the government in this House.

My point is that a bill that is similar to this, with the exception that it goes further, has been allowed by the Speaker of the Senate as in order. That means that in his view that bill does not infringe the financial initiative of the Crown. I believe that Your Honour and His Honour the Speaker of the Senate are on good terms and communicate with each other. Therefore I am happy to suggest that since Your Honour is reserving judgment you might discuss this matter with him. Whatever one may think about the other place, I am sure we would not want to be practising an inconsistency or want that place to be able to grant a right that is denied this House. I hope Your Honour will find this bill is procedurally in order.

AMENDMENT RESPECTING WAITING PERIOD AND DELAY IN PAYMENT OF BENEFITS

On the order: Introduction of Bills.

Mr. Howard (Skeena)—Bill Intituled: "An Act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971 (justitia pro societas)".

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I know that on the first day when these bills might have been introduced Your Honour raised some question about the construction of the Latin in the subtitle to the bill. All I was trying to do, though realizing it was inaccurate grammatically, was to put the concept of the just society in its proper place, namely, in the past, indefinite, indeterminate tense that it always has been.

Mr. MacEachen: What sort of tense is that?

Mr. Lewis: The imperfect past.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Without dealing with the substance of the bill, as I will when Your Honour permits it to be introduced on another day, I might just say that it does involve an expenditure of funds out of the unemployment insurance account. This is an expenditure to eliminate the two-week waiting period and to impose a penalty on the commission in the form of an additional benefit to be paid claimants whose claims have been delayed through no fault of their own.

I submit that the arguments which have been advanced by my colleagues from Timiskaming and Winnipeg North Centre about this expenditure not being from public funds are accurate. This is not money that would be available to the Crown to spend in any way. It is not money that is raised by taxation or by a general levy for public purposes. All the government is in this regard is the custodian of money provided by employees and employers. Inasmuch as the money is not public funds and it is not money under the authority and control of the government, except in a technical, custodial sense, I submit there should be no question of any infringement of the right of the Crown to expend public funds.

The other matter Your Honour should consider is this. Even if it is determined that, in the strict legal sense, yes, perhaps this does infringe upon what you might call the financial initiative of the Crown, I think in this day and age account should be taken of the fact that people who have complaints, who have experienced difficulties with, and been disadvantaged by, the operations of the Unemployment Insurance Commission in its administration and dispensing of money to those people who contributed the funds in the first place, should have some avenue that enables them to come before parliament with their complaints instead of having to go to this unknown thing called the Crown. Further, I submit that private members representing citizens all across the land should have the opportunity to raise such complaints and grievances in a formal way by proposing they be corrected through the introduction of a bill.

An interesting note—and this is the last of the series of ten bills dealing with people who have been disadvantaged—is that not a single member of the government has in any way objected to the procedure on these bills. They have advanced no procedural arguments against them. In this regard, because the government is sensitive to these matters and to the disadvantages suffered by claimants through delay and so on, I suggest the silence of the government means it consents to the introduction of these bills.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I should like to reinforce the argument advanced in support of these bills. As an individual member I am not of the opinion that we are infringing the prerogative of the Crown to raise money or to distribute money by means of taxation. The Crown has responsibility for moneys that are deposited in the fund and for how they are spent, but this does not upset the balance of ways and means. If this bill were a government measure, I suggest it would not be preceded by a resolution.

For this reason, I hope Your Honour does not make the decision that measures relating to moneys that are on deposit—I am thinking of the Canada Pension Plan, annuity plans and similar schemes in which the government has money on deposit—should be considered as in the same class as a taxation or revenue measure.

Mr. Speaker: I thank hon. members who have participated in the procedural debate. I shall have an opportunity later today or perhaps over the weekend to look at the arguments which have been advanced in support of each bill, and to review the bills from a procedural aspect, and without delay I shall indicate to hon. members which bills, if any, can be proposed to the House. Then hon. members can proceed further in light of the ruling that will be made at that time.

There is a late addition to the notices received under the name of the hon. member for Skeena. However, I do not have a copy of the bill. I would think that, although there is a notice, since there is no bill the matter cannot, of course, be put to the House at this time.

[Mr. Howard (Skeena).]

Mr. Howard (Skeena): I was going to ask that the order stand in any event, Mr. Speaker, for the very reason that the bill is not yet fully complete.

TERRITORIAL SUPREME COURTS BILL

CHANGE IN NAMES OF COURTS OF YUKON AND NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (for the Minister of Justice) moved the first reading of Bill S-3 (from the Senate), to change the names of the Territorial Court of the Yukon Territory and the Territorial Court of the Northwest Territories.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

STEPS TO PREVENT FURTHER SERIOUS INFLATION

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the statements made this week by the governor of the Bank of Canada and the chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission clearly warning Canadians that they must expect inflation in this country to rise considerably during the present year, would the Acting Prime Minister very briefly indicate to the House what steps the government is planning to take to stop this serious and continuing rise in the rate of inflation?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair has to take exception to a question that asks a minister or the government to make a statement as general as this. Even if the hon. member qualifies his question by suggesting that the list be brief or the enumeration be short, I would think a question such as this is not in order. The hon. member might like to rephrase his question and to put it in some other way for the consideration of the Chair.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, then I would ask the Acting Prime Minister, in view of the statements made by these two gentlemen this week, is the government prepared to introduce any measures other than those already introduced to stop inflation from rising?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I want to draw to the attention of hon. gentlemen that the rate of inflation in Canada in the last several months has been the lowest of any of the major industrial nations of the world. It will be the intention of the government to continue the expansion of the economy while containing inflation, and constant studies are under way from week to week with all agencies of the government to that end.

Mr. Hees: Another Paul Martin. Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is this: In view of the nonanswer given by the Acting Prime Minister, is the opinion of the government the same as that of the Prime Minister when he expressed his opinion—and I quote his words—that inflation is licked?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for York South.

Mr. Hees: Could we have an answer to that, Mr. Speaker?

HOUSING

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF LOW INCOME HOUSING AND OTHER REPORTS TO CENTRAL MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask some questions of the Minister of State for Urban Affairs who was not scheduled to be here but, who I congratulate for being here this morning. In view of the leak of a report by three professors of the University of Montreal regarding the operations of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, I should like to know whether he would agree to table that report at the earliest possible moment.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, whatever leaks there may be appear to be from the authors and not from CMHC. The comments I have seen in the press are neither new nor very original. Because there are so many reports which have been made within the corporation during the last little while, I have asked for a complete review for myself concerning which ones should be made public and which ones should not be.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister a supplementary question. The head of CMHC has already commented—and I quote from the newspaper report—that this report is bloody nonsense. In view of the fact also that there are five additional reports according to the newspaper, indeed six reports altogether which have been prepared as a result of the task force, may I ask the minister how soon he will inform the House which of these reports will be made public so that the people of Canada and members of parliament may have a better understanding of the role of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation under the National Housing Act on an issue as important as housing in Canada?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, when my review of the question is finished. I had intended to table the annual report of the corporation today which indicates, contrary to some statements that have been made, that 83.2 per cent of the present budget is allocated for low-income programs. I must admit I have devoted most of my attention, as indicated in the Speech from the Throne and in my speech of a week ago last Monday, to getting before the House as soon as possible new housing legislation to correct some of the mechanisms we now have to improve housing in Canada.

Mr. Lewis: I have a final supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister inform the House how long his department and Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation have had these reports, because I am informed it has been quite a time? May I ask the minister what exactly the department is trying to hide in refusing to make these reports public?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister might like to reply to the first part of the question, but the hon. member will appreciate that the second part of his question is hardly acceptable procedurally.

Mr. Lewis: It is a statement of fact, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Basford: The reports have been received over a period of time whenever they were finished and submitted and the department has been devoting its attention to reviewing the National Housing Act and putting proposals before me and my predecessor in the government.

AVAILABILITY OF REPORT ON LOW INCOME HOUSING PRIOR TO CONSIDERATION OF ESTIMATES BY COMMITTEE

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the minister. In view of the indictment in the report to the effect that the much touted special innovative program to help low-income groups a couple of years back was a failure, will the minister assure the House that the report in respect of which my friend and I are asking questions will be made available to interested members by the time when the housing estimates go to the committee.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think I have answered that question.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Greenwood for a last supplementary and then I think in fairness the Chair should recognize the hon. member for Compton.

INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the same minister. In light of the apparent fact that the task force report advocates a rehabilitation program immediately to replace present stop-gap measures, will the minister assure the House that the promised legislation on this subject will be brought to the House very soon?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the government's position was indicated in the Speech from the Throne and in my speech to the House of a week ago Monday in which it was made clear that legislation dealing with a number of housing subjects would be proceeded with just as fast as we can.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

ALLEGED DEFICIT TENDENCY IN BALANCE OF PAYMENTS—REPERCUSSIONS ON STABILITY OF CANADIAN DOLLAR

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister?

As the Governor of the Bank of Canada has expressed concern over the deficit trend in of our balance of payments, would the minister indicate if the Canadian dollar will remain stable or if it will be affected by this trend?

[English]

Hon. Arthur Laing (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I apologize but I did not understand the question of the hon. member.

[Translation]

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Speaker, I repeat my question.

As the Governor of the Bank of Canada has expressed concern over the deficit trend in our balance of payments, would the minister indicate if the Canadian dollar will remain stable or if it will be affected by this trend?

[English]

Mr. Laing: Well, Mr. Speaker, of course the position of the dollar is affected from day to day and week to week by various circumstances internally and externally. It is the intention of the government to continue to pursue policies designed to keep the dollar as stable as possible to create the best conditions for both exporters and businessmen within the country.

Mr. Speaker: Yesterday the Chair undertook to give some priority today to a few of our colleagues who rose without success yesterday and for a few moments I should like to try to live up to this commitment. The hon. member for Churchill.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a question for the Minister of Supply and Services. In view of the great concern being evidenced both in Churchill, Manitoba, and Winnipeg regarding a reported change in policy which would mean that the annual requirements of the Keewatin area in the Northwest Territories would be supplied out of Montreal instead out of the port of Churchill as has been the case for many years, can the minister inform the House whether in fact supplies are to go out of Montreal instead of Churchill this summer?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, there has been no change in policy in so far as the Department of Supply and Services is concerned in this area.

[Mr. Basford.]

Mr. Simpson: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the reply of the minister, but in view of the fact that the Minister of Transport has advised me there has been no change in policy in that department, I would ask the minister whether he would look into the report that all the supplies for the Northwest Territories which normally went out of Churchill in past years are this year to go out of Montreal? Would he look into that and report to the House?

• (1200)

Mr. Richardson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have already had word of that report and I am looking into it but, as I say, it does not reflect any change in my department.

POST OFFICE

STATUS OF NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNIONS ON NEW CONTRACT—REQUEST FOR AVOIDANCE OF PUBLIC INCONVENIENCE

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the President of the Treasury Board. In view of the fact that the postal union contract expires next week, can the minister advise the House of the most recent progress in the negotiations?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): No, Mr. Speaker, other than to say that progress is being made. I think the hon. member would agree that a detailed report would not be helpful.

Mr. Hales: In view of a possible breakdown in the negotiations, can the minister give the assurance that the people of Canada will not be inconvenienced and business suffer great losses and cost as they did at the time of the previous breakdown?

Mr. Drury: In so far as the question is based on the assumption of a breakdown, it is unfounded and consequently hypothetical.

POSSIBLE BREAKDOWN OF NEGOTIATIONS—CONTINGENCY PLANS

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a question of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Postmaster General relating to the one that has just been asked. In the event of a breakdown in the negotiations, what contingency plans does the government have to ensure the continuance of vital Post Office services?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is the kind of question on which it is difficult to rule. The hon. member prefaced his question with "in the event", which makes the question hypothetical. At the same time I think it is valid to ask whether contingency plans are being made. A question posed in those terms is in order and perhaps the parliamentary secretary might like to reply on that basis.

Mr. Gerald Richard Cobbe (Parliamentary Secretary to Postmaster General): I do not believe there is any indication that this will happen as negotiations are proceeding at a much more rapid pace than we had anticipated previously. I am sure that if such an event should occur the department is prepared to look after any circumstances as they arise.

HOUSING

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF CAPITAL BUDGET OF CENTRAL MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): I have a question for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs, Mr. Speaker. Does the minister intend to table the capital budget of CMHC soon and why is it now two months later than it has been in the past two years?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): I believe it has been tabled, but I will check into it.

AGRICULTURE

PROGRAM TO ASSIST SMALL FARMERS—STATUS OF NEGOTIATIONS WITH PROVINCES—METHOD OF APPLICATION

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the hon. Minister of Agriculture?

As he met with his provincial counterparts to discuss the small farms development program, for which $150 million were appropriated, would the minister report to the House progress made in negotiations with the provinces on this program, as several provinces recently objected to the terms of application of the program?

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the last meeting I had with the provincial ministers was on February 14. In so far as the features of the program for the farmers are concerned there has been a great deal of progress, but as to the division of administrative responsibility between the two levels of government I regret I have to report that there has not been a great deal of progress.

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. I should like to ask him whether this is because the provinces do not agree with the assumption that their administrative officials should be charged with the responsibility of carrying out what is essentially a federal program? Is this where the difference lies?

Mr. Olson: Not at all, Mr. Speaker. I think that, on balance, it would be the other way; they wish to assume more of the responsibility than we had suggested with us paying for it.

[Translation]

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister whether he would be willing to consider setting up individual methods of application for this program with each one of the provinces, that is to negotiate with each one instead of applying the policy uniformly across the nation?

[English]

Mr. Olson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, that is the stage at which we are now. At the meeting on February 14 I think it was generally agreed that one administrative plan applicable in precisely the same way to all the provinces was not capable of being reached, and we are now attempting to negotiate with each province bilaterally.

PROGRAM TO ASSIST SMALL FARMERS—NEGOTIATIONS WITH PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): I should like to ask the Minister of Agriculture, Mr. Speaker, whether discussions are at present going on between the government of Prince Edward Island and his department with regard to the initiation of the small farm program in that province in the near future?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Not directly with P.E.I. at present although we have extended to that province the same invitation as to all other provinces. I think only three provinces have replied that they are ready to start these negotiations, but P.E.I. is not one of those that has replied to date.

FEED GRAIN—POSSIBILITY OF FREE INTERPROVINCIAL MOVEMENT

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture who of course is always interested in assuring that farmers have the largest possible income. I therefore ask him whether or not the government is giving consideration to making it possible for farm producers of feed grains on the Prairies to ship them to any part of Canada regardless of whether movement is otherwise controlled by the provinces?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): I am sure that the right hon. member would be cognizant of the fact that if there were no restrictions such as those imposed at provincial borders at present it would completely break down the system of quotas which allocates the market fairly amongst all the producers, thereby leading to the destruction of that system which, in my view, would be undesirable.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That does not answer my question. The hon. gentleman should learn from the Acting Prime Minister who today showed what experience can do when it comes to answering questions. There is no substitute for experience. I ask the minister simply whether or not consideration is being given to making it possible for farmers to dispose of their feed grain regardless of provincial authorities or jurisdiction.

Mr. Olson: I do not think it would be proper for me to comment on the propriety of provincial legislation or programs which would flow from that legislation within the provinces.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is the answer a simple "no", instead of a multitude of equivocation?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Greenwood.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

LAY-OFFS OF CIVILIAN EMPLOYEES AT CHATHAM, N.B., BASE—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO PROVIDE ALTERNATIVE EMPLOYMENT

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): My question is addressed to the Acting Minister of National Defence, but I am not quite sure who he is. Has the attention of the minister been called to the recent lay-off of 50 employees at the Canadian Forces Base, Chatham, New Brunswick, with a consequent loss of jobs, seniority, retirement plan and other benefits and the serious effect of this lay-off in the already depressed situation? What action is the government taking to provide alternative employment for those affected?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, this matter has been brought to the attention of the Acting Minister of National Defence and all possible steps that can be taken at present are being taken.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, perhaps someone over there could tell us where the Minister of National Defence is and whether he is alive and well.

Mr. Fairweather: He has gone on a trip with Henry Kissinger.

Mr. Forrestall: Would the acting minister accept some persuasion from this side of the House to have his colleagues reconsider this program of lay-offs at the end of March since it affects not only Chatham but all bases right across the country and in fact hundreds of men are being laid off at a time when unemployment continues at an unacceptably high level?

• (1210)

Mr. Dubé: Yes, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of National Defence is alive and well. At the present time he is visiting Canadian bases, as he should, and on his return he will be given notice of the question asked by the hon. member.

PUBLIC SERVICE

SETTLEMENT OF CONTRACTS ON REGIONAL BASIS

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Treasury Board. Is it the policy of the Treasury Board, in negotiating contracts with public servants working in different parts of Canada, to try to settle wage rates on a regional basis?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): In principle, yes, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. Olson.]

Mr. Fairweather: Why does the government attempt to institutionalize the dilemma that faces this country, the dilemma of regional disadvantages and disparities?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would think that the way the supplementary question is asked it is inviting debate, but if the minister wishes to reply perhaps he will be allowed to do so briefly.

Mr. Drury: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is not a question but an argument that is being presented. I would reply by saying it is not true that an attempt is being made to institutionalize our problems. This is an attempt to bring about, in an orderly way, a greater measure of unity.

Mr. Fairweather: Ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

AGRICULTURE

HOGS—COMPENSATION TO PRODUCERS OF WEANLINGS

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. Minister of Agriculture.

In view of continuous submission of petitions from weanling producers calling for financial assistance as compensation for losses incurred during 1971, may I ask the hon. Minister of Agriculture whether he would be prepared to have this special problem considered in order to give, if warranted, a favourable reply to this class of producers who, according to the petition I received this morning, are calling for payment of a certain amount per brood sow?

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I have answered that we intend to pay this deficiency payment to those who market finished hogs. It seems to me that the hon. member has raised this question before, and he has agreed with me that the possibility of paying on the same hog more than once, if one were to make the payment at any other point in the marketing system, would be very high, and therefore it is not desirable.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

I would ask the hon. minister—although I have already put this question I believe we did not quite understand each other—whether he would be prepared to recognize that those raising hogs for marketing at 200 lbs., for instance, are in a different class from those raising piglets. Losses incurred by producers of piglets are not compensated under government policy, whereby there is payment of $5 for a "finished hog". Therefore—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the minister mig reply to the rephrased question briefly, and then we w try to proceed to another subject.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I have recognized that difference in replies in the past, but even recognition of the difference does not solve the administrative problem of probably paying on the same piglet more than once.

INCREASE IN FEED GRAIN SUBSIDY—EXCLUSION OF PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Agriculture if he is now in a position to reply to the question I asked of his parliamentary secretary some days ago as to why Prince Edward Island was excluded from the list of provinces to which Canadian Livestock Feed Board subsidies for feed grain shipments are made?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, Prince Edward Island is not excluded from those subsidies. Indeed, there have been no changes that in fact increased the actual cost to producers in Prince Edward Island. All of the changes that were made in the various zones across the country were to compensate for actual upward movements in transportation costs.

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister if he would give consideration to amending or correcting the press release which was issued from his own office?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I think it was a very accurate press release.

IMPORTATION OF FRENCH BEEF CATTLE—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON PROGRAM

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. The minister will recall his reply to my question in the committee regarding the three-year no resale department requirement on imports of French beef breeds. Has the minister now had time to reconcile his reply with the facts as I disclosed them yesterday in the committee?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, my replies were not at variance with the facts.

Mr. Rose: I wonder if I might ask a supplementary question of the minister. Will he undertake a thorough review of this whole program and then make a statement in the House articulating an improved policy in this area?

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member for Fraser Valley West rising on a point of order?

Mr. Rose: Yes, Mr. Speaker. My point of order is that the minister nodded in reply and I do not think the Hansard reporter caught the nod.

Mr. Olson: I said yes, Mr. Speaker.

TRADE

EXPECTED MORE RAPID GROWTH OF IMPORTS COMPARED TO EXPORTS—EXPORT TARGET

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Since there have been predictions by the business community in Canada that our exports in 1972 will grow more slowly than our imports, I would like to ask the minister if his department has an export growth target for 1972 and, if so, could he inform the House what that target might be?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the observation made by the hon. member is a correct one. In 1972 imports are expected to grow faster than exports. Indeed the present estimation is for a moderate growth of exports but in real terms, that is, with the lowest possible inflation content. The present expected growth is in the 7, 8 or 9 per cent range. If the hon. member wishes to see me later I will indicate to him a number of measures which we are taking to push on that moderate growth.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

SUGGESTED POOLING OF SURPLUS ASSETS OF ALL CROWN CORPORATIONS WITH THOSE OF NATIONAL DEFENCE

Mr. Cliff Downey (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Supply and Services. Have he or his officials investigated the possibilities that would be inherent in the pooling of surplus assets of Canadian Crown corporations and those of the Department of National Defence with a view to economies in administration, increasing revenue through better merchandising techniques, and the possibility of departmental cataloguing and retailing of items?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, the pooling of assets of all Crown corporations is not within the area of my responsibility.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

POSSIBLE EFFECT OF PRESIDENT NIXON'S VISIT ON LENGTH OF EASTER RECESS

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the government House leader. Can he tell us why he cannot say for sure whether or not we will be reconvening on April 10 after the recess? In fact, yesterday he said the return date would probably be later. Is it a fact that the government does not want parliament sitting while President Nixon is here?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please!

Inquiries of the Ministry

HEALTH

MEDICARE—POSSIBLE INCLUSION OF DENTAL CARE FOR CHILDREN—GOVERNMENT PRIORITY FOR EXTENSION OF SERVICES

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the growing requests from both community and professional organizations to expand the medicare program to include dental care programs for children, I want to ask the minister if he is prepared to indicate to the provinces that the federal government would be willing to pass the necessary Order in Council extending the medicare program to include dental care for children?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I cannot agree with the premise of the hon. member's remarks that the provinces, or some of the provinces, are pressing for dental care. It seems to me that various provinces have different priorities. Some feel that medicare should be expanded to include drugs as a priority over dental care. Some are pressing for other paramedical personnel to be covered rather than denticare first. I think there is really no consensus developing among the provinces for denticare per se.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, I agree with the minister that there may be some differences of opinion with respect to the priorities that the various provinces have established. May I ask him what is the priority of the federal government with respect to the next step in a comprehensive health insurance program? Is the minister seriously considering dental care for children as an essential next step?

• (1220)

Mr. Munro: Mr. Speaker, it is the government view that dental care is very important indeed but to answer the question specifically as to whether we have come to a decision on our preference, no, we have not formally come to that decision but we are giving it consideration at the moment.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

POSSIBILITY OF RETURNING AFTER EASTER IN TIME TO PARTICIPATE IN PRESIDENT NIXON'S VISIT

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I may rephrase the question which the hon. member for Huron addressed to the government House leader. Regardless of whether we come back on April 10 from the Easter recess, can the House leader assure us that we will be back in time for the memorable visit of the President so that we can take part in it in some form?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Yes, Mr. Speaker, probably the motion will indicate that we will come back on Thursday which is the day the President's visit begins.

Mr. Bell: Does the House leader realize that if we are not back then and are not given an opportunity to take part, the government might be accused of a fast political shuffle with the President with an election coming up?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, people would not suggest that at all.

Mr. Hees: They are suggesting it already.

AGRICULTURE

POSSIBLE CROP DIVERSIONS TO RELIEVE ECONOMIC BURDEN—MARKET OUTLOOK FOR 1972

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Based on the fact that we are on the eve of another crop year and that for the past two years the government has sent missions including officials of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce to various countries in order to study market demands and new products, may I ask the minister if he is now prepared to recommend to producers of agricultural products, especially in eastern Canada, any new crops or any crop diversion that might relieve some of the economic burden they now face?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I do not have at my fingertips, or off the top of my head, information on some new product that has not been produced before. However, two weeks ago or thereabouts there was an updated report from the outlook conference and producers will have available to them that updated prospectus on what the market demand for various commodities may be for the 1972 production year.

Mr. Danforth: Based on all the research, the task force reports and the meetings of the various commodity groups, has the Department of Agriculture no new crops to recommend or no new crop measures to recommend to agriculture at this time?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, what has come out of the research branch are new varieties and that sort of thing. If the hon. member is asking whether there is some completely new type of crop or product to be produced, I do not think we are in a position to say that there is a commercial, viable market for some of them although there are several that are being tried experimentally to test the market.

FISHERIES

INCIDENT WITH RUSSIAN SHIP—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Fisheries, perhaps his parliamentary secretary would take my question as notice. Would the minister be prepared to make a statement in the House or at least a reply giving details of an incident which took place a short time ago between a Russian ship and a Canadian fisheries patrol vessel off Canada's east coast, at which time the Canadian government attempted to discuss with the Russians their dangerous fishing practices and were refused access to the command ship?

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): I shall certainly bring this matter to the attention of the minister, Mr. Speaker.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

LENGTH OF EASTER RECESS—CORRECTION OF STATEMENT OUTLINING AGENDA FOR NEXT WEEK

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, my question is really a point of order directed to the government House leader but I see he has disappeared. First of all, I was going to ask if all of us could be told when we are being let out, let alone when we are returning? I see the minister has now returned to the chamber. Second, is he correctly reported in Hansard of yesterday as saying the "piracy amendments to the Criminal Code" or did he really mean the privacy amendments?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I meant "privacy"; I think I did say privacy. On the question of dates, I should like to tell my hon. friend that we propose to put down a motion to adjourn this part of the session on Wednesday next, probably coming back on the Thursday as I have indicated already to the chief whip of the opposition.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

REQUEST FOR CHANGE IN THE WAY DIVORCED MEN AND WOMEN ARE LISTED ON ELECTORAL LISTS

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the fact that divorced women or women living apart from their husbands cannot vote in the forthcoming federal election unless they have the preface "Mrs." before their names on the list, will the minister, in the interests of achieving sexual equality, draw to the attention of the minister in charge of the Canada Elections Act the need for a rule change to require divorced men or men living apart from their wives to be listed as "Mr." on the electoral lists?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I shall draw that matter to the attention of the Chief Electoral Officer.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): What about bachelors?

Mr. Speaker: I believe the hon. member for Joliette had a supplementary to a previous question.

[Translation]

Does the hon. member wish to put a question that is supplementary to the one he asked earlier?

AGRICULTURE

HOGS—PAYMENT OF SUBSIDY TO PRODUCERS OR JOINT PRODUCTION UNITS

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I should like to put a supplementary question to the Minister of Agriculture.

As several hog producers are now concerned about knowing in whose name the subsidy cheques will be made out by the federal government, can the minister tell us whether the cheques will be addressed to the producer or to the "integrator"?

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the payment will be made to the producer and, of course, the upper limit is 200 hogs per producer. There are some difficulties in various parts of Canada because of the method of selling. We have asked producers, in making their applications, to provide us either with the grading certificates or the best evidence that they have. We will check this against plant records to make sure that all bona fide producers, but only bona fide producers, are paid.

HEALTH

MEDICARE—POSSIBLE INCLUSION OF PARAMEDICAL SERVICES

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare, Mr. Speaker, which is really a supplementary to a previous question. Will the government this session either amend the Medicare Act, if that is necessary, or change the regulations to include cost-sharing of paramedical services with any province which includes or wishes to include one or several of the paramedical services under its medicare plan?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member may be aware, we have been negotiating with the provinces with respect to new proposals which would, in effect, replace hospitalization and medicare and provide a great deal more flexibility to the provinces to include paramedical personnel. We combined that proposal with a further proposal to make available to the provinces roughly $640 million in terms of thrust funds so they could get into new areas, one of the principal ones being the inclusion of paramedical personnel. The provinces are now considering these proposals.

MEDICARE AND HOSPITALIZATION—LIMITATION OF FEDERAL CONTRIBUTION UNDER GOVERNMENT PROPOSALS

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I have a supplementary question for the minister, Mr. Speaker. Are these proposals which the federal government is putting forward to the provinces contingent on the provinces accepting a restriction of the federal government's contribution to hospitalization and medicare programs and limiting the increase in any federal government contribution to the increase in the gross national product?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Yes, Mr. Speaker, that is an element of the proposals. The proposals have a twofold purpose, to halt the escalation in costs and to improve the efficiency of the health delivery system and by so doing respond to the provinces' demand for a greater say in the priorities. I might add, Mr. Speaker, that many of the provinces agree with the federal government that if the present projection in terms of escalation of health costs continues without some governmental action to limit the increase over the next few years, the growth will be so monumental that it might constitute a threat to the whole system we have developed in Canada which I believe is second to none in the world.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to interrupt the minister's statement. We have reached the end of the question period. Is the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre rising on a point of order?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: We have reached the end of the question period. I believe the Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State wishes to ask the House to revert to motions?

Mr. Faulkner: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I should like to have unanimous consent to revert to motions for the purpose of tabling the evaluation task force report.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

FAMILY INCOME SECURITY PLAN

MEASURE TO PROVIDE BENEFITS IN RESPECT OF CHILDREN

On the order: Government orders:

March 15, 1972—Second reading and reference to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs of Bill C-170, An Act to provide for the payment of benefits in respect of children.—The Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I hope that my point of order will be of interest to Your Honour. I think it will interest the government House leader. My point of order is based on the bill now before the House, Bill C-170. I submit, and this is my point of order, that the motion for second reading and reference to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs of Bill C-170 cannot now be considered. To do so, Mr. Speaker, would violate the long standing rule of the House to the effect that a question, being once put and decided in the affirmative or negative, cannot be questioned again but must stand as a judgment of the House. I submit that that is the accepted principle governing this House. Explanations of this rule will be found in May's Parliamentary Practice, Seventeenth Edition, at page 396 and following pages and at page 518 and following pages, and in Beauchesne's Fourth Edition, page 164, paragraph 194.

That is the procedural rule, Mr. Speaker. When applied to the situation now before the House, we find that the message containing the recommendation of His Excellency informs this House that the bill provides for amendments to the Income Tax Act. Clause 22 of the bill purports to implement this recommendation by amending section 120 of the Income Tax Act. Only a few days ago this House voted on Bill C-169, an act to amend the Income Tax Act. Having passed all stages in the House, Bill C-169 is now before the other place at the second reading stage. The Senate minutes for Thursday, March 23, 1972, under orders of the day, so indicate. Page 77 of the Senate minutes also indicates that on that day the other place adjourned until next Monday at eight o'clock in the evening.

Section 34(2) of the Interpretation Act, Revised Statutes of Canada, 1970, Chapter I-23, provides:

An Act may be amended or repealed by an Act passed in the same session of Parliament.

I want to make it clear that we do not oppose the principle of the bill before the House. What we oppose is the change that the government, in our view, has made in the bill. A bill similar to this one was introduced in the last session, I think as Bill C-264, and received first reading on September 13, 1971. Clause 21 or 23 of that bill regarding the repeal of the Family Allowances Act and the implementation of the new act provided that that section shall come into force on the 1st May, 1972. On a number of occasions throughout the previous session members on this side of the House pressed the government to bring forward this bill. There was general agreement in the House to pass this bill so that the families of Canada, especially the middle and lower income families, could begin enjoying the new benefits by the target date of May, 1972. Clause 3(4) of the bill now before the House provides:

> No benefit is payable under this Act for any month in a benefit year for which an allowance is payable under the Family Allowances Act.

In other words, it is entirely at the discretion of the government when extra benefits will be available for the mothers of Canada, whereas under the previous bill a specific target date was set. Frankly, we are suspicious of the government's intentions in this regard. We suspect it is trying to play politics with this bill and save it as a tidbit before the election.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McGrath: I submit that because of the mismanagement of the business of the House, a mismanagement of which the government is guilty, this House, according to the rules and precedents which I have referred to in my point of order, is prevented from proceeding with Bill C-170 until Bill C-169 receives Royal Assent.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I tell the hon. member that I will have no difficulty ruling on the point of order he has raised. If other hon. members want to express their opinions, I will listen to them, although I do not think I will have much difficulty in ruling on the point. Of course, I do not want to prejudge the point, and if any hon. member wishes to add to the interesting point of order raised by the hon. member for St. John's East, I will listen. If not, I will give my ruling.

There being no objection, I will proceed. May I begin by referring to the well known rule to which the hon. member for St. John's East alluded. The long established practice of the House is that the House should not be asked to pronounce itself on a question in the same session on which the House has already decided or expressed itself, either by negative or positive vote. That rule, of course, applies to legislation which is proposed to the House within a single session. If a particular item of legislation is proposed to the House on which there is a decision, either in favour or against, it is against the rules and long established practices of this parliament and other parliaments to ask that the House decide again the same question or reconsider the same legislative proposal in the same session.

However, so far as I know, no decision has been taken by this House in the current session, which began a few days ago, which would preclude anyone from proposing legislation of the nature before us at present. May I also indicate to hon. members that there is nothing wrong procedurally with bringing forward two legislative proposals dealing with the same subject. If hon. members will look at our parliamentary papers they will see that on many occasions, and almost at any time, a number of legislative proposals were before the House dealing with the same subject. Of course, once a decision has been reached on one of those legislative proposals, then the House has decided and, within the same session—this does not apply to the following session—it would be irregular to ask the House to look at the same legislative proposal in order that there might be a new or renewed debate. That might lead us into the strange situation in which, within the same session, the House might reach two decisions on that proposal, one being contrary to the other. That is the logic behind the long standing practice and rule to which the hon. member alluded. I do not think it is possible for the Chair to agree that this very valid rule should be extended to the point where it would preclude the consideration of the bill now before us.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved that Bill C-170, to provide for the payment of benefits in respect of children, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak on Bill C-170, which is now at the second reading stage, I should like to refer to the white paper tabled in this House over one year ago. In referring to family allowances, it pointed out that family allowances have lost their effectiveness over the years, as benefits have remained almost unchanged since their inception despite sharp increases in the cost of living. It further pointed out that, although the payments are a welcome addition to the limited incomes of poor families, the size of the allowance is relatively small. As a result, the white paper pointed out that the program has had a limited anti-poverty effect.

Payments per child of $72 to $120 a year, in essence the level of payments which our present family allowance program provides, cannot come near the annual cost of maintaining a child. It is estimated, for instance, that in 1971, about 24 per cent of family and youth allowance expenditures was paid to families with less than $5,000 income, and 76 per cent to families with incomes above this level. Many suggestions have been made in recent years that the family allowances program be made selective rather than universal. It is argued that money used to pay benefits to well-to-do families should be used to increase substantially the benefits payable to low income families.

Increasing the benefits within the existing structure, in other words, following along the philosophy of the present family allowance program, undeniably would involve massive increases in expenditures. One must take into account that current coverage involves almost 7 million children. When one takes into account the seven million children, and if we proceed along the universal route as presently embodied in the family allowance, each dollar added on to the present family allowance rates, again if universal, would mean additional expenditures of $82 million a year. To double the present rates would cost an additional $560 million. That is not counting youth allowances. With youth allowances providing coverage now for 670,000 youths, each dollar added to the youth allowances would mean an additional $8 million a year. To double the amount of this benefit, that is the youth allowances, would require another $80 million.

We see the tremendous expenditures involved when we start to double the rates and benefits under the present family allowances if we just double them and make them universal. We all know there are many other competing demands, both within and outside the security system, for funds of this magnitude. Improvements and social assistance, social insurance and the guaranteed income provisions for the aged are a few examples. For the program to be improved at this time, an alternative is to convert it from a universal to a selective measure, directing more of the current expenditures away from the well-to-do toward the lower income families. This may not be well received by many who will lose some or all of the allowances they receive, but it will do a great deal for those who have greater and more pressing needs.

Any restriction in the family allowances program must, therefore, serve a two-fold purpose. It must assist families in poverty whose resources cannot adequately cover the needs of their children. It must also compensate families in the lower middle income range with the economic burden of raising children so that they can take their place in the society of the future. Achievement of both these goals must remain a key element in Canadian family policy. I refer to the opening statement of the white paper. As Canadians strive for a better social and physical environment, one of their goals is to ensure that everyone has an adequate income on which to live. The white paper provided a focus for eventual consensus on income security for Canadians. For instance, how best can the federal government play its role in relation to income security within a context of a federal study? Adequate income bears partly on the actions of the government and partly on factors beyond a person's capacity to control.

The role of government, and I am referring to the white paper statement, is to develop social and economic policies that will influence those factors beyond individual control in a way that will help people to reach this goal. Income security protects people by giving them additional money when their own resources are not enough to meet the needs regarded by society as being basic. It also replaces the income of people who have lost their earning capacity for such reasons as unemployment, maternity, sickness, disability or death of the family income earner. As one component of over-all social security policy, income security programs are strengthened by the other parts, health insurance and special services for social assistance recipients. These are two outstanding examples.

Although any new initiatives are necessarily limited by what is economically feasible, the economy must be enlisted in support of social objectives. The primary goal is human development. This opening statement of the government's position on income security was a starting point and was subject to the various modifying influences implicit in the white paper dialogue. It could not stand alone nor was it intended to stand alone.

The next step was up to the people of Canada, to citizens and their spokesmen in various other governments and organizations. The people of Canada participated in the dialogue and as a result FISP, the family income security proposals, provides a departure point for the future in the development of the guaranteed income approach for people in the labour force.

In the development of the Family Income Security Plan, a vigorous effort has been continuously made to keep the provinces informed of the proposals, to seek their views and request their suggestions. Several provincial governments were critics of the existing family allowances program. Visits were made to all provinces by myself and my officials to outline and discuss the nature and scope of the federal proposals with provincial ministers and their officials. A federal-provincial conference of welfare ministers was held at which the proposals were further reviewed and the views of the provinces obtained. A number of important changes were made. Again, I and my officials visited the provinces to discuss the modifications. Some further adjustments in the proposals resulted. Another meeting of the welfare ministers took place. Following the announcement of the plan in this House, additional talks were held with those provinces which wished further discussion.

I would like to talk about FISP in relation to income security in general in Canada. The FISP bill is the third step to improve the over-all income security program in Canada. The first step was the guaranteed income supplement for old age pensioners. The second step was the improvement made in the unemployment insurance program. The third step was a selective income security plan for families in the lower income brackets, namely the bill now before us. Under the bill, benefit payments doubled over existing family and youth allowances programs. Children under 12 will get $15 a month instead of $6 or $8. Children 12 to 17 will get $20 a month instead of $8 or $10. This is a program intended to provide income support. Income support alleviates poverty and reduces dependency among those people who have very limited means of support from other sources.

Typical of income support plans are the social assistance programs and guaranteed income plans. The income security system in Canada operates on three levels. First, there is income protection through various social insurance and universal payment programs to people who meet certain eligibility requirements, without regard to their current incomes from other sources. Some examples of this are unemployment insurance, Canada and Quebec pension plans, veterans pensions, workmen's compensation, old age security and family allowances.

The second level is income support to people whose incomes from other sources fall below specified amounts. This in essence is the guaranteed income approach. This would be represented by current programs such as the guaranteed income supplement for aged persons and the new FISP bill which is now before us. The third level, of course, is social assistance for people whose needs are not adequately met through their own efforts or through the programs operating on the other two levels I have just described. The universal payment plans such as family allowances and old age security allowances serve both as income support and income protection. Both are very costly in the effort to reduce poverty. Old age security pensions at $80 a month are continued because this is such an important element in the retirement plans of most Canadians; it provides the foundation upon which Canada Pension Plan and private retirement arrangements are based. But we have placed most emphasis on the guaranteed income supplement and raised it substantially. Of course, it takes other income into account.

With this bill, two universal payment plans are being replaced by a family income security plan based on the guaranteed income concept. The role of FISP is important. FISP benefits will provide a basic income for each child upon which can be built additional supports as deemed appropriate by provincial or municipal authorities. We know that unemployment insurance does not make any special provision for children. Neither do old age security, the guaranteed income supplement, the Canada Pension Plan retirement pension or war veterans allowances. Thus, FISP is designed to help families in the lower income groups.

Perhaps it would be possible for me now to deal with some of the details of the FISP proposals. The federal government has tried to ensure that the federal plan fits in with provincial priorities and social policies. Quebec, which has been closely involved in this, is the only province with a supplementary family allowances plan. And, as we know, Quebec administers its own youth allowances. Quebec has proposed a selective family allowances program along similar lines to the federal plan. The extension of FISP as envisaged in this bill will cover youths 16 and 17 years of age and will replace the youth allowances program. Benefits under the proposed legislation are not treated as taxable income.

The white paper suggested that benefits might be reduced by $1 per month per child for each extra $500 of income. We find after discussion with various people that a provision of these lines might act as a disincentive. The plan, therefore, calls for an adjustment of 30 cents for each $100 extra of income.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Isn't it 33 cents?

Mr. Munro: It works out in terms of percentage.

To make benefits selective, an income floor of $4,500 is established below which full benefits will be paid and above which benefits will be reduced as income increases. The income floor is raised by an additional $500 for each extra child in the family. The ceiling or cut-off point for benefits depends upon the number of children, their ages and the reduction rate. Benefits are, as I indicated earlier, $15 a month for children under 12 and $20 a month for children aged 12 to 17 inclusive. Two and a half million families will receive benefits. Nine hundred thousand families will receive maximum benefits. This would include children of the lower middle income groups and children of families receiving social assistance as well as most of the 150,000 mothers who are, by themselves, raising more than 300,000 children. It will be particularly helpful to families in communities where the amount of social assistance is low.

By this measure the government will be committing $820 million to the FISP proposals, a sizeable increase over the amount now expended on family allowances.

An hon. Member: How much is that?

Mr. Munro: Roughly $650 million.

The scope of the new FISP proposals is such that it replaces both family allowances and youth allowances. The plan takes into account the number and age of children in a family. As far as coverage is concerned, all children under 18 are covered. As far as benefits are concerned, I have already indicated what they will be. In connection with the reduction as income rises, I have indicated that benefits per child are reduced in one-child families with incomes above $4,500 a year and in two-child families with income above $5,000 a year. The income floor rises by $500 for each extra child. The plan introduces a reduction rate of 33 cents per child per month for each extra $100 of income, or $1.65 for each $500, above the floor set for families at that size.

The maximum income in one-child families beyond which no benefits are paid is $10,560 if the child is between the ages of 12 and 17 and $9,045 if the child is younger than 12. In the case of two-child families the figures are $11,060 and $9,545. For three-child families, if the children are aged between 12 and 17—and there is a mixture here between 12 and 17 and under 12—the figures are $11,560 and $10,045, and so on by $500 intervals. I repeat that FISP benefits are not counted as taxable income.

The House would perhaps be interested to hear what is counted as income in the determination of benefits. The income of a person includes all items of income subject to tax, plus unemployment insurance, scholarships and bursaries, adult training allowances and Canada Pension Plan and Quebec Pension Plan, orphans and dependent children's benefits. It does not include social allowances based on a means or income test. Family income is the income of both parents or substitute parents except in the case of separation or divorce or unwed motherhood. Where the adult members of the family contribute to family income, only the income of the adult responsible for maintaining the child and that of the spouse would be counted.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. I regret having to interrupt the hon. minister, but it being one o'clock I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Munro: Mr. Speaker, before the one o'clock break, I was referring to what was included in the calculation of income to determine the benefits which would be payable. I mentioned that it does not include social allowances based on a means or income test. Family income is the income of both parents or substitute parents, except in the case of separation, divorce or unwed motherhood. Where the adult member of the family contributed to the family income, only the income of the adult responsible for maintaining the child and that of the spouse would be counted. So far as the basis of calculating income is concerned, we have endeavoured to avoid the hardship to recipients with declining incomes. Options will be permitted allowing the substitution of an estimate of income in the calendar year of 12 times the average monthly income in the remainder of the current calendar year instead of based on the previous year's income which is the usual case. So far as escalation is concerned, to ensure that FISP remains a significant program, arrangements have to be made to ensure that the income floor and benefit levels remain relevant as prices and incomes rise. To achieve this objective, periodic reviews by the Governor-in-Council will be made on the recommendation of the Minister of National Health and Welfare of the basic income floor and the maximum monthly benefit rates.

Perhaps I might now refer to the impact of the FISP proposal in terms of families affected. Full benefit under FISP will go to 1,249,000 families, or 35.5 per cent. Partial benefit under FISP, in terms of those who will be better off than under the present family allowances program, will go to 623,000, or 17.7 per cent of the total number of families affected. Partial benefits under FISP will go to families who will still be no better off than they were in terms of family allowances. This will happen in the case of 585,000 families or 16.7 per cent. Then, we have the total in respect of full and partial benefits, in other words, people who will be receiving all or part. This will involve 2,457,000 families or 69.9 per cent. Nil benefits will go to approximately 1,050,000 or 30.1 per cent. This is out of a total number of families of 3,516,000.

I should like to give an example of how this would work with reference to a family with an annual income of up to $5,500 having three children aged 7, 9 and 14. They receive under the present family allowances a total of $240 a year or $20 a month. Under the FISP proposal, that family would receive $600 a year or $50 a month incremental income. So we can see from an example such as this what a significant impact this program will have in terms of incremental assistance to those families in the lower income groups.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to refer to some well known authorities as a basis for the decision of the government to bring in FISP at this particular time. I shall refer to some submissions to the Senate Committee on Poverty. First of all, I shall refer to the submission of the Economic Council of Canada. I will paraphrase what the council had to say before the Senate Committee on Poverty. The Economic Council of Canada states that it is difficult to discover an authoritative statement of the fundamental objectives of the family allowances program in the circumstances of today. That, of course, has reference to the present family allowances program. Further, the Council states that this is not to say that family allowances and other long-established programs are not continuing to serve some highly useful purposes, but these purposes should surely be re-examined in the light of the many important economic and social changes in the last generation. One of the great uncertainties is the extent to which the existing structure of policies in fact constitutes an attack on poverty, the extent, that is, to which its benefits flow to those most in need.

I refer to another brief by a highly renowed body which is concerned in the social area, the Canadian Council on Social Development. I shall paraphrase its submission to the Senate Committee on Poverty. The Council believes that the ideal approach to a reformed family allowances program is a general family allowance plan that takes care of a substantial proportion of child rearing costs. The net benefits should be related more closely than now to other income resources.

I now refer to the brief of the province of Ontario, and again I am paraphrasing. The province is vitally concerned with the problem of the working poor, who are primarily low income families with children. Such families receive family allowances but their incomes are still inadequate for their needs since the allowances are not sufficient to raise their incomes to the poverty line. The needs of the poor are real. The leakage in the family allowances system cannot be justified in terms of public acceptability, simplicity of administration or a dubious anonymity. If the family allowances system is retained, it should be converted to a selective system which provides meaningful benefits to the poor and the near poor.

Then we have the brief by the province of New Brunswick, which reads:

> We believe it is essential that additional funds be invested in children to ensure that they have the capacity to compete, on an equal basis, during the years when they are obtaining the education and skills that are so important if they are to lead productive lives.
> In terms of human resource development, we do not think there is any group that is more important.
> The use of family allowances would go some way to solving the policy problems associated with establishing adequate minimum wage levels; establishing adequate welfare benefit levels; and providing strong incentives to work. Minimum wage levels, unemployment insurance benefits, and Workmen's Compensation Board payments all reflect the earning potential of the family head. They do not take into account the size of the family and its relative need.
> A restructuring of the family allowances program provides a means for ensuring that adequate levels of assistance can be provided under a needs tested welfare program without at the same time removing the incentive to work for employable persons with large families.
> If the increased allowances were combined with changes in the Income Tax Act designed to remove the benefit from those that do not need it we do not think the over-all cost would be great.

Now, I shall paraphrase the submission of the Canadian Labour Congress. For over a generation, Canada has recognized the problem of the cost of rearing children. Family allowances were introduced to supplement wage income in that connection since wages are not geared to family size. The value of family allowances has been seriously diminished by the fact that the scale of benefits has remained virtually unchanged since the introduction of the legislation in 1944. In the meantime, wages and salaries, prices, living standards and expectations as to such standards have risen very considerably. Accordingly, the role of family allowances as a contributing factor toward the well-being of the family with young children has gone down. We are not concerned with those families where wages, salaries or other income are adequate and where the family allowance benefit is no more than a minor supplementation to the total income enjoyed by the family. We are concerned about families with low incomes and particularly so where families are fairly large. In those circumstances, family allowances should play a much more important role. It is not simply a matter of increasing benefit rates. We believe that our family allowances system should be reviewed in order to cope more realistically with the cost of raising children at various ages and with the much greater needs of families with many children as against those with only one or two.

There we have some of the outstanding organizations concerned with the poverty problem, and concerned with the incomes of our wage earners in the low-income groups, urging a more realistic family income security system that would bring much needed incremental income to these people most in need. In essence that is what this legislation would do. My closing remarks would be directed mainly to the official opposition. I have been encouraged over recent months by various questions put to me from members of the official opposition, particularly those from the province of Newfoundland. I refer to questions put by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan) and the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall), just to mention a few. If I interpret their questions correctly, I take it that the Official Opposition is much in favour of this legislation. They may have suggestions as to details that can improve it, but in terms of the concept, they are for it. If that is the correct interpretation of the posture of the Official Opposition, then I would expect that this legislation, which is for a very worthwhile social purpose, will commend itself to the House.

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, first of all I wish to congratulate the minister upon putting up such a good front with so little to base it upon. It is just over 25 years since the baby bonuses, now called family allowances, came into effect in Canada. They were masterminded by Mackenzie King and Jack Pickersgill. The reason for their introduction was the depression which had come to the country in 1929. Mackenzie King saw the effects of that depression over the years, and as a result brought in the baby bonus. I do not know why it was called baby bonus, because it was a family allowance from the start. Its purpose was to help relieve poverty in the homes and to increase the spending powers of those on low incomes. As I said, no thought was given to the needs of the child in establishing the baby bonus, the money was to go to the family unit to help that family. This plan came into effect in 1945, and we are much more affluent now than we were then. I heard the minister say what he had done, but let us take a look at what has happened since.

Between July 1945 and September 1971, which was the year FISP was introduced, the consumer price index had more than doubled and had reached the figure of 230.7. It follows then that if the baby bonus had kept pace with this rise, payments for a child aged 11 would have risen from $7 a month in July 1945 to $16.50 in September, 1971. I should like to ask the minister why this figure was not reached, in view of the present affluence and in view of the fact that he has brought the baby bonus up to only a certain level. He has put a ceiling on it. Why did he not go a little beyond that figure? Under this new bill, a child aged 11 will be receiving a maximum of $15, not $16.50 a month, and children aged 12 to 17 will be receiving $20 a month.

The point I am making is that we are not even restoring the buying power which was provided under the legislation in 1945, 27 years ago. Why is that? I say to the minister that he has taken a very timid step, and I congratulate him on that, but maybe somebody should have given him a push. Since 1961, personal income per capita has almost doubled, rising from $1,600 to just over $3,000. At first glance, it would appear that there are fewer people living in poverty, but let us not fool ourselves because the fact remains that inflation and unemployment have eroded the value of the dollar. There are more people below the poverty line than there were in 1961. Let us suppose that personal incomes double again over the next ten years. More and more people will find themselves disqualified because their incomes will have risen above the cut-off line, yet many of those disqualified people may be living at the poverty line. I say to the minister that, in view of all the money that has been put into circulation in the last two or three months, inflation is likely to come about in six months.

While I am on this point, I should like to ask the minister why he should have the discretionary power to say when family allowances should be raised. Why should it not be parliament, and why should it not be done every year in accordance with the rise in the cost of living? This is the same old hook that we had with old age pensions. The government is defrauding the public. I am not saying the minister will do that; I do not think he would, but why does he take the prerogative of making the decision himself, why is parliament not deciding?

I believe that the government should stand condemned for its handling of the constitutional negotiations over the last 16 months. We have heard repeatedly in this parliament vague and conflicting statements from the officials of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro). After a further delay of six months, there has been the introduction of the FISP Bill C-170, keeping in mind that Bill C-264 died after its first reading in the House on September 16, 1971.

Let us take a look at Bill C-170. We find that there has been very little change, in spite of all the constitutional chit-chat in the meantime. No mention is made of the new arrangements for joint federal-provincial participation in family allowances, as was suggested by the Prime Minister himself in the letter to the premiers of March 9, 1972. There is not even a mention of it in the present Bill C-170, and the minister made no mention of it today. In other words, we have a bill before the House that will likely be amended over and over again by the cabinet, after consultations with and suggestions from the provincial governments to make it more acceptable to the provinces so that the constitutional deal can be completed.

I ask the government: why did they not pass the original Bill C-264 last September, since the amendments could have been introduced later and families could have been receiving their new family allowances at a much earlier date? Of course, the joker in the whole thing is that for every month they can delay the implementation of the Family Income Security Plan, Canadian families lose $13 million a month.

Mr. Béchard: That was not the argument in 1944.

Mr. Rynard: It is rather interesting to think of the sinister motives which might lie behind the government's action, in view of the fact that today is the day of the Newfoundland election. It is peculiar that they should have taken this long to introduce it. It is a good thing that the Newfoundland election is today or the bill might have been delayed longer.

Is it not peculiar that there is no date set for implementation in the bill? The minister never gave any indication as to when he was going to implement it, nor is there any date established for the signing of agreements with the provinces. When the Newfoundland election is over, will the bill be left on the order paper with just a few days debate? These are questions that should be answered. I am disappointed in the minister. I like him; he is a nice fellow, but he did not give us very much to go on.

As to the bill itself, there is no quarrel with the fact that families with children have needs that families without children do not have. No one quarrels with this, particularly when one considers that in the year 1944 some 84 per cent of Canadian children under the age of 16 were dependent on only 20 per cent of the gainfully employed. Unquestionably, this plan helped to ensure a little more income for the family unit, while avoiding grants that would diminish work incentives. That was the picture in 1944. Now, we see the minister penny pinching, and not even maintaining family allowances at the original level of their purchasing power. Of course, these allowances which are received by families are used to buy consumer goods, thus helping the economy of the country as a whole.

When family allowances were introduced on July 1, 1945, every child under the age of 16 years who was born in Canada, or who had resided in Canada for one year and complied with the school children attendance laws of the provinces, was covered. Later on, the one year's residence clause was eliminated if the child was supported by an immigrant who had permanent residence in Canada, or by a Canadian returning to Canada to live permanently. The family assistance was paid for a period of one year until the child became eligible for family allowance.

Over the years changes have been made. When family allowances were first introduced, the benefits were $5 up to age six years, $6 from six to nine years, $7 from ten to 12 years, $8 from 13 to 15 years, and monthly allowances were reduced by $1 for the fifth child, $2 for the sixth child and $3 for the seventh child. These restrictions were removed in 1949. In 1957, the regulations were again changed, and the new rates were $6 up to ten years and $8 from 10 to 15 years. Some of the provinces also had their own supplementary benefit plans.

In December, 1970, the government issued a white paper setting out a cut-off point at an income level of $10,000 per year. Monthly benefits would no longer be paid according to the age of the child, but would be regulated on a sliding scale according to income. Family allowances were to become taxable, and youth allowances were to remain unchanged. That is one good thing the minister has done, but it is amazing that, on one hand, the government taxes unemployment insurance benefits and other benefits, and on the other hand, does not tax these benefits. This is a hodge-podge jungle that we are getting into with some things being taxed and some things not being taxed.

The white paper recommendations were never put into legislative form. Bill C-264 was introduced in the House of Commons in September, 1971, as I have stated, and it retained some of the features of selectivity, and included 17 and 18 year olds. In brief, Mr. Speaker, family allowances would be paid to all dependent children under 18 years according to family income, with a limit of ten children for a family with an income of $15,000 per year. Up to age 12, maximum benefits would be $15 per month, and for ages 12 to 17 years benefits would be $20 per month. The family gross income floor was set at $4,500.

I would like the minister to tell me how he picked that figure of $4,500? Why wasn't it $5,500 or $3,200?

Mr. Munro: I took the poverty line from the economic conference study.

Mr. Rynard: What year was that fixed?

Mr. Douglas: It is a sliding scale, too.

Mr. Rynard: That is correct, and it is my opinion that this sliding scale will necessitate a great increase in staff. I think the minister himself admits that it will mean a doubling of staff. There will be a bureaucratic administration, the cost of which will be high and which will not benefit the family. The cost will be extracted from the taxpayer. This bill alone will involve the expenditure of around $800 million in its first year of operation. I do not think the minister gave this figure.

Mr. Munro: Eight hundred and twenty million dollars.

Mr. Rynard: I note that the government has anticipated more than a doubling of staff. I think I am correct in stating that around 1,500 people will be required to administer the scheme. This will cost the taxpayers $12 million for administration. It is a bureaucratic jungle.

Mr. Munro: The cost of administration is only 1½ per cent. It is better than any private scheme.

Mr. Rynard: Could these things not be all put together rather than have a mish-mash like this? Can they not all be placed in one department? Sometimes I wonder if the ministers ever get together and talk things over. In the field of welfare, we are getting into an administrative jungle. I believe it was the hon. member for York East (Mr. Otto) who said that less than 10 cents out of every dollar goes to the person who needs welfare. I do not think that has been disputed. As a matter of fact, I believe the figure is about 9 cents out of every dollar. When I see some of the things that are being done today, I wonder how long we can continue on our present path. It is my opinion that an income security scheme, administered through the income tax structure, could accomplish the desired end as effectively. It would decrease the number of administrative bureaucracies connected with welfare. In effect, it could wipe them out.

Turning to another point, Mr. Speaker, recently the minister told me that he would have enough nurses trained and put into practice. I wonder what fees he will pay them. At present we have nurses serving communities and their charges are just about the same as the charges that doctors impose. How is the minister going to get around that? Apparently the minister looks quite surprised at what I am saying. I will give him facts and figures.

Members of the government say they are helping the poor. How are they helping them? I want to talk about the chronically ill, and they are not all old people. Some have had paralytic strokes at age 50. I saw a fellow the other day who was a cripple and he was no older than the minister. These people have to go to hospitals for the chronically ill and to nursing homes, and they are charged a $3.50 a day deterrent fee.

What a magnanimous government we have in this country. These people need nursing care, medicine and doctors. They are the very people for whom services should be provided free. Let us not boast that we are helping the poor. I could tell the minister about a dozen places where the poor are not helped, where the poor and the sick lie silent, and nobody talks about them. I know the minister will say that these things are within the jurisdiction of the provinces, but the government introduced national medicare and has a responsibility to see that it works effectively.

Mr. Munro: Were you for it when we introduced it?

• (1440)

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Speaker, the minister asked me if I was for that. I want to tell him that I was. I also want to tell him that I mentioned the 30 per cent of doctors' bills that they were having trouble with and asked that this be covered. If that had been done, we would not be in this mess today. The government does not know whether or not it is going broke, but it is not providing the doctors or the service.

Mr. Munro: Talk to Premier Davis!

Mr. Rynard: The other day the minister spoke about services and so forth, but services are not being provided. Why are the universities not open during the summer in order to train the doctors that are needed? The minister speaks of pre-examinations and clinical check-ups to keep people out of hospital—

Mr. Munro: Talk to Premier Davis; he is in charge of education.

Mr. Rynard: This government introduced medicare, and it is their responsibility to talk to the provincial premiers. Mr. Speaker, I will go with the minister and talk to the premier anytime he says.

Mr. Munro: I might take you up on that.

Mr. Rynard: I will be glad to go, because I feel very keenly about this. The minister said that he wanted to practice more preventive medicine but, Mr. Speaker, there are not enough doctors to look after the sick, so where are we going to get doctors to practise preventive medicine? The minister spoke of setting up a clinic but what an impossible situation that is. Now, we are coming into the summer holidays and the universities could be running summer semesters for medical students. This plan would not cost anything because the cost would be recovered in income tax paid by the students as soon as they begin to practice. Mr. Speaker, I believe it is a well accepted principle that there is a tendency for families with a large number of children to have lower incomes. I think it is also reasonably well accepted that family allowances do not encourage couples to have children. There is no doubt about this, since studies have shown that family allowances are not an incentive to increasing the birth rate.

It is interesting to note that Dr. Willard, Deputy Minister of National Health and Welfare, cites as a major error the use of gross income rather than net income in establishing cut-off levels, and says that while there is evidence of the role of family allowances in reducing poverty, it is flimsy and incomplete. It is a pretty weak crutch on which to lean. I believe it is only fair to say that family allowances, as suggested in Bill C-170, will play only a very small role in reducing poverty. There have been many sociologists who have stated outright that this bill will do little to combat poverty. Perhaps we could add that it will do a little levelling between the rich and the poor but the crux of the whole problem is to provide greater opportunities, more work and more jobs for more Canadians so that they can look after themselves.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rynard: The very fact that these larger family allowances are needed, and the number of people who are unemployed, give silent testimony to the fact that the challenge is not being met by this government. This measure is only a stop gap. At best, FISP will not even restore the buying power of the family allowance of 1945. It is not a new advance. It has not even broken new ground. It is only restoring part, not all, of what has been lost because of the selectivity factor which cuts off families in the higher income brackets. Not only does this bill fail to close the gap between the buying power of the family allowance cheque in 1945 and the buying power of FISP cheque today, it does not include an automatic escalator clause to keep pace with this inflationary government.

Mr. Speaker, I do not think the minister is such a bad fellow, but you never know who might be in that portfolio next! It is true that at the whim of the Minister of National Health and Welfare, benefit levels may be raised but that is not automatic. As a matter of fact, the principle of FISP is at odds with other social security schemes. We have universality in medicare and unemployment insurance, but we have selectivity in FISP. Why? Working wives, for example, will be compensated for day-care costs up to a certain sum, and maternity benefits are paid by unemployment insurance, but FISP penalizes the working wife by cut-off levels being based on gross family income. In other words, she is penalized for working.

Actually, this aspect hits poorer people harder than anyone else because the wife goes out to work and her added income results in getting less money for the children through family allowance. This seems to me to be grossly unfair, and the cut-off level should be based on net income after deductions rather than gross income. In this way, personal income tax exemptions and day-care exemptions will have their full effect for the working wife. Let us take a look at the man who receives a raise of $1,000. He pays taxes, unemployment insurance and pension contributions. The single man earning $7,000 would lose 33 per cent of that raise in tax payments; the man with a wife and four children earning the same salary would lose 47 per cent; and the man with a wife and four children earning $11,000 would lose 33 per cent.

In closing, I want to say to the minister that I think he and the other ministers concerned should get together on this measure because they do not seem to know what they are doing. They look at the various schemes, but they do not blend them together. I am not blaming the minister. Perhaps these ministers commune with somebody higher than parliament, I don't know, but if they do only God knows!

Mr. Munro: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. member a question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Does the hon. member agree to accept the question?

Mr. Rynard: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Munro: I have some difficulty detecting from the hon. member's speech whether, in terms of principle, he is for this legislation or against it. Which is it?

Mr. Rynard: Well, Mr. Speaker, this is typical of the minister, and the way in which he established these allowances, because nobody knows how much he wanted to help the poor people. I suggest that he made a very poor attempt at giving them something. We are a lot more affluent today than we were in 1945, but that has not helped the poor very much. I have been trying to urge the minister to see that these people are looked after in a better fashion, instead of having a lot of money going into administration expenses. The ministers in charge of welfare and of manpower ought to get together to discuss this thing and come up with something to really help the poor.

Mr. Munro: Are you in favour of it in principle or not? Which is it?

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Speaker, I do not think for one minute the minister is so dense that he does not know I am in favour of it.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard) made a few references to the history of family allowances which, as he pointed out, came into effect on July 1, 1945. Some of us have to be careful that we do not paint ourselves too far back into history, but these references recalled to my mind the debate in 1944 when the Family Allowance Act was passed. There are only three of us still in this House of Commons who were members of the House in 1944. I refer to the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), the hon. member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. McIlraith) and myself. My good friend, the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas), had been here before that but had gone to the province of Saskatchewan so that he could take certain steps which would force other governments of this country to give more favourable consideration to social security legislation.

The debate of 1944 was a dramatic one. I was just thinking earlier how times have changed. This afternoon the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) had to wait for a number of minutes before he could continue his speech. He had to wait for a quorum to arrive in the chamber. Back in 1944, the attendance during that debate was greater than usual. There were a number of dramatic occasions. Perhaps the one most remembered by many around here was when a distinguished and greatly respected member of the House, the late Dr. Bruce, was named and put out of the House for the balance of a day's sitting because he had refused to comply with the Speaker's request to withdraw the word "bribery", which he had applied to Mackenzie King's action in bringing in the Family Allowances Act.

Another moment of drama arose when the then Prime Minister, Right Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, referred to the humble poor. That phrase, coming from his lips, produced laughter on this side, and actually occasioned a remark, recorded in Hansard, by the hon. member for York East, who then was Robert McGregor. He had the reputation of having sat silently in this House perhaps longer than any other member. At any rate, in that debate a remark by Mr. McGregor got on the Hansard record. The other dramatic part of that story involved the recorded vote on second reading. When the Speaker called for the yeas and nays, some ventriloquist made a noise which sounded like nay. So, the government members stood up and a recorded vote was taken. It turned out, when the vote was taken, that everyone present voted yea. It was one of those unanimous recorded votes. Liberals, Conservatives, CCF members, as our group was then known, and Social Credit members from Alberta all voted yea. Mr. William Golding, the late member of this House who later went to the other place and, still later, to another place, said afterwards that he was paired with the hon. member for Parkdale, who then was Dr. Bruce, but that if he had voted, he would have voted for the measure. That, of course, implied that Dr. Bruce who was then not present, would have voted against the measure. He never confirmed or denied that.

That was one of those interesting occasions when a measure was passed at second reading on a recorded division, with no one voting nay. When we got to third reading and the vote was called, Hansard merely recorded the bill as carried. No one said nay at that point, or even "on division". So, there we passed a piece of legislation that was very contentious and about which there was a great deal of feeling. Hon. George Drew was making noises in Ontario about this being done for Quebec; some threatened to take the bill to court, and so on. Some even charged on the floor of this House that the bill was an election gimmick. Mr. King dealt with that insinuation in the typical Mackenzie King fashion. By the way, I agree with one remark that Charles Lynch made in one of his columns a few days ago. He said that we should not forever be likening the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Laing), and the President of the Privy Council (Mr.

MacEachen) to Paul Martin. He says that they are really talking the way that Mackenzie King talked.

You know, Mr. Speaker, Mackenzie King dealt with the election propaganda charge in a manner that only he could get away with. That legislation was before us in June and July of 1944. He stood up with all the solemnity he was capable of mustering, and he was always pretty solemn, and said, "This is not an election promise; I have written into this bill that these payments will not come into effect until July 1, 1945, and everyone knows that under the constitution there will have to be an election before then." So, this was not election bait. The bill just happened to pass in 1944, and it just happened that an election was called in June, 1945, and the Liberals were able to say, "We have got this piece of legislation through, and you will get the benefits on July 1." No, it was not election propaganda—by no means. Good old Mackenzie King!

Mr. Douglas: They cannot say that this time.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): As I say, 1944 was a dramatic year and interest in the bill was keen. Attendance was good. It is noticeable, as we talk about this bill on Friday afternoon, that although there are quite a few people in the galleries, there are not many members in the House, even though this will have far reaching implications. It changes not only one of the basic principles of the Family Allowances Act, as put on the statute books in 1944, but taken with the guaranteed income supplement and statements made by the minister, it pushes still further ahead the principle of selectivity instead of the principle of universality. Actually, this government is changing the whole approach to social security programs that Mackenzie King and Louis St. Laurent built up over several decades. For the moment, I shall concede that the way we should approach this matter is debatable. I have my views and the minister has his, and we can still talk to each other despite our differences. But I think it is unfortunate that, when so major a piece of legislation is before us as this legislation, there seems to be so little interest in it on the part of members of the House of Commons. I am not complaining about the number of members who happen to be here while I am speaking. I am thinking of how small the attendance was when the minister himself brought in this legislation.

I should like to say a word now about the way in which the minister and the government are perverting their own white paper technique. I concede that under our system of responsible government, the government has the right within its council chamber to work out its legislation, lay it before the House in final form and to say that it shall stand or fall on the basis of that legislation. That is the kind of responsible government we have, and that is the way the prerogatives and the initiatives of government work. Yet, it is this very government that said it wanted to change all that, that said it wanted to develop the concept of participatory democracy and to develop the idea of involvement—

Mr. McGrath: Ha!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): —of the people and of parliament in the decision-making process. Mr. Speaker, those are not my words. Those are the words of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). He stresses all the time words like "decision making process", "participation" and "involvement". This really is as nonsensical as some of the things Mackenzie King used to say. And what did the minister do? He brought down a white paper entitled, "Income security for Canadians" and tabled it on November 30, 1970. It had in it a number of sections dealing with a number of areas. The two main ones were old age security and guaranteed income security for families.

The idea behind a white paper is that the government puts its ideas before parliament and before the country in a tentative way, presumably to let us participate in making the final decision. I thought when we got the white paper on income security, that that was what we were to do. I thought we were to be given a chance to participate in the making of the final decision. Everyone knows what happened. What happened to the old age security portion of the white paper is a matter of history.

As I say, the white paper was tabled on November 30, 1970. The bill to amend the Old Age Security Act, Bill C-202 in that session, was given first reading the next day, December 1. It was called for second reading on December 2. It went through all stages in the House, was given third reading and passed on December 17. It went through the Senate and was given royal assent on December 18. There was no practice of the white paper technique with regard to old age security changes at all: we got the white paper one day, the next day the process of making the change forecast in the white paper was started, and 17 days later it became law.

Mr. Munro: That bill was not necessarily the last word in the old age pension scheme; you said that yourself.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): My good friend, that is the finest thing you have said today. I hope Hansard recorded it. That bill is not the last word.

Mr. Munro: No, and we say it in the white paper.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It is nice to have it confirmed. I wish the minister would act on that.

Mr. Munro: Have you now changed your mind about the white paper technique?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): No, but the government has altered the technique. The things that this white paper proposes respecting old age security were enacted immediately, without any chance of parliament to discuss them as white paper proposals. I thought, with respect to income security for families, that the white paper technique would be carried through, Mr. Speaker. But today is March 24, 1972, this white paper was tabled on November 30, 1970—a year and four months ago—and in all that time it has not been referred to a committee of the House of Commons. We have had no opportunity in committee to discuss the proposed changes respecting family allowances. We have had no opportunity to take part in the participatory process that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said he was introducing to make things better in parliament.

Mr. Munro: The Senate Committee on Poverty had a chance—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Don't throw the Senate committee at me.

Mr. Munro: You expressed your views on that, or at least your party did.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I shall get around to the Senate Committee on Poverty in a moment. Because of what I am going to say to the minister, I remind him that he is my friend. My point is that we are still being handed the same process we have had down through the years with Liberal governments. They decide what is to be put before us; they put it before us and we have to take it or leave it. As I say, under the responsible government set-up that we have, that is their right. But it is the Prime Minister and the cabinet colleagues around him who have said they want to do it differently. They want parliament to be involved. We have had no chance at all to be involved in this.

We now have a bill before us in complete form. The minister found it necessary to ask the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard), are you for or against it? The minister thinks he put the hon. member on the spot. If he puts that question to me I shall tell him where we stand, if he has any doubt.

Mr. Munro: I am not going to ask you.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): My point is, no wonder the attendance is low in this House. No wonder there is lack of interest. We have been fed the notion that we would participate in the process, but we are not getting the chance to do so.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We can have this debate on second reading and express our views. Then the bill will be shipped off to committee where we will be permitted to go through it clause by clause. However, will we be able to get anywhere with basic changes in the concept of this bill? No. The only changes made in this bill will be those agreed upon by the Prime Minister of Canada and the Prime Minister of Quebec. The Prime Minister of Canada told Prime Minister Bourassa in a letter that if they reached agreement on provincial participation in this regard, the necessary amendments could be made to the legislation as it was going—

Mr. Béchard: You sound like Drew in 1944.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The hon. member knows better than that. I think I have made my point. It is the same old "take it or leave it" technique—and it comes from a government that said it would use the white paper technique!

I am recasting the line of development of my argument because of the interjection of the minister about the Senate Committee on Poverty. I will give the minister the benefit of the doubt because maybe the speech writers did it for him, but I thought it was less than fair of him to read us quotations implying that certain well known organizations in the country support the principle of this bill which in the main includes cutting off some people and paying only certain individuals. He referred to the Canadian Council on Social Development—but did he quote what that council said with regard to the Family Income Security Plan? No. He paraphrased what that body said before the Senate Committee on Poverty when it was dealing with the question of poverty in general. Even in his paraphrase he was not able to say categorically that the Canadian Council on Social Development is in support of this bill.

Mr. Munro: Of course not.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The minister says, "Of course not". But he stood here and tried to give the impression that the Canadian Council on Social Development, the National Council on Welfare, the Canadian Labour Congress—

Mr. Munro: I said they thought we were doing something meaningful in respect of family allowances.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I am not going to paraphrase; I am going to put a quotation on the record. This is from the comments and recommendations by the Canadian Council on Social Development on the Family Income Security Plan proposed in the federal government white paper "Income security for Canadians", 1970. This is a policy statement issued in 1971. I quote from page (iii):

> The council believes that:
> Family allowances should be universal, paid to all families with dependent children as a social right thus avoiding divisiveness among families and any element of stigma. The present program—

That is the family allowances program.

> —has this feature but FISP would eliminate it.

That is an open condemnation of this bill in changing from the principle of universality to selectivity.

Mr. Munro: No, it is not.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I suggest that the minister read these documents before making interjections.

Mr. Munro: Do they say how we are going to recover the money?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On page (iv) they deal with the question of universality and selectivity. They say they believe in selectivity within universality. In other words, they are prepared to have arrangements made for the tax of those in the higher income brackets to be adjusted so that most, or 100 per cent, of it is recovered.

Mr. Munro: Now we are getting at it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Now, now! They come down squarely for a plan that maintains universality and avoids the concept of putting some people into the position of being stigmatized because they are getting something that others do not get. I ask the minister to read page 10, and I quote:

> Family allowances should be universal: i.e. paid to all families with dependent children. As such, they would be accepted as a basic social right and would avoid the division of these families into the "haves" and the "have-nots"—

Mr. Munro: What happens if you pay it out and then take it all back?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am prepared at any time to deal with that at length. What I am pointing out now is that the minister misled the House when he told us that the Canadian Council on Social Development supports this bill.

Mr. Munro: I did not say that.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Let me finish the sentence I was quoting.

—would avoid the division of these families into the "haves" and the "have-nots", eliminating any element of stigma in receiving the payments. This result is certainly evident in the present family allowances program in which the entire "community" of such families participates.

I find the same kind of comment in a statement on income security prepared by the National Council of Welfare which was also issued in April, 1971. I am looking at page 18. This is the kind of criticism I would make of this plan. It is the kind of criticism I made of the guaranteed income supplement proposals. Here it is, from this important body, the National Council of Welfare, set up under federal legislation:

The proposed family income security plan is very much similar to the OAS-GIS revision in that it proposes that the increased benefits for the poor with families be financed by the not-so-poor with families. This presumably explains its total lack of even pretensions to adequacy.

We have called it a redistribution of poverty. There we find the proposition clearly stated by the National Council of Welfare. The minister also quoted what the Canadian Labour Congress said when it appeared before the Senate Committee on Poverty about the desire for a more realistic approach to family allowances. He tried to paraphrase this into support for the bill before us, but even by paraphrasing he could not do so. The position of the CLC is that family allowances should be related to the cost of rearing children. Yes, the plan should be more realistic and imaginative but the Canadian Labour Congress has never supported the idea abandoning the universality feature of family allowances.

Up to this point, Mr. Speaker, I have been trying to set the record straight with regard to what some outside bodies have had to say on this matter. Now I should like to say a few words about the legislation before us. There is one feature of it that is good. It provides for higher allowances, at least to those who will receive allowances. It is a crime, as the hon. member for Simcoe North said, that the rate has not been increased long before this. Except for the reduction from four categories to two it has not been changed since 1945, and it is good that a change has at last been made. But that is about the end of my capacity to say what is good about this bill.

Let me point out some of the things that are wrong. First, the complexities of this scheme make it just about unworkable and will make it incomprehensible to most of the Canadian people. Families will need computers in order to figure out their entitlement. What is the information which would have to be fed into these computers: the number of children, first of all, and just where they fit into the various age brackets. Next, statistics about the family income, and in the case of persons whose income is not steady from year to year estimates will have to be included because this will affect the point of cut-off and the amount of benefit per child. As the Canadian Labour Congress says, this will produce anomalies and difficulties out of keeping with all the fuss the government is making about the change.

The minister likes to speak of this bill as if it were a means of helping the poor. Mr. Mackenzie King, too, wanted to help the poor. I am glad to see the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) has come in and is now in his place. I want to tell him that earlier this afternoon references were made to the origins of the family allowance legislation, and I recalled certain incidents in 1944 when the bill was put through the House. I mentioned that only three of us who were there at that time are members of the House today—the right hon. member for Prince Albert, the hon. member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. McIlraith) and the member for Winnipeg North Centre; and we three voted for it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is one occasion when we were all right.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Yes, we were right then and we are right now. I was saying that the minister talks about doing something for the poor. That is a very nice line of talk but it is pretty hollow when one considers what the government has done in the field of income tax. What was done in Bill C-169? We provided for a 3 per cent tax reduction for individuals, amounting to a few dollars for the poor and many dollars for the wealthy. That is characteristic of the whole income tax structure. The small attempt to reshuffle which is involved in the bill before us does not counteract the basic unfairness of the income tax structure as far as ordinary people are concerned.

What I dislike most about this bill, though, is the decision once and for all to cut off payments at certain levels of income. I know there is a lot of popular support for this idea, especially from those who are below the levels set in the bill, although not so much from those whose incomes are just above those levels. My objection is not so much to the administrative difficulties which are encountered or the complaints we shall undoubtedly receive from those whose incomes are in the $11,000 to $14,000 a year range. There will be lots of them; people will write to us about their special circumstances, complaining that even though so-and-so earns $1,000 less, certain conditions which affect them and do not affect the other person make it unjust that one should get the allowance and another should not.

My real concern is that we shall be moving one step further toward the idea that our security and welfare programs must be placed on a basis of selectivity rather than universality. The minister speaks at length when we get into this argument and thinks he has it over me like a tent because he can announce three points, three principles or priorities governing the way in which programs should be set up. He did so last night and he did so again this morning. The arrangement differed slightly but in essence the list was the same. This morning he mentioned three things: (1) social insurance and universal payments; (2) income support; (3) social assistance. Last night it read: (1) social insurance; (2) demogrants; (3) service. He sets out these schematic areas, and because his proposal fits into them he thinks that makes it perfect. But I say to him that this scheme under three headings is altogether arbitrary. The whole business should be looked at in the context of where society is going.

Society is moving away from the work ethic. Society is going in the direction of a guaranteed livelihood for our people. I am not thinking, now, about a guaranteed annual income in terms of negative income tax, and so on. The minister knows enough to understand that I am not being inconsistent with my ideas on universality, because I have a different definition of a guaranteed income. But today society is going in the direction I have indicated and it is a good thing that we in Canada already have some programs which correspond with this development.

Already there is any amount of evidence that the government is not opposed to the giving of large amounts of money to people for doing nothing or next to nothing. Right now, under such programs as Opportunities for Youth, LIP, DREE, and so on, all kinds of money is being thrown around. Then there are the training allowances and all the rest of it. I am not criticizing these things. I believe some of these things have to be done and they are probably a foretaste of the future. We may reach a point at which, as I read in a paper the other day, welfare is not just a peripheral concern of government but the main business of government.

I think we will come to the day when we shall have universal grants and allowances, when people will have the right to live at a decent standard of living whether or not they have a job. So long as you take the other approach and give government money to people because they are poor, because they are have-nots rather than haves, then you keep them in that category.

I think it is good that old age security was universally applied. It is also excellent that family allowances have been universally paid to all families in the community. But once you get to the point where certain families draw family allowance and other families do not, if that continues it means the children of those families will be recipients of family allowances and they will be the next generation's have-nots. You will perpetuate the division of this country into those who have and those who have not. That is what this kind of program does and it is why I am concerned about it.

As I say, this concerns me even more than the mail that I know we will get from people who are denied family allowances because they do not have a sufficient number of children or because they are just over the income level set by the minister. Therefore, I think the government should have paid more attention to the proposals of the Canadian Council on Social Development; the government should have continued the principle of universality.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

I agree that under that kind of scheme family allowance payments should be subject to taxation, perhaps through a special scheme of taxation so that those in the higher income brackets actually pay it all back. Indeed, they might be put in the position where it is not to their advantage even to apply for family allowance; but at least the matter should be left so they can apply. There may be cases where they would want to, cases where the husband would say to his wife, "Let us apply for the family allowance so that you will get the money, and then I will pay it back in income tax."

Mr. Munro: If you put it through the tax system they automatically get it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I say that relating it to the tax system is a good thing to do. At this time in our history there is a considerable trend in favour of equal rights for men and women. There was an interesting question on that point this morning put by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis). For the past 27 years this is something the mothers of Canada have had: a cheque has been coming into the house in the name of the mother. It was hers. For the million or more families in the category to which the minister refers, these cheques will now cease. Even if it were the case that the mother received the payment and the wage earner had to pay it back in income tax, I think in principle it would be better to keep it that way.

I know what we are up against here, that is, that there is a certain popular notion that it is a good idea to make this money available to the public. If we did give an adequate amount of money to the poor, then that might be a matter to look at. But we do not. We are up against a system in this country where the government makes a decision and that is it; we are stuck with it, the white paper technique notwithstanding.

I am as convinced as I am of standing here that Canada was right when it started to move in the direction of universality with respect to old ages security and family allowances. That is a principle that we should be extending. The government is going the wrong way in trying to reverse this trend by imposing these tests, whether you call them needs or income tests. This approach does precisely what the National Council of Welfare said it does; it makes the not so poor pay for the poor. It also does what the Canadian Council on Social Development said it does; it divides the people in our land into haves and have-nots. That division is with us already and it should be the task of government to lessen the division, not widen it.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, the clock seems to move just as fast when one has 40 minutes to speak as when one has 20, as was the case yesterday, but there are one or two other matters I should like to mention. I am terribly concerned about the situation between Ottawa and the provinces on this question. In thinking about this matter this morning I resolved that I would not say anything about the matter unless the minister did. He did not, yet here am I deciding that something should be said about it. The correspondence tabled some days ago by the Prime Minister which has passed between him and the Prime Minister of Quebec indicates that negotiations are going on between Ottawa and that province in regard to some kind of arrangement under which Quebec could alter the scheme provided it did not claim more federal money than would otherwise be available. Another condition is that for any province to do this, the province would have to spend an amount equal to 15 per cent of the total amount spent in this area.

I recognize the growing strength and responsibility of the provinces, but it is interesting that so far as I can ascertain none of the other nine provinces wants this kind of arrangement. None of the other nine provinces wants to have a say as to how the money will be distributed if that would mean they would have to pay additional money. Therefore, I think this proposal has to be looked at carefully, and we should take this look when we go into committee.

If there is a desire on the part of the government to provide special status in this area for the province of Quebec, then I would not object to it, but say so. In effect, that is what we did with the Canada Pension Plan; we drew up the legislation so that any province could set up its own plan, at the same time knowing that Quebec was the only province that was going to do that. It was a special status arrangement which has worked out very well. If that is what is wanted in this case, then I suggest the arrangement be called that, not an arrangement for all the provinces, the government knowing that the other nine provinces are not interested in such an arrangement.

I make that brief comment about the matter because, as I say, the minister said nothing about it today. But the Prime Minister in his letter to the Prime Minister of Quebec did say that if they reached agreement on what should be done to provide for provincial participation, that matter could be dealt with when the bill was being considered by Parliament.

At this point I shall conclude my remarks. As one who, with other members, was here in 1944 when this legislation was first brought in, I am delighted to be here in the House when the amounts under the legislation are being raised, not by as much as I should have liked to see but nevertheless raised by a number of dollars. However, I am very sorry that the basic principle of universality, the principle that we are all together in this, is being dropped by the government. I think this step is wrong and that it should be looked at very carefully.

On this basis, the position that I am going to take on this legislation is that we should look at it further. We are therefore prepared, when the times comes, to give it second reading and to send it to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs. However, there will have to be a lot of improvement made to the bill as well as some effort to restore the basic principle that I think was so important to family allowances before we can be satisfied with the bill in its final form.

I see, Mr. Speaker, that you are getting up, so I shall sit down. I simply say again that I think the government of Canada was right with regard to the original concept of old age security and family allowances and that the present government, in reversing that decision, is wrong. Those of us who are trying to advance the idea of universality, of a country in which we are Canadians all, are not looking backward but are looking forward to the kind of Canada of which we can all be proud.

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I want to participate in the debate on Bill C-170 which promises to be highly interesting. The bill is entitled: "An Act to provide for the payment of benefits in respect of children." Thus, it provides for payments for those who have dependent children.

First of all I should like to subscribe to the remarks of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) at the beginning of this speech when he recalled the history of legislation authorizing payment of family allowances. They highly interested me.

I remember that during the depression years in Canada, from 1939 to 1940, agencies concerned with the plight of the people called on the government to pass legislation for the payment of allowances to Canadian families. I also remember that at the time short-sighted people denounced the views put forward by agencies or their representatives, accusing them of proclaiming a communistic concept. They claimed that this would mean handing out money to families without their having earned it directly as a salary. In their view, this would incite people to sloth.

Well, it has since been seen that family allowances did not have the results anticipated, that life continued quite normally and that those who were lazy remained lazy and those who were hard-working continued being so.

During a recent debate, I was surprised to hear hon. members, both Liberals and Progressive Conservatives, accusing each other of having done too little in the field of social security.

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that in politics it is perhaps quite normal to try to stress that greater progress was achieved during the time one was in power than during the time the other party was in power. However, I believe that we should ask ourselves whether Canada, from an economic standpoint, can do more to acknowledge the rights of the Canadian family.

In a speech he made recently the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) said that Canada is the most advanced country in the field of social security. So much the better, if it is true that the Providence has given us untold resources and if it is true that Canadians can develop and transform them in the best interest of the people.

Mr. Speaker, as for me, I believe that the family is the very basis of our society, that it is the family that provides the most important thing in this country, human capital. Therefore if the family assumes such a responsibility, I believe it behooves the State to recognize those rights in a better way, to enable it to fulfil its ideals by providing it with the financial means needed for a decent way of life.

Indeed, why do we live in a society? I believe we do not ask ourselves enough questions about that and I think our young ones, would like to benefit from life in society without thinking as much as they should about the reason why people live in society.

On the other hand, we have rights but we also have responsibilities. And even if it is not practical, from the political point of view, to speak about duties and obligations, I believe we should nevertheless do so.

As a matter of fact, life in society was a source of great benefits to us. It enabled scientists to make research on the possibility of helping workers, through the use of machinery, in order to enable people to produce more, to make greater use of resources so as to transform them, in order that everyone may have a better lot, not only three people out of five, as we are being told in the report of the Senate Committee on Poverty, but five people out of five. So we do not really live in a just society, if two Canadians out of five cannot be assured of a vital minimum.

• (1540)

We have really accomplished something, with this association of people, on the economic level. We have managed to develop our production system to an extraordinary extent—and this, in all sectors. In the agricultural and industrial sectors we have accomplished things which would have been unthinkable 20 years ago. Statistics Canada provides us with exact figures. I, for one, believe them. In a newsletter sent by the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce in September 1971, we find figures which speak for themselves.

There is a table showing the gross national product for the year 1961 and subsequent years up to 1970. By looking at this table we can see that in 1961, Canada's gross national product was about $39 billion, which means $2,143 per worker.

Through all the means to which I referred a moment ago, Mr. Speaker, we increased our production and processing capability to the extent that in 1970, national production was in the vicinity of $84 billion, which means that the production capability that is supposed to bring benefits to all Canadians has more than doubled in 10 years.

But unfortunately, during the same period, the gap between the gross national product and national income has widened through the years, so that in 1961, the total income of Canadians was roughly $29 billion. Hence there was in 1961 a gap of some $10 billion between the national income of Canadians—that is, their purchasing power—and their production to meet their own needs.

This gap, as I say, has widened through the years, so much so that in 1970, the total income of Canadians stood at $66 billion, compared with a production of $84 billion.

According to my information, the figures for 1971 will prove even more revealing. The gross national product for 1971 should reach $95 billion while about 200,000 fewer workers will have contributed. That means that despite higher unemployment, we have nevertheless succeeded in increasing the volume of production.

Experts anticipate that the GNP for 1972 will be even greater, which means that it is possible in Canada to increase the various benefits in the area of social security without disrupting the economy. Why? Because I think that it would certainly be dangerous if the purchasing power were greater than the gross national product. The government would then do a great disservice to society.

On the other hand, it rests with the manager in the society to which I have just referred to do some bookkeeping, in order to maintain as closely as possible a balance between production and purchasing power, in order to enable all its members and all Canadians to enjoy a purchasing power as fair as possible to meet their needs and to accept more readily life in society.

I stated, Mr. Speaker, a moment ago, that the family is the most important factor throughout our life. I have in hand a picture which I received a few days ago from a couple from Saint-Anselme, a municipality situated in my constituency. That aged couple lacking a sufficient income told me their financial problems. They have 18 children and they sent me a picture. That couple who has given Canada such fine wealth, priceless human capital, should get more from society, so that we may encourage not those who are through raising their children, but their descendants to do their duty in society and participate in the normal development of Canada, in order to ensure a higher standard of living, corresponding to our physical and material possibilities.

Mr. Speaker, Bill C-170 is certainly bringing something new compared to the old act. First, it must be noted that, in this legislation, the guaranteed family income would include the incomes of both parents, which would mean that if both parents are working to bring home the bacon, and their combined incomes exceed the provisions of the act, automatically, they must do without the allowances, or else, one of the parents must stay home. I think that there would be something to correct there.

The benefits will be paid out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund for every child aged from 0 to 18, dependent of a citizen residing in Canada. But if a province pays benefits to the young of 16 to 18, as Quebec now does, no benefits will be paid to them by the government of Canada if it already grants tax rebates to that province.

I read and reread carefully the letter of the right hon. Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau) to the Quebec premier, which must have been similar to the one he sent to all the other premiers. I noted that that long letter contained valuable suggestions. On reading the bill, I wondered whether the Quebec government, which fought for years for the jurisdiction over family allowances to be exclusively provincial, is really willing to accept the whole bill as now drafted or whether the government will ask that it be amended.

In any event, Mr. Speaker, I would like to try and look at the rates which will be used to determine entitlement to family allowances, so it will be realized that the selected income levels in the report of the Senate committee on poverty were not high enough. I think we must go higher to achieve better results. According to the report, you must add the allowable basic income of $4,500 to the amount of $500 per child, on top of the first one, to get the basic figure.

If the family income is $6,000 and that family has only one child, the income of $6,000 less the allowable income of $4,500 gives you a difference of $1,500. But since the rate is reduced by 33 cents for every $100, there is a reduction of $4.95. For a child in the 0-to-12 age bracket, the maximun amount will be $15 and the deduction will be $4.95, so the actual allowance for that child will be $10.05; if the child is in the 12-to-18 age bracket, the allowance will be $20 and the reduction will again be $4.95, so the actual allowance will be $15.05. If that family has two children, the reduction will be $3.30 for children in the 0-to-12 age bracket, leaving a possible allowance of $11.70, and for children aged 12 to 18, the reduction will be $3.30, so the actual allowance will be $16.70.

For a family with four children earning a basic income of $4,500, plus $1,500 as allowable income, they will receive a basic allowance of $15 per child under the age of 12 and $20 for children between 12 and 18.

If a family has 5, 6, 8 or 10 children, the allowances will be the same because they have reached the maximum. So, this means there is no increase for them.

In the case of a family having an income of $8,000 with one child, allowances will be $3.45 if the child is 12 years old or less, and $8.45 for a child aged 12 to 18. For a family with two children, allowances will be $5.10 for the first one and $10.10 for the second one.

A family having an income of $10,000 and one child will receive no allowance where the child is aged 0 to 12. For a child aged 12 to 18, the allowance will be $1.85. If such a family has 2, 3 or 4 children, it will receive allowances of the order of $1.80 for each child aged 12 or less and $6.80 for children over 12.

I quote these figures to show that if this schedule is to bring some improvements in the case of low income families, we should increase the maximum allowable income from $10,000 to $15,000.

In fact, the present cost of rents, building and clothing is quite high and we are being taxed from left and right. So it would be an acknowledgement of the country's genuine wealth, and the fact that Canadians are hard-working people if this income were increased to $15,000.

Would Canada be worse off for this? I do not think so because this would give a higher purchasing power that would permit families to buy more. In buying more they would pay more taxes, the government would obtain higher revenues and in turn our economy would pick up.

Will this new act provide more money to Canadians? From the statement of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) I understand that under the previous family allowance scheme, the government was spending $800 million a year and it is reported that the new act will increase this amount by $150 million.

This is all nice and well, but I am convinced that more could be done without demagogy and without depriving affluent Canadians or reducing our assistance to developing countries.

I wish to emphasize this because it is sometimes said that Social Credit members are opposing our assistance to developing countries. This is not true. We are in favour of helping developing countries in proportion to our own resources. We are also in favour of assisting underfed families and those who lack housing, food and clothing.

The text I have here is recent. Its title is:

We are not truly Christians unless we accept to share the plight of the poor.

It emanates from the Episcopate of Canada. What does it say?

The scandal of poverty and injustice throughout the world is flagrant. Twenty per cent of the people of the planet own 80 per cent of its resources.

Canada itself, with its vast resources, is far from presenting a comforting image to those who thirst after human righteousness and dignity. One of every three Canadians lives socially, economically, politically and culturally on the fringe of Canadian community life.

Present housing conditions, the lack of balance resulting from underdevelopment of some regions of Canada are an insult to justice and a canker at the very heart of one of the world's richest countries. We are all, collectively, responsible for such a situation.

Notwithstanding the fascinating horizons opened before us, our era, alas, is the source of many disillusionments. Economists contend that, for the first time in history, everyone could live well. Newly acquired knowledge and technological discoveries can transform old dreams into living realities.

We could do this. Do we really want to? How strong is our sense of justice? How sincere is our love? How steadfast are our convictions? Are we not facing the tragedy of collective irresponsibility? We forget the poor so easily. We are barely inclined to facilitate their participation in decisions concerning themselves. And yet that is a primary demand of man's dignity.

Mr. Speaker, I wanted to quote from this text because it comes not from politicians, but from people able to have a really objective view of the situation and to ponder upon it. We politicians should take heed of it and act in such a way as to achieve a maximum of justice in our society which, I know, will always remain imperfect. However, there is nothing to prevent our trying to do more.

In closing, I should like to mention the opinion held by a king who made available to his subjects the money required to really live as a society, to exchange goods and services. I am referring to St. Louis, King of France, who said that the first duty of a king was to mint money when there was not enough of it to guarantee his subjects a sound economy.

Indeed, I feel that it is the first duty of a responsible government to issue the credits required to that end. I know our opponents will say: There he goes again, speaking of money! The minister spoke about it—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being four o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's Order Paper, namely, public bills, notices of motions and private bills.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

HEALTH AND WELFARE

MEASURE TO RESTRAIN THE USE OF TOBACCO

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey-White Rock) moved that Bill C-10, to restrain the use of tobacco, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this bill which is again before us is one of three similar bills having the same general objective which I have introduced over a number of years. Like bills put forward by hon. members on the government side and the official opposition, the subject matter of the three bills was referred in 1969 to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs. Together with the representations of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) they provided the basis of the committee's hearings into smoking and disease.

This discussion resulted in the report of the committee under the chairmanship of the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Isabelle), which report in turn agreed to the recommendation that all cigarette advertising should be phased out over a period of three or four years, and to that extent charted a course of action similar to that taken in many other countries to reduce the promotion of cigarette-induced diseases, including lung cancer, heart attacks, emphysema and bronchitis.

This bill is in two parts, Mr. Speaker. The first part has been law since, I believe, 1909 and deals with the prohibition on sale and provision of tobacco products to juveniles. The second part of the bill is my own, and it recommends an addition or amendment to the first part and would give the government power over the packaging, labelling and advertising of tobacco products, the precise target in this particular bill being to protect the health of the public from deception as to the character, toxicity or safety of tobacco products.

It is, frankly, not with any hope of having this bill passed or referred to a committee again—it has already been there—that I left it on the order paper. My thinking was that the government has not yet proceeded with the proposed cigarette products act which came out of the health and welfare committee's report on cigarettes, which in turn came out of this and similar bills and the representations of various health agencies in Canada who appeared before that committee in 1969.

Mr. Speaker, no one was more pleased than I when the Minister of National Health and Welfare introduced that bill last year, and nobody was more fearful than myself that the government would not proceed with what the minister proposed, which was to end all cigarette advertising by January 1, 1972. That is why my bill is again before us this afternoon. My purpose in bringing it forward is to urge that action be taken along the lines proposed by this bill but, better still, that action be taken by the government on the more far reaching proposal of the Minister of National Health and Welfare, namely, that all cigarette advertising in this country should end.

One reason for the government not having acted on the proposals of its minister to end all cigarette advertising as of January 1 last is, without doubt, the step taken by the tobacco industry in the meantime of ending all cigarette advertising on the air, whether radio or television, and undertaking to print a rather harmless or even deceptive health warning label on its products and stop giving away coupons or prizes to encourage the sale of cigarettes.

These steps have been or are being taken by industry. But, Mr. Speaker, while some $8 million of cigarette advertising has been ended—that is, the part that used to go to radio and television—the cigarette firms are keeping up the roar of publicity in the print media, inducing people, particularly young people, to start smoking cigarettes and thereby to get hooked on this sickly and dangerous habit. We still have the type of good life, open-air fun and games cigarette advertisement illustrations, the same idea that cigarette smoking is a flesh-coloured, simple pleasure and not the grey killer that it is. There are never any hospital ward, operating room or funeral parlour scenes in cigarette ads. They are not in line with reality at all. Cowboys are still puffing away on cigarettes and they are never identified as coming from "emphysema county."

Mr. Speaker, this and my other bills and those of other hon. members of both the major parties all have one thing in common, as indeed does the minister's bill, that is, that the private profit of the tobacco, advertising and media industries cannot be allowed to stand much longer in the way of protection of public health. If chewing gum or pizza pie had been associated with one-tenth of the sickness and death that cigarettes have, then chewing gum and pizza pie would have been off the market many years ago. At this point I say that I am quite ready to take this bill and my other bills on the same subject off the order paper if someone on the government side will rise and indicate when we may expect the government to proceed with the minister's legislation to end cigarette advertising.

There is mounting need in the country for action such as is proposed in this bill and in the government's legislation. I have in my hand a letter received just this morning from the Canadian Tuberculosis and Respiratory Disease Association. I think it is particularly timely that I received this letter today. I quote one paragraph as follows:

> —we ask you to take immediate action on the cigarette products act. As you know, the bill was introduced last June and we in the health field feel it is imperative we get that legislation through to effectively ban cigarette advertising. This association views with alarm the present rapid increase in the incidence of chronic chest disease. We indict the cigarette as the principal factor in this man-made epidemic. I ask you on behalf of our association, on behalf of our thousands of volunteers, on behalf of the health of Canadians, to enact the cigarette products act now.
> Our association concerned as it is with tuberculosis and respiratory disease, had adopted a slogan we ask you to consider with great care, especially as it relates so dramatically to the smoking problem—"It's a matter of life and breath."

This is over the signature of the medical director of the association. In Great Britain the Royal College of Physicians estimates that 50,000 deaths a year are attributable to cigarette smoking, approximately 1,000 per week. In that country the number of doctors who used to smoke had dropped from a majority to just one-third. In the same period, the incidence of lung cancer increased by 25 per cent but it dropped among doctors by 30 per cent. In the United States, the number of cigarette smoking doctors has decreased to about one-third while in this country it is down to less than one-half.

Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Medical Association, whose representatives appeared before the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs in 1969, put it this way:

> The story of the health hazard created by cigarette smoking represents an unrivalled tale of illness. disability and death. The potential benefits to be derived from a cessation of smoking place it at a level of importance in preventive medicine with pasteurization of milk, purification and chlorination of water and immunization.

Many countries have acted against the cigarette disease and curtailed its promotion through advertising. This includes lands on both sides of what used to be referred to as the iron curtain and both sides of the Atlantic. Disease knows no geographical or political boundaries. In this country one million Canadians over the past 12 years have quit smoking cigarettes but about 8,000 begin smoking each month. Most of them are young people. It is this group of young people that we wish to benefit by reducing the inducement to smoke carried in advertising.

I have spoken so far only of terminal cases of cigarette induced disease and not of the millions of persons who are ill from smoking cigarettes or the hundreds of millions of dollars involved in lost lives and loss of time. Through the kind of legislation proposed in this bill, Mr. Speaker, there are several things we can do to help the nation's health. For one thing, we will encourage the government to move now on its own "Ban the cigarette advertising" law. This legislation also will encourage the Department of National Health and Welfare, the CBC and the CTV people to step up educational program aimed at putting out cigarettes across Canada. I might add that apparently the CBC's powerful recent show entitled "One way to quit" is to be aired again next Wednesday. The CBC says that this show has won more favourable audience reaction than any other informational show of this season.

I particularly urge the Department of National Health and Welfare to continue and expand its very fine educational efforts in this field of one year or so ago. Let it continue those efforts on paper and on the air, for without this kind of campaign cigarette smoking will increase. Despite the demise of air and cigarette advertising, this has occurred to some extent in the United States. That has happened, as I say, even though cigarette advertising has been taken off the air in that country. We could if we wanted to take a dramatic and immediate step that would save tens of thousands of lives over the next two or three years in Canada, follow the advice of the Royal College of Physicians of Great-Britain which recommended that cigarette smokers should simply switch to a pipe or cigars. We learned at the health and welfare committee hearings that pipe and cigar smoking are almost as safe as not smoking at all.

Another step we could take is this: Until the government proceeds with its own bill to end all cigarette advertising in Canada, we could say that any advertising so permitted at present must carry within itself, that is, within the text of the message, a warning. If the advertising is printed, there must be a tangible warning taking up at least one-sixth of advertising space and that warning must say something like, "Cigarette smoking is a hazard to health. Department of National Health and Welfare."

I conclude my remarks by urging the government to heed my suggestions. Also, I undertake to take the present bill and similar bills in my name off the order paper if the government will indicate that it will take action this year on its own cigarette advertising legislation and stop the spread of disease.

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to speak immediately after the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Mather). I am glad of the opportunity to say a few words on this subject.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, for some time now, there has been no doubt that cigarette-smoking is a health hazard. So overwhelming are its devastating effects that they shorten the life of most smokers. Considering this, one may be lead to try and study the psychic process by which man is urged to smoke, while he very well knows that this will be detrimental to his health. This phenomenon is interesting. Most smokers will readily admit that they do harm to themselves by smoking day in and day out and that the only way to recover is to give up the habit. Nonetheless, they choose to go on smoking, in defiance, it seems, of the medical art; they keep laughing at the warnings and not caring a rap about their health.

Once the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) and his officials have discovered the reasons why people go on smoking despite the risks involved, I believe a great step forward will have been taken towards the elimination of the danger that the use of cigarette entails.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) announced in the House of Commons, on February 17, that the government intended to introduce a legislation concerning cigarettes during this session. In this House, thousands and thousands of words have been uttered over the last years concerning tobacco and health. During the short period of time allotted to me, I should like to review the reasons why cigarettes create a problem, in our country and elsewhere, in view of which they have become a priority.

I am pleased to say that I think that the Minister of National Health and Welfare has done whatever he could in that field.

In order to become acquainted with some of the ill effects of cigarettes, all hon. members would be well advised to read the 1968 and 1969 proceedings of the House Standing committee on health, welfare and social affairs, dealing with tobacco and cigarette.

During those sittings, the minister himself referred to the health hazard created by cigarette smoking and with your consent, Mr. Speaker, I will now read part of the minister's statement. I quote:

> I said that cigarette smoking was harmful to the individual as well as to the community. The damage caused to the individual can easily be shown. Tobacco is the main cause of lung cancer. In addition, smokers are more liable than non-smokers to other kinds of cancer. It is not the only charge that can be laid against cancer. Since it affects the lungs, it gives rise to some chronic respiratory ailments, such as bronchitis and emphysema. Those who have suffered from strong painful fits of coughing know what I mean. Ask any athlete. As a simple experience, I could ask any heavy smoker to try either a 200-yard sprint or to run a mile. Wait till he comes back gasping for breath. You tell me then whether their respiratory system is in good shape.

That is not all. If you consider the report, you will notice that the number of heart failures is 70 per cent higher for smokers. The risk is particularly high for young and middle-aged smokers since the risk of this type of stroke is from two to three times higher for them than for non-smokers of the same age. Now, coronary disease is the main cause of death in our country. Generally speaking, there is no doubt that each cigarette smoked shortens life by approximately 8 minutes. For instance, a 32 year-old man who smokes from 10 to 20 cigarettes a day reduces his life expectancy by an average of 5 years.

This, Mr. Speaker, is the opinion of the Minister of Health and Welfare, who points out that cigarette smokers sacrifice in effect an important part of their lives.

Now, some people are probably asking: If cigarette smoking is so harmful, why not forbid it? Here is the answer: The tobacco industry is an important sector of the Canadian economy, and abolishing it would be a disaster from the standpoint of the economy and the employment market. I again refer to the 1969 report of the House of Commons committee, where it says that cigarettes are the basis of a prosperous agricultural industry in Ontario, and a lesser one in Quebec. Tobacco growing is also an industry in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, and Prince Edward Island. Tobacco is the second largest farm product export in Canada, wheat being the first, and this year the sales of smoke-dried cigarette tobacco yielded about $170 million.

The tobacco industry alone employs about 50,000 full-time or part-time workers, and over another 10 million people are employed in tobacco processing. In 1968, federal and provincial taxes, including corporate tax, amounted to $723 million. Over 75 per cent of this amount goes to the federal treasury. The economic impact does not stop there. Tobacco products are sold in 90,000 outlets—this is still according to the 1969 report of the standing committee—and by 650 bulk dealers and distributors. Cigarette advertising brings in $25 million a year.

It is therefore evident that forbidding the manufacturing and sale of cigarettes would not only seriously affect the Canadian economy but also leave thousands of Canadians unemployed. We should, however, examine the other side of the picture and take also into consideration the damages caused to our country's economy by cigarette smoking.

The losses due to cigarettes in Canada in 1966 were estimated at $388 million. Cancer of the lung accounts for a loss of $56 million, coronary diseases $201 million, chronic bronchitis, $14 million, emphysema, $7 million, other diseases $96 million and finally fires due to smoking, $13,500,000.

Evidence submitted during the committee hearings in 1968 and 1969, is probably the best proof one can give as regards such gloomy statistics.

The Canadian Medical Association were very clear in showing how the cigarette could be harmful to one's health. I quote the following from their brief:

"The most tragic result as far as diseases, disabilities and death are concerned".

Their brief points out further on that the benefits in the case of people who stop smoking are the equivalent of preventive medicine and as important as pasteurized milk, purified water, fluoridation and immunization.

The brief, as to possible medical disputes, contains the following:

We believe one needs only to point out that there are no more scientific controversies as concerns the danger of cigarette smoking. The first statistics were confirmed by clinical observations and the evidence brought about is now looked upon as a fact by Canadian doctors.

[Mr. Guay (St. Boniface).]

The Association des médecins de langue française du Canada, another medical group, presented somewhat similar evidence when they appeared before the standing committee. In their report to the committee—

• (1620)

[English]

Mr. Danforth: What was that all about?

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member brought to my attention a matter that is of vital importance to him, to me and to others. Although I am speaking on this matter I thought I would give him a written answer. I hope hon. members will tolerate this procedure and allow me to continue my remarks.

[Translation]

The Association has dealt with the tremendous change that can take place when someone stops smoking cigarettes. Their brief said in part:

It is very often noted that the symptoms affecting former cigarette smokers subside when they relinquish the habit: catarrh, cough and wheezing are less evident. Daily experiences now show that surgical complications are more frequent with smokers than non smokers.

Of course, hundreds of other statements have been made at the committee's hearings warning againsg the dangers of cigarette smoking, many of them being of an alarming character.

Mr. Speaker, I would have more to say in this respect, but I will conclude my remarks as soon as possible.

At the 1964 conference, a young high school girl from Ottawa, Miss Hilary Lips, made a report from which I shall quote a few excerpts:

It may happen that we come across an article describing the pains besetting a person who is dying of lung cancer and we become frightened to the extent that we swear to keep at least ten feet away from any cigarette; but fright has transient effects; a week or a month later, the first scare appears ridiculous and one quickly forgets one's decision to stop smoking. The decision not to smoke is not an action taken under the effect of histeria, but a decision arrived at calmly and reasonably after weighing the pros and cons. Many adults believe that teenagers are too immature to take such a decision and they try to exert pressures on their children either by categorically prohibiting cigarette smoking or by frightening them.

Surely, many of us could give examples of their personal experience, Mr. Speaker. I could do it myself because I gave up smoking more than four months ago and I used to be a heavy smoker. I know what it means to quit smoking and never start again.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that, in my opinion, the House should be reminded that the Canadian Tobacco Manufacturers Council published an advertising code of ethics to set up officially uniform standards for cigarette advertising in Canada. Canadian tobacco manufacturers readily stick to this code.

And now, Mr. Speaker, I shall leave the floor to other members who might wish to make a brief statement on the matter.

[English]

Mr. William Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Mr. Speaker, I rise to take part in the debate on Bill C-10 introduced by the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Mather). If I did not take part in the debate I would be remiss in my duty to the tobacco growing area of Norfolk county as well as many other counties in Ontario including Your Honour's constituency in Northumberland and Durham counties. Your Honour knows as well as I do the great impact which that industry has not only on those who produce tobacco but on many other sectors of the economy.

The production and sale of tobacco is of number one importance. Therefore, one can understand why tobacco producers get uptight whenever they hear something is going to affect the production and sale of a legitimate product. We also get uptight when we hear unreasonable attacks on this legitimate product of ours.

Having said this, I want to commend the sponsor of this bill, the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock. As he has told us, the bill is divided into two parts, one of which has to do with the control of tobacco products to young people. I do not think anyone in Canada, and certainly no tobacco producer, wants to encourage young people to take up the habit of smoking tobacco. But I am doubtful whether the proposition before us is the proper way of achieving such an end.

Young people are well able to appreciate logic and good reasoning when it is presented to them, and it seems to me that an educational program advising young people against consuming tobacco in amounts which might be harmful to them would be a more effective approach. As to the difficulty surrounding an attempt to do these things by legislation, I can only remind hon. members of the experience in the United States years ago when an effort was made to prevent the sale of liquor through the famous prohibition laws. Everyone knows what an utter failure that was.

It is part two of the bill which really concerns tobacco producers. First, as to the indication that tobacco advertising is to be regulated, it has now been shown that this procedure is useless in terms of restricting the smoking of tobacco. On January 1 legislation took effect in the United States banning cigarette advertising on radio and television. Nevertheless, as shown by figures at the end of the first quarter, consumption of cigarettes in the United States has continued to increase. The daily newspapers last week carried news items which made it clear that the only result was a negative one, a loss of revenue to the radio and television industry. So limiting advertising is not the answer. Again, I believe a program of education is needed.

What hurts and puzzles us as much as anything is the power which it is proposed be given to the Crown to test, analyse and regulate the tar and nicotine content of tobacco. We as farmers and producers are unable to control these levels except by a long process of plant breeding designed to produce tobacco with low tar and nicotine content. Suppose this were achieved: we would then have tampered with the aroma and flavour of the product and nobody would want to use it. This would be dangerous to the continuance of our export trade to Europe and particularly to the United Kingdom where people are very conscious of these qualities. A significant change in this respect might well lose us the sale of our product.

In connection with the proposition that the government be given power to control or ban advertising, I am surprised the hon. member did not read more closely the advertising code agreed upon by the Tobacco Manufacturers' Council and effective January 1 of this year. This would bring about, by voluntary action, the very results which the legislation has in mind. I shall not read the code in its entirety but I should like to quote a few of the rules which have been adopted:

1. There will be no cigarette advertising after December 31, 1971, on radio and television.

2. All cigarette packages produced after April 1, 1972, shall bear, clearly and prominently displayed on one side thereof, the following words: "Warning: Excessive smoking may be hazardous to your health"—"avis: Fumer à l'excès peut nuire à votre santé".

3. After April 1, 1972, labels carrying the warning noted in paragraph 2 shall be made available to operators of cigarette vending machines.

4. Average tar and nicotine content of cigarette smoke from any brand of cigarettes shall not exceed 22 milligrams of tar, moisture free weight, per cigarette, and 1.6 milligrams of nicotine per cigarette.

These people, knowing the effect of tar and nicotine, have fixed levels which we can accept, levels we can live with and beyond which it would be dangerous for them to go. There are 14 rules in all. It is far better, it seems to me, for an industry which is willing to police itself to be allowed to do so rather than to impose legislation upon it directed to the same end. After all, the proposals before us certainly include an infringement of the freedom to advertise and tell the story of a legitimate commercial product: this is sometimes described as "the right to sell, the right to tell." It might also be considered an infringement of free speech.

I therefore maintain that to interfere with free advertising practices in such circumstances would be exceeding the scope of good legislation. After all, consumers are knowledgeable people and have sufficient good taste to appreciate when advertising is unsuitable or unacceptable: if they feel that an advertiser goes too far, he will suffer loss in the marketplace. It is up to producers to control themselves in this area.

As a tobacco farmer, I should also like to fault this legislation on several other grounds. First, we in the industry are deeply concerned that so much of the thrust of this legislation should be based upon statistical evidence that smoking is a dangerous health hazard in Canada. We do not agree with this. We agree that there is statistical evidence to this effect, but it is only statistical evidence and statistics are shaky ground upon which to go as far as this legislation seeks to go.

Not only are the statistics questionable, but the way in which the statistics are gathered is open to question. During the hearing of evidence in the committee on health and welfare having to do with smoking and health, a statistician appeared before the committee and testified that before one could really reach any conclusion from statistics one should know how they were gathered, how many samples were taken, and so on.

What concerns me a great deal, Mr. Speaker, is that in the compilation of the report of that standing committee I have the impression that the writers followed a very selective procedure in bringing out evidence which seemed to favour a preconceived conclusion. In substantiation of this assertion I should like to quote from an important medical authority who gave evidence before the committee and whose reputation is beyond question. I refer to Dr. William B. Ober, director of laboratories at the Knickerbocker Hospital in New York and associate professor of pathology at the New York Medical College. His evidence was entirely omitted. This is what he said, and this is why we are so annoyed that people continue to cite tobacco as the number one health hazard:

> I have noticed a reluctance by the people who claim cigarette smoking causes lung cancer to present statistics which fail to support or which even negate their preconceived ideas. This is not acceptable in scientific argument. It is what is known as suppressio veri. They are perfectly willing to tell you in great detail about all the carcinogenic substances they have extracted from tobacco smoke, but they never bother to tell you that they have repeatedly failed to induce epidermoid carcinoma of the lung in any experimental animal by exposing it to these substances or by having batches of experimental animals inhale cigarette smoke for hours on end. The most they have been able to accomplish is to apply the tar extracted from smoke condensate to the skin of mice and produce small skin tumours, most of them not malignant, some of them, yes, malignant but the same sort of skin tumour one can produce in mouse-skin by applying a variety of harmless substances; that is, harmless to humans. In spite of the several million dollars expended on mouse, rat and dog experiments, it has all come to nothing, no proof whatsoever.

In other words, there is simply no cause and effect proof that cigarette smoking is the number one health hazard it is claimed to be. This is why we become uptight and tend to look askance at legislation of this type. Again I say that a ban on advertising is not the answer. I could quote statistics to show the proof of that statement. I have already mentioned the fact that in the United States cigarette consumption has continued to increase. It should also be noted that figures for Italy, where a total ban exists, or for the United Kingdom, Denmark, Iceland, The Netherlands and New Zealand, where partial bans exist, show that during the five years after the establishment of such bans cigarette smoking has continued to increase. So I say a ban is simply not the answer.

I think this is our biggest quarrel with the whole program. Tobacco producers are sick and tired of having tobacco singled out as the number one enemy, while, as I have said many times, some of the other major health hazards in this land are ignored. I point to alcohol, which I think is the number one health hazard. When one considers the detrimental effect that overconsumption of alcohol has on the individual, not to mention the slaughter on our highways caused by accidents involving drunken drivers, or broken homes, welfare costs, and so on, if the people who continually harp against the tobacco industry went to the same trouble, using the same skill and assiduity, to collect statistics for consumption of alcohol they would be surprised at the result of their investigations. The smoking of tobacco would pale into insignificance compared with alcohol consumption.

[Mr. Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand).]

If I may quote a medical authority in California, Dr. Marshall Orloff, who spoke at the Toronto Academy of Medicine, as reported in the London Free Press for January, 1970, he said alcohol causes 90 to 95 per cent of cases of cirrhosis of the liver and can harm even the weekend drinker. He said cirrhosis of the liver is the ninth highest cause of death on the North American continent. In an interview he went on to say that scientists have proven conclusively that alcohol is directly poisonous to liver cells.

Then, too, we are annoyed that no effort is made to ascertain the effects of pollution on cancer and other bodily ailments. I should like to quote the Delhi News Record for December 8, 1971, an article headed, "Pollution consultant takes swipe at MDs on smoking question":

> Medical associations have wrongfully blamed the tobacco industry for rising lung cancer rates. This assertion was made by R. W. Johns, a Calgary air pollution consultant, at a convention in that city on November 29.
> He told a meeting of the Engineering Institute of Canada that doctors are "woefully" ignorant of the role of air pollution.

Certainly anybody who has been to the Toronto international airport and suffered the pollution from contained automobile exhausts knows something about which we are talking. Then too, no attention is paid to the many other chemical substances that are ingested into our bodies. As reported in the Globe and Mail for December 4, 1971, 30 cancer experts from leading research centres of the United States and Europe met under the auspices of the World Health Organization to evaluate the cancer risk to man of various chemicals. With the international agency for research on cancer they will work on a program to evaluate the human cancer risk of hundreds of compounds which have been shown to cause cancer in animals.

I think the key to this whole question, whether we are talking of tobacco, alcohol, pollution, chemicals or what have you, is excess in any one of these elements of human activity. Anything done in excess can be harmful to human health. No one is suggesting that we want people to smoke themselves into the grave, if you like, by oversmoking; of course that would cause damage. But so would overeating, overdrinking and many other things.

I have spoken rather strongly about this matter because that is the way we feel. We feel, as I said in my opening remarks, that the tobacco industry is the heart and soul of the economy in the area I represent. Eight hundred million dollars of the money earned from tobacco products went into the tax revenues of various governments. Taxes from the sale of cigarettes account for 7 per cent of Ottawa's total tax revenues.

What would happen to Canada's thriving export market for tobacco in some 28 countries, the United Kingdom being by far the biggest buyer? From the 1970 crop, 78 million pounds of cigarette tobacco worth $65 million was exported. Tobacco is Canada's second most important agricultural export, wheat being the first. It ranks sixth in value of all Canadian exports to the United Kingdom. And remember that exports are the life blood of the Canadian economy.

I have taken longer than perhaps I should have taken, but I wanted to get across to you, Mr. Speaker, and to the members of the House the fact that we who produce tobacco for the welfare of our families and the economy in the area I represent feel very sincerely that we are being taken for a ride on what can be considered rather flimsy evidence which is built on half-truths and innuendos.

Mr. Mather: Mr. Speaker, could I ask the hon. member a question before he resumes his seat?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I understand the hon. member wishes to ask a question.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Mather: I want to ask my honourable and esteemed friend from the tobacco country of Canada this question. I know he was a member of the health and welfare committee when all the representations to which I alluded earlier were made by the cancer society, the heart foundation, the emphysema society, the bronchitis and tuberculosis representatives, all of whom said cigarettes were a great health hazard. Can he recall any representative of any organized health agency saying anything to the contrary before the committee? I do not mean one or two people whom the tobacco group put before the committee; I mean anyone speaking on behalf of an organized health agency.

Mr. Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): I do not think I do, Mr. Speaker. But I also think that the people who did come to speak on behalf of the groups that they represented did not know the whole truth of the story. I do not think they had ever listened to the evidence I have just put on the record, and this is what makes us so annoyed. It seems to me we hear only one side of the story. The organizations to which the hon. member referred have preconceived notions in this regard and shut their minds to other evidence which I consider to be equally authoritative.

Mr. Mather: May I ask a further question?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's time has expired and I have the impression that hon. members are anxious to hear the hon. member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Pringle).

Mr. Jerry Pringle (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I rise at this time to support Bill C-10 which has been moved by my hon. friend from a neighbouring riding in British Columbia, the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Mather). Due to the lateness of the hour I will not deliver my entire speech but will endeavour to select and dwell upon some priority items.

Regardless of the timely remarks, remarks I think we should take into consideration, of the hon. member for Norfolk-Haldimand (Mr. Knowles), there is such overwhelming evidence of the danger of cigarette smoking—I say cigarette smoking, not tobacco generally; I am referring to the way cigarettes are used by human beings—that I have no hesitation in supporting the bill, nor do I have any hesitation in personally condemning the use of cigarettes.

Perhaps one of the most frightening aspects is the paradoxical position taken by Canadians with regard to smoking and health. Many readily admit that cigarette smoking may be harming and indeed killing them, but they continue to puff away regardless. Somehow, some day, we must more than reach these people. Somehow we must make them respond positively, not for our sake but for their sake. Let us look at an example. A survey of students in 1968 in the Kenora region revealed that 90 per cent of non-smokers and 80 per cent of smokers believed smoking may have harmful effects on health. Yet only 60 per cent of the non-smokers and 50 per cent of the smokers said that publicity on the possible harmful effects of smoking had decreased their inclination to smoke.

Obviously, there is a great deal of work yet to be done. I suggest this should be centred on health education. I think we should pay tribute to the Canadian Tuberculosis and Respiratory Disease Association for the information they are providing and for the films they have made, as well as for their desire to co-operate with others in providing information for health education. I wish to refer to a letter which they sent to members of parliament on March 24 in which they advised that they had a film which was used on CBC television. The film is entitled, "One way to quit". It deals with the harmful effects of smoking. I feel they should be complimented for providing this film.

It is obvious that education must play a major role in the information program on smoking and health. In 1965, Ottawa was the host city for a youth conference on smoking and health which was attended by 74 teenagers from every Canadian province. One high-school teacher who attended that three-day conference was an Ottawan who walked away from the conference convinced of its value. He made the following statement:

> From what was discussed at the conference, one area of attack will most certainly be aimed at the non-smoking youngsters in our schools. If they are not smoking by the time they are 20 years of age, many of them will not start as adults.

It is understandable that this is one area in which we should start combating the use of cigarettes as quickly as possible, because we realize this is a statistic which has been proven, that is, if people do not smoke until they are 20 years of age they may not start as adults. Therefore, it is important that these young people be influenced to stay away from cigarettes. This is how our health program should be developed. It should be stressed that smoking is not a sign of manliness or sophistication even though the advertisers may hope the younger set will think this way.

I should like to switch to the economic situation in respect of the tobacco industry in Canada as mentioned both by the hon. member for Norfolk-Haldimand and the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay). I refer to the discussion which took place before the standing committee when it was suggested that we should immediately ban cigarette advertising. This was to be confined to television and radio. In effect, we were going to avoid having road signs in newspapers and periodicals. While a flash on television or radio could be banned, a full-page advertisement in a newspaper which might stay around the house day in and day out would not be banned.

If it were agreed—and I subscribe to this—that all advertising of tobacco should be banned, that would be one thing. But here in the House of Commons we are suggesting that one segment of the media should be discriminated against. I believe this would be most unfair. I feel we would be discriminating against radio and television. I would hope we would go forward with our bill to effectively eliminate all advertising or reconsider our stand in respect of discriminating against one section of the media.

On January 1, 1972 the cigarette advertising code of the Canadian Tobacco Manufacturers' Council became effective. Under the regulations of this code, cigarette advertising on radio and television ceased. In other words, the tobacco industry has accepted the suggestion and has decided to devote its advertising budget to media other than radio and television. While we are at it, let us cover the whole spectrum. Cablevision, of course, is becoming a very vital medium for Canadian citizens in their enjoyment of television. We are subject to advertising from the United States. The advertising dollars of Canadian companies might find their way in the not too distant future into the United States advertising market. Of course, cigarettes, tobacco and other items which we may not prefer to be used or sold in Canada are being advertised by United States television companies. I am making my plea regarding this type of advertising based on fair play and on the fact that I do not believe we as Canadians should be discriminatory in this area.

I should like to close by reaffirming my opposition to the promotion, in any way, of the use of tobacco. We should continue to promote health education as much as possible. I think we should have more confidence in our youth. While our efforts may never be 100 per cent successful by virtue of the fact that we are a free country and enjoy its freedoms, I believe with the proper approach we would be able to reduce the use of cigarettes and gradually eliminate the habit so as not to upset too drastically the economy of the tobacco industry in Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I notice that quite a few of our distinguished colleagues are anxious to participate in this debate, but unfortunately the hour set aside for the consideration of private members' business has expired.

It being five o'clock this House stands adjourned until two o'clock on Monday afternoon.

At 5 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT, 1971

RULING BY MR. SPEAKER ON PROCEDURAL ACCEPTABILITY OF CERTAIN BILLS

On the order: Introduction of Bills.

Mr. Speaker: Last week, a number of bills were proposed for introduction to the House. The Chair expressed reservations about certain procedural aspects of those bills. While three were then accepted for introduction after serious consideration, seven were held in abeyance. On Friday last, hon. members were given an opportunity to express views on a point of order which queried whether these bills might not affect the financial initiative of the Crown. A number of members participated in the interesting procedural debate and I have now had time to study their arguments.

The hon. member for Skeena suggested that the bills in question proposed to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act and argued that they do not infringe upon the financial initiative of the Crown. The hon. member suggested that if in fact all these bills or any of them are found by the Chair to affect the Crown's prerogative in this respect, the rule should be disregarded as being archaic. The hon. member will appreciate, I am sure, that the Chair can hardly be expected to disregard a rule that is so fundamental. If in respect of any of these bills the Chair is convinced that the financial initiative of the Crown is in fact affected, it has no alternative but to set them aside. That is the conclusion which I have reached in connection with three of the seven bills in question.

The bill standing in the name of the hon. member for Broadview purports to be an act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act. In fact it is a bill to amend the Income Tax Act. Clause 1 repeals section 158(2) of the Unemployment Insurance Act, but clause 158(2) repeals section 10(1)(h) of the Income Tax Act so that in fact clause 1 of this bill should not set out that it repeals section 158(2) of the Unemployment Insurance Act but that it repeals section 10(1)(h) of the Income Tax Act. The Unemployment Insurance Act says that benefits are taxable but the purpose of the bill is to make benefits non-taxable and to make workmen's compensation also non-taxable. This to my mind is purely taxation legislation and is not acceptable unless initiated by the Crown.

The bill standing in the name of the hon. member for Fraser Valley West also purports to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act while in fact in my view it is an amendment to the Income Tax Act. The purpose of the bill according to the explanatory note is to make unemployment insurance non-taxable when the benefits are received by Indians living on a reserve. This of course affects the taxing initiative of the Crown and is out of order.

I have the same reservations concerning a bill standing in the name of the hon. member for Kootenay West. That bill proposes to change the method of payment of that part of claimants' benefits which is to be deducted at the source as taxable income. This again to my way of thinking deals clearly with tax legislation and as such is irregular unless introduced upon the initiative of the Crown.

I have extremely serious reservations about the four remaining bills. Generally speaking, these bills tend to increase the benefits payable under the terms of the Unemployment Insurance Act or to extend the period during which benefits might be payable under the law.

The question is whether legislation providing for such additional payments affects the financial initiative of the Crown and requires as a condition precedent the recommendation of the Crown. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has argued that amendments have been allowed where the purpose was to relieve individuals of taxation rather than to impose a tax on someone else. I do not disagree with those rulings which were made in committee; I point out, however, that they were amendments and not new initiatives as in the present case. Citation 265 of Beauchesne's Fourth Edition is the authority to establish that distinction.

I am more impressed by the argument advanced by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and other hon. members that the moneys required for the payment of proposed extended benefits would not come out of the consolidated revenue fund and that they would not in any way affect the balance of ways and means. It is certainly a moot question whether these legislative proposals would in fact, in one way or another, directly or indirectly impose an additional burden on the public treasury and thus infringe upon the financial initiative of the Crown. One might well wonder whether government legislation tending to alter the benefits payable under the act or perhaps tending to shift the burden from one group of contributors to the other should not be accompanied by the usual recommendation. I somewhat suspect that some hon. members in this House would insist that this kind of legislation, if it were sponsored by the government, should be accompanied by a recommendation.

At the same time, there are precedents, particularly in British parliamentary practice, which tend to indicate that such legislative proposals, because they do not, strictly speaking, impose a tax or an impost as referred to in Standing Order 62, are outside the rule which protects the financial initiative of the Crown.

Because of the difficulty in interpreting the statute which these bills propose to amend, and because these bills, if they had been included in the original group filed at the opening of the session, would now be before the House along with all the others, I feel it would be fair to give the sponsors of these four bills the benefit of the doubt. The conclusion would be that the two bills sponsored by the hon. member for Timiskaming, that of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, and that of the hon. member for Skeena would be acceptable for submission to the House at this time.

However, I have an additional reservation regarding the bill standing in the name of the hon. member for Skeena. This does not have to do with his use of Latin in his explanatory note but rather with another aspect of the explanatory note. It has been ruled that such notes ought to be an explanation and not an argument. The mover of a bill cannot introduce in his explanatory note the speech or the arguments he might want to present on second reading. Somehow, I feel that that is what the hon. member for Skeena has attempted in his explanatory note which to some extent is poetry. It sounds lyrical to the Chair. I strongly urge the hon. member to make his explanatory note conform more with existing practice and the form that is usual for such explanatory notes. That is the only reservation I would have in connection with his bill. I hope the hon. member will find it possible to make the necessary correction, perhaps in consultation with learned parliamentary counsel, after which the bill could be introduced. The other three bills standing in the name of the hon. member for Timiskaming and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre can be introduced at this time.

AMENDMENT RESPECTING HOLIDAY PAY

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-180, to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971 (holiday pay).

Mr. Speaker: It is my impression that an explanation was given of this bill when it was first brought to the attention of the House last Friday.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT RESPECTING RETIREMENT BENEFIT

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-181, to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971 (retirement benefit).

[Mr. Speaker.]

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT RESPECTING BENEFITS AT TIME OF RETIREMENT

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-182, to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act (benefits at time of retirement).

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

ARCTIC WATERS POLLUTION PREVENTION ACT

On the order: Introduction of Bills.

Mr. Howard (Skeena)—Bill intituled: "An Act to amend the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act".

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Skeena has given notice of a further bill standing in his name, an act to amend the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act. I have examined this bill and find nothing procedurally wrong with it except, again, the explanatory note which I believe is in many ways argument rather than strictly speaking an explanatory note. I would hope that by tomorrow this might be corrected and both bills standing in the name of the hon. member for Skeena might be introduced at that time.

CANADA LABOUR CODE

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS, LABOUR RELATIONS BOARD, INDUSTRIAL INQUIRY COMMISSIONS AND CONCILIATION BOARDS

Hon. Martin P. O'Connell (Minister of Labour) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-183, to amend the Canada Labour Code.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

WEST COAST MARINE TRAFFIC REPORTING ZONE BILL

PROVISION FOR CERTAIN REPORTS BY VESSELS

Mr. D. W. Groos (Victoria) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-184, respecting the reporting of marine traffic off the west coast of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Groos: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill, as explained in the bill, is to require vessels approaching the west coast of Canada to make certain reports with the eventual view of providing a greater degree of safety on the west coast than there is at present.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

PERCENTAGE OF TOTAL FEDERAL TAX REVENUE PAID BY INDIVIDUALS AND CORPORATIONS

Question No. 5—Mr. Broadbent:

What percentage of total federal tax revenue was paid in each year between 1939 and 1970 by (a) individuals (b) corporations?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of National Revenue): The federal tax revenues for Customs and Excise and Taxation for the period 1939-1970 are shown in the Department's Annual Reports tabled in the House each year. The revenues collected by the Taxation Division are generally shown separately in the Annual Reports for individuals and corporations. However, import records are not kept in such a way as to provide such separate figures in the case of duties and taxes.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT—OFFICE SPACE LEASED IN HALIFAX, N.S.

Question No. 75—Mr. McCleave:

1. How many square feet of office space are leased by the Post Office Department in the City of Halifax, from whom is the space leased, at what annual rental and for what period of time?

2. How much office space is presently in use by the Post Office Department that is located in buildings owned by the federal government?

3. What is the present total of members of the Public Service who are employees of the Post Office Department, how many of this number are full-time and how many are part-time employees, and what are the comparable figures for the years 1969, 1970 and 1971?

4. Of the total number of employees of the Post Office Department in the Halifax area, how many are associated with local services, how many are associated with regional services and what are the comparable figures for the years 1969, 1970 and 1971?

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of Public Works and the Post Office Department as follows:
1. The following space is leased by the Department of Public Works for the Post Office Department in the City of Halifax:

Area in Square Feet	Owner of Building	Annual Rental	Period of Lease
407	Canadian National Railways	$ 814.00	During pleasure
3,700	Dresden Arms Ltd.	9,000.00	4 years terminating January 3, 1973.
8,219	Halifax Development Ltd.	55,889.50	3 years terminating March 31, 1974.

Area in Square Feet	Crown-owned Building

CANADIAN GRAINS COMMISSION—SALARIES OF MEMBERS

Question No. 222—Mr. Burton:

What is the salary of each member of the Canadian Grains Commission?

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Chief Commissioner, H. D. Pound, $23,500-29,000. Assistant Chief Commissioner, C. L. Shuttleworth, $20,000-25,000. Commissioner, F. M. Hetland, $20,000-25,000.

COMBINES INVESTIGATION ACT—INVESTIGATION OF REAL ESTATE AGENTS TARIFFS

Question No. 248—Mr. Robinson:

Does the government intend to investigate real estate agent tariffs under the Combines Investigation Act?

Mr. D. R. Tolmie (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): No. Real estate agent tariffs do not come within the purview of the Combines Investigation Act.

REPRESENTATIONS TO SUDANESE GOVERNMENT CONCERNING ITS UNDECLARED CIVIL WAR

Question No. 269—Mr. Robinson:

1. Has the government made any representations to the Sudanese Government concerning its undeclared civil war?

2. Will the government make representation to the United Nations regarding the situation in the Sudan?

3. Has the government contributed anything towards refugee relief in the Sudan and, if not, will it consider making a contribution towards the refugee relief program?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. The government has not made any representations to the Sudanese government on the subject cited, which evidently is in the domain of Sudanese internal affairs.

2. The government does not consider it appropriate to make representations before the United Nations about a Sudanese internal matter.

3. Canada does not have a bilateral aid program in the Sudan. However, Canada does contribute to the World Food Program, the United Nations High Commission for Refugees and various other relief agencies which administer aid programs within the Sudan. If in the context of a special United Nations program Canada were asked to provide aid specifically for refugees from the Sudan, such request would be considered in the context of the government's multilateral aid priorities and any other considerations relevant at that time.

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM

Question No. 277—Mr. Korchinski:

Under the Local Initiatives Program, in each province (a) how many applications were made (b) how many programs were turned down (c) what was the cumulative amount of the federal grants requested (d) what was the total amount granted for projects?

Mr. Ray Perrault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Under the Local Initiatives Program in each province:

(a) Records as of March 8, 1972 indicate that the following number of applications were received: Newfoundland, 1,142; Nova Scotia, 1,009; Prince Edward Island, 258; New Brunswick, 712; Quebec, 5,215; Ontario, 2,238; Manitoba, 594; Saskatchewan, 493; Alberta, 607; Northwest Territories, 109; British Columbia, 1,323; Yukon 36; Total, 13,736.

(b) No separate records are maintained only for those applications turned down. Records as of March 8, 1972 indicate that the following number of applications were turned down, withdrawn, or cancelled. Newfoundland, 683; Nova Scotia, 573; Prince Edward Island, 133; New Brunswick, 326; Quebec, 3,088; Ontario, 1,190; Manitoba, 373; Saskatchewan, 321; Alberta, 299; Northwest Territories, 66; British Columbia, 655; Yukon 14; Total 7,721.

(c) Latest available information indicates the following cumulative amounts of federal grants requested: Newfoundland, $34,285,000; Nova Scotia, $29,109,000; Prince Edward Island, $6,184,000; New Brunswick, $24,015,000; Quebec, $205,487,000; Ontario, $71,042,000; Manitoba, $28,083,000; Saskatchewan, $15,910,000; Alberta, $20,635,000; Northwest Territories, $2,948,000; British Columbia, $42,141,000; Yukon $755,000; Total, $480,594,000.

(d) Final approvals are now being processed and the last of the contracts finalized. When this is completed the total amount granted will be compiled.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—REMOVAL OF CROWN FROM BUTTONS AND INSIGNIA ON UNIFORMS

Question No. 312—Mr. MacKay:

Is the symbol of the Crown being removed from buttons and insignia of the military and, if so, at what cost?

[Mr. Sharp.]

Mr. J.-R. Comtois (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): No; not applicable.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—ACQUISITION FROM CHINA OF SUPERSONIC COMBAT AIRCRAFT

Question No. 314—Mr. Robinson:

Is the government considering the acquisition from China of a quantity of supersonic combat aircraft, such as the F-9 or other aircraft capable of flying at twice the speed of sound?

Mr. J.-R. Comtois (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

NATIONAL SECURITY

POSSIBLE INVOLVEMENT OF MEMBERS OF SOVIET EMBASSY STAFF IN ESPIONAGE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Prime Minister on a matter that needs clarification, especially in view of reports in the press. Has the government received information implicating members of the staff of the Soviet Embassy in Canada in espionage activities?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Members of my staff, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I would never accuse members of the Prime Minister's staff of that, whatever else. I ask the Prime Minister whether the government has received information implicating members of the staff of the Soviet Embassy in Canada in espionage activities, as reported in the press?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, if the Leader of the Opposition is referring to anything recent the answer to that is no, but I must go on to say that in a matter of espionage and security information it would not be customary for any member on the government side to volunteer information publicly.

Mr. Stanfield: Can the Prime Minister indicate whether the government has requested the withdrawal from Canada of any members of the Soviet Embassy on the basis of alleged espionage activities?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, having answered no to the first question, certainly the answer to the second question follows.

GRAIN

PROVISION OF EQUIPMENT BY RAILWAYS TO MEET EXPORT COMMITMENTS

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, in view of the statement by the president of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool that to meet export grain commitments from west coast ports 800 cars will have to be unloaded daily, and at Thunder Bay 1,700 daily after May 1, and that this level will have to be maintained through to November, can the minister responsible for the Wheat Board inform the House whether he has received any commitment from the CNR and the CPR to provide the equipment which would enable these levels to be maintained?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the figures quoted might perhaps even be considered minimum requirements in view of the tremendous sales prospects for Canadian grain. The Wheat Board has held discussions with the railroads and so have members of the government. We shall be continuing to hold such discussions. The railways have indicated the number of cars they are able to provide in connection with the movement of grain. The number of unloadings that can be accomplished tends to depend in part on the manner in which the system as a whole operates, the manner in which the terminals and the elevators operate. As I say, discussions are continuing. I expect to have a further meeting in a week or so with the railways and the elevator companies in connection with this matter.

Mr. Gleave: Does the fact that the minister has found it necessary to call such a general meeting of the grain companies, the railroads and the Wheat Board for April 6, according to news reports, indicate that the transportation committee, which is representative of the railroads, the Wheat Board and the department, has been unable to secure adequate commitments and co-operation from the railroads to move the grain into export positions? Is that the conclusion one should draw?

Mr. Lang: I do not think that is really a fair conclusion. The present committee is doing a very good job to make the existing system work to the maximum. Some additional policy decisions on the part of some of the companies may be involved, and at this point a meeting at a higher level seems to be in order. There is always a danger in times like these that one part of the industry may accuse another part of the industry of causing the problem in increasing total movement. Only the opposition is consistent in always accusing the government—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lang: —when we are trying to solve the problem rather than to leave people simply pointing fingers at one another.

WITHDRAWAL BY WHEAT BOARD OF OFFERS TO SELL

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister whether it is a fact that the Wheat Board has withdrawn all offers to sell wheat ex-Pacific until the situation at the coast returns to normal, which could be several weeks from now?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): No, Mr. Speaker, that is not a fact. The Wheat Board is continuing to sell wheat for many dates out of Vancouver. I have a report only ten days old of a further sale in that connection. Selling is continuing even while every effort is being made to catch up on the backlog of grain shipments from Vancouver.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Can the minister get to a date closer than ten days ago? I am reading from a report by James Richardson and Sons, of which the Minister of Supply and Services was at one time the head. It states that all offers have been withdrawn by the Wheat Board for export sales of wheat. Is that correct or not?

Mr. Lang: As I have indicated, not long ago another sale was made by the Wheat Board out of Vancouver. This shows that selling is continuing for different periods and times. Of course, for the immediate period, the rest of March and the month of April, sales were made by the board a long time ago to the maximum of the handling capacity.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I do not seem to be able to get my question over to the minister. I asked him whether it is a fact that as of March 23 the Wheat Board has withdrawn offers for export sales of wheat ex-Pacific, or is this statement by Richardson and Sons fictitious?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The right hon. gentleman knows he should not ask for verification of a statement. He can, however, ask the question directly. The question can be asked and answered on that basis.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I was trying to give the statement prestige. Will the minister, without the suggestion that came from—

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: The hon. member will be the expurgatorious member if he doesn't watch out. I ask the minister: Is it a fact that no orders are now being taken by the Wheat Board for shipment of wheat from the Pacific coast and that there will not be such orders for several weeks?

• (1430)

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, as I made clear to the House before and in my answer to the right hon. gentleman again this afternoon, for a particular point in time offers are not being taken. The Wheat Board is continuing to accept offers for future deliveries of grain beyond the period of the immediate catch-up—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think I should recognize the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar. A number of members are seeking to ask supplementaries, but the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar asked the first question and in fairness I think he should be given an opportunity to ask a supplementary at this time.

PROVISION OF EQUIPMENT BY RAILWAYS TO MEET EXPORT COMMITMENTS

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, the question I asked the minister was quite specific. Has he been able to obtain from the railways a commitment to provide adequate equipment, and has the minister been able to get the kind of co-operation that is required to move our grain into export positions?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, not only is the question very specific, it is also very simple, but the answer is very complex. The railways have indicated the equipment they have available under the circumstances to move an export volume of 800 million bushels of grain. Under certain additional circumstances some additional movement of grain is possible. Our targets continue to be higher than even the present unheard of figures. Therefore we are continuing to discuss additional ways of moving grain.

PROVISION OF MAXIMUM STOCKS AT LAKEHEAD FOR OPENING OF NAVIGATION—NUMBER OF DIESEL ENGINES UNDER REPAIR

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. In view of the fact that stocks of all grains at the Lakehead on March 1, 1972, were down by 22.2 million bushels from stocks held on the same date a year ago, is the minister prepared to state what measures the government is taking to ensure maximum stocks for the opening of the shipping season at the Lakehead?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the last report I had from the Wheat Board indicated that the schedule they have for adding to the stocks at Thunder Bay is being exceeded. The report shows something of the order of 70 million bushels of grain in store, though that figure is now some days out of date. The Wheat Board is satisfied with the progress being made in having ready the necessary quantities at Thunder Bay when navigation opens.

Mr. Knight: I wonder whether the minister is prepared to state how many 3,000 horsepower diesel engines are in the Montreal yards for repair and whether or not this is having an adverse effect on the movement of western grains?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, if the question refers to the CNR I am sure my colleague the Minister of Transport will be glad to obtain that information for the hon. member. I am not sure whether this information could be obtained for the CPR.

SUGGESTED USE OF UNIT TRAIN TO MOVE GRAIN TO VANCOUVER

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. In light of the reply the minister gave me and other hon. members last Thursday that there were over 20 ships waiting at Vancouver, and also in light of the experience gained from the unit train which was inaugurated last November and moved over a quarter of a million bushels of grain, is another unit train of that order being made up in order to load the ships now waiting, avoid demurrage and at least try to catch up on some of our commitments?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the whole question of the use of the inland terminals and the extra expense involved if they are used in certain ways is being actively examined. I am looking forward to deliveries being made by farmers to inland terminals in the fairly near future and we will take the necessary steps to ensure that those deliveries take place. It seems to me that with the peak movement we are likely to face, as well as the immediate problem at Vancouver, the movement of clean grain in that fashion may add to our efficiency.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Mackenzie on another supplementary question and then will recognize the hon. member for Bellechasse. We can return to this matter in due course.

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Speaker, may I ask whether at the present time the Wheat Board has authorized the terminals at Saskatoon to take grain directly from producers in anticipation of such movement?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, for some time the inland terminals have been taking in grain on behalf of specific elevator companies which made this arrangement with the Canada Grain Commission. In addition, I have asked the Wheat Board to examine with the commission the use of these terminals as alternate delivery points for all producers, and I expect a reply on this subject from the Wheat Board almost momentarily.

AGRICULTURE

APPOINTMENT OF MEMBERS TO NATIONAL FARM PRODUCTS MARKETING COUNCIL—SUGGESTIONS FROM AGRICULTURAL ORGANIZATIONS—DATE OF ESTABLISHMENT

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture.

May I ask him whether farm producers' organizations have submitted any list of names of persons whom the cabinet could appoint as members of the National Farm Products Marketing Council?

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question of the minister.

Now that he has replied affirmatively, may I ask the minister whether he will take into account the suggestions submitted by those organizations, and when will the Council members be appointed?

[English]

Mr. Olson: The answer to the first part of the question, Mr. Speaker, is yes, they have been taken into consideration. To the second part of the question the answer is, I hope very soon.

YOUTH

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—ROLE OF INDUSTRIAL REFERRAL CENTRE—CONSULTATION TO ACHIEVE PRIVATE FUNDING OF PROJECTS NOT ACCEPTED

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State. In view of the answers given and reports issued last week by the minister, in recognition of the fact that there are some 7,000 more project submissions under the Opportunities for Youth program, and in view of the government's inability to increase very much the capacity over last year, with the likelihood that five out of six projects will be rejected, or 160,000 young people will not be receiving a satisfactory answer, can the minister elaborate on his answer to me last Wednesday regarding the use of some industrial referral centre and what kind of consultation is going on for the private funding of the many projects that will not be accepted?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I have already told the hon. member that action is being taken to that effect. On the other hand, were I to start giving all the details in reply to a question, Your Honour would have to reduce me to silence.

If, at any time, I do consider or the House does consider it important enough to justify a new statement on motions, I shall be happy to oblige.

[English]

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the minister might take under consideration either the making of a statement on motions or taking the opportunity to make some public elaboration of this important question. In view of the fact that some 75 per cent of the students last summer found employment in the private sector, and in view of the great need for expanding employment opportunities in the private sector, would the minister say briefly whether he or any other member of the government has taken any initiative in terms of encouraging the private sector to develop some over-all plan for meeting the potentially very large amount of unemployment facing our young people this summer?

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I apologize for asking another supplementary but I think the minister might assist if he would indicate, even briefly, what the nature of this consultation has been or who is taking responsibility for this important area?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would hope this can be done briefly because normally the information sought by the hon. member would require a general statement on motions. If the minister can reply briefly he will be recognized for that purpose.

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: I cannot do so briefly, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): May I ask a final supplementary, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is asking leave to ask a third supplementary. He will be recognized for this purpose but I believe the hon. member for Gaspé also has a supplementary and his turn will come in a moment.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): In view of the imminence of many hundreds of thousands of young people coming into the labour force, temporarily or permanently, within the next few weeks, can the minister indicate when, and in what form, we might have some elaboration in terms of an answer to these important questions?

Mr. Pelletier: What is the question exactly? I heard the dissertation but not the question.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): When may we have an answer in some detail to the questions I have been putting?

Mr. Pelletier: Soon.

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—MEASURES TO LIMIT PARTICIPATION TO CANADIAN CITIZENS

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Gaspé): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

In connection with the 1972 Opportunities for Youth program, do relevant regulations provide that American or European youths in Canada on a temporary basis or on holidays are not eligible for that program? And what steps will be taken to ensure that this program will benefit Canadians exclusively?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the regulations provide that it applies to Canadians or legal residents of Canada. Besides, the publicity and the criteria of the program did mention that condition. If the attention of our agents is drawn to a litigious case when they visit the projects, steps will then be taken to straighten out the situation.

POWER

JAMES BAY HYDROELECTRIC DEVELOPMENT—FEDERAL PARTICIPATION IN NEGOTIATIONS ON PROBLEMS OF INDIANS AND ESKIMOS

Mr. Raymond Rock (Lachine): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development regarding the protest march held by 200 Indian youth in order to draw public attention to the plight of Indians, Eskimos and Métis in respect of the James Bay hydroelectric development. Is this the kind of negotiation taking place when the parliamentary secretary stated that the Indians in the James Bay area are negotiating for themselves with the provincial government?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the hon. member is not suggesting that his question is in order in procedural terms. The hon. member for Greenwood.

Mr. Brewin: My question is addressed—

Mr. Rock: I should like to ask a supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps it might be better if I recognized the hon. member for Lachine first so that he may rephrase the question and put it in proper form.

Mr. Rock: Mr. Speaker, is there any federal participation in negotiation of the Indian and Eskimo problems in the James Bay area?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I have answered that question on several occasions.

The Quebec Indians are now conferring with the government of that province in connection with the James Bay development. I keep informed regularly about the talks. Indeed, last week I met the president of the Indian Association as well as the president of the New Quebec Indian Association and I can assure hon. members that we are closely following the situation. However, at the present time the Quebec Indians have asked us not to intervene.

[English]

[Later:]

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Since the federal government has direct responsibility for looking after the best interests of the Indian people, will he inform the House why he or the government is not taking direct action in the negotiations that are taking place on behalf of the James Bay people?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, because we are less paternalistic than the previous government used to be.

AIRPORTS

PICKERING TOWNSHIP SITE—POSSIBILITY OF PLEBISCITE TO ASCERTAIN VIEWS OF THOSE CONCERNED

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. In suggesting that if 51 per cent of the people to be served by the new international airport in Ontario do not approve of the site the proposal will not be proceeded with, is the Prime Minister envisaging a plebiscite, or how will he determine the views of those concerned?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think the statement about the 51 per cent is a fair view of democracy. With regard to a plebiscite or referendum, the hon. member knows they are not customary in our form of government. We have a representative form of democracy and, as far as I know, the representatives of Ontario, particularly the Toronto area, have indicated they are in favour of and support this airport. If enough M.P.'s from the opposition wish to indicate to me that they are against the airport in the Toronto area, I will consider other ways of determining where the majority lies.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NEGOTIATIONS WITH FRANCE ON OWNERSHIP OF UNDERWATER TERRITORY BETWEEN ST. PIERRE-MIQUELON AND NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs concerning discussions with the French government regarding ownership of underwater territory between St. Pierre-Miquelon and Nova Scotia. Can he advise whether negotiations are in progress with the government of France on this matter, and what is this government's position in respect of what Premier Regan calls outrageous French claims?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there have been negotiations from time to time and we hope they can be renewed in the near future. The French have suggested the boundary should be on the basis of equidistance. Our position, which of course is the same as Mr. Regan's, is that "special circumstances" justify another boundary giving a smaller area of shelf to France. If a settlement satisfactory to Canada cannot be reached on the basis of negotiation, this government would be prepared to refer the matter for arbitration.

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Speaker, can the minister say whether on this very important matter he is keeping in touch with the embattled premier of Nova Scotia?

Mr. Sharp: Yes, Mr. Speaker, on such matters we do keep closely in touch with those who are likely to be affected.

FISHERIES

INCIDENT WITH RUSSIAN SHIP—INQUIRY AS TO PROTEST—REPRESENTATIONS RESPECTING DEPLETION OF RESOURCES OFF EAST COAST

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether the Canadian government, either through the Prime Minister or the Secretary of State for External Affairs, officially protested the recent incident of intimidation by a Russian vessel of a Canadian ship off the east coast of Canada? If so, what was the response to that official protest?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I will take notice of that question on behalf of the minister responsible for fisheries.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I ask it with a certain feeling that the Prime Minister has neglected to protest this incident officially. Has the Canadian government under any type of surveillance the 75 Russian ships that are now launching naval war on the marine resources off the east coast of Canada? If so, has the government made an official protest? This is not a light question as might be indicated by the rather jocular response across the way.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me everybody was listening; I know I was. In any event, the hon. member should ask his question.

Mr. Lundrigan: There are a lot of people not paying attention to this type of problem off the east coast of Canada. Has the federal government, through the Prime Minister or the minister, in fact made any protest to the Soviet Union with a request to discontinue this type of slaughter of our marine resources off the east coast of Canada?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we have been making representations to many countries, not only the Soviet Union, about the need to conserve the fisheries resources, of which my hon. friend is so well aware. But, as I said earlier, our purpose is try to get co-operation. It is not the satisfaction of making protests that interests us. What we are trying to do is to get better conservation of the marine resources surrounding our shores.

• (1450)

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I should recognize the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock and we will return to the hon. member for St. John's East later.

YOUTH

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—TASK FORCE RECOMMENDATION OF SIMILAR PROGRAM FOR AGED

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State. Having in mind the report of the task force on the Opportunities for Youth program, which contained a recommendation that there should be opportunities for all people including senior citizens, is any consideration being given at this time to the recommendation of the task force, namely, the establishment of an opportunities for age program?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, that part of the report was not really included in the terms of reference of the task force. Therefore, it is a recommendation which is outside the scope of the study. We know that a similar recommendation had already been made several months ago by the task force on youth.

Those questions are now being studied and considered by the government to find adequate solutions.

FISHERIES

INCIDENT WITH RUSSIAN SHIPS—INQUIRY AS TO PROTEST

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs similar to the question I directed to the Minister of Fisheries on Friday. Has the government protested the incident during which three Russian trawlers in a gang fishing operation very nearly collided with a Canadian trawler and the subsequent refusal of the Russians to discuss with the Canadian fisheries patrol vessel the rules of the road in fishing off the east coast? Has there been a specific protest to the Russian authorities regarding this incident and their refusal to discuss safety precautions with our people?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I myself have not entered any such protest. It may have been that some of my officials have discussed this with the Russians; I will try to determine that.

ACTIVITIES OF FOREIGN DRAGGERS IN GULF OF ST. LAWRENCE—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): My question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Can he indicate to the House whether he has been made aware of the intensity of activities of foreign draggers in the Gulf of St. Lawrence off the southwest coast of Newfoundland, and what action is being taken in this regard?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I will make inquiries, Mr. Speaker. I am sure my colleague, the Minister of Fisheries, has been very actively following these events.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate, but I have to bring to the attention of hon. members that there are 15 or 20 members seeking an opportunity to ask questions and we should give them an opportunity to do so.

INCIDENT WITH RUSSIAN SHIPS—CONSERVATION OF RESOURCES—SUGGESTED REPRESENTATIONS BY PRIME MINISTER

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): My supplementary question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the fact the only protest came from the director of fisheries for the province of Newfoundland, would the Prime Minister himself consider a primeministerial representation to the Soviet Union to try to emphasize the dangers involved in the incident referred to and, second, the impact of that kind of attack on the resources of the east coast of Canada?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): None of the answers given to this series of questions support the premise put forward by the hon. member.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not think that we should embark on a debate. If the hon. member has a supplementary question, he might be recognized for this purpose. Then we will try to go on to the next subject.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order brought on by the remark by the Prime Minister that no answers given to hon. members in respect of these incidents support the premise. If the Prime Minister would check with the Secretary of State for External Affairs he would find that the latter referred to the fact that the Minister of Fisheries was following this incident closely.

Mr. Speaker: Of course that is not a point of order; that is debate. We have to try to proceed. A number of hon. members and right hon. members are waiting for an opportunity to ask questions.

Mr. Lundrigan: I would simply ask the Prime Minister whether he would officially protest the recent incident to the Soviet Union and as well express the concern of Canada about Russian fishing activity off the east coast of Canada at present?

Mr. Trudeau: I have nothing to add to the answers that have been given.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

DISPUTE WITH NABET—RESENTMENT OF PUBLIC AGAINST LACK OF HOCKEY TELECASTS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, mine is a non-controversial question directed to the Secretary of State. It has to do with the NABET strike and the degree to which that strike is interfering with the pleasure of hundreds of thousands of Canadians who are being denied hockey broadcasts. Has the minister brought to the attention of the CBC that there is an aroused antagonism to what is taking place, and can he advise whether the CBC is prepared to relieve the viewers of Canada from being held up to ransom on the part of the employees of the CBC?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, there was no need for me to bring these facts to the attention of CBC management which is very well aware of them.

As for the action taken to bring to an end those labour problems within the CBC, I made a report to the House on every stage. I must say that right now negotiations seem to have resumed but, and I repeat what I have said several times, it is not for the government to settle that matter or to negotiate in place of CBC management. The latter has that responsibility.

[Mr. Lundrigan.]

[English]

Mr. Diefenbaker: If the minister, with his accustomed diplomatic attitude, would speak to the representatives of NABET I am sure he would convince them to the same extent that he does the members of this House.

DISPUTE WITH NABET—NATURE OF NEGOTIATIONS—GOVERNMENT INITIATIVE TO SETTLE

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State a question that does not make accusations against the employees of the CBC. Can he tell us whether the negotiations which have been resumed are taking place under a mediator or conciliator and whether the CBC as the employer is making some moves to make possible a settlement between the two parties?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I already answered this question last week. It is understood that in this meeting that has been referred to as "a summit meeting", it is the union management and the CBC management that have met around a table. But, as far as I know, this did not eliminate the role of the mediators who are still at work, as far as I know.

[English]

Mr. Lewis: I have a further supplementary, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that negotiations have gone on for many months and that after the conciliation board report that the CBC would not meet except on the basis of that report, and in view of the fact that the minister answers to parliament on any question dealing with the CBC, may I ask him whether it is not appropriate for him and the government to take some initiative in getting these negotiations going on a proper basis instead of the feet-dragging that has taken place for a year?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me that the hon. member's question is at the same time a suggestion and an argument.

[Translation]

DISPUTE WITH NABET—MEASURES TO AVOID LOCKOUT

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the Secretary of State.

Could the minister say what steps the government intends to take if the members of NABET impose a lockout to other CBC employees?

Mr. Speaker: I think that the hon. member will recognize that this question is hypothetical and cannot be put in these terms.

Mr. Valade: May I clarify my question, Mr. Speaker?

I should like to ask the Secretary of State what are the steps that the government intends to take should the union members involved in the labour dispute with the CBC decide to keep the regular CBC employees from going back to work?

Mr. Speaker: Even rephrased, the question is still hypothetical.

TRADE

REQUEST FOR OUTLINE OF POINTS OF DISAGREEMENT WITH UNITED STATES OR STATEMENT FOLLOWING PRESIDENT NIXON'S VISIT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister arising out of the reported statement of President Nixon that very basic disagreements exist between the United States and Canada. I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he intends to outline to the House and to the people of the country in a precise way what these disagreements are?

• (1500)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is, of course, no secret that in some of the trade negotiations we have not been able to conclude agreements which would be acceptable to both sides. As to the issues themselves, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce on previous occasions has indicated what certain irritants were on their side and on our side. I think, as he has added quite properly, that it would not be in the interests of the negotiations from the Canadian point of view for me to say now what the Canadian government is offering and what the United States does not think is enough.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, would the Prime Minister be prepared to make a fuller statement following the visit of President Nixon as to what disagreements continue, or are we to assume from the statement made over the weekend by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce that this whole thing might be put over until after the election?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, that would depend, of course, on when the election takes place. So far as we are concerned, we have made offers to the United States which we hoped would settle this matter. They have not been formally accepted. The door is still open so far as we are concerned and, I am sure, so far as the Americans are concerned too. Informal contacts are being made to know when the negotiations might take place. Once again, whether they would take place before or after an election, or whether they would be successful or not, depends on a hypothetical event about which I know nothing.

WELFARE

LEGALITY OF BRITISH COLUMBIA LEGISLATION LIMITING PROVISION OF ASSISTANCE—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare concerning Bill 49 of the British Columbia legislature which would give the provincial minister complete power to decide who gets social assistance and who does not. Have the minister's legal advisers now told him whether or not in their opinion this bill violates the Canada Assistance Plan?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am not sure exactly of the terms of the hon. member's question. If the hon. member is asking merely whether the minister has received an opinion, perhaps in those terms the question is acceptable.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Not formally, Mr. Speaker, but I am under the impression it is not clear at all that any type of illegality has taken place. This is due to several factors. I would advise the hon. member for one thing that my information—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the minister will appreciate the distinction I made. I think the hon. member appreciates that she cannot ask whether legislation is legal or illegal but can ask whether an opinion has been received. I believe the question is in order to that extent.

Mr. Munro: Without making specific reference to the legality or otherwise of the legislation, Mr. Speaker, I would advise that the legislation is in the process of being amended. The word "absolute" is being taken out of it, and the minister's discretion is subject to the regulations made under the act. Subject to further clarification, I have nothing more to add.

Mrs. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister if he would try to get further clarification and make a statement in the House about the whole situation before the Easter recess?

Mr. Munro: Mr. Speaker, I will try to make a statement in the House before the Easter recess if at all possible. Whether this is done by statement or by answer to another question perhaps could be left to me.

TRADE

AUTOMOBILES—IMPORTATION DUTY FREE FROM PARENT COMPANIES IN UNITED STATES—JUSTIFICATION FOR HIGHER PRICES TO CANADIANS

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. As the government allows Canadian branch plants to import duty free cars and parts from their parent companies in the United States has the minister, since taking over his portfolio, carefully examined the reasons put forward by these Canadian branch plants to justify the fact that they are charging an average of 8 per cent more to Canadians than to Americans for exactly the same model cars, particularly in view of the fact it takes no more today to manufacture or sell a car in Canada than it does in the United States?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): I have got the message the hon. member wants to give me, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Hees: As a supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Malpeque. The hon. member might allow the Chair to recognize the hon. member for Malpeque since we have just about reached the end of the question period.

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND CENTENNIAL

FEDERAL CONTRIBUTION TO CELEBRATION OF ENTRY INTO CONFEDERATION—NATURE OF GRANT

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State. Could he say whether he has reached agreement with the government of Prince Edward Island as to what is appropriate in the way of a contribution to the celebration next year of Prince Edward Island's centennial of its entry into confederation, and whether the financial grant which is made by the federal government is made upon condition that it be spent for certain purposes or is an unconditional grant?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I really think this kind of question normally ought to be placed on the order paper, but as it has been asked perhaps the minister might be allowed to reply.

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Yes, Mr. Speaker, the amounts were awarded quite some time ago, or rather determined. The amount has been determined. As for the program on which it will be spent, I had an opportunity to discuss the matter last week with the premier of Prince Edward Island and the promoters seem to have an extremely interesting and diversified program, which will be announced in due course.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime MInister. In view of the fact that the Prime Minister has dismissed as mythical the suggestion that government decisions are influenced by corporate contributions, would he have any objection to tabling the list of the 95 corporate contributors to the Liberal party and, if not—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member knows he cannot ask a question in those terms. That question is clearly out of order. The hon. member is asking a question of another hon. member in a capacity other than his official capacity in this House. Again I do not think the question asked by the hon. member is in order.

Mr. Broadbent: Maybe I could rephrase the question.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby on a supplementary.

Mr. Broadbent: Would the Prime Minister provide to the House, either by a statement on motions or in some other form in the near future, a list of all those corporations that are also supporters of the Liberal party and that have received—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have ruled that that type of question is clearly out of order and I cannot allow it. The hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings.

Mr. Broadbent: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member rises on a point of order.

Mr. Broadbent: The point of order is that some dozens, in fact more than dozens, of corporations receive millions of dollars annually from the taxpayers of Canada. This has continued for many years. The question I am posing, and I would like to know why it is not in order, is that I would like to get from the government a list of those corporations that have received financial assistance in any form—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question is asked in the wrong forum. The hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings had a supplementary to a previous question and perhaps he might be allowed to ask his supplementary. I assume it will be in order. I have to apologize to a number of hon. members in the back rows who have not had a chance to ask their questions. Perhaps we might all make an effort tomorrow to give an opportunity to our distinguished colleagues in the other rows to participate more actively in the question period. The hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings.

TRADE

AUTOMOBILES—IMPORTATION DUTY FREE FROM PARENT COMPANIES IN UNITED STATES—JUSTIFICATION FOR HIGHER PRICES TO CANADIANS

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Yes, Mr. Speaker, as always it will be in order. My supplementary question relates to the fact that neither I nor anybody around me could hear the answer given by the minister. I have an idea that he said, "I got the message." If that is correct, does that mean he will look into the matter immediately and report to the House as soon as possible?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the situation that the hon. member describes. He does have a point, and we are reviewing it.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

AIRPORTS

PICKERING TOWNSHIP SITE—CONSULTATION WITH ONTARIO AUTHORITIES BY PRIME MINISTER PRIOR TO STATEMENT RESPECTING DISAPPROVAL

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. It is never my position to question a ruling of the Chair, but I do believe a very important issue was brought to the attention of hon. members this afternoon regarding the site of the new international airport in Pickering Township. I believe that the Prime Minister's statement, holding out hopes to so many people as to the possibility of there being another choice, does demand some clarification, particularly in view of the fact the choice of this site was made in conjunction with the province of Ontario. I would hope that perhaps the Prime Minister would indicate whether he did, in fact, discuss this matter with the province of Ontario before making that statement.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Hon. members have previously sought to ask supplementary questions by way of points of order, and I have suggested that this is irregular. Hon. members may feel that during the question period they do not have a chance to ask their questions or supplementary questions. Obviously, if a large number of hon. members are anxious to ask questions, and we have only 40 minutes, there will be some who will not have that opportunity. I doubt very much that it is regular, when we have gone more than five minutes beyond the end of the question period, for hon. members, on a point of order, to seek to ask a supplementary, even when it relates to a matter as important as the one brought up by the hon. member for Hamilton West. Having said all this, if, of course, there is unanimous consent to allow the minister responsible to reply to the hon. member's supplementary question, which I repeat is not a point of order, the Chair has no objection to allowing the minister to reply to it.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It seems to me that the question has now been asked. I am not sure to whom it was directed, but if someone will reply to the hon. member's question I will then call orders of the day.

Mr. Alexander: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This is supplementary to the questions asked of the Prime Minister earlier regarding the site of the Pickering airport. In view of the fact that when this decision was made it was made in conjunction with the province of Ontario, did the Prime Minister have any discussions with the authorities of the province of Ontario responsible for this decision subsequent to the statement made by the minister when this whole matter was aired, and prior to the time the Prime Minister made the statement, whereby he gave some indication—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Alexander: —that if in excess of 51 per cent of the people disapproved—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think that not only is that not a point of order but I would not think it qualifies as a legitimate question that could be asked during the question period.

Mr. Alexander: Let me rephrase it.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sainte-Marie.

Mr. Alexander: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, perhaps I can shorten the question to the point where the Prime Minister can answer yes or no. Prior to the time the Prime Minister made the statement regarding the 51 per cent, did he discuss the matter with the provincial authorities, and did they give him authority to say that if 51 per cent of the people did not want it there would not be an airport?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, my authority is the constitution of Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

I put a question to the hon. Secretary of State. Because of the way I worded the question, there might be some ambiguity as to its substance and I should like to clarify it in order to prevent prejudice to the members of NABET.

I did not intend to suggest that the union could force a lock-out, but rather that the CBC could do so in regard to its employees.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

FAMILY INCOME SECURITY PLAN

MEASURE TO PROVIDE BENEFITS IN RESPECT OF CHILDREN

The House resumed, from Friday, March 24, consideration of the motion of Mr. Munro that Bill C-170, to provide for the payment of benefits in respect of children, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, when we adjourned last Friday I was saying that the first duty of a responsible government is to provide the funds necessary to ensure satisfactory operation of the economic life of Canadians. I know that some people may accuse me of again talking about money. In fact, did the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) himself not talk of this all through his speech—and yet, none of my colleagues will blame him for it.

I said before that we live in society in order to be assured of a greater opportunity for comfort and well-being, and I must add that the government which society has chosen is in a sense a board of directors which manages common funds and which should govern from above as a sovereign and supreme adjudicator, with complete impartiality, and only in the interest of the common good and of justice.

In 1971, the members of our society produced through their work about $95 billion worth of products, but because of the modernization of our means of production and of our association, the buying power distributed between the members of society during this production cycle is lower than the volume of production, which shows that there are surpluses.

The board of directors—i.e., the government—should therefore distribute this surplus equitably by issuing new funds—that is, by increasing the volume of buying power in the same proportion and at the same rate as Canadians increase production—in order to ensure a satisfactory economic life for Canada.

Society is a type of federalism within which an economic system is established. Ours is a capitalist system which is not bad in itself, but has been distorted. Its structure, though, is sound. However, order is violated when capital always receives the largest reward and the people are but a means of enhancing still more the money capital with no regard for the rights of human capital, of human dignity or of the social nature of economic activity, or even of social justice and common good.

To be true to ourselves and just towards others, Parliament has the duty to recognize that in order to effectively participate in this capitalist system, everyone should necessarily enjoy a basic capital, that is a capital related to his individual and family responsibilities, otherwise we contribute to a greater distortion of the capitalist system.

This system is in need of reform and it will be reformed by men of order with and for us, or else without and against us.

If accepted, the economic and social security systems proposed by the Social Credit party of Canada would already amount to a most worthy reform since Canadian families would receive a supplementary capital enabling them to share in Canada's plenty.

We have already shown that due to the increase of the cost of living, it has become necessary to increase to $5,000 the tax exemption for a married couple plus $500 for each child, and to $2,500 for a single taxpayer.

We have also shown that it would be possible to give family allowances of $250 a year for children 17 years of age or less and to make available an initial capital of $1,200 to those 18 and over.

Since participation in our capitalist system requires capital and most younger people do not have any besides whatever money they can save on their salary and since it is presently impossible for a great many to find a job, there is no more efficient means than the one we propose. And they can double, triple and produce even more with that capital which is practically a minimum, and the whole country will benefit from it.

This formula would accomplish the opposite of what welfare and unemployment insurance do, both of which force recipients to remain inactive and unproductive.

Achieving this plan will require money and in order not to strip those who are working and paying taxes, there is only one way: our sovereign government should regain the right to cash in on our credit by setting up a national credit board which would guide the Bank of Canada. This way we would have a truly social credit instead of a debt credit as is the case now.

High finance servants sometimes retort that if that were possible, it would have been done in other countries. Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out a fact that happened in the United States a little more than a 100 years ago, under president Abraham Lincoln.

International finance at that time had taken possession of America as well as Europe, keeping constant watch over its positions. One man dared one day insult it. He had to pay with his life. It was, I believe, the greatest president of the United States.

He was the son of a settler and never had the chance to go to school. But having learned to read from his mother and having studied law at night, after his hard day in the woods or in the fields, Lincoln finally became president of the United States at a critical time when the North and the South were at war.

Gifted with a staunch common sense and led by an unequalled rectitude of mind, Lincoln considered that if private banks make money and have people accept it, while passing it as debts, a sovereign government could make it as well and give it at least the same flexibility. So he asked the Treasury Secretary Chase to float successively three issues totalling $450 million in 1862-1863.

In 1938, after a legal fight between financial powers and the government, $346 were still in circulation, and had the same value as bank money.

Better still, contrary to the bankers' debt money, Lincoln's "greenbacks" did not saddle the United States public debt with one single dollar.

Had this issue come through the ordinary channel of banks, it would have increased the United States public debt from 1863 to 1938 by $10 billion, including compound interest. Were all their money issued by the government in that way, the United States would have no public debt.

The same can be said about Canada. The very existence of a public debt is the evidence of a defective system, of the money being corrupt right from the beginning.

This is why we are clamouring for a monetary reform while it is still time. I am sure that our reform proposals in this field would lead to a restoration of our social economic system and put an end to the jurisdiction conflict in fiscal matters between the federal government and the provinces. And more time could be devoted to other sectors of administration, in the best interests of all Canadians.

[English]

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, there are serious discrepancies between the bill presently before us and the bill on the same topic introduced in the last session. That, I think, was Bill C-264, and it died when the session ended. In that bill, the government committed itself to increasing the benefits on May 1, 1972. Every week from the moment that bill was introduced in September of last year, until the end of the session, members of the House asked the government to bring that legislation forward. I am thinking particularly of my colleague from Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall) in this regard. On behalf of our party, he put forward a number of suggestions to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) that this bill be brought forward so that parliament could deal with it, since there was a general disposition in the House to pass it. Certainly, every member of this House was in favour of that legislation. Why the government did not proceed with the bill remains one of the great mysteries of this parliament.

[Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse).]

The government has introduced a similar legislative proposal designated as Bill C-170 in the present session. There are a number of departures from provisions contained in the old bill, of which the most serious is the one to which I am about to allude. Under the bill now before the House, the government has discretionary power as to when the provisions of the bill regarding the payment of the new benefits will be implemented. Frankly, I am not happy about this, because I do not trust the government. I have already said that I do not see why provisions such as those this bill contains could not now be in force. The government has no legitimate excuse for not bringing them forward. There is no reason why families in Canada, especially the lower income families, should not now be enjoying the benefits of this bill. Consequently, I fail to understand why the government has refused to commit itself to a target date for implementation, as it did in the bill introduced in the previous session.

The government wants to leave the door open, so that proclamation of this legislation, once it has been passed by parliament, can be kept in abeyance until the election is called. Then, payments could be made to families in Canada a few days before the next federal election. I consider that to be the real motive behind that particular change in the bill, and it is regrettable. I feel that the needed benefits under this legislation should now be going to families in Canada, many of which desperately need these increased benefits.

In September, 1958, the Economic Council of Canada reported:

> Poverty in Canada is real. Its numbers are not in the thousands, but the millions. There is more of it than our society can tolerate, more than our economy can afford, and far more than existing measures and efforts can cope with.

I have just read an excerpt from the Economic Council's report on poverty, published in 1968. Obviously, the poverty problem was too large and, indeed, too painful to ignore. On May 21, 1968, in Stratford, Ontario, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) promised during the election campaign that new financial plans he would make would be directed at the poor. It is interesting to note that, as a first step in fulfilling this promise, the government directed the Deputy Minister of National Health and Welfare to undertake a review of existing social policies. His report was accompanied by a series of recommendations, but unfortunately that report was never made public.

By November 30, 1970, two and a half years after the election, the government introduced a white paper on income security. It contained three main proposals, the first of which recommended a doubling of family allowances for all families with incomes of less than $4,500. Those with incomes between $4,500 and $10,000 would receive allowances on a sliding scale. Families with incomes over $10,000 would receive nothing.

On the basis of Bill C-264 introduced in the previous session, that being a bill similar to Bill C-170, I sent out a circular to constituents of mine living in the rural parts of my district. I asked them to tell me by return mail the number of children they had and the size of their existing family allowance cheques. I said I would calculate for them, on the basis of the bill then before us, how much they could each expect to receive in new benefits if and when parliament passed that legislation. About 90 per cent of the people who responded to my survey qualified for maximum benefits, because their income level kept them below the requirements set out in the bill. Of the 10 per cent who could not expect to receive maximum benefits, payments, in the majority of cases, would be cut by only $3 or $5; that is, if you were over the income ceiling, benefits would be reduced by 33 cents for each $100 of income over that ceiling. Thus, since the incomes of those people perhaps were $1,000 or $2,000 over the income ceiling, benefits would be reduced by, say, between $3 and $5 per month.

However, Mr. Speaker, the point is that only a handful of people were to be cut off completely because their incomes were so high. A very small percentage, as I say, were to be cut off completely because their income level was so high that they could not expect to receive benefits. This group formed a very, very small percentage of the whole. I admit that Newfoundland is probably unique in this respect. We have large families. Statistically, I think, the largest families in the country are to be found in Newfoundland. Probably, the percentage of our population under 16 years of age is the largest in the country. I think one can include Quebec in these figures, although I am not sure. So, most families with large numbers of children could expect to benefit from this legislation and receive substantially increased payments. Also, Mr. Speaker, the increased payments would represent a substantial supplemental source of income for many of these people. Many of these families, largely because of their size and often because the breadwinner has been unemployed, unfortunately have had to depend on welfare payments made under the Canada Assistance Plan. As I say, these increased benefits would represent to them an important supplemental source of income. For them, Mr. Speaker, this legislation is an absolute necessity.

Although there have been some improvements in legislative proposals, the government seems to have dragged its feet on major recommendations. In replying to the white paper, the National Council on Welfare said that the government still has not shown a social philosophy which is directed towards ending poverty in Canada. I submit that comment for the consideration of the minister, in order that the government can develop that philosophy, can develop an over-all plan to do something about the serious matter of poverty in this country.

Although the Economic Council of Canada issued its report on poverty almost four years ago, the family income security plan which was drafted late in 1970 and was to revise the Family Allowances Act, is still being changed at this late date. I do not doubt that by the time we get to the committee stage with this bill, there will be further changes in the form of government amendments. That seems to be the pattern this government has followed with legislation introduced in this House. No attempt has been made to sort out the problems that will develop under the family income security plan as a result of certain provisions of the Canada Assistance plan. I am not at all satisfied with the minister's references to this aspect. They were far too limited, bearing in mind the scope of the problems that could develop.

Under the Canada Assistance Plan, and the minister knows this, the provinces are entitled to lower their rates of welfare assistance to families. They can lower these rates in proportion to the higher family allowance payments that will be made under this program. There is a great danger of that happening. The minister has not been able to satisfy the House that the provinces will not indeed be tempted to do just that.

It is rather interesting to note that the Canada Assistance Plan, which is one of the main social programs of the government, has been the subject of study for some considerable time. The provinces have made a number of representations to the government at federal-provincial conferences. Indeed, a number of representations have been made to the government in this House, asking for changes in the Canada Assistance Plan. For some strange reason, the government seems loathe to do so. One can only conclude that the government lacks an over-all social philosophy, an over-all sense of direction as to exactly where we are going with regard to the problem of poverty which we have in this land of plenty.

According to the Economic Council of Canada, there are five million Canadians whom they have designated as living below the poverty line. In this regard, it is rather interesting to note that large families constitute the majority of the poor in this country. Of those who are designated as poor, 23.3 per cent have families with four or more children under 16 years of age. That group represents by far the largest portion of those who qualify as being poor under the definition of the Economic Council of Canada in the province of Newfoundland.

Another aspect that concerns me, and this was alluded to by my colleague, the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard), is the eroding effect of inflation on the social welfare payments. People on fixed incomes, people who depend to a disproportionate extent on family allowances and that kind of social assistance as a very important part of their income, suffer most from the erosion of the dollar by inflation. These are the people who really have to suffer from the consequences of inflation. It is interesting to note that since the initial dollar amounts for family allowances were set in 1945, when the average weekly wage in Canada was about $32.50, the average weekly industrial wage has increased more than four times that level. In 1970, the average weekly wage in Canada was $132.72. However, in contrast to this more than 300 per cent increase, the average family allowance per child has only gone up by 15 per cent since 1945.

Therefore, simply to restore the original relative relationship of family allowances to wages, the proposed maximum FISP payments should be even larger than the $180 a year now proposed for ages 0-11 and the $240 a year proposed for ages 12-17. Rather, it appears that the maximum annual FISP amounts needed to restore the shrinkage over the years in the relative size of these baby bonus payments would be at least $257 and $334. In each case, the proposed FISP maximum payment amounts are less than 75 per cent of these updated amounts. As a result, far from representing an advance and breaking new ground, the Family Income Security Plan will merely restore part of what has been lost because of inflation and even then, because of the selectivity in the scheme that will cut off families in higher income brackets, only some will be able to regain the lost ground.

There is another way of viewing the erosion of the family allowance dollar since the 1945 inception of the plan, and that is to look at the effect of inflation on the family allowance dollar from that date. Between July, 1945 and September, 1971, when Bill C-264 was introduced into the House of Commons, the Consumer Price Index had more than doubled, reaching 230.7. If the amount of the baby bonus cheques had kept pace with this rise, the payment for a child, for example age 11, would have risen from $7 a month in July 1945 to $16.15 a month in September, 1971. Instead, a child aged 11 will be receiving, if and when Bill C-170 in its present form and with the same payment schedule is finally passed, a maximum of $15 a month, and most children aged 11 will be receiving much less or nothing at all.

I would like to get back to the relationship of this bill to the Canada Assistance Plan. I do not think enough has been said about that. The Canada Assistance Plan contains provisions that, unless remedial action is taken before FISP is enacted, could undermine completely the objective of the bill before the House. The only way we can be reassured in this regard is for the minister to undertake to negotiate with the provinces to obtain an agreement with them that there will be no reduction in welfare assistance. The problem in a nutshell, as I already said, is that under the Canada Assistance Plan, the provinces are entitled to lower their rates of welfare assistance to families in proportion to the higher family allowance payments these families will be receiving under this proposed legislation. There is nothing in the present plan to stop them from doing that.

Under the present Canada Assistance Plan, many provinces find it an increasing burden to meet their commitments. In my own province of Newfoundland, the 50 per cent portion of welfare payments which the province must pay represents a very disproportionate part of our budget. My province finds it very difficult to continue to assume this burden. We must bear in mind that we have the highest rate of unemployment in the country. This is a direct consequence of the federal government's failure to implement proper policies to combat inflation and to implement proper policies to combat regional disparity. It is because of the shortcomings of federal policies in this regard that Newfoundland has a higher rate of unemployment than any other province in Canada and, consequently, we have a much larger proportion of our population on welfare than any other province.

Under Section 2(b)(iii) of the Canada Assistance Plan, there is a provision that the provinces, in determining the degree of need and arrangements for social assistance to applicants for welfare, shall take into account all income maintenance payments through unemployment insurance, old age pension security, Canada Pension Plan and Guaranteed Income Supplement schemes. However, it is optional for the provinces to take into account family allowance and other schemes; this is a decision for each individual province to make. Because of the exceptionally high welfare payments that many provinces are forced to make because of unprecedented high unemployment, we wonder how many provinces will be tempted to take advantage of that provision which exists in the Canada Assistance Plan. Apparently none of the provinces now include family allowance payments in calculating income for purposes of assistance. However, it is possible and, indeed, highly probable, that after the family income security plan becomes law, and higher benefits are paid to larger families, several of the provinces will do just that: they will include family income security payments as part of a welfare applicant's income and will reduce social assistance payments correspondingly. This is especially likely to happen in the case of the poorer provinces.

Not only does the new family income security plan fail, in my opinion, to close the gap between the buying power of the allowance in 1945 as compared with the present buying power of the family allowance cheque, but in future the gap may become even greater in the absence from the plan of an automatic escalation clause in accordance with which payments would increase as inflation takes effect in the future. Although the present bill, unlike its predecessor, contains a clause providing for an increase in benefit levels and payments as the cost of living increases, the procedure is not automatic. I believe it should be. After all, we do not know who will be minister when the present minister leaves office.

A matter of this kind should not be left to the discretion of any minister. After all, regardless of the extent to which these men may be socially committed or how conscious they may be of the need, they will still have to persuade their colleagues in the cabinet of the necessity for granting increases. I feel, therefore, that the bill should contain a clause making the escalations mandatory. The lack of an automatic escalator clause in the present legislation means that neither benefit levels nor benefit payments take into account the eroding effect which inflation will exert in the future. Only a few days ago the Chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission stated that inflation was still a very serious problem. And inflation will continue to be a serious problem. Consequently, we feel it is unforgivable on the part of the government to fail to take this fact of life into account when drafting legislation designed to end poverty and make it easier for families on low incomes to live.

Since 1961, personal income per capita has almost doubled, rising from $1,613 to $3,092 a year. This does not mean that fewer people are living in poverty. Inflation has considerably eroded the buying power of the dollar in the last ten years. Though personal incomes have risen, cut-off lines for both maximum and partial family income benefit payments are stationary. If personal incomes double again in the course of the next ten years, increasing numbers of people will find themselves disqualified in respect of FISP payments, their incomes having risen above the stationary cut-off lines. Yet many of these people may still be defined by Statistics Canada or the Economic Council of Canada as living below the poverty line.

I do not object to the ending of the universality aspect of the plan. Until Canada reaches the stage at which we are prepared to co-ordinate all the social welfare activities of our various governments in the field of family allowances, old age pensions, blind persons pensions, veterans pensions and so on, and put some order into the chaos which presently exists by agreeing to some kind of guaranteed income arrangement, or negative income tax, if that is more acceptable, I have no quarrel with the government's proposal to end the universal application of family allowance payments. I say this because there are families in this country which do not need these family allowance payments, while there are other families who desperately need an improvement in their position, and I have in mind the majority of the poorer families.

It is interesting to note that two of the ten provinces already operate their own supplemental family allowance programs. I presume that negotiations have taken place in this connection between the federal government and the government of Quebec. I believe the minister referred to this. But I wonder whether discussions have taken place with the government of Newfoundland with respect to the supplemental program operated by that province. It is understandable, and in many instances necessary, that provinces should supplement federal social welfare programs, thereby exercising their constitutional option in this field. Since 1966, Newfoundland has provided a benefit amounting to $15 per year per child attending schools other than trade schools or universities. In 1967, the Quebec government also established a provincial program to supplement family allowances in respect of all children below the age of 16.

In conclusion, I trust that when he replies to questions during the clause by clause study of the bill at the committee stage the minister will reassure us on these points. I trust he will tell us, for example, that he has received commitments from the provinces that they will not exercise their option under the Canada Assistance Plan to reduce welfare payments proportionate to the increase which may be provided under this program. I hope he will be able to tell us, also, that the plan will not interfere with existing provincial programs such as those in effect in Newfoundland and Quebec, or with programs which may be contemplated by other provinces. Finally, I hope that the minister, who I believe to be personally committed to this principle, will be able to tell us in general terms when we may expect to see all the social welfare programs in Canada co-ordinated to the point at which we shall be able to take that final step which I believe to be so necessary, that is, to bring in some form of guaranteed income. In my opinion, this is the only way in which we can end poverty in this country.

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, we cannot vote against this legislation, but I must say we shall not vote for it with the degree of enthusiasm we should like to show in connection with a program which purports to provide an increased measure of family security for children in this country.

It is a little like your feeling toward a leaky umbrella in a heavy rainstorm. You have to use it because it is the only protection available, but you sure wish you had an umbrella without holes, one which would really do the job.

Mr. Alexander: A great statement. I will remember that.

Mrs. MacInnis: In our view this is a very shabby substitute for an adequate system of social security, and before I finish I hope to explore a few of the holes through which I believe the rain is bound to enter.

• (1550)

The hon. member who preceded me, the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), said that he did not object to the doing away with the universality feature, because until such time as we could have a co-ordinated guaranteed income system we would probably have to put up with the selectivity system. I would point out to him that this bill is a retreat from the principle of universality that we have been moving toward over the years. It is a retreat from the concept of a Canadianism that could stretch from coast to coast and embrace every citizen, without regard to race, class, place or creed. Under this concept of universality, which up to a certain point in Canadian history we had been achieving, people pay taxes according to ability to pay. This is measured by their income. Universal benefits they receive without distinction. These benefits are then taxed back according to ability to pay of the recipient, as I say, measured by their income. It is simple, it is uncomplicated, it is fair and it works.

I remember that the old age pension legislation began in a restrictive way. Originally, the pension was $20 a month payable at age 70, and there was a means test. This test is now politely dignified by use of the term "selectivity". Over the years pensions were made universal, and this was finally achieved in 1951. Indeed, this universality was gradually broadened, as we know, to include people within a lower age bracket, until finally those who were 65 received the pension. Then began the restrictions which I will come to in a moment.

What this universal pension meant in terms of freedom, independence and human dignity was wonderful to behold. Prior to the universal old age pension, prior to even the partial pension, our elderly people during the years which preceded the great depression were forced to go to court to prove their children were not able to support them before they were given any public funds at all. Many of our elderly people were mortified at doing this. They were ashamed and hurt that they had to take their children to court and rob those children's families in order to get funds so they could receive support, if the court so ordered.

Finally, as a civilized country, we got to the stage of saying that this must not be; that the people who had built this country had a right to be independent, free, to have their dignity preserved and protected by a pension of their own. Then, later on we introduced family allowances. We went to the other end of the age scale and said that young children have a right to be independent and to be helped financially in the same way; that their parents have the right to bring them up properly and preserve their health, wellbeing and dignity. Thus, we instituted the family allowance program, children's allowances, on a universal basis.

Over the years there has been practically no case of cheating or dishonesty. I know this is a fact, because each year we question the officials before the health and welfare committee and this is what they tell us. While this method of universal family allowances provided a measure of security for our children, it also provided for their mothers a recognition of the value of the service they gave. I shall come back to that a little later.

It now seems that this government is determined to turn universal legislation into class legislation. I know the government dignifies it with the term "selectivity", but selectivity requires a means test. It means that people will be degraded and demeaned, that they will be marked with a stigma just as horrible as the stigma that marks those who have to live in the high rise ghettos built for people on low incomes, ghettos in which it is so terrible for families to live. The government uses honeyed words to disguise the sharp sting of means test legislation.

Mr. Munro: It is not a means test, it is an income test.

Mrs. MacInnis: This is means test legislation and no amount of beautiful English prose will ever disguise that fact from those of us who know what the universal application of legislation really means. Selectivity, means test—

Mr. Munro: It is an income test.

Mrs. MacInnis: Let me give the minister another term. It is discrimination in the award of benefits to people. If you want real selectivity, Mr. Speaker, let me tell you what kind of selectivity would be quite acceptable to those of us who want a universal pension. It would be the kind of selectivity that the Canadian Council on Social Development has been talking about. I refer to tax selectivity, to the idea of taxing people, as I say, according to their means, their ability to pay in the first place. It is paying pensions on a universal basis and taxing them back again according to the income of the recipient.

Mr. Munro: Taking it all back.

Mrs. MacInnis: Yes, taking it all back when a person's income is that high.

Mr. Munro: Then, what is the difference?

Mrs. MacInnis: I will get to the difference in a minute, Mr. Minister. I am glad the minister has mentioned that point because I might have overlooked it, though I do not think I would. Nevertheless, I am grateful the minister is so considerate.

Tax selectivity was used during the first few years of the family allowance plan. The allowance was taxed back according to a person's ability to pay. My authority for this statement lies with people who at that time were bringing up families. I have never understood why, from the standpoint of sanity, efficiency and sound administration, it was ever found necessary to depart from that simple and just way of doing things. This is what the Canadian Council on Social Development meant when it referred to selectivity and universality. It meant universality of payment and selectivity of taxation.

Mr. Munro: What a farce!

Mrs. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, please do not let the minister tempt me. If he does I shall have to give him another wedge of quotations from the Canadian Council on Social Development, and I do not want to have to do that because I am sure he knows those quotations as well as I. If he did not he would not have paraphrased them the other day and thus avoided some rather awkward quotations. The minister knows the Canadian Council on Social Development wants universality of payment without discrimination, without a means test, and it wants selectivity of taxation according to a person's ability to pay.

I see the minister shaking his head so I cannot avoid quoting the council. They state:

> Family allowances should be universal, paid to all families with dependent children as a social right thus avoiding divisiveness among families and any element of stigma. The present program has this feature but FISP would eliminate it.

Let me tell the minister that I am not paraphrasing but quoting directly. The government will not accept this principle. If you would like to know why, Mr. Speaker, all you need do is take a look at the tax bill, Bill C-169, which we dealt with recently. It provided a few dollars for the poor, many for the wealthy and a bonanza for certain forms of corporate wealth—oil, gas, and similar companies. In other words, in the tax system there is anything but equality and fairness. We had the Carter Report which recommended that people be taxed strictly on the amount of income they have. This very elaborate and comprehensive report was shoved into a filing cabinet early in the game. This is obvious because Bill C-169 does not tax on the basis of ability to pay. Even before the introduction of Bill C-169, this government was taxing not on the ability to pay but heavily in respect of those people who could least afford to pay and who were the most defenseless. The government has now found it necessary to take the steps it has taken toward scrapping universality in social security schemes.

• (1600)

The government's first retreat from universality was in respect of old age pension legislation. It divided old age pensioners of this country into two categories, the poor and the destitute. The government said to the poor it would allow a 42 cent increase in pension bringing it up to $80 per month, and it would remain at this figure in perpetuity or for as long as the Liberal government was in power. I hope the two will not last for the same length of time. I doubt if they will.

The appeal to destroy federal universality made by the minister over and over again when he spoke the other day is made to the heavily burdened lower and middle income groups, particularly to the one-third middle income taxpayers who are taxed more heavily now than they should be. The middle income third is taxed more heavily because this government will not tax the upper third the way it should be taxed. Consequently, this middle income group is groaning under its heavy tax burden, but the minister says to them that one place the government can really save is in that area of federal universality in respect of family allowances. He suggests the poor people need these allowances and that is where the money should go. In this way the middle income group will not have to pay as much tax. I think this is the area from which comes the motivation of the government to destroy the universal feature of family allowances.

The minister introduced this bill as a strictly anti-poverty plan. I suggest that this government first impoverishes the people and then stigmatizes them. They will be impoverished because of the tax legislation and then they will be stigmatized. The minister says that the present family allowance figures of $72 to $120 are inadequate. No one quarrels with him in that regard. We all applauded his remarks that these amounts were insufficient to cover the annual cost of maintaining a child. The present figures are insufficient for this purpose as will be the prospective figures, and I will come to that later. The minister really overbid himself when he said that the primary goal of the present program is human development. I do not think this plan will do anything at all in the way of human development. It might help human survival, but that is all it will do. Forcing people with families to squeeze through the eye of the poverty needle is not the way to accomplish human development.

Let me deal with the faults of this legislation as I see them. First, this legislation divides people into categories of poor and indigent. This fault is similar to one in respect of old age pension legislation. It is mean, selective and discriminatory legislation, and we have heard how this works out in respect of those people near the borderline.

Second, it is extremely complex legislation and will be unworkable in many respects. It contains too many sliding scales and other special features which must be taken into account. The number of children, the size of benefits and the amount of income must be taken into account as well as what is and what is not income, and: there is a sliding scale in respect of payment. All these will make the legislation unworkable, as compared to the simple method of handing out universal benefits and taking them back through a nice, clean, computer technique. One can easily imagine the morass of bureaucracy this new measure will create.

Many people will be faced with these terrible and endless mathematical computations involving the number of children and other factors to which I have referred. Perhaps many of them will decide to have fewer children rather than be faced with these calculations. This family allowance legislation is so far removed from a method of adequately increasing benefits to big families that it may have the salutary effect of reducing the number of them. People may decide the calculations with which they are faced are too great in comparison with the benefits they may receive.

Third, just as in old age security pension legislation, there is no escalator clause in this bill. This is serious because the cost of living is going up relentlessly. Every forecast we see from the United States and from this country indicates that the cost of living will continue to move up in this fashion. How does this government justify the lack of an escalator clause in respect of security allowances with the lack of such a provision in this legislation?

Fourth, we must also consider the administrative cost of this program. The hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard) estimated that this measure would require administratively 1,500 new public servants and would cost in the neighbourhood of $12 million per year. I heard no denial from the minister who was here in the House when that statement was made. Nor did I hear a denial when the member said he calculated that under this type of program a recipient would receive about 9 cents of every dollar put aside for benefits. Great administrative armies are wonderful from the point of view of those armies, but they are pretty awful for the civilian population dependent upon these activities. This increased administrative cost will open the way for more red tape such as we have experienced in respect of other recent programs.

Fifth, let me refer to the impact of this legislation on those one million mothers who will not receive family allowances. Some 30.1 per cent of our mothers will be above the allowable level for the purpose of family allowance benefits. One might suggest they do not need these allowances. Let me point out that for many years all mothers in this country have been accustomed to these allowances. Many of them are in the low income groups and have had to use these allowances for urgent things such as food, clothing and rent. A great many mothers in the low and middle income groups have, by sacrifice, set aside the whole or a part of the family allowance cheque to pay for the educating of their children. Many women higher up on the income scale have set aside every family allowance cheque for the purpose of educating their children. For far too many women of either the high or low income group, the family allowance cheque has been the only source of ready cash which they could call their own.

This government has, through a very shortsighted, penny-pinching piece of legislation, swept these benefits from not only families in this country but from millions of mothers who have been setting aside these allowance cheques for various worthy purposes. This government has managed to alienate a good many sections of the population by its policy over the last few years, namely, the wheat farmers in the west, the fishermen down in the Maritimes, and quite a number of other people. I did not know that the government was quite prepared to adopt such a measure cutting off a million mothers across this country, but evidently that is what they are doing.

In case you might say that I am just making a plea for the one million mothers who are in the higher income brackets, let me say that I will also urge you to look at the low-income mother who has to work outside her home, either because she is the single support of her family or because her husband does not earn enough money by himself to be able to provide for that family. Let us consider a mother getting $4,500 or a little more which qualifies her for family allowance. In order to go out to work she must hire babysitters. At $15 a week, which is certainly what she will have to pay to get most babysitters, she will be paying $780 a year. The most she can possibly get in family allowance for a child under 12 is $180 a year. What is this measure doing for the working woman who must work outside the home and hire babysitting services?

I am pointing this out to indicate that this measure is no great bonanza. By penalizing one million mothers in the upper income bracket in order to be able to get enough money for the other children, the primary goal of human development will not be achieved. That may be the goal, but the minister will shoot so wide off the mark that he will forget where the target was. The minister may say that under Bill C-169 there is some provision for women who may get only partial family allowances for their children, but I want to point out that under the child care allowance provisions many women will be excluded from obtaining the deduction. I know that a woman in the $4,500 bracket who pays less than $500 in income tax does not qualify for a child care allowance deduction. When I was in Halifax about ten days ago a man with a family on a very low subsistence wage told me that he does not qualify for the $500 child care allowance deduction because he does not have enough income. So no one can tell me that the child care provisions in the Income Tax Act will partially make up to those families who do not receive the whole family allowance.

Let us consider a woman who is doing babysitting. Suppose she is married and suppose she earns $800 a year by babysitting. She must now declare her earnings and her husband must deduct her earnings from his exemption of $1,350 a year. On an average income that means that the babysitter's family unit will lose at least $137.50 cash on the husband's income tax return. So, the sitter assumes constant care and responsibility for a child for approximately 2400 working hours a year and earns, after her husband's taxes are deducted, only $600 instead of $800. Therefore, she receives exactly 24 cents an hour for her work. So, please do not tell me that the child care provisions will make up to those families who are unable to qualify for the family allowance.

I think this is a pretty poor deal all around. It is a hodgepodge, it is a bureaucratic jungle, it is a tangle of red tape, compared with what could be done if only this government would look at the economics of taxing people according to the amount of income they have, giving them universal, non-discriminatory family allowances and then taxing their income to the extent of taking back the whole family allowance and more if they do not need it.

The minister asks what the difference is. There may not be any difference to the minister, but let me tell him that there is a world of difference to the people who are on the receiving end because they would know that they are getting a non-discriminatory, fair amount and that they are paying for it. What they should pay is what their income indicates they must pay, and nothing more. We would not be going in for these unnecessary civil servants, the unnecessary paper work, the unnecessary computation and calculation and all the other things which only result in disguising the truth of the matter which is that this government is using measures of taxation which shield the wealthy. Then, they try to sell the poorer people on a scheme which does not protect them in anything like the measure to which they are entitled and which the wealth of this country, properly taxed, could give them.

In the Speech from the Throne which opened this session of parliament on February 17, the government included the following sentence:

> In a period dominated by bigness, in an increasingly impersonal social system, one of the major challenges facing government is to remove the impression of isolation which so often surrounds men and women, depriving them of their sense of worth, of accomplishment, of fulfilment, and removing from them their identity as individuals.

In thinking of those one million Canadian mothers who will be excluded and those millions of mothers on very low income who are forced to go out to work and to hire babysitters, which costs so much more than the family allowance will give them, one is compelled to wonder why this government was finally driven to take this step of alienating all these women and at the same time destroying the universal character of family allowances. I hope that when this measure goes into committee and when we have a chance to look at it closely clause by clause, the minister may yet see what he is doing to the fabric of Canadian life; how this measure will downgrade and give lower priority to the job of homemaking and motherhood which we have been trying to raise in the eyes of the Canadian people. For years a small badge of status has been accorded to women in this country for bringing up their families, and a certain amount of help has been given them through family allowances. This has meant a great deal to women in all groups and in all income classes across this country. Let me beg the minister not to destroy the unity and good will of those mothers, but to use the opportunity and the second chance that he will get in the committee to make yet another modification in the family allowance legislation to bring it into line with the kind of family allowance legislation that is wanted by the Canadian Labour Congress, the National Council of Welfare, the Canadian Council on Social Development, and all the fathers and mothers across the country. Let us make this our greatest effort and experience in human growth and development.

• (1620)

Mr. Raymond Rock (Lachine): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words about Bill C-170. May I first say I have always believed that any effort made to raise the income of the lower income group should be supported. I have also always believed that, so far as income is concerned, the goal of the individual is to reach higher. I have also believed that when increasing the income of the lower income group we should not do so by forcing a reduction in the income of those in the higher income group. I do not believe in a system where the have-nots take away from the haves until all are have-nots.

There are two areas of concern in Bill C-170. The first is the lack of an automatic cost of living escalator clause. The discretionary cost of living clause provided in the bill is inadequate, and inferior to an automatic escalator clause because it does not take into account the automatic erosion effect that inflation will have in the future. Inflation has always meant steady erosion in the buying power of the family allowance dollar and the pension dollar.

My second concern is the sliding scale by which the cut-off point is established at over $10,000. This calculation includes the husband's and wife's gross income, no matter what their expenses total. Working wives welcomed the latest tax reform legislation which provided compensation through deductions for day-care costs for their children. The new Unemployment Insurance Act provides for maternity benefits to be paid to women while they are away from work having their children. These two reforms provided an incentive to women to remain on the job.

FISP takes a negative approach by penalizing working wives since the cut-off levels are based on gross family income. If a wife decides to work in order to supplement her husband's salary and help meet payments on their home, furniture, car, etc., it is more than likely that she will push the total family income above the cut-off level and forfeit part or all of her family allowance. Cut-off levels should be based on net income after deductions rather than on gross income, and the number of children in the family. I, personally, know people in the over $10,000 a year bracket who, because of their position, own a home and a car, and who must meet heavy mortgage payments and municipal taxes. After all their deductions and monthly payments, they are left in poverty so far as food and clothing are concerned.

What about a family with three to six or more children whose gross income is a little over $10,000? Surely these matters should be taken into consideration. The cut-off point should depend on how many people in a family have to work to earn the gross income. If a man is making $6,300, his wife makes over $3,800, and they have three children, they will lose an amount of $406 a year. This is actually a loss of income. It is a penalty. A couple with six children will lose $800 of income from both the federal and provincial governments. It is a penalty for those who try to reach a higher standard.

[Translation]

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, we have before us a bill whose principle is good. It is imperative to talk about increasing family allowances. Such an objective should have been dealt with quite sooner. Legislation providing for the payment of benefits in respect of children, Mr. Speaker, is evidently fine in principle.

I must however point out, as did other hon. members, its deficiencies: First, it is not sufficient enough since—and it must be admitted—benefits for children are increased to $15 and $20. This would add a bit to the extremely low amounts which families have been entitled to for many years, but it stills falls far short. There could be a comparison, for instance, with what a welfare service awards for the care of fosterchild.

Mr. Speaker, under the present welfare system in Quebec, approximately $40 to $50 per month are allocated for the care of a child under 6 years of age. At age 16 and 17, the amount awarded is $95 to $100 per month. Such provincial welfare legislation makes it possible for a woman—taking care of three or four children, for instance, who are not hers—to receive welfare benefits which really assist in the care of those dependent children.

But the defect in the system, and the proof of inadequacy of amounts granted under Bill C-170, is that families are faced with the following dilemma: a mother of three or four children whose income is inadequate, whether she is a widow or separated or her husband has disappeared for some reason or other, will receive from the welfare service only a pension of $150, $160, at the very most $200, which is already inadequate. She will receive family allowances of $15 or $20, as the case may be, under this bill. On the other hand, if this mother were callous enough to abandon her children, whoever would be entrusted with their care would receive $50, $60 and up to $100 per month per child.

Mr. Speaker, one thing is sure and certain: if the mother were allowed to keep her own children, with a guarantee of adequate payments, there would no longer be the problem of this considerable number of children who now have to be placed in so-called foster homes.

It is ridiculous. I assure you that many mothers come to us as representatives of the people, telling us of their problems, saying: I should like to arrange to get rid of my children. I shall arrange with my cousin, my sister-in-law, my in-laws, to have them care for my children.

However mother-love still exists, Mr. Speaker, and the mother wants to keep in touch with her children. However, when it becomes financially impossible she sometimes has to consider such drastic solutions as parting with them, or at least pretending to do so as sometimes it is possible to place the children with the grandmother or grandfather and thus still maintain contact with them. But in such cases, the welfare service will move heaven and earth to oppose such a plan.

If there were an adequate children's allowance plan, such problems would be eliminated automatically, since mothers, parents with children they are unable to maintain decently because of an inadequate income would receive adequate allowances. This is why I find the principle is a good one but the amounts involved are inadequate.

Second, when one looks at this bill, as the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis) put it so will, one finds it is all tangled up. I cannot get over how impossible it is to implement a bill such as this one without running continuously into problems begging description. One will understand that it is difficult to calculate income when because of the present economic instability the figures can change every week. One does not know exactly when a company will close down, thus creating unemployment. One does not know exactly when he will be a victim of the bad economic system, and even the position of those who presently have very adequate incomes is uncertain. Just imagine, Mr. Speaker, the kind of trouble that can flow from the implementation of a bill such as the one before us.

I think universality always has this extraordinary advantage of guaranteeing a certain form of justice to all people. It will be said that it costs more, that it would be better to give more to those who need it and not to give to those who do not need it. Yes, Mr. Speaker, but there is an easy way to turn the difficulty. For example, why not make the benefits taxable? This way if we make those benefits taxable those who have incomes of $15,000, $20,000, $25,000 or $50,000 would have to add as income the amount of the benefits received in respect of their children and thus they would be simply paying back to the government those amounts which they received. As these amounts would be reimbursed, we could then increase them adequately and give the amount which is really needed rather than, once more, a kind of pittance, a small gratification on the eve of an election.

I think this impossible control, due to such legislation, should make us think. The minister should propose radical amendments in order to make this bill far more acceptable, especially if a distinction is going to be made to the effect that above a given income level, you do not need family allowances any more.

By making a distinction like this one, Mr. Speaker, what do we encourage? Once again, we encourage laziness, to a certain extent. In fact, we already face the problem of a certain class of people on welfare who, out of habit, and because of a wrong concept of our social legislation, would rather not work, not use their energy, not serve society, because it is easier to just sit back with your arms folded and your feet up on a case of beer and wait for time to go by.

Mr. Speaker, everybody deplores this system which results in the fact that in some municipalities, 30, 40, 50, or even 60 per cent of the people are on welfare. This is just encouraging laziness. I am not saying that those people are to blame; the system is.

• (1630)

When the government brings in a bill providing that from a certain level of income, the taxpayer is not entitled to family allowances, it is penalizing a worker whose energy and talents are normally used to increase the productivity of the country. The hard-working people are penalized, because they are resourceful, because they work, because they succeed with the wholesome ambition of receiving an adequate income.

This is another reason why the selective aspect of that plan is unacceptable.

I think that disregarding that indescribable chaos and impossible control, the government was concerned about one thing only—and that is regrettable—namely, the fact that it could tell the people that, from then on, family allowances would be $15 for children up to 12, and $20 up to 18. It seems that the purpose was, once more, window dressing, that is an increase which doubles or triples family allowances. This will look good but, in fact, what major change does this bring? We are still wondering.

Finally, in the analysis that I tried to make about this legislation, Mr. Speaker, the fact remains that I am very reluctant to accept it because of the constitutional difficulties arising from it.

Mr. Speaker, obviously, we will not be against the fact that amounts of money will be made available to Canadian families, but this will not keep me from stressing the extreme shortcomings of this bill. Why? Because this bill deals with a matter which, by virtue of the constitution and even plain common sense, should be totally controlled by the provinces. Mr. Speaker, family allowances were not instituted because during the war Quebec had a very weak government, and thanks to some special acts, the federal government could take over various provincial prerogatives. It took advantage of the situation to gain a foothold in a field which does not belong to it.

And why does it not? I said a while ago that it is a question of plain common sense. And why? Because, in a country as vast as Canada, although basic difficulties may be the same, there may be as many ways of understanding them as there are regions.

It may be that in British Columbia people see social matters differently from the people in Quebec. That principle must be protected, Mr. Speaker. To my mind, we meddle again and increase constitutional difficulties every time we are asked to study a bill that trespasses on ground that should fall totally within provincial administration.

Recently we were informed about a so-called agreement between the federal government and the provincial government, based exclusively on correspondence between the two prime ministers. I wonder to what extent this might be the confirmation of the wishes of most Quebecers. However I wish to stress that this confirms an infringement that has already been made and which is extended by the application of this bill. That is in my opinion a very unfortunate situation.

They will say: That is once more a very particular opinion which does not reflect reality. But I would like to prove it by reading an editorial from the newspaper La Presse of Thursday, March 16, and I quote:

The former deputy minister for intergovernmental affairs in Quebec—

That is a man who has served under three different regimes in Quebec and who must know quite a bit about such things.

This is an agreement between the prime minister and a provincial premier and not between two governments. Here is what Mr. Morin has to say:

—if the "administrative compromise" proposed by Ottawa were accepted by Quebec and then sanctioned in constitutional legislation, the Province of Quebec would then formally recognize a right to which the federal government is not entitled in the field of allowances. Mr. Morin even voiced the opinion that mere agreement from the premier of Quebec to Ottawa's proposal would be sufficient, in the absence of constitutional legislation, to establish a precedent.

According to Mr. Morin, when all is said, there is more cause for concern than for celebration at the moment if the recent federal proposal is looked at closely. There is a danger that this proposal could annihilate all progress made by Quebec in the constitutional field and postpone for ever the basis of Quebec's claims, which is a true sharing of powers.

Mr. Speaker, this is what Quebec wants: an adequate and fair sharing of taxation powers. That is what Quebec wants. As for us, we advocate decentralization in that area so that each region of this country may be allowed to administer itself better.

How can the Minister of National Health and Welfare know here in Ottawa the particular problems of each province? If too much money is accumulated and if it is then necessary to infringe upon provincial jurisdiction to re-allocate the surplus, there is only one thing left to do: reduce taxes.

It is a mistake for the federal government to collect too many taxes, and because there is too much money, it is necessary to infringe upon provincial jurisdictions. This is a mistake and it is merely a matter of correcting it.

A short while ago, I was saying that it is very pleasing to exert a small control of sort over what closely affects individuals. That is why we won't drop what we have already taken. Family allowances and old age security pensions should be administered by provinces; otherwise, we do not seem very responsible.

• (1640)

That is why in analyzing this bill, I must describe clearly the situation. As for Canadian taxpayers, no matter where the money comes from, they know that it eventually comes from their purses and therefore, no present is being made to them. So, they are ready to take it, whether it comes from federal, provincial or municipal governments. They are aware that this money belongs to them. Therefore, they will take it.

Taxpayers, of course, either from Quebec, from Manitoba, or from British Columbia, will take this money particularly as it belongs to them.

When I deal with the constitutional point of view, Mr. Speaker, I do not mean that Quebecers would refuse allowances for their children, but that in terms of administration, a mistake has been made and the federal government should have simply granted provinces the necessary fiscal authority to enable them to take these matters into their own hands. Those provinces which refuse are free to do so, but when one realizes that Quebec is ahead of the federal government in this respect, and that the programs are all set up and ready to be implemented were it not for lack of money, then, Mr. Speaker, I think that this question has been given little consideration and that sooner or later, we will regret it since a consensus has emerged to some degree among all Quebecers on this subject; we want constitutional reforms and a real sharing of responsibilities irrespective of the party we represent.

I believe that the bill before us is sanctioning an abnormal situation; there is no reason why an earlier precedent should be maintained. I think that the reform will have to be undertaken sooner or later.

Mr. Speaker, I now conclude my remarks. To round up my statement, I suggest that Canadians, whatever their province of origin, do not regard this as a gift but simply as a redistribution, though inadequate, of money taken from them. Why? Because it does not emanate from where it should. For example, the Quebec government has already established through its Department of Social Affairs, a comprehensive program in the social field. Having established a well coordinated over-all system, it should have material prosperity in order to apply it. This is what is called decentralization, so that each one can provide better administration.

Mr. Speaker, again, if we had a basic financial and economic system governed by logic, common sense and respect for the individual, the human being, such problems would be inexistent. We submit that we should guarantee to each Canadian a minimum income allowing him to live decently. Then, we would no longer need that impossible control over the meager allowances being handed out to families.

[English]

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, last week when I was in my constituency, I was surprised to learn from a telephone call made to my office that the government had decided to re-introduce the family allowances bill, now known as Bill C-170. It was introduced on Friday for second reading. I wonder why. According to my information, the government was not to introduce it in until after the Easter recess. Some of my colleagues who spoke in this debate on Friday seemed to think that it was introduced because of the Newfoundland election. If that is so, Mr. Speaker, the government did a pretty poor job of getting the message across, because, apart from the one telephone call to my office, I did not hear from one Newfoundlander who was aware of the facts. I, therefore, think my colleagues were wrong in assuming that the bill was introduced at this time because of the Newfoundland election. I think the bill was held in abeyance as a political manoeuver, and it was introduced on Friday because a federal election is going to be called right after the Easter recess. I repeat, the bill has been kept in abeyance as a political manoeuver, and has been so treated ever since the white paper on income security was introduced.

• (1650)

When I returned on Saturday, it was obvious from reading the local papers that not much attention was given to the bill. I hope this bill will finally be passed because it will increase the benefits to Canadian children up to and including the age of 17 years. I have tried to be reasonable in making representations to the government. I feel that my criticisms have been reasonable, at least that is my opinion. Also, I do not think I have been reluctant in giving credit to the government when credit was due.

I welcome the reintroduction of the family income security bill. However, I am sure no one in this House will blame me if I am suspicious of the government's intentions this time and about how far we will get with it. Apart from any political motives, I feel very strongly that increases in benefits to children of low income families must be implemented as quickly as possible. I believe this is an important step to ensure the proper growth of our future Canadian citizens and thereby ensure a better Canada. Also, it will help in some measure to alleviate poverty in this country.

Apart from some weaknesses pointed out by my colleagues, this bill is vitally necessary because over the years all governments have failed to provide enough opportunities for Canadians or to provide for the steady development of our human resources over the years, especially our youth. This program is vital because we failed to foresee the needs of the sixties and seventies by providing a well-planned program which would contain incentives to all Canadians, especially those with initiative. In the past we have failed to provide the poverty stricken adults of today with a well-planned program for education, decent health services, recreational services and all those things that were necessary for the development of our youth of yesterday. That is why we have one quarter of our population living below the poverty line today. That is why we have reached the stage in our society where we must deal with crisis after crisis by adopting helter-skelter programs to relieve poverty, sickness, disability, under-nourishment and suffering of so many of our citizens.

The real tragedy has come about because of our failure to recognize our poverty-stricken Canadians as human beings. We have failed to recognize that we are dealing with people. The government is so blinded by technological progress and trying to get answers to the problem of poverty by computers and studies by experts who were never poor that it forgets it should be concerned about people, not punchcards and computers. That is why we have a poverty rate of 25 per cent. One Canadian in four is a member of a family unit with an income that is below the poverty line. That is why 89 per cent of low income families in Canada are headed by persons who have not completed high school. Almost half of these did not complete elementary school. The reason is that governments failed in the past to foresee the need for education.

As a result of the blindness which results from reliance on the advice of sociological experts, the government has pushed citizens out of rural Canada into the cities by false inducements. As a result of this, 55 per cent of the low income families now live in urban areas. There has been a complete lack of concern for humans as a result of our past failures. The Senate committee report on poverty points out that 27 per cent of all heads of low income families are 65 years of age or over. The reason for this is that governments in the past failed to give the senior citizens leadership, opportunity and the basic necessities for life when they were young.

I think it is worthwhile to look at the events leading up to the introduction of Bill C-170 to show the devious strategy of the government in using various social programs for political purposes. The Throne Speech of 1968, the year this government came into power, outlined what the government was going to do for the poor. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said that everyone in this country deserved equality of opportunity regardless of where he lived. He also said we must provide a decent livelihood for the poor of this country. The government then produced the famous white paper on income security. Without dealing with the dribbles given to the senior citizens and the war veterans, I want to deal with the section on family income security.

May I call it five o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

It being five o'clock, the House now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions and public bills.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall)—Manpower—Local Initiatives Program—Suggested ongoing program to assist people in isolated communities; the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Knight)—Trade—Display of Canadian agricultural products at Peking fair; the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald)—Youth—Opportunities for Youth—Request for other programs to alleviate unemployment.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

TRANSPORT

REQUEST FOR RESCINDING OF ORDER FOR DISCONTINUANCE OF RAIL PASSENGER SERVICE IN NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of rescinding Order No. R.2673 of July 3, 1968 of the Canadian Transport Commission which gave authority to Canadian National Railways to discontinue rail passenger service in Newfoundland.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is almost 23 years to the day since Newfoundland became a province of Canada. It was on March 31, 1949, that the terms of Union between Newfoundland and Canada were consummated. During the negotiations leading up to the terms of union, a number of services operated by the then government of Newfoundland were, as a consequence of confederation, to come under the jurisdiction of the government of Canada. Allowance was made for the transfer of these services and utilities.

Included in the transfer was the Newfoundland Railway which was built at the turn of the century by the people of Newfoundland, at great expense and hardship, to open up the country. At that time it was a fully integrated rail service providing freight and passenger service, albeit a narrow gauge service. Term 31 of the Terms of Union between Newfoundland and Canada accordingly made provision for the transfer of these services from the government of Newfoundland to the government of Canada. Term 31 reads as follows:

At the date of Union, or as soon thereafter as practicable, Canada will take over the following services and will as from the date of Union relieve the Province of Newfoundland of the public costs incurred in respect of each service taken over, namely,

It goes on to list the services, the first being the Newfoundland rail service.

• (1700)

On July 3, 1968, the Canadian Transport Commission by its order R.2673 gave authority to the CNR to discontinue rail passenger service in Newfoundland. Since the summer of 1969, Newfoundland has been without rail passenger service, the only province so deprived. As a result, our province is suffering the consequences of a most inadequate system of public transportation. There are those who would argue—I shall not fall into this trap—that a legal case can be made out for asserting that the maintenance of the Newfoundland rail service is a responsibility which the government of Canada assumed in 1949 under the terms of union. It could be said that according to a legal interpretation of term 31, and under the Order in Council which followed, whereby the government of Canada placed the Newfoundland rail service in the hands of the CNR for operation, the government of Canada had assumed an obligation under the constitution to continue operating this service—it was merely a formality for the government to ask its agent, Canadian National, to take on the responsibilities of actual operation.

Much has been said since that order was made on July 3, 1968 by Canadian Transport Commission. I think it bears repetition to say that this order was attained as a result of a series of events which can best be described as acts of collusion between the Canadian National, the Canadian Transport Commission, the Canadian government and the then government of Newfoundland. Canadian National deliberately set out to downgrade the service for whose maintenance they had assumed responsibility in 1949. I can only conclude this was done because the CN did not want to be bothered by having to order the special rolling stock required for a narrow gauge railway, in other words a railway which did not fit into its own system. In any event, they deliberately set out to downgrade the service to the point at which they could appear before the Transport Commission and make application for its discontinuance on the grounds that they were losing almost a million dollars a year. In actual fact, they were only able to show one year in which the operating loss amounted to $900,000. Even this was open to question because of the nature of the railways accounting practices, practices which, as is well known, are difficult to understand.

For example, the total cost of the operations of the stations and the support staff necessary to keep them operating is lumped in with the cost of operating the rail passenger service. In our view, 75 per cent of this cost should have been designated as being the responsibility of the freight service division. In other words, the rail passenger service accounted for only 25 per cent of the $900,000 deficit which the railway was able to show the Commission. At one time the then president of the CNR indicated there was a move on foot to change the railway's long-standing accounting practices. When officials of the company appear before the Transport Committee of this House I shall be interested to learn whether these practices have indeed been changed; they had not been changed up to last year.

Rail passenger service was replaced by a road cruiser service, which is a fancy name for a bus service. It is interesting to note that this bus service, notwithstanding the fact that it enjoys a monopoly in the province, is currently operating at an annual deficit amounting to almost half a million dollars. In my submission, this bus service is operating at a greater loss than the rail passenger service ever did. At best, the bus service is inadequate. There have been a total of 54 accidents to date, I believe. And there have been a number of unrecorded near-misses.

Another important factor to be considered is the considerable personal inconvenience suffered by the travelling public who are obliged to stand, in many cases without shelter, waiting for buses which, generally speaking, have difficulty in maintaining a schedule. Then, there is the added inconvenience of travelling, often for long distances, in buses specially designed for road conditions in Newfoundland—buses which are, in consequence, narrow to the point at which it is difficult for two people to sit abreast in the seats. Moreover, the service to bus passengers, once they are aboard, is inadequate. People are not properly looked after while en route. Anyone who has experienced the discomfort of travelling from one end of Newfoundland to the other in one of these buses knows whereof I speak. People are often deprived of a meal at meal stops because they have to depend on private entrepreneurs whose services are not geared to providing for a bus load of people at any given hour.

In short, the system is inadequate. This was dramatically brought home during the air traffic controllers strike. While that strike was in progress there was only one way of getting out of Newfoundland. That was by bus. People who were obliged to use that route found out for themselves what an uncomfortable route it was and how great has been their deprivation since the loss of the rail passenger service.

Perhaps at this point I can anticipate the question: why raise this matter again. Well, we have done so because we have now had three years experience with the buses; three years of frustration and discomfort, three years without rail passenger service. We raise it again, too, because of a recent decision by the Transport Commission. The railways applied to the Commission for permission to discontinue the operation of the rail passenger service between Montreal and the maritime provinces. The Commission ruled that the railways should not be permitted to discontinue service, notwithstanding the fact that using outdated and unorthodox accounting procedures they were able to show that the service was operating at an annual deficit of $12 million. As a result of that ruling the railways will now be able to enjoy an additional subsidy, under the Transport Commission's regulations, flowing from the new Transport Act, amounting to 80 per cent of the deficit.

• (1710)

In addition to that, the Canadian Transport Commission asked people to make submissions to the commission on the following points:

1. Routing, including possible combinations of service on CNR and CP Rail lines.

2. Frequency of service on the resulting route or routes, with possible variations in summer and winter schedules.

3. Train departure-arrival times.

4. Connecting services by rail, road, air and water.

5. Methods and costs of providing meals.

6. Methods and costs of providing sleeping car service.

7. Fare levels for coach services.

8. Improved reservation procedures to reduce the "no show" problem.

I ask, why make chalk of one and cheese of the other? Why not do the same in the case of the Newfoundland service, which was costing considerably less than $1 million a year? It has come to my attention that the roadbed in the province of Newfoundland in the last number of years has been allowed to deteriorate to the point where it is now hazardous, and indeed is not efficient enough for passenger traffic. It is rather interesting to note, Mr. Speaker, according to information passed to me by an employee of the railway, that just a few years ago, again as part of the move to downgrade the service before making application to the commission, the operations manager issued instructions that passenger trains were to wait on sidings and give priority to freight trains. This, of course, is unheard of in railway practices, yet it was the case in Newfoundland.

[Mr. McGrath.]

I could go on, Mr. Speaker. Canadian National employees in Newfoundland, who are as disturbed over this as I, have not been loath to come forward with information which we are prepared, indeed want, to document. In this respect my colleagues from Newfoundland and I have written the Canadian Transport Commission asking for permission to appear to argue our case for reconsideration of the decision in light of the decision made by the commission on February 25, 1972 relating to the maritimes passenger service. In our submission we state:

> We submit that the bus service provided by Canadian National as an alternative to the train service does not now, and probably will never, fulfil the needs of the travelling public. Service has been anything but adequate; even more alarming, service is less than safe—as statistics recording the number of accidents will attest.

The submission goes on:

> One of CN's own vice-presidents, J. A. McDonald, has said publicly that "anyone who has experienced the miseries of peak congestion on even the most modern 12-lane super highway will recognize that road transport is incapable of providing adequately for all the needs of the travelling public". In Newfoundland, we have no 12-lane super highway: it is a two-lane, and the miseries and agonies of travelling by bus along the nearly 600 miles can be documented at length.

In our submission of February 15, 1972 we asked for permission to appear before the commission, but so far we have not been favoured with a reply, apart from the regular cursory acknowledgement. We believe that the rail passenger service in Newfoundland must be restored and we feel a case can be made for its restoration.

The present policy of the ministry of transport, which is difficult to determine at times though I suppose we can only be guided by the various speeches and pronouncements of the minister, would seem to indicate that they have a cost recovery philosophy, though this philosophy has not been adopted in the decision regarding the maritimes service. The minister said on February 25, 1971 before the transport committee of this House:

> Where it is possible, it is still the objective of the ministry to provide services on a cost recovery basis to the maximum extent possible.

I submit that even on a cost recovery basis, which is the overriding philosophy of the ministry of transport, it can be argued that the train service is much more economic, aside from the fact that it is much safer and more convenient to operate in Newfoundland than is the bus service.

The minister is not entirely unmindful of the future of rail passenger transport, for in speaking in this House on the CN financing bill, as reported at page 811 of Hansard, he said:

> The evidence is growing that the future of rail passenger travel depends to a large extent on new technology. Experience in Canada and in the United States has shown that conventional rail travel cannot compete with other modes over long distances and through sparsely populated areas. This is why the Ministry of Transport and the CTC, at my direction, have stepped up their research in this important field . . . It is by no means inconceivable that out of this combination of research and testing will come ideas and new designs which will make wholly new and more rapid and comfortable means of rail travel possible in many parts of Canada, including Newfoundland.

The minister knows better than I that you do not need advanced technology to provide an efficient rail passenger service in Newfoundland. All you need is a recognition by the railways of the constitutional right of the government of Canada to provide a rail passenger service in Newfoundland. Some direction from the government of Canada to Canadian National Railways to maintain the roadbed, which has been allowed to deteriorate, and to cut down some of the curves, is required. If this were done, then according to the evidence I have it would be possible for a passenger train to cross Newfoundland just as quickly, and certainly a great deal more safely, than a bus can at the present time, even the CN bus.

So, Mr. Speaker, the matter is a very simple one. Unfortunately, most of the rolling stock has been sold abroad. However, perhaps that is a blessing in disguise anyway because it was old and outdated and should be renewed. If the decision is made to restore the rail passenger service, then obviously new rolling stock will be required. It has been proven that cars operating on the mainland road beds of standard gauge can be carried quite efficiently on the narrow gauge used in Newfoundland. But the roadbed must be properly maintained.

I could go on, as I say, Mr. Speaker, but a number of my colleagues would like to join me in this debate. They feel just as strongly as, and in some cases even more strongly than, I do about this question. Therefore, may I conclude by saying that at the present time one of the radio stations in Newfoundland is operating a network program that has sponsored a petition to be sent to the government of Canada for the restoration of rail passenger service in the province. I am referring to the program "Phone Forum" broadcast from St. John's over radion station VOCM. Within the short time of two weeks the moderator of the program, Mr. Ron Pumphrey, tells me that he has received 12,000 names and expects shortly to see the total reach 25,000 names. When he gets a sufficient number of names, it is his intention to come to Ottawa to present this petition to the government of Canada. I believe that the majority of the people in Newfoundland support our contention that the rail passenger service in Newfoundland should be restored.

Mr. Jerry Pringle (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, in rising to participate in this debate this afternoon I have no intention of trying in any way, shape or form to belittle the words of the previous speaker in respect of the discontinuance of railway passenger service in Newfoundland. As a member of the committee which conducted hearings on this matter, I travelled to Newfoundland to study the situation at first hand and I found it very interesting.

Like every member of this House, I come from a part of this country where the evolution of transportation is occurring. This evolution has been occurring literally for years. We have all heard of the golden spike and we all know about the stagecoaches which made their final trips and were abandoned to storage in warehouses. There is a time for change in all types of transportation and we must give this fact serious consideration. Decisions must be made as to the future of various transportation systems. I submit decisions are being made in various parts of Canada in respect of the abandonment of rail service with which I do not agree. If I may digress for a moment, I should like to refer to a dangerous situation in the Fraser Canyon where an attempt is being made to discontinue part of this service. This matter will have to be given serious thought.

In perusing the information and evidence brought before the committee by many people, I found one or two points of particular concern. How many of these statements were made in an emotional vein and how many were made with a desire to keep the Newfoundland railway because of the use being made of it? It seems to me that the people of Newfoundland actually discontinued using the railway quite some time before the Canadian National Railways asked for permission to eliminate this service.

The last full year of rail passenger operation in Newfoundland was 1968, during which the total number of revenue passengers carried was 77,791. In 1969, the new CN road cruiser service was innovated. I agree with my hon. friend that this is perhaps a too fancy name for what is in fact a bus service. I say this because I have used this bus service in Newfoundland. In 1969 this service was implemented and carried 137,169 passengers. This increased in 1970 to 152,000 and in 1971 to 169,600.

There is a great deal of emotion involved in the abandonment of any traditional service. We all know about the old country stores in various areas, and I am not using that as a comparison here but rather as an example of how people cling to traditions because of emotion.

Mr. McGrath: You have no right to make that judgment.

Mr. Pringle: Perhaps we might call this the Canadian emotional railway rather than the Canadian National Railways.

Mr. McGrath: You have no right to make that judgment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Perhaps we could have order in the House. An hon. member who has the floor should not be interrupted.

Mr. Pringle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) stated there was a campaign under way in Newfoundland and that people were signing petitions. The figures he stated were very impressive, but I wonder whether the people who have signed these petitions will guarantee that they will use this service.

Amongst those who are charged with operating the various transportation systems across the country, there exists the saying in respect of these systems that you use them or lose them. I have been involved with aviation, and I know that many of the people who have signed petitions for certain services were not the people who used those services. I have a petition in my file now that I could use as a case in point. The people who usually sign these petitions are those who want the other people to use the service.

I would be happy to support hon. members from Newfoundland in a request to the CNR to upgrade its road cruiser service. When the railway was constructed there was not a proper highway system. I would support hon. members in their effort to get better buses with better facilities, because I believe this would be more in line with the needs of Newfoundland. Newfoundland could make more use of the roads, both highway and secondary, if they were improved. I hope we can find sufficient moneys to make better roads available. This would improve the transportation services tremendously. Highways are very important to a transportation system which uses the vehicles available today. When considering priorities, I hope we will be more concerned about the construction of better highways and roads.

Let me make one point with reference to the suggestion that the Canadian government somehow failed to fulfil its obligation to Newfoundland because there was some guarantee the Newfoundland railway would continue forever and ever. That is not entirely true. Had the hon. member continued to read Term 31, he would have noted that the operative words are as follows:

—Therefore, His Excellency the Governor General in Council, on the recommendation of the Minister of Transport, is pleased to order that, effective April 1, 1949, the Newfoundland Railway, including rights-of-way, wharves, dry docks and other real property, rolling stock, equipment, ships and other personal property—the title to which is vested in His Majesty, be and they are hereby entrusted in respect of management and operation thereof to the Company on the terms in the Canadian National Railways Act expressly specified, namely, that such management and operation shall continue during the pleasure of the Governor in Council—

• (1730)

I should like to emphasize the last phrase, "shall continue during the pleasure of the governor in council". I have here a very interesting newspaper article which appeared in the Clarenville, Newfoundland, Packet. We are all members of parliament here, and because there is some indication that what I will read has a political tinge I would ask hon. members to take it into consideration. The article reads:

The editor of the Clarenville, Newfoundland, "Packet" says that there are five Newfoundlanders in Ottawa who are going to be pretty red-faced should the Progressive Conservative party win the next federal election.

The five are those remaining of the six Tories this province sent to represent us in Ottawa in the 1968 federal election. Their faces are going to be red because of their present insistence regarding the CN passenger trains in Newfoundland.

Of the five, I always considered John Lundrigan to be the one who could and would be the most positive in his submission to Parliament, but it seems now as though he's been influenced by his four colleagues to get in on the "Newfie Bullet" campaign.

I wonder why our MPs keep on flogging a dead horse.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The House is entitled to receive a submission from the hon. member, but it should be his submission and not that of some editor.

[Mr. Pringle.]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): The hon. member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Pringle) who is making a quotation should know the rule.

Mr. Pringle: I am quoting from a newspaper, Mr. Speaker, the name of which I gave. This is a very interesting statement although I admit that it may not be in keeping with the hon. member's view. It continues:

The trains are gone and good riddance. This statement should not be taken to mean that I agree with the decision of CN to terminate its rail passenger service in Newfoundland, but the decision has been made and we have not suffered too many ill effects. The roadcruiser system can provide a good service if it can ever get operating properly.

There is a great deal more, but I agree with the hon. member that it is a little too political so I will conclude at this point.

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to pay tribute to the mover of this motion, the very eloquent hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath). He and my colleagues from Newfoundland have been valiant and vigorous opponents of any diminution of transportation facilities in their province and his motion today is just a part of that continuing expression.

As a member from another province I want to lend my support to his advocacy. I come from a province which has also lost its rail passenger service. We do not even have service to the water's edge of the mainland. People who travel by train to P.E.I. now must derail at Amherst, Nova Scotia, and come the rest of the way by bus. If they have luggage that is heavier than they can take by hand, that is too bad. So we know some of the problems. The causeway approaches to the water's edge but not the railway. I think that the expression "use it or lose it" is not a very comprehensive analysis of the transportation situation in Canada. I am convinced that the plethora of abandonments of rail services in this country is an example of outrageous shortsightedness.

Also, I believe that the hon. member who moved this motion is correct, there is the juxtaposition of the developments: one is that the carrier diminishes the service in its quality, frequency and quantity, discourages the use of the common carrier by the citizens, by the potential patrons, and then when statistics build up to indicate that it does not have increasing use, that in fact it has decreasing use, it goes to the CTC and says, "Let us abandon it". This is exactly the problem. It is a built-in development toward extinction. I have here the latest report of the Canadian Transport Commission and it begins with a rationalization of the rail service. The rationalization of the rail service is full-fledged abandonment. On page 4 we read the following:

Up to the end of 1971 the total of such applications was 69—CNR 49, CP Rail 18, Nipissing Central (part of the Ontario Northland) one, Northern Alberta one—

During the year the CNR filed 23 additional applications for the discontinuance of passenger train services and, apart from a few mixed train operations, all of its passenger services now are covered by applications.

This is the situation which we face. Instead of confessing failure, instead of saying, "The service is not being sufficiently used; we will let the rails rust and then we will pull them up and find some other way of doing it," we should be realizing that the railways in this country do in fact have a future and, at the same time, the imaginative zeal which preceded the first railway age should be re-created and restored at the present time.

I read every day of rails being taken up and I predict that before many of us are dead they will be laying them again because in this mobile, fast moving era—and it will become more mobile and more rapid—the transportation of people and goods by rail is a great boon to our society. We know, Sir, that today we cannot build highways quickly enough. We know that cities all over this land, large, moderate and small, are having great problems with the automobile and with finding space. Many countries in the world, instead of discarding are upgrading their rail service and encouraging people to make use of it. This is the kind of opportunity which should have been given to the people of Newfoundland, to the people of PEI and to the people at any of the extremities of this country.

Another feature for which the railways were famous was that they put the worst equipment in the remote areas of the land. I remember when many years ago the great moguls of the CNR came to Charlottetown and displayed at the Charlottetown railway station a museum car. They were impressed because one of the distinguished ladies of PEI who is in the Senate seemed not to be very excited about this. One of the CNR officials said to her, "You don't seem to be terribly interested, Senator" and she said, "Why should I be excited? The twin of this car is standing over there ready to go to Murray Harbour at two o'clock."

Newfoundland went through the same operation. The railways downgrade the facilities and then wonder why people are not excited and do not in ever increasing numbers make use of the diminished facilities. I think the hon. member is quite right and I do not think any Newfoundland Conservative needs to be red-faced or embarrassed these days.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Macquarrie: I say that if we abandon the rail system which this country built at such a cost, it will be a short-sighted policy. We will not be taking a forward step; we will be lacking in imagination and perception because we will need the rails to cope with the overload of other forms of transportation. From all the reports that I hear, and I hear a great many, the substituted service in Newfoundland is not capable of meeting the needs of those people.

I commend the hon. member for what he is doing. I suggest that all of us give thought to reversing the trend which is set out so fully in the Canadian Transport Commission report. What we have now is a sort of last-ditch stand that we hope will hold off this policy for a little while, while there is another line abandoned and then another. This sort of pay-as-you-go policy was such a colossal failure in one government department, the Post Office, that we should not be bemused into thinking that we are being somehow progressive or efficient when it comes to the question of railways. So I salute the hon. member and give him my full support. When the vote comes I will support the motion.

Mr. Arthur Portelance (Gamelin): Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Committee on Transport and Communications, I also had the privilege in 1969 to visit the Maritime provinces. During this visit we held hearings in Newfoundland as in the other provinces. The Committee received 105 submissions, of which 79 were heard. During these 15 days spent in the Atlantic region, the committee heard 125 witnesses during its 65 hours of sitting when studying transportation problems in the Maritime provinces.

One of the important submission that was brought to the attention of the committee was presented by the government of the Province of Newfoundland. This submission dealt with six major points. The first was highways; the second, maritime transport; the third, air transport; the fourth, rail transport; the fifth, terminal and storage installations and the sixth, communications.

As far as communications are concerned, as soon as we arrived in Newfoundland and in the towns of Wabush and Labrador City in particular, as a committee member, I saw very well that the main gap that existed here in Canada and particularly for the residents of this remote area, one of the major problems—

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. I must ask for order in the House. There are various conversations going on and it is difficult for the Chair to follow the speech that is being made.

[Translation]

Mr. Portelance: —one of the major problems, of which the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Peddle) is aware, I am sure, which has been brought to the committee's attention, was not so much the problem of the "Newfie Bullet", but rather the lack of communications in the area. There were complaints, particularly, that hockey games were not shown on television, or were shown ten days after they took place. With the new satellite Canada will soon be able to orbit, at least in the course of 1972, those people will see one of the problems eliminated and, like the great majority of Canadians, will have better communications with the rest of the country.

Mr. Speaker, from Labrador we went to St. John's Nova Scotia, going through Gander. At least the committee's visit to St. John's, Newfoundland was also for the purpose of hearing briefs and using the famous "Newfie Bullet". I believe we left towards 11.30 p.m., to reach a municipality not so far from St. John's but I found that the trip took quite some time. It was rather amusing. All those who took part in this historical trip were very kind, particularly the people from Newfoundland. And we had the good fortune to return by bus which is now part of the Newfoundland transport system. I personally was able to see that passengers on this bus have a definitely more comfortable and rapid system than the kind of train we had to use to get there.

I revert to the brief submitted by provincial authorities. It was prepared by the Minister of Highways himself, who insisted particularly on the development of a highway network in the province. According to him, federal assistance to Newfoundland authorities was more urgent for highways than for railways. With regard to highways, shipping and air transportation, the minister stated the following in his brief:

It seems that the development of highways throughout the province will not require new services nor the extension of present C.N.R. lines. Further efforts should be made to improve storage and container facilities, in order to reduce freight rates through this new dependable method.

After an in-depth survey was made among the main users of railway transport, and because of the importance of subventions in respect of Maritime freight rates for the survival of their commercial operation, the minister recommended that in the case of the province of Newfoundland there be no provision for the establishment of an extra-regional subvention, but that the present intra-regional subvention be maintained not only in respect of railway dispatch, but also for all other means of transportation.

You will note here, Mr. Speaker, that no mention whatsoever was made of passenger service in Newfoundland—and this, at the request of government authorities in that province.

On February 21, 1969, during our visit there, the St. John's Evening Telegram reported as follows:

[English]

Mr. McGrath: You just lost 33 seats, and you will lose all your seats down there next time.

Mr. Portelance: I am just quoting.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): I wish, again, that hon. members on both sides of the House would allow the Chair to follow the speech of the hon. member.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: It is pretty hard to restrain oneself when listening to this.

Mr. Portelance: We will wait and see what happens at the next election.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the important points are mentioned—

Mr. Speaker, after quoting from the newspaper the government's recommendations, there is one paragraph in particular which I would like to put on the record:

[English]

The government didn't take a stand on the CNR's move to replace passenger trains with its trans-island bus service. It expressed the belief that with the extension of highways in Newfoundland there would be no need for CN to expand its lines, and that the railway should concentrate on moving and warehousing of freight in an effort to lower transportation costs on goods.

[Translation]

Even government authorities do not see the necessity for this. And I believe that the committee recommended that subsidies for road construction apply to the province of Newfoundland and that the transport commission had no other alternative but to provide the most efficient service to passengers from Newfoundland.

I think also that the hon. member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Pringle) has mentioned figures showing that several passengers were already using the bus, rather than the train, contrary to what took place in the past. In fact, as far as I am concerned, the train has indeed been superseded by the bus.

[English]

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, in just about three minutes I should like to say it is a pleasure for me, on behalf of the New Democratic Party, to support the motion brought in by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath). I also was in Newfoundland when the transportation committee visited various parts of the province and heard briefs presented to the committee.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that because we have in this country the wherewithal and knowledge with which to build large, supersonic planes, because we can build huge airports, because we can spend millions of dollars of public money to build a transportation system which should include a railway system, we should not be trying to apologize to people in certain parts of the country for not being able to provide transportation by rail.

We know very well that millions of dollars are being spent on everything except rail transportation. We know very well that the Canadian Transport Commission is preoccupied with one thing only, and that is the elimination of rail passenger service. The hon. member is to be congratulated for trying to rectify a mistake that was made some time ago when the order to which his motion refers was passed. I am certain that if we were to talk about the rationalization of rail passenger service today we would realize that it is not right to eliminate this service in any province. It should not be necessary for the people of Newfoundland to take the type of abuse they have taken since they entered confederation, as a result of the orders that have been handed down by the Canadian Transport Commission in respect of rail passenger service.

If we are really concerned about having a comprehensive passenger service in Canada which takes in all modes of traffic, we should be looking at the situation in a sane and sensible manner instead of allowing the hodge-podge of rail policy we have seen in the past. In the United States they have what they call "Amtrack". Millions of dollars are being spent there in an endeavour to find a sensible solution to their transportation problems. Perhaps in Canada we should have a counterpart of that program; maybe it could be called "Cantrack". We need an organization which would consider the efficient use of every mode of transportation. We have done everything we can. We have listened to advocates of anti-pollution measures who have come before the House and said we should spend millions of dollars in this area. Mr. Speaker, one way in which we could save money is by bringing about an efficient transportation system. This motion should be passed without further debate.

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I shall take only about two minutes because of the time factor. First I should like to express my bitter disappointment over the presentation of the hon. member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Pringle), from British Columbia, and my Quebec friend. They are the first two members of this House of Commons to express the sentiments which we heard today. I wonder how members from Newfoundland would be classified if we had taken this line when the trains were taken off in the Gaspé area. Would we have been classified as anti-French, anti-Quebec, anti-Gaspé? It is a bitter disappointment to members from Newfoundland to hear representatives from Quebec and British Columbia disown their responsibility to Canada's most eastern province.

I am not going to touch upon the constitutionality or the economy involved. I want to make one point only: when our eastern province of Canada entered confederation in 1949 it brought with it hundreds of millions of dollars worth of resources. Some of these resources are being developed, but the vast majority of them, especially the resources of the continental shelf, would have belonged to the country of Newfoundland had we decided not to enter confederation in 1949. But these resources were contributed to Canada, and this area is absolutely vital to the future development of our nation. Our province is one of the last great resource frontiers in the world. We have made a tremendous contribution to Canada even if we have to look ahead, to the long run, to realize its potential.

We have not asked for special status or special consideration but just for some kind of equal status as a member of confederation. What do we get, Mr. Speaker? We see the provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, quite rightfully, being allowed to retain passenger services at a loss of $15 million a year. The loss on the Newfoundland passenger service is less than $1 million a year, but my hon. friend from Quebec says the trains should have been taken off because they were poor trains. I wonder if they have ever thought of upgrading the system to a standard acceptable to the travelling public? That is what we are asking.

We are not asking to get the "Bullet" back; it has been scrapped and placed in souvenir stores all across Canada. We ask that the federal government give consideration to establishing a passenger train service that would be efficient and comfortable and would give the Newfoundland travelling public, the thousands of people from the mainland and the United States, equal treatment with the rest of Canada.

That is the issue, Mr. Speaker; not whether it was a poor train or a good train, whether it was losing money or whether it has been referred to a couple of times in the "Clownsville Packet" with a circulation of about 273. We consider we have been discriminated against. We see evidence every day in the House of Commons and from the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) that our province, which has half a million people and seven federal representatives, is being discriminated against. Our dissatisfaction will be manifested in a very unpleasant way unless this government starts to respond to our allegiance.

[Translation]

Mr. Jacques-L. Trudel (Montréal-Bourassa): Mr. Speaker, it is amazing to realize during a debate how two hon. members can manage within a few minutes to present arguments on two opposite points.

I will merely say a few words because there are only a few seconds left.

The hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) talked about security; he criticized our Canadian National Railways by suggesting at one point that the service provided in Newfoundland was not giving security. I even believe that his colleagues from the same area tried to make the same point.

I want to tell him that, before talking about security, if he really wishes to speak exclusively on railways, he should first be aware that recent articles have been published on the security of Canadian railways. Some of his colleagues are against railways because they do not offer adequate security. He suggests that we should establish a transportation service by rail instead of by bus.

When railroads are discussed, I wish mention were made of the various existing lines in Newfoundland. This evening, we heard about the bus service but no mention was made of the railway lines that still serve travellers in Newfoundland.

There is a CN railway service between Badger and Deer Lake. There are lines between Brigus Junction and Carbonear, between St. John's and Argentia, between Clarenville and Bonavista, precisely because those localities have no bus service.

The transport commission decided to tolerate the existence of those lines and give the people who live far from the Trans-Canada Highway the service they expect.

No reference was made either to the expenditures the province and the country would incur for developing the type of service that these people are demanding. Now, when one considers the surveys and refers to—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. The hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business having expired, I do now leave the chair.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

FAMILY INCOME SECURITY PLAN

MEASURE TO PROVIDE BENEFITS IN RESPECT OF CHILDREN

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Munro that Bill C-170, to provide for the payment of benefits in respect of children, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, just before private members' hour at five o'clock I was trying to deal with the events that took place before the introduction of the white paper on social security. I was saying that the government was introducing increased benefits for children all across Canada; the benefits were to be given according to family size and income; they were to be forthcoming in September, 1971, according to statements in the white paper. I must say, with due apologies to the poor people concerned, that the government had no intention of increasing benefits by that date. Its intention in that regard was about as great as the power of the poor people in this country to bring this measure about.

It is obvious now that this move was as calculated as anything could be. Whoever was commissioned to come up with the program should be ashamed of himself as a parent. The cabinet ministers responsible who decided on this strategy should be even more ashamed. I do not blame the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro), Mr. Speaker, because I remember that about a year and a half ago a press release was issued which indicated that six cabinet ministers of this government had refused to go along with the recommendations of the Minister of National Health and Welfare. They cut his proposed budget by some 50 per cent for social security measures. I wonder how their consciences are now—if indeed those ministers have a conscience. Mr. Speaker, was their move not all too obvious when they decided that the proposals in the white paper did not fill the needs of Canadians? And those proposals were brought in as a result of the advice of experts.

Then, Mr. Speaker, we had the Willard report, the report of the deputy minister of national health and welfare. At the same time, a study was undertaken by the Senate Committee on Poverty. It was decided to give Senate committees something to do and that committee was established. It went across the country studying poverty again; not because they were interested in human beings who were suffering in Canada but because it was politically expedient to use tactics to delay bringing in a bill which would increase family allowance benefits.

What happened after that, Mr. Speaker? The government introduced Bill C-264 in the previous session and, according to the government's political strategy, increased benefits under that bill were promised for May 1, 1972. What did the government then do? It shelved the bill during the Christmas recess. At no time during the 16 months since the white paper on income security was introduced has the government been honest with Canadians about progress in the planning of this measure. At that time the bill was known as Bill C-264.

Let us consider the negotiations with Quebec. Repeatedly, vague and conflicting statements have emanated from the office of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the office of the minister responsible for the bill. Now, after a delay of six months in the introduction of the family income security bill—Bill C-264 died after first reading in the previous session—Bill C-170 remains virtually unchanged despite constitutional negotiations. It now appears that there is to be another delay because of the Easter recess which is to come in a couple of days.

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger).]

How many times in this House have I asked the minister to bring forward Bill C-264? How many motions brought forward by my colleagues and myself have been refused unanimous consent? How many conflicting stories have been told in this House about negotiations in Quebec? Our party promised many months ago that if the bill were introduced we would ensure passage with the least possible delay. We were finally told that the bill would be introduced in spite of the ongoing negotiations with the province of Quebec. There is a word that we are not supposed to use in this House of Commons. Far be it from me to use it, but someone in the press gallery should examine Hansard of the past few months to see the conflict of stories as to what has been uttered by various people.

I repeat, Mr. Speaker, we need this bill in spite of its weaknesses. We need it because of the plight of the youth and our country. It must be passed as quickly as possible. I have not seen a bill introduced by the government and passed in this House which came up to expectations, in spite of the experts who draw up these bills. It is fairly obvious that there are many criticisms of Bill C-170 with regard to costs and inequities of universality and selectivity.

I said previously that I am willing to compromise for the good of the country, as is my party. I refer to the compromises between Quebec and Ottawa as contained in letters sent to the provincial premiers by the Prime Minister. According to the Prime Minister's letters to provincial premiers, the suggested system for family allowances would permit those provinces who wished to do so, to move toward an integrated system within their boundaries while maintaining certain general standards for poorer families. The federal government is willing to extend the principles involved to other income-support programs, and, if desired, a constitutional guarantee of the principles could be attempted in spite of the considerable difficulties that would be involved in making the generalized provisions necessary for a constitutional guarantee in an extremely complicated field.

The hope would be that such an arrangement would clean up the problem of social security to permit further progress in the process of constitutional review. The letters from the Prime Minister stated that the federal government would proceed with Bill C-170 in the current session and, after consultation with the provinces, would recommend to Parliament amendments to the bill at the appropriate stage.

Without going into the various inequities pointed out by experts on social legislation, the main failure of Bill C-170 is the lack of integration with other federal programs which are closely associated. An editorial in the Financial Times pointed out that the new family allowance legislation emphasises that the Minister of National Health and Welfare obviously never discusses anything with the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Mackasey) or the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) to co-ordinate programs for the benefit of Canadians. For example, the administration of the Family Income Security Plan is quite unrelated to the administration of other schemes such as unemployment insurance and income tax.

The Family Income Security Plan requires a new set of forms to be submitted to a special branch of the bureaucracy. Recent legislative changes have increased, but not consolidated the red tape and bureaucracy of income tax, unemployment insurance and now FISP. The principles of FISP are at odds with other social security schemes. For example, the government has opted for universality in medicare and unemployment insurance, but selectivity in FISP. Also, the "reformed" Income Tax Act has established uniform treatment for social benefits, but not FISP which allows tax free income.

Another example is that the Canada Assistance Plan contains a provision that, unless remedial action is taken before FISP is enacted, could undermine the object of the program to fight poverty. The problem is that under the Canada Assistance Plan the provinces are entitled to lower their rates of welfare assistance to families in proportion to the higher family allowance payments these families will be receiving.

Under clause 3(3)(b) there is provision that the provinces in determining the degree of need and arrangements for social assistance to applicants for welfare shall take into account all income maintenance payments through unemployment insurance, the Canada Pension Plan and guaranteed income supplement schemes. However, it is optional for the provinces to take into account family allowance and other schemes: this is a decision for the province to make. At the present time none of the provinces calculate family allowance payments as income for the purposes of social assistance; but it is possible they might, especially the hard pressed, poorer provinces. In all these ways the lack of integration of the FISP plan with other government programs and legislation means that the total package has a haphazard and sometimes contradictory effect.

Before five o'clock I spoke of the various other objectives of the bill. I said that I believed the Family Income Security Plan would provide benefits for the children of Canada up to 17 years of age to develop their education and allow a proper upbringing. The failure of past governments is the reason so many people in this country are today living in poverty.

I therefore urge the government to bring Bill C-170 to a successful conclusion as soon as possible. I hope the government will indicate its sincerity by bringing about increases in family allowance payments without further delay, and that the minister will be equally sincere when dealing with all the clauses in committee and properly amending the inequities that exist so that a meaningful effort can be directed toward improving the situation of our disadvantaged children in order they can be good citizens in the future.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (2020)

[Translation]

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, we have already heard several viewpoints on Bill C-170, but it is not possible to examine the bill without considering the actions the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) agreed to take toward Quebec.

The Prime Minister's proposal means precisely that if a province wishes to initiate its own family or youth allowances program, Ottawa is willing to make the necessary arrangements, and I quote:

> —provision will be made for the federal scheme to be modified by a federal-provincial agreement so that the amount of monthly benefits, the levels of income at which the reduction of full benefits commences and the rates of reduction to be applied will accord with the standards of the provincial scheme. This will mean that the provincial legislation, within the ambit of certain limits related to national standards, will determine the design of the federal program operative in the province.

This provincial legislation will unfortunately be subject to some conditions.

The sharing option will be open to a province where its expenditure, apart from any funds raised by it through tax abatement provisions, is at least 15 per cent of the combined expenditures of the two governments for family allowances.

Bill C-170 provides that allowances paid in respect of youths shall be at the expense of the federal government, but if a province wishes to establish its own plan, like the province of Quebec, it will have to pay at least 15 per cent of all amounts paid as family allowances. This means that the province will have to tax its people by at least 15 per cent more than the other provinces in order to apply its plan under the provisions of Bill C-170.

Table 29 of the federal government's estimates for 1971-72 show that, for the 1971 fiscal year, Ottawa paid some 160 million dollars in family allowances in the province of Quebec.

Finally, Quebec will have to spend at least $25 million more than this amount, tax the residents of the province of Quebec accordingly, if the provisions of this bill are to apply, according to the Prime Minister's letter.

There is also another condition. At present, the province of Quebec gets a tax abatement for the allowances paid to young people of 16 and 17. According to the proposals of the premier of Quebec that abatement will disappear, because, in the letter from the Prime Minister of Canada to Mr. Bourassa, dated March 9, it is stated, and I quote:

> It is proposed that such an option should be open to a province where the provincial expenditures on the allowances, apart from any funds raised by the province through tax abatement provisions, is at least 15 per cent of combined expenditures on family allowances by the two governments.

Mr. Speaker, that letter from the Prime Minister of Canada to Premier Bourassa is quite clear: provinces will have to pay at least 15 per cent of the total amount of the allowances paid by the two governments, and this supplement that Quebec will pay cannot take into account the tax abatements that Quebec gets for the young people of 16 and 17.

True, the implementation of the act will entail an increase of about $150 million in family allowances. Were we to consider the other side of the coin, we could deduce that it is not that bad. However, because the rate of family allowances must be the one which has remained most unchanged in this country, as compared with increases experienced in all other areas, we must admit that if this bill is worth being enacted, it should be somewhat modified.

For instance, appropriations for family allowances in the 1965-66 budget stood at $601,800,000 while they amount to $618,500,000 in the 1971-72 budget.

For the same year, that is 1965-66, the amount spent by the Canadian government in servicing the debt reached $1,172 million; it will exceed two billion dollars this year. One can say without fear of erring that Canadian families have been sadly neglected.

With insufficient income, Canadians are going deeper into debt. Here is what La Presse reported on March 9, 1971, and I quote:

Canadians have sunk deeper into debt with banks, stores and finance companies by almost 5 per cent in 1970, and this increase in consumer credit occurred only during the last six months of the year . . . compared to 1969, when the indebtedness increased by 14 per cent—

Secured personal loans, the most important group of loans, increased from $4.1 to $4.6 billion during the year—

Unsecured personal loans . . . increased from $1 billion to $1.2 billion, while loans on insurance policies increased from $660 million to $745 million.

Therefore, consumer credit totalled approximately $11.3 billion in 1970.

Mr. Speaker, I shall quote from an article in the June 16, 1971, issue of La Presse, as follows:

TWENTY-EIGHT PER CENT OF FAMILY BUDGET FOR PAYMENT OF DEBTS

Debt is a rampant social evil in Quebec. It exceeds total government outlays of 4 billion dollars, and solely for consumer goods, according to a statement by Mr. Normand Caron of the Fédération des associations d'économie familiale at the annual meeting of the Association coopérative féminine du Québec.

The disasters, both individual and collective, it brings about are inconceivable, Mr. Caron stressed, claiming that the percentage of the family budget earmarked for payment of debts had increased from 8 per cent in 1955 to 28 per cent in 1969.

According to the lecturer, debts place the individual in a state of insecurity and tension and are often a cause of family disintegration because of conflicts they cause between husband and wife.

Mr. Speaker, insufficient incomes leave us with unsold products which are reflected in bad lodging conditions, poor clothing and many other services, including food consumption.

According to the Tuesday, November 11, 1969 issue of La Presse, milk consumption was decreasing in the province of Quebec while the government was penalizing farmers for producing too much.

In fact, at the convention held by the Quebec Industrial Milk Producers Association, National Council of Milk Producers Vice Chairman Jules Lafontaine stated and I quote:

Annual milk consumption in the province of Quebec has decreased by 100 pounds per capita compared with the level of 20 years ago.

In short, while farmers are being compelled by the government to reduce their production, it is being discovered that milk consumption is lower than the minimum suggested by the nutrition guide published by the government.

[Mr. Godin.]

In my opinion, it would be in the interest of some departments to consult more often with one another.

It is obvious that the increase in family allowances is socially desirable. And among the 30 per cent of Canadians who live in poverty, there are many thousands of families with many dependents which deliberately, out of self-respect, have succeeded in living without the support of welfare. It is likely that a good number of those families lack the bare necessities and often have a lower family income than their neighbour who lives on welfare.

An increase in family allowances in my opinion would represent a valuable financial assistance, if I may refer to a newsletter published by the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce on the structures and output of the Canadian economy. It can even be asserted that despite the $150 million increase that is provided, Canadian heads of families will not buy more with these extra $150 million than they could buy in 1965.

Indeed, this quite significant table based on the value of the dollar in 1961 indicates that the purchasing power of the Canadian dollar which amounted to 93 cents in 1965 had decreased to 77 cents by 1970.

The consumer price index being set at 100 in 1961, the table shows that it went up to 107 in 1965 and reached 129 in 1970.

This means that in 1965, to purchase one dollar's worth of production, the Canadian dollar was worth 93 cents against only 77 cents in 1970.

As the figures which I have just given you were taken from a table published in 1970, I will quote once again an article which appeared in La Presse of May 12, 1971 and which was entitled: "The cost of living in Canada has risen by 33 per cent during a 10-year period." The following can then be read and I quote:

The cost of living for an average Canadian family has risen by about 33 per cent during a 10-year period.

Statistics Canada reports that the retail price index has gone up .7 per cent in April, largely due to raises for housing, clothes and food.

For each $100 spent in 1961 for goods and services, the consumer must now pay $132.20.

• (2030)

Mr. Speaker, these figures show that the Canadian dollar is now worth only 75 cents and that the $150 million suggested by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) have no value whatever because of the rise in the cost of living and the dollar devaluation.

Another feature of the bill now before us is the selective system to be established, a system which will compell citizens to watch themselves, to evaluate themselves, and which will invite comparisons. The poor is compared with some one else who has succeeded in getting something. It will also force comparison between those who have attained a certain degree of success and those who have failed. It will provoke jealousy between those who give and those who receive.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, through the enforcement of such legislation, the government is simply going to distribute poverty. It simply wants to take money away from families which have too little as it is.

Thus, since a universal family allowance scheme is essential for maintaining the brotherly feelings within families as well as the community spirit among individuals, it would be in order, I think, to amend the bill now before us. It should be remembered that family allowances are not a salary but a right.

In times past, when production was insufficient because of famine, adverse conditions or floods and hurricanes, people necessarily had to resign themselves to the inevitable. They had to share among themselves since production was insufficient.

Since no one knows at the moment in Canada what to do with production, I am wondering why we are instituting a selective system for compulsory sharing. Production being sufficient, we are at liberty, as members of this House, to ask that our universal family allowance scheme be maintained.

In short, the universal scheme is maintained in respect of pensions paid to senior citizens of 65 and over. Consequently, in order to grant the same advantages to our younger people, it will be necessary that our economic life pattern undergo a transformation such that it will really be tantamount to a social organization. And I think that in order to reach this goal, many prejudices will have to be fought together with a host of selfish attitudes.

To change from the universal regime as we know it, to a selective plan will, I think, require the mobilization of thousands of people and I am convinced that the salaries paid to this new team of investigators will far exceed the total cost of a universal system.

The suggestion that a number of families can manage without family allowances is only valid, as we know, in respect of a minority of them in this country. We are also aware that the government is in a very good position, through its tax system, to fall back on those workers who receive too much. We know that very well.

Considering that we have already proposed in this House, the implementation of a guaranteed income scheme, which is inevitable in the long run, I think we should take the opportunity to implement part of this project. Whatever the salaries earned by parents, the government should normally co-operate with them through universal aid measures that will guarantee the well being of dependent children. I believe that these allowances should be scaled in such a way as to represent a substantial contribution toward the child's care and should also take into account the expenses incurred for older children. It is only necessary that we establish for our younger people a system covering the basic needs of food, clothing and shelter. This minimum is absolutely attainable given the present economic conditions of our country.

Mr. Speaker, if the young of today are tomorrow's generation, they are as much the heirs of those which have preceeded them.

And the answer in respect of the family allowances scheme comes quite simply from the fact that any person is entitled to something, by the mere fact of being born. Since family allowances are not considered as a supplement to the salary or income of the family head, the funds used to pay them should not be levied through a tax on the income of working people.

Family allowances are not earned income but a social measure designed to provide an equitable income for the families of workers and to remedy inequities in the present economic system. Those measures which guarantee social security are born of the commendable desire to relieve economic distress and to acknowledge the right of the children of this country to have their basic needs met.

The newborn child or the child who is growing up do not take part in the production of goods which are given to them freely. However, we acknowledge their right to a share of the riches produced. From the mere fact of being born, they are entitled to satisfaction of their basic needs. And those allowances should come not from the result of the labour of those who work in order to make a living, but only from the social fund built through the social factors of production, through the work of machines, in whose inheritance we all share.

There is more to it than that, Mr. Speaker. Since those social revenues are the result of education, of the centuries old work of machines, and of the development of techniques, there should be no discrimination in the distribution of social production. The right to social products should not be limited to only a few children in the country, because no matter what family they live in they are entitled to the things they need in order to sustain and develop their lives.

In order for the new measure to benefit the whole population, its implementation should be related to the establishment of new credits. We find that the gap between total purchasing power of Canadians and national output is growing wider from day to day.

In 1961, for example, the gross national product was $39 billion while national income stood at $29 billion. In 1971, the GNP was $95 billion while national income barely reached $70 billion. I think this difference of $25 billion is enough for us to suggest the creation of money which could be paid out to all family heads of this country. I think that before telling us it is impossible we could try it for a year. The government is making all kinds of experiments. Recently a hovercraft that will probably never hover was built. Planes that will probably never fly were built and discarded.

So, I think it is within that frame of mind that we should be proceding with this experiment of using new credit. Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, if the government can afford to spend on experiments with doubtful results, surely it could afford to make an experiment which we are convinced will end up benefiting all Canadian families.

[English]

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I never thought that I would be standing in my place in defence of something Mackenzie King did, but for once I am going publicly to support a measure brought in by that meandering person whom we had for so many years as prime minister of this country. When he brought into being the family allowance scheme in 1944, he acknowledged the need in our social security system for special recognition that married couples with children face circumstances and requirements which warrant income provision during the time their children are living at home. He was socially sound in his judgment that such schemes should be brought in on a universal basis. I cannot emphasize too much the significant social relevance of having such schemes on a universal basis.

What is fundamentally involved here apart from the dollar value of the current legislation—I shall come to that in a few moments—is the principle involved in having a piece of government legislation which is doing a complete about-face in terms of its commitment of 1944 on the question of universality in social legislation: its consequences for the future well-being in particular of the category of poor family about which the government proclaims it is most concerned cannot be over-emphasized.

I wish to make three points about this legislation which bear in one way or another directly on this issue. It seems to me that by introducing the discriminatory income position basis of the family into the eligibility criteria for family allowances we are making a great mistake, a decisive about-turn in the history of social legislation in Canada. The first point, which I believe is very important, to be made on this question is that it is a socially divisive act. There can be no doubt that in the future families—I do not say this applies to all families, but to many families in most communities—will regard each other in terms of whether or not they are eligible for family allowance, exactly analogous to the way in which families now regard one another in terms of their eligibility for welfare assistance. That is exactly what the government is doing. It is proposing a measure in terms of social consequences or assistance to the family which puts family allowances on a welfare assistance basis. Some government members may deny this. I see some shaking their heads. That is precisely the consequence of the legislation. The legislation is saying to the people of Canada that if their income position is such and such vis-à-vis the number of children they have, then they may receive the family allowance. It is saying that if they do not meet the criteria, they will not receive it.

Therefore, this legislation is saying that we recognize in the form of our social insurance provisions those who have and those who have not. We are stratifying the population of Canada in terms of this age-old distinction. We are doing it in a way which was not the case under the original family allowance legislation. One of its most significant social graces was the fact that it did not discriminate among Canadians.

Apart from the negative effect this kind of division will have on adults in terms of their perception of themselves and the self-perception of their children, it will involve an act of discrimination on the basis of income between those who will receive it and those who will not. It is this, I predict, which will serve to undermine the future actions of this or any other government in attempts to provide improved benefits which are necessary for the poor in our society.

I want to state as precisely as I can my reason for believing this. I repeat that I regard this question as being of profound importance. If my judgment is right it will have a profound consequence, and if I am wrong it will not. It is a matter of judgment. What we are doing in Canada now is this: we are saying to the working people they are to be divided into categories. I am thinking now on the one hand of reasonably well-off workers, in which category I would place most workers who are organized in the trade union movement as well as a number of others, and on the other the working poor.

In effect, we are saying to those at the upper income level of working people that at some point they will not receive family allowance benefits. We are saying to the organized lumber workers, the packinghouse workers, the steelworkers, the auto workers and reasonably well paid people in offices, as well as elementary and high school teachers in Canada, that they are not to receive family allowances any longer. They will not receive the benefits but will have to pay for those who will. This is the social point.

It seems to me that for the first time in the history of this country, in terms of social legislation, we are about to take a decisive backward step in which people are to be asked to pay increased amounts for benefits for which they will be ineligible although they are benefits which should accrue, and have accrued previously, to all. In future years this will undermine the willingness of this category of worker to continue to pay for benefits which other people will need and will receive. I think that is the important issue here.

Up to the present we have had the support of teachers, fishermen and other organized workers in respect of extensions and improvements in the social insurance system, whether on the basis of old age security or family allowance. We had their support because they would receive benefit. As members of the community, they were being asked to pay for the well being of others and for something from which they also would enjoy some benefit. In the present legislation, by restricting the number of recipient families, however, we have taken a step which will undermine the willingness of a substantial portion of our population to continue to contribute to badly needed improvements in social services for the community.

So the government—I will come to the dollars and cents implications in a minute—in their argument that they are really providing substantial benefits for those with the lowest incomes, those who need it most in terms of the long run, and by long run I mean beginning a year or two from now, are really undermining their own position because they are working against the kind of political support that is needed in any kind of community to sustain social welfare.

Whether it is in a democracy in Canada, the United States or Scandinavia, for the vast majority of the community to support social insurance schemes they themselves must see a direct benefit to themselves. There is nothing selfish in that; it is very much a part of human psychology. You cannot expect a total giving to someone else when you get nothing in return. I think that principle of universal community benefit is in jeopardy here. We are therefore building up a potential political opposition in Canada to continuing improvements in our social insurance schemes.

The second point I should like to make is that in terms of implementing this scheme every family in Canada will need its own little computer. Every politician in this House of Commons, or the ones who remain after the forthcoming general election, will I predict be confronted by irate citizens who think they are either entitled to receive the family allowance in principle or that they should receive it at a certain higher level. The politicians will be inundated with demands for changes, with demands to remove bureaucratic delays.

I predict that the bureaucratic foul-up that we have seen with the unemployment insurance regulations will seem like a tea party in comparison with what we will see when the family allowance legislation takes effect next fall. To repeat the point, any average citizen who spends most of his time working will need some kind of computer to make sense of the scheme with any degree of rapidity. One of the virtues of good legislation is that it can be readily understood by a non-expert. This is precisely what this legislation fails to achieve.

Mr. Alexander: Wait until we see the regulations.

Mr. Broadbent: I am sure the hon. member is absolutely correct. Both he and I were on the committee that dealt with unemployment insurance and we saw the morass that came from that legislation in terms of its detailed regulations. This government prides itself so often on its business efficiency. The cost argument alone in implementing this piece of legislation should have perhaps been sufficient for not supporting it. It will be a complicated bureaucratic mess.

The third point that I should like to make bears directly on the dollars and cents issue. It is that the legislation introduced by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) when considered, as it should be, as part of a total package of the financial measures introduced by this government with the tax bill that we discussed in the House last week, is seen not to benefit the poor in its cumulative effect nearly as much as it benefits the rich. It will be recalled that the minister and other supporters of the family allowance legislation have suggested that they are taking the money back from the rich who really do not need it. They ask us what we who are talking about the need for genuine social improvement are really complaining about. May I remind the House that if we consider the tax legislation that was introduced last week, it is the rich in Canada who are really going to benefit from the acts of this government.

I need not remind hon. members that it is quite plausible for us to expect an election this year. In 1972, what the government is taking away from the rich in the family allowance scheme, it is more than giving back with concessions in income tax. If we add the two together, the tax benefit plus the family allowance benefit, and consider who benefits most from the actions of this government in the past ten days, it will be clearly seen that richer Canadians come out on top.

I have before me a table which compares these benefits for a family with two children. Assuming that the family allowance legislation is passed—as it will be, with a government majority—and comes into effect next September 1, we discover that for 1972 a family with two children whose total income is $3,000 will have a total benefit of $216. We find that a family earning $4,000 will have a benefit of $218.19; a family earning $5,000 will have a benefit of $225.06; a family earning $6,000 will have a benefit of $206.19; a family earning $7,000 will have a benefit of $187.68; a family earning $8,000 will have a benefit of $169.47.

When we go up to a family whose income is $11,000, we begin to see an interesting development, namely, a substantial improvement in the net benefit coming from the government from these two pieces of legislation. We find that a family earning $11,000 will have a net benefit of $155.28; a family earning $12,000 will have a net benefit of $165.03, a family earning $13,000 will have a benefit of $175.02.

Let us consider a family earning $20,000. We find that under the proposed scheme, in family allowance plus tax benefits in terms of the tax reduction that was given by this government in the legislation that we debated last week, the family earning $20,000 will save $260.58; a man earning $25,000 will save $328.83; a man earning $30,000 will save $400,68; a man earning $50,000 will save $716.25; and a man earning $75,000 will save $1,153.14. A man who is eking out an existence and is able to afford only two or three trips round the world, who makes $100,000 a year, due to the generosity of this government which is so overwhelmingly concerned with the problems of the poor will save $1,611.39!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The rich get rich and the poor get children.

Mr. Broadbent: The conclusion seems rather obvious. The rich, if we define them for our purposes here as those who are earning $15,000 and more, will get more in net benefits from these two pieces of legislation in 1972 than will the poor—if we define the poor for purposes of our discussion as those earning from $3,000 up to and including $8,000. The other point to be made is that those in the middle-income range, those earning between $10,000 and $15,000, will be gaining less than the poor, which is understandable, and will also be gaining less than the rich, if we define the rich as those earning more than $15,000 a year.

• (2100)

To go back to the point I made very early in my remarks, it is that middle-income category of people who are very important in terms of maintaining their support for significant improvement in social insurance legislation, whether in respect of family allowances or anything else. It is this category of men and women who in the main are working very hard. These are the people earning between $10,000 and $15,000 who will feel the negative effects of this family allowance legislation and who will not benefit to any great degree from tax reductions. Consequently, these people will be increasingly reluctant to support significant improvements in social services proposed by this government by a provincial government or by government at any level.

The government expects to count on this category of income earners for support in the coming election. To be frank, Mr. Speaker, they are the kind of people who tended to support the government in the past. But their support is being whittled away precisely because the government is beginning to exclude them from the benefits that accrue from good social insurance legislation.

I would like to conclude by saying that in spite of the benefits that this legislation will provide for the poor, it completely undermines the universality aspect of social insurance legislation in Canada. It is a retrograde step, the first of its kind in Canadian history in this area, and therefore does not warrant support. Its benefits could be much more effectively provided by significant reform in taxation. I will not take the time of the House to go into this matter; I have spoken on it in the past as have other hon. members of my party. We believe the needs of the poor should be looked after by significant tax reform.

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I would like to offer a few suggestions with respect to Bill C-170. Like the hon. member who preceded me, I believe that the government, in not opting to have the family allowance included in an individual's income, has made the administration of the plan much more difficult without really achieving what it set out to do, to provide something of greater value to the low-income family. It has been said many times by many people that the dollar value of a family's income is a poor measurement of how the family is able to live in our society. Nevertheless, I have to accept that the use of the income tax method is the only way in which measurement can be made of a family's income but it is only a rough method of assessing the social standard of living of any family.

For instance, in Manitoba we have always been told by the people who live in the north of the province that they should have an increased income tax exemption because of the increased cost of living in that area. It has often been said that north of 53 degrees in Manitoba each family should have an additional $1,000 a year exemption. When one has personal experience of the area, one must agree that there is much to be said for that point of view.

In a program such as this, Mr. Speaker, where a specific dollar value can be paid to every child or youth through guardians or parents it seems most likely that universality should be inherent in the plan. In order to preserve the idea that low-income families should benefit the most, it seems to me that by adding the family allowance to income and taking the normal percentage of income tax that can be deducted all Canadian citizens should have a better and fairer return with respect to their income. If we decide that further relief should be given to our lower income groups, we could do this by means of a tax cut or by a change in the income tax rate benefiting those at the lower income level who need it most. It seems to me that the method proposed by this bill whereby applications for benefit will have to be filed along with an estimate of family income is an unnecessarily cumbersome method of arriving at the figure that the benefit should be in each case.

The bill provides that families are allowed to file a revised estimate of income at intervals of four months should their financial status change, and benefits would then be adjusted. Initially, families will be allowed to file estimates of income based on last year's earnings or on earnings projected for next year, whichever is most favourable to them. I cannot imagine a more complicated system. In most cases the responsibility will fall, as usual, on the woman of the household to make the application even though she may not always know whether her husband has had an increase or decrease in income.

Then there are families, and here I speak of farmers, whose income is averaged over a five-year period. There are self-employed people whose income may vary from nothing in one year to many thousands of dollars in another. All this will create a great administrative problem and I am afraid will mean considerable variance in the benfits, particularly those paid to people whose incomes fluctuate each year. There is no doubt that widespread administrative inequities will occur under this complicated system. It seems logical that had the universality of the program been continued, with the benefit added to family income, the money could have been just as effectively used to aid low-income groups and could have been just as effectively distributed to those who need it most.

In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, if we give the basic old age pension to every citizen who reaches a certain age, we should also give a basic income to all our new citizens who have not yet entered the economy. I believe this bill is unnecessarily complicated and will require frequent amendment. It leaves itself open to administrative problems and considerable inequities in the calculation of payment of benefits. As has been outlined by other hon. members, when the regulations are introduced they will further increase the problems of members of parliament trying to resolve the difficulties connected with this program.

I would like to speak for a moment on the value of programs such as this in respect of the alleviation of poverty. It seems to me that when a program such as this is introduced there is an immediate benefit in redistributing income but as time passes this benefit decreases. It seems to be decreased because segments of society, high wage earners and entrepreneurs, those who are the bellwethers of society, are in a position to demand and receive higher incomes so that their take-home pay remains at a level comparable to what it was before the advent of the program. In other words, our economic system and tax structure seem to adjust themselves so that the members of our society who lose money in taxation to provide these benefits are able to recoup their losses by means of wage settlements and imposing higher prices for goods. Perhaps this is part of the general inflationary trend.

Perhaps for these reason it is generally considered that family allowance plans have had no great value in fighting poverty. Often these plans have to be analysed to see how they fit in with the original program. The data as to the effect of family allowances on combating poverty seems to be equivocal and can be construed in many different ways. While the poor pay relatively little in direct income tax to our treasury, in the form of indirect taxes a major burden is imposed on the poor.

The Croll report, the report of the Senate Committee on Poverty, cited figures from 1961 to show that 56.5 per cent of the income of those earning less than $2,000, before transfer payments, goes in taxes and of this 56.5 per cent only slightly more than 1 per cent is taken directly in individual income tax. The dilemma of increasing income tax is that eventually, unless some money is left to the individual taxpayer, he presumably will not be a member of the labour force or productive in any manner other than through dollar value. Fighting poverty with the family allowance probably is not as rewarding as people would wish.

Mr. Speaker, I should not end these comments without a few words on what is being discussed the world over, and that is the mood that is prevalent, namely, that if man is to stay on this planet we may have to approach a zero population growth. The comment of the President of the United States last week regarding population growth has given events a new turn. The comment urged the United States to welcome a plan for stabilized population. On March 13, 1972, an article in the Globe and Mail commented:

> A government-appointed panel Saturday proposed that the United States try to halt the rise in population and "enable individuals to avoid unwanted childbearing".
> "We have looked for, an have not found any convincing economic argument for continued national population growth," John D. Rockefeller, chairman of the commission on population growth and the American future, said.
> Mr. Rockefeller told a press conference he believed the United States would be the first country to adopt a population policy aimed at ending growth, if it accepted the panel's proposals.
> The panel said that even if the birthrate maintained its downward trend to the point where married couples had an average of only two children, the U.S. population would continue to grow for nearly 70 years. This is because so many now are of child-producing age.

There has been considerable discussion as to whether the family allowance program increases the tendency to larger populations. It has been considered, and studies have shown conclusively, that family allowances are not an incentive to an increasing birthrate. But at an international conference on children's allowances in 1968 the participants gave evidence that there is no direct relation between the existence or characteristics of a children's allowance system and the birthrate. This is perhaps, in the over-all view, quite right, but in the lower income segments of some groups there has been in the past a tendency to increase the family income by prolific birthrate. However, once these groups attain their material desires there seems to be a tendency for a fall-off in the birthrate.

There are those who advocate reduced payments to larger families as a disincentive to a high birthrate. This is not generally accepted yet, but I think that at some time in the future, and not too far away, more thought will be given to it. In any case, the role of the family allowance as a stimulus to the birthrate does not seem to be very strong.

In this legislation the government has departed from universality. It has increased the problems of administration and cost and will create many social inequities that could have been avoided merely by adding the income from family supplement to family income and taxing it at the usual rate.

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for recognizing me. For a moment I thought I was not to have the opportunity of participating in the discussion on this significant piece of legislation. I see the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) is in his place on the other side of the chamber. I did not hear what he said, but I am sure it was worth while. He can be a nice fellow at times, but I wonder what he thinks of this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I wonder what happened to the participatory democracy that this government was supposed to bring forth and which would give Canadians an opportunity to put before this House of Commons their ideas on where our country should go in terms of social welfare policy? I am very disturbed to find that there is a trend—

An hon. Member: A pernicious trend.

Mr. Alexander: —a pernicious trend that seems to be projected by this government. We had a white paper on the tax bill. Thank goodness that was referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs so that we had an opportunity of ascertaining the direction we should take with respect to tax reform. Many worth-while suggestions came from that committee and as a result we have a better—although imperfect, if you will, Mr. Speaker—bill. We on this side of the House would never say it is perfect, but many of the inequities that were pointed out by members of the opposition made it possible for the bill to become more acceptable.

On November 30, 1970, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) issued his white paper on income security for Canadians. I was under the impression, as were many hon. members, that this document would be placed before the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs following the pattern that had been decided upon by this government, thereby giving the many Canadians involved an opportunity for their voices to be heard. But this did not happen, Mr. Speaker.

In answer to a question which I posed this afternoon, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the great exponent of the just society and participatory democracy, indicated that with respect to the proposed airport in the township of Pickering he, in a unilateral way and under the British North America Act, had come upon a solution. As far as he was concerned, if 51 per cent of the people affected—I do not know how he could ever determine that—did not want the airport, there would not be one. I am not questioning whether there is going to be an airport. I am trying to point out that there is a fraudulent aspect to this government's conception of participatory democracy.

• (2120)

Mr. Olson: Not at all.

Mr. Alexander: The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) can say all he wants. I know that the statement was made without any agreement, consultation or negotiation with the province of Ontario.

Mr. Olson: That is not right; we have been discussing it with the province of Ontario for months.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I do not know if the Minister of Agriculture was here this afternoon.

Mr. Olson: Yes, I was.

Mr. Alexander: Then he should know that the Prime Minister indicated to me in no uncertain terms that there was no discussion with the province of Ontario or members of that government from the time the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) made the statement in the House until he made the statement about 51 per cent. The Prime Minister did it on his own, unilaterally. That is wrong. That is not participatory democracy. And that is what is being done with this income security bill. I say it is discouraging, because we were promised the just society.

Mr. Olson: And you have it.

Mr. Alexander: The Minister of Agriculture says we have it.

Mr. Olson: I do.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Alexander: Well, Mr. Speaker, I have heard that the Minister of Agriculture will have a tough time getting elected.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Alexander: And I say that with great respect.

Mr. Olson: I always did find it hard getting elected.

Mr. Alexander: Well, it will be even tougher this time.

Mr. Olson: Five out of six elections; that is the record.

Mr. Alexander: The government claims this is a significant piece of legislation. If it does not give people the opportunity to bring forward ideas, suggestions and reasonable amendments which will make the bill more satisfactory, I say the whole thing is a fraud.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, it is a fraud and we on this side will tell that to the Canadian people.

Mr. Olson: The hon. member is still wrong.

Mr. Alexander: Speaking of universality, I can recall—

An hon. Member: This is the second lousy speech I have heard tonight.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Alexander: I heard the hon. member for Sarnia say that this is the second lousy speech he has heard this evening. I can say one thing: at least I can raise my voice and tell the House how fraudulent is this bill, unlike the hon. member who behind the curtains makes irresponsible remarks about a responsible speech being made by an hon. member.

Mr. Thomas (Moncton): Now he is making faces.

Mr. Alexander: Before the hon. member for Sarnia, that some time parliamentary secretary, interjected I was about to talk of the principle of universality. The former minister of labour told me that with the new Unemployment Insurance Act which came into effect on June 30 we were to move into the area of universality. That is the principle we were adopting. I ask, why could we not include the self-employed man and the franchisee? In that way we could cover 95 per cent of our people and establish the principle of universality in this area.

What has the minister piloting this bill through the House done? He says that there is not to be universality with regard to this program. Frankly, I do not know whether one minister talks to another or whether they all go to the same cabinet meetings. Here we have a retrograde step, a step that moves back from the position originally adopted. Here we have legislation that is to be based on income and the number of children in a family.

Mr. Olson: You are pretty mixed up, Linc.

Mr. Alexander: No. This legislation will remove over 1.5 million families from the family allowance rolls.

An hon. Member: Shame!

Mr. Alexander: I know that for more than a million families there will be significant changes in benefits.

Mr. Breau: You are the party of the rich.

Mr. Alexander: The party of the rich!

Mr. Thomas (Moncton): That is what he said.

Mr. Alexander: The hon. member is trying to read my speech. I want to tell him something about the middle-income man, the man who has been paying the shot. That is the point I am coming to.

An hon. Member: Make a speech that makes sense.

Mr. Alexander: I am about to get to the point. What disturbs me, Mr. Speaker, is that at the bottom end of the scale about a million families will be affected, perhaps significantly, by this bill; yet all the indicators show that this legislation will not relieve the poverty of our brothers and sisters in this country. That is the most significant thing about it. I believe this government is trying to do its best.

Mr. Olson: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: Its best, however, is not good enough. The real challenge is providing greater opportunities for more Canadians so that with their skills, knowledge and willingness to work they can take advantage of policies that will bring about greater economic growth.

Mr. Olson: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: I notice that the Minister of Agriculture agrees with me. Those policies in turn should lead to full employment. The Economic Council of Canada suggests that an unemployment rate of 3.8 per cent constitutes full employment. Certainly an unemployment rate of 7.7 per cent does not. If we are to bring about significant changes that will benefit all Canadians, we shall need to evolve an industrial strategy, an industrial policy.

Mr. Breau: Ha!

Mr. Alexander: I do not know the hon. member over in the wilderness. He does not speak in the House; he does not ask questions.

Mr. Benjamin: Who is he?

Mr. Alexander: I don't know. He is an non-entity.

Mr. Thomas (Moncton): A nobody.

Mr. Alexander: He just sits there and makes comments. I notice the Minister of Justice laughing. The government brings in all sorts of ad hoc programs. It is departing from the principle of providing justice for all Canadian families. We are no longer in the same ball game because the government is removing one and a half million Canadians from the rolls. We need to establish an industrial strategy built up through negotiation and consultation with the provinces and with management and labour. In that way we may devise a policy which would bring Canada and Canadians to the horizon, if you will, of full economic growth, or greater economic growth, which would lead to greater productivity and more employment and programs such as the one we are considering will be at a minimum—

Mr. Breau: Ha! Your party is for the rich.

Mr. Alexander: My friend in the corner, over in the wilderness, suggests I am speaking on behalf of the rich. No, I am not speaking on behalf of the rich; I do not care about the rich. They can look after themselves. I care about the poor. I come from a poor family. I know what poverty is all about. At the same time, Mr. Speaker, I am concerned about a man who has not been referred to so far in this House, or if he has been referred to the reference has been made—

Mr. Thomas (Moncton): With a sneer?

Mr. Alexander: No, not with a sneer. The reference has been made in an entirely acceptable way. I am talking about the middle-income man, the man making $10,000, $12,000 or $14,000 a year. Who speaks for him?

Mr. Breau: The Liberal party.

Mr. Alexander: The Liberal party?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Alexander: The Liberal party: did you hear that? After supporting the white paper on tax reform and the bill which followed the white paper, the hon. member supports the bill now before us and says that he speaks for the man in the middle, the middle-income man. I say you are wrong, Sir.

Mr. Breau: No, right.

Mr. Alexander: The hon. member is wrong. You do not have any compassion for what that man has gone through and is continuing to go through under this government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Breau: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I do not have time for questions now. You can ask them when I have finished.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member should address the Chair.

Mr. Alexander: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I was saying that someone has to speak for the middle-income man who, it seems to me, is being ignored. He is the only one who sees himself. The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) dwelt on this question. It is time we started to give the man in this group some incentives, not disincentives. It seems that every piece of legislation is directed toward him adversely. I wonder how many lumps he can stand. Hon. members know what the Prime Minister said with regard to lumps: he said if they don't like it, they can lump it.

• (2130)

Mr. Olson: When did he say that?

Mr. Alexander: I hear the Minister of Agriculture. The Prime Minister said it and he meant it. Hopefully, a lot of people will take him at his word and let him know how many lumps they can stand. All I ask is how many lumps the middle man can stand. His land taxes are going up; he is paying a greater chunk as a result of the white paper on tax reform; he is being emasculated in terms of whatever contribution he receives from this government.

As far as I am concerned, one and a half million people will not be covered by this plan. If this is the type of just society we have to live in, it is not fair. A man is prepared to stand up and be his brother's keeper, but there always comes a time when he has to think about himself and his family. He will find that the government does not have a heart, compassion or the understanding that he who pays the shot must be recognized at some time. If the government does not get that message I have no hesitation or reservation in stating that the polls will let them know how many lumps these people can take.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: Another thing that bothers me about this act is its complexity. I would not even attempt to explain to anyone in this House how an individual will get his money or how much he will get. If you think the Unemployment Insurance Act was beyond immediate comprehension, wait until you get into this act! What concerns me about this bill, and I say this with a great deal of respect, is that it is being directed toward people who perhaps are not adequately prepared to complete the forms that are necessary for this measure to come to fruition.

Are we building up a bureaucratic society second to none? It is amazing. Do you know how much we now spend? We spend $16 billion a year. Without having looked into this too deeply, I say that a lot of it goes into unnecessary bureaucratic administration. This comes through acts which are imperfect and complicated such as the Unemployment Insurance Act and this one.

Mr. Olson: You sound like an old Tory.

Mr. Alexander: Whose voice was that? Was it the member for Windsor. There is one thing about him, his voice is loud; it carries.

I get back to my point. There is something about this bill which disturbs me. We who are involved with the standing committee will have to look into this matter very profoundly, because mistakes have been made in the Opportunities for Youth program and LIP. I am not going to talk about the merits of those programs; that can be done at another time. I am talking about the forms that will have to be completed in order to be able to take advantage of this program. My experience leads me to believe that they will follow the same pattern as forms for the Opportunities for Youth and LIP. There will be a lot of frustrated people whom we should be helping. I do not know where the forms will come from; perhaps the regulations. In order for people to be in a position to take advantage of this scheme we must ensure that the forms are as simple as possible. The type of person who will be taking advantage of this program does not have the capacity to complete complicated forms.

I have looked at some of the forms required under the Unemployment Insurance Act. I do not claim to be very clever, but with my training I should have a sufficient awareness of how to fill out forms. With all respect, I find them highly complex. As a matter of fact, they are so complex it will lead people to frustration and lateness in filing. They are embarrassed because they do not know how to complete the forms. If they do complete them, they are wrong. Even though the government has an idea, I hope the forms they bring out will be understandable, concise and relatively easy to complete. In this way we will be helping people, not throwing forms at them which they cannot understand.

I want to move into other areas. I read an editorial in the September 20, 1971, edition of the Financial Times with regard to the proposed new legislation. I quote:

> The new legislation on family allowances which Mr. John Munro presented to Parliament last week is a dreadful example of the incoherent muddling which is emerging as the hallmark of the Trudeau government.

Those are not my words. I am not trying to be nasty; I am just trying to agree. I am reading into the record—

Mr. Nowlan: Isn't that the Prime Minister's authority?

Mr. Alexander: Perhaps you are right. I quote further:

> There is little evidence there that Mr. Munro discusses anything with Mr. Mackasey or that either of them speaks to Mr. Benson. If any ministers are in communication with God, that remains a private matter: obviously they do not get the same answers.

I notice that the hon. member for Windsor laughs. This is true: the truth of this criticism can be proven in several ways. I will go through them; I will touch upon them in a significant way. I want to be concrete and concise. The principles of FISP are at odds with other social security schemes. The government has opted for universality in medicare and unemployment insurance, but selectivity in FISP. Also, the "reformed" Income Tax Act has established uniform treatment for social benefits except for FISP, which gives tax-free income.

I will touch on administration. The administration of FISP is quite unrelated to the administration of other schemes such as unemployment insurance and income tax. FISP requires a brand new set of forms to be submitted to a separate branch of bureaucracy. Recent legislative changes have therefore increased but have not been consolidated, as I pointed out earlier. I refer to the red tape and bureaucracy of income tax, unemployment insurance and now FISP programs.

Let me touch on another group which I believe is of some significance, namely, working wives. The new tax reform legislation includes deductions and measures, however imperfect, to compensate working wives for day-care costs for their children. The new Unemployment Insurance Act provides maternity benefits to be paid to pregnant women while they are away from work to have children. In contrast to these positive steps to recognize the costs of having children and to provide an incentive for remaining at a job, FISP takes a negative step: FISP penalizes working wives through its cut-off levels being based on gross family income.

Let me give an illustration. If a wife goes to work to supplement her husband's meagre salary, it is quite likely that her added income will push total family income above the cut-off level and she will therefore forfeit part or all of her family allowance cheques. For a middle-class wife this effect may not be too important, but for a family struggling to get out of poverty the loss of even a baby bonus cheque hurts. Consequently, FISP has a built-in disincentive.

This is what we on this side of the House are always talking about. It does not seem to reach the other side. We always talk about incentives. This government continually implements disincentives. I repeat, consequently FISP has a built-in disincentive for working mothers who know that they will probably lose part or all their family allowance cheque as a result.

Cut-off levels should be based on net income after deductions, rather than on gross income. This would be more meaningful. In this way personal income tax exemptions and child-care deductions will have their full power for working wives. Benefit cut-off levels could then be scaled to ensure that poverty-stricken families benefit most from family allowances. When I start to think about the cut-off levels I wonder why $4,500 was picked as the minimum and $9,100 as the maximum, the least deserving of any level.

There is an inconsistency among government departments in their assessment of when families need government support. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) takes into account the fact that it costs more to raise a child once he reached the age of 12 years, whereas the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) in his new Income Tax Act did not recognize that children cost more to raise until they reach the age of 16. This is why I wonder what is going on here. Do we ever discuss where, why and how we are going?

It seems that one minister contradicts another. As I said, the Minister of National Health and Welfare believes that a family with one child and a gross income of $4,500 or less should get maximum assistance from his department. The unfortunate thing about the white paper and the new tax bill is that through the Department of Finance a substantial tax continues to be imposed on the same person. How can we rationalize that when on one hand the Minister of National Health and Welfare says that if you earn $4,500 and have one child, you are entitled to full benefits, and on the other hand the Minister of Finance says that he will not go along with that and will tax and take all he can get? I think I have placed some points before the House for serious consideration.

We have to reward initiative. I repeat that those who have been paying the shot for so long should be rewarded now and again. As it is, it seems the only time they will ever get anything is when they reach the age of 65. When they are 65 they will get old age security benefits and, maybe, benefits under the Canada Pension Plan. Otherwise there do not seem to be any programs of which they can take advantage so that they may project themselves into the good life and feel happy about it.

This is why I say: Be careful: Do not go too far, continually taking from so many people while at the same time leaving initiative without reward. Such a policy is bound to backfire. As I walk around my riding and talk to the people with whom I am concerned and who are concerned with me, I find there is a feeling permeating society and reflected in my riding, that we had better start rewarding initiative. Otherwise, why should a person continue to break his back? Can members opposite give me one good reason why anyone should continue to break his back to pay taxes when he finds that at times his money is spent in a haphazard, irresponsible way or even squandered?

At the same time, the people I am talking about can never seem to get a loan or a subsidy. All they seem to get are tax bills. Come April 30 they will start getting demands saying: You owe us so much. At least if you do not pay you are not sent to jail. I know this because I have been delinquent: I still am, as a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker. But there are no concessions except that the authorities will take it easy and charge interest at 5 per cent.

I notice that the Minister of National Health and Welfare is in the chamber, a friend of mine from Hamilton, so I will repeat a few of the remarks I have made. I hope, in any case, he will read my speech in Hansard tomorrow. It was not a very significant speech but it was one given in all sincerity. I have tried to outline a few areas of concern. I know the minister of health understands what I am talking about when I say we ought to reward initiative. I am repeating myself, but the minister was not here and I want to bring this to his attention. We cannot go on creating disincentives which affect the man who is paying the shot. We have to show some interest in him.

I have another point with respect to the regulations. I find that the regulations which people are asked to follow up by way of forms are too complex to be understood by those we are trying to reach. I hope that the minister in his charity—he is a charitable fellow—will do something to see that these forms are made easier to fill out by those we are trying to reach.

Let me close by saying once again that if ever this country is to move toward an economy in which everyone can enjoy equal opportunity, including opportunities for employment—and I believe we all want to work; I do not accept that there is a right not to work; I do not think we are yet ready for that—it is necessary to create a climate in which the economy can develop and move into an era of profound economic growth leading to greater productivity and, hence, to full employment. Then there will be no need of provisions such as we are considering at the moment.

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, it is about four years since I heard the maiden speech of the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander). I shall never forget that speech because in it he set forth his philosophy of life. In essence, he said:

Judge not a man by the colour of his skin,
Or the way he looks or fights or sins,
Or the gods he serves or the wine he drinks,
But judge a man by the way he thinks.

Tonight we heard that philosophy reiterated by the hon. member. He spoke with clarity and conciseness and he certainly convinced many of us on this side with regard to the points he put forward. I could add an addendum to that by saying that if an NDP member is not elected during the next election in Hamilton West, then I hope the present member is re-elected.

On November 30, 1970, the government tabled its white paper on income security for Canadians. The purport of that report covered two main subjects. One concerned the treatment of pensions for senior citizens and the second covered family allowances. Many of us were prepared to forgive the minister at that time for not sending the white paper to the committee for study in depth, because in the month of December, 1970, the government introduced its old age security legislation. Well do we remember the matters contained in that legislation in 1970, and more especially the 42 cents increase given our pensioners, right at Christmas time. Not only did the government make a generous increase of 42 cents, but it froze the cost of living clause at 2 per cent for those who were going to receive the $80.

That was the first benefit received by our senior citizens from the white paper on income security for Canadians. Many of us were very unhappy about this because at that time the minister was introducing a principle to which many of us are strongly opposed, namely, the principle of selectivity as opposed to that of universality. I am sure that if Mackenzie King were here tonight—and he may be in spirit—he would recall the legislation for which he was responsible in 1944 which introduced for the first time in the history of Canadian social welfare the principle of universality. He or his spirit would shed buckets of tears at what the government he once led has now done to the principle of universality.

Not only has the minister dropped this principle from the old age security legislation but he is now attempting through Bill C-170 once more to drop the principle of universality in favour of selectivity in the field of family allowances. I am rather amazed that the minister would introduce such a principle. He comes from the city of Hamilton, a city composed of working people with a wide scale of income. The minister is now adopting the principle that payment of family allowance shall be determined by family income. It is, in effect, a polarization of income which determines whether or not a person is entitled to family allowance.

Although we have polarization taking place in other parts of the world, now is not the time to introduce this principle in Canada. In fact, the government has been strongly opposed to polarization in many fields, such as the different nationalities within our country, the cultural rights of the people and also linguistic rights. Many of us on this side have not been very proud of the government in this respect. We do not think that polarization of nationalities, culture and language should be allowed to take place. Yet while the government adopts this principle of polarization it rejects the principle of universality in the payment of family allowances, and I suggest that such rejection is not worthy of support.

Some of our speakers have indicated the results that will flow from this type of legislation. When the legislation giving the 42 cents increase to our pensioners was passed in December, 1970, as well as the legislation that gave certain old age pensioners the guaranteed income supplement, certain consequences flowed and from that time on all hon. members have felt these consequences. First of all, there was a feeling of ill will on the part of those now being paid the $80 because the 2 per cent cost of living increase was not provided at that time. There has been a feeling of ill will on the part of those in receipt of the guaranteed income supplement because some people, by not declaring income, may be able to obtain more than their rightful share of the supplement. As a result, we do not have the type of atmosphere we want to create for our old age pensioners. Instead, we have had divisiveness, ill feeling among the different classes of old age pensioners and resentment, on the part of many who do not receive it, of those who do.

I suggest the same consequences will flow from the family allowance legislation now before the House. We will have a division of our working people. There will be a polarization in that some people will get none of the benefits of family allowances yet will pay a large proportion of the cost. If there is one thing we do not need, Mr. Speaker, it is division among the working people who are dependent on their income. I am rather surprised that the minister would seek to introduce this legislation at this time. I shall continue in depth tomorrow afternoon, if I may call it ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I believe the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) seeks the floor on a point of order.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, if I could have consent of the House to revert to motions I should like to make reference to the Standing Committee on Public Accounts and to the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization, both of which matters have already been cleared through private discussion.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that the minister shall have leave to revert to motions?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Mr. Gilbert.]

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS

MEASURE TO SET OUT FUNCTIONS AND POWERS OF THE AUDITOR GENERAL

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson):

That the Standing Committee on Public Accounts be authorized to prepare a draft bill concerning the office, functions and powers of the Auditor General.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Motion agreed to.

PROCEDURE AND ORGANIZATION

RADIO AND TELEVISION BROADCASTING OF HOUSE AND COMMITTEES—REFERENCE OF EVIDENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson):

That the question of radio and television broadcasting of the proceedings of the House and its committees, including the legal, procedural and technical aspects thereof, and the evidence collected by the committee during the past session in relation to these matters, be referred to the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Motion agreed to.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

MANPOWER—LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—SUGGESTED ONGOING PROGRAM TO ASSIST PEOPLE IN ISOLATED COMMUNITIES

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, some time ago I asked a question in the House of the acting minister of manpower and immigration regarding consideration being given to extending the Local Initiatives Program. I asked the question in sincerity because in my opinion this is the first time citizens of Canada in remote and isolated communities have been able to use their initiative on behalf of their communities to create employment opportunities for those in need.

However, through lack of communication in the past many people in remote areas were unable to involve themselves in the programs of the government. This is the reason I should like to have this program extended. Unfortunately, the minister merely replied that the province of Newfoundland received its fair share. I am not satisfied with this answer because regardless of the fair share of anyone in Canada, there are unemployed people in remote and isolated communities of Newfoundland who have never had the opportunity to participate in government programs because of lack of communication. The people in the isolated communities of my province do not receive the message of government programs. I feel communication is vital in this regard in spite of the weaknesses in some of the programs.

In spite of the fact that the Local Initiatives Program has done some good, I believe the government has failed to help those who are unemployed and are in greatest need. There has seemed to be lack of control by the government over the program in respect of going to the Manpower centres and finding out who indeed is in need of a job. I give the government credit for introducing the program, but if the government is prepared to provide such a program I feel it should follow through to ensure that it benefits those who are in greatest need.

I spoke to the parliamentary secretary and it was indicated to me that some of these programs may be ongoing. I believe the program is good and I feel there is no reason it should not be continued so that people whose programs have been disapproved could have the opportunity to receive the benefit of an ongoing program which would create employment opportunities for those who are vitally in need in my province. I can only say I hope consideration will be given to some other type of program such as the Local Initiatives Program.

People in one community ask me why a project has been approved in another community as being a good one while in their community a similar project has been disapproved. I can only say to them that this is because many programs were submitted and there was lack of control. I believe the parliamentary secretary or the minister would wish to clarify this situation so that I may give proper answers to these people. I say, again, this is a good program but for some reason people across Canada wonder why they cannot participate while others have an opportunity to participate in a similar program. I ask the parliamentary secretary to clarify this matter and give me an indication of what the future holds for these Canadians.

Mr. Ray Perrault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the spokesman for the Progressive Conservative party for the strong support he has given to the Local Initiatives Program. This program is just that; it is a program based on local initiatives. Despite reports to the contrary, the Salvation Army was given a grant in Burlington, Ontario, for a very worth-while social development program.

It is a fact that for every project in a metropolitan centre there are many other projects designed to provide employment and improve facilities in literally hundreds of small towns, villages and rural crossroad communities all across the country. We have projects such as the building of a community centre at 100 Mile House in the B.C. interior, land clearing and repairs to housing at Watson Lake in the Yukon, construction of a terminal building at Haven Settlement in the Northwest Territories, establishment of a fishing co-op at Savage Island in northern Manitoba, construction of a community wharf at White Bay, Newfoundland, community rink improvements at Forchu, Nova Scotia.

The list goes on and on. Indeed, while I have many more examples such as those I have given, I cannot give the whole list of perhaps not very glamorous but nevertheless very important contributions to community betterment and alleviation of unemployment represented by the hundreds of projects put forward by community groups in isolated settlements which have been accepted under this program. I cannot give the list simply because what may be regarded as an isolated community by people in one place may be seen as the very heart of civilization to those living somewhere else. But one thing I can tell the House is that LIP has been very successful in directing aid to pockets of unemployment wherever they exist in the country.

It is common knowledge, of course, that in absolute numbers most of our unemployed live in cities of 50,000, 100,000 or more population. But while the numbers are not so great, it is unfortunately often true that some of the more remote rural areas suffer proportionately much higher rates of unemployment in winter than do the cities. LIP has been very conscious of this problem in its allocations and, since it is a program primarily concerned with providing useful work for the unemployed, it has concentrated a good deal of effort in stimulating proposals for worth-while projects in smaller centres where unemployment is high.

In terms of the population in those geographic areas served by the various Canada Manpower centres, the centres having the highest rates of unemployment, which had an estimated 30 per cent of the country's total unemployed, received nearly 40 per cent of project approvals and funds. Those with the lowest unemployment rates, which generally tended to be the more populous places, the Canada Manpower centre areas having the lowest rates of unemployment in the country, accounted for 25 per cent of total unemployment and received 15 per cent of project approvals and funds. Of course, in all areas some rationing of funds was necessary and not every project could be approved. But given the emphasis I have described, an emphasis which was maintained for reasons which I hope I have made clear, applications from rural areas were given consideration commensurate with local unemployment conditions.

New employment creating programs are under consideration and the experience gained in the Local Initiatives Program, both as to the source of the applications received and the type of projects put forward, will be taken into account in this consideration.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. The hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Knight).

TRADE—DISPLAY OF CANADIAN AGRICULTURAL PROJECTS AT PEKING FAIR

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): I assure you, Mr. Speaker, that you shall not hear such rapid-fire speaking as that to which you have just listened. I suppose it works on the old theory that if you talk fast enough somebody will believe you.

I asked the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) last fall a question pertaining to the China Solo Fair and at that time I did not receive the answer that I was seeking. The minister announced in a news release that Canada was going to have an important China Solo Fair which would be the first fair at which Canadian goods would be the only goods on display.

I then asked the minister if there would be any attempt to show Canadian agricultural products at this fair. At that time there was no answer. Therefore, in the new session I once again asked the question and the minister suggested that there were 250 companies or groups desirous of participating in the China Solo Fair. He did not outline what those companies were and whether any of them were connected with the agricultural industry. The information I am seeking through my questions is simple: Who has applied? Will there be a display of our agricultural products?

In his answer the other day the minister suggested that the Canadian Wheat Board has a direct line of communication with a purchasing agency in China. I think a number of points should be made about that type of answer. For example, one large sale of wheat should not ignore the possibility of further development of sales on a long-term basis. This is particularly true now that the Americans are developing friendship with the Chinese and say that they will trade in non-strategic goods and products. That, to me, means agricultural products, making the Chinese Solo Fair that much more important in terms of displaying our agricultural products.

I am concerned that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce assumes that there is only one farm product to be sold to the Chinese. I point out to him that there are a variety of products such as beef, rapeseed oil, mutton, dairy products, sunflower seed oil, other grains, etc., that we should display and which would be of interest to the Chinese buying companies.

In terms of the answers I have received, I wonder whether the government has ever considered the difficulty involved in having one minister in charge of the Wheat Board and another in charge of trade and commerce, when at times those two gentlemen have jurisdiction in the same area of trade affecting the sale of Canadian agricultural products. I ask the government that the Canadian people be informed of who has applied and who will be going to the Chinese Solo Fair. I hope the agricultural sector will not be ignored because of the minister's preoccupation with the industrial sector.

[Mr. Perrault.]

Mr. Bruce Howard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, let me assure the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Knight) that Canada will be represented in all important aspects of its commercial and agricultural sectors at the Solo Canadian Trade Fair in Peking.

Mr. Knight: What about agricultural products?

Mr. Howard (Okanagan Boundary): I included agricultural products. Canada is in the position of going to China as a guest of the Chinese government, and all exhibits at the fair will be entered in consultation with the Chinese government. Exhibits will include grains, oils seeds, forage seeds, tobacco, livestock and semen, and poultry breeding stock. We will have a very large exhibit in this area that will be backed up by technical experts with films and teams of experts who will be available to talk to the Chinese specialists in these fields.

We expect that our specialists will also be touring areas of China which are involved in agricultural production and areas that are of special interest to Canadian producers. We hope that as a result of this presentation we will be able to enlarge our sphere of influence in the agricultural field in China. But I emphasize that these arrangements with the Chinese government must be carried out in consultation with the Chinese with respect to the selection of products that will be shown.

I repeat that we will be represented in the agricultural field. The displays will be made by representatives of national producer and trade associations and marketing boards, and not by private companies as in the case of manufactured products. In this way we feel we will have the most effective representatives there, that we will be able to obtain immediate business in this area and will be able to open up areas of trade that will be of long-term significance for Canada and Canada's farmers.

YOUTH—OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH—REQUEST FOR OTHER PROGRAMS TO ALLEVIATE UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I think it is typical of our situation that in again raising the question of employment for youth this summer the minister has not thought it important to be here to deal with the questions that I have been putting to him week after week. It is typical, in view of his non-answer to my question this afternoon and to questions over the last weeks and months that have attempted to find out what the government's answer is to the growing problem and national crisis of summer employment for the nation's youth.

On March 9, commenting on the Cohen report which followed last summer's Opportunities for Youth and other programs and which pointed out a major failure to solve student unemployment programs, I asked the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) if he was now exploring with the provinces or with business and other authorities further measures that might be taken to alleviate the very serious student unemployment that will occur this coming summer. The minister replied:

> Mr. Speaker, we are exploring all possible means to reduce unemployment.

I would not even dignify that response by calling it an intelligent or concerned answer. On March 22, again inquiring what would happen to the many project submissions that could not be accepted by Opportunities for Youth—some 16,000—I asked:

> In view of the fact the minister indicated earlier that some 20,000 opportunities for youth projects have now been submitted and only a fraction of these will be accepted, is there any specific program underway to consult with other agencies that might well implement some of these very worthwhile projects?

The minister replied: "Yes, Mr. Speaker". Again today, in a series of specific questions to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) I asked a question about this coming summer and expected massive youth unemployment but did not receive an answer.

The government, and particularly the Secretary of State, seem to be content to play parliamentary games at a time when more and more young people are seeking employment on a labour market that has neither the depth nor the scope to accommodate a substantial portion of them. It now appears clear that there may be over a quarter of a million young people with no chance of employment. The reticence and lack of concern by the ministry and this government is shocking. This is difficult to understand because as far back as last fall, one series of unemployment figures which was published showed a higher proportion of unemployed young people between the ages of 14 and 24. The Prime Minister seemed surprised and disturbed by this.

The Prime Minister obviously had not been reading Economic Council of Canada reports over the years which have been consistently warning the government to expect this influx of young people into the labour force as the baby boom of the 1940s reached the working age level. In September, 1969, the Economic Council of Canada reported:

> There is a need to develop much more effective measures to bridge the present disturbing gap between school enrolment and productive employment, especially with very large numbers of young people emerging from the educational system.

That can be said both of those coming permanently on the labour market and those who are seeking seasonal employment in order to further their education. The government is still not aware of the figures relating to lack of employment. There will be over 1,300,000 young people available this summer, an increase of 100,000 over last year. How well did the government do last year? According to this evaluation report tabled last Friday, about 75 per cent of the young people seeking work last summer found it in the private sector. Of the remaining 25 per cent, about 5 per cent found employment through federal government expenditure, which leaves about 20 per cent who found no employment. That is about 217,000 young people unemployed last summer. If we add the projected increase of 100,000, it is not difficult to assume that there will be over a quarter of a million young people unemployed this summer.

In trying to brush this off last November 11 the Prime Minister suggested that many young people would just as soon bum around. I have news for the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State: those who hitch-hiked around then or now are not counted as seeking work or as statistics for unemployment. Who knows how many simply turned to bumming around because there was no promise of employment? The Prime Minister's ability to slough off serious issues of work opportunity constitutes, in the vernacular, a bum steer, a steer from which our young people deserve escape.

Mr. Bell: Shame!

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): The minister seemed reluctant to be quite so eulogistic about opportunities for this year, and rightly so. He must now realize that Opportunities for Youth is no solution to the problem of growing youth unemployment in this country. Close to 200,000 young people will willingly spend time and energy in thinking out proposals. They will submit them in the expectation of seeing those projects accepted. How many of those young people, and there are almost 200,000 of them, will be fortunate? How many projects will receive favourable consideration within a few weeks? I suggest that less than 30,000 will be in that position. Therefore, over 160,000 young people at that late date will be forced to find other means of employment.

That is a cruel if not a close to dishonest way, of dealing with young people who are anxious to further their own position and prepare themselves for the service of this country in a social and economic way. This entails a waste of youthful talent and a serious waste of youthful expectations and is bound to create growing frustration and cynicism.

We face a major dilemma in this country, one which this government has not yet recognized. We need an over-all strategy for coping with the situation. Hopefully, through that strategy some leadership can be shown by this government. Today there is no evidence of such leadership, which is necessary for co-ordinating the activities of various levels of government and of various bodies, public and private. Only with such bodies acting together can we put together an over-all plan. Only that way, if we act on a long-term basis, can we help our young people to work constructively for this country and at the same time for their own advancement, and help them avoid that despair which the leadership of the government and of the minister has not alleviated.

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the minister was in the House today but he has to be absent tonight and tomorrow on important government business in Calgary, the announcement of which I am sure everyone will be interested in tomorrow. If my colleague wishes, as a courtesy gesture I will give my answer in English instead of in French as I usually do.

In response to the question of initiatives being taken by the government to tackle the problem of student unemployment, the hon. member previously had an extensive exchange with the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) on this question in the miscellaneous estimates committee on March 17. I do not see the need to comment further on steps we have taken to secure the co-operation of the provinces in an all-government effort to deal with student summer unemployment.

With regard to the private sector, it has become apparent that individual companies and agencies are interested in funding projects which, although extremely worth while, are not eligible for funding by Opportunities for Youth. Thus, a special committee is working this year to follow up these initial contacts made with the private sector and also to seek out and encourage other companies or agencies who might be interested in such a venture. Where possible, projects are referred to these sponsors.

However, the summer programs which are funded by the Department of the Secretary of State should not in any way be misconstrued as representing total government action towards alleviating student summer unemployment. Appreciating that the traditional source of student employment lies with the private sector, the Department of Manpower will continue to work with the Canadian Chamber of Commerce in its Operation Placement program. The department's role will be to encourage co-operation among all the Chamber's 125,000 members across the country to develop local campaigns and promote community involvement in providing summer employment.

In addition, $1,773,000 has been allocated to fund 132 special Canada Manpower centres for students. These centres will be staffed by 500 students and will be able to assist both students seeking employment in industry, and industry seeking students to fill job openings. I might also point to a new program this summer in the Department of Manpower—the inter-regional student summer employment program. Through this program students seeking employment in other provinces will be assisted by government.

The government is aware that this program will not by itself solve the problem of student unemployment. However, both in the example it sets and by the model it portrays it represents a major effort by the government to involve the provinces, the private sector and other authorities in a co-ordinated and comprehensive response to student unemployment problems.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.27 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, March 28, 1972

The House met at 2 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

HOUSE OF COMMONS

EASTER ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council) moved:

That when this House adjourns on Wednesday, March 29, 1972, it shall stand adjourned until Thursday, April 13, 1972, provided always that if it appears to the satisfaction of Mr. Speaker, after consultation with the government, that the public interest requires that the House should meet at an earlier time during the adjournment, Mr. Speaker may give notice that he is so satisfied, and thereupon the House shall meet at the time stated in such notice, and shall transact its business as if it had been duly adjourned to that time;

And that, in the event of Mr. Speaker's being unable to act owing to illness or other cause, the Deputy Speaker or the Deputy Chairman of Committees shall act in his stead for the purpose of reconvening the House.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, there are just a few words I should like to say on this motion which has been placed before us by the President of the Privy Council. We have no objection to the motion, which calls for a two-week recess beginning at six o'clock tomorrow night, but I think that the President of the Privy Council at some point ought to take us into his confidence and tell us what is involved, particularly since we are coming back on a Thursday rather than on a Monday as is usually the case following an Easter break. In view of the fact that Thursday, April 13, is the day when President Nixon arrives in Ottawa, it seems only fair that we should be told what plans the government has in mind, particularly for the House of Commons.

My other comment, Mr. Speaker, also arises out of the proposal for a slightly extended recess at this time. With the speculation abroad about a general election, it seems to me that the government might also take us into its confidence in that matter. I realize that if I were to ask the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) directly—and that is the way you like us to put questions—when the election is going to be held, he probably would not be as definite as some of us have been. But, Mr. Speaker, I remind the government that on certain occasions in the past when a general election has been more or less certain the government has told the House what its plans were so that the business of the House could be arranged for the last week or two in an orderly fashion. It seems to me, if the government is not prepared to make such a statement with respect to this motion, that it should, when we come back after the Easter recess, make a clear statement as early as possible and tell us what the actual position is. If the election is going to be put off until next fall or next year, let the government say so categorically. But if it is planning to hold the election at the end of June, I suggest we ought to be told so that the business of the House can be dealt with in an orderly fashion during the last week or ten days that we are here.

• (1410)

Mr. Hees: You guys just don't know when the election will be. You cannot make up your minds.

Motion agreed to.

FISHERIES

TABLING OF EXCHANGES OF NOTES BETWEEN CANADA AND DENMARK, THE UNITED KINGDOM AND PORTUGAL AND AGREEMENT BETWEEN CANADA AND FRANCE

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I wish to table four sets of documents dated March 27 consisting of an exchange of notes between the government of Canada and the government of Denmark concerning fisheries relations between the two countries, an agreement between Canada and France on their mutual fishing relations, an exchange of notes between the government of Canada and the government of the United Kingdom concerning fisheries relations between the two countries, and an exchange of notes between the government of Canada and the government of Portugal concerning fisheries relations between the two countries.

Mr. McGrath: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I object most strenuously to the procedure being followed today by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Members of parliament are not being given the same rights as the press in this regard. I point out to Your Honour that yesterday afternoon at five o'clock members of the press were briefed on these four important treaties by senior officials of the Department of External Affairs.

An hon. Member: Shame!

Mr. McGrath: It is regrettable that the same privilege has not been extended to members of parliament. I want to be on record as being opposed to the procedure now being followed, and I wonder what is happening to the concept of responsible government.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, may I say a word on the same point of order. Yesterday afternoon, as the hon. member suggested, I signed agreements with the High Commissioner and the ambassadors of the countries concerned. I did not feel it desirable to do this in secret since we had nothing to hide. At the first opportunity I have tabled these documents in the House of Commons.

TRADE

TABLING OF TELEGRAM TO CANADIAN COPPER PRODUCERS HAVING CONTRACTS WITH JAPANESE PURCHASERS

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 41(2) I wish to lay on the table of the House the text of a telegram sent by me, as Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, to Canadian copper producers who have contract arrangements with Japanese purchasers.

NATIONAL SECURITY

STATEMENT ON MATTER INVOLVING ANTON SOBOTKA

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, hon. members are fully aware that there is constant work and vigilance in Canada on security matters and that at the same time it is not customary to comment on these matters or on this work. Indeed, the success of security work requires this restraint.

There has been recent speculation concerning a security matter associated with the name Anton Sobotka. This speculation is based on a fictional account which itself was based in part on real facts, and which formed a part of training material for our security work.

I should reassure hon. members that, while the case is interesting, it bears little resemblance to the colourful speculation about it. Indeed, the espionage depicted is espionage at a low level, and the case is one of effective counter-espionage work in discovering it rather than a defection.

Having said that, I hope that hon. members will agree with the ordinary procedure of avoiding comment on security matters. In the ordinary course the Leader of the Opposition is briefed on security matters. In this case, as Acting Solicitor General, I would be glad to discuss in full detail with the leaders of the opposition parties the training material to which I have referred.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, this place is getting to be somewhat like Alice in Wonderland. We get the brush-off from the Prime Minister one day and then the next day we get the statement that the Minister of Justice has just made.

Mr. Danson: And is the Mad Hatter now speaking?

Mr. Stanfield: The minister said that the speculation is based on a fictional account which itself was based in part on real facts. That sounds like the government's version of its own record.

[Mr. Sharp.]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: I will, of course, take up the minister's proposal to discuss this matter with him. But I want to make it very clear that I will do so on the basis that I do not tie my own hands with regard to information that may come from other sources.

The minister also made the statement that in the ordinary course of events the Leader of the Opposition is briefed on security matters. I do not want anybody to get the impression from this that I have been briefed on this or, indeed, on any other matter relating to espionage since I have been Leader of the Opposition.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

TRADE

STEPS TO INCREASE EXPORTS TO EUROPEAN ECONOMIC COMMUNITY

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the very sharp decline in Canada's trade with the European Economic Community during the past year and in view of reports from within the community of very strong pressures in each country to increase manufacturing, which of course will make it more and more difficult for countries to trade within the community, will the minister advise the House whether Canada is taking special additional steps at this time to increase our trade with the EEC, and will he take the first opportunity on motions to outline what those steps are?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, statistics are one of the strong points of my hon. friend, but he always neglects to digest them. If you look at the exports to Europe you will realize that the picture is not as he indicated. In 1971 we had a slower growth. This was due to the fact that in 1970 we had a rather extraordinary growth. This having been said, the efforts of my department were fully developed yesterday at a trade conference here in Ottawa to which 20 of our trade commissioners were recalled from Europe in order to advise and receive advice from Canadian businessmen. This is only one of many things we are doing to enhance our trade position with Europe.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: In view of the fact the minister considers that a 5 per cent increase in trade, which is only about one-third of what is necessary, is satisfactory, and in view of the fact the steps he has outlined, as he knows perfectly well, are completely inadequate, will he get his head out of the sand and face reality instead of thinking of things as he would like them to be?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's question is a suggestion. I do not think it is procedurally acceptable. I believe the hon. member for Waterloo has a supplementary.

INDUSTRY

PROVISION OF NEW INDUSTRIAL STRATEGY

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce whether his department is working on a new industrial strategy for Canada, and whether this new industrial strategy includes a redefined role for Canadian international corporations?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Yes, Mr. Speaker, we are working on that. I am afraid the hon. member will have to wait for some time before he is given a chance to see it in proper shape.

Mr. Stanfield: I should like to ask the minister whether it is the policy of the department to encourage Canadian corporations to establish subsidiaries within the European Common Market for the purpose of increasing sales there.

Mr. Pepin: Yes, Mr. Speaker, when this is a way of enhancing Canada's national interests.

Mr. Saltsman: Can the minister give us some indication of when we might expect a report on the new industrial strategy he is preparing?

Mr. Pepin: I have already provided this information. I will send the reference to the hon. member.

TRADE

UNITED STATES DISC PROGRAM—DETERMINATION OF AREAS AFFECTED—USE OF COUNTERVAILING DUTIES

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Since the minister has so far failed to enunciate any policy in response to the implementation of the DISC program in the United States because of the fact that there was not sufficient information as to what was being done under this program, and since the word from Washington now is that some 190 corporations have applied for tax status under DISC, I want to ask the minister whether his department is doing any research to determine which areas of our trade will be affected, and whether any countervailing duties will be applied in these particular areas?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I suggest that anybody reading Hansard tomorrow will find a good justification for not having done what is suggested, in the first sentence of that question. In view of the fact that we do not have sufficient information it has been difficult to devise a policy. I thought that was a good remark, good justification for not having devised a policy. Nobody has that information. The hon. member referred to 190 companies which might use DISC facilities. This is a figure which is sometimes given. Sometimes the figure 100 is mentioned; at other times it is 300. No information is available, to my knowledge, as to which companies are included in that number. There is not even information on many points of importance concerning the manner in which the DISC program will be implemented. It is still vague. So the hon. member is right: we cannot devise a policy unless we know all the facts.

Mr. Douglas: The purpose of my question is to ask the minister whether he or his officials are making any serious attempt to find out the names of the corporations which have applied under DISC, what those corporations are, and especially whether any car manufacturers or manufacturers of car parts have made application. Has the minister any of this information, and, if not, when he gets this information will he make a statement in the House outlining the government's policy with respect to countervailing duties?

Mr. Pepin: If the hon. member would care to look at past copies of Hansard he would find that I have already answered this question. My information is wholly hearsay; it is not based on documentation but hearsay, consultations and conversations we have had with the Canadian sectors of industry, and is that automobile manufacturers do not plan to use the DISC facilities and that a small number of parts makers are supposed to have filed applications under DISC, but a very small number indeed. My information from the parts makers in Canada—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to both the hon. member who asked the question and the minister who replied that we are taking a little too long on each individual question. I would remind hon. members that there appeared to be agreement yesterday that we might make an effort today to give an opportunity to those in the back rows who wish to participate in the question period.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the fact that last year's figures reveal an alarming increase of 20 per cent in bankruptcies in middle-class industry and business, and in view of the very serious ramifications that the DISC program might have on this segment of industry, can the minister not say whether countervailing duties have been considered by the government, and will he not consider making a statement on this matter?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, my Bible is still what was said at the time by the then Minister of Finance, now Minister of National Defence, namely, that when a proper assessment of the effect of this program on the Canadian economy has been made, the necessary countermeasures will be taken.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby on a supplementary and then will go to the hon. member for Abitibi. I point out we have not yet completed the first round of questions and we should try to get on.

UNITED STATES DISC PROGRAM—POSSIBILITY OF CANADIAN LEGISLATION TO COUNTER EFFECTS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the fact the government House leader in the Senate is reported to have said in a speech in Washington, I believe two days ago, that in fact the government does have detailed legislation prepared and ready to implement in order to deal with the effects of the DISC legislation of the United States, are we to understand from what the minister has said in reply to a question asked by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands that the legislation that the government House leader of the Senate was referring to—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will allow the minister to reply briefly to the question, but the hon. member knows that the rules do not make it possible to quote what is said in the other place for the purpose of asking a question. I have the impression that this is what is being done at the present time. I believe there is good reason for this rule. However, since the hon. member has asked the question the minister might reply briefly.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): The government representative in the Senate was speaking in another place, Washington, so perhaps we could make an exception here. It shows how well informed the government leader in the Senate is. He is aware—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister's reply shows how well founded the rule is, because I suggest that in replying to questions it is not in order for the minister to refer to statements made in the other place.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Broadbent: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Broadbent: I am sure Your Honour misheard me. I did not refer to comments made by the government House leader in the other place but to a speech that the government House leader of the other place made in Washington, with direct reference to government policy. Therefore I repeat the question and would ask the minister to answer it.

Mr. Speaker: I doubt whether that makes the question any more in order. The hon. member knows that speeches made outside the House can be quoted as support for questions only to ascertain whether such statements represent government policy. Because we are running short of time, if the minister has anything to add to his previous answer he will be recognized for that purpose, but I am anxious to give an opportunity to a representative of the party to the extreme left of the House to ask a question.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, may I just repeat that the government House leader in the Senate is aware of a number of things that could be done, and that is what I thought he was referring to.

MANPOWER

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—SUGGESTED EXTENSION OF DEADLINE FOR COMPLETION OF PROJECTS

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Can he tell the House whether he has accepted the suggestion of the Union of Municipalities and the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities that the deadline for the Local Initiatives Program be extended from May 31 to June 30?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the responsible minister is still of the same opinion that he held in the House, that is to say that, for the time being, he has no intention of granting an extension and that, should the matter be considered, a statement would be made in due course.

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—PROVISION OF ADDITIONAL FUNDS

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

In view of the large number of extremely serious and worthy projects presented by the municipalities and various other bodies, can we hope the government will add millions of dollars to the amounts already allotted, thus enabling government services to accept those projects?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, to my mind the hon. member should not entertain high hopes in that regard. We have already earmarked considerable sums for that program and the possibility of increasing them is rather slim.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCES—POSSIBILITY OF PARTICIPATION BY MUNICIPALITIES

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister.

In view of the fact that, in their brief, the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities seem to blame the federal government for a lack of consultation, does the Prime Minister intend to consult the provinces in the near future to discuss the possibility of negotiating with municipalities as far as pollution, taxation, transportation and industrial promotion are concerned?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, a year and a half ago, the federal government at a conference held in Winnipeg and attended by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs then responsible for Urban Affairs suggested tripartite meetings and that proposal was discussed on several occasions. I know that early in April the Minister of State in charge of Urban Affairs is also meeting his provincial opposite numbers to continue this discussion. Yesterday, at the meeting of the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities, I announced that we hoped there would be a tripartite conference before the end of the year.

MANPOWER

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—PROVISION OF ADDITIONAL FUNDS

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. Is it the intention of the government to allot any further funds to the local initiatives program, and, in particular, are the recent reports that the government intends to allot a further $500 million to this fund accurate?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have the impression that this question has just been asked by another hon. member. If I misunderstood, perhaps the Prime Minister could reply again to the hon. member's question.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I think my question is more specific.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, my question was whether or not the reports that the government intends to allot a further $500 million to this fund are accurate?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the only accurate thing about the question is that it does indicate a great deal of enthusiasm on all sides for this program.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate for a last supplementary and then recognize the right hon. member for Prince Albert.

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—REINSTITUTION THIS SUMMER WITH REDEFINITION OF CRITERIA

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister whether the government plans to reinstitute the local initiatives program this summer with some redefinition of criteria and, if so, when can we expect an announcement in this regard?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid I did not hear the question.

Mr. Lundrigan: I will repeat it, Mr. Speaker. Does the government plan to reinstitute the local initiatives program this summer with some redefinition of criteria and, if so, when can we expect an announcement?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, this question was raised several times last week. I do not know where the hon. member was but I think it has been answered many times.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest we are running short of time.

Mr. Hees: Ask the Minister of Transport.

Mr. Speaker: If we have time we will try to return to this important matter. I understand the hon. member is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Last week we had our own local initiatives program going in Newfoundland; it was an anti-pollution program.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lundrigan: I did not hear the Prime Minister's answer.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The right hon. member for Prince Albert.

CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

QUEBEC LEGISLATION ABOLISHING OATH OF ALLEGIANCE FOR MEMBERS OF LEGISLATURE—SUGGESTED INTERVENTION BY GOVERNOR IN COUNCIL

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the right hon. Prime Minister as the Queen's first minister. As the legislature of the province of Quebec is abolishing or has abolished the oath of allegiance for its members, which clearly contravenes that part of the constitution embodied in the British North America Act, does the Governor in Council intend to request that His Honour the Lieutenant Governor reserve royal assent pending the signification of the Governor in Council in respect of this measure?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I must confess that I do not know whether this has been done, as the right hon. member suggests. If it has been done and if it clearly contravenes the constitution, this action of the Quebec government is not valid and therefore we do not have to take action on it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, this matter cannot be brushed aside like that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is the constitution going to be upheld by this government or is it not? That is the question I ask the Prime Minister. If it is to be upheld, is the Lieutenant Governor to be asked to withhold royal assent pending the signification of the Governor in Council? Otherwise, the constitution is entirely swept aside.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, on problems in respect of the reservation of provincial laws I believe it has been the policy of all governments in the past 30 years not to have recourse to this paternalistic and undemocratic method. I could go on to reassure the right hon. member—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: Really, I am astounded to hear all the oh, oh's from the Conservative party members, Mr. Speaker. Our position is that if any law of a provincial or the federal government is anti-constitutional, it is up to the courts to decide rather than for the federal government to disallow, any more than it is for the Imperial Parliament to disallow provincial laws.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: In other words—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I have to interpret the Prime Minister because the ambiguity of his statement requires some clarification. I ask him whether any province is to be allowed to defy the constitution when there is no recourse against this kind of thing in the courts as the government argued in the language bill appeal raised by former Mr. Justice Thorson?

[Mr. Speaker.]

TRADE

COPPER—SUGGESTED PROTEST TO JAPAN CONCERNING EFFORTS OF JAPANESE BUYERS TO CHANGE CONTRACTS

Mr. Len Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources in connection with the document he tabled today regarding a study of the contractual relations between Canadian copper concentrate producers for the Japanese market and Japanese buyers. Many of the British Columbia producers are in my riding. I should like to know whether the minister will make a formal protest to the Japanese government concerning the efforts of the Japanese buyers to change established agreements?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, as the Telex indicated, we have asked the Canadian copper producers not to take any further steps to renegotiate contracts with their Japanese counterparts until April 30 so the government may have an opportunity to examine the proposed changes in the contracts. We look very seriously on any prospect of unilateral and retroactive changes in basic contractual arrangements with another trading partner.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member on a supplementary question and then the hon. member for Brandon-Souris, who I believe also has a supplementary question.

Mr. Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister whether during his discussions with the copper producers in British Columbia and other areas he will explore the possibility of establishing a copper smelter in British Columbia in order that these concentrates can be processed at home?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest that the hon. member's supplementary question is rather in the form of a submission.

POST OFFICE

POSITION OF NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNIONS ON NEW CONTRACT

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question relates to another subject and I address it to the President of the Treasury Board. In light of the fact that the contract with the postal unions expired yesterday, can the minister inform the House whether the government and the postal unions are near agreement on a new contract and, if so, when will a statement be made on this important matter?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Postmaster General to reply to this question as he is more closely in touch with the matter than I am.

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, we know the contract expired yesterday, but it is normal for negotiations to continue and I can assure hon. members that the climate has been excellent. We do not necessarily anticipate signing the agreement in the immediate future, but I can assure hon. members that things are going quite well.

[English]

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Speaker, can the Postmaster General assure the House that there will be no work stoppage during the continuing negotiations and, in particular, can he inform the House whether the government has made a specific offer on wages and job security to the postal unions?

[Translation]

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, I do not think it would be in the public interest to release any statement at all concerning negotiations which are being held in camera.

PUBLIC SERVICE

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF BRYDEN REPORT ON STAFF RELATIONS ACT

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the President of the Privy Council. In view of the strong representations made to the government by the Professional Institute of the Public Service of Canada and also by the Public Service Alliance of Canada for the tabling of the Bryden report on public service legislation, can the minister say whether this report will now be made public?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I can tell the hon. member that it is not the intention of the government to make this report public. It is presently being studied within the government and if there is any legislation to be introduced when that study is concluded it will be introduced, but the report is not to be made public.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, what is the government trying to hide?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I wonder if at this point the Chair might not seek the co-operation of hon. members to give me an opportunity to see some of the hon. members who were waiting yesterday for an opportunity to ask questions. I will return to the distinguished front benchers in a moment. The hon. member for Lisgar.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

POSSIBLE SHIPMENT OF SUPPLIES FOR NORTH FROM MONTREAL RATHER THAN CHURCHILL

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that in past years the port of Churchill has been used as a resupply port for the transportation of goods into the north, has there been a federal government decision to originate the northern resupply ships not from Churchill as has been the case in the past but rather from Montreal?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this is quite a complex matter, one which I do not believe I could now have the opportunity to explain in full. I am contemplating whether it is necessary to make a statement on motions tomorrow in order to clear up some of the misunderstandings, but in any event I will make a statement available to all interested hon. members.

Mr. Murta: Since it was reported on Saturday, March 25, in the Winnipeg Free Press that tenders for the contract for sea-lifting from Montreal were to open yesterday, I would hope the minister would make a statement to the House tomorrow so that the matter can be cleared up once and for all.

Mr. Speaker: Order. That, of course, is an additional representation by the hon. member.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF MINISTER OF TRANSPORT OF ISRAEL

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I could have your indulgence for a moment to call the attention of hon. members to the presence in the distinguished visitors gallery of a distinguished parliamentarian from Israel, the Minister of Transport for Israel, the Hon. Shimon Peres.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TRANSPORT

UPDATING OF YEAR OF MANUFACTURE OF FOREIGN AUTOMOBILES—ACTION TO END PRACTICE

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport on a subject of great current interest. In view of the findings of a special committee of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs with respect to the updating of some foreign automobiles, could the minister outline the measures his department is contemplating in order to put an end to this practice, and could he give any information as to the number of vehicles that have been so updated in recent years, say over the last five years?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have some doubts about the procedural acceptability of the question. The first part of the question invites a statement that should normally be made on motions. The second part of the question seeks statistical material which should not be sought during the question period. I would hope the hon. member might consider raising the matter at the time of adjournment this evening.

OIL

POSSIBLE ROUTING OF ARCTIC OIL THROUGH MONTREAL—DELIVERY OF ALBERTA OIL TO MONTREAL BY PIPELINE—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the provocative statements made to the Richelieu Club in Montreal on March 22 by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, suggesting that Arctic oil be routed through Montreal, I wish to ask if this is an expression of new government policy, and would the minister explain it in detail to the House?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would hope that the question could be asked directly. The hon. member knows that questions should not be asked about statements made outside the House. However, we can assume that it was asked directly and allow the minister to make a brief reply.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, it is a very interesting suggestion. I would like to take a look at the full text of the speech before commenting.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Can we assume that the government is now prepared to authorize a western pipeline to Montreal for the delivery of Alberta oil to the east?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE COMMISSION

INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF NEW CHAIRMAN

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question, in the absence of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, is addressed to the acting minister. In view of the recent appointment of the chairman of the Unemployment Insurance Commission as Deputy Minister of the Department of Manpower and Immigration, can the minister inform the House when a new chairman of the commission will be appointed?

Hon. Martin P. O'Connell (Acting Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Not at present, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. MacKay.]

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, can the minister inform us whether or not this means that the services of the manpower department and the Unemployment Insurance Commission will function together or will be merged as they were several years ago?

Mr. O'Connell: They certainly will be functioning in an integrated manner, but that should not lead to the other conclusion implied in the question.

OIL

ADJUSTMENT OF LEVY FOR POLLUTION CONTROL TO PERMIT CONSTRUCTION OF SUPERPORT AT LORNEVILLE, N.B.

Hon. Hugh John Flemming (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Is the minister in a position to inform the House that his conversation with Premier Hatfield of New Brunswick has resulted in an adjustment of the oil levy, which will result in work being resumed without further delay on the deepwater superport at Lorneville in Charlotte County, New Brunswick?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I had what I am sure were mutually satisfactory meetings this morning, first of all with the mayor of Saint John and, second, with the premier of New Brunswick who, in real bipartisan fashion, brought along the Leader of the Opposition. So they were very amicable meetings all the way through. I made some proposals to him. He is now taking them back to consult with his colleagues and presumably with the oil companies concerned. These proposals essentially maintain the integrity of our original position as to the need for a levy, but we have made some concessions which I hope will make it possible for him to get on with the project.

ENERGY

POSSIBLE RESUMPTION OF DISCUSSIONS WITH UNITED STATES—PROPOSED MACKENZIE VALLEY GAS PIPELINE

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the fact he is going to Washington this week, is it his intention to discuss the resumption of energy discussions between Canada and the United States and, if this is so, would he be prepared to make a statement in this connection tomorrow before he goes to Washington?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the second part of the question may I say I will be leaving early tomorrow morning to go to Washington. The intention is to have a general tour d'horizon with the U.S. Secretary of the Interior on questions of mutual responsibility, a general survey which we hope can provide the basis for further discussions on energy and resource questions.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): In light of statements made by the minister's colleague, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, with regard to the construction of a gas pipeline along the Mackenzie River, is the minister in a position to tell the American government that we in Canada are prepared to discuss a Mackenzie pipeline on the basis of the fact that Canada is satisfied one can be built there?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I intend to point out to the Secretary of the Interior, as has been pointed out by several of my colleagues in the past, that we are in the process of completing studies which indicate that both oil and gas pipelines can be constructed down the Mackenzie River, and also to reconfirm to the Secretary of the Interior our concern about heavy shipments of oil down the west coast which could be the result of a TAPS pipeline.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the minister. Has he sought to consult with the national or any other Indian organizations preparatory to seeking discussions in Washington with respect to the construction of a pipe line across the north?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that my colleague, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, who has that responsibility, has been arranging discussions on this question.

AGRICULTURE

HOGS—SUGGESTED MODIFICATION OF REGULATIONS RESPECTING SUBSIDY PAID TO PRODUCERS

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Minister of Agriculture.

A number of pork breeders being not quite satisfied with present regulations on federal subsidies for pork, could the minister tell us whether he is prepared to recommend an amendment to these regulations, for instance lowering the 100 index so that breeders might get more benefits from this assistance policy?

• (1450)

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we do not intend to change or modify that part of the regulations. We are, however, open to look at the wide variation of marketing procedures in order to make certain that every bona fide producer gets paid.

DRUGS

INQUIRY AS TO LE DAIN COMMISSION REPORT ON CANNABIS AND THE LAW

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): I have a question for the Minister of Justice, Mr. Speaker. Is the Le Dain report dealing with cannabis and the law going to be released officially when the House is not sitting and, if not, will the report be tabled in the House immediately after the Easter recess?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, this question should more properly be directed to my colleague the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Mr. Rynard: Is the Department of Justice now studying a confidential report on this problem?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I would have to determine what the hon. member means by "confidential report". The Department of Justice at all times is studying very many subjects.

PROPOSED CLOSING OF QUAKER OATS PLANT, SASKATOON—PRIME MINISTER'S RESPONSE TO REPRESENTATIONS BY MAYOR

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the request by the mayor of Saskatoon that the Prime Minister ask the Quaker Oats Company of Saskatoon to defer action on the closing of its plant in that city pending discussion with civic, provincial and federal authorities concerning the possibility of continuing the operation of the plant, has the Prime Minister replied to the mayor and can he indicate the nature of his reply?

HOUSING

LEAKING OF REPORT ON LOW-COST HOUSING—ACCURACY OF MINISTER'S STATEMENT AS TO RESPONSIBILITY

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs with regard to the assertion he made on Friday afternoon regarding the leaking of the report of the task force on low-cost housing when he said that "whatever leaks there may be appear to be from the authors and not from CMHC". In view of the fact the authors have denied that, I should like to know whether the minister has any information upon which to found his statement?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): The advice I am given as a minister, Mr. Speaker.

An hon. Member: Oh, come on, Basford.

Mr. Stanfield: I should like to ask the minister, who made that assertion in the House, whether he can justify that statement or is he prepared to withdraw it?

Mr. Basford: I am not, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Stanfield: Since the minister is not prepared to correct this statement, may I ask whether he has now made up his mind to release the report?

Mr. Basford: I answered that question on Friday, Mr. Speaker. We are considering all of the various studies and reports that have been submitted to determine which ones are appropriate for publication. Some of the authors are working on various abridgements of them in preparation for publication and until all of that work is done there can be no decision as to which should be published.

FISHERIES

INCIDENT WITH RUSSIAN SHIP—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, on Friday last I directed a question to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Fisheries which can be found on page 1128 of Hansard. I asked whether the minister could give any details concerning an incident involving the Canadian fisheries patrol vessel Cape Freels and a Russian fishing trawler. Since that time I am in receipt of a copy of a telegram to the Minister of Fisheries from the fish association of Newfoundland protesting Russian gang fishing operations which in their opinion represent a threat to the flounder species and a great hazard to Canadian fishermen. Can the minister now report on the incident and the action he has taken to protest this method of fishing to the Russian authorities?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, we have had a careful report of the incident prepared and have made several attempts to contact the captain of the Russian fishing fleet. On each occasion he has suggested that we raise the incident at the next meeting of ICNAF in June. We have sent our fisheries patrol vessel, the Cape Freels, to the area, and it has been there more or less continuously ever since looking after Canadian interests in that part of the North Atlantic. We have also advanced an official protest to the Russian embassy through the Department of External Affairs.

STEPS TO INCREASE SURVEILLANCE OF FOREIGN FISHING VESSELS BY ARMED FORCES AIRCRAFT

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): I have a supplementary for the Minister of National Defence, Mr. Speaker. As a consequence of these incidents have any steps been taken to increase surveillance by aircraft of the Canadian Armed Forces?

[Mr. Stanfield.]

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, fisheries protection vessels are out there and air surveillance is being carried on normally by DND aircraft.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There are a number of supplementaries but we should try to make them as brief as possible because we will be running short of time. The hon. member for Annapolis Valley.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REPLACEMENT FOR ARGUS PATROL AIRCRAFT

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. In view of the fact that all planes in the Argus Squadrons 1, 2 and 3—it is the patrol aircraft in the North Atlantic—were grounded last week because of structural defects that showed up due to wear and tear and general old age—

An hon. Member: Like the government.

Mr. Nowlan: —has the government made any decision on a replacement for that aircraft? Is it going to do so before those who have to fly it in all types of weather conditions are involved in unfortunate accidents because of the old age of the aircraft?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Defence): First of all, Mr. Speaker, I would say that most of the old age is across the House. We still have Tracker aircraft flying. The Argus aircraft were temporarily grounded but they are now completely back in operation.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, my question was whether the minister has made a decision. As far as old age is concerned, we will not worry about that as between the minister and myself because I think it is reflected in the answer from the minister. Is this Minister of National Defence going to start to discharge his ministerial responsibilities and make some decisions so that the military who defend the sovereignty of this country can rely on a basic aircraft without having to worry about whether that aircraft can fly?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister might reply briefly and then the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre.

Mr. Nowlan: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I meant to welcome the minister back because he has not been in the House—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, you asked me to comment briefly. I will compare my record of attendance in the House with that of my hon. friend—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre.

Mr. Nowlan: A point of order, Mr. Speaker. There was a little—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member rises on a point of order.

Mr. Nowlan: There was a little flak between the minister and this side of the House, Mr. Speaker. However, I hope the minister can give a serious answer to this question because the lead-in time for a replacement aircraft is long overdue. The whole North Atlantic is involved and our NATO commitment. Several bases on the east coast are affected which are trying to discharge their responsibility.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the minister for the purpose of replying briefly but we have gone beyond the end of the question period. The minister will be allowed to reply briefly.

Mr. Forrestall: He has not been in the damn House for six weeks.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, first of all the comment was incorrect—

Mr. Forrestall: And you won't be here for another six weeks.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the minister reply briefly and as directly as possible?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, I have been trying to answer the question specifically. If my hon. friend would look at what I have said with regard to the Argus and Tracker aircraft he would understand that the question of their replacement is presently being studied and a report is expected in the very near future.

An hon. Member: Three years. That is the way you move, like the tax bill.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

SUGGESTED AMENDMENT RESPECTING CONTRIBUTIONS TO POLITICAL PARTIES

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister on a subject in which I know he has a keen interest. In answer to a question asked earlier this winter he said there would not be sufficient time to bring in legislation on election expenses. Would he now give consideration to bringing in two small amendments to the Canada Elections Act to require disclosure of election contributions similar to the practice now carried on in the Senate and House of Representatives in the United States?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I shall certainly take the consideration under consideration, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. In an effort to try to conclude the previous question the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate who wishes to ask a supplementary.

FISHERIES

NUMBER OF FORMAL AGREEMENTS REPRESENTED BY DIPLOMATIC NOTES TABLED

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs how many of the documents he tabled earlier today represent formal agreements rather than an exchange of notes? In the event that none of them do, would he give consideration to consulting with the four Atlantic provinces and the province of Quebec before there is official ratification of these proposed treaties?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the diplomatic notes in this case consist of agreements which are binding upon us and upon the governments concerned. In the case of France, however, the agreement constitutes a treaty and, as I understand it, it is the only one of these agreements that would be subject to ratification.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

FAMILY INCOME SECURITY PLAN

MEASURE TO PROVIDE BENEFITS IN RESPECT OF CHILDREN

The House resumed, from Monday, March 27, consideration of the motion of Mr. Munro that Bill C-170, to provide for the payment of benefits in respect of children, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, last evening I was making some remarks with regard to criticisms concerning Bill C-170, an act to provide for the payment of benefits in respect of children.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. In fairness to the hon. member who has the floor, I wonder if the conferences and consultations between hon. members might take place behind the curtains.

Mr. Gilbert: Mr. Speaker, as I was saying, last evening I was voicing my criticisms of Bill C-170, which is an act to provide for the payment of benefits in respect of children. I said that my three main grounds of criticism were, first, that in the act we replace the principle of universality with the principle of selectivity; second, that the act will stigmatize and categorize people earning certain incomes; and third, that since the act is so complex, it will lead to confusion, misunderstanding and resentment.

Some hon. members here no doubt will recall when legislation concerning family allowances was introduced back in 1944. I think the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has said that three members only who now sit in parliament were present when the late

Mackenzie King introduced the family allowances legislation. No doubt they recall the election of 1945, in which the Liberals were swept back to power through the political footwork of the late Mackenzie King. He introduced the family allowances legislation. I am sure that some here will recall the remarks made by the late George Drew concerning family allowances. He said that they were iniquitous. The Conservative party had a hard time living down the label which attached to it as a result of comments like that concerning family allowances. May I also remind hon. members that all members of all parties unanimously voted in favour of the family allowances legislation in 1944. I think it is fair to say that the prospect of family allowances was one of the determining factors that persuaded many of the people in Newfoundland that their province ought to enter confederation.

Between 1944 and the present, there have been no changes in the categories of people who are eligible for family allowances or amounts paid under that legislation, despite sharp increases in living costs between 1944 and 1972. Probably, because the legislation has not been changed, it has been criticized. Some people say that it has lost its effectiveness.

Acting on criticisms, the government prepared a white paper entitled Income Security for Canadians which was tabled on November 30, 1970. This dealt with two areas involving social security: First, old age security concerning senior citizens; second, guaranteed income security for families; in other words, family allowances. I remind hon. members that the white paper was tabled on November 30, 1970. On the following day, the government introduced legislation concerning old age security payments. Under that legislation the government increased the basic old age security payment by 42 cents. Cost of living increments were not to apply to the basic old age security payment. Also, for the first time, the government introduced the guaranteed income supplement for old age pensioners, and the 2 per cent cost of living escalation was to apply to the pension and supplement, when paid together. Mr. Speaker, there we saw the first departure from the principle of universality concerning old age security pensions. The government adopted the principle of selectivity.

May I remind hon. members that, because the government abandoned the principle of universality and adopted the principle of selectivity, many old age pensioners have experienced difficulty in determining their incomes, largely because of the complexity of the regulations. They have experienced frustration in anticipating their incomes for the following year and determining the amount to which they will be entitled. Also, unnecessary resentment has developed among senior citizens, since one group gets only the basic old age security payment and the other group gets the old age security payment plus the guaranteed income supplement. Many say that their basic old age security payment of $80 is a poor reward for their hard work in contributing to the development of Canada. At 65, if they possess certain assets or a certain income, they are deprived of any government pension payment larger than the basic old age security pension of $80 per month.

It can be said that in adopting the principle of selectivity as opposed to universality, the government has led to divisiveness within the country. Bill C-170 adopts the principle of selectivity instead of universality, the principle formerly adhered to. Last Friday, the minister attempted to show that certain organizations across the country support the changes in the legislation proposed by the government. We must be thankful for hon. members like the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. Not only is he the father of procedure in this House—I should say, the expert on procedure—but he is also a man of great patience. He has tremendous knowledge in this field. He corrected the minister when the minister tried to leave the impression that certain organizations supported the legislation. In particular, I am thinking of the Canadian Council on Social Development and the Canadian Labour Congress.

May I put on record again what the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre said concerning the attitude of the Canadian Council on Social Development towards this legislation. On page 1140 of Hansard for March 24, 1972, the hon. member for Winnipeg No th Centre read a recommendation of the Canadian Council on Social Development, as follows:

> The council believes that:
> Family allowances should be universal, paid to all families with dependent children as a social right thus avoiding divisiveness among families and any element of stigma. The present program has this feature but FISP would eliminate it.

• (1510)

It took the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre to set the minister straight with regard to the position of the Canadian Labour Council. It has been said, and it should be repeated, that the approach with regard to the problem as contained in the proposals in the white paper should have been referred to a committee of this House for study.

The minister attempted to answer the criticism on Friday by saying that the Senate Committee on Poverty had studied the question in depth. A matter of this importance should have been referred to the appropriate committee of this House. I am sure hon. members would not have objected if the committee had been comprised of members of the House of Commons and the other place. This opportunity for study has been denied because the white paper was tabled in November, 1970 and to date there has not been any reference to the committee. If we are to ascertain the attitudes and criticisms of organizations across this country, the white paper should have been, and still should be, referred to the appropriate committee so there would be an input from the many concerned people who are expert in the field in order to obtain the best possible legislation.

The change from the principle of universality to selectivity will create a divisiveness that is not worthy of pursuit. It will create a divisiveness between persons getting family allowances and those who are not. It will divide us into haves and have-nots. It will make the not-so-poor pay for the poor. If this is so, we should hesitate to proceed on a principle that will create divisiveness. I respectfully submit that the change from universality to selectivity will obtain that result.

The second point of criticism is that the act stigmatizes and categorizes people on low income. Poverty is a relative term these days. I can recall many members, myself included, pleading poverty at the time the salaries of members of the House of Commons were increased. I am sure it can be said that poverty is a very relative term. We can have poverty which is a denial or absence of the basic living needs of people and cultural deprivement or spiritual impoverishment can be included in the general definition of poverty.

The Economic Council of Canada made a study of poverty. It found that the basic minimum income for a single person living in Canada today would be approximately $2,000 in order to keep him above the poverty level. The basic minimum income for a married couple would be between $3,500 and $4,000. The astounding fact is that 20 per cent of all Canadians live below the poverty level. This is why we have to look at this problem with all the seriousness and concern we can give to it. I have said that it will stigmatize people according to their income and divide us into the haves and have-nots. With regard to family benefits, it will make the not-so-poor pay for the poor.

One of the proud facts of being a Canadian is that regardless of nationality, race, linguistic or cultural differences, we categorize people as Canadians. We create unity amongst all people living in Canada. In fact, one of the clarion calls of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) during the last election campaign was unity. I respectfully submit that the programs we are developing and devising will not create unity in Canada, but disunity because of the divisiveness that will be created and the stigmatization that will be imposed on people according to their income. Surely, no man should be judged by the income he obtains. He should be judged on the basis that he is a Canadian and that he has a basic right to employment, education, medicare and all those things that make us essentially Canadian. To develop legislation which divides rather than unites is not worthy of this government.

It can be easily said that this may be an attempt by the government to deal with the problem of poverty by giving people with low incomes certain benefits which will close the gap of poverty. This is a very small step. The major step we as Canadians have to take is legislation to provide full employment, housing and medicare. These are the things that will attack poverty. The measure providing family allowances, even though it is a very minimal step, will do very little to close the large gap that exists between the income levels of Canadians today. Not only am I opposed to the legislation on the ground that it imposes selectivity rather than universality, but it imposes a stigmatization on poor people. This brings me to my third point.

The act is so complex that it will lead to confusion, misunderstanding and resentment. Mr. Justice Hart, the chairman of the Law Reform Commission, said last week that the laws of Canada should be so expressed that they are understood by all Canadians. I am sure all members will agree with that proposition. This government has brought forth legislation so complex that it makes it very difficult for any Canadian to understand it fully. Need I remind hon. members of the Old Age Security and the Guaranteed Income Supplement legislation? I also remind hon. members of the tax bill that we recently passed. We now have the family allowances bill which is very complex. I have had an opportunity to look at the bill. I have found it very difficult to follow. However, I have received some encouragement.

With regard to the complexity of the bill, the minister said last Friday, as recorded at page 1133 of Hansard, and I quote:

> The white paper suggested that benefits might be reduced by $1 per month per child for each extra $500 of income. We find after discussion with various people that a provision of these lines might act as a disincentive. The plan, therefore, calls for an adjustment of 30 cents for each $100 extra of income.

He then set forth the principle. He said:

> To make benefits selective, an income floor of $4,500 is established below which full benefits will be paid and above which benefits will be reduced as income increases. The income floor is raised by an additional $500 for each extra child in the family. The ceiling of cut-off point for benefits depends upon the number of children, their ages and the reduction rate.

That is the basis on which the allowances will be paid. He also said and I quote:

> The scope of the new FISP proposals is such that it replaces both family allowances and youth allowances. The plan takes into account the number and age of children in a family. As far as coverage is concerned, all children under 18 are covered. As far as benefits are concerned, I have already indicated what they will be. In connection with the deduction as income rises, I have indicated that benefits per child are reduced in one-child families with incomes above $4,500 a year and in two-child families with income above $5,000 a year. The income floor rises by $500 for each extra child. The plan introduces a reduction rate of 33 cents per child per month for each extra $100 of income, or $1.65 for each $500, above the floor set for families at that size.

• (1520)

Is it any wonder, Mr. Speaker, that it takes almost half a page to set forth the criteria? The minister went on to say:

> The maximum income in one-child families beyond which no benefits are paid is $10,560 if the child is between the ages of 12 and 17 and $9,045 if the child is younger than 12. In the case of two-child families the figures are $11,060 and $9,545. For three-child families, if the children are aged between 12 and 17—and there is a mixture here between 12 and 17 and under 12—the figures are $11,560 and $10,045, and so on by $500 intervals. I repeat that FISP benefits are not counted as taxable income.

Then, Mr. Speaker, in a moment of graciousness, he said:

> The House will perhaps be interested to hear what is counted as income in the determination of benefits. The income of a person includes all items of income subject to tax, plus unemployment insurance, scholarships and bursaries, adult training allowances and Canada Pension Plan and Quebec Pension Plan, orphans and dependant children's benefits. It does not include social allowances based on a means or income test.

Further on, he says:

> Options will be permitted allowing the substitution of an estimate of income in the calendar year of 12 times the average monthly income in the remainder of the current calendar year instead of being based on the previous year's income as is the usual case.

Mr. Speaker, it has taken me about five minutes to set forth the criteria on the basis of which family benefits will be paid. Under the 1944 act, the criterion was simple. If a person was of a certain age and fell into a certain category, a definite amount was obtained. This was understood by all Canadians. Under the new system it is almost impossible to determine whether a family qualifies or not, whether the income, details of which are submitted, is sufficient to qualify one for benefits. I have never seen such a hodge-podge of rules and criteria. There is no question we shall encounter many difficulties, not only in relation to the act itself but in relation to the regulations which will follow.

There has been an outcry across Canada against the system of calculation of income which is being adopted in connection with UIC payments. Without doubt there will be similar protests concerning the method the minister proposes to use to determine whether young people qualify under this legislation and how much they are entitled to receive. Proposals of this type are not worthy of the government. One of the first objects we should seek to realize is clarity when it comes to legislation. The legislation before us will create division as a result of the change from the principle of universality to the principle of selectivity. It will have the effect of stigmatizing people whose incomes are low. It will introduce unnecessary complexity into the question of determining who should qualify for benefit.

It is for these reasons I have set forth my criticism of this bill. I hope the government will decide not to act at this time but, rather, they will agree to refer the white paper which was tabled in 1970 to the appropriate committee so that it might be studied in depth, enabling a bill to be presented which would be understood by all Canadians.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I am tremendously interested in this legislation, not because I have ever benefited from family allowances personally but because of the circumstances connected with the bringing into effect by the Right Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King of the family allowances legislation in 1944 and 1945. I think I can speak dispassionately upon the subject of social security because I am one who has not accepted the old age pension, believing that the contribution I had made was not in keeping with what the return would be if I were to collect it. I can, therefore, speak with some objectivity concerning the bill before us. We note there have been a great number of changes in the present bill as compared with the bill introduced last session under the number C-264.

I look back to 1944 and 1945. I listened the other day to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) telling us what took place at that time. He pointed out that only three members of the present House were here at that time the vote took place. The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) was a member at that time, as I recall it, but left shortly for the pastures and power in the Province of Saskatchewan. These things bring to mind the attitude of the Conservative party at the time. Personally, I supported from the very beginning the principle of family allowances. There were some who said it was socialism. I was able to indicate that I did not believe socialism and social security to be synonymous, as is often claimed, or, indeed, on a par with that, that Liberalism and liberty were synonymous.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Mr. Gilbert.]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Both these myths have been dissipated in the intervening years.

I wonder why the changes have been made in the bill. I shall be interested to hear the minister. As it happens, there are only two ministers in the House at the present time, an indication of the degradation of this institution as a place in which, as a result of argument, changes can be brought about. In the days I have just been recalling, Mr. King was present a great deal of the time, despite the fact we were in the midst of a war.

An hon. Member: He is probably present now.

Mr. Diefenbaker: He was present and he listened to arguments made by members of the opposition with respect and regard. If they were fruitful in content, they became embodied in the legislation. But that is all over now. The legislation is fixed up in the East Block by civil servants and that is all there is to it. This is the reason parliament is falling into desuetude. The present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has shown his disregard for parliament over and over again. This to me is one of those things which represents a situation that is dangerous to Canada and its freedom. For when this institution dies, freedom dies.

• (1530)

I go back to the bill that was introduced on September 13 last. I should like to know from the minister what kind of political legerdemain has been going on. Is it the result of representations made by the provinces? Why these changes? I intend to refer to a most striking example of how the constitution can be degraded, with the Prime Minister of this country passing it off, as he did. I refer to a matter that strikes at the very heart of the institution of parliament and of the legislature of the province of Quebec, or any province, namely that the oath of allegiance shall be removed without there being a constitutional amendment.

When the legislation was originally introduced it was gone into in an exceptionally masterful way by the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard). The last hon. member to speak analyzed this legislation in a way that showed he had given a great deal of study to the subject, yet there was no minister here to listen. He made a worthy contribution, and when a worthy contribution is made, from whatever part of the House, it should receive the attention of all parts of the House.

The Family Allowances Act that was originally introduced, the Youth Allowances Act, and Bill C-264, had one principle in common. Bill C-264, introduced last fall on September 13 and thrown on March 15 into the ash can of desuetude, had about it a different principle, a different philosophy, a different legal concept from that now substituted in the present bill. Nowhere has there been an explanation by the minister. At page 1133 of Hansard for March 24 last he said this:

FISP—

I do not like that abbreviation. Somebody is liable to think the "P" is an "H".

—benefits will provide a basic income for each child upon which can be built additional supports as deemed appropriate by provincial or municipal authorities. We know that unemployment insurance does not make any special provision for children. Neither do old age security, the guaranteed income supplement, the Canada Pension Plan retirement pension or war veterans allowances.

He might have added: "Neither does FISP".

Section 5 of the Family Allowances Act as enacted by this parliament provides:

The allowance shall be applied by the person receiving it exclusively toward the maintenance, care, training, education and advancement of the child—

That was the concept that moved Mr. King. Subsection (1) of section 5 of the Youth Allowances Act provides:

An allowance payable to a parent in respect of a dependent youth shall be applied exclusively for the care, maintenance, education or advancement of such youth.

Clause 5 (2) of Bill C-264 introduced last session—see the great change that took place here—provided:

A benefit shall be applied

(a) in the case of a child referred to in paragraph 3(1)(a), exclusively toward the maintenance, care, training, education or advancement of the child in respect of whom it was paid, and

(b) in the case of a person referred to in paragraph 3(1)(b), exclusively toward the maintenance, care, training, education or advancement of the person in respect of whom it was paid in such manner as is prescribed by regulations,

Why were the trust provisions for the benefit of the children taken out? Why has this change come about? Those provisions do not appear in the present bill. Instead, this bill takes away the vested right of the children, a right that the minister said—and wrongly said—was the only right they now possess. What does this bill propose to substitute? It proposes outright grants to adults. The children become part of a formula upon which the right of the adult is based and calculated.

I suggest there is something behind this. Negotiations have been going on with the premier of the province of Quebec since the Victoria charter. Did this suggestion come from him? If not, from whom? Clause 5 provides that the recipient of an allowance shall be the parent or other authorized person. The definition of "family" and "parent" refers to the child as being in the custody and control of such person. Again I ask, why was this change brought about? This is a complete abnegation and denial of the basic principles upon which the family allowance legislation and the other legislation, including the bill introduced last September, were founded, and properly so.

One may wonder when this legislation is going to come into effect, whether before or after the election. There is a provision which states it is to come into effect on September 1. I dislike having to take a different view from that expressed by the commentator Mr. Charles Lynch, who has keyhole opportunities to make prophetic utterances. The other day, when the Prime Minister was talking to some youngsters at a collegiate, Mr. Lynch was quite certain the election would take place on October 4. I do not believe that. Some 1,050,000 Canadian families will go off family allowance, so do you think, Mr. Speaker, that this government is going to bring in legislation that is made effective before the election so that those people realize that they are out?

Mr. Bell: They are not that stupid.

Mr. Diefenbaker: On the other hand, by getting the legislation through—and I am always one who believes what the government says, to an extent—they will be able to go to two million people and say to them: "Look at the tremendous amount you are going to receive". Less attention will be paid in the Liberal literature to the 1,050,000 Canadians who are going to get nothing than to the tremendous magnificence that will have to wait only for the election result.

In connection with the so-called, misnamed, two price system, the cheques will be going out within the next three weeks, and they will be just like manna from heaven. Therefore, my prediction—and the Prime Minister has not even let his backbenchers or cabinet know when the date is going to be—is that this bill is convincing evidence that the election will not be postponed until fall, despite the fact that I am told that Liberal members from some parts of Canada, even including British Columbia, would like the election in the fall. Those from the province of Quebec would like it earlier, though the Ontario Liberal members would not really like it at all. I am not going to go into particulars of the legislation because, as I say, that has been covered well by the hon. member for Simcoe North and other hon. members who have spoken. I do ask one thing: Why the fixing of the ceiling at an income of $10,000?

Mention was made by the last hon. gentleman who spoke of the intricacies of the wording of this bill. I have never seen so many words chasing one idea in such a way that nobody knows what the idea is. William Jennings Bryan was one of those who used a multiplicity of words. When somebody said he was going to be defeated in the election, instead of saying do not count your chickens before they are hatched he said, "Do not compute the totality of your poultry population until all of the manifestations of incubation have been entirely completed". That is an example of the way this legislation is worded.

I believe that with the tremendous increase in the cost of living, and the prophesy made the other day by the Governor of the Bank of Canada that we are apparently just starting up the wall of inflation, in a matter of two or three years $10,000 will be a basic level; indeed, it will be approaching the poverty line. I think the amount is entirely inadequate as a ceiling and it should be raised, otherwise many needy people across Canada, on the basis of the expected tremendous cost of inflation, will be denied a fair deal.

What is behind the wording in the bill? I took it on myself to read the correspondence in connection therewith tabled the other day by the Prime Minister. A letter from the Prime Minister was sent to the Premier of Quebec and other premiers. I have not the time to go into lengthy detail, but parts of the letter are worthy of being read. It provides for a new system of family allowances for Quebec and those provinces which accept it. It proposes to bring about tremendous changes in what has been constitutionally feasible up to the present time. Page 7 of the letter reads:

Sir:

As you will appreciate, what is contemplated here is a major adjustment in the federal approach to an important income security measure established by parliament more than twenty-five years ago.

This bill, the letter reads, would —introduce a degree of flexibility in relation to provincial conditions that has been hitherto unknown. It would permit provinces that so wished to move toward an integrated system of family allowances within their boundaries, while still maintaining certain general standards for payments to poorer families. I think the plan would meet the basic requirements necessary for the government of Quebec to establish the integrated system of family allowances that it wishes to introduce. I realize that such arrangements would be as temporary as any statute. But if a constitutional guarantee were needed, this could be contemplated as indicated in the next paragraph.

While the immediate federal proposal relates to the family allowance program, the principles involved are clearly capable of extension to other income support programs.

What has happened and why the change in the wording of parts of this bill since last fall? What has taken place that brought about so important a change in such a short period of time? I can only believe it is because Premier Bourassa said he would not have anything to do with the Victoria Charter unless the government capitulated on the subject of family allowances and other social security measures. The government first said it would not do that. Mr. Speaker, I find it difficult to understand why many of the provincial premiers accepted the Victoria Charter. I suggest that the Premier of Quebec was justified in preventing the implementation of that charter, even though he did so on grounds I would not necessarily support.

What would happen under this charter had it come into effect? I ask this because of the statement made today by the Prime Minister in answer to a question relative to the position being taken by the province of Quebec in abolishing the oath of allegiance to the Queen. From now on, apparently anything can be done to the constitution today. It can be emasculated, even castrated as long as whatever is done will bring about votes in the opinion of the Prime Minister of Canada.

Where is the constitution today? I took strong objection to the language bill, not because of its terms but because it represented a constitutional amendment brought in by the back door through a statute of parliament. The government realized it could not secure passage of a constitutional amendment through which would require the agreement of all the provinces of Canada, therefore the language bill was introduced. I have no apology to make for opposing that bill on that ground, and events since have shown that the one argument I advanced, that nobody could challenge it in the courts, was true. The then Minister of Justice, now the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) said it could be done, but I said it could not. As soon as there was a challenge by the former Mr. Justice Thorson the government of Canada argued that a private person had no status to take action and succeeded in the courts. That constitutional amendment brought in by statute put an end to the British North America Act and its amendment constitutionally for all time to come. Now, we have the fruit of that family tree.

The FLQ and the Parti Quebecois did take strong objection to the oath of allegiance, and joined with the Liberal government of that province to abolish the constitutional right and the duty that is provided for in the constitution, Section 128 of the British North America Act. This is part of the picture epitomized in this legislation and the changes which have been made in the last few months. This section reads:

Every Member of the Senate or Houses of Commons of Canada shall before taking his Seat therein take and subscribe before the Governor General or some Person authorized by him, and every Member of a Legislative Council or Legislative Assembly of any Province shall before taking his Seat therein take and subscribe before the Lieutenant Governor of the Province or some Person authorized by him, the Oath of Allegiance—

That is the provision in that constitution and it cannot be tinkered with by any province, even though the government of Canada under the present Prime Minister has cut through the constitution as though it did not exist. When I asked him today whether or not this action, which is a complete denial of Section 128 and the whole principle of confederation as embodied in the British North America Act, was wrong and whether he would instruct or advise the Lieutenant Governor of the province of Quebec, the Queen's representative of that province, to withhold royal consent pending consideration by the Governor in Council, he gave an answer of sorts. I cannot describe it, but with that nonchalance which used to be regarded as wisdom contended that disallowance is not being used any more. He claimed that it is as dead as the right of veto of the Imperial Parliament over the Parliament of Canada. Is it?

In respect of the Lieutenant-Governor's discretionary powers and the executive process of the Crown I will read from the comments of J. R. Mallory. The government of Canada asked the Lieutenant-Governor of the province of Alberta to withhold Royal Assent to legislation such as the Bank Act and other things of the time. Mr. Mallory summarizes as follows:

The revival of the power in Alberta in 1937 caused general surprise. It had become widely believed that the power had become constitutionally obsolete in the same way that the position of the governor general as an imperial officer had disappeared as a result of the achievement of Canadian autonomy. So general was the uncertainty that the federal government referred the whole question of the scope and validity of the powers of disallowance, reservation, and withholding assent to the Supreme Court in the autumn of 1937.

The Supreme Court had no difficulty in finding that these powers continued to subsist, unaffected by changes in constitutional conventions, and the powers were equally valid, whether the legislation was intra vires the provincial legislature or not, and that the only limitations on the discretion of the lieutenant-governor were instructions from the governor general.

Now, we see the present constitutional picture being unveiled. Today is a dark day in the history of Canada's constitution when the Prime Minister, the Queen's first minister, says we will let the provinces do whatever they want to do whether or not it is constitutional and will not ask for reservation being made because to do so is obsolete. The Victoria Charter was turned down as a result of Premier Bourassa's opposition. I am glad he did so. His objection to that charter is proved in the present change in the bill as introduced last September.

The Victoria Charter would have hamstrung Canada's future for generations to come. The Bill of Rights would have been reduced to virtual innocuity. The Supreme Court of Canada would have been a body in which judges would be expected to decide cases on the basis of geographical location rather than on the law. There would be no chance for the provinces of Manitoba or Saskatchewan to ever have anything to do with the amendments because they would have to have 50 per cent of the population of the four western provinces in order to have the right to object to or advance constitutional amendments. We will never, in those provinces, have 50 per cent of the population with the populations of Alberta and British Columbia increasing as they are. This is what is happening to our constitution. Finally the protection of the English language under the British North America Act would have been removed. This legislation shows a fine Machiavellian hand. I shall not say an Italian hand. We have the answer given by the Prime Minister of Canada today that this government does not intend to do anything about it and that from now on the provinces of Canada will be free to make any changes they desire in the constitution. This day represents one that will be looked back on in the years ahead as the natural culmination of a disunited Canada with the monarchy being undermined. The constitution will not be in existence. Every Father of Confederation, including the French Canadian representative, recommended or demanded the preservation of the monarchy.

The second fruit of the family tree is the changes in this bill. In order to obtain this agreement in respect of the Victoria Charter which I say would destroy the hope of one Canada, one nation, the erosion of this constitution is continued with the approval of the Prime Minister. This legislation is introduced in order to provide an excuse to secure the support of a province which took a firm, honourable and reasonable stand. Over the years I have been here I have never known the constitution to be trampled on in the way in which it is being trampled on today. Shades of Mackenzie King and St. Laurent! Where do we go?

Mr. Steven Otto (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I was very pleased to listen to the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker). The thrust of his speech ws very impressive. However, as the right hon. gentleman spoke, I wondered whether that part of the constitution was so important that it must override the benefits which are to be provided for children. Do we deny benefits to children in order to preserve a constitution which is changing? The right hon. member knows it is changing. To sit here and say that the constitution will never change just does not make any sense because of the changing relationships with the provinces. The provinces are assuming certain jurisdictions with the federal government just as the federal government is also assuming certain provincial jurisdictions. I think this House should accept that fact. The right hon. gentleman nods his head. He knows I agree with him on the value of a constitution but it must be a new one. There is no sense in putting up our back and saying we will keep it the way it is, because there will have to be a new one.

What we want is a constitution which is relevant to our times. If I correctly understand some of the speeches made on this bill, I believe the opposition is really based on the fact that the universality of the old law disappears in the selectivity that this bill now brings about. I could be more cautious politically at this time, if indeed we are to have an election, and say that everyone will get their little benefit. However, I believe we should be honest. I am the first to agree that some people will lose the benefits, while others will get more. The right hon. gentlemen from Prince Albert mentioned the preamble in the 1944 bill to the effect that family allowances were meant to assist in the education, the clothing and the welfare of children. In 1944, our economy had not yet reached a stage which would give us perfect security in growth. We anticipated a large increase in the population of children. We knew what the situation was. The Liberal government then introduced a measure which would be of assistance to children. It was assumed that the money received by the mother would be laid on the table in the form of food, or else used to provide clothing. Education was also an important factor because the cost of education was going up, and after the depression not everybody had the necessary money.

Let us look at the position today. How many mothers think that this is money for the children? How many of them think it is a reward to them for having borne children, pin money that they don't have to get from their husbands? We have had a change in emphasis. Now, we provide substantial aid for education, at the federal, provincial and municipal level. We also have provided assistance for housing and many people no longer have to worry about housing. We have welfare plans and widows' allowances. All of these things have been substituted for the dread, the panic and the anxiety that was with us in 1944.

Hon. members opposite say we should continue the scheme. I ask continue what? Should we continue taking money out of one pocket of the taxpayer, and putting it back in another pocket, charging him a few pennies for administrative costs in between? We said we were going to be a reform party, a reform government. We said we would make changes. The real change here is that universality will no longer apply. We have to give more to those people who are in need, and we must discontinue paying those who are really not in need.

From the evidence that I have gathered over the past four or five years, I know that in the lower income bracket the family allowance is used as part of the general household budget. In the higher income brackets it may be used to build an education fund for the children, but the majority of mothers in this group tend to consider it as their own, as largesse from the government to use for their own purposes, for hairdo's and all sorts of things. The government is not some kind of deity that gives out money. This money comes from the taxpayers' own pockets. If we increased the amount of family allowances under the old scheme, the taxpayers would have to pay out more money. Again, Mr. Speaker, the taxpayer is beginning to resist the constant and increasing drain on his pocketbook.

It is not true to say that this bill will not hurt some people. But I do not mind telling people in the higher income brackets that they will not continue to get family allowances. Increasing the tax burden by taking money out of one pocket and putting it back into another just does not make sense, and that would be the only alternative.

For the NDP to regret the disappearance of universality is a reversal of their former stand. I point out that it was not the present government that wanted this change. Since 1963 and 1964 there has been a constant demand in the press. At meetings everywhere people were saying that we had to change the family allowance scheme. We are changing it now, Mr. Speaker. But a law cannot be changed in a way that will affect only somebody else. A lot of people over the $10,000 salary level will be affected. I have no qualms at all about saying that I am proud of this bill. It is something that had to come.

Those people who say we don't dare bring this measure forward because an election is coming are advocating a return to the old Tammany Hall style politics, when politicians always warned, "Don't do anything before an election. Keep nice and quiet. After the election is over, then you can throw the book at the people." I think people now want to know what the situation is, and what it will be. Despite my great respect for the right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert, I do not think that the date this legislation comes into force has had, or will have, any bearing on the Prime Minister's decision to call an election. I do not think he is that kind of Prime Minister. As a matter of fact, the people of Canada know he is not that kind of politician.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Come on, Steve. You had better take a drink of water or you will have a tough time swallowing that one.

Mr. Otto: I think what irritates members opposite now, especially those people who have been members for a long time, is the fact that I tend to call them old-time politicians. This applies not only to those on the other side, but to those on this side as well.

But, Mr. Speaker, I have found that the new Canadian, the present-day Canadian is more educated, more sophisticated. He wants to be told exactly what you are going to do. He wants to discuss it. Of course, he may complain. Any number of people will complain. Nobody likes change thrown at them all of a sudden. But on reflection, people will admit today that this bill is the only way to deal with this matter. By and large most Canadians will agree that universality no longer applies to such programs as old age pensions, supplementary allowances, family allowances or youth allowances. They know that to continue universality makes no sense. I think that today they will accept the idea of selectivity. They will accept the fact that there are children in Canada who do need more help.

If they, themselves, can do without this help they are pleased that they have the means, that they have the security, to do without it. Despite all the surface complaints, I have a deep conviction that Canadians will not object to this measure. I have confidence in them. I believe that when they see the courage of the government in putting this bill forward, they will not take away their support but show their own confidence in honesty and truth.

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to speak at this particular stage in the debate and to follow the hon. member who has just spoken. I have to disagree with just about everything he said. I cannot think of a more opportune moment to enter a debate such as this, because what the hon. member is endeavouring to say in a philosophical way is that the government can continue to tax the middle income group to an ever-increasing degree and anticipate that they are going to produce the revenues needed to look after everybody else in the nation. In other words, the harder you work and the more you earn, the greater the degree of discrimination practised against you by this government. If the hon. member thinks that people will continue to put up with this sort of government philosophy he is in for a shock when the election comes, whether it be this spring, this summer, this fall or next year.

I think it is a crying shame that the principle of universality in the family allowance measure is being destroyed. I think it is a crying shame that once again the middle income group has found that the government's legislation, as was the case with the so-called tax reform measure, is going to discriminate against them and make them pay the fiddler without allowing them to dance. I think the time has come in this parliament when members should speak out and try to stop those people who are making this country what it is today. If we are moving ahead, if things are getting better, by and large it is the result of the efforts of the people who are discriminated against by this sort of legislation.

Unfortunately, for too long these people have felt that the government is like a bloodsucker, a real leech. Every time it is looking for funds for the various programs that it feels may have some political value, it lands on them and draws more blood. What this government does not appear to realize is that it also draws more incentive out of these people. The more it draws out, the less is left in the nation and, basically, this is the reason we have over 600,000 unemployed in this country. People are getting sick and tired of working so that they can turn over most of their earnings to the government to help out those who, for one reason or another, are not able to look after themselves.

I believe we have gone well beyond the limit in taxing the middle income group. I believe we are destroying the incentive of this nation by this type of legislation, and I believe the end to this type of philosophy had better come in a big hurry or we will find ourselves in an even worse mess than we are today. God knows, it is difficult to imagine how we could be in a worse mess.

Mr. Perrault: Oh!

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker, the other thing that bothers me a lot is that once again the government of Canada is involving itself in a form of means test. There is a philosophy in Canada that abhors the means test or the needs test or whatever you want to call it because it is distasteful. We can go back to the 1930's if we so desire—and this government has taken us there in many ways, certainly as far as unemployment is concerned. We can recall how the dignity of the individual was destroyed when there was no work and he was subjected to the investigative procedures of municipal, provincial and federal governments in order to get enough bread on his table for his family.

This type of legislation is taking us back to that philosophy. When the Canada Assistance Plan was before the House I spoke up because it embodied the same type of philosophy, the investigation of the individual to determine whether he should get what he requires to keep himself alive. Once that principle is adopted, there is a proliferation of bureaucracy. In the end, as you destroy universality by saying there are some people receiving benefits who do not require them without adding the rider that they are entitled to them because the tax they pay gives them that right, you do two other things. First of all you destroy a person's dignity and, secondly, you take away his liberty. Every time a bureaucrat walks into a home and wants to know this and that, the individual has lost certain inalienable rights. I oppose this, Mr. Speaker, as strongly as I can but this is what is happening in Canada over and over again as a result of legislation of the type proposed.

In a couple of years after this plan comes into effect, after we have eliminated over a million people from the family allowance rolls, after we do all that and make an assessment of how much it costs, we will probably discover that it is costing more to be selective than it would have cost to give it to everybody.

Mr. Rynard: That is true of welfare right now.

Mr. Coates: The hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard) says this is true of welfare right now, and I agree with him. This is the most damnable thing about this type of legislation, the minute you bring in selectivity and eliminate universality you interfere with the rights of people and bring in bureaucrats by the hundreds of thousands who go around investigating people and building up files to which other people may have access. These people are subjected to all kinds of investigative procedures which are very destructive.

The hon. member for Sainte-Marie (Mr. Valade) says you delay the procedure and that is correct. You delay people from securing immediately what they have a right to while bureaucrats determine whether they should approve or disapprove. Members of parliament will not vote against family allowances, even though under this bill the government will wipe out family allowances for over one million people. They will not vote against the bill because through it the government will provide greater benefits for many millions of people. No member of parliament wants to prevent people securing additional benefits at a time when living costs seem to be almost out of control. However, Mr. Speaker, that should not prevent a member of parliament from saying that the legislation before the House should be much better than that being proposed by the government.

I say, Sir, that since November 30 we have been considering some type of family income security plan. Despite all the time spent in thinking about the legislation, Canadians in general will be given legislation that is less beneficial than that presently existing. A great many Canadians will get nothing except an additional bill to pay. When asked to pay the bill they will be told that they are not to derive any benefits from their additional payments. This situation is something like the one involving the postal service of Canada. It costs twice as much to send a letter that will take twice as long getting to its destination, as compared with previous days. Producing that kind of legislation for the people of Canada seems to be almost inbred in this government's approach to legislative priorities.

So far as I am concerned, this particular piece of legislation will not have any significant anti-poverty effect in this nation. Even in the Atlantic region, which probably will benefit to a greater extent than any other part of Canada, the impact of this legislation on poverty will not be all that significant. The number of people who face poverty the day before the new payments are sent out will not be substantially different from the number who face poverty the day after the new cheques are sent out. What would help us would be legislation that would produce jobs. This is the subject we ought to be debating. At present, even though we are debating the bill before us, we do not know when the new cheques are to be sent out.

Last September constituents of mine telephoned me to ask why their family allowance cheques were the same as before. In July or August, the government had announced that new family allowances at higher rates would be available in September. I had to tell those people that, according to what I had learned in the House of Commons, the September date had been changed to May 1, 1972. Now I must tell those same people that instead of being implemented in May, this bill is to be implemented some day but I do not know when. The government is not telling me, and it is not telling them. Well, Mr. Speaker, that is not good enough, and the people of Canada will not think it is good enough. If the hon. member who spoke just before I entered this debate thinks that is good enough, that is just dandy. His attitude is probably a very good indication that he will be replaced in the next general election, whenever that comes.

The right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) was right in suggesting that for the Liberal members representing Ontario constituencies there is no satisfactory date for a general election. Neither 1972 nor 1973 is satisfactory so far as those Liberal members of parliament are concerned. If the philosophy of the hon. member who spoke just before I did is an example of the philosophy of federal Liberal members representing Ontario constituencies, they are in trouble. Any day will be a bad day, so far as they are concerned, for a general election, no matter whether it comes in spring, summer or fall.

When we return after the Easter recess, I hope the government will introduce legislation that will help all families which are to receive family allowances as well as families which need help through forms of income security that do not involve any package being considered by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) or any other minister of this government. I hope such legislation will produce employment for the more than 600,000 people who find themselves without work and want to work. I do not know how much longer this government can expect the people of this country to put up with its relaxed and nonchalant approach to the serious problem of poverty facing so many in this nation.

I repeat, the middle income earner of this country has been the goat for far too long. It is time we put a stop to legislation of the type now before the House. Under it, the middle income earner is to be penalized, because he is industrious and trying to make a contribution to building a better Canada. He is making his contribution and assisting his fellow man by working and earning. We must put a stop to legislation of this kind. Every middle income earner in this country has as much right to family allowances, if he has children, as any other person in Canada. Unfortunately for him, because of the government's philosophy, he has been cut off at the pass. He is being made to foot the bill, and he will receive no benefits. He has been asked to do this time and again. I am fed up with this treatment, and I am sure he is; I am sure the government will discover just how fed up he is when it calls the election.

Mr. C. Terrence Murphy (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I wish to take part in this debate, especially after having heard the speech of the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North (Mr. Coates). Never have I seen a better example of a man who wants to have his cake and eat it, too. He has been making statements during the past 15 or 20 minutes which tend to indicate to the middle income man in his riding that he is all for him, he is his hope and this government is completely against the middle income man. At the same time, out of the other side of his mouth he speaks about the poverty situation in Canada, the poor and how this government is lackadaisical about doing anything for the poor. I cannot put the two statements together so that they make any kind of sense.

An hon. Member: That is the problem with you fellows over there.

Mr. Murphy: It may be, but you do not have the answer, either. You are talking about the abominable tax on the middle income group. I agree that the middle income group in Canada may be carrying more than its share of the tax. However, that system has been accepted as the proper system in Canada for decades. The aim of that system has been to improve the lot of the poor people by moving them into the middle income group. Where are we to get the money to help the poor? Is it the proposition of the Conservative party that we should tax the corporations to a greater degree? I thought the proposition of that party was to allow the corporations free-wheeling rights so they could invest their profits and create jobs rather than take more tax from them. I thought their proposition was that taxes should be reduced in that area.

What should we do? Should we tax the poor to a higher degree? The money that is paid out in the form of family allowances or family income security, and the people of Canada know this, does not grow on trees. It comes out of the pockets of the taxpayers. What group forms the biggest tax-paying base in Canada? It happens to be the middle income group. I am glad to subscribe to the philosophy enunciated by the hon. member for York East (Mr. Otto). He said that the people in this group are prepared to face up to their responsibilities and do something for the less fortunate in the country. They are not acting like dogs in a manger by saying "I've got mine; now, Charlie, you try to get yours". They are prepared to take part in this exercise. I am prepared to accept his philosophy in that regard.

The hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North deplored the loss of universality. I agree that in many ways universality is a fine concept. However, as a member of parliament, assuming I only have one child and that I draw a salary of $18,000 a year, I find it difficult to understand why I should get a cheque in the same amount as a working man with one child who only earns $4,000 a year. I do not buy that. The time for universality in Canada has ended.

Yesterday the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis) mentioned that universality worked because you put money into the hands of all individuals and then get it back from those who do not meet it through taxes. This system works in the case of old age pensions where $75 or $80 a month is paid out, is counted as income and those in the higher income groups repay most or all of it to the government in taxes. I remind hon. members that that principle does not apply to family allowances. The money goes into the family, but it is not counted as income. Therefore, the principle of universality does not work in the same way when applied to family income security, baby bonus or whatever you want to call it, as it does when applied to old age pensions. The time for universality, in the sense that it was being used for purposes of family allowances, is gone.

There are many poor people in Canada who need additional assistance. The pie is just so big. It should be distributed among the people who are hungry, not among those who are well off. The hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North referred to the government as a bloodsucker sucking funds from the middle class group for its own benefit. I suggest the hon. member does not have the respect that I do for the intelligence of the voters of Canada. The voters of Canada know that the government is not coining money in the Mint or printing it in the basement and handing it out to people. They know that the money that is paid out to various groups in Canada comes from the people of Canada.

To suggest that this government would think that by increasing family allowances to a certain number of the population would result in an increase in its popularity is an insult to the intelligence of the voters of Canada. However, I believe the hon. member indicated that. While he deplored the fact that the government was proceeding in this way, he spoke vociferously about the business of ridding ourselves of the concept of universality and criticized as strongly as he could what he called the re-introduction of the means test. In his next breath, he said "but I won't vote against it". Why will he not vote against it? The reason is that a number of people in Canada, particularly in the hon. member's constituency, are going to receive increased benefits as a result of this change. He would not want to deprive them of those increased benefits, despite the fact this measure goes against his highest principles, because those people have a vote in the next election.

The hon. member deplored the introduction of some kind of means test, and mentioned how the introduction of this method of distributing money would result in a proliferation of bureaucrats. To quote him, one result would be the employment of bureaucrats by the hundreds of thousands. As I understand it, Mr. Speaker, the distribution of these new family allowances is based on income tax returns which are already being made by all of the taxpaying citizens of Canada. It is on the basis of those returns that this family income security money will be distributed. There is no question about the introduction of additional hundreds of thousands of bureaucrats. I suggest that, like many of his colleagues, he is thinking of 30 or 40 years ago, when the means test was a mean and miserable way of dealing out dole as it were.

I heard some of the examples cited yesterday by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis). I agree with her wholeheartedly. When we reached the stage at which parents, to prove their children were unable to support them, had to bring the children into court in order to qualify for assistance, I agree wholeheartedly with the hon. lady that we had got ourselves into a deplorable position. Surely, though, the plan we are talking about today is not that type of plan. It is a plan geared to returns which are already being made by taxpayers. It no longer implies a demeaning inquisition by government bureaucrats or the services of the numbers of government bureaucrats who were involved in the system in the late twenties and thirties. Fortunately, the present government, and governments before it in Canada, have recognized the folly of their ways. They have made changes and brought the system up to date to the point at which it is now a reasonable and practical proposition on the basis of which we can make the best possible use of the resources available to us.

One of the hon. members opposite who spoke this afternoon said: Retain the universality principle but raise the allowances for everybody. I agree with him in a sense. That would be absolutely great, provided we had the money. I should like to drive a Cadillac. I can only afford to drive a Volkswagen. I wish the hon. member would keep this in mind when dealing with the facts of the situation in Canada—the amount of funds and resources available to 22 million Canadians to take care of the poor and the elderly. Let us keep an eye, after all, on the resources which are available to us.

I cannot end without commenting on the speech made by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), for whom I have the highest respect. I must say I only heard the latter part of his remarks, that dealing with the constitution. The right hon. member has a great appreciation of the constitution which was written in 1867. So has everyone. But today is 1972. Canada is not the same today as it was in 1867 and a constitution written in 1867 is not necessarily the best constitution for Canada in 1972. I gather from the right hon. gentleman's comments that change is alien to his nature. I hope he will reconsider and realize that constitutional change is an absolute necessity if we are to continue as one united Canada.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with great interest to a number of speeches this afternoon. They were not at all similar, but in my opinion they were well made. I was particularly interested to hear the last speaker refer to the desirability of establishing uniform legislation which would take into account the situations of those who are poor and those who are rich and distribute wealth on a selected basis providing more for those at the low end than for those at the high end. I wonder why the hon. member has not sat down with the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro), who is involved in many pieces of legislation concerned with establishing minimum incomes, in an attempt to arrive at some way of arranging for a guaranteed annual income so that we might move away from what the hon. member obviously acknowledges to be the deficiencies of the legislation before us.

I am prepared to put on record the difficulties arising from the relationship between family allowances as contemplated in Bill C-170 and the income tax structure set out in Bill C-169. We reach a position under that tax structure which would allow a fairly large payment at the low end of the income scale, but also a very large deduction from tax at the other end. In effect, this is really making provision of a high amount for children at the low end, through family allowances, and at the top as a substantial deduction in respect of children whose parents enjoy very high incomes—I am talking about income as high as $100,000 a year.

One of the objections to the proposition before us is that we are abandoning what we really set out to achieve in the beginning, that is to say, the provision of something special for the children regardless of their parents ability to earn.

It has been said that the middle class is paying the shot—that the middle class does not need this money. This is not really my experience. I believe we are now confronted with a totally new poverty level in Canada, and this poverty level is not necessarily below $10,000. For instance, I know many teachers who are earning between $10,000 and $14,000 and who are not getting enough money to meet their needs. This is because their standard of living has increased considerably and they are finding great difficulty in maintaining this level. Now, when these people are experiencing great financial difficulty, exactly the same thing happens with respect to children in those families as to any other children. The two cars in the garage cost so much a month to maintain. The $40,000 house costs so much to maintain. There are bills for heating, medical expenses and so on. There is only a certain amount of money to be spent on these things, and if it is not enough, what happens? There is a shortage of food and the children are eating hamburgers. So we are not going far enough if we simply take a certain level and say it is a reasonable level of income.

I read a story the other day in a Toronto newspaper which maintained that a family consisting of parents and two children, who own their own house and car, were living at poverty level although the family earnings amounted to $11,000. The two children were attending university. I suppose it depends entirely on the way in which a family distributes its income, or on the type of society in which we live. Members of parliament are familiar with this situation. Since I have been here our wages have been increased on three occasions. I find that no matter how high my wages are I can find some way of spending them all. There is always some way of distributing the money. I suppose this is true of everyone in every category.

I heard of a case the other day involving a family which was very worried about two things. These people live in a house which is worth, I suppose, about $300. Their income, I presume, would be less than $1,000 a year. I am quite sure they were not receiving welfare or any kind of assistance at all. Two of the children go to high school. The mother says: "I don't know what my daughters do with their stockings." I continually have to buy nylon stockings. She also pointed out that she was obliged to pay $4 to buy a book. The sum of $4 is an immense amount of money for that family, but they were willing to pay it. I imagine the reason they were willing to pay it was that they got the money in the form of a family allowance, as a right, and it was used for the purpose for which it was intended.

In many cases this is also true in families of higher income. For example, take the family that drinks too much, or which has drug problems or monetary problems. The fact that there is a large income coming into the house does not necessarily mean that the children get any of the benefits. They may, or they may not. But in many cases a universal payment given to them as children as a right has been of exceeding advantage to those children.

I am of the opinion that one of the reasons the government is now moving away from universality is that it is considering a guaranteed income for Canadians. If that is so, then I am fully in support of it. But if it is so, then let the government be brave and introduce such a proposal now instead of playing around with it. If we pass this piece of legislation as it is, no one, but no one, will know how it operates. Let me just read one small paragraph and ask the minister for a quick explanation of it. This is a complete sentence:

> Where at any time during the first eleven months of a benefit year, other than the fourth month, or during the eight-month period next before that benefit year a parent—

And so on it goes. Another example:

> (b) where the parents of the child were not resident in Canada for the complete base calendar year, unless a statement of the estimated income of the child's family for the first calendar year thereafter in which the parents reasonably expect to be resident in Canada has been submitted by the parents, in which case the income of the child's family for that calendar year shall be deemed to be the income of the family for the base calendar year.

There are many clauses of the bill like that which do not make sense. I would advise the minister to look at them closely, because he is doing in this bill exactly what we did with the unemployment insurance legislation—putting in an "and" or a "this" or a "that", and giving alternatives.

[Mr. Peters.]

As far as the unemployment insurance legislation is concerned, by doing this we literally created chaos. The calculations that will have to be made in this legislation will require use of a computer. First of all, you will have to compute your income for the previous year, or people will have the alternative of establishing a base year, whether the previous year or a projected base year, at one's discretion. This information will be fed into the computer along with other facts and figures, such as age of the child, number of children in the family and so on. Each will be separately calculated. Then, during the year you will have to decide, either at the end of the fourth month or the eighth month period before the end of the benefit year, whether you ceased to be employed, and so on. You will be faced with many choices for the computer.

This will mean the minister will have to engage the services of inspectors. Just to give the House an example of what this means, an inspector for the Unemployment Insurance Commission visited a man in my area the other day. The man was not home, but the reason the inspector called was that this man had reported some part time earnings the previous week and the inspector was checking whether he was making more money than he claimed. The inspector telephoned this man's wife at her work and asked where her husband was. She replied he was in southern Ontario. He asked for his telephone number, but his wife replied that he was looking for work and that he telephoned her every night. The inspector reported this man was unavailable for work since they were unable to telephone him.

This is the kind of inspector who will be appointed under this act. These inspectors will have to find out what money people made previously. There will be inspectors to find out what people are making now. If a wife works for two months, this will alter the annual budget information that is fed into the computer and the information will have to be refed to the computer. If the wife receives unemployment insurance benefits, she will have to calculate the wage that she has received which is added to family income. Thousands of calculations will have to be made during the lifetime of a family. In other words, bureaucracy will grow to an immense size.

I see nothing wrong in this country with establishing an income tax structure which will absorb any payment made universally for which there is no need. One would know at the end of the year whether or not one had received too much money. If one had, this amount could be paid back through the income tax structure. If not, the money is kept by the recipient. I fully realize we have been through the Income Tax Act a number of times. I understand that one major company hired six or seven lawyers and sent them away to a quiet area to study the recent act. Having looked at it, they came back and said they could not come to any conclusions which they felt would be helpful to the company because they really did not understand what the act was all about. I sympathize with them because I think that is true of nearly everybody. I think there will be much cause for amusement in this country, in addition to television, when people try to complete their income tax forms for the first time under the new act in 1973. I suppose it will be the national pastime for several months.

A number of other factors relate to the changes made by the government in the payment of family allowances and I think they should receive consideration. One of the major influences was the desire of the province of Quebec to handle family allowances. Under the family structure in Quebec, people have been incensed that cheques are in the names of wives rather than husbands. The government has now corrected that. May I call it five o'clock?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Perhaps the Chair might be permitted to read the proceedings for the adjournment period this evening. The hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Haidasz)—immigration; the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs MacInnis)—public service; the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay)—finance.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely public bills, private bills, notices of motions.

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Speaker, earlier in the day there were some discussions about the conduct of business during this hour. There are two items that hon. members on all sides of the House have expressed interest in proceeding with this afternoon, and if the House continues in this amicable mood it might be that we will be able to get through all stages of two measures in the list of private members' public bills. The first is Bill C-78, in the name of the hon. member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. McIlraith) concerning use of the term "Parliament Hill"; the second is Bill C-172, in the name of the hon. member for Témiscouata (Mr. Gendron) concerning the change of name of his constituency. If it meets with the approval of the House we might proceed with those two bills.

• (1700)

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as everyone is in an amiable and friendly mood perhaps we might consider in addition to the two items mentioned by the parliamentary secretary, as our third item, another matter, probably as important if not more important than those two, namely Bill C-180 standing in the name of my colleague the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters), relating to earnings under the Unemployment Insurance Act. Perhaps we could make the order encompassing those three items as the ones for consideration.

Mr. Jerome: Your Honour, the difficulty I am faced with in this regard is that there has been no forewarning. Certainly, had there been any suggestion in advance we would have been prepared to accept the idea of asking for unanimous consent in that way. I did endeavour to contact the House leaders of all parties to see whether there was a disposition to deal with bills outstanding. There was one item in the name of Mr. MacDonald (Egmont) concerning the abolishment of corporal punishment to which we had given consideration. Unfortunately, he is not able to be here this afternoon and that is as far as our consideration can go on that matter. We then had some discussion earlier in the day, but I cannot commit myself further than I have in respect of these two bills.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, let me say with respect to the parliamentary secretary that we are dealing with one bill concerning the name "Parliament Hill", and Bill C-172. When those are completed, I suggest we consider the bill standing in the name of my colleague, namely Bill C-180. It does not take much consideration to agree to this suggestion. The government agrees that the subject-matter of my hon. friend's bill needs debate, discussion and airing here, and requires some solution, perhaps even more so than does the subject of the name "Parliament Hill".

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to the consideration of the bill referred to by the hon. member after the conclusion of all stages of the two items to which I have referred. Perhaps we can proceed to the consideration of that matter at that time.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): If we are to proceed with the two bills, namely C-78 and C-172 in that order, and then proceed to the consideration of public bills the House has no recourse but to proceed to the consideration of Item No. 1, namely C-9, because that is the order of business. What I am submitting is that we are pretty well obliged to follow that course, but that following the consideration of the two bills mentioned we should agree to consider the bill I mentioned as the third item, otherwise we will have to proceed with the first item.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It seems clear to the Chair that the question is whether there is unanimous consent to follow the procedure suggested by the parliamentary secretary. If there is not, I will call the first item of business in the normal fashion.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Perhaps I did not appreciate what you said, Mr. Speaker. Am I to understand that the parliamentary secretary refuses to consider the subject-matter of unemployment insurance today?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It seems that the matter is quite simple, and we should not take any more time on the point of order. I will put the proposition again, as I understand it. The parliamentary secretary has made a certain suggestion and I feel that hon. members understood what he said. This requires unanimous consent. If there is not that consent we will proceed in the normal fashion.

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Speaker, for the benefit of those present I should like to clarify my position on the matter. I am not about to withhold my consent to the suggestion that we consider the item referred to by the hon. member. We have agreement to consider the two items I mentioned, and I would be perfectly prepared to have the Chair call the bill mentioned as the third item after we have concluded all stages of those two items.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent that the first item referred to by the parliamentary secretary be called, followed by the second item, and, if there is time, to then deal with the bill referred to by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard)?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is so ordered.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

PARLIAMENT HILL

MEASURE RESTRICTING USE OF THESE DESCRIPTIVE WORDS

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Ottawa Centre) moved that Bill C-78, respecting the use of the expression "Parliament Hill", be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

He said: Mr. Speaker, perhaps at the outset I should thank hon. members for agreeing to have this bill brought forward for consideration today. I appreciate that courtesy and I want hon. members to know that I do.

The bill itself is quite simple. It is an attempt to prevent the commercial use of the words "Parliament Hill" to designate any property or place, or to identify any articles for sale or to otherwise identify any commercial enterprise for commercial use. It is very simple in its form and I think it is clear from its language.

The reason for the bill is the usage of the term "Parliament Hill" to designate a very fine new hotel in Ottawa. I might add that it is a much needed and very good new hotel. In November of last year the hotel, in a large advertisement in one of the Ottawa newspapers, indicated that the hotel was on Parliament Hill, which it is not, and the intention to use the designation "Parliament Hill" to identify that hotel as one of a number of hotels in a chain. This error was immediately drawn to the attention of the hotel and I thought the matter had then been concluded. In February of this year it became clear, when the hotel was about to open, that the name had not been changed. This matter was again drawn to their attention and notice of this bill was filed at that time. The hotel immediately took steps within its organization to change the designation of that hotel to a more appropriate one. I want to acknowledge and thank the hotel for its courtesy and action, or its maturity, however one wishes to express it. In any event I want to express appreciation for their action when the matter was brought to their attention.

As best I can ascertain, there has been no attempt to use this designation by any other enterprise in the first 102 years of confederation. Last year a farm near Ottawa chose this designation and applied it to certain livestock records in respect of cattle. There is also a small sports clothing or sports goods shop which has started to use the name. These are very recent cases and so far as I know there are no others. It seems to me this is a most inappropriate designation as applied to anything other than this immediate area and grounds on which the Parliament Buildings are situated, and the name should be reserved for that purpose.

[Mr. Deputy Speaker.]

I tried to make the bill very simple, providing that the words "Parliament Hill" should not be used for the three purposes set out in Clause 1 (a), (b), (c), that is to designate a property or location, to identify any goods, merchandise, wares or articles for commercial use or sale, or in association with a commercial service rendering establishment.

There is in addition a simple provision that a breach of these provisions is an offence punishable on summary conviction. Then, there is a clause which makes it clear that the bill in no way limits or interferes with the powers, privileges, rights and immunities of both Houses of Parliament and their members. That provision was put in because there had been some academic discussion concerning whether the use of the term would in fact constitute technically a breach of the privileges of parliament. That is not an argument or a reason which I assert for bringing forward this bill. However, that argument has been made and I thought it wise and appropriate to include a provision in the bill making it clear that the bill in no way limits the powers, privileges, rights and immunities of both Houses of Parliament and their members.

• (1710)

There is one other matter I should draw to the attention of hon. gentlemen. If it is agreeable to the House I should like to ask permission to change the wording of the motion so that instead of providing that the bill be read a second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, it read that the bill be read a second time and referred to the committee of the whole. Then, we could proceed today to the committee of the whole stage and third reading if that is agreeable to hon. members.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I shall be very brief. I think it is appropriate that the hon. member who is sponsoring this bill should do so because I know he has always had the interest, the rights and dignity of parliament, as well as the facilities which are provided for parliament, at heart. I agree wholeheartedly with the motivation behind this bill and indeed with the bill itself. I think it is a fitting topping-off of his parliamentary career that this bill should be promptly passed so that it would have the effect the hon. gentleman has in mind. However, there are a couple of things I should like to say in passing. Perhaps this would be more appropriate at the committee stage, but if I may have some latitude at the moment this would remove the necessity of saying anything at the committee stage.

Not being a lawyer, I should like to be assured that a sub-paragraph here is not wider than the hon. member intends in respect of identifying any goods, merchandise and so on. I would like to believe this would not include the use of such familiar names as "Parliament Cigarettes" and "HP Sauce", which of course stands for House of Parliament, and things of that sort. There is one slight query I have. It has to do with the designation of the bounds of Parliament Hill. As the hon. member knows there has been some discussion about the possibility of bringing the Confederation Building into use for members' offices. I am not sure at what stage this is now, but I would presume if that is done this bill would have to be amended to include that area in Parliament Hill.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I, too, shall be very brief. I should like to commend the hon. member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. McIlraith) for introducing this bill. I express to him my appreciation of the privilege of being named as the seconder of the bill. I am sure we all agree that the term "Parliament Hill" has a certain meaning in this country and that we do not want to see it commercialized. Accordingly this bill is a good one and we are happy to give it our support.

The other reason I thought I should like to get to my feet at this stage is to say that the hon. member for Ottawa Centre, who shortly plans to leave this place,—and we do not yet know to what place he may go—has already a distinguished career and many accomplishments to his credit. This was demonstrated at a public gathering in this city a few days ago. What is now happening is that he is achieving a new pinnacle. He is achieving an accomplishment which has been reached by few private members of the House of Commons. He is about to have a private member's bill passed in private members' hour. This really is a climax to an outstanding career and we extend to the hon. member our warm congratulations.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): I will be very brief, Mr. Speaker. I should like to extend my congratulations to the member for introducing and, as indicated by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), for having passed through this House a private member's bill. Under the bill it is, of course, to be unlawful to describe or designate a property, place, site or location by the use of the term "Parliament Hill". I should also like to draw the attention of hon. members to the fact that there has been a commercial shown on national television, the CBC, depicting a helicopter landing in the area and picking up, there is no question of doubt, what is supposed to be a member of the House of Commons. In the event that I do not have an opportunity to refer to this again, when the bill comes before committee of the whole I would hope that consideration would be given to making it unlawful to depict Parliament Hill in any commercial.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Laniel in the Chair.

On Clause 1—Use of expression "Parliament Hill".

Mr. Bell: Mr. Chairman, I just wish to ask a brief question and indicate my interest in and approval of the legislation. Did the hon. member have an opportunity to examine any other jurisdictions relative to this over-all subject? For example, what do they do in London and Washington? They may have similar problems and I can see in the future the misuse of other words as well as "Parliament Hill". There might be a bar, for instance, down on Rideau Street called the "Centre Block" or something of that nature. I am wondering whether these other jurisdictions have been able to cope with such things without having separate legislation. However, I support the bill and have no argument with it.

• (1720)

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, referring to the point just raised by the hon. gentleman, I did not check out the larger question with other jurisdictions, for example, with Capitol Hill, to see what measures they had taken. I thought it better to deal with the immediate problem that had arisen. I have no doubt in my mind but that it may be necessary to enlarge the legislation on this general subject, but this bill is confined to the circumstances that have come to public attention.

The hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond raised a point about a television program. I have not seen or heard of it, and I must say I am not clear about it from his description of the incident. However, it may well be covered by clause 1(c). If not, it raises a question that may have to be dealt with later.

The words dealt with here are "Parliament Hill" in combination. That is the answer to the first point raised by the hon. member for Malpeque in his rather generous remarks. I think that should remove any question that there may be in his mind.

As to the second point raised about other buildings being used to house members of parliament in the course of their duties, and the example given of the Confederation Building, which is outside the area described in the bill, I did give this a good deal of attention and thought. It appeared to me that it was better to refer in this legislation at this time to the area clearly and commonly defined as Parliament Hill. If and when arrangements are made to house members of parliament in an area off Parliament Hill, there will be other questions to be settled affecting their privileges, so that the privileges they have, and have always had traditionally, will be clearly protected at that stage. Then, the definition of the area may have to be changed when dealing with those other matters. I came to the conclusion that it was best not to try to anticipate any such change, and contented myself with a description that was soundly based, that should have support in law, and the support of hon. members as a reasonable approach.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Chairman, I want to clear up any confusion that I may have introduced. If I referred to a CBC program I wish to say I meant to refer to a CBC commercial which left the impression that a certain member of the House was being picked up from the lawn by a helicopter. I think this would trespass on the area covered by the bill. Certainly it is commercializing the Hill and House itself.

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

MEASURE TO CHANGE NAME OF CONSTITUENCY

Mr. Rosaire Gendron (Témiscouata) moved that Bill C-172, an Act respecting the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

He said: Mr. Speaker, as was indicated on first reading, the purpose of this bill is to add the name "Rivière-du-Loup" to the constituency of Témiscouata so that we may again use the well known name of "Rivière-du-Loup-Témiscouata".

The present constituency is made up mainly of the provincial counties of Rivière-du-Loup and Témiscouata together with part of the county of Rimouski.

My predecessor, Mr. Fréchette, a progressive conservative member from 1958 to 1962, had introduced a similar measure which was passed by this House. When the electoral map was readjusted, compound names of constituencies were eliminated, although the majority of people upheld the usual designation, that is Rivière-du-Loup-Témiscouata, because it better reflected the demographic and geographic reality and it also prevented any mix-up with the provincial county of Témiscouata.

I hope that hon. members will be prepared to meet this popular request and help clarify this situation, for which I thank them on behalf of my constituency.

Mr. Speaker, may I have the consent of this House that this bill be referred to the committee of the whole for third reading?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. Is it the pleasure of the House to allow the hon. member for Témiscouata to amend the motion so that the bill can be referred to the committee of the whole?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): In accordance with a special order, the House will now go into committee for the examination of Bill C-172.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Laniel in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: The committee will now proceed with Bill C-172.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the bill be reported?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT, 1971

AMENDMENT TO EXCLUDE HOLIDAY AND SEVERANCE PAY FROM DEFINITION OF EARNINGS

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming) moved that Bill C-180, to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971 (holiday pay), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have the opportunity, through the generous consideration of the House and my seatmate the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard), to speak on this bill. Its purpose is very simple and I hope it will be treated in the same way as the other bills we have considered in this hour. I hope we can deal with the bill in committee this afternoon and make progress toward its passage. As hon. members know, the question of holiday pay is under the jurisdiction of provincial governments. Most governments that have passed legislation on vacation pay have deducted at least 2 per cent of a worker's earnings and set this amount aside for his regular annual holiday.

In the province of Ontario, where I am familiar with the operation of the vacation pay act, the purpose was that a person could take one week's holiday and receive for that period the amount which he would normally earn. The desire to implement holiday pay in Ontario stemmed both from the advantages that flow to the employee, which were fairly obvious, and to the employer. It was the feeling that if the employee were to get one week's holiday with pay in the summer he would be apt to produce more efficiently when he returned to work. Most unions have negotiated an additional week's holiday and there are in some cases arrangements which provide for up to five weeks' holiday after 20 years of service.

One of the things the Ontario government did in their legislation was to ensure that vacation pay was not available to an employee until July 2. This was because we live in the northern hemisphere and have a relatively short period of sunshine. In the mines and in the factories we have not been able to provide the kind of lighting that would give enough vitamin C, so it was thought that if the worker took vacation pay after July 2 he could take his family to the beach or elsewhere to get the sun. Obviously, if he could take the vacation pay at a time of his own choosing, he might take it when he needs extra money. It was therefore decided that it would not be available to him until July 2.

Other benefits have been negotiated by unions over the years. One that has become very important in the last ten years is severance pay. This is negotiated by unions with companies against the day when the company will no longer be able to employ as many workers, particularly in fields where technological change is a real possibility and retraining will be necessary. There has been set aside a sum of money which can be used by the employee in addition to other moneys that he might have in order to make the transition between jobs. This government has agreed that in some cases where a worker has to move from one area to another it will make enough money available to the Department of Manpower and Immigration to move the family and furniture to the new location. However, everyone who has moved his home knows that while this may cover the actual moving cost it does not cover the upheaval that takes place when a person travels from one area to another to find a job.

As our technology improves and specialization in industry involves more and more retraining of workers, severance pay becomes a very important part of the protection provided to the worker. When the Unemployment Insurance Commission began calculating benefits they took into consideration a number of items they called "other moneys". These include, of course, insurance against loss of wages which one can take out, training allowances and "other moneys" which their handbook defines as follows:

> Other moneys: You must declare all moneys you have received or will receive for the period for which you are reporting, even if you did not work. This includes vacation pay, temporary workmen's compensation payments, bonuses, gratuities, severance pay, etc. Be sure to give a brief explanation of the moneys received in the space provided on your report form.

Mr. Speaker, it is my hope that other hon. members will agree that there were many reasons for establishing benefits such as vacation pay, severance pay and workmen's compensation, and that these should not be included as moneys earned by an employee while unemployed. It is for this reason I have introduced this bill and I strongly urge those members who believe in severance pay and vacation pay to support it.

Mr. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the measure before us this afternoon concerning vacation with pay has caused a degree of unhappiness to people who become unemployed, particularly those engaged in seasonal work, who have seen legislation introduced that did not exist under the old Unemployment Insurance Act.

An hon. Member: That is putting it very mildly.

Mr. Caccia: It is a regulation that was introduced in the new act and to some extent it has detracted from the general quality of the Unemployment Insurance Act passed last summer by this parliament. Another effect of this regulation, Mr. Speaker, is that it has caused an anomaly which works in favour of those who become unemployed and who are members of a union or an organization which has agreed with the employer upon a system of so-called vacation with pay to be payable at a certain date.

• (1740)

As a result of this vacation with pay fund agreed upon with the employer, it is possible for people who become unemployed and have the benefit of this arrangement to withdraw money from the fund as payment for vacation only on a date specified usually in the agreement with the union. If you become unemployed at any other time of year you will not receive this vacation with pay sum and, therefore, since the money is not available it is not calculated against your claim and is not deducted from the benefits you hope to receive.

As a result, people who become unemployed and fall into the category I have mentioned enjoy a benefit that is usually not enjoyed by the vast majority of workers who become unemployed and do not belong to a union that has negotiated such an arrangement with the employer. Therefore, there is dual treatment of unemployed people. Those who have entered into this kind of arrangement with the employer can look forward to a higher level of payment for a greater number of weeks, whereas for those who do not enjoy the benefit of this arrangement their vacation with pay moneys are included in the calculation of unemployment insurance entitlement. Thus, they pay the consequence of not having been able to organize themselves as well as other workers and for not being able to work out with their employers a vacation with pay agreement that others have entered into.

This situation, Mr. Speaker, was brought to the minister's attention several months ago and has caused considerable unhappiness particularly in the construction industry where the level of employment fluctuates from season to season. Of course, when workers are thrown out of work or become unemployed and are not covered by a specific vacation with pay agreement with the employer, their vacation with pay entitlement becomes part and parcel of the total calculation respecting unemployment insurance benefits.

The hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) also made the point that the vacation with pay payment to a great extent represents 2 per cent of the salary that a man has earned and saved while employed, and it stands to reason that this form of saving ought to be made available to the man when he becomes unemployed. It should not be deducted from the payment he looks forward to receiving under unemployment insurance.

These two matters, Mr. Speaker, have probably been brought forward for consideration because the new approach to this question is one based on cessation of income. So long as we call the present scheme unemployment insurance it will be considered by the men concerned as a form of insurance payable when they become unemployed. If vacation with pay benefits are due to people as a result of their work and earnings, those payments represent an additional resource on which they can count in time of need to meet expenses which may be unpredictable. The vacation with pay payment should not be confused with entitlement to unemployment insurance.

Mr. Peters: Hear, hear!

Mr. Caccia: In this sense, the hon. member for Timiskaming has rendered a great service to a vast number of people across the nation who are now struggling, as they have been for the past few months, with unemployment insurance regulations. They have suffered as a result of a calculation which it is felt, and rightly so, should not have been made.

It is distressing to see what has happened to a piece of legislation passed by parliament. In the practical application of that legislation, in day to day dealings with people affected one finds that the concept in the minds of the legislators who originally approved this very fine piece of legislation has been greatly distorted. Parliament intended to increase benefits and to make them available to people who had contributed to the fund for a shorter period than previously was necessary. At the same time, parliament wanted our people to enjoy a standard of living that would not be reduced to the level where a man would need to be truly concerned as to whether he could meet his day to day commitments for the upkeep of his household and the maintenance of his family. Vacation with pay is the type of extra that in this day and age, when living costs are increasing, is essential if a family is to survive the tragedy of sudden unemployment.

I do not share the view expressed a few moments ago by the hon. member for Timiskaming that perhaps a man would need this payment in order to move to a job in another region. Such costs are supposed to be taken care of by the manpower mobility program. Certainly, vacation with pay payments will be utilized by the people affected in a manner that is not extravagant. Such payments will help to meet the basic, substantial needs of a breadwinner who suddenly, for reasons beyond his control, loses his job.

It seemed to me, therefore, that I ought to take this opportunity to speak in support of this measure and express the thoughts expressed to me over the last few months by a number of people. People are dissatisfied with the measure which was introduced by means of regulation and which is causing hardship that is unwarranted. Such regulations need to be removed.

Mr. Peters: Question.

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a simple point of order. According to my assessment—and I have talked to hon. members, although not having spoken with the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis) I cannot speak for him—there is no disagreement about this bill. There is agreement: hon. members agree that the situation with which the bill deals needs to be corrected. I wonder if the hon. member for Ottawa West, as a courtesy to members of this House and to unemployment insurance claimants who are experiencing difficulty, would agree to confine his remarks so that we can vote on the bill before six o'clock.

Mr. Francis: Mr. Speaker, I do not think that is a point of order. I want to make some observations on the bill, if the hon. member for Skeena will let me proceed.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): I made a suggestion which obviously the hon. member will reject.

Mr. Francis: The hon. member who spoke in support of the bill is entitled to his opinion. As a member of the House, I have an equal right to express my observations and to raise some questions which have occurred to me about the bill.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): The hon. member agrees with its concept, does he not?

Mr. Francis: Some hon. members opposite are quick to prejudge things. That is a rather dangerous way to exercise one's mind. I want to direct a question to the hon. member who introduced the bill. Perhaps he can enlighten me on this matter. What will be the effect, if this bill is adopted, on benefit periods? I hope the hon. member will listen to me. I have the same right to make observations as any- other member in this House. If the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) and the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) would restrain themselves, I could say my piece.

I want to raise a question. What is the effect on the benefit period of adopting this proposed amendment? I pose that question at the beginning of my remarks. I hope the hon. member will restrain himself a little. Does this measure mean these payments will, or will not be counted as earnings when it is a matter of determining whether a claimant is unemployed? As I read it, the effect would be to have them disregarded as earnings. This means that once a claimant becomes unemployed, he or she would have a bunching of income at that point and would more quickly exhaust his or her benefit period.

The effect of the act as it has been interpreted is to regard such payments on a contribution basis. This would have the effect of extending the benefit period because it would not be deemed to have commended until such time as the benefit had been received. Unfortunately, unemployment in Canada is seasonal. I see the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) smiling. I am sure he will have some observations to make on this point. It is a matter of concern to all of us.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I was smiling all right, but I was smiling at what my friends behind me were saying. If the hon. member would like me to tell him what they were saying, I should be glad to do so.

Mr. Francis: Mr. Speaker, I have the highest regard for the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. I know of his concern in social welfare matters. I wish to pose a question to him. The way in which the act is now interpreted means there is an extended period of benefit. If this amendment were adopted it would put the claimant in the position of receiving a bunching of income at the commencement of unemployment when there is least need for it. It would terminate the benefit period that much sooner. I raise this question. There may be particular circumstances in which it is to the benefit of the claimant, but would the adoption of this type of amendment really be in the interest of all claimants who would be affected by it?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Don't you believe in holidays?

Mr. Francis: I believe in holidays as much as anybody else, but I do not believe in paying benefits such as holiday pay, severance pay or unemployment insurance and thereby terminating unemployment insurance benefits that much sooner.

Mr. Peters: There is no relationship at all.

Mr. Francis: There is a relationship. I know that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is not given to the kind of remark being made by his colleagues behind him.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Skoberg: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Would the hon. member accept a question? Is he aware that in 1954 an umpire ruled that neither severance pay nor holiday pay could be computed as earnings of people claiming unemployment insurance? There has already been a ruling on this question.

Mr. Francis: I am aware there have been a series of rulings. However, a substantial amendment to the act was passed in 1971, which changed many things. I am sure that when the hon. member thinks about it he will realize that amendments of consequence can even change the decisions of umpires. I do not know what has happened in respect of recent decisions in this area. The amendment before us reads in part:

—earnings received as bonus, gratuities, severance pay, retirement payments, retirement leave credits or payments in lieu thereof, wages in lieu of notice—

It is expressly designed to cope with, among other things, the particular items mentioned by the hon. member who just spoke. If that is the intention of the mover of the amendment, I come back to the question which I raised. Is it in the interest of an unemployed person to receive the maximum amount at the beginning of a period of unemployment and to have it disregarded in calculating eligibility for unemployment benefits, thereby having an earlier termination of the period in which unemployment insurance can be claimed?

I know the hon. member will want to think about this question. He will be as concerned as I am about the quick passage of a bill which has not been printed or distributed in the usual way by leave of this House. It has been given accelerated treatment.

Mr. Peters: You are reflecting on the actions of Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Francis: That is not correct. I think it is useful to debate this matter. It serves a useful purpose. I again raise the question, is it in the interest of claimants to do what the amendment before us proposes?

Mr. Skoberg: Ask the unemployed.

Mr. Francis: I have asked many unemployed persons. It is desirable to have the maximum amount of money as soon as you can get it, but the wives, children and families are often more concerned about the security inherent in being guaranteed unemployment insurance payments for a longer period of time than would be the case if this amendment were adopted.

I raise this valid question again. I believe it is necessary for all of us in this House to weigh such matters and give them careful consideration. I am not saying this concept is wrong. I believe there are circumstances in which it is conceivable that some of these items should be disregarded, but there should not be a blanket disregarding of all the items not only in the calculation of the earning space but in the calculation of eligibility for benefits. I believe it is six o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Jerome: I do not know whether Your Honour intends to call it six o'clock. I know other hon. members have much to say on this issue, but if it is six o'clock—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): It can be called six o'clock only by unanimous consent.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): The parliamentary secretary has suggested there are other hon. members who wish to speak. This is an important question that needs to be resolved. Could I ask for the unanimous consent of the House that this item stand in its position of precedence at the top of the list so that on another day we can deal with it again?

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Speaker, I do not think that would be a fair undertaking in respect of those who have bills ahead of this one. We have had some discussion on the subject matter of the bill of the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald) being referred to committee. There are other bills of that nature which have to be attended to in the proper order.

Mr. Peters: Perhaps the House would consent to continuing with this important subject for another hour.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is there unanimous consent to any of the requests made?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. It being six o'clock, the hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business has expired. I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock p.m.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

FAMILY INCOME SECURITY PLAN

MEASURE TO PROVIDE BENEFITS IN RESPECT OF CHILDREN

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Munro that Bill C-170, to provide for the payment of benefits in respect of children, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, before private members' hour I was drawing attention to the difficulties which are bound to arise as a result of adopting a selective rather than a universal type of plan as the basis for family allowances.

Universality has many great advantages. The women of this country have developed a great respect for family allowances, partly because payment is made directly to them. As a result, even in households where there is very little money available, there is always extra cash which the mother can use to buy necessities for the children, whether in the form of additional clothing or a little extra food on the table.

It is true this method of distribution has given rise to some misgivings in the province of Quebec. There was a measure of resentment, on social grounds, that the money has not been made available to the husband rather than to the wife. I note that the bill before us does not specify who shall receive the money. The various provinces, in operating their plans, presumably will be able to make this decision for themselves.

In support of the legislation which became effective on July 1, 1945, it was argued that the system then adopted would ensure a greater measure of equality of opportunity for all children. It was argued, also, that it would help ensure an adequate income for large families in receipt of social insurance and social assistance payments while avoiding grants which might diminish the incentive to work. Advocates of the bill argued, too, that it would assist in maintaining higher levels of income and employment during the post-war period.

Over the years the government has not seen fit to keep up to date the standards initially set in 1944. At that time children up to six years old received $5, from six to nine years $6, from 10 to 12 years $7, and from 13 to 15 years $8. These rates were changed in 1957 and children up to the age of 10 received $6, and from 10 to 15 $8. In relations to many of the basic costs of both clothing and extras that children require for school, this payment represented considerable assistance to a family yet, as I say, over the years the government has not seen fit to keep the program up to date. The province of Quebec had a similar program to this which was in the form of a school allowance. This resulted in our adding youth allowances to the family benefit program and included children who were attending school and had not yet reached the age of 21.

The white paper indicated there was to be a reduction in family allowance according to the income of the parents. This has been followed to a certain extent by computing the benefits that will now flow to a young person. This has to be considered with the new tax provisions recently passed in Bill C-169. For the low-income families this will be a definite advantage. For the higher income families the advantage will not be so great.

In this regard, when you consider tax accrual you find the following interesting situation. I should like to refer to a study undertaken with regard to bringing into line the deductions that increase as income rises, the benefits that flow from the present scheme and the new proposal in Bill C-170. For example, a family with two children under the age of 10 years whose total income is $3,000 presently receives a family allowance benefit of $96. Under the new act the family will receive a further $120, bringing the total allowance up to $216. No deduction from that sum would be made under Bill C-169, the tax bill, so the whole of the $216 is a benefit to that family.

At the $10,000 level the same family would continue to receive the $96 allowance but there would be a tax deduction of $50.07, which means they get a total net benefit of about $46. At the $25,000 level they would still receive the $96 allowance, and under the new scheme they will receive a total of $328.82, more than $100 over the benefit received by the family earning $3,000. So it is quite true that a family which receives benefits under this act receives more if its total income is low, and the family earning $10,000 will suffer a reduction of $100 more than at present.

Another factor to take into consideration is the cost of operating the plan. Under the present plan a person sent in an application for benefits when a child was born and the following month the benefits commenced. When making an application under the new act for family allowance you have to include a statement of estimated or actual income. Clause 8 provides:

> (1) Where an application for a benefit in respect of a child is made in respect of a current benefit year, the application shall not be approved
> (a) where the parents of the child were resident in Canada for the complete base calendar year, unless a statement of the income of the child's family for that year has been submitted by the parents; or
> (b) where the parents of the child were not resident in Canada for the complete base calendar year, unless a statement of the estimated income of the child's family for the first calendar year thereafter in which the parents reasonably expect to be resident in Canada has been submitted by the parents, in which case the income of the child's family for that calendar year shall be deemed to be the income of the family for the base calendar year.
> (2) Where at any time during the base calendar year or during the fourth month of a current benefit year a parent
> (a) ceases to hold an office or employment previously held by him or ceases to carry on a business previously carried on by him, or
> (b) for any other reason suffers a loss or reduction of income,
> as a result of which event or occurrence it is reasonable to expect that the income of the family for the calendar year next following the calendar year in which the event or occurrence took place will be substantially reduced, the parents may, in such manner and within such time as are prescribed, file a statement of the estimated income of the family for that next following calendar year, in which case the income of the family for that calendar year shall be deemed to be the income of the family for the base calendar year.

That is very clear up to that point, but subclause (3) provides:

> (3) Where at any time during the first eleven months of a benefit year, other than the fourth month, or during the eight-month period next before that benefit year a parent
> (a) ceases to hold an office or employment previously held by him or ceases to carry on a business previously carried on by him, or
> (b) for any other reason suffers a loss or reduction of income,
> as a result of which event or occurrence—

And so on it goes, Mr. Speaker. The whole of this provision relates to the filing of an application for family allowance. If someone who is called upon to read this act cannot reduce it to plain English, then obviously the poor woman who leaves hospital and wants to make an application on behalf of her newborn child will have considerable difficulty.

• (2020)

I think this illustrates the complexity of the legislation and the difficulty involved in trying to sort out those who will and those who will not be eligible for the family allowance. Of course, every time we produce legislation that is confusing it means there will be a great deal of cost in the administration of the program. It is interesting to note that in the years 1969 and 1970 the administrative cost for family and youth allowances amounted to $11.6 million, or only 1.8 per cent of the total payments. It is estimated the administrative cost will rise sharply, not only because of the complicated provisions in the bill but because of the possibility of several provinces introducing their own allowance scales.

In relation to any legislation I believe there is violent reaction by the general public to having to fill out forms and provide a vast duplication of information to government agencies. Then there is the fact that on occasion this information is a question of interpretation which is subject to change. If a member of a family should obtain employment for a time there would be a change in the family income. If the breadwinner should be sick there would be a change in the family income. Each change, of course, would involve either an overpayment or additional payment which would have to be made in light of the family allowance payment.

Obviously, the administration will be 100 times more complicated than it is in a program involving the payment of a straight grant operated on the basis of age of the child. In my opinion it will be a great deal more expensive to arrive at a calculation as to what the family benefits should be, either under a projected or a base-year income program, than the saving involved in respect of those who really do not need this kind of assistance. I believe it is interesting to note that in some areas the working poor are at a much lower income level than even welfare recipients. The minimum wage in most areas is below what is considered to be the poverty line.

The minimum wage is on an almost uniform basis in the provinces and the welfare structure is based on need, which takes into consideration the size of the family and the type of accommodation it occupies. In many cases the welfare level is much higher than the minimum wage. By looking at a person's income one is really not in a position to make a decision as to whether or not that person is in a better position than someone else to maintain children and pay for their necessities.

I find this situation in respect of the student loans legislation where such a criterion is used. I am thinking particularly of a small store which also has a restaurant in a very small community in my area. The daughter of the people who own this store and restaurant attended university for several years. When she applied for a student loan it was immediately rejected on the basis that the father and mother operated a store. I think it is safe to say—certainly experience has proven this—that in relation to the net income derived from that business the family is living very close to the poverty line as indicated by the welfare structure in the area. This girl eventually was able to obtain a student loan. Originally, however, it was automatically turned down on the basis that her mother and father operated a small store and restaurant, which placed them in a certain category.

It seems to me this will be the situation of many young couples who have children and are living considerably beyond their means. It may well be that this government will soon get around this regulation. We certainly have many tables. We have them in respect of income tax and unemployment insurance and now are to have them in respect of family allowances. We will probably have them in respect of most of our health legislation. So, shortly we will have an indication of what the family income should produce in terms of housing. Probably we will be telling people, as we tell them now in the low-income field if they are receiving the old age pension and are living in a rental unit, that they should pay $36 in rent. If the federal government is making a payment through the supplementary benefit program, then obviously the rent would be increased to the maximum of, I believe, $80 and the federal government would pay it. In any case, the decision concerning what type of housing a person will have is made according to his income.

I believe the public is becoming fed up with the government asking how it is spending its money and whether or not it is able to get along with the special benefits. I am sure every member has spoken to old age pensioners who are under this kind of structure asking for supplementary benefits and the government, on examining their total finances, sometimes finds they have over the years purchased war bonds or something of that nature which they have put away for old age, burial or whatever it may be. So long as they have this money they are unable to obtain a reasonable amount of assistance.

I believe we should be working toward less of this type of automated control based on income and should be providing benefits to all those in need. Members of parliament have been receiving a reasonable salary and I am sure most of us have been able to assist our children to attend university. I do not believe we are opposed, although our children may be, to paying for their university education while someone not in our salary category is receiving a government grant or loan of perhaps more money than parents like us who may be considered affluent have made available to our children.

I think the same situation may exist in respect of the family allowance program. There may be young people, and certainly there will be children who will be deprived of some of the benefits we intended them to have when in 1944 we first talked about instituting the family allowance program. Many of our young people have less of an advantage under the new system than they have under the present one.

• (2030)

I hope that after the next election there will be sufficient change so that the government will react to the needs of the people, so that we will make an attempt to get rid of the huge bureaucracy with which the individual must deal and will not pass this type of legislation which provides that assistance is to be given to those who are poor, with no assistance going to those who are rich. This type of legislation means that we establish people in those categories and we enact legislation to keep them there.

I hope we will enact legislation providing that when the individual reaches a certain age he is entitled to a certain benefit, legislation providing that when you are born you are entitled to family allowance, not calculated on your parents' ability to pay their way but provided as a right of a newly arrived citizen of Canada.

When members of parliament go out on the hustings and talk to the people of this country I am sure they will find that one of the major complaints is with respect to the morass of detail and information that people have to provide to government. The criteria governing this information are both degrading and divisive.

I believe that this legislation has accomplished in the years of its existence much that we wanted it to accomplish I am sure it has given the opportunity to many poor families to provide a better education for their children. An opportunity has been provided by the family allowance program to buy clothes for children in order to make them acceptable in our society. The family allowance payments have also been spent on medicine and on additional food for poor families. The only disadvantage that has occurred has been not with respect to the form of the demogrant or the tax structure but the fact that the government knows children do not vote. If children had the franchise, then every time we had an election during the last 15 years there would have been an increase in family allowances to match the increases in old age pensions.

Old age pensioners had the vote and governments remembered them. However, after the 1968 election the government had such a huge majority that no increase was given to old age pensioners but a scheme was introduced to assist those in dire need, a totally new program providing a guaranteed income supplement. I suggest that if children were able to vote, Mr. Speaker, we would not have this kind of silly, selectivity-based program.

[Translation]

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to say what I think of family allowances in our modern society; to my mind, this is the most important problem in Canadian history because it is the very basis of our society.

Mr. Speaker, the structures and institutions of peoples are undergoing deep transformations these days and our country cannot escape them. These transformations accompany cultural, economic and social evolution, which profoundly influence the political life of our society, especially with regard to the rights and duties of the individual in the exercise of civil liberties and the pursuit of the common good and with regard to the structure of relations between citizens and between the citizen and public powers.

Awareness of human dignity has grown more acute. Efforts must be made to set up a political-judicial order in which the rights of the individual in public life are better protected, while being closely related to present economic and social progress. There is more co-operation and this is likely to guarantee to each and everyone, not only to a privileged few, the true enjoyment of the rights that attach to the human being.

Mr. Speaker, the adoption of a truly human policy implies, above all else, the development of an intimate sense of justice reinforced by fundamental convictions on the true nature of the political community as an end, the sound exercise and the limits of public authority. Obviously, the political community and public authority find their basis in human nature and therefore stem from an order established by God, although the choice of political regimes and the appointment of its leaders are left to the free will of the citizens.

• (2040)

As for our present concern, Mr. Speaker, what Canadians are asking is a guaranteed minimum income, not a selective plan such as proposed under Bill C-170.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot get over seeing how much they like to take trouble, to complicate things, to multiply problems, to invent new formulas so that people grow increasingly confused about their relationships with their leaders.

Only family allowances were still readily understood by the working population and received every month with no other complication than the proof of existence off citizens. Bill C-170 will now eliminate this worthy feature of family allowances and leave every family wondering and fending with the perennial increases and decreases in benefits they will get from this government as a result of accounting complications, undecipherable for the non-university graduates.

So, Mr. Speaker, instead of speaking of universal or selective programs, why not just call them national, instead of using the big word "universal" which I suggest has no logical meaning here in Canada.

If the allowances plan were called national, applying to the whole territory of Canada, it would definitely be known that it extends to Canadians of all the provinces and territories of our country. But what does "universal" mean, actually? And what about "selective"? Another lovely gem, which only further complicates concertation involving the guaranteed family income.

So, when reading the comments of the hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) as they appear on page 1131 of Hansard for March 24, 1972, I feel humiliated in my pride as a Canadian citizen and ask that this House, seeing to what extent this study of family allowances and security of family income is linked with concern over lack of money for the family, the children, the human person in need and the population in general, take some action.

Mr. Speaker, when it is a matter of doubling, tripling the income of corporations, banks and big institutions, there is no limit to our ambitions, skills and possibilities. Crown corporations are easily created with stock amounting to $2 billion. A bill is merely brought forward in the House of Commons and everything runs smoothly. But when it is a matter of the children of the country, the Minister of National Health—why not universal health—and Welfare had this to say, which I quote from the second column of page 1131 of Hansard for March 24:

> Payments per child of $72 to $120 a year, in essence the level of payments which our present family allowance program provides, cannot come near the annual cost of maintaining a child.

I keep quoting:

One must take into account that current coverage involves almost 7 million children—

We see the tremendous expenditures involved when we start to double the rates and benefits under the present family allowances if we just double them and make them universal.

And so, Mr. Speaker, the whole speech of the hon. minister on family allowances reveals his fear of running short of money to give a decent life to Canadian children out of the incalculable resources that Providence has bestowed upon this country.

Mr. Speaker, it bears repeating over again that this approach to family income security and personal and family allowances is terribly depressing and even ridiculous on the part of our most intelligent people in parliament, who are merely trying to summarize the Canadian government's policy expressed in the now famous white paper, published a year ago following exhaustive university, administrative and legislative research by our national and provincial elite. The results are really depressing, ridiculous and discouraging. To all who are good at arithmetic, I am tempted to give a little lesson.

I am going to quote this other sentence of the Minister of Health and Welfare, which is also on page 1133 of Hansard:

By this measure the government will be committing $820 million to the FISP proposals, a sizeable increase over the amount now expended on family allowances . . . roughly $650 million.

How about that? One hundred and seventy million more. This—$170 million more for seven million children up to 17 years of age inclusively, which is, a third of the population—is a crushing burden for Canada, whose national product—not universal, mind, but national—was from $92 billion to $95 billion in 1971 and 1972, and will be over $100 billion in 1972-73.

Can you imagine? To have been afraid to increase allowances in respect of children, of students under 18 years of age, by $170 million when the national product is going to increase by over $8 billion in the coming year. I will, therefore, urge the minister to make the calculation and stop making a fool of himself on behalf of all learned Canadians.

Does the minister not understand that an increase of $170 million on an extra production of $8 billion in Canada for next year is only a peanut in a wheat field? Where does he get his proportions and percentages?

An amount of $820 million out of $100 billion, that is not even one per cent. We should stop making fools of ourselves, stop mocking the people who are beginning to see through this play on figures, because the game is the same with millions as it is with dollars and cents. The percentages, the proportions are the same whether you figure out millions or billions, cents or dollars.

So, the minister will finally understand without need for further comments. He himself said, as reported on page 1131 of Hansard for March 24, 1972, and I quote:

—family allowances have lost their effectiveness over the years, as benefits have remained almost unchanged since their inception despite sharp increases in the cost of living.

I say to the minister that this sentence would have more strength and informative value if we made a calculation of percentages and proportions from the beginning, or from 1945.

However, the national production amounted to only $12 billion in 1944-45. In 1971, it was $92 billion and it will increase to $100 billion in 1972.

In 1944, the basic salary for MP's was $4,000; it is now $26,000 which is seven times more. However, family allowances have remained the same. We are the ones to decide, according to our judgment and our knowledge.

The income for MP's, judges, ministers, university graduates, accountants and economists is based on the cost of living, proportionately to the national production, whereas for children who make up one third of the population, we are still maintaining the rates in effect in 1944-45 whence Canada's production was $12 billion, that is seven or eight times less than today.

We are now in 1972. Mr. Speaker, I could quote a dozen tables which show quite clearly the lack of responsibility or understanding of our governing and thinking elite concerning proportions, percentages, the sharing of income and the purchasing power at the various levels of population.

I have no intention of needlessly annoying hon. members by striking a discordant note. I would rather at any time play a harmonious tune which has to do with the economic balance that ought to prevail in Canada under the auspices of parliament.

Mr. Speaker, every Canadian wishes and heartily strives for understanding, economic balance in the country at every level of the population. Nobody wants to see the disharmony and the lack of balance which prevail today because of inflation, unemployment and poverty.

However, this correction must be made in our national economy. No other authority but the one at the national level, the Parliament of Canada, is in a position to administer our national economy.

What does this parliament consist of? The 264 members elected by the people on June 25, 1968, among whom we notice thirty-odd ministers and as many parliamentary secretaries, all the Liberals responsible for legislation with the support of members of the various opposition parties also elected by the Canadian people, as well as 102 senators.

It does seem therefore that on such an important issue as the security of family income, all members and ministers elected by the people of Canada, all equally interested in the well-being of nearly 23 million Canadians, should get together regarding this matter, the most important economic question, that is the security of family and personal income, which should be granted to citizens from the enormous national and natural resources that we own, with the co-operation of capital and labour of adult citizens and producers.

If only we could at long last become aware of the importance of the life of the citizens, as opposed to that of capital and the work of those who contribute to national production, we would at least have taken an initial and direct step towards economic harmony, towards balance between the various segments of our national economy.

We could at long last hope to see an end to inflation, unemployment, poverty.

But all that requires recognition of the prime objective of all government and parliament activity—guaranteeing the survival and the income of every citizen. The life of the human being, that is the first objective of all government administration. Human life must take precedence over the primacy of capital or labour because, without human life, where would capital or labour be?

If we have provided to such an extent for the protection of capital, guaranteed income or labour, why should we not afford as much or even more protection to human life, even that of the unemployed or the penniless? Such is the main object of any administration or any efficient legislation of this parliament or this government of Canada. This is the question which should be the main concern of the ministers and elected representatives of Canadians who are now close to 23 million and who are entitled to live before being entitled to employment or capital.

If capital does exist apart from the human being, if labour does exist as an expression of the human being, life is the very basis of that human being and the basis of his labour or capital. Without life there cannot be any capital nor labour for any citizen.

Therefore that life must be our first goal when we administer the economy of our country in the same way as that life is the first expression of the existence of every living citizen, even before he is able to work, even before he is able to own some capital. Life comes first, labour and capital follow suit. Is it really that order we follow in our administrative priorities? It is not surprising that the economy is out of balance, that capital is at grips with inflation, that labour suffers from all kinds of unemployment and that the life of the citizen is threatened by the harassing existence of shameful and depressing poverty.

Mr. Speaker, at long last here is that famous Bill C-170 on family income security. Are we going to deal with it in the same way as with all other major economic bills, including the Bank Act, the tax reform and the Unemployment Insurance Act, when all our efforts only resulted in providing greater sources of guaranteed income for capital, in triggering at the same time and as a consequence the increase in prices, taxes, all things that increase the cost of living, even for all the citizens who have no work and no capital, no source of guaranteed personal income, neither through work nor through capital?

This is why, the more we step forward, the more we go backward in dealing with inflation, unemployment and poverty. It is very simple. We take the wrong approach. We see things upside down. We seek to protect capital and work before protecting the life of the people of this country. Everything is mixed up in our minds. We think we are going up when in fact we are going down.

This is why capital becomes more and more important at the expense of work which is given less and less value, at the expense of personal incomes which are taxed more than ever, at the expense of the life of those out of work, without capital who are becoming poorer and poorer because the cost of living is going up, even for those who are too young, too old or too sick or unable to eke out a livelihood through their work or their capital.

Are we forgetting that life is the prime source of personal income, that before working or owning capital, each and every living citizen, whether he is a child, a student, an adult or an older person, has a right to live from the first moment of his existence to the last beat of his heart?

Nevertheless, the tremendous research work done by this government since it gained power has made us conscious of the economic situation in our country, Canadian companies, families and each and every citizen of this country.

Mr. Speaker, the individuals, the families and the companies, whether private or public, are what is being administered in Canada under the unique leadership of the government which is comprised of 264 members of parliament elected by over 22 million Canadians. In 1972, national output will reach $100 bil'ion, more than $4,500 per person on the average, which represents $22,500 for a family of five. We are rich and we live poorly. All this can be corrected through a minor readjustment in guaranteed personal income, in the right to essential things for each family of this country according to the decision we can take, we the members of parliament elected by the people for a term of five years legally ending in mid-July 1973.

That decision rests upon us. No other Canadian citizen can be held responsible for that decision. Each and every one had the opportunity of expressing his opinion thanks to the many inquiries held by royal commissions over the past ten years, and to studies of task forces and debates on white papers. Time has come for action, legislation, administration, the new economic order we want to establish and which is the responsibility of all of us, ministers and members.

The president of the Royal Bank of Canada, the chairmen of many companies with assets of more than $40 billion, the president of the Canadian Labour Congress, Mr. Donald MacDonald, with his two million union members, bishops, cardinals and the Pope, none of them can vote for or against family income security. Here, in Parliament, not even bishops, cardinals or the Queen of England could vote for or against guaranteed personal income. Therefore, it is our duty and our exclusive and complete privilege to make a decision on that urgent matter.

In order to finish its task and to establish a just society in a unique and united Canada, to create a permanent guaranteed family income for every one and for each Canadian family, for every home, apartment, residence or slum dweller in Canada, within our present monetary, economic and political and capitalist framework in our better understood free enterprise system, the present majority government has one full year left. It is entirely responsible for its decisions once opposition members have been allowed to express their personal opinions on this all important subject for the future of Canada.

If capital is treated fairly in corporations of all kinds, if work is respected by unions, big or small, the fact remains that the rights of each citizen must be considered and protected unconditionally and very closely through Bill C-170 on which we cannot vote without due reflection.

For the 22 million Canadians, there must be 22 million guaranteed incomes whether through capital or work or the basic personal rights of citizens who have no work nor money.

Mr. Speaker, since personal capital earns a guaranteed interest set by contract, since personal labour deserve a guaranteed salary established through contracts, therefore each dependent citizen deserves a guaranteed minimum by contract. This is what we should accomplish through Bill C-170.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, out of a national product of $100 billion which, on the average, amounts to $4,500 for each person or $22,500 for each family of five, there is nothing preventing us from legislating on a personal guaranteed minimum as follows: family allowances for all children up to age 10 for those aged 10 to 17, for all adults between 18 and 59 and for all pensioners aged 60 or more.

This table shows the amounts paid to each citizen in every family where the breadwinner earns an income through his work or his capital. For those families or single persons who do not earn any income through work or capital, an additional premium for motherhood, for guidance or for loneliness will be automatically added to the guaranteed personal income. As regards contributions, the program is selective and national. It is a national program in that it does not neglect anyone. It is an easily assessable national program calculated on the basis of $1 a day, or $30 a month, which is within the understanding of most Canadian families, whatever their level of education. Once the principles are recognized, the logical means must also be accepted.

Let us take time to ponder this table which is quite easy to grasp and think of all the citizens who have a right to live proportionately to our national production, year after year, before individuals and prosperous corporations can accumulate large amounts of capital for the years to come. Before capitalizing too much there must be enough consumption, Mr. Speaker.

I am well aware that it is impossible to express one's ideas in a few sentences, but this is enough to stimulate the curiosity of each one of us. I can give you more details, if you wish.

As regards production, Mr. Speaker, we should add an additional $12 to 16 billion for the guaranteed security of each citizen. It is very simple: we could draw from production itself an amount of $12 to 15 billion to be added to insufficient consumption; this amount would be levied on extravagant and inflationary capitalization, and would bring about increased purchasing power and, at the same time, lower prices and taxes; it would also stem inflation while maintaining the availability of $24 to 30 billion for capitalization, development and progress in Canada. This still gives an average—

• (2110)

An hon. Member: Read some more.

Mr. Latulippe: —of $1,000 or $1,300 for every citizen—man, woman, and child—for the future.

By taking those billions of dollars from the capitalization of corporations during the current year, you do not reduce in any way the share capitalized by productive and prosperous Canadians. Private and public corporations will still enjoy magnificent capitalization, quite enough for the most daring projects.

An hon. Member: It is very well read.

Mr. Latulippe: Those billions injected in the consumption of goods and services would help give production a new start in all sectors in Canada, in all municipalities, regions, provinces, and territories, thus reducing unemployment and increasing buying power.

Let us keep in mind that the return in a proportion of 75 and 25 in the division of production into consumption and capitalization, instead of a proportion of 60 and 40, will be effected on an estimated national production of $100 billion, which gives even more latitude than in the computation of taxes and personal and corporate income tax.

You cannot say it all in a few paragraphs, or answer in advance all the objections which are a cause of anxiety to Canadians who may feel affected by this correction of our national economy, but let us think right now of the well-being which could be brought to every Canadian home and to every sector of the economy by this injection of several billions of dollars distributed at the rate of $1 a day per child, about $60 a month for students, and around $90 or $150 for unemployed adults with no capital.

Besides, only members of parliament in Canada have the necessary legislative responsibility and authority to so restore the national economic balance, to eliminate inflation, unemployment and poverty in the normal framework of our monetary, economic and political system.

Mr. Speaker, there are many things we could say. I should like to quote from a speech published in the October 8, 1971 edition of Le Devoir:

> Having spoken about the Belgian family allowances system, which is a progressive allowance system, Mr. Vermeire expressed concern about the new family allowances schemes proposed by Canada and the province of Quebec. He said: "It seems they wish to grant them only below a definite income ceiling, a definite standard of living. It is the opposite of what it should be. Family allowances are not social welfare but a question of horizontal justice.

We could quote hundreds of similar texts stating that the plan now proposed by the government is unacceptable in such a wealthy country as ours, a country where we have only resources to distribute. Instead of doing so, we are doling this money out, to those who really need it, those who are the real consumers in our society. The family is society's greatest consumer and we need such consumers in Canada. Why then should we deprive our families? They represent the most important consumers in Canada.

The family today has all kinds of needs, unsatisfied needs. And to meet them, our production, which is abundant, is there to serve, to meet to satisfy, the needs of Canadians.

It is therefore up to us to so organize our economy that this abundance be distributed to those who need it, to those who are now deprived in our country, who could consume much more than they do now.

It is up to us to supply them with economic means, give them economic security, the surplus we have in Canada and see that this surplus meets every need. Every human being has his needs and they should all be met in a truly just administration, truly healthy and truly loyal.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, once more I will say to the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Latulippe) that in my opinion, we do not suffer at this time from a lack of consumption. If we study statistics we realize that the province of Quebec, far from witnessing an increase in population, has to cope with a falling birth rate.

It is rather in the rest of the country that we see larger families. I wonder whether the whole policy of the hon. member does not appear concentrated on the province of Quebec rather than on western Canada.

Mr. Latulippe: I speak for all Canadians.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I do not question the sincerity of my hon. friend, who is an honest man besides being one of my good friends, but when it comes to his economic philosophy!

Having said that, I will now deal with another matter.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, the minister the other day almost popped his buttons, in a literal fashion, with pride at what this government has done in connection with what he claims to be an improvement of the income security program. First, he claims in the sector of old age security a guaranteed income supplement. Then, somehow, as a denial of the principle of the words "unemployment insurance", the minister claims that in this field there is a guarantee of security of income. Also, we are told that Bill C-170 represents the third element of this over-all income security plan. But only a fortnight ago we were told that the provinces would have the right to introduce their own schemes and that they would be allocated the resources for so doing. What income security is there in that?

This is relevant to the remarks made by my right hon. friend from Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) this afternoon as to why the Victoria charter is brought in. There is a quid pro quo being brought into the picture. Under this FISP proposal, some of the provinces, may elect to move in their own direction, and this choice has been offered to them seemingly in exchange for acceptance of the Victoria charter by Quebec. At least it is public opinion that this was a quid pro quo arrangement, and we certainly heard many trumpetings of joy from the Prime Minister of Quebec. He said this was a great victory over Ottawa.

I find it strange indeed that it should lie in the mouth of any political leader in this country to say there is a victory by some Canadians over other Canadians. The whole principle of this argument is illogical and untrue. There can be no victory of Quebeckers over Albertans; there can be no victory of Ontarians over Quebeckers or other Canadians. No one can say that a province is a victor over the rest of the country. To say that a province is a victor over the rest of the country is dishonest, in my book.

An hon. Member: You said that once before.

[Mr. Latulippe.]

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I will repeat it, because today we have a report of another speech which we will also need to watch very carefully. It is the speech of the Premier of the province of Alberta. We shall see what the reaction of that province will be with regard to this and any similar proposals. It may be he is overstating his case. I have not read the speech; I have only read news reports of it. It may be an overstatement of the case by the Premier of Alberta if only to point out the absurdities that have been created in other cases. So I shall look at this legislative proposal in that context.

First of all, I agree that universality of an income transfer scheme of this kind is patently wrong. A man earning $25,000 a year and whose wife receives, under the Family Allowances Act, say $35 a month or $420 a year, should not be placed in a more fortunate position than the man who has the same number of children but earns only $5,000 a year.

Mr. Benjamin: If it is universal it will not matter.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The hon. member will have the right to make his own speech. If it is felt that there has to be some change, I would have thought it far simpler and in fact far more equitable to bring any family allowance scheme within taxable income so that any family allowance payment received would be taxed at the marginal rate applicable to that particular taxpayer.

Under this bill we are going to have a different arrangement, and what a bureaucratic nightmare it is! Family allowance will be based on family income for the first time. There are many provisions in the Income Tax Act that deny family income; family income has to be kept separate. But for the purposes of this bill the income is joined. That is the first point.

In addition, during the first year income will be estimated during the base revenue year, which is the previous year, and may bear no relationship to the income in the year in question. Take the case, for example, of a married woman who is working, who becomes pregnant, has her child and ceases to work during the year that follows while the child is still small. She has to base her claim for family allowance for her child on the revenue of herself and her husband for the previous year when she was working. In other words, her family allowance payment will be less than it should be because of the required overstatement of her earnings.

Then, take the case of the husband who is overpaid during a given year because his actual earnings are greater than his estimated earnings. Who is going to make the recovery? Who is going to audit that return? There are provisions in the bill regarding repayments and adjustments, but all of these items call for paperwork on the part of the individual recipient of family allowance as well as on the part of the control branch of the government. Again, it would have been far simpler to take it in as part of income and tax it according to that person's income.

Mr. Benjamin: Make it universal.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Another point is this. Under the Income Tax Act which we passed late last year there is provision for the payment of child-care allowance before determination of taxable income. The expense of caring for a child has now been introduced into the concept of earning an income. That was accepted in the case of working parents or single parents. There have been some difficulties with the scheme but basically the principle is acceptable. But, strangely enough, under this bill, unless the definition of "income" is to be changed by the regulations, which we have not seen, there is no provision for child-care allowance.

In other words, disqualification for family allowance is based on gross income. Why is there no provision in this bill that deductions from the gross amount payable shall be on the basis of taxable income? I think that would be far better. It would certainly be far better for persons with lower incomes because they would also receive the benefit of the working allowance. That is not provided for in this case.

So, Mr. Speaker, I find that the formula adopted for paying larger amounts to poor families with a large number of children will be horribly complicated, far more complicated than it should be. I do not understand why the government did not use the income tax structure. Why not bring the family allowance program into the income tax collection system operated by the Department of National Revenue?

I heard some members on the government side arguing that in this day and age the principle of universality, without any compensation for old age security, is a wrong principle; that old age security should be added to income, as it is, and taxed. That serves as an adjustment and determines as best we can the transfer of income from those who have large income to those who have less.

The scheme devised in this bill, while I think acceptable in principle as a laudable objective, is being used in the wrong way. In this regard I can ask further questions. In the bill there is no definition of the word "custody" as such, but the bill provides that payment shall be made to the person who has custody of the child. Does this mean that the act as it now stands will in general be followed and that the mother will be regarded as having custody except for a few exceptional cases?

Let me warn the minister that a whole generation, perhaps a generation and a half, of Canadian mothers have become accustomed to receiving a family allowance cheque. Under this bill the cheque is to be made payable to the husband and the minister will be responsible for the beginning of the biggest outbreak, shall I say, of domestic warfare that it would be our misfortune to suffer. So I hope that if only for purposes of domestic felicity—

• (2130)

Mr. Kaplan: Be serious.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I would ask the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Kaplan) to read this statute and understand it. The act provides generally for payment to either parent without any difficulty at all. We are being asked here to improve the act, and I would suggest to the minister that he continue the practice of making the payment to the mother but with sufficient flexibility that in exceptional cases the payment could be made to other than the mother.

Mr. Munro: That is what is intended by the wording.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I suggest the emphasis may have gone too far. In any event, I think the minister sees very well the point I am attempting to make. Computation of income becomes very important because it is on the basis of family income that the amount of family allowance will be determined. The formula is very complicated. Remember, this is to be subject also to further regulations which will lay down the most minute determination concerning what is income.

One can imagine, when looking at the matter of family income, what it will be deemed to be. Things like board and room may be involved. In order to arrive at the total, is the value of services a man receives to be considered? What about the ma and pa operation? Again, what will be deemed to be family income? Under the Income Tax Act it was very clear.

Then we might look at the definition of "child" as contained in clause 2(1)(c) at the top of page 2 where it reads:

in such circumstances as are prescribed—

That is by regulation.

—a person who has been admitted to Canada as a non-immigrant—

What, at the present time, is the entitlement? It is very simple. In the case of a landed immigrant there is a short waiting period and then the filing of an application, just as in the case of anybody else. These statutes are supposed to be for the benefit of, not the befuddlement of people.

I trust the hon. member to my left and to the rear will read the bill—

Mr. Benjamin: I am merely trying to be helpful.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): —so that he may be able to assist his colleague from Winnipeg South Centre who also is mystified.

An hon. Member: Winnipeg "North" Centre.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), yes. I apologize to the hon. member. He will admit to being mystified and the other hon. member will not. If we look at clause 7 subclauses (2) and (3) we will see there is a situation where the level of allowances payable may be varied by order in council depending upon change in the cost of living. The order in council will not be effective until it is brought before this House.

Strangely enough, this is another place wherein I find some disagreement. This act is a statute of the parliament of Canada. The provision of the levels of payment under it will be approved by the Parliament of Canada. The changes will be those proposed under an order in council which will be subject only to an affirmative resolution of this House. I would suggest to the minister that this is wrong and beyond the legislative power, because this is a statute of parliament. Why should a statute of parliament be reviewed only under resolution of the House? According to the rules of this House, the resolution shall be passed after seven hours of debate. There has not been one iota, one jot or tittle of suggestion of rule changes in the House in respect for affirmative or negative resolutions.

We now have the statutory instruments committee. But will the minister be able to tell us when his colleague will introduce proposals in respect of changes in the rules to provide for this, because the motion must come under government initiative? There is nothing to implement this resolution because the House is impotent to deal with it. There is nothing to define how the resolution will be handled in this House. I suggest attention must be given immediately by the government to introducing a special rule to deal with these affirmative resolutions which appear in the Statutory Instruments Act and which now appear, lo and behold, in this bill. I think the minister will see the point.

Then I wonder what will be the composition of the appeal tribunal. There may be an appeal tribunal under clause 12 on the question of whether any benefit is payable. A person, department, agency or institution may appeal against the decision to a tribunal to be conducted in accordance with the regulations. Is this to be another job for the boys? Are we to have a tribunal going around the country hearing arguments between departmental officials and mothers and fathers? I wonder how much more bureaucracy we will have to set up.

With respect to income and the grounds for appeal we find this provision:

> Where, on an appeal under this act, it is a ground of the appeal that a decision or determination made as to the income of a person was incorrectly made, the appeal on that ground shall in accordance with the regulations be referred for decision to the Tax Review Board—

Now it finally comes within the field of income tax and the Tax Review Board. This would never have arisen in the first place if the definition had referred to taxable income. As I said before, if the family allowance to be paid to all persons making application were taken into income and the level set so that you could achieve the same sort of result as may be obtained from the proposal in this bill, it would be easier to administer.

I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that what we have here is a very cumbersome proposal to achieve an end which I would agree has merit but it will require a fantastic amount of adjustment by the recipients of family allowances. It will require a tremendous bureaucracy to administer. It will be an endless bone of contention. There will be all sorts of difficulty. Why do we need such a complicated scheme?

Further, Mr. Speaker, it is possible that some of the provinces may decide that they want none of it. They may decide to maintain only certain minimum levels. Certainly, I do not think there are more than one or two provinces, or possibly three, which could support entirely from their own resources the level of family allowances indicated in this bill. What will be achieved by this bill? What will be the gain? These are questions which must be weighed when dealing with the bill.

Will all the administrative changes, all the upsetting of people be worth a candle if the end result from a social point of view is very little better than the present scheme, and may be even worse? I hope that when the bill goes to committee the minister will come up with a lot of explanations and accept worth-while amendments which might make the legislation much more effective and less objectionable.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Certainly.

Mr. Benjamin: Since I am having difficulty about this bill, I ask the hon. member whether he is or is not in favour of universality?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I think the hon. member is confused about what is meant by universality. If what is meant by universality is that all persons having children can make application and receive a payment, yes I am in favour of that. But I do not agree that there should be uniformity of payment universally on a non-taxable basis. In other words, I insist that you achieve the right result, in fact a better result, by taking the family allowance into taxable income and using your tax system, that which governs all your other income, as a method of recovering moneys to transfer them to the lower income groups from the middle and higher income groups, groups which under this bill will be deprived of payments.

Mr. Jack Cullen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, if I needed any convincing that this was a good bill, and I certainly did not, the arguments that have been put forward by the opposition parties have convinced me that I was right and that it is good legislation.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): It creates a Frankenstein.

Mr. Cullen: The only Frankenstein was the hon. member's attempt to explain what he means by universality. It took him five minutes to answer a 30-second question. Fortunately, he did not have the job of drafting this bill.

The opposition parties have reached out to the point where in some cases their arguments have been ludicrous. We have heard them talk about the difficulty concerning the payments going to the husband or the wife and upsetting domestic tranquility. Then we heard the usual scare tactics. I am sure that one hon. member who spoke this afternoon, when preparing his speech wrote that thousands more bureaucrats would be required. I can just imagine him saying then, "No, that won't have enough impact," so he promptly turned it into "hundreds of thousands more bureaucrats." I am surprised that he would attempt to mislead the House without endeavouring in any way to back up his statement.

Mr. Alexander: As you said last night, this is another lousy speech.

Mr. Cullen: I tried crossing swords with the hon. member last night and came out second best because I was not on my feet, but if he wants to tangle with me tonight I will give him his answer. This afternoon we heard the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker). I doubt if he touched on the subject matter of the bill. I do not know how long he spoke, but it was probably for the full 40 minutes allowed. Possibly he dealt with the bill for about three minutes. The rest of the time he spoke about oaths of allegiance to the Queen, about how the constitution was being destroyed and how this was a black day for the House. Mr. Speaker, I think he has been saying that every day since he came into the House 30 years ago except during the time when he was prime minister, and then all the doom and gloom he spoke about came true. As a matter of fact, I wonder if he deserves the title of right honourable. I think he is more often wrong than right and more often mischievous than honourable.

I support this bill, Mr. Speaker. I think the government has been courageous. What have members of the opposition said? They have said the bill will be difficult to administer and to interpret. It is the sort of thing that scares them from coming forward in the House and telling us what they really think. We do not know whether they are for universality or against it. One of their members said, "It is a poor bill. This is wrong, that is wrong; but I am going to vote for it." What kind of position is that to take?

Then of all things we have an NDP member getting up and almost deifying Mackenzie King for the wonderful decision he made in 1944, forgetting that in the old days the predecessor of that party used to vilify the Right Hon. Mackenzie King. In fact, listening to the hon. member almost made me think that Mackenzie King was in the House last night. Maybe they are hearing voices from up above; but if they are hearing the voice of Mackenzie King they should pay more attention to it, because it would make a lot more sense than some of their speeches.

The hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) was one of those who attacked this bill. Mr. Speaker, I never thought of him as a lobbiest for millionaires, but he gets up and says that the fellow who is making $50,000 a year and has a couple of children should get this money even though we have to tax the fellow earning $5,000 a year, who has three or four children, in order to pay the first man. That is his idea of universality. Members of the NDP say we should give money to everybody and more to those in the lower income bracket. Who could disagree with that? But it must be remembered that they do not have the responsibility of raising the money from the taxpayers, in particular from those in the middle income bracket.

There comes a time when you have to decide that you do not have that kind of money to spend. We do what every government should be doing—we endeavour to help those who need help. We are not giving this money to the $50,000 a year man. We find the people who need help, and help them. What is the other argument of the opposition parties? It is that this bill is complicated. We heard that argument all through the tax bill.

Mr. Alexander: We were right on that.

Mr. Cullen: The reason bills are complicated is to protect the people who will derive benefit under the legislation. The 90 per cent or 98 per cent of the people who will benefit will do so in a routine way; they will get their cheque every month. However, there will be cases where differences will crop up and I suppose this is where the hundreds of thousands of bureaucrats that we heard about this afternoon will have to be put to work. Mr. Speaker, we know that is just not true.

Mr. Alexander: It will work just like unemployment insurance—perfectly!

Mr. Cullen: As a lawyer, Mr. Speaker, I remember that we used to be called upon from time to time to talk on wills and estates. One of the happiest things to happen to a lawyer when he spoke to a group on these subjects was the Ontario succession duty act which was drafted by the Conservatives. The relevant section was almost a page long, without a comma, a period or a question mark. It made comical reading, but it was an example of poor draftmanship. It could have been made very simple. We recognize that governments have to draft legislation to cover every alternative, not so that people will be excluded but so they will be included. They can only be included when they come within the four corners of the act. Anybody can get up and read off a section quickly and make it sound complicated and confusing. What kind of criticism is that? What this bill is trying to do is help people by giving benefits to those on low-income.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cullen: I think the New Democratic Party is misleading the general public. They seem to think that the man earning $4,000 a year who has four or five children will be upset because he has to apply for this benefit or because he will now get two or three times as much money for each child. I do not think that will disturb him at all. The people who will be disturbed are those who were in the income bracket that I was at one time, about $18,000 a year, with two or three children.

Mr. Alexander: You were making more than that. Be honest.

Mr. Cullen: I was talking about when I was a young law student working my way through college.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, those people will be disturbed with the old political platitude that we hear from the Conservative party—when you give something to the Canadian public you cannot take it away from them. If the $12,000 a year or $16,000 a year man is told that he is going to get this, it is political heresy to suggest that it might have been a mistake and perhaps we should be giving the $6 or $12 a month to the people in the $4,000 a year bracket. They are the people who should be getting it and who can use it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cullen: People are going to be upset, particularly the wives of good friends of mine who will no longer be receiving the family allowance, or mothers allowance as it has come to be called. But, Mr. Speaker, I think that any politician could go on a platform, debate that question with anybody and point out that the person in the low-income bracket needs this money much more than the person in the $12,000 a year bracket. I would be happy to debate that question on any platform, except with my wife who will no longer be receiving it, at least until the next election.

Mr. Alexander: What does she say about it?

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, I support this legislation because it is one more example of the courageous stand that the government is prepared to take with legislation that is difficult. Putting through the Criminal Code omnibus bill was a long and difficult procedure, but how right it was. Notwithstanding the fact it would be difficult to put through the House, this government amended it and put it through. Then there was the tax reform bill.

Here we have a bill that I think the public of Canada is prepared to accept. I do not fear the bureaucracy of Canada, Mr. Speaker. I hear this condemnation from the opposition parties: The rotten old bureaucracy; they are always trying to build their empires. We have the best civil service of any country in the world.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cullen: Occasionally there is a rotten apple in the barrel, but that is bound to happen with the thousands of civil servants we have. I suggest that by and large the people who administer these laws are doing the best they can to make them easy to understand and to help people who need assistance. These people come before our committees and we speak to them individually, yet we come here and hear the general condemnation that they are bureaucrats. Mr. Speaker, these bureaucrats are doing Canada a great service. Most of the time they are civil and most of the time they recognize that they are the servants of the people. I do not think we want them to be subservient.

We tend to forget that sometimes the person making an application for money is wrong, not the bureaucrat. But the bureaucrat has to tell him that he does not qualify under the act, and that makes him a bad bureaucrat in the eyes of many people. Mr. Speaker, I shall not take any more time because I see we are reaching the closing hour.

Mr. Alexander: Go ahead. Praise the government some more.

Mr. Cullen: I do not think this government needs any more praise. We find that our popularity is going up and Conservative popularity is going down, although it is hard to go down when you are at the bottom of the pile. This bill does not need a lot of shouting or support. It is doing what governments are elected to do, namely, to see the need and to fill it. I am proud to support this bill.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

[Mr. Cullen.]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The hon. member knows that he can ask a question only if the hon. member who has just resumed his seat accepts it. Is the hon. member willing to accept a question?

Mr. Cullen: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Benjamin: May I ask the hon. member whether he is for or against universality?

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, I am against universality when it does the kind of thing that the old bill did, that is, give money to people who do not need it.

Mr. Benjamin: Would the hon. member be kind enough to allow another question? If he is against universality, would he apply this principle to farmers who receive acreage payments, or any other category of Canadians who receive large payments?

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, it is ten o'clock and I am not going to fall into that trap.

An hon. Member: That was a good way out.

Mr. Bell: I wondered who was going to call it ten o'clock.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MacLean: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the acting House leader or the parliamentary secretary would confirm what business the government intends to place before Parliament tomorrow.

Mr. Deachman: Perhaps I could answer, Mr. Speaker. I am advised that we will take up the Canada Labour Code, Bill C-183. If we complete that we would return to Bill C-170, family allowances. If we glide smoothly through that we would return to Bill C-4 respecting the CNR, after that explosives and hijacking and then dissolve the House.

Mr. MacLean: Could the parliamentary secretary tell the House what he expects the government to place before us immediately after that, some time in June?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, once the House is dissolved how can anything be placed before us?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

IMMIGRATION—COMPLAINTS BY TORONTO POLICE ABOUT DIFFICULTY IN OBTAINING DEPORTATION ORDERS

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, Canada has many immigrants. In this century Canada has admitted approximately three million immigrants to its shores.

These people from various countries who have settled here have contributed significantly to our growth and to our development in every field.

• (2200)

In March, 1967, the government introduced the Immigration Appeal Board Act. It was passed by Parliament and was intended to remove ministerial discretion in the great majority of deportation cases and allow a court set up under the statute to deal with appeals from deportation. Since the new immigration regulations of September, 1967, which instituted an assessment system and removed geographical limitations and other discriminatory factors, an unexpected and unprecedented number of applications by people wishing to settle in Canada has been received by Canadian immigration authorities.

These potential immigrants saw Canada, with its freedom, its beauty, richness and great potential, as the best place in the world in which to live. Consequently, immigration offices both at home and abroad have been flooded with many applications. Unfortunately, since many visitors to Canada have decided to stay and ask for landed immigrant status the processing of these applications in Canada has become very complex and long. When rejected by immigration officials applicants have the right of appeal to the Immigration Appeal Board. Today I learned that there is a backlog of about 7,000 cases involving appeals from deportation orders. These cases are awaiting decisions by the Immigration Appeal Board.

Mr. Benjamin: They are all going to lose, too.

Mr. Haidasz: Apart from these people there are in this country many so-called deserters, draft-dodgers and others who have drifted to Canada from the United States. They have compounded the problem. I have received many representations from my constituents and have also been in contact with people concerned, especially in Toronto, about this matter. These people tell me that waiting two or three years to be heard involves great hardship for them. That is why I think the Immigration Appeal Board Act should be amended to provide for at least double the number of Immigration Appeal Board officials who could hear this great backlog of cases.

Mr. Benjamin: Notice who is on the board now: they are ex-members of the Liberal party.

Mr. Haidasz: Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, the difficulty has been compounded by fugitives or people wanted by the police. People like that have come to this country and have created problems for our police forces and the police forces of other countries who are seeking them. The Toronto police department, especially, has complained about problems in this regard. They want amendments made to the act and procedures in immigration offices, especially in Toronto, improved in order that they can deal with these cases swiftly and justly. Tonight, I hope that I will be given a reassuring answer by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, (Mr. Perrault) as to whether there is in the making any policy which will help solve this complex problem.

Mr. Ray Perrault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we have investigated the circumstances of the issue raised by the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Haidasz) with respect to general immigration policy and charges made by a member of the Toronto police department to the effect that recourse to extradition proceedings has to be made in removing from Canada unwanted criminals, rather than deportation proceedings, because of what was quoted as ineptitude and delays on the department's part in carrying out its responsibilities. In our view this is a completely unfair and unfounded charge.

As all hon. members know, while there are delays in the holding of certain immigration inquiries for people not able to comply with our laws, this is not the case in so far as persons arrested under the provisions of the Immigration Act, who are known and wanted fugitives from justice, are concerned. The Immigration Act is very explicit in indicating that such proceedings under the Immigration Act must be taken immediately, and this is being done. Persons so arrested and ordered deported do, however, have the right of appeal against their deportation to the independent Immigration Appeal Board.

It is also a known fact that this independent board is faced with a substantial backlog which is resulting in delays in the hearing of appeals. Indeed, the former minister of manpower and immigration tabled a report to the government by an eminent legal authority, Mr. Joseph Sedgwick, some time ago on this situation and subsequently indicated on several occasions in this House that measures were being examined to attempt to reduce the total time lapse between the ordering of deportation and its implementation. Just as soon as it is possible to accomplish this, I assure the House that it will be done. In the meantime, police authorities are of course free to choose the alternate extradition method if they consider it more expeditious.

PUBLIC SERVICE—REQUEST FOR INFORMATION ON RECOMMENDATIONS RESPECTING STAFF RELATIONS ACT AND TABLING OF BRYDEN REPORT

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, on March 7, in response to my question about the Bryden report, the President of the Privy Council Mr. MacEachen), informed me that it was not his intention to table this report or to take legislative action on it at this session of Parliament. Today, in answer to a question by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), he reiterated this stand.

This fresh questioning was undoubtedly triggered by the fact that both the executive director of the Professional Institute of the Public Service of Canada and the president of the Public Service Alliance of Canada recently have written strong letters to the government demanding publication of the Bryden report. It took several months to prepare this document at the taxpayers' expense a year ago. Time and care went into its preparation. All staff associations submitted extensive briefs which were made public.

However, the brief submitted by Treasury Board has been kept secret. Why? What does it contain that the government fears to release at this time? What does the Bryden report include in the way of recommendations that the government is so anxious to keep from the light of day? Is the government afraid that if the report is released the public will demand that action be taken in this session of parliament, before an election? Why is the government determined not to trust either the public service or the public with the facts and recommendations contained in the report?

This matter involves a quarter of a million federal public servants. With their families they number approximately a million Canadians, about one in twenty of the population. Why should all these people be kept up against a blank wall indefinitely? Changing conditions over the past few years have resulted in amendments to the Public Service Staff Relations Act which were not only desirable but vitally necessary. The field of subjects included in collective bargaining needs to be widened to include such matters as classification and superannuation.

The legislation as it stands actually favours strike action as a solution of deadlocks because so few matters can now be dealt with by arbitration. But even this procedure is very limited and needs amendment so as to make provision for the services of an independent adjudicator. These are only a few of the more urgent amendments required.

Before the Public Service Staff Relations Act was passed some years ago, the Heeney report was prepared and tabled in Parliament. Now that the act needs amendment, why cannot the Bryden report be tabled in its turn? The answer may lie in the different attitudes of government toward the public service then and now. It used to be considered unsporting for a minister publicly to attack a civil servant. Now we hear a minister publicly branding a member of his staff as stupid, without giving him any opportunity of defending himself.

It would be difficult to imagine Prime Minister Pearson, when asked about collective bargaining in the public service, replying that the staff associations and unions appeared to be suffering from "insufficiency of thought" in connection with the problems arising from public staff relations, and that they were not helping the government to find better solutions. But we hear this from our present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) whose government refuses to release a report which is vital to the processes of collective bargaining in the public service. What the government appears to suffer from as far as the Bryden report is concerned is insufficiency of action.

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Here's your chance.

Mr. Jerome: I have had more chances than I am accustomed to in one day. No one questions the importance of the subject of collective bargaining in the public service or of the importance of collective bargaining generally. Certainly, we do not question the importance of the study in that regard or the importance in the minds of the Canadian people of the questions which have been raised by the hon. member. But nothing the hon. member has said changes the situation respecting the general picture as to the disposition of studies prepared for the confidential use of the government.

The time to decide about the release of these documents is when a study is being prepared, because the decision will affect the manner in which it is conducted and the way in which the report is compiled. It would not be good enough to tell the people who have conducted such a study, after it had been prepared, that one had changed one's mind on the question of releasing it. If a specific undertaking has been given, the people who have prepared the study are entitled to rely on consistency of thought in that regard.

Whether or not the hon. member agrees with what was done, the fact is that those were the terms under which the study was prepared and those are the terms in which the government views the situation at the present time. And, as has been already stated by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen), this is a document intended for the confidential use of the government and will not be tabled. I can only confirm that legislative action on the basis of that study is not contemplated during the present session. Those are the only remarks I have to make on the subject at this time.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I thought you believed in an open society.

FINANCE—POSSIBLE REDEMPTION OF THREE PER CENT PERPETUAL BONDS

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, on March 21 I put a question to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) with reference to the government's plans, if any, to redeem the so-called perpetual bond issue put out in 1936. To set the record straight, at that time, on a point of order, I suggested the minister had not answered my correspondence on two occasions. I want it to be clear that I was referring to only one letter of September 20 which concerned the matter of criminal law reform. It was only one letter that he did not answer with regard to the question I asked him on March 21.

The minister has since replied, though to my way of thinking in a most unsatisfactory manner. It seems obvious to me that a government which can devise such a cumbersome and complex tax reform bill as we saw recently could certainly devise a plan which would be equitable to those who in 1936 invested to the tune of $55 million in the future of this country and who have since seen their investment eroded to the point at which it is almost a joke.

I doubt very much if the 1936 perpetual bonds could be sold for more than $50 at the most, perhaps for only $40 per $100 of their par value. To me this is nothing less than a national disgrace. It is hardly creditable for a country such as Canada, which purports to be one of the world's leading financial nations, to put out an official government issue which compares with some of the Russian or Chinese bonds issued early in the nineteenth century.

It is strange to me that the Minister of Finance cannot recognize the hardship inflicted upon Canadians who have been holding these bonds which are now returning about 3.1 per cent in interest. Surely the Minister of Finance could devise some plan, based on random serial numbers or otherwise, which would alleviate the hardship which these investors have encountered since 1936. That is about the year in which I was born, Mr. Speaker. I realize I have depreciated a great deal since that time, but not as much as these bonds, I suggest.

This is a matter of concern. Surely a country's bonds are a measure of its integrity. As a Canadian and a member of parliament I am embarrassed to think that a bond issue involving some $50 million should have earned such an ill reputation on the bond market that it should have sunk to its present level. It seems to me, despite the minister's comments in page 2 of his letter to me, that he should recognize that redemption of these bonds has become a matter of national conscience.

It may well be said that to redeem these bonds would be to create a precedent which would suggest to anyone with an investment, government or otherwise, that something should be done to make certain that their investment is protected. This is not the case. When a government guarantees that bonds will be redeemable at par, a person has fair warning when they buy the bonds. Here we have a bond issue and there is no guarantee when they will be redeemed. As far as the people who are unfortunate enough to hold the bonds are concerned, they have something that is worth practically nothing. It is true that they could perhaps get $40 or $50 for these bonds, but there is no guarantee that they will get their money back at any particular time. The very stigma attached to these bonds should make them an embarrassment to a country such as Canada.

It seems to me that all the minister has to do is accept the fact that these bonds are unique both in terms of their perpetual nature and their low yield. Does the minister not think that these bonds deserve special treatment, contrary to the observation in his letter to me? I suggest that they do, that this is an important enough issue for the Minister of Finance to address himself to it immediately and give very real thought to correcting what is a blot on the financial reputation and record of this or any government.

Mr. Judd Buchanan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to have the situation clarified regarding the two letters. We were able to locate only the one letter dealing with this subject, but I will be happy to check into the previous letter, which I gather dealt with another subject, and see just what the situation is.

As for the subject raised by the hon. member, the concern is that these perpetual bonds are marketable and that their price is determined in the bond market. In his letter the minister indicated that he was aware that a number of persons who were holders of these bonds could ill afford the capital loss that would be involved in selling at current market prices.

A good deal of consideration has been given to this problem, including, as suggested by the hon. member, recalling these bonds on the basis of random serial numbers. Unfortunately, all such proposals carried with them the implication of protecting investors in marketable securities from the vagaries of the market. To accept this principle, even in circumstances designed to alleviate hardship, would in the opinion of the minister lead, quite understandably, to demands for similar treatment by all other investors in government of Canada marketable securities selling below their issue price. In these circumstances it was felt that this is not an undertaking into which the government would like to launch itself.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.21 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

LE DAIN REPORT—STATEMENT ON GOVERNMENT ACTION ON RECOMMENDATIONS CONCERNING TREATMENT OF ADDICTS

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I undertook some time ago to make a statement to the House concerning the government's reaction to the remaining recommendations of the last instalment of the Le Dain report on treatment. I am pleased to indicate to the House the action taken to date by the government relative to the report on treatment.

As hon. members are aware, this report was submitted to the government only a few weeks ago. We have already taken significant steps to implement major recommendations contained in the commission's report. These may be summarized as follows: First, with regard to methadone maintenance, recognizing the necessity to rationalize treatment of opiate dependence I announced in the House on February 24, 1972, government action to control the drug methadone used in treatment of heroin dependent persons. I am pleased to announce that my officials are completing arrangements for the designation of physicians who will be authorized to use methadone.

Those so authorized will be considered to possess the necessary expertise and will have available to them necessary facilities and ancillary services to properly utilize methadone. Principles to be used in determining the criteria for good medical practice in the use of this drug are in full agreement with recommendations in this area by the commission.

Hon. members will be pleased to learn that full support for the government's action to control methadone use is being received from the medical profession. The methadone control program I announced on February 24 is expected to be fully operational by June 1, 1972.

Second, heroin maintenance. Included among the recommendations in the commission's report was one which dealt with maintenance of heroin addicts by providing them with heroin. The commission concluded that heroin should be made available for administration by physicians to heroin dependent persons, under very strictly controlled conditions. As I have indicated on several occasions, I felt it advisable to withhold comment on this recommendation pending careful study of it. This study now has been completed and I wish to indicate the government's views on the commission's recommendation.

In arriving at a position on the recommendation I have, of course, been aware of the views expressed by Canadian physicians regarding a heroin maintenance program. As some hon. members may be aware, the Canadian Medical Association has stated it disagrees "in the strongest possible terms" with any program of providing heroin to those dependent on the drug.

Having carefully considered all the factors involved, I have concluded that if patients must be maintained on an opiate drug, use of methadone is to be preferred, on both medical and social grounds, to use of heroin. Furthermore, the possibility of abuse of a heroin maintenance program is intrinsically high, even if one considers the safeguards suggested by the commission. For these reasons the government cannot accept the recommendation of the commission of inquiry relating to heroin maintenance. We agree with the Canadian Medical Association that there is no place for such a method of treatment in the Canadian setting.

Third, treatment of rehabilitation facilities. Officials of my department have been actively engaged in discussions with their counterparts associated with treatment and rehabilitation facilities for opiate dependent persons. These discussions have centred on the need to establish criteria for the evaluation of treatment programs and the necessity of periodic reappraisal of their effectiveness.

Fourth, use of amphetamines. I announced in the House on February 24 plans to limit the use of amphetamines to the treatment of two relatively rare medical disorders. Physicians wishing to use amphetamines for these two conditions will be required to receive authorization from me for this purpose. Amphetamines will not be permitted for use in the treatment of obesity as with so-called diet pills. Details of the administration of this program are now being worked out in conjunction with the medical profession. Plans are under way to convene an expert advisory group to consider the feasibility of developing an effective amphetamine antagonist and consideration is being given to sponsorship of research in this area.

Fifth, treatment manual. The treatment manual presented in the commission's report is being enlarged and brought up to date through the co-operation of medical consultants. The revised manual will be sent to all physicians in Canada within the next few months.

Sixth, therapeutic communities. Recognizing the general validity of the commission's recommendations regarding the value of therapeutic communities, my department has provided funds to assist a therapeutic community in British Columbia and is completing final details relative to the provision of financial assistance to a second therapeutic community in the Montreal area. Research and evaluation of the effectiveness of these communities are integral parts of the programs.

Seventh, the treatment of alcoholism. My department agrees that alcohol is the most widespread drug dependence problem. Consultations are being held with provincial governments and key provincial agencies to determine what form of assistance the federal government might most appropriately provide in the fields of prevention, education, treatment and rehabilitation of alcohol dependent persons.

May I say in closing, Mr. Speaker, that the commission has identified a number of community treatment service needs for drug and drug related problems. My department had already responded to some of these needs—information for parents and teachers and the development of laboratory services are good examples—and will continue to promote fulfilment of these needs through its non medical use of drugs programs.

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro). This is the quickest action I have ever seen from this government. It was just yesterday that I asked the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) about the drug heroin about which the minister has spoken. If we can get this type of reaction every day, let's keep it up.

[Mr. Munro.]

The minister spoke of the rationalization of the methadone treatment and the appointment of doctors who are skilled in the art of treating this particular type of addict, and has seen fit to reject the report of his own commission, one which was in keeping with the report of the research committee of the American bar association which only a couple of weeks ago stated that after a full survey it had reached the conclusion that federal centres should be set up across the United States for the treatment of heroin addiction. This is very similar to the recommendation of the minister's commission which proposed allowing physicians to treat heroin addicts across Canada under strict conditions.

However, the Canadian Medical Association after looking at the situation felt, I believe rightly, that there are two sides to this coin, one being the art of interference with the medical profession and their conscience and the other being the power of government to do as they like. You have those two sides of the coin to keep in mind. However, as I say, the CMA after looking at the situation did back the idea the minister has expressed and felt it was safer to treat heroin addiction through the use of methadone in properly oriented centres. The reasoning behind this is obvious. Research facilities are necessary if one is to know how a heroin addict is progressing during his methadone treatment and whether or not the result has been successful. It has to be accepted that this is scientifically necessary in connection with the treatment which addicts ought to take.

The minister went on to speak of the use of treatment and rehabilitation centres. I am not quite clear what he meant in this regard. I am sure the medical profession has not heard of this. I do not believe the minister has consulted the CMA, any other medically oriented body of which I am aware, or the provinces. If he has, we would like to know about it.

This brings me to another point. The minister has often made excuses for not taking action on the ground that he cannot interfere with health and welfare arrangements or seek to control the medical profession because these are areas within provincial jurisdiction. But in this case he takes another position entirely, as far as I can see. He also states that amphetamines have a limited use in the treatment of two relatively rare disorders and that physicians using amphetamines for the treatment of these disorders will be required to obtain authorization. I am sure the minister intended to add "on the advice of medical commissions or medical experts in their particular fields."

• (1420)

The minister said that amphetamines would not be used in diet pills, and we approve of that. However, amphetamines and like drugs are used for other purposes, and used medically correctly. I hope that the minister is not regarding this as a criterion for stepping in and interfering with proper medical practice in this or any other field. On occasion he has stubbed his toe. I need only remind him of the interference that took place in the use of diet on diabetic sweeteners for sugar not so long ago. I am sure he recalls that.

However, I do want to congratulate him for something. It has taken me a long time to get the minister around to realizing and to expressing in the House the fact that alcohol is the most widespread drug dependent problem in Canada and costs us more than the rest of the addictions put together. I congratulate the minister for finally realizing that. I knew that if I kept after him long enough, some day he would get up in this House and agree with me. For that I am very grateful.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rynard: We may also be making a start on educating young people of the age to consume alcohol, of the dangers thereof. I sincerely congratulate the minister for taking this step. I also appreciate the fact that he is setting up centres for this purpose. On the whole, Mr. Speaker, I agree with many of the points made by the minister but I ask him to keep in mind that this must not be considered any criterion for interfering with good medical practice or the conscience of the doctor. As the minister said in his statement, this matter falls under the provinces and the medical profession and it is they who must exercise the necessary discipline.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, this is the second declaration or statement by the minister to the House during the past month or five weeks which we have had to chew, ingest and digest. Fortunately, we have not yet become addicted to the same sort of approach that is advocated by the minister in his statement. With one exception, I look upon the minister's statement as a sort of expanded progress report on the statement that he made on February 24.

With regard to the use of methadone for the maintenance of addicts, the minister has gone a little further in his statement than he went earlier. He said that they are now in the process of selecting those members of the medical profession who will be considered to possess the necessary expertise and they will be authorized to use the necessary facilities and ancillary services that will be made available to them properly to utilize methadone.

However, I suggest that this is a rather vague and ambiguous statement. What is the necessary expertise that a doctor must have? What are the criteria which are to be established? Again, where will methadone be administered? I take it from the February 24 statement that it will be administered in conjunction with the clinics. If that carries with it the implication that these clinics will be in urban areas only, then to the extent that methadone maintenance may have some value, the people living in rural areas and small communities will be precluded from taking advantage of the program.

I suggest that the whole of the medical profession must be involved in the methadone maintenance treatment program so that addicts who want to cease using heroin and move on to the methadone maintenance program will be able to avail themselves of it no matter where they live in Canada. To confine the program to metropolitan areas where there are clinics at the moment would, I think, do a disservice to any value that methadone maintenance may have.

The minister stated that the medical profession is in full support of the government's program to control methadone and the like. I am not overly impressed with the opinion of the medical profession as to what methadone is or can be. I do not know of any doctor who uses methadone and I wonder how doctors can know what it is all about. I do know, as I am sure other hon. members do, from conversations with former heroin addicts who have given it up and moved on to the use of methadone that they contend that methadone, its after effects and addiction are worse than heroin itself. I understand that the idea is still endorsed by the state that a person can take intravenously or orally a chemical in order to create for him an internal condition that permits him to escape from reality. This is still the promotion of an addiction type program.

I foresee that when there is a shortage of heroin, heroin addicts will be moving in to see these doctors, who will be chosen for having the necessary expertise, and simply using the methadone program as a substitute for heroin addiction during the time there is a shortage of heroin. As soon as the supply picks up they will go back to the use of heroin. The idea behind methadone maintenance carries with it relatively little in the field of rehabilitation or the moving away from addiction to drugs, because methadone is a drug and the state is saying, "We endorse the concept that you as an individual should continue an existence which is dependent upon a drug, and we classify methadone as a drug that is legal." But this does not touch the core of the problem at all.

The valuable part of the minister's statement—I congratulate him for it, but say he should have done this the day the Le Dain report was made public; he did not have to wait for an opinion on it—was his reference to the fact that heroin should be used and given a semi-legal status to support or maintain an addict where the individual may not desire to follow the methadone treatment, for whatever value that may have for the individual. The minister will recall that on February 24 I made this suggestion to him, and I am glad he has accepted my advice so quickly.

The minister also talks in the statement about therapeutic communities, as did the Le Dain commission, in respect of treatment. The Le Dain commission expressed some very commendable thoughts about therapeutic communities as mentioned both in its treatment report and its first or interim report in which was mentioned, with some commendation, the X-Kalay Foundation program which has been in existence in Vancouver for some time and which now has expanded and moved into Winnipeg. I am pleased that the department, the minister and the government have understood this and are providing some financial support and assistance to the only therapeutic community in British Columbia, as well as doing something about establishing one in Montreal.

I think the minister would be well advised to extend this area of activity of his department and financially support therapeutic communities far beyond the program he has announced. Such communities could be of value to addicts wherever there is need, such as in Vancouver, Montreal, Toronto and other large centres. Having accepted the value of the X-Kalay Foundation, I am convinced that without further examination or study the government should very quickly extend its support.

In respect of the social question, the statement moves away from the need to make a major assessment as to why people, especially younger people, are social dropouts, why there is cynicism among the younger generation, why they reject the values which have been established and built up over the years and why they turn away from the realities of life and substitute the intake of a chemical, no matter of what sort, in order to create for them some kind of subculture within which they feel comfortable.

I think something must be done to establish a different form of society. We should try to create a concept in society that will be acceptable to people so they will not want to take alcohol, heroin, methadone or any other drug in order to live in an unreal situation. The statement misses completely the fact that there are 10, 11 and 12-year old children in this nation and in North America generally who are addicted to heroin and who reached that state by the route suggested by their peers through the intake of chemicals. The statement also misses the point completely that 6, 7 and 8-year old children are able to go to a hobby shop, purchase glue, get high and damage themselves mentally and internally.

In the past few years there has been a fantastic increase in drug abuse. There has been a fantastic increase in the number of people using alcohol, methadone, marijuana, acid and all the other chemicals and psychotropic drugs. The statement of the minister does not do much to cope with this problem and unless something more positive and worth while is done we will have a steady increase in the use of drugs and a year from now we will be in an even worse position.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Canadian people will be happy to learn about the decision just announced by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) in which the government took into account the recommendations of several Canadian doctors who, upon publication of the Le Dain report, expressed their views on the dangers of drug abuse both under medical control and clandestine.

Mr. Speaker, drug abuse has caused considerable ravages in Canada to date. A commission of ten doctors reported, after the publication of the first volume of the Le Dain report, that in British Columbia alone, 10,000 adults use heroin illegally and that the use of LSD is increasing considerably among the young especially. In addition, marijuana and hashish continue to attract ever more young Canadians.

The House is now studying a program against the illegal use of drugs, with the co-operation of the medical corps. But, to my mind, we have waited too long before taking efficient steps against the use of drugs.

Only a few years ago, sale or distribution of heroin, opium and drugs of all kinds were limited to adults. However, the pushers discovered, in universities, CEGEP's and even secondary schools, a potential clientele lured by the kicks to be derived from the use of drugs.

We therefore witnessed the development of what I shall call a shocking trade with young people in our schools.

And there have been instances, particularly recently, of both Canadian and American police seizing enormous quantities of drugs of all kinds. Nevertheless, distribution continues even at school levels.

Therefore, to be consistent in this fight against drug abuse, a major publicity campaign should be launched first of all, geared more particularly to young people, to make them aware of the deleterious effects of drugs. There should be a concurrent fight against the drug-distributing mafia, which seems to be very well organized.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I am also gratified to see that the minister's release includes a very small paragraph about alcoholism. There again, Mr. Speaker, government coffers are being filled year after year by taxes derived from sales of spirits, but so far very little action is being taken and very little money spent for an anti-alcoholism campaign in Canada. In recent years, the provinces have launched such an offensive, which so far the federal government has not participated in.

I therefore urge the minister to consider the problem and to have his officials, the physicians employed by his department, also study it and give it all the attention it warrants. I think this will benefit all Canadians.

AGRICULTURE

ANNOUNCEMENT OF INCREASE IN BASE SUPPORT PRICE FOR MANUFACTURING MILK

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I have an announcement with respect to dairy policy for the year starting April 1, 1972. The Canadian Dairy Commission has been authorized to implement a program for the coming year that will permit a substantial increase in the base support level for manufacturing milk.

While prices paid to producers for milk are a matter of provincial jurisdiction, the program will provide for an increase in the support price of the order of approximately 20 cents or more per hundred pounds of milk. The Canadian Dairy Commission has been authorized to pay a subsidy on manufacturing milk and cream under its quota system at the same rate as in the year just ending; that is, $1.25 per hundred pounds of milk testing 3.5 per cent butterfat, or 35.71 cents per pound butterfat. The price at which the commission offers to purchase skim milk powder in support of the market price will be 29 cents per pound, up 3 cents from the present level of 26 cents.

There will be no change for the present in the commission's purchase price of butter, which is 68 cents per pound, or of cheddar cheese which is 54 cents per pound. The market price of cheddar cheese has been well above that support level since last July. Emphasis in the program on skim milk powder will provide a better balance between butter and cheese production and should avoid the possibility of the overproduction of cheese.

There is a holdback from payments to producers to finance the cost of disposing of surplus dairy products, mainly skim milk powder, exported at prices below Canadian support levels. While the Canadian support price for powder is being raised by 3 cents a pound, the holdback on each milk shipper's deliveries within his quota will be retained at the 1971 level of 10 cents per hundred pounds of milk. This is possible because of the greatly improved export price. There will be no holdback on cream deliveries within quotas. While the threshold at which over-quota holdbacks apply will revert to the quota level, production patterns will be closely watched and, should production so warrant, exemption levels can be reinstituted retroactively. I refer to the 10 per cent quota threshold.

The program for the coming year, plus the steps taken in the year just ending, and the quota arrangements provide a price to producers which should ensure adequate supplies without risk of serious butterfat surpluses.

The commission's support prices for skim milk powder and cheddar cheese were increased in February, 1971. There was a further upward adjustment in those prices last August, as well as in the butter price. As a result, a downward trend in production was arrested in the last quarter of 1971 and production is now on an upturn. The arrangements for the coming year should consolidate that trend and ensure adequate supplies for Canadian consumers.

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, I wish to express our thanks and appreciation to the minister for having provided us with a copy of his announcement on our entry into the House. I should like to say that this announcement is not unexpected; as a matter of fact, it is a policy that for many months has been vigorously pressed for by the entire dairy industry. This policy cannot be attributed solely to the political expediency of an approaching general election but is, rather, an act of desperation.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Danforth: It is an indication of another attempt by the government to use the taxpayers' dollars to buy themselves out of a misinterpretation and lack of proper assessment of a major Canadian problem. It is an outright admission by this government that the policy which they have instituted for the Canadian dairy industry during their term of office has been tragically wrong, in its thrust and in its ramifications, for the industry.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Danforth: As a result of that policy hundreds of thousands of small cream producers have been put out of business, many of the best herds in Canada have been dispersed completely and small cheese factories have been closed down never to reopen. Now the government expects that through the payment of more money at this time they will reinstate the dairy industry of Canada.

The government's policy has resulted in consumers having to pay more for butter and cheese than ever before in the history of this country. It has resulted, for the first time in Canadian history, in producers of agricultural products actually being fined for production. We have seen chaos in the industry. The government was warned of this by all opposition parties in the House and by the entire dairy industry of Canada. They deliberately introduced a policy of cutbacks in Canadian production at a time when every international food gathering in the world was forecasting a drop in dairy and protein production, saying that it would be necessary for dairy production to be increased rather than decreased.

The final sentence in the minister's statement reads:

> The arrangements for the coming year should consolidate that trend and ensure adequate supplies for Canadian consumers.

This is not a statement made in face of the facts but is, rather, a prayer on behalf of the government. To that prayer I say amen.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. McBride: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gleave: It is very kind of the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. McBride) to cheer me on.

An hon. Member: You need some cheering.

Mr. Gleave: It would have been better had the cheering come from the minister. The objectives mentioned in the statement are laudable enough. The government hopes to achieve in this year a balance between supply and demand, to correct the errors made last year when we had a shortfall and to increase payments by a small amount.

I should like to take this opportunity to point out to the minister that certain areas of this policy are in need of adjustment and correction. This dairy policy is probably the beginning of a first major supply management program in a major food area of this country. It is an attempt to achieve a balance between production and consumption. In the process, a great deal of injustice has been done to some small producers in this country and I point out to the minister that these injustices have not yet been corrected. It should be a major concern of the government to correct these injustices, especially in western Canada where cream producers have been denied quotas which they cannot get back. The least the minister could do is correct these injustices.

I know that some producers are getting their payments back, but many are being left out and are being told to buy another herd or to buy another quota. It is a large enough problem for farmers, particularly small farmers, in this day and age to meet the capital costs of machinery and land, without having imposed upon them another capital cost which will be a burden on their farming operations. The minister's department should look at the situation of producers who have continued to produce cream with a minimum return and should now be given a quota. Those who were held down to a low quota should be given an additional quota.

I say to the minister, also, that if we are to have supply management for food, attention should be paid to people who have such a low level of income that they cannot readily purchase adequate supplies of protein which is available in skim milk powder and dairy products. The government should be working on a program to make protein available to the disadvantaged people in our community, and by that I mean the total community of Canada. I hope that one day he will stand in the House and announce such a policy.

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) has anticipated our desires today. I had intended to ask him whether the new 1972-73 dairy policy would soon be announced. I thank the minister for having sent us a copy of his statement at the beginning of the sitting.

We are pleased to note that the dairy industry is now popular in Canada. Once, we used to refer somewhat diffidently to the dairy industry in the House, because it was considered as a secondary industry operated by uninteresting, deficient or uneducated people.

I now realize that all Canadians, including hon. members, are concerned with that vital industry whose annual production is worth $2 billion. Indeed, the industry supports to a large extent the rural areas which are more seriously affected by losses of income or unemployment.

• (1450)

Mr. Speaker, there is more still. This industry helps provide some 300,000 jobs, most of them outside the farm. So, this industry concerns all Canadians because not only on farms but outside as well in villages and even in cities there are people who depend on that industry.

I would also say that the subsidies received by industrial milk and cream producers or others in the dairy industry do not benefit only this category of producers. In fact, these subsidies also help the consumer because otherwise he would be required to pay these amounts granted by the government to support higher prices for producers, which would mean a still much bigger increase in prices.

Mr. Speaker, this is no gift by the government to the producers of industrial milk. It is one way to distribute in the fairest possible manner, the purchasing power across the country in order to create an exchange in production between consumers and producers.

In Canada, the proportional value of subsidies equals only 6 per cent of the gross value of finished products, whereas U.S. subsidies for milk products are much higher. Canada is not a leader in this field. Sometimes I hate to see that the moment the government loosens the purse for industrial milk producers we are left with the impression that they are granted important gifts.

The government is convinced of the proper use of these piecemeal amounts which are doled out to industrial milk producers. Fortunately, they are made good use of and we know how to administer them. That is why the situation can be improved and why I suggest to the government and the hon. Minister of Agriculture to do more because this is a good investment which will bring benefits and which will be profitable to the entire population.

However, I am somewhat puzzled by the minister's statement because although there is the matter of an increase of 20 cents or more per cwt. for the year 1972-73, the estimates for dairy products indicate a decrease of $21 million. In that case, will it cost less because production will be down from last year or will the consumer be asked to make up most of the increase announced by the minister?

In any case, I think it is the government's duty to make the dairy industry prosperous because if it is we can expect that agriculture as a whole will be healthier.

I notice that in its brief the Canadian Federation of Milk Producers made this recommendation, and I quote:

> A careful analysis led us to conclude that there was need to adjust the support levels. Our delegates recommended a 50-cent-per-hundredweight increase in the support prices for manufacturing milk because such an increase is imperative if we are to make sure that there is enough milk in stock to meet the demand on domestic markets. Or else, from another standpoint, those increases are necessary to strike a reasonable balance of income relative to the other sectors of society and in order that the new system of supply management be fair and viable.

In my opinion, that recommendation is most sensible. I for one find it reasonable, but an increase of 50 per cent would certainly not have been exaggerated.

In closing, I would like to point out that the minister has already stated in the House that his department is prepared to allocate many millions of dollars to assist small family farms so that they may survive. I find that amazing; having drilled holes in the boat of small enterprises and of small farmers who are about to sink because water is seeping from everywhere, they tell them: Here is a bit of plastic, try to patch up the holes so that you may come safely into port.

In my opinion, the best plastic that they could be given would be a guarantee for more reasonable prices, more in line with the increase in production cost; they would thus be able to get a better income, to have a more waterproof boat to allow them to reach their goal.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Before proceeding I am led to comment on the length of the statements and comments which have been made during the last hour. I would hope that hon. members might like to consult Standing Order 15(3). I wonder whether the spirit of that Standing Order is not somewhat offended if we have ministerial statements and comments on such statements of the length of those we have heard this afternoon. I may be wrong in this respect. I appreciate the importance of such statements and the importance of and interest in the comments made by hon. members who speak on behalf of their respective political groups. I think an effort might be made when we meet again next month to limit the length of the contributions under the terms of Standing Order 15(3). The hon. member for Moose Jaw.

Mr. Skoberg: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, may I point out that on page iv of today's notice paper there is a notice of motion in my name for concurrence in the first report of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications which calls for public hearings to discuss the study of rail passenger service in southwestern Ontario, commencing on April 17. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, the chairman of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications is in hospital. In view of the urgency of this matter I should like to ask for unanimous consent to move my motion today.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Under the Standing Orders the only thing on the order paper is notice of a motion. The hon. member would be authorized, under the Standing Orders, to make that motion tomorrow. If he wants to do that he may find that some of us will not be here. He cannot proceed with the motion unless with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent. The hon. member will have to wait a while before the motion can be proceeded with.

FISHERIES

INCIDENT WITH RUSSIAN SHIPS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the unanimous consent of the House to make a motion under Standing Order 43. I do so for the following reason. A short time ago there was a very serious incident on the Grand Banks in which Russian trawlers, in the process of a gang fishing operation, very nearly collided with the Canadian trawler Zonne Mier. The Canadian fisheries patrol vessel Cape Freels was dispatched to the area and endeavoured to make contact with the Russian command ship. The Russians refused to talk with the Canadian government. The refusal of the Russians to discuss rules of the road and conservation of certain species which are threatened with extinction by gang fishing methods, and the failure of the federal government to obtain an agreement with the Soviet Union—

Some hon. Members: Order, please.

Mr. McGrath: —constitutes a danger to—

Some hon. Members: Order, please.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has experience in connection with motions under Standing Order 43. He knows what the Standing Order says. I have brought to the attention of all hon. members that this is a Standing Order which should be relied upon only in exceptional circumstances. It is available to hon. members provided they limit their remarks as much as possible to indicating the urgency of the matter without argument, and the submission of a motion for consideration.

Mr. McGrath: I have concluded my brief and very important preamble, Mr. Speaker. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan):

That this matter be referred to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Hon. members have heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for St. John's East under the terms of Standing Order 43. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

• (1500)

Mr. Speaker: There does not appear to be unanimous consent and the motion cannot be proceeded with at this time.

PENITENTIARIES

INNOVATIVE LEAVE PROGRAMS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax East-Hants): Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 43 I should like to move, if given unanimous consent, in light of the arrest in St. Catharines following the shooting of two men of a convicted murderer who was an inmate of the federal penitentiary at Collins Bay and who did not return after his Christmas leave, the following motion:

That the House instruct that innovative programs of the Solicitor General regarding leave be confined to inmates whose offences do not include elements of violence.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Halifax East-Hants. This motion, proposed under the terms of Standing Order 43, requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

An hon. Member: The hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth said no.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity and the motion cannot be put.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

BASE FOR NORTHERN RESUPPLY SHIPS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I wish to propose a motion under Standing Order 43. I request the unanimous consent of the House to propose a motion on a matter of the most urgent and pressing necessity. It concerns the present consideration by the government of tenders to originate northern resupply ships in Montreal and divert such shipping business from the port of Churchill and supply business from the western area. I would therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Simpson):

That this House urges the government to reconsider its policy to promote Montreal as the exclusive eastern supply port and depot for northern Canada, without regard to the economic prejudice suffered by other areas of Canada, as evidenced by its immediate intention to divert 4,000 tons of shipping and supplies from Churchill, Manitoba, and by the recent statement of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development in Montreal.

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Alexander: What do you mean by saying no?

Mr. Speaker: I must inquire whether there is unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: I have heard at least one negative response, which means that the motion cannot be put.

Mr. Alexander: Who is that hon. member?

An hon. Member: The hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton, I think.

SMALL LOANS ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING SHORT-TERM DISCOUNTING OF PAYMENTS TO INDIVIDUALS BY GOVERNMENTS

On the order: Introduction of Bills.

Mr. Rowland—Bill intituled: "An Act to amend the Small Loans Act."

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Selkirk has supplied the Table and the Chair with a copy of his bill. I have had an opportunity of looking at it in advance. I hope the hon. member will not be offended if I confess that I find the purpose of the bill somewhat difficult to understand. On that basis I would also find it difficult to rule that it is not in order. Perhaps the meaning of the bill will become more apparent when the hon. member has explained what its purpose is as he is permitted to do under Standing Order 68.

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-187, to amend the Small Loans Act.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Explain.

Mr. Rowland: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to include under the provisions of the Small Loans Act the practice of the short-term discounting of payments by governments to individuals, such as unemployment insurance benefits, pension payments and income tax rebates, by defining the discount fee charged by persons lending money on this basis as being interest and therefore restricting interest rates charged by discounters to 2 per cent per month. In this way the financial attractiveness of this practice would be removed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps it might be simpler if the question were put at this time. Is it the wish of the House that the hon. member shall have leave to introduce the said bill?

[Mr. Murta.]

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

CANADA PENSION PLAN

AMENDMENT TO INCLUDE HOUSEWIVES WHO PAY OR HAVE PAID FOR THEM EMPLOYEE AND EMPLOYER CONTRIBUTIONS

On the order: Introduction of Bills.

Mr. Rowland—Bill intituled: "An Act to amend the Canada Pension Plan".

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Selkirk has also provided the Chair with a copy of another bill he seeks to introduce about which I have some procedural reservations. I am tempted to wonder whether this bill does not in some way infringe on the financial initiative of the Crown. I have looked at the bill and I can tell the hon. member that I discern more than faintly the scent of money in this bill. Perhaps the hon. member might be given an opportunity to indicate what the purpose of the bill is.

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-188, to amend the Canada Pension Plan.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the explanation in this case will be somewhat simpler than it was in the case of the bill previously introduced. The purpose of this bill is simply to include within the terms of the Canada Pension Plan housewives who pay, or have paid for them, the employee and employer contributions prescribed by the act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

*UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE COMMISSION—ADVERTISING COSTS

Question No. 3—Mr. MacKay:

What has been the total amount spent by the Unemployment Insurance Commission on advertising of all varieties (electronic and printed media) up to the last day of January 1972, to promote or otherwise explain the new UIC program?

Mr. Ray Perrault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): The reply is, about $700,000.

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM

Question No. 60—Mr. Orlikow:

What moneys have been allocated to date in each federal constituency, in each province, under the federal government's Local Initiatives Program?

Mr. Ray Perrault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): This information cannot be provided because the records of the distribution of funds are not recorded by federal constituencies. To provide an accurate answer would entail costly expenditures and the hiring of additional staff to undertake the large amount of work which would be required to gather this information. The Department is preparing a consolidated approved list of all projects in Canada which will be available shortly.

ANNUAL DISTRIBUTION BY INCOME GROUPS FOR 1961, 1966 AND 1971

Question No. 61—Mr. Orlikow:

In Canada, for the years 1961, 1966 and 1971, what was the distribution by income groups of families and individual taxpayers, and particularly the groupings of income above $1,000,000; $500,000; $250,000; $100,000; and below $6,000; $5,000; $4,000; $3,000; $2,000 and $1,000 annually?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of National Revenue): No distribution by income groups of families is available in so far as this Department is concerned. The following distribution of individual taxpayers is based on the annual analysis of tax returns. 1971 data are not available; the latest available are for 1969 and these are given in lieu of 1971. Incomes above $200,000 are not further classified. The figures for individual taxpayers are as follows:

Income Class Based on Total Income	Number of Taxpayers
	1961	1966	1969
Under $1,000	23,566	56,918	44,802

3. New chesterfields and chairs were provided and material used was Suede. Existing furniture was not reupholstered.

4. New carpeting was provided. There were no new drapes. (a) Material for carpeting consists of wool pile, 76oz. Wilton and is of Canadian manufacture. (b) Cost of carpeting, underpad and installation was $1,263.

CRIMINAL CODE—DANGEROUS SEXUAL OFFENDERS

Question No. 191—Mr. Orlikow:

1. What is the total number of inmates in Canadian penitentiaries who have been convicted and sentenced under the Dangerous Sexual Offenders sections of the Criminal Code?

2. (a) How many of those sentenced were paroled (b) how many have violated their parole (c) how many have been re-convicted while on parole and was the offence the same?

3. What is the average length of incarceration for such offenders before parole is considered?

4. What programs are made available to these inmates while they are incarcerated?

5. Has the medical profession been consulted as to the type of treatment being given?

6. (a) How many inmates have received medical or psychiatric treatment (b) how many failed to improve after such treatment (c) have any been denied such treatment?

7. Has the government made any provisions to implement such recommended treatment services?

8. Have the inmates a choice in case they wish to seek out such treatment and, if so, what provisions have been made?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Solicitor General): 1. Sixty-three (as of January 1, 1972).

2. (a) 28; (b) 12; (c) 2 (1 similar).

3. Pursuant to Section 694 of the Criminal Code, the National Parole Board reviews the inmate's case once in every year to determine whether or not he should be granted parole.

4. A diagnosis of each individuals's case is made which includes an evaluation of his potential for treatment and training. An individualized program to meet the inmates' social needs is determined by the Inmate Training Board following completion of reports by members of the professional staff. The findings and recommendation of the Board are discussed with the inmate, who is invited to express his views on the matter. This program may provide for individual and group therapy in addition to the regular training activities which include educational, vocational, religious, recreational, social and trades training.

5. Yes. An Advisory Board of Consultant Psychiatrists, composed of five members who are representatives of the areas of Canada in which there are penitentiary populations, and three members at large, has been appointed to determine the need for psychiatric services in each region to provide adequate treatment, to recommend a program to meet the needs of each category of mental illnesses as well as the location and type of physical facilities required.

6. (a) All inmates in this category have received the available treatment; (b) nine of those who received such treatment violated their paroles; (c) no.

[Mr. Dubé.]

7. In so far as the Department of the Solicitor General is concerned; yes.

8. The first thing penitentiary psychiatrists must decide is the nature of the treatment best suited to meet the requirements of the inmate. If better facilities are available in neighboring outside psychiatric clinics in mental hospitals, the inmate is transferred to the facility until his condition is such that he may be returned to the penitentiary. In addition, should the penitentiary psychiatrist feel the need for assistance in making important psychiatric decisions, he is free to consult with or call in any psychiatric consultant he wishes.

SECOND NATIONAL PARK, SASKATCHEWAN

Question No. 238—Mr. Southam:

1. What is the present status of the second national park that was promised to Saskatchewan in the spring of 1965?

2. Has the Province of Saskatchewan offered a selection of possible national park sites to the federal government and, if so (a) what were the locations (b) what is the reason for the delay in the development of this project?

Mr. Allen B. Sulatycky (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. Negotiations are still being held between the federal and provincial government for the establishment of a second National Park in Saskatchewan.

2. A joint federal-provincial study was made to assess the National Park potential of various areas (a) Cypress Hills; Val Marie; Last Mountain Lake; Saskatchewan Landing; Big Muddy Lake; Moose Mountain. (b) Negotiations are still being held.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—STRENGTH OF ARMED FORCES, FEBRUARY 29, 1972

Question No. 381—Mr. MacRae:

What was the strength of the Armed Forces on February 29, 1972?

Mr. J.-R. Comtois (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): 84,653.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the parliamentary secretary would make inquiries regarding question No. 27. The Department of National Health and Welfare assured me that there would be a revised answer. I hope that it will be available without undue delay.

Mr. Jerome: I will check into that, Mr. Speaker.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, would you be so kind as to call notices of motions Nos. 8, 13 and 36.

COPY OF STUDY BY SUMMEROUR AND ASSOCIATES INC. REGARDING "ANALYSIS OF THE MANPOWER UTILIZATION OF THE MANITOBA GARMENT INDUSTRY"

Motion No. 8—Mr. Orlikow:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the study by Summerour and Associates Inc., Atlanta, Georgia, undertaken for the Department of Manpower and Immigration regarding the "Analysis of the Manpower Utilization of the Manitoba Garment Industry".

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Stand.

Mr. Speaker: Stand.

Motion stands.

COPY OF CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN FEDERAL GOVERNMENT AND P.E.I. CONCERNING FAR EAST YOUTH HOSTEL, CHARLOTTETOWN

Motion No. 13—Mr. Macquarrie:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House a copy of all correspondence, memoranda, etc., between the Government of Canada or any agency or department thereof and the Government of Prince Edward Island, the City of Charlottetown or any other party or individual concerning the establishment of the Far East Youth Hostel at Charlottetown in 1970.

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, this motion is the same as motion for production of papers No. 200 of the last session. As stated at that time, correspondence concerning the Far East Youth Hostel at Charlottetown is considered to be of a confidential nature.

I would therefore request that the hon. member withdraw his motion.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has heard the comments of the minister. Does he wish to drop the motion?

Mr. Macquarrie: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is dropped.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

COPY OF REPORTS BY GOVERNMENT RELATING TO DEUTERIUM OF CANADA LIMITED

Motion No. 36—Mr. Hellyer:

That an Order of the House do issue for copies of any report or reports prepared by or for the government recommending that Atomic Energy of Canada Limited assume responsibility for the reconstruction and operation of the Deuterium of Canada Limited heavy water production plant at Glace Bay, N.S.

Mr. Speaker: Stand.

Motion stands.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining notices of motions stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Burton: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the parliamentary secretary to look into Notices of Motions Nos. 16 and 18 in particular, which have been on the order paper since some time in February. It should be possible to obtain a response from the government at this time in terms of what it is going to do, particularly since the Easter recess is before us and it will be almost one week after the House resumes sitting before motions for papers are again taken up.

Mr. Jerome: I have made a note of the numbers the hon. members has mentioned, Mr. Speaker.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Speaker, I have had a question on the order paper for the last two sessions. It is a very simple question regarding the closing of trade missions, embassies and so on in foreign countries. There are not that many involved that the department could answer this question in a very few words. Would the parliamentary secretary ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs why this question has not been answered? What is the department trying to hide?

• (1510)

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Speaker, I am sure there is no effort being made to conceal anything. I will conduct an inquiry to see if the question can be answered.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

FINANCE

INQUIRY AS TO AMENDMENTS TO INCOME TAX ACT AND PRESENTATION OF BUDGET

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the government House leader when we may expect to have put before us the changes in the Income Tax Act that were promised by the previous Minister of Finance at the time the so-called tax reform bill was passed?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I will be happy to draw this question to the attention of the Minister of Finance. I can tell my hon. friend that it is not intended to have any such measure placed before the House within the next short period.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Can the Prime Minister indicate to the House when we may expect the presentation of a budget?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if there is going to be a budget we will inform the House of that in due course.

Mr. Stanfield: Can the Prime Minister tell the House whether a budget will be presented prior to the House recessing in the spring or meeting the same fate earlier? Will a budget be presented or will the country be left in a state of uncertainty as reflected in the very disappointing commitment of private investment indicated in the report tabled today?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, that, of course, would depend on the plans the government has for the continuation of this session. I think I would be safe in saying there will be a budget if the House is going to sit until the end of June.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

ARRANGEMENTS DURING VISIT BY PRESIDENT NIXON TO OTTAWA

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the President of the Privy Council with regard to the future business of the House. Is the President of the Privy Council in a position to make any statement regarding arrangements that may be made during the visit of President Nixon which may affect the sitting of the House?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to advise my hon. friend and members of the House that the President of the United States of America, Mr. Richard M. Nixon, has agreed to address members of the House of Commons and the Senate in this chamber at 3 p.m. on Friday, April 14, 1972, on the occasion of his forthcoming visit to Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: If I have the consent of the House now or later to revert to motions, I will make a motion that will finalize the arrangements for this historic event.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that we revert to motions at this moment for the purpose suggested by the President of the Privy Council?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

HOUSE OF COMMONS

MOTION CONCERNING ADJOURNMENT ON FRIDAY, APRIL 14, AND INCLUSION OF ADDRESS OF PRESIDENT NIXON AND RELATED SPEECHES AS APPENDIX TO "HANSARD"

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Benson):

The House shall adjourn at 1 p.m. on Friday, April 14, 1972;

And that the address of the President of the United States of America, Mr. Richard M. Nixon, to be delivered on Friday, April 14, 1972, before the members of the Senate and of the House of Commons, together with all introductory and related speeches, be included in that day's House of Commons debates as an appendix and thus form part of the records of this parliament.

Motion agreed to.

PENSIONS

LOWERING OF AGE FOR ESCALATION OF PENSIONS OF RETIRED ARMED FORCES AND RCMP PERSONNEL

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the President of the Treasury Board. It relates to the escalation of pensions of retired RCMP and Canadian Armed Forces personnel. Can the minister say what progress the government is making in arranging for this escalation to take place in the case of those not yet 60 years of age?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member is aware that the conditions of service and retirement of the RCMP and the public service as such are sufficiently analagous to make the problem an easy one. The conditions of service of members of the armed forces under the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act are quite different in relation to retirement and we have not yet succeeded in working out an appropriate formula.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Now that a program, effective June 1, 1972, has been established to enable everyone to go bankrupt with decency, when will the government implement a program that will enable everyone to live decently and when does it intend to adopt a measure cancelling the national debt and enabling us to start anew?

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me that the hon. member is asking a government representative to make a statement of a general nature which should normally be made on motions.

AIRPORTS

PICKERING TOWNSHIP SITE—POSSIBLE ABANDONMENT IF MAJORITY OF AFFECTED PROPERTY OWNERS OBJECT

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. During the course of his recent trip near Toronto be stated that if 51 per cent of the people in Pickering Township were opposed to the establishment of an airport there, their views would be accepted. The other day he stated in the House that a referendum was outside the regular course of democratic practice. Because of the aroused interest in that statement on his part, which was unequivocal, if bona fide owners of property in the area comprised within the general plan for the airport sign a petition to the effect that they do not wish to have their properties expropriated for an airport, will their wishes be upheld?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the question is really based on a false premise, an assertion of something that I was supposed to have said but which was incorrectly conveyed by or to the right hon. member. I never made the assertion—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Why did you not correct the press?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, if there is a supplementary question I will entertain it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: This is not the first time the Prime Minister has run for cover after allowing his tongue to run loose.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I simply ask, will he or will he not accept a petition by 51 per cent—

An hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, that hon. member may join the ranks of the Prime Minister's expendables if he does not watch out.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: There are more than 20 now. Twenty was the number that were going to be dumped.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the right hon. gentleman ask the question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I simply ask the Prime Minister, if 51 per cent of the registered owners of the land in that area sign a petition, with proper proof that they are the owners, is he now prepared to carry out his promise that the area will not be taken over as an airport?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will allow the Prime Minister to reply to the question although I have to caution that it appears to be in the nature of a hypothetical question. I appreciate that we have taken a bit of time to consider the matter, and perhaps the Prime Minister should be allowed to reply.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, in my answer to the first question I stated that I had never made such an assertion relating to the property owners or inhabitants of Pickering Township. The right hon. member has repeated that assertion in his question. I do not know if it is customary or by accident that he is doing this, but I assure him by this type of question he is making assertions which are not founded on fact and is spreading things which are contrary to what I said. I do not know if it is done deliberately or by accident.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We are now getting into debate.

Mr. Diefenbaker: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I was simply quoting from several papers—the Canadian Press—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: —the Globe and Mail, the Toronto Star and the records of the CBC. The Prime Minister knows he is in a jam over that statement and is running away from it.

DRUGS

SELECTION OF DOCTORS TO ADMINISTER METHADONE TREATMENT

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare arising from the statement he made earlier in connection with drug abuse. Can the minister tell the House what steps he intends to take to choose the doctors who will be authorized to administer methadone treatment?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I do not see it as being a highly formal process. We are already aware that some doctors are desirous of rendering this service. We shall find out how much time they are prepared to give to it and make some preliminary assessment as to their competence; of course, I shall have medical advice on that aspect. Then we shall designate them to run a particular service. We hope they will do so in a clinical setting or an outpatient department of a hospital or something of that kind with proper back-up facilities. Then we shall give them financial support.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): I wonder whether, in the course of assessing the qualifications of the doctors who will be chosen, the department has made any study as to the number of drug addicts that members of the medical profession have created by the careless prescription of drugs in the past?

Mr. Munro: I think the hon. member may be referring particularly to the overly liberal habit of prescription in the area of amphetamines. If he is, may I remind him I have already said that this has probably resulted in at least a high degree of psychological dependency by people on amphetamines. I have already indicated the corrective action which the government is prepared to take, with the support of the medical profession, I may add.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): A supplementary question—

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I take the liberty at the beginning of the question period of inviting the co-operation of all members in relation to supplementaries? There are hon. members seeking the floor today who vainly attempted to ask questions yesterday. I am anxious to give them an opportunity to be heard but we shall be able to make progress only if there is a degree of co-operation from hon. members in relation to supplementary questions.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): My supplementary question was not confined specifically to those doctors who have been overly liberal in prescribing amphetamines but referred generally to the medical profession creating drug addicts by being careless in the prescription of amphetamines, barbiturates, sleeping pills, tranquilizers, methadone and so on. I am asking the minister how he will be selective about that.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Perhaps the minister might reply briefly, but we are obviously engaged in a rather lengthy debate between the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the hon. member for Skeena.

Mr. Munro: Without agreeing that doctors would be criticized in all the areas the hon. member has mentioned, may I say that some of his observations are valid. The Canadian Medical Association is aware of this danger and is co-operating fully in trying to get the message to the medical profession across Canada that doctors should be far more restrictive in those areas where prescription practices are subject to valid criticism.

FISHERIES

POSITION OF NEGOTIATIONS WITH DENMARK ON CONTROL OF SALMON FISHING ON HIGH SEAS

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Canada has signed fishing treaties with Britain, France, Portugal, and Denmark. In light of the fact that the treaty with Denmark involves only the Gulf of St. Lawrence and Canadian waters within the 12-mile limit, will the minister tell us what progress the government is making in negotiations with Denmark to control high seas fishing for salmon so that this species can be conserved?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The agreements I tabled in the House yesterday related, of course, to the phasing out of fishing operations within the fishing zones of Canada. That was their purpose. The negotiations with respect to fishing on the high seas are being carried on for a different purpose; these are not Canadian waters we are talking about. We are trying to get Denmark to co-operate in conserving a fish species which is particularly valuable to Canada. These negotiations are continuing. Regrettably, we have not been able to make as much progress with the Danes as we would like. Nor has anyone else.

NECESSITY FOR RATIFICATION OF TREATY WITH FRANCE

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, may I take this opportunity to correct an answer I gave to the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate yesterday on the subject of fishing treaties? The hon. member asked me whether ratification would be necessary in respect of any of these proposed treaties. I answered that in one case, in the case of the treaty with France, I thought ratification would be necessary. I am now advised that the agreement is silent with respect to the time at which it comes into effect. Therefore, under international law it does not require ratification; it came into effect when it was signed.

DISCUSSIONS WITH U.S.S.R. ON ACTIVITIES OF RUSSIAN SHIPS OFF EAST COAST

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): May I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether discussions are under way with the Russians regarding their fishing activities on the east coast, particularly their gang fishing activities which are a threat to certain species and a danger to Canadian fishermen? If not, are such discussions contemplated, and when may we expect an announcement by the minister?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The answer to the question is yes, Mr. Speaker. Discussions are under way. My colleague, the Minister of Fisheries, is gathering material. The Russians have asked us to submit it and we are in the process of doing so.

CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCES AFFECTED ON AGREEMENTS WITH OTHER COUNTRIES

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Fisheries. Bearing in mind the implications which these agreements carry for the provinces, may I ask whether the minister is taking steps to consult with the provinces in the future concerning the effects of these agreements?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): These agreements were all discussed with the Ministers of Fisheries of the provinces and with Premier Moores of Newfoundland before they were signed.

AGRICULTURE

INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENTS TO FARM PRODUCTS MARKETING COUNCIL OR AGENCIES

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. Has the minister made any appointments at either council or agency level under the farm products marketing legislation and, if not, can the minister offer an explanation to the House bearing in mind the alleged urgency last session when special sittings were held?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The latter part of the question is argumentative. The minister might reply to the first part of the question.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): The answer is yes, Mr. Speaker. Six were announced yesterday morning.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Témiscamingue.

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the hon. minister—

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Speaker, I should like—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Témiscamingue has been recognized and has already started his question.

Mr. Nesbitt: I am sorry; I was not able to hear Your Honour.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the hon. Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

The minister recently stated in Quebec that we are witnessing a curious phenomenon whereby the number of unemployed increases in conjunction with the number of jobs made available by the government.

I would like therefore to ask the minister if the economists in his department are now in a position to explain this phenomenon?

Mr. Speaker: Order. It does not seem immediately possible to reply to the question of the hon. member.

Would he also tell us when he made the announcement, since it was not made in the House?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, it is not customary to make announcements of this kind in the House but I did take the precaution, I think, to see that the communiqué was sent to every member of the House, along with biographies of each appointee.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

SASKATCHEWAN—REPRESENTATIONS AGAINST TRANSFER OF EDUCATIONAL SYSTEM TO PROVINCE

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development whether he has had representations from a group of Indian chiefs from northern Saskatchewan who are dissatisfied with the turning over of the educational system to the province of Sasaktchewan, and is he prepared to consider the possibility of reverting to the federal system of education?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, this problem has been in existence for some time. Several months ago I had occasion to meet with the Saskatchewan Minister of Education as well as representatives of the Indian Association of that province. We discussed this problem, and we are now trying to find a solution which would be satisfactory to the three parties concerned. Only two weeks ago I received the representatives of a special committee of the Saskatchewan Indian Association, and I think we made some progress in this field.

[English]

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister whether he is seriously considering the possibility of reverting to the federal scheme?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, we are seriously considering any possibility for action.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

POSSIBLE WITHDRAWAL OF PROVISION OF FUNDS TO ASSOCIATIONS

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Is it the intention of the minister and the government to discontinue the policy of providing funds to Indian associations, such as the Union of Nova Scotia Indians, for educational and other programs while continuing, as usual, to provide such assistance to band councils?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, we have in no way revised the policy followed in the past few years. We grant funds to provincial Indian associations only with the support of Indian bands in the province.

[English]

Mr. Muir: A short supplementary, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the minister whether a directive has been issued to officials at Indian affairs branches in the provinces concerning this very important question, and does such directive advise that this has been a cabinet decision?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of any directive in that regard but I will check and report to the hon. member.

POLLUTION

WRECKING OF FREIGHTER "VANLENE" NEAR PACIFIC RIM PARK—STEPS TO SUPPLY ADEQUATE EQUIPMENT FOR CLEAN-UPS AND STRENGTHEN NAVIGATIONAL RULES

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of the Environment and Fisheries arising out of the untimely arrival of the Panamanian freighter Vanlene on the shores of our new Pacific rim national park. I should like to ask the minister, not only in his capacity as Minister of the Environment in charge of environmental quality but also in view of his responsibility for fisheries, what steps his department is taking to deal with the obvious inadequacies in the supply of equipment to those responsible for clean-up as well as the obvious inadequacies of navigational rules, which meant that we avoided a major ecological disaster by good luck rather than by good management in this instance?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, the question of navigation is one for the Minister of Transport. However, my department is responsible as a co-ordinating agency in crises of this kind. We are developing plans to deal with similar situations on both our coasts. I gather that we have been fortunate in respect of the Vanlene and that coastal pollution has not been serious in that case.

Mr. Barnett: May I direct a supplementary to whoever is speaking for the Minister of Transport today. When are the regulations under the new Part XIX of the Canada Shipping Act and the recently enacted Pilotage Act going to become operative and effective so as to prevent this sort of blundering of old freighters into our coastal waters?

Mr. Speaker: Apparently the matter is being taken under advisement. For the moment—

Mr. Barnett: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is rising on a point of order.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I will take this question as notice in the name of the Minister of Transport.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

MEASURES TO STIMULATE INVESTMENT BY PRIVATE SECTOR

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a question of the Acting Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce concerning the figures that he tabled in the House today respecting capital commitments by industry, which must be considered disappointing since they are at about the same level as last year's. Is it the intention of the department to take measures to stimulate investment commitments in the private sector, or does the department regard the figures as the best possible in view of the statement of the Minister of Labour that the economy is operating at its full potential? I ask the minister the question very earnestly in view of these disappointing figures and in view of the fact that the Prime Minister has refused to give any indication whether or not we are going to have a budget.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Acting Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, in the terminology of economics, capital expenditures are considered to be a lagger in the development of the economic cycle. I think the Leader of the Opposition will recognize that the conditions precedent to capital investment growth are already well established in our economy. I am referring, of course, to the growth in consumer demand of 8½ per cent over last year and the growth of profits by over 16 per cent over the same period—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me that we are now becoming involved in a debate, and I am wondering whether this would be very useful in view of the fact that we are running short of time.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I should like to press the minister since we will be away for a couple of weeks. In view of the minister's statement perhaps he would explain very briefly to the House, since he has said that we are in the early stages of an expansion, why the rate of expansion in 1972 over 1971 is so much less than 1971 was over 1970?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the Leader of the Opposition and to the minister, who apparently wants to reply to the question, that this is the kind of information which normally ought to be given in a general statement on motions.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

SUGGESTED ESTABLISHMENT OF COMMISSION OFFICE IN CHARLOTTETOWN

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Labour whether he has received a unanimous resolution passed by the Prince Edward Island legislature urging the return of the Unemployment Insurance Commission office from Moncton to Charlottetown, and can the minister indicate whether he is prepared to give such an undertaking to the legislature and people of the province of Prince Edward Island?

Hon. Martin P. O'Connell (Minister of Labour): I regret to say that I cannot give that assurance today, Mr. Speaker.

SPORTS

1976 OLYMPIC GAMES—POSSIBLE FINANCIAL CONTRIBUTION TO MONTREAL

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In view of the statement by a member of the Canadian Olympic Committee that the 1976 Olympic games scheduled for Montreal will be a disaster unless the federal government contributes upward of $500 million, and in view of the Prime Minister's report to the House that the federal government did not intend to contribute to the summer Olympics, does the Prime Minister not agree that an expenditure of this magnitude would be more beneficially spent on the Canadian economy as a whole instead of on one specific area?

Mr. Speaker: Order. Obviously that is not a question but an argument. The hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain.

Mr. Simpson: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Churchill is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Simpson: Perhaps I can put a direct question to the Prime Minister since this is a very important matter and the House will not be sitting for some time.

Mr. Speaker: That is hardly a point of order but I will recognize the hon. member for the purpose of his rephrasing the question.

Mr. Simpson: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he would again outline to the House the plans of the government regarding any contribution to the 1976 Olympic games.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have put this matter on the record on several occasions. It was indicated in an exchange of correspondence between the mayor of Montreal and myself as Prime Minister that there would be no special contribution by the federal government to the Olympic games. This has been agreed to by both sides. I believe Mayor Drapeau has indicated that the very substantial contribution of the federal government at the time of Expo 67 made it unnecessary for us to make any particular contribution at this time. He is hoping that federal shared-cost or other programs which apply across the country will be used in Montreal in some way toward the games, to which we have no objection. The position is still as I stated: there is no special contribution contemplated by the federal government for the games.

1976 OLYMPIC GAMES IN MONTREAL—PREVENTION OF DESTRUCTION OF HOUSING

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact it was announced in Montreal some months ago that some 200 or 300—I forget the precise figure—housing units of average people are going to be destroyed in the process of providing facilities for the Olympics, and in view of the Prime Minister's suggestion that he would not object to some federal funds being used for the Olympics, will he consider requesting or making it mandatory that such destruction of ordinary housing will not take place, as one of the conditions of obtaining federal funds for the Olympics?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I may have lost the meaning of the question, but it is my impression that the reference to Mayor Drapeau's position is not as I understand it. I understand the concern of the hon. member about the problem. I had occasion to discuss this matter a few weeks ago with Premier Bourassa. We are now in a position of having no particular request or submission on expenditures by the mayor of Montreal. There is no commitment on his or on our side beyond what I just related. The federal government will at some point want to know more precisely from the mayor of Montreal what his plans are for proceeding if, indeed, he is counting on any federal participation through these established programs. We have no precision in that regard. I repeat that I discussed this with the premier of the province. I would hope if there is any thinking along any specific lines such as this it will be conveyed to us as soon as possible.

Mr. Broadbent: I have a further supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I should like to allow hon. members to ask supplementary questions but it seems to me this question might well wait 15 days to be asked. My understanding of the situation is that this kind of question might well be put aside for a while. We should try to allow other questions before the end of the question period.

WOOL—SUGGESTED SUBSIDY TO ENCOURAGE PRODUCTION

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture who has momentarily stepped out behind the curtain. Perhaps the parliamentary secretary could take notice of it. In view of the statement made earlier this afternoon regarding assistance to the Canadian dairy industry, and in light of current reports from the textile trade and needle industry that because of the increased demand for woollen fabrics the cost of this commodity will increase by 20 per cent this year, will the minister now consider revising his policy and provide a wool subsidy to encourage the production of wool in Canada rather than having it imported to meet this increased demand?

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I will take the question as notice and report to the minister.

WELFARE

LEGALITY OF BRITISH COLUMBIA LEGISLATION LIMITING PROVISION OF ASSISTANCE—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, last Monday the Minister of National Health and Welfare, in answer to my question about the legality of British Columbia Bill 49 concerning the eligibility of social assistance applicants, promised to make a statement on the issue if at all possible before the Easter recess. I wonder whether the minister is now prepared to make a statement on this very important matter?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I think if the hon. member will check Hansard she will find that I did not indicate I would make a statement but rather that I would try to answer her question by statement or by an answer to another question. I endeavoured to do so the other day.

Mrs. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the point of order. I might be obliged to quote Hansard if the minister will not accept the suggestion that he made an alternative undertaking to answer the question by a statement or an answer to another question. I do not mind asking him another question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wish the hon. member would do as she has proposed and ask another question. I think it would be easier to proceed in this way rather than by way of a point of order.

Mrs. MacInnis: I should like to ask the minister whether he will now in a few words indicate the status of Bill 49 of the British Columbia legislature vis-à-vis the Canada Assistance Plan?

Mr. Speaker: If the minister can give this information briefly he should be allowed to do so. In the very few minutes we have left before the end of the question period I do not think he should be allowed to do this at length at the expense of other hon. members who wish to ask questions.

Mr. Munro: As I understand it, Mr. Speaker, the more contentious aspects of the legislation, the parts which have led some people to believe it is contrary to the Canada Assistance Plan, have been deleted. I refer to the expression "absolute discretion". The word "absolute" was deleted from the legislation as it was being considered by the legislature. The minister's discretion is circumscribed by the regulations to be passed under the legislation. Until such time as we see these regulations it would be almost impossible to determine whether in fact there is any contravention of the plan.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

BROADCASTING OF ADDRESS BY PRESIDENT NIXON TO MEMBERS AND SENATORS

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, I hope that my question is more topical in view of the pending recess. I should like to ask the President of the Privy Council, in respect of the announcement earlier today of President Nixon's visit to Canada, whether the government intends to have the President's address in this chamber broadcast over radio and television?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): I would hope so, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I will address my question to the Secretary of State in light of the negotiations between NABET and the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and the picket lines that have been set up in various parts of this country. In view of worldwide interest in President Nixon's visit to Peking a few weeks ago, will the minister discuss with the NABET people their position in respect of picket lines that could affect foreign and Canadian correspondents in covering this historic event? There might be misinterpretation if they are not able to see President Nixon on the video tube.

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the minister responsible for the environment arising from a statement he made last week indicating that the federal government would be prepared to accept some responsibility in the area of crop damage by migratory water fowl. Has such a program been finalized and when will an announcement be made in the House in this regard?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, I did not catch the question.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member might ask the question again and we will not charge the question period with the additional time required to do so.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, my question arises from a statement made by the minister in Winnipeg in which he indicated that the federal government would be prepared to accept some responsibility in the area of crop damage created by migratory water fowl. Has such a program been finalized and, if so, when will a statement be made in the House?

Mr. Davis: This subject-matter has not been dealt with in detail by the government. I have had discussions with the ministers from the prairie provinces. The program has been finalized as a result of our discussions and I am now taking it to the government hoping for its approval.

PRICES AND INCOMES COMMISSION

CONTINUED OPERATION AFTER END OF JUNE—POSSIBLE ALTERNATIVE POLICY TO CONTROL INFLATION

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Can the Prime Minister indicate what his plans are for the Prices and Incomes Commission? Will it continue in operation or does the government have an alternative policy to propose?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we have announced in the House that the Prices and Incomes Commission would be wound up by the end of June unless it were prolonged. My information at this time is that the members of the commission plan to have their report on the causes of inflation and other aspects of their mandate by the end of June. It is possible we might have to prolong it for a very short period of time but as of now we expect this report by or around the end of June.

As to the question concerning whether there are any contingency plans for an upsurge of inflation, the answer is yes. The government has been considering contingency plans for a long period now and they may involve the prolonging of the commission's mandate or other methods, but at this time there is no announcement to be made.

I have now been informed that these reservations are given in the main to people within an 80-mile radius of Ottawa. I wonder whether the minister intends to change this policy which seems to prohibit people living at a distance from the national capital from obtaining tickets to these performances?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the statement I made yesterday had to do with a policy for northern Canada beyond the 60th parallel, but it would be advisable for the Quebec government to implement the same policy for the James Bay Indians.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We have just about reached the end of the question period. Indeed, we have gone a few minutes beyond the prescribed time. Because of a few points of order, the return to motions for one or two minutes and the entreaties of the Chair, I thought it would be proper to prolong the question period for a few minutes. If we can have one or two rapid questions, hon. members might be recognized for that purpose. I believe the hon. member for Athabasca has a supplementary.

JAMES BAY HYDROELECTRIC DEVELOPMENT—MORAL APPROVAL OF PROJECT BY MINISTER

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): I have two supplementaries, Mr. Speaker, and I shall ask the second one. Has the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development approved proceeding with the James Bay project at least morally?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I have no moral approval to give on this proposal. I repeat once again that I follow very carefully the talks taking place between the Indians and the Quebec government on the James Bay proposal. In due course, at the Indians' request, I shall be glad to participate in the discussions.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I believe the hon. member for Hamilton West has a supplementary.

Mr. Alexander: It is not a supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member might be allowed to ask his question without a supplementary.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

FORTHCOMING VISIT BY PRESIDENT NIXON TO OTTAWA—SUBJECTS TO BE DISCUSSED

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact the President of the United States is almost on his way here and as yet we do not know what the points of discussion will be, can the Prime Minister indicate now what the points of discussion will be and in fact whether matters such as the auto pact and DISC in particular will be discussed? I hope an answer can be given this afternoon in view of the fact that we will be absent for a couple of weeks.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I am afraid I cannot give a precise answer. I am sorry that the member will not be here. If he would check with me perhaps sometime later next week, I might have a final answer from the United States government.

An hon. Member: Where will you be?

Mr. Trudeau: I will leave my forwarding address. The two governments have discussed the agenda. It will be on bilateral and international matters, but it is not yet accepted or finalized in detail and I am afraid I cannot answer the question.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day. I believe the hon. member for Mackenzie is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Korchinski: I apologize, Mr. Speaker, but I wish to raise a question. Because of the fact that there is to be an Easter recess and because of the importance of the local initiatives program and the fact that it has a deadline, I wonder whether I might be permitted one question of the minister.

• (1600)

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will appreciate that it is irregular to ask a supplementary question or a question after the question period has expired. He is not alone. I see the hon. member for Regina East and a few other hon. members who were anxious to ask questions but did not have the opportunity to do so. The hon. member for Egmont has been very patient. If there is unanimous consent, the hon. member for Mackenzie may be allowed to ask his question. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

MANPOWER

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—POSSIBLE DENIAL OF GRANTS WHEN FUNDS STILL AVAILABLE

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the House. May I ask the Minister of Labour whether grants were denied for any projects and an announcement made that there were no more funds when in fact funds were still available?

Hon. Martin P. O'Connell (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, similar questions have been put before. What frequently arises and what appears to be a discrepancy in approvals and dates has to do with the words "approval" and "final approval". Final approval frequently relates to the time when the contract is actually negotiated and signed. Those dates are sometimes two or three weeks after others have received notice that the funds are all exhausted. There is a discrepancy there which disturbs people but which can be readily explained.

Mr. Korchinski: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, more for clarification than for irritation. It arises out of the fact that on March 15 an answer was provided in reply to a question which I placed on the order paper, question No. 317. On that occasion I asked on what date the final project under the local initiatives program was approved in the province of Saskatchewan. I was informed that the date was March 8. I also asked on what date the town of Sturgis was informed that its project was rejected, and the answer was that it was on February 14. In a letter from the co-ordinator there is an indication that the funds had run out on Feburary 14. My question of privilege is simply this: if the funds had run out on February 14, how is it that a project was approved on March 8?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is obviously a point of debate. I suggest to the hon. member that he may be right in his contention, but this has nothing to do with privilege. If the hon. member would consult the authorities and precedents he would see that a question such as this one cannot be raised by way of a question of privilege. In my way of thinking, privilege is a very important right of hon. members which cannot be used for the purpose of asking supplementary questions or arguing with ministers or other hon. members regarding the accuracy of statements made outside or inside the House. I hope the hon. member will find some way of getting to the minister and trying to obtain a clarification of the statement, perhaps on motions. I appreciate that there is a difficulty in that we will be adjourning for two weeks and it may be that the hon. member might want a clarification of the matter before then. I hope that some way can be found to do this other than by privilege.

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Speaker, may I then raise this question at ten o'clock two weeks from now?

Mr. O'Connell: Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to look into any specific situation if that will help.

Mr. Speaker: I believe the hon. member for Egmont has a point of order and the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River also has a point of order. At this point I am trying to mend fences. I have not been looking to my right and did not realize that the hon. member was seeking the floor. Perhaps we could continue on points of order and alleged points or order so that first I might recognize the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River, who will be followed by the hon. member for Egmont.

HIGHWAYS

PROPOSED ALL-WEATHER ROAD BETWEEN FORT NELSON AND FORT SIMPSON—CONSTRUCTION AND COMPLETION OF NORTHWEST TERRITORIES SECTION

Mr. Robert Borrie (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the indulgence of the House. In view of the fact the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development has left, I will direct my question to the acting minister. In light of the statement by the government of British Columbia that an immediate start is to be made on the construction of an all-weather road in British Columbia linking Fort Nelson, B.C., and Fort Simpson, Northwest Territories, can the acting minister advise when we may expect work to commence on the Northwest Territories section and when we may expect the completion of the road?

Hon. Martin P. O'Connell (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I will secure an answer to that very interesting question.

Mr. Speaker: Before I recognize the hon. member for Egmont, it appears that there might have been a disposition on the part of hon. members to allow the Minister of Labour to reply to the question of privilege of the hon. member for Mackenzie or to his point of order, supplementary question or whatever it was. I certainly have no objection to that if the hon. member would want the minister to do so at this time.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a brief, non-controversial point of order. Earlier in the question period when the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development was responding on the important matter of the causeway to Lennox Island he mentioned the Minister of Public Works who unfortunately was not here. Since we will be adjourning for two weeks I wish to ask whoever takes questions for the minister, because of the importance of the matter, whether he would prepare an answer in the interim and give it to the House when the House reconvenes?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair has been as lenient as possible but in view of the circumstances we might be allowed to call orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CANADA LABOUR CODE

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS, LABOUR RELATIONS BOARD, INDUSTRIAL INQUIRY COMMISSIONS AND CONCILIATION BOARDS

Hon. Martin P. O'Connell (Minister of Labour) moved that Bill C-183, to amend the Canada Labour Code, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I find it necessary to bring to your attention, Sir, some methods by which the government brings in bills, one in particular. My point of order relates to Bill C-183. It concerns a breach of a custom of the House with respect to the form in which a bill that amends a statute should be presented. On Monday, if I recall correctly, Your Honour was pleased to give a ruling which opened with the following words:

> Last week, a number of bills were proposed for introduction to the House. The Chair expressed reservations about certain procedural aspects of those bills. While three were then accepted for introduction after serious consideration, seven were held in abeyance. On Friday last, hon. members were given an opportunity to express views on a point of order which queried whether these bills might not affect the financial initiative of the Crown. A number of members participated in the interesting procedural debate and I have now had time to study their arguments—

Your ruling, Mr. Speaker, then exhaustively analysed the acceptability of these bills. In the result, three were found wanting and four were accepted, but only by giving them the benefit of the doubt. The four acceptable bills were then introduced. Immediately thereafter the Minister of Labour (Mr. O'Connell) moved for leave to introduce an act to amend the Canada Labour Code, now Bill C-183.

I do not propose to speak about the distinction in treatment accorded the ten bills presented for introduction by private members and the bill presented for introduction by the Minister of Labour. In the Latin maxim which we use in law, res ipsa loquitur, "the matter speaks for itself."

I make the point that the government has not demonstrated that it possesses any greater skill than private members in preparing bills which are in accordance with the rules. I should like to point out that when the bill was tabled it did not have the recommendation of the Governor General. However, the day after, when the bill was distributed to our offices the recommendation of the Governor General was included.

Your Honour will recall the warning you issued to the government in the last session with respect to bills. You will also recall the procedural errors that accompanied the tax reform bill. Had the opposition insisted on adherence to the Standing Orders, Your Honour suggested that you might have to shut down the House for weeks while you checked the bill against the budget resolutions. You will also recall, Sir, that only by special order agreed to by the House was it possible to amend the bill. It is not, therefore, expertise that justifies special treatment for the government on the introduction of bills.

I therefore draw your attention, Mr. Speaker, to the fact that Bill C-183 contains no explanatory note although it proposes to amend a statute. There is no Standing Order that requires an explanatory note in such a case, but almost 50 years of custom have made the practice mandatory. That practice has been swept aside. The Chair, in yesterday's ruling on the bill of the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard), referred to previous rulings on the substance of explanatory notes. You are probably better aware of the origin of explanatory notes than I am, Mr. Speaker. They are founded in the report of the committee on procedure which was adopted by the House on June 14, 1923. The report recommended that in the following session the House adopt these rules:

> 1. In the preparation of bills amending existing enactments the amendments shall not ordinarily be made by clauses which add or leave out words or substitute words for others, but by clauses which re-enect the section, subsection or other minor division, as it is amended.
> 2. In the text of the bill, on the left hand page, new matter shall be indicated by such typographical means as may best suit the varying circumstances of each case, such as brackets, italics, underlining, asterisks, etc. Opposite each clause, on the right hand page, the enactment amended thereby, or so much thereof as is essential, shall be printed with the proposed changes to be made therein similarly indicated.
> 3. When a clause repeals an existing section, subsection or other minor division of a section, that section, subsection or division, or so much thereof as is essential, shall be printed opposite the clause.
> 4. A memorandum by the draftsman explaining briefly the reasons for each clause, shall be appended to the bill, or distributed therewith. Whenever practicable the memorandum shall be printed on the right hand page of the bill, in paragraphs opposite the clauses referred to and numbered correspondingly.
> 5. The above rules shall also as far as practicable apply to the reprinting of bills.

Although the House adopted these recommendations, it did not implement them in a subsequent session by incorporating them in the Standing Orders. The other place did make these recommendations rules of that chamber and they are now incorporated in rule 54 of that body. However, as rulings of this chamber bear out, over the past 50 years these recommendations have been applied to bills which propose to amend statutes.

Mr. Speaker, Bill C-183 proposes to amend an existing enactment. It does not comply with recommendations 2, 3 and 4 to which I have just directed my remarks; it does not indicate new matter, it does not reprint repealed clauses, nor does it contain any memoranda explaining the reasons for each clause. What the bill does contain in lieu of these requirements is a preamble. That preamble has one thing in common with the explanatory note of the bill of the hon. member for Skeena: it is lyrical, to some extent it is poetical, but it is not an explanatory note.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of Labour (Mr. O'Connell) must make his preamble conform more with existing practice and the form that is usual for explanatory notes. I submit that the bill must be withdrawn and reintroduced with proper explanatory notes or, alternatively, that it continue at pro forma first reading stage and with unanimous consent be reprinted with explanatory notes. The bill was introduced only a couple of days ago and a measure as important as this should not be permitted to proceed to second reading stage unless it contains explanatory notes to aid all members of the House.

Mr. Speaker, in order to substantiate my argument I would refer to a bill which was given first reading on February 21, 1972. I refer to Bill C-6. Clause 2 of that bill reads as follows:

> The Criminal Code is amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 178 thereof, the following part—

It then gets into part IV of the bill. The important point that I bring to Your Honour's attention is that there is an explanatory note, in some detail, on the right-hand side of that bill. This fact strengthens my argument. With the bill in question, Bill C-183 which is a bill to amend the Canada Labour Code, particularly part V, industrial relations, there is no explanatory note whatsoever. I think this omission is fatal to the legal presentation of this bill. I need not remind Your Honour that if I am correct in my conclusions and my point of order, the bill is imperfect.

Lastly, I should like to direct Your Honour to Standing Order 69 which reads:

> No bill may be introduced either in blank or in an imperfect shape.

Even though this bill has been introduced I think we are now faced with the problem of an imperfect bill and I would recommend to Your Honour that either of the two alternatives I have pointed out must be adopted.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am prepared to make a ruling at this time on the point raised by the hon. member. Basically, his point is that the bill is not acceptable in form because it does not contain the proper explanatory note. The hon. member suggests that although there is no requirement in the Standing Orders for an explanatory note, there is tradition or practice in support of his contention that bills should always contain an explanatory note and it should be in a certain form.

I agree with the hon. member that the Standing Orders do not provide in any way that it is a requirement that an explanatory note should accompany a bill. In fact, it has been brought to my attention that from time to time bills are submitted to the House without explanatory notes being in them. I have two such bills in my hand. Bill C-4 does not appear to have an explanatory note, neither does Bill C-170, an act to provide for the payment of benefits in respect of children. It seems that the bill before us does not contain an explanatory note. There is, therefore, nothing mysterious about this particular bill.

[Mr. Alexander.]

My intervention the other day in respect of private bills was to say that when there was an explanatory note, it should not be argumentative but should be in the form of an explanation. I fully agree with the hon. member that it is extremely helpful to the House and hon. members to have an explanatory note for their benefit and to assist in their understanding of legislation. However, the Chair, taking into account the Standing Orders and the long established practice of the House, cannot agree with the contention that the bill before us cannot proceed on the basis of the argument advanced by the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander).

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The similarity which Your Honour has just drawn to the attention of the House between the bill before us and other bills which do not contain an explanatory note is correct, but a quick perusal of these bills shows that the majority of them are new. I think it is the practice that new bills do not require an explanatory note. However, I think it is invariably the practice of this House that when there is an amending bill there is an explanatory note.

Mr. Speaker: I might add, as a conclusion to the ruling I was making, that Bill C-183 does have an explanatory note. This has just been brought to my attention. The explanatory note is at the back of the bill. I took the word of the hon. member for Hamilton West because he went to the trouble of making an extensive argument. I therefore assumed that there was no explanatory note. However, there is one. It may not be satisfactory, it may not be in the proper terms, it may not be in the same form as other explanatory notes, but at least there is an attempt to include one in the bill. That fact weakens the hon. member's argument and strengthens the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I had noticed the explanatory note at the back of the bill, but you will notice also that it refers only to sections 4 and 5 of the Public Service Staff Relations Act. Other than that there is no explanatory note.

Hon. Martin P. O'Connell (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, in rising to initiate second reading debate on this bill, an act to amend the Canada Labour Code, I want at once to acknowledge the contribution made to the legislation by my predecessor, the Hon. Bryce Mackasey. I know that hon. members will understand when I say that my colleague sincerely wishes he could be with us today when the principles of this bill are being discussed in the House for the first time.

Hon. members will recall that a bill to amend the Canada Labour Code was first introduced on June 28, 1971. At that time my predecessor made it clear that the bill was being introduced at the end of June for the purpose of stimulating public discussion. The bill did not proceed to second reading and lapsed when the previous session of this House terminated. In the intervening eight months my predecessor and I and senior departmental officials have received representations from and consulted with most groups in the country representing management and labour. In addition, we have consulted with provincial ministers of labour. On the whole, the original bill was well received. A few provisions, particularly those relating to technological change and picketing, stimulated much public discussion and comment. The present bill incorporates a number of the suggestions received in response to the government's request for comments.

The bill before the House now proposes amendments to improve the legal framework governing the relationships between organized labour and management in enterprises within federal jurisdiction and also affirms the proper role of government as representative of the public interest in those relationships.

The present act forms part V of the Canada Labour Code and was formerly entitled the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act. That act was passed in 1948 and has remained unaltered. It is no small commendation to the Hon. Humphrey Mitchell, minister of labour in 1948, and to the drafters of the IRDI Act that it is still functional today. One forgets that at that time we were still in the era of the DC-3 airplane, television broadcasting was still in the experimental stage and the St. Lawrence Seaway had not been built.

Our economic performance in the world is of vital importance to all Canadians and it will increasingly be so as the world's economic environment drastically changes through the rest of this decade and, indeed, the rest of this century. Good industrial relations will play a vital part in our economic performance and, accordingly, they will be the concern not only of the parties immediately involved but of all the Canadian public. It is with these thoughts in mind, Mr. Speaker, that we have approached the amendments to part V of the Canada Labour Code.

The government's objectives in its labour relations policy are to promote social justice and economic development. This will be done by providing the legal framework that encourages the development of an efficient and equitable system for industrial relations based on the cornerstone of collective bargaining. These principles are reflected in a new preamble. The preamble recognizes the long tradition in Canada of labour legislation and policy designed to promote the common well-being through encouraging free collective bargaining and the constructive settlement of disputes.

An essential ingredient of free collective bargaining is freedom of association and protection of the right to organize. In this respect, Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to inform the House that Canada has ratified International Labour Organization Convention No. 87 which was deposited with the ILO on March 23 by the Canadian ambassador, George Ignatieff. Reference to this convention dealing with the right to organize and to be represented by the union of one's choice is made in the preamble to the bill before us today.

Let me now turn, Mr. Speaker, to some of the provisions of the new bill which I believe are consistent with the over-all goal of labour legislation which I indicated earlier. First I would like to deal with the extension of bargaining rights. The bill would extend bargaining rights to professional employees who until now have not been entitled to bargain collectively. We believe that these people have tended in recent years to be put into a kind of no man's land between management on the one side and the organized worker on the other, without the right to be certified. We propose to rectify this. But in doing so we recognize that professional employees have specialized knowledge and training and that they may choose to have their own bargaining unit.

The bill clarifies in a statutory way the present practice of the Canada Labour Relations Board to grant bargaining rights to employees who have supervisory duties over other employees. If, however, such an employee exercises managerial responsibility or is employed in a confidential capacity in matters relating to industrial relations, then he would be excluded from the bargaining unit as he is at present.

The legislation recognizes that share-of-the-catch fishermen and owner-operator truckers are often in a position of such economic dependency that their relationship is more analogous to that of an employee than to an independent contractor. Accordingly, bargaining rights will be extended to such persons in those industries. I must say, in fairness, that there may be some jurisdictional difficulties with respect to the share-of-the-catch fishermen and we believe that this matter should be settled by the courts.

In extending bargaining rights to persons not previously covered we were cognizant of the fact that these groups could indeed organize and at times strike, but at the same time that they were beyond the dispute settlement procedures of the code. This clearly was not a satisfactory situation and militated heavily in favour of the extension of bargaining rights. It is proposed to permit a union which seeks bargaining rights for a unit that has no bargaining agent to apply to the Canada Labour Relations Board for a representation vote if it can demonstrate membership support of at least 35 per cent in the unit.

A union seeking to displace an existing bargaining agent would still be required to claim majority support at the time of the application for certification. The requirements for the representation vote have been eased to provide that the majority would be determined by a majority of the employees actually voting. Previously, the majority was calculated on the number of employees actually in the bargaining unit whether such employees voted or not. This change reflects common electoral practice.

In addition, we have included provisions designed to put bargaining rights acquired by voluntary recognition, and those acquired by certification, on an equal basis. These provisions also offer protection against the abuse of rights granted voluntarily so that a union carrying such rights would be subject to challenge for a one-year period on the ground that it lacks majority support.

The bill also contains provisions designed to carry over bargaining rights when unions merge or when a business or undertaking is sold. In the same vein, provisions are included in the bill which carry over bargaining rights when an agency of the federal government is transferred from the public service to a Crown corporation covered by this bill.

The bill would strengthen and extend the provisions regarding unfair practices in such a way as to offer additional protection for employers and trade unions and for individual employees and trade union members.

The jurisdiction over unfair practices is to be transferred from the courts to the Canada Labour Relations Board because we take the view that these questions are primarily ones involving industrial relations and are not properly dealt with as matters of quasi-criminal law. We think that these questions should be dealt with in a different atmosphere. The Canada Labour Relations Board would be empowered to seek accommodation between the parties through the assistance of field officers before the complaint is processed by the board itself.

We propose, further, that the Canada Labour Relations Board be reconstituted as a full-time body. Its members would no longer be representative of employees and employers. This provision has been somewhat misunderstood. We are not saying that members shall not have had a labour or management background. We are merely saying that once appointed to the board they must sever their connection with the organization or firm of employers, as the case may be, that they formerly represented or of which they were a member. There will, of course, be consultation with employers and the labour movement with respect to appointments. The Canada Labour Relations Board would have jurisdiction over unfair practices, deal with problems of successor rights, technological change, declarations of unlawful strikes and orders granting access to premises.

The predecessor bill proposed to clarify the law of picketing. The revised bill before the House has not carried forward that provision because of the representations received from both labour and management. Employers largely held the view that it extended the right to picket. Unions, on the other hand, were of the opinion that it infringed upon well established rights in Canada, rights that have been clearly supported in recent jurisprudence.

During the lifetime of a collective agreement, grievances are resolved by an arbitration process. The bill proposes to strengthen and better define the role of an arbitrator because we believe that arbitration is the only effective mechanism for the settlement of grievances. We have attempted to protect arbitrators' decisions from excessive judicial review.

I come now to the dispute settlement area which is perhaps one of the most important areas in the day to day administration of the legislation. The Minister of Labour is to be given increased flexibility in the use of techniques to attempt to bring about settlements. The minister would have the choice of taking no action at all or of appointing a conciliation officer, a one-man conciliation commission or a conciliation board. Should a conciliation officer be appointed and should he be unable to effect a settlement, the minister would be authorized to take no further action or to appoint a conciliation commission or a conciliation board.

[Mr. O'Connell.]

Thus, depending on the circumstances prevailing, the minister would be free to use the appropriate agency to assist in resolving a dispute without being required to follow the present, more rigid procedure. May I say that the right to strike or lockout would arise seven days after the minister states his intention to take no further action or after the report of a conciliation commissioner or board has been received.

In addition to the use of conciliation procedures the minister may at any time appoint a mediator to assist the parties, but the intervention of a mediator would not in any way affect the timing of a strike or lockout. Provision has been made in the bill that in the event that a serious strike or lockout is threatened at a time when Parliament has been dissolved for an election, the governor in council may postpone until after the election the date on which the work stoppage would normally become legal. This power would be available only when the stoppage would adversely affect the national interest. The Minister of Labour would be required to report to Parliament at the earliest opportunity after the election.

I have left to the last the provisions of the bill dealing with technological change. As hon. members are aware, provisions regarding technological change were incorporated in the bill presented to this House by my predecessor on June 28, 1971. These provisions have been recast for the purpose of clarification, but before I discuss them I wish to express the philosophy of the government underlying these provisions.

Rapid change has become a fact of everyday life and we must recognize it as such. This government's position is clear, that it must encourage technological change if Canadians are to compete successfully in the years ahead in the world's rapidly changing economic environment. On the other hand, the government recognizes that technological change often seriously dislocates or adversely affects those employees directly involved and that such effects ought to be minimized.

Thus, we are faced with two seemingly conflicting goals: on the one hand the encouragement of technological change and, on the other, the desirability of minimizing adverse effects on employees. In studying the options, I believe that the best solution is found in the provisions of the bill. What we are seeking in these provisions is to encourage management and labour to deal with the impact of technological change on employees at the bargaining table. Industrial precedent proves that by working co-operatively labour and management can introduce major technological changes harmoniously.

Perhaps the greatest concern expressed by management about the technological change provisions is the possibility of the collective agreement being reopened during its term. The technological change provisions have been clarified to establish clearly that the collective agreement cannot be reopened where the employer gives notice of the intended technological change before the agreement was entered into, where the agreement establishes procedures by which the effects of the change may be negotiated and settled, or where there are substantive provisions contained in the agreement that the parties specify are intended to assist the employees affected by the change. Under these circumstances the collective agreement cannot be reopened. The technological change provisions would not apply to existing collective agreements but only to those made after the bill comes into force.

I might point out that the technological change provisions of the act require that before an application be granted by the Canada Labour Relations Board to reopen the contract, the board must be satisfied that a significant number of employees would be substantially and adversely affected. In the event that the Canada Labour Relations Board grants leave to negotiate, the bargaining would be limited to provisions that would assist employees affected by the change; there would be no bargaining over the change itself.

I would also like to outline very briefly the commitment my colleagues and I have made that the legislation needs to be supplemented in a determined and imaginative way by a number of non-legislative initiatives to reduce the undue emphasis on the adversary elements in employer-employee relationships. Among other initiatives, we will be reinforcing the industry specialist and mediation program. We will give new emphasis to labour-management consultation and conference activity and devise means to promote improved efforts by employers and trade unions in the field of industrial relations training. Our research effort will be strengthened.

I conclude by saying, Mr. Speaker, that I believe this proposed legislation is a step forward in the development of a sound legal framework for the process of free collective bargaining in the federal jurisdiction.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-183, formerly Bill C-253, is an attempt to update the industrial relations section found in part V of the Canada Labour Code. One is impressed with the forceful arguments for change, if only through time, considering that the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act has been unchanged since 1948. Consultations over the years with those affected by its provisions, and consultations with the provinces have indicated a need for change.

• (1640)

The Woods task force of 1968 in its intensive study also emphasized the need for amendments which would bring about a more meaningful piece of legislation. The public, too, especially of late, has registered its concern about the future of labour-management relations. The trend as presently seen points to more strikes, to the public interest being adversely affected, to loss of dollars, to questionable motives in bargaining, to lack of stability in labour-management relations, to additions to the unemployment rolls and to the deterioration of our competitive position.

It seems to me that labour-management relations are suffering from a sickness which calls for an immediate cure. They are in a deplorable state. In bargaining, it is obvious that confrontation, with emphasis on the adversary system, far outweighs the principle of bargaining in good faith. We are today attempting to inject a serum which will cure this illness. The people of Canada are demanding no less, and they should expect no less. This is the challenge.

The conditions to which I have referred affect the high hopes that Canadians cherish for the future in terms of social and economic goals. At a time when our ability to reach these goals is being strained by policies of our neighbours to the south and elsewhere, we must make certain that the legal framework we finally approve as a means of dealing with labour-management relations does not in other ways strain our ability to make progress.

We cannot be unduly harsh in our attitudes regarding management or labour interests. We do not wish to inject a climate, through legislation, which would have a detrimental effect on the continuing quest for industrial peace and the stabilization of collective bargaining relationships. Two things are certain. First, business needs maximum freedom, in this age of rapid technological change, to inject new ideas and innovations thereby maintaining its competitive position and improving its efficiency. Second, the workers need protection or a reasonable guarantee that they will not be thrown out on the street when these changes mean loss of jobs.

What is involved in all this? The labour law before us applies to industries within the jurisdiction of the Parliament of Canada. These include interprovincial or international rail, road and pipe line transportation, shipping and related services, air transportation, interprovincial or international communications, telephone, telegraph or cable, radio and television broadcasting, and banks. Regardless of the jurisdictional aspect, it is well recognized that the provinces may, and often do, adopt in whole or in part legislation which is implemented federally. Here is another reason for making a conscious and determined attempt to bring forth the right bill.

I am not unnerved or impressed by the government's determination to proceed to the second reading of this measure only two days after the bill received first reading. The government can hardly construct an image of expeditious and decisive reform in this or any other area, whatever may happen in the weeks and months ahead. The fact is that this legislative statement of the government's intentions with regard to the Canada Labour Code is long overdue.

I should like to refer to a few of the highlights of the legislation before us because careful scrutiny must be directed toward all these aspects. I have a great deal of respect for the minister. I know he will recognize that our interest in this subject is as great as his and that he will turn a receptive ear to the suggestions we offer. We shall be dealing, as does the legislation, with questions which include the extension of bargaining rights, the appointment of a full-time labour relations board, a new definition of unfair practices, easier certification of unions, dispute settlements through the minister, enforcement procedures following collective agreements, technological change during the term of a collective agreement and rules in connection with strike action and picketing.

I heard what the minister said about the appointment of a full-time labour relations board. I am pleased he was able to explain some of the uncertainties. I was interested, too, in the new definition of unfair practices and in what was said about the certification of unions. There seems to be some contradiction implicit in the procedure for certification as compared with de-certification. All these questions, as well as others, will be looked into.

The clauses dealing with technological change during the term of a collective agreement are concerned with a matter which has caused frustration and misgiving not only in business circles but among many who will be indirectly affected. The minister has already explained his stand with respect to the picketing aspect of the bill.

The extensively researched proposals of the Woods task force were made public in December, 1968. We waited until June 28, 1971, for the government's legislative response and now, in March of 1972, we are debating on second reading an amended version of that response. Mr. Speaker, the range, the soundness and the originality of the bill before us today hardly justifies such a prolonged gestation period. In fact, it has not been good for the country. Bill C-253, which was introduced on June 28, 1971, was ill-advised and added to the unacceptably high degree of uncertainty which already existed in the business community. The fact that industry and business has been waiting for this amended bill for the last eight months has undoubtedly cost people their jobs. After studying the highlights I can see no reason why the bill itself, or at least a declaration of intent, could not have been made public months ago.

A government can be excused for taking eight months to reach certain decisions, but not the kind of decisions embodied in this bill. To agonize for eight months over the changes which appear in this measure is pathetic; it is another indication of awesome indecisiveness and bad government. This is not the time for the government to seek to undertake a pretentious effort to speed the present bill through the House. To do so would not serve the government's cause, nor would it serve industrial relations in Canada.

My party wants to see this mini reform debated and decided before the next election. If this does not happen, it is only the government which is to blame. Proper consideration of this bill will call for open and serious discussion at the committee stage. The government has a high responsibility to ensure that experts from the labour, management and academic fields have an opportunity to comment on the legislation and suggest improvements. It is questionable whether this will actually be done when the bill gets into committee. I would remind hon. members that Bill C-253 created a furore because we did not know whether the proposed amendments, particularly those concerning technological change, were soundly based.

I will say that the minister did allay many of the fears which existed. I want to know whether there will really be an opportunity to become involved in discussions with the people I have mentioned. I notice the minister is nodding his head. I am grateful for that attitude. This is important when we are trying to improve the structure of labour legislation which directly affects the community. I am pleased that the minister should agree.

• (1650)

The success of this task will not be known simply by debate in this chamber but, rather, by how the reform is received in the human arena of free collective bargaining.

[Mr. Alexander.]

Our party is prepared to give cautious approval to this bill at the present time in view of the great number of changes relating to the technological aspects of the legislation. I say cautious also in view of the new innovation in regard to strikes.

We want to know whether in fact labour and business are happy with the subsequent amendments that will be brought in. We say that free collective bargaining has been the main foundation of industrial relations in a free society, and this bill does provide improvements to the structure of collective bargaining. Although I should like to say a few words on this matter, may I simply say we accept the use of bargaining procedures in preparing and equipping both employees and firms to deal with technological change.

As I said earlier, if technological change is not faced up to and not made more humane, we will not have adequate or sustained development or as fulfilling and just a society as possible. In scope, this bill provides an acceptable basis for parliament to reform the Canada Labour (Standards) Code. However, let me emphasize that sometimes we get into a hang-up on second reading. Some members seem to think that because a bill has had second reading that is the end of it, that the bill has been agreed to in principle which means it cannot be further amended. I do not accept that argument. I contend we are constantly improving the principle of bills and I want to make it very clear to this House that our party will be making extensive and substantial suggestions in committee for improving these proposals. We will be open and responsive to any suggestions and comments made by those in the community who have an interest and a stake in industrial relations.

However, Mr. Speaker, we are disappointed by the timidity of the entire bill. Hundreds of thousands of dollars have been spent on a task force to provide ideas for a comprehensive overhaul of our industrial relations legislation. A plethora of creative and sound proposals was made by the task force and by many others concerned with industrial relations. There has been ample time and willingness in this House calmly and rationally to undertake a really comprehensive reform. However, I submit that the government has shied away from its big opportunity and I say it has let the country down. This is most evident in the challenge to find some way more effectively to reduce the necessity for strikes and lockouts and more reliably to protect the public interest.

I am very pleased with one part of the bill that has been brought to our attention and I am amazed that this provision has not been heretofore included in the code. I refer to what would happen if the members of the House of Commons were away beating on doors in June and strikes were called. I understand there is a provision in the bill to give the Governor General, or the governor in council, whichever is the correct terminology, power to deal with the situation. I recall one of my hon. friends in the New Democratic Party saying that when one of the members of my party wanted to inquire what would happen in such circumstances he was resorting to Nazi tactics, the tactics of fascism. I was quite surprised to hear that.

Mr. Skoberg: Let us use the War Measures Act.

Mr. Alexander: The hon. member has answered my question, but I did not mention his name. However, I do not want to get sidetracked because I want to give my hon. friends an opportunity to speak on this bill in which I understand they are greatly interested. Strikes and lockouts are an integral part of free collective bargaining. As long as free collective bargaining remains the best way peacefully to settle industrial disputes, we must accept strikes and lockouts. Hon. friends to my left may laugh at this, but a noted labour leader in the United States has remarked that labour strikes are not in keeping with industrial, social or economic development.

Mr. Barnett: Did you say "noted" or "notorious"?

Mr. Alexander: It has also been noted that after the technicians' strike it was also questioned whether the strike was a proper weapon. Perhaps we would have to go into the psychological reasons for strikes, whatever that may mean, but I shall not deal with that question now.

In our increasingly fragile and interdependent society, certain strikes and lockouts cannot be endured and must be disallowed. It is nonsense to suggest that they are always the only course of action. Parliament has intervened to protect the public interest when strikes in essential services have become unacceptably harmful. When the public interest is or has been adversely affected, then common sense is required and we should act in defence of the public interest. I subscribe to that contention, and so do some labour unions. Common sense has required such action in the past and will do so in the future. This subject is neither perverse nor academic, and the bill should have addressed itself to this area. I do not think it has, though it may have made an attempt. Perhaps when we get into committee the minister will explain why the procedure to which I have referred was not followed.

The Woods report dealt with this problem and made several proposals to improve the relationship of free collective bargaining and strikes and lockouts which have an intolerable and measurable effect on the public interest. This key suggestion was strongly endorsed at the annual meeting of our party and it should be in this bill. When parliament is not sitting, the minister has agreed that there is a procedure by which the Governor General can deal with the situation. We believe that when the public interest requires such action, it must remain the responsibility of parliament. Therefore, we feel that the recommendation of the Woods task force regarding a public interest disputes commission—I wonder where it went to—should have been developed legislatively. Such a body would be charged with determining special procedures for resolving industrial disputes in essential services. In addition, where strikes or lockouts occurred in essential areas this body would be responsible for advising parliament on how the public interest was being affected and on what action parliament might take.

This step would not roll back the right to strike or to lock out, nor would it end industrial conflict. However, it would provide parliament with a more comprehensive and informed basis on which to exercise the power it now has to legislate an end to a strike or lockout. Such a proposal is missing from the bill. I know the minister is charitable and I have a great deal of respect for him. I hope he will be able to convince his deputy that there is need for this sort of body charged with looking into the entire area of labour-management relations, thereby creating a climate that would eliminate the strike as a weapon because both sides are better informed.

Contrast this situation with the lack of information we are given by Treasury Board in regard to the Post Office Department. And who knows what is happening in the NABET negotiations? Ministers take the position that they feel it is not right to disclose matters that may affect negotiations while the negotiations are going on. We are about to go home for Easter and we cannot find out what is going on. Perhaps somebody knows. This sort of cat-and-mouse game, not only with labour-management but also with members, should not be permitted in an area of such vital concern. I think the establishment of an industrial disputes commission is a good idea and I see no reason why the government should not take action in this direction.

I want to deal with some of the amendments that the minister has brought in regarding technological change. He is quite right when he says that previously there was no opting out provision if notification was given of changes prior to the time of the signing of the contract. There was no reference to whether in fact the bill affected contracts in existence or which would come into existence at the time the bill was being debated. I think the minister has cleared up this matter, but there is still one point left. The right to strike is still there and we must look into this question.

As I said before, there is a feeling permeating the country, supported by labour, which I think is important, that perhaps we should look at another area. I will not deal with the amendments because I think the minister explained them well. The issue of technological change which creates such concern in terms of the amendments before us is of importance. We are hoping the committee's study will provide a basis acceptable to both labour and management—but we do not know that and this concerns me. I know labour was not happy with the 30-day notice they had to give. Whether this legislation has appeased labour, or whether business is prepared to go along with it remains to be seen. During the debate I think we have had co-operation. No one has bothered anyone, and I do not quite understand this. Perhaps because we know we are going home, and we have just been paid, has made everybody charitable.

The provision for collective bargaining during the length of a contract is not to be taken lightly. I emphasize this fact. Let me refer for a moment to this productive form of collective bargaining. Bill C-253 was certainly a mistake. The proposal of the former minister of labour would have weakened the efficacy of free collective bargaining in the interests of the workers of this country. My friends on my left, with their enthusiasm for that proposal, I would say are intellectually bankrupt. This bill places emphasis on dealing with the effects of technological change during the time a contract is renegotiated. It does not allow the reopening of a contract unless more sensible and available procedures are neglected. We can tighten up this provision. With his expertise, the minister perhaps can tighten it up sufficiently. In any event, we can explore this area.

This bill covers some 500,000 Canadian employees, many of whom are already negotiating contracts in respect of technological change. Even if this proposal provided such rights to unionized workers in both federal and provincial jurisdictions, which it does not, the two-thirds of the Canadian workers who are not unionized and are just as much affected by technological change would get nothing. We must admit that one-third of the working force is unionized while two-thirds are not. Even if every Canadian worker was unionized and reached by this reform, free collective bargaining could not do a complete job.

This is the main point we make this afternoon. As the Woods report pointed out, and as my party has, the achieving of a more humane and secure community in these times of rapid technological change requires the effective involvement of government in a whole range of economic and social areas. In meeting that challenge it seems to us this government has failed miserably and has made the situation worse. I will not get into that matter again during the debate this afternoon. Everybody knows what we on this side think of the government, but we will stick with this bill and see what happens.

The best climate for technological change for the worker is when there is growth of economic opportunity. Under this government we have had to endure restrictive, timid economic policies, a slowing down of assistance to research and development and no contemporary industrial strategy. Hopefully, this will change in the future under this government or the one that will be formed after June 27.

It is a fact that many of the effects and challenges of technological change to employees are primarily the responsibility of the federal government. Income maintenance, manpower mobility and retraining programs are essential instruments to help individuals deal with change. What is the government's record in this regard? Unemployment insurance reform which does not provide cost of living escalators will soon be inadequate. There have been no reforms or amendments to manpower mobility programs. We have seen a token in-industry retraining programs designed primarily to pad unemployment figures. There have been no changes to the manpower training program which has proven to be inadequate and inaccessible to those most poorly equipped to participate in our fast changing economy.

This bill will receive approval in principle because of the many good things it contains for the Canadian people. But, as I have said, we reserve the right to bring forward serious and substantial suggestions and amendments to improve the bill. In conclusion, I would like to state that the Toronto Star of yesterday reported in accurate terms what this whole thing is all about. I know hon. members have read the article, because we read everything we can get in this place, particularly when there is talk about labour-management relations. The last paragraph of this article reads:

> The important thing to remember is that the interests of employer and worker may be in conflict in the short-term, but never in the long. Unless the employer can adapt to change and keep his plant competitive, there will be no jobs. But if the employer does not manage change so as to cushion the impact on his work force, he will have bad labour relations whatever the law says.

We must arrive at an acceptable balance between the interests of business and labour. Hopefully, we will be able to arrive at the necessary solution in this regard.

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I am sure hon. members on this side of the House listened as attentively to the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) as they did to the Minister of Labour (Mr. O'Connell) when he was explaining the provisions of this bill. It is difficult to criticize the hon. member for Hamilton West on his presentation, but he leaves me a little confused as to the stand his party takes on the legislation. This suggests to me the plight of people who become bowlegged from riding fences.

The hon. member suggested that we must maximize business freedom, but at the same time we must give the workers protection. I am wondering whether business needs maximum freedom and workers need only protection and a reasonable guarantee. What is wrong with workers having maximum freedom in dealing with environmental and social conditions? The hon. member, when speaking of the rights of labour, talked about the right to strike but then suggested that we must tighten things up. I ask him, through you, Mr. Speaker, what he was referring to when he said we must tighten things up. First he wants maximum freedom for the business community, and then he suggests we tighten things up in so far as collective agreements are concerned.

I believe the hon. member was being very considerate to one type of individual, but I do not think he would support any legislation which would weaken labour. I do not think his party would bring in the type of legislation, if perchance they had the opportunity to form the government, that would do harm to the Canadian worker. However, I am not certain I would want to give his party that opportunity. Only time will answer that question.

The legislation before us, Bill C-183 to amend the Canada Labour Code, the industrial relations process, is of the utmost concern to all organized workers, management and to most of the unorganized or John Doe people, the public of this country. All too often the non-organized and underpaid millions make no headlines. These people are so easily overlooked. Many people seem to doubt their existence in our society. This is why I believe it is necessary to bring in legislation that will put everybody on an equal footing so that the people of Canada may realize that those who are unorganized should have a say in so far as protection is concerned.

One might ask what this has to do with the bill now before us. I suggest the Canadian public wants legislation that would allow both management and labour to face modern-day, fast moving changes on an equal footing. I do not subscribe to one side having any advantage in this regard. Job security is the most important concern of the working man. The need to control mass lay-offs brought about by technological change is always uppermost in the minds of Canadians because whenever there is a technological change there are lay-offs which affect the purse strings of the community. The community concerned must accept the situation.

Unless common sense, honesty and decency are practiced by employer and employee, there is room for concern. There must be a restoration of dignity in the job because this brings profit to industry, workers and the general public. Suspicion and hostility have cost the country dearly and this can be reversed only by a feeling of enthusiasm, understanding and co-operation. This bill in a small way does provide that type of relief from the never ending fear of employees that their jobs will be phased out without warning or consideration.

This legislation should also relieve the high tension of the employer in attempting to bring about technological change in the closed period of a contract. At least to some degree advance notice will have to be provided. Management must abandon the idea that the worker is bound to do what he is told simply because obedience is right, desirable or necessary. Every worker must be given the right to plan for change and must be told how change will affect him and his fellow workers.

The real purpose behind good industrial relations must be understanding and moderation. I believe the minister has understanding and I believe he will use moderation in the type of regulations which may be introduced with regard to this bill. If a worker is faced with new machines, new methods and organization which follow one another in rapid succession, if he is confronted with further changes before adaptation is completed, his tensions are multiplied and his fears become greater. If in fact he is told, without consultation with himself or his union, that his job is being sacrificed in the interest of alleged progress, his alarm and resentment will burst out in hostility. I suggest this is the reason we have had wildcat strikes and dissension throughout the country.

This is the type of consultation which should be carried on in respect of good industrial democracy as between management and labour. I hope the bill will provide some stability in this direction. I hope both management and labour can successfully work out industrial peace and contracts where little legislation is required. After all, legislation must be enforced, and this means third party intervention which should be required only in exceptional cases. It is not necessary to have the intervention of a third party if there is good will by the two parties concerned.

We in the New Democratic Party subscribe to the preamble of Bill C-183. While it may not add to the effectiveness of the bill, it does set out the desired goals for free collective bargaining in a democratic society. Sometimes I wonder if the Treasury Board negotiators and, indeed, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) have ever read, studied or employed good relations and constructive bargaining practices. One has only to read a reply to a question asked of the President of the Treasury Board to realize how shallow a government department is in so far as good industrial relations are concerned. I refer to issue No. 1 of the Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence of the miscellaneous estimates committee. The President of the Treasury Board was asked a question in committee and his reply was as follows:

—I can assure you that strikes are not the kind of thing that the employer, particularly the federal government, encourages or tries to precipitate—

A member of the official opposition then asked:

Does this pose problems in a negotiating way to the federal government as the one employer with a very large bank roll?

The response to this question is what I am getting at in order to show that there are no meaningful negotiations by the Treasury Board in an attempt to bring about a solution to labour strikes. The response was:

In so far as the employee group—and this is one expectation they may have with a private company—hopes to bankrupt, if need be, the employer, the public service employees I do not think should nourish this particular hope. This is one significant difference.

A philosophy based on a test of economic strength obviously is not appropriate and should not be satisfactory to the public service employee. I think a number of them are recognizing this.

I suggest that with this type of approach to industrial relations it is no wonder we are in a mess in respect of the various contracts being negotiated by that department. As one goes through the bill, various words are used which need clarification if a battle as to legal interpretation is to be stopped before it begins. I am sure that those of us who are involved in looking at words in official contracts realize that the lawyers in this country have made millions of dollars because of the difficulty involved in interpreting sometimes just a small word.

Sometimes I think we would be better off if we used professors of English to write contracts rather than the legal people who normally write them. One word can make a great difference in the interpretation of a clause in a collective agreement. If we look at the interpretation placed on the word "strike", we see where work to rule could be considered to come under the interpretation. Sometimes work to rule or a slowdown can be, and has been, substituted for a strike. I am sure the minister is aware that this is so.

Many observations and representations have been made on the composition of the Canada Labour Relations Board. I was pleased to hear the minister say there will be consultation with employees and employers before people are appointed to the board. We will take him at his word, but we must be concerned about how another minister might do it. There may be merit in establishing a full-time Canadian Labour Relations Board with broadly increased powers and duties. However, nowhere does the bill spell out that members of the board will be equally representative of employees and employers—and one questions giving the governor in council such far reaching authority.

It is necessary to establish a board which fully represents management, labour and the public. All too often boards of this type are composed of learned friends without practical experience in the field for which they are given responsibility. It is absolutely necessary that this board not be composed of politicians, friends of the government, pork-barrel type of appointments, if we are really interested in bringing about sound, respected decisions affecting labour and management relations.

I believe that the Minister of Labour will ensure proper representation on the board. We have heard his commitment with regard to the Canada Labour Relations Board. However, the minister and this government may not be here tomorrow or the day after and a new government may have an anti-union philosophy and fill the board with right-wing reactionaries. We should all be concerned about this. That is why we should have a form of guarantee that the Canada Labour Relations Board will be equally representative of the public, labour and management.

I believe that no provision should be embodied in the legislation which would permit anyone beyond the age of 65 to hold office on the board. This is my personal opinion. I see that there is a provision under which office can be held by a person up to the age of 70. The minister is aware of the many appointments being made of people close to retirement age and all too often an important body becomes strictly a hobby-horse for the people concerned. However, we agree that there are many exceptions in this regard. At the same time, if we had sound rules and sound legislation in so far as the age provision is concerned, I am sure it would be to the advantage of all concerned.

I believe, also, that the legislation should specify that women be represented on the board. I say this specifically for the hon. lady member of our party. Many male chauvinists see women only in a motherhood role, but the majority of the female species have much more than that to contribute. The fact remains that if there is to be a full-time board there must be effective communication between the minister and parties involved, otherwise the whole area of good industrial relations will fall down before the legislation gets off the ground.

In all seriousness I suggest that a woman should be appointed to the board. I think this would be a recognition of the views of the general public. My friends are suggesting just one woman, but I would not hesitate to say that there could be more than one.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Skoberg: This suggestion should be given consideration because all too often male chauvinists are appointed to boards and they are the people who end up on top. I am certain all members of the House recognize the importance of freedom of choice in deciding membership for various jurisdictions. Therefore it is important that we recognize the right of unions to apply for certification, and even more so, the importance of making a decision on the matter at the earliest possible time. In the past there have been lengthy delays in granting a vote to unions applying for certification.

A typical example is a union which applied for certification in April of 1971 in the Saskatoon area. On March 13, 1972, they received an acknowledgement that the situation was being considered. In the meantime the turnover in the plant had been tremendous, three of the key members were fired, which cut back on the certification application. Because of the passage of time and withdrawals from the company, the certification which they attempted to obtain no longer merited consideration by the board.

I hope that in spite of the amount of work the Canada Labour Relations Board will have, they will not become bogged down in such situations because this can only result in the stirring up of hostilities. With hostility there is bound to be suspicion and work stoppage.

I should now like to speak about one of the most important concerns of the average worker whether he be in the retail business, in transportation, in industry, in the service industry or in any other industry. I refer to the provisions regarding technological change which are in the bill. It is becoming increasingly apparent that workers in all sections of our economy want some assurance with regard to job security. They are concerned, and rightly so, about technological changes which will make them obsolete or which will allow an insensitive management to charge them with being featherbedders.

Workers have a right in our democracy to expect humane treatment and consideration for the years of service they have contributed to industry. At the same time, surely no one disagrees that management has the right to expect a fair return on their investment. But this cannot be construed to mean that an employee can be turned loose without consideration being given to the contribution which he made to the success of that industry.

That is why the technological change provision in Bill C-183 is so important. That is why I consider that a loophole exists in the bill which may create unnecessary labour disputes between now and the time when many contracts will be open for negotiation. All contracts, whether open or closed, should be treated in the same way in so far as the technological provision in the bill is concerned. When enacted, this legislation should apply in exactly the same way to both open and closed contracts.

It may be expected that a number of industries will try to beat the gun by bringing about changes in their operation under the guise of introducing new operations, although I hope I am proven wrong. Such could be the interpretation of the wording in the legislation where reference is made to a change that is directly related to the introduction of equipment or material. I believe that a change is a change, and whether or not it is directly related to the introduction of equipment or material will not soften the impact.

I should also point out that concern is expressed because no coverage is provided for the shutdown or transfer of a railway terminal. Perhaps this matter is covered in collective agreements. I believe that is the case with most of them. But one has only to refer to the words of Mr. Justice Samuel Freedman to realize the seriousness of the matter. What he said is very important. The minister referred in committee to what Mr. Justice Freedman said. I should like to quote a chapter from the report by Mr. Justice Freedman on technological change—an economic and human problem. He quotes Dr. John T. Deutsch, chairman of the Economic Council of Canada. The quotation reads as follows:

> We are confronted with the problem of how to deal with displacement and dislocation, with the need for retraining, with the development of new skills, with the survival of an enterprise and the investment of new capital, with material and human losses, and with the question of how to distribute new benefits between wages, social welfare and leisure. These are complex and rapidly changing issues which cannot be tackled successfully unless; first, there is mutual concern and mutual recognition of the legitimate role of each party; second, there is realization that neither the responsibility for nor the cost of adjustment can be imposed solely upon one of the parties or let fall upon the weak; and third, there is a comprehension of the need for objective analysis, for information, for prior study, for consultation and forward planning, and for a readiness to deal with realities.

Mr. Freedman quoted Dr. Deutsch and there is much wisdom in the words quoted. Mr. Freedman wrote:

There is much wisdom in the words above quoted, and the commission is pleased to adopt them as the basis of its approach to the problem now being considered. So well do they define that problem and expose its implications that an extended treatment of it by the commission is hardly necessary.

• (1730)

In the same vein, Mr. Speaker, he quotes Messrs. Somers, Cushman and Weinberg's "Adjusting to Technological Change" as follows:

This differentiation between beneficiaries and sufferers from technological change presents us with a moral as well as an economic problem. Society as a whole is, by and large, a beneficiary. Is it morally acceptable for most of us to enjoy the benefits of new technologies without utilizing every possible means of minimizing the losses and assisting the readjustment of those who are not beneficiaries but sufferers? Society has a moral obligation to accept the cost of necessary programs to this end as a charge against the benefits of technological advance.

In that regard, Mr. Speaker, I suggest we should realize that whether the contract is open or closed, or whether it has another three years to run, there should not be any technological change that would bring suffering to the workers.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Skoberg: I assure the minister that the New Democratic Party will be pressing for this change consistently, and until it is brought about debate will be protracted. We consider this to be one of the most important areas omitted from this bill, and of course we will be watching it.

Mr. Speaker, the New Democratic Party will be watching a number of other areas very closely. We question why a change was made from the previous act in that "approximate" is now used in referring to notice being served concerning technological change. Why would the positive approach as to how many employees are likely to be affected be replaced by the word "approximate", which leaves room for argument and interpretation and long and costly legal battles? Why is a word such as "significant" used, which again leaves a veil of doubt and suspicion, and a word like "substantially" when talking about an order to serve notice to bargain? Why the change from the first to the seventh day when talking about the right to strike or lockout being limited during the period between parliaments?

These and other questions will be asked when this bill goes to committee and we have an opportunity to question the minister and hear briefs from interested parties. Even with reservations, we in this party intend to vote for this bill on second reading. When that is completed it will go to committee and there we will ask the type of question that is in the minds of many, in order to find out precisely whether industrial relations are adequately covered in this bill.

We all want equality and a healthy nation. However, no one relishes compulsion because compulsion in one area can only lead to more compulsion. When some hon. members talk about how we will bring about compulsion in regard to labour, we question where this leads. The answer is that it will lead to more compulsion in other areas. This is not what Canadians desire; rather, they desire good labour management relationships bringing peace and stability through true, uninhibited collective bargaining.

Mr. Speaker, we wish the minister well with this bill. We hope that at some time he or one of his colleagues will stand in this House and state that some of the thoughts we have expressed will be given favourable consideration. All employees are entitled to this.

[Translation]

Mr. Charles-Eugène Dionne (Kamouraska): Mr. Speaker, I think it is normal to make a few remarks at this stage of the proceedings on Bill C-183, entitled "An Act to amend the Canadian Labour Code". I wish to point out that I took some time to peruse the preamble of the bill. It is very interesting to note the good intentions showing through the purported principles of this bill.

Unfortunately, we see that the purpose aimed at is not always achieved, since the tensions that exist in labour-management relations are certainly no indication that those relations are good and that the methods of settling disputes are effective.

The recommendations contain provisions for the remuneration of the members of the Canada Labour Relations Board, the establishment of offices where it is deemed necessary, the remuneration and expenses of members of the Board in relation to matters investigated and, lastly, the setting up of the whole bureaucracy deemed necessary for the implementation of the various provisions of the act.

I can very well understand that it is not always easy to maintain a constant balance between the fair claims of labour and the requirements of the common good. However, labour legislation must aim at such an objective.

Bill C-183 contains a few amendments as to the administration of the law, in cases of technological changes. It varies somewhat from the present legislation in that its clauses relating to technological changes will not affect collective agreements already in effect, but they will apply after the adoption of this bill. From now on, any employer who is bound by a collective agreement and who intends to effect a technological change must advise the union in writing 90 days prior to the proposed change and he must indicate: (a) the nature of the change; (b) the approximate number of employees who will be so affected and (d) the effect of the changes on employment security.

Should the employer not comply with these requirements, the union is empowered to appeal to the Canada Labour Relations Board and request action. The Board will order the employer to suspend the application of the clauses relating to technological changes for a period of 90 days. Upon a request by a union, the Board will also be empowered to order the employer to negotiate new labour conditions if the changes affect clearly and unfavourably the terms and conditions or security of employment.

What happens in the case of failure to negotiate? Will the unions be able to strike? The new bill does not throw any light on this point.

In fact, it would appear from clause 180 dealing with the right to strike, that the union involved in technological changes allowing for a re-examination of the collective agreement will be in a position to strike provided all the requirements set forth in clause 180 are met. One exception deals with a strike during an election campaign when it goes against the national interests. The governor in council can then prohibit such a strike by order in council until 7 days after the elections have taken place.

There has been also a new amendment to insure that an employee must pay his union funds, at the source or directly, when it is so stipulated in the collective agreement. This is a very strange concept of union freedom. I would now like to point out that in my opinion, real freedom for unions should be clearly established by taking into consideration two points in particular: the freedom to join the union, or to get out of it. This is real freedom for unions.

This bill also proposes to continue the Canada Labour Relations Board in order to make it, as had been suggested by the former Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey), a full-time body made up of a chairman, a vice-chairman and four members. If necessary, another vice-chairman and four other members at the most could be added.

Under present circumstances, I think we should rather set up a board of experts secure from undue influences, a group experienced people familiar with labour and management problems; a few experts who could provide accurate data on variations in the cost of living and determine basic wages for workers in various types of industries or services, taking into account all the necessary factors to ensure normal production of goods or services.

There is such a thing as a labour board made up of competent men! What we have to do is assure them of a fair salary and give them the power to make decisions.

In public services, the economic power resulting from the right to strike could be replaced by some adequate mechanism for salary adjustments based on the cost of living index. Let us stop thinking in terms of compulsory contributions or arbitration and start considering a fair and equitable distribution of corporation profits and of workers' salaries, and we will have peaceful labour-management relations. The solution will not be arrived at without effort, but the present situation makes it mandatory that we take appropriate steps if we truly want to avoid anarchy.

Responsible workers, a high percentage of whom have families to support, are entitled to demand some degree of happiness for their dependents, but they should be able to do so without being forced to resort to strikes, when they can unwittingly be the instrument of an enemy using them to promote subversive interests.

Strikes merely lead the worker into a vicious circle. He might get a little more, but will he be better off, after the effects of the strike have ceased and new taxes bring down the value of money and make him consider another strike?

[Mr. Dionne.]

I have here an editorial of Station CJRC on strikes. I quote:

> Strikes are in style. They have become so frequent that they are no longer being kept count of.
> We shall be asked to keep calm, told that the rights of workers are sacred and that the strikes of others always seem more reprehensible. But facing that rising tide of walk-outs, all equally costly, let us ask whether such folly will not lead us straight to disaster.
>
> Here is a typical example of a stupid strike: the air controllers. Basically, their 11-day strike gained them a 7 per cent increase in salary. Arbitration, it will be remembered, suggested 15.8 per cent over a period of 27 months. They were offered 17 per cent a few days later. Confrontation led to another arbitration decision, granting them 16.5 per cent. To obtain a 7 per cent salary increase, the controllers lost 11 days' pay—they have no strike fund—causing a loss to the air companies of $22 million, not to speak of inconvenience and expense caused to passengers, who had to bear them with patience and selflessness. Was it worthwhile?
> Those in favour of strikes could perhaps benefit by such soul-searching. This might avoid the catastrophe which seems imminent. It is not a matter of being pessimistic, but of being realistic. It is high time.

Before deeper involvement in strikes, workers should give it serious thought. They do have rights which must receive recognition, but there are also rights, and responsibilities related to young people to whom other alternatives than strikes should be taught.

Unions remain democratic instruments of protection for workers, provided they are directed by leaders aware of their responsibilities to their members and the means resorted to in order that management recognize its social responsibilities.

In view of the trend towards centralization, one is often inclined to forget the adequacy of human communication required in order to understand employees' grievances. Necessarily, an instrument of consultation must be established and maintained constantly on the alert, particularly as concerns changing working conditions. It is not normal to give up the morale and well-being of employees for the sake of efficiency, service or performance.

In a fluid situation, as a result of the rigidity of policies of the authorities in command, there grows among employees the desire to test the right to strike.

Labour laws should be formulated with clarity, thus allowing the average worker to grasp their meaning without having too often to consult lawyers, who do not seem to need to go on strike to increase their fees.

Let all those responsible for legislation get their inspiration from the same principles behind the salary adjustments put forward in the case of ministers, hon. members, senators, judges and a group of senior officials, and we will then undoubtedly have laws which will be aimed at preventing useless and harmful strikes.

The right to live, for every individual, stems from a natural right. It must be recognized way before the right to strike or to make exaggerated profits, and the necessary steps must be taken by those who are responsible for legislation, to ensure first of all that each and every one has in fact the right to live. We should be clear-sighted enough to set up a system for the intelligent distribution of existing goods without having recourse to strikes, when the majority of the citizens want to work.

Hopefully, this bill will improve somewhat the situation in a field where solutions are imperative.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. MacLean: Mr. Speaker, since we expect the messenger from the other place to arrive at any minute and we shall shortly adjourn for the Easter recess, I suggest it is hardly worth the while of any hon. member to begin his speech now. Could we, therefore, not sit here quietly until the messenger arrives?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Do hon. members agree that we suspend the proceedings until the messenger arrives from the other place?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Peters: Perhaps we could take my unemployment insurance bill.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Or my bill to abolish the Senate, which is even more appropriate.

Mr. Paproski: Stanley, there is still a chance for you.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MacLean: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if someone on the government side could undertake to advise the opposition parties, if he cannot advise them at present, several days before the House resumes its sitting on April 13 what the business for that week will be.

• (1750)

Mr. Deachman: Mr. Speaker, I will be pleased to convey that suggestion to the government House leader.

Royal Assent

THE ROYAL ASSENT

A message was delivered by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable House in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the House went up to the Senate chamber.

And being returned:

Mr. Speaker informed the House that the Deputy Governor General had been pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the royal assent to the following bills:

Bill C-55, an act respecting the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act—Chapter No. 3.
Bill C-74, an act respecting the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act—Chapter No. 4.
Bill C-92, an act respecting the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act—Chapter No. 5.
Bill C-167, an act respecting the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act—Chapter No. 7.
Bill C-172, an act respecting the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act—Chapter No. 6.
Bill C-8, an act to authorize the making of certain fiscal payments to provinces, to authorize the entry into tax collection agreements with provinces, and to amend the Established Programs (Interim Arrangements) Act—Chapter No. 8.

Bill C-169, an act to amend the Income Tax Act—Chapter No. 9.
Bill C-164, an act to incorporate Unity Bank of Canada.
Bill C-175, an act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1972—Chapter No. 1.
Bill C-176, an act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1973—Chapter No. 2.

Mr. Speaker: As hon. members know, on Wednesday evenings there are no adjournment proceedings. With the consent of the House the "late show" will be advanced to 6.15 this evening and we might adjourn for that purpose to room 16.

[Translation]

I remind my hon. colleagues that they are invited to Room 16 to exchange the usual good wishes.

[English]

At 6.10 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Special Order, until Thursday, April 13.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, April 13, 1972

The House met at 2 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

EXTENSION OF ORAL QUESTION PERIOD TO 60 MINUTES TODAY—ADJOURNMENT UNTIL MONDAY, APRIL 17

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a very brief statement with regard to the business of the House which, hopefully, can be translated into a House order.

We have had some discussions and, in view of the events tomorrow, we have agreed that we might extend the oral question period today to occupy a period of 60 minutes. That is the first part of the arrangement. Second, when the House adjourns today it will stand adjourned until Monday, April 17, 1972, at 2 o'clock p.m., the result being that there will be no sitting of the House tomorrow morning or afternoon. The address of the President is an address to a joint meeting of the House of Commons and the Senate. It is not a sitting of the House in the normal sense. That arrangement will permit the facilities to be prepared for the address tomorrow afternoon.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) has indicated the situation properly. Although we feel that one hour will hardly suffice to deal with the very serious and large number of problems that the government will have to face, we will accept it for the time being.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Agreed.

• (1410)

Mr. Fortin: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the arrangements proposed by the President of the Privy Council. Is it the pleasure of the House to agree?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is agreed and so ordered.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43 I ask the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion concerning serious aspects of this country's foreign policy. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall):

That this House suspend all other items of business this day and direct itself to a discussion of those vital questions affecting Canadian-United States relations, in such areas inter alia as diplomacy, commerce, energy, resources and environment control so that the President of the United States may have the benefit of the views of the representatives of the people of Canada in this very crucial period in the relationships between our two friendly and allied nations.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion proposed by the hon. member. Under the terms of Standing Order 43 it requires unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity. The motion cannot be put.

MANPOWER SHORTAGE FOR MAPLE SUGAR PRODUCTION—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I solicit adjournment of the House in order to deal with a matter which I consider to be very urgent, regarding citizens receiving unemployment insurance benefits.

In our region, many citizens operating maple groves need extra labour during the sugar season, which they find practically impossible to hire because those receiving unemployment insurance benefits are unwilling to risk losing this coverage. We humbly request that the House—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I regret having to interrupt the hon. member who seems about to bring forward a substantive motion in the House. The hon. member calls for adjournment of the House under S.O. 43. I take the liberty of reminding him that adjournment of the House must be sought under S.O. 26, which requires advance notice to the Chair.

The hon. member should therefore present his motion otherwise, under S.O. 26.

[English]

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 26 I ask leave, seconded by the hon. member for Hillsborough, to move the adjournment of the House in order to discuss a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely the issues which are or ought to be discussed between President Nixon and the Prime Minister on the occasion of the visit of the President of the United States to Ottawa, including, in particular, questions dealing with trade relations, foreign investment, pipeline construction from northern parts of the continent, pollution and the Alaska Highway, so that the members of this House, as the representatives of the people, might be able to indicate the views of the people of Canada.

Mr. Speaker: I have serious reservations as to the form of the presentation of the hon. member for Peace River and of the notice he has given to the Chair, but I can confirm that the hon. member has in fact given notice of his intention to move the adjournment of the House for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter under the provisions of Standing Order 26.

There is little doubt that the subject matter of the hon. member's proposal is of great importance and that the matters he would like the House to consider today are of current and national interest. My difficulty is to determine whether the proposal, though I fully recognize its timeliness, importance and national interest, meets the requirements for immediate debate at this particular moment under the provisions of Standing Order 26.

My understanding of Standing Order 26 is that its provisions relate to a genuine emergency arising suddenly and requiring immediate debate. It does seem to me that the President's projected visit to Ottawa has been common knowledge to members of the House prior to the Easter adjournment. As early as October 15 last it was the subject matter of a question and a reply in the House. The proposed visit was formally announced in the Speech from the Throne on February 17 last. Hon. members need not be reminded that the debate on the address did provide an opportunity to discuss the several topics enumerated by the hon. member for Peace River. Furthermore, each one of these matters has been raised in the House on a number of occasions in the course of debates on supply motions, during the question period, during adjournment proceedings and, as I have said, during the address debate. In light of these circumstances it would be exceedingly difficult for the Chair to allow the motion at this time.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

UNEMPLOYMENT INCREASE—GOVERNMENT POSITION—NEW POLICIES TO COPE WITH PROBLEM—INQUIRY AS TO BUDGET

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I have a question for the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the seasonally adjusted unemployment figures show that unemployment has risen again to above 6 per cent, I should like to ask the right hon. gentleman whether it is the view of the government that there are plenty of jobs available if people will take them, or whether the government intends to announce any new policies designed to reduce this very disappointing rate of unemployment? In the latter case, would the Prime Minister indicate very briefly what these policies will be?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The answer to both questions at this time is no, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Stanfield: Then may I put a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. May I ask the Minister of Finance if he has yet made up his mind whether he will present a budget to the House? If so, when can it be expected, and will it indicate any proposals with regard to the economy?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if a budget is presented to the House sufficient notice will be given so that the hon. gentleman can prepare.

Mr. Stanfield: I have a further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, for the Prime Minister. In view of the difficulties the government seems to be experiencing in arriving at a policy in this regard, does the Prime Minister intend to seek in this area the assistance of Business International Executive Services?

UNEMPLOYMENT INCREASE—GOVERNMENT ACTION IN ANTICIPATION—SUGGESTED REDUCTION OF INTEREST RATES

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. In view of the very serious rise in unemployment, had the government foreseen that this was going to take place?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member might like to rephrase the question; I do not think it can be asked in those terms. Whether the government had foreseen certain events or not is not a question that can be asked at this time. The hon. member might like to rephrase his question.

Mr. Saltsman: May I ask the minister whether he had taken any action in anticipation of this increase in unemployment?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I may not have the foresight of the hon. member but I do not have his gift of hindsight either.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister an additional question and perhaps he will be less inclined to be smart-alecky about the whole thing.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: He is trying to build a reputation as a wisecracker.

Mr. Saltsman: I see he is not the only one on that side who is smart-alecky.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I gather there is only one hour for the question period.

Mr. Saltsman: My question to the Minister of Finance is this: In view of the artificial level of the Canadian dollar, which is much higher as a result of the policy of the Bank of Canada to maintain higher interest rates than those in the United States, and in view of the serious unemployment situation which requires that there be an increase in manufacturing jobs—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Saltsman: —can the Minister of Finance indicate whether he is holding discussions with the governor of the Bank of Canada in an effort to reduce interest rates further in Canada?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I meet with the governor once a week and these matters are under review.

UNEMPLOYMENT INCREASE IN ATLANTIC PROVINCES—SUGGESTED RENEGOTIATION OF REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION AGREEMENTS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. In view of the increase in the unemployment rate on a regional basis—I am thinking especially of the Atlantic provinces—is the minister prepared to renegotiate the present DREE agreements with the four Atlantic provinces in view of the failure of present agreements seriously to curb rising unemployment?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, agreements can always be renegotiated if all parties wish to do so. If the provinces want to renegotiate part of the agreement I will be pleased to comply with their request.

[English]

ATLANTIC PROVINCES—NEW PROGRAMS TO PRODUCE EMPLOYMENT

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the statement today in the job vacancy survey showing in the Atlantic region a 15 to 1 ratio between unemployed persons and job vacancies, compared with Canada's 12 to 1 ratio, indicating that the Atlantic region has the highest unemployment and the fewest job opportunities, can the Prime Minister say whether he is prepared to introduce some new employment-producing programs for this region of Canada?

• (1420)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, I cannot.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact the same survey shows Belgium, France, Germany, the Netherlands, Sweden and the United Kingdom with a job vacancy ratio of 1.3 to 1 and Canada with 10.6 to 1, is the Prime Minister now prepared to send out a corrected version of the last six or seven speeches he has made across the country?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Order. Does the hon. member for Champlain wish to ask a supplementary?

Mr. Matte: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I shall recognize the hon. member for Champlain in a few minutes.

Inquiries of the Ministry

UNEMPLOYMENT INCREASE—SUGGESTED INITIATIVES TO ENSURE BUILDING OF MACKENZIE VALLEY PIPELINE

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In view of the increase in the unemployment rate in this country, is the minister prepared to announce any new initiatives in the direction of ensuring that the Mackenzie Valley pipeline will be built rather than the TAPS pipeline which seems to be the route preferred by the Americans at the present time?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, we have no special announcement to make in that connection since final decisions have not yet been taken by either side.

UNEMPLOYMENT—CONSISTENCY OF LATEST STATISTICS AND FINANCE DEPARTMENT FORECASTS—FORECASTS FOR COMING MONTHS

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. Are the latest unemployment statistics consistent with whatever forecasts have been produced within his department? Will he also indicate whether he has forecasts of unemployment in the coming months that he is prepared to make available to members of the House of Commons?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the figures that were published still show there are too many men and women in this country out of work.

An hon. Member: You can say that again.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I am confident that the strengthening economy will bite into these unemployment figures. I am not in the business of forecasting, but if the hon. member will review what I said when I first addressed myself to this subject during the throne speech debate I think he will have a full answer to his question.

UNEMPLOYMENT INCREASE—INTRODUCTION OF MAKE-WORK PROGRAMS

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): My question is directed to the Acting Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the high unemployment rate, is it the intention of the government to introduce make-work programs similar to the local incentives program in the future to overcome unemployment?

Hon. Martin P. O'Connell (Acting Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the question of direct employment programs is under constant consideration by the government. If there are any new ones they will be announced in due course in the House.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Has the right hon. gentleman a supplementary question?

[Mr. Speaker.]

UNEMPLOYMENT INCREASE—ADVERTISING OF JOB OPPORTUNITIES IN PARIS NEWSPAPERS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I believe this question will clarify the whole situation.

An hon. Member: You should have someone over there to do it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I direct this question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I have before me a translation of an advertisement which appeared in Figaro and at least two other Paris papers. The embassy of Canada asks that the coupon be filled in and returned and says that those who do so will receive free documentation on the Canadian way of life. It states in part:

> To the higher staff and to the technicians.
> To the young graduate like you. In such a case, instead of waiting, write to us. Simply fill in the coupon below and you will receive complete documentation on all the available careers in Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder whether the right hon. gentleman has a question to ask after that preliminary?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I put the question in this form because the advertisement suggests that they will get good jobs that are available.

An hon. Member: You shouldn't listen to or believe everything you hear or read.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The hon. gentleman who just interrupted will soon be out of employment, whenever the election occurs.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I ask the minister whether he will table in the House a list of all the good jobs referred to in this advertisement which states:

> You will find out that all good jobs are not filled everywhere. They are available where you are most needed.

Would the minister table a list of the good jobs in the higher echelons, the technical and university trained, that are available and which he had in mind when he inserted this advertisement?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I thank the right hon. member for having asked such a clarifying question. I will look at the advertisement and if I can add something which would be of interest to him or other members of the House I shall do so.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is the inference to be drawn that the minister did not know the advertisement was being put in the Paris papers?

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VISIT OF PRESIDENT NIXON TO OTTAWA—SUBJECTS TO BE DISCUSSED AT MEETING WITH PRIME MINISTER

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Prime Minister whether he can inform the House as to what the agenda is for his meeting with the President of the United States, whether such agenda has been adopted by the two administrations, and what items it covers?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there has been no formal agenda adopted for the talks between the President and myself. We will talk informally and have an exchange of views on many, many subjects.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister whether it is his intention to take up with the President of the United States the present dangerous situation of the war in Viet Nam and whether he will seek an assurance from the President of the United States that nuclear weapons will not be used, even though I cannot believe that administration would permit the use of such weapons, in order to reassure the people of the world that this will not occur?

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Does the Prime Minister intend to ask the President whether the recent statements by Secretary Connally that Canada cannot have a trade surplus with the United States represent the position of the President?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I do not think I will refer to any particular quotation, whether exact or not. I will ask him for his own view on these things as I did in September.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, can the Prime Minister at least tell us whether he will be discussing with the President the question of the foreign investment policy of this government and, if so, will the government then feel free after the discussion with the President to announce the policy to the House and the country?

Mr. Trudeau: We always feel free to do that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Obviously many members wish to ask supplementaries on this important matter, They will be recognized in a moment. However, before returning to the hon. member for Calgary North for a supplementary as well as others on this subject, I think the Chair should recognize the hon. member for Champlain.

DISPUTE WITH NABET—INTERVENTION OF MINISTER—MEASURES TO AVOID LOCK-OUT

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Secretary of State.

Have the parties concerned asked the minister to intervene in the conflict between the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and NABET?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Matte: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question.

Does the minister intend to do something in that connection, so that the Canadian people may obtain the services they are paying for?

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, I think that the Department of Labour, which is directly responsible, is quite busy at the present time trying to settle the conflict.

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary.

I should like to know whether, before the CBC authorities imposed the lock-out, the minister was consulted with a view to ascertaining whether or not it might not have been possible to proceed by injunction against NABET members to order them back to work, that the people might benefit from the services of the CBC for which they pay so dearly?

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, I understand the dissertation but I fail to grasp the question.

Mr. Asselin: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary. I shall clarify my question.

Did the minister advise the CBC authorities to get an injunction ordering NABET members to return to work before the lock-out?

Mr. Pelletier: No, Mr. Speaker. With regard to the allegation that the CBC locked out its staff, the situation is not as clear cut as the hon. member makes it to be.

POSSIBLE DISCUSSION OF NORTHERN PIPELINE ROUTES WITH PRESIDENT NIXON DURING VISIT TO OTTAWA

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Would the Prime Minister be prepared to clear up the question of whether pipeline routes, the Alaska route to Valdez or the overland route down the Mackenzie Valley, will be discussed with the President of the United States during his visit to Canada? I ask this in light of the fact that the Alaska route seems to be a fait accompli and in view of the fact that there is a serious danger of pollution to the west coast of Canada.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I cannot say if that subject will be discussed, but if there is time and an interest in doing so on the part of the President I shall raise it.

Mr. Woolliams: I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Has the minister given any thought to discussing this subject with the President of the United States in light of reports that some discussion in reference to this matter is going to take place with the President?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the question has already been discussed with the American administration.

Mr. Woolliams: May I ask one further supplementary, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Calgary North on a further supplementary.

PROPOSED MACKENZIE VALLEY PIPELINE—STUDY OF ECONOMICS AND ECOLOGICAL EFFECTS

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Would the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources be prepared to tell the House now what study Canada has undertaken in reference to the economics of the Mackenzie Valley route and the ecology and who is heading that study, or is it being left to free enterprise? Is there some liason between the coporate bodies and the government?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): No, Sir. By the end of the current fiscal year the government will have expended approximately $15 million on studies of all phases of the pipeline, from the economic implications right up to the ecological considerations. By the end of this year we would expect to be in a position to provide guidelines to the National Energy Board and other agencies which will have to consider the pipeline, for the purpose of making an evaluation. In effect the board and the government agencies have been and will be further put in possession of the research background for this proposal so they can consider an application.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VISIT OF PRESIDENT NIXON TO OTTAWA—SUGGESTED REFUSAL BY CANADA TO DISCUSS CERTAIN SUBJECTS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In view of the fact the Prime Minister stated that discussions between himself and the President of the United States would be of a general nature, could he inform the House whether the United States government proposed three specific subjects for discussion which were turned down by the Canadian government? If this is so, why were they turned down?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have never heard of any suggestions the United States made to us that we would have turned down. We are prepared to discuss any subject they want to raise with us as we do between friends.

VISIT OF PRESIDENT NIXON TO OTTAWA—DISCUSSION OF RESUMPTION OF AUTO PACT NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. In view of the grave implications of the current break in trade talks with the United States, particularly with regard to the auto pact, is it the intention of the right hon. gentleman on behalf of the government to discuss the possibilities of an early resumption of those negotiations when he talks with President Nixon?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the question implies that there has been some voluntary interruption in the talks, and this is not the case. I am sure the President and I will discuss general trade matters and we will be saying what we have always said, that there is no interruption on our part, that we are always open to any continuation of those talks.

VISIT OF PRESIDENT NIXON TO OTTAWA—DISCUSSION OF DEFENCE PRODUCTION ARRANGEMENTS—REPLACEMENT OF ARGUS AIRCRAFT BY ORION

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister as well, Mr. Speaker. Can the Prime Minister indicate whether, in his discussions with the President, he will touch upon defence production arrangements? If so, will he go into these talks with an open mind or have we already arrived at some agreement in earlier talks with the Americans on this particular subject?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this is really getting into the kind of package which has been discussed by the negotiating parties in the last several months until the February meeting. As the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce has said, I do not think it would be advantageous for the Canadian government to state publicly what its bargaining position is. I believe he also said that we had discussed a series of subjects and, if my memory is correct, this is one of those which he admitted we were discussing.

Mr. Forrestall: I appreciate the full answer given by the Prime Minister. I wonder if I could now direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In arriving at our bargaining position has the question of the purchase by Canada of the Orion as a replacement for the Argus been taken into consideration?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I remember the then Minister of National Defence saying that the Americans had a number of products they would like to sell to Canada and I remember him saying also that we were making our own estimation and looking at our own requirements.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES—DATE FOR RESUMPTION OF TALKS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, Mr. Speaker. Has any date been set for resumption of the discussions between the governments of Canada and the United States on the subject of trade and the difficulties and disputes existing between the two countries? The last time I asked the minister, no date had been set. Has a date now been set or is a date under discussion?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): No date has been set for formal resumption of the discussions, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Stanfield: Is a date for the resumption of those discussions being actively sought by Canada?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I have said before that the fact that there are no active negotiations does not mean that the whole exercise has come to a stop. As my friend knows, we have, for example, an embassy in Washington and maintaining contact is the usual type of work we can expect of an embassy.

Mr. Speaker: Again I see that a number of hon. members are seeking supplementaries. For the moment I will recognize the hon. member for Waterloo on a supplementary and then the hon. member for Edmonton West.

PROPOSED MACKENZIE VALLEY PIPELINE—CONSIDERATION OF EFFECT ON CANADIAN DOLLAR IN ECONOMIC STUDIES

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): My question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, Mr. Speaker, and refers to his earlier statement that studies are being conducted on the Mackenzie pipeline route. In the economic studies that are being conducted is the effect on the Canadian dollar being taken into consideration? If such a study is being made, when will the minister let the House into his confidence on the conclusions of that study?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Yes, and in due course, Mr. Speaker.

INCOME TAX

PUBLICATION OF REGULATIONS RESPECTING CAPITAL GAINS AND TAXATION OF CORPORATIONS AND PARTNERSHIPS

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): My question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue, Mr. Speaker. Bearing in mind that the new Income Tax Act came into effect on January 1, 1972, will the minister tell the House and the business community when his department is going to publish the regulations dealing with the capital gains tax, taxation of corporations and the complicated business of taxation of partnerships?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I shall take the question as notice and endeavour to provide a reply when next in the House.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Is the minister implying that he does not know whether he has authorized these regulations and whether they have been published yet?

Mr. Gray: Certainly not, Mr. Speaker.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

MODIFICATION TO ALLOW RECIPIENTS TO WORK IN MAPLE SUGAR INDUSTRY WITHOUT LOSING BENEFITS

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, I shall put my question to his parliamentary secretary.

Since maple sugar producers are experiencing difficulties in finding the required manpower, would the parliamentary secretary say whether it is intended to change the unemployment insurance regulations in order to allow the unemployed to work during the sugar season, without losing their entitlement to benefits?

Mr. Ray Perrault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): This matter will be taken under consideration, Mr. Speaker.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT—CABINET MEETING WITH INTERNATIONAL BUSINESSMEN—REASON FOR ALLEGED CANCELLATION

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): I have a question for the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. Would the Prime Minister advise the House if the meeting originally scheduled to start next Monday between the cabinet and 60 very important international businessmen was cancelled because the government is not yet in a position to announce its foreign investment in Canada policy and, if not, why was this very important meeting cancelled?

• (1440)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the meeting on Monday with a business group has not been cancelled. There must be some misunderstanding.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for South Shore.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, I also wish to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister—

Mr. Hees: It wasn't cancelled? For Christ's sake!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for South Shore.

FISHERIES

DISCUSSION OF POSSIBLE JOINT CONSERVATION POLICY WITH PRESIDENT NIXON

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the serious depletion of our fishery resources on the east coast, will there be any discussions between the Prime Minister and the President of the United States directed toward establishing a joint fisheries conservation policy between Canada and the United States on our continental shelf?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

HARBOURS

SUGGESTED ADDITIONAL EXPENDITURE ON PORT OF CHURCHILL RATHER THAN DEVELOPMENT OF NEW NORTHERN PORT

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. With reference to a recent announcement by the Prime Minister concerning the development of a northern Canadian seaport and the suggestion that this could take place within the next decade, has the Prime Minister considered that by capital expenditures of a rather moderate nature at the port of Churchill this could be achieved within a year or two?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have serious doubts about the way the question is asked. The hon. member is asking for an opinion on whether something might be realized in a year or two. In those terms the question is not in order.

[Mr. Hees.]

Perhaps the hon. member might like to rephrase the question.

Mr. Simpson: On a point of order, with due deference, Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether you got the implication of my question. I just asked the Prime Minister if he would consider this matter.

Mr. MacInnis: He doesn't know where Churchill is.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): He is dead, Mr. Speaker.

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—NUMBER OF JOBS CREATED—FOLLOW-UP PROGRAM

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration I would like to direct my question to the acting minister. Can he now say how many jobs have been created under the Local Initiatives Program?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question as asked should be put on the order paper or considered during the adjournment proceedings. The hon. member might like to rephrase the question.

Mr. Nystrom: I will direct an alternative question then, Mr. Speaker. Can the acting minister tell the House what type of follow-up program he has in mind after the Local Initiatives Program expires?

Hon. Martin P. O'Connell (Acting Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as I reported earlier, the question of any direct employment program is under consideration, and if any program comes forward it will be announced.

ON-JOB TRAINING—REJECTION OF STELLA LUCAS FOUNDATION PROJECT AFTER VERBAL ACCEPTANCE—AVAILABILITY OF FUNDS

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Acting Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Is it the policy of the minister or at least of the government to honour verbal as well as written assurances regarding subsidization of on-job training programs?

Hon. Martin P. O'Connell (Acting Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I do not know what the hon. gentleman means by verbal assurances. If he has any specific instance in mind I would like to hear about it in those terms.

Mr. Alexander: Would the minister look into the situation concerning an organization in Hamilton, the Stella Lucas Foundation Ltd. which was given verbal assurance to go ahead with a particular program employing some 13 people but after it went ahead its program was rejected by way of a letter negating the original verbal assurance?

Mr. O'Connell: Mr. Speaker, I would be very glad to look into that case, and if the hon. member has any additional information would he please let us have it.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask one last supplementary question. Is the minister aware of the fact that there are some 250 to 300 applications under the on-job training program in the Toronto-Hamilton area, and are there enough funds to honour these applications? In other words, are the funds overdrawn or will these applications be looked into and honoured? Is there enough money available?

Mr. O'Connell: Mr. Speaker, the government is all too well aware that there were several hundred very good applications that could not be accepted because the financial limits had already been passed. The program was increased from $20 million to $50 million during the course of its life to try to respond to the flood of applications that came in.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT—CABINET MEETING WITH INTERNATIONAL BUSINESSMEN

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Am I to understand from the answer the right hon. gentleman made to my colleague from Prince Edward-Hastings—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: —that the meeting reported to have been arranged with members of the cabinet to enable U.S. businessmen to make representations to members of the cabinet, a meeting arranged by an organization known as Business International Executive Services, is in fact to take place and that the report in the press attributing the cancellation of that meeting to a member of the Prime Minister's staff was wrong?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, I am not saying that, Mr. Speaker, and I am afraid that this question is not the same one. I also hope the hon. gentleman will make sure that the profanity of the hon. member remains on the blues.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, my question to the Prime Minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member might wait until he is recognized. I am not sure but I thought the Leader of the Opposition had a supplementary question. If not, I will recognize the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Prime Minister was: was the reason that the meeting originally scheduled to commence Monday between members of the cabinet and 60 important international businessmen—was it cancelled that the government is not in a position to announce its policy on foreign investment in Canada, or was it for some other reason? Would the Prime Minister answer that question?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the question was not asked in the same terms, as we will see in the blues which I am sure will be complete. I can only go on to say that my meeting on Monday with international businessmen has not been cancelled.

Mr. Hees: As a supplementary question, is the meeting to be held with members of the cabinet or not?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, there is some misunderstanding here. I am sure the hon. member must be talking about a meeting which had been scheduled for Tuesday and which has been cancelled, but there is another meeting on Monday between businessmen and myself.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order. I hope this matter can be concluded soon because we should move on to another question.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister whether the foreign businessmen in question are going to have another opportunity to make their representations about the policy of this government before the government announces its policy?

Mr. Trudeau: Well now, Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition is talking about the meeting which has been cancelled, and it was cancelled by them—

Mr. Stanfield: Cancelled by them?

Mr. Hees: By them?

Mr. Trudeau: Cancelled by them. We have always taken the position that we are prepared to discuss our policies with important visitors from abroad, and we still are.

NATIONAL REVENUE

ISSUANCE OF INTERPRETATION BULLETIN BY TORONTO "STAR" CONCERNING DEDUCTIBILITY FROM TAXABLE INCOME OF MONEY PAID BY TORONTO STAR FOR "TELEGRAM" SUBSCRIPTION LISTS

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask what I think is an important question of the Minister of National Revenue. Is he aware of an interpretation bulletin issued by his department in October or November of last year which had the effect of enabling the Toronto Star to deduct from taxable income the $10 million paid by that organization for the subscription lists of the Toronto Telegram? If he is aware of that, can he indicate to the House the circumstances under which such a bulletin was issued by the department, which saved the Toronto Star over $5 million of tax money in connection with that situation?

• (1450)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I am precluded by law from discussing the affairs of individual taxpayers, but I will be happy to look into the matter to see what type of further answer I can properly give to that question.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Lewis: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member rises on a point of order. I will recognize the hon. member for York South on a supplementary afterwards.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, the minister claims he is precluded from discussing the tax affairs of any individual. Many precedents have been established within the last few months in this House when tax concessions to oil companies and others have been discussed.

Mr. Speaker: Of course, that is debate. I would not think that is a point of order on which I ought to rule. The hon. member for York South is recognized for a supplementary.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister if he is aware that an interpretation bulletin was issued in October or November dealing with the acquisition by anyone of a list of customers under certain circumstances? If so, would he inform the House of the circumstances under which such an interpretation bulletin dealing with the deductibility for tax purposes of the purchase price of a list of customers was issued by his department?

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, I will be pleased, as I said, to look into the matter and see what further information I can properly give.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a further supplementary question. Would the minister be prepared to table a copy of this interpretation bulletin which should, of course, be a public document, and at the same time also table any correspondence between the Toronto Star and his department or any notes of any conversations between members of his department and others speaking for or on behalf of the Toronto Star, including Hon. Walter Gordon?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: Here we go! I smell something coming up.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, I will be pleased to consider the question of tabling such material as may be proper under our rules.

[English]

Hon. Martin P. O'Connell (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, in the case of the funds made available to municipalities for local initiatives programs there was a certain limited amount of overbooking or overfunding in the knowledge that some municipalities would not carry out their projects and that the total of funds would fall back to the limit. That seems to be happening.

Mr. Craig Stewart (Marquette): Mr. Speaker, my question was for the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board who is supposed to be here today. In his absence I will direct it to the acting minister. Will legislation pertaining to the two-price system for wheat be introduced and proceeded with before the end of the present session?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I will take this question as notice. It will be answered the next time the minister is in the House.

Mr. Stewart (Marquette): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the acting minister tell the House when the farmers' cheques will be mailed for this year?

Mr. Pepin: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker. There are a number of questions on grains that I can answer today, but unfortunately this is not one of them.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT—CABINET MEETING WITH INTERNATIONAL BUSINESSMEN—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON APPROVAL AND CANCELLATION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. It concerns the arrangement, apparently approved by the Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs, of conferring upon Business International Executive Services of the United States the exclusive right to have its clients make representations to a substantial number of ministers of this government. I ask the Prime Minister whether he will make a statement clarifying this whole sordid affair?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: If so, will he explain in the course of that statement why the arrangement was approved initially and then disapproved when it became public knowledge?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I certainly will not make a statement, but I will answer any question that the hon. member wants to ask about this affair, which is only sordid in his own mind, I am afraid.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, is it the practice of the right hon. gentleman to confer upon a management service company the exclusive right to have its clients make representations to members of the cabinet of this country? Would the Prime Minister also indicate why this was approved in the first instance and then disapproved quite promptly after it became public knowledge?

Mr. Trudeau: On the first question, Mr. Speaker, the answer is no. Of course we did not confer any exclusive right—

Mr. Hees: Mitchell Sharp did.

Mr. Trudeau: —to any particular group to talk to the government. I said earlier that the government is open to representations from any important businessman, Canadian or foreign, who wants to have business with the members of this government and there is no exclusive—

Mr. Hees: Mitchell Sharp did.

Mr. Trudeau: George, keep your cool.

Mr. Hees: I said, Mitchell Sharp organized the meeting.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must bring to the attention of hon. members that, even though the question period is 60 minutes, we will soon be running short of time. A number of hon. members have been waiting to ask questions since the beginning of the question period.

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Would the right hon. gentleman agree to table all correspondence between the particular firm or business people themselves and his office, including, perhaps, a copy of the agenda? Would he be prepared to table this tomorrow?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I certainly would be prepared to table any correspondence between my office and such group. I will see if there has been any correspondence. There may not have been any correspondence. All I know is that this group asked for an appointment and that the appointment was granted to them on the basis that they had met many heads of government and ministers from many important countries, including their own, in the past few years. We accepted to receive them; however, the publicity they had about the proposed meeting and the expectations they raised on behalf of the people they were soliciting for of course were of their own making, and they were not in any way known by the Canadian government.

PROPOSED ALL-WEATHER ROAD BETWEEN FORT NELSON AND FORT SIMPSON—CONSTRUCTION AND COMPLETION OF NORTHWEST TERRITORIES SECTION

Mr. Robert Borrie (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might have an answer to the question I put to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development as recorded in Hansard at page 1266. In part the question reads:

> In light of the statement by the government of British Columbia that an immediate start is to be made on the construction of an all-weather road in British Columbia linking Fort Nelson, B.C., and Fort Simpson, Northwest Territories, can the ... minister advise when we may expect work to commence on the Northwest Territories section and when we may expect the completion of the road?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I am glad the hon. member asked this question. We had to suspend the building of the road from Fort Simpson to Fort Liard because we were not getting anywhere and because the government of British Columbia was not proceeding with its northbound road. But now that they have decided to proceed with this northbound road, we are resuming the building of our road. As to dates, we are studying the matter at the moment and shall inform the hon. member of this in due course.

ALASKA HIGHWAY—SUGGESTED RESUMPTION OF NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNITED STATES ON PAVING

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the Minister of Public Works if he will immediately resume negotiations with the United States government with regard to a joint arrangement for paving the Alaska highway?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, there were two meetings last fall called by officials of the United States government, at which officials of my department attended. They wanted to obtain some information, some data, with reference to traffic. That data was provided and American officials drew their own conclusion, namely, that they would not participate in a joint venture at this time.

Mr. Nielsen: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Was it not the Canadian position that the Americans should bear 80 per cent of the cost and the Canadian government 20 per cent of the cost? Is that the Canadian government's idea of a joint venture?

• (1500)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will appreciate that the question as asked is argumentative. Perhaps he could redraft it.

Mr. Nielsen: I will rephrase it, Mr. Speaker. Is the Canadian government not prepared to embark on a joint venture with the American government for the paving of the highway on a 50-50 basis?

Mr. Dubé: No, Mr. Speaker. The negotiations did not reach that stage.

INDUSTRY

ACTION TO AVOID CLOSING OF SKIL CORPORATION PLANT, RICHMOND, B.C.—ALTERNATIVE EMPLOYMENT FOR WORKERS

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. A number of my constituents are badly worried because the Skil Corporation, power machinery division, of which they are employees, has announced that it will close down its Vancouver operation in July. In view of the very serious unemployment situation, will the minister discuss with this company the prospects for keeping their Vancouver plant in operation?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, that was done about a year or two ago. We managed to convince the company to stay and continue to produce in Vancouver for a while longer, but they now find they cannot go on any longer. As a matter of fact, this subject is scheduled for debate at ten o'clock. I or my Parliamentary Secretary will try to provide a "Skilful" answer at that time.

Mrs. MacInnis: Will the minister consider making a statement on motions as to what alternative employment can be provided for these workers who are going to be displaced?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, this subject will be mentioned in my answer.

VISIT OF PRESIDENT NIXON TO OTTAWA—INQUIRY AS TO COMMUNIQUÉ FOLLOWING MEETING WITH PRIME MINISTER

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question with regard to the presidential visit tomorrow. I do not want to raise any false expectations, but having regard to what the Prime Minister said in reply to a previous question, that there is no agenda of specific items to be discussed and the conversations between the Prime Minister and the President are to be of a general nature and private, can the House assume that a joint communiqué will be issued after the meeting of these two gentlemen outlining where we agree and where we disagree on some of the basic issues between the two countries?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, no plans have been made for a communiqué. It would be much too long if it were to outline the areas on which we agree.

Mr. Nowlan: Can we assume from the absence of the Secretary of the Treasury from the American delegation that there will be no serious discussions between Canada and the United States on some of the basic economic problems affecting the two countries? Also, who initiated the omission of the Secretary of the Treasury, Canada or the United States?

Mr. Trudeau: On the first question, Mr. Speaker, I assure the hon. member that he is free to assume what he wants. On the second question, I imagine it is the President of the United States who decides who will accompany him. I might see if he will entertain a question from the hon. member.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

HOUSE OF COMMONS

SECURITY MEASURES DURING ADDRESS OF PRESIDENT OF UNITED STATES

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. I support him in everything he is doing—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: —to ensure security during the visit of the President of the United States. A great responsibility rests on the Prime Minister in that regard. I ask the Prime Minister whether a rumour that is going around has any basis in fact and whether the tradition of this House of Commons, which in the tradition of the British Parliamentary system has never permitted anyone to have arms within this institution, is going to be maintained tomorrow?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe that what happens in the House of Commons is under the jurisdiction of the Speaker. However, I believe it is possible for me to answer part of the question that is in the mind of the right hon. member by saying we made it quite clear to the Americans that the security of the President while he is in Canada is the business of the Canadian security forces, particularly the RCMP, but while he is in the House of Commons his security will be in the trust of the most excellent security staff of the House of Commons under the direction of the Speaker.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, does the Prime Minister admit that there will not be anyone, security force or otherwise of Canada or the United States, permitted to be in the galleries of this House during the visit to the House by the President?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I assure the right hon. member that the government does not have control over who enters the galleries and who does not.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Any control of the House of Commons?

Mr. Trudeau: I rather think Your Honour would agree with me that it is not the business of the government to determine the security measures to be taken in the House of Commons. I can only say the government has taken upon itself to make clear to the American government that the security of the President of the United States will be well handled by the Canadian security forces, both in the House of Commons and outside.

Mr. Speaker: I believe the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby has been trying for quite some time to ask a supplementary to a question asked some time ago. I will recognize him for that purpose.

TRADE

AUTOMOBILES—FAILURE TO ACHIEVE PRICE PARITY WITH UNITED STATES—DISCUSSIONS WITH CANADIAN COMPANIES

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, it is supplementary to an earlier question with regard to the visit of President Nixon. My question is to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the fact that in the past American officials have had a legitimate criticism of our government's failure to achieve price parity for automotive products on both sides of the border, and in view of the fact it was recently revealed that the price differential between Canadian cars and American cars is now anywhere from $250 to $1,250, in short, back to the pre-auto pact level, can the minister inform the House to whether he has discussed this question in recent days with leaders in the Canadian sector of the industry and, if so, what were the results of those discussions?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I would not like it to be understood that the situation described is one that resulted from faster increases in prices in Canada than in the United States. The accentuated price gap is due to the revaluation of the Canadian dollar. As far as principles are concerned, most people in Canada feel there is an inevitable price disparity between the cost of automobiles in Canada and the United States. The question is how wide the tolerable gap should be. We analyse these things all the time. We are now making a deeper analysis.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will recognize the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby for a short supplementary. I hope he will receive a short reply from the minister.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I am not accepting the nonsensical premise of the answer. In view of the fact the revaluation of the Canadian dollar should, in fact, have caused a decrease in the price of products in this industry, has the minister taken any action with regard to at least getting some further reduction?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, in view of the nonsensical remark made by the hon. member, I feel compelled to remind him that there is an export and import aspect to trade in automobiles between Canada and the USA.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have the impression there is now a debate between the minister and the hon. member.

OLD AGE SECURITY—REQUEST FOR INCREASE IN AMOUNT AND FULL COST OF LIVING ESCALATOR CLAUSE

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In light of the increased cost of living and concern by senior citizens of our country, is the government going to introduce legislation to increase the basic age pension and provide for a full cost of living escalator?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on the premise of the question, the hon. member might want to know that the increase in the cost of living in March was one-tenth of 1 per cent, which is not a bad performance.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: With regard to the second part of the question, if there is any announcement we will make it in due course.

Mr. Nesbitt: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is it the intention of the government to take any action to improve pensions for the elderly before this parliament is dissolved?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I can only say that if there is any announcement to make we will make it in this House.

SPORTS

1976 OLYMPIC GAMES, MONTREAL—POSSIBLE REQUEST FOR FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Prime Minister. Three weeks have now passed since the right hon. gentleman made his last confession to the House in connection with the Montreal Olympics. Will he tell the House whether he is now aware of what is expected from Ottawa in the way of established programs for the Montreal Olympic games in 1976 and what the cost to the Canadian taxpayer will be?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, there has been no further step taken since I answered the question of the hon. member on this subject.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Paproski: Is the Prime Minister satisfied that Montreal will not call on Ottawa for money?

VETERANS AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR CONSTRUCTION OF HOSPITAL IN HALIFAX

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. I will bother him for some money. Will he cap his distinguished public career by promoting as vigorously as he can an early decision to construct a modern veterans' hospital in Halifax, perhaps tied in with the Department of National Defence?

An hon. Member: And located in East Hants.

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I expected you to say that this was a representation.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

1976 OLYMPIC GAMES, MONTREAL—PAYMENT OF GRANTS FOR CERTAIN WORKS

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion?

In view of the facilities that will be necessary for the olympic games in Montreal, will this city receive grants for the building of such facilities, which would create many jobs?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, Montreal is not included in a special area, and I am not therefore empowered to grant any assistance for infrastructures.

GRAIN

TRANSPORTATION TO WEST COAST—COMMITMENT BY RAILWAYS TO SUPPLY EQUIPMENT

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the minister in charge of the Wheat Board and the Minister of Agriculture, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. It arises out of a meeting which took place in Winnipeg on April 6 between representatives of grain handling interests and the transportation companies. Was the government given any undertaking by the railroads that they would supply rolling stock and motive power to meet the emergency situation which now faces grain shipment to the west coast?

[Mr. Trudeau.]

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I will be pleased to take notice of the question on behalf of the minister responsible for the Wheat Board.

SUGGESTED DEVELOPMENT OF PORT OF CHURCHILL TO INCREASE HANDLING FACILITIES

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): In view of the statement last week that a major northern port is to be developed in the future, may I ask whether any discussion took place in Winnipeg concerning immediate action to develop the port of Churchill so as to double or even treble grain movement from that port?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I do not know whether such a discussion took place. I will refer that question also to the minister responsible. I might remind the hon. member that the port of Churchill serves the Atlantic Ocean and points east, whereas the northern port I have in mind would serve the Pacific Ocean area and points west.

Mr. Gleave: A further supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: Order. We have just about run short of time and I think the Chair might be allowed to recognize a few more hon. members before orders of the day are called.

FISHERIES

MEASURES TO CONSERVE HERRING STOCKS—REGULATIONS GOVERNING SALMON FISHING

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries. It concerns a petition which was forwarded to the minister by a large number of fishermen in Placentia Bay having to do with the need for conservation measures to protect the herring resources of that area. Does the minister intend to take any action to conserve the herring stocks of the bay in line with the recommendations made by the fishermen?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): The answer is very definitely yes. We have recently set up an Atlantic herring management committee. This committee is studying the problem and similar problems, and I hope it will soon be making a recommendation so that I can take the necessary action in that area.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have a difficult decision to make. We have just about reached the end of the question period. I would hope that we might eliminate supplementaries so as to allow time for direct questions. Perhaps the hon. member for St. John's West might be allowed one supplementary, and then I will recognize the hon. member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys.

Mr. Carter: Can the minister tell the House whether it is his intention to announce new salmon fishing regulations to become effective during the forthcoming salmon season?

Mr. Davis: We have no new regulations to announce. We shall, however, be repeating those made last year to make sure that the fishermen fully understand the announcement made in 1971 with regard to 1972 and future years.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

CAPE BRETON—REQUEST FOR AID IN CREATING EMPLOYMENT

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the persistent and staggeringly high rate of unemployment on the island of Cape Breton, would the minister be good enough to have experts from his department proceed to the island and offer their assistance and co-operation, and work in concert with the officials of the Cape Breton Development Corporation who are apparently encountering extreme difficulty in their efforts to create employment and induce new industry to move into the area?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I am glad to hear an acknowledgement of the qualities of the officials of my department. They have been at the disposal of the Cape Breton Development Corporation since the inception of that corporation.

Mr. Muir: They do not seem to be meeting with very much success.

AGRICULTURE

CROP DAMAGE BY MIGRATORY WATER FOWL— REQUEST FOR COMPENSATION FOR FARMERS

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the minister in charge of the environment. It arises out of a question I posed to the minister on March 29, as reported at page 1263 of Hansard, concerning the responsibility of the federal government in the area of crop damage caused by migratory water fowl. I might say that this causes the farmers of western Canada considerable financial loss. Is the minister now in a position to make an announcement to the House with respect to the details of such a program and, if not, why not, since parts of an announcement have already appeared in the press?

Mr. Speaker: The first part of the question is in order and perhaps the minister might reply briefly.

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): This matter has been discussed with the responsible ministers in the prairie provinces and a recommendation has been made to the government. It is now under active discussion. I believe all parties agree. However, I am unable to announce the result until the discussions here in Ottawa are complete.

NATIONAL PARKS

LAKE LOUISE PROJECT—REQUEST FOR DELAY TO STUDY ECOLOGICAL IMPACT

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might put two short questions together and address them to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. They concern the proposed Esso Lake Louise Village project. I would ask the minister whether his department has reached a decision following the recent public hearings. If not, will he consider placing a moratorium on the Lake Louise Village development until a thorough study of the ecological impact has been carried out by competent ecologists and evaluated at a public hearing?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, we received many representations until April 4 last. We have started looking into them and, in due course, will advise the House of the decision of the government. I can assure the hon. member that, in the course of this study, we will take into account the danger to the environment in that area.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): May I ask the President of the Privy Council to outline the government business which the House will be dealing with next week?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): On Monday we would continue to deal with the Canada Labour Code legislation which is now before the House if it is not completed today. After that we would continue discussion of the family income security plan and of the amendments to the Criminal Code in the name of the Minister of Justice, including the hijacking and privacy provisions.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CANADA LABOUR CODE

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS, LABOUR RELATIONS BOARD, INDUSTRIAL INQUIRY COMMISSIONS AND CONCILIATION BOARDS

The House resumed from March 29 consideration of the motion of Mr. O'Connell that Bill C-183, to amend the Canada Labour Code, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

Mr. Arthur Portelance (Gamelin): Mr. Speaker, it seems to be particularly pertinent to have today this opportunity to discuss a bill respecting industrial relations in Canada.

• (1520)

All hon. members are currently watching the province of Quebec where a major conflict is paralyzing the public and para-public services. I am quite aware that the Quebec jurisdiction is the only one involved but the citizens cannot be prevented from wondering about the validity of our industrial relations system. This unfortunate event once more emphasizes that labour relations are a major problem in Canadian society and this problem will prevail until new structures are adopted to keep to a minimum the impact of industrial conflicts.

The public discussion of these unfortunate developments is caracterized by two main concepts: first, we have the reactionaries who are advocating the use of the whole legal machinery to impose solutions to these conflicts, starting with compulsory arbitration and up to labour relations lectures.

In this connection, the experience in New Zealand and Australia, where they have compulsory arbitration, proves beyond a doubt that it is not the solution. Industrial conflicts are not solved by making them illegal. When an illegal strike breaks out, the conciliation services of the state are not available. Despite everything, some people maintain that strikes must be declared illegal, that the strikers must be forced back to work, through illegal interventions.

At the other extreme we find those whom I would call adventurers, that is, those who claim that unions do not have enough power, that the state should give them the necessary tools or means to fight for the interests of their members. In practice, those people ask the state to take a stand in favour of union members while, traditionally, the state has played the role of mediator.

Half-way between these two trends of thought, a good many Canadians, while recognizing the positive part played by the trade unions on the one hand, and the dynamism shown by employers on the other hand, admit that public interest should prevail in such conflicts.

At the present time, the province of Quebec is passing through dramatic hours since hospital, school and other public services are almost paralysed. Such a state of affairs, apart from the blame to be assumed by the parties, simply shows that the present system is faulty and that time has come to correct it.

Also, I should like to point to a situation indicating that the present system, if improved through the amendments now before the House, could promote the development of sound relations between employers and employees.

Some ten days ago, the Montreal dockers ratified a contract, signed by their representative, guaranteeing labour peace for three years. Since a large number of the workers affected by this settlement live in my riding, I hastened to get in touch with some of them, in order to obtain further information on this situation; contrary to the first instance I have quoted, it unfortunately did not make headlines in this country's papers.

[Mr. MacEachen.]

The history of the port of Montreal is one of trouble, uneasiness and walk-outs, in which mingled violence and organized crime. Since the creation of the specialists system by industry, the Department of Labour has promised to correct the situation and, for the first time in the history of the port of Montreal, a collective agreement has just been signed, without any work stoppage nor compulsory arbitration being imposed on the parties involved.

• (1530)

I wish to insist on that fact because the shipping industry is a pioneer in the field of technological development and serves, as it were, as a laboratory for modern techniques of transportation. Consequently, there is greater insecurity among and lower productivity by the workers concerned, both major causes of labour disputes.

How is it that in such circumstances the parties involved are able to voluntarily sign a contract which will be binding upon them for the next three years? How is it that in the present situation, which is favourable to the development of labour relations problems giving rise to strikes and often to violence, we should see the industry rationalize its relations and conclude this pact which is to the advantage of all parties concerned? This contract is the result of a constant dialogue, an almost stubborn dialogue between the two parties which, every day for the last three years, have met and tried first of all to identify their problems, to explore all possible solutions and to chose the best one. Labour and management at the port of Montreal are used to talking with one another, to confronting one another, to negotiating and to coming to agreements. It is therefore not surprising that in such circumstances they can come to a peaceful solution of their problems.

This collective agreement is clearly geared to job security. That question was recognized as the primary issue at the port of Montreal. In fact, the salary increases are negligible: 2 per cent the first year, 4 per cent the second year and 4 per cent the third year. How was it possible when we see settlements of 10 or even 15 per cent a year? The settlement became possible because the parties concerned did not hesitate to tackle the problems which they faced. On the other hand, the employer has frankly considered the issue of employment security and taken all possible means to find an answer. The union, for its part, has refused to resort to blackmail in connection with the other clauses of the collective agreement which did not give rise to any important problem. Their agreement probably includes the best plan for security of employment in the country and the employer finds it profitable. The agreement eliminates traditional practices to restrict production, increases standardization of working hours, provides a better definition of each job, in short gives a professional status to the longshoremen. This agreement deals with the whole problem of the effects of technological change. These provisions allow the employer to rely on the stability of his personnel for the next three years.

The purpose of the bill now before the House is to extend to all industries under federal jurisdiction the concept of early negotiations concerning problems which recur during all negotiations. Technological change cannot be ignored. It is a condition for the survival of the employer. Failure to mechanize equipment, introduce new machinery and streamline operations makes it impossible for him to compete, not only on international markets, but locally. Nor can the workers ignore technological change. They see it as a threat to their livelihood and are prepared to make any sacrifice to prevent lay-offs which usually follow its introduction. It is suggested that the parties meet around a negotiation table to discuss these matters and arrive at an agreement.

It seems to me that we have there—and the case of the port of Montreal proves it—all the conditions favouring industrial peace. Some employers were reticent about our proposals, alleging that we were giving greater power to the union, the power to control the introduction of technological changes. Some union members claimed that we were not going far enough, that the union should be absolutely free to introduce these changes. I think that the solution suggested here is a happy compromise taking into account the employer's obligation to follow the progress of modern technology and respecting the worker's right to minimum security through collective bargaining.

As for so-called public interest disputes, the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) has suggested the establishment of a commission which would be asked to investigate in that field. I find it difficult to accept that on so vital a matter as that regarding disputes of public interest the first responsibility be given to a non-elected and independent commission which, to all intents and purposes, has no more power than the minister of labour (Mr. O'Connell). In my opinion, in circumstances such as these, the one who must assume the responsibility for the settlement of these disputes must be a member of the government elected for this purpose. I don't think the Minister of Labour should shun his responsibilities by submitting disputes to a third party.

Mr. Speaker, the bill would also provide the right of bargaining rights for professional employees, owners and drivers of trucks and fishermen; it also aims at reconstituting the Labour Relations Board into a full time organization with increased powers, to reinforce the clauses pertaining to unfair practices in order to further protect employers and the union members; it also provides the Minister of Labour with a greater number of instruments to enable him to settle disputes.

As long as we are willing and co-operate, we will achieve this objective and overcome the difficulties brought about by the automation era.

(English)

Mr. Charles H. Thomas (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-183 now before us for second reading is of such importance and far reaching magnitude it is surprising to me to note the haste with which the government has presented it to the House in an attempt to rush it through. After all the months of consideration of the Woods and various other reports on labour-management relations, along with the introduction of the infamous bill C-253 which came to such a dismal end, I should have thought that when the government introduced the revamped and watered down Bill C-183, it would have given the House a greater opportunity to study the changes in order that a reasonable assessment of the worth of these changes may be made.

Bill C-183 was given first reading on March 27 and was brought into the House for second reading on March 29, at which time very few members had ever seen the bill. It was impossible for us on this side to make a reasonable assessment when we had not even seen it. I thought the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) did an excellent job in presenting his and our views, even though when working largely in the dark because he had only had the bill before him for a very few minutes. I agree with his statement that we on this side feel revisions to the Labour Code are long overdue. We agree with certain changes and with the need for an overhaul of the code, but there are certain clauses in the new bill about which we still have reservations. We will examine them more thoroughly in the committee.

It was encouraging to have the minister give his consent to the suggestion of the hon. member for Hamilton West that those people who have representations to make on this bill be heard. I hope this will be done in the committee as it will give us a much better opportunity to assess all the implications of Bill C-183, and the changes from Bill C-253 which was so abnoxious to so many people. In case I am accused of exaggeration in referring to the fact that the previous bill, on which this bill was modelled, was abnoxious to people, I should like to refer to a letter I received from one of my constituents who happens to be the general manager of one of the largest employers in the area. He said that the bill was so one sided it gave one the impression of having been drafted by a labour fanatic.

The Labour Code needs to be amended, certainly, but where are the amendments we as Canadians, not just employers and employees, really need? What about legislation dealing with public interest contracts and making the unions legal entities? How long do we have to put up with the use of power by unions because of the present imbalance of power? When are we going to differentiate between a wildcat strike and a long study session, and when are unions going to be responsible for personal property damage caused by so-called lack of administrative control?

While I hasten to inform the House that this letter refers to Bill C-253 and not the bill presently before us, it is a good indication of the feelings of a great body of Canadians today. The Canadian public is worried about the obvious breakdown in relations between management and labour. When the member who spoke earlier began his remarks, he referred to the unhappy situation in Quebec and indicated that this whole matter is one of urgent and pressing concern to all Canadians. It is time the government took some action to resolve this conflict between labour and management.

At the time Bill C-253 was introduced, it was interesting to read a comment by Mr. David Peach, assistant professor of the school of business administration at Western University. The article by Mr. Peach, which appeared in the Financial Post, reads in part:

> The government, in my opinion, has introduced a piece of absurd legislation, and its implications should be of real concern to managers everywhere, even though the immediate application of the legislation is limited to the federal jurisdiction.

He goes on to refer to the provisions in the first bill which would allow collective agreements to be reopened during the life of a contract. I realize that this has been altered in the present bill. The article continues:

Presumably, the government wants to encourage the development of contract provisions which would provide workers with protection against the effects of technological change. The proposed legislation will not achieve this aim. If the government is serious in its intent, it appears the legislation will have to be changed.

A strong case can be made for eliminating the proposed provisions on technological change altogether.

Without agreeing or disagreeing with Professor Peach, I quoted from his article in order to illustrate the great concern Canadians generally have about this type of labour legislation. Is this the best way to create harmony between management and labour? Surely, this is the key to the whole problem. Without that harmony we can legislate from now until kingdom come and nothing will be accomplished. We must have that harmony between management and labour. We should be trying to decide the best way to develop that harmony.

Professor Peach went on to refer to the earlier bill. He said this was the wrong way to develop harmony, that it would only create further antagonism and lead to more strikes and lockouts. He went on to say:

• (1540)

However, there is a better way of going about this than what Mackasey proposes. The solution lies in the 1968 Woods task force report on labor relations.

These few remarks are intended as a background to the concern I wish to express on behalf of myself and those on this side of the House about the chaotic state of labour-management relations today. It is not my intention to point the finger at or place the blame on anyone. However, in discussing this bill I should like to make perhaps four or five specific suggestions concerning areas of the bill which I believe are undesirable and should be changed.

I shall refer to some of the things the bill does not do. While I agree with my colleague from Hamilton West that changes in the labour code are desirable, I wish to enter a caveat that we will consider each of the clauses in the bill in committee and reserve the right to suggest amendments as we see fit. What are the things the bill purports to do or does not do? To start with, the bill, admittedly, represents a considerable improvement over Bill C-253. The technological change clause has been watered down, but here again we will not know the effect of it until we have had an opportunity to study the clause in depth after hearing representations from representatives of management and labour. The wording of the clause is obscure. The minister's opening statement left a bit of doubt concerning how far this change would go. The point is not clear and, therefore, should be discussed extensively in the committee.

The bill is unimaginative and weak in respect of reducing the incidence of strikes and lockouts and their effect on the public interest. I cannot see any provision in this bill that would in any way alleviate the chaotic conditions which exist today. I suggest that some of the provisions in the bill possibly could aggravate present conditions. Those who drafted the bill failed to take advantage of many of the suggestions contained in the Woods report of 1968. I will refer to one or two of these later. The hon. member who spoke previously mentioned that we advocated, or that the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) advocated, a suggestion contained in the Woods report which he felt was an excellent suggestion.

As I read it, Bill C-183 affects some 530,000 employees in the public service which covers people in the fields of transportation, pipelines, communications and many other federal services. The bill, however, does not affect collective bargaining in respect of public servants who are members of NABET and employees of the CBC, or those who are covered by the Public Service Staff Relations Act. I know members opposite and the minister might say the bill is not intended to do this because those employees are covered by a separate piece of legislation. I agree. However, it seems to me that one of the greatest concerns of Canadians today, whether or not they are hockey fans, is the continuing frustration caused by the fact that a few members of a relatively small union are able in effect to throw the whole country into disruption, anger and disgust. It seems to me this is one of the aspects we should be looking at in respect of this bill or in respect of some clauses which might be added to it.

Another subject which interests members on this side—and this was referred to by the hon. member for Hamilton West—is the Canada Labour Relations Board. The bill will set up this board much along the lines suggested by the Woods report with a chairman, a vice-chairman and four to eight members who would be appointed full time by the Governor in Council. What disturbs us is the fact that the method by which members of the board would be appointed would do nothing to make the board representative of management and labour. We feel there should be an amendment which would ensure an advisory role for management and labour in respect of the appointment of some of the members of the board. This is one suggestion we would have for the improvement of the bill.

The bill also extends bargaining rights. Many more employees will be brought under the umbrella of collective bargaining. The bill would extend bargaining rights to certain professional and supervisory people. Here again, however, the wording of the bill is fuzzy. It is unclear just who would be included under this particular provision. At a time when there is such a great deal of dispute between management and labour, there is also the question of whether it is wise to extend these rights.

I might refer to a brief presented by Domtar Limited in respect of Bill C-253, in which the following point is made:

The extension of collective bargaining rights to professional and supervisory groups at a time when collective bargaining appears to be creating serious economic and social problems is questionable. Existing problems, including the impact on inflation, should be better understood before collective bargaining is extended to new areas. It is suggested that the confines of collective bargaining be kept within the present boundaries until we have learned how to cope with existing problems.
