

MAYOR EULDS SUNDAY BATHING DISPUTE

LONDON DEALERS DO NOT LOOK FOR COAL SHORTAGE

Confident There Will Be Sufficient Supply For All Demands This Winter.

NO ALBERTA YET

While coal dealers in London think that possibly the negotiations between the anthracite operators and miners in the United States may mean a month's tie-up, still they are buying as much coal as possible, and feel confident London will have a sufficient supply this winter.

Charles S. Martin, wholesale jobber in coal, pointed out that the dealers can only secure as much coal as they can finance, or at the most as much as their yards are capable of holding. Cash is paid for anthracite, he said, as soon as it leaves the pit.

C. V. Lang and W. C. Hawken of the Hawken-Lang Coal Company declared that the dealers were buying in the open market wherever they could get a supply.

Efforts had been made to get a railroad of Alberta coal, Mr. Hawken said, but no information could be secured on it from the west.

"We can't handle it at $14 if it is going to cost $2.50," Mr. Hawken said. "It would cost $15 anyway, after bagging and delivering it."

Mr. Lang stated that Mayor Wenige had decided to leave the question of Alberta coal with the dealers, and at a meeting had stated the city had lost money in the coal business before, and that he thought it best for the dealers, who understood the business, to take care of the situation.

"We will just have to wait for the end of the negotiations between the anthracite miners and operators to see what is done," Mr. Lang said.

"We look for a month's tie-up, but we are buying as much as we can. I think we will be able to take care of the trade."

Coal dealers in London had no facilities for handling Alberta coal, he said. They were equipped to handle anthracite. Better quotations from the west varied.

TWO COUNTIES MEET IN STOCK JUDGING

Annual Match Between Elgin and Middlesex Scheduled For July 31.

The annual inter-county stock judging match between Elgin and Middlesex counties is to take place on Tuesday, July 31, says R. A. Flinn, Elgin county judge. The judging will be done in the forenoon at several farms around Sheddin, and the boys taking part are expected to inspect herds in their localities in order to be in form for the annual event next Tuesday.

Following the judging at Sheddin, the teams will spend the remainder of the day picnicking. The picnic is a new innovation in stock-judging contests, and will serve the purpose of giving the boys an outing and also provide an opportunity for the judges to examine the written reasons for the placing of the stock in the different classes.

The district representatives, Chas. Buchanan and R. A. Flinn, will be in charge of the contest, while R. R. Harding of Middlesex and Hugh Duff will be the judges.

HOLD TWO GIRLS AS BANDITS' COMPANIONS

A weapon is most often purchased for use as a riot gun by bank messengers. For this purpose it is believed that the barrel is sawed off by the user. The removing of ten or fifteen inches from the barrel gives greater freedom of movement and facility for shooting in a crowd. The spread of the shot makes the charge cover a circle of three or four feet in diameter at a distance of fifty or sixty feet. When the barrel has been considerably shortened the pellets spread more rapidly and cover a three or four-foot circle at a very short range.

So far the police have been unable to link up local confederates with the gang, though it is believed that the invaders received assistance during their short stay in the city, as they evidently had some knowledge of the quickest route over which to reach a point of safety in their rapid flight after the gun-fight.

Search Continues.

The search for the robbers, however, continues uninterrupted. The police are co-operating with private investigators representing the insurance companies, which have to pay the equivalent of the amounts stolen from the Bank of Nova Scotia and the Sterling Bank. Questionable resorts in Toronto frequented by suspicious characters have been placed under strict surveillance. Information reaching the police from private sources has been followed up, but without apparent results. Meanwhile the gang of daring robbers continue to enjoy their liberty.

WHY EMPLOY SIR ADAM AS CIVIC GO-BETWEEN WITH STREET RAILWAY

habilitation. It can't be done with a 5-cent fare, he feels.

Is there any chance that the company, in return for a 5-year extension would consent to a reduced fare of 25 cents?

This proposal was submitted today to The Advertiser, and in turn to the street railway authorities.

"We can't see any hope for it at this moment," was the reply from Vice-President Ivey. "As a matter of fact, although there are members of the council who will not believe it, we are not making money with a five-cent fare. Our operating expenses are too high at this time."

"And there would be only one way to permit the 5-cent fare and that would be with a reduced service, which at present is remarkable for a city of this size. As an instance, we are paying higher wages now than we ever did."

The people of London must say in December next whether they wish to purchase the road or not. If not, the company's franchise automatically extends for another five years.

Playing Politics.

With this fact staring them in the face, many citizens are now voicing the fear that certain members of the city council are even now preparing to play politics, and use the street railway issue as another civic football to gain prestige and afford appropriate capital. All of which would mean that the general public would suffer.

In all likelihood Sir Adam Beck would not be able to secure from the street railway company a purchase price that would induce the aldermen to submit it to the people. In the words of Vice-President Ivey yesterday, they would consider the price excessive and the people would refuse it.

RAILWAYMEN TO HOLD THEIR PICNIC TODAY

Brotherhood Branch Has Good Program For Outing at Springbank.

The local branch of the Canadian Brotherhood of Railway Employees are having their annual picnic this afternoon at Springbank, when employees of the Canadian National and C. P. R. will put on a short program and several ball games.

The race program promises to be an excellent one and includes no less than 31 races. In addition to the races, a baseball match between C. N. R. employees working east of Midland street and those to the west of that point will be played. Considerable rivalry exists between the east and the west end, and the game itself is an event promises to be an exciting one.

Several softball games will be played, scratch teams from the ladies' office staffs being the participants.

Those in charge of the picnic arrangements are: General chairman, Tom Cliff; refreshments, Jack Chick; sport program, Davey McHarg.

INDIA PROTESTS BRITAIN'S ACTION

White Paper this week. The rival British Government's handling of the situation in Kenya colony and its proposed remedial measures, which were disclosed in a government conference regarding the demands of the Indians in Kenya for equal citizenship rights with the Europeans.

Delegates Confer in London on Equal Citizenship Rights With Europeans.

PROTECT NATIVES

Associated Press Despatch.

London, July 28.—Cable despatches from India indicate that there is pronounced dissatisfaction there with the British Government's handling of the situation in Kenya colony and its proposed remedial measures, which were disclosed in a government conference regarding the demands of the Indians in Kenya for equal citizenship rights with the Europeans.

Since July, 1919, Kenya has been administered by executive of four members, in addition to the governor and a legislative council, consisting of elected representatives of the European community, three nominated members, two representing the Indian population and one the interests of natives until the official members to give a majority in the council.

Under the authority of the present decision, number of nominated official members will be so fixed as to maintain an official majority on the legislative council, thus leaving the British Government in the hands of the colonial office. One nominated official member will be selected from the Christian missionaries to protect the interests of natives until the natives are fitted for direct representation.

At yesterday's session of the transportation commission, Ald. Leonard Douglas announced the Sunday bathing controversy: "The ratepayers of London will have their recourse at the polls next December."

"I have made my stand sufficiently public," his worship asserted. "Everyone knows what it is. It remains the same today. Everyone knows the attitude of the four members of the public utilities commission who opposed me and who are responsible for the fact that the civic bathing pools will not be open Sunday."

"I cannot help their opposition. I have taken my stand, but next December 3 the people of London will have their opportunity to tell members of the public utilities commission that they are not pleased with their record and that they will find it imperative to leave them at home."

"I still insist that it is not right to allow Sunday bathing on one side of the fence and prohibit it on the other."

Pools Will Be Closed.

Another week has passed, and once again the pools will be closed Sunday. As a matter of fact, Mayor Wenige has contemplated such drastic action as knocking the padlock from the Thames Park pool and in his capacity as chairman of the police commission throwing it wide open for general use.

But he considers that, while he is confident that he would have the majority of the people of the electorate with him, he should not set the example.

Although his worship hints further consideration of the issue, his announcement today, offering the people the power of their franchise at the next election, is received in many quarters as practically the finish of the controversy, which is becoming an annual event in London.

"Rot," says Mr. Wenige, "is a vulgar, unchristian, and unbecoming of the public utilities commission, stated today that it was all for Mayor Wenige to be advancing as a new argument for Sunday bathing."

Section six of the Lord's Day Act is provided merely to make it illegal for any person to enter rivers or lakes without bathing suits, in view of any residential section.

"Sub-section six of the Lord's Day Act means just what it says, submits the chairman of the commission, 'It means that no person shall bathe on Sunday in any exposed situation.' Exposed situation means a situation where one is exposed to the view of any incorporated municipality or private residence."

The mayor has suggested that 'exposed situation' refers to bathing without suits. What is your version of this?" the chairman was asked.

"Rot," he answered, "giving further assurance that the municipal pools will not be available for use tomorrow."

SUNDAY BATHING DISPUTE CLOSED FOR THE PRESENT

Mayor Says the People Can Answer Utilities Commissioners by the Ballot.

REPORT BAPTIST FAITH INCREASING IN WORLD

Members Claim the Stockholm Gathering Has Been Productive of Much Good.

Associated Press Despatch.

Stockholm, Sweden, July 28.—The Congress of the Baptist World Alliance, which adjourned yesterday, was the largest and most representative meeting of Baptists in all their history, in the opinion of Dr. E. Y. Mullins of Louisville, Ky., the new president of the alliance.

The meeting was in high degree productive of mutual understanding. Dr. Mullins declared today. "Many groups of Baptists coming from all the European countries were greatly encouraged by the meeting, which realized fully for the first time that they belonged to the Baptist family, numbering more than eleven million."

In many European countries, Baptists are being persecuted; in others there is a movement toward religious liberty. This is especially true of Czechoslovakia.

"Baptists from the western hemisphere, including about 1,000 from the United States and Canada, were greatly inspired by the testimony of their brethren in Europe. They saw for the first time how well the simple message of the Gospel of Christ is adapted to the needs of the world in Europe, produced by the world war. The congress was very strong in its missionary emphasis."

CHARGES MAN ABDUCTED HIS 16-YEAR-OLD DAUGHTER

Canadian Press Despatch.

Swastika, Ont., July 27.—Arthur Hebert, who played the saxophone in the orchestra supplying the music at the masquerade ball, from which the London Rotary Club was held up on Wednesday night, is wanted for the abduction of a 16-year-old girl.

Mike Dolan of this place swore out a warrant before Chief of Police Johnston under the belief that his daughter had gone away with Hebert.

The couple were understood to have left for Ottawa.

WOODSTOCK MAY DEVELOP TRADE MARKET IN BRITAIN

Special to The Advertiser.

Woodstock, July 27.—Woodstock was this forenoon visited by J. E. Ray, the Canadian trade commissioner at Manchester, England, who is at present making his headquarters in London, Ontario. Mr. Ray called upon Harry Sykes, secretary of the Woodstock Board of Trade, and made a tour of the city. He expressed a desire to pay a return visit in the near future, when he would like to meet some of the manufacturers, as he is anxious to get in touch with them regarding the possibilities of developing a British market for their goods.

Mr. Smith has promised the book to the Historical Society, to whose records it ought to make a valuable addition. All the names entered are followed with a London East address and a great many are also registered from London Township. Scores are simply entered under the address "London East," at that time the area was evidently being of much smaller proportions than it is at present.

London East today is practically a city in itself. Oldtime residents of London East will find in the book the names of many of their schoolmates. The general secretary, Edwin Smith, stated today that he would be pleased to hear from anyone who has recollections of the London East school under Wm. Eckhart or others of the earlier teachers. No mention is made of the teacher's name during 1875, the year in which the records commence.

LIEUT.-GOVERNOR DIFFERS WITH MANITOBA CABINET

Winnipeg, July 27.—Answering questions in the legislature today, Premier Bracken said there had been a difference of opinion between the cabinet and the lieutenant-governor recently in respect of the investment of some of the funds of the provincial savings office. He refused to table the correspondence. The matter of giving Sir James Aikins assurances as to future conduct was under consideration at present, the premier replied.

COAL HARLEY MEN; ANTHRACITE STRIKE FEARED

STRIKES FEARED AS HARLEY ENDS

Operators' Refusal Causes Collapse of Atlantic City Contract Negotiations.

CONTEST IS BITTER

Associated Press Despatch. Atlantic City, July 27.—Refusal of anthracite operators to grant the demand of the United Mine Workers of America for installation of the check-off dues-paying system throughout the industry resulted today in the sudden collapse of contract negotiations.

After a bitter contest of words in which each side charged the other with responsibility for the state of affairs and declared its opponent was making an unfair bid for public sympathy, the joint committee of eight adjourned sine die.

At the last moment a resolution was passed authorizing the secretary to reconvene the committee if either side indicated it had anything worth while to concede.

There was no indication, however, that miners or operators saw any weak spot in their own argument that of their opponents which would be apt to justify a resumption of negotiations. Since the union already publicly declared it would not submit to arbitration, the only possible peace agency seen in the way of a threatened strike on September 1 was government intervention.

The general break was preceded 24 hours by the miners' ultimatum demanding to know the operators' attitude towards "complete recognition of the union," including the closed shop and check-off system before they would proceed with negotiations. The operators refused to grant such "complete recognition."

Urging that the fulfillment of further conference warranted immediate adjournment, the miners finally agreed to a 24-hour truce, which ended this afternoon.

Describes Proceedings. The proceedings, as described in the official communiqué of James Gorman, secretary, were:

"Mr. Lewis, president of the miners' international, made the statement that there was no change in the attitude of the miners upon the demand for full and complete recognition of the union. S. D. Warren, into the record a statement outlining the position of the operators. Mr. Lewis made a statement outlining the position of the miners. The committee adjourned subject to the call of the secretary at the request of either side."

The recorded statement of the joint committee leaders was their only comment on the situation, except that neither would withdraw the demand for the other. Mr. Warren, with members of the operators' scale committee, summoned today for the most important of the conference, prepared to return to their properties "for a day or two."

Mr. Lewis announced he and his staff would remain here "for important conferences."

Gives Out Statement. Mr. Warren, in a statement addressed to the union leaders in the joint committee, declared the industry was operating under the best of post-war conditions, and anthracite employees today were "far above the increased cost of living." The recent report of the United States Coal Commission corroborated these statements, he said, continuing:

"In the light of these conditions we are prepared to execute a contract renewing the present wage scale to April 1, 1925. We wish to see the 12-hour day which is in effect, speed up the work of the board of conciliation, and endeavor to embody in the contract clauses covering these minor changes which have expressed a willingness to consider during the present negotiations."

The operators' prepared statement evidently took the miners by surprise. Mr. Lewis, replying extemporaneously, said it was obviously prepared for the purpose "for public consumption." He was believed to have obtained a truce yesterday for this purpose, "and not with the intention of giving further consideration to the matters before the conference."

In demanding complete recognition, he said, the anthracite men were only asking for that form of human relationship which had obtained in the bituminous industry for 25 years. They wanted only a contract with the operators that would be formal and complete recognition of the mutual responsibilities by both parties thereto.

Associated Press Despatch. Philadelphia, July 27.—The adjournment of the wage conference of miners and operators at Atlantic City without fixing a date for the resumption of the conference did not seem to surprise observers in the anthracite field who were keeping in touch with the situation.

An early agreement was not expected, it was said, and this was indicated when the operators in the preliminary meetings proposed that miners remain at work after August 31 in the event that a new agreement had not been reached. The miners refused to agree to the proposition on the ground that there was plenty of time to reach an agreement.

The present contract has exactly five weeks to run. In previous wage negotiations since the adjournment there has been taken but there was always a resumption of the conference and an agreement reached when the two sides were ready to make final proposals.

A suspension is looked for by those who have been following the strike closely. Hundreds In British Isles Are Leaving For Dominion To Aid In Western Harvest

By HENRY SOMERVILLE. Special Cable to The London Advertiser by a Staff Correspondent. Copyright.

LONDON, July 27.—Shipping agents throughout Britain continue to be flooded with applications for passages to Canada for harvesting work. Three hundred will sail on the Melita from Southampton on August 2, followed by contingents from the midlands and the north on August 3, leaving Liverpool on the Montclair. On the same date the Marburn sails from Glasgow, calling at Belfast with Scottish and Irish laborers.

Every part of the British Isles is contributing its quota. Many army ex-officers, public school graduates and several ordained ministers are taking advantage of the special through rate of £12 from the shipping office to Winnipeg.

Some are going more for a holiday than for the sake of the wages they will earn.

Applicants include men who have been in Canada before as laborers or farmers who intend to stay there after the present harvesting season. One man booked in London is a veteran of the Riel Rebellion.

Large queues are to be seen at London steamship offices daily. While they are a good type on the whole, some of them look too weakened by prolonged unemployment in England to be capable of hard labor. Though there is a medical examination en route, these enfeebled men are likely to pass because there is nothing organically wrong with them.

HE IS NINETEEN-YEAR-OLD GRAND OLD MAN

John Sinclair Is Ninety-One; Has Been a Mason Fifty-Six Years.

A SPLENDID RECORD

Special to The Advertiser. Petrolia, July 27.—John Sinclair, Petrolia's grand old man, has perhaps a record that stands foremost in Lambton county, or even in Western Ontario. He has been connected with the Masons more than 56 years, and has just celebrated his 91st birthday. He is the oldest living member of the Petrolia Masonic lodge, having joined in 1866.

Mr. Sinclair was born in the county of Peel, where the town of Brampton now stands. He is a well-known figure among the Masons from British Columbia to the United States, and was the intimate friend of the late John Ross Robertson. Mr. Sinclair was district deputy grand master of the Masonic order for the years 1885 and 1886, and is a member of the Royal Arch Masons.

Also An Odd Fellow. Besides being a Mason, Mr. Sinclair is past grand patriarch of the I. O. O. F., and is the fourth oldest past grand patriarch in the world. He represented the Friendship Lodge at Tillsonburg at the grand encampment of the I. O. O. F. He has marshalled two regiments of 414 West street, Hoboken, at Fort Park, North Bergen, this afternoon. The child died before the hospitalization to the North Hudson Hospital.

Adolph Bentz, owner of the dogs, was arrested on a technical charge of manslaughter.

The boy victim was on his way home with other children when he decided to take a look into the back.

At the hospital it was found that the jugular vein had been severed and that the lad had bled to death.

Well Known Abroad. Not only is John Sinclair a familiar name to many people in Canada, but he is also well known in foreign countries. His work with the drillers, as he was a Canadian agent for many large drilling companies, is well known in all oil-producing countries.

Mr. Sinclair was bailiff for over 30 years, and has given a helping hand to many who were in need of it. He was also tax collector for some years. He has also taken a great interest in sport, and attended yearly the caledonian games held in Hamilton, Ontario, where he was champion of the London and other places in Western Ontario. He used to follow with great interest the string of victories of the West Zorra tug-of-war team, who were champions of America.

Although now in perfect health, Mr. Sinclair has for the past fifteen years been afflicted with rheumatism and neuritis, which has many instances taking place in Petrolia in the older days.

Captain Reilly, upon his return here tonight, said that when he sighted the small boat drifting, he examined it through his glasses and distinguished two forms stretched in the bottom. Shaping his course toward the craft he found Collins and Hillman both barely conscious, and took them aboard. The skipper says from what he could learn from the men in their weakened condition they had been fishing off Sandy Hook when their engine became disabled. They drifted for 60 hours without food and had only water which they were able to catch in a rainstorm.

Lawyer at Toronto TAKES HIS OWN LIFE

William Hiram Merrill Shoots Self Through Head With Revolver.

Canadian Press Despatch. Toronto, July 27.—Going into the yard of his house about 8 o'clock tonight William Hiram Merrill, aged 56, Belmont street, Toronto, shot himself through the head with an automatic revolver. He died in the General Hospital about one hour later without regaining consciousness. The police have been unable to learn of any motive behind Merrill's rash act. Merrill, who was an attorney-at-lawyer but unable to practice here, lived with his sister, Mrs. W. Hays. According to the police he and his wife were living apart, though on friendly terms. For some time Merrill had been in a sanitarium, and seemed to be subject to hallucinations. Yesterday afternoon he was called at the detective office and offered to surrender himself for some crime he imagined he had committed, but the police, unable to trace him, told him he was not wanted. Merrill was employed here as a clerk.

London, Eng., July 27.—The resignation of Earl Beatty the first lord of the Admiralty appeared today a possibility as a result of the disagreement between him and the cabinet over the control of the air forces. M. S. band, all doing their part to make the tattoo a success.

The big event came to a fitting close with a wonderful display of fireworks.

M. W. Althouse Has Camped Every Year Since a Boy

Walked Forty Miles to Pitch His First Camp At Grand Bend.

The primitive life! Frying trout beside a mountain stream. Sleeping on a balsam bed beneath the stars. That is the sort of life which M. W. Althouse, principal of the Rectory Street School, delights in. Camping has long been his hobby. For forty-five years he hasn't missed a season out of doors. With the result that probably he knows more about woodcraft than any other resident of the city.

He knows how to keep dry in the rain even if he hasn't a raincoat. He knows how to keep butter hard as wax when the temperature is 90 degrees, and ice is a minus quantity. He can find comfortable sleeping quarters out in the woods, when the weather is stormy, and he has no tent. He knows that in the months of June and July the mosquitoes and black flies are the pest of the camper and so he makes his trips in August or September.

He has camped throughout the length and breadth of Ontario, but his best trips have been through the inland lakes of Ontario, the Kawartha Lakes, the Katchewan Lake district, the upper waters of the Magalloway, Georgian Bay and along Lake Huron.

This Year's Trip.

This year he leaves early in August for a camping trip through eastern Ontario from Kingston north and west. The journey will be made by automobile, a method of transportation decidedly more comfortable than the forty miles on foot, which was a feature of his first camping expedition. That first camping trip was taken when Althouse was but sixteen years of age. He traveled alone with a very simple camping outfit. An oilcloth table-cover served for a tent, and a bushy place with a couple of logs to hold it in place. In the middle of the night the young camper crawled every night. With him he had a trying pan with a handle, a hatchet and box of matches, a home-made hickory fishing pole and hooks, a box of bait, a parcel of corn, a tin of apples, a tin cup, and one dollar in cash. He walked forty miles from Strathroy to Grand Bend (the journey should have been about thirty but he missed his way at one point), he camped on the Au Sable River bank for a week, sold one fish for two dollars, and went home richer than when he went away.

The Simple Life.

Mr. Althouse's camping outfit is much more elaborate today, although it is still primitive as camping outfits go.

"My idea of camping is that it should be the simplest absolutely," says Mr. Althouse. "And the less impediments the better. All my life I have lived out of doors as much as possible under modern civilization. I have never spent happier times than out in the open."

Mr. Althouse's tent is a home-made one of cotton and will comfortably sleep five or six people. It is a double-slanted wall tent, made with a double roof, the fly roof projecting two feet over the inner roof. Sixty-three yards of factory cotton did the trick, with a couple of yards of cheesecloth for the ventilators at each end. The whole tent is so compact that it can be packed in an ordinary flour sack, pegs, fly roof and all.

Mr. Althouse would now have no other type of tent, although he has tried out canvas, oil, and even silk tents.

Resourceful in Woods.

He has learned to be resourceful in the woods. When it rains and he has no raincoat, he gathers a bunch of swamp grass, ties it together with a band of inner clothing, and with his head, lets the grass tops hang down over his shoulders, shedding the rain.

He has found that a hollow log forms a very comfortable sleeping place even in cold weather. He knows that no mattress or springs ever can compare to the comfort of a balsam or cedar bed, the twigs cut and placed with the big end downwards.

He has discovered that a very cool storage for food is obtained in sandy ground, by scooping out the upper soil in a shady spot, wrapping the food in paper or oilcloth, and putting it down in the sand. Experience has taught him that the constant evaporation from the sandy ground carries away the heat of the food, and makes butter so hard that it can hardly be cut, when the temperature above ground is 90 degrees.

He has found out that telescopic cooking utensils are the most com-

THE APPIN INSTITUTE PREPARES FOR FETE

Construct Permanent Booth For Annual Garden Party On August 1.

The regular monthly meeting of the Appin Women's Institute was held at the home of Mrs. Robert Webster, about forty being present. After the reading of the minutes, considerable business was discussed and transacted. Reports of the different committees were heard, and of especial interest was the report of the new permanent booth which is being built for the annual Appin garden party which is to be held this year on August 1.

The members of the committee appointed to see about putting up a permanent booth for the garden party reported that they expect to have this built immediately, estimates of the cost having been made and accepted.

After the business was transacted the following program was given: A vocal solo by Mrs. Johnson and address by the district president, Mrs. Ed. De Gex of Kewwood. Mrs. Brunt, the secretary-treasurer of the district, gave a brief talk, and the little McCall girls were heard in a vocal duet.

Her only attendant was her sister, Miss Lillian Rogers, who looked very charming in a gown of sand colored crepe with hat to match. Dr. Allan McQueen of Tillsonburg acted as best man.

Immediately after the wedding breakfast the bride and groom left on a motor trip. The groom's gift to the bride was a handsome rope of pearls, to the bride a gold bangle, and to the best man a set of gold cufflinks. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. A. E. Jones, pastor of Victoria Avenue Methodist Church, at one o'clock. A charming frock of blue georgette over satin was worn by the bride, and her flowers were a basket of roses. Owing to the rain the garden fete which was to have been held on the grounds at the Adelaide Street Baptist parsonage in King street last evening took place in the parsonage. The affair was held under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid, and the many guests were welcomed by the president of the society, Mrs. William Maynard, assisted by the general convener, Mrs. William Chamberlain, and her committee, including Mrs. Bert Summers and Mrs. R. Greenside.

Kathleen England Chosen Best Camper at Orendaga

Zhonta Tribe Wins First Honors As Best Allround Tribe At Second Port Bruce Camp Just Closed.

Special to The Advertiser.

Orendaga, July 27.—On the closing night of the second camp at Orendaga for this year, Miss Kathleen England, big chief, was elected best camper. Kathleen had endeared herself to all by her lovable qualities and her ability as a leader.

The tribe of Zhonta, whose little chief was Mary Buchner, and leaders were Miss Gollan of Lucknow, and Miss Asplant of London, won first honors as the best all-round tribe, the decision being based on the camp record percentage, sportsmanship, including the results of water and land sports days, nature study, stunts, and special features. The members of the tribe were Mary Buchner, Ruth Westland, Maxine Rogers, Anna Forté, Kathleen England, Margery Singleton, Louise Spettigue, Beatrice Cooke, Frances Clarke, Lillian Pearson, Grace Bayley and Lillian Hayward. The Zhontas had a percentage of possible points of 78.4.

Records Are Close.

Extremely close were the records of the other tribes, the Obitchaks, whose little chief was Mary Connelly from Watford, came second with a percentage of 77.5. The Tsunganis were close with 74 per cent, while the Kitchchiks had 75.5 per cent. The little chiefs of these tribes were Margaret Thomson and Ruth Blakely.

Dorothy Parsons, followed by Catharine McBurney of Sarnia and Beverley Westland. In land sports Aileen Hallett came first, Hazel Aitken second and Virginia Dyer third.

On Sunday last the campers of Orendaga and of Queer Camp, the Y. M. C. A. camp for boys, as well as the villagers and summer residents, had the pleasure of attending service in the beautiful out-of-doors conducted by Mr. Ingram of Alviner. A scene from among the Orendaga girls gave a beautiful anthem.

Hold Softball Game.

On Monday the girls of Orendaga played a game of softball against the boys of Queer Camp. The game was interesting from start to finish, but the girls are keeping very quiet about the score.

Orendaga was delighted with a visit from Miss Marcel Smith, one of those who won the honor of being elected best camper last year. Miss Smith, who is just completing her training in Victoria Island, was the one whose suggested name of "Orendaga," meaning "Place of Magic," was chosen by the campers' Association for the name of their beloved camp.

Stunts proved most interesting. The judges had a decidedly hard time to choose the winners, and finally announced that the river scene, with girls in gaily-decked flower dresses, singing from boats lighted by gay Japanese lanterns, and cat-tails, and a pantomime showing the taking of the picture Robin Hood, most cleverly put on, were tie for first honors. The remainder of the afternoon was spent in games.

Dainty refreshments were served by the hostesses. The next meeting of the club will be held at the home of the Misses Matheson on Wednesday, August 8.

Alice Mackay gave a very interesting paper on Helen Keller, Marjorie Matheson led in prayer and Marie Hogg gave the Bible reading.

It was decided that the buying committee purchase towelling to be made up and sent to Miss McCarty's baby hospital in India.

The remainder of the afternoon was spent in games.

Princess Kourakine's Own Story of the Trial by the Soviet—Lenin Is Interested—Sentenced To
One Year's Hard Labor In Notorious Women's Prison.

By PRINCESS KOURAKINE.

CHAPTER I.
Tried and Condemned in the Kremlin.
Soon after Easter I was summoned to read my accusation act, and informed that the day of my trial was near. I read the document with interest. It appeared that I was implicated in a tremendous affair.
On the following morning, after being informed that our trial was fixed for twelve noon, we were taken to the executive committee. Trials usually took place at the revolutionary tribunal, but special honors were rendered us. Our case was considered so important that it was decided to bring us before the highest court, the pan-Russian central executive committee, which corresponds to the former senate. Only the most important counter-revolutionary plots were examined there. I was highly flattered by such an honor.

Another tedious hour went by and we were at last called into the hall where the trial was held. We were placed between two guards and marched into the room.
Lenin Ordered Daily Reports.
The hall had an imposing look, as there was a big audience. The Bolsheviki imagined that they had discovered an important plot, a whole counter-revolutionary organization.
Wrangel's army had begun an offensive at that time, and the Reds were greatly agitated, as was usual with them at the slightest threat to their armies, and they spoke of Wrangel with a frenzy of hatred. My position was further complicated by the fact that I was a sister cousin to Wrangel. Lenin had given orders for daily reports to be sent to him on the affair and the representatives of the Soviet press had been invited to be present at the trial.

I felt, as I entered the hall, that hundreds of eyes were fixed upon me. They expressed a mixture of curiosity, contempt, and a humiliated, confused, dejected woman. My appearance, therefore, was a disappointment to them. I was not crushed, confused, or humiliated. I stood in the bench of the accused, holding my head high. I glanced at the platform, covered with bright red cloth, and at the tribunal. Four men sat on one side; at a big table in the middle was the president of the tribunal, a Russian workman, with his two assistants and the secretary;
and on the opposite side at a small,
separate table, the great Krylenko, who had signed thousands of death warrants of innocent victims. Kry-lenko was to be my accuser.

The trial lasted two days. The proceedings of the first day did not concern me. On the second day they occupied themselves specially with my affair. The hall was even more crowded than on the preceding day.
Cross-Examined by State Attorney.
My turn came to be questioned.
The president of the tribunal turned to me:

"Prisoner at the bar, Kourakine, do you plead guilty?"

"I certainly do not plead guilty, because I do not see any guilt on my part."

At this, Krylenko began to question me.

"What is your relationship to Wrangel?"

"I explained that our fathers were brothers."

"Have you any connections in the White army?"

"Of course I have. All my relations, all my friends and acquaintances are in the service of the Whites."

"Can you name some of them?"

"Of course I can."

And, speaking like a wound-up machine, I began to enumerate all the family names of the Russian "Almanach de Gotha": the Gallitzines, the Dolgoroukys, the Shorevets, the Shouvaloffs, the Gagarins, the Shouvaloffs, the Vus-emskys, the Bobrinskys and the Koutchoubeyes.

"Enough, enough. You have recommended officers to Wrangel before, haven't you?"

"No, this is the first time I did so."

"Excuse me. You say in your letter to Wrangel (here he opened my letter and read): 'Dear Piper—you know that I never recommend anyone unworthy to serve you.' What do you say to this, prisoner at the bar?"

"I say that Russian is evidently not very familiar to the gentlemen here. I made a gesture in the direction of the judges, secretary, prosecutor and the other officials."

"I beg you once more to read my letter aloud." I called to every word of it. "What have you done with one small but important word—the word 'would'? Read the letter carefully. It says: 'You know I never would recommend anyone unworthy to serve you.' Don't you think the word 'would' makes some difference?"

Krylenko seemed confused. "Did not notice that word," he muttered, and went on questioning me on other subjects.

"Do you know where your son is?"
asked Krylenko.

"I have not the slightest idea."

"Do you realize that you have committed a crime against the republic of the Soviets by recommending an officer to Wrangel, especially one who was in the service of the Soviets?"

lawyer to speak in my defense. I must confess that he spoke extraordinarily well. It was an eloquent, picturesque and convincing speech,
with a plea that I should be released.
Then came Krylenko's turn to deliver his prosecuting speech.
He spoke abruptly, spite and hatred pervading all his words, and this hatred was not only turned against me, but against the whole of our class—against the Whites and everybody and everything that was not of his political party and opinion.
Both Tarabykin and I had the foreboding that his demand would be drastic, and that we should have to suffer heavily if the conference of the tribunal did not alter it. We were not mistaken. Krylenko recommended a sentence of ten years for me and twenty for Tarabykin.

A mortal dread stole over me but I clenched my hands over the little ikon of the Mother of God which I was holding. My heart was full of faith. After a trial is over, prisoners at the bar are allowed to say a few last words in their defence. My turn came to do so.

"Princess Kourakine, have you anything more to say?"

"No," said I. "I refuse to say anything more, for I will not appeal to your mercy. You must consult your conscience, if there is any of it left."

One Year in Prison.
The trial was at an end. The judges and the prosecutor Krylenko passed into a neighboring room to confer on a final sentence. Tarabykin and I were led back into the room where we had awaited trial in the morning. We were both greatly excited, of course. I felt a nervous dread, realizing that my fate was being decided at that moment, perhaps for 10 years.

My defender ran in for a moment and shook my hand. "Be calm," he said, "let us hope for the best." I sincerely thanked him for his brilliant speech in my defence.

An hour went by, and we were once more called into the hall where the trial had taken place. I returned to my place on the prisoners' bench and sat down as before, gazing through the window and prayed. The

The Doo Dads—Repairing the Streets of Dooville

After the long, long winter, the spring rains, little creeks and rivers formed in the roads and washed out great gullies. Pools of water stood in the streets of Doo-ville. As the carts passed by, they would twist and turn and wear the holes a little deeper, where the water stood.
When the bright, warm summer sun began to shine, the roads became dry, but they were full of little valleys and riverbeds. The streets of Dooville were so rough that they were almost impassable. Doctor Sawbones hired Nicholas Nutt and Tiny to repair the streets, and here they are busy at the task. First, they hauled many loads of huge bowlders and scattered them about on the surface of Main Street. Then Nicholas hitched Tiny to his big roller.
Tiny took the "masher" with his trunk. As they went along, Tiny crushed the huge bowlders with his masher, and the great, heavy roller follows behind, and leaves the street as nice and smooth as the hardwood floor of Doc Sawbones' office. Roly and Poly and the little Doo Dads were gathering nuts off the big tree in the pasture. It or dear to me in Moscow, I can hardly describe the feeling of joy and emotion which I experienced when I once more beheld the dear beloved face of our old nurse. We were both of us inclined to weep from sheer joy.

The interview took place behind a double grating. We stood about two steps distant from each other, but she was able to relate all her adventures in Bolshevik prisons to me. I felt that I loved her still more for all she had gone through.

After our interview, thanks to her astounding energy and practical sense, she found the time not only of supporting herself, but of bringing me the nicest things to eat. She began by selling one of my jewels for 500,000 rubles, and another for 450,000 rubles. With this money she opened a little bakery, selling her white loaves every day at the Smolevsky bazaar, and earning from twelve to fifteen thousand rubles daily.

I may well say that I owe it to her that I did not entirely lose my health.

My constitution was so exhausted that the doctor doubted whether I would be able to stand another winter under prison conditions. Nurse brought me food parcels twice a week, which were not only sufficient for my every day, but which I was able to share with many hungry prisoners. I had meat every day, very often milk, and enjoyed above all the cheese and sour cream she sometimes brought me. I never eat now with the same joy in the restaurants in Paris as I did when nurse brought me her food parcels.

Thanks to my healthful food, I began to recover rapidly. The abscesses and feeling of giddiness from which I had suffered disappeared completely and my strength increased daily. This had one drawback, however. I looked so well I was obliged to leave the hospital.

I returned to cell No. 14, but I no longer felt solitary and the days of interview with my dear nurse were a real delight to me.

married to Dr. Samuel Poindexter Oast, of Columbus, Ohio, son of Mr.
and Mrs. Samuel Poindexter Oast, of Portsmouth, Virginia. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Monsignor McKeown.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her brother, Mr. Edward F.
Harper, of Detroit, wore a Quaker frock of brown flat crepe, combined with embroidered organdie and a brooch of velvet hat with trimmings, and her corsage was of Ophelia roses
and lily of the valley.

Miss Kathleen Harper was her sister's bridesmaid, and wore a gown of sand shade crepe, with a becoming hat of the same shade, and her flowers were roses. Mr. Edward F. Oast of Portsmouth, Va., a brother of the groom, acted as best man.

Following the ceremony an informal reception was held at the home of the bride's mother in Princess avenue. Mrs. Harper received with Dr. and Mrs. Oast, and was gowned in navy blue flat crepe, with a black hat. A wedding breakfast was served, from tables dainty with summer flowers.

Dr. and Mrs. Oast left later on a honeymoon trip down the St. Lawrence, going on to Boston and Norfolk, Va., and upon their return they will reside in Columbus, Ohio.

Among the guests, numbering twenty, were many from out-of-town, including: Mr. and Mrs. E. F. Harper, of Detroit; Mr. W. F. Harper, of Detroit; Mrs. T. G. Williamson, Miss Williamson, Mrs. Lighthouse, and Mr. and Mrs. Otto Auerbach, all of Toronto.

SATURDAY, JULY 28, 1923.

When the Church Splits.

The pastor of a church in the northern part of Ontario has resigned his charge, and is now seeking another location because there has been a split in the ranks. From very reliable and unbiased sources it appears that some time ago the young people of the congregation wanted to conduct a skating rink on a piece of property owned by the church and for which permission was granted. All went well for a time, until the complaint was made that the place was kept open too late, especially on Saturday night, and that on several occasions it was after midnight before some of the skaters returned to their homes.

Last year the request came up again before the church officials, and they declined to sanction the move. The pastor did not fall in with their views, and then the trouble started. He offered at that time to resign, but the great majority of his congregation would not hear of it. So the church officials who had opposed the opening of the rink for another season pulled out and hired a hall of their own and secured supply preachers. On many occasions these supply speakers, instead of trying to bring the two factions together, took the ground that those who had pulled out had done so on a matter of principle, and that they should never turn back.

It was impossible to finance two churches of this denomination in the town, and the pastor, feeling that his leaving might help matters, insisted on his resignation being accepted.

The reasonable course would have been to have rules and regulations for that rink, one of them being that it should be closed at a certain hour at night. But here, again, it seems it was impossible to agree.

What a spectacle for the man not interested in churches to look at! Two factions splitting the church from top to bottom over the conduct of a skating rink! The man on the outside looking in has a right to see in the church something better than he sees in the world outside. If he does not, then there is something very much wrong with the church. If, on looking at the church from the outside, he sees nothing but a body of people who are ready to stage a fight over a matter that a few reasonable men ought to be able to settle in a few minutes, then he has looked in vain and his impressions are going to be negative.

Church people make the high claim that they have a power that keeps them and holds them and blesses them in a way that the man of the world knows nothing about, and it should be their ambition to measure up to the expectations of those on the outside. A consistent church member should never resent having the eyes of the world turned on him or those associated with him in the Master's work. Especially should a church be keen to see the folly and the error of coming to the point where one part of the membership breaks off from the other, and furnishes the world with a spectacle that is the very opposite to that of the early Christian church, where the outsiders used to look on and marvel because these people loved each other.

What Might Have Been Done.

There have been scores of suggestions made since the Toronto hold-up, each one showing what should have been done to catch the car with the bandits.

The beauty of the suggestions is that each one seems perfectly good a week after and quite satisfactory to the person making it.

The one queer thing is that many people stood and watched the whole performance with a telephone at their very elbow, and yet no one thought to phone the police.

That is not peculiar to this particular case, but to many others. A person witnessing a street battle becomes so engrossed, particularly if the view is from a safe window, that the idea of playing a real part in the affair by calling the police never seems to come to the surface. The idea of changing from a spectator to a participant is one that does not come easily.

These post-mortems showing what might or should have been done may be entertaining, but they are not helpful, because most people forget all about them in a few days.

Germany Moving Toward Collapse.

According to figures quoted on the New York market Friday, one million German marks could be secured for 90 cents.

It is almost impossible to conceive what this means. The million marks represents only a fictitious value, and the 90 cents is certainly a very good joke to hand over for a million or ten million of these valueless marks.

There can be only one end to this sort of business, viz., the collapse of the entire German monetary system. Germans themselves realize the situation. Circulars sent out by German dealers seeking to buy certain things in Canada state frankly that "payment of the costs must, in consideration of the present low value of the German mark, be considered as almost impossible." The suggestion is made that the German firms be allowed to pay their bills in goods, on the basis of the old system of barter.

Doubtless Britain sees the danger in this situation, and it may have had much to do with her latest pronouncement on the reparations issue. With France in possession, and Germany going into a state of bankruptcy, the most likely thing to happen is that France shall assume the role of prior creditor and take possession of sufficient territory to satisfy her claims.

It will be a world-wide surprise if Germany can keep going through the summer.

President Harding in Canada.

The appearance of President Harding in a Canadian city breaks a precedent.

Precedents of this kind are better broken than kept. President Harding represents a government that has fashioned a tariff that hit Canada hard.

He is also president of the other great nation that tenants the North American continent.

A man in such a position should know more about Canada. Personal contact with Canadian people would give him a bigger and a better vision.

The day is passing when rulers are supposed to stay at home for fear they may know exactly what is going on in the world outside. It is in line with bringing diplomacy out in the open, and that is where people want it.

Curbing the War Effort.

An American publisher offers $100,000 for the best suggestion as to how United States can participate in European affairs in the interests of peace.

That is a lot of money, but one writer was quick to point out that $300,000 was hung up for a prize fight purse a few weeks ago.

The ratio of three to one is not indicative of the efforts made to promote peace and war.

Had the world spent $1 for peace every time it spent $3 for war much of the world's saddest history would never have been penned.

One of the surest ways to have peace is to make war unprofitable.

There are men who made more money in war years than they ever made before.

Instead of getting rich they should have been made to suffer along with the wives and mothers who had seen their husbands and sons marching off to the front.

Had the nations of the world been made to feel the hardships as they were felt by the men who went into the trenches, war talk would not be one quarter as persistent as it is today, and the word "glory" of war would have given place to the "hell" of war.

So Both Were Found Guilty.

The magistrate at Brampton had a case before him the other morning where one man was charged with trespass and the other with assault. The whole trouble arose over a misunderstanding as to which of these men was entitled to gather the fruit from a piece of land which one had rented to the other.

The Brampton magistrate heard the evidence, and no doubt each of the complainants put up a perfectly good case. In the end the decision of the bench was that both were guilty and ordered to split the costs, amounting to $19.

It might be a dangerous thing to treat many cases in this way, but there is an element of simple justice in the verdict that smacks of common sense.

All the fruit that ever grew on a dozen trees was never big enough or good enough for two men to fight over.

The Turk's Next Move.

The Turk, having won in the diplomatic battle at Lausanne, can now whet his sword in anticipation of the next slaughter.

The next slaughter will come because the Turk of today has not changed; he is still the damndest scoundrel on the face of the earth.

The wonder is that any civilized nation would sign a paper polluted by his signature.

The Chatham News declares that "to be absolutely frank, a three-week-old kitten knows more about sanitation and has a higher sense of decency in such matters than the average picnicer." Nay, nay, a three-week-old kitten is simply being lifted about by the scruff of the neck, and it knows not that decency and sanitation are great forces in the world to which it has come.

An analysis of Canadian bond sales to date shows that of $139,095,631 sold by various firms this year, government bonds to the extent of $21,000,000 were bought in Canada, while United States took $25,000,000; British investors took none. In municipal bonds, Canada absorbed $59,000,000 and U. S. $28,000,000, none going to Britain, while corporation bonds sold to the extent of $52,000,000 in Canada, $19,000,000 in United States, and $1,000,000 in Britain. The totals of this year's buying are: Sold in Canada, $113,643,531; sold in United States, $73,949,000; sold in Britain, $1,000,000. It looks as though Canadians themselves had quite a lot of money tucked away waiting for safe and attractive bonds.

LEAVE EUROPE—DEVELOP EMPIRE.

(From the Orillia Packet.)

The suggestion is made that if the present efforts of the British government to straighten out the political and economical tangle in Europe should prove fruitless, they will give up the attempt and turn their attention to the development of trade within the empire. The moment seems opportune, and the task would afford ample scope for British brains, capital and energy. Moreover, the results would probably prove more satisfactory than the efforts to re-establish trade with the half bankrupt and politically distracted nations of Europe and Asia. In the past, the British government has contended that the mother country could not afford to enter into preferential trade relations with the Dominions because it would disturb much greater interests in other lands. But Germany, Russia and Austria have ceased to count for much; if France persists in having her own way in the Ruhr, she cannot complain if Britain takes steps to develop markets in other directions; and the United States, with the Fordney tariff, certainly could not grumble. The adoption of a policy of free trade within the British empire would afford a market which would give ample scope for the manufacturers of all sections of the empire in mass production. The war demonstrated that Canadian manufacturers are quite able to compete if only they are given the opportunity to produce in large enough quantities. There would be no reason why each of the Dominions should not continue to frame its tariff against foreign countries as might suit its own circumstances. On Great Britain's part, all that need be asked is an understanding that there should be a tariff on food-stuffs from outside the empire.

THE SOURCE OF WAR.

Out of the heart come forth evil thoughts.—Matt. 15:18.
War, with its attendant horrors, seems like an outrage upon love. And so it is, in its origin and source. "From whence come wars and fightings among you? Come they not hence, even of your lusts that war in your members?" "Ye lust and have not; ye kill, and desire to have, and cannot obtain." "Yet there is a war against war which is set in the very key of 'Love thy neighbor as thyself.'"
It was to frustrate a gigantic crime and to redress villainous wrong that the allies took up arms in the world war, and America at last joined them.
Had her heart been quicker, her feet more swift, she might have reached the Jericho Road in time to stop the robbers before they began their cruel work.
Who can tell?
At last, having arrived, she did her best and beat them off.

TO THE EDITOR.

GETTING IN TO CANADA.
Editor of The Advertiser:
Sir, Please find enclosed a copy for publication. The following was received by me from a nephew, en route to London from England:
Dear Halifax, Tuesday, July 20.
Uncle Charlie—Just a few lines to let you know that I am in Canada, but I am pretty nearly regretting that I ever came.
To begin with, I did not sail on the Andania on the 13th of July owing to the dock strike, so we were transferred to the Coronica at Liverpool (July 14), rather than wait in England another fortnight for the next Southampton-Quebec boat. That was our troubles began. When we got on the boat we found there were only 40 Englishmen passengers, the remainder being foreigners of every nationality, Poles, French, Austrians, Greeks, etc.; in fact, every nation under the sun. I have never seen such a crowd in my life.
Two days out, they discovered two cases of smallpox on board, so as soon as we arrived in Halifax, the ship was isolated.
We were vaccinated on board on Saturday on the understanding that we continued on our journey. We were landed on Sunday morning and put in a train under the pretense of going to Quebec to pass customs officials. Instead, we found ourselves landed here at Halifax.
My vaccination did not take on Saturday; the rest of the Englishmen passed, and we are leaving today. I was vaccinated again yesterday (Monday) on the promise of being cleared with the rest of the Englishmen today.
Today they refused to pass me, as it hasn't taken again, so I have to stay here for another nine days—one Englishman with about 3,000 foreigners. If only you could see the conditions here; herded in like cattle, no grounds for exercise, and armed guards round us night and day. I won't say any more about it, as you might get as disgusted as I am. We're full of bugs and fleas here. You cannot write to me here, but I hope to see you in a fortnight.

PUBLIC BATHING.

Editor of The Advertiser:
Sir—Regarding articles on Sunday bathing: In my opinion Section of the Lord's Day Act "It shall not be lawful for any person on Sunday to bathe in any exposed situation, in any water within the limits of any incorporated town, or within view of any place of public worship, or private residence," means just what it says—that bathing nude or otherwise shall not be lawful on Sunday, except in places absolutely isolated. Yours truly,

Canada's Century THE CANADIAN PRESS

By ARTHUR HUNT CHUTE.

The seat of sovereignty in Canada is not in a bureaucracy, not in a plutocracy. Here the seat of sovereignty is in the press, in the instruments that mold our mind and thought.

The forming of an independent, enlightened opinion is not without its sinister doses, the welded hiring propaganda, and the no less wretched pandering to the mob. Someone once asked John D. Rockefeller why he did not buy a great newspaper to defend his interests. "Why," answered Mr. Rockefeller, "if I did, the next day the paper would be worthless." The experience of Joseph Pulitzer with the New York World confirms this statement. When Mr. Pulitzer took over from James Gordon Bennett, he was struggling along at 10,000 a day. Four years later, freed from the incubus of Wall street, the World had climbed to over 400,000 a day, proving that in newspaperdom, the friendship of all the people is worth more than the friendship of all the Morgans.

But it does not follow, conversely, that the friendship of all the people is always a criterion of achievement. There have been cases of the million circulation which in the end were merely a pandering to the masses, as merchandising in ink and paper. Canada is worthy of a better form of journalism than this merchandising ink-and-paper variety.

The heart of a newspaper is the editorial page, by which one publication is proven worse than worthless; by which another publication is proven a chart and compass of the people.

Courage Is Needed.

The editorial page is not a place in which to say "poor pussy," and "pat em on the back." It is a place in which to attack the colossal self satisfaction of man, of which Canada has its due share; its true function is to create dissatisfaction, and the yearning for something better, to stir up the animals, to discourage anything like lethargy in the menagerie.

The heart-beat of the editorial page should be attuned to all mankind. Regarding this necessity, William Peter Hamilton said to me once, "I don't want to edit my paper from an air-tight compartment." The editor with the wide outlook was perfectly set forth by John Thaddeus Deland, of the London Times, of whom Sir Edward Cook wrote, "Deland lived in a great world, as well as in an office of the Times."

An editor of a widely-circulated newspaper, asked for the secret of his success, replied, "If there is a fire in the drug store round the corner, and an earthquake, in the Piziquid Islands, I'll give a stick to the earthquake, and a column to the fire in the drug store, and the rest of the news was first news. A problem of Canadian journalism is to expand

By ROYAL S. COPELAND, M.D.

During the dreadful heat of summer, it is necessary to give the baby the greatest degree of care. Unless he is guarded against the heat, he will not only suffer from the heat, but his weight and may suffer serious illness. During this period nothing is more important to the welfare of the infant than the quality and quantity of the milk he gets.

I am sorry to say that the American-born mother is more likely to resort to artificial feeding than is the mother of the baby unless the mother is a nurse. However, it is only fair to add that this is due, in most instances, I am sure, to the physical inability of the mother and not to a lack of inclination to do the best thing possible for her child.

It is not conceivable that a real mother would deny her offspring the great physical pleasure of this practice. It is an exception to find a mother who is not keen to nurse her infant. I am glad of this, because, as I conceive it, it is the bounden duty of the parent to make every self-denial necessary for the welfare of the child.

The appearance of the mother is no guarantee of her ability to feed her baby. Many robust-looking women are more incapable of this function than are some frail and weak mothers.

The child itself is the best exhibit, testifying to the successful effects of the breast-feeding. If he grows, looks healthy, is good-natured, and normal in appearance, you may be sure he is thriving as he should. This means that his food is satisfactory.

Healthy babies cry little. This does not mean that an hour or so of wailing during the twenty-four hours is a bad sign. All of us possess more or less temper and a baby is entitled to a tiny share.

Breast-fed babies if they are thriving are sweet babies. They never have a sour smell, neither do they spit or give other evidences of upset stomach. There are no belching of gas and abnormal stools.

If the baby is doing well on the breast, he sleeps most of the time. For the first half year he should be awake not more than four or five hours out of every twenty-four. He falls asleep during his feeding or immediately afterward.

No matter how good may be the mother's milk, it will not insure perfect health for the baby unless the feedings are given regularly. The health of the mother is fundamental to the health of the baby. She must be regular in her habits, to reflect health and comfort on her child.

The self-denial of the mother is rewarded by the sweetness, the good-nature and the liveliness of the baby. It pays to give the little one the great benefits of breast-feeding.

Gives Owners' Angle On Pro Ball Situation In London

President Heard Reviews the Club's Affairs Since Organization In 1919.

In the following written statement by President Heard of the London Baseball Club, the fans are given the baseball situation as it affects professional baseball in London, from the angle of the club directors.

During the last few weeks the writer's attention has been directed several times to a series of misapprehensions in respect to professional baseball as operated in this city. The best way to clear this up is a plain statement of the facts, for often a single demonstration is better than a book full of arguments.

The Teumseh Baseball and Athletic Association, Limited, was formed in 1919. All the money that was raised at that time and $2,000 more, a total approximating $7,000, was used in that year with no assets at the end of the year.

During 1920, reorganization took place. Additional money was raised and a pennant was won. The club had 100,000 people in the ball park, sold about $6,000 worth of players, which left a surplus at the end of the year of about $9,000. During that year the manager received $2,150. Through the backing of a certain shareholder he demanded and got for the next year $3,500, besides a percentage on sales of players.

He then demanded $4,000 more, and a percentage on sales of players. He then demanded $4,000 more, and a percentage on sales of players.

ONE BAD MIX - UP

Associated Press Despatch.

St. Catharines, Ont., July 27.—

Threatening weather conditions which did not develop failed to interfere with a successful completion of the first day's event of the 41st annual regatta of the Canadian Association of Amateur Oarsmen on the Royal Canadian Henley course here today.

Four races for three hours were held, with the interest centering upon the senior singles which was the first of the day.

Heavily favored was the St. John's N.B. present champion, won, and which was keenly contested. Since his return from competing in the Henley regatta at Henley it had become apparent that the easterner was not in his best condition.

His win of the race was accompanied by his greatest performance since he made his bow on the local course. Paul Costello of Philadelphia, who had been expected to be Belyea's chief opponent, in the finals which are to be rowed tomorrow, won his heat fourteen seconds ahead of the runner-up.

Costello's heat was not in his best condition. He finished seventh length ahead of the runner-up, but he was not in his best condition.

Terry, Alone In New York, Decides To Call On Her Sister, Julia, and Takes a Taxi

WHO'S WHO IN THE STORY:

Who's Who in the Story.
Terence Desmond, (Terry)—Exquisite and convent-reared, unbelievably innocent, is forced to work as a cashier in her father's roadhouse while Juliet Divine, the stage name of her beautiful half-sister, whom Terry has not seen for years, lives like a princess and talks vaguely of a millionaire.
Terence Desmond, their father, moody and selfish, formerly caretaker of an estate, is now the proprietor of the Blue Moon, a roadhouse. He is anxious to get Terry married and off his hands.
Mrs. Parmelee owns Silverwood, the estate of which Desmond was caretaker.
Betty Sheridan, her granddaughter, whose rudeness to Terry the latter will never forget, is the wife of Miles Sheridan, handsome and likable, who when Terry was a child furnished the money to send her to the convent, partly to atone for his wife's rudeness. To Terry he is always "the prince."
Eustace Nardo, a wealthy Greek, unscrupulous with women, is impressed by Terry's beauty and her resemblance to Juliet Divine, the famous stage beauty. He invites her to go for an auto ride and on the way to New York he kisses her.
While Nardo is arranging for a private dining-room at the hotel, Terry slips away. Nardo is furious.

CHAPTER 14.

An Unexpected Visitor.
"The young lady had a letter in her hand," the doorman informed him. He had asked if she would like it posted, but she said "No, thank you," she preferred to go out herself. "Did you see whether she took a taxi?" Nardo inquired, controlling his voice.

The man hadn't seen what the young lady did after she went through the revolving door. Others had come in about that time. He'd forgotten to watch for her return.
Nardo's blood pounded in his head, and he had difficulty in concentrating. But he was a man trained to master emotion. He accepted the fact that he could afford the pleasure of letting it master him.

He forced himself to face the question: "What would the girl be likely to do?"

There was one thing certain. She wouldn't have run away if she'd meant to come back. And it seemed almost equally certain that, as this was her first visit to New York, she wouldn't go wandering about the streets.

It seemed as if her one thought would be to get home. Probably she hadn't much money. No doubt, however, she would have enough for a ride in the subway, and the journey to Oldport by train.

Like a fool he'd told her among other things how easy it was to travel to New York from Long Island and back! Yes, she would run for home. That must be what happened.

Terry had made use of a convent letter which she had in her pocket in order to escape without rousing the door porter's suspicion. She was going to her sisters! She was going to find Julia.

She had no money at all. Nevertheless, while Nardo was studying a time table, in order to head her off at the Pennsylvania station, if it could be done, the girl was in a taxi. She had not dared to get into one in front of the restaurant, lest she might be seen and tracked. But, having hurried round the corner and walked very fast for a block and a half, she noticed a number of vehicles in front of a hotel.

The girl had seen many couples arrive at the Blue Moon in such conveyances and knew that they were not private cars.

"Take me to the Ardhamont, on Riverside Drive," she said, half afraid, in her ignorance, that she might be asked to pay in advance. If she had been she planned to say: "My sister lives there. She will give me the money." But it was a relief that the man seemed to trust her.

If Julia were not at home, maybe there'd be a servant from whom she could borrow. But oh, it was too bad to be true that Julia should be away! She hoped desperately that it might not be so.

There was not only the difficulty about paying! She did not know what would become of her for that night unless she found Julia, or, indeed, for the night to come, for she felt that she could never go back to live with her father.

The drive seemed much longer than before, because the girl feared each minute might now be a last one. She was interested in Riverside Drive, the lighted brick bulk of the Ardhamont loomed above her, the girl peeped anxiously out of the window before she ventured to descend. But there was an automobile in sight resembling Nardo's.

The only one in front of the building was a dark colored car of much the same build, which looked black in the summer dusk.

"Will you please wait a few minutes and I'll bring you down the money, or send it," said Terry. The chauffeur made no objection to this proposal, and she was relieved.

Yet her voice trembled as she asked a negro in livery, inside the door, if he knew whether Miss Divine was at home.

"No, I don't know, miss," replied the man, staring, no doubt because of the resemblance. "I don't know, miss," he said, and he went out, and her auto ain't been around. But you better take the elevator up to her floor. It's the tenth."

As he spoke, the smart-looking negro motioned toward a pair of sliding oak doors which at that instant flew apart, showing a tiny room, with an electric light and red velvet seats round the wall. In it stood an old negro in the same dark green livery as the first.

Terry had never seen an elevator, but she walked into the little room and was shot up and up, with appalling speed. The attendant was able to inform her that Miss Divine was in. He had taken a gentleman to call on her about fifteen minutes ago.

At the tenth floor the black man pointed out a door at the left of a marble-paved corridor, and Terry touched an electric bell.

He rang the bell, and despite the humble warmth of the night. Could the gentleman with Julia possibly be Mr. Nardo?

She was kept waiting a few moments, and was just about to touch the bell again when the door opened. A tall, fine-looking mulatto woman with a black hat and a little lace cap and apron, and high-heeled shoes gazed wide-eyed at the red-haired girl in mourning. Her expression showed astonishment.

"Is Miss Divine in?" Oh, I hope she is!" Terry almost gasped. "She—she's my sister."

"My goodness! You sure did give me a start," cried the woman. "I hope you're her sister. She'll be glad to see you. But I ain't sure. She wasn't expectin' you, was she?"

"No," Terry admitted. "I didn't know I was coming. I live in the country, a long way off. Oh, but I'm sure she'll see me! Do let me come in!"

Danny and Nanny Meadow Mouse Decide To Turn the Old Tin Can Into a Fine Storehouse

By THORNTON W. BURGESS.

All that Nanny Meadow Mouse said about that old scarecrow for a place for a new home was true. Danny had to admit it. The only thing he could find to say against it was that it stood a little way from the grass of the Green Meadows, for, as you know, it was in Farmer Brown's corn field. Danny always feels safest when he can make his little paths through the grass. But Nanny promptly pointed out that it would be just as safe in there because the broad, long leaves of the corn would keep them hidden when they were running to and fro. Nanny didn't waste any time. She started to work right away to make a place in the middle of the bundle of straw with which the old scarecrow was stuffed. She pulled out straw until there was a good-sized little room there. Then she brought fine, soft, be driven out of our home. I do believe we have found the best place in all the great world to live."

Nanny chuckled. "I know it," she said happily. "I know it. Just think of all the food we will have when this corn becomes ripe. We won't have to even hunt for it. Isn't it funny how things that seem about as bad as they can be turn out to be the best things that could have happened? If Mr. Blacksnake hadn't found our home in Redwing's old nest we wouldn't have found this new home. This will make us a much better winter home than that would have been. I never felt worse in my life than when I saw Mr. Blacksnake climbing up to that nest. Now I'm glad. I wouldn't have believed that Mr. Blacksnake could ever bring me good news. It is a funny old world, isn't it, Danny?"

Danny agreed that it was.

BEFORE MY BABY CAME

I Was Greatly Benefited by Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Sydenham, Ont.—"I took your medicine before my baby was born, and it was a great help to me as I was very poorly until I had started to take it. I just felt as though I was tired out all the time and would have weak, faint spells. My nerves were bothered me until I could get little rest, night or day. I was told by a friend to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and I only took a few bottles and it helped me wonderfully. I would recommend it to any woman. I am doing what I can to recommend this good medicine. I will lend that little book you sent me to any one I can help. You can with the greatest of pleasure use my name in regard to the Vegetable Compound if it will help others take it."—Mrs. HARVEY MILLIGAN, Sydenham, Ontario.

It is remarkable how many cases have been reported similar to this one. Many women are poorly at such times and get into a weakened, run-down condition, when it is essential to the mother, as well as the child, that her strength be kept up.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is an excellent tonic for the mother at this time. It is prepared from medicinal roots and herbs, and does not contain any harmful drugs. It may be taken in safety by the nursing mother.

Miss Hopper if you keep on wearing that Egyptian dress of yours you'll get your picture on a cigarette pack and a letter to Miss Agnes Ardent, Trysting Trestle, Tennessee. Dear Miss Ardent.

Just received your letter telling about how your girl friend Catherine Carress who has just finished school where she got culture and learned how to greet a young man for the first time like the opening of a beautiful flower was out with your crowd the other night and she was telling all about the Italian opera she heard in the city and she spoke about this hero that is a very stout baritone with a tamoshanter on and how he sings a song to one who gets off and after looking through all our records of operas and playing most of them I was just able to give up on account of their being in Italian when I stumbled on this Italian opera record where the hero sings about something the heroine wants and he hasn't got any of.

You add that Catherine Carress your girl friend couldn't think of the name of this song and will I find out what it is for you and send you the record of it, so you can put it on your phonograph and show her where she gets off and after looking through all our records of operas and playing most of them I was just able to give up on account of their being in Italian when I stumbled on this Italian opera record where the hero sings about something the heroine wants and he hasn't got any of.

Yours for authentic opera, THE SUPREMACY EMPORIUM Per. D. D.

Facial Blemishes

Sallow, muddy, roughened or blotched complexions are usually due to constipation. When you are constipated, not enough of Nature's lubricating liquid is produced in the bowel to keep the food waste soft and moving. Doctors prescribe Nujol because it acts like this natural lubricant and thus secures regular bowel movements by Nature's own method—lubrication.

Nujol is a lubricant—not a medicine or laxative—so cannot gripe. Try it today.

THE DAILY SHORT STORY

COOKING TIMOTHY'S GOOSE

By H. LOUIS RAYBOLD.

About all there was to Tim's act was Caroline. Caroline, the Marvelous Trained Goose—that is how she was billed. Even Daisy's song was incidental, merely serving to fill forty-nine seconds while Tim changed Caroline's costume in the wings. Yes, Caroline was the little money-maker in the Gordon and Gordon combination, and if Daisy hadn't had the influenza and been laid up in a hospital for several weeks the season's profits wouldn't have been so bad.

Fortunately they were booked some weeks ahead, and if they made good further bookings would doubtless open up. At least, that was the situation when Tim fell a victim to the same prostrating malady which had so weakened his sister. Tim tossed restlessly.

"It's no use, kid. I can't go on today. Heaven knows whether you can manage alone. Just our luck, too, having that guy Winters follow us with his dog act. Can't figure whether he's sweet on you or has an eye on getting the goose or queering our act somehow." Tim tossed restlessly.

His sister Daisy tried to soothe him, but they both were too well aware of the various vicissitudes of a second-rate actor's life not to know that by no means the least of them was being stranded and ill and near-broke.

"I'll manage," Daisy assured him. "Don't worry—about Dick Winters, either. He's on the square."

But at the very mention of Dick's name, Daisy flushed until she rivalled Tim's feverishness. Was it coincidence that Winters had played in so many theatres at the same time as she and Tim? Was he really "sweet on her," or was Tim's other cynical surmise correct?

She resolutely put the thought from her mind and wondered if the work of the performance would be doubled for her, and before that there was the cold-blooded manager to propitiate who would not be his own man, feeling one member of the Trained Goose act.

At the stage door, Daisy ran into Dick, who did not yet know of her illness, or if, in the absence of Tim, he wasn't considerably more cordial and friendly even than usual. "Darren shame about Tim," he said. "Let me know if there's anything I can do. How's Caroline? Any time Tim wants to sell the old girl, don't forget she's just top my act."

But Daisy shook her head. "Haven't reached that point yet, thanks," she said.

Somehow or other, Daisy staggered through the afternoon performance, rose to the occasion almost as if she understood the circumstances and won many applauding hands. Buoyant, Daisy rushed home to report to Tim, only to find her brother teasing in a delirium that took no interest in either her or Caroline.

A hastily summoned doctor looked grave, feared pneumonia, urged a nurse for the next few days. After he had gone, Daisy sat quietly for a few moments, then silently gathered her resources together, determined to pull Tim through.

Recalling Dick's words, she called him by telephone in the lobby below, explaining how she could barely leave Tim for the time necessary to telephone, and she felt a great wave of relief sweep through her as Dick promised to cook right over.

Three days later Tim woke from his first refreshing sleep. Daisy sat beside him, holding his thin, white arm, "Good old girl," he murmured and slept again.

Beneath Daisy's eyes were dark circles and her face was wan. There had been no work for Caroline the past few days. On the contrary, there had been bills for medicine, for the doctor, for the nurse, for extra hotel service. Daisy's pocketbook was flat and Tim's rifled pockets no longer jingled. Not near-broke now were Gordon and Gordon. Stony broke.

And the doctor had said Tim must have nourishing food to pull him through.

Daisy bit her lip and her eyes filled. At that instant the door opened, and Dick's head poked in. "How's Tim?" he whispered cheerily. "Better? That's good. Say, lend me Caroline, will you? She's no use to you right now."

Listlessly Daisy nodded assent and Dick withdrew. Tim, waking shortly, took all Daisy's attention for some time. Suddenly: "Gee, but I'm starved," he said. "What do I get for supper?"

Daisy turned away. What did he get, poor fellow? And how could she disclose to him their plight? Evasively she postponed the moment.

But it wasn't later—that dusky hour when the street lamps are lighted and one hears the feet of hurrying crowds homeward bound, and from the myriad kitchens are wafted appetizing odors of preparing meals.

Daisy stood irresolutely at the window. She could pawn her suit perhaps and depend on her old raincoat. It might tide them over until they were earning once more. As she turned to look at down someone knocked at the door.

It was not Dick, as she had hoped, but the bellboy with a tray—a heavily laden tray. Such a supper! Broth, for Tim, roast fowl with all its accompaniments for Daisy.

"De compliments of Mister Winters," said the boy and vanished.

Just as they were finishing the meal Daisy remembered Caroline. "I wonder what he wanted her for?" she said half aloud.

"Her?" Daisy asked Tim. "Dick borrowed Caroline," said Daisy.

"Dick Winters?" exclaimed Tim, who did not yet know that Dick had gone. "Well, then, our goose is cooked!"

At his words Daisy's hand flew to her throat, and she stared at the empty tray. "Goose is cooked? Oh, no. Dick wouldn't have—that sort of thing might make a good plot for a story, but in real life it's a disaster."

"Well, well, folks!" Dick's breezy voice burst upon them. "Some little benefit that was, thanks to Caroline! Stop your noise, Caroline! Oh, here's the proceeds." In Daisy's lap he poured handful after handful of coins and bills.

After he had told them all about it Tim apologized. "I'm not a judge, you old man," he said. "Thought you were after Caroline."

"No," said Dick slowly. "I'm not after Caroline, and across Tim's best Dick's honest eyes and Daisy's shining ones met.

HUMANE INSPECTOR
REVIVES 'DEAD' HORSE
Dr. C. Tamlin and George Tustin Come to the Aid of Afflicted Animal.

After the wagon from the fertilizer company had arrived on the scene to remove the "body" of a supposedly dead horse of Oxford and Waterloo streets last night about six o'clock, the driver was obliged to return empty-handed, so to speak, when the animal rose to its feet again after being attended by Dr. C. Tamlin and George Tustin, humane inspector.

The horse is owned by Stanley Hodgins of 1067 Florence street, and was being driven along Oxford street when it was suddenly seized with an acute attack of staggers. The owner asked the humane inspector to shoot the horse, believing it to be in its death agony, but Mr. Tustin refused to do so, assuring him that he could save the animal.

More than 200 people congregated to witness the resuscitation of the equine, which was finally accomplished after the inspector and Dr. Tamlin had worked over him for two hours and a half.

HARDING'S SHIP

Boat Bearing U.S. President Strikes Escort Zeilan In Heavy Fog.

HOLE TORN IN SIDE

Associated Press Despatch.
Seattle, July 27.—President Harding and his official party returned today to the continental United States from their visit to Alaska and Vancouver. Their ship narrowly escaped sinking the destroyer Zeilan, one of the escort ships, which, blinded by fog and battling with strong currents in the channel off Port Townsend, was thrown off its course and into the path of the navy transport Henderson bearing the president.

The destroyer was seriously damaged and when the Henderson continued its way the destroyer was left listing heavily to port, a hole torn in its side and three of its sister ships holding fast with two lines.

According to witnesses when the destroyer was first sighted the transport's bow was in a position to be rammed amidship and too close to avoid a collision.

The president had not left his cabin when the collision occurred and few of the Henderson's passengers knew of the accident until some time later. There was no alarm sounded and no confusion.

WILL LONDON BUY

STREET RAILWAY?

Mayor and Associates Will Ask Beck To Open Negotiations.

URGES ARBITRATION

Mayor Wenige and his associates are preparing for another whirl at the street railway with a view toward a possible purchase. Sir Adam Beck has been chosen as the "spear-head" to lead the way. Mayor Wenige, and his followers will receive the tidings at headquarters.

All this was decided at a hurried session of the transportation commission yesterday afternoon. Alderman Douglass moved that in view of Sir Adam's valuable experience in street railway affairs, not only in London, Windsor and other centers, but as a member of the arbitration board in Toronto, he should be asked to approach the company and ascertain its price.

This proposal was passed with mixed feelings from those congregated about the board. Ald. Watt voicing the query as to what he (Beck) had to do with it.

Opinions Varied.
Richard G. Ivey, vice-president, representing the company, was another to view askance this proposal from Ald. Douglass, urging that Mayor Wenige and his associates adopt arbitration proceedings with the provisions of bylaw 916, the city's agreement with the company.

But Ald. Gordon Drake was immensely pleased with everything and commended Ald. Douglass' foresight. "Good for you, Ald. Douglass," he exclaimed, "an arrow back in the Conservative party for this."

Ald. Douglass received this assurance in his modest way, but offered no comment.

"What do we want with the street railway?" questioned Ald. Peter Watt, as the subject was introduced. "We have too many public utilities as it is now."

"Have we any answer from the company to our last request?" asked Ald. Douglass.

Cannot Go To People.
"We can't go to the people without a price," volunteered Ald. Watt. "Of course I can understand the company's attitude. They can feel that they have us on the hip."

Ald. Watt made some comment that the company was probably making too much money to let go of their holdings, but Vice-president Ivey would not agree that the company was rolling in wealth.

"What has he got to do with it?" questioned Ald. Watt sharply, when Ald. Douglass moved that Sir Adam Beck go forth to ascertain what price the company would take.

"He's in the government now," explained Ald. Drake.

"We got a price from him last year," replied Ald. Watt. "We're dealing with the company now. We don't need any outsider."

"He must bring back a definite price," cautioned Mayor Wenige.

Submit to People.
"Are you going to give Sir Adam power to accept the price," asked Mr. Ivey, "or do you want to let our hands and leave the city free?"

Ald. Douglass insisted that whatever price was submitted would be submitted to the people, and Mr. Ivey promised that in all likelihood the ratepayers would say it was excessive and vote to reject it.

Ald. Douglass contended that the people would have purchased the road last year if they had been given a price, and again informed his colleagues that Sir Adam would be a capable representative and that he had had a wealth of experience.

Mr. Ivey said that arbitration proceedings would be done to both parties, and from the tenor of his remarks it could be safely assumed that the company will never submit a price to Sir Adam Beck, Ald. Douglass or anyone else.

Opposes Arbitration.
Ald. Drake promised that if no price was submitted the people would have as their alternative a chance to vote in the affirmative for the mayor's $900,000 motor bus project.

"Arbitration is a good thing," he humbugged, essayed Ald. Watt. "You'll submit as much that way as would buy the road."

During the meeting, Ald. Drake and Ald. Douglass, both of whom were in the 1922 council, argued the merits of the city hall vote in 1922.

Ald. Drake contended strenuously that it was understood then in the council that if the people did not want to build on the Spencer site the alternative plan would be the McCormick site. Ald. Douglass adhered to a contrary view.

Ald. Greer brought the conversation back into the proper channels by inquiring why the people decided that they did not want to buy either the street railway or the mayor's motor buses.

"Let their own consciences answer Ald. Watt, but his colleagues differed in this pronouncement. He added that he felt there was no need to interfere with the company just as long as effort was expended to improve the service.

The committee dealt with other items affecting street car transportation, and the city engineer was directed to confer with the company and bring in a report within a week as to what spot would be advisable for a new switch near the corner of Oxford street and the Wharncliffe road.

There was certain discussion relative to the proposed removal of the spur on West Oxford street and the installation of a switch on the Wharncliffe road, near Charles street.

Mr. Ivey assured that he could provide a 10-minute service through West London without the addition of this switch, and by the removal of the Oxford street spur, which extends east from Wharncliffe.

Glad to Remove Track.
"We would be glad to remove all our track in West London for all the revenue we get," he stated. "We only average a passenger and a half all day on the Oxford street extension."

The company will seek the opinion of the Ontario Railway and Municipal Board, with respect to the operation of a bus on Rectory street, between Dundas street and the Hamilton road, as consistently urged by Ald. Drake. Mr. Ivey admitted that this innovation would better the service materially and speed up matters generally.

There was some little discussion about the type of rail now being laid by the company, and Mr. Ivey insisted that this material was equally as good as any used by the hydro authorities.

ADMIRALTY CHIEFS THREATEN TO RESIGN

BRITISH NAVAL CHIEFS TO QUIT
IF PLEAS DENIEDSpecial Committee Believed To Have Refused Separate Air Force.

FAVORS COMPROMISE

Certain Naval Officers May Be Admitted to the Air Ministry.

Associated Press Despatch.
London, July 28.—The old controversy centering about the demand of the admiralty for a separate air force for the navy has been revived in the last few days and rumors are afloat that certain members of the admiralty board, including Earl Beatty, first sea lord, would resign unless their claim was granted.

There was acute tension in the matter during the early part of the present session of parliament when Bonar Law, then premier, announced that the question would be referred to the committee on imperial defence whose decision, it was understood, the admiralty had agreed to accept.

This committee has reported, and although it has not been publicly issued, it is believed to be adverse to the aims of the admiralty and that it proposes to relieve the situation by a compromise which would admit certain naval officers to the air ministry.

The admiralty which has the support of many Conservative members of the House of Commons is reported to be disgruntled with this result, hence the rumors of the impending resignations.

NOT BEEN CONSULTED
OF WAR ON RUMMERSPremier Ferguson Thinks U.S. and Canada Must Cooperate in Action.

Canadian Press Despatch.
Ottawa, July 28.—Asked today if anything officially had passed between the Ontario and Federal governments regarding the anti-rum export conference soon to be held between officials of the Canadian and United States customs departments, Hon. G. Howard Ferguson, premier of Ontario, replied in the negative.

"Since assuming office," said the new premier, "I have heard nothing about the matter in an official way." Mr. Ferguson is to meet a delegation in connection with the improvement of the Prescott-Ottawa highway.

Premier Ferguson believed that steps to stop rum running at frontier points must be taken by the governments of the two countries. He intimated that the attorney-general might have heard something about the approaching conference, but if he had Mr. Nickle did not pass the information along. Commenting upon the new government's road policy Mr. Ferguson said it would be aggressive and active, but would be shorn of some expensive features.

The premier, after hearing the deputations, will go to his home at Kemptville, where he will spend the week-end.

FARM FIRE NEAR CITY
CAUSES $5,000 LOSSSpontaneous Combustion Believed To Be Responsible For Outbreak.

A large barn belonging to George and Robert Nixon, on the second concession of Westminster, was destroyed by fire last night, which is thought to have started by spontaneous combustion. The barn which stood one-half mile to the west of Summers' side road on the second concession of Westminster, contained much valuable machinery, and the whole of the season's crops. It was one of the largest barns in the neighborhood. The fire was first noticed by Arthur Brooks and Joseph Mairs, who live close to the Nixon farm.

The flames when first seen were bursting through the ridge of the roof at the south end of the barn. Neighbors telephoned to the Nixon brothers, who live on the corner of the Base Line and Summers' side road. In answer to telephone calls the neighbors turned out in hundreds, but the fire had gained such headway that nothing of the contents of the barn was saved. It is thought that the fire had been burning in the hay mows of the barn for some time before it was noticed and within half an hour of discovery the roof had fallen in and the building was a mass of flames.

A small milk house close to the barn was destroyed, but the efforts of a volunteer bucket brigade were rewarded in the saving of the large brick house and implement shed and workshop.

Questioned at the time of the fire, George Nixon stated that he could give no reason for the barn burning other than that it might possibly have started from spontaneous combustion. He said that all the hay which had been moved into the barn was well cured and in first class condition, and that he is at a loss to explain the heating in the mows which may have set the barn afire.

The loss is largely covered by insurance and is estimated between four and five thousand dollars.

of Chatham Girl In AthensMiss Louise MacLachlan, Engaged in Relief Work, To Wed
Olig Vladimir Rodomer-Voucoutich on August 29.

Canadian Press Despatch.
Chatham, Ont., July 28.—Miss Louise MacLachlan of this city, who for several months has been engaged in relief work in Athens, will be married to Olig Vladimir Rodomer-Voucoutich at Athens on August 29, culminating a pretty romance which started at the home of her uncle, Dr. Alexander MacLachlan, principal of the International College, Smyrna. A year ago last May Miss MacLachlan accompanied her uncle on his return to Smyrna after a visit with his brother here. Mr. Rodomer, who is an employee of the Standard Oil, was a frequent visitor at the MacLachlan home in Smyrna and became acquainted with the Chatham girl while on one of these visits. Shortly after the return of Dr. MacLachlan to Smyrna the uprising occurred, but fortunately Miss MacLachlan was in Constantinople with a party of friends at the time. It will be remembered that an attack was made on the International College and Dr. MacLachlan received some rough treatment at the hands of the Turks. Miss MacLachlan arrived at Smyrna just as the refugees were fleeing from the city, and she returned to Athens without leaving the ship.

When the Near East Relief Association accepted the position of secretary to Mr. Rodomer, head of the organization. Mr. Rodomer was subsequently transferred from Smyrna to Salonica, and the friendship of Mr. Rodomer and the Canadian girl was continued, which ripened into love, and finally the relatives here were apprised of their engagement. The wedding will take place in the drawing room of the old castle in Athens which is the headquarters of the relief association.

MINE OPERATORS AND WORKERS FAIL
TO REACH TERMSNegotiations Over Wages and Union Recognition Break Down.

WILL INTERVENE

U. S. Officials Likely To Enter
Dispute To Prevent a Strike.

Special to The Advertiser.
Atlantic City, N. J., July 28.—Anthracite operators and miners' leaders left for their homes today while Thomas Rogers, government observer, carried to Washington a report that negotiations over wages and union recognition had definitely broken down.

Official intervention is either expected by both sides, as otherwise a strike would be probably begun on Aug. 31, when the existing wage agreement expires.

An informal conference called by the United States coal commission is another attempt to bring operators and men together before Sept. 1 is anticipated.

John J. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers remained here for a series of conferences with district presidents.

The break off of negotiations occurred when operators announced flatly unalterable opposition to the demands of the United Mine Workers regarding union recognition and the "check off," or scheme by which miners' union dues are paid by the company before the worker gets his wages.

GERMAN FOOD CRISIS
WORSE THAN WARTIMEWomen of Ruhr Wander On Streets Weeping as Money Is Worthless.

Special Cable to The Advertiser.
London, July 28.—The food crisis in Germany is worse than it was in wartime, special correspondents of leading British papers report.

Food queues in Berlin are longer, and suffering is more severe and widespread than in 1918 despatches declare. Numerous German towns are threatened with famine, with civil war foreseen.

The tense atmosphere in the Ruhr and which is described as resembling those days of early November, 1918, on the eve of the revolution. The correspondents say the German government insists it is prepared to put down sternly any attempted coup.

The Manchester Guardian's Cologne correspondent says important developments are anticipated within a fortnight.

The spectacle is seen of the poor women of the Ruhr, wandering about the streets, tears streaming down their cheeks holding out handfuls of worthless money which will not buy the ingredients of the simplest meal. Farmers, discouraged because money is valueless are refusing to sell food, and special police are being assigned to duty to guard food stocks.

Increasing use of the American dollar for trading and a reversion to bartering is also reported from Berlin. The dollar is being used in any international deals while many employees and servants are dealing in foreign commodity the employer deals.

The servant of a British official in Berlin resigned, saying he was going to take a job in the country. "What wages will you receive?" his master asked. "A hundred weight of rye per week," the servant replied.

BY COMMUNISTSPrepares To Combat Anti-Fascist Demonstrations in Country.

REVOLT IS FEARED

Radical Element To Obey Government Ban on Outdoor Meetings.

By CARL D. GROOT.
Special Cable to The Advertiser.

Berlin, July 28.—Germany girded herself today for trouble tomorrow, when Communists throughout the country will meet in anti-Fascist demonstrations. Every available police reserve will be on duty. All leave in the army has been stopped for eight days.

The first sign of disorder is to be met with a mailed fist. The authorities are afraid to let any demonstration get a start, with an appalling food shortage at hand and the country snowed under by trillions of worthless paper marks. It is feared the first move against the government will enlist thousands ordinarily not inclined to revolt.

Sunday's demonstrations will be all indoors contrary to custom. The Communists have agreed to observe the government's ban on open air meetings.

The money shortage is so acute now that banks are meeting only one per cent of customers' demands. For instance, the branch serving the British and American embassies obtained only 50,000,000 marks this week and instead of the 5,000,000,000 asked for.

Rev. Wardle Stafford, on behalf of the assembly, wished him speed and said to Toronto the conference was doing something to strengthen imperial bonds.

JUNIOR EIGHTS RACE WILL BE ROWED AGAIN TODAY

Canadian Press Despatch.
St. Catharines, July 28.—A small but intensely interested crowd was on the grandstand at 10:30 o'clock this morning, when the six crews, University of Toronto, Ottawa, Argonauts, Lachine, Hamilton and Detroit, lined up for the start of the junior eights, which was ordered to be rowed over by the regatta committee last night. Yesterday's contest, which was adjudged to be "no race" as a result of the finish gun being discharged prematurely, an occurrence unique in Canadian rowing annals, provided as keen competition as could be desired. For three-quarters of the race it was a very close contest, and when the crews stopped rowing Judges Fournier, Bright and Seavey, were unable to name a winner.

A light drizzle promises wet weather for this afternoon's event.

Raise Funds For Extensive Liquor Expedition.

Special Cable to The Advertiser.
London, July 28.—The report of a committee appointed to investigate liquor smuggling into the United States was laid before the British cabinet today, and a statement on the subject will be made in the Commons probably next week.

Simultaneously with this announcement, the Daily Express today exposed an attempt by Lieut.-Col. Sir Broderick Hartwell, Bart., former consul at Naples, to raise funds for a whiskey-selling expedition on the high seas.

The baronet stated he already had arranged for 5,000 cases, and guarantees to return the invested money plus 20 per cent interest, within 60 days. The minimum investment per case is one case of whiskey in bond note, which is not subject to tax since it is for foreign consumption.

The circular carries illustrations of a newspaper clipping describing how a million dollars was made by a British skipper selling whiskey on the American coast.

SPINE INJURIES
FEATURE OF SIX
ACCIDENT CASESMedical Men Interested in the Remarkable Sequence of "Broken Backs."

SIX IN FEW DAYS

Three Proved Fatal While the Other Three Victims Are Still Dangerously Ill.

Members of the medical profession of London and district are interested in a series of accidents which have been brought to their attention the past few days, a feature of which has been the fact that six men have received injuries which diagnosis shows to include broken backs. That this series of unfortunate accidents should be so similar is regarded with more than passing interest by physicians and surgeons called to attend the victims.

Added to the coincidence of these back injuries is the fact that three of the men so seriously injured are farmers who were engaged in their regular duties when misfortune overtook them, each man falling from a load of hay. Three of the victims have succumbed, while the condition of the remaining trio is, in each case, regarded as dangerous.

Michael Austin of Godeerich is the latest reported victim of this series of similar accidents. Mr. Austin fell while at work at Godeerich Thursday, the impact breaking his back. He was rushed to St. Joseph's Hospital here, where his condition is serious. Dr. W. J. Stevenson is attending him. The initial accident in this district was that which befell James Johnson of 101 Clarence street, who suffered injuries near St. Thomas, when an auto in which he was riding overtook him about two weeks ago. The young Londoner was taken to Amasa Wood Hospital, St. Thomas, where he died a few hours later.

Hope for Recovery.
The next victim was Charles Sears of Windsor, aged 30, who is believed to have suffered a broken back when he misjudged the depth of the water while in bathing at Port Stanley July 25. He is receiving treatment in the Flower City, and attending physicians hope for his recovery.

John Knott of Belmont, aged 49 years, was loading hay on his farm wagon, when he fell to the ground, fracturing his back and shoulders. Mr. Knott, who was a well-known farmer in the district, was transferred to Victoria Hospital, where X-ray photographs revealed that his back, in its upper portion was broken, the victim suffering paralysis of his limbs and trunk. So severe were his injuries that Mr. Knott died late Wednesday night.

Robert Kidd, aged 62, of Denfield, met with a similar accident on Monday last, slipping from a load of hay on his farm. He fell from a height of about 10 feet, and was taken to St. Joseph's Hospital Tuesday afternoon, on the advice of Dr. W. J. Stevenson, who attended him. Thursday night he lapsed into a state of coma, and passed away early Friday morning.

The Sixth Case.

The sixth, and friends of the victims hope he is the last patient to be admitted to district hospitals with a broken back, is Thomas Judd, aged 31, a farmer residing near London Junction. He fell from a load of hay on his farm Thursday, sustaining a broken back. While it is not definitely settled that Mr. Judd's back was broken by the fall, it is suspected, and the extent of the force on the spinal column, and fractured vertebrae resulted. However the similarity of the injuries is regarded with interest, because a broken back is comparatively rare in accident cases, and great force to the body being usually required to produce it.

WOULD KEEP FARRELL

Move To Retain Him as Provincial Immigration Official.

A number of residents of the city and township who are interested in the placing of farm help in this district and the bringing here of men likely to buy farms, have taken action to have the services of John Farrell retained as immigration official. Mr. Farrell is probably the best known immigration man in this district. He knows the whole district, is a farmer himself, and has wide acquaintance, the men and do more than any other man to keep them on the farms.

Representations will be made to the Ontario Government looking to having Mr. Farrell placed in London, permanently.

DAVID LLOYD GEORGE Says the Lausanne Treaty Is a Disaster

Lausanne Treaty Is Not Peace—It Is Merely One Milestone In a General March of Defeat—the Turk Remains the Same.

Special Cable to The Advertiser. London, July 28.—The Turk may be a bad ruler, but he is the prince of anglers. The cunning and patience with which he lands the most refractory fish, once he has hooked it, is beyond compare.

What inimitable play we have witnessed for six months on the shores of Lake Leman. Once the fish seemed to have broken the tackle—that was when the first conference came to an abrupt end. It simply meant, however, that the wily oriental was giving out plenty of line. He knew the moment would come when they would return with the hook well in their gullets and the play begin once more—the reeling in and the reeling out; the line sometimes taut and strained, but never snapping. Time and patience rewarded him. At last, the huge tarpon are lying beached on the banks—Britain, France, Italy and the United States—high and dry, landed and helpless, without a swish left in their tails, glistening and gasping in the summer sun.

It is little wonder Ismet had a smile on his face when all was over. Reports from Angora state that peace is hailed there as a great Turkish triumph. And so it is. If the Turk could govern as well as he angles, his would be the most formidable empire in the world. Unfortunately, he is the worst of rulers, hence the trouble—his own and that of those who unhappily have drawn him as governor in the lottery of life.

A Picture of the Struggle. The able correspondent of the London Daily Telegraph at the Lausanne conference supplied us from time to time with vivid pen pictures of the four greatest powers of the world struggling in the coils of the squalid and broken remains of an empire with an aggregate population equal to that of a couple of English countries that I could name. This what he wrote a few days ago:

"The records of the conference present an even more marvellous series of concessions and surrenders. What was frayed before is threadbare now. The Allies have whittled away their own rights with a lavish hand in the cause of peace. The figure that the European delegates are cutting in Lausanne and the agents of the concessionaires in Angora—all alike representatives of the west—has been rendered undignified as much by the manner as by the matter of their worsting."

Since those distressing words were written the powers have sunk yet deeper into the slough of humiliation.

The Times correspondent, wiring after the agreement, writes in a strain of deep indignation at the blow inflicted on the prestige of the west by this extraordinary treaty.

In order to gauge the extent of the disaster to civilization which this treaty implies, it is only necessary to give a short summary of the war aims of the Allies in Turkey. The experience more especially of the past century had demonstrated clearly that the Turk could be no longer trusted with the property, honor or lives of any Christian race within his dominions. So a series of agreements were entered into in the early months of 1915 between France, Russia and ourselves by which the greater part of Turkey, with its conglomerate population, was to be partitioned at the end of the war. Cilicia and Syria were allocated to France, Mesopotamia to Britain, and Armenia and Constantinople to Russia. Palestine was to be placed under the joint control of Britain and France. Arabia was to be declared independent, and territory carved largely out of a desert—but including some famous cities of the east, Damascus, Hama and Aleppo—was to be constituted into a new Arab state, partly under the protection of France and partly of Britain. Smyrna and its precincts were to be allotted to Greece if she joined her forces with those of the Allies in the war. The Straits were to be demilitarized and garrisoned. When Italy came into the war later on it was stipulated that in the event of the partition of Turkey being carried out in the pursuance of these agreements, territories in Southern Anatolia should be assigned to Italy for development. In the main the distributed regions were before the war being cultivated and developed by a population which was western and not Turanian in its origin and outlook. This population represented the original inhabitants of the soil.

The War Policy of the Allies. I have set out shortly what the war policy of the Allies was in reference to Turkey. The treaty of Sevres considerably modified that policy in many vital aspects. By that treaty Constantinople, Cilicia and Southern Anatolia were left to the Turk. Armenia was created into an independent state. There were many objections which could be raised to the original proposals of 1915, as it might be argued they contemplated handing over in Cilicia and Southern Anatolia populations which in the main were Turkish and Moslem to Christian rule. But in substance, the modified plan of Sevres was sound, and, if carried out, would have conducted to the well-being of millions to be liberated by its terms forever from Turkish rule. The world at large also would have benefited by the opportunity afforded to the industrious and intelligent Armenian and Greek populations of Turkey to renew the fertility of this land once so bountiful in its gifts, and thus enriching man's store of good things. The barbarian invasion which withered that fertility was pushed back into the interior by the treaty of Sevres. The treaty of Lausanne has extended and perpetuated its sway from the Black Sea to the Mediterranean.

I have explained the why and the wherefore of Sevres. But why Lausanne? It is a long story. A compound of shortsightedness, disloyalty, selfishness and pusillanimity amongst nations and their statesmen. And more than all, fate happened to be in its grimmest mood when dealing with this problem. The Russian revolution eliminated that great country from a solution of the problem on lines of protection for the oppressed races of Turkey, and cast its might on the side of the oppressor. President Wilson was inclined to recommend that the United States should undertake a mandate for the Armenians. Had he succeeded, what a different story many years to come would also tell. His health broke down, and America would have none of his humanitarian schemes. Then came the departure of Sonnino from the Quirinal. With him went for a momentous while the old dreams of Italian colonization, which in the past had done so much to spread civilization in three continents. His successors were home-lier men. I have still my doubts whether they served Italy best by the less adventurous and more domesticated policy they pursued. The future may decide that issue. But whatever decision the time for action has passed away, and unless and until there is another break up in Turkey, the chance that Italy lost since 1919 will not be recovered. Will it ever come back?

Unity Was Broken. Then there was the French check in Cilicia, and negotiations at Angora with Mustafa Kemal, which were both single-handed and underhanded, for the allies were not even informed of what was going on. This was a fatal step, for it broke up the unity which alone would enable the western powers to deal effectively with the Turk. This unity was never fully recreated.

The last fatal change was the Greek revolt against Venizelos. It is often said that he is the greatest statesman thrown up by the race since Pericles. In all he has undertaken he has never failed his people. Disaster has always come to them when they refused to follow his guidance. When King Alexander was killed by a monkey, the Greeks were called upon to decide between Constantine and Venizelos. Their choice was ruinous to their country, and no greater evil can befall a nation than to choose for its ruler a stubborn man with no common sense. Before the advent of Constantine, Greece, with no aid and little countenance from the powers, was able to hold the forces of Mustafa Kemal easily at bay, and even drive them back into his fastnesses. In encounter after encounter the Greek army, led by men chosen for their military gifts, and sufficiently well equipped, inflicted defeat after defeat on the armies of Angora.

But with Constantine came a change. In the Greek army courtiers were substituted for soldiers in the high command. French, British and Italian public opinion, remembering the treachery of Constantine during the war, altered their attitude towards the Greeks, who had elevated him to the throne in defiance of allied sentiment. Indifferent powers became hostile. Hostile powers became active. Final catastrophe began with a heroic but foolish march of the Greek army into the defiles of Asia Minor, followed by the inevitable retreat. It was consummated when Constantine, for dyn-

"IT IS NOT PEACE."

Here are the men to whom Lloyd George refers in his article today denouncing the Lausanne treaty as no peace. From left to right, the top row shows: Sir Horace Rumbold, General Pella, Ismet Pasha and Kemal. In the lower row, on the left is King Constantine and on the right is Venizelos.

Lloyd George Says:

"What next? Lausanne is not a terminus. It is only a milestone. Where is the next? No one claims that this treaty is peace with honor. It is not even peace."

"If one were dealing with a regenerated Turk there might be hope. But the burning of Smyrna and the cold-blooded murder of 130,000 Greeks in the interior prove that the Turk is still the same."

"From Sevres to Mudania was a retreat. From Mudania to Lausanne is a rout."

"Why Lausanne? A compound of shortsightedness, disloyalty, selfishness and pusillanimity amongst nations and their statesmen. And more than all, Fate happened to be in its grimmest mood when dealing with this problem."

"President Wilson was inclined to recommend that the United States should undertake a mandate for the Armenians. Had he succeeded, what a different story many years to come would also tell."

"That the history of the east, and probably of the west, should have been changed by the bite of a monkey (resulting in King Alexander's death, the succession of Constantine and the Greek debacle) is just another grimace of the comic spirit which bursts now and again into the pages of every great tragedy."

How the Bite of a Monkey Has Changed the Destinies of Europe—A Grimace of Fate In the Midst of Tragedy.

astic reasons, appointed to the command of troops in Asia Minor a crazy general whose mental condition had been under medical review.

Require Leadership.

The Greeks fight valiantly when well led, but, like the French, once they know they are not well led, confidence goes, and with confidence courage. Before the Kemal attack reached their lines, the Greek army was beaten and in full retreat. With the attack came panic; with panic, the complete destruction of what was once a fine army. With the disappearance of that army went the last hope for the salvation of Anatolia. That the history of the east, and probably of the west, should have been changed by the bite of a monkey is just another grimace of the comic spirit which bursts now and again into the pages of every great tragedy.

All that could be done afterwards was to save the remnants of a great policy. Western civilization put up its last fight against the return of savagery into Europe when, in September and October of last year, British soldiers and sailors, deserted by allies and associates alike, saved Constantinople from hideous carnage. The pact of Mudania was not Sevres, but it certainly was better than Lausanne. From Sevres to Mudania was a retreat. From Mudania to Lausanne is a rout.

What next? Lausanne is not a terminus. It is only a milestone. Where is the next? No one claims that this treaty is peace with honor. It is not even peace. If one were dealing with a regenerated Turk there might be hope. But the burning of Smyrna and the cold-blooded murders of 130,000 Greeks in the interior prove that the Turk is still the same. To quote again from the correspondent of the Times at Lausanne, "all such evidence as can be obtained here confirms the belief that the new Turk is but the old, and that the coming era of enlightenment and brotherly love in Turkey, for which it is the correct thing officially to hope, will be, from the foreigner's point of view, at best humiliating and at worst a bloody chaos."

Promise Cab Evolution In London

To-morrow the YELLOW CAB CO. will make its bow to London, and place in commission new YELLOW CAB equipment with a definite promise that we will give to the people of this city the service, system and satisfaction they have been wishing for and have never had.

The YELLOW CAB CO. is a London concern, London-owned and operated by London men, vitally interested in the welfare and progress of this city and its environs. At the very outset of its career this company has the organization and financial responsibility which warrants our fullest confidence.

YELLOW CABS are the finest cabs in the work and are the product of the YELLOW CAB MANUFACTURING COMPANY of Chicago, which builds the cabs for the Yellow Cab operating company of Chicago—the largest and most successful company in the world. We have the same system, the same type of organization and the same methods of operation and maintenance, only on a smaller scale.

YELLOW CABS will be driven, not by ordinary cab-drivers, or the irresponsible kind you have known in the past, but by men picked for their intelligence, decency and ability, who have been trained to know what the public wants in courteous and efficient service.

We want the people of London to know they will regulate our rates. We want lower rates. That depends on volume. So it is practically in your hands to make the rates. Give us the volume and we will give you low rates.

As rapidly as London shows that it wants more cabs we will add YELLOW CABS to our initial fleet. We don't care how many. The more the better for all of us.

Watch for YELLOW CABS to-morrow.

For Sunday At Home
 SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON FOR JULY 29.
 Scripture Lesson: Matthew 9:9-13; Luke 5:27-32. Golden Text: Luke 5:32.
 By REV. T. DE COURCY RAYNER.
 Can a man who has made shipwreck of his life ever find a chance to begin life anew? This is one of the great problems of modern life, and our lesson points the way to a satisfactory solution of the problem. With God, all things are possible. Matthew, or Levi, the son of Alphaeus, was a tax-gatherer at Capernaum. His special duty would be to collect tolls from the fishermen on the lake, and perhaps from the merchants traveling southward from Damascus. He was, therefore, one of the hated and ill-reputed publicans. He was despised by his fellow-countrymen, who considered that "he had sold his country" to the Roman oppressor; he was the heart-break of his family; and was considered to have fallen so low that even the doors of the synagogues were closed to him. What hope, then, was there for him? What chance to begin life anew? None—until Jesus found him and changed his whole life.

1. Matthew Found—When Jesus went down into the little customs office where Matthew was, what a wonderful transformation was wrought. Matthew, the publican, low-countryman, who considered that "he had sold his country" to the Roman oppressor; he was the heart-break of his family; and was considered to have fallen so low that even the doors of the synagogues were closed to him. What hope, then, was there for him? What chance to begin life anew? None—until Jesus found him and changed his whole life.

2. Matthew Preaching—We read nothing of Matthew as a preacher, and yet he preaches to us today through the Gospel he has written. "You are writing a Gospel, a chapter in the deeds that you do and the words that you say. A Gospel that is false, or a Gospel that is true? Say! What is the Gospel according to you?"

3. Matthew Serving—He made a feast for his old companions, and invited Jesus there. In so doing, Matthew solved the problem of the modern Church. He drew the Saviour down among breaking hearts, and he drew those breaking hearts into touch with Him whom they thought to be whole. Real service ever seeks the eternal welfare of men.

4. Matthew Preaching—We read nothing of Matthew as a preacher, and yet he preaches to us today through the Gospel he has written. "You are writing a Gospel, a chapter in the deeds that you do and the words that you say. A Gospel that is false, or a Gospel that is true? Say! What is the Gospel according to you?"

BIBLE SEARCHER STORY FOR CHILDREN, "THE SICK GIRL"
 Once upon a time there lived a little girl in a small city across the sea. Her father was quite a wealthy gentleman, and a very important official of the Church was in the city—only they did not call it a "church." He dearly loved his little daughter, and when she was about 12 years of age, she was taken very ill, and her father sent for the physician of the city; but in spite of all his efforts the little girl quickly died. Her father was so grieved that he feared that she might die. What could the poor father do? He did not know, until a servant told him of a strange new teacher who was in the city, and how people declared that this teacher could make sick people well again. So the father hurried to find this teacher, and ask him to come and heal his little girl; but, although he found the teacher all right, the good man did not hurry to him. The result was that before they had gone very far a servant came running to the father to tell him that his little daughter was dead. His good teacher did not worry, instead he told the poor father not to be afraid, but to believe. Then, when they arrived at the teacher's house, he told the hired mourners not to make so much noise as the little girl was not dead, but only sleeping. However, the mourners only laughed at him, so he had them turned out of the house. Then he took the little girl's mother and father, and three of his followers, and went into the house. The good teacher then took hold of the dead girl's hand and said: "Talitha, cumi," which means "little girl, arise," and, to the surprise of her parents, she came back to life again, and sat up strong and well. This made the parents and the little girl so happy that they ever after they loved that kind teacher with all their hearts. Wouldn't you love him, too? This story is found in Mark's Gospel, last chapter and verses. Who was the little girl? What office did her father hold? Who was the wonderful teacher? What was the name of the city where this happened?

Canadian Cheddar cheese is regaining the ground which was lost in English and European markets. Of late years, Canadian cheese has fallen back somewhat in the markets of the mother country, not on account of lack of quality, but a lack of uniformity and grading. This fact has been stressed by both provincial and federal departments of agriculture since the closing years of the war, and the long struggle to regain supremacy in the English market is starting to bring results, say the exporters in this district. The market reports of late show a steadily-increasing quotation for all grades and classes of Canadian cheese, and yesterday's market was indicated on the local cheese board quotations throughout the province gives a new high level of 19, and in some cases 19½ cents per pound. It is understood that this is the highest quotation since the boom days following the signing of the armistice.

'Admit I'm a Good Reporter' Says Cobb Who Won His Way In His Letter to the Kaiser
 How Irvin S. Cobb's Audacity Shocked the German High Officials and Gave Him Freedom of the German Lines.

By IRVIN S. COBB.
 If anybody claims I am an authentic humorist I can show him a scrapbook full of clippings, signed by expert book reviewers, to prove the contrary.
 But if anybody says I am not a good reporter, I'll bet him a million dollars he is a liar.

I AM a good reporter, and I admit it, and I can prove it, and I am proud of it. I know how to go out and get a news story and how to assemble the stuff afterward. I know how to play on a news story as though it were a concertina or a crush hat; which is to say, I know how to stretch a small story out to the length of a column, and by the same token how to pack down a big story into the compass of a paragraph.

I can gather my facts in the midst of noise and excitement, and it needs but a few minutes to write down the gist of more noise and more excitement.

With one lobe of my brain I can think of the story I am writing and with the other lobe of my brain I can be watching the clock and keeping tally of the narrow margin between now and press time.

I am not a born reporter; I never saw one. Reporting, like any other specialized work, is a trade, and I learned, not one to be born with, and I learned mine. I acquired it by experience, by making the same mistake often that, after while, I learned not to make it quite so often.

The real test of a real reporter is exactly what we mean to write—a business letter. He says he wants the American people to know something authentic about the conduct of his troops. We're going to tell him so, in a letter. And now the question is, will you undertake to start this letter forward by wire through the proper channels after we write it?

This second shock to his Prussian sensibilities seemed almost as severe as the first one had.

But before we left we wore down his powers of resistance and he gave his reluctant consent to aid us, but disclaimed any responsibility for the possible consequences of our madness.

So we went away and in conference drafted our letter—a plain business letter setting forth a plain business proposition. I wrote a letter not too formal, and yet, I trust, not too chatty. When it had been properly translated into German we took it back to our unhappy legation.

On reading it he suffered shock three. Nevertheless, being a man of his word, he took it and started it upon its way.

The Kaiser Replies.
 We sat down to wait. We waited three days. On the morning of the fourth day came a gorgeous military figure, wrapped in a magnificent Huns gray coat, with medals on his chest and the badges of a staff colonel on his uniform.

He bore to us an imposing parchment document, heavy with seals and ribbons, in which, in German script, was a statement of our mission, informing all whom it might concern not so much his ability to write as it is his ability to get the news, and to do that he must know news by his own method of getting the desired result. One of the best reporters I know is a man who works by various and round-about methods. He has a natural flair for intrigue.

Now, my method almost invariably has been the exact opposite of this. I have no instinct for intrigue, and mighty little of the deductive quality in my make-up. I generally have had recourse to the direct approach, the frontal attack, as you might say.

My plan has been to go straight to the person who, I believed, could furnish me with the information I needed, and in so many words to ask that person for the information. If he turned me down I was done with that person.

But it very often happened that he did not turn me down. In fact, my system has successfully operated so often that I am convinced it is, for me at least, the best possible system.

In the early autumn of 1914, three of us landed in the German border city of Aix-la-Chapelle. We had been brought there as prisoners from Southern Belgium by the Germans. With the aid of the American consul at Aix and of Ambassador Gerard, we convinced the Imperial government that we were not British spies but properly accredited correspondents from a then neutral country.

We were not no longer were dodged by German secret service men, we were cooped up in that town as effectually as though we had been under lock and key.

Word reached us that the Germans were about to permit one chosen group of writers from neutral nations to make a trip along the western front. We were informed that the chances for our party of three to be included in this excursion were about one in a thousand.

Nevertheless, we promptly made application to the Imperial government for the great privilege. In return we received polite but ambiguous messages from various chancelleries.

We grew more and more desperate. One afternoon we three went to the Kaiser's unofficial civilian representative in Aix-la-Chapelle, a wealthy German manufacturer who had rendered various friendly services to us. We told him we meant to write a personal letter to the emperor, asking that we three be allowed forthwith to visit the imperial forces in the field, and we requested this valuable office in expediting the transmission of this letter to high headquarters, wherever high headquarters might be.

Well, when he had rallied somewhat, he told us in strained and startled tones that what we desired was impossible, preposterous, unheard of.

You have told us before now that active emperor is a great business man," said our spokesman. "Well, if he is, then a good, smart, business letter should appeal to him. And that was exactly what we mean to write—a business letter. He says he wants the American people to know something authentic about the conduct of his troops. We're going to tell him so, in a letter. Life's Little Comedies ~ An Evening with a Summer Bachelor

PHILIP SNOWDEN SAYS LABOR WILL SINK CLASS IN NATIONAL WELFARE

British Labor Statesman Believes That Trade Unions Would Not Be Allowed To Dominate a Labor Government— Outlook of Trade Unions Is Widening.

LABOR RULE WOULD BE CONSERVATIVE

By PHILIP SNOWDEN, M.P.
In the following article Mr. Philip Snowden, M.P., deals with the suggestion that any Labor government which may arise in the future will be simply an instrument for carrying out the orders of the trade unions.

There is a fear in certain quarters that a Labor government will be simply the instrument for carrying out the orders of the trade unions, which, in the main, form the constituent parts of the Labor party. This is not an unnatural fear, but in reality there is little reason to expect that it will be the fact. If it were a likelihood, then all that is said about the Labor party being a class party would be justified. I will give some reasons why I think this fear is groundless.

The present constitution of the Labor party, under which the affiliated bodies promote candidatures for which they are financially responsible, is not an ideal method. But there was no other way in which a Labor party could be started. Gradually, however, the method of selection is being broadened, and political considerations, rather than sectional trade union interests, are becoming the deciding factor in the adoption of parliamentary candidates. A few years ago the constitution of the Labor party was changed, and local Labor parties were given the standing of affiliated bodies. These local Labor parties are composed of the local branches of socialist societies and trade unions, whose national bodies are eligible for affiliation to the Labor party, and also of individual members. Any person, whether a member of a trade union or socialist society or not, can join a local Labor party. These local Labor parties occupy a position in relation to the national party precisely similar to that held by local Conservative or Liberal associations.

More and more the selection and financing of parliamentary candidates is being undertaken by these local Labor parties. I believe that at the last general election the majority of the Labor candidates were run as the nominees of local Labor parties, and judging by the preparations which are being made for the next election, it seems likely that a considerably larger proportion of the Labor candidatures at the next election will be similarly promoted. In addition, the Socialist societies will promote about one-fifth of the candidatures. So that the majority of a parliamentary Labor party under a Labor government will be dominated by trade union interests with no wide political outlook.

Widening of Trade Union Outlook. But even if the majority of a Labor government were trade union officials and nominees, it is not unlikely that national considerations would be subordinated to sectional trade union interests. Believe me, when I say that nothing has been more remarkable than the widening of the trade union outlook in recent years. It is seen in the trade union movement itself in the growing demand for trade union amalgamation, and for the strengthening of the powers of the general councils of the trade unions to deal with matters common to all classes of labor. An examination of the agenda of a trades union congress will show in a striking manner that the trade unions, as trade unions, are as much interested in great political issues as in purely industrial questions. The annual conference of the National Labor party meets in London this week, and the conference agenda throws a strong light on the mind and outlook of the party. It shows that it is not the trade unions, but the local Labor parties, which make the program and direct the policy of the party. Of the hundreds of resolutions on the agenda, not more than a dozen have come from affiliated trade unions. It is the local Labor parties, and to a small extent the Socialist societies, which have brought forward the topics for discussion. That is to say, it is the affiliated bodies which are not sectional which are the active elements in the party.

It may be true that a Labor government would attach more importance to the decisions of its national conferences than a Conservative or Liberal leader does to the resolutions of party conferences. But no Labor government could be hidebound. Nor, I am sure, would the party outside parliament try to interfere with its discretion so long as it kept its policy and legislative program within the general lines of the party platform, and its election pledges. Conference resolutions are not parliamentary bills. Conference resolutions indicate in broad outline the ideas of a party on a particular subject, but the treatment of the idea in a legislative proposal is a matter which must be left to the decision of the responsible executive, who must take all relevant circumstances into consideration.

The Advisory Committees. In a very general way, then, the resolutions on the agenda of a Labor party conference indicate the mind of the party on public questions, and they give an indication of the line which a Labor government would take when it rules the country. It is important that it should be known, because it shows that the Labor party takes its present and future responsibilities very seriously, and that it is not a party of expediency. The members of the party executive, who are neither members of parliament nor members of the party executive, have joined these committees. These advisory committees prepare memoranda on special subjects for the information of members of parliament and the party executive, working out in detail difficult administrative problems. The result is that the Labor party is probably better equipped than are the members of any other political party.

Resolutions of the annual conference of the party, which are brought forward, of course, by the rank and file, who have only a general knowledge of the subjects dealt with, are afterwards submitted to these advisory committees, who work out a scheme for giving legislative effect to the general idea. The resolutions of the annual conference, therefore, even when somewhat detailed in their character, must not be taken as committing the party to the precise terms of the resolutions, but as indicating in broad outline the party's views on the subject.

Labor's Fundamental Aim. The fundamental difference between the Labor party and other political parties is this, that while other political parties accept the basis of the present industrial system, namely, private ownership and private management of productive concerns as a system which must be preserved, while admitting that it has evils which should be ameliorated or remedied, the Labor party believes that such a system is inherently wrong, and that no amount of tinkering with it can make it permanently tolerable for the majority. The program, therefore, of the Labor party is framed with the ultimate aim always in view. The "acid test" which it applies to every ameliorative proposal is whether it gets down to the root cause of economic and social ills.

It is ridiculous to assume that the Labor party believes that capitalism is the cause of every ill which afflicts mankind today. But it does believe that general poverty, and all the evils which arise from that, are due to capitalism, and that the abolition of the private monopoly of the means of life would insure conditions where poverty would not be the compulsory lot of the vast majority. When such conditions had been established it would depend upon the character and will of the individual whether he made the best of his opportunities, and if he failed to do so economic conditions would not be responsible.

This fundamental aim of the Labor party can be detected by the discerning mind in all the resolutions of the party conferences, and in its schemes for dealing with problems, which are the common concern of all political parties, such as municipal administration, public health, national insurance, unemployment, education, finance, and taxation, housing, land reform, and agriculture, and the empire and international relations. How a Labor government would be likely to deal with these problems I shall explain in detail in subsequent articles. And let me state explicitly that the Labor party is wholly united upon this fundamental aim. When my Socialist motion was brought before the House of Commons it was widely reported in the press that this was a move on the part of the Socialist members of the party to commit the whole party to Socialism, and that my action was seen by the trade union members. That is not the case. And it will be seen when the debate is resumed and the vote is taken that the foundation for such an assumption.

The Extremist Section. Neither is it true, nor will it be true of a Labor government, that the party is under the domination of what is called the "extremist" section. The party is not a party of extremists, it is true, and it will have, but they are mostly young men with little experience. Time and experience will mellow them; or, if they do not, they will become useful members of the Tory party. "The pure and unadorned" in politics, as the world generally, often wrong, or at least expect a Labor government to err rather on the side of conservatism than of "extremism." While consistent in its principles it would hesitate to go too far. It would know full well that it could not move faster than public opinion. It is a crime often charged against the present leaders of the Labor party that they are too punctilious in their observance of the forms and procedure of the House of Commons. But that is a good fault. And it is due to the knowledge that the House of Commons, with all its anachronisms and shortcomings, is the greatest achievement of democratic government. The leaders of the Labor party will do nothing to bring that institution into popular disfavor, because they look to the time when Labor will control it, amend its deficiencies, and make it the instrument of the popular will.

The question is sometimes asked how a Labor government would be formed. While in theory the Labor party would expect to elect a government, in practice it usually shows a conservative spirit. This is proved by the way in which it re-elects, year after year, the same men to its executive councils. But at the same time there is a decided unwillingness to put any man in the position of permanent leader of the party. It is only recently that the elected chairman of the parliamentary Labor party has been designated leader of the party; and it is doubtful if that change would have been accepted if it had not been necessary because he is now leader of the opposition. I remember in the early days of the parliamentary Labor party what safeguards were adopted to prevent the chairmanship of the party from becoming a party leadership in the sense in which the other political leaders are not only parliamentary leaders, but they are too party in the country. Chairmanship of the parliamentary party has always been, and is still, an annual office, and on many occasions a chairman, though still in the House of Commons, has been superseded. Behind this practice is a fear and an idea—the fear that a permanent leader may develop into an autocrat, and the idea that it is not for a leader to dictate policy and propose programs. According to the democratic theory it is the party who should settle policy and programs.

But I am sure that there will be few, if any, members of the parliamentary Labor party, in the day when Labor has to form a government, who will suggest that the various offices should be filled by a vote of the parliamentary party. The leader of the party at the time will, of course, be called upon to form the government, and it is unthinkable that he could accept that great responsibility unless he were free to select the men to serve under him.

There is one further point about the constitution of a Labor government which needs to be mentioned. Some of the men who would undoubtedly be invited to join such a government—and who ought to be in it—are high officials of great trade unions. It would be very undesirable that they should retain these positions when members of a government. For instance, my friend, Mr. J. H. Thomas, could not at the same time be general secretary of the Railwaymen's Union and president of the board of trade. It is true that during the war there were Labor members who took office without, I believe, being required to give up their trade union positions. But those were exceptional times. A minister is required now to resign his company directorships, and the idea in this is perfectly sound; namely, that a minister of the crown must have no interests which are likely to embarrass him in giving his services solely to the welfare of the state.

I attach the greatest possible importance to this, and I am sure a Labor government would do the same. Indeed, it is far more necessary that a Labor government should be in a position and determined to maintain the balance evenly between conflicting interests than the government of any other party, in view of its policy of extending state control and public employment. This is the only objection to Labor government brought forward by our opponents to which I attach much importance. By its success in averting that danger a Labor government will be mainly judged. And if it succeeds, as I believe it will, it will be the first government in this country wholly to subordinate class interests to national welfare. (Copyright. All rights reserved.)
