David Russell Begins Action for Damages

PAPERS SERVED

John Evening Newspaper to Be Brought to Book for Publishing Damaging Article Regarding a Business Matter—Item Referred to Caledonia Springs Purchase.

Montreal, Oct. 17.—(Special)—Under the heading "Heavy Suit for Damages in St. John—David Russell, of Montreal, Takes Action Against the St. John Globe," the Montreal Star this evening publishes the following:—

On Sept. 19, last the St. John Globe, a Liberal organ in St. John, edited by senator John V. Ellis, and published by Richard O'Brien, printed the following "Special to the Globe."

"Toronto, September 15.—The Grand Hotel company of Caledonia Springs commenced action for specific performance of contract of purchase of the hotel building owned by Montreal, in which Mr. Russell is compelled to complete the purchase of the hotel in Caledonia Springs in which the miller's wells are said to exist and also to pay the balance of his indebtedness in regard to the purchase.

"Subsequently, and as stated in the Star, the Toronto suit was withdrawn, not having gone to trial, and the case was settled on the basis of a quit claim respecting an architect's bill, which it was shown had no relevant connection with the merits of the allegations set forth.

"Frank Arnold, of Toronto, tried to force Mr. Russell to pay an architect's account of $1,000—that was claimed by H. H. Mott, the well-known architect of St. John, to be a heavy overcharge—while the whole matter had nothing whatever to do with the purchase of the property, as the deeds were held by the Montreal Trust & Deposit Company until today, when the final payment of $30,000 fell due and was promptly met according to contract.

"The sum of $2,700, which Mr. Mott had advanced Mr. Russell for the legal aspect for the services rendered, was accepted by Arnold & Ewert, the architects of the Caledonia property, in full settlement of their claim.

"Today David Russell's attorney in St. John served the publishers of the Globe with a writ commanding $25,000 damages.

"There are several interesting features in this case apart from the legal aspect. The suit is creating considerable interest in St. John, where Mr. Russell has many friends and large newspaper interests, which conflict with those of the proprietors of the Globe, one of whom, Richard O'Brien, has entered the political arena as a Liberal candidate."

DIVORCED PERSONS BARRED BY CHURCH OF ENGLAND BISHOPS

Passed an Amendment to Marriage Canon Yesterday Forbidding Re-marriage of Divorced Persons.

Boston, Oct. 17.—The House of Bishops, one of the legislative bodies of the Episcopal general convention, today adopted an amendment to the canon on marriage and divorce, forbidding the remarriage of any divorced person. The amendment was substantially the same as that which was rejected by the House of Deputies on Friday last. The action of the bishops was not unexpected, as the sentiment of that body was well known. A conference of committees representing the bishops and the deputies will be held to consider the disagreement, but leading clergymen do not anticipate that the deputies will recede from their vote of last week.

In the house of deputies today a proposed canon providing a court of review, to which appeals may be taken from diocesan courts was reported, and the main body of it was adopted, but several provisions went over until tomorrow. Among these was one grouping the dioceses and missionary districts into seven provinces, each province to have a court of its own. A proposal to establish a court of appeals or a sort of supreme court, to be composed of the bishops of the church, was referred to the next convention.

DOUBLE MURDER AT BROOKLINE

Rum-crazed Man Murders His Wife and a Policeman

TERRIBLE STORY

Harry Boles, After Shooting Mrs. Boles Dead, Barricaded Door, and Officer Trying to Break In Door to Arrest Him Shared the Same Fate.

Brookline, Mass., Oct. 17.—Crazed, the police say, by drink, Harry Boles, a city laborer, tonight shot and killed his wife at their home at 81 Boylston street, and a few moments later killed Patrolman Joseph McMurray, who attempted his arrest. Mrs. Boles was instantly killed, and the policeman expired almost immediately after receiving a bullet wound below the heart.

After shooting his wife, Boles barricaded the doors and windows of his home, and the policeman had broken in a panel of the front door when he was killed. Later a squad of officers forced an entrance into the house, and after a struggle secured the murderer, who had hidden under a bed.

Patrolman McMurray was forty years old, married, and had seven children. He was one of the most popular officers of the force, and was recently presented with a gold watch for heroic services when, in imminent danger of his own life, he stopped a runaway team and probably saved the lives of two women. Last winter he rescued a party of elaters who had broken through the ice in the parkway. Not long ago he distinguished himself by capturing three burglars single handed.

Only four hours before he was killed, McMurray had arrested five men who were alleged to have stolen copper from a residential office. Three years ago the officer rescued from drowning the man who killed him tonight.

The police have not yet learned what led up to the killing of Mrs. Boles, as the man under arrest cannot tell a coherent story and there was no witnesses to the trouble.

Policeman Shot Dead.

Boles came home shortly after 5 o'clock, and less than half an hour later he was in the house heard the sounds of a quarrel, followed by a revolver shot. A little girl who lived in the house ran down the street and told Police Sergeant Joseph O'Connell and Patrolman McMurray that Harry Boles was murdering somebody. The officers hastened to the house and found that Boles had locked the doors and refused to admit them. The policemen then broke in one of the door panels, and at the same instant Boles fired the bullet passing through the broken section of the door, and entering McMurray's breast just in a delivery wagon, and died less than a minute after receiving the wound.

A squad of police were detailed to the Boylston street house, and after a struggle Boles was arrested. The police say that Boles is thirty-five years of age, and had been employed by the Brookline water department. He was married about six years ago to the woman he killed, but no children were born to them. Mrs. Boles' maiden name was Mary Ann McNichols, and she was a native of Lowell, where two of her sisters, Lizzie and Maggie McNichols, now reside. Boles has four brothers living in Boston.

RUSSIANS CLAIM A JAPANESE REVERSE

Say They Have Pierced Oya-ma's Centre and Taken Many Guns

Tenth Day of the Battle Marked by Desperate Fighting—Kuropatkin Fiercely Holding His Position as on That Depends the Safety of Left Wing of His Army Which is in Desperate Straits.

Reports from Russian sources give a more hopeful view of the situation of General Kuropatkin's army. That commander has reoccupied and holds the town of Shakke, the possession of which for several days was first with one and then the other contending armies.

The Russian left wing, for the safety of which there had been much anxiety, are no later than the night of October 13. It had been fighting for two days for possession of Tumin and Saitchoum passes, important strategic points, but up to the time of the sending of the last despatch, the Japanese were still in possession of the passes.

In order that this column may be able to rejoin the main Russian army, it is necessary that General Kuropatkin should hold the bridges over the Hun river and the position he now occupies on the Shakke river. There is no indication that the end of the great battle is at hand. Estimates of the losses show a wide divergence, but are as a rule lower than those given in Sunday's despatches.

Russians Turn Tables on Japs.

Mukden, Oct. 17, 1.30 p. m.—The Russian forces at 11 o'clock this forenoon penetrated the Japanese center, and it is reported captured 102 guns and 200 prisoners east of the railway. At another point during the day the Siberian regiments took 24 guns.

The Russian operations today have been quite successful. The Japanese after a terrifically stubborn resistance were compelled to retire along their whole line, leaving heavily. All the trenches carried by the Russians were filled with the Japanese dead.

In one not very large trench there were counted 800 corpses of Japanese. In spite of their losses the Japanese were undaunted. They have brought up siege guns and have left no stone unturned to retake the mastery of the situation. Every step the Russians have pushed forward today has been in the face of a superior resistance, that has cost the Russians dearly, and they seem to be willing to fight until they are annihilated.

Tomorrow will be the tenth day of the battle.

Russians Capture Jap Positions and Guns.

St. Petersburg, Oct. 17.—6.30 p. m.—The commander of General Meyerhoff and Zambaloff bore the brunt of the fighting of Saturday and Sunday at the Russian center. A high officer of the general staff informed the Associated Press that the Russians still hold Fengtau, and the north-east of the point where the Mukden-Bensaiptze road crosses the Shaakhe river and they are holding command of the road from Bensaiptze to Fushun.

The fighting which began yesterday was concluded at 8 o'clock this morning with the capture of Lone Tree Hill, the importance of which it is explained is due to the fact that the Japanese therefrom were able to pour an enfilading fire upon the Russian posts east and west along the Shaakhe river. The Japanese fully appreciated the value, and promptly mounted heavy guns on the hill, of which the Russians captured twelve. The others were removed. The possession of Lone Tree Hill will now enable the Russians in turn to enfilade the Japanese trenches right and left of the hill. An effort on the part of the Japanese to recapture the hill is expected as reinforcements are seen moving from the other side of the railroad, ostensibly for this purpose. It is not improbable that the Japanese will require some time to dispose their troops and concentrate for the attack.

The war office is keenly watching for any evidence of a wide flanking movement from the east with object of compelling Kuropatkin to withdraw towards Mukden, but as yet there is no sign of it.

Oku Reports Severe Fighting.

Headquarters of General Oku's Left Army in the Field, Oct. 15, 4 p. m., via Tien Tsai, Oct. 17.—The Russians last night retired along the eastern line, except on the extreme right, where they made a strong stand at Lushishou station in the Chinese villages nearby. The guns banged away all night, throwing thousands of shells into both camps.

MURDER CASE ARMY GATHERING

Paul Beataugh, of Kings-clear, Seriously Stabbed

HOW IT HAPPENED

One Account Says That Frank Good Did the Deed While Helping His Father Attack the Injured Man—Another Version is That Cutting Was Done During a Fight.

Fredericton, N. B., Oct. 17.—(Special)—Paul Beataugh, a resident of Central Kingsclear, aged about forty-five years, is lying at the Victoria hospital in a critical condition, as a result of a brutal assault which he alleges was committed by Charles Good, of Kingsclear, and his son, Frank Good.

Beataugh's story is that he was driving along the road near his home at Central Kingsclear, at 8.30 o'clock this morning, when without the slightest warning he was set upon by the Goods. The elder Good struck him a vicious blow over the head with a club, and the son stabbed him in the left side with a jackknife. Some neighbors who witnessed the assault say the Goods made a hasty departure. A team was procured and the injured man was brought to the city and had his wounds dressed by Dr. G. J. McNally at his office. The most serious wound was made by the knife, the point of the blade having penetrated the lung, and his recovery is said to be in doubt.

The elder Good is an ex-convict, having served a ten year sentence in Dorchester penitentiary for burning Squire Cliff's barn at Kingsclear in 1892. He is a man nearly seventy years of age. It is said that there had been blood between the two families for some time. Good sought Beataugh of stealing a quantity of pork from his home some time ago, and threatened to even matters up with him.

The affair has been reported to the authorities, and it is understood that warrants have been issued for the arrest of the Goods.

Another account of the fracas, and probably the correct one, is that Beataugh drove out of the wagon to accept a challenge to fight, which the elder Good had thrown out to him. The two men went at each other hammer and tongs, but Beataugh soon got the best of his antagonist, and threw him down. It was then that Frank Good appeared on the scene and struck Beataugh over the head with a club and used the knife on him. A warrant has been sworn out for the arrest of Frank Good.

Private McIninch, of the Royal Regiment, was this morning convicted by Col. Marsh on the charge of stealing shirts from Lieut. deDomaine, and sentenced to three months' imprisonment in the country jail. In passing sentence the police magistrate bestowed on the prisoner some wholesome advice.

The steamer Aberdeen will resume her trips to Woodstock tomorrow morning, and will likely be kept on the route for the balance of the season. The boat is loading freight today for river ports.

Steamer Springfield will resume service on the Fredericton-Gagetown route tomorrow morning.

Fredericton Baptist church, at a business meeting on Friday evening, unanimously approved of the basis of union of the Baptist and Free Baptist churches by convention and conference. In taking the vote, Rev. Mr. McDonald explained the bearing union would have upon local churches. In his judgment there would still be need of two churches, as both places of worship are now taxed to their capacity, and the outlook for both congregations is most promising. Each will probably carry on its local work according to present plans of organization, while uniting for prosecution of missionary, educational and other enterprises of the church at large.

GREAT SALVATION ARMY GATHERING

Eva Booth Sways Huge Audience With Grand Address

HER FAREWELL WORDS

Admirable Resume of the Army's Accomplishments Given in Eloquent Language—Representative Citizens Tell of Their Faith and Pride in Work of General Booth's Followers.

Commissioner Eva Booth's farewell meeting in the Opera House Monday night will easily take rank as one of the most striking demonstrations in local Salvation Army history. Gallery, balcony, main floor stage wings, lobby—all were densely thronged for fully three hours and at the conclusion of the meeting attention was given as keen as at the commencement.

Mayor White presided, addresses were given by city clergymen and others who have been loyal friends to the army here. Among those on the stage were Rev. Messrs. C. Burnett, H. H. Koach, S. Howard, Dr. Sprague, Dr. Koberlingham, G. Comben, T. Marshall, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Bullock, E. H. MacAlpine, K. C. Hon. H. A. McKown, Dr. T. D. Walker, T. M. Hildes, Judge Forbes, G. Sidney Smith, C. Skinner, K. C. A. H. Hanington, K. C. W. Watson-Allen, Geo. Robertson, M. P. E., Ald. T. H. Bullock, Ald. T. B. Robison.

After the meeting had been formally opened with music and prayer, the following address was read to Miss Booth by Col. Sharp:

Beloved and Esteemed Commissioner:—On this, the occasion of your farewell from our midst, we desire to place on record our respect and admiration for the work you have done for the poor and the suffering, and for the privilege of being counted among the people who have been benefited by your presence here. We congratulate you on the magnificent advances which have been made and the solidly of our present position, which has been brought about under your administration. We commend you to Him who has thus far been your sustainer, by whose strength you have accomplished, by whose power you have overcome all your difficulties, and by whose love, peace and abundance, so plentifully bestowed on the people of this city, you will continue to prosper. We congratulate you on the magnificent advances which have been made and the solidly of our present position, which has been brought about under your administration. We commend you to Him who has thus far been your sustainer, by whose strength you have accomplished, by whose power you have overcome all your difficulties, and by whose love, peace and abundance, so plentifully bestowed on the people of this city, you will continue to prosper.

Mayor White.

Mayor White was then introduced by Col. Sharp. His worship said that by consulting the programme he had found his duty somewhat amplified for he had been put down for an address. There were many other speakers and a discourse of very great duration could hardly be expected from him. He was proud of the privilege to preside at so vast a meeting called together for such a purpose, while it was calculated to bring pride to the hearts of Salvationists, must also arouse benevolent.

The Commissioner.

Miss Booth was received with prolonged applause. She expressed the belief that her mission here had been to the glory of the army in Canada but only a small part of the work could be attributed to her efforts.

She complimented her officers and soldiers on the parts they had taken in carrying on the campaign against sin. They had rallied to her side, they had executed her wishes and her orders, they had not been found wanting in the hour of need, and disappointment they had not felt. No leader had been more blessed with wholehearted loyalty.

Good Words for Col. Sharp.

To Col. Sharp, in command of the maritime forces, she wished to acknowledge her warm appreciation of his services. He was practically a life long member of the army. From the time when she first came to know him she had admired his unfailing stability, his courtesy, his ability, his Journeyed Over the Remains of the Franklin Expedition—Government Explorer Back to Ottawa—Says Hudson's Straits Are Navigable Four and Half Months in Each Year.

Ottawa, Oct. 17.—(Special)—A. P. Lowe, of the geographical department, who left here more than a year ago in charge of the Neptune on an expedition to Hudson Bay and the far north, arrived in Ottawa today.

Mr. Lowe came back in the Neptune and reached Halifax more than a week ago. He put the Neptune in the dock for repairs and disposed of the surplus of supplies.

Mr. Lowe has had his report ready for presentation to the minister of marine and fisheries but so far he refused to be interviewed. The Neptune struck on a rock on her way home and was badly damaged. Mr. Lowe went further north than Peary went. His captain had been along with Peary. The Neptune came over some of the remains of the Franklin expedition.

One thing demonstrated by Mr. Lowe and that is the Hudson Bay straits are open to navigation for more than four months in the year. They were open this year more than four months and the whalers say it was the worst season they had for years. Mr. Lowe's own opinion is that the straits are open to navigation four months and a half in the year.

Perhaps had Fauconberg been a man of greater experience in the world and knowledge of the springs of motive which influence men's actions he would not have overlooked one potent factor which was bound to go far towards frustrating his desperate attempt at enlisting Lord Davenham's sympathy and help. It was this: The time honored position and tenure of the Fauconbergs was a standing reproach to the mushroom peer with his recently purchased estate. Fine as it all was, and compelled as the country families were to accept the man who, with considerable cash, had come among them, and whom for the sake of his enterprising hospitality they could not afford to ignore, yet they looked at the man with a certain contempt which they dared not show. For men with sporting sons and marriageable daughters are forced to do many things of which without those restless incentives they would not dream: few are so short-sighted as to let a prejudice stand in the light of an enjoyable present and a possibly brilliant future. And if men are so mentally desiccated, why, they have ever a wholesome corrective in their wives. But when, among themselves, the worthy settlers in the country found an opportunity of relieving their feelings with regard to the lord of Scotchwick, it was to Fauconberg of Gains that they pointed in spitefully triumphant contrast. Lord Davenham, of course, knew that this must be so—that plain Fauconberg of Gains was thought more of, even in this age of upstart presentations and status worship, and held a higher position than his own Right Honorable and noble self. This Fauconberg was one of several thorns in his flesh, thorns which his thick skin did not prevent from pricking him. That this one was going to fall out of its own accord was a satisfaction to him; and that view occurred to Fauconberg he would scarcely have asked the sufferer to victimize himself by pushing it in again.

CHAPTER VII.

"I'll no more of these good things; there's a crack somewhere, something that's unbound it the rattle!" Fauconberg walked out of the house with a mind full of bitterness, such bitterness as he would not, a few days before, have believed himself capable of. It only he had had presence of what his punishment would be! But now it was too late. He went off towards the stables with the intention of leaving the party, for he was too sick at heart to stay longer. He saw his man lounging in the yard and told him to put to. Then he remembered his appointment with Sybilla Caspari, and went off moodily to the lower and comparatively deserted garden where he was to meet her. In half an hour he had said. He had no idea whether the time was past, and was careless whether she might be waiting for him or not. But there she was, sitting on a rustic bench just off the winding path. In the curious struggle between recklessness and a sense of desolation that was going on within him, there was room for a touch of satisfaction that one person, at least, did feel interest and sympathy for him, however futile it might be. "I need not ask you," she said as he stood before her. "You have not succeeded."

He forced a laugh. "I was an utter fool over to expect I might." She rose, and the action brought her close to him. "Poor fellow," she said, in a tone little above a murmur, "I am so sorry for you—so sorry." The situation and the mood were both dangerous; there is no shorter cut to both than recklessness piloted by sympathy. He looked away, halting between impulse and indifference. "It is very good of you," he said almost mechanically. "I'm afraid, though, there is not much use in troubling about a fellow like me." "But what are you going to do?" she asked. "You are not going to let your own self drift to—?" "To the unmentionable?" he supplied, with a laugh. "What else? Swimming is no use now that I am fairly in the downward current. Look here, Miss Caspari, it's very good of you, but you really must not bother any more about me." She turned with a little gesture of concern and took a step away from him. "Oh, but it is terrible," she said, "to see you so helpless, and all the worse that one can't help you. Is there no chance?" "He laughed again. "Yes, there is, at least Murray Lydford tells me. You can guess!" Perhaps she could, but she shook her head a little apprehensively. "The daughters of the Philistines are not always fair, but they are often rich," he said. "Ah!" She had come near again, but now drew back a little. "I understand what you mean," she said impassively. "But why need you look for your salvation among the Philistines?" He had a notion that she resented the idea, and it amused him to tease her. "The Philistines have all the money nowadays. But I did not say I was going to try the plan." "Why not?" She was put out; he could see that. "I have another." She looked suddenly up into his face. "Yes?" "Yet more effectual," he added. "Your own or Mr. Lydford's?"

"Oh, his, of course," he answered. "I never had an idea worth speaking of." "Then this is one. Tell me." He shook his head. "Not even you, Miss Caspari." His manner was thawing again now. "I am sorry," she said, "you don't consider my interest in you warrants that." "Only I cannot tell you this, and you would not thank me if I did." She was puzzled and her face hardened again. "I suppose I must not ask Mr. Lydford?" she inquired with affected carelessness. "I advise you not to," he replied, though not very convincingly. "We had better be strolling back." Fauconberg asked himself whether it did not look as though he had rather snubbed her, at least whether he must not appear visibly ungrateful in her eyes. With the blank in front of him, his future seeming to be bounded now at the distance of a few hours, the things of the world took extraordinary aspects; proportion and significance seemed to matter much, for the end was at hand to put all things right again, and consequences could be of no account. He laid his hand on the girl's arm as she moved away. "Miss Caspari—Sybilla, don't think me horribly ungrateful; if your interest is thrown away upon me, it is not my fault; I've had a good time, I've got to pay the bill, and mustn't whine about it. Only let us part friends. If I am to be just a memory, don't let me be an unpleasant one. May it not be so?" She looked up at him now, putting her hand on his, which still touched her arm. "Of course," she answered in a low voice. "I hoped—"

"What?" She gave a little sigh, a slight shiver. "Never mind," she murmured, "since it is hopeless." "I never had a chance," he said. "The folly was that I didn't see it here. Good-bye, Sybilla. We'd better say it here. Good-bye, Sybilla. Their hands were clasped now. "Good-bye, Jack." Their eyes met; then by a common impulse their faces drew each a little nearer the other; then the space that remained between them was extinguished as by a common impulse their lips rushed together, and so stayed in a kiss, which to him seemed no more than the last taste of the life of life to her—perhaps something very different. Suddenly she drew away and pushed him from her. "Jack," she protested reproachfully, "this is fearfully wrong. Let me go back. You know—"

"Why wrong?" he asked caressingly. "You know it is," she replied impetuously. "I don't," he rejoined in the self-deceptive mood of a passion's momentary flush. "You don't care for me." She shook her head as she stood there slightly trembling. "You had no right; it was cowardly to make me forget myself," she exclaimed almost passionately. The surge of feeling within him, short-lived, was now rapidly ebbing. "I am sorry," he said, gently, "if I have made you do anything for which you can reproach yourself." "I shall," she returned vehemently, "reproach myself to my dying day." "My dear Sybilla! A kiss?" "It is nothing to you," she said impetuously. "You had no right to take advantage of my interest in you to make me hate myself." "Had I thought it meant that, I certainly wouldn't," he replied almost naively. "It was hateful wrong and quite unjustifiable," she persisted. He was surprised at her vehemence and the obviously suppressed excitement with which she spoke. It was far from what he would have expected, and he could not understand it. The girl had almost made love to him, and a kiss, although, of course, wrong enough, did not seem such a terrible matter. "It was unjustifiable," he assented a little coolly. "But you would not have done it, had you been in the world from whom you have less to fear. Don't be annoyed about it, dear," he continued, as he put out his hand and touched hers gently. Don't grudge me the last kiss but one; I shall ever have this side of the veil." She looked into his face swiftly and searchingly. "What do you mean?" "But he would not explain. "It doesn't matter now; you shall see." "I can't tell you. I hardly know myself—at least, it doesn't bear thinking of. I can't justify my folly, Sybilla," he went on, as though hurrying from the other and less pleasant subject. "You know I don't marry you; a little hardening of the voice. "Of course that would be madness. I am a poor girl, from your point of view, not a daughter of the Philistines either by breeding or income." "Ah, if you only were!" he cried with genuine regret. "You want so much," she said softly. "I must have it," he replied gloomily, "for none at all."

"Jack," she almost asked imploringly, "tell me what your plan is, for I know you have one." "My plan?" he laughed. "No, no; don't ask. You wouldn't like to hear it." "You are going to marry?" "My marriage," he answered, "must be a very desperate one, and to a very common non bride. But once I am hers, you will never fear for what has passed between us today." "Jack!" "Be a word more could be said a party of guests making a tour of the garden broke in upon them. Others were strolling at intervals behind; the solitude of the place was effectually disturbed. Fauconberg and Sybilla turned off towards the approaching group. "We shall have to part now," he said hurriedly while they were yet out of earshot. "Whether we are fatal to meet again or not, you may be certain of this: The Fauconbergs have sometimes been fools, but they have always been men of honor. I am forgiven?" He held out his hand for the farewell. Here gave him the answer. "Are you off, Fauconberg?" Murray Lydford, called to him as he made his way towards the crowd of carriages in the drive. "Yes, Good-bye."

Lydford saw that his lips were set, and there was a peculiar expression on his face: the look of a man whose horizon is shutting in. "Any news? Any luck?" Lydford had just come from a casual elch with his host, who, knowing he had spent the previous night at Gains, had just descended, and had incidentally hinted that Fauconberg had come over to beg of him. So the impatient head-ache was anticipated. "Then I suppose it is good-bye," Lydford said with refined callousness. "Ah, well," he added, with something in his mouth between a yawn and a sigh. "The men I've had to say 'Adieu' to in my time! I don't suppose you will be the last. Can I do anything for you?" "In what way?" "I mean give any message. I suppose you shan't see you again." The man's callousness atung even through Fauconberg's apathetic mood. "You mean you hope you won't," Mr. Murray Lydford, he returned dryly. "You need not be afraid that I shall trouble me. At least fate will put a bar between me and such devoted friends as you represent." He whipped up his horses, he plunged forward, and in a few steps had rounded the corner of the drive, taking Fauconberg out of sight—for ever, as Lydford looked, the quasi friend who had begged his hospitality but a few hours later. Lack of heart will not prevent a man, otherwise suitably equipped, from being the most popular in town. "Mr. Lydford," Sybilla Caspari said, coming up to him a few minutes later, "I have been looking for you." "Not for long," he suggested. "I want to tell you about Mr. Fauconberg." "Don't you give him time to tell you about himself?" he asked with a characteristic jealousy, enquiring, grudging the man who had gone under even the sun that had lighted up his last glimpse of life's landscape. "I can't make him out," she answered, too concerned about Fauconberg's fate to notice this man's tone. "He spoke so enigmatically, and seemed in such a reckless, desperate state of mind. Mr. Lydford, what are you going to do? Is it to marry some dreadful person?" Lydford looked at her sharply. "Did he say so?" "I could not understand what he meant. He would not speak plainly. You advised him to marry, didn't you?" "I did!" Lydford almost drawled. "Yes, I think it was mentioned, but our friend rejected the expedient as being more troublesome if rather less drastic than the other alternative." "What was that?" "Miss Caspari, I must not tell you. It is worth taking so seriously? The fellow has gone for good I fancy; let him go." She turned and faced him. "Mr. Lydford, you must tell me. Why do you refuse? What are you afraid of?" He looked at her searchingly. "You are very interested." She saw, with a woman's quick perception, that a quasi-indifference might get more from him than an exhibition of true feeling. "I am puzzled and hate fiddles," she replied, with a change of tone. "Mr. Fauconberg spoke so strangely that it has worried me. I shan't get high out of my mind till I have a light on what he really meant." "What did he say? Anything about marriage?" "First he declared he would not marry a daughter of the Philistines, then that his bride was to be a common one who would not tempt him to tell secrets." Lydford's mouth drew back in an ugly smile. "He said that, did he? And you don't really understand?" "Am I very stupid?" "If you were a man I might wonder. I fancy the plain English of our friends' accents is that—"

Cancer, Its Cause and Cure. The more carefully this subject is studied the more one becomes convinced that there is a peculiar condition of the blood which favors the growth of the disease and until this condition is changed by a constitutional treatment, all attempts at cure are futile. ST. JOHN FAMILY LOST WITH SHIP'S CREW OFF CHATHAM

Three-master Lost in Thursday's Storm Was the Wentworth - Capt. Priddie, of This City, Drowned, With Wife and Babies.

Chatham, Mass., Oct. 14 - A small part of the forward section of the hull and a starting foremast stood as mute reminders tonight of the ocean tragedy here last night when the three-master schooner Wentworth, of Moncton (N. B.), struck on Cabbaham Bay during a raging northerly gale...

Of the twelve persons who were on board the stranded vessel, not one remained the ashore alive, although two bodies were entangled from the surf this morning...

The Wentworth was 328 tons, owned by William Herman Edgett, Moncton (N. B.), and under the command of Capt. Priddie, the most experienced seaman that has occurred on the Cape Cod coast during the last decade.

It was just before dark last night that the schooner was seen by the keeper of the Handicrafts shop, but at 8 o'clock the patrol of the Old Harbor life saving station, ten miles below Naspet, discovered the schooner on the bar.

Within half an hour Captain Doane had his crew opposite the wreck and a line was fired. As the little line tightened it was believed the crew had caught it and would soon pull aboard the big hawser...

Bodies of Man and Woman. Two bodies, a man and a woman, were found some time afterwards. The woman was about 32 years old. She was fully dressed. Her face was considerably disfigured, probably from contact with the wreckage.

standing together, apparently from the captain's cabin. A small hood with the strings tied together, as if it had been washed from the child's head and a knit frock also belonging to a child, were cast up by the waves...

The life-savers made an attempt to get on board of low water this forenoon, but the sea was found to be too rough. Another attempt will be made as soon as the sea moderates.

A wooden seal was washed ashore during the afternoon. It bore the name of "J. J. Godfrey, Georgetown." Other marks were on the seal but it was impossible to read them.

There is a need for any woman to be a sure and positive cure in Dr. Pitcher's Backache-Kidney Tablets.

There is no one more to be pitied than the woman who suffers from the terrible ache in the back, a darting pain between the shoulders, a heavy dragging pain in the loins, or a persistent headache that will not let up for an instant.

Mr. Magee is seventy-three years old, and Mrs. Magee seventy. He was born in St. John (N. B.), Sept. 14, 1831.

Mrs. Magee was born in Danneberg, Ireland, June 5, 1834. Her maiden name was Ann Jane Adare. They were married at Kings county (N. B.), Oct. 16, 1851, by the Rev. John Prince, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal church.
