THURSDAY MORNING, JANUARY 4, 1883.

MIRABEAU, DANTON, GAMBETTA.
 That Gambetta was the greatest man among all those who led the French revolution brought to the front a thing spread upon. The second revolution has been but a small affair, bringing out a great man at all, the essays of the daily press are forced back to the time of the first revolution of modern times—in order to find something like his parallel. Already it seems as if Mirabeau would be generally followed upon, as the character of nearly a hundred years ago with the statesman just departed would most fitly compare. But it may appear that Danton also just to be included, if we would do justice to facts.

It is Carlyle's judgment that the first revolution drew out three really great men—Mirabeau, Danton, Napoleon. As Gambetta was not a soldier, he cannot be compared with Napoleon, but in character and career he resembles Mirabeau here and Danton there in several important respects. Like Mirabeau he seemed a born leader of a tumultuous, revolutionary assembly, impatient of control, and with a turn for desperate measures. Mirabeau's supremacy in the constituent assembly was never disputed, though it might have been had he lived longer; may he might even have gone to the block as did Camille Desmoulins, Danton, Robespierre, and others, who in turn guided the popular whirlwind until their time came to be swept away, as others had been before them. To Mirabeau's death came when he was at the apparent culmination; whether his star would have declined had he lived a few years longer it were needless to inquire. What history does record is that he died without a rival to dispute with him the foremost place in the assembly which he almost ruled. And at that time the control of the revolutionary constituent assembly was the control of France.

As the apoplexy of war against enemies abroad, Gambetta will remain the special parallel of Danton in French history. When a Prussian army, invading France in order to secure the throne, was almost threatening Paris, and when the whole assembly seemed paralyzed with terror, Danton's gigantic force and courage turned the tide and roused the timorous to action. It was boldness, he said, that was wanted, not submission. "De l'audace, et encore de l'audace, et toujours de l'audace." To dare and to be bold, again and always, were the words which, pronounced by Danton in a voice of thunder, infused courage into the wavering and turned the tide of the revolution. Resistance to foreign foes, and for his power of communicating that spirit to others, Gambetta may certainly take his place beside Danton in French history.

Mirabeau was an aristocrat born, but from his youth up he refused to be bound by the traditions of his "order," and, to the honor of his blue-blooded relations, he became a leader of the people. Gambetta, like Danton, sprung from the ranks, and another parallel—both were lawyers. All three were alike in this, that they put morality at defiance and lived lives of reckless indulgence. Both Mirabeau and Danton died young in consequence, but the guillotine saved all trouble in enquiring as to Danton's health. Danton had never any opportunity of doing better, but Mirabeau through high connections, and Gambetta through his own wealth and wealthy connections besides might have done better, had they been so disposed. On the whole, and while allowing for some very strong points of resemblance between Gambetta and Danton, it seems likely that in the history which is yet to be written Gambetta will be bracketed with Mirabeau, as the most fitting character which the third revolution has to show to parallel the first.

A COULURED ORGAN.
 There was a time when the Mail professed to be a gentleman's paper, "written by gentlemen for gentlemen," but all pretence to decency has apparently been abandoned, as an extract or two from an editorial in yesterday's issue respecting the liberal convention will show. It says the delegates have been tempted to Toronto by "cheap railway fares, board at half price, whisky and cigars at the expense of the combined London commissioners," and "such a combination of free lectures and free lunch" as "never yet tempted the imagination of a somewhat dull-witted mob of semi-civilized Parisians." It is further of opinion that "all that was needed was a promise to throw in some old clothes and a few spelling-books, a ration of cut plug, the promise of a bath, and a copy of the Globe's Christmas illustrated paper, and the rash world would have been treacherous." It suggests also that the delegates should have labels attached to them, so that they may be known when frequenting "cheap restaurants and free lunch bars." And this we are to suppose, coming as it does from a journal that not long ago professed to be "the sensitive" "style," is a specimen of refined wit and humor. People who are not so highly cultured as the editor of the Mail, who do not find it necessary to show the extent of their reading by making three consecutive literary allusions in one breath, and in the next proceed to language of which a corner leader might well be ashamed, will be more apt to set it down as sheer blackguarding.

But the audacity of the Mail exceeds in this instance even its insolence. After intruding in the most wholesale style a body of gentlemen of whose personal character it cannot possibly know anything, after representing them as fitter for a cell in a police station than for a place amongst respectable persons, it calmly invites them to come and inspect its office and see its press in operation! Perhaps, after all, the Mail people know the kind of company they prefer better than we do. But this is just where they give themselves away.

A HOME OF ONE'S OWN.
 None except those who have tried it fully realize how comfortable it is to have a home of one's own. In importance it is next to being happily married. It is doubly dear, because it has been purchased with the savings of mutual earnings of husband and wife. What though one has foregone many of the luxuries of life, has worn old clothes, turned a cold shoulder to the fascinating soda fountain and the foaming lager, worn even patched shoes and the wife an out-of-style bonnet, he has a home, and it is his own.

No landlord troubles, no nightmare of increasing rent with no available means of meeting the demand.

Farewell to fear of becoming homeless in sickness or in age. One of the problems of life is solved: how to live without paying rent.

True, there has been a liberal expenditure of self-denial all round—some pinching here and there—but we have a home to show for it as a recompense.

In this and all cities there are small houses and cottages which may be purchased on monthly payments or on small annual payments, which are safely within the reach of the poor man blessed with health and courage to strike out for himself. The yearly amounts paid for rent will make up his payment or payments, and he has something to show for his year's toil.

Such opportunities are not rare in city, village and country to the wide-awake man with a wide-awake prudent wife.

The young couple just married, or the older but not wiser couple, who adopt this method will have a paid-for home—humble, perhaps, but still a home—almost before they are aware of it. All self-denials endured will have been forgotten, or remembered only as a matrimonial cement making their union closer and happier.

There is nothing more desirable, young people, than getting a right start in life, and the beginning of a year is an appropriate time to give this subject a fair consideration.

LIGHTNING DIVORCE.
 Chicago is the Mecca of disappointed husbands and wives, where the copious waters of divorce are dealt out to those who fall sick and weary on the cross-roads of matrimony. No pilgrim who sighs to be restored to the paradise of single blessedness is ever turned away unsatisfied. As the windings of the wheel of Zenzen remove all the sins of mortality, so the marriage certificate immortalized in the Chicago divorce court is an effectual remedy for the evil of the most iron-bound matrimonial contract.

The western city has, however, recently surpassed its own previous reputation. A young lady of the theatrical profession, harmoniously mated, being on a temporary visit to Chicago as a member of the Esmeralda company, suddenly bethought her of the happy opportunity afforded her of getting rid of an objectionable husband. So she filed a bill of divorce in the court, notified the accommodating judge that she was a hurry to leave the city, obtained a hearing, got consent to dispense with the filing of an answer, proved that a balance of the book of her married life for eight years showed a larger debit to drunkenness than to sobriety, and in twenty-four hours after the filing of the bill walked out of the court with the decree of divorce in her pocket. On Monday she left Chicago with her company free from the trammels of a husband.

The heroine of this lightning divorce, Mrs. Marie Louise Dillon, nee Hernandez, is young and good-looking. If she wins a second husband as rapidly as she got rid of the first, she will not long retain the maiden name which she resolutely refused to change after her second venture.

There have been many ugly scandals about the cause of Gambetta's death, but it is improbable that the official accounts will clear up the uncertainty. He was of such importance that the government officials will agree to protect his memory, even though, as asserted, he may have been shot by a woman. They know how to do these things in France.

Bismarck's Neuralgia.
 A Berlin dispatch says the neuralgia from which Prince Bismarck has been suffering so severe that he is scarcely able to articulate. Privy Councillor Frederichs, a physician frequently consulted by the Chancellor, delivered his opinion that the pain arose not improbably from the teeth. Prince Bismarck, though he has never yet undergone a dental operation, was quite willing to submit to one now if it were necessary. On examination, however, by an experienced dentist, no trace of any fault could be discovered among the teeth, and accordingly Prince Bismarck, who himself calls his malady "the dentist's," has escaped being experimented upon for the present.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

(To the Editor of the World.)
 I visited the meeting of the Salvation Army at their barracks, Wednesday afternoon and Capt. Charles W. was announced at "All night with Jesus," to commence at 7 p.m. and end some time in the morning." My curiosity was aroused and about midnight I went to the barracks. Never did I witness so disgraceful a scene of confusion and disorder. One woman (called the "Hallelujah Widow") lay full length on the floor, at one time shouting, "O, how I love him," and at another time screaming at the top of her voice two of the "tambourine ladies" and singing out "There is glory in my soul," one of the soldiers was engaged in prayer in a tone of voice the opposite to melodious, and there were small groups of persons on the platform and floor, some talking and some exclaiming "Amen," altogether the means by which (according to the Salvation Army) the world is to be converted to Christianity. Well, so much the worse for Christianity say I.

METROPOLITAN.
 P.S.—I wish to draw the attention of the authorities to the fact that a religion which does not teach its adherents to "love their neighbor as themselves" is not worth much at all.

THE POOR FORGOTTEN.
 (To the Editor of the World.)
 Sir: A correspondent in yesterday's World calls attention to the "selfish indifference" of the late Sir Hugh Allan in leaving no bequest for the benefit of the poor or for any public purpose. It is no credit to the memory of this Sir knight that this can be said of him. Perhaps, however, he took his cue from a late minister of one of the churches in Toronto, who died worth over ninety thousand ($90,000) dollars and never left a cent of it to relieve the poor even of his own church, or for any other charitable object. Sir H. Allan is now praised for his great enterprise and his qualities, and it was the desire of some of the late ministers of the church, while the dead man who no doubt profited much about almsgiving and charity in his lifetime, yet forgot hungry sinners at the last hour to leave a bequest of $100,000, costing three thousand dollars. Don't you think this money could be put to a better purpose? The minister charged the church during his ministry, three thousand dollars would go some way to help some of the poor and needy of the city. He would have done so had he not been so miserly. Hoping you will insert these plain-spoken words in your paper, I remain,
 Yr. Obedt. Servant,
 N. O. L. FARMER.

STATISTICS OF MANUFACTURES.
 (To the Editor of the World.)
 Sir: In attempting to collect statistics of the manufactures of Ontario I find it difficult in the way to be the least that in giving values of materials and products the profits of manufacturers may become known. But in making a calculation of profits there are other data scarcely less essential. We must know the cost of rent, local taxes, management, running expenses, insurance, and the cost of fuel, which are asked for in the schedule. Some of the returns already received, and others very imperfectly, also all valuable, many copies of the report will be sent through it is desirable that the manufacturing interest of our province should make a good showing in the statistics. The industrial centres will be judged largely by the exhibit it makes, and this depends entirely on the care with which the returns are made. A. BLUE, Secretary.

Tearing Down the Tulleries.
 The last hour of the palace of the ancient kings of France has sounded. The ruins of the Tulleries at Paris, or rather the site of the palace, are being razed to the ground. The materials of the palace, which were sold at a high price of $64,000. This was a goodly sum to pay for the charred materials of the antique walls, since the government reserves to itself not only all the sculptures, pilasters, and other architectural details, but also all the valuable objects of art which were found in the palace. There is, indeed, a legend current that a quantity of precious objects, such as diamonds, gold plate, etc., were hidden in the walls of the palace. The agent of the demolition, who was travelling over the Pan Handle route the other day, happened to take a seat opposite a Boston drummer. Each wore a pin with six diamonds in it, and displayed two watch chains. The coincidence happened to strike a solid, old-fashioned farmer as rather curious, and, hitching along up to the pair, he asked: "Gentlemen, will you give me honest answers to a question or two?" They said they would, and he continued: "At what time is it by your four watches?" The agent replied that he only had one watch, and that did not tick, while the other confessed that he had none at all. "One more question: Did you buy your diamond pins at the dollar store?" The two men looked at each other in troubled way, and then informed the blunt questioner that he had reached the limit. "Oh, well, I don't intend to be nasty," he remarked, as he fell back. "I'm speaking a wider up in Wood county, and I was thinking that if I could buckle on a dollar diamond and harness on two watch chains around me she'd either kick or carve into a week."

PHOTOGRAPHER'S HILL.
 A New York photographer has suddenly jumped into the lucrative business in making cheap photographs. His "specialty," which is the secret of his success, is letting costly sealskin sashes, Gainsborough hats, and other finery to his "subjects," who are mostly poor shop girls, to make their pictures more attractive. For each picture he makes for these privileges, which offer a temptation which few girls can resist, bring him in great profits. "The only difficulty in the business," he says, "is to get the sealskin sash and silk cloak of the girls when once put on. They have a bad way of slipping them off, and then they keep a whole line of anxious sitters waiting."

Wilberforce's Memoirs.
 Some sensation has been caused in England by the publication of the third volume of Bishop Wilberforce's "Memoirs." The bishop left a record of many conversations which were strictly private in their nature and were regarded by his interlocutors in that light. His son now publishes all these rough notes, and the public is told how the great orator, the noble statesman, the dis-establishment of the Irish church; how the present Earl of Derby's father hated Daniel O'Connell; how the father of whom he was condemned by fate; how the bishop of Oxford himself looked upon Disraeli as an "adventurer and a charlatan"; how John Walker looked at the circulation of the London Times, and so on. Many of the strongest passages have been suppressed.

Washington's Deed.
 Horatio Seymour has given to the Clinton collection of MSS. in the New York state library a manuscript deed of land from George Washington and George Clinton of the city of New York, acquired, to Nathaniel Griffin of Whitestown, Montgomery county. It bears date July 27, 1790. The land consisted of 216 acres and was sold for $251. It is now worth nearly $50,000, being situated near the city of Utica. Not only is the deed signed by the first president of the United States and the first governor of New York, but it bears the signatures, as witnesses, of their private secretary, the present minister to Great Britain, and John Walker, located at the circulation of the London Times, and so on. Many of the strongest passages have been suppressed.

 INSURANCE
 A SOLID INSTITUTION.

THE PRIMA LITE INSURANCE COMPANY of Hartford, was organized under a charter from the State of Connecticut, and has a paid up capital of $750,000. It commenced business in the year 1850. During the earlier years its progress may be said to have been slow, as the management was not so judiciously conducted as it is now. It has, however, since that time, been steadily increasing, and its business has grown to such an extent that it is now one of the most powerful and successful insurance companies in the world. The following table shows the growth and indicates the extent of its business.

Year.	Assets.	Year.	Assets.	Year.	Assets.
1850	$10,000.00	1870	$10,000,000.00	1880	$20,000,000.00
1851	15,000.00	1871	15,000,000.00	1881	25,000,000.00
1852	20,000.00	1872	20,000,000.00	1882	30,000,000.00
1853	25,000.00	1873	25,000,000.00	1883	35,000,000.00
1854	30,000.00	1874	30,000,000.00	1884	40,000,000.00
1855	35,000.00	1875	35,000,000.00	1885	45,000,000.00
1856	40,000.00	1876	40,000,000.00	1886	50,000,000.00
1857	45,000.00	1877	45,000,000.00	1887	55,000,000.00
1858	50,000.00	1878	50,000,000.00	1888	60,000,000.00
1859	55,000.00	1879	55,000,000.00	1889	65,000,000.00
1860	60,000.00	1880	60,000,000.00	1890	70,000,000.00

It has paid to policyholders $10,000,000.00. It has in good, productive assets $75,000,000.00.

THE DIFFERENCE, $7,000,000.00, IS THE EXCESS OF ASSETS OVER ALL EXPENSES, SHOWING THAT THE COMPANY HAS BEEN CONDUCTED MOST ECONOMICALY, AND THAT THE POLICYHOLDERS HAVE BEEN BENEFITED BY THE MOST LIBERAL MANAGEMENT.

Having the utmost confidence in its superiority over all others, and after thousands of trials of the most complicated and severe cases we could find, we feel justified in offering to friends of the company a large quantity of our celebrated "Burdock Blood Bitters," at a special price, to be had only at the Dispensary, 27 Gould Street, Toronto. All answers promptly, without charge, when stamped with a return address. Dr. Andrew's Dispensary, 27 Gould Street, Toronto, Ont.
