WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 9, 1850. There is a species of rivalry which exalts and dignifies the character of a people. It is that rivalry which is not ashamed or afraid to proclaim lizes the superiority which it confesses - and dwells upon the contrast as a spur to reform, or a warning to be avoided. That an American should be proud of the land of his birth, that he should point with generous pride to the progress which she has made in the arts and sciences—in manufactures and agriculture - in maritime power, in commercial wealth,-is but a natural consequence of human passions, impulses, and instincts. Trace back the blood of the foremost American patriot, its sources may lay among elements little calculated to parture the future freeman; as an homogenous mass, there is an infusio of every characteristic, which, upon European soil, invested the owners with pre-eminence as soldiers, statesmen, or scholars. The infant Her cules is now struggling to emancipate himself from the thralls and fetters which restrained the full play of his vigorous frame-he is completing the bodily aliment requisite to fashion his form but, before another generation comes into activity, and assumes its share in the great game of lifethe mental activity of the American people will have been carefully schooled, and the immature fruit, which disfigures even the loftiest of their deliberative Assemblies, sifted and rejected There are many salient defects which cannot escape observation in the working of their political system—ignorance, presumption, and vanity, as-pire in the fulness of their pride to an equility with the rarest endowments-the highest order o intellectual refinement and the most consummate oratory. The fault may be charged to the insufficient education of the masses-we speak not of the ordinary teaching of the free school-for the masses are better educated than those of any other nation-but we speak of these superior qualifications only attained by patient and prolonged study, which entitle the possessors to form a correct judgment, and pronounce with confidence upon the pretensions of an aspirant. In the English House of Commons, no member could op press his hearers, as constantly occurs in the American Senate, and our Parish Assembly, with the unmitigated trash reporters are doomed to record. The intellectual calibre of the audience would at once guage the capacity of the speaker and decide his fate, and no individual remon strance or obstinacy could overcome their unequivocally expressed condemnation. An ordeal thus severe is essential to preserve the dignity of debate, where important questions of national concern are canvassed and decided. That such an ordeal has not been introduced into the Halls of Legislation in the United States, is but too plainly proved by a reference to the amount of labor there perform-which were passed and a glance that the amount of busins a acco-pilished is very much in favour of t. a British Legislature; and this difference becomes the more striking, when it is remarked that in Congress the labor was not very unequally distribute I between the two branches, whereas in Partribute I between the two prancines, whereas in Far-liament full fate-sixths of it was performed by the House of Commons. It is also to be borne in mind, that many of the arbitrary regulations, and minch of the machinary which we employ for facili-tating the discharge of business, is unknown to British legislation. In Parliament there is no rule British legislation. In Parliament there is no rule limiting the duration of speeches; the previous question is not often resorted to; and there are no standing committees, to who a the consideration of measures in their detail may be reterred, though, to be sure, this convenience is in some degree supplied by the frequent quoud her appointment of section providers.

plied by the frequent quoad hoc app. antment of select committees.

Me mbers of Parliament receive no pay, while Nembers of Congress drew a liberal per diem; and the latter ara far more directly dependent upon, and responsible to, their constituencies than the former. Is it not a strange thing, then, that the one should display so much more practical industry than the other? To what shall we attribute it? The whole mat er is solved by the angle fact, that in Parliament there was only one religiourned debate (namely, the great discussion of Palmerston's foreign p-licy) during the whole Session, and in Congress there was hardly one debate of any importance that was not again and again adjudred. Sourcely a day of Parliament was wasted in idle talk, while months were frittered away in Congress in most irrelevant, superdebate of any importance chair was met again and again adjourned. Sometive and you Parliament was wasted in idle talk, while months were fittered away in Congress in most irrelation of the control of the discussion is making confined to the ablest and must intelligent Members of the House, and questions are consequently debated with most admirable directness and most stinfactory completeess. In Congress the time of debate is chiefy taken up by men of great vanity and little intellect, who shound to the class of orators characterized by Montequieue as making up in length what they lack is depth. To illustrate our affirmation, we must be personal. To discussion our affirmation, we must be personal. To discussion our affirmation, we must be personal. To discussion of the Compromise Bill in the Sanate last though he was the great channings of the Bill, see cupied only 7 days; these of Mr. Mehrer 3—both them 10 days. The specehes of Mr. Timery occupied only 7 days; these of Mr. Timery occupied only 7 days; the see of Mr. Webster 3—both them 10 days. It is the inordinate loguncity of such men as need, that makes the difference in the practical flictency of the American and English Legislates. We could, if necessary also draw a comefficiency of the American and Language tures. We could, if necessary, also draw a comparison between Congress and the French Assembly in this respect, which would be much mere to our disadvantage. But it might be said, and with some force, that legislative acts are not to be counted so much as weighed, and that French legislation is too unwise and unstable to afford just ground for comparison. No such objection can apply to the labors of the British Parliament.

What it saids does it very seldom finds occasion to under; and the difference that we have shown between what has been done at Westminster, and what has been done at Westminster, and what has been done at Westminster, and what has been done at Comparison between whit has been done at Washington, is not peculiar to the present sessions. A comparison between any of the former ones during the late years would produce a very similar result. Although we are in the ordinary affairs of life by far the most practical people upon the face of the earth, we must concede that our English brethten excel us in practical legislative activity. They waste far less time than we, in empty words—and this difference will continue to our perpeach until a stronger public opinion is formed against a mode of legislation which subordinates the public good to private wanity. private vanity.

The funeral of the Roman Catholic Archbisho Quebec took place at nine o'clock on the morning of the 7th. We are afraid that, like the rest of his works, this one will moulder on the shelves of the booksellers, and only be used up when some day it belgs to defeat the effects of the fireman. The author, indeed, confesses that society has not yet attained that state of perfection to relish such a work. We arguiese, in this idea, and cannot help thinking, that another hundred pensionate roll away before the public mind is prepared for such asstate of socialism; when polygany; subtrided ficeritionasces, lechery, roluptiousness, and all the consonationate of so should a compact, will be the order of the day. Some ming speem raised up for their age. What a pity Major Eichardson has appeared so long before the age in which his genius can be appreciated, for undoubtedly he is destined to go down.

To the vite dust from whence he sprung,
Unwept, unhousered, and unisans."

We may further observe, that the author's pro fanity is only equalled by his ignorance, for the whole part of it which has reference to the celebreted Order of Military Monks, called the Order St. John of Jerusalem, is a tissue of blunders.

Eastern Provinces.

The brig Rival, on bound of which the recent frightful tragedy was enacted, is, we believe, the oldest vessel at present sailing out of the port of Halifax, having been constructed at, and launched from, the establishment of her owners, the Measrs. Pryor, just them is used to her owners, the Measrs. Pryor, just them is used to her owners, the Measrs. Pryor, just them is used to her owners, the Measrs. Pryor, just them is still a sound and substantial vessel, and affords a striking illustration of the durability of Nova Scotia vessels when carefully constanted. In the olden tune, before the art of ship-building had made such advances—as it undensibly has—in this province, the Rival was, for many years, considered to be a crack vessel. She has probably made more long voyages, and viaited a greater number of foreign ports, during the quarter of a century she has been running, than any dozen other vessels at present owned out of this port; and has always enjoyed the reputation of being a lucky ship. Her second voyage was one of the most profitable in the annals of the port: it was to the Brazila, and netted for her enterprizing owners upwards of £2000 clear profit.

to the Brazils, and netted for her enterprizing owners upwards of £2000 clear profit.

The Rivol's third voyage is a capital illustratration of the peregrinations of a Merchantman. It occupied about two years, during which she visited successively half a dozen ports in the Brazils, took a freight to the Cape of Good Hope, thence to St. Helena, with a cargo of Cape Sheep. From St. Helena, with a cargo of Rock she necessively her orders and merceded to Lerhorn. and loaded for turnatur, at the received her orders, and proceeded to Leghorn, Marseilles, &c. From the blue waters and verdant shores of the Mediterranean, she shaped her course for the St. Lawrence River, and, after decourse for the St. Lawrence River, and, after delivering a cargo, the product of the sanny South, she proceeded to Sydney, C. B., returning to Halifax ladea with coal. From that time to the present, the Risal has been pursuing her course over the world of waters, almost without interruption.
After repairing the trifling damage sustained in the sad occurrence of Saturday evening last, and procuring another crew—for her former hands, with true sailer-like superstition, refused to perform the voyage so disastrously begun—she sailed for her destination, St. Jago de Cuba, on Tuesday last.
Her werthy skipper—of whom we shall presently

Her werthy skipper—of whom we shall presently say something—is still in command.

Having said thus much of the ship, we are Having said thus much of the ship, we are bound to say sometining about her master. We shall be very brief. Long Jack Crum, as he is familiarly known almost everywhere, is no common man. He is, we should think, about the oldest sea-faring man cut of the Port of Halitax. If we mistake not, Captain Crum was mate of the brig Alligator, commanded by Captain Coulson, when taken by piratee in the West Indies, about thirty years are in the locesain, as everyb dy knows. years ago. On that occasion, as everyb.dy knows, Captain Coulson was hanged up by the miscreants, and probably owed his life to the intrepidity and coolness of his mate. All who remember Captain Coulson will recollect the effects produced on that gentleman by the hanging match; how he ever after carried his head over to starbard! ()n that occasion, as everyb dy knows, unconquerable encurance, her usean strengts, and an eagle vision, he has all his life managed to weather the storms of old ocean, and triumph over all the dangers incidental to his hazardous profession. If we add to the foregoing, that Jack Crum has the courage of a lion, combined with the gentleness of the lamb, and the heart that can feel for another, we have feebly conveyed a pendink sketch of our countryman. Helifer. ind-ink sketch of our countryman. - Halifez

FREDERICK DOUGLASS .- The Rochester Democrat, in noticing the rumors that an attempt would be made to take Frederick Douglass back into slayers, says that his freedom has been pur-chased, and that he holds a deed of himself from via former "master."

What security is that? Five hundred dollars would purchase affidavits enough to swear the seal off a dozen such deeds.

However, we suspect there is little danger of the slaveholders sending for Dougless. They will hardly wish to have a man of his intelligence and influence, harbored within ear shot of their slaves.—N. Y. Post.

The British Empire,

The British Empire.

"By the last accounts from the Australian Colonies of Great Britain, information is brought of a movement on foot designed to establish the Independence of Australia. Dr. Lang, a Presbyterian Minister, is lecturing upon the subject in the Town of Melbourne, and advising the formation of an Association to effect the Severance from the Mother Country in a friendly way, and the election of a President. The English papers profess to believe that if any wish for Separation exists, it is more likely to be retarded than presented by the advocacy of Dr. Lang,"

We know nothing of Dr. Lang, or of the prospect of success of this particular movement in Australia—though, of course, we anticipate its failure—but chronicle the above as one of those facts which indicate the growing weakness of the.

failure—but chronicle the above so one of those facts which indicate the growing weakness of the British Empire. We are of those who helieve that the greatness of Britain depends, in an eminent degree, upon her numerous Colonies. England and Scotland might still be flourishing countries without their Colonies—but a prosperity based simply upon their own resources, would be as nothing compared to that greatness which they derive from being the mighty centre, the glowing heart of a kingdom, on which the sun never sets, and the moon and starm never centre to shine othis case. But the men or Frymouth Rock, and of the That's Elm, and of Jamestown, were a mobler order of British subjects than ever left British before or since. They were, like Pens, and the Puritan Fathers, and the Virginia Cavaliers, of the best blood of England—thrown out from their native land by anuscal causes, by civil and religious wars. Each men were not of a kind to be kept long in leading strings—they acon saw that the policy of England was to build up herself at the expense of her Colonier, and scon saw that the policy of England was to build up herself at the expense of her Colonies, and they were determined that to such a policy they would not submit. They thought it became a wealthy mother, tasher to assist her children who had gone out into the wilderness, than to com-mence levying contributions upon them as soon as they begar to prosper. They did not demand at first Independence, they only impliered not to be oppressed. But when the question became one of arms—they boldly struck, with as much wisdom as daring, for the highest prize; and won it.

And such is the inevitable destiny of Canada And such is the inevitable destiny of Canada, of Australia-probably, ultimately, of even Hindoostan. That Canada will be annexed to this Union, in the course of the next hundred years, we regard as certain. No extra-superfine and non-sensical feeling of loyalty to a distant country, can long triumph over the rightful loyalty which one owes to his native land. The two Canadas, once American States, would experience a rapid advance in prosperity. They are now lumbering along like the stage coaches of fitty years agoattach them to our wonderful locomotive, This Union, and the sudden start forward would commence with a yerk sufficient to wake up all their mence with a jerk sufficient to wake up all their alcepers. This fact is so evident, that it must force itself more and more upon the Canadian mind, until it becomes the prevailing sentiment. And then Annexation will be consummated at the

And then Annexation will be consummated at the first favorable opportunity.

Austraina, too, must ultimately become Independent. Wonderful will be the changes that the indomitable energy of the Anglo Saxun blood will work in that great lahand of Austraina, almost as large as Europe, in the next century. Will such an immense territory always remain subject to those little specks upon the map of the Globe, England and Scotland 1 No, it is only a question of time.

And what matters it? Is there anything in this and what matters it I is there anything in this inevitable future, to eause a son or a lover of England to rebel against the natural order of events? By no means. England will still live in these great nations to whom she has given life. The British Empire, under new and improved The British Empire, under new and improved forms, will still dominate for good over the children forms, will still dominate for good over the children of men - leading on the advanced corps of the world towards the perfect sunlight of Freedom and Truth. The United States, or aster of all North America, will give the law to the Western Hemisphere. In Europe, England and Scotland will still preserve sufficient of their present power, to aid efficiently in upholding the cause of Constitutional Freedom. While midway between the two, in the regions of the Equator, Australia shall serve as a beacon light and guide to the benighted and degraded nations of Eastern and benighted and degraded nations of Eastern and Southern Asia. Thus these three great torches of Freedom and Knowledge, shall encircle with their light, the whole earth—and the rod of Universal Empire, once held by the Roman, pass, under happier auspices, into the grasp of the under happier auspices, into the grasp of the Anglo-Saxon. How to MAKE A RAISA .- An entertaining correspondent mentions a good retort which he once made upon an acquaintance, whose wont it was to go around the city "sherry-coblerizing" of a summer morning, and who in winter was often for a week at a time in a "state of whiskey-punchiness:"

He was once very angry with me: I said to him one morning: "I'm going to 'make a raise' soon, and as you are to be the means, for civility's sake, I'll tell you about it, though it is not essen

"Well," growled my friend, "how is it?"
