Mr. BROCK. Have you any account of any revenue that has been collected there ? I am informed that there has been $16 collected there, and we have spent $22,000. It is simply ridiculous to spend that large amount of money unless there is some business.

Mr. BLAIN. Could the minister give us an explanation as to why this work was commenced ? Did he send his engineer up there to report, and was there any public demand for the work ? It is only fair that the minister should give us some statement as to the revenue from that time to the present. The public accounts show that last year the revenue was $16.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That would be probably for three or four months from the time the work was completed and was handed over to the department. This is a very important place, a good deal of trade is being done there, and is growing fast. No doubt full information was given in regard to this matter when the appropriations were made. This is a balance to pay for the work that has already been done.

Mr. BENNETT. What arrangement has been made about the dock ? At the town of Midland the dock is handed over by the Crown to the department. What rental is being paid this year by the parties who are using this dock ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I was waiting for the estimates to pass and to receive the authority of parliament to proceed with this work. No action has been taken by the department since the government became owner of the property.

Mr. BENNETT. But the minister has on file in his department applications from parties wishing to rent this dock. I know one party who is prepared to pay $500. I suggested to him to write the department, and ask whether they would rent the dock to him. He got a polite letter saying his letter would receive consideration, and that is all he got. It is now in the hands of a warm political friend of hon. gentlemen opposite. Now, the minister cannot tell whether that gentleman is paying anything at all for rent. Have the firm who are using that dock made an arrangement to pay anything for it this season, and if so, how much ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have not been able to give the matter consideration yet, but I will take it up after we get an appropriation. I could not give it proper consideration until I know what work we intended to do there.

Mr. BENNETT. The town of Midland handed over to the Dominion of Canada a considerable portion of the water frontage. On a part of this water frontage there is being erected a good dock on which there are large storehouses, and a warm political friend of the hon. gentlemen opposite has the use of this dock on which are already erected this property and storehouses. The minister will find in his department an application from a business firm offering to rent this dock and pay $500 for it this season. I ask the minister, since there are applications on file in his department asking to rent the dock and storehouses, what arrangement he has made after declining to accept the offer from this firm ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have not had the matter under consideration. I do not see how I could undertake to rent the property until I knew what the extent of the property would be.

Mr. BENNETT. But there is already a dock built on a part of it and large storehouses, and it is occupied and used by a warm political friend of the hon. gentlemen. Playfair & Company are using it, and other parties ask to come into fair competition to rent it.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is the first I have heard of it. I will take an early opportunity to look into the matter.

Mr. BENNETT. I hope the minister will exact at least $500 rental for it this year, because other parties would be happy to pay that amount.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Does the hon. gentleman consider that is fair value for it ?

Mr. BENNETT. I think in open competition you would have got $500 for the use of the dock and warehouses.

Mr. BLAIN. On that item for Bruce Mines, I want to draw the attention of the minister to this item, 'material and labour for construction of frame storehouses on the wharf, $500.' Is it the policy of the government to construct warehouses or storehouses on a wharf constructed by the government ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It has been the policy of the government to build small warehouses for the accommodation of the public.

Mr. BLAIN. In this same item I see 'Gordon & Hellowell, architects, of the city of Toronto, $35 for the preparation of a plan of a square building to cost $500.' Has not the minister in his office any persons capable of drawing a plan and writing specifications for the construction of a warehouse on a wharf at Bruce Mines, to cost $500 ? If he has not, is it not time that he should have such officers in his department ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am warranted in saying that there are sufficient architects in the department perfectly competent to design these buildings. The ex-minister seems to have thought fit to employ these gentlemen in Toronto to make these plans, and I suppose they have to be paid. It does not seem an outrageous sum. Why he considered it desirable, I cannot say.

Mr. BLAIN. The minister will remember that a protest was entered by the leader of the opposition the other evening against the practice of this government in employing outside labour of different kinds instead of employing officers in the department. It seems to me there can be no justification whatever for the employment of political friends of the government in Toronto for the preparation of a plan and specifications for the construction of a $500 warehouse at Bruce Mines. May I ask the minister if it is his intention to continue that policy when he wishes to construct similar small wharfs and warehouses, and if he intends to give the preparation of the plans to outsiders, to political friends, as was done in the case of Bruce Mines ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS No ; I never authorized the preparation of plans by any outsiders, and have no intention of doing so.

Mr. BENNETT. Since the general question has come up for discussion, I am going to call the attention of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries as well as the hon. Minister of Public Works to these docks on the Georgian bay and particularly on the north shore. There is a line of steamboats calling at Bruce Mines, Cockburn Island, Thessalon and other places, and while the country has spent on an average from $20,000 to $25,000 erecting a dock at each one of these places, these steamboat owners are permitted to call at these docks upon which storehouses are erected and what is the result? We will take the case of Thessalon, where there has been an expenditure of $20,000 or $25,000. The Dominion government did not derive a single cent revenue from that dock last year. The country goes to an expense of $20,000 or $30,000 for building these docks and after they are finished you permit a wealthy steamboat company to use them and to store their freight in the storehouses while the country is not collecting a single dollar at the thriving town of Thessalon. In the case of Bruce Mines where there is a fairly considerable town, you only derived a trifling revenue of $16.83 last year, and at Cockburn Island some $60. It is high time that when all these gigantic expenditures are made, because in the aggregate they amount to a considerable sum, these steamboat companies should be compelled to pay something for the use of these docks erected by the country. I see that in the city of Toronto when an application was made by a steamboat company that was about to make that city a port of call, for the use of a dock, they were asked to pay a very large sum for it. I am going to ask the hon. Minister of Public Works if he thinks it is good business to expend $20,000 or $25,000 on a dock and then allow a steamboat company to use that dock and not ask a single cent in return, and if he as a member of the government is approving of that system of doing business. The hon. minister must remember that he was Minister of Marine and Fisheries last year and that this happened under him.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. If my memory serves me aright the wharf at Thessalon was built some nine or ten years ago. I had imagined that there was quite an increase in the business there. The wharf has been transferred to the Department of Marine and Fisheries. As my hon. friend knows, I was a short time in the Marine Department. This is a matter that was not particularly brought to my attention, but my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries will look into it and see whether the revenue is being collected there. It may be that it is being honestly returned, and may be not. I draw his attention to it.

Prescott—dredging, $2,500.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Representations were made to me that the trade of that port requires that some dredging should be done. It was ordered to be done, but delay has occurred in the work. It was only started a few days ago and it will come under the supplementary estimates of 1903-4, because, as the work is not completed during the current year, this vote could not be used. I move to strike out the item.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I would like to say, before dropping that item, that I hope the hon. minister will not forget it when the supplementary estimates for 1903-4 are prepared, because the work is an actual necessity there. Prescott is a very important harbour. I suppose there are about half a million tons of coal handled there every year and it is at the foot of lake navigation where all the barges have to remain over night in case they arrive there late. A number of years ago the government made a channel there, I suppose, fourteen feet deep, and this vote is merely to make it a few feet deeper in order that these large draft vessels can go down and discharge their cargo or lie to during the night. I hope the hon. minister will see that this item is put in the supplementary estimates for 1903-4.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman and I have already given instructions that this amount be placed in the supplementary estimates for 1903-4. I do not think there will be any objection to it. The work is important in the public interest.

Amendment agreed to, and item struck out.

Mr. BLAIN. May I be permitted to ask what proportion of item 74, amounting to $43,210, was expended without the authority of parliament?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I suppose that technically this has practically all been spent without the authority of parliament. I think it would be a mistake if $100, or if $1,000 were required to complete a work that it should be stopped because the appropriation had been exhausted. I think, perhaps, in regard to this whole amount, the works and the places being important, that the over expenditure might be justified, but technically, I fancy that the amounts have been expended without the appropriation having been made.

British Columbia—Hardy Bay wharf, $2,100.

Mr. EARLE. Is this work going on?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, that work is going on. I found that it would require so much to complete the work and that there would be great loss if the work were stopped. I authorized the engineer to go on and complete the work having made provision in the meantime for the money and this is to recoup the parties.

Mr. EARLE. What is the total cost ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. $4,000.

Telegraph lines, Quebec, Magdalen Islands, Bryon Island and Anticosti Island cable connection, &c.—to pay balance due on cable $36,-782.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is to pay the balance due on the contract for the cable between Bryon Island and Anticosti. I understand that at the time the appropriation was taken for this work an explanation was made to the House as to what the cost would be. This is to pay the balance on the contract for the cable.

Mr. BELL. What was the total cost of this work ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. $70,330.52.

Mr. BELL. Who had the contract ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The W. T. Henley's Telegraph Works Co., London, Eng.

Mr. BELL. Is the contract completed ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The work is completed.

Mr. BROCK. Have you an account showing the expenditure and revenue in connection with this telegraph line ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I think I gave the statement as to the revenue on a former occasion, but I will get it and bring it down for the hon. gentleman.

Mr. BELL. Where does that cable make connection with the land line ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There is a cable that crosses from the north shore to Anticosti.

Mr. BLAIN. Who had the inspection of this work on behalf of the government ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The cable was laid under the immediate superintendence of Mr. Keeley the chief officer of the department.

Mr. HACKETT. I have taken occasion frequently to call the attention of the government to the state of affairs in the province of Prince Edward Island in regard to telegraph communication with the mainland. A monopoly was fastened on that province some fifty years ago by the Anglo-American Company. The matter has been brought up frequently in this parliament and last year we were assured by the then Minister of Public Works that action would be taken to relieve the people from that monopoly. The Anglo-American Company charge an extra fee of twenty-five cents on each message for the use of their cable, about eight miles across the straits of Northumberland. This is very detrimental to the business of that province, and I trust that the Minister of Public Works of to-day who is known to be an active fair-minded man will take some action to remove this incubus that has dwelt so long and so heavily on the business interests of the province of Prince Edward Island. What action does the minister intend taking in the matter ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. A deputation waited upon me with regard to this matter, but on looking into it I found that it was a rather complicated question in which a great many legal points were involved. I will be pleased to go into it more fully after the session, and if there is anything I can do to relieve the people of Prince Edward Island from the exhorbitant rates they claim to have to pay under the present arrangement, I will be glad to do so in every possible way.

Mr. HACKETT. I understand that the company would give the accommodation required by the people if they get a slightly increased subsidy.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That matter is under discussion now.

Mr. HACKETT. If you cannot agree with regard to the subsidy you should withdraw the subsidy they are now paid of some $2,000 a year if they do not afford the accommodation that the people require. If by increasing the subsidy to a reasonable amount you can arrange with them to reduce their rates, and not to close their offices at eight in the evening and not open them before eight next morning, you would be conferring a great benefit upon the people of the province.

Telephone line to Alexander Indian agency, North-west Territories, the poles to be supplied by the settlers, $500.

Mr. BLAIN. Would the minister explain why this telephone line was constructed ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is for the accommodation of the settlers in this outlying district, and the department concluded that it would be better to have a telephone line than a telegraph line.

Mr. BLAIN. Is there any revenue from it ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There must be some revenue; it is a new line. I will bring down a statement of the revenue.

Alberni-Clayoquot line—to complete payments, $1,050.

Mr. BLAIN. Where is this line ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I think it runs from one end of the island to the other.

Mr. EARLE. It is a continuation of the Alberni line down to Clayoquot Sound.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I wish to ask the minister if he has decided to do anything with the channel between Kingston and Brockville on the Canadian side ? I understand there was a survey party there last year with a view of having a regular Canadian channel. I have not heard whether the government have decided to do anything or not. I think that Fiddlers Elbow in the Thousand Islands requires particularly a little straightening.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have not come to a conclusion as to that. The matter the hon. gentleman refers to is under the consideration of the officers of the department.

Esquimalt graving dock—special constables, $1,825.

Mr. BROCK. This seems to be an expensive item for special constables. What is the meaning of it ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The people in charge of the dock got the impression that the work was going to be destroyed and they asked for special constables.

Mr. BROCK. How did they think it was going to be destroyed ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Blown up. There was considerable excitement at the beginning of the South African war and the Welland canal was threatened, and it was thought by the military authorities there was danger at Esquimalt and we were asked to appoint those special constables.

Mr. BLAIN. Who selected these men, how long were they on duty and what was paid to them ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There were two special constables. I do not know on whose recommendation they were appointed. I have their names here.

Mr. EARLE. How long were they doing duty ?

Mr. BROCK. I thought this belonged to the British government. Could they not protect it themselves ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The dry dock is the property of the Dominion government.

Mr. BLAIN. Did the minister say that there were two special constables appointed here ? I am not anxious to have the names, but would like to know the number.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That is the only memorandum I have with regard to the matter.

Mr. BLAIN. How many months were they employed ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. They were placed on duty the 12th January, 1901, at $2.50 per day, and must have been on duty about a year.

Mr. EARLE. How many were there—two or four ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Two in addition to the regular ones.

Mr. EARLE. Who recommended their dismissal ? Was it the admiralty ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I think they were dismissed by the deputy ? There was no necessity for keeping them any longer, and they were dismissed.

Mr. EARLE. I cannot conceive how any necessity could have arisen for the employment of these men when there is a naval station close by. Why these men were kept there a year is something I cannot comprehend.

Mr. BENNETT. They forgot to sack them.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I suppose that during excitement, such things are done. My information is that the Department of Justice advised that it was desirable to make these appointments.

Toronto post office—building for branch office in west end of city (station C.), $10,500.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is to complete the contract. The total cost of this building is $43,342. I think the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Brock) will admit that we got good value for the money.

Mr. BROCK. Who is the contractor.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Brown and Love, of Toronto,

Mr. BROCK. Was this contract let to the lowest tenderer ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. BROCK. In Toronto the contracts are not always given to the lowest tenderer. My hon. friend from West Toronto (Mr. Clarke) objected that in a certain case the contract was not given to the lowest tenderer, and the excuse was that the lowest tenderer was not a satisfactory contractor. My hon. friend has conclusive proof to show that that statement was incorrect.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is not the item which has to do with that. There is another item in which that discussion will come up. I furnished the hon. member for West Toronto with all the papers.

Mr. BROCK. I was merely stating this in order to express the hope that this last transaction was not so discreditable to the government.

Sorel—deep water wharf, $47,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This item was allowed to stand on a previous occasion until the premier was present, and as he is here now, I would ask the hon. leader of the opposition if he is prepared to discuss it ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would prefer that it should come up when my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier is here. I had no idea that it was coming up to-day, or he would have been here.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier informed me that he did not want to discuss it any further.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). He did not intimate anything of the kind to me.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I could easily arrange to have a full discussion on this item on the supplementaries.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Not only my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier, but two or three others intimated that they desired to be present when the discussion of the item took place. They are not here to-night, and I would ask my hon. friend if he would fix a day.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am perfectly willing either to allow this item to stand or to have it discussed on the supplementary estimates. We intend having a special supply Bill, and it is necessary that this item should be included.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If my hon. friend would give me notice a few days in advance, I would see that the item was discussed.

Item allowed to stand.

To pay arrears of salaries between certain city postmasters and assistant postmasters accrued during the period beginning June 1, 1881, $15,764.85.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Under the Post Office Act, it is provided that the salaries of postmasters shall be contingent upon the revenue of their respective post offices, but for many years the late government did not appear to think that that created a legal liability, and failed to increase the salaries of some of the postmasters. The question came up, however, in the case of the postmaster at Winnipeg. Inasmuch as the practice had been to disregard that provision and not look upon it as creating any legal liability, I did not depart from that practice but allowed the salaries to continue at the old rate. However, Mr. Hargraft preferred to take the opinion of the court upon the subject. and brought an action in the Exchequer Court. The court held that the postmasters were entitled legally to the increase based upon the percentage. If hon. gentlemen will refer to the Civil Service List, page 208, they will find the schedule under the head 'city postmasters' with a provision :

When postage collections exceed $250,000, $4,000.

When postage collections are from $200,000 to $250,000, $3,750.

And so on. It has happened that, in the course of years, the revenues of city post offices have gradually increased, but the salaries of the postmasters and assistant postmasters have not increased according to this scale. However, when a postmaster took the view that he had a legal right to the increase, the government issued a fiat and the question was decided by the Exchequer Court, as I have stated. Accordingly it is necessary now to make provisions for all the postmasters who have not been paid their salaries. They are as follows :

Mr. BELL. There is nothing for Halifax ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Nothing was held from the postmaster at Halifax.

We have gone through all the cases in view of the decision of the Exchequer Court——

Mr. BELL. Including the legal representatives where the postmaster is dead ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. REID (Grenville). What about the ex-postmaster at Belleville ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. His case does not fall within this rule, because nothing was withheld from him. The officers of the department have gone through all the cases and where anything was withheld, it has been included in this list. There are three other items included in this vote. The first is $11,126.80 for the British American Bank Note Company. This company had at one time a contract for the printing of postage stamps, which contract came to an end in 1897. In settling up accounts, the question arose whether the government was entitled to a surrender of the dies, rolls, plates, machinery and appliances used for printing the postage stamps. The question was in dispute for some time. It has now been settled, and these things have been surrendered and destroyed, and the balance due has been struck. The amount is, as I have stated, $9,581.10, being for principle and the remainder for interest at 3 per cent.

Mr. BELL. Was not that case in litigation ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, but there was a subject in litigation with this company. That question has been settled. There was a verdict, but a dispute as to the amount. But that has been adjusted, and my hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Hon. Mr. Fitzpatrick) tells me that the amount has been paid to the Finance Minister. Another item is for $8,000 to pay Canada's share of the service established in 1902 between Dawson and Eagle city. Eagle city is a few miles within the American territory of Alaska. The present service is being carried on jointly and it costs $9,000. This is apportioned, according to the distance travelled, between the two governments, and the amount falling upon our government is $8,000. The last item is $8,000 for additional service between White Horse and Dawson.

Mr. BELL. Are these services tendered for ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes, a man named Calderhead was the contractor and he was paid so much per trip, and so much per pound over a certain weight. The amount is about $8,000.

Mr. BELL. This is to provide for the year just closed ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. BELL. This is the yearly amount ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes. We have had a service for some years, and last fall we established an extra service. We invited tenders for this additional service of 700 pounds to be carried in after the close of navigation between White Horse and Dawson city. The contract was $238 per trip, and thirty-two cents per pound for all mail matter exceeding the limit of 700 pounds. Some thirty or thirty-two trips at $238 would bring it up to about $7,200, and, in some instances the mail carried exceeded the limit, and the excess being paid for at thirty-two cents per pound, the cost for the whole would be about $8,000.

Mr. BELL. This provides for thirty-two weeks ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Thirty to thirty-two weeks, yes.

Mr. BELL. This was during the last winter ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. BELL. Were tenders invited ? Was the service advertised ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Tenders were invited, and it was advertised, but not for the six weeks. There are only a few people who could tender. There was a bona fide competition. I can recall the tenders being submitted. The White Pass Railway were tenderers. I think there were about three tenderers altogether. I am sorry to say this man lost money by it. I do not know that it affected him financially, but I do not think he wants any more contracts at this rate.

Mr. THOMSON (Grey). At what time was the decision come to with regard to the first item ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. My deputy informs me that it was about last August.

Mr. THOMSON (Grey). When the Postmaster General stated that he had a surplus of $5,000 in the Post Office Department for the year 1902, he was quite wrong, it would appear; he really had a deficit of over $40,000 according to his own statement here.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I hardly think that is fair. These are old arrears in no way concerned in my administration, debts handed down to me largely by my predecessors. My statement was made up from the balances in my department, without reference to these figures, not connected with the financial year to which I allude.

Outside service—salaries and allowances, $1,373,366.75.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That is too comprehensive an item to undertake tonight.

Mr. BELL. I suppose the Postmaster General does not intend to make a long speech on this vote at this late hour.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am always willing to make a statement in regard to my department. We shall have some supplementaries. If the hon. gentleman would like to have a full statement of the work of the department for the financial year that is closed, it can be made on the supplementary estimates.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The statement of the hon. gentleman should not be left till too late in the session, and the supplementaries might make it very late. It would be best to reserve this item for that purpose. I think it would be desirable for the hon. gentleman to make his statement earlier in the evening and to a larger House.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have no objection to make the statement, but during my twenty years' experience in this House, on no occasion so far as my recollection goes, has any Postmaster General been called upon to review the work of the department when asking parliament for a vote. It is not at all an unreasonable request, and I readily accede to it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It is the hon. gentleman's custom to do so.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I never made one yet, it has never been the custom in this department to make a general review. It is the custom, I believe, in the Department of Railways and Canals. I would suggest to the hon. gentleman that we proceed with some of these resolutions, and we can keep the last one for a full discussion.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think these items will involve a good deal of discussion, and it is rather a late hour to begin it.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is not my fault if the House is slim. Since the hon. gentleman is desirous of having a general review, I think it would be more interesting if made a little later. The fiscal year of the department has only closed on the 30th of June. The discussion of the supplementaries might be postponed for a week or two.

Mr. LANCASTER. If the hon. gentleman's statement is to be of any assistance to us, it should be made before we are asked to vote the estimate, instead of afterwards. For my part I would like to hear the statement before I voted for or against some of these items.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Whilst I am not unwilling to make a general review, it is not fair to interject that demand at this moment, and to ask that the whole business should stop until something unusual and unprecedented is done. Nor am I to blame because the hon. gentleman's forces are limited to-night. I have not heard any appeals from that side of the House for postponement. On this side we are anxious to proceed.

Mr. LANCASTER. Are they going to discuss the item on your side ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. They will no doubt do their duty.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The hon. gentleman will of course take his own course about it. Perhaps he will be good enough to explain the increases.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The increases amount to $56,066.75, and are arrived at as follows : In the inspector's office, 17 annual increases, making in all $780. Also to provide for increases in salaries to messengers, $152. Railway mail service, 78 increases, $3,670. Seven additional appointments, $3,400. The decreases are as follows : Difference between the salaries of persons promoted or retired and the salaries of persons appointed to fill vacancies, $800 ; over estimate, $80. Five vacancies dropped, $2,450, total $3,330. Making an increase for the railway mail service of $3,740.

Mr. REID (Grenville). In what city post offices have they received increases ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. All the city post offices.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The hon. minister has read us a long list which it is a little difficult to follow. I have noted two or three of the additions, but, of course, I could not catch them all. There are seven increases to railway mail clerks. Would the hon. gentleman explain the necessity of them, where the increases are and for what lines ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There is one additional third-class clerk at $520.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Who is he ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. A. C. McLatchy, and there are six additional railway mail clerks at $480 each, making $2,880.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Carried.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not know why the hon. Minister of Customs desires to call out 'carried' when hon. gentlemen are getting on their feet.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I did not do it when you were on your feet. I want to get on.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would call the attention of the hon. Minister of Finance to the fact that we have had no notice that we were to go into the Post Office Department estimates to-night. The announcement last night was that we were going into the Public Works estimates.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I know that on previous occasions the post office was mentioned, but I cannot remember as to last night.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. My recollection is that the hon. Minister of Public Works announced that Public Works and Post Office would be taken up.

Mr. LANCASTER. The hon. Minister of Public Works said that minor Bills, Supply, Public Works and nothing else would be taken up.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. And I think Post Office.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Here is what 'Hansard' says :

> The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS moved the adjournment of the House.
> Mr. BARKER. In the absence of the leader of the opposition, might I ask what business will be taken up to-morrow ?
> The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Minor Bils and supply for Public Works Department.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I think he added Post Office also.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). He may have, but 'Hansard' does not say so.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I do not care what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden, Halifax) says, he was not on his feet when I made the remark to which he referred.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I did not get from the hon. Postmaster General the reasons for these increases.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. These increases are due to the extension of the service which is going on in all directions, owing to the prosperity of this country.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Surely, the hon. gentleman does not regard that as an answer. I am asking him where these increases have taken place.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman will get all the information he ought to have. I did not hear the hon. gentleman ask where ; he asked why, and I gave him the reason.

Mr. COCHRANE. The hon. minister might as well keep his temper.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I will keep my temper, but the hon. leader of the opposition in presenting his question ought to be fair too. I understood him to ask why. Now, he asks where. Does the hon. gentleman expect me to bring him all the books in the department, and show where every one of these officers on the staff is ? Is that his idea of doing business?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The hon. Postmaster General seems to be in an unpleasant state of mind for some reason, and it is a little difficult to gather what is the occasion for it. I asked him distinctly where these officers were.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, my hon. friend asked why.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I say where now.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Well, I accept his where.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think it is a reasonable question to ask where they are. I would like the hon. gentleman to state that.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Mr. McLatchy is from the hon. gentleman's own province. He was appointed to the railway mail service in Nova Scotia. Mr. McRae was appointed to the railway mail service in British Columbia, Mr. Leckie in Nova Scotia, Mr. Hartling in British Columbia, and Mr. Doyle in Ontario.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Where is Mr. Doyle from in Ontario ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I could not say.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The hon. Postmaster General should know where he was from when he was appointed. He must have had some place of residence.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have not the least idea where he came from.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Who recommended him ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That I do not know.

Mr. REID (Grenville). What run is he on now ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Railway mail clerks are not assigned to any particular run. They belong to the service generally.

Mr. REID (Grenville). What run did he start on ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That is a matter for the controller of the department.

Mr. REID (Grenville). It does seem strange that when a man has received an appointment to the service nobody knows what run he is on. As long as I have been a member of this House I have understood that when a railway mail clerk is put on a certain route, he remains there for some time. This man is from Ontario. I represent an Ontario constituency, and I think I have the right to ask where he is located and what constituency he is from.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I cannot tell my hon. friend what constituency he is from. The practice when a railway mail clerk is appointed is to leave it to the controller to utilize his services as he sees fit. Railway mail clerks are not appointed to any particular railway run.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I would like to have some idea where this man is from. Of course, if we cannot get it now, I hope the hon. minister will be prepared to give us the information on some other estimates.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. If the hon. gentleman desires the information, he will get it.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Why was W. E. Lemon transferred from the railway mail service to the Toronto Post Office ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Mr. Lemon had been employed in the Toronto Post Office. He was an experienced officer, and he had been transferred for a while to the mail service at the union station. Subsequently he was retransferred to the city post office, because of his special efficiency. When we opened the office at the union station four or five years ago, an officer had to be placed in charge of the railway mail service, it being connected very largely with the running of trains, and Mr. Lemon being an experienced officer, was put in charge of the railway station office. After some experience in the working of the system, it was deemed advisable to place the railway station office under the control of the city postmaster of Toronto, and accordingly Mr. Lemon was transferred back to the city post office so as to be amenable to the postmaster.

Mr. REID (Grenville). He was paid $1,300 extra according to the statement made by the hon. Postmaster General.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. He was paid nothing extra. His salary was $1,300 a year. The same amount he had as a railway mail clerk he received on his transfer to the city post office.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Can you tell us the names of the inspectors, and how much they each received ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. A. Thompson, J. A. Madore, M. J. Whitty, W. T. Cox, E. A. MacDonald, P. W. Erwin, W. A. O'Reilly, M. W. Shaw, A. L. Robertson, M. Ford, J. H. Landerkin, J. M. Morris, T. Keys, K. M. O'Connor, M. A. Curran, M. C. Green. These are the names of the persons in the inspectors' offices who received this increase.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Did they all receive the same increase ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Under the law they received different amounts, according to their position.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I call the attention of the Postmaster General to the fact that the postmasters in rural districts are not getting a sufficient remuneration for the services they perform. I would like to ask the minister if he intends making any change in the system of paying these country postmasters ? In some cases they do not receive a salary in proportion to what others receive in the same locality. It seems to be a general cry throughout the country that the rural postmasters are paid too little, and I have been requested on several occasions to raise the question in parliament. Sometimes it is difficult to get them to keep the post offices. What is the intention of the minister in that regard ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have not devised any different system from that which I found when I entered office, and as to increasing their salaries I am not able to give any opinion to-night. The matter is one deserving of every consideration, but in saying that I do not wish to be understood as committing myself to any conclusion at all. They are paid to-day the rate of salaries that I found current when I entered office. I have not yet been able to devise a system that would be more satisfactory to the taxpayers, as well as to the postmasters, than the one which I found in operation by my predecessors.

Mr. LANCASTER. Did these inspectors get their salaries increased because of increased duties, or because the Postmaster General thought they were getting too little?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. These increases are made in accordance with the Civil Service Act. The practice is that an official enters office at a lower salary than he is expected to receive later on. I suppose the theory is, whether it is supported by fact or not, that when a man is in the service for some time he is better able to discharge his duties than when he enters.

Mr. LANCASTER. You do not imply that it is because their duties have increased ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. My hon. friend can draw his inference.

Mr. LANCASTER. I would like the Postmaster General to help me to draw a correct inference, and we may save time if he does. Is there any regular rule as to how often the rural post offices are inspected in the course of a year ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There is an effort to inspect these offices at least once a year. There are 'accounting' and 'non-accounting' offices, and the non-accounting offices are minor places and the others are of more importance.

Mr. LANCASTER. In my part of the country there is no regularity as to the hours at which the people can get their mail in the different post offices. The post office at Beamsville will be open an hour or two longer every day than the office at Grimsby. We had a new postmaster appointed in Grimsby not long ago, and perhaps he thinks he knows more about how to run a post office than one who has been there for a long time. The postmaster at Grimsby sometimes closes the post office at seven o'clock at night, sometimes earlier and sometimes later. The people there complain that he says he can do pretty much as he likes about it. I do not believe that, of course, and so I wish to know from the Postmaster General what rights my constituents have in the matter. A mail comes to Grimsby village from St. Catharines and Buffalo and Suspension Bridge at six in the evening, and there is another mail fifteen or twenty minutes later from Hamilton and Toronto. The fruit-growers and others, who do a great deal of correspondence, like to get their mail regularly, but if one mail is late the postmaster will close the office until the two come in together. He says he is not going to be bothered handing out letters until the two mails come in, and if the mail from the west is late sometimes he does not open the office again at all that night. I want to know from the Postmaster Geineral, so that I can tell my constituents, whether the inspectors have anything to do with regulating the hours for opening and closing these offices. I think we should have some regular system, so that everybody would know when they could get their mail. If the people in Grimsby find that the post office is open for longer hours at Beamsville, five miles away, it naturally creates dissatisfaction. What has the Postmaster General to say in reference to this ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There is no law or general regulation determining when the post offices shall be opened or closed, but postmasters are required to manage their business having regard to the convenience of the patrons of the office. At one office the mails may arrive later than at another, and it may be to the convenience of the people that that office should be kept open longer. Again, the customs of the people in one small town differ from the customs in another. In some places the business establishments close at different hours from others, and it would seem proper that the post office in each town should conform reasonably to the practice of the business people. However that be, the policy of the department is to have the postmasters manage their offices with proper regard to the convenience of the people. The public, as a rule, are not slow to call attention to a departure from any such practice. If a mistake is made, it is promptly inquired into. If there is any issue between the patrons and the postmaster, the inspector inquires into the matter and makes a report.

Mr. LANCASTER. Would it not be well to have a rule fixing the number of hours during which post offices must be kept open? In St. Catharines the stores are open from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m., and the post office is open from 7 a.m. to 8 p.m., whereas in the village of Grimsby, where the stores are open until eight at night every day and on Saturdays still later, the post office closes at 6 or 7. It is not satisfactory that people living within short distances of each other should compare notes and find out that in one place a man can get his letters up to 8 o'clock at night and in another he cannot get them after 6 or 7 p.m. There should be some system. Let the hon. minister make the hours 8 or 10 per day, but the length of the working day should not be left to the will of each postmaster.

Mr. BLAIN. A part of the item is for superannuation in connection with some officers of the hon. gentleman's department is it not ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, not in this item.

Mr. BLAIN. I thought the hon. minister read out some names.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Not in this item.

Mr. BLAIN. Then it was in one of the other items ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Probably the hon. gentleman is thinking of a former item in the supplementaries of this year and of an explanation in connection with the postmaster at Winnipeg, who had been superannuated.

Mr. BLAIN. I probably misunderstood. I thought the hon. gentleman had read out some names on this item. Did I understand correctly that he has under consideration the question of increasing the pay of country postmasters ? He justified his position by saying that he found the salaries of the country postmasters very low when he came into office.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I did not say that. I said that I found the salaries as they are to-day.

Mr. BLAIN. That would be about the same thing.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I did not express any opinion.

Mr. BLAIN. The hon. minister justified his present position by the fact that some of the salaries were very low when he came into office. Why did he see fit to have a Bill passed this afternoon to increase the pay of the city employees. When he was considering that class, he should have given some consideration to the country postmasters. Is it his intention to make some provision in the supplementaries for an increase in the salaries of some of the underpaid country postmasters ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am afraid it will be out of order for me to discuss the provision of the Bill which passed the House to-day, but it is quite in order to discuss the question of the salaries of the postmasters. My hon. friend suggests that I expressed an opinion as to the scale of their salaries being low. I am not saying they are not low, but I have not expressed any opinion. The hon. gentleman asks me whether we could not include an item in the supplementaries to provide for an increase. I am afraid that I could not anticipate a message from His Excellency by saying what the supplementaries will contain, but when on the Table they will speak for themselves. No legislation is necessary in order to deal with the subject, as the statutes vest that power in the Postmaster General. That has been the law for many years before this government came into office. I am very pleased to hear all that can be advanced in favour of an increase, and will give every consideration to the representations of hon. gentlemen.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The hon. minister read a statement of the increases in the staff, but gave no explanation of the reason. I can understand that railway mail clerks are assigned from time to time to their respective routes, am I right ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That, of course, is very satisfactory, as far as it goes. Could the hon. gentleman tell us on what particular lines the increase has been found necessary ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I hardly think that my hon. friend expects me to give him that detailed information. The railway service of Canada is extensive and increasing, and as the number of trains increase, mail clerks have to be put on and additions have to be made to the staff. If the hon. gentleman has any particular mail service which he desires to discuss, I shall be happy to give him all the information in my power.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I should have thought that it would not be beyond the hon. gentleman's knowledge of his department, or at least beyond the knowledge of his officers, to give to the House information as to where the particular demands for increases come from. There must be some parts of the country where there are more railway clerks required now than before. He says that there are seven additions, but I want to know where the additional ones will be located, and where the demand for these additional clerks comes from. I would not have supposed that it would be outside the hon. gentleman's information to tell the House where the additional clerks are now placed. There must be some distribution of the additional offices; where there were say five before there are six now, and so on all over the country. Surely the hon. Postmaster General ought to be able to give us that information.

I have been informed of a case in the North-west Territories which I would like to bring to the hon. gentleman's attention. I have not the exact details. Not knowing that the post office estimates would come up, I have not the papers before me, nor could I lay my hands on them at once in my room, as at this late hour my secretary is not here. But as I recollect the case, there is a mail car which runs south to the United States boundary and then on to an American line of railway. I believe it connects with the Canadian Pacific Railway at Moosejaw and proceeds southward from there. I have been informed that if people put their letters into this car, they are not received by any railway mail clerk until after the car has crossed the boundary into the United States, when they are taken by a United States mail clerk. The result is that if the letters are addressed to places in the United States and have a Canadian stamp on them, the American mail clerk does not recognize the stamp as payment of the postage and sends the letters to the dead letter office. And so the people.

even on the Canadian side, posting letters on this car addressed to people in the United States, must put upon their letters United States stamps. I do not know that this state of affairs has been described to the hon. minister, but I would like to know if he has any information to give the House on the subject. It seems an extraordinary state of affairs, if true. If it has been true in the past, he might tell us whether it is still true, or whether one of the additional mail clerks spoken of by him has been placed upon the car to which I refer.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have not heard of the case to which my hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax) refers. I understand he is not able to-night to identify the railway, further than to say that it is a railway passing from the North-west Territories into the United States. If he will give me the name of the railway, I shall be glad to look into the matter.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). My hon friend from West Assiniboia (Mr. Scott) is more familiar with the point, no doubt, than I am.

Mr. SCOTT. I suppose it is the train on the Pasqua branch of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It runs south to the United States and joins the Canadian Pacific Railway at Moosejaw. That is my recollection.

Mr. SCOTT. Yes.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think I am right in saying that that is the line referred to. I can learn with certainty from the papers in my possession. Perhaps the Postmaster General can say in the meantime whether such conditions exist.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I said I did not know, but I would inquire.

Mr. SCOTT. I think the car which my hon. friend (Mr. Borden) refers will be found on inquiry, to be an American mail car. Since the beginning of the year, the Postmaster General has placed a mail clerk and Canadian mail car upon the line. But formerly, the American mail car ran to Moosejaw, and I suppose does so still. Of course, there is no Canadian mail clerk on that car.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The point that particularly attracted my attention was that a Canadian subject in the North-west Territory desiring to place letters on this car—I suppose, after the mail in the post office had been closed—could only get his letters carried to an American destination by putting American stamps on them, although the letters might be mailed a hundred miles from the border. I think it is a condition of affairs which the Postmaster General might do well to inquire into. I was informed also that there was some striking anomaly in regard to the mail service between Regina and Prince Albert. But the details have escaped my recollection at the moment, and I have not the papers at hand. No doubt, my hon. friend from Assiniboia would be familiar with the matter.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I see that the Ottawa Supply Company got about $16,000 supply from the department. Can the Postmaster General tell me who are the members of this company?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not know the personnel of this company. They had a contract for manufacturing mail bags, and I think that it is on account of that contract that the item appears to which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Reid, Grenville) has referred.

Mr. REID (Grenville). What is the name of the gentleman who deals with the government on behalf of the company ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The officer of the company—the president, I believe—is Mr. Stratton, an Ottawa businessman.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The hon. Postmaster General read a list of what was included in this $56,000, but the items were read too fast for me to take note of them, and they were too many to remember. Has the Postmaster General a duplicate, so that we can see the items ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have no duplicate at hand.

Mr. REID (Grenville). In arranging for the carrying of the mails from point to point, does the hon. Postmaster General always call for tenders, and, if so, does he accept the lowest tender ? I notice here one item where a contractor is paid for service between Midland and Honey Harbour, twelve miles, sixty-nine trips, $10 for the season, and he receives $8. Surely that must be wrong. The hon. Postmaster General would not be guilty of asking a contractor to make sixty-nine trips for $8.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I cannot at the moment explain the item. I suppose this is not the whole amount paid, but it is probably some balance. Contractors are required to carry out their contracts and are paid whatever has been agreed upon.

Mr. REID (Grenville). But this item reads 'Midland and Honey Harbour, contractor, distance 12 miles, 69 trips, December 30th, 1901, at $10 for season. The season, I suppose, would be the whole year, surely the hon. gentleman would not pay $8 for such a service, particularly when I find another man is paid $1,200 for eighteen miles, and others also are paid large amounts.

Mr. LEFURGEY. While these large increases in the estimates for the Post Office Department are going through, I would like the minister to consider the need of some satisfactory arrangement about the mails of Prince Edward Island. I think his attention was called to this during the winter, and I propose now to refresh his memory. While the winter service boats were running the mails arriving at Georgetown, and at Summerside also, had to wait ten or twelve hours before they were distributed from the west to Charlottetown, or from Georgetown to Charlottetown and Summerside. Passengers arriving there thirty or forty at a time had to telegraph to Charlottetown and to put up money out of their own pockets to get special trains in order to reach the capital. These trains paid for by private individuals carried His Majesty's mails free of cost. This matter has been going on for a number of years. I believe some of the ministers disclaim having had any notice of it this last winter; but if they will turn up the 'Hansard' of last winter and the winter before, they will find that reference was made to this matter. My hon. friend from Queen's, Prince Edward Island (Mr. MacKinnon) puts me in mind of the time when I crossed myself. We had thirty or forty passengers on board the steamer, arriving about six o'clock. We had two or three days mails, and we found that there was no special train to take the passengers and mails to Charlottetown. We wired to the board of trade and to the hon. member for Queen's, and through his good offices, who put up the money from his own pocket, we finally got a train. That is only one instance, there have been numerous instances where the merchants and people of Charlottetown and Summerside had to put up money out of their own pockets in order to get the mails distributed throughout the island. While it is possibly not desirable to have the regular train wait over where there are passengers arriving every day, our mails are uncertain some consideration should be given to a reasonable distribution of the mails throughout the island. The Postmaster General must know that the merchants are labouring under serious disadvantage from the irregularity of the steamers. It is intolerable that this condition of affairs should continue year after year. The trouble seems to be between the Railway Department and the Post Office Department, who bicker among themselves as to who shall stand the loss. The people of this country who pay the money do not care which department expends it so long as they get the service which they pay for. It might just as well be expended under the Post Office Department as under the Railway Department. I trust enough has been said on this subject, and that the minister will see that next winter arrangements are made for the transmission of mails and passengers by special trains to meet the boats.

I want also to call his attention to some improvements that might be made in connection with some of the smaller post offices, for the transmission of the mails along the line between Charlottetown and Summerside. For the information of the minister I will read a communication which I received from a gentleman who is well informed in the matter :

Kelley's Cross, P.E.I., March 28, 1903.

A. A. Lefurgey, M.P.,
Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—I wish to direct your attention to the very unsatisfactory daily mail service between Kelley's Cross and New Wiltshire. Our mails are despatched from Kelley's Cross every morning at seven o'clock to New Wiltshire, where, by the present arrangement they lay all day and night and are only sent forward by the next morning's express from Charlottetown and said letters for Charlottetown and all eastern and southern points on the island being returned to the capital by the western mail on express train from Summerside, which does not reach Charlottetown till late in the evening, and, in all cases too late for banking or other business transactions or to admit of replies to correspondence by next morning's train. You will thus see that it takes a letter from thirty-six to forty hours to find its way from Kelley's Cross to Charlottetown, a distance of eighteen miles. To give you another instance of how unsatisfactory the present arrangement is, suppose a letter for Charlottetown is mailed and despatched from Kelley's Cross post office at seven o'clock a.m., on Saturday, it remains at New Wiltshire Saturday and Saturday night, Sunday and Sunday night, goes forward on the west bound train Monday morning and returns by the western express from Sumerside and arrives in Charlottetown Monday evening so late that practically you may call it Tuesday morning, on three days and three nights travelling from Kelley's Cross to the capital a distance of eighteen miles. I do not think that I need say any more to convince you that this is not a very fast or up-to-date daily mail service. But Kelley's Cross is not the only section that suffers inconvenience by the present arrangement. There are three post offices, viz.: Brookvale, Emy Vale and Tyrone on the mail route between Kelley's Cross and New Wiltshire, which have only a tri-weekly service and whose mails are detained at and despatched from New Wiltshire in the same manner as the Kelley's Cross mails. Thus the mails of four post offices are needlessly detained at New Wiltshire for days—to the great inconvenience of the large sections of country served by these offices—now that I have stated my grievance you may naturally ask what is the remedy I propose ? Simply this, arranging with the New Wiltshire courier to make a second daily trip between New Wiltshire and North Wiltshire railroad station, taking the Kelley's Cross, Brookvale, Emy Vale and Tyrone mails to connect with the western morning train from Summerside to Charlottetown, so that the mails of above named offices would reach the city early on the day they were mailed instead of late in the evening of the following day as under the present arrangement. The New Wiltshire courier is willing to make this second daily trip for a very small remuneration so that if the department wishes they can give us a satisfactory daily service at a very trifling additional cost. Years ago I wrote Sir Louis Davies re this matter. Sir Louis handed my letter to the Postmaster General who in turn referred it to the post office inspector at Charlottetown. The latter informed me that he reported favourably, but for some reason or other there has been nothing done to remedy the grievance. I feel confident, however, if the Postmaster General was fully aware of the nature and kind of our so called daily mail service he would not hesitate a moment in arranging for the second daily trip from New Wiltshire to North Wiltshire station which is only about half a mile—for I can't believe that any progressive minister would tolerate or continue such a slow, inconvenient and unsatisfactory service as I have pointed out, when it can be made up-to-date and satisfactory at such a trifling cost. I therefore hope that on receipt of this you will lay the matter before the honourable the Postmaster General so that he may order to have the grievance removed with as little delay as possible.

Now I think this gentleman has made out a prima facie case, and I do not see how the minister can hesitate in having a second daily trip made from New Wiltshire to North Wiltshire, and give these people a reasonable service. There is a large number of farmers and merchants to whom this daily mail service will be a great benefit. While I am on this matter, I wish to call attention to another convenience that the minister should place at the disposal of these people, that is the establishment of a money order office. This gentleman writes:

I may say that a large amount of mail matter is despatched from and read at the Kelley's Cross office and that large number of remittances are sent from this office, and hence the necessity of having it made a money order office. There is no money order office between Crapaud and North Wiltshire (and I am doubtful if there is one there) a distance of ten or twelve miles east and west, nor more between Breadalbane and Bonshaw, a distance of fourteen or fifteen miles reaching north and south. It would, therefore, be a great convenience and accommodation to the farmers, mechanics and business men living within the points named if a money order office was established at Kelley's Cross, and I hope when you are urging a better mail service for Kelley's Cross you will not forget to press for a money order office at Kelley's Cross.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the increases in this post office service are mounting up to hundreds and thousands, and there is no reason why the minister should not expend a small portion of that on the matters I have brought to his attention. Last year I also brought to his attention the mail service between Wellington and Egmont Bay and the sections down through the western part of Prince county, when the minister stated that he would look into the situation. Now, I understand that nothing has been done, and as in the case of the Kelley's Cross and North Wiltshire section of the country, a very small amount of money would put matters right and would satisfy a large number of people. It is not only to the large items of expenditure and to the lessening of rates to the United Kingdom and other parts of the empire that the hon. minister must look, but he must certainly look to the smaller sections of the country and see that the people get the service they require. I trust the hon. minister will give the people of Prince Edward Island a portion of his attention and of the expenditure of part of this large increase that he has in the estimates.

Mr. MACKINNON. There may be something in the grievance that the hon. member (Mr. Lefurgey) has just mentioned in some small sections of the country in Prince Edward Island, but I do not wish the committee to be under a wrong impression about the mail service of Prince Edward Island. In regard to the winter mail service, the grievance of which the hon. member speaks, arose from the desire on the part of the government to comply with the wishes of his own constituents. At his own request, and at the request of the people of Summerside and Prince county, they put the steamer 'Stanley' on the winter route between Cape Tormentine and Summerside. The 'Stanley' stuck in the ice and she remained there during the greater part of the winter. Another steamer was sent to her relief and she also remained there during a large part of the winter, and while both steamers were fast in the ice, the mail service was not as good last winter as it had been formerly. It arose from the fact that there was more ice in the straits than usual and a desire to please the people of Prince county, who urged upon the government the desirability of sending the 'Stanley' to the western part of the island. These people are represented by members of the opposition. Members supporting the government in the House were desirous that they should be fairly treated and they yielded to the request, and that is the reason why this service was established. The hon. member, time and again, has spoken of this winter service across the straits, both as to the steamers and the mail service. I rise particularly to point out that Prince Edward Island is not ice bound all the year round. We have passed the middle of the summer; yet, the hon. member still reiterates his statements about the ice thus advertising our province as a place unfit to live in. It conveys a wrong impression to the world. This is one of the most fertile spots in the Dominion, and one of the most progressive, and it is one where the hon. Postmaster General has improved the mail service far beyond anything in the history of that province. Both locally and from an interprovincial point of view he has improved the service greatly. I regret to hear hon. members coming from the province talking in this way of Prince Edward Island. I have looked up the record of 'Hansard' and I find that for 20 or 30 years hon. members from the island have got up and continued discussing this ice question, and they give people the impression that we are nearer to the north pole than we are. It is true that we have ice in the winter, but the government has placed two steamers on the service where the former government had but one. These hon. gentlemen have been chasing a tunnel project which would cost almost half the value of the whole province instead of doing what they could do to secure an improved service. They have been getting up and grumbling about the matter and suggesting no remedy. They get up and chase that tunnel scheme that would cost $10,000,000 or $20,000,000, instead of in a practical way proposing some feasible scheme. Hon. gentlemen get up year in and year out and continue the same old story about the ice. There is no reason to talk in that manner. A few of these grievances occurred last winter, and I have explained the reason why. So far as the salaries of postmasters on the island are concerned, there are a few places where they should be increased a little, and I am satisfied that if the question is brought to the attention of the hon. Postmaster General this will be done. I suppose he is treating the island in the same way as he is treating other parts of Canada, and I think we should be satisfied with that. It is not a money making transaction to keep a post office any way. The people of Prince Edward Island are generally satisfied with the service, and although this trouble did occur last winter, it was through the fact that an experiment was being made in the western route during a winter when navigation was more difficult than for the past twenty years.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I am surprised that any hon. member from Prince Edward Island should get up and make a speech before this committee such as the hon. gentleman has made reflecting upon the intelligence of the people of his own constituency and of Charlottetown. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. MacKinnon) mean to lell this committee that the delegations that were sent up here and that the remonstrances sent up from a mass meeting in Charlottetown were simply jokes? A mass meeting was held at Charlottetown by those whom the hon. gentleman represents, and condemnatory resolutions were passed upon the conduct of the mail service and the conduct of the winter boats last year, and for that hon. gentleman to come here and make light of the resolutions passed by his own strong supporters, and by the very best business men of Charlottetown and of Prince Edward Island, I think, is certainly paying a small compliment to the intelligence of his own electors. Now, Mr. Chairman, in one word he condemns the placing of the steamer on the Summerside and Cape Tormentine route, and in the next moment he applauds it. If the hon. gentleman will look at the report from Mr. Shewen, published in 1894, he will see that Mr. Shewen recommended the placing of a steamer on the Summerside and Cape Tormentine route to test the feasibility of this route, and when the hon. gentleman gets up and says that it is a failure, I say he does not state the truth.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I say he does not state the facts as they are.

Mr. MACKINNON. I would ask the hon. gentleman if it was not a failure, what is he grumbling about?

Mr. LEFURGEY. I am not grumbling about placing a steamer there.

Mr. MACKINNON. Was it a success?

Mr. LEFURGEY. It was a decided success.

Mr. MACKINNON. The steamer was stuck in the ice all winter.

Mr. LEFURGEY. She was stuck there on account of the neglect of the officers of the department, but that was no fault of the route. It is not necessary for me to go over that again, because I have reiterated on several occasions that when the boat was stuck off Summerside, she remained ten days in the ice without a hand being lifted to free her, while experts claim that with reasonable diligence, such as any private owner would have exercised in the conduct of his affairs, the captain could have relieved her from her position and continued the mail service throughout the balance of the winter. We had reports upon this mail route between the two capes years ago. The hon. member says that the government are coming forward with a progressive policy to-day. We have not any amount in the estimates for establishing a pier at Carleton point. We have this report of Mr. Shewen, prepared in 1894, recommending in the strongest words possible that the route between Cape Tormentine and Cape Traverse was the only natural route, and would eventually be the route of communication between the island and the mainland. We have been presenting petitions praying for a pier to be constructed at Carleton point during the last two sessions. And when the hon. gentleman gets up and says that we have a progressive policy, why does he not get his ministers to put an amount in the estimates to carry forward this pier? I am afraid the progressive policy the hon. gentleman is talking about is carried out with the idea of keeping up the local prejudice of which he speaks, and keeping the boats on the Charlottetown and Pictou route. That is why the route was not tried long ago. It is not because the intelligent people of the western part of the island have not been asking the government for years to experiment on the route. The experiment with the 'Stanley' on the Summerside route has been eminently successful, and the Minister of Public Works will tell you that the service was everything that could be expected under the circumstances. If the hon. gentleman wants to carry out an up-to-date policy, let him put a vote in the estimates this year for carrying out that project, and not wait for another year, or until on the verge of an election. I believe the engineers of the government made surveys there last winter, and I believe all the evidence points to the fact that between Cape Tormentine and Carleton point is the only alternative by which the Dominion can carry out the terms of union with Prince Edward Island. I am sorry to have to bring forward a defence of our position on the island against one of the members who is sent here to represent us. I can only say that his words will not be accepted with very good grace by the people who gave him their confidence at the last election.

Mr. BENNETT. They will never do it again.

Mr. MACKINNON. I never boast until the election is over.

Mr. REID (Grenville). There is hardly a member in this House who has not some grievance against the Post Office Department, and that shows the injustice of bringing down this vote when there are so few members in the House. However, I am prepared to do my share of the discussion, and I will ask the Postmaster General to explain the contract he has with the American Bank Note Company with regard to the printing of postage stamps.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Before the Postmaster General answers that, it seems to me that he ought to inform the House how it happened—putting aside the question of passengers—that the Prince Edward Island mails are delayed for some considerable time when they are landed from the boat. There is the instance quoted by my hon. friend from Prince (Mr. Lefurgey), where money had to be deposited for the purpose of getting a train to send the mails forward.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The Post Office Department has not the control of the Island Railway. When the trains are put on by the Department of Railways they are utilized by the Post Office Department the same as any other trains in Canada. There was some interruption for a short time this year, but that was overcome, and there is no reason to suppose there will be a repetition of it. With reference to the question raised by the hon. member for Prince, as to the second daily mail service between Kelley's Cross and North Wiltshire, I have had a note made of his suggestion, but I may say that I find in the Postmaster General's Report some circumstances which may have some bearing upon the hon. gentleman's demand. It is customary to give the best possible mail service to all localities, but it is always necessary to have some regard to the financial side of such a question. I find, however, that the revenue at Kelley's Cross for the last fiscal year was $67, and the postmaster was paid $24 ; the mail service cost $125, and if that were duplicated it would be $250 a year for a service to that very important place, which, however, does not send a large revenue to the department. I may say that these are circumstances which have to be considered. However, I will have that point looked into. With reference to the question of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Reid), I may say that the bank note contract was made in 1897 with the Department of Finance. That contract ran its term of five years and has been continued since. The company do excellent service at reasonable rates, and probably this country never received a better service at more reasonable rates than it is receiving to-day for the class of work that is being done for the department.

Mr. HACKETT. The question under discussion is of so much importance to the people of Prince Edward Island that I cannot allow it to pass without making a few observations, especially at this early hour of the morning. I regret that the Postmaster General so cavalierly brushed aside the grievances of my hon. friend from Prince. He said that some slight difficulty occurred last winter and it was removed, and he trusted the like would never occur again. A slight difficulty ! Why the people of Prince Edward Island were for weeks at a time deprived of their mail, and the government of Canada were too mean and too contemptibly small to hire a special train to send these mails to their destination when they arrived on the soil of Prince Edward Island. Sir, when the island entered the union a solemn compact was entered into by the government of Canada that we should have steam communication continuously between the island and the mainland for the convenience of mails and passengers. The Postmaster General says a slight delay occurred last year. Let me tell him that the people of Prince Edward Island were filled with indignation from one end of it to the other. They were on the verge of revolt. This mass meeting was held in the citadel of the hon. member for East Queen's ; held there under—I was going to say under his nose—but within the length of his arm. The board of trade of the city of Charlottetown passed strong resolutions and sent a delegation to this government asking redress of the grievances. My hon. friend has spoken about ice, but let him read the speech of the hon. member for East Prince (Mr. Lefurgey) when it appears in 'Hansard' to-morrow, and he will see that the hon. gentleman made no reference whatever to the ice He wanted to make it appear that the whole trouble was in connection with the ice, and he says we have fine weather now and that we should not give the province a bad name by talking about ice. Let me tell him that the ice and the winter will come again. It is unfortunate that an hon. gentleman, representing a people who are labouring under such wrongs and who are vainly pleading for redress, would not raise his voice in the parliament of his country in behalf of those people, but endeavour instead to shield the government which has been unfaithful in its duty and has made no attempt to carry out its pledges or the contract between the Dominion and the island. The hon. gentleman speaks about the beautiful little spot, about its green valleys——

Hon. Mr. ROSS. And high mountains.

Mr. HACKETT. No, not high mountains, nothing to compare with the mountains along Bras d'Or. But we have undulating hills and green valleys and rippling streams. If hon. gentlemen want to see nature at its best, let them visit the province of Prince Edward Island and they will be rewarded for their trouble. I would advise the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Ross), after this parliament is prorogued and when he will have some leisure days on hand, to take a trip to Prince Edward Island.

Mr. SCOTT. You have no ice there now ?

Mr. HACKETT. My hon. friend from Assiniboia (Mr. Scott) evidently requires to be cooled off, and if he will make the trip we will take him across in one of the old ice boats that have been there the last forty or fifty years. That will certainly bring him down to a proper temperature, and then, when he returns to his native home in the Pile of Bones Creek, he will be able to interest his people by a description of the Straits of Northumberland. It was not my intention to take part in this discussion, but I felt bound to enter a protest against the utterances of my hon. friend from East Queen's (Mr. McKinnon). I am certain that the remarks of that hon. gentleman will not be accepted with much favour by his own supporters and will be certainly condemned by those who are opposed to him.

Hon. Mr. ROSS. It is now coming pretty near the full moon, which is about the time when usually the grievances of Prince Edward Island are ventilated in this House. The hon. gentleman has given me an invitation to visit the island. Let me inform him that I have been there before and enjoyed my trip very much, but that does not blind me to the fact that when the ice becomes thickened with the frosts of winter, it is impossible for the steamers to make their regular trips from Pictou to Charlottetown or any other spot on the island. And before the hon. gentlemen from that province unburden themselves of their complaints, they should try and remember that it is not within the power of the Dominion government or parliament to remove the obstacles which Divine Providence has placed in the way of winter communication between the island and the mainland. If they would cultivate a spirit of submission to the will of Providence, they would be conferring a great boon on this parliament by sparing us the repetition of their complaints from session to session on every possible occasion. I happen to be a resident of an island which considers itself of as much importance as Prince Edward Island, but we have no grievances for which we cannot obtain redress in the different departments of the government without bringing our troubles before this House. I think it is about time that the people of Prince Edward Island and their representatives would learn to submit to the will of Providence and not expect from this parliament the accomplishment of the impossible.

Mr. HACKETT. This is not the first time the hon. gentleman has read me a lecture on my audacity in venturing to speak in this parliament on behalf of the interests of my constituents. Well, Mr. Chairman, the strictures of the hon. gentleman are a matter of very slight moment to me. He is perfectly free to criticise anything I may say, and all that he is able to say will not prevent me from doing my duty to the people I represent. We are supposed to be here prosecuting the business of Canada, and if the hon. gentleman has sufficient youth to remain until very early in the morning and desires to keep up his assiduous attendance, he will hear me on many more occasions speaking in defence of the rights of my people; and if he choses to remain in his seat quietly and read his newspaper, that is no business of mine. I was reading the other day in a newspaper a very interesting article which had some reference to the hon. gentleman, and in which he was styled the Lord of the Isle. It appears that the rock St. Paul, in the gulf of the St. Lawrence, had been set aside for some years by the Canadian government for the propagating of the lobster. That rock, however, had excited the jealous and envious eye of many hon. gentlemen opposite, interested in the lobster fishery down in that vicinity, and many were the attempts they made to secure the coveted treasure for themselves, but the government withheld all their attacks. The hon. gentleman, however, at last succeeded by his wiles, his winning ways, and his fawning and cringing manner, in prevailing upon the government to make him Lord Paramount of that rock, and since then he has been dubbed the Lord of the Isle, and no one but he is allowed to kill lobsters around St. Paul Island.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It seems to me that the hon. the Postmaster General has hardly given an adequate answer to the complaint made of the defective mail service in Prince Edward Island. All he has been able to reply is that the Post Office Department utilizes the services of the Railway Department. That, I submit, is not an adequate answer. The hon. gentleman is responsible for the delivery of the mails, and we want to learn from him whether there is any particular reason why the mails should remain undelivered for hours after they have been landed from the steamers. It does not matter whether it be the Railway Department or the Post Office Department which is involved, what we are entitled to know is the reason why the mails, even after they have been in the ice of the gulf for weeks, should be detained for hours before being sent forward to their destination. Does he think he meets the case by stating that he utilizes the services of the Railway Department? The Railway Department in the other provinces provides the means for forwarding the mails at once upon the arrival of the steamers. That is the case in Halifax as regards the mails of the upper provinces. The only answer the Postmaster General might make is that these mails are for a much larger population and are much greater in quantity, but that will not justify his neglect to take the proper means of forwarding them immediately upon their arrival in the island.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The post office has not the ordering of trains as to their starting or progress, nor as to whether they shall start at all. The mails are not the only thing to be carried by the railway. The hon. member for East Prince (Mr. Lefurgey) pointed out that there was a large number of passengers coming by these steamers, and I suppose there were goods also to be transferred. It is for the railway to meet the requirements of the country as to train service for the carriage of passengers, goods and mails. When railways are in operation, this department feels it its duty to utilize the trains to the fullest extent for the purpose of carrying on the mail service. That has been done by the department in Prince Edward Island and will continue to be done. I understand that arangements have been made so that the interruptions which took place shall not occur again. Therefore, I do not anticipate any further ground for objection such as has been made. I can understand the disappointment of the people at the delay and interruption in the carriage of mails and I am quite as solicitous as the members from Prince Edward Island to avoid these interruptions.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I suppose we must take the remarks of the Postmaster General as rather a censure of the Railway Department for not providing the necessary facilities. Of course, if we understand it in that sense, the hon. Postmaster General, administrator of his own department, might not be open to severe criticism, except, possibly, for not having made some arrangement with the Railway Department to forward the mails promptly upon their being landed. However, as he gives assurance that he believes that arrangements have been made to avoid a repetition of these delays, I suppose that ought to be regarded as fairly satisfactory. We shall see to what extent his expectations are realized in the coming winter.

Mr. HUGHES (King's). There is no doubt that the service last year was unsatisfactory. But I think it was largely due to the differences among the people of Prince Edward Island themselves. The steamers employed in the service were sent one to the eastern end and one to the western end of the island. In former years, this service had been fairly satisfactory, particularly since the two steamers were provided.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). May I ask the hon. gentleman a question? I did not understand the position taken by my hon. friend from Queen's (Mr. MacKinnon). He said at one time that the result which had obtained was owing to the fact that steamers had been put upon the new route between Summerside and the Capes. But then I afterwards understood him to say that the route between Summerside and the Capes was the proper route.

Mr. MACKINNON. Not between Summerside and the Capes, but between the two Capes. This is the shortest route.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That is the route covered by the ice-boat service when the steamers do not ply?

Mr. MACKINNON. Yes. The route to Summerside is twenty or thirty miles.

Mr. HUGHES (King's). I thought the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden, Halifax) wished to ask me a question, but it seems he wishes to ask my hon. friend (Mr. MacKinnon).

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I want to get the view of my hon. friend (Mr. Hughes, King's) also.

Mr. HUGHES (King's). One of the steamers went to try to keep up communication between Summerside and Cape Tormentine. But the western route has not proved satisfactory, and, in my opinion, and in the opinion of men who are competent to judge, it cannot prove satisfactory. The interruption was due also in part to the fact that last winter was an unusually severe winter, and there was a great quantity of ice in the straits and the gulf.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Hughes, King's) agree that the route between the Capes is the best?

Mr. HUGHES (King's). That has not been tried by steam—and—well I will come to that later on.

Mr. LEFURGEY. Would the hon. gentleman have any objection to the government trying it ?

Mr. HUGHES (King's). We are dealing now with what occurred last winter. I think the difficulty was largely due to the fact that the government listened too much to the representations of the western part of the island and went too far in trying to meet the wishes of everybody. I believe that in that they made a mistake, and I trust that that mistake will not be repeated. I think that the ministers, and particularly the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, has information that will enable him to place the winter steamers on the route that will give the people of Prince Edward Island the best service. And I believe that next year, and for the years to come, there will be no great cause for complaint. There was a difficulty and we might as well recognize it. There was a steamer plying between Pictou and Georgetown and one between Cape Tormentine and Summerside. It was certainly difficult for the railway department to provide trains to meet both steamers on their arrival, for they did not arrive on schedule time, and no one could say when they would be in. That difficulty will continue as long as the steamers are on different routes. If they are put upon one route, the one known to be feasible, the one the use of which for the last thirty years has resulted in a reasonable service, it will be easy for the Railway Department to meet the steamers and to convey passengers and mails to Charlottetown where they may be distributed to their destinations. The government, in their anxiety to please everybody, particularly the people of the western part of the island, made a mistake. It is no reflection upon the harbour of Summerside to say that it cannot be a winter port. Montreal cannot be a winter port, yet it is a very important city. It is a fact known to men skilled in winter navigation that Summerside cannot be successfully navigated in the winter, and so the route between Cape Tormentine and Summerside cannot be successfully maintained. But the route between Georgetown and Pictou has been fairly successful since it was established about thirty years ago. With the two boats on that route, a satisfactory service will be given to the people. I trust that idea will be followed. I believe the Minister of Marine and Fisheries will be seized of the facts and will carry on the service in a way satisfactory to all parties concerned.

Mr. McLENNAN. Before the question of railway mail service is disposed of, I wish to say a few words with regard to a matter brought to the attention of the Postmaster General last session. I informed him that mails were carried on the Inverness railway as mere baggage, and this has proven very unsatisfactory to the people. I remember that the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Scott) called attention to a similar difficulty in his riding. I find from the discussion this evening that the matter has been settled to the satisfaction of the hon. member.

Mr. SCOTT. I have another one.

Mr. McLENNAN. In the case of the Inverness Railway, I regret to observe that nothing has been done. The Postmaster General is evidently seeking to make both ends meet between revenue and expenditure in his department; but of all the departments, I believe this particular department is the one that the people of Canada would be willing to pay deficits to keep in a satisfactory condition.

Leaving the railway question and dwelling a little on this economy in the mail service, I wish to call attention to the fact that so much economy was practiced in the county of Inverness last winter that while travelling on a train I happened to fall in with the deputy post office inspector for Nova Scotia, and he told me, to my amazement, that he was just going down to Inverness to seek for offers to convert about half the daily mail service in that county into a tri-weekly service. Needless to say that I felt quite excited over the evidence of retrogression in this connection. I must say en passant that the Postmaster General was not at home at the time. But now that he is here and that I am here, I wish to call his attention to the fact that on that occasion tenders were publicly asked to have about half daily mail service in Inverness converted into a tri-weekly one, As usual the Minister of Finance was at his post, and I appealed to him in the absence of the Postmaster General ; and I wish to say here to-night that if the officials of the Postmaster General had their way, and had it not been for the prompt action of the Minister of Finance, the county of Inverness to-day would be jogging along, so to speak, with a tri-weekly service where it had a daily mail service for 35 years previously. I, therefore, feel that I would be derelict in my duty if I did not call public attention to a matter which threatened to affect so seriously a matter of vital interest to the county of Inverness, which perhaps of all counties in Canada is progressing the most rapidly. At such a time, then I submit whether such a handicap would not be a most regrettable circumstance. I asked a question in this House last year as to the comparative cost of carrying the mails in the county of Inverness in the year 1896 and in the year 1902. The Postmaster General's answer to that showed that there had been $5,000 a year for six years saved out of the mail service in the county of Inverness by the Post Office Department. I would not complain about that were it not that I find it very difficult to secure any improvement in the old order of things with regard to the mail service in that county. The matter has been progressing, however, as I said before. Other departments of this government are doing well for that county, and I regret all the more that this particular department of the government should do anything which would calculate to retard the progress of that county.

Mr. LEFURGEY. The hon. member for King's (Mr. Hughes) has referred to the service between Georgetown and Pictou as being the only service that proved satisfactory. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if there was not a period last year when the captain himself reported that for upwards of two weeks it was impossible to enter the harbour of Pictou. I want further to call the hon. gentleman's attention to the report of the resident engineer, to show how up-to-date this government has been in providing a suitable service. I am going back to the year 1894. This letter is dated March 15, 1901 :

Sir,—I returned to the office from Richibucto just before mail time yesterday, and on opening your letter despatched immediately a copy I had on hand of my report made on the 14th of February, 1894, on Cape Traverse and Carleton Point. Since that date other references to the same subject have occurred in several reports of mine relating to Cape Tormentine, the harbour intended to be the New Brunswick end of the island crossing.

I inclose an extract from report No. 4039, dated the 8th of September last, which in a condensed form points out the facilities for successful winter navigation presented by the narrows of Northumberland strait. I beg you to read this in conjunction with the report of 1894, forwarded yesterday.

This report was made in 1894, that Carleton Point was the place to establish a pier for a winter service, and we have now the engineer of the government going over the same ground again and using this as an excuse for not going on with the pier.

The primary work of the examination made in 1894 was intended to determine whether a harbour should be made at Cape Traverse. As you will see, the conclusion is obvious that Cape Traverse is utterly unsuitable, while Carleton Point presents undoubtedly the best site for a harbour of the island side of the strait. One question has arisen since the date of that report, namely, objection has been made to crossing from Cape Tormentine because of the risk a steamer would run of being swept upon the point of Jouriman reef. To this it may be said that in the present crossing from Pictou to Georgetown the Caribou shoals constitute a similar danger ; while the area of those shoals is, from their appearance on the chart, perhaps larger than the area of Jouriman reef, the dangerous part of which may be almost limited to that point.

Besides, if there is any danger of a steamer being carried on Jouriman reef it can only happen while the current is setting westward, and would be entirely removed when the tide stream ran to eastward. As you know, the flood stream that enters Northumberland strait from both ends, the two tides meeting and parting abreast Cape Tormentine and Tyrone. Of course, in ice navigation, or in open navigation, much depends upon the skill and judgment of the mariner. Since the strait is so narrow at this point some opportunity for observation of the conditions of the crossing will be given from the masthead of the steamer before starting, an advantage not found at Pictou. A short time ago the 'Stanley' was drifting about in the ice off Pictou for fifteen days, and a few years ago was in similar case for sixteen days. Such a contingency would not I think be posible where the current runs, where the ice is not merely moving, but is parted east and west by the tides twice a day.

Mr. MACKINNON. That was under the old government too.

Mr. LEFURGEY. The old government was not responsible for the ice conditions between Georgetown and Pictou.

I have given a great deal of attention to the island crossing since 1894, and have endeavoured to collect information every winter upon the subject. Everything tends to show that the natural crossing is where the strait is narrowest.

Yours obediently,
(Sgd.) E. T. P. SHEWEN,
Resident Engineer.

I have another report of the resident engineer dated 8th September, 1900, in which he says :

It is, I believe, admitted that daily communication by steam is the object sought. Hitherto that object has not been obtained during the winter months. Up to this time the winter steamer has been crossing from Pictou to Georgetown, a distance of about forty-two miles, with more or less irregularity occasioned by the ice. The northwest winds of the winter drive the field ice to the eastern end of the strait of Northumberland and sometimes lodge it against the Cape Breton shore, completely blocking the eastern end of the passage at which Georgetown and Pictou are situated. When the ice is packed as in this manner it is almost impossible for a steamer to force her way through, as will be seen from the following quotation from Admiral Makaroff's description of the voyage of the Yermak' (vide the proceedings of the Royal Geographical Society for January, 1900), who found it easier to break the ice in the polar seas with that vessel than in the Baltic, because in the Arctic seas the ice is broken, while in the Baltic it extended from land to land.

The engineer is pointing out one of the main difficulties in the navigation of the straits at the eastern end of the island. The ice is carried in an easterly direction and is jammed up between Pictou island and the Cape Breton shore, and where there is no room for relief it is impossible for these steamers to break through. He points out further that the tides meet and part twice daily at the Capes and this forms loose ice which it is very much easier for the boats to get through. He goes on :

Floes of ice might be several miles or several fathoms in length. Between the ice floes are the lanes, which are very irregular. Sometimes ice floes are pressed against each other and sometimes not. When the ice is not pressed, the progress of the ship is very easy. Floes of ice even a mile long move away and give passage to the ship. But, the fact is that even ice 14 feet thick cracks when charged at by the ship, provided there is room to remove broken parts.

In the neighbourhood of Cape Tormentine the two branches of the principle tide wave, which formed at the Magdalen Island into the east and west ends of the strait respectively (but with 12 hours difference of time) meet each other with a surface overrun in either direction according to the moon's age, due to the diurnal inequality. Thus, in the neighbourhood of Cape Tormentine the currents meet and part twice a day.

What he means by this is that the tide forms off the Magdalen Island and it flows in at the eastern end of the island and up around the western end, coming in at both ends and meeting the Capes twice daily.

This condition is of course favourable to the loosening of any blocked ice there might be. But there are really two considerations which recommend a winter crossing from Cape Tormentine :

1. Cape Tormentine is the nearest point to Prince Edward Island, the distance across being only 8 miles, and it is certain, the voyage being dangerous, the shorter the passage the better. I believe the distance to Georgetown is 42 miles through ice more closely packed than at Cape Tormentine.

2. That the narrowest part of the strait is found the strongest current and current assists in loosening the ice.

These are two elementary principles that I do not think the hon. member for King's can contradict.

There are other ice crossings in northern Europe somewhat similar to that between Cape Tormentine and Prince Edward Island in the winter. One of these between Zealand and Funen in the great belt, appears to resemble very strongly in many respects that of Cape Tormentine and illustrates the fact that at least in Denmark the principle of adopting the shortest passage has been observed. This crossing has been maintained I believe except in one severe winter (when detention for a day or two occurred), without interruption. The steamers start from Neibor, in the island of Funen, a harbour of which Knuds Head is the headland. From Knuds Head to Körsor in Zealand, a distance of 10 nautical miles, is the passage. The great belt must be more hazardous in the winter than Northumberland strait at Cape Tormentine because of the number of reefs and shoals. The prevailing current in the great belt is northward but variable and occasionally the streams and eddies are locally very strong.

Here we find away up in Denmark that the people get an almost uninterrupted service. In one season there was one day which they could not cross, while here we are in Canada, with only eight miles to cross and the hon. member for Queen's has spoken of it as being a fairly reasonable service when our boats are in the ice for fifteen or sixteen days at a stretch.

The shortest crossing of Northumberland strait would be from Cape Tormentine to Carleton Point but there is no harbour at the latter place. The distance to Summerside is about sixteen miles, but it is wise to try first whether uninterrupted communications can be maintained between Cape Tormentine and Summerside during the winter, because, if so, construction of an expensive artificial harbour at Carleton Point may be avoided. Of course there is a disposition always to accept whatever is as immutable and in changing the establishment of anything that has become worthily or unworthily by lapse of time and institution, local prejudices will be met. Careful consideration should be given however to the experiment of crossing from Cape Tormentine.

In selecting the crossing for the steamer at the Strait of Canso, where heavy ice is found in the winter, I chose the point on the Cape Breton shore nearest to the Nova Scotian terminus of the railway. This crossing afterwards adopted by the Intercolonial Railway has I understand, proved satisfactory, and may perhaps afford another illustration of the principle that the shortest ice crossing is liable to be the best.

Yours obediently,
(Sgd.) E. T. P. SHEWEN,
Resident Engineer.

I may remark that the hon. member for Victoria (Hon. Mr. Ross) spoke rather disparagingly about the efforts we are making to have the service made satisfactory, but he failed to say that $1,000,000 had been expended at the Strait of Canso in order to provide a satisfactory crossing. It is all very well for the hon. gentleman, after a million dollars has been expended there, to be satisfied with this crossing, but if he were putting up with the service that we have he would be one of the first to protest. Then there is another letter as follows :

Antigonish, N.B., June 18, 1894.

Amherst Head (Cape Traverse).

Sir,—In reply to your letter No. 1571 of the 13th received to-day, I beg to report from my report of the 14th of February.

Amherst Head.

At first sight, the presence of deep water close to the shore at Amherst Head suggests a work similar to Cape Tormentine. But Cape Tormentine is practicable because the north-west wind is a little off the land, while the pier is protected from north-west and northerly seas by Cape Jourimain reef——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I would call the attention of the hon. member (Mr. Lefurgey) to the fact that I do not think what he is reading has any relevancy to the question now under discussion. I have been as patient as I could possibly be in the hope that the hon. gentleman would bring the reading of these reports to an end, but I am bound to say that I cannot see how these reports have any reference to the item of salaries and allowances in regard to the Post Office Department. They may come in more naturally under the next item which is that of the mail service.

Mr. LEFURGEY. We are discussing item 239, and it is included in that item.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. No, we have selected the first item for consideration. This is the only item we have been speaking of for the last two hours and a half—salaries and allowances. I think the hon. gentleman had better hold his papers over until the next item, that of mail service, is taken up.

Mr. LEFURGEY. Since we are on this subject now and as it is a very important one——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. This afternoon I urged upon hon. members of the committee not to proceed in violation of the rule when the chairman called their attention to it. I hope hon. members will remember that. I do not call the hon. member to order upon any particular point for the sake of doing so, but so as to keep the committee in order as far as possible so that we may accomplish some business and I hope, therefore, that when the rules are pointed out no hon. member will persist in going on in opposition to the ruling because there are so many opportunities in this House under the rules whereby everyone can express himself on any question upon which he desires to express his views.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). This is all one resolution practically.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. We started out to consider the first item. When we take up the items each item has to be considered in its order, and checked off as it is passed, and the rule says that when an item is passed we cannot refer to it again. There may be a general discussion of the whole resolution, but when the items are taken up the rule is quite definite in saying that each item has to be discussed as a separate question and that when each item is passed no reference can be made to it again.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Exactly, this same kind of discussion has been going on for——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Two hours and a half.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). An hour and it would have been best to have limited it in the first instance.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I have been very patient for the last hour and a half. We are making no progress, and I think the committee will see the necessity of confining the discussion to the question under consideration so that we may make some progress. I am sure the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden) will agree with me.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). We are discussing an item now of which we had no notice last night; on the contrary the 'Hansard' report shows that we were impliedly told it would not be on to-night. I have not heard any of the hon. gentlemen state that there was any other announcement than the one which is reported in 'Hansard.' On the contrary the hon. gentlemen around me assure me that the 'Hansard' report is exactly correct with regard to the statement of the business coming up to-day. I regard it as an unfair proceeding to place such before the House, an item amounting to nearly $4,000,000, at half past eleven o'clock at night.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. So far as that is concerned it was announced last night that minor Bills would be taken and after that supply, and when it was asked what would be taken in supply and it was said Public Works, and I think the words were added that if we had time we would take up the post office estimates.

Mr. LANCASTER. It is not so reported, and I must disagree with the hon. gentleman in regard to my recollection of it. It was I who asked the hon. member for Hamilton to ascertain what business would be taken, and I listened attentively because it was my duty as Whip to know what the business would be. My recollection of it which is confirmed by other members is that we would have minor Bills and after that supply in the Public Works estimates.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. You can only state what you heard.

Mr. LANCASTER. I was sitting here, and I have good ears and as Whip I had a particular reason for wanting to know what the business would be.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I have not the slightest objection to the hon. gentleman saying he did not hear, but I certainly heard it and so did other hon. gentlemen.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. You may think me a little out of order, but I would suggest a compromise here. I would suggest that the first item be passed and that the committee rise, and report progress.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). All I have to say with regard to what has been stated by my hon. friend the Minister of Customs is that I think we must feel that we must follow the record. If we depart from the record we simply have a controversy between different members of the House. Further than that, I will say that if the business of the House is announced in such a tone that members on this side of the House cannot hear it, then the announcement might as well not be made at all. I have called attention once or twice to the confusion when announcements were made, and in some cases the answer has had to be repeated. It is perfectly clear that no one on this side of the House has received the slightest information from anything said last night that the Post Office estimates would be taken up.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. My recollection is as I stated before that I heard the announcement made, and therefore I do not like to have it repeated that it was not made. Of course it is possible I might be mistaken in my hearing, but hon. gentlemen around me corroborate what I heard.

Mr. LANCASTER. If it was said, it was said so that it was not heard by members on this side of the House. It was not heard by the people who wanted to hear it, because the members on the other side of the House do not ask the question. It is the members on this side of the House who want to know, and it certainly was not heard by them. I sat on the front seat and having caused the question to be asked I listened attentively and I can say that it was not stated.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I was not present in the House last night, and therefore I only know what occurred from what has been stated here this evening. It was proposed to proceed to-night with these estimates and my colleague the Minister of Customs states that notice was given that these estimates would be taken up, or I, for one, would never have thought of proceeding with them. Until very lately it has never been the practice on the part of governments to go into details as to what estimates would be taken up. During my years in opposition I have never once heard the government of that day give the information to the opposition as to what particular estimates would be taken up. We have, as a matter of courtesy, and also to facilitate discussion, adopted the practice of giving intimation as to the particular estimates that would be gone on with. The leader of the opposition, if I heard him aright, has made a statement which seems to me as rather overstating the case. I understood him to say that not only was it stated last night what estimates would be taken, but it was also stated that the Post Office estimates would not be taken.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The hon. gentleman has not quoted my words. I said that it having been stated that certain Bills and the Public Works estimates would be taken, it was by necessary implication understood on this side of the House that no other estimates would be taken and that therefore the Post Office estimates would not be taken. I want to be fair to my hon. friend the Minister of Customs. He told us this evening that a reference to the Post Office estimates had been made the previous evening. I find that he is quite right about that. It was mentioned on Monday night that they were likely to come up the next day. But that is a different thing from mentioning them last night.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. So far as I am concerned I have no desire to take this committee unawares respecting my estimates, and I am sure that no other minister nor no members who support the government want to take the opposition by surprise. We have felt that the attitude of the opposition just now is hardly warranted by the circumstances or the courtesy that we have endeavoured to show to them, not only this session but on other occasions. We have endeavoured to be reasonable and to recognize their rights to the fullest extent. However, it is quite manifest that whatever be the justification for it, the opposition propose to continue discussing, whether relevant or otherwise for a considerable length of time. I suppose that if this protracts the session we can take the consequences the same as they can and we are prepared to do so. I wish, first of all in my remarks to have it made quite clear that the leader of the opposition was in error if he said that it was distinctly agreed that these estimates should not be taken up to-night. Whatever ground there might be for taking up estimates which have not been formally announced there would be no justification for us taking up any business which we promised not to take up. However, the leader of the opposition desires it to be made clear that he only drew that inference from what took place. Since the difficulty has arisen, I beg to move the committee, rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not want to be understood as admitting that we are taking any unusual course at all. A good deal of discussion has taken place from the other side of the House and particularly one matter that has been brought to the attention of the House by my hon. friend from Inverness (Mr. McLennan) has not been answered by the Postmaster General. I do not wish to rest under the imputation of being lacking in courtesy to the Postmaster General or to any other member of the government. I think I endeavour on all occasions to treat them with courtesy, while of course, having firm convictions sometimes as to my own rights and the rights of the opposition. So far as matters of courtesy are concerned, I do not accept the suggestion of the Postmaster General that on any occasion we have been lacking in courtesy towards the members of the government or towards any gentleman on the other side of the House.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The leader of the opposition has misunderstood me. I have not made any reflection upon the lack of courtesy on his part or on the part of his colleagues. I said that the government endeavoured to treat the opposition with courtesy and because they thought it was not fair that we should proceed. I said that since the hon. gentleman was under that impression, in order that he might have no foundation for even thinking that we treated him with discourtesy, I moved that the committee rise.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I beg my hon. friend's pardon, I misunderstood his remarks, and I take his remarks as he now interprets them in very good spirit indeed, and I accept them as such.

Some resolutions reported.

ADJOURNMENT — BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What business does the government propose to take up Monday ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There are several Bills remaining on the government Orders. We will endeavour to deal with these on Monday after Private Bills ; and if we are able to reach supply, I would like to take up the remainder of the supplementaries, to that, however, there is one qualification. I desire to mention an understanding which I have with the hon. the leader of the opposition with regard to the estimates of the coming year. We have entered on a new fiscal year, and it is very important that at an early day we should have a partial Supply Bill passed. The practice in such cases is to take a vote on account—that is to vote a small proportion of the estimates, reserving the balance for discussion. Therefore, I shall propose on Monday that we take a vote of one-fifth of the remaining estimates for the new year, reserving, of course, every item for discussion later on. I mentioned that to my hon. friend the leader of the opposition, and he was good enough to agree to the suggestion. That matter will be dealt with on Monday. The post office estimates will then be continued, and possibly the interior, if there be time.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Regarding the partial Supply Bill, there has been some conversation between my hon. friend and myself on that matter. There are precedents for the course he suggests ; and as it is in the interest of the public service that the public officers should be paid without the delay which would otherwise ensue, I think that the proposal is one which will meet with every support from this side.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 2.10 a.m., Saturday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, July 6, 1903.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

CENTURY LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY.

Mr. R. F. SUTHERLAND (North Essex). In the absence of the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Morrison), I move :

That the order for the third reading of Bill (No. 175) respecting the Century Life Insurance Company be discharged and that the Bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole for further consideration.

Motion agreed to, and House went into committee on the Bill.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (North Essex). I move that clause 3, paragraph 4, be amended by substituting the word 'ten' for 'twenty-five,' in the second line.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). How will that read ?

Mr. HENDERSON. That is not an amendment to a Bill before the House, but an amendment to some other statute.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (North Essex). This is a proposal to reduce the amount of cash paid in before the company begins from twenty-five per cent to ten per cent.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). This amendment goes somewhat further than I understood from the hon. member who is in charge of the measure. I prefer that the Bill should be allowed to stand until the next day for Private Bills. I move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to, and progress reported.

ASSINIBOINE RIVER WATER-POWER.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 192) to enable the city of Winnipeg to utilize the Assiniboine river water-power.—Mr. Puttee.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The committee were considering section 4 :

The city, or its assignees, or appointees as aforesaid, may excavate, construct, operate, keep in repair and enlarge a canal (with locks, if necessary) to connect the Assiniboine river with Lake Manitoba.

—with Mr. LaRivière's amendment thereto to strike out the words 'if necessary.'

Mr. LaRIVIERE. I am of the opinion that the canal should not be built without locks. But I want it to be provided that all works constructed under this Act must have the approval of the Governor General in Council. I am willing with a proviso to enlarge the amendment that I have suggested, and I will move that all the words in brackets, 'with locks, if necessary' be struck out. After consultation with the promoter of the Bill, he has agreed to allow me to move that amendment ; then it will remain with the Governor General in Council, as provided in clause 6, to decide whether the locks are necessary or not, and to approve of the plans for the construction of the canal. If this section 4 is left as it is, there is nothing to provide who shall decide as to the necessity of those locks, but by striking out these four words in this clause, it remains entirely in the discretion of the Governor General in Council to decide whether there shall be locks or not. I, therefore, move that the words between brackets in the third line be struck out.

Mr. PUTTEE. That amendment is agreeable to me as a matter of arrangement. I may say that the Minister of Public Works has suggested to put at the bottom of the clause 'subject to the approval of the plans by the Department of Public Works.' That would thoroughly safeguard the matter.

Amendment agreed to.

On section 5,

For the purposes aforesaid, the city or its assignees or appointees, as aforesaid may acquire lands by purchase, lease or expropriation, and for the latter purpose all the provisions of the Railway Act which relate to expropriation shall, so far as they are applicable, apply to the undertaking and works hereby authorized.

Mr. McCREARY. It is a little unusual to give such wide powers as these to a private company, that is to say, the powers of expropriation that are contained in the Railway Act. Along the Red river, as most gentlemen understand, and along the Assiniboine also, the lands fronting on the river are in small narrow lines three or four chains wide, and extending back two or four miles. They are the lands of the original settlers who came there years ago. The part on the river is the most valuable. Their homes are there, their houses are there, and their cultivation is generally there. But unless this clause is properly worded it might happen that witnesses would go into court and swear that the land was only worth $10 or $15 an acre, whereas a small portion on the river, four or five acres, would be worth $100 an acre. The house may have only an actual value of $50, whereas the land upon which it is situated and in the immediate vicinity, may be worth $500. I think this section is a little too wide, and I don't believe they should have this power under the Dominion Railway Act. As I have already pointed out, this matter is one of gigantic importance, if the company were to construct this canal, as any gentleman will see who looks at the map from an engineering point of view and understands the quantity of water that is likely to flow down into the Assiniboine river through this canal. The clause should be restricted very much, and when we get to the other clauses, I shall raise certain objections to them. I would ask the Minister of Public Works to give us his views on this entire Bill, more especially on this particular clause.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. James Sutheriand). I would suggest to the hon. gentleman in charge of this Bill that it would be well to amend this section. I do not think that the parties should go on and take action under this clause until their plans have been approved, and as there is no objection, I propose to insert, after the word 'aforesaid' in the first line, the words 'after approval of the plans as provided in section 6 of this Act.'

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I would draw the attention of the Minister of Public Works to this clause. Most of the rights which the city would have to obtain would be those of easement for overflowing the lands, the right of erecting a dam and overflowing the lands. The principal damage would be the easement of the right of overflowing these lands. It seems to me they can do this without any expropriation in the first instance. They would have the same right a railway would have. It is an extraordinary power to give to a person to erect a dam on a river.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. In reply to the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. McCreary), I would say that the Bill had not been brought to my attention until after it had passed the committee. I would not like to refuse the city the legislation they are asking for, the object is a good one, and under certain restrictions it is desirable, perhaps, that the city of Winnipeg should have this power. But I think my hon. friend will agree with me that after the amendment we have put in for the approval of the plans, they can take action under this and under the Railway Act, and the city would be liable for all damages caused.

Mr. McCREARY. Under section 110 they have the power.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. That is the power that is only given to a person to erect a dam on a navigable or other river. They can obtain the easement in the first place before they get the charter or the right to proceed. This gives them the power of erecting a dam and settling for the easements afterwards the same as the railway company may do. I think it is rather an extraordinary power to give to any person the right of overflowing a large section of country such as the hon. gentleman describes.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I would suggest that we might proceed with the Bill. Some material amendments have been proposed, and when the measure has passed through the committee stage it might stand for a third reading so that we might have an opportunity of further studying some of the suggestions which have been made to-day.

Mr. PUTTEE. I think the amendment proposed by the hon. minister covers the case in a fairly satisfactory manner. This is not a new matter. These powers have been granted over and over again by this parliament. The question of damages has been thoroughly gone into. The dam is to be constructed within the corporate limits of the city of Winnipeg, and the area of the land which will possibly be damaged will not be more than 100 acres. All this has been provided for and there is no intention on the part of the city of Winnipeg to endeavour to exercise any extraordinary powers.

Mr. CLARKE. The city would be responsible for any damage done ?

Mr. PUTTEE. Yes, the city makes itself thoroughly responsible for all damages.

Mr. McCREARY. I rather think the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Puttee) has not given the matter sufficient consideration. I have the statement of the engineers of the department here to the effect that instead of 100 acres being flooded it will be more like 10,000 or 20,000 acres. We all know that the banks of the Assiniboine at Headwich, further up than Winnipeg are lower than they are at Winnipeg, and that as a result the country would be flooded. The hon. member for Provencher (Mr. LaRivière) knows that the Manitoba government, away back in 1881, constructed this very canal from Long lake to Assiniboine river, and that while it cost $10,000 or $15,000 to construct it, it cost nearly $50,000 to stop it up again because the water flooded the adjacent country. When I first went to Manitoba, the parish of Baie St. Paul was a populous parish, but in 1882, practically the whole population left and went to the North-west Territories, because of the flooding of the country ; in fact, in the town of Baie St. Paul, in the fall of 1882, when the Canadian Pacific Railway was diverted from the route intended to Portage La Prairie which it was originally intended to follow, I came down and I saw some of the houses which had been upset in that parish so deep had the water been. It is of some importance to the public that their rights should be safeguarded. When the hon. member for Winnipeg makes the statement that the construction of this dam may result in the overflowing of 100 acres of land he certainly is entirely in error. I have applied to the engineers of the department who understand the situation fairly well and they say that it will be impossible to construct a dam there without overflowing a large extent of territory. Under all the circumstances, I think the hon. Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Sutherland) is quite right in suggesting that the Bill should stand until he has time to look into it.

Mr. PUTTEE. It does not seem to be necessary to go into disasters that happened in other parts of the country in connection with this Bill. I have been in the city of Winnipeg during the last week looking into this question and examining the plans. I find that the plans are identical with those which were approved in 1889. The banks of the Assiniboine are as low immediately west of Winnipeg as anywhere. The overflow will extend for four miles west of Winnipeg to the point where the river strikes Sturgeon creek and not to Headingly. The river-bed at Headingly is 25 feet higher than it is at Winnipeg, and to say that the land will be affected by the rise of the river level at that point is to say something which is not reasonable. As a matter of fact, it was stated in this House last week that these floods occurred last year right back as far as Portage La Prairie. Last year the water was higher than this dam when constructed will allow it to go. This dam will not stop the flooding, but it will not increase it one bit. The water will only be raised as far back as Sturgeon creek four miles above the dam, and not up as far as Headingly where the banks are steep.

Mr. CLARKE. Have there been any protests against this Bill ?

Mr. PUTTEE. The Board of Trade of Winnipeg did make a protest, but during the week they have been looking into the amendments that have been proposed and they have agreed that they are satisfactory.

Mr. McCREARY. As a matter of fact, the people there do not know anything about the Bill that is before the House. I scarcely knew anything about it until a few days ago. They have had no means of knowing.

Section, as amended, agreed to.

On section 7.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I would ask the promoter of this Bill to show cause why this clause should not be struck out altogether. I think it would be very objectionable.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. I gave notice of motion to the effect that section 7 be struck out and I believe the promoter of the Bill agrees with me on that. I believe there should be a provision that wherever any work is done by the city of Winnipeg outside its own limits and within the confines of the limits of another municipality the local municipality should have something to say in the matter. It is a fact that these works might cover ground in one, two, three or four municipalities. There is the municipality of Assiniboia which is adjacent to the city of Winnipeg. They should be consulted if any work affecting their interests is done within their limits. The municipalities of St. François-Xavier and Portage La Prairie are in the same position and therefore when my hon. friend from Selkirk (Mr. McCreary) speaks with regard to those localities, he speaks with regard to municipalities which he represents in this House; namely the municipalities of Assiniboia and St. Francois-Xavier. Of course that has no reference to this clause at all. I move that section 7 be struck out.

Mr. PUTTEE. If that is the view taken well and good. However, if hon. gentlemen will look at the next clause they will see that this matter is thoroughly covered. The idea is that the putting up of this dam will practically make that river navigable and it has only been technically navigable for the last twenty years. Later, when necessary work is done further along the river at Portage La Prairie perhaps by this government or the local government, the river for a considerable stretch will be navigable. At that time it would be right and proper that the lock should be put in. As the Minister of Public Works and the member for Provencher (Mr. LaRivière) think it is safer to have this clause striken out I agree but I point out that what they seek is already provided for in the Bill.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. For the last fifteen years in the city of Winnipeg the question has been discussed of utilizing the power on the Assiniboine, and it has been a subject of a very great deal of investigation and study. It is a question to which very great importance is attached by the leading citizens of Winnipeg, and the House ought do what it can prudently do to enable the work to be carried out. There is however a great deal in what my hon. friend from Selkirk says in regard to the natural difficulties in the way, and I do not think that the House ought take any chances at all in regard to the rights of the property owners who live on the river banks above the city of Winnipeg. Whatever may be the importance of the work to the city of Winnipeg, it must be carried out in such a way as not to do injury to the rights of other people. In view of what happens in the Assiniboine river season after season it is difficult to think that the construction of a canal without a lock would be a safe proceeding. I am satisfied that the result of constructing a dam without a lock would sooner or later be disastrous, and in that respect I think that my hon. friend from Selkirk (Mr. McCreary) is perfectly right. The Bill therefore should not give countenance to that intention, and when the time comes for the officers of the Department of Public Works to deal with this question, they will have to deal with it in a thorough and far reaching way, and they will have to have a complete examination made of the river for 100 miles or perhaps 150 miles, and a very careful study of the whole project, before approving of any plan. In the meantime it would be a great mistake for parliament to give any indication that the works should be built without any dam, and without any provision being made, not only for the purpose of navigation but in respect to the work itself.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. There is an objection to transferring the power of eminent domain to the city of Winnipeg for the purpose of erecting a dam to create light and power. We transfer that power to companies for the purpose of constructing railways or canals, or telephone, or telegraph lines, but I have never known of it being transferred to a private company or to a city for the purpose of erecting a dam to generate light and power. I know the ground perfectly well, and it seems to me that this will be an enormous undertaking. A dam to be utilized for the purpose of power of any kind must flood the country for an immense distance up stream, and to allow any party to exercise that power without their plans being filed and the property acquired is a very serious matter.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It is merely a question of whether the purpose is of sufficient importance. I have known cases where power has been given for similar purposes. It is usual in some of the cities of the maritime provinces to give power to expropriate for the purpose of erecting water works, and the city of Halifax also received power to expropriate for the purpose of constructing a dry-dock. These are somewhat in the same line as the works proposed in this Bill except that in this case the city of Winnipeg is authorized to dispose of the surplus power for commercial purposes. As far as section 7 is concerned I do not think it makes the slightest difference, with regard to the power of the Governor in Council, whether it is in or out. If it is in, the Governor in Council may or may not order the lock, and if it is out, the Governor in Council may or may not order the lock. There is therefore no reason why it should not be struck out.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No doubt my hon. friend (Mr. Borden) is perfectly right as to the legal effect of section 7, but I am afraid that it might be an indication to the officers of the Department of Public Works that parliament had in mind the possibility of this being done without the construction of the lock. To that extent it seems to me the clause is objectionable and ought to come out. I do not think there is any serious objection to the city of Winnipeg, if it so desires, developing this power and making use of it for any purpose it thinks fit. I remember that when the project was first mentioned the city authorities had the idea that they would lease the surplus power to manufacturers, and that was the main purpose of the scheme at that time. And although I have not followed the discussions lately I feel satisfied that that idea is largely responsible for this Bill being here. I can see no objection to their selling the surplus power in any manner they see fit.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I have no objection to their utilizing the power for any purpose whatever, but what I take exception to is granting to the city the right of expropriation for any such power as this.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I quite agree that every precaution should be taken to prevent the city from acting in an oppressive way or injuring in any way the private rights of anybody. Perhaps when the sections have been further proceeded with, with the exception of this section 5, that my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works may very well take that point into consideration.

Mr. McCREARY. I think a clause should be introduced stating more exactly what damages should be paid in case land was flooded. For some time past the city of Winnipeg has been trying to make an agreement with the Canadian Pacific Railway in respect to a subway, and in the Bill it was stated specifically what damages the Canadian Pacific Railway would have to pay. The Canadian Pacific Railway refused to enter into that agreement. It was stated that they must pay for the damages on Point Douglas Avenue as well as for five or six streets north and south of Point Douglas Avenue; so much so that the damages might have amounted to $1,000,000. If the city of Winnipeg was so careful in protecting its rights in that Bill why should they not grant the same protection to private individuals now? The only means of crossing the Assiniboine river is by means of ferries, there are no bridges at all until you get to Portage La Prairie. There are ferries at St. James, and St. Charles, Headingly and St. Francois Xaxier, and if the river is made navigable these municipalities would be put to extra expense in operating these ferries. The cable would have to be lowered every time a boat came along, which would entail quite a little expense on the municipality. Outside of that the damage which should be assessed in favour of the private individual should be more fully stated in the Bill. He should not be put off with the bare value of his land on the edge of the river.

Motion of (Mr. LaRivière) agreed to.

On section 10,

Mr. McCREARY. Here is the danger point in this Bill. While you have the city of Winnipeg to attack for damages, you are able to get justice, because it is a solvent corporation. But suppose that the city under this clause should assign the franchise and the works to a company which became insolvent, where would the private owner be? The Bill does not make the city responsible; it simply provides that the city may assign, and the party to whom it assigns shall be responsible. I think the owners of the land along the river should be better safe-guarded by this clause, if it is allowed to stand at all.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. So far as I am able to judge, the hon. member is quite correct. It is questionable whether the power which we are granting to the city of Winnipeg would be granted to a private company. I think it would be only right to strike out this clause; and if at any future time the city should desire to transfer its rights to a company, it should come and ask for legislation for that purpose. It would be very much safer. I move that this clause be struck out.

Mr. CLARKE. Might I ask the hon. minister if the object he has in view could not be accomplished by amending this clause so as to require the city to obtain the consent of the Governor in Council before it assigns or transfers its rights?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That was my first thought; but after hearing the discussion, I see that the interests involved are very large.

Mr. CLARKE. The city will have to assume all responsibility for whatever damage is sustained.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. CLARKE. As I understand, the city wants to construct these works and hand them over to a private company. It wants to control them, but to allow somebody else to operate them.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, the city can assign the franchise.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. I do not see how it would help the matter to require the city to obtain the consent of the Governor in Council. The city might hand over the franchise to people of straw. It is questionable, in my mind, whether such powers should be granted to the corporation at all; because, by being allowed to transfer, the city gets out of the responsibility. As to Orders in Council, they are not to protect rights, but to see that provisions made by parliament are properly carried out. An Order in Council would be no protection to the private owner against the objection to giving the city these extraordinary powers. If we gave them to the city, it would be on the consideration that it is a municipality and that it is responsible for all its acts; but I would even hesitate before giving such extensive powers to a city. We are, in fact, substituting the city for the Crown, giving it to some extent the right to control the navigation of this river. I think with the Minister of Public Works that we go quite far enough in giving the city power to construct these works, and if subsequently it wants to transfer them to anybody else, it would be no hardship to it to come back for special legislation for that purpose.

Mr. FRASER. I have two objections. I do not see why we should permit the city to transfer the water works anyway, because the city is the proper party to own and control water works. Secondly, I think we would be going a little too far to allow the transfer on its being submitted to the Governor in Council. I doubt very much the wisdom of permitting the Governor in Council to say that any franchise should be transferred. Some of the clauses I would not agree to if proposed for a private company; and if I would not for a private company, neither should I for the city if the city could transfer to a private company; for so long as there is the power of transferring, it is the same as if we gave the franchise to a private company direct. I think this clause should be struck out, and all the other clauses referring to assignment amended so that we would give a charter to the city without the possibility of its being assigned to anybody else.

Mr. CLARKE. I would be sorry if it were possible to conceive of the city of Winnipeg obtaining this Act in its own name for the purpose of constructing certain works merely as a blind, in order to grant that power to a private corporation. I understood, from glancing at the Bill, that the object of the city was to construct these works and have them operated by a private company, and that is the reason it asks for the power to assign. If this is merely an attempt of the city to obtain for private individuals legislation which they could not obtain for themselves, I have no objection to having this clause struck out; but I cannot conceive it possible that the city of Winnipeg would come and ask for legislation to benefit a few private individuals in the name of the city. I assume that if the city did assign its powers and franchises it would require those to whom it assigned to put up the necessary security before undertaking the work, and that if the Governor in Council were satisfied with the parties and the security, there would be no objection to allowing this clause to pass.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. The danger to the property owners might arise after a great part of the work was done; and, after the city made the transfer, it would be relieved of responsibility.

Mr. CLARKE. They must give security.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. No, they may, for the purpose of construction, alteration and everything else, transfer their rights and powers to any company upon such terms and conditions as may be agreed upon between the city and such company. If we were dealing with a private corporation, we would hesitate a great deal before granting it any such rights, and we ought to hesitate before granting the city this exceptional power and enabling it to get rid of all responsibility by transferring all its rights and obligations to a company. There might be question of very serious damages arising from the construction of the works authorized by this Bill for which the city would be responsible, and the question for us to consider is whether we shall allow the city to shift that responsibility upon somebody else.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). The point which suggests itself to me is this: Has this House the authority to vest in the city of Winnipeg the power to interfere with provincial rights? I should imagine that the provincial government would have something to say with regard to the carrying on of the works authorized by this measure.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not know what the opinion of the Department of Justice would be, but as these are navigable waters, we have no doubt the right to pass this legislation.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). The canal is not navigable because it is solid land.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It would be after it was built.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Under the charter of the city of Winnipeg, I very much doubt if it has authority to build canals and navigate the Assiniboine river.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It might be necessary for the city to get legislation from the provincial legislature as well, with regard to some of these works, but so far as we are going we are acting within our jurisdiction. I move in amendment that this clause be struck out.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I ruled the other day that no amendment could be made to a Bill in Committee of the Whole, which was of any importance, without giving a day's notice. To strike out a whole section is a very important amendment, and the rule to which I refer must apply.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Then I move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again, and I would ask you, Mr. Chairman, to take notice that at the next sitting of the committee I will move that this clause be struck out.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Was our action irregular in striking out clause 7?

Mr. LaRIVIERE. I gave notice of that.

Mr. PUTTEE. I would ask the hon minister of Public Works to consider whether it would not serve the purpose just as well to put in a clause making this matter subject to the approval of the Governor in Council. The city has been asking for this power for years past, because this motive power is within the city limits, and the question of obtaining power is becoming a very serious one. We have no fuel except at a tremendous price, and the number of factories is growing. It seems to me that if we made this clause 10 subject to the approval of the Governor in Council, that would meet the difficulty with regard to damages.

Motion agreed to, and progress reported.

QUEBEC, NEW BRUNSWICK AND NOVA SCOTIA RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. LOGAN moved that the House go into committee on Bill (No. 135) to incorporate the Quebec, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia Railway Company.

Hon. Mr. COSTIGAN. I would like the Bill to stand over, if the promoters will agree to this.

Mr. LOGAN. Can the hon. gentleman give any reason for his request? It has stood over already several times at the request of parties interested, and on one occasion at the request of the hon. gentleman himself. I do not think that it should stand over again after all these adjournments.

Hon. Mr. COSTIGAN. I prefer not to go into a discussion on the Bill at present. I think it is necessary to give notice of any amendment, and I intend to move one for which I will have to give a day's notice. I would ask, therefore, that the Bill be allowed to stand over, but if not I shall go on and discuss it. I may say that I do not think much progress will be made by insisting on going on with it to-day. One of the reasons why I have made this, to my mind reasonable, request, is that I think the Bill ought not to be here to-day at all. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Logan) has, referring to my request to postpone the Bill, said that it had stood so long—I do not know whether he meant to convey the idea for my convenience or not—that I ought not to complain. It is true the Bill was a long time before the committee. And I watched it very closely, because the Bill is one calculated to interfere with existing rights, and it was my duty, associated with other gentlemen in connection with an existing charter, to protect those rights, and more especially so, in the absence of others, I was about the only one left to do it. This Bill is almost as broad in its scope as the Grand Trunk Pacific Bill, and it opens up a very large field. I have never taken up the time of the House discussing the Grand Trunk measure, or any other; but, as this opens such a wide scope, I may be permitted to take advantage of the opportunity afforded me to speak pretty generally upon the question, but, I trust, without infringing the rules of the House.

Mr. PUTTEE.

Mr. CLARKE. What is the length of the proposed line?

Hon. Mr. COSTIGAN. Speaking roughly, I should think a couple of thousand miles. Two or three years ago a charter was applied for and obtained to construct a road from some point opposite the city of Quebec down through the province of Quebec and into the province of New Brunswick, so as to connect with the railways existing at that time. That charter was obtained as the result of a consultation between several Quebec representatives and myself in the province of New Brunswick. We had felt a great desire to have what we contended for in the early days, the old Intercolonial line extended, and, though we failed to secure the construction of that road by the route which we thought the most economical and the best, we did obtain the construction of the line built from Fredericton up as far as Edmunston at a cost, not to this country but to our province, of the most valuable wild farming lands in the Dominion of Canada—bush lands. We reached Edmundston. We made further efforts to get the line built thirty-five miles farther, to a point near the mouth of the St. Francis. Twelve or fifteen years ago, during the time when Mr. Mercier was in power in Quebec, a charter was granted to construct the Quebec portion, not in connection with ours, but as a colonization road. It was to develop the lands in six counties in the province of Quebec, on the south shore of the St. Lawrence. The province of Quebec granted a bonus of 12,000 acres of land per mile in aid of the road. Land at that time was not considered as valuable as it is at present; and, having no other subsidy, the company failed to build that colonization road in the province of Quebec. Having pushed that railway thirty-five miles up beyond Edmundston towards the western country, towards Quebec, I approached the late Mr. Deschenes, who was a member of this House, and who was working up the enterprise of having this road built through Quebec. I told him that if he would join us in New Brunswick and make it an interprovincial railway, our chances would be better, and I would do anything to work with him if he would agree to connect at Connors' station or at the present terminus of the Témiscouata branch of the line. This was arranged, and we obtained the charter. Everything went on satisfactorily. The Dominion government gave a subsidy to about half the road, that is 135 miles to the point of connection at Connors' station.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Does this go by the St. Francis river?

Hon. Mr. COSTIGAN. Yes. The province of New Brunswick granted its usual subsidy for the portion in that province to encourage the construction of this through line; and the Dominion parliament granted a subsidy for half the whole line. The Quebec legislature did not grant the aid that was expected by the Quebec friends. Last year a contract was entered into with the Dominion government to construct the first section on the lower end. Work was commenced and proceeded with. This session my attention was called to the fact that amongst other charters one was applied for to construct a railway from the city of Quebec up to the Quebec bridge, across the bridge and thence to Moncton, thence to some point in Nova Scotia, and so through the province of Nova Scotia to some harbour on the eastern coast of Nova Scotia. I do not think I am over suspicious ; but, looking around, I wondered at the application being made for a charter which must necessarily blanket the charter of the Quebec and New Brunswick Railway Company ; and, more than that, was evidently intended to blanket or cover the charter already granted to another company two years ago, I believe, to build from the city of Quebec up to the Quebec bridge and control its approaches. Now, I wondered why this application should be made to construct the railway from the city of Quebec up to that bridge, which must cover this existing charter. I was more surprised at that than at the attempt to cover the charter claimed by the Quebec and New Brunswick charter. One of the reasons that I asked that the Bill should go back is this—and this is the effect of the amendment of which I gave notice, but which I cannot discuss now—that the line should be defined to some extent, at least the proposed location of the road through the province of Quebec. Now, some of the hon. gentlemen who are behind this Bill say that they do not intend to touch or interfere with the Quebec and New Brunswick Railway. That is all very well. But the charter does not say that—the charter leaves them full power to construct over every mile in Quebec and New Brunswick of the Quebec and New Brunswick charter. I do not think that that is right. I did propose to some of these gentlemen, when they told me they did not want to build over the line of the Quebec and New Brunswick Railway, but to take a short cut through Maine : Amend your Bill ; be frank, and say you are going to build from Quebec to a point on the boundary, and name the point. From that you can secure your right through the state of Maine. Let us know where you are going to. But that has not been done. The Bill was passed in committee and comes from committee in this shape, giving them the power, if they wish to exercise it, to build over every mile of road chartered and under contract with this government. I do not think that is a fair proposition at all. It has been said that I raised no objections on behalf of the company that I am speaking for, when the Grand Trunk Bill was in committee. It is true I did not make any protest on that ground, because I understood that all the people of the eastern provinces were a unit, or ought to be a unit, and I am sure they are, on any question affecting a transcontinental line, when they are seeking an outlet at some Canadian port in the east. I felt there was no doubt about that. If I raised any question for my part as to how they would reach that eastern port in Canadian territory it might be said that I was inconsistent, that while I was pressing this corporation to extend their line in Quebec eastward down to the provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, I was throwing obstacles in the way of their doing so. I felt all the time, though interested as president and one of the directors of the road, that if the company were to build a transcontinental line down to the sea-board, and to build it through Canadian territory, there was no other ground for it to take but over that line. I really thought at the same time that we should not stand there in the position of stand and deliver, and say : You cannot go over there without you pay so much. If the country wanted a through-line we were entitled to take that position, and I believe they will take it yet, whoever constructs the road. But because I was willing to do that, and the company I represent, I daresay, was willing to do that, as this was the only proposition that came before the House as a transcontinental line, that is no reason why our company should sit down and allow a Bill like this to pass this House, taking away rights granted by this parliament and recognized by the government, from a company that is now under contract with the government for the construction of this very road. I do not think it is consistent at all, I do not think that hon. gentlemen ought to press this any further. I simply ask : Do the company wish to ignore the legislation of this parliament and deprive the Quebec and New Brunswick Railway of their charter ? If they do, then I must say that I will do my best to oppose it. Are they sincere in stating that they do not want to interfere with that road at all, but that they want to go across the state of Maine ? Very well, if they do, let them amend their Bill, or ask that it be sent back to the committee where that amendment may be made. Here is the first clause of the Bill :

> The company may lay out, construct and operate a railway of the gauge of four feet and eight and a half inches, from a point in the city of Quebec to the Quebec bridge on the north shore of the river St. Lawrence, and may enter into an agreement with the Quebec Bridge Company for operating the new line of railway over the bridge of the said Quebec Bridge Company, and thence by the most convenient route from the south shore approach of said bridge to a point at or near Moncton.

That is their starting point. We start at Chaudière Junction near Quebec, and we go in the most convenient direction—not to Moncton, because our charter never contemplated such a line at that time. But so far as it goes it covers the only ground possible in Canadian territory for a transcontinental line to follow. I understand that some slight change has been made in the Bill in committee in regard to one part of the line when it reaches Moncton. I think the Minister of Railways very properly considered that that paralleled the Intercolonial too closely.

Mr. FRASER. Beyond Moncton ?

Hon. Mr. COSTIGAN. Near Moncton. It was considered to parallel the Intercolonial, and was therefore amended. I would like also to see the Bill amended in such a way that the rights acquired by Canadian subjects from this parliament, rights which they are legitimately and lawfully enjoying, are not interfered with. I rise to oppose and to protest against this House being asked to ignore that company by granting a charter which, in the very wording of it, takes away rights that have already been acquired, which would ignore the company entirely. I presume, Mr. Speaker, that on that motion being carried for you to leave the Chair, we would go into committee on the Bill. Now I do not like to take the position of standing here and wearying the House. I think I have said enough to show that I have pretty good reasons for making objection to the progress of this Bill in its present shape. If you leave the Chair and the House goes into committee, I will have other and more convenient opportunities of discussing it, because I would rather speak often than a long time at once.

Mr. LOGAN. May I ask the hon. gentleman how much road his company has completed, how much road has been completed by the New Brunswick and Quebec Railway Company ?

Hon. Mr. COSTIGAN. Without giving full details, I will give the information that has been given to the Committee of Railways and Canals with respect to this Bill. The company have done all that is necessary to hold their rights under the charter, and they have complied with the law in every respect so far as I know, both in subscribing their stock and in conducting their business, in taking a contract from the government to build a portion of the road, in commencing the work within the time stipulated, in buying and paying for the right of way, and in many other ways. But I do not wish to give any more details. If the company has forfeited its charter, then let that be said.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. How much of it have you built on the River St. Francis, for instance ?

Hon. Mr. COSTIGAN. We have only started. I do not suppose there has been over $20,000 expended on it.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. But is not a part of that line built ?

Hon. Mr. COSTIGAN. No, we only commenced last year. We could not get the rails. When I made the inquiries myself I found we could not get first class Canadian rails, they told us the best they could do was to give us English rails, first class rails delivered at Quebec for $45 a ton, and we would have to pay for carrying them across to Lévis and the freight from there down; so we did not buy the rails. But that question is entirely aside from the question asked me. It is true the gentleman who asked me the question may say that behind him are men who will do a great deal more. I think perhaps they would. But we have done all that the law required us to do. If not, let them show that the company is in default and let them wipe out the charter. But the charter is not wiped out, the charter is in existence and legally in force, and their contract is in existence.

Mr. CLARKE. Was not this matter discussed before committee ?

Hon. Mr. COSTIGAN. The Bill was never discussed in committee. The promoter of the Bill told me he would not bring it in my absence. I was away, and he kept his word. The next day there was a meeting of the committee, and the Bill was called. I was in the city, but not in the committee, and when I came to the House, and went upstairs, I found that another gentleman, not knowing the discussion that had taken place between us, had called the Bill, in good faith, I daresay. The Bill went through, but there was no discussion, that is, there was no chance so far as I was concerned as representing the other company, and no chance for me to offer any opposition, or to ask for any amendment in that committee. I think the Bill ought to go back to the committee to be amended.

Mr. LOGAN. I am sorry that I cannot oblige the hon. member for Victoria, N.B. (Hon. Mr. Costigan). I think if ever a man had a weak case when asking for a Bill to be sent back to the committee, the hon. member has shown a weak case to-day. I am not going to occupy the time of the House at present, and I regret that the hon. gentleman has seen fit to throw out the threat that he is going to weary the House by talking upon this question, when it goes into committee and so on. The facts of the matter are that the Bill providing for the construction of the Quebec, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia Railway is a Bill to allow of a construction of a railway to connect with the Great Northern Railway. That railway is at present controlled by Messrs. Mackenzie & Mann, and this Bill authorizes them to connect that railway with a maritime province port. It is a well known fact that the Canadian Northern Railway, or the Mackenzie & Mann system of railways, control the Canadian Northern Railway through the province of Quebec which gives them a summer port. They desire to secure a winter port, and for that purpose they are, I think, entitled to get this charter which is before the House at the present time. Now, the hon. member for Victoria is a director of the Quebec and New Brunswick Railway Company. I am not going to discuss the Quebec and New Brunswick Railway Company. If it becomes necessary to discuss the progress of that company, I think I might be able to show that the progress has not been such as will commend the enterprise to this House, but I do not think it worth while to discuss that, because of the position it occupies at the present time. The Bill which is now before the House was before the Railway Committee for a considerable length of time. I knew that there were some gentlemen interested in it and I spoke to them and asked them when it would be convenient for us to discuss the Bill in the Railway Committee. It never was convenient until last Thursday, when the hon. member for Victoria came to me and said that he desired to attend a picnic on Thursday, and asked me if I would agree to allow the Bill to go over. While it had been hanging for a long time, I allowed the Bill to go over, although the hon. gentleman did not go to the picnic, but happened to be in the committee. The Bill was brought up on Friday last. I was there myself. The Bill was discussed, it was amended at the suggestion of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair), it went through without a dissenting vote, and now we are asked, when it comes up here by the unanimous consent of the Railway Committee, amended and endorsed by the Minister of Railways and Canals, which amendments were accepted by me as the promoter of the Bill, to consent to send this Bill back to the committee simply because the hon. member for Victoria did not happen to be in the committee, and because the hon. gentleman happens to be a director of another company which has a charter for a small part of the country over which this charter authorizes the construction of a line. I do not think he has made out a case that will commend itself to this House.

Mr. CLARKE. How far would your road parallel his ?

Mr. FRASER. I do not know that it will parallel it at all. I think there is room enough for all ; but that aside, the application for this charter was made before the application for the Grand Trunk Railway charter. Now, we have granted the charter to the Grand Trunk Railway. I am willing that another road that is going to be a transcontinental road shall also get down there. They simply come and ask for the passage of this Bill. The argument of the hon. member for Victoria (Hon. Mr. Costigan) is no good when you consider that this House has passed the Grand Trunk Railway Bill. Now the Grand Trunk Railway Bill will kill him, and he cannot be killed any worse by a second Bill. The fight, if there is to be a fight, will be between the Grand Trunk Railway and this company. He is dead already if there is anything in his contention, because the Grand Trunk Railway Bill is passed, authorizing it to construct to Moncton, an all-Canadian route through Canadian territory.

An hon. MEMBER. It has not passed yet.

Mr. FRASER. It has passed through the committee and it is going to pass through this House ; so that, there is nothing gained and there is nothing that the hon. gentleman has to fear. As the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair) said in the committee, before a road is in operation, if two or more parties come and ask for a charter, give it to them. After a road is built, equipped and in operation, there are rights that should be respected. But I think, now that the Grand Trunk Railway Bill has passed the committee, Messrs. Mackenzie & Mann have the right to the Bill which they desire to enable them to connect with their own road and to connect with the lower provinces. Therefore, I cannot see any ground for sending the Bill back.

Mr. CLARKE. Have the gentlemen of whom the hon. member for Victoria (Hon. Mr. Costigan) speaks lost any time in going on with their work since they got their charter ?

Mr. FRASER. Much time.

Motion agreed to, and House went into committee on the Bill.

Hon. Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to get into any personal discussion with any of my hon. friends in this House, but I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Logan) in whose name the Bill stands was a little in error when he stated the conditions upon which the Bill stood over. He said that I had asked him after his arrangements were made and when his friends had found it convenient to meet and take up the Bill on a certain day, to have the Bill held over because I wanted to go to a picnic. No, I did not ask that at all. We discussed the Bill, and it is true I stated I was going to a picnic, and I did go to a picnic. Notwithstanding the fact that the hon. gentleman said I was present in the committee, I did go to the picnic.

Mr. LOGAN. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon.

Hon. Mr. COSTIGAN. And I had a very pleasant time.

Mr. KEMP. That was on Thursday ?

Hon. Mr. COSTIGAN. It was on Dominion day. On Thursday the committee met again.

Mr. LOGAN. The committee did not meet on Dominion day.

Mr. FRASER. Then there were two picnics.

Mr. CLARKE. The other fellows had the picnic next day.

Hon. Mr. COSTIGAN. Yes, the picnic was here the next day. I was absent from that unfortunately. I feel myself a little embarrassed in speaking as I do and in opposing a charter behind which stand men for whom I have the greatest respect and in whose ability to build a railway I have the greatest confidence. If that firm had come forward to this parliament and proposed to build an all-Canadian transcontinental line I would have held up both hands for it in preference to the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway. The hon. gentleman who promotes this Bill says that he does not want to go into a discussion of the Quebec and New Brunswick Railway Company or their affairs. Well, I am glad of that, but I hope he does not want to create the impression that there is anything in the transactions of that company which the company are afraid to discuss openly in parliament. The company have been properly organized, as I have said before, and I cannot see the necessity of this Bill. It is true there is a small portion of the line of the Quebec and New Brunswick Railway Company in my own constituency, and so far as the rights of my constituents are concerned, I feel it is my duty as well as my right to speak for and advocate their interests and rights. It passes through six counties in Quebec, and I know that every one of these six counties wants that road constructed and has been waiting for it for years. The people in these counties have been promised the road and they want to see it constructed. The question has been asked of the promoter of this Bill, how far the company behind this charter would be likely to parallel the existing line of the Quebec and New Brunswick Railway, and now an hon. gentleman says: Well, I do not know but I think there is room for several railways there. That might be, if you could build railways irrespective of the formation of the country. But there is notably but one single available line open for a railway there, and that is to follow the St. Francis valley, or if you go to the state of Maine you can get through the St. John valley, but you would have to pass through American territory. By following the St. Francis valley you can keep in Canadian territory and get good grades. That is the reason why the Quebec and New Brunswick Company took that particular route. There is just one point, and it is very pronounced on some of the maps, that juts in there and our company could have shortened its line twelve or fourteen miles by cutting across that nose of land, but we would have to go through American territory, and we would not have got as good grades. Why is it that the gentlemen in charge of this Bill are not a little more definite in their location of the railway. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Logan) defines the line from the city of Quebec right up the north shore of the St. Lawrence. There is only one place there where you could go and get to the bridge and cross the bridge to the approach on the south side. But when they get to the south side they propose to reach a point at or near Moncton without one syllable in the Bill to indicate by which route they are going to get there. When the promoter of the Bill defines his line so plainly from the city of Quebec to Chaudière Junction, why is it that he does not define the route from Chaudière to Moncton. Will it come between the Quebec and New Brunswick Railway and parallel the Intercolonial along the borders of the St. Lawrence? If it does it will have to follow that route all the way, because we all know that the Temiscouata Railway was built across that country from River du Loup to the valley of St. John and the grades on that road are such as to make it almost impossible to carry on a business traffic on that road. Successful railway operation to-day has resolved itself into a question of good road-bed and light grades, and you cannot handle traffic, nor can you pretend to successfully give an outlet to products of the west unless you have such a road as will handle the greatest amount of traffic with the least expenditure of power. Some persons have said that we ought not be uneasy because they do not intend to touch our road at all. Well, they are going from Chaudière to Moncton, and if they do not go by the valley of the St. Lawrence or by the valley of the St. Francis or through the air, they will have to go through the state of Maine. I admit that it is shorter for them to go through the state of Maine, but if they intend to do that why don't they say so? I do not ask that the Bill should specify what particular parts of Maine they should go through, because we have no right to say anything about that, but let them indicate what route they will take after they get to Chaudière Junction. Why should this parliament allow them to take a route that will practically destroy an existing charter which is now in process of being worked out. If it is the contention of these gentlemen that the Quebec and New Brunswick Railway have not made more rapid progress, I can tell them that we have reasonably complied with the requirements of our Act and this very session parliament has passed a Bill extending the time for the extension of our charter, putting us in a position to go on with the work. It is true that we haye been delayed and one of the causes of delay was that financial arrangements could not be made until the government of Quebec had aided the portion of the line going through that province, there being about 110 miles, out of a total of 135 in the province of Quebec.

Mr. CLARKE. How would the proposed Grand Trunk Pacific Railway arrangement affect you financially ?

Hon. Mr. COSTIGAN. I do not know what form the Grand Trunk Pacific scheme will take, nor do I know what it will be when it gets to this parliament.

Mr. CLARKE. Nobody else seems to know much about it.

Hon. Mr. COSTIGAN. I presume that if a transcontinental line is to be built it will be carried through to some Canadian port on the Atlantic. I would not complain if the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway would absorb the Quebec and New Brunswick. As one man I will say that I have no desire to block a great enterprise like that, but because I am willing to go that far, does it mean that I am going to give the same concession to another company. It is true the promoters of this Bill say that it is part of a transcontinental line.

Mr. CLARKE. Part of the Mackenzie & Mann scheme.

Hon. Mr. COSTIGAN. I have no desire to throw any obstacle in their way, but I have naturally a very strong desire to see that there should be some respect paid to what little rights we have there. I am well aware that I may have to submit to the forces that are behind this Bill and that I may have nothing for my trouble but a little talk, but whether that be so or not, I intend to talk very plainly about it. I say that if this charter passes through it will cause disappointment to a great many people in the province of Quebec and in the province of New Brunswick as well. It will cause more than disappointment. I think I would have the right to complain that there is a want of good faith somewhere. The first subsidy was granted by the federal parliament to the Quebec and New Brunswick road for three miles of that road extending from Connors' Station to the mouth of the St. Francis before the charter was obtained. Then when the charter was obtained, the Dominion government subsidized sixty miles of the whole road, making sixty-three miles of a Dominion subsidy, and forty-five miles of that subsidy was put on the Quebec end and fifteen miles upon the New Brunswick end so as to give assurance to the people of both the provinces interested that the road would not be diverted to any other place.

Mr. COCHRANE. How many miles of it is built ?

Hon. Mr. COSTIGAN. There are three miles of it partly finished.

Mr. CLARKE. I suppose there is a good deal of grading done ?

Hon. Mr. COSTIGAN. The grading is partly done, the right of way bought and paid for, and the plans and surveys over the first section made and approved of by the Governor in Council.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. You are not default in your charter ?

Hon. Mr. COSTIGAN. No, and we have been able to show that or parliament would not have extended the time.

Mr. CLARKE. What suggestion have you got to make with regard to the other charter ?

Hon. Mr. COSTIGAN. I suggest that they should define their line from Chaudière Junction to Moncton more distinctly. Do they want to go over the road we propose to build or do they want to go to the left of it. All I ask them to say is that they will agree to a clause stating that it shall not be prejudicial to our charter.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). When was your charter first obtained ?

Hon. Mr. COSTIGAN. In 1900 or 1901. As far as the charter is concerned, if any one wishes to argue that the company has not made great progress I plead guilty to that. I do not want to make any dishonest claim or profession. We made no great progress for the reason I have stated. The railway runs through six counties in the province of Quebec and only through one county in the province of New Brunswick, and over 100 miles out of the 130 is situated in the province of Quebec. We were waiting until the government of the province of Quebec could grant aid for that portion of the line running through that province. But we made the commencement on the New Brunswick end, where we had a subsidy. We made a contract, we have not forfeited our contract, we bought the right of way and paid for it, we made our survey, and we came to this parliament this session, I acting for the company, and asked for an extension of time. The Bill passed this House and the Senate, and we got the extension of time. I do not think it is a strong argument to criticise the legal standing of the company. It is a fair argument to say that we have not made very rapid progress. I admit that. It is no argument to say that the gentlemen who are seeking this charter are men who would push this road vigorously. I believe that too. But if they are going to build through Maine, I have not the same interest in the road, nor have I the same objection to it. This is not a matter I am now prepared to discuss ; but I think I am entitled to have some explanation as to the location of the road.

Mr. FRASER. It is impossible definitely to say that. But this company is composed of some of the best men in Canada. The man who represents it in Nova Scotia, Mr. Graham Fraser, is a man whose name is a household word. The idea is to go through Canadian territory, if such can be done; but they simply ask for the chance of building and operating by the most convenient route. They cannot say anything more. They cannot name the places through which they would build because the places they might name here might not furnish the best route. I think the hon. gentleman's fears will be found to be groundless. For myself I want to see the railroad built through Canadian territory. I do not know the best route, but if it is impossible to build it through Canadian territory, and if the hon. gentleman's line is to be built as well as the Grand Trunk, perhaps they may get a charter for a line through Maine. But in the meantime, as the Grand Trunk is to be built to Moncton, I think we should not prevent these people getting a charter to do the same thing. If any injury is done to the hon. gentleman's scheme, it has been done already by the Grand Trunk.

Mr. CLARKE. The Grand Trunk Bill is not passed yet.

Mr. FRASER. Well, it is as good as passed. They are going to get their Bill. We were in the field first. Mackenzie and Mann want this system in order to connect with the lower provinces and to reach Moncton by the most convenient route. I think my hon. friend will find that his interest will not be at all prejudiced, and that nothing will be done to interfere with his route. I am sure that Messrs. Mackenzie & Mann are broad minded enough not to hurt his road. But I must come back to the other argument, because it strikes me as a complete answer, that already there is a Bill before this House, which is sure to go through the House, which puts him in that position already.

Hon. Mr. COSTIGAN. I do not want to weary the House, or to obstruct, or to keep other Bills behind; but I do say that there is a regular way of proceeding. I obtained information as to the steps I could take, and, after getting advice, I had a notice prepared, finding that I must give notice of an amendment to this Bill, and it is in the hands of the clerk. It will not appear before to-morrow, so that I shall have no chance of moving it till then. Under these circumstances, I think it is a little hard to forces this Bill through. The hon gentlemen have a strong combination behind them, but they ought not to use their strength to force this Bill through, when I say that it is not a fair thing to do. I am assured that this charter will not hurt us—that its promoters only desire to take the most convenient route. Well, a very convenient thing for a new company to do is to work on the experience of forty years, and to take the only convenient route recognized in that country. When the Intercolonial Railway was undertaken, a line was surveyed through the St. Francis river country, and it was the line approved of.

Mr. FRASER. What is the hon. gentleman's amendment?

Hon. Mr. COSTIGAN. The amendment is that the Bill shall go back to the committee, and define the proposed route approximately through the province of Quebec, if no further.

Mr. FRASER. That is not done in the Grand Trunk Bill, and, if my memory serves me rightly, in the hon. gentleman's own Bill the definite points one after another are not named.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not think there is anything in the hon. gentleman's contention that we should define the exact points where this road shall run. We have passed many Bills through this House in which the points are not defined. Unexpected difficulties may arise, and we must give some latitude to the people who are putting large sums of money into these enterprises. The hon. member for Victoria, N.B., is the last man whose interests we desire to prejudice. He said we have a good deal of strength behind us, and I think we have a good deal of strength in this House. As the promoter of the Bill, I will agree that the location of the line be subject to the approval of the Governor in Council. I do not think I could do anything fairer than that.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. My hon. friend from Victoria, N.B. (Hon. Mr. Costigan) has to my knowledge been promoting this railway for a number of years. It runs through his own county, and through the St. Francis river country to Chaudière Junction, and it has what I think the only feasible connection, so far as gradients are concerned, between New Brunswick and the Chaudière bridge. He says there was a road built via Temiscouata, but its gradients were such that it could not be used for freight purposes at all. I think the promoter of this Bill ought to grant the hon. member's request, because, as I understand, the Bill was reported on Friday, and he had not an opportunity to give notice for the reconsideration of the Bill before to-day. He says he had the notice prepared and was ready with it when the Bill came up for consideration, but according to the rules of the House, he has not had time to give notice before, and all he asks the promoter of the Bill to do is to leave it over until the next day for private Bills in order that his amendment may be considered. I think it is but just to the hon. member for Victoria, N.B., that the Bill should be left over.

Hon. Mr. COSTIGAN. I am arguing this Bill not from stubborness, but from honour. I am connected with others who are interested in this matter. One of the directors is in England. And before he went he made me—he did not require to make me promise, but he knew that I would—fight for the interests of our charter against anything that would unfairly prejudice it. I am only one, and have the least interest in it. But the burden is laid upon me, and that is why I make the fight; and it is laid upon me, perhaps, because they know I would make the fight the best I could. Will not the hon. gentleman have some consideration for a man who at least thinks he has the right to claim what he does claim, and agree to leave this Bill over for another day, in the meantime, they may see their way to make some allowance for the position I am in.

Mr. FRASER. That is all right.

Progress reported.

BRANDON, SASKATCHEWAN AND HUDSON'S BAY RAILWAY COMPANY.

House went into committee on Bill (No. 157) to incorporate the Brandon, Saskatchewan and Hudson's Bay Railway Company.—Mr. Stewart.

On section 10,

Mr. HENDERSON. Before section 10 is adopted, I have an amendment to propose. When this Bill was before the Railway Committee, there seemed to be some feeling on the part of the members of that committee that possibly there was little or no intention on the part of the promoters to construct this railway. I believe that a great many Bills are being introduced in this House to charter railway companies where the real intention of the promoters is unknown, no attempt being made to show that the provisional directors have the ability to build the road or have any real intention of proceeding with it. It is felt, I know, by other members of the committee besides myself that many of these Bills are simply put upon the statute book to give the provisional directors an opportunity of dealing with some company of real railway builders. I realize that we are chartering far too many railways in that fashion, and I think some restriction should be put upon the power of these concerns to alienate their charters or holding up some railway company that wishes to construct a line of railway over the same route. If the intention of the company is a genuine one, if they intend to construct the road and put it in operation, the amendment I now propose will in no way interfere with them. But if the charter is not intended to be acted upon by these promoters, if it is simply to be held until some other charter is asked for to build over the same territory and then to hold up the company asking for it, the amendment will have the effect of preventing the incorporators under this charter from interfering with or unduly harassing any company that may want to build the road. Section 10 reads as follows :—

> The company may enter into an agreement with the Canadian Northern Railway Company or the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, for conveying or leasing to such company the railway of the company, in whole or in part, or any rights or powers acquired under this Act.

I contend that this company should not be empowered to enter into any agreement to convey its charter or any of the rights that are given under this Bill until they have practically completed their road. If they have a bona fide intention of building the road, the amendment I propose will not hinder them, but it will prevent their holding up another railway company which might want to construct the road. Therefore. I move that after the word 'may,' in the first line of section 10, the following words be inserted : 'After the said railway has been constructed and put in operation, but not before.' The clause will then read : 'The company may, after such railway has been constructed and put in operation, but not before, enter into an agreement with the Canadian Northern Railway Company, the Canadian Pacific Railway,' and so on.

Mr. GALLIHER. I am not interested in this Bill in any way, but I was in the Railway Committee when the same objection and the same proposition were made by the hon. member for Halton. Does it not strike the hon. gentleman that it is rather late in the day to propose an amendment of that kind ? We have up to the present, during this session and during preceding sessions, passed through railway Bills containing exactly the same clause. Why should we single out this particular scheme and apply this restriction to it ? While I entirely agree in the suggestion of the hon. member, because I do not believe in what is known as charter mongering, I do not see why we should impose a restriction in this Bill, at this stage of the session, which you have not imposed in any others of a similar nature. If we intend to apply the principle advocated by the hon. member, let us start at the beginning of a session with the first Bill before the Railway Committee, and then we will not be accused of unfairness and discrimination.

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not consider that this amendment will in any way interfere with the operations of the promoters if they really intend constructing this road.

Mr. GALLIHER. Does it not discriminate against them ?

Mr. HENDERSON. The hon. gentleman asks why this road should be singled out ? I would simply reply that the evil has been a growing one, and we must begin some time to put a stop to it. Why should we not begin with this Bill ? I may relieve the hon. gentleman's mind if I tell him that to the end of this session I shall be very careful to propose the same amendment to every railway charter that comes before this House, when I have any suspicion that the promoters are simply getting the charter for the purpose of selling it. I am sorry the hon. Minister of Railways is not in his place, but I may say that he took a strong view in the Railway Committee on this question, and stated that next session of parliament he would deal with it, so that the only question is whether we should begin now or wait until another session. My impression is that now is the time to stop the evil, instead of waiting for another session, and possibly passing a dozen or two of charters before this session closes. I hope, therefore, that the committee will accept this amendment, more especially as it will not prevent the construction of this road if the promoters are in earnest.

Mr. BARKER. The amendment proposed is, in my judgment, very useful and important. If it affected no other object, it would probably save some weeks of the time of parliament every session. Hundreds of Acts are on the statute-books granting charters which were never obtained with the slightest idea on the part of the promoters of constructing the railways in question. The promoters in each case simply spent a couple of hundred dollars to get through a charter in the hope of being able to sell it at a profit to somebody else, and the amendment suggested would put an end to that practice. Why incorporate companies and authorize them to sell railways which they have no intention of constructing ? If these various promoters had built their railways, there might be some reason for enabling them to sell or lease their property, but they simply get a charter and the power to sell it and put that charter on the market for sale. There is not an hon. member in this House who believes that in one charter out of ten granted here for the building of railways the promoters are competent to go on with the work. Their sole object is, not to build, to sell out their charter to some existing company at a profit, and thus pass on to some other company the very work which we authorize them to construct. I think it is about time to put a stop to that sort of thing. The hon. member for Yale (Mr. Galliher) says we should not begin this session but wait until next session. But at the beginning of next session we will have the same objection raised again. There are scores of people paying out money to get Bills printed and drafted, and going to all sorts of expense, in the expectation of getting charters, with this clause inserted, giving them the right to sell ; and if we were to decide now that we would not give this right, we would save these people considerable expense and trouble. The best thing we can do is to take all the Bills coming before us this session and strike out this clause, and thus give full notice to all further applicants for railway charters what they may expect.

Mr. GALLIHER. It seems strange that the voice of the hon. gentleman was never raised before against this prevailing iniquity. It has been said that the hon. Minister of Railways has given notice that next session he would deal with this matter. Well, that will go abroad. Those people who come here with Bills prepared for next session will have learned of this discussion through the 'Hansard' or through the newspapers, and if they go to the expense of printing these Bills and putting these clauses in, they will have themselves to blame, because they were warned beforehand. The very fact that the minister gave notice that at the beginning of the next session these matters will be taken into strict consideration, to my mind argues that in fairness this rule should not be applied this session, but that every one should start on an equal basis next session. Now we are all here; the hon. gentleman who has spoken as well as the rest of us, I think, are here to do what we consider fair between the different applicants who come to us in the Railway Committee, or in any other committee with Bills of this kind. In that view, I contend that we should not start in towards the end of what is a long session to cut out clauses in railway Bills or others that we have allowed to pass under exactly similar circumstances in former cases during the present session. That is all I ask, I ask that this Bill be treated exactly the same as other Bills this session. If we have started in on a particular line and have followed it through during the present session so far, let us carry it out and be fair to all parties.

Amendment negatived. Yeas, 19; nays, 29.

Bill reported.

Mr. SPEAKER. When shall the Bill be read a third time ?

Mr. HENDERSON. I desire to move an amendment to the third reading.

Mr. SPEAKER. We must first settle the question whether the Bill be read forthwith or later.

Mr. HENDERSON. If it is to be read now, I wish to move an amendment.

Mr. DAVIS moved that the Bill be now read a third time.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. Under the rules of the House you have to give twenty-four hours notice before you can move an amendment. I am raising the point of order. I am calling the attention of Mr. Speaker to the point that was raised by the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson), because there is a conflict between these two orders. Certainly the rules of the House are not intended to cut away the right of any man to move an amendment.

Mr. SPEAKER. There is nothing which prevents the hon. member from moving his amendment now, because I see that he has given notice that he will move an amendment in committee on the third reading.

Mr. HENDERSON. I beg to move that the Bill be referred back to committee with instructions to insert after the word 'may' in the first line of the tenth clause, the following words :

After said railway has been constructed and put in operation, but not before.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. I wish to raise a second point of order that the twenty-four hour rule should prevail. If you allow stages to be taken without unanimous consent, it will open the door for amendments without the required notice having been given. If this amendment is allowed, it must be because Mr. Speaker holds that you need not give notice of an amendment on the third reading, and the consequence would be that very important amendments might be moved without notice. Unless Mr. Speaker rules that this notice is the same notice the amendment has already been given notice of, he would be opening the door to any sort of motion being made on the third reading.

Mr. SPEAKER. I call attention to the House that the hon. member for Halton has given notice of a motion that he would move on the third reading the amendment which he has just now moved. His amendment will be found in the Votes and Proceedings of July 3.

Mr. HENDERSON. The notice reads : 'In Committee of the Whole, or on the third reading.'

Mr. SPEAKER. I rule that he has a right to move his amendment on the third reading, even if he has moved it in Committee of the Whole.

Amendment negatived.

Motion agreed to ; Bill read the third time, on division, and passed.

QUESTIONS

YUKON TERRITORY—PAYMENT OF REPRESENTATION FEES BY A. N. C. TREADGOLD AND ASSOCIATES.

Mr. BELL—by Mr. Lancaster—asked :

1. Has the government been advised that E.C. Senkler, gold commissioner of the Yukon, has granted free representation to A. N. C. Treadgold and his associates ?

2. If so, by what authority has the gold commissioner acted ?

3. To what extent has Treadgold been relieved of the payment of fees, or representations ?

4. Is the ground which Treadgold holds, or is supposed to hold, open for location, because no representation has been done upon it ?

5. If the Gold Commissioner was wrong in his interpretation of the regulations, what steps have been taken to correct the error ?

6. What money has the Treadgold syndicate paid to the government in representation fees since the granting of the original concession ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton).

1. Yes.

2. The Gold Commissioner gave as his authority the provisions of an Order in Council of the 21st April, 1902, but the department disagreed with the holding of the Gold Commissioner and ordered him to collect representation fees.

3. Answered under question two.

4. Representation money having been paid upon the claims they were presumably in the same position as any other claims upon which fees have been paid.

5. Answered under question two.

6. The claims which are the property of the syndicate have been recorded in the name of individual members of the company. The department is not able to say what representation fees upon these claims have been paid since the date of the original concession. The amount paid upon the claims stated in the records of the department to be held on behalf of the company during last year was $3,726.00.

SIR JOHN BOYD.

Mr. TAYLOR—by Mr. Lancaster—asked :

What amount of money has Sir John A. Boyd, now chancellor of the province of Ontario, received from the Dominion treasury, for services outside his regular salary as a judge, since August 1, 1896 ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). The Public Accounts do not show any payments of the character indicated to Sir John Boyd. Sir John Boyd was appointed by the province of Ontario to be one of the arbitrators in the matters of account between the provinces and the Dominion. That appointment was made under an Act passed in 1891 in the time of Sir John Macdonald. The expenses of the arbitrators are paid jointly by the two provinces and the Dominion government contributes something to the expenses of the arbitrators, but the division is made by the arbitrators and our returns show only the sum paid to the clerk of the exchequer court for the purposes of the common fund, but we have no specific payments made to Sir John Boyd.

SURETIES FOR J. G. GRANT, BARRIE.

Mr. BENNETT—by Mr. Lancaster—asked:

Who was the surety, or who were the sureties, if any, for J. G. Grant, Barrie, who, upon page B-2, Auditor General's Report, under heading of Department of Customs, is reported to be in default for the sum of $1,130? What position, if a government official, did said Grant fill; and under what circumstances was such indebtedness incurred?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Hon. Wm. Paterson). The following were sureties for J. G. Grant:—

C. H. Ross, of Barrie, and A. C. Thompson, on bond dated 22nd May, 1887; C. H. Ross, of Barrie, and John Davidson, of Angus, on bond dated 12th October, 1891;

J. G. Grant was formerly sub-collector of customs at Barrie, Ontario.

Grant's indebtedness was incurred on account of customs duties collected by him prior to 1894.

ALIEN ACT AMENDMENT.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved the third reading of Bill (No. 204) to amend the Acts relating to naturalization and aliens. He said: The hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) the other day put to me the question as to whether it would not be advisable to have this Bill apply only to the North-west Territories and to leave the law as it is in the other provinces. I gave the reason for the legislation when the Bill was discussed the other day and I said that we thought in the North-west Territories on account of the large aggregation of population that frauds might take place in connection with applications for naturalization. According to the information we had some frauds had taken place. This statement of mine was rather resented by my hon. friend from Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis) who declared that he knew of no frauds having taken place and that the character of the population was such as in his opinion to preclude any possibility of it. I am glad to hear and the country at large will be glad to know that the character of the people we are getting into the North-west Territories is so exceptional that there has not been and there will not be any violation of the laws of the land. At all events, even if that be so, we think the law is a wise one. The applicants will be very numerous and we deem it essential that some notice shall be given to parties of any application so that if objection is to be taken it can be taken after due notice. This reasoning does not seem to apply with the same force in the other provinces but I think my hon. friend will admit that it is better to have a uniform law than to have a law something which is the law in one part of the country and which is not the law in another part of the country.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the third time, and passed.

SUPPLY—SEIZURE OF SCHOONER MARKLAND.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE moved that the House again go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. C. E. KAULBACH (Lunenburg). Seeing the Minister of Customs in his seat, I desire to bring to his notice a subject of vital importance to the fishing and shipping interests of the maritime provinces.

The case I desire to present to the minister's notice is this; The seizure of the schooner 'Markland.' The schooner 'Markland,' Captain Begin, Master, of 99 tons, belonging to the port of Mahone Bay, N.S., was returning some few weeks ago from the fishing grounds off Cape Breton, in Nova Scotia waters, her destination being the port to which she belonged—Mahone Bay—to discharge a small catch of fish, and owing to heavy weather, and a dense fog prevailing when off Halifax harbour, she put into that port as a place of refuge, anchoring inside of Georges Island, having reached that port about 11 o'clock in the morning of the 15th of June, 1903, and the next morning at 5 o'clock—the 16th of June—weighed anchor and proceeded on her voyage. On the afternoon of the 15th, and whilst the vessel was at anchor, a boat drew up beside the vessel, and one of the boats' crew asked the deck hand, who chanced to be on the deck of the vessel at the time, where the vessel was from, and whither bound, which was answered, that they were from the fishing grounds off Cape Breton, and bound to Mahone Bay. Had this official asked for the captain of the 'Markland' and advised him of the requirements of the port and the necessity of his reporting inward, the captain would have complied with his request, which I contend the official should have done, and thereby avoided serious loss, and inconvenience, as well as annoyance to owners and fishermen. But instead of which, he—the Tide Waiter, or official, reported the vessel to the officer of customs at Halifax, who acting on the information, advised the customs officer at Mahone Bay to seize the vessel for an offence of the Customs Act, requiring a bond, and deposit of $400—the maximum penalty—awaiting the decision of yourself, the minister here at Ottawa.

The master of the schooner informed me that he had great difficulty in obtaining the $400—during which time the vessel was detained at a serious loss to owners and crew.

The master further stated that this was his first voyage as master, and that he was impressed with an idea that had he been in port 24 hours, he would have been required to report, but even on this he had a doubt, as the vessel was engaged in fishing. As a fisherman merely entering the port for a place of refuge, and awaiting a chance to proceed on her voyage, not intending to land, or take anything on board and with no intent of wrong doing is a hardship which you yourself, Sir, I feel will realize, and which is recognized, I can assure you by all fishermen, and those engaged in shipping, as indeed cruel. And in view of the facts, I consider the owners and master should be released from the payment of any penalty, as they suffered sufficiently already from the action of the sub-official, in not—when he was at the side of the vessel at Halifax asking for the captain, and informing him of what the port required—unless the object of the sub-official in not advising the master, was greed, plunder or ill-gotten gain, to supply his own pocket, in which case I contend he should be severely reprimanded.

I feel it my duty, Sir, to bring this matter to your notice considering it a great hardship that our vessel fishermen should be compelled to report at every port along the Nova Scotia shore they enter for refuge, or a supply of bait, when they have nothing to land, or take from the port. In fact I do not consider it was ever intended that fishermen should be placed under such rigid ruling, as they would find themselves in such cases at a serious sacrifice to carry such ruling out, so much so that they would have to abandon the industry of fishing entirely.

With the manipulation of interests in the markets of the West Indies where the fish are principally disposed of, competition being so keen, we can barely have a margin of profit at all, but if those engaged in deep-sea fishing are to be told, and required when their vessels enter a port for refuge or for bait that they must report to the Customs every time, I mean vessels engaged in the fisheries, and their vessels detained till the Customs official puts in an appearance in his office at ten o'clock in the morning, it would be extremely hard, and as the representative of the largest fishing constituency in the Dominion, I strongly protest against such ruling, and ask that the Customs official of the port of Halifax, and every other port along the sea-girt shore, be advised that fishing vessels, actually engaged in fishing, shall when entering a port for shelter from a storm, or seeking bait, be relieved of reporting to the Customs, unless they are in port over twenty-four hours.

I must ask the Minister of Customs to realize the serious inconvenience such ruling as I have referred to, such as was dealt out to the schooner 'Markland' would be to the deep-sea fishermen, and the sacrifice to the fishing industry in general, in being so hampered by this unnecessary requirement, and I here ask the minister to have in future all fishing vessels actually engaged in fishing, relieved of such a requirement so unnecessary and unreasonable.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I may say to the hon. gentleman that had I known he would bring this matter to the attention of the House this afternoon I would have refreshed my memory as to the particulars. However, I shall take care that the department will have its attention called to the remarks and suggestions of the hon. gentleman, and if it can be found with perfect safety that the line of action he suggests may be adopted, of course we would be prepared to adopt it. There is no desire to harass any one in that way, but, in order to prevent illicit traffic we have found it necessary to be a little more strict in reference to these matters than perhaps was hitherto the case. I will bring the suggestions of the hon. gentleman to the attention of the officers of the department.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). I would like to say to the hon. member for Lunenberg (Mr. Kaulbach) that there will be no necessity for a vessel being detained until ten o'clock as she can enter at the customs house at nine o'clock in the morning. There is a steam boat in connection with the customs house that boards all the vessels that come into the port, and when the other side of the story will be known from the report made by the officer himself, it will be found that he just warned the man he saw on deck that the vessel must report to the customs house. With that warning given to the man, it should have been obeyed. Instead of that, the vessel proceeded to sea without reporting to the customs house at all. If you are going to widen this gap, and allow vessels to go into port and leave again without reporting within twenty-four hours, you do not know the mischief you are going to create. The customs collector at Halifax, under whose instructions these men are working, cannot be too careful in seeing that all vessels comply with the regulations, and that there shall be no exception between those who enter and those who will not enter.

Mr. KAULBACH. A part of my complaint the hon. member for Victoria, I do not think understands. My complaint is that this official who spoke the vessel lying at anchor in Halifax harbour, spoke to a deck-hand, whereas he should have asked for the master of the vessel, and should have informed him what the requirements of the port were. He would have been only too willing to comply with the request that would have been made to him by that official. But he was entirely ignorant of such a rule, and felt satisfied that he was only compelled to report if he were in port twenty-four hours. My hon. friend from Victoria does not seem to realize this fact.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). I realize this fact, that the hon. member for Lunenburg (Mr. Kaulbach) has the report from his captain, but where is the report which the Minister of Customs has from the collector at Halifax ? Because there are always two sides to a story of this kind.

Mr. BELL. It would seem that in this case the hon. Minister of Customs has not been informed of the circumstances, and therefore it is impossible to form any opinion as to whether a hardship has been improperly or unintentionally inflicted on the owners of the vessel or on the captain. But I would imagine, in view of the enormous number of fishermen employed about our coasts, and the absolute necessity there is occasionally of their running into a port and out again, and the great importance of their not being delayed during the fishing season, that the rule requiring them to report at the customs house should be waived if it can be done. However, I understand that the matter will be further dealt with by the Minister of Customs after he has had time to inquire into it; and it would be unfair to lay too much stress on the incident narrated by my hon. friend from Lunenburg, who I am sure has not overstated the case while there is perhaps no county so greatly interested in the fishing as the county of Lunenburg, still it is of very general interest in the province of Nova Scotia, and I think the Minister of Customs would do well to facilitate as much as possible the business of the fishermen around our coasts, and obviate if possible a repetition of such an occurrence.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Before we proceed with the details of the estimates, I desire to avail myself of an understanding which I have had with the hon. leader of the opposition, and of which I made mention on Friday night, by way of notice, with a view of obtaining the consent of the committee to a vote on account. We had a special Supply Bill carried through a few days ago; but that had reference to urgent matters affecting the fiscal year which closed on the 30th of June. We have now entered on a new fiscal year, and even such an economical government as we now have cannot carry on the affairs of the Dominion without a little money.

Mr. BARKER. Have you no credit ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We have a credit, but the banks are all the better pleased when we have the Committee of the House of Commons behind us, in which they show their excellent sense. We desire, however, to avoid any difficulties which might arise through the non-payment of clerks and others if we had no Supply Bill before the close of the session, although we hope that blessing may come pretty soon. I have discussed this matter with the hon. leader of the opposition, who has been good enough to say that he would assist me in securing the passage of a special Supply Bill by which we will take one-fifth of all the remaining estimates. On the estimates which the committee have already passed upon, we shall be in a position to-morrow to ask concurrence; and in respect of all the main estimates for the current fiscal year with which the committee has not yet dealt, I propose that the House give us a vote of credit for one-fifth of the total sum. The effect of this will be to give us a supply for about two months. All the matters that can be discussed in connection with these votes will, of course, still remain before the House; and we will have to take these up item by item for the purpose of obtaining the remaining four-fifths of the estimates. So that the course we now propose does not in any way restrict the fullest and freest discussion. It simply facilitates the granting of a partial supply which will be very much needed before the end of the present month. I therefore move :

That a sum not exceeding the amounts set forth below be granted to His Majesty on account of the following services for the year ending 30th June, 1904.

In each case the item is set forth as it appears in the main estimates, with one-fifth of the amount set beside it. As respects the remaining four-fifths, we will take up each item, upon which the same discussion will take place as if this motion had not been passed.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The only question which suggests itself to me is as to the effect of the proposed resolution upon items which there might be a motion to strike out or upon items which eventually might be dropped. Has the hon. gentleman considered that ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I admit that would be a proper criticism; and if any particular item were indicated as likely to be the subject of debate, I would strike it out of the present motion; but if such a motion should be presented later, it would apply to the four-fifths.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I have no doubt we can arrive at some understanding in a case of that kind between now and eight o'clock, if the hon. gentleman will allow the motion to stand till then.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I will agree to my hon. friend's suggestion, and perhaps we might in the meantime take up the remaining items of the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Additional for services between Canada and Great Britain, $22,083.33.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. We have slightly altered the terms of the contract, and pay by the trip, according to the class of steamer, from £500 to £1,000 sterling. Formerly we used to have a small vote of $20,000 additional for a steamer between St. John and Liverpool, but that is struck out.

Mr. CLARKE. Can the hon. gentleman inform us what is the average speed, and whether there has been any acceleration ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. From July to November, 1902, the average was 7 days, 21 hours and 5 minutes, which is a good deal better than it used to be—from Moville to Rimouski.

Mr. CLARKE. What is the average speed ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I think it would be a little over 12 knots an hour.

Mr. CLARKE. Has the hon. gentleman the figures to communicate to the committee ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I have simply the days, the average speed will have to be computed. It has somewhat improved on former years, though not quite within the contract time—a few hours over. In winter the average speed was 9 days and 3 hours to Halifax from Moville. In summer the average speed from Moville to Rimouski was 7 days, 21 hours. In winter the average speed from Halifax to Moville was 7 days, 11 hours.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I thought the hon. gentleman mentioned 9 days ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Yes, in respect of one particular portion of the service—the service from Moville to Halifax in the winter—9 days and 3 hours.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Was that by the same boats, or was the longer time due to a different class of boats ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Pretty much the same boats seem to have been employed—the 'Parisian,' the 'Bavarian,' the 'Tunisian' and the 'Corinthian.'

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Will the hon. gentleman explain the cause of this additional vote ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. We used to pay a lump sum, but of late we have been paying according to the ship employed—the lowest class £500, the next class £750, Liverpool to Montreal and return, and also at the rate of £1,000 for the round voyage between Liverpool and St. John and return during the winter season. This last was paid to the 'Bavarian' and 'Tunisian.' In the case of several of the other vessels we reduced the pay to £500 per trip, our object being to get the faster vessels. We used to have a vote of $20,000 in addition to the $150,000. That was for a boat from St. John to Liverpool, but that was struck out a year or so ago, inasmuch as there was really no distinct service.

Mr. CLARKE. What are the qualifications which would enable a vessel to receive £500 and another £750 ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The 'Bavarian' and 'Tunisian' are larger and better boats. They have much superior accommodation and are somewhat faster. I should say that they average about one and a-half knots faster than the others. The 'Numidian,' the 'Ionian' and the 'Corinthian' are not considered at all equal to the 'Bavarian' and 'Tunisian,' and we reduced the price to them accordingly.

Mr. CLARKE. What is the average speed of the faster boats ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Thirteen to fourteen knots. Fourteen would be the highest rate of speed attained by any of them.

Mr. CLARKE. Would the hon. gentleman lay on the Table the average speed made in the twelve months ? Fourteen knots is not a bad average through the year.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. They did not average that through the year.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman promised to lay on the Table the agreement for the South African service.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I have it here.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Has the hon. minister taken into consideration the freight rates on produce by the various lines of steamers from Canadian to European ports ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Yes.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Could we have a statement of that ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I will get that if possible. This, the hon. gentleman will see is merely a side vote. The main vote will come on later, and any information the hon. gentleman wants I will gladly endeavour to procure for him.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). The information I want should be prepared in form to be read by people throughout the country. I think it would be of service to let the people of Ontario, for instance, know that we are being taxed both for railway and steamship purposes to enable American grain to reach Europe cheaply. Ontario farmers pay higher freights on their cattle and grain——

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. If my hon. friend (Mr. Hughes, Victoria) will let me know what particular point he wishes to cover——

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I mean all points. If the hon. minister will look at the American returns of Trade and Commerce, he will find that the figures issued by the government show the freight rate on all classes of goods from the main points in the country to other main points within the country, and also the rates per mile on the main classes of produce, as well as the rates on steamers from the principal ports to European ports. If we had these figures, it would be shown at a glance that the shipper in Central Iowa can send his produce to Liverpool for less than can the farmer five miles outside of Ottawa.

Mr. CLARKE. The hon. minister has been good enough to lay on the Table a document headed 'Allan Line Service,' giving the time occupied by the steamers of that line making voyages to and from Canadian ports. I find a summary on page two, which shows that on the voyages westbound by steamer from Moville to Rimouski the average time was eight days, eight hours and forty minutes; and from Moville to Halifax, eight days, eighteen hours and nineteen minutes. Then, for the summer service, east-bound from Rimouski to Moville, the time was seven days, nineteen hours and two minutes; and the winter service from Halifax to Moville, eight days, one hour and twelve minutes. I wish to ask the hon. minister if he will have a compilation made showing the average speed? Also I would like to aks if all the subsidies are paid to vessels of the Allan line?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. They are the only ones which we have under contract at the present moment for that particular service. We have a contract of course, for other services, as I have mentioned—two or three distinct lines?

Mr. CLARKE. It would be interesting if we could obtain from the hon. minister a statement of the average speed. Also, if the hon. minister would give us information as to what the weight of mails and newspapers carried by these vessels is. I suppose that could be easily ascertained?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I could give that when the main vote comes up. We have a main vote of $150,000. So, whatever is asked for now, I can get the information in time for the consideration of that vote.

Mr. CLARKE. May I ask the hon. minister if he has information as to the mails sent via New York?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I will have to apply to the Postmaster General's Department for that. The bulk of our mail, as the hon. gentleman knows, goes by New York.

Mr. CLARKE. That is a lamentable fact.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. You see, we have one steamer per week, and they have a steamer, practically every day, and sometimes two. Also, of course, the rate of speed is very greatly against us.

Mr. CLARKE. Our vessels merely drift across the Atlantic between Moville and Halifax, the service is so slow.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I am not in a position to contradict the hon. gentleman. Of course he knows that speed and price are co-relative terms in these cases. The amount we pay is not very large and the service we get is not very swift.

Mr. CLARKE. I think I am within the mark in saying that the great bulk of Canadian mail is sent via New York because its gets to its destination two or three days sooner.

Mr. BELL. Will there be an opportunity to discuss the proposed fast line?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I am afraid not. It is now ten minutes past six——

Mr. BELL. When the general estimates are brought up, will the minister be prepared to make a statement on the subject?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. It will be within the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Bell) right to raise the question and have a discussion upon it. Of course, I could make a statement as to the result of the negotiations that are going on, but that is all that I could do.

Mr. BARKER. I would like to ask the right hon. minister, in cases where he allows the larger subsidy, does he stipulate for a certain speed to be made by the vessels so subsidized? In the long runs from Moville to Halifax, he had some of the fastest vessels, and they ran, apparently nine days, and yet——

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. They did better than nine days. But I suppose the hon. gentleman is speaking of the average speed.

Mr. BARKER. Is there a stipulation that the fast vessels shall make a minimum of speed ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The stipulation is that they shall average a certain speed taking one voyage with another.

Mr. CLARKE. What is the average demanded ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The average demanded is that they should make the trip from Moville to Rimouski and vice versa at an average of seven days, twelve hours, and from Moville to Halifax and vice versa at an average of eight days. These may be divided between summer and winter—seven and one-half days in one case and eight days in the other. From Halifax to Moville is somewhat shorter than from Rimouski to Moville.

Mr. BARKER. When they do not make this speed is there any deduction from the subsidy ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Sometimes I may make a reduction. Of course, they plead—and sometimes, I suppose, fairly enough—that they are detained by fog or ice or similar causes, and, in a good many cases, they obtain a modification of the contract on that score. As a rule, during the last year, and, I think, during this year also, there has been a considerable improvement on what they formerly did, though I cannot pretend to say that the service is, or that it will be, a fast one.

Mr. BARKER. Have there been any deductions on that account during the past year ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. This year, I have not examined the matter. Perhaps we may have to make some deductions, I fined them $10,000 last year for failing to comply with the contract.

Mr. HACKETT. Before the item is adopted, I desire to ask the right hon. minister a few questions on a very important subject, and, as it is after six o'clock, I would not like to detain the hon. minister now.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. If my hon. friend (Mr. Hackett) will put the questions, I will answer him if I can.

Mr. HACKETT. Has the hon. minister arranged for communication between Prince Edward Island and Great Britain ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Yes, we are going to give a grant for the service between Prince Edward Island and Great Britain—the amount is in the estimates.

Mr. HACKETT. I am aware of that. But the season is pretty far advanced. Has the right hon. gentleman arranged now for the service ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. We did arrange for some trips for this year's service.

Mr. HACKETT. Commencing at what time ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. We arranged for trips in the latter part of the year, in October, November and probably in December. I may say to the hon. gentleman that I will be able to give him detailed information upon that when that particular item comes up. That will be up in the course of the ordinary progress of the estimates in a few days, and if he will kindly wait until then I will give him the information.

Mr. HACKETT. The season is advancing.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. It was not neglected. We are endeavouring to obtain contracts for the service.

Mr. HACKETT. Is that line running to Manchester or Liverpool ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Manchester.

Mr. HACKETT. I would desire to say to the right hon. gentleman that it does not suit Prince Edward Island so well as to have a line of boats running to Liverpool. It is true we are pleased to have it, but it does not suit the business of the island, because the connections of our business men are mostly in Liverpool.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I will endeavour to meet the views of the business people as far as possible, but we have had a great deal of difficulty in getting any vessels to call there at all. We have had several negotiations, and they broke them off altogether. We are obliged to take what vessels we can, but if it be found possible to secure vessels going to Liverpool I should be very glad if the merchants of the island prefer it to make that arrangement..

To provide for a weekly service from January 1 to June 30, 1903, between Halifax and Canso (revote), $2,000.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. This is merely a revote. There was a clerical error in voting it last year. The words 'semi-weekly' were put in instead of 'weekly' and the Auditor General required another vote.

For services of the steamer 'Lord Strathcona' and wrecking plant on the St. Lawrence for the year ending June 30, 1903, $10,000.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. This is a vote for the wrecking plant which is maintained at Quebec to go to the relief of any vessels that get into trouble on the St. Lawrence. The 'Lord Strathcona' is a very large and powerful tug with the proper appurtenances for relieving vessels and it has been pretty successful in doing that work.

Mr. CLARKE. Does the government bear the expense in connection with a wrecking outfit ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The government make a $10,000 grant. This is a kind of a retaining fee to keep this tug always ready to go to the relief of any vessel in distress.

Mr. CLARKE. Who owns her ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The firm of Davie & Son, of Quebec, a firm well known in that business. The whole of the shipping interests of the St. Lawrence unanimously petitioned us to give this grant to that firm for the purpose of maintaining this wrecking plant.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is this the usual vote or a new vote ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Well, it is a little increased. It used to be $5,000. But they had a much inferior boat. They have put on the 'Lord Strathcona' and we have increased the vote to $10,000.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Since when ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. This is for the service of the year 1902-3.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There is an increase this year.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. There is an increase of $5,000. The service has been very useful. I think they succeeded in relieving four vessels that got into very considerable trouble in the Gulf of St. Lawrence.

At six o'clock committtee took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at 8.20 p.m.

INTERIM SUPPLY BILL.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). I move that a sum of money not exceeding one-fifth the amount voted so far this session be granted to His Majesty for the public services for the year ending 30th of June, 1904.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I presume there is no reason why the committee should not adopt this motion providing the necessary moneys for carrying on the public business of the country; but of course it will be understood that the passing of this resolution or of any Bill founded upon it will be absolutely without prejudice to the right of any member to move to strike out or reduce any one of the items which are comprised in this by way of schedule. In that respect it will be understood that every member of the House will be exactly in the same position as if this resolution were not passed, it being merely to prevent, I understand, detriment to the public service by reason of there being no funds available to pay the salaries.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I entirely agree with the views expressed by the leader of the opposition. Of course as respects this particular one-fifth, as soon as the supply is granted, we have to spend some part of it. But all the hon. gentleman says will remain absolutely correct with regard to the four-fifths.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would not care to be in this position, that because we have voted this one-fifth, in order that some portion of it might be expended on public works, for example, any gentleman on this side of the House should be precluded from the right of moving to strike out the whole item.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Of course in any particular case, after we have acted upon the Supply Bill to the extent of one-fifth, it would be too late to strike out the item in that case. But I hope no such case will arise. At all events, I quite agree with the hon. gentleman's wish to have full freedom of discussion and of action in the matter, and that he merely facilitates the passing of this resolution because it is necessary to make supply for the public service. I quite appreciate that, and in that spirit only is the matter agreed to.

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLY.

House again in Committee of Supply.

Post Office Department—outside service—salaries and allowances, $1,373,366.75.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The hon. gentleman on Friday night gave us a list of increases, and among others was a number of increases in the city post offices. Do any of these increases relate to the post office in Halifax, and if so, what are they ? Perhaps also the hon. gentleman would give us some information respecting the increases in the salaries of letter-carriers ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Sir William Mulock). There are four increases of second class clerks, $50 each; seven increases of $40 to third class clerks; six increases to salaries of letter-carriers. The names of the letter-carriers, and their salaries, increased by $30 each, are these : De-Young, $570; De Freytas, $540; Day, $510; Pheeney, $420; Beattie, $570; McDowell, $450.

Mr. CLARKE: Is there any provision for the increase of the salaries of Toronto letter-carriers? The hon. minister promised the other night to bring down some information respecting the salaries paid to the letter-carriers, and the number who had taken advantage of the provisions of his Bill.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The number of those who have come in under the new Bill is 195. They are distributed throughout the Dominion as follows: Halifax, 8; St. John, 20; Quebec, 15; Montreal, 45; Ottawa, 12; Kingston, 5; Toronto, 39; Hamilton, 15; London, 8; Winnipeg, 5; Vancouver, 10; Victoria, 5.

Mr. CLARKE. How many of these letter-carriers have taken advantage of the Act of the hon. gentleman, and have come in under its provisions, who were before receiving the maximum salary of $600? The minister has made the statement that under this new Bill their position has been substantially improved. He has extended the time under which they may come in under its operation by six months. Now, can he tell us how many men who were in receipt of $600 a year, the maximum salary paid under the old law, have taken advantage of this new law?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Eight letter-carriers of the city of Toronto who are at their maximum have come in under the provisions of the present Act. They are as follows: T. A. Nuller, F. Kirke, M. Lawless, John Drew, R. Durston, J. S. Clarke, T. Humphries.

Mr. CLARKE. This is the total number from Toronto who have come in under the new law?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE. How many throughout the Dominion?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Fifteen.

Mr. CLARKE. How many letter-carriers throughout the Dominion are drawing the maximum of $600?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The staff would have to go through the civil list to prepare that statement.

Mr. CLARKE. There can be no doubt that not more than fifteen letter-carriers in the Dominion have taken advantage of these liberal provisions which the minister claims he has made for them.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE. Will the minister supply at as early date as possible a memorandum showing how many have made application to take advantage of this provision and who are at the maximum of $600 a year?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I will get that information.

Mr. CLARKE. The minister read a list of those who are to receive increases in the Halifax post office. To whom does he intend to give increases in the Toronto post office?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Three first class clerks will be increased $50 each; namely, Messrs. R. E. Chaad, W. E. Demon, R. Loudon; three second class clerks will receive increases: H. Boulter, W. D. Milligan and J. Stoddart. There are twenty increases in the third class; do you want the names?

Mr. CLARKE. No.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. In the fourth class there is provision for forty-nine who have been transferred from the ranks of stampers and sorters to the fourth class.

Mr. CLARKE. Are these all the increases which are to be made in the Toronto post offices?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. In addition to these there are fourteen increases of $30 each in the salaries of the letter-carriers of the city of Toronto.

Mr. PUTTEE. How many of the Winnipeg letter-carriers applied to come in under the extra grade E?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The inspector will proceed to Winnipeg in the course of a few days and I have no doubt will report favourably in regard to the letter-carrier staff. We have no report yet.

Mr. CLARKE. Similar to the others, I suppose?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The Bill is immensely to their advantage.

Mr. PUTTEE. In view of the statement of the minister that the inspector is going to Winnipeg in a few days, I take this opportunity to draw the attention of the Postmaster General to the very serious complaints that are being made in Winnipeg and in the west generally with respect to the post office service. In the city of Winnipeg the way the post office business is being transacted amounts now to almost a public scandal. It is entirely inadequate and the only explanation we can offer is that the department at Ottawa does not appreciate the tremendous increase in the volume of business that is monthly taking place in the west. I understood the minister to say on Friday afternoon, that a sorting room was going to be provided when the Canadian Pacific Railway Company erect a new station, but that question has been hanging fire for two years and it looks now as if there will be no new station for another year. The congestion in the Winnipeg post office is such that delay of that kind cannot be tolerated. They will simply have to put the mail matter into the lane instead of in the building. Some of the departments of the local post office are in a disgraceful condition. If the minister inquires he will find that there is no room in the dead letter office for the clerks to sit to do their work, and they have to sit on bags to do the sorting. The conditions are not sanitary there, and are positively injurious. Some plan must be found to properly man the post office. Not less than five left the service there at the end of last month. I was in the post office myself a short time ago, and I found that in the registry department the work is being done by temporary employees who are classed as labourers. That does not look safe. If the men are fit for the service, their work ought be properly appreciated. I believe that two-thirds of the mail matter that goes through the Winnipeg office is sorted in the boxes. The letter carrier service has not met the requirements of the city and the people have found it necessary to have boxes. There are six persons working at these boxes and only one of them has been in the employment of the department for a year. It is impossible for them to understand their work and the result is all kinds of misplaced mails. There are more complaints than there are officers to attend to them. It does seem that the service is growing worse and worse. With the great influx of population at the present time it would look as if the service is going to break down altogether unless some radical improvement is made. I understand that there are often as many as 2,000 changes of address by temporary residents in Winnipeg in a month. There is no officer told off to attend to that work, so that this mail matter gets laid to one side and accumulates unassorted and undelivered. I know as a matter of fact that the staff are working overtime, and the reason that it is not increased is the fear that the employees would resign in greater numbers than ever. I wonder if the hon. Postmaster General knows the number of resignations that have taken place in the Winnipeg post office since the beginning of this year. I know that there have been so many that the work of the office is crippled, and I would like to know, and the citizens would like to know, whether any plan has been outlined for carrying on the business of the office and organizing the staff so that not only the present work, but the increased work which is bound to press upon the office from this time forth, will be kept up.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The Winnipeg post office building is wholly inadequate to the requirements of the office and it will not be possible to put that office on a proper footing until additions are made to the building or some of the other government staff are removed so that we can have additional accommodation in that building. The architect of the Public Works Department has already been at Winnipeg along with the chief superintendent of the post office, plans for the remodelling of the building have been prepared and approved of, and everything awaits the vote of parliament to give us money to proceed with the work. The staff of the Winnipeg post office, so far as its numbers go, is perfectly adequate. The city has made great progress of late, and the business of the office has outgrown the capacity of the building. The hon. gentleman has alluded to temporary employees. There is no temporary employee in the Winnipeg post office who is legally qualified for permanent appointment. There are not in that young country as many persons who have passed the civil service examination as are required from time to time, and consequently it is necessary to appoint persons temporarily until they can pass the examination and be legally appointed on the permanent staff. That is the only reason why so many temporary employees are in the Winnipeg post office at the present time. I do not say that the service is sufficient; quite the contrary. I am as well aware as my hon. friend is, that it is not sufficient, and I am as anxious as he is to make it sufficient. But it cannot be made sufficient in advance of the necessary accommodation being provided. The difficulty to-day arises from the great prosperity of Winnipeg and the west, which has thrown a much greater population into the city, and has consequently increased the work of the post office. With reference to the money-order and registration branches, it is part of the plan of re-organization to transfer these to the upper part of the building, and that will be done as soon as the upper part of the building can be prepared to receive them. When those two branches are removed from the lower part of the building, more accommodation will be afforded for the general business of the office. But even all this is but a make-shift, as I understand it, and the government will have to supply additional building accommodation at the city of Winnipeg at an early date.

Mr. PUTTEE. I am glad to see that the minister appreciates the situation. It is no worse than either he or I have explained to the House; it is simply very serious. But the question is, is it going to be remedied at once, or is it going to be allowed to get worse? Because it seems to me that if some improvement is not effected more quickly than is usually the case with government departments, there will be soon a congestion in the office which it will be difficult to overcome. As regards the staff, it may be that there are persons there who are not qualified to be appointed permanently. The office is manned by persons employed temporarily, many of them being rated as labourers. For this some remedy should speedily be found. People who have gone in during last year have left because the salary has not been sufficient to induce them to remain. Five left during the past month, and at present there are but few competent employees, for want of experience. How does the hon. Postmaster General expect to remedy this state of affairs, and remedy it in time to be of some use ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There have been several experienced post office men sent from the east to Winnipeg post office within the last few weeks. The staff is to-day adequate for the work, but it cannot do its work properly until sufficient accommodation is supplied. The work will be done under great disadvantages until then. I have no doubt that in a short time parliament will be asked to provide for additional building accommodation, and the sooner we reach those estimates and get them passed the sooner the work will be undertaken.

Mr. CLARKE. Did I understand the hon. Postmaster General to say that the reason why there are so many temporary employees in the Winnipeg post office is because he could not find men who had passed the civil service examination? Is that right ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE. Might I ask the hon. minister if that same difficulty is experienced in Ontario and other provinces ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There is no trouble of that kind in other parts of Canada east of Winnipeg. It may be found to some slight extent in British Columbia, but there is not the same rapid increase of population there.

Mr. CLARKE. Is there any insuperable difficulty in the way of having extra examinations by civil service commissioners ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The Civil Service Act provides that the examinations shall be held only annually, I think in the month of November.

Mr. KEMP. Might I inquire of the hon. Postmaster General if his attention has been called to the fact that the cost of living is very much greater in Winnipeg than in eastern cities, and does he think he can get the work done in the Winnipeg post office at the same wages as are paid in the east ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, I do not.

Mr. KEMP. What does the hon. Postmaster General propose to do about it ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. They are paid more in Winnipeg than in eastern cities.

Mr. PUTTEE. I might explain to the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Kemp) that the employees in Winnipeg get $10 a month more than they do in the east ; but even that is inadequate ; and the reason we have so few on the permanent list is that they will not stay in the office long enough to be appointed. Forty dollars a month is less than a man can live on, and they are constantly leaving. The better ones leave first, so that the inferior ones are left. To run the office properly, it is necessary to have efficient people, and you can only have them by paying as good salaries as are paid elsewhere. Those who have left have done so because the express companies and others are offering higher salaries than are paid in the post office.

Ten dollars a month does not more than cover the extra house rent in Winnipeg to-day in comparison with this city or any other eastern city. Ten dollars a month is not adequate, and the proof is they are leaving the postal service in spite of the inducement of permanent employment and gradual increase. The pay is too low at the start. Unless a man has been five years on the staff he will leave, and it is the best and most promising who are leaving first.

Mr. CLARKE. Apparently the Post Office Department is in some respects in as bad a position as the Militia Department. The hon. gentleman says that the position of the letter-carriers has been much improved under his new Bill. He has not however made that quite clear. If there has been any improvement, it is very extraordinary that only fifteen or sixteen have taken advantage of the new law.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not know where the hon. gentleman got his information that only fifteen had availed themselves of the new law. I stated that 195 old employees had come under the new system. One hundred and ninety-five letter-carriers have elected to come under that system, and I have no doubt that when the Bill now before the Senate becomes law, a very much larger number will avail themselves of it. The time allowed to take advantage of the new system had expired. A good many of them had not time to fully appreciate the benefits and have since intimated their desire to come under the new law. To meet this desire, a clause has been inserted in the Bill, which passed this House and is now before the Senate, extending the time for admission. My hon. friend will then be able to judge whether these people appreciate the advantages of the new law or not. If my hon. friend desires to know how the matter stands, I will give him a few figures and he can judge for himself. The transfers from the old to the new system were made at irregular dates. The letter-carriers could come in whenever they liked within six months, and therefore I cannot give a tabulated statement running a clear year, but I can give you a number of figures which will explain the advantages of the new system. I have here a statement showing the effect of the change regarding a hundred and ninety-five letter-carriers.

Mr. CLARKE. Were they drawing the maximum salary ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Some of them were.

Mr. CLARKE. How many—fifteen or sixteen ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think I said fifteen.

Mr. CLARKE. That is all of those receiving the maximum salary who have taken advantage of the new law ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. These are some figures showing the actual salaries paid to certain letter-carriers and what they would have received under the old law.

Mr. CLARKE. Give us the dates of the appointments of those gentlemen ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Mr. Britnell, appointed 11th September, 1899, would have received under the old law $435, and since his transfer he is receiving $464.50, and will be entitled to a bonus of $20, making an increase of $49.50 over what he would have received had he remained under the old system.

Mr. CLARKE. What about his superannuation ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is not affected by the change. He is entitled to all the rights regarding superannuation.

Mr. CLARKE. What is the length of the holidays received under the old system and under the new ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. My hon. friend is so curious that he will not allow me to give the information. I propose to answer the first question first and then will come to the others. The hon. gentleman evidently does not wish me to make good my statement that a certain number of letter-carriers, who had elected to come under the new system, were substantial gainers by the transfer.

Mr. CLARKE. The hon. minister knows that he is only advancing his own friends.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman does not wish to have this information but probably the committee would desire it.

Mr. CLARKE. Delighted to have it.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I shall proceed to give the information to the hon. gentleman and this committee.

Mr. Gay, appointed 9th April, 1900, gains $113 by the transfer. Mr. T. H. Reeves, appointed 13th July, 1901, gains $59.90 by the transfer. Mr. F. J. Cooney, appointed 1st January, 1900, gains $49.24. Mr. W. J. Livingstone appointed in 1898, gains $29. Mr. Coghlan, appointed in 1899, gains $95.-24. Mr. P. J. Murphy, appointed in 1889, gains $80.74. Mr. Finnigan, appointed in 1900, gains $96.74. Mr. W. S. McDonald, appointed in September, 1900, gains $46.05. Mr. D. Hornell, appointed 20th April, 1896, he is not one of our appointees. He would have received, had he remained in the class in which he was, under the law of hon. gentlemen opposite, $497.42. He has elected to come under the Act of last session and he is receiving $156.18 more than he would have received under the old law. Mr. T. M. Black, appointed in 1900, gains $113. In each of these cases the letter-carrier is entitled to the bonus of $20 and I am adding that to his profit.

Mr. CLARKE. You are adding it before they have received it ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have explained to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clarke) that at the end of each fiscal year a letter-carrier is entitled to $20 if his services have been satisfactory. That payment, therefore, cannot be made until the year's service is completed. The year's service, in the case of these people is now complete, and they are entitled to receive the bonus of $20, and, the government being good for it, we may assume that they have benefited to the extent of $20. The remainder of the list is as follows : T. A. Miller, 16th of December, 1899, $82.02; F. Kirk, 14th of September, 1882, $82.02; R. Louden, 29th of May, 1882, $62.02; J. Ryan, 13th of January, 1897, $120.26; M. Lawless, 1st of July, 1886, $46.77; A. Fleming, 14th of May, 1894, $143.76 ; W. W. Leake, 30th of December, 1895, $114.-76; J. McCaffrey, 19th of December, 1898, $101.58; F. J. Lomas, 17th of April, 1901, $48.05; S. J. Rich, 12th of July, 1900, $49.24; W. A. Hammond, 25th of April, 1900, $104.-60; H. Blathwerwick, 23rd of April, 1900, $112.50; S. J. Kerwin, 2nd of June, 1900, $112.50; W. J. Logan, 1st of January, 1900, $64.24; J. Quigley, 10th of May, 1901, $74.40; J. H. Young, 4th of February, 1898, $143.92; J. Drew, 19th of January, 1893, $87.25; R. Durston, 22nd of March, 1882, $80.02; E. J. Hand, 19th of December, 1898, $65.08; J. Taylor, 19th of December, 1899, $64.24; F. A. Kearns, 29th of September, 1898, $23.08; J. S. Clark, 15th of April, 1889, $46.77; H. McDonald, 26th of February, 1900, $113; A. Smith, 17th of February, 1900, $113 ; J. Jaffrey, 11th of July, 1900, $49.40; T. Humphreys, 19th of November, 1891, $84.68; James Pett, 7th of December, 1899, $107.90;

W. Gilmour, 28th of December, 1899, $107.90. These are all the letter-carriers attached to the Toronto post office. I have in another column full information as to the bounties in Montreal and other post offices. It makes a very lengthy statement, and the increases run about the same as those I have read. If the committee desire me to give the whole schedule I will do so. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clarke) is not satisfied I will read further.

Mr. CLARKE. I would be sorry to weary the hon. gentleman by asking him to read the whole list. But he has not established his statement as to the relative benefits under the old superannuation law and under his new law.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. If the hon. gentleman wishes me to read the list, I will do so.

Mr. CLARKE. If the hon. minister desires to read it, I will offer no objection. But I would prefer that the hon. gentleman would give us some information with regard to the relative position occupied by the men who have come in under his superannuation scheme and those under the old superannuation scheme. Let us know what advantage the men have under the new superannuation scheme.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I will read a comparative statement——

Mr. CLARKE. What we want to know is what the law was under which the appointment was made.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I will go on to give what the law was and how it worked compared with the present law. Under the old law a letter-carrier entered the service at an initial salary of $360 per annum. But it will be interesting, if I explain how that figure was reached. There is a record of the hon. gentleman's party on this point. And, as I remarked on a former occasion there was a time when the hon. gentleman's criticism and interest might have been exercised with great advantage for the letter-carriers of the city of Toronto. But I am afraid he failed to voice that criticism, or else his influence with his friends was not so great as we supposed it was.

Mr. CLARKE. We should not have to do anything now, if the Minister of Labour (Hon. Sir William Mulock) would do his duty.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. He is doing his duty. The difficulty with my hon. friend (Mr. Clarke), and his real grievance, is that I have done my duty too well to suit him. When the first administration of Sir John A. Macdonald left office it left the letter-carriers' salary at $360 on entering the service with an increase of $40 until a maximum of $600 was reached. When the Mackenzie government came into office they changed that law and raised the initial salary from $360 to $400. That administration went out of office in 1878, and the party of my hon. friend's (Mr. Clarke), now in opposition and now so anxious for the welfare of letter-carriers, came in. Within a couple of months after they had taken office, they reduced the salaries of the letter-carriers by $100 a year. Where was the hon. gentleman then ? Where was his sympathy then ?

Mr. CLARKE. How long ago was that?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. What right had they to reduce it from $400 to $300 ? Does the hon. gentleman approve of that measure ? If he condemns it now where was he then ? They allowed the initial salary to remain at $300 for several years.

Mr. CLARKE. How many years ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Until they had to go to the country in 1882. Then just before going to the country they made some slight change.

Mr. CLARKE. What change did they make ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am sorry to say that it was a change not altogether to the advantage of the letter-carriers.

Mr. CLARKE. What was it.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Instead of giving an annual increase of $40, they reduced the annual increase to $30. But in 1884, they raised the salary to $360 at entrance. Thus, they reduced the initial entrance salary of a letter carrier from $400 at which the Liberal party had left it in 1878 to $300, and left it at $300 till 1884, and then they raised it to $360 with an annual increase of $30, and kept it at that figure during the whole period of their being in office up to 1896.

I am not aware that the hon. gentleman during the whole of that period, either protested against this reduction or was known to raise his voice in favour of the betterment of the status of the letter-carriers of Toronto. When I have benefited the letter-carriers of Toronto and of the whole Dominion to a very material extent in the Bill that is now before the House, I have received the gratitude of the letter-carriers, notwithstanding any opinion of hon. gentlemen opposite. I know, Mr. Chairman, that the letter-carriers do not thank the hon. gentleman for his professions of friendship on their behalf at the present time. The hon. gentleman is not in the slightest degree helping himself or helping his role as a friend of labour in trying to obstruct me in my efforts to better the status of the civil service in my department, as I am doing ; and instead of trying to misrepresent me and unfairly criticising me, he should stand up in his place and, if he voices the sentiments of the working classes, he should candidly do his duty by voicing their gratitude on the floor of this House, and tell me that I have greatly benefited them. That would be his proper course, if he desired to represent those whom he professes to be so much concerned about, instead of obstructing, and misrepresenting, and detracting from what I have done. I would like to have the hon. gentleman explain why he allowed his party to lower the salary of the letter-carriers from $400 to $300, and why he allowed it to remain at $300 for six years; and why, if they were deserving of such great increases, he allowed them to remain under the injustice of being underpaid from 1878 until his party went out of office in 1896. I think the committee is entitled to know from him what he has been doing all these years, why he has not been using his influence and his powerful voice on behalf of the classes in whom he professes now to be so deeply interested.

Mr. CLARKE. I am sure the minister must feel himself considerably relieved after the violent abuse he has vomited out on me, because I have stood up in the House and tried to secure for the letter-carriers a reasonable measure of justice and fair-play. The minister read us a list of those who are benefited by the Act which came into force last year, and I am in the sense of the committee in saying that three-fourths of those who have been benefited have been appointed since the hon. gentleman came into office. He professes to do justice to a deserving class of civil servants, the hardest worked and poorest paid, possibly, in any department of the civil service ; yet, when the facts come to be known, the hon. gentleman's sense of justice and fair-play prompts him to pass a measure through parliament which practically only benefits those who have been his own appointments since he became Postmaster General. That is about the size of the hon. gentleman's generosity. He claims that his legislation has been of great benefit to the letter-carriers. It has been of benefit in so far as it has shortened the time when a man coming into the service may receive the maximum of that class, from $600 to $626 a year. But that is all the benefit it has been. The minister knows all this just as well as I do, and I am sure the committee will be surprised when I read a copy of a letter which was addressed to himself on the 20th of May last, stating the position of these very letter-carriers, whose interests I am feebly attempting to present to this House. The minister knows that this is a copy of a letter addressed to him by a committee representing the letter-carriers of the country :

Honoured Sir,—Your favour of 6th instant with memorandum from your deputy regarding letter-carriers' salaries duly received and contents noted. In reply we ask you to consider the following : We submit that while the amendment which was passed at the last session of parliament made the conditions for men entering the service better, that it made no provision——

Mark these words, notwithstanding the deliberate statements made by the Postmaster General, this is the emphatic statement made by the men affected :

—it made no provision for those already in the service who had reached the maximum salary.

That has been my contention, and the hon. gentleman cannot dispute that fact.

We think you must admit that it would be unreasonable to ask men who were drawing the limit under the Civil Service Act to accept the terms of the amendment, which only granted $26 above what had been paid already, and no allowance made for sickness or accident.

The hon. gentleman gave that $26 with one hand, if they worked instead of taking their holidays, and at the same time he deprived them of their sick pay and their accident pay, which they received before.

As the work of letter-carrying necessitates a man being out in all kinds of weather, and as the average life of a letter-carrier is very short in consequence thereof, it is to be expected that sickness will overtake him, and we think that if such did come, through no fault of his own, that he should receive some consideration.

This hon. gentleman who has just told the committee what he is doing for the working people, and who charges me with being derelict in my duty in not raising my voice in their favour when he knows that I did not have a seat in the House nor an opportunity of doing so—this hon. gentleman, in his legislation, which his officers are trying to persuade the men in the various cities to take advantage of, is actually depriving them of their sick pay and their accident pay, and if he increases the salaries of those in class E from $600 to $626, he does that in lieu of ten days holidays which they formerly received.

We feel that it would be an easy matter to enact such legislation as would embrace every carrier throughout the Dominion, thus doing away with the feeling of dissatisfaction that prevails at present and which cannot be for the best interests of the service.

These statements are every one of them correct, they are susceptible of being proved to the hilt. I say it with all respect, there is a very wide divergence between the statement which the Postmaster General has just presented to the House and the statements I have read here, which emanated from the letter-carriers. He sat down without explaining to us what position the letter-carriers are in now in so far as superannuation is concerned. He will not tell us what the position of the letter-carriers was under the old Civil Service law under the old regime. I think myself that the letter-carriers were always scantily paid considering the important service which they render to the public. I think that a salary of $360 was a miserably small salary, especially when one or two per cent of it was taken for the purpose of establishing a superannuation fund. I ask him why it was that for three years after he assumed office he refused to give to these men the miserable pittance of $30 or $40 a year annual increase ? Is that the way he was showing his touching regard for the working classes? Was that the record which he was establishing for himself that he might be appointed Minister of Labour for the Dominion of Canada, forsooth ? The hon. gentleman has been petitioned by the letter-carriers in almost every centre, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, for an increase of wages. It has been pointed out to him again and again by deputations which have waited upon him and in communications which have been sent to him that the cost of living has substantially increased in the cities where these men are employed, and that the struggle to make both ends meet is much keener than it was eighteen or twenty years ago. He has been petitioned again and again and it has been pointed out to him that it is a very difficult matter for men earning $600 a year to make both ends meet. When the Postmaster General, having these facts before him, gets up in this committee and states that he has improved the position of the men who were receiving the maximum under the old regime he makes a statement that he will find it very difficult to prove. I challenge him to make good that statement and to prove that the position of the men who were receiving the maximum salary under the old regime has been improved in any way by the amendment which he has made to the Post Office law. He has made an amendment in regard to the conditions under which a man can attain to the maximum salary of a letter-carrier but the legislation which he has had passed applies only to men appointed since he came into office. When the hon. gentleman admits that only fifteen men in the entire Dominion receiving the maximum of the old class have taken advantage of the new legislation, I think he has given up the whole case. I ask the hon. gentleman to give us the facts now in regard to the position of the men under the old regime as far as superannuation is concerned, and to give us the facts as far as the men are concerned, appointed since the Civil Service Act was amended. If he will give us that information we will be able to make a comparison as to the position of the men under the old administration and under the new.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman asks me a number of questions and I am desirous of answering them all. If I have omitted anything I hope he will be good enough to remind me of the facts.

Mr. CLARKE. Give us the facts.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will allow me to have the floor, and even if my information is distasteful to him perhaps he will allow me to give it to him. I understand him to be desirous of knowing how those who were at the maximum, when they were transferred, have been treated and whether or not they have gained financially by electing to come from the old system to the new. There were fifteen men at the maximum when they were transferred. They are as follows :—

| Name. | Salary when transferred. | Paid under new law, | Bonus |
|---|---|---|---|
| | $ cts. | $ cts. | $ cts. |
| William McFarlane..... | 600 00 | 704 25 | 20 00 |
| B. W. Baskerville, Hamilton P.O..... | 600 00 | 704 25 | 20 00 |
| A. C. Blake..... | 600 00 | 704 25 | 20 00 |

Running down the list I find that all the men whose names I will read under the old law only received $600 and that under this new law they received $704.25 annually and are entitled to $20, which they will receive at the close of the fiscal year, showing that each one has gained $124.25 under the new law more than he would have gained under the old law. One hundred and twenty-four dollars added is an increase of twenty per cent on $600. The men know the difference between $724 that they get under the Liberal administration and the $600 that they got under the former administration. They quite understand that and more of them are anxious to come in under it. The hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Clarke) forgets that already there has been a Bill passed through this House to greatly improve the status of the letter-carriers. I stated when the Bill was going through, and I state again that the provisions of the Bill which has passed this House increasing the salary of the letter-carriers apply to every letter-carrier in Canada, no matter when he was appointed, and I am at a loss to understand what the hon. gentleman means when he says that that measure only applies to the letter-carriers appointed by the Liberal administration. The Bill passed last session was open to every letter-carrier in the service. No matter when he was appointed he was eligible to come in under it if he chose. It was optional with him, and I may say that 195 letter-carriers have availed themselves of the privilege, and of the 195 letter-carriers 71 were appointed by the administration prior to the present government took office. What does the hon. gentleman mean by saying that there were only 15 that have had any benefits conferred upon them under the provisions of the present Bill which has received the sanction of this House. I did not receive any assistance from the hon. gentleman in securing its passage. On the other hand, I received some unfriendly criticism such as I am receiving to-night, and the letter-carriers will understand the difference between the substantial advantages I am giving them and the hollow pretentions they have received from the hon. gentleman. Under the Bill which has passed this House this session I have practically arranged for an increase of $78 to every letter-carrier in Canada and if every letter-carrier chooses to come under this new law as he may, and by good conduct reach the maximum of $2.25 a day, he will be eligible to receive in all, in cash, $724 a year. In addition to that he has some perquisites. He is given uniforms annually worth $40 or $50, he is given two weeks clear leave of absence with full pay, he has considerations extended to him on certain holidays and his period of service per day does not exceed eight hours. Now, I say to this House, and I say it generally, that the status of the letter-carrier in Canada under this new Bill now before the Senate is a reasonable compensation and will secure to him as high pay as is earned by the average wage earner of this country. If the hon. gentleman himself is an employer of men I will ask him if his employees fare any better at his hands than the letter-carriers whose case is under the consideration of the committee. Perhaps the hon. gentleman could give me that information.

Mr. CLARKE. I will ask the hon. gentleman as to the payment he gives his employees first.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I try to treat them well.

Mr. CLARKE. Perhaps he could give us a list of the salaries he pays to his own help.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. If the hon. gentleman still desires——

Mr. CLARKE. We want an answer about the superannuation fund.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. What is the hon. gentleman's question ?

Mr. CLARKE. I want to know what position the men who were appointed by the hon. gentleman occupy in regard to superannuation and what was the position of the men under the old regime in regard to superannuation.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I speak on this point subject to correction, but I think the first Superannuation Act in Canada was passed by the Mackenzie regime. It underwent certain changes and it continued in force until 1897 or 1898. Another law is taking its place. It was repealed generally as to new appointees, but it applies to old appointees, and those whom my hon. friend (Mr. Clarke) seems to be specially solicitous for are therefore entitled to the benefits of the Superannuation Act. The hon. gentleman has been in the House since the present law was passed and he supported it. Under that law a man contributes to the fund from his salary, and he is allowed 4 per cent on his contributions. If he retires from the service he gets his money which he has paid in with interest, and if he dies his family get the money that had accumulated. Under the former Superannuation Act the letter-carrier contributed to the superannuation fund, and no matter how many years he contributed, if he died in the service his family got nothing whatever.

Mr. CLARKE. When a man retired under the old law after a service of twenty or twenty-five years he received an annuity of a dollar a month for each year of service. How many men were drawing that superannuation allowance when the hon. Postmaster General took office ? The Postmaster General is attempting to draw a comparison between the condition of the letter-carriers under this Bill and their condition under the old law, which comparison is very misleading to say the least. Under the old Act they had their superannuation as stated. That Superannuation Act has been practically done away with, and what he gives to the men now is the accumulation of what he deducts from their salaries and interest added. The fact remains and it is incontrovertible, that the men themselves who know whether they are to be benefited or not, have not as a rule taken advantage of the broad liberal measure which the Postmaster General says he has enacted on their behalf. The best possible evidence that the men are not satisfied with his legislation, and believe it is of no substantial benefit to them, is the fact that only fifteen in the whole Dominion have availed of its provisions. Under the old system a man entered at $360, and he was increased by $30 or $40 a year till he reached the maximum of $600. Under the old system the men were paid during sickness, they got three weeks holidays and they got superannuation when they retired from the service. Under the new system they commence with $1.25 a day, and in four of five years they reach $2, or if they have been placed in grade E afterwards they receive $2.25, but their holidays have been cut down, they receive no pay when they are sick, and when they retire or are dismissed from the service they only get their own contributions into the fund. I want to tell the Postmaster General that those men who came to him again and again would have gladly accepted any reasonable measure of relief, and the fact that they have not accepted the legislation which he has given them is the strongest possible proof that it is of no substantial benefit to them. The hon. gentleman's officials have gone amongst the men and have tried to point out to them the advantages of the new Act as forcibly as they could, but only eight in the Toronto division have taken advantage of it, and only seven others throughout the whole Dominion. These are the strongest proofs that the position of the men who were receiving the maximum salary under the old regime has not been improved by the legislation which the Postmaster General has passed.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Much as I would like to satisfy the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clarke) I am afraid I cannot, but there is a class who will be satisfied and that is the class I am chiefly solicitous for. I refer to those who are going to be benefited by this legislation. I can tell the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clarke) that he will have very little argument to support his statement when the Bill now before the Senate becomes law. He will receive his rebuke from the letter-carriers themselves, because I believe that they will in overwhelming numbers avail themselves of the benefits of this Bill. The law of 1884 was continued during the whole of the Conservative regime and although the hon. gentleman tells us that he had no seat in parliament to protest against it, yet he has always been a power in his party and if he spoke he would have been listened to. I will give the hon. gentleman some figures which will compare the position of the letter-carriers under the present measure with their condition under the old law. Under the old law suppose a letter-carrier entered the service, after they raised the salary to $360, he would have taken nine years to reach the maximum of $600. Under the present Bill, and including those in grade E under the Bill of last session, suppose a letter-carrier entered the service and remained for nine years he would receive in all $5,358, as against $4,520 which he would have received under the law put in operation by the Conservative government. He would have over $1,000 more during the nine years and a fraction under the present law than he would have under the old law, and yet the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clarke) says that this new law has not bettered the letter-carriers. I will leave the conclusion to the letter-carriers themselves, and I think the hon. gentleman will find that next session a great many of the letter-carriers whose case he is pretending to espouse, will have repudiated him by accepting the benefits of this Act. I will admit that there are a few letter-carriers in the Toronto post office who will not come in under this law. There are a few who are known to be dissatisfied and who could not be satisfied; they do not propose to be satisfied; and these are the gentlemen who probably are extending some of their spirit to the hon. gentlemen opposite. But the great majority of the letter-carriers are desirous of this betterment, not only in Toronto but throughout the Dominion, and will accept it gratefully. I do not know what the hon. gentleman means by saying that officers of my department have been going among the letter-carriers trying to persuade them to make the transfer. For six months past it has not been possible for them to transfer, because the time during which they could avail themselves of the privilege expired, I think, last December. Since then there has been no legal authority for a letter carrier to transfer himself to the new system, and therefore it is rubbish to say that any superior officers have been endeavouring to persuade them to do what it was not legally possibly for them to do. The hon. gentleman asks why I am extending this system? Because many of the men have asked me to do so. Probably some bad advisers have got amongst them and persuaded some of them to remain in a discontented state; but they are learning better; they are learning who their true friends are; and the hon. gentleman may find in another year that he has few friends among the letter-carriers of Toronto.

Mr. CLARKE. I am perfectly satisfied to stand all the contumely and abuse which the hon. gentleman heaps on me, because if I sit in this House in another year and he is also here, unless I am grossly deceived, I am satisfied, notwithstanding all the persuasive eloquence of the hon. gentleman and all the inducements his officers hold out to the letter-carriers to come under this Act, the great majority of them will refuse to do so, because they know and believe that their positions would be in no way improved, but rather the reverse, if they took advantage of this legislation, which is offered to them as a substitute for the increases which they were promised two or three years ago.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. What promise was made? Who promised? I would like the hon. gentleman to make good that statement.

Mr. CLARKE. I will make it good. When was the hon. gentleman in Australia?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. In 1901.

Mr. HEYD. It is not a desirable thing that the people of Canada should be under the impression that the men who are discharging the arduous duties of letter-carriers are being under paid; and therefore it would be just as well to revert to the positions these men now occupy in order to get at the facts of the case. Under the old law it would take nine years for a man to get the maximum salary of $600. The first year he would get $360. Under the present law he gets $469, or an increase of $109 a year. After one year's service under the old law he got $390 ; under the present law he gets $469, or an increase of $79. In the third year he gets an increase of $127, in the fourth year an increase of $97, in the fifth year an increase of $146, and in the sixth year an increase of $116 per year. My hon. friend opposite (Mr. Clarke) who has just spoken said that the men who were employed previous to the advent of the present government do not derive any benefit from the present law. Now, all the letter-carriers appointed previous to 1896, who were six years in the service, got an increase from $510 to $626 a year, or an increase of $116. Men who were seven years in the service got an increase of $86 a year. Those who were eight years in the service got an increase of $56, and those who were nine years in the service got an increase of $26 a year, or a salary of $626 a year ; and I figure that the actual benefit of a letter-carrier who served nine years in the service under the new rate amounts to an increase of $1,000. Although he does not stand quite so well in respect to superannuation, a man whose wages have been increased to $1,000 in nine years has a fund in reserve much larger than he could hope to receive from the superannuation fund. The only important question to consider here is whether a man getting $626 a year is well paid for his services. We must take into consideration the character and quality of the men who carry on the business of letter-carriers. I do not want to say a word against the characters of the men ; but the qualification necessary to a successful letter-carrier are simply physical strength and the ability to read the address on a letter. That class of men are not scarce. In the ordinary avocations of life they would regard themselves as receiving a princely salary were they getting $626 a year, especially when we consider that the time they labour amounts to a little over eight hours per day. Now, I am quite satisfied that there is not an employer of labour in this House who is paying labouring men more than $2 per day. The position of a letter-carrier is such that when a vacancy occurs a hundred men are after it. They are willing to leave their jobs as moulders, machinists, brick-layers, carpenters or any of the ordinary avocations of life. They are willing to drop the trowel at once and become letter-carriers at $626, a year, with two weeks holidays, two suits of clothes, and shoes, amounting to $40 a year more. I asked a motorman to-day what wages he was getting. He said $1.65 for ten hours labour. The letter-carriers get $2 a day and work two hours a day less, and do work requiring no higher degree of intelligence than the motorman. Considering this service fairly, I think that a letter-carrier who is getting $2 a day is getting as much money as he could hope to obtain in any other walk of life requiring no greater degree of intelligence and training. He does not require to put in five or six years as an apprentice. He starts out at once at a good salary, which increases each year until in four years he gets $626 a year, his clothing and his boots, so long as he behaves himself and is able to discharge his duties. I am, of course, in touch with the letter-carriers, because since I have represented South Brant, we have established the free delivery system in the city of Brantford, and I know how anxious men are to get the position of letter-carrier. They are willing to go to any extreme to obtain it. I have had over eighty applications for six places. It is not a good thing to instil into the minds of our working classes the idea that a letter-carrier who is getting $626 a year is not well paid. It is a little discouraging to the men in the factories who are working ten hours at the most arduous toil for $1.50 a day. If we consider the circumstances fairly and dispassionately, I think we shall come to the conclusion that these men are well paid. There are none who have a right to complain unless those who are getting $626 a year, and we have a right to ask ourselves, is their complaint well founded ? Is $626 a year not enough ? What employer of labour in this House to-day can say that he is paying men over $2 a day who do not require any more training or education than the letter-carriers ? I have very grave doubts that any man in this House, who is an employer of labour of that class, is paying the wages paid by Canada to-day. I am glad that Canada is setting a good example to the employers of labour. I believe that the class who labour with their hands are entitled to be well paid, but I believe that $2 per day is fair pay for a letter-carrier.

Mr. CLARKE. The hon. Postmaster General challenges the accuracy of the statement I made respecting a promise given these letter-carriers, some two or three years ago, of an increase in their salaries. If the hon. gentleman will take the 2nd Vol. of 'Hansard,' 1901, p. 5793, he will find the following record of the promise to which I have referred :

Mr. BIRKETT. Yesterday I placed a resolution on the Order paper, asking the attention of the acting Postmaster General to the increase of salaries which, he admitted, he intended giving the letter-carriers. I was one of the deputation that waited on the hon. the Postmaster General a day or two before he left, and he assured the deputation that the gentleman he was leaving in charge of his department would see that the matter was carried through. Several deputations have since waited on the acting minister, and I think it would be a gracious act on his part to carry out the promise made by the Postmaster General. The letter-carriers are a very deserving class of men and certainly have presented a case that is well worthy of consideration.

Hon. Mr. SUTHERLAND. My hon. colleague, the Postmaster General, had taken the matter into consideration before he left, and had practically devised a scheme by which these men would be given an increase. I had two or three deputations of the letter-carriers wait on me. There was some difference of opinion as to the best plan to be adopted, and after full consideration I concluded it was best to allow it to stand over until next session. I think that the letter-carriers themselves were pretty well satisfied also to have the question remain over. While I am not in a position to say what will be done, I can assure my hon. friend that the Postmaster General and the government are favourable to an increase, and that a plan will be adopted which will, I trust, meet the views of the letter-carriers and the House generally.

Mr. CLARKE. I understand, from what the acting Postmaster General has said, that a plan had been drafted and that that plan had been submitted to the carriers themselves, who waited on the acting minister, and that the reason it was not put into effect is because there was difference of opinion among the letter-carriers as to the best method of carrying it into effect. Is that correct ?

Hon. Mr. SUTHERLAND. Not quite. We discussed different plans, and after full consideration it was thought better to leave the matter stand over until next session. It was late in the session and there was a great deal to do. And I think that the letter-carriers themselves were satisfied that it would be in their interest to let the matter stand until next session.

I think that is pretty strong evidence that a pledge was given the letter-carriers by the gentleman who was acting for the Postmaster General, which pledge was no doubt made with his approval. That is the justification I had for making the statement I did.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman has read from 'Hansard' some observations made in the discussion arising out of a question put by the senior member for Ottawa (Mr. Birkett). It is true that a deputation waited upon me in the department in the spring of 1901. A number of members were present, including my hon. colleague the Finance Minister, and, if my memory does not deceive me, my hon. friend the leader of the opposition was there also. I was leaving for Australia the next day, and after hearing all that could be advanced, I said that various plans were under consideration, that I had not matured anything definite, but that if I did before I left, I would give the benefit of my views to my hon. colleague the Minister of Finance, who was going to look after the Post Office Department in my absence. I gave him the benefit of my views, but after consideration I wrote him that I thought it would be better to let the matter stand until another year. Accordingly it was allowed to stand until last year, when the government did introduce a measure which has met with the approval of 195 letter-carriers and will doubtless meet with the approval of the very large majority ; and in addition there is another measure before this parliament, which will give them a further increase of $78 a year, or about 12 per cent. All who choose may take advantages of these very substantial advances, but no definite plan was ever announced to any one and nothing definite promised. The first time any definite promise was made was when I introduced a Bill last session, which has been supplemented by another Bill this session.

Mr. CLARKE. Does the hon. gentleman think that this is not a promise : 'While I am not in a position to say what will be done, I can assure my hon. friend the Postmaster General and the government are favourable to an increase.'

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes, and they got it.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I would suggest to the hon. the Postmaster General that if there were locked boxes in the post office in this building, they would be an improvement on the present system.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The post office in the House of Commons is under the control of the Committee on Internal Economy.

Mr. CLARKE. Are many men paid by the department who drive wagons and collect the letters out of the letter-boxes ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The collection by those wagons is done under contract.

Mr. CLARKE. Who are the men who are driving the wagons and emptying the boxes ? Are they officials of the Post Office Department ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. They are sworn officers of the department. They are not paid directly by the department.

Mr. CLARKE. They wear a uniform ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes, we require them to wear a uniform, but they are paid by the contractors. They are not officers of the department directly, but indirectly.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). With regard to salaries paid the mail-clerks, some receive salaries with mileage. I see one man named Sloan, a second-class clerk, received only $2.16 mileage. Can the hon. gentleman explain that ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Mr. Sloan, who is a railway mail clerk, met with an accident. Since then he has not been able to be on the road. This is simply a small balance, I suppose, owing to him up to the time of the accident. We put him into some light work inside.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). The hon. Postmaster General, some years ago, made some arrangement about promoting clerks. A clerk temporarily in the service and desiring a permanent appointment, would have to accept a reduced salary for a time. There were a number of clerks in 1896, when the Postmaster General came into office, who were temporarily appointed.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Appointed under my administration ?

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). No ; the hon. minister took good care that his own friends were appointed permanently. They were clerks who were employed in the temporary service when the hon. gentleman came into office. Are any of these still temporary clerks ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am informed that at the time this government took office there were a number of temporary employees, railway mail clerks. Under the law, as it was then, if they had been made permanent they would have had to begin at the initial salary of their class. But the law was changed in 1898, and we made them all permanent, giving them the salary they were receiving at the time of their permanent appointment.

Mr. BELCOURT. I believe I can say, speaking for a number of my constituents, that the substantial measure of justice that has been given to the letter-carriers and railway mail clerks and other employees of the outside service has been received with a great deal of gratitude on their part. And, no doubt, if an opportunity is afforded, as I hope it will be, they will strongly express their gratitude. While discussing the matter of increases for the mail clerks, the letter-carriers and the outside service of the Post Office Department, I wish to submit to the committee reasons which will be applicable to the Post Office Department, and also to the civil service generally. I crave your permission, Mr. Chairman, to lay before the committee certain figures and statements in connection with the civil service generally which, I think, ought to receive the close attention of the members of this committee. I want to submit to you that the time has come when the salaries of the civil service ought to be increased all round. It seems to me that, owing to the great changes which have taken place in Canada, particularly within the last few years, the time has come when, for the reasons which I shall have the honour to mention, the salaries of the civil service generally ought to be increased. If one examines the work now being done in the various departments, one is struck at once with the fact that the civil servants of to-day are performing a great deal more work and giving a great deal more of their time to the country than they did formerly. There has been a very substantial increase in the quantity of their duties and a change in the nature and extent of those duties. There has been also, as every one knows, a very great increase in the cost of living. I do not know that this increase has been greater in the city that I represent than in any other city in Canada, but I am able to say that it has in larger ratio than in a great many other cities. We have to pay more for rent, wages, fuel, municipal rates, food, clothing—in fact, all the commodities, all the comestibles, have largely increased all over the country, and particulary in the cities. The cost of living to-day, I think, may be said to have increased 35 or 40 per cent over what it was twenty-five or thirty years ago. The wage-earners all over the world are demanding and receiving to-day a much larger wage than they received a few years ago. Mechanics are better paid, farmers get a better return for their labour, the professions receive larger fees, teachers, professors and, I believe, clergymen also, are in receipt of much larger stipends than even a few years ago. These matters are all decided by comparison. If one looks at what has taken place in the banks, the railway companies, the insurance companies, and all the great corporations which do the financial, commercial and industrial work of the community, he finds that the salaries of the principal officers and of all their employees from top to bottom have been very largely increased within the last few years. I wish also to give you some figures which will show how much the increase of salaries is justified, how much, in fact, it is demanded, by the place that Canada now occupies and the attention she is receiving from the world at large, in order to make the stipends paid to our state officials commensurate with the dignity of the nation. I take the year 1873 as a basis of comparison, because that is the time when the rate of salaries in the civil service was fixed ; and it is well to remember that in the thirty years since then there has been no increase in the salaries of the civil service, while every other occupation in Canada has expected and has received a return for its labour increased, in some cases by 50 or 75, or even 100 per cent. In 1873 the total revenue of Canada was $20,000,000; in 1902—and probably it is more in 1903—it was $60,000,000. In 1873 we had 5,000 miles of railway ; to-day the country has 20,000 miles of railway. In 1873, in the Post Offic Department, now presided over by the hon. member for North York (Hon. Sir William Mulock), there were 34,000,000 letters carried ; in 1902 there were 214,000,000 letters carried.

Now if we take the heads of the civil service we find that they were receiving more in 1873 than they are now. They are receiving, the most of them $3,200, some of them, I believe, receive $3,500, and one something over $4,000, the deputy Minister of Railways and Canals. Now these deputy heads of departments have a very much greater responsibility; owing to the circumstances I have mentioned and to many other reasons, their duties have much increased, both in kind, in quantity and importance. They are brought before the public, not only in our own country, but in other countries, in the discharge of their official duties. They have been sent abroad on many occasions to represent the government of Canada, and in fact have great responsibilities cast upon them. They are all the year round responsible for carrying out the policy of the ministers under whom they serve. I say therefore that because of their duties having been so much increased these gentlemen should receive consideration at the hands of this parliament and receive an increase of salary. As I said before, their salaries in 1873 were practically what they are to-day, I say practically, because in one or two, perhaps three instances, the salaries of the deputy heads, instead of being increased in the last thirty years, have been decreased. The Deputy Minister of Public Works in 1870 was in receipt of a salary of $3,500, to-day he is only entitled to $3,200; he cannot get anything beyond that. In 1882, the salaries of three or four deputy ministers were $3,600; they received $3,200 as deputy ministers and an additional sum of $400 as members of the board of civil service commissioners. In 1903, the average salary of the deputy ministers is $3,200. Now if we take the secretaries of departments, what do we find ? I ask my hon. friend from West Toronto (Mr. Clarke) to note this. He was complaining that the salaries of some of the officials have been decreased by this government.

Mr. CLARKE. When ?

Mr. BELCOURT. I thought the hon. gentleman said that the Postmaster General had not improved the condition of the letter-carriers.

Mr. CLARKE. That is a different thing from what the hon. gentleman has just stated.

Mr. BELCOURT. It is on the same subject. My argument is not now referring to the letter-carriers, but to another class of the civil service.

Mr. CLARKE. The hon. gentleman must not put words in my mouth that I did not use.

Mr. BELCOURT. If I misunderstood the hon. gentleman I am willing to drop that argument. But am I wrong in understanding that the hon. gentleman said that the Postmaster General had not treated the letter-carriers with the same liberality as they were treated by the former government ?

Mr. CLARKE. Probably the hon. gentleman, being a lawyer, knows how to twist words. He is trying to convey the impression that I said that some of these officials were worse off than they were some years ago. I made no such statement.

Mr. BELCOURT. If the hon. gentleman did not mean that——

Mr. CLARKE. I never said it, and nothing that would give the hon. gentleman cause for suggesting it.

Mr. BELCOURT. Well, did my hon. friend go so far as to say that the Postmaster General has not improved the condition of the letter-carriers in the outside service of the department ?

Mr. CLARKE. I make the statement that the letter-carriers who were receiving the maximum of the third class when the hon. gentleman came in, $600, have not been benefited by his legislation. That is their opinion as well as mine.

Mr. BELCOURT. My hon. friend is not a lawyer, but he can twist a statement much better than many lawyers.

Mr. CLARKE. I suppose I ought to feel proud at the compliment paid me by a gentleman of the ability of the hon. member for Ottawa. Did I hear the hon. gentleman aecurately in understanding him to say that the cost of living has increased during the past twenty-five years by 35 per cent ?

Mr. BELCOURT. I said that in the last thirty years the cost of living in cities had increased 30 per cent, 35 per cent, and in some cases, 40 per cent. But whether my hon. friend made the statement I credited him with or not, the figures are there to prove that the want of liberality has been the other way. In 1882 the secretaries of departments were receiving $2,800. The secretary had an assistant who was in receipt of $2,000. To-day the maximum salary to which the secretary can aspire is $2,400; whilst in 1878, when the political friends of the hon. member came into power and for a few years thereafter, they were receiving $2,800, that is, $400 more. I cannot exactly remember the date, but I think that was changed in 1889 or 1900, by the Conservative government, when $400 was taken away from the secretary of the department and the post of assistant secretary was abolished. The secretary is now replaced by a chief clerk whose salary is $1,850. That was the work of a government which the hon. gentleman supported. Then the accountant of the department in those days was receiving $2,800, and had a cashier at $2,200, and an assistant accountant at $2,200. To-day the maximum of the accountant is $2,400, as against $2,200. Both the cashier and the assistant accountant have been abolished and replaced by clerks whose salary only reaches $1,800. The accountant to-day is only in receipt of $2,000. The chief superintendent of the savings bank received, in 1882, $2,700, and the assistant was paid $1,775. The highest the superintendent can now attain is $2,400, with no assistant. The salary of the present superintendent is about $1,900, $800 less than in 1882. Certainly some of the figures show that the Liberals have been more generous than their predecessors in the treatment of the officials. Again I repeat that these are relative questions which are decided by means of comparisons, and I think it is by looking at the figures in the various departments that we can arrive at a correct judgment as to whether the civil servants to-day are in receipt of the salaries to which they are entitled by reason of their services and by reason of the conditions which I have described. Take the Post Office Department. We find that in 1896, the year in which there was a change of government, there were employed in the Post Office Department 254 clerks, of whom 198 were permanent and fifty-six temporary. The revenue in that year was $4,005,890. In 1902, with a revenue of $5,128,118, there were 279 employed in the Post Office Department of whom 208 were permanent and seventy-one temporary. It will be seen at once that with a revenue of $1,250,000 less than what it is now there were only twenty-five employees less in the Post Office Department, or to put it the other way, with a revenue of $4,000,000, we had 254 clerks while with a revenue of $5,250,000, we have 279 clerks, or an increase of only twenty-five in six years.

Mr. CLARKE. What does that prove ?

Mr. BELCOURT. That proves that the civil service to-day are doing much more work than they were doing during the period of the former government.

Mr. CLARKE. Does that apply to letter-carriers ?

Mr. BELCOURT. No, I did not pretend to say that it did. I am speaking of the civil service generally. I am not dealing with the letter-carriers. I thought my hon. friend had enough of the letter-carriers.

Mr. CLARKE. I thought it would include them. I thought the hon. gentleman was harping back to them.

Mr. BELCOURT. Since 1896 the Post office Department has established a branch known as the postal note branch and to man that fifteen clerks were taken from the departmental staff. Since then five clerks were added to the staff of the branch. The point which I have been endeavouring to make and which must be plain to my hon. friend (Mr. Clarke), who generally follows a discussion with such keen interest as not to miss the point, is that we have now only twenty-five employees more in the Post Office Department, while one-fifth more work is being done. I am not dealing with letter-carriers, but with the post office inside service. If we look outside of Canada at the other British colonies, and I think this is a fair test to apply in matters of this kind, what do we find ? We find in three of the British colonies the figures of which I have looked at, the following results : In New South Wales, with a population of 1,356,000, the deputy heads have an average salary of $4,800 each ; in Victoria, with a population of 1,163,000, the deputy heads have a salary of $4,252, and in Cape Colony, with a population of 1,527,000, the deputy heads have a salary of $4,742, whilst in Canada, with a population of 6,000,000, the average salary of a deputy minister is $3,200.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Why does the government not increase the salary ?

Mr. BELCOURT. That is what I want them to do. I submit the time has come, when, notwithstanding the fact that a number of people throughout the community believe that the civil servants are already well enough paid, we must really consider the matter. We must remember what I said before, that this rate of salary has not been touched for thirty years. While speaking of the civil servants, I want to refer also to a matter which has very often worried me not only here, but abroad. For instance, when in England or in France or United States, I was asked the question what the salary of our Prime Minister was and what the salaries of our other ministers were and what the salaries of our judges were, I confess I felt a deal of shame when I had to admit that the Prime Minister of Canada was paid the paltry sum of $8,000, that the salaries of the other ministers were $7,000, and that the salaries of our judges were $5,000. There is not one single British colony which pays its officers as little as we pay. I had hoped the time would come when parliament, for the sake of its dignity, for the sake of Canada, and for the sake of the place it occupies in the eyes of the world, would have thought it proper of its own motion to have increased the salary of the Prime Minister of the country to such a substantial sum as would not cause shame to any of us when asked what the salary of the Prime Minister was. I think these remarks apply not only to the Prime Minister, but to the other ministers also. They apply to the judges and I hope also, when the House considers this question, it will consider the propriety of affording the leader of the opposition, who sacrifices his time, his profession and his dearest interests, some recognition of the claims which he has upon the country. I say the time has come when, because of the changed conditions in the country, because of the greater duties which the civil servants have to perform, because of the increased cost of living, because of the greater demands in money matters which are made upon them and in the face of the great prosperity which exists, in face of the higher salaries which are being paid to managers and the employees of the greater corporations, we must meet the question fairly and squarely and afford our civil servants and the servants of the state a remuneration which is commensurate with their services, commensurate with their requirements and commensurate with the dignity, honour and position which Canada now occupies in the eyes of the world.

Mr. CLANCY. I am sure the committee will be somewhat gratified at the admirable election speech which the hon. gentleman has just made. It is quite easy to see that we now seem to be on the brink of a general election. That hon. gentleman has been moved to tears almost over the civil servants in Ottawa.

Mr. BELCOURT. I have almost every session, since I have been in this House, on some occasion or other when there was not an election in sight, said something on behalf of my constituents, including the members of the civil service.

Mr. CLANCY. As occasion arose evening after evening in this House when the government were endeavouring to make a name for themselves by depriving those gentlemen who were the hon. gentlemen's constituents of their statutory increases, I heard no strong appeals from him.

Mr. BELCOURT. The hon. gentleman could not have been in the House then, because I did appeal on two or three occasions.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman says he did appeal on two or three occasions out of several thousands that have happened since I have had the honour of being a member of this House. Does not the hon. gentleman think it would be a little more becoming on his part first to advocate the payment by the government of the back salary due to these civil servants and to letter-carriers as my hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Clarke) suggests ? I venture to say that if there was a vote of condemnation proposed in this House against the government for having unfairly retained the pay of civil servants, the government would be perfectly sure of the hon. gentleman's support. The voice of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Belcourt) should have been heard long ago in this House demanding that justice be done to the civil servants by having the back pay that is due them returned. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Belcourt) advocates an increase in the salaries of the ministers and the judges. It is currently reported that the hon. gentleman is a candidate for both positions.

Mr. BELCOURT. I deny that.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman is not particular whether the minister's salaries or the judges' salaries are increased, because he expects to be either one or the other, and in the meantime if his hopes are shattered he expects to make himself safe with the voters of Ottawa by advocating an increase in the pay of civil servants. But the Postmaster General was either asleep or intently reading while the member for Ottawa was speaking, and so the Postmaster General was entirely oblivious to his appeals. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Belcourt) remarked that many people in Canada thought that the civil servants were well enough paid, if not overpaid. Let me tell the hon. gentleman (Mr. Belcourt) that his political friends made it a campaign cry against the Conservative party that the members of the civil service were overpaid and under worked, and if the impression which he speaks of, prevails in the country then it is due to the efforts of his party friends that that impression prevails. I do not know whether the deputy heads receive too much or too little, but, I say that any official that has not the maximum of his class is entitled by law and contract to get his annual increase, and it is nothing to the credit of the government that these increases have been stopped. Let me appeal to the Postmaster General on behalf of the rural postmasters of this country who are undoubtedly underpaid. It may be that he can get others to discharge the service for the same pay, and it may be that under our system we cannot give them full and fair remuneration, but he certainly should make some effort to place their pay on a fairly reasonable basis. I wish to ask the Postmaster General if it is his intention at the present session to make increases all around in the pay of the country postmasters.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The postmasters are being paid to-day according to the same scale that was in force when we took office. If it should be decided at any time to alter that scale they will at once be notified. I stated in committee on Friday night—and I assume my hon. friend was not present—that legislation is not necessary to increase the salaries of postmasters other than those postmasters who are on the civil service list. Under the Post Office Act it remains with the Postmaster General to increase the salaries of the others so that legislation is not necessary.

Mr. CLANCY. I am as wise now as I was before. I did not ask the Postmaster General what the scale formerly was. We have been told by his supporter (Mr. Belcourt) that the cost of living has increased from 30 to 40 per cent and the Postmaster General evidently pays no attention to that statement.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I heard my hon. friend (Mr. Belcourt) say that that increase extended over 30 years. Perhaps the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) can tell for what portion of that 30 years the Conservative government is responsible that they would not increase the salaries of the postmasters on account of the increased cost of living.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Belcourt) has been in the House for seven years and he never made the discovery until recently that the cost of living had so much increased. The Postmaster General has been seven years at the head of his department and he has not been able to make up his mind yet as to whether the postmasters are paid too low salaries or not. He tells us that they will be notified when their salaries will be increased. I do not think the Postmaster General weighed his words when he said that. Did he think he was enlightening the House with such a statement? He ought to be able to state from his seat as a minister whether he thinks the postmasters are sufficiently paid, and if they are not sufficiently paid that he will increase their salaries. I was not here the other evening, but I am told that the Postmaster General boasted that notwithstanding that the rate of postage had been materially reduced the revenue had gone up on account of the increased business.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I did not allude to it.

Mr. CLANCY. Perhaps I was misinformed as to that. The hon. gentleman would scarcely deny that he has said over and over again in the country that there had been a material reduction in the burdens of the people and a very substantial increase in the revenue. I do not know whether he is now prepared to recede from that position and admit that it is not the case. The hon. gentleman knows perfectly well that the burdens on the people are greater now than they were in the matter of postage. The hon. gentleman, it is true, decreased the letter postage from three cents to two cents, but he has increased the postage on the other classes of second, third and fourth class matter, in some respects 100 per cent; and he has put this increased burden upon the class who are least able to bear it. Who are the people who, after all, benefit by the reduction in the postage from three to two cents? It is not the taxpayer generally, but it is a few persons in the great business centres. Who are the class who make up for that? The men who scarcely write two letters a year, but who use the mails to carry parcels of every description. I will give the hon. gentleman some instances of his splendid reductions and of the ways he has lightened the burdens of the people. Formerly newspapers were free for all distances in Canada; now they are free only within a radius of twenty miles. Newspapers and periodicals posted at a place other than the place of publication were charged one cent for four ounces; now the hon. gentleman has them at one cent for two ounces, or an increase of 100 per cent. Newspapers, single copies, weighing not more than one ounce, were formerly charged half a cent each; now they are charged one cent. Books, printed, of instruction, music, drawings, and other such books, were charged one cent for four ounces; this has been increased to one cent for two ounces, or an increase of 100 per cent. Pamphlets, circulars, handbills, packages of seeds, plants, grafts and similar mail matter, were charged one cent for four ounces; the postage is now one cent for two ounces, or an increase of 100 per cent. On maps, printing, drawings, lithographs, photographs, sheet music, deeds, wills, mortgages, chattel mortgages, insurance policies, voters' lists, assessment rolls, municipal returns, patterns, samples of merchandise, of which there are thousands pass through the mails daily, the hon. gentleman found the postage at one cent for two ounces, and doubled that by charging two cents for four ounces, this being the minimum on which the charge is made, which is an increase of 100 per cent. I might continue the list, but I have given the classes of mail matter on which the hon. gentleman has doubled up the rates. Then take the trade that is going on through the mails. The poorer classes of the people, from Halifax on one side to Vancouver on the other, go to the large cities of the province of Ontario, and some to Montreal, and pay this rate of postage on parcels of merchandise sent from these places to persons who use the mails for the purpose of getting these goods. The hon. gentleman has been able to take the burden of postage largely from one class of people and lay it on another class who do not use the mails except from dire necessity. These are fair samples of what a public benefactor the hon. gentleman has proved himself to be. He has starved the service in a most scandalous manner. Now, Sir, there was formerly a fair growth of post offices in this country during a period of great depression. I am going to call the hon. gentleman's attention to the number of post offices and the service he is giving the people during the period of expansion which we have been enjoying for some years. The number of post offices in existence in 1890 was 7,913; the number in existence in 1896 was 9,103, an increase in six years of 1,190. That was during a period of very great depression, when the necessities of the country did not demand the increase that they did at a later date, when you would expect at least a corresponding increase. Now, what has been the hon. gentleman's record? In 1902 the number of post offices was 9,958, or an increase of 855, as against an increase of 1,190 for the same period previously. How does the hon. gentleman account for that discrepancy? Does he mean to say that the people were so well supplied with post offices by the former government that he did not need to increase the number? But I am told that it is almost impossible to wring a new post office from the hon. gentleman. He is always frightened that it will interfere with his revenue—with his surplus, as an hon. friend suggests. He would be very flattered to be told that he has a surplus; but he has not a surplus. If the hon. gentleman is able to give the country a good service and to show a better balance on the credit side than has been shown in former years, he only does it to the extent to which he starves the service. But with the country growing as it is at present, and with the immense territory of which Canada is made up, no Postmaster General can give a good service and at the same time show a credit balance. So the hon. gentleman has been driven to the rather discreditable device of concealing his accounts by showing to the public only a portion of the service. The hon. gentleman did that no doubt with the avowed object of showing how he had made the two sides of the ledger balance. Speaking for myself, I do not think this House or this country would expect any apology from the hon. gentleman, so long as he gave the country a good service, whether it paid its way or not. He has taken it off one class and put it on another, and to-day the public are paying more postage than before. The rate in 1896 was 93 cents per head, and to-day it is 96 cents per head, after all this pretended reduction. I know of no more conclusive evidence to show the fraud which the hon. gentleman is perpetrating on the people when pretending that he is lessening their burdens.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Before this item passes I would like the hon. minister to explain how it happens that Mr. A. D. Mallon, who collected the letters from the boxes in the town of Lindsay was retired from his position ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. None of my officers are able to furnish me with this information to-night, but I will have the information for my hon. friend at a later period.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Will the hon. gentleman be good enough to bring down the letter which Mr. Mallon wrote him ? Mr. Mallon declined to support the Liberal candidate at the last election. He had previously been a faithful Liberal supporter, but for some reason or other he declined to support the Liberal candidate in 1900, and was forthwith dismissed. Can the hon. minister refresh his memory as to a conversation he had with this letter-carrier in which he promised to give him a permanency ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not remember ever having seen the gentleman in my life, much less ever having had a conversation with him.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Nothing about putting his arms around his neck and saying he would make him permanent.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I never made any such statement.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). That you remember of ?

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cardwell). The first session I was here I asked the hon. Postmaster General to do something, if possible, for the country post office keepers, and he promised he would try. The salaries of these men amount to from $15 to $20 and even less. In fact the neighbours, who get their letters in these little offices, have to club together and pay fifty cents or $1 apiece in order to get the postmasters to keep the offices. I have listened to a great deal of information about the arrangements made for the benefit of the letter-carriers in the cities and towns and also for improving the positions of the postmasters there, who have their caretakers and are supplied with light and fuel, but I have yet to hear of anything being done for the poor country postmasters, who have to keep longer hours than do the men in the cities and towns, and who are not paid enough to heat their little offices. It is pretty hard that a country post office has to be run at a loss because the government will not supply the postmaster with sufficient wage to pay his running expenses. Were it not for the contributions of the neighbours, many of these post offices would have to be closed. The hon. gentleman has boasted of having given us a 2-cent rate, but that has had the effect of reducing the revenue in the country post offices and consequently of reducing the emoluments of the postmasters, so that the change is altogether against their interests. Three years ago the hon. gentleman asked me what I wished to have done and what suggestion I could make that would enable these men to be better paid and not run the department into debt. I made a suggestion, which I think a reasonable one, that in the cities and towns, where postmasters are paid $1,600 $1,700 a year and are furnished with fuel, light and a caretaker, they might be made to do with less and our country postmasters in the rural districts, even if it be only farmers who are served, the sum of $50 each for taking care of their little offices. If the hon. gentleman cannot do otherwise, let him take the money off the cities and add it to the rural districts.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Let me first inform the hon. gentleman that the reduction in the rate of postage has in no case led to any reduction in the salaries of the postmasters. When that reduction took place instructions were issued that there was to be no reduction in the salaries of the postmasters, even if the revenue should be reduced. The hon. gentleman suggests that there should be an increase of $50 to each country postmaster——

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cardwell). Not an increase, but that at least $50 be paid to each.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. A minimum of $50. That is not a new question. This same question has come up periodically for the last forty years. I heard it a great many times when I was on the other side, and the answer given then was what I must give my hon. friend now. Those small offices, to which my hon. friend alludes, are not such as can be expected to supply a living to the incumbents. They are established merely to suit the convenience of groups of people. In fact, wherever there are a dozen people in a district, a post office is given them, even if it is within a short distance of an adjoining post office. It is a rare thing to refuse to establish a post office because of its close proximity to another, say within a mile or two. If the immediate neighbourhood desires it, the post office is given, but the result of the multiplication of these offices must be to diminish the revenue of each. The policy of multiplying these offices is a good one because it adds greatly to the conveniences of the people, and the postmasters enjoy some advantages besides the pay. For instance, they have the special advantage of getting their mail brought to their house, and I do not suppose that the salary can be considered as any remuneration. The salaries were not fixed by me, but are such as I found them fixed by my predecessors and confirmed by long usage. As to whether it is possible to increase them by giving each country postmaster $50 a year, that would mean a very considerable increase in our expenditure. It would mean an increase of $35 per year to each country postmaster. The number of increases would be very great. It would be rash for me to estimate the number, but perhaps it would not be out of the way to suppose it would require $100,000 to give an increase of $35 per head to the class of postmasters to whom the hon. gentleman refers. So, while it does not seem much to suggest that an increase of $35 be given to a particular person, yet to give such an increase to all in that class involves a good deal of expenditure. Therefore, the proposition should not be entered upon lightly. The hon. member for Bothwell alluded to the increased rate, and suggested, amongst other things, that the people who purchased newspapers had to pay higher subscription rates because of it. I do not know to what case he alludes, but I myself have not heard of any instance where subscription rates have been increased because of the imposition of postage upon newspapers. But whether increased or not the imposition of rates on newspapers was, I think, justifiable. Parliament thought it was, and so made the increase. The hon. member from Bothwell says the reduction of the letter rate proved a benefit to none except to those in industrial centres. I do not admit the soundness of that proposition. Every man, be he a resident of an industrial centre or of a rural district, and no matter what be his walk of life, if he uses the post office at all, then to the extent that he uses it, he is benefited. The advantage of the lower rates of the letter postage are rateably distributed among the population in proportion as they make use of the post office. I doubt very much if the great mass of the people of Canada, would if they could, return to the old rate. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) has a policy of that kind, if he would like to go back to the former rate, and would test the opinion of the House, we could have an interesting debate; and, if the majority favour the return to the three cent rate, that rate will come into effect, and the hon. gentleman will be able to feel that he has rendered a very distinguished service to the people in imposing great burdens upon them. The hon. gentleman speaks of increases in the rates in certain third and fourth class matter. The rate on merchandise passing through the post office is the same as when I took office. I have not changed that rate at all. The rate was one cent per ounce then, and it is one cent per ounce now. There were some changes made in some minor matters, the volume of which is very trifling comparatively. Ninety per cent of all the postal revenue is from letters alone, and the postage paid on these extra articles of mail matter to which the hon. gentleman alludes are comparatively trifling, so far as any effect on the revenue is concerned. Nevertheless, the present rates are as low as they are in any place in the world. They are the same as those charged in the United States; and, I think that the Canadian rates on the classes of matter to which the hon. gentleman refers, are as low as in England, although our area is so much greater.

Mr. CLANCY. If the hon. minister will turn to his own report and compare it with the postal guides of 1896, he will find that the statement I have made is absolutely correct. Take, for instance, the first item here. 'Books printed, books of instruction, music books, drawing books,' were one cent for four ounces, they are now one cent for two ounces. Is that a correct statement ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That is the rate throughout the United States.

Mr. CLANCY. That is not the question I asked.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. What is the hon. gentleman's question ?

Mr. CLANCY. I will read it again. 'Printed books, books of instruction, music books and drawing books,' formerly one cent for four ounces, now one cent for two ounces. Will the hon. gentleman deny that ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I will let the hon. gentleman finish his piece——

Mr. CLANCY. I have asked the hon. minister a question in a courteous way. He said he did not increase the rates——

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No. I did not make any such an observation.

Mr. CLANCY. Well, we will take the next item. 'Single copies of newspapers, weighing not more than one ounce.' 'When the hon. gentleman came into office these paid one-half cent each; the charge at the present time is one cent each.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There has been no change on single newspapers.

Mr. CLANCY. The change appears in the postal guide and the hon. minister had better not speak from memory. But if the postal guide is not correct the hon. gentleman himself is responsible.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The secretary of the department informs me that there has been no change in the rate on single copies of newspapers since this government came into office.

Mr. CLANCY. Well, whether the change has been made or not, it appears in the postal guide. Now, take 'pamphlets, circulars, seeds and plants,' the rate was one cent for four ounces, the present rate is one cent for two ounces—an increase of one hundred per cent. Then take the large class, 'maps, prints, drawings, lithographs, photographs, sheets of music, deeds, wills, mortgages, chattel mortgages, insurance policies, voters' lists, assessment rolls, municipal returns, patterns, samples of merchandise,' now one cent for two ounces, formerly two cents for four ounces, four ounces being the minimum. This practically doubles the rate. I take this from the guide that the hon. gentleman sent out for the instruction of the people. If he says the guide is wrong I shall have to leave it for him to settle it with his department. But the minister knows perfectly well that that class of matter of which there has been a very large increase, and which is still increasing, has gone up to the extent which I have stated. And I say that by reason of that, the reduction which the hon. gentleman has made to certain classes in this country has fallen on other classes. The hon. gentleman says that all classes are served alike by the reduction in letter postage. But any service of which a man may not be in a position to avail himself cannot be spoken of as a real advantage to him. Nor is the public service a fair one when only half the people can use the service, but all have to pay for it. I would ask the Postmaster General what the workingman has profited generally by this reduction?

I will take the employees in Mr. Eaton's establishment, in his own city, and I will take the establishment itself. Who has profited by the reduction of the postage? Why, that great commercial concern has been saved thousands and thousands of dollars a year, and probably his employees do not write one letter a month. That is the effect of it. The hon. gentleman has laid down a rule that not one man in a hundred can avail himself of. The true rule is that every man should pay for the service he gets. If a majority of the people are unable to avail themselves of it, and you give it to the minority in number, then that is not a fair service to the majority who don't use it, but who are paying for it in favour of the minority. That is the effect of the hon. gentleman's position today. If, on the other hand, the hon. gentleman was able to take off all the postage then it might be fair. But I repeat that the hon. gentleman has not only reduced the postage for the benefit of a few persons in Canada, but he has done what is worse, he has unloaded that reduction on to a class who do not use the mail except perhaps for third and fourth class matter. I am glad to know that the hon. gentleman does not dissent from my statement with regard to the increase in that matter that comes within the third and fourth class.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I may explain to the hon. gentleman, as I did to the House, why the changes were made. When parliament was being asked to change the law, I explained that there were a number of different rates on mail matter, and a great deal of confusion was occasioned because, in many instances, there was difficulty in determining in which class the mail matter ought to fall. In the rapid despatch of business that law could not be really lived up to. In order to simplify the rates we removed many special rates. There were many different rates on different articles, for example lithographs and printed matter were charged differently. I cannot pretend to enter into all the niceties, but there were constant questions arising as to the class to which certain articles belonged. It was not a matter of count. When mail matter is passing through the post one person may think it falls in a certain class and is liable to a certain rate, and attach the necessary stamp upon it: while another postmaster may come to the conclusion that it ought to be rated differently. Then there was trouble. In order to meet the convenience of the public and to facilitate the transacting of business, we did away with these shades of difference by making the classification as it is now. The hon. gentleman says that every man should pay for the service he gets. That is not altogether an unsound proposition. How then would he deal with the case of a man being called upon to pay for a service he does not use? If a man should only pay for the service he gets, that is another way of saying that he should not pay for the service he does not get. The hon. gentleman went on to argue that the poor man had no use for the post office, and yet under the old law the poor man had to pay the burden of the post office. Under the old administration to which we succeeded, there was an annual deficit of three fourths of a million dollars. Who paid that deficit? The hon. gentleman shakes his head. Who paid that deficit ? The poor man had to pay his share of it. The taxes have to be collected from the whole public, and under the system that the hon. gentleman seems to prefer, the poor men were taxed to pay for the mail service of the rich men. Under the present system the poor man has no deficit to pay for, and if he does chose to use the post office, he pays only two cents instead of three as formerly. I believe the poor man prefers to be called upon to pay two cents instead of three; I think he prefers not to pay a share of the three fourths of a million dollars of a deficit in the mail service of Canada. He is not now called upon to pay any such deficit, because there is none. The hon. gentleman knows that, and he must be extremely glad to know it. If the hon. gentleman, however, is desirous of restoring the three cent rate, the opportunity is open to him to present a proposition to this House to that effect. Let him have the courage to commit himself to that view ; instead of skirmishing and harping, let him come out into the open like a man and make a proposition, then let him go back to Bothwell and see how the people there will approve such a retrograde step.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman's friends are taking good care that I shall not go back to Bothwell, because they are taking care that there shall be no such constituency as Bothwell. So his challenge is rather an empty one. Let me tell the hon. gentleman that he has adopted a most extraordinary course of reasoning when he says that the poor man paid the deficit in the past when there was a three cent rate and now he does not pay a deficit under a two cent rate. How does a deficit arise ? By reason of the revenue not being large enough to pay for the service; then there is a greater chance of a deficit. I ask the hon. gentleman, who is so willing to challenge me to take a course that he would not dare to take himself, I ask him to tell this House what he intends to do with regard to the country postmasters. The hon. gentleman knows the answer he gave me. He had less courage then than he now enjoins me to have upon the question. I want to tell the hon. gentleman that we are not supposed to find politices for the government. We have no responsibilities, and when the hon. gentleman throws out his challenges to this side of the House I want to tell him that he is not very courageous. He knows perfectly well that our responsibility is to criticise the conduct of the government, criticise it fairly and honestly, and I hope we have done so. Now the hon. gentleman has declared over and over again that he has a surplus. Does he say now that for the last year ending the 30th of June, 1902, there was a surplus in his department, considering all the services throughout the Dominion ? Does he say that ? I will venture to say that the hon. gentleman will not say so; while he says in an off-hand way, rolling it out, that there was a surplus and I knew it. The hon. gentleman did some juggling. I will venture to say that if the Yukon paid its way and a little more the hon. gentleman would include it. But, if the hon. gentleman finds there is any part in the service that is not paying its way he side-tracks that and he says : I gave it in my statement, I will exclude that, I will find a surplus, and I am not deceiving the public because I made some mention of that elsewhere. I will ask the hon. gentleman if this is an honourable way of treating the public ? The public will understand the hon. gentleman. The hon. gentleman is anxious for one thing and that is to appear before the country as having been a great reformer in regard to postal matters. His reforms have consisted in starving the postmasters.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. We are paying them as much as they got under the former administration.

Mr. CLANCY. My hon. friend says they got as much under the former government. Does he mean to say that if it should appear to him now that they were not fully paid under the former government, he is relieved from the responsibility of giving them their rights now ? The hon. gentleman is very fond of saying that he has changed matters as he found them under the former government. If that is the case why not change this ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Everything we found was bad.

Mr. CLANCY. Quite so. I think the country is beginning to discover that. To give the reason that the former government, under different conditions, paid the same salaries as are paid now, is to my mind not a fair answer to the question.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Why is it not ?

Mr. CLANCY. I will tell the hon. gentleman why.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes, that would be interesting.

Mr. CLANCY. As the hon. gentleman beside me (Mr. Johnston Cardwell) pointed out a moment ago the duties of postmasters have increased. There are many places where they have to serve other offices. I have a case in my mind where the postmaster getting the same salary that he got when the hon. gentleman came in has certain other post offices to attend to. His office became a distributing point for one or two other places, but he still received the same salary as he did before.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. If there is any distribution work assigned to a man he is paid for it according to a regular scale, and if the hon. gentleman will give me the name of the office to which he alludes, we will see whether there is any distribution work for which the postmaster is not being paid and if there is he will be paid for it. It does not depend upon me. The officers automatically deal with all such cases and they give the postmasters the payment they are entitled to according to the scale provided for distribution work.

Mr. CLANCY. That is not salary.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is in addition to salary.

Mr. CLANCY. I am speaking of the increased duties that are devolving upon postmasters.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Distribution to other offices.

Mr. CLANCY. Quite so, but the hon. gentleman knows perfectly well that he must be there to take these mails and that by reason of the increased duties devolving upon him the increased sum paid him for distribution is not a fair compensation for the additional time he has to give that work by reason of being postmaster.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The rate was in force when he took office.

Mr. CLANCY. The rate may have been too low. The hon. gentleman has been told by a zealous supporter of his own that these are growing times, that prices have increased, that the cost of living is greater and so on. If he pays any attention to it he knows perfectly well that the answer he gives in regard to that being the rate when he came into office is not a fair answer.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cardwell.) I am pleased to know that I will be able to go back and tell the postmasters in my constituency that there is no hope held out by the hon. Postmaster General to them of an increase in their salaries. A few years ago when I spoke to the hon. Postmaster General, he said that he would give the subject his best consideration. He said that he was in favour of an increase and that he advocated it ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I did not say that I advocated it.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cardwell). The hon. Postmaster General at least agreed in effect with what I said. Now, I can go back to the postmasters and tell them that the hon. Postmaster General says there is no relief for them. That is my understanding of the hon. gentleman's position. Notwithstanding that we heard him to-night declare in a braggadocio manner that he was increasing the salaries of the letter-carriers in the towns and cities, he refused to increase the salaries of postmasters in country places. These postmasters have to buy their own wood, they have to provide for themselves and the citizens who have to pay something out of their own pockets to get their papers. Yet, the Postmaster General says there is no relief for them. Is that what I shall tell them, Mr. Postmaster General ? I am in earnest about it. I did tell them that the Postmaster General had said that he would give their case his most serious consideration, that he believed they had a grievance and that he would try to remedy it.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think not.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cardwell). I cannot quote the exact words, but that is the effect of the hon. gentleman's answer given to me a few years ago. I have had letters from some of the postmasters in my constituency asking me if they could not get some more remuneration for keeping the post office in the country, but I must now go back to them and say that the hon. Postmaster General holds no hope to them. They only get $20 for keeping a post office open, and if the stage comes along at seven o'clock in the morning they have to be up to see to the mail and they have to continue, with perhaps some interruption, distributing letters until night. I think their request is a reasonable one and especially in view of the fact that the salaries of the letter-carriers and the salaries of ther officials have been raised. When you talk about the expense of living and the good times that we are having in this country, I think it is only fair that the salaries of these men should be raised to $50 for keeping a country post office. It would not cost any more to raise the salaries of the postmasters of the country to $50 a year, the amount they ask, than it would cost to raise the salaries of the letter-carriers in the cities. Some of the postmasters who are getting $20 would only require to have $30 added to their present salaries to make up the $50. To the salaries of others who are getting more you would have to add less, while, of course, to those who are getting $10 the increase would be greater. In Caledon there is one man getting $20 and there is no other post office nearer than three and a half miles. For two and a half miles around the people come to the post office for their papers and the postmaster is on duty the whole day, handing out papers and only getting $20 a year for it. I leave it to the good sense of the House if it is fair to treat a man in that way.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Would the hon. gentleman give the name of that office ?

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cardwell). It is Sleswick, between Caledon East and Mono Mills. There is another, Blount, in Mono.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have listened with much interest to the remarks of the hon. member for Cardwell (Mr. Johnston). He very rarely trespasses on the time of the House and he always speaks with great earnestness. I tell him with all frankness that I have the greatest respect for any view he may advance to this House, I know he is most conscientious in the presentation of any case. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Johnston) must have misunderstood me if he thought I promised to deal with the subject. I may have expressed myself to the effect that these positions were rather nominal so far as salary goes, because these offices are established to accommodate very small groups of people, and more for the convenience of the neighbourhood than anything else. The postmaster of such an office as the hon. gentleman alludes to does not expect a substantial sum in the sense of salary. A small allowance having no reference to the time or labour involved is all he expects. It does not involve a man devoting himself to the post office ; as a rule it is carried on in a private house and some member of the family is always present. It will never be possible to remunerate people who keep post offices of that kind. For instance, I find from the report of the Postmaster General for the last fiscal year that the revenue of the Sleswick post office was $18.91, and that the postmaster was paid $20. The revenue represented only three letters a day posted at that office and therefore you will see that it serves only a very small group of people. But if it should happen that this post office has to be kept open at unreasonable hours because of the time of the arrival and the departure of the mails, this circumstance might be taken into consideration and the subject dealt with specifically, but it is one thing to deal with special cases and another thing to deal with the question generally. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Johnston) will be good enough to give me the facts connected with that particular case it will be looked into, and if I am not able to accede to his wishes it is not because I have not the greatest respect for anything he may say in this House.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cardwell). I may say to the Postmaster General that a great many farmers get their papers at this post office, and as I said three years ago, Sleswick and other country post offices are great distributing offices but very poor receiving offices, because a great many people go to Mono Mills and Caledon East and Charleston and buy their postage stamps there where they do their business, but they post their letters at Sleswick and consequently the revenue from the latter post office is comparatively very small. But there is a great deal of distributing to be done at the post office and a great deal of work to do. There are a great many other post offices in the same fix, and I hope that the postmaster at Sleswick will get something done for him. As the Postmaster General says some one has to be in the office all the time and there is not a holiday in the year that they can close the post office ; some one has to stay there and miss the enjoyment of the holiday. Anything I can do to aid the postmaster to obtain fair remuneration I will be most willing to do it.

Mr. SCOTT. I do not for a moment seek to minimize the importance of the case which my hon. friend from Cardwell has been urging, but I do not agree with his suggestion that a certain amount should be cut from the pay of the town postmasters, in order to make up to the country postmasters. It is a poor proposition that an injustice should be perpetrated upon one class of the people for the sake of remedying the grievance of another class of the people. I can tell my hon. friend (Mr. Johnston) that so far as western Canada is concerned he is mistaken in thinking that the allowance given to the town postmasters is excessive. Since the commencement of this session the accounting postmasters, including the town postmasters of Manitoba and the North-west Territories, deemed it advisable to go to the expense of sending a delegation to Ottawa to present to the minister the grievances under which they labour. I know of one particular case where an allowance of $14 per month is paid to a town postmaster for rent, fuel, and light, and that postmaster is at present paying $25 per month for the premises he occupies as the post office, and which premises are only half the size that are required for that town. That is at Moosejaw.

Mr. THOMSON (Grey). What is the population ?

Mr. SCOTT. When the census was taken it was 2,000 and probably it would be 3,000 now.

Mr. CLARKE. It is a divisional point.

Mr. SCOTT. It is a railway divisional point, and quite an important place. The revenue from Moosejaw will be as large I suppose as that of a town of 7,000 or 8,000 or even 10,000 population. If the postmaster there was obliged to rent the building now I venture to say that he could not obtain it for less than $40 a month, and yet he is only allowed $14 a month for rental, fuel and light. I rose particularly to ask the Postmaster General if he has yet reached a decision with regard to the petition of the delegation that waited on him during the early weeks of the session to represent the interests of the town postmasters of Manitoba and the North-west Territories. The other day the Postmaster General told us when we were discussing his Bill relating to the increase of salaries of mail clerks, that he would consider certain matters if they were brought to his attention when the estimates were being discussed. I then complained of the insufficiency of the accommodation afforded by the mail cars furnished by the railway companies. I stated that it had been found necessary to put the mails in box cars and that sometimes on a train there would be a box car full of mail matter. As I stated the other day, the work of the mail clerks of the western division is rendered almost impossible.

There is another matter which, while on my feet, I would like to bring to the attention of the hon. Postmaster General. The appeals I have been making have been on behalf of a very limited number of people. I now wish to appeal on behalf of about 75,000 people who are served by the mail service on the Prince Albert branch railway. Last year I brought to the attention of the hon. Postmaster General the service on the Pasqua line, which forms a part of the Minneapolis, St. Paul and Sault Ste. Marie Railway, and I am very pleased to say that since that matter was spoken of a step has been taken in the direction of giving a proper service to the country traversed by that line, by putting a mail car and a mail clerk on the railway. The same kind of service is very urgently required on the Prince Albert branch. At present the service is on the baggage car. There is no mail car and no mail clerk; and when we recollect that that branch serves the whole Saskatchewan district, which two years ago contained 26,000 people and must this year contain 60,000 people, and also a large portion of the district of Assiniboia, and it is not too much to say that 75,000 people are served by that branch line.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cardwell). The hon. gentleman who has just sat down misunderstood me when he said that I recommended that the salaries of postmasters of cities and towns should be cut down. Two years ago I advocated increasing the remuneration of the country postmasters, and the Postmaster General asked me what I would propose. I said that if there was no other way of meeting their requirements, I would even go the length of taking something from the salaries of those who were getting from $1,500 to $2,000 a year and dividing it among the postmasters in little country places. I did not say that that should be done, but I said that if the revenue of the country would not permit it to be done in any other way, I would resort to that.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. member for Western Assiniboia has asked for an improved service on the Prince Albert branch. The comptroller of the mail service informs me that until this year the trains on that branch were only running tri-weekly, and the mails could not be sent more frequently than that. But since there has been a daily train there has been a daily mail service. He informs me that no application has been made for any different service from the one now in existence.

Mr. SCOTT. I must inform the Postmaster General that the comptroller must be mistaken, because months ago I wrote to the department applying for and recommending a mail car and mail clerk on this line.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. To whom did you write ?

Mr. SCOTT. My recollection is that I wrote to the deputy minister, and since the commencement of this session I have had conversations with the comptroller about the matter, and I have again written on one or two occasions to the deputy minister to the same effect. It is quite true, as the Postmaster General states, that this spring the railway company put on a daily train, and a daily mail service has also been put on, for which the department is entitled to due credit. But the baggage car service is not sufficient for the large number of people served by that line.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The deputy informs me that he has not received any communication from the hon. gentleman.

Mr. SCOTT. Then there must be something radically wrong with the mail service, if my letters have not reached the deputy.

Mr. CLARKE. Is this the proper time to ask for information in regard to the disposition of the automobiles which were formerly used for the collection of mail matter from the letter boxes in the city of Toronto, and in regard to the contract which has been let for the collection of this matter, and also in regard to the conveyance of the mail to the station ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The deputy informs me that the automobiles have not been dispensed with, but are still in use. But in some parts of the city they cannot be used owing to the state of the streets. They are used considerably for running between the branches and also between the post offices and the station. A contract was let this spring to a man named Power for collecting the mail matter from the letter boxes. It was let by public tender.

Mr. CLARKE. How many tenders were received ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The deputy thinks four or five.

Mr. CLARKE. Were there advertisements calling for tenders ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE. Mr. Power was the lowest tenderer ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. He was.

Mr. CLARKE. Has the department to supply wagons ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, he is to supply wagons.

Mr. CLARKE. There were no wagons bought by the department ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No.

Mr. McLENNAN. I wish to call the attention of the hon. Postmaster General to the inefficiency of the postal service in the county of Inverness, and to ask him if he has any encouragement to hold out of any improvement in that service ? I would like also to have some explanation of the attempted conversion of a daily service of some fifty miles into a tri-weekly service. The people of Inverness do not feel secure that some official may not take it into his head to dismantle the postal service in that county at any moment.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I will assure my hon. friend at once that I will never take into my head any such idea as that. I will attempt to give the county of Inverness the best service it is possible to give it, having due regard to the interests of the county and of the country generally. I will be able at a later stage to give the hon. gentleman all the information he desires on the subject he refers to. He correctly stated the other evening that I was absent from Canada at the time, and I cannot speak with any personal knowledge of the subject ; but, if I remember rightly, he heard of the proposed dismantling of the service from an officer on a train, and he immediately put himself in communication with the Finance Minister, who looked after his interests in the matter ; so that even if the postal service was insufficient, my hon. friend was fortunate in having the Finance Minister here to look after the interests of the county of Inverness. Although I was absent, I had an efficient colleague who saw that no injustice was done to the county of Inverness, and I can assure my hon. friend that I will be very careful to follow the lead he has set me.

Mr. McLENNAN. I called the attention of the hon. Postmaster General the other evening to the insufficient postal service on the Inverness railway. I also did so last session and he gave me every assurance that he would look into the matter. The service is somewhat akin to that referred to by the hon member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Scott). The mails are only taken on as baggage. They are taken through the county of Inverness, a distance of sixty-one miles, over the Inverness Railway, and through the county of Antigonish on to the Intercolonial Railway, thence through Pictou county until they meet the east bound train for Sydney. The letters are then sorted by the mail clerks on the Intercolonial Railway mail car, taken back, and distributed along the Inverness Railway that evening or the next day. This I am thoroughly aware of and what no explanation of the officials can justify. We have good reason for complaint, and I only hope that the hon. minister will mete out to the people of Inverness the same measure of justice that he has been pleased to give to the people of Assiniboia, in the instance of one railway which passes through that county. With regard to the other railways which go through Assiniboia, the hon. gentleman has promised to give the complaints his attention. All I ask is that the county of Inverness be similarly treated, as are those people who recently came into our western country. The people of Inverness have been residing there a long time, and are at least as much entitled to consideration as are the people who have come from every country in Europe into the Northwest in recent years. Let me also point out to the hon. gentleman that when the post office inspector of Nova Scotia went among the people of Inverness asking for tenders for a tri-weekly service for a distance of fifty miles, where formerly for thirty-five years there was a daily mail service, that matter was not at all so light and unimportant as the hon. the Postmaster General seems to view it, and the people really feel grateful to the hon. Minister of Finance who came to their rescue and will continue to feel under an obligation to him, as I certainly do.

Mr. CLARKE. What is the amount paid for the services rendered by Mr. Powell ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I will have that on the supplementary estimates.

Mr. McLENNAN. The Postmaster General has not stated what he intends doing for the county of Inverness.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. My hon. friend asks me to do as well for the Inverness Railway as I have done for the Prince Albert branch. Well, it is given as good a service as is given on the Prince Albert branch. What the hon. gentleman really wishes is the establishment of a mail car on the railway.

Mr. McLENNAN. Certainly.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That is what the hon. gentleman desires.

Mr. McLENNAN. I desired it last year.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There are many things we desire which we cannot get. The establishment of a railway mail car service is somewhat expensive and cannot always be had. We must have some regard for the cost and the revenue and the district served. There are many places throughout Canada which have not postal car service. It has never been the practice of any government to establish indiscriminate postal car service, but to consider the merits of each application. I was speaking with the comptroller, and he informed me that he has the application of the county of Inverness under consideration. He is the expert officer who advises me with regard to these matters, and I am sure he will be guided by the best interests of the country, and I hope that that will not conflict with the interests of the people of Inverness.

Mr. McGOWAN. Some months ago, on the Wellington, Grey and Bruce branch of the Grand Trunk Railway, a fast train was put on connecting with Guelph and trains for the east, west and south, but there is no mail on that train which comes down in the evening. It would be a great convenience if it were given the mails, as it is one of the fastest trains on the road, and connects at Guelph with all the trains going east, west and south.

The DEPUTY SPEAKER. The discussion of the mail service is not in order on the item before the committee. We had better pass the first item.

Mr. BLAIN. I understood the hon. minister to say that the same allowances are given the country postmasters as were given by the previous government.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I said that we were dealing with them in the same scale. Whatever the scale was when I took office is in force to-day.

Mr. BLAIN. That would leave rather a false impression on the committee. You would naturally suppose that the country postmasters were receiving the same salaries to-day as under the former administration. But the hon. gentleman has told us that the revenue, in a large number of the smaller post offices, is less than it was before, because more post offices have been established, which necessitates a greater division of the revenue among them. That being the case, I suppose it is fair to assume that the average country postmaster is receiving less now than he did under the former administration.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. My officers inform me that that is not correct. There are fluctuations in salaries as there are in revenues, but some salaries are fixed. Where the salary is in proportion to the revenue, that is where it is paid by a commission, there is fluctuation, but there has been no reduction of revenue because of any reduction in the rate of postage.

Mr. McLENNAN. I see that the comptroller of the railway mail service is here, and I wish to call his attention to the fact that the hon. the Postmaster General has reduced the cost of the mail service in the county of Inverness by over $5,000 a year for the last seven years. That would amount to something like $35,000. When the comptroller is called upon to make a report with regard to putting a mail clerk on board that train I hope he will take into consideration the fact that $35,000 has been sweated out of that service in the past seven years.

Mr. BLAIN. I confess that I do not follow the statement made by the hon. Postmaster General with respect to the salaries of country postmasters. I am anxious to get the information and have no other object. Am I to understand that the salaries of postmasters do not increase with the revenue of their post offices? Or, if that is not a correct statement, will the hon. gentleman give us an illustration of how the sliding scale he speaks of applies to a country district like his own county?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The scale of payment to the postmasters paid by way of commissions is as follows: 40 per cent upon the gross revenue up to $800, 25 per cent on the excess between $800 and $10,000; 15 per cent on the excess over $10,000.

Mr. BLAIN. If the revenue is $150, do I understand the Postmaster General to say the postmasters receives 40 per cent on that amount?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. BLAIN. The hon. gentleman's (Hon. Sir William Mulock) report does not appear to bear that out, as he will see by referring to the case of almost any country post office.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The accountant of the department tells me that that is lived up to.

Mr. BLAIN. Would the hon. minister turn to the case referred to by the hon. member for Cardwell, that of Sleswick.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I except from that, offices where there is a fixed salary. In the case of Sleswick, the postmaster is paid a fixed salary of $20. The gross revenue there is $18. In these small, minor offices, the rule does not apply. Forty per cent on $1 would be only $7.20. Therefore the rule does not apply.

Mr. BLAIN. The hon. minister's statement was misleading, therefore I did not understand him. He makes the statement that up to $800 the postmasters are paid by commission.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I qualified that.

Mr. BLAIN. Then, the fact is that the Postmaster General was not discussing the underpaid postmasters whose cases the committee are trying to understand. Will he tell us what is the policy of the government with regard to the payment of postmasters where the revenue runs from $18 up to $50?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The accountant informs me that where the revenue is $30 or under, the 40 per cent does not apply, because it would give the postmaster less than is desirable; but, above $30 the scale is applied.

Mr. BLAIN. Then, do I understand that if the revenue of the post office is $40 the salary of the postmasters is $16 ? If that statement is correct then the hon. gentleman's report is not correct.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. In the case of a small office, where the salary has been fixed in years gone by, that salary has not been lowered even where the revenue has fallen. Therefore, the hon. gentleman will find many cases of postmasters receiving a fixed sum which is far in excess of 40 per cent of the revenue. These fixed fees have been handed down to us by our predecessors.

Mr. BLAIN. Here is an office the revenue of which is $36, in a country district in the province of Ontario. According to the hon. minister's scale, what payment would the postmaster receive ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. If he is paid by a percentage, it would be 40 per cent of the revenue, and the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blain) can compute that. But, it may be that the salary was fixed at some anterior time and has not been disturbed.

Mr. BLAIN. Then, the hon. gentleman's statement with respect to 40 per cent does not hold good there ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. What is the office ?

Mr. BLAIN. I find it at page 35 of the Postmaster General's Report. Take any of the offices there. The one I was referring to was Dunkeld in the country of Bruce.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The postmaster is paid $20.

Mr. BLAIN. What is the scale of revenue in a case like that ? They vary in every page of this report. The hon. minister must not misunderstand my desire; all I want is to know what the policy of the department is with respect to the payment of postmasters in country districts where the revenue runs from $40 to $150. Is there any fixed policy ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Blain) asks about a case like Dunkeld which has a revenue of $36 and the postmaster is paid $20. The officers of the department explained to me that that $20 was evidently paid some years ago, probably when the revenue was higher. It may have fallen because of some other offices being opened near it, or for some other cause, but the department has not lowered his salary. But if this were an office to be opened in the first instance today, the scale would apply. We do not, however, apply the scale to reduce the salaries which we found in existence.

Mr. BLAIN. Then, the fact is that where a country postmaster received $20 in former days, he receives the same salary now.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That is the rule.

Mr. BLAIN The post office at Dunlop in the county of Gloucester, has a revenue of $34.75. Can the hon. gentleman tell us, according to his scale, what the postmaster would receive in that case ? He says the postmasters are paid a percentage when the revenue is above $30.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. According to the scale it would be 40 per cent.

Mr. BLAIN. The policy of the government is what I want to get at. Where the revenue of the post office is $34.75, what is the policy the hon. gentleman applies to the payment of the postmasters ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have answered that question several times. The policy of the department is to pay the postmaster acording to a certain scale. Where the revenue is small and a fixed allowance is made, the commission system of remuneration does not apply, but in other cases it does apply, and then the postmasters are paid a commission according to the volume of the revenue, subject to the qualification which I made some time ago that we do not, and have not, reduced any salaries based upon a commission where the reduction of revenue was in consequence of a reduction of the rate of postage.

Mr. CLARE. The hon. gentleman says that the postmasters are paid according to the revenue in towns of 2,000 or 3,000 inhabitants. In Ridgetown, where the revenue is $3,496, the salary is $1,000. In Morrisburg, where the revenue is $3,202, the salary is $1,000. It cannot therefore be on a fixed percentage that these two salaries are paid.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The accountant informs me that the amount of salary is based upon the revenue of the preceding year. For example we are now in the month of July, the fiscal year closes the 30th June, in a short time the revenue from the post offices of Canada will be ascertained, and then the department will fix the salaries for the current year according to the revenue up to the 30th of June last. I do not know from what year the hon. gentleman takes his figures.

Mr. CLARE. 1902.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Well, the salary commencing on the first day of July, 1902, was based upon the revenue for the fiscal year that closed on the 30th of June, 1902. So the hon. gentleman will have to take the report of the previous year. The accountant informs me that the same rule applies to all.

Mr. CLARE. Then the revenues of these post offices were a year ago exactly the same, but the figures do not show it. For the information of the Postmaster General,

I will refer to the town of Preston, where the revenue is $3,907, or $700 more than in Morrisburg, and the salary is $950, while in Morrisburg the salary is $1,000. I will take Newmarket, where the revenue of the post office is $3,405, and the salary is $985. At Mount Forest, the revenue is $3,567 and the salary $1,120. I hope the statement of the Postmaster General that the salaries are based upon a percentage will be carried out. But I cannot see how the salaries in Ridgetown and Morrisburg should be exactly the same where the revenues are not the same.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Is the hon. gentleman quoting figures for the present year or the preceding year ?

Mr. CLARE. For the preceding year.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Then the figures are not the figures upon which the salaries at the present moment are based.

Mr. CLARE. When we look at the allowances paid to postmasters, I find that at Morrisburg the salary and allowances are $1,573, where the revenue is $3,200 ; while in Preston, with a revenue of nearly $4,000, the salary and allowances are $1,208.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I cannot to-night explain the figures of the department in regard to these post offices. But the accountant who is present informs me that the rule I have quoted several times is applied. If the hon. gentleman desires any information with regard to revenue of salaries in any office, he will be furnished it, the department will endeavour to satisfy the hon. gentleman. I never interfere with the salaries paid to postmasters. Changes are made automatically by the department, and each postmaster is entitled to his rights, and if he does not get them it is certainly not my fault.

Mr. CLARE. I suppose the Postmaster General will see to it that if the postmaster at Preston does not get his salary according to the percentage, he will be paid the amount due him for past services.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Certainly, and every one else.

Mr. THOMSON (Grey). I would like to ask the hon. Postmaster General if the vacancy at Chatsworth has been filled and if so by whom ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I cannot give the hon. gentleman the name, but I understand there has been an appointment.

Mr. THOMSON (Grey). I understand that Mr. Macdonald of Chatsworth, a local banker, was appointed to that position. The hon. Postmaster General visited that district during the by-election and the result of it was that a promise which had been given by the late representative (Dr. Horsey), was not carried out. The late Dr. Horsey promised that appointment to Mr. Dobie. It is to be regretted that his wishes were not carried out in this matter. It seems to be a matter of the basest ingratitude on the part of the Liberal party and I say that the least the hon. Postmaster General could have done was to carry out the wishes of the late Dr. Horsey in this matter.

Mr. BLAIN. I want to ask the hon. Postmaster General how it comes that where an office, Dwight, in the Muskoka and Parry Sound district, has a revenue of $130, the salary of the postmaster is $50, while at another office, Dyment, Algoma, which has a revenue of $129, the salary is $70. This is a matter that requires some explanation so that we will be able to understand how these salaries are fixed.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I will have the information for the hon. gentleman.

Mr. HACKETT. I would like to ask the hon. Postmaster General if any letter-carriers are employed in Prince Edward Island. We have Charlottetown with a population of 12,000 and Summerside with a population of 4,000, and there is no mail delivery outside of the general post office.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It has not been the practice to establish the letter-carrier system generally throughout Canada in all cities and towns, and there has been no fixed rule upon this subject, but I fancy the practice has been to adopt the system in the leading cities. Of course, I would not underestimate the importance of Charlottetown. It is the largest city in the province of Prince Edward Island. At the same time, compared with other centres of population throughout the Dominion, there are many much more populous than Charlottetown that have not yet had the benefit of the letter-carrier system. I did not find when I took office that the late government had favourably dealt with the case of Charlottetown. I did not find that they were prepared to establish the letter-carrier system at Charlottetown, and I have not yet been able to take exception to that view. I hope, however, that Charlottetown will grow in importance, wealth and population and win for itself the distinction of having a free letter delivery system established there.

Mr. HACKETT. I am very much pleased to get the explanation of the hon. Postmaster General and I am in hopes that Charlottetown will grow in importance. But, the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Robinson) spoke the other day in favour of a rural distribution of mails and I would suppose that a city like Charlottetown, having a population of 12,000 or 13,000, would be entitled to some advantage in that respect. The hon. Postmaster General received a letter from me a few days ago in regard to the post office at Portage on the line of the Prince Edward Island Railway. Has the hon. gentleman considered that matter ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The practice would be that the letter would be forwarded to the inspector on the island to make his report. I suppose it has not yet been received.

Mr. HACKETT. I desire also to call the attention of the hon. Postmaster General to another matter in regard to a place called lot 14, in Prince county, where there is a semi-weekly mail and where the people are now very anxious to have a daily mail. This is quite an important village. They have lately established a cheese factory and as other matters in connection with the business of the country are progressing they ask that this semi-weekly mail should be superseded by a daily mail. I trust the hon. minister will take into consideration the requirements of that part of the country. He should only have to ask his inspector down there in regard to the propriety of having this request carried out and that gentleman would say that in consequence of the establishments there that the farmers require this further accommodation for the purpose of carrying on their affairs.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Has there been a formal application made to the department as to this increased mail service ? If there has been such an application it will go to the inspector and be reported on, then his report will come to the department, will be considered, and if the report shows the service should be increased it will be increased, but if it does not show that I am afraid it will not be increased. We have to depend upon the case presented by the inspector.

Mr. HACKETT. I have always found the hon. minister on the report of his inspector to act fairly by the people, and although I cannot say positively, I am pretty sure that the inspector will report in favour of the increased accommodation. I have always found that when a good prima facie case was made out the hon. Postmaster General was likely to fall in with what was suggested.

Mr. THOMSON (North Grey). I do not think the Postmaster General has given all the information in connection with this appointment at Chatsworth. I think he must have some knowledge of the appointment, because he was there during the by-election, and no doubt talked it over. If the appointment was not made by him, I would like to know who recommended the appointment. These are simple questions that should be answered.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is not the practice to inform the House on whose nomination any one is appointed. The minister takes the responsibility. If there has been an appointment made at Chatsworth I take the responsibility of that appointment, and I have made it on what I deemed proper authority. More than that I am not able to say.

Mr. MORIN. In the county which I have the honour to represent there are three postmasters, one of whom has been keeping the post office for thirty-three years, another one for twenty-six years, and another for twenty years. Before I left home in March these three gentlemen came to me and asked me to request the Postmaster General if he will allow them for house rent.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. What are the names please ?

Mr. MORIN. I will give the names a little later on. They see an item in the estimates for rent of post offices, and they think they should be allowed rent for their post offices. They are not very extravagant people and they would be satisfied with $12 a year each. They do not claim any back rent, but they believe that if the government pays rent for post offices elsewhere, they should have an allowance for rent. In the town in which I live the post office has been opened for fifty years and the present postmaster has been in charge for thirty-three years. A little bit of a scale has been sent to the postmaster that is of no use at all, and it is not suitable for the requirements of the office. Now I think the Postmaster General should send a scale to that postmaster. He cannot weigh five pounds of mail matter on a scale that will only fit one pound. If the Postmaster General wishes, I will go to the Post Office Department and tell the deputy the names of the postmasters who asked for an increase.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Very well. The deputy informs me that the postmasters are entitled to a set of scales equal to the requirements of the office.

Mr. BENNETT. What was the value of the issue of the so called jubilee stamps, and what was the highest denomination ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is six years ago since they were issued, and I cannot exactly say what the issue was, but the highest denomination was $5.

Mr. BENNETT. It is a matter of general complaint throughout the country that a large number of these so called jubilee stamps are now repudiated by the government. That is serious when you come to think that some of them have a denomination of $5. When the issue was placed upon the market a great number of children were induced to buy them, and as a consequence some of these stamps are yet held by people throughout the country. It is due to the holders of these stamps that an order should immediately be issued by the department that one cent or two cent stamps should be exchanged in return for these stamps of large denomination. It is not creditable to a great country like this that it should issue stamps and then repudiate them. If they are not exchanged, a great deal of loss and inconvenience will be suffered by a great many people. What does the Postmaster General propose to do?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There is ample occasion of making use of these stamps in Canada. It is not necessary to affix them to a letter. There are many ways in which postage far in excess of $5 can be paid. There is no country in the world that redeems postage stamps. When postage stamps are issued they are issued for good. Occasionally when there has been a fire in a post office, or where by some accident a large quantity of stamps become soiled and useless, we have substituted others for them. There is a large amount of mail matter mailed in Canada and posted in bulk; there is not a particular stamp fixed to each piece of mail matter, but the payment is made on the bulk amount. For example, take a news agent who is sending out magazines in great quantities. There is no separate postage stamp put on each separate piece, but the payment is made in bulk. The Toronto post office receives daily large sums, sometimes in money, sometimes in postage, and these stamps are just as goods as any other stamps.

Mr. BENNETT. I find, on reference to the Postmaster General's report, that there was on hand at the beginning of this year $30,680 worth of Jubilee stamps, and that there was on hand at the close of the year $30,680 worth. In other words, there was not a buyer in the whole Dominion for one of these stamps. This goes to show that people know that these stamps are practically worthless unless they can be converted into stamps of lower denominations. I cannot understand where it would be possible, in the ordinary course of trade, for people to require a $5 stamp, and there is the fact standing plain that the department have been utterly unable to sell any of these stamps. May I ask, does the department hand out these stamps as it does current and negotiable stamps?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The deputy informs me that the value the hon. gentleman refers to of these high denominations has been reduced by over $7,000, to some $23,000 at the present time. I repeat that the stamps are available, there is a legitimate demand for them, and all any one requires to do with these stamps, if he does not want to use them, is to transmit them where they will be used. I have not any doubt that if any person wants to exchange these stamps for stamps of smaller denominations, the department will accede to his request.

Mr. BENNETT. Then, do I understand that any person applying to the department at Ottawa will have smaller stamps issued in exchange for $5 stamps or other stamps of large denomination?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not say that it would be done at any post office. It might inconvenience the postmaster by depriving him of the necessary supply of stamps for the ordinary use of customers; but if transmitted to the head office here, the exchange would readily be made.

Mr. LENNOX. I would like to ask the hon. Postmaster General about the establishment of a branch post office in the northern part of the town of Barrie. In speaking of this, it will be recognized that I am speaking of something in a constituency which I do not represent. However, I am speaking with the consent of the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) to whom I spoke about the matter to-night. About a year ago I was requested to prepare a petition for this post office. I did so, and it was numerously signed. The matter was inaugurated, I think, by a gentleman named Sproatt. The post office would be available to a large number of people in the northern part of the town of Barrie, and in the country roundabout, who cannot be very well served by the post office at Barrie. It is pointed out that a place could be got for the post office on the line of the mail route between Barrie and Midhurst, and that it would be a great convenience to a large section of the country as well as a considerable section of the town, and I do not know that it would entail any expense on the Post Office Department.

Mr. McCARTHY. The petition which the hon. gentleman has spoken of was forwarded by him through me to the Postmaster and was urged upon the Postmaster General by me for his consideration. I received a reply, which I communicated to my hon. friend, that it would receive the consideration of the Postmaster General. I do not think the situation of the post office is quite correctly stated by my hon. friend. I do not think it is in the limits of the town of Barrie, but outside the limits. It was to be called Vespra, after the name of the township in which it would be situated. Mr. Sproatt lives outside the limits of the town of Barrie, about a mile and a half from the town, on the line between Midhurst and Barrie, which has a daily mail service. A mail bag could easily be left off at Mr. Sproatt's house. This would be of advantage to a section of the community. That was pointed out to the department by me. But I recognize that if a post office is opened there it should be on the distinct understanding that the postmaster would be willing to accept the remuneration which the department ordinarily allows, and would not encourage any demand for more pay. Upon that understanding, I would urge the hon. Postmaster General to grant the request.

Mr. LENNOX. My hon. friend from North Simcoe is probably correct in saying that the post office will be established in Vespra. At the same time, it would serve a number of people in the northern part of Barrie as well as many people in the township of Vespra. There is a schoolhouse in the immediate neighbourhood, and children from two or three miles around, in a thickly settled part of Vespra, would come there and be able to take the mail to the people in the evening. In what my hon. friend says as to the remuneration of the postmaster, I am not very much concerned. I presume that it would not be on the basis of percentage if the revenue is exceedingly small, but that the hon. Postmaster General would make it on as generous a basis as those spoken of to-night, where the revenue is only $30 or $40, while the remuneration is $20. If the hon. the Postmaster General will take the matter into consideration and establish a post office, I am sure there will be no difficulty on the score of remuneration. Mr. Sproat is a supporter of the Liberal party, and I have no doubt will be very reasonable in his views and is prepared to accept what is fair under the circumstances.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This case seems to be very well supported on both sides, and I am glad to find there is something on which both sides can agree. I cannot promise anything further than that the matter will receive careful consideration.

Mr. LENNOX. There will be no extra expense involved because the postmasters are paid according to the revenue.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. How will it be served ?

Mr. LENNOX. By the same carrier as now brings the mails. You would have to give him some nominal remuneration.

Mr. LEFURGEY. The remarks of my hon. friend from West Prince concerning the mail delivery at Charlottetown were very timely and I did not hear the hon. the Postmaster General give any good reason why the city of Charlottetown should be without letter-carriers. I should like to know on what principle he grants the different towns these letter-carriers. I find that there are towns in Ontario with much smaller population which have the advantage of this service.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Where are they ?

Mr. LEFURGEY. There is the town of Barrie, with a population of about 6,000 and a revenue of some $9,000, while Charlottetown has over 13,000 population and a revenue of over $17,600. I cannot see why Charlottetown should not be served as well as some of the smaller towns in Ontario.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. member for West Prince brought the matter up earlier in the evening and I then gave my views on the subject and I have nothing to add to what I then said.

Mr. LEGURGEY. I do not consider that the hon. minister gave any very good answer for my hon. friend from West Prince. He said that the matter was under consideration at one time, but nothing was done. That was not laying down the principle on which he gives letter-carriers to the different towns throughout the Dominion. There must be some principle, either on the basis of population or revenue.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. As regards the town of Barrie, I am told that some twenty years ago a letter-carrier was appointed for that place by the late Conservative government. I do not know why they slighted Charlottetown. Perhaps my hon. friend could find that out. I myself did not establish the system at Barrie, but have not disturbed it. My impression is that it was to meet some special case, and I only learned by accident that there was a letter-carrier there.

Mr. LEFURGEY. We are not dealing with the past, but the future, I would like to know why the hon. gentleman himself neglected Charlottetown as he has done for the last seven years. The people there deserve equal treatment with the people of Ontario and the rest of the Dominion, and I should like to know what the hon. minister proposes to do in the future.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. When the city of Charlottetown requests the department to establish a letter-carrier system or do anything else in connection with the mail service, that application will receive careful consideration.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I am very glad that I have at last got the principle upon which the minister conducts the business of his department. You have simply to make application and you will get what you apply for.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Ask and you shall receive.

Mr. LEFURGEY. There is just one other matter to which I wish to refer. That is the case of Kelley's Cross. I pointed out, last night that the people in that locality were at a great disadvantage. It takes from twenty-four to thirty-six hours to carry their mails a distance of eighteen miles.

While Kelley's Cross gave a revenue of $67.25, and the postmaster there was paid $24, as the hon. minister pointed out last night, he left out of consideration the fact that there are four other post offices, whose revenue should have been taken into account, and among those five post offices the revenue amounts to $246, and the expenses to $100, leaving a balance of $146 to the good. From Kelley's Cross to New Wiltshire, the amount of $125 which the hon. minister gave us last year, was for the carrying of the mails between these two places and taking in also Elm Vale and Bookval. What the people want is to have the mails carried from New Wiltshire to the railway station, which is only a matter of some three quarters of a mile and costs $35. So that the expense of the service would simply be doubling the $35 and not doubling the $125.

Mail service, $2,382,850.

Mr. CLARKE. What does that include?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That includes the land service, amounts paid to contractors by land, rail service, courier and on foot.

Mr. BLAIN. May I ask if the same form of contract for mail carriers in rural districts is in use now was in use under the former administration ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The deputy informs me that it is very much the same. There have been some slight changes.

Mr. BLAIN. Would the minister kindly tell us what those changes are ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I could not without comparison of the two contracts. The deputy tells me that some vagueness was removed.

Mr. BLAIN. I am informed that a percentage was taken off——

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I know what the hon. gentleman refers to.

Mr. BLAIN. Then, would the hon. gentleman be good enough to give us the information ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not know if we could say it was taken off, unless you count it as being added in the first instance. Contractors leave one per cent of the contract price in the hands of the government as an insurance fund. It frequently happens that contractors break down or fail to perform their contract or otherwise refuse, and, in order to have our accounts so that we can depend upon them, we have this special fund. Just as we have another fund for the insurance of the fidelity of the staff. We have a numerous staff, and, in order to save them being obliged to apply to their friends for bonds or to go to guarantee companies there is a small charge against them, and that is put into the fund. The fund is made up from these two sources, contributions are on the assessment system.

Mr. BLAIN. Does that apply to country carriers ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes, it is advertised.

Mr. BLAIN. Is this in place of the sureties that were asked for formerly ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, that is an assurance not only upon the contractor, but also upon his surety.

Mr. BLAIN. Then, if the country mail-carrier was to receive $125 per year for carrying mail under the former administration, he was paid the full amount quarterly. But under the present administration, a percentage is taken off ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, that is not correct.

Mr. BLAIN. Then, will the minister please explain ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. When a service is let it is set forth in the advertisement that one per cent of the contract will be retained by the department for the purpose I have named. That one per cent becomes the property of the Crown and goes into this fund. The contractor takes that into consideration when he makes up his tender.

Mr. HACKETT. When the mails are carried across the straits and landed on Prince Edward Island what facilities are there for carrying them to their destination? Does the hon. minister intend to do in the future what he has done in the past and allow the mails to remain at Cape Traverse or Georgetown for hours waiting for the regular train.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The mails are conveyed by train from Cape Traverse and Georgetown—the train goes down to the dock.

Mr. HACKETT. Last year, the mails were delayed for hours at Georgetown, Summerside and Cape Traverse, because the government would not pay for a train to carry them.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That is all over now, that is all settled.

Mr. HACKETT. Very well, I do not wish to renew it. But the member for King's (Mr. Hughes) speaking on Friday night said:

> I think that the ministers, and particularly the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, has information that will enable him to place the winter steamers on the route that will give the people of Prince Edward Island the best service. And I believe that next year, and for the years to come, there will be no great cause for complaint.

Now, I would like to ask the minister what information the hon. member for King's had in connection with this matter ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I presume the hon. member for King's made the statement on the information he received from the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Hon. Mr. Préfontaine), and as the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries is not here I cannot ascertain the facts. If the hon. member (Mr. Hackett) will leave the question in my hands, I will get him the information.

Mr. BLAIN. On the question we were discussing before the hon. member for West Prince (Mr. Hackett) rose, I wish to ask one other question. Do I understand the hon. minister to say that when he puts an advertisement in the newspapers calling for tenders for the carrying of the mail between the two points, he states in that advertisement that one per cent will be deducted ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is not the practice to advertise all the specifications but to deposit a copy with the postmaster and at other places for the convenience of contemplating tenderers, and the advertisement informs the public where the form of contract may be seen. If the would-be-tenderer goes to the post office as he would have to do to get a form of tender he would have an opportunity of seeing the form of contract. I do not know that it is stated in the tender, but the tenderer has an opportunity of knowing the facts.

Mr. BLAIN. Do I understand the Postmaster General to say that, notwithstanding the deducting of one per cent the mail-carrier has still to give bonds for the performance of his contract the same as before ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I stated that.

Mr. BLAIN. Then, I do not quite understand what the one per cent is for.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. To insure the surety as well as the contractor.

Mr. BLAIN. For illustration, here is a man who carried the mail between two points ten miles apart for the former administration. When he signed the contract he was asked to give bonds for the carrying out of the contract. The bondsmen were his securities to the government. Under the new arrangement the mail-carrier is asked to pay one per cent of the contract price, and he still has to give the same bonds to the government. The fact is that the mail-carrier is made to pay and is not relieved at all of the amount of bonds he has to give for the performance of his contract. Now, what position would the mail-carrier have to take in order that the department might receive from this fund some advantage ? Would he have to be an absconder, or be a man who did not fulfil his contract ? What wrong would he have to commit in order that something would be paid out of the fund that has accumulated under the one per cent deduction ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. If the mail contractor should, for any reason, cease to perform his contract and there was a difficulty in securing its performance by the sureties, the department would proceed to get the service performed in some other way, and if there was any loss, then it would have recourse to this fund to make good the loss.

Mr. BLAIN. And in the contract that he signs, it is stated at one per cent ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE. I want to draw the attention of the minister to a statement that appeared in the Toronto 'Star' some time ago respecting the method that was to be adopted by the department in furnishing supplies for the post office. The Toronto 'Star' is a paper very friendly to the hon. gentleman. Under the big heading 'Current wages and union hours—the stipulations for all who furnish post office supplies,' I find this item, dated Ottawa, August 28 :

> Hon. William Mulock has decided that all men or firms furnishing supplies of all kinds to the Post Office Department must pay the current rate of wages to their employees and adopt the union hours of labour. This applies to goods whether sold under contract or not. At present the regulations apply only to contracts, but the principle has now been extended so as to become operative in the case of all who are on the patronage list of the department. Hereafter all persons who sell goods to the Post Office Department will have to make a sworn declaration that they have complied with the new regulation before they will receive payment.

I propose, when this matter is brought up further, to ask the hon. gentleman for a copy of the sworn declaration referred to, and also for an explanation as to what is meant by this despatch, whether it is correct or not, and if this regulation is well enforced.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. If the hon. gentleman will let me have the article, I will see that the information is obtained, and will produce a copy of the affidavit.

Mr. CLARKE. And the names of those who are on the patronage list ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I may be able to give that information as well, but I will not make any promise.

Mr. BARKER. I understand the hon. gentleman is willing, provided that these items 'Miscellaneous and Yukon Territory' are allowed to pass, that when his estimates come up again the subjects may be fully gone into and discussed.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes, everything in my department, inside and outside, may be discussed.

Mr. BLAIN. Would the minister state what that fund has amounted to arising from the deduction of one per cent for mail-carriers ? How much has been paid out of it since it was created ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I will have to get that information for the hon. gentleman.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is understood that on all these items we are passing now, one-fifth has been already passed, so we are voting now in all these cases the other four-fifths.

Mr. BARKER. Does that apply to the Yukon territory item ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. All that is embraced in item 239.

Some resolutions reported.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding) moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. BARKER. What will be the business taken up at the next sitting ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The Minister of Railways will invite the House to resume consideration of his Bill respecting the Railway Commission. If we reach supply, the Postmaster General will continue his estimates, to be followed by the Department of the Interior.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 1.15 a.m., Tuesday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, July 7, 1903.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

SUPPLY—CONCURRENCE.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). In regard to the items of supply which were the subject of discussion yesterday, I propose to ask the House now to take concurrence in the various estimates which have been passed in committee.

House proceeded to consider resolutions reported from Committee of Supply.

Fisheries, salaries, &c., $85,000.

Mr. SPROULE. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries promised to give us on concurrence a statement as to what state this fisheries question was in between the provinces and the Dominion. I presume he is prepared to make that statement, but I do not see him here to-day.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) be good enough to let the item pass, I will undertake to call the attention of the minister to the matter. I have no doubt he will be ready to carry out whatever promise he has made. I prefer to have the item concurred in, but if the hon. gentleman wishes it postponed I will have to consent.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not object to it passing, but it would be interesting to know in what position the question stands as between the provinces and the Dominion, and if any decision has been arrived at with regard to a settlement.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I will call the attention of the minister to it, and an explanation will be given at an early date.

Item concurred in.

Public works—chargeable to income—harbours and rivers, Quebec, $491,650.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There is one vote in this item with reference to which, I understand, a motion will be made. I refer to the Grande Vallée pier, $7,200. I do not know if there is any objection to let that stand without letting the whole item stand.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am afraid that under procedure it will be difficult to separate them. Perhaps it will be sufficient if I give my hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax) the assurance that no expenditure will be made of the money covered by this vote until the main estimates are through. That will, perhaps, meet the hon. gentleman's view.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That is satisfactory. But, in order that we may keep ourselves technically correct, so that we may move afterwards that the four-fifths be struck out, I would like to move that this item be struck out, and let the item be carried on division.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. So long as my hon. friend has placed himself on 'Hansard' I suppose that it is all right. I do not object to his method.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I move in amendment that the words 'Grande Vallée pier $7,200' be struck out.

Amendment negatived.

Resolution agreed to, on division.

RAILWAY ACT, 1903.

House in committee on Bill (No. 21) to amend and consolidate the law respecting railways.—The Minister of Railways and Canals.

On section 24; regulations of the board.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS moved that section 24 be amended by striking out the three subsections (e), (f) and (g) and substituting the following :

(e) With respect to the use on an engine of nettings, screens, grates and other devices and the use on any engine or car, of any appliances or precautions and, generally, in connection with the railway respecting the construction, use and maintenance of any fire guard or works which may be deemed by the board necessary and most suitable to prevent as far as possible fires from being started or occurring upon, along or near the right of way of the railway.

(f) With respect to the rolling stock, apparatus, cattle-guards, appliances, signals, methods, devices, structures and works to be used upon the railway so as to provide means for the due protection of property, the employees of the company and the public.

(g) With respect to any matter, act or thing which by this, or the special Act, is sanctioned, required to be done, or prohibited.

Mr. GERMAN. I would like to see the amendment as this is the section where my proposed amendment in relation to protection from fire should come in. I notice there is something in this amendment in relation to fire.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have a section providing for that to which I would call the hon. gentleman's attention later on as it applies to his case particularly. This does not. This makes provision for fire-guards and for protection along the right of way.

Mr. LANCASTER. I do not see why the minister makes this reference to cattle-guards in this section.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We are not dealing with the cattle-guard question here.

Mr. LANCASTER. You mention cattle-guards.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, but we are coming to cattle-guards later.

Mr. LANCASTER. I do not want this section to pass without understanding what it is.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not want the hon. gentleman to be compelled to make the same speech twice. We will deal with the cattle-guards later on.

Mr. LANCASTER. The minister has the use of the words in a certain sense, and if the board sanctioned a cattle-guard the company might be able to say it is suitable and sufficient notwithstanding that it would not turn anything.

Mr. COWAN. It is time enough to talk about that when you come to it.

Mr. LANCASTER. I am not sure that the hon. gentleman is right.

Mr. COWAN. Are you sure I am wrong?

Mr. LANCASTER. I am at present of that opinion, and I do not think that time will be saved by interrupting me in this way.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This clause will certainly not have the effect the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lancaster) fears, because even though the board were to make regulations with regard to cattle-guards, I do not think that this Bill will exempt the company from liability if they were liable otherwise. The words are inserted here to enable the board to express its judgment as to what class of cattle-guards ought to be used. It would not relieve the company from liability if they used them and if they were defective.

Amendment agreed to.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS moved to insert in subsection 2 the following :

Any such orders or regulations may be made to apply to any particular district or any railway or section or portion thereof ; and the board may exempt any railway or portion thereof from the operation of any such order or regulation for such time or during such period as the board may deem expedient.

In the case of fire-guards, for instance, they may be necessary on one portion of the line and utterly unnecessary on another, and this is to enable the board to have discretion in the matter.

On section 59—paid up stock may be issued for certain purposes.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We adopted the section referring to paid up stock as it is in the existing law. My first inclination was to make it more effective, and to, if possible, require additional precautions and safe guards, but upon more mature consideration I would not make any very strenuous effort to retain the clause in the Bill if it is the wish of the committee to strike it out. If it were eliminated from the Bill I do not see that any great inconvenience would arise, I am not going to move, however, that it be struck out, unless hon. gentlemen who have considered the matter deem it advisable to do so. Under the existing law the board of directors have the power, and if we preserve it at all I think we should put that power into the hands of the company. I would suggest the following as an alternative :

The company may make and issue as paid up stock, shares in the company whether subscribed or not, and may allot and hand over in payment for plant, rolling stock, docks, elevators, wharfs, warehouses or materials of any kind, and also for the services of contractors and engineers, such an amount of such stock as shall be the fair and bona fide value for the property purchased or services rendered as aforesaid ; not being promotion services ; due regard being had for the fair value of the stock, and such issue and allotment of stock shall be binding on the company and such stock shall not be assessable for calls.

Mr. BARKER. I would like to ask the minister whether that clause would not enable a person to act as a contractor in disposing of the bonds of the company, and to obtain from the company for his services a certain amount of paid up stock on which he would not pay a dollar ? I think the amendment is open to the same objection that was referred to before in the discussion on the original clause, that persons with financial influence who might be employed to place a large amount of bonds or debentures, might get practical control of the company without putting a dollar into it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think what the hon. gentleman suggests, and a great many other things as well, could be done under this clause. I do not think it would be possible to frame a clause that would not be liable to abuse.

Mr. BARKER. I think the section as now proposed is just as objectionable as the old clause. The word 'contractor' in the old clause was generally supposed to refer to a contractor who undertook to construct a railway; but I think that these contractors in reality do not often have stock given to them. It is more generally given to financial contractors, and all the objections raised against this method of disposing of the stock of the company without cash being paid for it apply to this clause quite as much as they did to the old clause. I see no objection to issuing stock for the payment of right of way or equipment, because in such cases it is given for a property which has a specific value; but the value of the services of a gentleman who has influence on the money market in placing bonds is an absolutely unknown quantity, and the company could give to such a person as much stock as it chose, and there would be no possible check upon it. What is the need of putting the word 'contractor' in this clause at all ? If it were useful for a company to pay for its right of way or its rolling stock or anything else with stock, it could do so; but when you put in a word which would enable the company to give stock to the kind of contractor I have referred to, you throw the whole thing open without any possibility of a check upon the company.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My hon. friend's objection is chiefly to the use of the word 'contractor.' That word has been in this section ever since the first enactment, so far as I know, and I question very much whether it is subject to such a wide interpretation as he supposes, or that it would be held to mean more than a person who contracted with the company for construction or for some other work on the line. I question very much whether it would be held to apply to a person who acted as a broker for the sale of bonds. If it did, I do not imagine that it would be any more objectionable than it would be as applied in the other cases. If the company has bonds to dispose of, it has to pay brokers or bankers or other financial men to dispose of them; and if the stock had a fixed value, I am quite sure that the company would not be willing to pay any more than what the ordinary percentage on a business basis would amount to. If they had not any value in the market, it would be pretty difficult to say what limit might be put upon the issue of such shares. I think the section is some improvement on the existing law, but I do not say that it would not be liable to great abuse, and if the hon. gentleman wishes to move to strike it out altogether, I would not raise any objection.

Mr. BARKER. I think the section is of no real value except to enable the company to issue stock without getting any money for it, and it is important that the company should not be allowed to issue a very large amount of capital. I would therefore move that this clause be struck out.

Motion agreed to, and section struck out.

On section 91,

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS moved that the following be substituted for section 91 :—

The directors may, with the sanction of the shareholders of the company, at a general meeting, declare a dividend to be paid out of the net profits of the undertaking. Such dividend shall be at and after the rate of so much per share upon the several shares held by the shareholders in the stock of the company.

He said : I propose this in order that the law may conform to the existing practice.

Motion agreed to.

On section 92—rate of dividend,

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS moved that section 92 be struck out and the following be inserted in lieu thereof :—

The directors may, before recommending dividend, set aside out of the profits of the company such sum as they may think proper as a reserve fund to meet contingencies or for equalizing dividends or for repairing maintaining, renewing or extending the railway or any portion thereof, and shall submit their action in regard to such reserve fund to the shareholders at a general meeting for their approval, and the directors may invest the sum so set apart as a reserve fund in such securities as they may select, not however inconsistent with this or the special Act.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. Can they do that without the approval of the shareholders ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The clause provides that they must submit such action to the shareholders for approval.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. It does not say that in case the shareholders do not approve the directors will be unable to set aside such reserve fund. That possibly might be implied. As I understand the general law, dividends can be declared on the net profits, and this is an interference with that to the extent that this reserve fund can be taken out of the net profits and set aside. It ought to be made clearly subject to the approval of the shareholders.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is a necessary implication. If the shareholders do not approve it cannot be done.

Amendment agreed to.

On section 94—no interest on calls in arrear,

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS moved to amend by adding the following section :—

The directors may take from any dividend accruing to any shareholder all or any such sum or sums of money as may be due from him to the company on account of any call or otherwise.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. The only objection to this would be that there might be a disputed account, and the directors ought not to be the party to decide the dispute.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is taken from the English Act.

Amendment agreed to.

On section 105—sale of forfeited and unissued shares.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I propose that the following be added as subsections 2 and 3 :

2. The company shall not sell or transfer more of the shares of any such defaulter than will be sufficient, as nearly as can be ascertained at the time of such sale, to pay the arrears then due from such defaulter on account of all calls, together with interest, and the expenses attending such sale and declaration of forfeiture, and if the money produced by the sale of any such forfeited shares be more than sufficient to pay all arrears of calls and interest thereon due at the time of such sale and the expenses attending the declaration of forfeiture and sale thereof, the surplus shall, on demand, be paid to the defaulter.

3. If payment of such arrears of calls and interest and expenses be made before any shares so forfeited and vested in the company shall have been sold, such shares shall revert to the party to whom the same belonged before such forfeiture, in such manner as if such calls had been duly paid.

These subsections are new. It will be known to the committee that the law as it stands now permits forfeiture of the defaulter's shares, and whatever surplus there may be is appropriated by the company for its own use. It seems to me enough, if the company gets its call, and the interest and all that is due to it ; and that whatever balance there is ought to be returned to the shareholder.

Mr. BARKER. May not difficulty arise in some cases ? Take the case of shares on which 40 per cent have been called, and the shareholder making default of all or part of the 40 per cent. When the share is sold, what is it that is sold, the full share or the 40 per cent. For, a man may owe 10 per cent upon it, and it may sell for 35. We would get back 5 per cent, but what would become of the 60 per cent uncalled ? I am not clear on that point.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. When you sell the share in that case, you sell a share on which only 40 per cent has been paid and 60 per cent is due, the amount due being subject to call. If it has a market value of more than 40 per cent, when the subscriber has made up all that was coming to the company with interest and expenses, he ought to get back the remainder.

Mr. BARKER. Is it clear that you sell a partly paid up share, or do you sell a share ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You sell it on the basis of what is paid up.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is there not likely to be some confusion in this respect ? Supposing that five calls have been made of 10 per cent each. Four of these calls have been paid by every person, but certain shareholders make default on the fifth and their shares become forfeited and sold. You sell them as shares on which 50 per cent has been paid up——

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Only 40 per cent paid up, and 10 per cent called and not paid and 50 per cent subject to call.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Then, you collect out of the proceeds of that enough to pay the remaining call of 10 per cent.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is it.

On section 112,

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS moved to strike out subsection 3, and to insert the following in lieu thereof:

3. The company may except from the operation of any such mortgage, deed or assets, property, rents or revenues of the company, and may declare and provide therein that such mortgage shall only apply to and affect certain sections or portions of the railway or property of the company; but where any such exception is made the company shall in such mortgage deed expressly specify and describe, with sufficient particularity to identify the same, the assets, property, rents or revenues of the company, or the section or portions of the railway not intended to be included therein or conveyed thereby.

4. Every such mortgage deed and every assignment thereof or other instrument in any way affecting such mortgage or security, shall be deposited in the office of the Secretary of State for Canada, of which deposit notice shall be forthwith given in the 'Canada Gazette': such mortgage deed or other instrument need not be registered under the provisions of any law respecting registration of instruments affecting real or personal property.

5. A copy of any such deed or instrument so deposited, certified to be a true copy by the Secretary of State, or by the Deputy Registrar General of Canada, shall be received as prima facie evidence of the original in all courts.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The hon. gentleman will observe that under subsection 5 it is necessary that the handwriting of the Secretary of State and the Deputy Registrar General shall be proved. That might be rather inconvenient. In the Canada Evidence Act, according to my recollection of it, the signatures of officers of state are not required to be proved. Under this subsection I think they would require to prove the handwriting of the Secretary of State or the Deputy Registrar General.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I might add these words at the end of subsection 5, 'without proof of the signature of such official.'

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. I would like to point out to the hon. minister, before the amendment is adopted, that by striking out subsection 3 he leaves out the provision requiring the mortgage to be deposited with the Secretary of State, and providing that until so deposited and until notice is given no such mortgage shall have any force or effect. Does the hon. minister designedly leave that out?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, I think it is a very objectionable clause. In subsection 4, as we propose to amend the section, provision is made for the publication of notice in the 'Canada Gazette.'

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. My point is that if some penalty is not put upon them they may never deposit the mortgage, and yet the mortgage is in force. The object of the other subsection was to compel them to deposit it. Now, they are not bound to register it, and it is only made directory that they shall deposit it where anybody can find it. It is in force the instant it is executed, and unless it is made obligatory to deposit it the mortgage is in force and it is impossible for the public to get at it. In Ontario we always register these mortgages in a land office, and they are always registered unless a special clause relieves the company from the necessity. I rose to mention the fact that the mortgage becomes in force now the instant it is executed and there is nothing to compel the company to deposit it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Subsection 4 provides in explicit terms that the mortgage shall be deposited. It is not required to be registered under the provisions of the ordinary Registration Act.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is it not desirable that there should be some means by which the public can have knowledge of what property is covered by a conveyance of this kind? Of course, there is a provision in subsection 4 of section 112 that the document shall be deposited in the office of the Secretary of State.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is in lieu of the ordinary registration.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Yes, but the difficulty is that you do not insert the usual provisions of the Registration Act which require the conveyance, or deed, or mortgage, to be registered, and in default of registration make it void as against the conveyance of any person who shall first register the same. While there is a direction to deposit this mortgage in the office of the Secretary of State, there seems to be no result whatever in case the document is not so deposited. It is a provision which the railway company could ignore absolutely, in which case there would be no way of getting access to the document. It might be important that the public should know to what extent a railway company has mortgaged its undertakings. People who are doing business with the railway company would want to know that. The hon. gentleman has made a change in that respect from the former law. Has he given any consideration to the possible results which I have just mentioned?

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. There is no doubt the other clause was distinctly put, was a penalty if the mortgage was not deposited:

Until so deposited and notice given no such mortgage shall have any force or effect.

The notice would not be so important, but it would leave an unprecedented position in a legal sense. I quite agree that it is not necessary to record it elsewhere than in the office of the Secretary of State, but to leave it directory, so that if the company see fit they may not do it, and the mortgage will go into force the moment it is executed, I think is objectionable. I do not see any hardship in the old law requiring that they shall deposit it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The old law did not say that. That is the provision of the Bill as we introduced it, but these words are not in the existing law at all. Upon the first consideration we gave the subject it struck us, as it would strike any lawyer, that perhaps that provision had better go in, but it does not seem to be wise to continue it. That is the view we arrived at. Mortgage deeds and other conveyances have not been habitually or largely registered in registration offices throughout the country. Whatever is done with them in a public way is simply to deposit the mortgage, according to the provisions of the existing law, in the office of the Secretary of State.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The practice in the different provinces has probably been different. At one time in the province of Nova Scotia these documents were required to be registered, but the law was so amended providing that they need not be registered or filed. I understand from my hon. friend from South Norfolk (Hon. Mr. Tisdale) that the practice has been to register them in Ontario. The only circumstance I want to bring to the hon. minister's attention is that it seems to me that in some way or other the public have the right to inform themselves of the contents of these documents, and you could hardly accomplish that result by a provision of this kind.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You might put a penalty in.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). You might put in a penalty for every day's delay after the document had been executed.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Two months is the limit under the existing law. We might make it less than that.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. There is a further provision here that it shall not be necessary to register under any provincial law. If you want to build the real estate in Ontario you must register the mortgage, and I do not think you will find any mortgage upon which bonds are founded in Ontario but what is registered in every county through which the line passes. I know I have had to register several and that was the custom of the Grand Trunk Railway. In Ontario they did that at that time, and I am not sure but that there was a special clause in the Railway Act, or in a special Act, making the bonds a lien on all the property of the railway company without registration or formal conveyance. You have removed here the necessity for registering them locally, and I would like the minister to give his consideration to that matter.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We propose to substitute this deposit in the office of the Secretary of State in lieu of registration.

Mr. LENNOX. I think you will find an express provision in the Registry Act of Ontario, for instance, which makes it necessary that mortgages should be registered. I presume the mortgagee would desire to have the registration for his own protection.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, I expect he would.

On section 176—construction of branch lines, lapse of power, &c.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. At the end of subsection 8 of this section, I propose to add :

'Nothing in this subsection contained shall be deemed to take away or impair the rights or powers of any company under any contract with the government of Canada approved and ratified by special Act of the parliament of Canada.'

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 184,

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I move to insert after the words 'But the board shall not grant leave to any company,' the words 'incorporated after the passing of this Act.'

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The difficulty about this amendment seems to be that so far as all existing railways are concerned it authorizes the board, without the consent of the municipality, to grant permission for the construction of a tramway or street railway along the streets of any municipality. That is a very important amendment, for it practically repeals the clause which was agreed upon the other day. I should think the minister ought to state to the committee the reasons which induced him to make so important a change.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Since the clause was introduced one or two of the companies have complained that we were taking away from them specific rights which they had acquired, and the taking away of which would have a very injurious effect on their interests, financial and otherwise. The securities they were arranging to finance would be seriously prejudiced, and we would practically bar any further extension of the rights on which their undertaking had been started. I confess that the words we have put into the hands of the chairman would free all existing companies from the restriction imposed by the clause.

Mr. CLARKE. It would destroy the value of the clause.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is a very serious question as to how we could deal with a case of this kind. For example, here is a company which is in operation, and which has acquired its status, financial and otherwise, on the strength of the lines it has already built and other lines which it has in contemplation. If we enabled a civic corporation to bowl them out entirely without any possibility of relief from any quarter, we would be pursuing a rather hazardous course with respect to such an undertaking. We can imagine the case of a couple of rival corporations operating in one city, one of them being very much more influential than the other, and being able to impose its will, as it were, upon the municipal body, and inducing it to refuse to allow the other corporation to make its extensions, while allowing the rival corporation to make all the extensions it desired. It would seem unfair that such distinctions should exist, and that the arbitrary power should rest with the municipal body to favour the one corporation and refuse to extend equal privileges to the other.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Could not that condition of affairs obtain with regard to companies hereafter incorporated ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It might ; but when parliament is granting these incorporations, it would no doubt be put in possession by the promoters of all the necessary facts and circumstances, so that it could govern itself accordingly. But it looks to me as though, while we were moving in a direction which would meet with the acceptance of the public in the majority of cases, such legislation might and doubtless would work very injuriously as respects others. It might cover one ground without covering the other.

Mr. CLARKE. Will the minister lay on the Table the memoranda of protests which he has received with respect to this clause as amended ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have been called on personally.

Mr. CLARKE. Might not provision be made for those specific cases instead of amending the clause so as to destroy its value ? Around every city and town in Canada at the present these tram railways have their lines, and if this clause is amended as proposed, it will practically destroy all the advantages which the minister was good enough to give us the other day.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not understand that.

Mr. CLARKE. The minister can readily see that if this clause is amended as proposed, it leaves it wide-open to the commission to allow any railway to run through the streets of cities whether the corporation is willing or not. The amendment he proposes is simply deplorable.

Mr. MACLEAN. On the same line I wish to point out that the city of Toronto receives an immense and growing revenue from its street railway franchise. The revenue will disappear entirely unless the streets of the city are protected from the aggression of the railway companies. They will have lines of their own independent of the municipality. In that way you would take away the great revenue which the city has at present from that source. Toronto receives a quarter of a million dollars a year from its street railway franchise. If the railways could come into the city under this law, the control of the street railway franchise would be taken away from the city.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think that would follow at all. I can mention to the committee one case which has been very much before my mind, and which has been dealt with by the Railway Committee of the Privy Council on several cases ; that is, the case of the Montreal Terminal Company. This company had occasion to make application to the Railway Committee of the Privy Council from time to time, to be allowed to make extensions under their charter through different streets of the city of Montreal, and the way the matter has worked out has been this. The committee has always recognized that the city authorities must be consulted, and there has been no instance in which it has been necessary for the committee to make an order adverse to the city council. But the city council had not the arbitrary power to exclude corporations from the use of the streets without the approval of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council. I may say, as a matter of fact, what is pretty well known in the city, that the Montreal Street Railway Company is very much opposed to the terminal company having these rights, and it is a very influential corporation, and has exercised its influence as against this company; and if the Railway Committee had not been supreme in the matter, the terminal company would probably have been refused the privilege which was given to the other company.

Mr. CLARKE. Does not the operation of its lines in the city of Montreal depend on the good will of the city council ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It does, although its charter does not say so.

Mr. CLARKE. If this amendment carries will not the position of the city of Montreal be seriously jeopardized ? The contract of the Terminal Railway Company operating in the city has several years to run, and at the end of that time the council may renew the contract or not as it pleases. I have a memorandum here respecting the Montreal Terminal Railway.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is not subject to the consent of the council.

Mr. CLARKE. I understand that the city has the right to designate the streets through which the company shall run, the number of years it shall run, and the conditions generally under which the road shall be operated. I would not be a party to the company being deprived of any of its rights, but I do not want to see the municipality deprived of any of its rights or privileges. My hon. friend from East York (Mr. Maclean) has pointed out the serious effects this amendment would have upon the city of Toronto. With all due respect to the members who may compose the railway board, we would greatly prefer being allowed to manage our own streets and our own interests without the interference of any board or tram car company. The interests of a quarter of a million of people ought to be of greater moment to parliament than the carrying out of the schemes of two or three railway promoters. The franchise of the Toronto Street Railway Company will in ten or twelve years be worth twenty millions of dollars to the city of Toronto. That city, which has the exclusive right to operate street cars on its own streets, has given that right to the Toronto Street Railway Company for thirty years, nearly one-half of which term has expired. That city has the best tram car system in Christendom, and should be allowed to continue in control of its own affairs. The company should be made to come to the city ; but the hon. gentleman, by his amendment, would take away our control and say to the promoters of railway companies : If you can get the ear of the railway commissioners you may go into Montreal or Hamilton or Toronto, or any other city, whether the corporation likes it or not. Such a provision would work a monstrous injustice to the municipalities. The interests of the people in our great municipalities ought to come in front of the interests of these promoters. The citizens of every large municipality are desirous of getting the most perfect tram car system they can, and the franchises given by this parliament would not be worth the paper they are written on were it not for the large aggregations of human beings in the cities into which these tramways enter. If the municipalities impose conditions upon the companies, it is the people who have to pay. The promoters do not put their hands into their pockets and pay out whatever sum may be charged by the municipalities for the use of their streets. The regulation of the traffic, the conditions under which cars are allowed on the streets, the number of cars, the fares, the protection to life and limb—every one of these should be provided for by the municipal authorities, and I would ask my hon. friend, who has put his hand to the plough and given us a reasonable measure of protection from the charter mongers, not to take away what he gave us a week or two ago, and what we accepted as a generous measure of protection. If the position of the Terminal Railway in Montreal be jeopardized, if its rights be prejudiced by this clause, let special provision be made for that railway. No municipality desires to take away any right it has given. What we stenuously object to are these insidious attempts made by promoters to get greater privileges over the streets of municipalities.

Mr. LANCASTER. My hon. friend from West Toronto (Mr. Clarke) speaks about a reasonable measure of protection by the amendment given to the municipalities. The hon. minister will remember that I did not agree that that was reasonable, because it only applies to cities and towns and left out townships and villages. In my opinion, townships and villages have as much right to be protected as cities and towns. Of course I am in favour of justice being done to the cities and towns, but I also want our country districts and villages to be protected. Take the Hamilton and Grimsby Electric Railway, which runs through the counties of Wentworth and Lincoln upon the only highway between the escarpment and the lake from the city of Hamilton through Grimsby to Vineland, some twenty-five miles, of which escarpment the mountain at Hamilton and the Heights of Queenston are the principal elevations, and which is the only road that runs between these points on account of the irregular width of space of land between the escarpment and the lake. Certain conditions were imposed upon that road by the municipalities when allowing the railway to go on the highway, but if this amendment carries, this railway board can interefere with these restrictions and break the by-laws and conditions imposed by the municipalities upon this company. The board may say that it is in the interests of Canada that that railway should use steam or be relieved from certain regulations imposed upon it by the municipalities. Under the Electric Railway Act, which is an Ontario statute, and under which this railway company is incorporated, this railway could not run a foot without the consent of the municipalities, as I showed by the statute I quoted a week or two ago. This railway connects with the Canadian Pacific Railway for freight and traffic and gets its charter from the Ontario legislature. Under that charter, it could not run a foot on any highway in either of those counties, as I pointed out to the hon. minister the other day, without the consent of the municipalities. It had to make its bargain with these municipalities, and are not these municipalities the parties most competent to look after their own interests? They are not innocent babes or people of unsound mind who require to have their interests managed by executors or curators or guardians. The reeves and councillors of the townships, the mayors and aldermen of the towns, are just as well able, yes, much more able to look after the municipal interests and use of highways than this railway board. But if this amendment passes, the bargains which the municipalities made with the railway companies may be set aside, and the railway board is to control the highways instead of the municipalities who are responsible for the repair and safety of the highways. If this passes, what would be the result? This board, if it thinks fit can say of the bargains made by the railway companies with the municipalities that they are improvident and unreasonable and so set aside all these bargains. In other words, it allows the railway to use and to sell to somebody else something to which they have no right and which they have contracted not to use except under certain conditions and limitations. This would remove restrictions imposed by municipalities and hand over control to the board. The highways are properly under the control of the municipalities; and surely the people who elect the reeves and councillors, and who have the opportunity once a year to declare by their votes whether they are satisfied with the acts of their representatives or not, and who are most intimately concerned with the proper use of these highways, should be allowed to control the use of those highways. This proposal of the minister still leaves the villages and townships out in the cold. But, while I think that the townships and villages should be protected, as an honest man, I am bound to say that the towns and cities should be protected also. The hon. minister proposes to restrict this to railways that are not now incorporated. This is equivalent to saying to me: I will allow you to possess a fortune five years from now if you can get it in the meantime, but what property you have to-day I will take away from you. These railways are now existing and are running under certain limitations, and the hon. minister says that only new railways shall be compelled to come under the control of the municipalities. The municipalities have made bargains with these railway companies, but these bargains will go by the board if this proposal is adopted.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is nothing to be gained by making exaggerated statements concerning what we are dealing with here.

Mr. LANCASTER. Mine are not exaggerated statements.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They are most extremely exaggerated statements. No one proposes to interfere with the powers of the municiaplities to impose whatever terms they choose to impose. All that the board does is to say, that one street and not another shall be used. That class of questions arises in respect of these tramways under the existing law. Take, for instance, the case of the Montreal Terminal. Their charter gives them the right to use the streets of the city, but it does not give them the right to go upon the streets for the purpose of laying down tracks or otherwise using them until the corporation has looked the question over and has decided whether this street or some other street is the one they should have the power to use, or until they have decided whether they will require such a percentage or contribution from the earnings of the company, or what other regulation they shall deem it in the interest of the public to impose. That is the state of the law as it is to-day, and it is absurd to say that if this amendment were passed it would cut that ground away. It would not do so. All that it would do would be to give to the board of railway commissioners powers which the Railway Committee of the Privy Council now possess to enable them to say whether or not the absolute refusal to allow the company to make any use of any of the streets is a refusal which is a just, proper and reasonable one on the part of the municipal corporation. That is all that this Bill proposes. The Railway Committee of the Privy Council, as I say, has that power to-day, and I want to say that in no single instance has that tribunal made any order which was not made ultimately and finally, with the consent of the city corporation.

Mr. LANCASTER. But this board may do so.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This board would exercise their jurisdiction, I apprehend, in the same way as the Railway Committee of the Privy Council has exercised its jurisdiction. There is no reason to suppose otherwise. Now, my hon. friend could not expect that one who is not closely associated, either as a citizen or otherwise with the city of Toronto could appreciate the superlative importance and grandeur of that city. We who reside at a distance cannot grasp the infinity of those great qualities which these hon. gentlemen's town possesses, and we can only gaze upon it from afar in wonder and admiration. My hon. friend may discover in that circumstance some little explanation why we cannot see the force—at least I am unable to see the force—of much that he suggests. Very much that my hon. friend has said that would apply to the common towns of the country, such as Montreal, Hamilton, London, Halifax and

St. John, I can fully agree with. I think that these ordinary towns ought to have a great deal to say with respect to the use of their own streets. I might, perhaps, if I knew Toronto, be prepared to admit that, as respects the streets of that great city, the corporation ought to have everything to say—and more. But, for the reason I have stated, I cannot go further than would be applicable to the ordinary towns of the country. Now, with regard to the ordinary towns, authority has been given to companies to lay down their tracks in the streets. At the same time, parliament in giving that power said that that power should be exercised subject to the control and direction of the corporation of the city. Now, the company in Montreal to which I referred, under general legislation was given that power. But the city corporation may make it a condition of the use of a particular street that a portion of the revenues of the company shall be given to the city. These revenues might never attain the magnitude of those in the city of Toronto, but still, they might reach a very respectable sum. Parliament has given these powers, and it has been represented to me that this parliament, having given these privileges, ought not arbitrarily to take them away. If that argument is one which ought to have any weight at all, I am sure the company will join with me in endeavouring to work out the problem of the recognition of these privileges consistently with the maintenance of proper rights on the part of the city corporations.

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. BARKER. With regard to the proposed further amendment to section 184, I wish to call the attention of the minister to the fact that this is not merely a question of rivalry between two companies in a municipality, but rather a question between any one company and the municipality itself. I refer to that particularly, because the city of Hamilton, which I represent, is very materially interested in this matter, not because of any rivalry or competition between two railway companies, but because of its own position should the Board of Railway Commissioners see fit, under any power secured here, to grant powers to railway companies to pass through the streets of a city. There is in Hamilton a street railway company enjoying rights granted by the city itself, not by any parliament or legislature. The legislature incorporated the company with certain powers, but the city of Hamilton, like many other municipalities, had the absolute power to define what streets the company should construct its works upon, and all the accompanying conditions, rates and terms, just as if it were the parliament itself. Under those conditions the city of Hamilton has granted power to the street railway company there for a limited number of years. The hon. gentleman must see that the power that is proposed to be given to the Board of Railway Commissioners under the General Railway Act, is not a limited power for a perpetual power. Now the city may say, we are willing to grant privileges to a railway company for ten, fifteen, twenty or thirty years; but the Board of Railway Commissioners are not bound by the wishes or the opinions of the city in that regard. Under present conditions, it is, I think, the intention of almost all the municipalities in this country where street railways have an existence, to take over these railways and operate them at the expiration of the present charters. Now, if in ten or fifteen years hence the corporation of the city of Hamilton, for instance, should think it to the interest of the people to run the street car service itself, it is a most important feature of the whole thing whether another body, some other company, should have the power to compete with the corporation upon other of its streets, under power granted by the Board of Railway Commissioners, who know nothing whatever of the local wants or interests, who perhaps may live at Ottawa, and know as little about the city of Hamilton as they do of the city of Vancouver or the town of Moncton. I think it must be obvious to the committee that this parliament cannot well deal with any question about the operation of street railways in municipalities. The further amendment that is proposed to be out in this clause, as I understand it is one under which the board may allow privileges to street railway companies heretofore incorporated, and in spite of the opinion of the municipality concerned. That is the objection I take to it. Now with regard to the terminal railway in Montreal, I understand that a letter has been sent by Mr. Mullarkey, secretary of that company, to the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Clarke). That is a company that does not possess any special privileges. Mr. Mullarkey says, quoting the language of the charter:

> The company may lay out, construct and operate branch or circuit lines, to be operated by electricity only, in such streets in the city of Montreal as are designated by the council of said city, and subject to such terms and conditions as are imposed upon the company by the said council.

This is a material point, because the council designates the streets upon which they may run, subject to such terms and conditions as are imposed upon the company by the city council. Now it does seem to me, Mr. Chairman, in face of a charter granted upon such conditions, to give to a Board of Railway Commissioners, who know as little about the wants and interests of Montreal as I do, the power to ignore the terms and conditions which the corporation of Montreal may wish to impose—I say that seems to me a monstrous stretching of the powers of this parliament. According to my view, this parliament has no more right to deal with the question of street railways in the city of Montreal, or the city of Hamilton, than it has with the canals, if they exist, in Mars—they have nothing whatever to do with them. That is my judgment, and I think the government should be careful how they put into a General Railway Act any words that would appear to interfere with the independence, rights and legislative powers of the provinces. There can be no question that it was intended that the provinces should deal with all such matters as these; and I think it is a grave matter for this government to throw any doubt upon that power. But if there be any doubt, if the hon. gentleman wishes to reserve all the rights heretofore granted by parliament, if he thinks it desirable to protect what is called vested rights, I recommend the suggestion that is made here that the particular company that may be affected by this legislation should be specially mentioned. Although it may be said it is not a good form of legislation to mention in a General Railway Act a particular company, and its particular rights, I beg to call the hon. gentleman's attention to section 276, of the General Railway Act, of 1888 now in force, where a special condition with regard to two railway companies was provided for, because they had rights that perhaps other companies did not have. Section 276 puts certain restrictions and conditions upon all the railways of the country, but expressly reserves the rights, under certain charters, of two railway companies that are expressly mentioned in that section. Now if there is any question whatever as to the rights of this terminal company in Montreal, under the words which I presume are correctly quoted by the secretary of that company, if there be any question at all as to the propriety of reserving its rights, or assumed rights, the hon. gentleman should put in a restriction safeguarding whatever rights it may have under its charter. If, before this legislation came before the House, they had obtained from the city of Montreal any rights upon the streets of that city, those rights are now in existence, and surely it will be an easy matter to put in words to protect and preserve them. It ought not to be left a matter of doubt throughout the whole Dominion as to the rights of every city, town, or municipality, because some company in Montreal claims to have a peculiar right. The municipalities want to know where they stand, and if there is one exceptional case let that be mentioned in the clause, and not leave every municipality in the whole Dominion in a state of uncertainty as to its position.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am not at all desirous that this committee should extend any favours to any of these electric railways operating in any of the cities. All I desire, and in that I am at one with hon. gentlemen opposite, is that we shall not take away from any company that has had a particular franchise conferred upon it that franchise in whole or in part. I go the full length that my hon. friends opposite have gone as to the character of the legislation that ought to be passed by this parliament on that subject. I do not think we ought to be easily convinced that we should legislate upon this subject, and I agree that these companies ought to go to the provincial legislatures in the first place, and in the second place I am prepared to go as far as any hon. member of this committee in giving a full measure of control to the municipal councils of the different towns and cities. I am willing that they should have the right to say whether they will have a street railway at all. I do not lag behind hon. gentlemen opposite in respect to that branch of the question. Now, what I do desire, though, is that we should say all that is really necessary in order that we may leave these companies exactly as we find them.

Mr. CLARKE. We quite agree with that.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My hon. friend (Mr. Barker) has read one of the clauses of the charter of the Montreal Terminal Railway. I have no doubt it is correctly quoted by Mr. Mullarkey who claims that this company has the right to lay down its lines in the city of Montreal, of course, under the restrictions contained in the Act. All the Acts which have been passed by parliament in recent years have contained similar restrictions; that is to say that the terms and conditions under which these privileges shall be exercised shall be under the control of the municipality and that the council shall designate which of the streets shall be occupied. The charter does not say 'which, if any,' but 'which' of the streets. When parliament, whether wisely or unwisely, gave to the company the right to run their street railway within the city upon the streets of the city, I take it that it would be a distinct violation, or a refusal to submit to the voice and direction of parliament, if the city should refuse to allow any of its streets to be occupied for that purpose. I take it that inference is clear and I believe my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Borden) will agree that it would be a disregard of an Act of parliament if any city council or municipal body were to refuse to allow a company to get into the city at all. That is practically one of the conditions we are facing and in the interpretation which the Railway Committee placed upon that Act we thought, that, while the city council of Montreal might properly impose all reasonable and proper conditions when designating the streets, they were bound to designate the streets or else the legislation would be absolutely nugatory and in that view, after having refused in the first place to name any streets, if my memory serves me, the city council were advised to agree and did agree. So that there was really no trouble and they came to an agreement with the company later on when they found what view was entertained by the railway company and everything went on satisfactorily. If we were to put a provision in this Bill to the effect, that this clause should not deprive any company chartered by parliament of its rights to lay down its line, subject to proper oversight and direction and subject to the conditions of the special Act, I think we would not be going too far as we would simply be preserving the rights which had been created. But, I do not think we should limit it to this particular company. I do not know but that there may be a great many others and to specifically mention one particular company in the way which the hon. gentleman suggests is not legislation which one would wish to favour. True, it was done in 1888, but it is not a desirable system at all. I am sure my hon. friend would not think that it would be a desirable thing to do if it could be very safely avoided. If rights have been created by this parliament, can there be any reasonable objection to say that it is not proposed to take away these rights by this Bill? I do not think, if a proper interpretation and construction are put upon the meaning of this Bill, that we are depriving the town or city council of the right of imposing terms. We are not doing that. The Railway Committee or the board of commissioners or any body constituted for the purpose of deciding these matters would be bound to consider what the special Act required, and would be bound to make their ruling in accordance with the spirit and letter of the Act creating the corporation. I do not think that there is any good ground for taking a serious view of the matter at all. I am perfectly willing to withdraw the words I was proposing to the committee and substituting anything else that might meet more fully the views of hon. gentlemen who are discussing this question if proper words can be chosen for that purpose.

Mr. MACLEAN. Mr. Chairman, the question is a broader one than has been put by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals. We are to-day in the midst of a constitutional revolution in this country, and the party in power, by the legislation they have put through this House recently, are fast carrying this country into a legislative union. The provinces are being stripped of many of their powers and especially have we seen this session and during past sessions a general raiding of municipal rights particularly in the province of Ontario. If the municipal rights of the province of Ontario can be raided as they have been raided by this parliament, repeatedly, then the civil and religious rights of the other provinces will also be attacked and very soon we will find that the old battle of provincial rights will be up again. I take the position that wrongful legislation has been repeatedly passed through this House, legislation raiding the rights of the provinces, and to put the question which is now before the committee and before parliament, the question of the Toronto and Hamilton Railway, I propose to read to the committee the case of the municipalities against this raiding. This is well set out in a paper which I have in my hand and which says:

Memoranda re Bill 147, Incorporating the Toronto and Hamilton Railway Company.

This Bill contemplates the incorporation of an electric railway to run from Toronto to Hamilton, a whole distance of some forty miles. It authorizes amalgamation with or the acquisition by purchase, lease or otherwise, in whole or in part, of the franchises, works, plant and other property of the Hamilton Radial Electric Railway Company, the Hamilton, Grimsby and Beamsville Electric Railway Company, the Hamilton Street Railway Company, the Toronto and Mimico Railway Company, the Metropolitan Railway Company, and the Toronto Suburban Railway Company, all companies incorporated by the legislative assembly of the province of Ontario, and all subject to municipal consent and control.

The purchase of the Niagara, St. Catharines and Toronto Railway Company, a company incorporated by the Dominion parliament but which has not yet been constructed, is also authorized.

The Bill also declares the undertaking to be 'a work for the general advantage of Canada,' and provides that upon the acquisition of any of the lines of any of the companies above enumerated that the Railway Act of Canada shall apply to such lines and 'to the maintenance, repairs and operation thereof.'

Manifest Objections.

1. An undertaking entirely provincial and essentially for municipal services in its nature is removed from provincial and municipal control.

2. Existing railways whose very existence depended on the consent of the municipality interested are without the consent of such municipality entirely removed from municipal jurisdiction, and become clothed with the powers, privileges and independence of a great state line. A revolution is created in the control and conditions of the streets of municipalities.

3. An intolerable conflict of legislative powers is precipitated—provincial rights and those of important municipal councils disregarded and local sources of revenue abolished—and it must hereafter be recognized that should this Bill become law it is open to other promoters to go from parliament to legislature, or vice versa, in an attempt to obtain greater powers, or to evade contracts and obligations entered into.

4. The result must be that these local lines will practically be operated and maintained just as the company desires. Imagine an application with its attendant cost being made to the Railway Committee of the Privy Council by the city of Hamilton to have a certain car declared to be out of repair and unfit to be operated on the street railway system of that city, or one by the county of York that a small section of the road bed of the Metropolitan Railway Company was out of repair—and on the other hand consider the unreasonableness of expecting that the Dominion authorities could efficiently oversee and look after the many questions trivial in themselves, but, of large importance to the municipality, which necessarily arise in connection with 'the maintenance, repair and operation' of a city or rural street car service.

5. All the paramount powers of a state railway are vested in this extensive tramway without going into detail it is only necessary to refer to the very extensive powers of expropriation—the absolute right to build branches up to a distance of a quarter of a mile—and with the consent of the railway committee, up to six miles—the absolute right to remove trees to a distance of six rods from either side of the railway—to divert streams, change position of gas and water pipes, sewers or drains, and telegraph, telephone or electric light wires or poles, and the right to appoint constables, all of which are given to the proposed company by the Railway Act. 6, W—H—Y ?

Why should the company in the case of future friction with Toronto or Hamilton have the right to level every shade tree, whether on or off the streeet, to a distance of six rods from its railway ?

Why should the company have the right to cover the streets of either of these cities with lines under the name of branches ?

Why should the difference in principle between steam railways owning and occupying separate rights of way and railways occupying the highways belonging to the municipality, be lost sight of and obliterated ?

Why should the portions of the county of York on the highways of which railways have been already constructed under the safeguards of proper agreements, ask that all extensions of such railways, rural or urban, shall be as to 'maintenance, repair and operation,' only controlled by the provisions of the Railway Act, while they protect themselves by proposing to continue by an amendment the operation of their agreements ?

By section 600 of the Municipal Act of Ontario, municipal councils obtain jurisdiction over the streets in the municipality, and section 601 vests every such highway in the municipality—Why should this jurisdiction be transferred to the Railway Committee of the Privy Council ?

The Ontario Railway Act, the Ontario Electric Railway Act, and the Ontario Street Railway Act have all declared that no railway constructed under their provisions shall be carried along a highway without the consent of the interested municipality. Why should these provisions be over-ridden, and the power therein contained transferred from municipal councils to a railway committee or board by declaring a work similar in character to be for the general advantage of Canada ?

The right of the Dominion parliament to so interfere cannot be supported except possibly after the declaration that this undertaking is for the advantage of Canada.

It is respectfully submitted that this declaration cannot fairly be made. At the very most all that can be pretended is that the work may be for the benefit of portions of the counties of York, Peel, Halton and Wentworth—counties already well provided with electric railways constructed or under construction. In any event it is with much confidence submitted that the right to decide just what is best in the interest of the locality, the right of home rule, should be left with the people of the locality and the provincial parliament, who it is submitted have not proved themselves unworthy to discharge that trust.

The signatures to this document will show that the protest has the endorsation of the municipal authorities of some of the leading cities of the Dominion. It is proposed that this parliament should remove the jurisdiction over these railways from the provincial power and from the control of the municipalities interested. That was never contemplated in the Confederation Act, and yet provincial rights are constantly going by the board, and all under a Liberal administration, whose leading principle used to be the upholding of provincial rights. Just before dinner the Minister of Railways made a reference to the city of Toronto in a somewhat sneering way.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Oh, no.

Mr. MACLEAN. He said it was some kind of a very superior city and people up there. Let me tell the hon. gentleman that the people of Toronto are inoculated with the doctrine called public ownership, and as the member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker) has said, they hope in a very short time to own and control the street railway of Toronto. But if legislation of this kind is allowed to go through this parliament, this franchise will not be worth a single cent. The city of Toronto derives $250,000 a year revenue from its street railway ; it hopes soon to derive $500,000, and it hopes within twenty-one years to own and control that street railway and to give the people a better and cheaper service. If you pass legislation of this kind at Ottawa, by which you are openly raiding municipal and provincial rights, you will deprive Toronto and all other cities of this fine revenue. It is a shame to see the way a number of the cities of this Dominion have been raided by the legislature. Down in Quebec the street railway corporations and the electric corporations of all kinds have raided the cities and have obtained powers they ought not have obtained, and it is now proposed to still further raid the cities in the federal legislature and to rob them of their inherent municipal rights.

There is something wrong surely. I have read the protest of the municipalities against their being robbed of valuable franchises in the interest of private corporations. Surely the people have a right to ask that their municipal rights be protected against these rich corporations. Let me tell the Minister of Railways that there are two kinds of confiscation, notwithstanding that the only kind he can see is the confiscation of the rights of corporations. Let me tell him that you can confiscate as well the rights of the people, and that is what you are doing here, and that is what it is the duty of the minister to prevent. He must lay down a principle that will govern not only this Toronto and Hamilton Railway, but which will govern all these other corporations who are now beginning to believe that the easiest way to accomplish their ends in raiding the municipalities is to get past the municipal council, get past the provincial legislature, and come to Ottawa, where they believe they will get everything they want. This has got to be such a menace that the municipal organizations have formed an association to defend their rights, and we find them circulating amongst members of parliament the document which I have read. It is high time that a protest was entered and that the House and the country should know that a constitutional revolution is taking place by which municipal rights and provincial rights for that matter are being invaded by this federal parliament. It is incumbent on the minister to declare on behalf of the government that this Dominion parliament will not allow municipal rights to be invaded by corporations who come to Ottawa as a last resort, when they cannot obtain what they want from the municipalities and the provincial legislatures. I trust the minister will not make merely an amendment which will protect one street railway, but that he will make a clear-cut announcement that this parliament of Canada cannot be used for the purpose of overriding the will of the provinces and the municipalities. If some provision of this kind is not made, the city of Toronto and other cities will be robbed of their power to grant franchises and robbed of the rights which as municipalities they should possess.

In the end we will find the province of Ontario and the other provinces turned over to these corporations with perpetual charges and franchises. That is the danger.

Under this Act, as the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker) has pointed out, you give these corporations perpetual franchises through the rulings of this board of railway commissioners. At present every one of them has a limited franchise, subject to termination after a number of years, and for the enjoyment of which they pay liberal allowances to the municipalities, and for which they are being educated to pay larger rentals. The city of Toronto to-day, if it could recover its street franchise, would give a million dollars for it; the city of Hamilton would like to get back its franchise; probably the county of York would like to get the franchise it has given to the Metropolitan Railway. But if the owners of these railways understand that the way to get past the municipalities and the provincial laws is to come to the federal parliament and have these works declared to be for the general advantage of Canada, so that the board of railway commissioners could step in and interfere with them, I say good-bye to provincial rights and to our federal union, for the day has arrived, brought about by the action of the Liberal party, when practically the doctrine of a legislative union has been established in this country, with one supreme legislature and no other in it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I must say I am exceedingly pleased to hear the hon. gentleman give us the assurances he has given us to-night. I am glad to know that, after a long period of slumber, he has at last awakened to the importance and necessity of arousing parliament and the country to the imperative need of wise and safe legislation in this direction. I hope my hon. friend is not going to relapse into that comatose condition, speaking in a political and legislative sense, in which he has existed for so long a time; for I think this parliament and the country would be relieved if we could get an assurance from him that from this time forward he is going to conduct himself with a greater measure of propriety and with some regard for the public interest; that he is going to see that the legislation passed in this House shall reflect no discredit upon it, and is going to exhaust the utmost measure of his great abilities to see that the people's rights are protected to the remotest degree. My hon. friend must not be content with getting up for a few minutes and making these declarations and calling upon other people; but he must live up to the promises he has made, and to the expectations which no doubt his remarks have aroused among the members of this House, and which, when known in the country, they will no doubt arouse throughout Canada. As my hon. friend has started in a judicious direction, I want to see my hon. friend, with that boundless energy which distinguishes him, that great foresight which he possesses, that keen perception of right and wrong for which he is so well known, stand up manfully and help the government in this movement as he has not hitherto felt it his duty, and his inclination to do. I am going to ask my hon. friend, in the spirit in which he has spoken to-night, to lend me his valuable support towards correcting this amendment, so that we may have the law in perfect shape, so that we may have the people's rights in every particular protected; and while we are protecting them, and protecting corporate rights, and seeing that the municipalities are not trodden under the heel of these ruthless corporations who are seeking to swallow up other people's properties, rights and interests, I want him to assist me in an equally strong effort to secure the rights of individuals. I am going to propose an amendment which I think will meet with general acceptance :

Nothing in this section shall deprive the company of rights conferred upon it by any special Act of parliament of Canada heretofore passed.

Mr. CLARKE. That takes the place of the other ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, I am going to withdraw the other amendment altogether.

Mr. MACLEAN. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to offer a suggestion ? Why does he not make the clause say : 'Nothing in this Act shall interfere with the rights of the municipalities' ? Do not protect the companies. Protect the municipalities; that is what we want.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Has my hon. friend reached this point, that whilst he is desirous of protecting the municipalities, those bodies which are well able to protect themselves, he will allow individuals to suffer and individual rights be trampled under foot ? When parliament has conferred a franchise or a right, will he be prepared to ask parliament to withdraw that franchise after interests have been created and grown up under it ? My hon. friend will not, I trust, forget the eloquent appeal which he made to us a few minutes ago.

Mr. BARKER. I beg to call the hon. minister's attention to this fact. In his amendment he proposes to leave at large all acts which have been passed before this Act becomes law. I think during this session there have been some hundred Acts of parliament passed already. I do not think the hon. gentleman addressed his mind to this difficulty when this subject was introduced into parliament. But I would like, on the general question, to quote again from this letter with regard to the Montreal Terminal Company. The right given to it by this parliament was 'to run over such streets in the city of Montreal as are designated by the council of the said city.' The hon. gentleman argues, perhaps with some technical legality, that that means that the city council had to give power to run over some streets. But what would any municipality understand from these words : 'and subject to such terms and conditions as are imposed on the company by the city council' ? Is there one municipality in this Dominion that would not understand these words to give them absolute control over the company that was proposing to lay tracks on its streets ? We find that when this matter came before the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, that body, according to this letter, seemed to think that the city must be reasonable, that it could not impose terms that would be unreasonable. In other words, the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, or the board of railway commissioners acting in their place, would be the judges of whether the municipality was imposing reasonable conditions or not; and if the municipality in their opinion was acting unreasonably, the board could tell them what was reasonable. In other words, the board would be the body that would dictate on what terms the railway would be constructed through the streets of the city. I understand that one difficulty which the Railway Committee of the Privy Council found in this case was that the city wanted to impose on the Terminal Railway company conditions more onerous than had been granted to another company. Why should they not ? Why should not a municipality impose any conditions it thinks proper ? In one year conditions may change. A year ago a city may have made a blunder by granting a railway company power to run along its streets on too liberal terms. Is it to be bound for all time by what it does one year ? If the year after it wants to impose more onerous terms, why should it not have the right to do so, and why should the board of railway commissioners or the Railway Committee of the Privy Council undertake to discuss whether the municipality was seeking to impose unreasonable terms or not ? Beyond question the moment you put in an Act of parliament that the municipality shall have the right to dictate the terms and conditions upon which a company shall enter a city, you give that municipality the absolute power to say whether that company shall enter the city at all. Because this House chooses, without rhyme or reason, to insert into an Act that a particular work is a work for the general advantage of Canada, should it have jurisdiction in such matters. Surely it was never contemplated that the mere insertion of these words would or ought to give jurisdiction where, under the constitutional Act, none was intended to be given. It was intended only that a work should be declared for the general advantage of Canada when it was really a Dominion work, and that in that case alone the declaration should be made and this parliament should have jurisdiction. But under the loose legislation that we have been passing, these words have been inserted into statutes in order to withdraw jurisdiction from the provinces over purely local concerns and vest it in this parliament without any reasonable ground for doing so.

Mr. LENNOX. The more this question is discussed, the more important it appears and the more fully we realize the great variety of interests affected. It involves certainly the question of provincial rights. This is not the only Bill that raises in a very distinct form the question of provincial rights. If we go back to preceding sessions, we shall find a number of other instances which show that we are gradually raising again the old issue of provincial rights. This measure is an encroachment, not only on provincial, but municipal rights as well. With regard to the municipalities, there can be no more serious proposition perhaps than the one involved in the question raised this afternoon. True, the hon. minister proposes to modify the attitude he took earlier in the session, but even with that modification we are not dealing with the case upon a proper basis. In the cases of the cities and towns, we have perhaps grappled with the most serious phase of the question, but next in importance are the rights of the incorporated villages and townships. Many of the electric railways may be converted into steam railways, and we are confronted with this proposition, that in the future we may have the miles of electric tramways now upon our highways, highways which belong to the municipalities and were made by the municipalities and were intended primarily for the use of the people—we may have these electric lines converted into steam railways and locomotive engines puffing up and down our municipal highways.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say seriously that if a company is chartered to operate an electric road, it can, of its own sweet will, change its system into a steam railway line and run locomotives upon the public highway ?

Mr. LENNOX. Those of us who have even a slight acquaintance with these matters know perfectly well that it is an easy step to change an electric railway into a steam railway. The Metropolitan Railway is to-day purchasing steam engines to run on its tracks.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They cannot do it without permission.

Mr. LENNOX. I admit that, but it is entering the thin end of the wedge. As my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Maclean) has said, we are upon the eve of a revolution in the system which has governed in this country in the past. Why, how astounded the people would be if it had been proposed in the first instance to have a steam railway run for even a few miles along the highways. And yet, we have the fact that in the old and populous county of York, the Metropolitan Company is running along what was the best highway in the Dominion of Canada, Yonge street, and they are making preparations to-day to propel their cars by steam. Now, this matter, as I say, is probably of primary importance to the cities. But, as regards the local municipalities it is of great importance too, and it will be a serious question throughout the length and breadth of this country for all the local municipalities, for the incorporated villages and townships as well as for the cities. What are we proposing to do ? We are proposing to vest in a board of three members the right to say, in defiance of the wishes of the municipalities, whether an electric railway or tramway shall be operated upon their highways or not. I submit that that is a proposition which, when it is realized by the people, they will never submit to. It is revolutionary. I believe it to be one of the most serious innovations that have been proposed by the government at any time ; and, so far as I am concerned, I shall oppose it in toto. The Minister of Railways says that we must not hamper the railway companies ; that we must make some provision that will safeguard the interest of the companies that have already been chartered, or we shall be encroaching on vested interests and hampering these railway companies in negotiating their securities. Which is the question of paramount importance, the facility with which these railway companies negotiate their securities, or the rights of the people who live along the lines on which it is proposed that these railways shall run ? I submit that the people who live in these rural municipalities, who live in these villages, are the best judges of the needs of these townships and villages, and it is for their representatives, not for a board of three persons, however eminent they may be, to consider whether it is in the interest of the municipality that these railways should be run within their confines or not. It is upon the decision of the people of the locality that the matter should ultimately rest. The hon. gentleman thinks that we must consider vested rights. But there is a broad distinction to be drawn between vested rights that have been exercised and assumed, and vested rights of which the companies have first knowledge from the discussion of the matter upon the floor of this House. What we have been doing throughout the discussion of this Bill in more than one instance is suggesting, by legislative sanction, that these companies should encroach more and more upon the rights of the people, suggesting to them to claim rights that they never dreamed of before. The hon. minister has only heard of one company, he says, that has encroached upon the rights of the municipality. I will promise the minister that if this legislation passes in the form he proposes, there will be a great crop of such encroachments upon the rights of municipalities. That will be the effect of the legislation the hon. gentleman proposes. The question of exclusive control within the cities of the valuable franchises existing there has been so ably dealt with by hon. gentlemen who have given it special consideration that I do not propose to discuss it further. But I do suggest that in the case of municipalities outside the cities and towns they also have very valuable franchises in their roads and highways, and these should not be left to be dealt with by a board sitting in Ottawa. An important point was certainly raised by the minister when he suggested that possibly, in some instances, the representatives of the municipalities could not be induced to let the railway company use the highway upon fair terms. I am quite free to admit that there may be instances in which an extreme position is taken in that regard. But whether is it safer to leave that to the council of the municipality who can be changed, and will be changed by the people when they cease to represent fairly the views of the municipality, or, to vest it in a board composed of three men remote from the municipality, knowing nothing of the local interests or local requirements, out of touch with the people, and having no ear for the needs of the locality. I submit that it is vastly more in the general interest of the people that those who are in touch with local interests, the municipal council, who can be deposed if they cease to voice the views of their constituents, should be left in control of these matters rather than that such control should be handed over to a board which cannot be held to similar responsibility by those whose interests are most deeply affected.

Mr. BLAIN. I would like to ask the hon. minister a question with respect to the point involved. I have a letter from Joseph Burton, Esq., the reeve of Toronto township, which is a township in Peel county, lying between the city of Toronto and the city of Hamilton. The Toronto and Mimico Railway Company applied to the legislature of the province of Ontario at its last session, and secured a charter to run a road between Toronto and Hamilton through this township. My correspondent tells me that in that charter the rights were left with the municipalities to say where the road should be built through the township. What I want to ask the hon. minister is, will the amendment he proposes take away that right from the municipality of that township ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It would not affect it—would not have any relation to it at all. This does not relate to any company incorporated by a provincial legislature, except so far as crossings with Dominion lines are concerned. It will not affect the question in the slightest degree.

Mr. BLAIN. I understand, then, that the rights that were allowed to remain in the municipality referred to, by the charter granted by the local legislature of Ontario at its last session, will not be interfered with by the amendment that the minister is now proposing.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It will not affect them at all.

Mr. LANCASTER : Supposing that a railway company comes down here and gets itself declared to be a railway for the general advantage of Canada, won't these rights be interfered with unless he puts in the word 'municipalities' ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. When they come down here we will be in a better position to judge.

Mr. CLARKE. The minister should be informed of the facts. There is a Bill now passing through the House having for its object the amalgamation or grouping together a lot of these tram lines, one of which is to run between Toronto and Hamilton to connect with the Hamilton Radial system. Now my hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain) asks this question : That being one of the group of trains that are to be absorbed by this company which now has a Bill before parliament, if its enterprise should be declared to be a work for the general advantage of Canada, will not the rights of the municipality to which he has referred be taken from it ? In case that Bill passes through this House and the company is declared to be incorporated for the purpose of constructing a road that is for the general advantage of Canada, will not the rights of the municipality be interfered with ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not know what Bill the hon. gentleman refers to, but has there been any Bill before this parliament which proposes to absorb a number of lines ?

Mr. HENDERSON. Yes, and it will come up to-morrow night as a private Bill.

Mr. BLAIN. The hon. member for West York (Mr. Campbell) introduced it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Has the legislature given the other companies the power to sell to this company ? Unless we assume by a distinct declaration that it has a control over these local lines, they would not have any power to sell unless their charter gave it to them, or some amending Act of the provincial legislature.

Mr. LANCASTER. This Bill coming up to-morrow night asks for power to purchase a certain number of railways, one of which is the Hamilton, Beamsville and Grimsby road incorporated by the Ontario legislature. It got permission to run on their highway by certain regulations and under certain conditions only, and if it does not conform to those conditions it can be put off that highway. Now, if this Bill coming up to-morrow night passes, and that railway is given permission to sell out to this Toronto and Hamilton Railway, I ask the minister if it is not the case, unless this section is made to cover other municipalities as well as cites and towns, that the rights which the townships of Barton, Saltfleet, Grimsby, Clinton and others nows possess, townships through which this railway runs, will go by the board ?

Hon. Mr. TARTE. There seems to be so much doubt about the interpretation and meaning of the clause that we are discussing, that I would like to be clear about it. In the city of Montreal we have two street railway companies to which we have granted certain privileges and rights. They have undertaken to do certain things, one of which, for instance, is to remove in the winter all the snow from the streets. I would like to know if the Bill passes in its present shape, whether any conditions that may have been imposed by the city of Montreal, or that we may deem proper to impose later on, will be affected ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They would not be interfered with by this Bill.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Then we would have the right to impose any other conditions that we saw fit ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You will have all the rights you have heretofore had, whatever they are.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. It will not interfere with the conditions we have imposed ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

Mr. MACLEAN. In the city of Toronto there is a limited street railway franchise. Approaching the city of Toronto are four or five suburban lines, and there is now a proposal to consolidate them and have them declared to be for the general advantage of Canada. Under that consolidation they propose to ask this parliament, or this board of railway commissioners, the right to run to the centre of the city of Toronto. The road that comes from the west is to come to the centre of the city, say to the city hall, and the suburban line that is coming from the east is to have the right to come to the city hall, also the road from the north, also the road from the north-east, also the road from the north-west. These suburban roads have none of them limited franchises, they have perpetual franchises. They come to the centre of Toronto, they are declared to be for the general advantage of Canada, they are united into one line and thenceforward they are entrenched and in possession of the streets of Toronto for ever without the leave or consent of the city, and the franchise which the city owns in its street railways is done for for ever, and the city will never get a dollar of revenue thereafter. All these things are in the minds of these railway companies to-day, they have them all in view, they are trying to secure these things from the provincial legislature, they are trying to get them by surreptitious means from this parliament, by asking to be declared a road for the general advantage of Canada. Why, look at what took place in the city of Toronto the other night. The very same people who are now attempting to consolidate these suburban roads, raided the city the other night and tried to take possession of our streets in the middle of the night, had fifty men at work, and if the mayor and the authorities had not been alert they would have been in possession to-day, and would have thereby prepared the way for this very broad proposition that they have in hand. So there is a danger of the municipal rights of cities in these franchises being taken away from the people by this Bill. The constitution of Canada never contemplated that. There was no legislation of this kind introduced in the old days into this parliament. But now the provincial authorities in Canada have said that their rights are being raided. They themselves are to blame. There is a way of stopping many of these companies from coming from under provincial jurisdiction to Dominion jurisdiction, and that is by putting in provincial legislation some kind of a clause providing that if they go to the higher legislature, their rights already obtained shall become null and void. Some legislatures are protecting themselves in that way. I am not giving an imaginary case; I am giving the actual facts showing what is taking place in the city of Toronto to-day and that is the reason why the municipal authorities are aroused, why they have organized, why they are before this parliament and why they intend to ask that this Bill which is coming up to-morrow be defeated. I trust the hon. minister will hold this clause over and that he will give the municipalities an opportunity of being heard, and especially, not only in connection with this clause, but in connection with this Bill, that he will be prepared to assure the municipalities of all portions of this Dominion that there is no intention on the part of the government or of parliament either through this Railway Bill or any special Bill to in any way deprive them of the control which they ought to have over their own streets and over their own franchises within their respective limits. What I say as to cities is equally true also to other municipalities, whether it be a township, village or any other corporation.

Mr. CAMPBELL. As the matter has been discussed very largely in reference to the Toronto and Hamilton Railway Bill, I may be permitted to say a word or two on the subject. I do not think this is the proper time to discuss the Bill and I do not intend to discuss it, but the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean) and other hon. gentlemen who have spoken have discussed that Bill and have placed it unfairly before the committee. One would imagine that all the discussion was on the rights of the city of Toronto and that it was the only municipality in the world to be considered. I want to say that every one of the municipalities surrounding Toronto is anxious for the passage of the Toronto and Hamilton Railway Bill. Every single one is anxious for the passage of that Bill, not in its present shape, but as it is proposed to amend it.

Mr. MACLEAN. By whom ?

Mr. CAMPBELL. By the promoter of the Bill. When the proper time comes, as hon. gentlemen know very well, that Bill is to be amended. The amendment has been submitted to every municipality surrounding Toronto, and every municipality approves of it and is anxious for the passage of the Bill. It seems to me, that, if the hon. gentleman had been as anxious as he pretends to be now for the rights of the municipalities, he would have been in his place when this Bill was considered. It was introduced on the 5th of May, read a second time on the 12th of May, referred to the Railway Committee, stood on the Order paper for a month, notice was given of the meeting of the special day fixed for the consideration of the Bill in the Railway Committee, and when the Bill came up, where was the hon. member for East York? Away at work on his farm neglecting the duties which he is paid to attend to here. Where were the four members from the city of Toronto ? There was not a solitary one of them in attendance at the committee ; not one of them paid any attention to the committee.

Mr. MACLEAN. Where was the hon. member for West York (Mr. Campbell)—raiding the city of Toronto ?

Mr. CAMPBELL. The hon. member for West York was in his place in the committee defending the rights of the municipalities as he has always been found in his right place. I was not away neglecting my duties and drawing my pay for doing it as the hon. member for East York was. The question has resolved itself into this : There are two parties to this Bill. There are first the municipalities around the city of Toronto.

Mr. SPROULE. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. I wish to ask your ruling whether it is proper to anticipate an order on the paper by discussing it before we reach it ?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Before you rule, Mr. Chairman, I just want to say that I am discussing the particular Bill that has been referred to so often by the hon. member for East York and the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker) who have been discussing it. I am discussing the principle, and I want to show why the amendment which is proposed by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals is in the interest of the municipalities of this country and why it is an amendment that should be adopted by parliament. I am illustrating that by the reference that has been made by the hon. gentlemen who preceded me to the Bill of the Toronto and Hamilton Railway Company. The Bill to which reference has been made involves two points.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. As my ruling has been asked, I may say that references were made to this Bill, and I regarded them as illustrations of the point which hon. gentlemen were discussing in regard to municipal control. If the references were so intended they were perfectly within the rules of the House. But, to discuss the merits of a Bill which will come before us to-morrow is beyond the rules of the House and the Bill in that sense cannot be discussed.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I quite agree with your ruling, Mr. Chairman. I was not proposing to discuss the Bill except in its application to the matter now before the committee. The point has been raised in behalf of the municipality of Toronto, for instance, that no railway should go into the city unless by the sanction and approval of the municipality. I take the ground that whatever rights you give to the city of Toronto you must give to every other municipality in the country. The municipalities have just as good a right to have whatever protection is required. The municipality of Scarborough, of Etobicoke, Toronto township or any other municipality should have the same rights as are given to the great city of Toronto. Where are you going to be landed ? Suppose a great railway work is projected that is in the general interests of the country and you place it in the hands of any little tu'penny ha'penny municipality on the whole line to hold it up and stop the whole work ? I say it is not right. These railways, and this is the amendment which will be proposed to the Bill to which reference has been made, should first be required to obtain the consent of the municipality having jurisdiction over the highways. But if a municipality refuses to give that consent, or if they cannot get its sanction, then, they should have the right to appeal to the railway commissioners who are disinterested men, whose duty it is to take charge of these matters. Or, you may refer it to the hight court if you like. The rule has been heretofore to refer the question to the Governor in Council and the Governor in Council has always sanctioned any proper request and done what was right and proper in the interests of the people. I expect that the commissioners who will be appointed under this Railway Bill will be men above reproach and men who thoroughly understand all these questions. If they do not know it will be their duty to go and find out. They will consult the city of Toronto, they will consult the municipalities interested and they will take into consideration all the rights and privileges and look thoroughly into the case and I am sure that they will give a decision that will be in the interest of the people at large. But I want to point out that if the proposition of the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker) is carried into effect it will place it in the power of any one municipality to block any great railway enterprise that is in the interest of the whole country. The promoters of such an enterprise may get the consent of fifty municipalities and the fifty-first will say : You cannot get through this municipality, and the railway is blocked. I do not think that is in the interest of the country, much as I believe in protecting and guarding the rights of municipalities, and I know that under the railway commissioners all the rights and privileges that should be accorded to the municipalities will be ensured to them, the terms upon which the company shall operate upon the streets, the amount of money they shall pay, the amount of roadway they shall keep up, the percentage that shall accrue to the municipality, all these things will be taken into consideration and justice will be done to all. I think the amendment proproposed by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals is one that is in the interest of the country and ought to receive the sanction of this committee.

Mr. SPROULE. The clause proposed by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals has two very serious objections. The first is, that it proposes to protect the rights of cities and towns, but not of incorporated villages or rural municipalities. I agree with the hon. member for West York (Mr. Campbell) that there is just as strong reason for protecting the rights of incorporated villages and rural municipalities as there is for protecting the rights of cities and towns. In this respect that clause falls short. My second objection is that it proposes to protect the rights of railway companies under existing charters, quite regardless of whether these rights were properly or improperly obtained. I have been amused often at the contention of those who cry out vested rights when they come here. I have been amused I say at their contention because in my opinion it is not confiscation to denude them of so called vested rights which have been improperly acquired. In the first place they got these vested rights through our invading the rights of the municipalities or of the provinces as the case may be. It is we who did the confiscation for them originally. As a member of this parliament for many years I have watched with a great deal of interest the trend of legislation here. Twenty years ago we had jealous defenders of provincial rights, but to-day they are silent. It was with pride and pleasure that twenty years ago I saw almost every member of the province of Quebec jealously guarding provincial rights, but those who have taken their places to-day seem to hold provincial rights as of little value. None were more strenuous defenders of provincial rights than the Ontario reformers of twenty years ago, but where are they to-day ? I have heard it said over and over again in this House, when it was proposed to declare that a work was for the general advantage of Canada, that we could not take away provincial rights by that mere declaration. Many eminent lawyers have held that view. But to-day, fortified by the decisions of our courts, we believe that whenever we say a work is for the general advantage of Canada, that declaration is sufficient to deprive the provinces of their constitutional rights in that corporation. We have been practically confiscating rights belonging to the provinces ; we have been surrounding the provinces with chains, and to-day we are endeavouring to weld the links so as to bind them for ever. That is just what the proposition of the Minister of Railways and Canals will do. He declares that when a railway has acquired rights, whether they be properly or improperly obtained, we will not interfere with them. Well, whether you call it confiscation or socialism or whatever you care to call it, I publicly declare here that I have no respect for rights which are improperly obtained, and as a member of parliament and a member of this commonwealth, I would take away these rights and restore them to those to whom they properly belong. I have always regarded that as wrong, and what was wrong twenty years ago cannot be right to-day.

Mr. COWAN. You thought it was right then.

Mr. SPROULE. I did not. I have voted against it persistently and consistently for twenty-five years, and I regret to see that many Liberals who fought side by side with me on this issue twenty years ago are now amongst the most willing to invade the rights of the provinces.

Mr. COWAN. You did not always vote that way.

Mr. SPROULE. If the hon. member was better informed he would know that there is no truth in the senseless interruption he makes. I never interrupt the hon. gentleman, and I dislike these interruptions that are not founded upon common sense. If the hon. gentleman knew my record in this House he would not make the statement he has made, but on the contrary he would give me credit for consistency in this, as he might fairly do in other things. Let me give an example of interference with municipal rights. They are building a line of railway in Winnipeg which runs twenty miles out in the country, and wherever there is a depression in the street I found the street railway was building an embankment to keep their track on a level that must greatly interfere with the drainage of the surface water from the street. I do not know whether they are working under a provincial or Dominion charter, but if it be a provincial charter the people of the municipalities are remiss in their duty. When I asked why they allowed such a thing to be done the answer was: They are working under a charter and we cannot interfere with them. This railway runs through rural municipalities, and it is a living example of how rural municipalities may be seriously injured by the operations of these corporations. I hold, Sir, that we should protect the rights of these rural municipalities just as well as the rights of the cities. I object to this proposal of the Minister of Railways and Canals because it perpetuates rights that were improperly obtained. I object to it because it does not protect the rights of the rural municipalities; and I object to it because it is an infringement of the rights which the provinces should enjoy under the constitution.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. I had not the opportunity of hearing this motion read, but I would like to know if it is a fact that a railway can go along a highway in any municipality without the permission of that municipality? If that be the case I hope the minister will amend it. In the county of Jacques Cartier where I live, we have a road there only wide enough for two carriages to pass, and if a railway should be permitted to go along that narrow road it would block the entire traffic. I do not think that is what the minister intends.

Mr. CLARKE. It is.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. If it be, then I hope that the minister will amend the clause so that they will at least have to get the consent of my municipality before doing such a thing.

Mr. CLARKE. And every other municipality.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. Well, I am speaking for my own parish in particular.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not mean anything of the kind, and I hope that I have made it clear on more than one occasion that I do not mean anything of the kind. What we are doing here is passing a law which shall have reference solely and exclusively to federal charters and to the railway companies incorporated under federal charters. We are not proposing by this legislation to interfere in the slightest degree with the legislation of any of the provinces. I want hon. members to keep that in their minds. The question as to whether or not this parliament has wisely exercised its powers in declaring local works to be for the general advantage of Canada, and thereby acquiring control over provincial charters, is a question altogether outside of this Bill. We are not proposing to do it here. I quite agree with what many hon. gentlemen have said, that that power has been exercised too freely in the past. But whose fault is that? Is it the fault of any one party in this House in times past? I think not.

Mr. MACLEAN. Yes. The government have——

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My hon. friend will pardon me. I say no, and my hon. friend will find it difficult to establish it. I believe there has been no division of party lines upon that question—never; and why? Because the question has not been raised; because parties have applied here for legislation, and members of committees and the Committee of the Whole, when it came before them, have allowed the legislation to pass. Those who have been opposed to that legislation may reflect upon themselves, but they have no right to reflect upon any one else. They have no right to claim exemption for themselves or for any one political party, nor to claim the right to criticise the action of their opponents. The question has not hitherto attracted the same amount of attention that it attracts now, because the people who desired incorporation for what were merely provincial purposes have been coming to parliament very frequently of late. There has been a disposition to come to parliament for these powers, for some reason or other, and these applications have multiplied so rapidly that they have aroused, no doubt legitimately, a strong feeling against the practice. I am prepared to assist any member of this committee, when a Bill of that kind comes up, to strike out the clause declaring the work to be for the general advantage of Canada, unless good reasons are given why it should be so declared; and the members who sit on the right hand of the Speaker will not yield to those who sit on the other side in their declarations in that regard. I see a very weak and flimsy, and I do not think very creditable, attempt by some hon. members on the other side of the House to make political capital by representing themselves to be the only people who care anything about municipal interests, and by spending hour after hour in speechifying on the subject when no body was controverting the position they took, in order that their remarks might be spread out on 'Hansard.' I exonerate some of the hon. gentlemen opposite from this charge; but the gentlemen who have been doing this are not of the same size as others. I say they want to spread their speeches out on 'Hansard,' in order that they may send them out among their constituents to show how they have been standing up for the rights and liberties of the people as against those fellows on the other side of the House, although it would puzzle any man among them to find anybody opposing them. I do not claim that we on this side of the House are any more zealous in that particular. I admit that hon. gentlemen opposite desire that proper legislation should be placed on the statute-book in reference to these matters. I am willing to acknowledge that, and they will, if they desire to be fair, acknowledge that we on this side are just as anxious in the same direction. This is a very weak attempt, I say, on the part of some hon. gentlemen opposite to parade themselves before the country as the bold and valiant defenders of the peoples' rights as against their opponents—a vain attempt. I do not believe that, when they come to count up the result, they will count many noses. The people know how cheap such an attempt is. We have a Bill here which we are trying to make as good a Bill as we can make it; and I think my hon. friends opposite, barring this little disposition which exists on the part of some, have the same desire. I know that some hon. gentlemen opposite would like to create the impression that this Bill would have come out of this committee in a most deplorable shape if it had not been for the important assistance they rendered in its preparation. I know that some of my hon. friends are not making these long speeches for nothing. After it is all over, I know that they will make large claims in respect of what they have done. My hon. friends on this side of the House, you will observe, are not making long speeches—why ?

Mr. COCHRANE. Because the minister is doing it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will tell you why. They are not so anxious to hear themselves talk ; and in the next place, they have done in hosts what has only been done by individuals on the other side. They have taken means of calling my attention, during the long period that this Bill has been under consideration, to points which they would like to have covered, and to improvements which they would like to have made, and the record of their work appears in the many amendments which have been made to the Act. I have availed myself of the suggestions of members who came to me privately, whose sole desire was not limited to the opportunity of making a speech. They wanted to see the legislation improved, my hon. friends on the other side of the House have been equally zealous, I will not say more zealous ; and the fruit of their effort has appeared without their making any great show in 'Hansard' or on the floor of parliament. We are going to have this Bill in pretty good shape; but it could not emerge from this committee in good shape if we were all of the disposition of my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule). My hon. friend has had a long experience in parliament, and he knows that the credit of this parliament cannot be sustained if, after we confer a right on any individual in this country, on the strength of which he has invested his means or his friends have invested their means, we propose to take that right away, be the consequences what they may.

Mr. SPROULE. We are doing it in every session of parliament.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We are not doing it this session. My hon. friend thinks we might do it properly. My hon. friend would do it without hesitation. I would not do it. The vast majority of this House would hesitate to do it, and I am quite sure that no interest that could possibly be involved would justify us in doing it. The question about which all this talk has taken place is not whether we are going to tread with the iron heel on some municipal authority, or sweep away the rights of any municipal body, or interfere with the freedom of any body ; but the question is, shall we, in enlarging and extending the power of the municipality, make it subject to this one limitation, that if any rights have been conferred upon individuals by this parliament, those rights shall not, in the working out of this Bill, and in the interpretation and construction of this law, be taken away from them. If any rights have been conferred by this parliament, those rights shall not, in the working out of this Bill, and the interpretation of this clause, be taken away from them. I do not think that the subject is one which would justify a very great deal more discussion than we have had. Our minds must be pretty well made up, and I hardly think that anything more need be said.

Mr. CLARKE. Hon. members on this side must feel under a great debt of gratitude to the hon. gentleman for the fatherly advice he has given us in such a kindly spirit. I assure him that we appreciate it cordially and heartily. Would he now permit a very humble member from this side to make a suggestion to him ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Certainly.

Mr. CLARKE. We appreciate the great amount of labour he has given to make this Bill as perfect as possible. When we saw occasion for it, we offered suggestions. We have not gone behind the door to do so, but at the right time and place, when the House was in committee and the hon. gentleman and his supporters had the right to criticise our suggestions, we have expressed our opinions and offered amendments when we found what we believed to have been flaws in the Bill. We did so in the most respectful and friendly way. Some of our amendments were accepted in the best possible spirit by the hon. minister, and we believe that he accepted them because he considered they would improve his measure. We feel confident that the hon. minister is actuated solely by the desire to make this Bill as perfect as possible. In his closing remarks, the hon. gentleman said that what he proposed to do was to secure to corporations the rights which they had received in years gone by from this parliament. I do not think that, if the hon. minister had confined himself to the amendment which he now accepts, five minutes of the time of this committee would have been occupied with any further discussion upon clause 184. What we have objected to is the fact that the hon. minister, when he entered the chamber, distributed among us a number of amendments, amongst them an amendment to clause 184, the effect of which would have been to destroy that recognition of municipal rights which he was good enough to make some eight or ten days ago; and I take it that he has been so impressed with the arguments or suggestions from this side that he has gracefully withdrawn the amendment he presented in the first place and has submitted a further amendment protecting the rights of the companies incorporated by this parliament some time ago. We on this side have no desire to take away from any company the rights it has legally acquired from any legislative body with power to grant them; and when he declared that the rights of one company, the Montreal Terminal, might be injuriously affected by the amendment he accepted ten days ago, my hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Barker) suggested that he should make a special provision to protect the rights of that company. We have not the slightest desire to interfere with whatever rights the Terminal has legally obtained, and join with the hon. gentleman in protecting them, but we thought—and the hon. gentleman will not contradict the statement—that if the amendment he presented to section 184 had been allowed to go, every municipality in the country would have been at the mercy of the railway commission and every municipal right might have been taken away by the action of the commissioners. The hon. minister before recess made reference to the city of Toronto. I do not know whether he intended to be sarcastic or flattering, but I would make this suggestion. I would, on behalf of the mayor and corporation and citizens of Toronto, invite him to come to that city and take a trip over its tram-car system. All the provisions in connection with that system were prepared by the engineer and solicitor of the city, the contract was drawn by the city attorney, the system was laid down on the conditions imposed by the city, and we have the best street railway system in America to-day ; and I think that the municipality gets a greater revenue from it, considering its mileage and traffic, than any other municipality does from any other street railway. I do not intend to make a long speech and be put in the category of other hon. gentlemen whom the hon. minister has chastised and stigmatised most unfairly. If the amendment which he suggested to section 184 became law, the privileges we are enjoying in Toronto to-day would practically disappear.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

Mr. CLARKE. Will the hon. gentleman permit me to tell him that I know something about the situation in Toronto, and I have the temerity to say that I know as much at least about it as the hon. gentleman. Let me tell him that if power were given the board of commissioners to allow other tramways to come into the city of Toronto, the value of the franchise we have there now would be destroyed. Because that franchise was made valuable by the fact that the company leasing it has the exclusive right to operate an electric car service into and through the city.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Does the hon. gentleman know how many companies are authorized by this parliament to lay down street railway lines in Toronto ?

Mr. CLARKE. I do not know of any company.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. In that case this section would not have any application to Toronto whatever.

Mr. CLARKE. I do know that attempts are being made, and have been successfully made, to get legislation through this parliament declaring works to be for the general advantage of Canada, which are purely and entirely provincial in their nature. I want to tell the hon. gentleman that the sole object of these promoters in coming to this parliament and having these enterprises declared to be for the general advantage of Canada is to escape the obligations which the province and the municipalities would impose upon them. No one knows that better than the hon. minister himself. If the right to operate street railways is to be declared for the general advantage of Canada, where will legislation of this kind stop ?

It is a prostitution of the powers and prerogatives of the parliament of Canada to pass such legislation. Would the hon. gentleman seriously argue that a group of railways around the city of Montreal, Toronto, Hamilton, or London would be a work for the general advantage of Canada and should be incorporated by this parliament ?

Mr. WADE. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to ask him a question ?

Mr. CLARKE. When I get through, my hon. friend can follow. And I would prefer that he would allow me to continue my line of argument.

Mr. COWAN. I do not blame him, for not wanting to get an answer.

Mr. CLARKE. If the hon. gentleman insists, I shall give way to him.

Mr. WADE. I would ask my hon. friend, in the most respectful manner, whether he does not think that the proper time to guard against those things is when the particular charter is before parliament ? And is it not right that we should have a General Railway Act to deal with the different railways that are chartered by this parliament ?

Mr. CLARKE. The hon. gentleman twelve months ago asked me the same question, when I was making an emphatic protest against the incorporation of the Toronto Niagara Power Company. I tried to point out to him that all railways declared to be works for the general advantage of Canada will come under the purview of this commission. The hon. gentleman will admit that in this I am right. The tram-car lines come here seeking incorporation and are declared to be for the general advantage of Canada, and the control and operation of those lines will come under the jurisdiction of the board of commission.

Mr. WADE. That is not the question I asked.

Mr. CLARKE. We are trying to protect the rights of the municipalities by the amendment to clause 184. How did that clause read before the hon. minister proposed his further amendment this afternoon ? It read as follows :

> The railway may be carried upon, along or across any existing highway upon leave therefor having been first obtained from the board as hereinafter provided. But the board shall not grant leave to any company to carry any street railway or tramway or any railway operated or to be operated as a street railway or tramway along any highway which is within the limits of any city or incorporated town until the company shall have first obtained the consent therefor by a by-law of the municipal authority of such city or incorporated town.

Though I am not a lawyer, I take it that if that clause were permitted to remain in that shape, these tram-car outfits which are declared to be works for the general advantage of Canada, could not go along the streets of a municipality at all without first obtaining the consent of the municipality. That is our contention. Have we not the right to demand that protection for these particular municipalities and for all municipalities ? Is it not a reasonable proposition that where a great number of human beings are assembled in one city, one hundred and fifty, two hundred or two hundred and fifty thousand people, that their rights in the highways shall be protected ? Is this parliament more jealous of the rights of railway promoters and tramroad promoters and exploiters than it is of the rights of the people ?

Mr. COWAN. Has anybody disputed that?

Mr. CLARKE. My hon. friend from Annapolis (Mr. Wade) I understood, disputed that.

Mr. WADE. Not at all.

Mr. CLARKE. Then, what was he disputing ?

Mr. COWAN. The Toronto and Niagara Power Company was not a railway company at all, but was absolutely a power company ; and the rights of municipalities were guarded in the Private Bills Committee before the Bill came back to this House.

Mr. CLARKE. My hon. friend has contradicted the statement I have made. Let me draw attention to the discussion that took place on the Toronto and Niagara Power Company. I drew attention, when the Bill was in the committee stage, to the fact that the gentlemen who were asking for incorporation as the Toronto and Niagara Power Company were, probably by coincidence, probably by circumstances, the owners of the Toronto Railway Company, and also of the Suburban Railway companies that it is now proposed to amalgamate with the Toronto and Hamilton Company. And I drew attention to the fact that it was only reasonable that the municipalities through which the power company passed should have the right to obtain power, and that the power company should sell it to them without discrimination ; because I pointed out that the franchises of the tramroads would fall in, and unless the company was obliged to sell power without discrimination the value of the franchises would be destroyed. And when we asked that this should be done, hon. gentlemen opposite voted against that simple proposition. Twelve months have elapsed since that charter was given. And now we find that the gentlemen who got that charter and their associates are asking now for a charter for a railway, to be declared a work for the general advantage of Canada, to amalgamate not only the suburban railways, but the Toronto and Hamilton Railway in one company, and to override by legislation from this parliament the obligations, the duties, the conditions which the legislature of the province of Ontario imposed upon them and which the municipalities have imposed upon them. This is our position. It is a sound position, and we are not going to recede from it. Hon. gentlemen opposite may think that we are wrong. They have a right to their opinion. But it is surely our bounden duty, at every stage when an opportunity offers, to protest against the invasion of municipal rights, when we believe that that invasion is not in the public interest. The hon. minister very courteously amended this clause, No. 184, when it was before us ten or twelve days ago. The amendment the hon. gentleman agreed to did not go so far as that I suggested to him. I desired that the municipalities—all the municipalities rural or urban—should have their rights protected. The hon. gentleman confined it to the exclusion of tramroads from incorporated towns and cities. So far so good. But I say that the rights of all should be protected, that rural municipalities had rights that ought not to be disregarded, and that the object of this parliament should be to protect those rights as against the claims of railway and tramroad promoters. One word more before I resume my seat with regard to the position the city of Toronto occupies. I have already said that the franchise of the street railway belongs to the city of Toronto, but it has been leased for a period of years. The citizens of Toronto have not objected to the entrance of suburban trams. In fact, we have been trying to get them in. We are building a market at an expense of more than a quarter of a million dollars to store country produce, to facilitate the business they are expected to do. But, while we want the suburban tram-car lines to come in, we want them to enter upon the lines of railway already existing, and we want them to come in upon conditions imposed by the city of Toronto. The difference that has existed between the promoters of the Toronto and Hamilton railroad and the corporation of Toronto has been that, while the citizens of Toronto desire that whatever agreement they make for the entry of the suburban roads should terminate with the lease of the Toronto franchise, the proprietors of these suburban roads had the audacity to ask that they should have the right in perpetuity to run their lines into the city of Toronto. Was that a fair proposition? And, not being able to obtain from the provincial legislature, or from the municipality of the city of Toronto, these privileges, these unfair and unjust privileges, they come here and ask this parliament to incorporate them as a work for the general advantage of Canada and seek to override not only the municipal, but provincial rights. That is a statement of facts, and I challenge contradiction of it; and I say we are only doing our duty as members of this opposition in raising our voices, however feebly and ineffectively, in favour of maintaining municipal and provincial rights and against this parliament being made the means of incorporating a purely local concern and declaring it to be for the general advantage of Canada. My hon. friend from West York (Mr. Campbell) said that the municipalities about Toronto were in favour of the entrance of the Toronto and Hamilton Railway.

Mr. COWAN. That is not law yet.

Mr. CLARKE. I only refer to it as the hon. gentleman referred to it. I only want to say that the city of Toronto has not interfered, that it has left the suburban municipalities free to make any arrangements they thought good, and I think the least the city of Toronto has a right to expect is that the suburban municipalities will allow the city to make its own agreement. The principal value of this franchise is in the right of access to the city of Toronto; and if that is a valuable franchise the city of Toronto is the best judge as to what value to place upon it and what terms to exact from those to whom it is conceded.

Mr. COWAN. I do not propose to follow the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Clarke) in the long diatribe——

Mr. CLARKE. Diatribe?

Mr. COWAN. Yes, diatribe. I have chosen the word advisedly. I do not propose to follow the hon. gentleman in the long diatribe which he has chosen to inflict upon us here to-night concerning the street railways of Toronto. He has done so notwithstanding that he knows that that matter will come up to-morrow evening. But I may go one step further and tell the hon. gentleman that he never discovered the Bill known as the Toronto and Hamilton Railway was something that was going to interfere with the rights of Toronto until it had its second reading, and after it had passed the Railway Committee. The hon. member for Toronto was silent as a clam in its shell while that was going on until the press drew the matter to his attention. When the question of the tramways and electric railways of Toronto come before us, we shall be pleased to listen to what the hon. gentleman has to say upon the subject. But now we are discussing a general railway commission Bill, yet he wishes to discuss this question of provincial electric railways, something entirely beyond the jurisdiction of this parliament, something which I hope, and which hon. members on this side of the House hope will not be dealt with here, but will be left to the jurisdiction of the province.

Mr. LANCASTER. Why, the Bill before us deals with them in half a dozen sections.

Mr. COWAN. I admit that the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) has taken a great deal of pains and a great deal of care in connection with this matter, but I must tell him in this, as in most other sections of the Bill, he is entirely wrong. The Bill does not propose to deal with provincial electric railways——

Mr. LANCASTER. All I want to say to the hon. member for South Essex (Mr. Cowan) is that he had better read the Bill.

Mr. COWAN. And all I want to say to the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) is that if he were to read the Bill half a dozen times more his ideas would be quite as beclouded as they are after the reading he has given it. The hon. member for West Toronto tells us that the Bill to incorporate the Toronto and Niagara Company usurped the rights of the streets of the city of Toronto to the absolute disregard of the rights of the citizens or the corporation of that city. I desire to draw the attention of the hon. gentleman to section 13 of the Bill of last year, which was passed before the Private Bills Committee and afterwards was passed in this House without amendment, though the hon. gentleman made a speech in connection with it. This, be it remembered, was not a tramway company, but it was for the purpose of transmitting power from Niagara Falls to the city of Toronto to supply the city, and the effect of the Bill was to give the right to erect poles and to do other works to carry out the purposes of the company. There was this express clause put in :

> Provided the same are so constructed as not to incommode the public use of streets, highways or public places or to impede the access to any house or other building erected in the vicinity thereof, or to interrupt the navigation of any waters, but the company shall be responsible for all damages which it causes in carrying out or maintaining any of its said works.

So that in the Bill which the hon. gentleman held up as an example, the very safeguards were put in which now at last he wakes up to say ought to be inserted in all Bills in which the public interest is concerned.

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not propose to travel out of the record as the hon. member for Essex (Mr. Cowan) has done, but to deal directly with the question before the committee. Now I would assure the minister that I do not intend to make a speech to circulate in my constituency, notwithstanding the statement made by the member for Essex. The amendment that was adopted by this committee to section 184, reads as follows :

> But the board shall not grant leave to any company to carry any street railway or tramway, or any railway operated or to be operated as a street railway or tramway, along any highway which is within the limits of any city or incorporated town.

Since the minister has given us an assurance that he is enlarging the powers of municipalities, I wish to ask him why he does not give the same power to townships and villages that he gives to cities and incorporated towns. Now that is what my constituents desire should be done. I have a special request that the minister be asked to extend that privilege, or right, or power, to other municipalities as well as incorporated cities and towns. If he will accede to my request, I shall make no further protest with regard to this section. I realize that he will only be granting what is our right, and I contend that the minor municipalities, the incorporated villages and townships have the same right to protection for their streets and highways as the towns and cities. Now I hope and trust that the minister, since he is endeavouring to meet the views of the committee, will enlarge the amendment by adding the words 'other municipalities.'

Mr. WADE. I asked the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Clarke) whether he did not think that the proper time to raise these objections in regard to street railways was when the charters for them were before the House. Was not that the time to ask that such conditions and provisions should be thrown around the charters as were necessary in order to protect the interests of the cities and towns ? Certainly all hon. gentlemen must recognize that we are to-night attempting to frame a general railway law, one that will apply to all railways that are in existence to-day, and to all railways that may come into existence in the future, and to street railways that may be chartered by this parliament. Now I was astonished at some of the speeches made by hon. gentlemen opposite. A stranger listening to them would suppose we were passing this clause for the first time, and he would be surprised to know that ever since Canada had a Railway Act, and long before the Dominion existed, a similar Railway Act existed in the old province of Ontario and the other provinces, in which substantially the same clause was contained as we are now discussing. Section 183 of the General Railway Act as amended in 1888, contained substantially the same provision, by which a railway company can cross a highway or, by leave of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, can go along that highway. Now, Sir, I do not take a second place to the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) or to any other hon. gentleman on that side of the House, or upon this, in my desire to protect the rights of the provinces and of the municipalities. Nobody has ever raised any such question before. These hon. gentlemen are setting up a man of straw for the purpose of knocking it down. I want to ask the hon. member for East Grey if, during all those twenty-five years he has been sitting in this House, he ever raised his voice to say one word against this section 183 as it is contained in the Railway Act ?

Mr. SPROULE. I can tell the hon. gentleman that twenty-one or twenty-two years ago I fought that question as vigorously as I could, when it was proposed by the same means to take over the Toronto, Grey and Bruce Railway. I drew attention to the fact that it was a provincial railway that had been subsidized to the tune of $300,000. In one of the by-laws were contained certain provisions that were regarded as valuable for municipalities, and if that railway was amalgamated with a Dominion railway and declared to be for the general advantage of Canada, it took away provincial rights, and I fought it as vigorously as I could, as I have done many times since.

Mr. WADE. Now I wonder if the hon. gentleman has satisfied himself that he has answered my question. What I asked him was this, if he could tell me that he ever stood in his place in parliament and uttered one word against this section 183 which has been in the Railway Act ever since Canada had a Railway Act, as infringing upon the rights of provinces or municipalities. That is what I want to get from him.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not remember whether I was present at the time that Act was passed. But I say that from time to time when private Bills were brought before parliament infringing upon those rights, I objected as strenuously as I knew how.

Mr. WADE. There is an Act upon our statute-book which is substantially the same as the section we are now trying to enact. There is this difference, that under the old section as it stood it was necessary, before you could run along a highway, to have the consent of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council. Instead of that tribunal we now have the board and it is upon that that hon. gentlemen are making all this talk about guarding the rights of municipalities.

Mr. SPROULE. There was no Railway Committee of the Privy Council for years after the question was debated in this House.

Mr. WADE. The hon. gentleman is certainly taking a marvellous position. We have had the old Act amended time and time again. Let me pin him down to this that in 1888 the whole railway legislation was consolidated. Did he, when the Act was going through in 1888 and when he was upon this side of the House, rise up and say anything about infringing upon provincial rights, or city rights, or municipal rights ? Did he not sit in his place and give a silent vote, or if he spoke, did he not speak in favour of it ?

Mr. SPROULE. Never.

Mr. WADE. We, upon this side of the House, are getting somewhat tired of this kind of talk. It is a fact, and hon. gentlemen know it, that before a railway can be located over the country the company must come forward with their plans showing the location and get these plans approved and if these plans show a line running along the street, before they can be put into execution, they must have the approval of the board. There is a tribunal provided for by this Bill which will listen to all parties and decide as to whether it is proper to allow a railway to pass along a street in any municipality. I can imagine that in 99 cases out of 100 cases the railway company will not be allowed to build their line along the highway, but in the 99th case, or perhaps in the 999th case, it will be absolutely necessary that the railway should be carried along the highway or a street because there would be no other feasible way by which it could be carried along. Then, I ask hon. gentlemen as a reasonable proposition : Must not this parliament have the power to enact a law by which a charter can be carried into effect that is granted by this House ? The speech of the hon. member for East Grey would lead us to suppose, in fact, he has made the solemn declaration, that he would wrest from these companies all the rights they have of crossing highways under the provisions of this section. That is a bold declaration to make. It may be one that will bring to him some influence in the rural districts but I am sure——

Mr. SPROULE. I never made such a declaration.

Mr. WADE. I am glad to know I misunderstood the hon. gentleman and that he will not take such a position now. The hon. gentleman will lead us to suppose that this parliament has no powers. Surely, that is a peculiar contention. The parliament of Canada has the right to declare what are works for the general benefit of Canada. The parliament of Canada has the right to pass a general railway law, parliament has the right to incorporate railway companies and I must take this occasion for saying that I regret that hon. gentlemen opposite have so much to say about this charter jobbing and of people who are around grabbing up all these franchises. I cannot imagine what sort of men are conducting these affairs in the province of Ontario. We hear nothing of that kind in our province down by the sea and I cannot believe that the people who are organizing these companies are quite as bad as their friends over there paint them. If we have the right to enact a general railway law and if we have the right to charter railway companies must we not possess the right of saying that they can build their railways ? I would call the attention of hon. gentlemen to the present situation where it is proposed that a railway shall be built from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Suppose that we enacted here a provision by which that railway company, before it could cross a municipality, had to get the consent of that municipality.

Mr. LANCASTER. No one has suggested that they should be prevented from crossing a municipality.

Mr. WADE. I do not want to put you wrong and you are not going to put me wrong.

Mr. LANCASTER. Do not put up a man of straw.

Mr. WADE. If you are going to give a municipality this right for which the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) is contending, then you must be logical and you cannot allow a railway to cross a municipality until they have obtained the consent of that municipality. That is the logical conclusion of what he said.

Mr. LANCASTER. No.

Mr. WADE. The hon. gentleman repeated that.

Mr. LANCASTER. We never contended that.

Mr. WADE. Would it be right or fair that a municipality could come in and say : You must not pass along a street of this municipality ? It may be the only possible place where they can pass through that municipality but the municipality will say : No, you cannot pass through, you will have to go around. Here is a provision which should be exercised only in extreme cases and we have appointed a tribunal to judge and determine as to when an extreme case arose and with such a provision I cannot see what my hon. friends have to complain of.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Is it the pleasure of the committee that the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals shall have leave to withdraw his first amendment to section 184 that the following words be inserted 'incorporated after the passing of this Act' ?

Amendment withdrawn.

Mr. SPROULE. I would not waste the time of the committee by making any further observations regarding this subject if it were not for a statement or two made by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals and by the hon. member for Annapolis (Mr. Wade). The hon. member for Annapolis has thought fit to read the hon. member for East Grey a lecture because he happened to be in this House years ago and did not object to a clause in the Railway Act which was passed at that time, when so far as my knowledge goes he was not present. But he said these very same grievances existed in 1888 and that they existed even before confederation.

Mr. WADE. I did not use the word 'grievances.' Do not put words into my mouth.

Mr. SPROULE. I say these grievances exist to-day Why was it that the attention of parliament was not directed to the question then as it is to-day ?

Mr. COWAN. You were here; we were not.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the matter with the hon. member for South Essex (Mr. Cowan) ?

Mr. COWAN. I say that you were here and we were not.

Mr. SPROULE. It is impossible for the hon. gentleman to keep quiet. It was because of the fact that we had no electric railways and no street railways then in Canada. We had none of the troubles then that we have to-day.

Mr. WADE. No street railways in 1888 ?

Mr. SPROULE. I have answered the hon. member. I do not know whether he wants to be facetious or foolish. He can play either part to his heart's content. At the time when these discussions took place regarding provincial rights we had not street railways or electric railways to any great extent in Canada. They have grown up since that. At first when we had electric railways they were incorporated by the provinces, but since that it happened that the owners of these railway corporations came here for rights that had been denied by the provinces. They came here to secure rights that they could not get from the provinces and then they were taken out of the control of the provinces.

Mr. COWAN. What electric railway in this Dominion has been incorporated by this parliament ?

Mr. SPROULE. I am going to address myself to the committee, not to the hon. member (Mr. Cowan) who seems so particularly anxious, whenever I am on my feet, to interrupt me. It is something that I have never done to him. I have had quite enough of it from that source, and if I must say what will be very disagreeable, I will say it. I can tell the hon. gentleman that. At that time we had very little trouble from this source, but when we began to take over these railway corporations and give them the powers that the federal parliament alone could give, strong objection was raised to it. Although the evil had not grown to the present extent, they were strenuously fought by members on both sides of this House, and I regret to say that the contention of these gentlemen did not prevail. Of late years we have in two different ways invaded provincial rights ; one by taking over the charter rights conferred by the provinces and declaring them to be for the general advantage of Canada, and the other, by this parliament giving Acts of incorporation to roads that under the provisions of the British North America Act should be under the jurisdiction of the provinces. It is because of the growing tendency in this direction that there is a strong demand for the protection of provincial rights. The Minister of Railways said that if every one was like me it would be an unhappy day for the corporations. I did not propose to take away vested rights that were properly obtained, but I did say that I would have no hesitation in taking rights away from a corporation that were improperly obtained, and I repeat that statement on my full responsibility as a member of parliament. Suppose a man steals your horse and sells it to an innocent party, you have the right to take that horse back when you find it in the possession of the third party, and if these corporations become improperly possessed of public property, the public should have a right to claim them back. I have no respect for vested rights improperly acquired, and I am prepared at any time to restore these rights to their proper owners. I commend to the judgment of this House the amendment proposed by the member for Toronto, because it confirms to corporations the rights they have properly and legally secured.

Mr. WADE. The hon. gentleman is an old member of this House, and I am but a new member. Might I ask him if he was in the House supporting the government that proposed to wrest from the provinces the inland fisheries and the inland reserves?

Mr. SPROULE. That is foreign to the question we are discussing. It was declared by many legal authorities that we could not by the mere statement that a work was for the general advantage of Canada, take away provincial rights, and many of us allowed that question to be fought out in the courts. But there has since been a decision of the courts that we can take away these rights by such a declaration, and in view of that, we think it is time to stop it. I am consistent in my whole parliamentary career for I have always fought on the same lines as I am fighting to-night.

Mr. COWAN. It must be amusing to the members of this House to hear the member for East Grey, that encyclopedia of all parliamentary knowledge in his own judgment, saying for the first time in twenty-one years that he was now in favour of defending provincial rights. For the last twenty-one long years he has been wandering in the wilderness, and the greater part of that time supporting a government that constantly invaded provincial rights.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Come back doctor.

Mr. COWAN. I am not surprised that the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) should leave the Chamber. I rose to ask him whether he referred to street railways being incorporated by this parliament ? When he was speaking I asked him for the name of an electric railway that had been incorporated in the province of Ontario by this parliament, and the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule), shielding himself behind his rights, refused to answer, and stated that I was making an absurd interruption.

An hon. MEMBER. And then he runs away.

Mr. COWAN. I rose in my place now for the purpose of addressing a few remarks to the member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) and the brave and gallant gentleman left the Chamber. For twenty-one years he was the enemy of provincial rights in this House, when men on this side who have grown grey in the service of their country were fighting the battles of provincial rights. For twenty-one years the hon. gentleman from East Grey was silent and dumb as an oyster in his shell, and voted every time against provincial rights in this House, but now at last he has suddenly found the light and he has become a champion of the provinces. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) saw fit to draw a comparison about a man stealing a horse, and I can only say that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) reminded me of a story which comes from the far off state of Kansas.

A new member of the legislature of that state after listening to a long speech void of either interest or merit arose, and in a nasal twang replied as follows :—' Mr. Speaker, I have listened for the last hour or hour and a half to the hon. gentleman, not that what he said was worth listening to or the manner in which he said it particularly interesting, but because I could not prevent my auricular organs from performing their natural functions within a reasonable distance of a noise of that description, and the longer I listened the more I was irresistibly driven to the conclusion that the honourable gentleman had started his mouth agoing and had then gone away and left it.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. It seems to me that there are one or two important misapprehensions with regard to this clause. As I understand the question which has been raised just now, it is a very important one. There is no gentleman on this side of the House contending that a railway as distinguished from a street railway shall not be under the control of the board. I was calling the attention of the hon. member for Annapolis (Mr. Wade) to what I thought was a misapprehension on his part. I regard this as one of the most important propositions under the Bill, because it effects the jurisdiction of this House, the rights of this House, the rights of the provinces and the rights of the municipalities. As I understand it, no one on this side of the House objects to that part of the Bill which is the same as the old law. The hon. gentleman stated the old law correctly, as passed in 1888, I think, that a railway cannot be constructed along a highway of a municipality without an order from the Railway Committee of the Privy Council. That was the tribunal established to deal with such matters, after a very exhaustive inquiry by a commission presided over by Sir Alexander Galt, and it has remained the law until this Bill was introduced, under which we are shifting the authority to the board of railway commissioners. It is not contended on this side of the House that that should not be made the law. The amendment proposed relates entirely to street railways. My hon. friend from Annapolis accused somebody of putting up men of straw to knock them down, and I think he put up one without intending to do so. Possibly he misunderstood the hon. gentleman on this side of the House, because I can assure him that my hon. friends on this side, those who are old members, from the care and trouble that many of them have taken in discussing this Bill, are most anxious to have a proper Bill.

Mr. HEYD. What does the hon. gentleman want? I have been listening for two hours and a half to try to find out what hon. gentlemen opposite are driving at.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. I doubt if I have spoken an hour in the House during this session or two hours during the last session. I want to assure the minister that my hon. friends on this side of the House are discussing the Bill with a desire to improve it. They may be wrong in some instances, and I am free to say that with some of their contentions I have disagreed; and I may disagree with them in regard to some other matters. The difficulty seems to arise from the powers to be exercised by railways proper as contra-distinguished from street railways. The hon. member for Annapolis seemed to misunderstand that.

Mr. WADE. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to interject a remark? I am sure I take very great pleasure in listening to anything the hon. member for South Norfolk (Hon. Mr. Tisdale) says on any question pertaining to railways. I know that his sole desire in discussing this Bill is to make it as good an Act as he possibly can; and I believe that every hon. gentleman on this side of the House will agree with me in that. But what I stated was that this parliament has not yet incorporated a street railway company, as far as I know. It is a question which will have to be determined by this parliament, whether it will incorporate street railways or not. But if this parliament does in its wisdom see fit to incorporate street railways, then I submit that the control of these railways and the regulating of their running and crossing must be under this board. I submit to the hon. gentleman if that is not a fair proposition.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. I quite admit that; but the hon. member for Annapolis went further than that. He charged gentlemen on this side of the House——

Mr. WADE. Not the present speaker.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. If I understood the hon. gentleman rightly, he charged the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) with having been in the House when a law was passed by the Conservative government, and now going back on it and objecting to it. The hon. member for East Grey is not objecting to it any more than he did when it was passed. The hon. member for East Grey has always held what I called radical opinions on this subject, and to my certain recollection he opposed his own party at different times in connection with that Act. But it was the law, and we on this side of the House are not objecting to it. It is satisfactory that both sides of the House can concur thus far. The hon. gentleman for West Toronto (Mr. Clarke), who spoke so ably and so strongly about municipal rights, did not object to the railway commission having control in Toronto or outside of it over railways proper, but he does object strongly to it having control over street railways. I go with the hon. member for East Grey this far. When the Act was passed in 1888, we hardly heard anything about street railways. This country has progressed, however, and electric railways have grown up rapidly and have become important, without the question as to what jurisdiction we do exercise or should exercise over them having been raised. But that has become a very important question, and I am bound to say for myself, that for some time I was not impressed as much as I have been lately, since the discussion of this Bill has arisen, as to the exercise of the power of declaring the work to be for the general advantage of Canada. I understand that under the constitution we have power to do that if we see fit. I believe that the British North America Act gives that power to us absolutely, trusting to this House not to exercise it improperly; because under our constitution, as I understand it, the right of eminent domain is relegated largely to this parliament, to the extent that we have at least concurrent jurisdiction with the provinces on many of these questions, and this is said to be one of them. I do not understand that that is challenged on either side of the House. This question of street railways has become important, particularly in the larger towns of Ontario, and we must pay attention to it and investigate it. The provincial legislature has sent a memorial to this House, finding fault with the manner in which we have seemed to exercise that important power. Now, I am one of those who are not willing to abnegate one title of our power. At the same time, when we have a discretionary power, of course we must be careful and reasonable in exercising it. This has become an important question, and I think both sides of the House are willing to consider it, and I have no doubt that the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals has been troubled a good deal in the preparation of this new Act, which had to do two important things. One is the establishment of a railway commission and the other defining the powers and jurisdiction of that commission, particularly with regard to electric railways.

This question of electric tramways and their relations with the municipalities is a difficult one for to deal with and possibly may require to be dealt with by a general Act applying especially to them alone. Evidently the hon. minister is not disposed to go as far in excluding electric tramways from municipalities without their first obtaining the consent of these municipalities as hon. gentlemen on this side desire, and we shall therefore have to be more careful when special Acts come up to see that the rights of the municipalities are in each case protected, but there is no doubt that there must be some tribunal to decide disputes between these companies and the municipalities in cases where the companies have been incorporated by this parliament. That tribunal must necessarily be the railway commission. Such disputes have frequently come before the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, and I have never known a case in which the municipality was not content to abide by its decision. There is no doubt a great deal in the contention that these tramways should be left exclusively within the jurisdiction of the local authorities, and the fact that the hon. minister is not bringing in a general measure to deal with them leads me to believe that he is disposed to take that view himself, but of course we cannot abrogate entirely our right to interfere. I am in accord with the hon. minister in protecting the rights that we have granted, but I am sorry that he could not go the length in protecting the municipalities desired on this side of the House.

Mr. WADE. I would like the hon. gentleman to answer the question I put to him. I am asking for information only. Suppose this parliament does incorporate an electric tramway, does he not think that that tramway should come under the operation of the General Railway Act of Canada ?

Mr. LANCASTER. I am sorry that the hon. member for South Essex (Mr. Cowan) has left the Chamber, as I was anxious to enlighten him with regard to the question he put some time ago. That hon. gentleman however seldom favours us with his presence for any length of time, but contents himself with coming in now and then and by his interruptions seeking to turn our parliamentary proceedings into a farce. He undertook to show his superior knowledge to mine by pointing out that the electric railways were not dealt with in this Bill at all, and he did not give me a chance to set him right. Why, we have taken up nearly the whole day in discussing an amendment of the hon. Minister of Railways which deals exclusively with electric companies, and further let me draw the attention of the hon. gentleman to sections 5 and 7 which also deal with electric companies. And section 7, as I have said, brings all these electric railways within the scope of these provisions. Perhaps some hon. gentleman will inform the hon. member for South Essex that when he comes in to interrupt legislation with very doubtful contributions to the debates of the House—perhaps, in kindness to me, they will inform him—that he should be more careful in his interruptions in the future and should learn something of what he intends to talk about. The hon. member for Annapolis (Mr. Wade) sneers at us on this side as champions of provincial rights. I do not know whether he means by that that he is a better champion of provincial rights than we are. I assume that he is not going to interfere with provincial rights improperly. And I would point out to him what he would have known had he been attending to his duty here for the past week or two. I pointed it out to the Minister of Railways. The general Railway Act of Ontario, the Electric Railway Act, and the Street Railway Act, of that province, all dealing with the subject here touched upon contain provisions by which it is expressly enacted that no railway shall pass upon or along any highway, but may only cross the same, without the consent of the municipality. If the hon. member for Annapolis wants to have the legislation of this parliament directly in conflict with that of the largest province of the Dominion—I do not pretend to say whether the legislation of his own province is the same in this respect as that of Ontario, though I think it likely that it is—if he wants the legislation of this House to be directly in conflict with that of the largest province on a question that has been prima facie delegated to the provinces, the right to control the highways, of course, the hon. gentleman must be left to his choice. Under the circumstances, I need not weary the House longer with the discussion of the argument of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wade). I wish to impress upon the minister the absolute inconsistency of the law as he proposes to leave it in saying that the electric railways shall not be permitted to deal with the board without the consent of the municipalities, so far as cities and towns are concerned, but that that consent shall not be required in the villages and townships. And I would desire, notwithstanding what the minister said a little while ago and notwithstanding the insinuation he made (and which may have included me) to urge this point once more upon him. The hon. minister insinuated that we on this side were talking too much, and that hon. members on his own side accomplished more by seeing him privately with regard to proposed amendments. I do not think it is our duty to go to the hon. minister privately to ask if he will agree to have legislation amended. I think it was better to bring the matter before the House and get the combined wisdom of the two hundred and fourteen members of this Chamber upon our arguments, and not attempt 'Star' chamber legislation in regard to such an important Act as this is. I doubt whether good would be accomplished by what the hon. minister thinks ought to be done, and I think it is more charitable to him and better for the Dominion that we should assume that in speaking as he did about us and about hon. gentlemen on his own side he was only joking, for he has made no amendments in the interest of the people that did not come from this side of the House.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am going to ask that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again. But, before doing so, I wish to make an observation. The hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) and the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster), I think, were present when this subject was under discussion before. They urged very strongly—I know the hon. member for Lincoln did at least—what the hon. member for Halton is now advocating. That point was thoroughly discussed. I think it is only a fair claim I am making upon the committee when I say that, when we have had an exhaustive discussion upon any one question, and a full opportunity to consider it, and when that question has been disposed of, it is not entirely reasonable to present the same arguments again and ask to have the subject reconsidered. My hon. friend, I think, coincided with the view I then stated that, so far as electric railways are concerned, after very careful consideration I concluded that we might properly make provisions that they should not be allowed to operate in any city or incorporated town unless with the consent of the municipal authority.

Mr. LANCASTER. I think I heard all that the hon. gentleman said on that subject. I know he said it would make it apply to cities and towns. But I have never yet been able to get him to state a reason for not making it apply to incorporated villages and rural municipalities.

Mr. LANCASTER.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think I must have stated my reasons; I must have replied to the hon. gentleman's question. I did not think it desirable to give to all municipalities the same control that we were giving to the councils of towns and cities. We were giving them this power without any appeal at all. The fiat or decision of the municipal council of a city or incorporated town is made final. I can well understand that in the case of a populous centre, the streets ought not to be used except under some such conditions as we have laid down here. But when it comes to country districts, many of them sparsely settled, the case is different. It may be a great convenience to people living at long distances apart to have a street railway to facilitate communication, and I do not think it would be reasonable or proper that any one of these townships through which a railway was seeking to have the privilege of running should have the power to hold up the street railway company. I think that that would be an extreme power to give without any right of appeal. That is my reason, and I still think the reason is a sufficient one. Hon. members are debating this question as though we were incorporating electric railways between towns and cities in vast numbers. We are not doing anything of the sort, and I hope we are not going to. As I said before, I shall lend my voice as far as I can to refuse charters to these purely local companies wherever they come from. I do not think we should pass such charters. There are very few instances where such incorporations have been granted. I think it would be difficult to name half a dozen in Ontario, and I do not know of any in the eastern provinces. There may be one or two in the province of Quebec.

Mr. SPROULE. There are several in the province of Ontario. There is one that was from Port Perry to the Georgian bay, to Kincardine, Meaford, Owen Sound, South Lambton and Durham. There is another radial railway around the city of Guelph, another that extends to Galt and Preston. These are all under Dominion charters.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think the hon. gentleman is not up to my limit yet, and probably he has named all he can think of. Now these people ought to have gone to the provincial legislature. I would send them there. Therefore, I hope the committee will see its way to allow this clause to pass as a proposed amendment.

Mr. SPROULE. I would ask the minister why he excludes villages, though many incorporated villages are larger than some incorporated towns ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. An incorporated village might cover a large area, and yet have a sparse population, a much less population than an incorporated town.

Mr. INGRAM. I rise to dispute a statement that has been frequently made, that this parliament has never granted any electric railway charters.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Surely the hon. gentleman is not quoting me as having said that ?

Mr. INGRAM. No, it was the hon. member for Annapolis (Mr. Wade), and I think the hon. member for South Essex (Mr. Cowan) who stated that frequently to-night. I want to point out that as far back as 1899 this parliament granted a charter to the Montreal Island Belt Line Railway, and to change its name to the Montreal Terminal Railway Company. In this charter hon. gentlemen will find these words : 'may be operated by electricity only.' So here is an electric railway charter, notwithstanding the statement made by these hon. gentlemen. I would draw the minister's attention to the fact that more lines of railway are being constructed in this country that use electricity and other motive powers than steam, and it is their intention to carry freight and passengers, and to interchange freight and passengers with railways that are under the General Railway Act of Canada. The minister has already conceded legislation in his Bill to meet the case I have quoted ; therefore, I say hon. gentlemen on this side of the House are quite justified in using the language they did with regard to electric railway lines.

Mr. HENDERSON. I trust the minister will pardon me for pressing my amendment. I said, when on my feet before, that I had been requested to ask the minister to extend the same favour to minor municipalities as had been extended in this section to cities and incorporated towns. I will read a resolution passed at a meeting held in the town of Oakville, in the county I have the honour to represent, on the 24th of June last :

> Moved, by Colonel Kerns, reeve of Burlington, seconded by Mr. Bryans, reeve of Etobicoke, that the amendment of the honourable the Minister of Railways not allowing electric railways to enter upon any street or highway in any city or incorporated town be extended to include all municipalities.

That is the request I referred to. Therefore, I beg to move, seconded by Mr. Blain, that section 184 as amended be further amended by adding after the word 'town' where it occurs in said amendment, the words 'or other municipality.'

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. member evidently is under the impression that all any of these companies would have to do would be to go to the Board of Railway Commissioners and they would get permission to enter upon the streets of municipalities. Now that is contrary to all experience. They do not get this permission except in cases which are made abundantly clear. If the people in any locality petition against it, I do not think there is any board of railway commissioners that would give permission to a railway company to enter upon the streets of a municipality unless it were very necessary that such permission should be granted. Take for instance, a case where a street railway or an electric railway traversed through several rural townships or villages. Supposing that there was one municipality at one end which was in favour of granting the company this power and petitioned for it, and supposing that at the other end another municipality was also in favour of giving this permission to the company, but that between these two was a third municipality which was opposed, which for some reason or other declined to fall into line with the other two, and said : We don't want this tramway running upon our streets, we won't give them permission. Would it be right that one township or one village should be able to hold up the whole enterprise ? If an instance of this kind occurred, and the law was changed, as the hon. gentleman suggests, there would be no remedy ; if it occurred under the existing provisions of our Bill, there would be a remedy, because they could go to the board and show the board what the difficulty was, and the board would have the power to decide the question. Now in all these cases there ought to be some controlling power, some independent tribunal, which would consider such a difficulty from an independent standpoint and pass upon it. I do not think it would be advisable to carry this clause, and, therefore, I hope the hon. gentleman will not press it. If he does I will have to ask the committee not to accept it.

Mr. HENDERSON. The case I have in my mind is one where I am sure the municipalities want the electric railway that will ask for a charter to-morrow night but they do not want the electric railway to run along the streets or highways, at any rate, without their having something to say as to the conditions on which they should do so.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Put that in the Bill.

Mr. HENDERSON. The very fact that the Bill, as we have it now, makes provision that the consent of a city or incorporated town must be obtained and that no reference whatever is made to a township or village corporation to my mind would lead to the conclusion that they would not have the right to make any remonstrance to the board before the board adjudicated upon the matter although the hon. minister has told us that the board would not be likely to deal with it until they had heard from the municipalities.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The Railway Committee of the Privy Council has never dealt with such a case without hearing from the municipalities.

Mr. HENDERSON. This is possible, but I dare say that under the law as it existed before, there was no such distinction between an incorporated town and an incorporated village. Here there is such a distinction. We are to have a board on which certain rights and powers are conferred by the statute. It may well say to one: We will listen to you, and to the other: We are not called upon to listen to you. I would like to take the sense of the committee on that resolution, because I know the intense feeling that prevails in my county in reference to this very matter, and I would not be doing my duty did I not urge upon the hon. minister to grant us the same rights as have been accorded to the city of Toronto and accorded to a small town in my own county. I refer to the town of Oakville.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We had better strike them all out probably.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am quite satisfied.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cardwell). While I do not pretend to talk about railway matters, I must call the attention of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals to an incident that occurred in the county of Peel when I was a member of the county council. An electric railway company came to the county council and asked for liberty to run its track along a certain part of the highway, but the council flatly refused because it was thought that accidents would result to farmers with their horses and cattle on the highway if street cars were allowed to be run there. The county council took the view that if the electric railway were a paying affair the promoters should be compelled to buy their right of way the same as any other railway company. It is very annoying to farmers, particularly with young horses, to go out on the highway and meet an electric railway car. I think that the rights of rural municipalities should be recognized in this matter as well as those of cities. If an electric railway is a paying enterprise the company should be compelled to buy their right of way in the direction which they wish to go. The county of Peel absolutely refused to grant this company running rights over a certain road from Toronto to Oakville. I know that in our section of the country the people are opposed to allowing electric railways to be established on the highways, because of the difficulty they have with young horses. Street cars can be controlled on the road and no damage will be done to them, but if their operation on the highways is legalized by legislation they have a right to run there and in the event of damage being done to people in vehicles drawn by horses which are not manageable, the injured parties have no redress. I think the rights of municipalities should be guarded as well as those of cities and towns.

Progress reported.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply.

Post Office Department—salaries, $224,480.

Mr. CLARKE. In the legislation which has passed this House respecting railway mail clerks, provision has been made to increase the salaries of these officials. Is it the intention of the hon. Postmaster General (Hon. Sir William Mulock) to provide for any increase in the salaries of railway transfer agents? These are men who are connected with the railway mail service and who transfer the mails from train to train at divisional points and elsewhere. I have been asked to put that question to the Postmaster General.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Sir William Mulock). The Act, passed last session, makes provision for increases in the salaries of the railway mail transfer agents.

Mr. CLARKE. Does not that say 'hereafter appointed'?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It also contains a provision allowing them during the six months to come in under the provisions of the Act.

Mr. CLARKE. I have been asked if it is the intention to increase the salaries of those officials who handle the mails at the different divisional points of the railway.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. They will come in under the Bill at present before the Senate.

Mr. CLARKE. They are provided for?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE. There are post office clerks who are now sent out on a line to assist the railway mail clerks for the purpose of accelerating the delivery of letters by the first delivery. They practically do the work of the railway mail clerks and they are liable to the same risks, but they are not provided for. Is it the intention of the Postmaster General to grant these gentlemen mileage?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. These are post office clerks and they are eligible for the promotions that the Bill which has passed this House contemplates.

Mr. CLARKE. Their occupation when engaged on railway service is more hazardous than when employed in the post office.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No doubt.

Mr. CLARKE. Is it not fair that these gentlemen should have mileage for the time they are on duty on the trains as well as the railway mail clerks ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not think so. They are not fully responsible like railway mail clerks and they only make a run for a short distance. They retain their status as post office clerks.

Mr. MACLEAN. Would the Postmaster General tell the House what progress has been made towards the introduction of rural mail delivery.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have not yet reached a conclusion upon that subject. I have had it looked into by the officers to a considerable extent, but it is a very large and serious question indeed. Some very wild statements have been made from time to time as to its supposed paying character, but I do not know that they are founded on fact. The United States Post Office Department is going through an ordeal just now over it. They voted millions upon millions for the service, and the first reports made by their officers seemed to indicate that it was remunerative. It now turns out that a number of the high officials responsible for that service are under criminal indictment for frauds of various kinds, and I am inclined to think that their reports in regard to the service have not been reliable. Questions are now engaging the attention of the criminal courts of the United States and we are not warranted up to this moment in taking the records of the United States in this respect as a safe guide. It is estimated that it will cost the United States some $25,000,000 to establish a system of even a limited character. We should approach that matter with very great care in order not to make mistakes. Should the system be established in Canada, although we might in the first instance throw safeguards around it yet, it might naturally lead us into a very serious financial problem. I have not been able to reach a conclusion in favour of the important step of establishing a rural mail delivery in Canada. I do not wish to take any attitude against it, and my present opinion is that it is wise to defer reaching a conclusion until the system has been longer on trial in the United States.

Mr. LENNOX. I do not dispute the proposition of the Postmaster General in any way, but I would like to ask him whether he has considered the carrying on of an experiment in the matter without adopting any policy in reference to rural mail delivery ? Would it not be possible for him to select some limited section of the country and make an experiment with regard to it ? Has the hon. gentleman made any inquiry into this system outside of the examination of the United States postal records ? I know that there is a strong feeling among a considerable portion of the rural community that they would like to have this service, and they have asked their representatives to urge it upon the Post Office Department, that if they can undertake the service without any unjustifiable expense the Post Office Department should do so as soon as possible.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. In reply to the hon. gentleman's inquiry as to whether the department has any data other than the official postal records, I have to say that some of the officers of the Post Office Department have visited the actual routes traversed by some of the rural mail-carriers and have informed themselves as accurately as possible, from actual observation of the work, as to the extent of the mail matter which is being carried, and they report the greatest discrepancy between the number of pieces of mail matter carried on those occasions by the couriers and the official returns of the same trips. Speaking from memory, I believe that in one instance the official return of the number of letters supposed to be carried on a certain route was near 500, while by actual count by one of my officers, the number was forty-eight or thereabouts, which shows how unreliable the official report was in that instance. I am not in a position to characterize all the reports in the same way—far from it ; I would not be warranted in doing that. But that was the result of the count in that instance, and my officer was in actual communication with the couriers themselves. As to experimenting, that would be the only safe way to proceed ; but even in that case it would be necessary to select representative routes and districts and to provide proper safeguards. I suggested to one of the officers who has been studying the matter particularly, to endeavour to devise a set of regulations or specifications which would be safe to follow in a test of that kind. As yet he has not been able to do so. Probably this fall the officers will make another trip and investigate further. We have investigated in many states almost from the Atlantic to west of Detroit, in order that we may reach safe conclusions. I can only say that it is a subject of such importance that it can only be approached after the fullest investigation. I should rejoice if during my tenure as Postmaster General I could have the honour of inaugurating a system which is apparently of such great convenience to the rural people, but I would not wish, for the sake of a personal pleasure and satisfaction, to take a step that might result disastrously to the country.

Mr. CLARKE. I would like to ask the minister if he has brought down a copy of the affidavit that has to be subscribed to by persons who tender for supplies ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have not that to-night, but I shall have a supplementary estimate, and all the information I promised last night I will bring down.

Mr. CLARKE. Will the minister also bring down a copy of the form of tender for the work of collecting from the letter boxes, serving the railway station, and so on; and copies of the tenders received in the city of Toronto, and the contract that is now in force?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I will bring those down.

Mr. BLAIN. Might I ask the hon. minister who receives the rent of the post office boxes in the post offices of country towns?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The postmaster, for renting the boxes, is allowed to retain half the revenue, and the other half goes to the government.

Mr. BLAIN. Can the hon. minister say about how much is received in his department altogether from the rents of post office boxes?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have not the figures, but I will bring them down.

Mr. BENNETT. What is the practice in the department in reference to the repairs to mail bags? Are tenders called for that work, or is it given out to anybody the minister may prefer? Also, how is the supply of boots for letter-carriers in the cities purchased—by tender or by preference?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The repairs to mail bags are not given out by tender; they are given out by the department at the discretion of the minister. As to the purchase of boots, I think the practice has been to have them made in different cities, and sent to the cities where the postmen live.

Mr. BENNETT. I have been looking over the Auditor General's Report, and I find that a great deal of expense apparently is incurred owing to the fact that the minister has seen fit to have the mail bags in a very large part of the province of Ontario sent for repairs to the riding which he has the honour to represent, I presume to party friends of his own. I also find that the boots for the letter-carriers, to be worn in different cities, not only in the province of Ontario, but outside the province of Ontario, are in turn bought from people in the north riding of York, who, I am sure, are not in a large way of business. It seems to me that if tenders were asked for this work, it could be done a great deal more cheaply than it is. Now, I find the following items for last year:

|---|---|
| Fardy, T., Newmarket, repairs, bags.... | $ 550 |
| Hall, Chas. H. King, repairs, bags.. .... | 1,997 |
| Willis, W. & Son, Aurora, bags, &c..... | 2,383 |
| Winter, T. H., Aurora, cartage, bags.... | 73 |
| Fleury & Sons, Aurora, supplies.. ..... | 1,302 |
| Hastings, W., Aurora, supplies.... ..... | 196 |
| Willis, W. & Son, Aurora, supplies ..... | 117 |
| Watson, W., Aurora, supplies, boots.... | 189 |
| Watson, W., Aurora, supplies, boots..... | 207 |
| Fleury & Sons, Aurora, supplies, boots.. | 48 |
| Watson, W., Aurora, supplies, boots.... | $ 189 |
| Watson, W., Aurora, supplies, boots.... | 77 |
| | $7,330 |

In other words, the hon. minister has taken this large amount of patronage aggregating about $7,400, right to his party friends in his own riding, and given it to them without any competition. It does seem odd also that when boots are required in Brantford for the letter-carriers, they have to be purchased in Aurora. I find also the hon. minister sends his mail bags to the little town of Aurora to be repaired by his party friends, and that it costs $73 to cart them back and forward from the railway station. The returns of the hon. gentleman show that in Ontario there are letter-carriers, who carry the mail bags daily to and from the post offices, who do not receive more than $73 the whole year, yet the hon. gentleman pays that much for sending the mail bags to his own party friends to be repaired. In former years these mail bags were repaired at 15 cents a piece, but in order to favour his party friends in his own riding and to pay them for their party services, he gives 25 cents a piece for repairs. Why should the hon. gentleman graft all this work among his own party supporters in his own riding? He will not give a contract for the carriage of a mail bag between a railway station and a post office without inviting tenders, but he has no scruples about dividing $7,400 for work and material among his own party friends in his own constituency. Even away down in St. John, the boots for the letter-carriers there are purchased in the little town of Aurora. It is due to the country that the hon. gentleman, who boasts so much of the economy practised in his department, should explain why he grafts this money among his own party friends, and why he does not give the town of Brantford a chance to supply the boots worn by the letter-carriers of that place, and the town of St. John the opportunity of providing boots for its letter-carriers. I am free to admit that the hon. minister has to face somewhat severe competition in his riding, for we know from the public press that Mr. Davis, the Minister of Crown Lands of Ontario, has handed over a very valuable timber concession to King Bros., of Newmarket, and no doubt the hon. Postmaster General feels bound to do as much as he possibly can to off-set this liberality of the Ontario minister to his party friends.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman complains in the first instance of the payment of $73 for the cartage of the bags from the station at Aurora. Well, no matter where the bags are repaired, it is necessary to pay for their carriage. The bags are collected at different centres, and have to be taken to the repair shops, whether at Aurora or at any other place. I am not aware why Aurora, though it may be a small place, is not entitled to some consideration. As to the rate of 15 cents paid by the former administration, there is less spent on repairing bags now than then. It is quite true that I have increased the rate to 25 cents. I first increased it to 20 cents and then to 25, but when the late government paid 15 cents, they must have sent a great many bags to be repaired which did not need any repairing, and the result was that under the old system considerably more was spent per year than we do at present. For a period of six years before the present government took office, it cost annually $7,765 to repair the bags, at the rate of 15 cents, and under the present system it only costs $7,065 to repair them, although the rate is 25 cents. In other words, we are paying $669 per year less in the last six years. I do not see why the constituency I represent is not entitled to some consideration. Most constituencies in some form or other, come in for government patronage. The hon. gentleman thinks that my constituency should not have any.

Mr. BENNETT. No, what I said was that the boots for the letter-carriers in St. John were purchased in Aurora, and it would have been much cheaper to have purchased them in St. John.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. St. John gets its attention from the government in many ways. It is a seaport town and has been equipped with public works at a very large expense. While the cities of this Dominion have benefited by government expenditure, very little is done in the rural constituencies in the way of public works, and they are therefore entitled to some attention in a matter of this kind. At all events the country has got good value for the work done.

Mr. BENNETT. The Postmaster General is to be congratulated on his frankness if on nothing else. He admits that no tenders are called for for this large amount of supplies—it runs up into the thousands of dollars—though there is every reason to believe that if public competition were invited prices would be lessened very considerably. But the frankest confession he made is that all this is done simply to strengthen his own political position. While he is supposed to have a very strong riding politically, those gentlemen who supp rt him and who may have very close ridings and are not to have the benefit of any patronage though it might strengthen them. Hon. gentlemen like the hon. member for South Brant (Mr. Heyd) are thus informed that when supplies are to be purchased for use in Brantford they will be purchased in such a fashion as to strengthen the Postmaster General's back politically, even at the expense of others. It is most unfair that public money should be spent, not with a view to the best results in the public service but to strengthen the political position of the Postmaster General. And I am sure that the House and the country will be surprised to know that the Postmaster General, after all his boast of economy and statesmanship in the management of the department, is down to the lowest kind of grafting in the management of the patronage under his control. I congratulate the Conservatives of North York, for the Postmaster General must be getting mightily afraid of the results in his own riding when he finds it necessary to resort to such means of strengthening his position.

Mr. CLARKE. It is rather an extraordinary admission the Postmaster General made in reply to the hon. gentleman from East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) that boots required by the letter-carriers, say in the city of St. John, are purchased in Aurora or some other place hundreds of miles away. And the hon. Postmaster General explained that as the city of St. John had a certain amount of other patronage, therefore he was not bound to buy the goods there. Are these the methods adopted by a business administration—goods to be bought from party friends, and the excuse given that other patronage is given to the place where one would naturally expect those supplies to be bought ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clarke) expect me to answer ?

Mr. CLARKE. I would be glad to have the hon. gentleman answer in due course.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I will answer the hon. gentleman when he takes his seat.

Mr. CLARKE. I have another question to ask the Postmaster General. He made the statement that under the previous administration bags cost fifteen cents each to repair, but that bags were sent to the repair shop that did not require to be repaired. May I ask how he obtained that information ? Did he personally examine the bags and ascertain that they were out of repair, or did he get the information from some official of the department ? And if he obtained the information from an official of a fraud of that kind perpetrated upon the country, has he ever called to account the official who was responsible for it ? It is hardly fair for the hon. gentleman to throw responsibility upon his predecessor unless he can show that he has brought to book the officers who were immediately responsible for this dereliction of duty. Now, I would be glad if the hon. Postmaster General would answer my questions.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Clarke) has asked me two questions.

Mr. CLARKE. Three, I think.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Very well, let us begin with the last. What I said was that it costs more to repair bags under the former system than under the present system. It might be said that any bag needed repair that was in the slightest degree broken. But, in the absence of proper supervision of sending bags for repair, many must have been sent before they were actually in need of repair; we are sending now those only that require it. The result is that the work does not cost the government nearly so much—not by something over $600 a year. Another question is as to boots made for the letter-carriers who work in the city of St. John. It never was the practice of the department to make boots in the city where the letter-carriers work. I was told by the superintendent of the stores branch, an officer who has been in charge for many years—he is not here this evening, but I give his explanation as I recollect, it—that when boots were made in the town where the letter-carriers live the letter-carriers insisted upon boots different from the regulation pattern. The result was a lack of uniformity and also the purchase of boots in many cases that had not the wear in them.

Mr. CLARKE. Was that the sole reason ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes, that was the sole reason. It appeared to me at the time rather an extraordinary explanation, and I was inclined to disregard it, but the superintendent was clear on the point and I yielded to his judgment. What was the third question the hon. gentleman asked ?

Mr. CLARKE. I have forgotten what the third question was.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. So have I.

Mr. CLARKE. Now, we come to a crucial point with regard to these supplies. Is the union label attached to these boots, when they are sent to St. John ? And are the people who furnish the boots required to make affidavit that they are made by union labour paid for at the highest rate of wages ? How are the men who wear the boots to know whether they were made under union conditions or not ? And does the hon. minister exact a similar affidavit with regard to the mail bags How does he make sure that the contract is done under the conditions imposed a year and a half ago ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. As regards the mail bags, the men who make the repairs are obliged to pay certain wages to their workmen engaged in this work. Formerly there was no such provision. When an increased allowance was made to the man who has the work of repairing it was accompanied with the condition that he should pay an increased rate of wage to those who did the work.

Mr. CLARKE. What was the rate of wages paid for repairing bags under the old regime, and what is the rate now ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not know the rate of wages paid to the workmen engaged in repairing under the old government. At first, on taking office I did not inquire as to the wages being paid by the employer. Subsequently, when increasing the allowance the chief object I had in view was to enable the employer to pay a fair wage, I do not know whether there is an affidavit of the wages paid on these small jobs. But an affidavit is required in the case of the manufacturers making the bags. Each account sent in for work done is accompanied by the affidavit of the employer or his foreman testifying to the scale of wages that it is the rate required to be paid under the rules of the department. In the contract itself the rate of wages required to be paid is set forth, and the amount to be paid as verified by the affidavit must show that it is not less than the minimum wage set forth in the contract, otherwise they would not be entitled to payment. But I will bring down that evidence.

Mr. CLARKE. Who fixes the minimum rate ? Is this where the fairwage officer gets his work in ? Who determines in the various localities what should be the minimum wage ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The only contract of this kind, I think, is in the city of Toronto, except a very small contract made with Mr. Willis, of Aurora. The contract was let some years ago by tender for the manufacture of mail bags. They are of two classes, those of canvass and those of leather chiefly. The public accounts will show what these contracts cost per annum. But the small bags made by Mr. Willis are very trifling in amount. The chief contract is for the manufacture of the ordinary mail bags that are sent everywhere with His Majesty's mails. A large number are used per annum, and the contract was a very substantial one. That was let by tender to the Ottawa Supply Company. That contract was made long prior to the establishment of a Labour Department, or the appointment of a fair wage officer. I think I am correct in saying that it was let in the year 1898. On that occasion I myself made inquiries of certain representatives of labour in the city of Ottawa, and submitted to them the question what would be a fair wage to be paid by the contractor for the manufacture of these mail bags. The persons to whom I applied for information called a meeting of the representative work people in this city who were doing the kind of work involved in making these mail bags, and they made a report to me, setting forth what in their opinion was a fair prevailing wage in the city of Ottawa, and that wage was adopted in connection with the contract.

Mr. CLARKE. What contracts have been let since then ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The contract only ran out a few months ago, and it has recently been relet, I do not know whether it is yet signed. I think it is only a week or two since the deputy informed me of the result of the tenders. I have no doubt he has adopted the same method, but he would not have to take the same trouble. But I have no doubt the same principle is applied, and that the minimum wage is set forth in the contract.

Mr. CLARKE. Are these the only two contracts ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I said there is a small contract for bags let to Willis & Sons, of Aurora. But it is a trifling one, the Auditor General's Report will show it.

Mr. CLARKE. Are these the only two contracts in which the minimum wage is fixed ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think these are the only two.

Mr. BENNETT. I would be sorry to think the Postmaster General has erred in the direction of purchasing supplies without competition every year as badly as he did last year. But I find this pernicious habit dates back a couple of years, and it may go beyond that. I find that in 1900, C. H. Hall, of the village of King, for repairs, obtained $1,420. W. Willis, Aurora, obtained $1,600 for supplies. And again in the same year, $275 for supplies. Then comes the year 1901. I find : C. H. Hall, King, repairing and cartage, $1,845; Willis & Sons, Aurora, $1,815; T. H. Winter, carting, $29; Willis & Sons, supplies, $165; W. Watson, boots for Brantford, $27; W. Watson, boots for Hamilton, $175; W. Watson, boots for St. Johns, $202. May I ask the minister if all these goods were supplied without tenders being asked for, and was the work also done without tenders being asked for ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The work of repairs which the hon. gentleman has mentioned was not let by tender and never has been, either by the preceding government or by the present one. I don't think it would be possible to invite tenders for boots unless you had them all made at one place. But I do not think unreasonable prices were paid, the prices were certified to be fair and reasonable. There is no mystery about the cost of making a pair of boots for a letter-carrier. The contract held by Willis & Sons for making mail bags is for a trifling amount per annum.

Mr. BENNETT. I find that this last year this gentleman Mr. Winter, received $74 simply for the cartage of these old mail bags back and forward to the place where the repairs were made. It seems to me a most exorbitant sum to pay a man for doing a little carting. The committee will be astonished to know that Mr. Winter gets $74 when it is by grace of the member of his county, the Postmaster General, but when Mr. Winter has to enter into open competition to carry ordinary mail bags back and forth from the train, he is pleased to make twenty-four trips a week, four trips every day in the year, except Sundays, for the sum of $120. In public competition this man goes back and forward four times every working day in the year for $120; but when he is permitted simply to put his hand into the public chest without leave or license, he is paid $74. I think that other men throughout the country who are forced to go into public competition to perform mail courier service at low rates, will be astonished to find that a constituent and a strong political supporter of the Postmaster General is treated in this most kindly manner.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There is a little difference in the task of carrying a small quantity of mail matter to and from the station and carrying wagon loads of bags, which involves a good deal of labour and perhaps more appliances. The bags are bulky, and a man would have to have a wagon and horse, and to handle and re-handle the bags. That is different from merely going to the station for a small amount of mail matter.

Mr. BENNETT. I would like to ask the Postmaster General this question. I find by reference to the report of 1900 that a firm called the Ottawa Supply Company furnished $11,630 worth of supplies, that in the year 1901 they furnished $16,500 worth of supplies and that last year they supplied $15,338 worth. May I ask if these supplies were furnished under public competition, and moreover, who the Ottawa Supply Company are ? I have searched the directory and they seem to have no place of business.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not know the personnel of the Ottawa Supply Company, and I never did know. I know they tendered recently again and lost the contract. As to whether these contracts were made by public tender or not, I am not able to say, but I think tenders were invited. I can recollect having a considerable number of tenders submitted to me by the superintendent of the stores branch.

There was a fair system of tendering and the work was obtained at fair prices, at much more advantageous prices than those paid under the former administration.

Mr. BENNETT. Do I understand the hon. minister to say that tenders were not called for but that the goods were supplied at what the department considered fair prices ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I did not make such a statement.

Mr. BENNETT. Were public tenders invited, and if so was the Ottawa Supply Company the lowest tenderer for this large amount ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Speaking from memory only, while tenders were not publicly invited, tenders were invited by circular from reliable persons and the contract was awarded in competition and the Ottawa Supply Company obtained the contract as the lowest tenderer. That is my recollection, and I am sure it is the case, because I can recall the circumstances of the superintendent having extended the tenders in the book. We have a book in which all tenders are entered as they are opened, extended, and then brought to me if necessary, but not necessarily, because, in regard to the last tenders I do not think the book was brought to me. I think the deputy informed me who was the successful tenderer, but at an earlier stage I took a more detailed part in the work of the department. The cost under the system in existence now has been less than under the former system. Under the contract with the Ottawa Supply Company the cost of mail bags was less and materially less than under the system in force when I took office.

Mr. BENNETT. I must protest against this way of conducting business in the hon. gentleman's department. I think it is utterly unfair that the hon. Postmaster General should discriminate in the way he does. Assuming that a courier service is to be undertaken between two points, if it should not be for any more than for $100, tenders are called for and public competition is invited. I believe that the lowest tenderer does receive the contract, but here are $42,000 worth of supplies purchased and the hon. minister frankly states to the committee that when he requires $42,000 worth of goods he is not going to ask for public competition, but an official in his department will ask certain gentlemen if they wish to tender and the lowest tenderer receives the contract. I do not think that is a business-like proposition and I say there should be open, honest, fair competition when such a large amount as $42,000 worth is to be purchased. May I ask the hon. minister who he, or the officers of the department, have met in connection with the tender of the Ottawa Supply Company and is it not a fact that the Ottawa Supply Company has no place of business in Ottawa, that they are a company only in name, and that they are intermediaries who buy for other persons ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not know that there is the slightest foundation for such a statement.

Mr. BENNETT. Where is their place of business in the city ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am sure that such a company has a place of business in the city of Ottawa. It could not be otherwise. We have never heard of their being middlemen. Their affidavit will show who the members of the company are. As to the personnel I do not know.

Mr. BENNETT. Does the hon. Postmaster General know that Mr. Ronan who is now and has been for a number of years, secretary to the Liberal Whip is one of the parties concerned in the Ottawa Supply Company, and the most prominent one ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am told that at one time Mr. Ronan was interested in the company but that he has long since ceased to have any interest in it whatever.

Mr. BENNETT. Had he an interest in it within the past three years when the supplies were purchased to which I have made reference ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I could not say when his interest ceased.

Mr. CLARKE. You do not know when his interest ceased ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No. I do not know whether it has ceased or not, but we can get that information.

Mr. CLANCY. Since the hon. Postmaster General is able to obtain that much information in regard to Mr. Ronan, how is it that he is so hazy about the balance of the question that has been asked; namely, if Mr. Ronan has been out of the company for three years ? Surely his officer can tell him who the company is composed of now, and where its place of business is. It seems very extraordinary that so much information can be furnished and that nothing else is forthcoming.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not think any hon. gentleman should make any such imputation as that. The Ottawa Supply Company, I presume, is a company of honest business people. I do not think we are called upon to reflect upon people and to suggest that there is any such thing as a fictitious company. If the hon. gentleman has any information upon that point, I would be glad to get it. All we know is that there was such a company and that they supplied good work under the conditions of the contract. If the hon. gentleman has any reason to suppose that there is anything improper let him say so. I will assist him in any way he desires to get any information in connection with the purchase of mail bags.

Mr. CLANCY. If there is no information to be had it seems that I will have to furnish it. His officer told him in the last five minutes all about Mr. Ronan. His officer knows who Mr. Ronan is and who the company is. If there is no suspicion about it the hon. gentleman is casting suspicion himself by his own conduct. Surely the hon. gentleman does not expect this committee to assume that neither he nor his officer knows anything about this company? The hon. gentleman says he is concealing nothing. If he has been doing business with a firm for some years and if it is not a fictitious firm, surely the hon. gentleman can tell the place of business of that firm in Ottawa. The hon. gentleman should not put it upon the committee to furnish this information. If they are not middlemen the hon. gentleman has created the suspicion that such is the case. This committee ought to know whether we are dealing with a merely fictitious company which is getting a portion of the profits to which it is not entitled. I say that, in view of the statement that public competition was not asked for. To how many persons were these circulars sent out? Unless the hon. gentleman can tell us all this he will lie under suspicion himself.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. What suspicion are you talking about?

Mr. CLANCY. He has left himself open to the suspicion of just what any person would draw a fair conclusion from unless he can tell what this company is.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There is such a thing as decency to be observed in discussing public questions. I told the hon. gentleman I know nothing about this company, but he has made an insinuation, and if he wishes I will have a meeting of the Public Accounts Committee and have the people connected with that company subpœnaed and give the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) an opportunity of ascertaining everything he likes about it. I don't know what he means by suggesting that there is any suspicion about it. Is that proper language for a member to use in this House? You can read about a company in the newspaper, but that does not give you any idea about the personnel of the company. I have no doubt that the officers are perfectly familiar with the persons who are actively connected with that company, and we have at the head of that branch as honest and as efficient an officer as there is in the public service, Mr. Sydney Smith. It is not possible that this could have been a fictitious company for five years and he not to report it. The country has been furnished with goods of excellent material at far less cost than under the old system, and yet we are told that that company may be a fictitious company, acting for some one else. I ask the hon. gentleman to withdraw that suggestion or we will have a meeting of the Public Accounts Committee, and we will investigate. Either one thing or the other. I will not let the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) make an insinuation of that kind against my department.

Mr. CLANCY. That dire threat will not terrorize this side of the House much. If we are to lay down a code of good morals and good taste, I think the Postmaster General as well as myself might go to the same school. His role of injured innocence does not amount to much. The Public Accounts Committee has enough to do without investigating matters that the Postmaster General should know about off hand. He has one of the chief officers at his elbow, who may be able to inform him. I have not insinuated that this was a fictitious company.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. You have.

Mr. CLANCY. I have not. If there is any suspicion about it it has been created by the Postmaster General himself, who cannot, or will not give the information. This company does not seem to have any record in the city directory, and it is very easy for the Postmaster General to answer whether there is such a company or not. Private tenders were sent out to the friends of the government, which, as a matter of fact, is no tender at all, and they were sent under such conditions which always gives to the middleman, who is a friend of the government, an opportunity to get hold of these things. I have not said that it is a fictitious company, but it has the appearance of it until the hon. gentleman explains it away.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman suggests that the experienced officer of the department who is present can give me the information. There are 300 experienced officers in the department, but each is not familiar with every branch.

Mr. CLARKE. Which has to do with the tenders?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The department called 'stores' of which Mr. Sydney Smith is the head.

Mr. CLARKE. A very reliable officer too.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. He was here last night, and I do not see why he is not here now, but I presume he thought that the estimates would not be reached to-night. However, Mr. Ronan, who the officer informs me was in the company, is at present an employee of this House, and I will try to get some information from him. I am now informed that the Ottawa Supply Company has its place of business at the corner of Lyon and Sparks streets, in the city of Ottawa.

Mr. LANCASTER. What is the capital stock ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have no idea. I am told that there are two persons in the company: Christopher and some one else Stratton. Mr. Ronan has ceased to have any interest in it.

Mr. EARLE. Was he interested in the company at the time the contract was let ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. BLAIN. About what amount of supplies is purchased for the department in twelve months ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The officer is not able to give me any information as to the amount, which is a fluctuating amount; but the Auditor General's Report will show what is paid out each year.

Mr. BLAIN. Is not the hon. gentleman able to tell us what is the value of the supplies purchased by his department every year ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. A large part of the supplies are purchased through the Secretary of State's Department. The practice is for that department to purchase stationery supplies for all departments. A considerable portion of our miscellaneous expenditure is for stationery supplies, which include a great many classes of goods, such as letter paper, official paper, printing papers, wrapping papers, twine, wax, mucilage, inks, pens and various other articles. Then, there are other supplies such as bags, boots and uniforms.

Mr. BLAIN. Can the hon. minister tell us whether it is the policy of his department to purchase supplies by tender, in so far as the tender system can be applied ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have spoken of the tenders we invite for the supply of bags. The rest of the supplies, which are chiefly stationery, will be found set out in the Auditor General's Report. I do not know how the Secretary of State gets his supplies, but he issues them to the various departments at some specified rate, I suppose corresponding to the rate at which he buys them.

Mr. BLAIN. Are we to understand that the hon. minister's department does not purchase a supply of stationery, ink, &c.?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, we do not purchase them. They are issued to us by the Secretary of State's department.

Mr. BLAIN. With that answer in mind, would the hon. minister give us an explanation of this item: George Bailey, Ottawa, 180 quarts of ink, at $2.25 per quart.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That is not ink used in the department, but it is ink used by the postmasters for stamping. That is not the kind of supply that is in stock for general distribution amongst the various departments.

Mr. BLAIN. Then we are to understand that the policy does not hold good, but that the hon. gentleman's department does purchase very large quantities of stationery, including ink. I see another item: 180 pints, at $1.75 per pint. I may say that that one item of George Bailey, Ottawa, amounts to $3,916. Will the hon. gentleman tell us whether tenders were asked for these supplies ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am not able to give the information. It is a sort of printers' ink used for stamping.

Mr. BLAIN. Another item is the Crown Tailoring Company, Toronto, $1,801. Another is Caldwell, Boyd & Co., Lanark, material for letter-carriers' uniforms, 1,249 yards, at $1.75, and 140 yards, at $1.15, making a total of $2,347. There are three items, page S—43, making a total of about $6,500. Will the minister say whether tenders were asked for these supplies. While I am on my feet, I would like the minister to tell us whether it is the policy of his department in the purchasing of supplies, to ask for tenders, and what proportion of the supplies purchased year by year are purchased under tender, that splendid system which the hon. minister advocated when in opposition, and which indeed was one of the planks of the platform of his party. What I want to know is whether the hon. gentleman has forgotten all that, or whether he is applying what he advocated in opposition to the purchase of supplies for his department ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman has referred me to page S—43 of the Auditor General's Report, and the first name I find there is that of the American Bank Note Company, which received the sum of $23,305 for printing postage stamps, &c. The contract was let about the year 1897. There was at that time another company here doing business, the British American Bank Note Company, and the government invited tenders from these two companies, and awarded the contract to the American Bank Note Company. That contract has, I think, expired and been renewed. I am not aware of there being many persons from whom to invite to tender for that class of work. The tender was awarded. As a result of that tendering, the Minister of Finance explained to the House that the government had effected a saving of something like $150,000 or $160,000. As to the Crown Tailoring Company's contract, that was obtained after tenders were invited by circular

Mr. CLARKE. From whom ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have not got a list of the names. The contract was awarded as a result of that system of tendering, which, in the case of goods of that kind, I think is quite a proper system. As to Bailey, his supplies were ink, &c., and I do not know whether tenders were called for or not. He supplies a number of articles, letter boxes, locks, pens, ink, and other small items.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Where does the hon. the minister get his letter boxes ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Some are made in Aurora.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). They are very badly made.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Which ones ?

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). The boxes that open with keys. In Lindsay they are not fit to use.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. These were put in when the public building was erected, and they were put in by my predecessors, but there have been great improvements of later years in the design of letter-boxes, and I do not think that it will be said that the lock letter-boxes now are not good. The last letter-boxes put in were in connection with station C in Toronto. I think the design is a credit to the company, and a great advantage to the country.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Has the hon. gentleman found the letter from Mr. Mallon that he promised to bring ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No.

Mr. CLARKE. Where were the postal bags made ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. At the corner of Lyon and Sparks street.

Mr. BENNETT. That is at the Butler House—a hotel.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There are several corners.

Mr. BENNETT. The other one is a public market.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. He may not have meant literally on the corner. The factory is over a store called the Stratton grocery store, where these bags are made.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The hon. minister has not told us whether the $16,000 of supplies got from the Ottawa Supply Company were got by tender.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The contract was let several years ago, and tenders were invited from a number of qualified persons, and the invitations were not confined to our friends. I think that we invited tenders from the people who had been supplying the late government. There was good competition, and the prices were materially less than previously.

Mr. CLARKE. What were the prices paid previously?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I cannot say, but I remember my superintendent telling me that there was a very material reduction.

Mr. CLARKE. Were all those invited to tender on the patronage list ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not think so.

Mr. CLARKE. What is the practice. Are circulars sent only to persons who are lucky enough to be on the patronage list ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not know whether there is any regular practice prevailing. In my department I endeavour to see that circulars are sent to competent men. We do not always get satisfactory results from advertising for tenders for certain classes of goods. For example, suppose you advertise for clothing, you may adopt a very strict specification and not get satisfactory results, as to the character and material and so on. If the contract is let very low and the contractor is not going to make money, he will endeavour to save himself by furnishing inferior goods. That is one of the chief drawbacks of the tender system. It is found in many instances wiser to invite tenders from persons of recognized standing in the trade.

Mr. CLARKE. How do they get on the patronage list ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. If the hon. gentleman has any worthy manufacturer he desires to have put on the patronage list, all he has to do is to send to some minister the name of that person.

Mr. CLARKE. Suppose I were to send some one to the hon. gentleman, would he put him on the list ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I dare say I would, if the hon. gentleman will let this item through.

Mr. BLAIN. The hon. minister has not answered two of the questions I put him. I see the firm of Geo. Bailey & Company, of Ottawa, was paid $3,916.15 ; Caldwell Boyd & Company, Lanark, $2,347.99, and Pritchard, Andrews & Company, of Ottawa, $7,905.08. Were tenders asked for in these cases ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The prices paid Pritchard, Andrews & Company for the miscellaneous articles purchased from them are the regular set prices. I do not see how we could possibly have invited tenders, because the articles purchased are small matters of a great variety, and but few of each description. For instance, they comprise four numbering machines, brass buttons, cast iron plates for letter-boxes, steel stamp with crown, and a lot of other miscellaneous articles. With reference to the scales, I think tenders were invited. There are not very many scale makers in Canada, but notices were sent to Messrs. Gurney & Company, of Hamilton, some firm in Montreal and Pritchard, Andrews & Company, here, and perhaps others. The scales required for the post office must be well made, because they must do delicate weighing. Therefore, it would not do to accept tenders except from makers who are known to be able to make scales of the quality required by the department. My impression is that Pritchard, Andrews & Company have made a specialty of manufacturing these post office scales for many years. They supplied the department long before I came into office, as hon. gentlemen can see by turning up the public accounts of former years. I am under the impression—still, I may be doing them an injustice —that we cannot even claim them as our political friends.

Mr. BLAIN. I rather differ with the hon. minister as to an account of $7,900 as being so small that it is not worth——

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I did not say that.

Mr. BLAIN. I stand corrected. Do I understand the hon. minister to say that the account of the Pritchard and Andrews Company consisted of such items as could not well be tendered for ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Some of them.

Mr. BLAIN. I see one item of 927 stamps at $3.75. That I should look upon as an order worth tendering for if the policy of the department is to ask for tenders. I would not extend my remarks further on that point, but would just ask the hon. minister to say generally whether it is the policy of the department to ask for tenders for the supply of such articles as we have been discussing to-night ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There are some classes of articles which are properly subjects for tenders, and some that cannot be made so. Take the account of the Pritchard and Andrews Company. It is a pity to go into details——

Mr. BLAIN. I do not ask the hon. gentleman to do that.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman speaks of an account amounting to $7,905.08, and asks whether I do not think that it would be made a subject for tender, I hardly think the question suggests a proper answer. The subject matter of the account, I think, would determine the answer much better than the amount. Here are some of the items in this account: Bate's numbering machine (5 wheels) 4 at $17.50—that is a little machine for paging—brass crown seals, 103 at 35 cents—that is something in connection with the coat of arms on the mail bags—Brass buttons, cleaned and burnished, 130 gross at 75 cents; cast iron plates for letter boxes, 10 at 50 cents; dated stamps, 927 at $3.75——

Mr. BLAIN. How about that item ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. These people have been manufacturing these dated stamps for many years and have been recognized suppliers of the government. They are reliable people, and there is some nicety required in the manufacture of date stamps and they have become experts in that branch. Therefore, it is in the public interest that they should be allowed to continue the furnishing of these supplies. They are highly respectable people and reliable; and it is not the practice of the department, in supplies of that kind to have them made here and there. There is uniformity to be considered. Therefore, the custom has been to order from them. If there were a change of the government, I am sure our successors would do as we have done; we are following exactly in the footsteps of our predecessors.

Mr. POPE. A pretty safe thing to do.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is the right thing to do in this instance. Still, if the hon. gentleman thinks that a different course should be adopted, we will consider his suggestion. The account goes on—though I cannot explain what this means—with outer rims type, &c., figures 7 at $5; with outer rims and steel hammer handles, 75 at $4.58, 2 at $6.85, 1 at $5.40—and so it goes on line after line of items small in themselves, although they aggregate a good deal over the whole year. I do not think that in that account it would be possible to buy by tender many of the items.

Mr. BLAIN. I agree that it would not be possible to invite tenders for many of the items the hon. gentleman has referred to. We do not contend that it is possible to have tenders where the department requires one or two letter boxes, or wishes to have brass buttons burnished. But what I would like from the minister is an answer in a general way. Would he say whether it is the general policy of the department to call for tenders in the purchase of supplies. I see on two pages of the Auditor General's Report accounts for supplies and in all they amount to about $150,000. Is it the policy of the department to call for tenders in these large items or not ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The policy of the department is to obtain supplies with reasonable competition where the goods are of a nature to be tendered for. In pursuance of that policy, tenders are invited for the furnishing of postage stamps. I find one extension of this account amounts to $23,305. Then the next item is $3,309, dead letter stamps, &c. These are also furnished by the company under contract. Post cards, &c., $18,801. These goods have been also obtained in the same way. Letter cards, $2,104. Post bands, $1,878. There are about $50,000 worth of goods supplied by the American Bank Note Company as a result of tenders in the manner I have explained. The Crown Tailoring Company, Toronto, furnished goods to the value of $1,801, obtained by tender.

Mr. BLAIN. Who is the Crown Tailoring Company ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The only person whose name I know is George Anderson.

Mr. BLAIN. A Liberal candidate of East Toronto.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think so. His place of business is on Front street in the city of Toronto. I think the contract with Sanford & Co., of Hamilton, for uniforms, was also a result of tenders.

Mr. BLAIN. Would it be fair to the hon. gentleman to state the case in this way : In no case does his department ask for public competition except in the narrow form of selecting business houses of good standing, and asking tenders from these ? But in no case does he ask for tenders by public competition, allowing every person to tender.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Not for supplies.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I understood the minister to say that he asks for tenders from those who are in the business of manufacturing the articles he wants, only from reliable firms. I would like to know how he can make that statement insofar as the Ottawa Supply Company are concerned. This supply company, I am informed, is composed of Stratton Bros., who run a little grocery store on a street in the outskirts of the city, and with them was an employee of the government who was supposed to manipulate this deal. Now this firm simply dickered out this contract. I am satisfied that the minister could have purchased by tender and public competition this $42,000 worth of goods supplied during three years, for much less than he paid these gentlemen. I am satisfied the minister would never have acted in that way if he were buying goods for his own use. In this instance, and in the instance of the Crown Tailoring Company, he gave contracts to persons who are not in the business at all. He has admitted that he has been giving out large contracts, some $42,000 worth, to parties who were not in the business and never were, and had no means of manufacturing the goods they supplied. Now this Ottawa Supply Company are down here in addition for making wooden boxes. Now, they cannot manufacture wooden boxes in an upstairs place over a grocery store. They furnished 3,500 wooden boxes, which could have been purchased from some box factory much cheaper than from the Ottawa Supply Company. I would like to ask the minister who compose this Canadian Postal Supply Company, in Montreal, who, for the rent of two mail marking machines, are paid $200. Would the minister state in what way these machines are used, and has the same company a contract for other cities ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman says that tenders were invited from persons who were not in the business, in the case of the Crown Tailoring Company of Toronto, and the Ottawa Supply Company. In regard to the Crown Tailoring Company, he is entirely in error. I never knew anything about the Ottawa Supply Company. But I do know that the place of business of the Crown Tailoring Company is situated on Front street, in Toronto, and the company is largely engaged in business. The hon. gentleman will find that store a short distance west of Yonge street, between that and York street. There is a very large establishment with the name of the Crown Tailoring Company. That I believe to be the headquarters of the company that has supplied the goods in question here. The hon. gentleman is in error when he says that they were not in the trade.

Mr. REID (Grenville). How about the Ottawa Supply Company ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have discussed that. The hon. gentleman was not here when we discussed that.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Yes, I was here.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Then the hon. gentleman should know all about it. We made a contract with the Ottawa Supply Company as a result of fair competition with very substantial manufacturers of this city who were proper persons to supply bags. As a result of that competition this Ottawa Supply Company, being the lowest tenderers, obtained the contract and they have delivered the goods to us in accordance to the specifications and of good quality at much lower prices than were being paid under my predecessors at the time of the change of government. When their contract expired recently, tenders were again invited, they tendered and they lost the contract. Some other person got it. I do not know who.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Does the hon. gentleman know who has the contract now ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have just said that I do not know. It is only within the last month the deputy told me the result of the tendering.

Mr. POPE. Are these public tenders ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have explained all that several times.

Mr. POPE. Just in regard to that point.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have said that we invited tenders from reliable persons but not by advertisement. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Reid, Grenville) asked me about this account.

Canadian Postal Supply Company, Montreal, rent of two mail marking machines, twelve months, $400.

This is an invention for obliterating stamps on letters and it is a very rapid working machine. I do not know by whom it was invented but the firm of Dolphin & Hay in the United States supplied this machine to the United States government and we have had several of them installed in different offices throughout Canada. I think there are two in Montreal.

Mr. REID (Grenville). There are six in Montreal.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There is one in Ottawa, two in Toronto, and there are some elsewhere. They do very rapid work and they are the best stamp cancelling machines up to date. I do not know anything about a company under the name of the Canadian Postal Supply Company. We made our arrangements with the American company. There are no such stamp cancelling machines made in Canada, and I do not know there are any made in the world that are as good as these. I am afraid to say how many stamps this machine will cancel in a minute, but the letters pass through the machine so rapidly that no one can count them. It takes several men to feed the machine. A wheel revolving at a high rate of speed separates each letter from the rest to be carried to the obliterating stamp. The stamps are obliterated as the letters pass the lines. Hon. gentlemen will remember seeing the long bars extending three inches across the envelope in the vicinity of the stamp. These are lines made by the stamp cancelling machine.

Mr. REID (Grenville). $200 a year seems rather a large amount for the rental of a machine.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. They cannot be got any cheaper.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I was wondering whether these machines could be purchased.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, they cannot be purchased.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Therefore you are obliged to rent them.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. They are not obtainable in the United States or saleable there, and we could not manufacture them.

Mr. CLANCY. On what principle are the cotton duck bags used by the department kept in repair ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The superintendent of stores branch, Mr. Sydney Smith, is in charge of that. I do not know what principle he adopts. He, I suppose, gives instructions throughout Canada that when bags get out of repair they should be returned to the stores to be dealt with. He has his officers and I suppose they overhaul the bags and have those repaired that require repairing. At one time there was a good deal of laxity in the matter of returning bags, and there was trouble between the department and the general public in seeing that bags were returned. Occasionally mail bags are sent out to private citizens. I dare say the hon. gentleman had occasionally had a mail bag delivered to him if he had a large amount of mail matter. The department is constantly endeavouring to get traces of these bags. Sometimes newspaper people get the bags and so on. The stores branch gather them in and overhaul them.

Mr. CLANCY. I must disclaim being of sufficient importance to have a mail bag devoted to myself. Therefore, I cannot be charged with the theft of mail bags. One can scarcely conceive that mail bags will be found in the same state of want of repair. Any one can very well understand that there will be a large difference in the condition of the bags. I see a very extraordinary uniformity in the prices paid for repairing bags. I will read the list to the hon. gentleman and he will probably be able to give an explanation :

| Name. | No. of bags. | Price charged. cents. |
|---|---|---|
| Hugh L. Carson, Ottawa.. | 317 | 42 |
| Mrs. W. Christie, Toronto.. | 324 | 42 |
| James Christie, Toronto .. | 35 | 42 |
| J. Darch & Son, London.. | 96 | 42 |
| Desmarais & Choquette, Ottawa.. .. .. .. .. .. | 342 | 42 |
| Geo. Lugsdin & Co., Toronto.. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 537 | 42 |
| Mrs. P. O'Donohue, Montreal.. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 537 | 42 |
| M. Scarrow, London.. .. .. | 441 | 42 |
| C. Warner, Ottawa.. .. .. | 338 | 42 |

There may be some good reason for this uniformity. There is no objection to sending work of that kind to the friends of the government. I concede the right of the government in all cases where the public service does not suffer by it, to give the patronage to their own friends under our system. The uniformity of prices shows that there is a fixed sum no matter in what condition the bags are.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There are the ordinary canvas bags for which the rate is 25 cents, and there are bags into which leather enters which cost more to repair. The department has fixed upon these figures as representing the fair average payment for repairs. The superintendent of that branch is Mr. Sydney Smith who is the son of a former Postmaster General, and who has been in the office for many years. He is in complete control of that branch and no one ever interferes with Mr. Smith in the proper discharge of his duties. There is no possibility of any job being perpetrated under him. The repairs of these bags require certain machinery that is not found in country establishments and is only found in city establishments.

Mr. BENNETT. On the 4th of May last, I asked a question relative to two mail services in the vicinity of the Manitoulin Islands. I asked if tenders has been called for them, and the Postmaster General replied yes. I have been informed that formerly the two services were in the one tender, that this year a man named Cleland tendered for $3,050 and that his tender was accepted on the first of April for the joint service, but afterwards he was informed by the department for reasons best known to themselves that the tender was at an end. This, after he placed himself in a position to undertake the duties, owning as he did a very valuable steamer. However the statement in the 'Hansard' is that he had made a tender for what was afterwards put in two distinct tenders. May I ask the Postmaster General whether it is correct that this gentleman was asked to tender under an advertisement for what is now comprised in these two tenders ? The reply in the 'Hansard' is that for the service from Cutler to Wekinagong taking in the intermediate points of Spanish Mills and Little Current, was given by contract to Simms Bros., at $1,500 per annum, and that the other service known as the Cutler and Gower Bay service was given to Herbert Cleland at $2,000, but he declined it unless he was given the other, and that the contract was given to Wm. Fraser at $1,800. These two services now cost $3,200. Is it correct that tenders were asked for these two services, or was one tender asked and was Mr. Cleland the lowest, and did the department decline to act on it ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There is no foundation for the statement of the hon. gentleman for reasons best known to themselves. Speaking off hand, for I have not refreshed my memory with regard to that matter since that answer was made, the facts are as follows : There had been a service by boat from Cutler to Gore Bay, and I think to Kagawong, and on to the terminal point of the route whatever that may be. I think the service extends from Cutler across to Gore Bay and thence to a terminal point which I suppose is Little Current. Whatever that terminal point is I desire the explanation to be considered to have reference to it. That service was performed by one vessel and the complaint was that it did not reach the terminal point at a sufficiently early hour. It had to leave Cutler on the arrival of the Canadian Pacific Railway train due at 4 p.m., and the distance was very considerable. The boat had only a speed of eight knots or eight miles an hour and this was considered unsatisfactory. The department decided to try to get a vessel of a greater speed, and if it could not get a vessel of sufficient speed to perform the service within a reasonable time so as to reach the terminal point at an early hour in the evening it would divide the service between two steamers, one going from Cutler to Kagawong, calling at Gore Bay, and the other going from Cutler to the terminal point. Accordingly, public tenders were invited. We asked for a steamer of twelve miles an hour. Tenders were put in. Mr. Cleland's I think, was one of the tenders, and so far as I remember, he only tendered for one of the services, that from Cutler to Gore Bay and Kagawong. He did not put in a separate tender for the other service ; but he accompanied his tender with a letter saying that he was prepared to perform the joint service for a certain sum—I do not remember the amount. Is it stated in that letter ?

Mr. BENNETT. $3,050.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. He wrote to the department saying that he was prepared to supply a vessel for the service, and the department telegraphed him that they would accept his offer. When the name of the vessel was mentioned, it was found to be the steamer which had performed the service before, the 'Telegram.' The department then communicated with him that if that was the vessel, it was known to have a speed of only eight miles an hour, and it would not be satisfactory. Mr. Cleland was invited to come to Ottawa to see if he could be arranged with to put on a steamer of proper speed. He came here, but no arrangement was made with him. It became necessary then to make other arrangements for the service. Accordingly, failing to get one vessel of sufficient speed to do the joint service, the department had to arrange to get separate vessels to do the two services in the proper time. The result was that the two contracts to which the hon. gentleman refers were made. As to the price, I had not to do with the negotiations or the tenders, but my recollection is, though on this point I may be in error, that the price payable for the two services is less than the amount of Mr.

Clelands' offer. The only object of the department was to get a good service, and we had either to get a faster vessel than the old one, or divide the service.

Mr. BENNETT. Are the two boats now performing the service capable of running twelve miles an hour ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is not necessary for the two to run twelve miles an hour, as they run on separate routes.

Mr. BENNETT. Did the advertisement for tenders say that the boats would have to be capable of running twelve knots an hour ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The advertisement referred to the specifications and the proposed contract, which did name twelve miles an hour.

Mr. BENNETT. It would appear that in the preceding year there had been a contract for this service, and it was performed by the 'Telegram' for $3,400. Knowing that the contest would be keen this year, Mr. Cleland tendered at $3,050, and he was notified by the department that his tender would be accepted. The advertisement made no reference to the rate of speed required.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Will the hon. gentleman permit me ? I say that the advertisement notified the public where they would see the form of contract they were required to sign, and that form stated that the vessel would be required to have a speed of at least twelve miles an hour.

Mr. BENNETT. I am informed that there was nothing in the advertisement in regard to the rate of speed. The hon. Postmaster General states that it was referrable to the contract, which stated that it would be required to have a speed of twelve miles an hour, and included other details. When Mr. Cleland was informed that his was the lowest tender, he was notified to appear at Ottawa, and he did come down here. He assured the department that his boat would run twelve miles an hour, not including stops; but if stops were included, a boat would require to run eighteen miles an hour. The 'Telegram' has always been considered a speedy boat, and I am informed that Mr. Cleland would have got the contract but for the interference with the department of the hon. member for Algoma.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There is not a word of truth in that.

Mr. BENNETT. When I asked the question about the contracts the hon. gentleman informed me that tenders were called for these two separate and distinct services. My information is that tenders were never called for these two separate and distinct services, but that tenders were asked for the total service, that Mr. Cleland was the lowest tenderer, and that he complied with the conditions, his vessel being capable of running twelve miles an hour, and he certainly attaches the blame to the hon. member for Algoma of having interfered with the department and prevented him getting the contract. When he came to Otawa he was told that although his boat did run twelve miles an hour, as required by the department, if the stoppages lessened her time he could not have the contract; and without any other tenders at all being called for, the contract was handed over to this man Simms, a most prominent partisan, a man who was mixed up with the Stratton matter in Ontario.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think that the hon. gentleman is quite misinformed. The hon. member for Algoma in no way interfered. Mr. Cleland is a strong supporter of the present government, and we would have no reason politically for not giving him the contract. The only reason was that his vessel had not the speed required.

Mr. BENNETT. Were tenders called for these two services ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That is my impression. The advertisement, I think, invited tenders in two ways—for one service, and a service divided into two parts. The form of contract brought me by the officer in charge asked for a vessel of twelve miles per hour, including stoppages. Mr. Cleland's vessel had not that speed.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Cleland emphatically tells me that no tenders were called at all for the second service, and the only tender he ever made was for $3,050, and he guaranteed that his boat would run twelve miles an hour, but the department insisted that should include stoppages, which would mean eighteen miles per hour. He is emphatic in stating that the hon. member for Algoma interfered on behalf of Simms Bros. who are politicians of more than local repute and notoriety, and they got the patronage. Here is a letter from the Postmaster General which shows that Mr. Cleland felt he was harshly treated. He had a vessel worth $15,000 and had made a contract with the department when it was too late to put her on any other route for the season, and he was told that he could not have the contract, although his boat had the speed required. He went to one of the hon. gentleman's political friends, Mr. Williams, and Mr. Williams wrote protesting against the treatment. The reply was not that there had been public competition and that Mr. Cleland's tender was higher than the one accepted, but that the matter was urgent. Here is the reply :

Ottawa, April 20, 1903.

Dear Sir,—With further reference to the mail service between Cutler and Manitowaning, since writing you on Saturday, the department has received offers for the performance of this service as two separate ones, and as the matter was urgent the offers have been accepted and instructions have been given to have the service established without delay. It will, therefore, not be possible for the department to make a contract with Captain Cleland as referred to in my letter of Saturday.

Yours sincerely,

WM. MULOCK.

D. Williams, Esq.,
The 'Collingwood Bulletin,' Collingwood, Ont.

It is evident that no tenders were called for. It was a case of unfair interference not to give the contract to this man when he was the lowest tenderer and guaranteed that his boat would run twelve miles an hour. Whether rightly or wrongly, Mr. Cleland blames the hon. member for Algoma for having interfered, and probably some day will be able to pay the hon. gentleman in kind.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not know that I can throw more light by further observations on the matter. Had the hon. gentleman intimated that he would bring this up, I would have refreshed my memory. The impression on my mind is that the advertisements were for one continuous service and also for a separate service of two parts. The hon. member for Algoma in no way interfered in regard to Mr. Cleland. He was anxious that the service should be equal to the requirements; and from the papers submitted to me, I came to the conclusion that Mr. Cleland could not comply with the advertisement, and I do not think he pretended that his vessel had the speed required. He came to Ottawa within twenty-four hours after a telegram was sent to him, and the papers were submitted to me, and I learned that his vessel had not the proper speed.

Mr. BENNETT. Did he see the Postmaster General himself?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, he saw my deputy. I was not in Ottawa at the time.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Would the hon. gentleman bring down at the next sitting the names of those who tendered for the goods supplied by the Ottawa Supply Company?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes, and the amount of each tender.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I asked the hon. gentleman the other evening if he knew where a mail clerk named Doyle came from and he said he did not. Has he found that out?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have not thought of it since.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Was there an appointment made recently of a mail clerk named Doyle?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I cannot say, but I will get the information.

Mr. CLANCY. Can the hon. minister give any information as to the dismissal of the postmaster at the village of Port Lambton? The post office was kept by a man named McNulty and was attended by Miss Ross, who was acting postmaster—probably deputy. The office was removed and Miss Ross was practically dismissed because of that removal. Perhaps the hon. minister cannot recollect——

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. What county?

Mr. CLANCY. In the disappearing riding of Bothwell, in the county of Lambton. I hope that the disclosure I have made of the locality will not give the hon. gentleman any pangs. Has he any recollection——

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, I do not recollect.

Mr. CLANCY. I could hardly expect the hon. gentleman to be ready with the information without notice, I would ask him to bring down the correspondence and petitions presented to the department against the removal of the post office from the place where it was, and also against any action being taken on account of the displacement or dismissal of Miss Ross.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I will get that information. I understand the hon. gentleman to want all the correspondence and papers bearing upon the change of location and what he calls the dismissal of the postmaster, or leading to the former postmaster ceasing to be postmaster.

Mr. CLANCY. And the petitions.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes, I will see that all that information is given on the next item I have.

Mr. AVERY. Would the hon. minister bring down the information as to why he dismissed the postmaster at Enterprise?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I will get that as well.

Mr. AVERY. Also the postmaster at Dead Creek.

QUESTIONS.

CLAIM AGAINST MR. MILLS, ANNAPOLIS, N.S.

Mr. WADE—by Mr. Campbell—asked:

1. What is the address and occupation of Mr. J. B. Metts, of Annapolis, N.S., whose name appears on page B—6 of the Auditor General's Report for the year ending June 30, 1902, as being in arrears to the Department of Militia and Defence ?

2. When and how did such indebtedness arise ?

3. Has the correctness of said claim ever been disputed ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Hon. Sir Frederick Borden) :

1. The Auditor General states that a typographical error has been made in this name, and the word Metts should read Mills.

2. The indebtedness arose through a lease of the garrison property at Annapolis. The liability dates from July 31st, 1887. The rental was £34 10s. sterling, or $167.92 per year. The amount of the claim against Mr. Mills is $854.68.

3. The correctness of the claim has been disputed, but owing to the fact that the papers on the subject cannot be found, I have been unable to examine fully into the merits of the case. The tenant claims to have a counter claim for repairs. The records of the department show that on June 11th, 1895, the official docket was handed to the deputy minister, the late Colonel Panet.

I.C.R.—RATE FOR CARRIAGE OF COAL.

Mr. KENDALL—by Mr. Calvert—asked :

1. What is the rate per mile charged by the Intercolonial Railway for carrying coal for the short and long hauls ?

2. What is the cost of such traffic per mile ?

3. What is the rate per ton of coal from Spring Hill Junction to Moncton, St. John, Quebec, Montreal and St. Hyacinthe ?

4. What is the rate from Stellarton to the same points ?

5. What is the rate from Sydney and North Sydney to the same points ?

6. What is the rate from Stellarton to Port Mulgrave ?

7. What is the rate from Sydney to Point Tupper ?

8. What is the estimated cost of transfer of coal at the Strait of Canso ?

9. What is the rate for carriage of coal from Sydney and North Sydney to New Glasgow ?

10. What are the rates from Sydney and Stellarton, respectively, to Halifax ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair). This is information that cannot be given by means of an answer to a question.

COMMISSIONERS TO INVESTIGATE ACCIDENT AT WEST LORNE.

Mr. CLARKE asked :

1. Where do Messrs. J. E. Duval and Gerald Ruel, the commissioners appointed by the government to report upon the causes of the fatal railway accident at West Lorne, reside ?

2. Are both of the gentlemen engineers, or have they had any experience in railroad operation or management ?

3. What is the profession, or occupation, of each of the gentlemen ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair) :

1. In the city of Ottawa.

2. Neither is an engineer. Mr. J. E. Duval has had long and varied experience in railway operation and management, Mr. Ruel only as regards legal matters.

3. Mr. Ruel is a lawyer of high standing, and is in the Department of Railways and Canals. Mr. Duval is a member of the operating staff of the Canada Atlantic Railway.

P.E.I. RY.—CONSTRUCTION OF BRANCH LINE.

Mr. HACKETT asked :

1. Has the government received a petition from the inhabitants of Lots 6, 7, 8, and 9, in Prince county, province of Prince Edward Island, asking for the construction of a branch line of railway from, at or near, O'Leary Station, to a point at or near Cape Wolfe ?

2. If so, is it the intention of the government to proceed immediately with the construction of said branch railway ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair) :

1. Yes.

2. The subject is under consideration.

COMMISSION ON LUMBER TRADE.

Mr. SCOTT asked :

1. Has a commission been appointed to hold inquiry into the matter of complaints arising in Manitoba and the North-west Territories, concerning the lumber trade ?

2. If so, who has been appointed commissioner ; when and where will the commission begin the inquiry; and what is the scope of such inquiry ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). In answer to the question of the hon. member (Mr. Scott) I may say that a commission has been appointed for the purpose of inquiring into the alleged lumber combine, that the commissioner is Mr. Justice Richards, of the province of Manitoba, and that the time at which he is to begin the investigation is necessarily left to his own discretion. He has informed me that he will be able to undertake the work as soon as the routine business in connection with this court is disposed of. I understand the investigation will begin at once.

PAYMENTS ON MANITOBA SCHOOL LANDS.

Mr. McCREARY asked :

In deciding to pay over to the province of Manitoba interest upon the deferred payments upon the sale of school lands, was the government influenced by instructions, advice or suggestions from the Colonial Secretary, or any one acting on behalf of the imperial government ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). In deciding to make the payment referred to, the government was not influenced by anything except its own conception of wise public policy. No instructions, suggestions or advice of any kind upon the subject have ever been conveyed either directly or indirectly, orally or in writing, on behalf of the imperial government or any of its members.

LEAD BOUNTIES.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding) moved that the House go into committee to-morrow to consider the following proposed resolution :

That it is expedient to repeal chapter 8 of the statutes of 1901, intituled : 'An Act to provide for the payment of bounties on lead refined in Canada,' and to enact as follows :

1. The Governor in Council may authorize the payment of a bounty of seventy-five cents per one hundred pounds on lead contained in lead-bearing ores mined in Canada; such bounty to be paid to the producer or vendor of such ores, upon evidence that such ores have been smelted in Canada. Provided, that the sum to be paid as such bounty shall not exceed five thousand dollars in any fiscal year. Provided, also, that when it appears to the satisfaction of the minister charged with the administration of this Act that the standard price of pig lead in London, England, exceeds twelve pounds ten shillings sterling per ton of two thousand two hundred and forty pounds, such bounty shall be reduced proportionately by the amount of such excess.

2. Payment of the said bounty may be made from time to time to the extent of sixty per centum of the full bounty authorized, subject to the adjustment at the close of each fiscal year. If at the close of any year it shall appear that during the year the quantity of lead produced, on which the bounty is authorized, exceeds thirty-three thousand three hundred and thirty-three tons of two thousand pounds, the rate of bounty shall be reduced to such sum as will bring the payments for the year within the limit mentioned in section one.

3. If at any time it shall appear to the satisfaction of the Governor in Council that the charges for transportation and treatment of lead ores in Canada are excessive, or that there is any discrimination which prevents the smelting of such ores in Canada on fair and reasonable terms, the Governor in Council may authorize the payment of bounty at such reduced rate as may be deemed just, on the lead contained in such ores mined in Canada and exported for treatment abroad.

4. The said bounties shall cease and determine on the thirtieth day of June, one thousand nine hundred and eight.

5. The Governor in Council may make regulations for carrying out the intention of this Act.

He said : I beg to say that His Excellency the Governor General, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the consideration of the House.

Motion agreed to.

RAILWAY ACT, 1903.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 21) to amend and consolidate the law respecting railways.—The Minister of Railways and Canals.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If the committee would permit me, I would ask that it should rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again this day, as I would like to take the final stages in the Supply Bill. It is a purely formal matter, and will occupy only a few minutes.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Very well.

Progress reported.

INTERIM SUPPLY BILL.

House went into Committee of Ways and Means to consider supplies to be granted to His Majesty.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE moved :

Resolved, that towards making good the supply granted to His Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service for the financial year ending 30th June, 1903, the sum of $708,-179.52 be granted out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada.

Resolution agreed to.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. With regard to the sums which the committee has passed for the current fiscal year, I beg to move :

Resolved, that towards making good the supply granted to His Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service for the financial year ending 30th June, 1904, the sum of $18,342,-669.39 be granted out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). This covers the items that have been passed and also the 20 per cent ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Will it not be a little inconvenient to deal with the two in the one Bill ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think not ; it is the usual method. They form the one Supply Bill, but they will be separated in the Bill.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Very good.

Resolutions reported, read the first and second time, and agreed to.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 218) entitled an Act for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial years ending respectively the 30th June, 1903, and the 30th June, 1904.

Motion agreed to ; Bill read the first and second time, and House went into committee thereon.

Mr. SPROULE. What portion of the estimates are we voting now ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. So much of the main estimates as we have passed upon in committee, and one-fifth of that portion of the estimates which have not been taken up.

Mr. SPROULE. Why is the need so urgent for passing these now ? We have only just reached the 1st of July, the financial year has only ended, and payments for the current year will not require to be made so early.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The invariable practice is, after resolutions have passed their various stages, to collect them in the first Supply Bill. We do not need the whole of them at once, I grant; if we had one-fifth of the whole it would be ample; but inasmuch as they have passed the committee, they are all included in the Bill. It is the usual course.

Mr. SPROULE. I regard the principle as an unsound one. The minister says we are adopting the usual course. It is a very unusual course. It is a very rare occurrence to pass a portion of the Supply Bill before the close of the session. I think I remember a few times when a small portion was voted, but it was only when the session was extended far beyond the usual length. You have practically the whole Supply Bill granted except a few items, so that at any time the government might avail themselves of the powers reserved to them without the permission of the House, and even though the opposition were not satisfied. It gives the control of the House into the hands of the government, I think improperly and unwisely for the safety of the country. I think we are establishing a very bad precedent.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I hope my hon. friend will find, on examination, that we are not establishing any bad precedent ; and if it will make him any more happy, I think I may go so far as to assure my hon. friend—though I would prefer that this came from the premier—that this House will not be dissolved before we proceed again in Committee of Supply. But as to the principle involved, it is not unusual to have a vote on account. It has been done time and again when the House has found itself in session after the 1st of July. If we had not passed any items in the estimates at all, we would have asked for one-fifth of everything; but it happens that a certain portion of the estimates had been dealt with, and they are included. Soon after the beginning of July, claims will come in, some of them very urgent, though not in every department; but it is convenient to take one-fifth of the whole rather than submit the estimates of the particular departments in which these urgent claims occur. Before this House will complete the Supply Bill, it will be necessary to pay certain claims. Take, for example, the Militia Department; there is urgent need for the payment of the militia now in camp. The course we are taking is with the single desire to meet the convenience of the public service, and there is no such danger as my hon. friend imagines.

Mr. SPROULE. If only one-fifth were taken, it would not be so objectionable; but you have the whole of the supplies for public works, for railways and canals, for customs, and when this Bill goes through you will have practically the Supply Bill for the current year, though one of the main features of your policy, that with reference to the transcontinental railway scheme, is not yet before parliament. We are voting the supplies that will put us under the control of the government for the next year whether we will or not. Suppose we saw fit, after the government had submitted their policy to the House and the country, to refuse the Supply Bill. We could not help ourselves, because we have only held back a very small portion; and I regard it as an abandonment of the proper functions of the opposition to allow that to be done. I could understand the government requiring a small portion to keep the business of the country running; but I cannot understand why they should have practically the whole of the supplies for the current year for public works, for railways, for canals, for militia, for customs, and other departments. After we have voted them, we are at the mercy of the government.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend is wrong in assuming that we have taken so much of the estimates. As a matter of fact, a very large portion of the estimates have yet to be dealt with. We have not yet taken a penny of the estimates for railways, or for canals, or for the Interior Department, except for the past year.

Mr. SPROULE. We passed several items yesterday in connection with the Intercolonial Railway.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend is mistaken. The Minister of Railways and Canals has not yet passed his estimates at all. These large spending departments have yet to bring the great bulk of their estimates before the House. The House will have ample opportunity of sitting in judgment on the expenditures of the government, and I have no doubt my hon. friend will avail himself of it.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

RAILWAY ACT 1903.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 21) to amend and consolidate the law respecting railways.—The Minister of Railways and Canals.

On section 184,

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS proposed to add subsection 2 to this section as amended :

But nothing in this section shall deprive any such company of rights conferred upon it by any special Act of the parliament of Canada or amendment thereof passed prior to the present session of parliament.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. HENDERSON moved that the following words be inserted : After the word 'town' where it occurs in the section as amended, 'or other municipality.'

Amendment negatived, on division.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 192—construction of telegraph and other lines on the highway.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I move that the following be inserted as section 192 :

The company may construct and operate telegraph and telephone lines upon its railway for the purposes of its undertaking ; and for the purpose of operating such lines or exchanging and transmitting messages, may enter into contracts with any companies having telegraph or telephone powers, and may connect its own lines with the lines of, or may lease its own lines to any such companies.

2. The company may transmit messages for the public and collect rates or charges therefor, but no rates or charges shall be demanded or taken for the transmission of any message, or for leasing or using the telegraphs or telephones of the company, until such rates or charges have been approved of by the board, and such rates and charges shall be subject to revision by the board.

3. The Electric Telegraph Companies Act shall apply to the telegraphic business of the company.

And also that the heading of the section be amended to read 'Construction of telegraph, telephone and other lines or wires.'

Mr. MACLEAN. Is it intended under this clause to control the telegraph rates of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company ? They have now a telegraph company and are doing a large business. They also have a clause in their special charter, I believe, which takes their rates out of the control of parliament for a certain time. Will those rates be subject to the control of the Governor in Council under this clause ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We are not dealing only with those lines established in connection with the railways.

Mr. MACLEAN. But the Canadian Pacific Railway Company has a line.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We are not dealing with that, and I would certainly not propose to interfere with any contract made on the subject.

Mr. MACLEAN. I think the hon. minister must have misunderstood me. He is taking control of the rates of other telegraph lines of railway companies doing public business. Does this apply to the telegraph lines of the Canadian Pacific Railway so as to provide that their rates shall be subject to the Governor in Council ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My own impression is—I do not wish to be understood as speaking positively—that the Canadian Pacific Telegraph Company is a separate and distinct corporation from the railway company. If that is so, we are not dealing with it here.

Amendment agreed to.

On section 193—telegraphs and telephones,

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have endeavoured to meet the wishes of that portion of the House who sympathize to some extent with the motion made by the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean). I move the following as section 193 :

Whenever any municipality or corporation has the power to construct, operate and maintain a telephonic system in any district, and is desirous of obtaining telephonic connection or communication with or within any station or premises of the company in such district and cannot agree with the company with respect thereto, such municipality or corporation may apply to the board for leave therefor, and the board may order the company to provide for such connection or communication upon such terms as to compensation as the board may deem just and expedient, and may order and direct how, when, where and by whom and upon what terms and conditions such telephonic connection or communication shall be constructed, operated and maintained.

Mr. SPROULE. That is good, as far as it goes; but I do not think it will cover all the requirements of the case. It applies only to municipalities or corporations. This can only include municipalities and such companies as have received corporate rights by Acts of parliament. A large number of our telephone lines are not owned either by municipalities or incorporated companies, but are lines projected by individuals or private corporations that give the use of them to the public generally. I apprehend they could not avail themselves of the right of connection with the railway stations under this provision. To that extent, I think the clause will fail to meet the requirements of the situation.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think that any clause which provides for making arrangements with any body of men not incorporated would fail. These concerns must have some sort of organization, so that the railway company, in dealing with them may know who they are dealing with, and may feel that they can make the concern fulfil its obligations. I would be sorry to impose such conditions upon the railway companies as regards every association of fifteen or twenty individuals who might wish to have telephonic access to the railway station.

Mr. MACLEAN. I am very glad the hon. minister has given us this amendment. It shows that discussion is profitable at times. My intention was simply to have a discussion of the question, to have no trouble about it, and to get something that would be in the public interest. I give the hon. minister credit for having met our views to a considerable extent, and I am very much obliged to him for this amendment. Since the question came up the other day, I have received a number of communications, and I would like to read extracts from two or three of them. A man in Ontario writing to me, says :

I have just read your remarks in the House as to the telephone companies and Sir Wilfrid's noting your 'insulting language,' and was glad that those who are not afraid to speak out were not all dead yet. You can thank Sir Wilfrid's words 'vested rights' for this letter. My poor judgment is that nearly half the vested rights are vested wrongs.

Another farmer writes from Harrietsville :

We are watching with much interest the developments of the telephone legislation at the capital. We have here in Dorchester about twenty-five miles of line and have Canadian Pacific Railway connections at both Harrietsville and Putman stations. Now, we would indeed feel it a hardship if we were to lose this connection, as we have no Bell line within some distance of us.

I would also read a short extract from the Orono 'News,' a letter received by Mr. William Armstrong from W. T. Smale, of Eskbridge, Kansas, a former Orono boy. Mr. Mr. Smale speaks of the operations of the rural mail delivery, and then goes on :

We also have the independent telephone system here and every house in our township is connected with Eskridge, Burlingham, Harveyville, Topeka and anywhere we want to talk, and best of all it is ours. We own the lines, the farmers do I mean, and all it costs us is twenty cents a month to keep up central. The telephone companies out here thought they owned the earth, but we thought we would let them see we owned some of it, too. So twenty-two of us fellows here formed a company of ourselves, built into Harveyville, bought our own switch-board and made Harveyville central. They laughed at us, would not have anything to do with us, made us pay to talk over their lines, but now the laugh is the other way. We have six lines running into Harveyville using our central, so the companies are glad to give us free exchange over their lines for the privilege of using ours, and that is what the farmers of Clare and Darlington townships ought to do, organize themselves into a club, not a company—own their own lines, and make Orono central.

Now, I believe that under this legislation the farmers of the country can form themselves into little clubs or companies, who will be in a position to get telephone connection with the railway stations. I have had intimations from all over the province that under a clause like the one the minister has now put in the Bill, the farmers will build telephone lines of their own, and will extend a telephone service all over the country independent of the Bell Company. There is just this difficulty in the way, that until this Bill goes into force they will not be recognized, and I would like to have the minister declare in this Bill that contracts like that one made between the railway companies and the Bell Telephone Company are against public policy and ought to be so declared by Act of parliament. I am not going to press that at the present time, I am satisfied to accept this amendment now. I hope it will pass, and I hope that the minister will be given at least this much credit, which he deserves, that after full discussion of the question he came to the conclusion that there was a grievance in the country that ought to be remedied by legislation.

Mr. SPROULE. The very instance which the hon. member has cited from that letter he read, shows that this thing can be accomplished and is accomplished, if not in our own country, at least in the adjoining country. But I tell him that these very companies would not come under this Bill, because they are not a municipal corporation, they are not incorporated, they are only clubs of farmers. To give the Minister of Railways and Canals an idea of the prevalence of lines in our country, I may tell him that to my knowledge there are several private lines in the county I represent, some of them eight or ten miles long, but not one of these can take advantage of this because they are neither owned by the municipalities nor by a company incorporated by an Act of parliament. I do not see how this trouble could be got over without surrounding the right by special safeguards. But I think it is a great pity, because the great bulk of the private lines will be practically shut out, notwithstanding this amendment, which is certainly in the right direction, and of which municipalities can avail themselves as well as companies who are incorporated by Act of parliament.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. All these people have got to do is to pay $5 or $10 and get a pass from the provincial government. I should imagine that unless these people adopt some method of that kind their telephone arrangements will not last very long.

Mr. SPROULE. But their arrangements have been running, some of them, for fifteen years, and running more successfully to-day than in the past; so the danger of their lasting need not be taken into account. They might not be as stable as if they were incorporated, and may be this will compel many of them to be incorporated and take in other lines which are to-day controlled or owned by private individuals. It is a very common custom in our country for a doctor to build lines in different directions from the town or village where he lives, for the convenience of people who call on him as well as for his own convenience, and the public always have the use of these lines. In the county of Grey some of these lines have been in operation for twelve to seventeen years, and they are increasing in number every year; and it is for the purpose of enabling these to take advantage of this Bill that I have drawn the attention of the minister to them.

On section 194,

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I move: That section 194 be struck out and that the following be substituted in lieu thereof:—

The company shall in constructing the railway make and maintain suitable ditches and drains along each side of, and across and under the railway, to connect with any existing ditches, drains or water courses upon the land through which the railway runs, so as to afford sufficient outlet to drain and carry off the water, and so that the then natural, artificial or existing drainage of the said lands through which the railway runs shall not be obstructed or impeded by the railway.

2. Whenever any lands are injuriously affected by reason of the drainage upon, along, across or under the railway being insufficient to drain and carry off the water from such lands, or whenever any municipality or landowner desires to obtain means of drainage, or the right to lay water pipes or other pipes, temporarily or permanently through, along, upon, across or under the railway or any works or land of the company, the board may upon the application or complaint of the municipality or landowner, order the company to construct such drainage or lay such pipes, and may require the applicant to submit to the board a plan and profile of the portion of the railway to be affected, or may direct an inspecting engineer, or such other person as it may deem advisable to appoint, to inspect the locality in question, and, if expedient, then hold an inquiry as to the necessity of requirements for such drainage or pipes and to make a full report thereon to the board; the board may upon such report, or in its discretion, order how, where, when, by whom, and upon what terms and conditions, such drainage may be effected, or pipes laid, constructed and maintained, having due regard to all proper interests. 51 V., c. 29, s. 14 Am.

Strike out section 195, and substitute the following:

Whenever, by virtue of any Act of any province through which the railway runs, proceedings may be had or taken by any municipality or landowner for any drainage, or drainage works, upon and across the property of any other landowner in such province, the like proceedings may be had or taken by such municipality or landowner for drainage or drainage works upon and across the railway, and lands of the company, at the option of such municipality or landowner in the place of the proceedings before the board as in the last preceding section provided, and thereupon the drainage laws of the province shall apply to the lands of the company upon or across which such drainage is required, to the same extent as to the lands of any landowner of such province, subject, however, to any previous order or direction of the board made or given with respect to drainage of the same lands, and provided that the company shall have the option of constructing the portion of any drain or drainage work required to be constructed upon, along, under or across its railway or lands, and in the event of the company not exercising such option, and completing such work within a reasonable time without unnecessary delay, such work may be constructed or completed in the same manner as any other portions of such work are provided under the laws of such province to be constructed; provided always that no drainage works shall be constructed or reconstructed upon, along, under or across the railway or lands of the, until the character of such works or the specification or plans thereof shall have been first submitted to and approved by the board. 63 and 64 V., c. 23, s. 2, Am.

2. The proportion of the cost to be borne by the company of the construction or reconstruction or maintenance of any such drainage or drainage works, so required to be constructed, reconstructed or maintained upon, along, under or across the railway or lands of the company, shall be in proportion to the benefit to be received by the company therefor therefrom unless the company shall have neglected to provide and maintain the necessary ditches and drains, as in subsection 1 of the last preceding section provided, for that purpose, in which case such proportion of cost shall be based upon the increase of the cost of such drainage or drainage works.

Mr. COWAN. This matter was up for discussion the other day, and I am very glad to say that apparently the Minister of Railways and Canals seems anxious to meet the requirements of drainage. There are some things, however, in these sections which he now proposes which I would like to draw attention to. The first section starts out:

The company shall in constructing the railway make and maintain suitable ditches.

I cannot for the life of me see why the words 'in constructing the railway' should be inserted in that clause at all, because it seems to me that under the decision which I quoted the other day those words would be construed not to apply to roads constructed prior to the passing of this Act. Section 195 referring to subsection 1 of section 194 might I think be construed as applying only to railways constructed after the passing of this Act. It seems to me that the minister should strike out the words 'in constructing the railway' and simply let the section read:

The company shall make and maintain suitable ditches and drains along each side of, and across and under the railway.

I strike out the word 'its' before railway and substitute the word 'the.'

To connect with any existing ditches, drains or water courses upon the land through which the railway runs.

That would refer generally to a railway and not to the railway previously mentioned. Instead of the word 'runs' I think it would be very much better to use the words 'has been constructed.' It would make it then absolutely clear that this section applies to railways now in existence as well as to those hereafter to be constructed.

So as to afford sufficient outlet to drain.

I suggest that the word 'efficiently' should be inserted before the word 'drain.'

—to efficiently drain and carry off the water——

The amendment reads 'the then natural or artificial.' As I pointed out, when these railways were constructed there was no artificial drainage in the northern portion of the county of Essex through which these large trunk lines pass. But under this amendment it says:

The then natural or artificial.

There was no artificial drainage then, and I think the word 'then' should be striken out so as to read:

And the natural or artificial drainage of the said land through which the railway runs shall not be obstructed or impeded by the railway.

I do not think there is any doubt that the intention of the Minister of Railways and Canals is that this shall apply to railways which are in existence as well as to those to be constructed hereafter. The changes in the direction which I suggested would put that beyond any question of doubt.

Mr. BARKER. As I understand these clauses 194 and 195 they deal with two phases of railway construction. Clause 194 deals with the duty of the railway company in constructing its railway, and I suppose the language which the minister here uses is proper. They construct their drains to the then requirements, but the subsection of that section seems to provide for subsequent events, it provides for what may be necessary at any time after the railway has been constructed.

Mr. COWAN. The word 'the' is used in the second line of subsection 2, and it refers to the railway spoken of in subsection 1.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not at all. The hon. member has stated correctly my intention with regard to this section, but you must have a little uniformity in framing a section of this kind to cover all the ground, and I think that after careful examination the hon. gentleman will find, that the idea was to lay down a principle for the guidance of railway construction in the future. I wanted it distinctly called to the attention of railway companies that in constructing their line they should study the situation from the drainage point of view at the very commencement, and that if while they are constructing it is brought to the attention of the board that they are failing to discharge their duty in the matter, the board shall have power to compel them to perform their duty. The fact that we have laid down a general provision does not warrant the inference that in all the subsequent sections we are dealing only with respect to railways that are to be constructed in the future. The language of the following clauses does not justify that interpretation. I must confess that I think my hon. friend (Mr. Cowan) is a little hypercritical about it. Let me deal with one or two suggestions he makes as to the phraseology of the first section. The hon. gentleman would have us put in the word 'efficiently' before the word 'drain.' They are bound to afford a sufficient outlet to carry off the water. I do not think you can add anything to make the meaning and intent any clearer.

Mr. COWAN. You might drain off the water in a week, which is long enough to destroy a crop.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think the outlet would be held to be sufficient if it would not carry off the water in a week. It should be sufficient to carry off the water in a reasonable time. The conditions might be so exceptional that no company could be supposed to anticipate such a demand on the outlet; but if the outlet had been made sufficiently large to carry off the water under the ordinary conditions which prevail, without allowing the water to lie long enough to do any damage, it would be sufficient. My hon. friend must understand that these provisions are made with respect to conditions which exist not only in the county of Essex, but all over the country, wherever drainage is required. Where there is natural drainage going on when the railway is constructed, it is the business of the railway company to provide a sufficient outlet for that drainage. It is not necessary that they should make provision for artificial drainage, if there is not any or if the conditions are such as would not require it in other places. When we pass from the main clause of the section, we come to deal, not with the laying down of a general principle, but with the duties which attach to the railway company in the condition of things as they are to-day. These refer not simply to a railway which may be built after the passing of this Act, but to any railway wherever the trouble occurs and the remedy is being sought. But when we come to the next section, 195, we are drawing into the operations of this Act the provisions of the provincial law and applying them to the case that exists, so as to enable the landowner or the corporation that has drainage to proceed according to the practice laid down under that law and follow the remedy out to its conclusion. My hon. friend, I think, has indicated his satisfaction with that portion of the Bill.

Mr. COWAN. I do not think we need have very much quarrel about section 194; but section 195 is the important section, and if the hon. minister would change the word 'runs,' in the second line, so as to make it beyond all doubt apply to railways heretofore constructed as well as hereafter, I would have no fault to find with subsection 1 of that section.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Does my hon. friend say that these words, 'through which the railway runs,' would imply that the section had reference only to a railway to be run after the passage of this Act ?

Mr. COWAN. All I can say is the case I read the other day in volume 1 of the Ontario Reports of 1901, in which the Divisional Court of this province held that the words 'is carried' referred only to railroads constructed after the passing of the Act and not to railways constructed before ; and when the hon. minister asks me if I think these words refer only to a railway to be constructed after the passing of this Act, I think it is a pretty close decision, stretching the words of the statute possibly further than the average legal mind would stretch them, but it has been done, and I think the words 'is carried' are just as strong as the words 'is run.'

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I would not agree with my hon. friend in that. I think there is the clearest possible distinction between the case he refers to and the language of this clause. I am not going to venture to suggest that the decision is anything but right ; it is not necessary ; but if we were to make this section read 'is run,' then you would bring it within the judgment, at all events of that judge, and he would be bound, if he is to adhere to his original decision, to hold that the words had reference to a future act and not to conditions which exist to-day. But the distinction is very clear to my mind. All a judge has to ascertain and determine is : is there any railway running through that district to-day, at the moment when this remedy is applied ? When he finds that a railway is running, it is a matter of indifference to him when that railway was put through. I am quite sure that my hon. friend is wrong in that, and I think he will himself agree that there is no room for question when he thinks a little more about it. This clause is acceptable to my hon. friend with that one doubt in his mind. That being removed, the section, I take it, will meet with the approval of the committee.

Mr. COWAN. I would like to draw the minister's attention to this point. The clause provides that no drainage works shall be constructed until the character of such works, or the specification or plans thereof, shall have been first submitted to and approved by the board. Under section 16 of the Ditches and Watercourses Act of Ontario the engineer must make his report within thirty days, and he cannot make his award without the approval of the chief engineer of the railway commission ; or, if he does make the award, and approval is withheld by the commissioners, there is no machinery in the provincial legislation providing for the expense incurred, and the provincial statute will have to be amended to meet that case.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You will not have to amend any provincial Act. You will have to work out the matter in addition to what the provincial Act requires. As respects Dominion railways, you cannot dig under them until the character of the work you have to perform has been approved by the board. There must be some superior tribunal to pass upon it.

Mr. COWAN. I understand that the hon. minister has made up his mind on that, so I accept that.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That does not require any amendment.

Mr. COWAN. Under the Ontario Act, if the engineer does not make his report within the thirty days the award is illegal. Furthermore, the moment the report of the engineer is adopted by the council, under our Drainage Act, he cannot change it, so that the Ontario statutes must be amended, which can be easily done.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not see any difficulty. When they have decided upon their scheme and have their plans, they need not wait until the work is under progress, but can send them into the board right at the start.

Mr. COWAN. Suppose the Railway Commission has approved plans submitted by the engineer, and which have been adopted by the council, the engineer cannot change his report or plan after their adoption. That has been definitely decided by the decisions of the courts.

Mr. SPROULE. Might I ask the hon. minister in what position would a municipality be which had made a drain that was afterwards crossed by a railway and which required to dredge out that drain ? Could the railway company be required to deepen that drain ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is probably the chief object for passing this clause.

Mr. SPROULE. It does not seem to me that it would apply to such a case. I know of instances where the railway companies refused to allow the municipalities to deepen the drain.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If the drainage originally provided is insufficient, this Bill enables an application to be made to the Railway Commission, which would have the power to order the additional drainage. It would apply to every possible, conceivable condition and circumstance.

Mr. CLANCY. I have in my mind several cases of large drains which were constructed by the use of dredges and which must be kept in order and repaired by the same means. In many instances the railway companies have, since the construction of a drain, driven piles into them. If there be any such thing as right of way, the drains had that right in the first instance. When the municipalities want to repair those drains by dredges, they come up against the railway piles, and are prevented from doing so. What provision is there in the Bill to protect the rights of the municipalities ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Application will have to be made to the Railway Commission, and that board will have jurisdiction to give an order compelling the railway companies to allow the drain to be repaired.

Mr. CLANCY. At whose expense ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That will be in the discretion of the board.

Mr. CLANCY. There ought to be some general principle laid down for the guidance of the board.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You have to leave these matters to the Railway Board, as we have hitherto left them to the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, and I do not think that any fault has been found with the decisions of the Railway Committee. That committee has always found justification for making the railway company pay its proportion of the cost, if not the whole.

Mr. COWAN. Does the hon. minister know of any case in which the proportion can be fixed ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We cannot arbitrarily fix a proportion. You have to leave the discretion somewhere, as you do in a court of equity. If you have not confidence in your tribunal, the whole system falls through.

Mr. CLANCY. Would it not be reasonable to lay down some general rules or principle which would govern that tribunal ? Is it possible for the hon. gentleman to make such a provision that where the enlargement of the drain is made necessary by the railway company, the railway should bear the whole cost ? That is a fair proposition.

Mr. STEPHENS. I know of one case where a railway company charged a dredging company, to take their dredge through under the railway and bring it back, $1,500, which was almost as much as the drain cost. That is a couple of years ago.

Mr. ROBINSON. If a farmer finds his land flooded, will he be able to start proceedings under this section to secure drainage ? If so, how will he do it ? What the farmers require is a simple method of draining their lands beneath the railways.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not know what the machinery is. All I can say is that it is the same as that provided in the provincial Act. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Robinson) is better informed as to the Ontario law than I am.

Mr. SPROULE. You cannot get a drain through under that law.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I say that this section provides that the machinery shall be that provided by the provincial law.

Mr. SPROULE. Perhaps the hon. minister did not understand me. I say that under the provincial law, you cannot get a drain across a railway, if the railway does not agree to your doing so.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The unfortunate part of my hon. friend's (Mr. Sproule's) condition is that, not having experience in law, he does not seem to know that with these companies you cannot now proceed under the provincial statute. But we provide here that the provincial law shall apply in these cases. What more can we do ?

Mr. SPROULE. But the provincial law is practically inoperative and of no value. If this law does not provide machinery for enforcing it, I do not see how the farmers will be better off with respect to drainage than they are now.

Mr. BARKER. As I understand it, this will make the Dominion railways subject to the control of the province as regards this matter. The Dominion railways in Ontario will be as much subject to the drainage laws of Ontario as a private owner would be with regard to his own lands.

Mr. COWAN. Exactly.

Mr. CLANCY. Is the board of railway commissioners supposed to follow the law strictly, or have they discretionary power in that administration of it—that is, to make the law where there does not seem to be any special provision ? And would that be the case in such matters as that I referred to a moment ago ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Many of the provisions of this law are imperative, while, in other things the form is permissive, and with respect to these the board has a good deal of discretion. It would be difficult to establish a good working system in every way. We are attempting to provide a general administrative organization which shall have, from a railway point of view, control all over this country. One thing with another it is sought to enable the board to exercise its discretion with respect to the conditions which arise in different localities.

Mr. CLANCY. But take such cases as I have spoken of where a large drain has been constructed before the advent of the railway, and the railway take possession of it. I think that case is sufficiently aggravated and of sufficient magnitude to be worthy of consideration by the hon. gentleman before coming to a final conclusion.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have a good deal of difficulty in undertaking to give in words direction for guidance—not control—as to the different principles upon which the board is to act in these matters. If we attempted to provide for every case, I feel that we would be more likely to cause harm than to do good. I am quite sure that if the board takes up a question of this kind, it will be far better able to lay down principles for itself which will be equitable and just than we who have no knowledge of the circumstances and conditions. It does not follow that because this parliament establishes this board it loses legislative control. We shall be able to judge whether or not the machine has been made fairly workable and where it has failed, if the difficulty is remediable, we can apply the remedy. While the perfect condition is the one to be desired, it is not to be looked for; and, in seeking that perfection and trying to provide for every possible contingency, you would make stumbling blocks for your commission. That would be my fear.

Mr. CLANCY. I have not asked the hon. minister to provide for every conceivable case. I have spoken of a drain that has to be made and maintained with dredges. That is a clear distinct case, and need not be confused with any other. I admit that it is impossible to provide for all conceivable cases, but I am not able to see that it is not possible to provide for such a case as that I have cited. I still think the hon. gentleman may unwittingly do much injustice to a large class of taxpayers who are drawn in by means of a railway company. The power of expropriation is a proper one that they should have, it would be a great pity to stand in the way of the construction of a railway. But the company simply comes and takes possession of the land and the farmers must make peace with the company. There is no more reason why, in such cases, a railway should take charge of the drain than that a drain should take charge of a railway. I think the hon. gentleman could, without being involved, as even a layman may see he might be, in great difficulties, provide for this class of cases. I think this is so distinct in itself that a provision might be made.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not know how it would be possible to frame any clause that would cover the hon. gentleman's case any better than this covers it:

> The cost of the drainage or drainage work shall be in proportion to the benefit to be received by the company therefrom, unless the company shall have neglected to provide and maintain the necessary ditches and drains as in subsection 1 of the last preceding section is provided.

Now, it is a fair question as to whether that drainage which has been provided by the company is sufficient. The hon. gentleman is proposing to clear out the drain.

Mr. CLANCY. I am proposing to clear out a drain of which the company bore no share in constructing, and no claim is made upon them; and it would have to be admitted the railway company did not receive any benefit. It was a drain they took possession of, and they bore no part of the cost of its construction. Therefore, it does seem to me a piece of confiscation. You could not argue that they derived any benefit from it. Your whole case is that they prevented you from enjoying the benefits they had before the railway was constructed. So it does not come within the provisions of the section the hon. gentleman has read.

Mr. COWAN. When this matter was up for discussion before, I moved an amendment to sections 194 and 195, which I think may possibly satisfy the member for Bothwell, and meet the case. I proposed to add it as a new section:

> Whenever any drainage work or proposed drainage works passes across the lands of a railway company in the construction or repair of which work a dredge or dredges or other machinery is used, the railway company shall remove any obstructions to the free passage of said dredge or dredges across their property, and which has been erected or placed thereon by the said company, charging only the actual cost for removal of same, except in cases of a natural watercourse, when the entire cost of removal of said obstructions to the free passage of the dredge or dredges shall be borne by the company.

The effect of that amendment is that in every natural watercourse the entire cost is borne by the railway company, but in artificial drains, it is not.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman's provision is where drains cross the lands of a railway company. The case is simply reversed. In the one case the drain was constructed. There is no reason that you should make a distinction between a drain constructed as a watercourse and a natural watercourse. The hon. gentleman is placing a limit that should not exist. He knows that there are many drains that are not constructed through natural watercourses.

Mr. COWAN. There is no drain in the county of Essex which has been constructed or repaired by a dredge, that is not a natural watercourse.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman is speaking for his own county. I am speaking of things I am familiar with in other localities.

Mr. COWAN. In the county of Essex all the drains are through natural watercourses where they cross the track.

Mr. CLANCY. There are drains in the county of Kent that are not natural watercourses at all, there are some even in the county of Essex. Take the lands where an embankment has been made in the county of Essex, through the plains where there were no watercourses in many cases.

Mr. COWAN. Not under railways.

Mr. CLANCY. But I am showing that a railway might cross the drain. So it would be making an unfair limit to adopt the hon. gentleman's amendment and confine it to watercourses. If the hon. gentleman can get the Minister of Railways and Canals to accept his amendment, it ought to cover the case.

Mr. MACLAREN (Huntingdon). The question raised by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) has some similarity to a case in the county of Huntingdon. It is sometimes difficult to grasp these matters when we talk about them in the abstract; I want to put an actual case before the Minister of Railways and Canals, and to ask what should be done under the circumstances. We have in the county of Huntingdon what is called the Hall creek, which empties into the Chateauguay river, and runs altogether a distance of seven or eight miles. It crosses the New York Central Railway, and where it crosses, the main branch was some nine feet wide. Last year we made a new procès-verbal, as we call it, to drain that land. Some of the land had been cleared up, and we found we had to change the main channel of the creek. We removed it west a mile or a mile and a half. There had been a branch of the creek across the railway at that particular place, which was only four feet wide, and we made it nine feet wide and made it a main discharge, making it the same width as the original discharge, nine feet, and making at what was the original discharge a branch four feet wide. The New York Central had a wooden culvert four feet wide, and we required a culvert nine feet wide. That culvert has not yet been built and we want them to build it. They intend to put in a concrete culvert nine feet wide, and I understand that under one of the sections of the hon. gentleman's Bill the cost of these culverts should be borne in proportion to the benefits received by the various properties drained and the railway. Under these circumstances what proportion does the minister think should be borne by the railway, and what proportion by the farmers ? This is a concrete case, and I would like to know how we stand. I may say our contention is that the railway should put in that new culvert, and they intended to do it as the law stands now. But if this new Act is passed, I am afraid the New York Central will come to the municipality of which I am secretary-treasurer, and want us to pay part of the price of that new culvert, which I do not think we have any right to pay for. There is were we stand, and I want the minister to answer my question.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My mind is not working actively on abstract questions of damages.

Mr. MACLAREN (Huntingdon). This is not a question of damages.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I would not like to answer the hon. gentleman's question off-hand. I think if I did he would not think very much of the opinion I gave. The facts would have to be inquired into.

Mr. MACLAREN (Huntingdon). If I understand the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals he is bringing in a railway Bill and he is undertaking to frame a particular section to deal with these matters. I say it is a concrete question, not an abstract question. I would like to know what the hon. minister had in his mind when he framed the section and how he would apply it to this case. My contention is that when a railway runs through a country and builds up a bank which interferes with the drainage it is bound to give openings through or under that railway which would give the farmers as good drainage as they would have had if the railway had not been built. That particular railway of which I spoke crossed a man's farm. This man had a farm which was forty rods wide. The right of way cost the company at the rate of $75 an acre, or about $50 for crossing the farm. Does anybody mean to tell me that that is any compensation to this farmer for the damage that has been done to him by the building of that railway ? My contention is that if a railway company obstruct the drainage of the country and if culverts and openings are required for the farmers such drainage should be at the expense of the railway company and the farmers should not be required to pay any proportion of it. That is the ground I take, because, if you say, as in the section, that the railway company has to pay proportionate to the benefit received, what benefit does the railway receive by having a culvert pass under it ? The difficulty we have in getting drainage is that the railway companies say that it is injurious, that they do not consider it any benefit, but that they consider it a nuisance and they fight us in every way possible to prevent us getting drainage across their lands to the natural outlets which would have been clear of any obstacle had the railway not been constructed.

Mr. STEPHENS. The railway companies contend that they receive no benefit from drainage and that it will be a damage to them instead of a benefit. I know of a place where a man carried his drains down through another farm to get to the outlet. He had to build the drain for a third of a mile to get to the outlet, where 150 feet would have taken him to the outlet if the railway had not been there. He had to go to this extra expense on account of the railway. He could have put the tile under the railway and the water would have run through that without any great expense if the railway had thought fit to consent to allow him to do so.

Mr. LENNOX. I have not been able to see the proposed amendments until just now and I find by looking at these amendments that they do not meet the difficulties at all, at least, some of the difficulties that were presented the other day. The Ontario Ditches and Watercourses Act as applied to railways, provides that all the cost of putting necessary drainage under railway lands shall be borne by the parties making the application and nothing paid by the company. That is expressly provided in the Railway Ditches and Watercourses Act of Ontario. It was pointed out very forcibly by the hon. gentleman who moved the amendment the other day and others who followed him that it was only fair that the landowner should be put in the position that he would have been in if the railway had not been carried across his lands. I find that in subsection 2 of section 195, as it is now proposed by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, the following words :

> The proportion of the cost to be borne by the company of the construction or reconstruction or maintenance of any such drainage or drainage works, so required to be constructed, reconstructed or maintained upon, along, under or across the railway or lands of the company shall be in proportion to the benefit to be received by the company therefrom unless the company shall have neglected to provide and maintain the necessary ditches and drains, as in subsection one of the last preceding section provided.

As I understand that section it amounts to this, that we are proceeding upon the basis that each party has only to pay in proportion to the benefit that will be derived. That is the principle that is laid down for the guidance of the board and that is the rule that is to be adopted. We are not dealing with a case of where two parties are seeking to have an apportionment of benefit decided between them. We are dealing with a case where the landowner is suffering under the grievance created solely by the railway company. The railway company want to do nothing whatever. They want to stand as they are. The landowner is endeavouring to get rid of this grievance. It will be a benefit to him to get rid of this grievance, but it will only be a benefit which will in the end restore him to the condition in which he would have been if there had been no railway built at all. When you speak of the benefit he would derive it is merely that his rights are being restored to him under the Act for this he should not have to pay. He should have his rights restored under this Act without condition and without expense and until that is done justice is not done to the landowner. The true principle was enunciated the other day by the hon. member for South Essex (Mr. Cowan) and I wonder he is not ready to maintain it today, or has not been so far, that we should replace the landowner in as good a position as he was in before the railway was constructed. That is all we are asking, but if you are to measure it by the benefit derived, as I ventured to point out the other day, the logical answer of the railway company is : We are not getting any benefit, we are in a better position if no drainage is carried underneath our railway, every cutting under the railway weakens the roadbed. Even if it can be done for nothing, we are rather injured than benefited. But, the answer of the farmer is : I want to get my lands restored to the condition of usefulness they were in before. If you provide in the section that it will be in proportion to the benefit derived, then no court having regard to the ordinary meaning of language can do anything else than exonerate the railway completely from payment, because the wording is 'in proportion to the benefit' and the railway company can certainly say that they are deriving no benefit from the work. Let me direct the hon. minister's attention to the position of the matter. By the wording of this section a sufficient remedy is not provided. Means are probably provided for getting drainage under the railway lands, but certainly at the expense of the person who makes the application because not one dollar of it will be paid by the railway company. When you invoke the provincial Act in the province of Ontario, and I think the hon. member for Huntingdon (Mr. Maclaren) explained the other day that the law is similar in the province of Quebec, all the expenses are paid by the municipalities to the railway company. The minister has evidently taken a considerable amount of pains in recasting this legislation, and while I call attention to this point I want to say that in the main I believe the provisions are satisfactory. But in this particular I submit with due respect that they do not improve the conditions as they existed before.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am prepared to say that a railway company could get no benefit, but if they got any benefit that benefit should be deducted from any sum which they would be required to pay, or rather, they would have to make allowance for that benefit when the question of costs came to be fixed. You must start out with the fact that the duty of the railway company is at the time it constructs its line to have provided all proper drainage. Having done that, and if ditches are required to be enlarged by reason of changed conditions since the railway was constructed, I do not think they should be asked to assume all the expense.

Mr. MACLAREN (Huntingdon). Why not?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Why should not those interested in the drainage bear their share of the burdens which are imposed by the altered conditions.

Mr. MACLAREN (Huntingdon). There would be no increased cost if the railway was not there.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You would have to enlarge your ditches.

Mr. MACLAREN (Huntingdon). The enlarging of the ditches would cost $4 or $5. What I refer to is a culvert which would cost $500 and which would not be necessary if the railway was not there.

Mr. COWAN. In the original Bill introduced by me it was provided that the proportion of the cost of the drain crossing a railway, to be borne by the railway company, should be based upon the increased cost of such work caused by the construction and operation of that railway. The reason why the railway company should bear that proportion is, that when the railway company went through these lands they knew that in order that these lands might be properly tilled they must be properly drained. They also knew that the fall of the land lay across their right of way, and in order to properly till and drain the land there must be openings under the railway sufficient to carry off the water. Therefore, in the construction of the road-bed, if they failed to leave these culverts or openings they should pay the increased cost by reason of their failure to do so. When a railway goes through an absolutely new section of the country there are no farm crossings required, but still the law provides that the railway company must give them farm crossings, because when they clear the land it will be necessary for the farmer to pass from one side to the other. The Act says that these farm crossings shall be made at the expense of the railway company. If it is necessary in the case of farm crossings, much more so is it necessary where it is absolutely impossible to till the land. Unless openings or culverts pass under the railway as the natural lay of the land requires for the necessary drainage thereof, as in the state of Illinois, provision should be made by the railway company. 'Sufficient for the necessary drainage thereof.'

Mr. WADE. When lands are being expropriated for a railway company it is necessary to file plans and profiles of the track showing the embankments across the line and so on. Then the appraisers go upon the land and they estimate the value of that land and also the damage occasioned to the owner by severance, and in estimating that they say that the adjoining land is uncultivated, but if at any future time it may be cultivated then the railway company must give farm crossings. But a different principle prevails with regard to this drainage. The appraisers say that so far as the drainage is concerned there is no further burden laid upon the railway in that regard. Therefore the two cases are not parallel. In one case they have it distinctly before them that the railway company can be compelled to construct crossings, but they cannot be compelled in some cases to construct an opening across the track for drainage. Suppose the railway company has constructed a railway and has put in drains sufficient for carrying out the natural flow of the water if a system of drainage is afterwards constructed by the farmers in the locality which increases the flow of water at a certain point, that is done to enhance the value of their property and it seems to me that should be taken into consideration.

Mr. COWAN. Does it not enhance the value of the property of the railway company by giving it increased freight?

Mr. WADE. That is a very pertinent remark, and if by reason of that work the company obtains more revenue, then that should be taken into consideration also.

Mr. CLANCY. I would like to call the attention of the hon. minister to this section. The persons claiming drainage would be infinitely better without that provision, because unless they are prepared to show that the railway company benefits from the drainage works, it would not be required to bear any share of the cost. I would ask the hon. gentleman, if he were sitting as a judge, and a case came before him under this section, and the landowners could not show that the railway company derived a benefit from the maintenance of a drain already constructed before they took possession of it, would he not decide that the landowners would have to pay the whole cost of cutting through the railway, and the railway company none?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That would depend on whether or not they had constructed a sufficient drain.

Mr. CLANCY. Suppose the railway company had no mandate to construct drains at all, but the railway crossed a large drain. It would be simply impossible to show that the railway company derived any benefit from it or was the least concerned in it, beyond having prevented the landowner getting through. According to the provisions of this section, before the railway company are called upon to bear any share of the cost, it must be shown that they have derived some benefit from the work. The landowners would be infinitely better without such a provision, leaving the matter an open question. I do not know any more serious phase of the hon. gentleman's legislation than this. I am sure that every lawyer will see that it is a most dangerous thing. It puts us out of court entirely.

Mr. STEPHENS. When the railway company permits a drain to cross the railway, the municipality or the landowner has to pay the cost, and this includes the cost of engineers and other expenses, which are sometimes more than the cost of the culvert itself. I know of one culvert in the hon. gentleman's own riding (Bothwell) which cost the township of Chatham $5,000 under the management of the railway company, whereas if the municipality had put it in, I do not think it would have cost more than $1,000 ; so that the railway company injured the municipality to the extent of $4,000, and kept the water back and drowned out the crops for a number of years besides.

Mr. COWAN. Will the minister kindly tell us just what portion of the cost he proposes that the railway company shall bear, under subsection 2 of section 195 ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I propose that if they are not in default they shall pay no portion unless they get the benefit.

Mr. COWAN. The clause goes further than that. It refers to railways already constructed.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, to all railways. Many of us are disposed to think that we can fall back on the railway companies with perfect reason and propriety to bear the cost ; but I think it is at least reasonable that we should consider that all railways are not a source of injury and destruction to the countries through which they pass.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman surely will not make an argument of that kind. No one has said so.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think some little recognition should be given to the fact that railways are very necessary and useful institutions, and in a great majority of cases very much enhance the value of the property though which they pass, often making valuable land which before was nothing but a wilderness. We have heard a good deal about the superiority of the Ontario law, and my hon. friend has availed himself of the provisions of that law. If I understand the provisions of the Ontario Act as they relate to ordinary landowners, and their rights in regard to draining, this principle obtains, that where the drain benefits the land, the landowner must pay in proportion to the benefit he derives towards the cost of the construction of the drain. I believe the railway companies pay nothing ; they are not asked to make any contribution at all.

Mr. CLANCY. I can tell the hon. gentleman that in certain localities they do not pay a farthing.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is what I am stating. Under the Ontario law, when drains are put through under these drainage commissions, the railway company makes no contribution whatever. We are rather improving upon the Ontario legislation, which is recognized by our hon. friends opposite as being very superior and worthy of being followed.

Mr. CLANCY. I want to say that it is enough to exhaust the patience of this committee to listen to the reasons which the hon. gentleman has given. If the hon. gentleman were the advocate of the railways of this country, he could not take a different position from what he has taken just now. It is the most extraordinary thing you could expect from a minister of the Crown and a gentleman of his large experience as a parliamentarian and a lawyer, to say that a man through whose land the railway runs should suffer all these penalties by reason of that fact. No one has contended in this committee that railway companies should not have the right to expropriate, and the hon. gentleman must be driven to the last ditch when he makes such a plea in favour of this legislation. I tell the hon. gentleman that with his eyes open he is introducing a manifest injustice into our railway legislation by the clause he asks us to pass. He is taking even from the board of commissioners the right to do justice to the farmers. He affects to believe that the railway companies contribute to the drains, but he must know that they do not contribute a farthing. The only drains, for the construction of which they have paid, are those which cross their own lands or which are made in order to provide outlets for drains upon their own lands. But in cases where drains have been built by municipalities or private landowners and are obstructed by railway companies, the hon. gentleman says that unless you can show that the particular railway company interested is benefited, the farmers must pay the whole cost of repairing such drains. I know of no more deliberate piece of robbery than is involved in the section the hon. gentleman has in his Bill.

Mr. LENNOX. I must admit that when the amendments were read this afternoon, I did not follow them very closely, because I knew that the hon. member for Essex was giving special attention to the matter, but I am perfectly amazed, when I come to read those amendments, which, by the way, it was understood we were to have had copies of in advance. I am astonished that the hon. minister could so far overlook the relative rights of the parties as to have submitted the proposition which we find in the concluding words of section 195, subsection 2. Instead of giving us some measure of relief, he is putting the farmers and the landowners adjoining railways in an infinitely worse position than if he had done nothing. The other day I endeavoured to have these matters settled by the local tribunals, and in that view I ventured to point out that it would be well to invoke provincial legislation. But I also pointed out that so far as the province of Ontario was concerned, the legislation of that province would lead to this result, that the railways probably would escape all liability.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman seems to think that this subsection makes their position a great deal worse than before. Let me say that if the hon. member for Essex is willing to have subsection 2 struck out from section 195, I am willing to drop it altogether.

Mr. COWAN. Some hon. gentlemen on the other side, notably the hon. member for Simcoe, have seen fit to refer to me once or twice as sitting silent while some iniquitous legislation was being passed, and have suggested that I was not pursuing the course to-day that I did on a former occasion. Let me say to the hon. member for Simcoe that I was discussing clause 195.

Mr. LENNOX. I rise to a point of order. I merely resumed my seat in order to allow the hon. Minister of Railways to interrupt me by some remarks which he desired to make, and I do not propose to give up my place to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Cowan). I should be very glad to accept any suggestion that will facilitate the progress of this business, and I hope that the hon. member for Essex does not consider that it is from any desire to be lacking in courtesy that I wish to proceed with my observations.

Mr. COWAN. If the hon. member (Mr. Lennox) will permit me—I am sure of that in his case. But I wish to explain that I was discussing section 195. I have an amendment to propose in substitution of that subsection 2, for that subsection does not suit me.

Mr. LENNOX. Under these circumstances I think the proper course for me will be to curtail my remarks, for I may entirely agree with the amendment to be proposed. I am not opposing this nor are any of us opposing it, with a view to political effect. We are all on the same line, though we may not view it in the same way. We want to secure fair play for the railway companies, but we want also fair play for the people. I represent a rural constituency, and my sympathies are naturally with the people in rural localities. But I have a special reason for the position I take. The first railway line projected in Canada, barring a short line in Quebec, runs through my riding. It was built in 1851, and the ponds caused by the embankments of that railway are there undrained to this day. So, I have reason to know the sentiment of the people on this question. If we adopt the local law of Ontario without any qualification, we get into this condition. We have the Ordinary Ditches and Watercourses Act, and we have also the Railway Ditches and Watercourses Act, which is to be read as part of the other. Now, after provisions for the meeting of the engineers, the estimate of the cost and everything in connection with putting a drain under the railway, the law reads:

> But the railway company shall not be liable for the cost of any work performed upon lands or under the road-bed of any railway under the provisions of this Act.

It is said by the hon. minister that we from Ontario were proud of our legislation, and boast of it. So we are in some respects. But, if the hon. minister reads the discussion of this point in this House, he will see that I, at all events, contended that we must be careful as regards this provision, as, otherwise, the railway company would escape liability, whereas the very principle enunciated by the hon. member for South Essex (Mr. Cowan) was that all the additional cost occasioned by the presence of the railway should be borne by the railway company, so that the parties might be restored to their original positions. I reserve any further remarks until I have heard the amendment of the hon. member for South Essex.

Mr. COWAN. Subsection 2, of section 195, as it is now proposed, means, if I read it correctly, that if a railway, at the time of its construction, neglected to leave the proper openings for culverts to drain the land as it was then, the increased cost of drainage occasioned by its construction over and above what it would have been if it had made these openings, is to be borne by the farmers. I shall not extend my remarks to show again why the railway company ought to bear the increased cost occasioned by the construction of its roads, but shall simply submit the amendment I have prepared. I propose that the following be substituted for subsection 2, of section 195:

> The proportion of the cost of the drain or drainage works across or upon the railway to be borne by the railway company shall in all cases be based upon the increase of cost of such works caused by the construction and operation of the railway.

That puts the matter as clearly, I think, as the English language can put it, and it is briefly this that whatever it would cost to take that ditch across the land occupied by the line of the railway, if there were no railway works there, shall be borne by the farmer. For example, if it would cost $5 to take the drain across the land in the absence of any railway works, that $5 shall be paid by the farmer. But if the construction of the road-bed causes the work of crossing the land occupied by that road-bed to be $50, the railway shall bear the $45 and the farmer the $5. That is, the increased cost which the construction of the railway has occasioned in the making of the drain shall be borne by the railway. That is as clear as I can put it, and I hope the House will understand it.

Mr. JABEL ROBINSON. I asked the Minister of Railways a question, and he did not answer to my satisfaction. I desire to propose an amendment in the following language :

That wherever it is found that farm lands are injured by the overflow of water caused by the construction of a railway, the railway commissioners shall have power and shall provide and compel said railway companies to construct drains sufficient to carry off all waters, natural and artificial, at the expense of the railway companies.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Referring to the amendment of the hon. member for South Essex (Mr. Cowan), I would draw the hon. gentleman's attention to one point. Suppose that a railway is constructed through a certain section of the country. The openings allowed for the passage of water are quite sufficient for all the purposes of the railway at the time of construction. But, five or six years after this the municipal council decides to drain the whole municipal area. It constructs a drain—in some counties these drains are more like canals, being eight or ten miles long—and brings it down to the railway and wants to cross the railway. On what principle of justice should the railway company be called upon to pay the extra cost that is necessary to take that drain across the railway ? I cannot understand that. The work may be a useful and necessary one for the community, but I cannot understand why the railway should be compelled to bear this extra cost. As long as means are provided and instructions given to the Railway Commission that upon any reasonable grounds the drain shall have the right of passage, I think that is sufficient. They should not be compelled by statutory enactment to pay for the increased cost of the construction of that work.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I wish to point out to my hon. friend from Essex that he has not well considered his amendment, for he does not even make provision for the case where a railway company has taken land in the first instance, and has fully settled for it and made compensation. My hon. friend would make the railway pay irrespective of whether they had made compensation or not.

Amendment (Mr. Cowan) agreed to.

Progress reported.

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

TORONTO AND HAMILTON RAILWAY COMPANY.

On the order for resuming the adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Campbell, that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the House to go into committee of the Whole on Bill (No. 147) to incorporate the Toronto and Hamilton Railway Company.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair). Mr. Speaker. The attention of the government has been called to the fact that very strong objections are entertained to further proceeding with this Bill on the ground that the Bill assumes to take legislative control in respect to a local measure out of the hands of the provincial legislature of Ontario. It is maintained that it is open to objection on various grounds, not simply because it is a usurpation by this parliament of a subject that properly belongs to the provincial legislature, but, because the exercise of authority by this parliament over the Bill would be to withdraw an undertaking of this character from the supervision, regulation and control of the province. The government is desirous that the measure should not be proceeded with to-night and I would ask that it stand with the view of hearing from those gentlemen who are here now and who wish to present their objections to the Bill. I think I may say with authority that if it appears from what may be stated to us by these gentlemen that this is not properly a subject for us to legislate upon and that we are in fact withdrawing from the provincial legislature control over a railway which ought to be permitted to remain within the provincial control, the government will not sanction or permit the Bill to pass. We ask now that it may stand for the purpose which I have mentioned. I beg to move that the debate be now adjourned.

Mr. CLARKE. I would ask the hon. minister who has just spoken (Hon. Mr. Blair) if the Bill is to be proceeded with that we will get notice in time to give notice of certain amendments that we desire to make.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Certainly.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

CENTURY LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 175) respecting the Century Life Insurance Company.—Mr. Morrison.

Mr. MORRISON moved:

That Bill No. 175 be amended by adding the following section at the end of the printed Bill 'Clause 3, paragraph 4, chapter 93, 1 Ed. VII, is hereby amended by substituting in the second line the word 'ten' instead of the word 'twenty-five.'

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I do not understand that chapter 93, I Edward VII, is before this committee at all. I fail to see how we are going to amend a Bill that has never come before us. Had the amendment been to change or add to Bill 175 I could see the force of it, but I fail to see why or how we can amend a Bill that was passed last session without any notice whatever being given other than that which appears in the Votes and Proceedings. The Bill of last year is not before us and is therefore not open to amendment.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I think the hon. member's point is not well taken. I think we are doing something similar to this almost every day, amending Acts of parliament that are not before us. This is simply proposing to amend an Act of parliament to which the hon. gentleman refers by making a change of these words of 'ten' for 'twenty five.' Therefore, the Act which is now before us will be amended by the passage of this clause.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Sir William Mulock). Every Act is before us.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The Act is in a sense before us to-night.

Mr. HENDERSON. While I do not wish to press unduly the objection it seems to me that this is a most irregular proceeding. I might as well give notice that when Bill 175 is taken up I will move an amendment to some Bill that was passed ten years ago and that has no relevancy whatever to the matter before the committee. No notice of it came before the Committee on Standing Orders. They knew nothing about it, and I would like to know from a member of the government whether he thinks this is a regular proceeding.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). The hon. gentleman (Mr. Henderson), in his illustration, is hardly fair in saying that we might as well undertake to amend a Bill passed ten years ago having no relevancy whatever to the Bill before the House. This Bill has relevancy inasmuch as the Act which it is proposed to amend is an Act relating to the same company. Therefore, there is nothing irrelevant in it.

Mr. HENDERSON. I would agree with the Minister of Finance if we had a Bill before us to amend the Bill referred to in the notice of motion, but I fail to see anything in the nature of an amendment.

Mr. MORRISON. The whole Act is one respecting the Century Insurance Company and one section of that Act is referred to in this Bill as being amended. Surely the hon. gentleman (Mr. Henderson) can see the difference between that, and the reference to an Act that had no relevancy to the one in question. The object of the amendment is to reduce the amount that is to be paid upon organization.

Mr. LENNOX. We have here a Bill which originally consisted of one section, but now it has grown into a Bill of a great many sections. It appears to me that under the circumstances this Bill should be reprinted and redistributed, or else, how are the members of this House to know what it is about and to vote intelligently on it. In the case of these Bills which are considerably altered they should be reprinted. I would like to have the opinion of one of the ministers as to that.

Mr. CAMPBELL. This Bill was fully considered in committee and the amendment was not opposed. If there is to be any very strong objection to it, it would be better to refer the Bill back to committee.

Mr. LENNOX. I did not so much need the opinion of a prospective minister as an actual minister of the Crown at the present time.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. LENNOX. The majority of the members of this House have not the honour to belong to the Committee on Banking and Commerce, and so it is impossible for us to know what changes have been made in the Bill.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am quite satisfied that the Bill in its present shape is innocent, but if any hon. gentleman desires to have it reprinted I have no objection. The company came before us with a single clause proposing to extend their time for organization for one year. When the Bill was passing through the committee on Banking and Commerce it was deemed well to introduce clauses which have been introduced into the legislation of other companies since this charter was obtained, so that we might put them on even terms with other companies chartered last session and this session. My hon. friend (Mr. Morrison) comes in now with a further suggestion which has not been before the committee, but which is in conformity with what has been done in other charters, and I do not suppose there would be any harm in permitting the company to do the same thing as others. In the charters of one or two other companies permission has been given for them to change their name under certain circumstances, and it is proposed that the same power shall be given to this company. There is nothing in this Bill as it now stands that is not to be found in the legislation granted to other companies.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I may say that these clauses were inserted in the committee at the instance of the Minister of Finance who proposes to insert similar clauses in all charters of this kind, and so far as the company is concerned that was done against their assent. Clause 4 simply gives the company the right to change its name with the approval of the Governor in Council, a provision which is to be found in the charters of other life insurance companies, and the next clause simply safeguards the public so that the change of name shall not affect the obligations of the company. I cannot see that there can be any objection to that.

Mr. LENNOX. I am perfectly willing to take the explanation of the Minister of Finance, made much stronger and better of course by the explanation of the leader of the opposition, but I take the general objection that when a Bill of this kind is brought before us it should be printed so that we may know what its provisions are and not be obliged to vote for it in the dark. I call the attention of the government to the matter in order, that they should take steps to prevent such a thing occurring in the future.

Mr. SCOTT. I entirely concur in the suggestion of the hon. member for West York that this Bill be referred back to the Banking and Commerce Committee for further consideration. The original Bill merely provided a year's extension for the company to procure its license. That was all that was considered by the committee. Now we have another and even more important amendment proposed, not to the Bill, but to the original charter of the company,—a change which has not been considered by the Banking and Commerce Committee. If there was any useful purpose served by sending the Bill in the first instance to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, why is it not just as advisable and necessary to send this new and important proposed provision of the Bill to be considered by the committee? At the same time, if the Bill is sent back to the committee, I think it would be well to make some inquiry into the history of the company. I am informed that there were serious complaints made against the passage of the original Bill granting the extension of time, by the people who may be termed stockholders of the company, and I think these complaints merit a little more consideration than they have received. I move that this Bill be referred back to the Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I must inform the hon. gentleman that the motion is not in order, as it has not been made in the proper place. That motion should have been made when the order was read by the clerk at the Table before we went into committee. If the hon. gentleman desires to send the Bill back to the Committee on Banking and Commerce, he can move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again; and when the order is next called, he can make the motion to send the Bill back.

Mr. MORRISON. My hon. friend who has just spoken has on a previous occasion made the reference that he has made at the present time, and the sense of the committee was adverse to the suggestion he made on that occasion. My hon. friend also had the opportunity before the committee to lodge any complaints which he might have had in regard to the details of the measure. The committee considered the Bill fully, the House considered it and passed upon it, and now my hon. friend comes a second time without any new argument and asks that the time of the committee and of this House be taken up in considering a matter which has already been fully gone into by the Minister of Finance and by the officers connected with the Banking and Commerce Committee. I cannot see that there is any force in such a request, and I would strongly urge that no more time be taken up in a matter which after all has not been shown to be of any consequence, and that this Bill be allowed to pass. I must confess, as the hon. Minister of Finance has said, that there has been considerable patchwork about the Bill, but that is the fault of the solicitors who have charge of it. I think there has been nothing done but what should have been done by the officers of the committee in seeing that the interests of the public were safeguarded. The government have seen fit to add two clauses, and then it was discovered by those in charge of the Bill that these two omissions had been made, and these two paragraphs are added. They do not affect the substance of the Bill, and I would strongly urge that it be allowed to pass as amended.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

RAILWAY ACT, 1903.

House in committee on Bill (No. 21) to amend and consolidate the law respecting railways.—The Minister of Railways and Canals.

On section 196—farm crossings.

Mr. HOLMES. I move that the following words be added:

And whenever the embankment and road-bed of the railway is high enough to permit of its being done, the railway company shall make undercrossings, passing beneath the track, built up of stone or other material, for the convenience of persons across whose land the railway is carried, in order to permit the passage of live stock back and forth, such under-crossings to be maintained and kept in repair by the railway company.

My object is to anticipate what may be a serious grievance in the future, just as we have been anticipating serious grievances with regard to drainage. Let me cite to the committee a circumstance which will show the necessity for this amendment. On the line of the London, Huron & Bruce Railway, which happens to be a branch of the Grand Trunk Railway, a number of farmers enjoyed for a considerable length of time under crossings. They enjoyed them as a right from the railway company in harmony with an agreement made by that company with the individuals. The agreement was made some twenty-five years ago and was drawn up by an hon. member of this House, who is consequently familiar with the circumstances. The railway company lived up to that agreement for twenty-five years, but during the past year, for some reason or other, it has filled up those under crossings, very much to the detriment of the farmers over whose land the railway passes. In the future construction of railways, a precaution of that kind ought to be provided, because it is a very serious matter to a farmer to have to drive his cattle across a railway instead of under it. Where a farm is crossed by a railway with a number of level crossings, that involves serious risk to him in driving his cattle back and forth. I brought this case particularly to the attention of the hon. minister, who promised to consider it; and it seems to me that in anticipation of difficulties of that kind in the future, some provision should be made for the placing of under crossings in the formation of the roadbed. I do not wish to convey the idea that all the under crossings on the line of the London, Huron & Bruce have been filled in, but certainly some have, very much to the injury of the farmers. The excuse given by the company for violating its agreement is that this agreement was not embodied in the deed of transfer of the property from the farmers to the company and not registered, and therefore they claim that they are under no obligation to maintain these under crossings, although they admitted their own liability by keeping them in a state of repair for twenty-five years. It seems to me that a provision of this kind would contribute also to the safety of the travelling public by providing against cattle being struck by passing trains and thereby endangering the safety of the passengers.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood that the hon. minister had an amendment to propose to this clause, which would give the right to farmers to have crossings over portions of their land, in cases where a part had been disposed of and a part retained. A man, for instance, who has one hundred acres, might sell fifty acres. It might happen that the crossing was on the part sold, and because the law only obliges railway companies to give one crossing over a lot, they could refuse to furnish another crossing or to allow another to be built on that portion of the lot remaining unsold. I understood that the hon. minister intended proposing an amendment to meet such a case, and it would be more proper to deal with that now before considering the amendment proposed by the hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Holmes).

Mr. LANCASTER. I have prepared an amendment with regard to level crossings, which perhaps the hon. member for West Huron would accept as being more practical than his own. It would impose a heavy burden on the railway company to compel them to tunnel under their roads every quarter of a mile or so. It would almost amount to reconstructing the whole roadbed, and although that might be in the interest of the farmers, it might also be unreasonable. What I was going to propose was the following amendment:

That section 196 be amended by adding after the word 'accidents' in the last line of such section the words 'and the company shall erect and maintain fences of the minimum height of four feet six inches on each side of the crossing from the company's boundary fences to points as near to each side of the rails as to admit of the safe passage of trains.

That perhaps would meet with the approval of the hon. minister. Even if the railways do not agree to it, it is an obligation which we have the right to impose on them. The remedy proposed by the hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Holmes) is to compel the railways to provide passage for the animals underneath, but we ought not to impose burdens on railways which are not absolutely necessary, and the plan I suggest would be cheaper and accomplish the same result. It may be known to some hon. members that during the recess, I was attending many meetings of the cattle-guard commission, and it is but right that I should tell the House that although the farmers were very anxious to get that law amended, they also were urging upon me to get the farm crossings protected in some such way as I am providing. I would point out also that the hon. minister, in drawing up this measure, has imposed a burden upon the farmers with regard to farm crossings which does not exist to-day.

The law which is now in force, and which will be in force until this parliament prorogues, simply provides that 'every company shall make the crossings for persons across whose lands the railway is carried, convenient and proper for the crossing of the railway by farmers' implements, carts and other vehicles.' Under the law as the hon. minister proposes to amend it, provision is made that 'every company shall make crossings for persons across whose lands the railway is carried, convenient and proper for the crossings of the railway for farm purposes.' The word 'vehicles' is not used. And this provision is added: 'In crossing with live stock, the same shall be in charge of some competent person, who shall use all reasonable care and precaution to avoid accidents.' Of course, we presume that every person will use care and precaution, but here is a distinct addition to the law, laying it down as an emphatic command to the farmer that care and precaution shall be used. But while we impose it upon the farmer that he shall use proper precautions with regard to live stock, we ought to compel the railway to use proper precautions also. Both parties ought to be compelled, or induced, so far as we can control them, to do everything reasonably possible to prevent the impact between animals and the trains. But it is not only at farm crossings that cattle and the trains come in contact. As the law stands, it is not necessary for the railway company to do anything but to have its line fenced between its right of way and the adjoining farm property. While the gate of the farm crossing is open for animals to pass, they have access to the whole width of the right of way. There is no immediate danger except at that point. But the animals are apt to turn to the right or left as soon as they get through the gate, and they have the lands of the railway between the fence and the track to run upon. They have to be headed off and driven back. But they may meet a train at any moment. If there were fences set at right angles to the boundary fence and carried down as far as would be consistent with the safe passage of trains, the danger from these cattle getting upon the railway right of way would be reduced to a minimum, because they could only escape where the rails are. In the case of highway crossings, there will be cattle-guards. I am not suggesting that there should be cattle-guards at the farm crossings, but I am only saying that we should reduce the chances of danger as far as we can. While we impose this additional clause upon the farmer, bringing it in this year for the first time, providing that the farmer is to have his animals under the care of a competent person who shall take all reasonable care and precaution to avoid accidents, we ought to impose upon the railways the duty of doing all that is reasonably possible to assist the farmer in preventing accidents. It would be a matter of small expense to carry the fences out at right angles to as near the rails as would be consistent with the safe passage of trains. That is why I propose this amendment. It is not an undue or unreasonable imposition upon the railway. The amendment proposed by the hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Holmes) is designed to accomplish the same end and remedy the same grievance. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will come to the conclusion that my amendment will accomplish what we both want, and it has the additional advantage, as I regard it, that the expense will be merely trifling as compared with his proposal of tunnelling under the railways at each farm crossing, which might be every eighth or quarter of a mile.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Three or four subsections have been dealt with by hon. members; I shall try to deal with them in the order in which they have been brought up. The hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) called attention to the case of farms being split up and portions sold, and suggested the making of additional farm crossings. I think the hon. member must have misunderstood me if he thought that I had engaged to prepare an amendment on the subsection. I did engage to turn the matter over in my mind to see whether the proposition that the hon. gentleman made could be accepted. I have considered the matter, but have not been able to see that it would be reasonable or fair to multiply these farm crossings to the extent that would be necessary if the suggestion were given effect to. It is possible that a farm might be cut up into half a dozen parts and distributed among as many different owners. We know that that is very much the practice in the province of Quebec, where the farms are very narrow. A railway might pass eight or ten times as many crossings as were originally provided for, by reason of the property being divided and passing into different hands. That, I think, would be an exceedingly onerous obligation to impose upon the railway. I think that it would also multiply the danger involved in operating the railway. On consideration, it does not strike me that we ought to require this of the company. It is always possible for the owner of a farm, if he decides to sell, to afford opportunity to the person to whom he sells to use his crossing. I think it would be better to require that that should be done rather than to multiply farm crossings and increase the hazzards involved.

Now we come to the further vexed question, the amendment proposed by the hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Holmes). I think that is a very serious proposition. I must confess that it does not commend itself to my mind. I think we are carrying this sort of legislation pretty far and are imposing very heavy and expensive obligations upon the railway companies which they have not hitherto been called upon to bear. I am not saying that we have already gone too far, but I am saying that we had better proceed a little more deliberately. We had better see how what we have already effected works, and, perhaps, later, this or a cognate proposition might be considered by parliament. But at this stage, not having been able to give to the subject proper consideration, not having heard what may be alleged on the other side, I think I would not be justified in acceding to the hon. gentleman's request or asking the committee to entertain it.

My hon. friend from Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) has a suggestion to make, and he covers it with the remark that under section 196 we are imposing additional burdens upon the farmers, and we may, therefore, reasonably and fairly, as a set-off against that, impose some further obligation with respect to these crossings upon the railway company. I am not saying whether or not the committee ought to require them to erect these cross fences. I have this observation to make with regard to the hon. gentleman's suggestion, that I do not see we are imposing any additional obligation, or one that involves a big charge upon the farmer in the clause that we have proposed.

In the crossing of live stock the same shall be in charge of some competent person who shall use all reasonable care and precaution to avoid accidents.

We provide that a person taking the live stock across a railway shall do what every careful man does do now, who is taking cattle across a railway over which perhaps many trains are running. Every person puts his cattle in the charge of competent hands, and he would be certain to have a suitable person in charge of the cattle. Therefore I cannot see that in the language of this clause we are making an undue demand upon the farmers or increasing their responsibility in the premises. Now, coming to the question of expense, I would be glad to have a more general expression of opinion from the committee as to the desirability of having this provision made. I confess that there is only one reason which can be assigned against adopting it, and that is, the one of expense. There are reasons which suggest themselves to my mind, and which have already been mentioned by the hon. member, why a precaution of this sort would be wise. But when we consider the number of crossings on these railroads already, the question whether the charge might not be unduly burdensome, is one that I would like to see more fully discussed by gentlemen who are better acquainted with the practical side of the question.

Mr. HOLMES. I am free to admit that it would be better to adopt the suggestion of the hon. member for Lincoln than to make no provision at all regarding the crossings ; but I am not free to admit that his is a better provision than the amendment I proposed myself. In the first place the proposition of the member for Lincoln would imply that at certain seasons of the year there would be along the line of railway merely a number of boxes that would be filled up with snow, to the detriment of the farmers who were passing to and fro, and it would not be found as workable. But my own proposition to make a permanent crossing beneath the railway——

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). Would that fill up ?

Mr. HOLMES. It might fill up with snow, but it would be easier to remove it, because it would be on a level track. But at the same time, you would have one under crossing where you would not have any over crossing. I will also admit the contention of the minister that it puts on the railway a considerable burden to provide for an under crossing. Whether we should impose that burden on the railway is not for me to say. At the present time I am asking for better protection for farmers and for their stock than they have in the provisions of the present Act. I realize that to require the company to make a crossing every few hundred yeards would perhaps be a burdensome thing for them to do, but in the long run, I think it would be to the advantage of the railway as well as to the farmers, because if they were maintained, they would be there for all time and would be a great convenience to the farmers.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I would like to mention to the minister one reason why I think, these under crossings would be objectionable. For instance, in the case where a farmer has part of his land on one side of the railway and a part on the other side, and is obliged to draw his hay across to his barn on the other side. In that case he would have to have two crossings, that is, an under crossing for cattle and an over crossing for his wagon. In other words, it would necessitate the railway giving that farmer a double crossing, unless the under crossing was made wide enough and deep enough to allow a load of hay passing through. It would be very costly to make the under crossing large enough for a load of hay or grain to pass. For this reason I think it would be a hardship to compel the railway to make an underneath crossing. Now, I have not heard of any complaint with regard to accidents at the crossings we now have, though of course there may be accidents now and then. But the great difficulty I have heard of among farmers is where the farm has been divided, where a farmer has sold off, say, fifty acres of his land. In a case of that kind this clause simply states that the farmer shall have a crossing. As long as the board would have a right to authorize the railway to grant a crossing in a case where they thought it was right, I think that is all that is required. So far as this amendment of the hon. member for Lincoln is concerned, I doubt myself whether it is really necessary. Of course cattle may go into a place that is fenced in, then turn around and run along the track, and it would be a great difficulty to get them back. But I think, as a rule, cattle go straight across the track. However, I have not made any inquiries to ascertain whether such a change is necessary, but I do not feel at present that it is necessary to impose such a burden on the railways.

Mr. LANCASTER. I forgot to tell the minister a moment ago that a good many farmers have asked me if there was no way by which the Railway Committee of the Privy Council would permit them to go upon the railway lands and build these fences themselves. The farmers would be willing, if the railways would permit them, to go to the expense of digging these post holes and putting in the posts and putting on the boards or wires. The farmers will be willing, if the railways will permit them to go to the expense of digging these post holes and putting the necessary boards up, to do so, but I have been obliged to tell them that they cannot go upon the railway lands and that I do not know any way in which they can get permission to do so.

Mr. WADE. When the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lancaster) speaks of farmers one would suppose that he was representing all the farmers. I chance to represent a constituency composed largely of farmers, and I think it is my duty to speak for them. I assume that the hon. gentleman means to convey to the committee the impression that he speaks only for the farmers in his riding.

Mr. LANCASTER. For the farmers generally in Ontario.

Mr. WADE. I do not know if he can speak for the farmers of Ontario, but certainly he cannot speak for the farmers outside of Ontario. As to the suggestion which has been made in regard to underground crossings or subway crossings I think that is not practicable at all. If they had these crossings dug underneath the railway during the winter time they would fill up with snow and in the spring and autumn they would fill up with water, and it would be impossible to drain them. I cannot see why there should be a demand for anything of that sort. The farmers are not asking for it.

Mr. LANCASTER. They are asking for it.

Mr. WADE. The farmers would not ask for any such crossing as that, because I think it would be unreasonable and I do not like to hear it said that they are asking for anything unreasonable, because I have found the farmers to be intelligent men who are only asking for what is right. They are quick to ask for what is right and to obtain it too if they can. In regard to the other proposition made by the hon. member for Lincoln, I would be slow to take any suggestion of that sort until I had an opportunity of laying it before my constituents who are largely made up of farmers. No complaint of that sort has come before me. The only demand that has come before me is for good substantial crossings, good gates with fastenings upon them and the only complaint is in regard to the matter of fires. This has been remedied in the Bill as it stands now. I can see very substantial objection to this proposal of fencing and there may be objections to it which would occur to the minds of farmers but would not occur to my mind and would not occur to the minds of very many of the hon. gentlemen present. If two lines of fences were built up to the track as has been suggested by one of the speakers, what would be the result? Suppose a man was driving a herd of cattle through from one side of the track, when the cattle come upon the track the most natural thing for them to do is to spread off each way. Before the farmer can bring them back he has to climb a four and a half foot fence, and if he is not more sprightly than some of us it will take him so long getting over the fence that the cattle will be away up the track and perhaps meet a locomotive before he overtakes them.

Mr. COCHRANE. I do not think that would alarm the practical farmer.

Mr. WADE. What does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Cochrane) say?

Mr. COCHRANE. If the hon. gentleman does not know more about law than he does about farming, then he does not know anything about it and his opinion is not worth anything.

Mr. WADE. That is an expression of opinion by an hon. gentleman whose opinions do not meet with very much favour in this House. I think I know a great deal more about farming than the hon. gentleman does. I was brought up on a farm.

Mr. COCHRANE. 'Seest thou a man wise in his own conceit, there is more hope of a fool than of him.'

Mr. WADE. Satan quoting scripture. I usually know what I am talking about and that is the difference between the hon. gentleman and myself. One of these days I may be able to convince him that I do know something about law, but this House is not interested at the present moment in knowing whether I know anything about law or not. I would be very slow in asking this House to make any radical change in the Act affecting farmers until I had some complaint from the farmers I represent and until I know whether the proposed change will meet with their approval or not. This matter of fencing, this question of cattleguards and all these things have been before this House year after year. This is a new suggestion thrown out, and I think the remarks of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals are very appropriate and pertinent when he says that we should take time to consider this matter before we make any change of this kind. I can see a further objection to the building of these fences. They would be a snow trap in winter time. The space between the two fences close together would fill up and blockade the crossing which would be a detriment to the farmer who has to use any of these crossings in the winter time. I do not believe there would be the slightest complaint on the part of the farmers as to farm crossings if all the gates were provided with proper fastenings and hinges so that they could be easily opened and closed.

Mr. SPROULE. I wish to say a word or two more in regard to the necessity of more crossings than one to each 100 acres. I understood the hon. minister to say that he had intended to direct his attention to this with a view of presenting an amendment. It was in that sense that I understood he had an amendment to propose, but he tells me now that he has no amendment.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have an amendment, but I do not imagine that it would be sufficient to cover the case mentioned by the hon. gentleman. This amendment reads as follows :

The board may, upon the application of the landowner, order the company to provide and construct a suitable farm crossing across the railway, wherever in any case the board deems it necessary for the proper enjoyment of his land, on either side of the railway, and safe in the public interest.

That proposition is made to the committee in order that the power may rest with the board in a proper case to make such an order. My hon. friend, I understand, wants to have a provision in the Bill that if a person sold a portion of his land the railway should provide a highway crossing in respect to the portion of it with which he had parted. I do not think we should do that. If this is satisfactory to the hon. gentleman I would be very glad, but I did not regard it as likely to meet his views.

Mr. SPROULE. That is the amendment I referred to and it is an amendment that would meet the case. If land changes hands there must be an owner of it and if the landowner is entitled to a crossing the board is empowered to order that it shall be provided. I am quite sure that it would be reasonable enough to do so, and therefore I think that would meet every requirement of the case so far as my judgment goes. That is the amendment I referred to, but I understood that the hon. minister was not prepared to make any amendment whatever.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I had in my mind that the hon. gentleman took the ground that the railway company should provide a crossing in respect to every other piece of land which had been cut-off from the larger portion, and which had passed into new hands, that wherever a farm was cut up the person who got the other portion of the land from the original owner would be entitled to a crossing. I thought that was what the hon. gentleman was asking for. I am very glad to hear that this will be satisfactory to him.

Mr. SPROULE. I have in my mind a case like this : In our country the land was originally laid out in fifty acre lots. One fifty acre lot was a free grant and the adjoining one was what would be called in the North-west a pre-emption lot. The settlers might retain that pre-emption lot or drop it, or sell his right to some other person after he had improved his own lot and increased its value. He might sell his right to that fifty acres to some other person. The farm was originally 100 acres and the railway crossed the 100 acres and gave but one crossing. It was to meet such a case as that that I wished to have the clause amended, but I think this will meet the case in every respect, and I am satisfied with it. As to having crossings underneath the railway I can readily understand that it would be convenient for the farmers, but the objection is raised that it would tend to interfere with the safety of the travelling public, and it would also be enormously expensive as it would mean a subway about every quarter mile. I think the House will feel reluctant to order such a thing as that. These subways would also be troublesome inasmuch as they would be likely to fill up with snow. The hon. gentleman from Annapolis said that the fences would also pile up snow in winter, but if they are wire fences there would be no danger from that source. I confess that I do not look with very great favour upon the proposal to build these fences to the track, for unless there be a cattle-guard at every one of these crossings the cattle may frequently get on the track. It does seem to me that if the farmers have proper level crossings it is all you can reasonably expect the railways to provide. In the original clause it was stated that these crosssings should be for farm purposes, and I am glad the clause has been amended with regard to that. I know a case where the person who purchased one portion of a sub-divided farm claimed the right to have a crossing and he allowed others to cross, but the company objected because he had only the right to cross himself and then only for farm purposes. This is an unnecessary and unjust restriction, and I am glad to see that the section has been amended so that the board may order a crossing on whatever terms they deem proper.

Mr. COCHRANE. The minister intimated that he was willing to take sugestions from practical men, and I suppose he meant those who were accustomed to drive cattle across a railway track.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. COCHRANE. In that respect I am practical, and I may tell the minister that while I do not want to make a speech for 'Hansard,' I will give him my view. As to the member for Annapolis (Mr. Wade) I will dispose of him by quoting a passage from Scripture ;

Seest thou a man wise in his own conceit there is more hope of a fool than of him.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. COCHRANE. As to fencing the crossings, the arguments made by some hon. members are fallacious. When the person in charge of the cattle opens the gate and the cattle go through, the first thing that attracts their attention is the long grass on both sides of the railway track, and their instinct is to scatter in different directions to get at that grass, and if a train comes along an accident may happen. If there were wire fences running along each side of the crossing, then nothing but the bare track would be open to the cattle and the chances are ten to one that they will not go on the bare track. I would not require those fences to be as high as the farm fences, but if there was some kind of a fence running up to the track which would prevent the cattle from turning to the right or to the left it would be a great improvement on the existing condition of things. As to tunnel crossings no matter how convenient they might be to the farmers I would not vote for it because of the extremely detrimental effect that it is bound to have on the operation of railways. However, now that we are legislating to make the farmers cautious we should also make the railways a little more cautious to protect the farmers, and if the minister would carry out the suggestions which I make it would have a tendency in that direction.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). I was glad to hear the minister invite suggestions from practical men and I shall avail myself of that invitation. I take it that the railways formerly construed the existing law to mean that they must keep up fences on those crossings because along the Grand Trunk Railway and the Toronto Hamilton and Buffalo there were originally fences at all these crossings. I cannot imagine it possible that such a Bill as this should go through parliament without providing for these fences. If the existing law does not provide for them, then a clause such as that proposed by the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) should be inserted. One man could not tend a drove of cattle crossing the track; it would require two or three men. It is a very easy matter to maintain light fences of wire which would not catch the snow, and I believe that all the railway companies of this country feel the necessity of building these fences; but when we are passing the Railway Bill we might as well make it clear. A word with regard to underground crossings. Originally there were underground crossings under the Grand Trunk Railway, and that I suppose was one reason why it cost $100,000 a mile. Now, since the wooden crossings have rotted away, the company are putting in expensive stone crossings, being obliged by the terms of their agreement with the farmers to do so; but they are making them so narrow that they are practically of no use. There has been some litigation with regard to them, but as a rule the farmers dread the expense of litigation with a railway company. Some of the crossings which were originally ten feet wide have been reduced to three or four feet, which will not let more than one animal go through at a time. The danger to the railway of these crossings is so great that I could not consent to vote that they should be built. One objection has been urged to them is that they get filled up with snow. This objection is quite invalid because farmers do not pasture their cattle in the winter time, consequently do not care whether they fill up with snow or not. But I think it is absolutely essential that provision should be made that these fences should be built at every farm crossing, unless this is done I feel sure there will be a great outcry among the farming community and I think justly so.

Mr. BARKER. I do not think I would have said anything on this clause had I not been specially referred to by the hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Holmes). Having been formerly connected with a railway company, it might appear that what I say might be influenced somewhat by that fact. However, for a good many years I have had no interest in nor connection with any railway company. At the same time, I have had a good many years' experience on many of the questions that have been discussed here; and I can say, after hearing what has been said, that there is a good deal of truth and a good deal of error on all sides. The hon. member for Huron has referred to an agreement which he says was drawn up by me some twenty or twenty-five years ago. I have no doubt whatever that the agreement he refers to, if it exists, was drawn by me. In the case of the railway to which he alludes, all agreements that were entered into were put in writing; and I can only say that from my long experience of railway companies, I do not believe that either the Grand Trunk, which now owns the road which he referred to, or any other railway in this country, would repudiate a written agreement which had been entered into by the company or by its predecessor. I have never yet known an agreement to be repudiated in that way, and I think there must be some mistake. I can only say that if the Grand Trunk Company is repudiating such an agreement,

I should be happy to assist to the utmost of my power in compelling the company to adhere to that agreement to the last letter. I can hardly believe that a railway company would be guilty of such dishonourable conduct as to repudiate such an agreement. With regard to the point the hon. gentleman makes as to underground crossings, I know that the railway companies of this country have spent thousands of dollars in buying up these crossings in the interest of the safety of trains that run over their tracks. Every person connected with railways knows that every hole in the track is an element of danger. If a wheel gets off the track and runs along an embankment, there is frequently no serious accident; but if a wheel runs off the track and gets into one of these underground crossings, there may be a very serious catastrophe involving loss of life. There have been many devices to get over the difficulty; but the railway companies, in the interest of their passengers, in the interest of their men, and in the interest of the safety of their rolling stock, have spent many thousands of dollars in buying up these crossings. I think the safety of the trains is the great consideration that should be given weight to here, and I should be very sorry if this parliament should under any circumstances commit itself to ordering the construction of underground farm crossings. With regard to the cross fences, I think most hon. gentlemen will recollect that some ten or fifteen years ago, along the railways in the province of Ontario there were to be seen many fence posts which had formerly been fences at farm crossings; but if the hon. gentleman could travel along all the railways of Ontario to-day he would see very few of these cross fences existing. It has been said here to-night that it is all nonsense to say that the farmers object to them. I know personally that many farmers have objected; they have told me that they do not want them. If the farmers thought they were good, they would have been continued; but many who had agreements with the railway companies requiring these fences abandoned them and have not insisted on the agreement to keep them up. The reason is obvious enough. Cattle will get on to the railway whether driven across it or not. Farm servants, children, and others, will be negligent, and will leave gates open; colts and cattle will get out and ramble along the track; the train will come along, the animal will run ahead of the train until it comes to the cross fence when it will run up to the opening and get killed. It is an element of danger. Formerly, when the fences were of wood, there was another element of danger in these cross fences, the danger of fire with the train rushing along and the sparks flying backwards, these fences were liable to catch fire and conduct the fire into the farms. But it seems to me there is not much in the point, because under the clause proposed by the minister, if the board should come to the conclusion that these fences are necessary or expedient, it can order them. The language of the clause permits the board to order any kind of crossing they like. It says they may order and direct how, when, where, by whom and upon what terms and conditions such farm crossing shall be constructed and maintained. These terms are broad enough to enable the board to order any kind of fence that may be required at a crossing. With regard to public crossings, the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) has said that the minister proposes to add some words here which impose a greater burden on the farmer or the person living in the neighbourhood of the crossing than has hitherto existed. There is not one word in this clause that any judge of the land would not say is part of the law as it stands to-day. Every lawyer knows that a judge, in directing a jury on this subject, would say that the law providing that the cattle or horses should be in charge of some person does not mean merely that the person may be there without doing anything. Over and over again it has been decided that if the person in charge did not take reasonable care to protect the cattle in crossing, the complainant had no case. All that the minister has done is to add words which make the legal effect clear to the ordinary lay mind, and it is better that the farmer should know exactly what the law means than have to go to a lawyer to interpret it.

Mr. LANCASTER. I do not think that the hon. gentleman could have considered the language preceding this. There is not a word in the provision of the law preceding this, requiring that any one must be in charge of the stock. There is a great difference between having to be guided by the common law as regards what is contributory negligence and making a special enactment saying that a certain thing must be done. In the latter case if that thing be not done there is of course negligence, whereas, under the common law, all the circumstances being considered, there might not be negligence.

Mr. ERB. While I do not think we would be justified in passing legislation to compel railway companies to construct under crossings, still I do think that some provision should be made compelling the railway companies to give the farmers the use of existing structures where they may be of service. I have an instance in my mind of a culvert which is sufficiently large to allow cattle to pass through it. The farmer has land on both sides of this culvert, and during the greater part of the summer the watercourse is dry and cattle could pass through without any injury. The farmer would be willing to put the necessary side fences from the division fence to the culvert, and if necessary to plank the bottom of the culvert, so that the cattle could pass through without tramping up the bottom. It would not put the railway to any additional expense if he were allowed to use this culvert, and I think that a provision might be inserted compelling the railway companies in such cases to allow the use of their structures for the passage of cattle.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cardwell). If the hon. minister considers he will be imposing too great a burden on the railway companies to compel them to make these double fences, he should at least give the farmers the right to build them themselves if they consider them of advantage. I know where farmers have built fences from the railway fence to as near the railway track as possible in order to get cattle over with less trouble. One man could handle a dozen cattle easier where there is a fence on each side up to that track than two men could where there is no such fence. The fact that the municipalities compel the railway companies to put fences up at the highways is proof that the people believe it is easier to get cattle to pass between a fourteen or fifteen feet gap than through one of two rods. The railway companies should either be compelled to put these fences up themselves or allow the farmers to put them up if they require them.

Mr. INGRAM. Does the hon. member for South Perth say that the railway companies object to their culverts being used for the passage of cattle, when they are in such a condition that they may be used for that purpose ?

Mr. ERB. I know that an owner of property told me a few days ago that he would like to see some provision made which would give him the right to make use of a railway culvert by building all the necessary works himself. Whether he applied to the company and was refused, I am not in a position to say.

Mr. INGRAM. In that case there is nothing in the contention of the hon. gentleman. We know that in the last twenty-five years the construction and operation of railways have undergone a great change. The reason why underground crossings have been done away with is because the companies have changed very materially their system of operating. Years ago their rolling stock was much lighter but when they concluded to make their rolling stock heavier, when they decided to increase their engine power, they found that it was necessary to close up these under crossings because they interfered with the solidity of the road-bed. The first thing to be considered is the safety of the travelling public, and it was that which the railway companies had in view when they filled up these under ground crossings. Then we have water passing under the railways in many places. Formerly many railways had wooden bridges over these water courses, whereas to-day they have very strong structures built over them in order to make them perfectly safe and strengthen the road-bed. I did attend meetings of the Cattle-guard Commission, and I found farmers stating that they did not attach as much importance to the cattle guards as they did to farm crossings and the way they were kept on different railways. They say that they used the private farm crossings fifty times for once they used a highway crossing. The principal reason for using the farm crossing was to drive their stock and produce back and forth, and they thought some steps should be taken in order to protect their stock and loads of produce going over the track from time to time. And they suggested that fences be run from the gate near to the rails on the railway. I am not prepared to say that that would be a good thing. I do not know from personal experience whether it would be or not. But perhaps I might be permitted to suggest an idea in view of what the farmers stated. They said they would be willing to furnish the material and do the work themselves, if the railway companies would give permission sooner than do without them. Under this section the board would be empowered to consider the applications of these people : and, where there would be no harm in allowing a wire fence from the farm crossing gate up to the railway, if the farmer chooses to provide such a fence, I do not see any reason why the board should not have the power to allow the farmers to make the fence. That seems to be the idea of these farmers, rightly or wrongly. Having been present and having heard their views, I think it is my duty to lay those views before this committee. So far as authority for creating these farm crossings are concerned, I think the amendment proposed by the hon. minister will cover the point.

Mr. ERB. The remarks made do not apply to the case I referred to. The culvert is an open culvert and the cattle, if permitted to pass through it, would not add at all to the danger of running trains.

Mr. INGRAM. What railway ?

Mr. ERB. The Grand Trunk Railway.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cardwell). I believe that if the right were granted to farmers to make the fences from the farm gate up to near the rails it would facilitate the crossing of cattle and would also, to a large extent, provide for the case mentioned by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule). And I think that the farmer should be allowed to make these fences if he thinks it best to do so in his own interest. It would be no disadvantage to the railway whatever. It would be better to have wire fences, as they would not catch the snow.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. In view of the great difference of opinion of the committee as to the possibility of adding a clause requiring these fences to be constructed at farm crossings, I think it would be unwise to adopt the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster). But it will be observed that the board is fully empowered to deal with this question. The board can inform themselves as to the utility and desirability of having these fences, and they can require the railway companies to construct them if they think it well to do so. I think the matter stands in very good shape as it is, and that it would be undesirable to adopt the amendment. My hon. friend from South Perth (Mr. Erb) has expressed the wish that, if possible, a clause may be included in the Act enabling farmers to utilize the culverts or arches which are on their farms, for the purpose of driving cattle through. I apprehend there cannot be many cases of that kind, and that this is not a matter requiring provision in a general law of this kind. At this time it could not be satisfactorily dealt with. Not having heard of it before, I am not in a position to pass on it satisfactorily. I think my hon. friend will see the desirability of not asking me to make an amendment of that kind at present.

Mr. ERB. Would there be any objection to empowering the commission to deal with these applications if they are made ?

Mr. LENNOX. Would not the board have power to deal with it under the subsection proposed by the hon. minister ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think under the general powers it might.

Mr. ERB. That would answer.

Mr. LANCASTER. Referring to the suggestion of the hon. minister that there would not be much harm in leaving this question of fences between the farm gate and the railway to the board, I would point out that the board will probably be guided in their decisions by what they find in the law. In ordering a new farm crossing, they would naturally say : We should not provide that these fences shall be made, because other farm crossings have not these fences. If we are of opinion that these fences ought to be made, we ought to say so in the statute.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I remarked that in view of the great difference of opinion on the part of the committee, we should not make the provision.

Mr. LANCASTER. I think there is a strong majority in favour.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I doubt it. I think the strength of the argument may be said to be against the hon. member's amendment. I think the general power given to the board to require any appliances that they think necessary at crossings, will apply to these farm crossings and the protection of them. If there is a case made out in favour of placing these fences on each side of the farm gate, there is no doubt but the board has power and it would act upon that power.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. There are a number of amendments to be dealt with. They are all amendments to the clause, and not to other amendments. The first is that of Mr. Cowan——

Mr. COWAN. In order to clear the atmosphere, I may say that when I moved the amendment the other day to clause 196, the clause stood as printed in the original Bill, and no subsection was proposed, so far as I knew. But subsection 2, as now proposed, obviates the necessity for the amendment I proposed. Therefore, with the consent of the seconder (Mr. Thompson, Haldimand), I beg leave to withdraw the amendment I made.

Amendment (Mr. Cowan) withdrawn.

Amendment (Mr. Holmes) negatived.

Amendment (Mr. Lancaster) negatived.

Amendment (Hon. Mr. Blair) agreed to, and section, as amended, agreed to.

On section 197—fences, cattle-guards.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (Essex). I think section 197 should be dealt with in connection with section 237. Now in connection with this cattle-guard question——

Mr. LANCASTER. Will the hon. gentleman allow me a word ?

Mr. SUTHERLAND (Essex). No, I will not.

Mr. LANCASTER. I merely wanted to say——

Mr. SUTHERLAND (Essex). I have the floor at the present time. I am not in the habit of wasting the time of the House. While we on this side of the House have been paying just as much attention, and perhaps more attention, to this Bill than hon. gentlemen opposite have been doing, they have been trying to create the impression in the country that they are the only people who are paying any attention to this Bill at all. I want to say in the first place that the people of this country will view with a great deal of satisfaction the conduct of the minister who has charge of this Bill, in the first place, for the great care, consideration and judgment he has manifested in its preparation ; in the next place, for the calm and judicial way in which he has presented the Bill before the House, and the readiness with which he has invited criticism from both sides, and has yielded to all sorts of suggestions for the purpose of perfecting this Bill. I believe that the Bill will become law one of these days, and that it will reflect the greatest possible credit on the hon. Minister of Railways. Now there has been a great difference of opinion as to what form an amendment in respect to cattle-guards should take to remedy the evil which certainly exists, to the detriment of the farmers and owners of cattle. That fact is very apparent from what occurred last year. A number of gentlemen have sought to frame an amendment to the existing law which will be generally satisfactory. There is no question that while this matter of cattle-guards is important to every province of Canada, it is especially important to the province of Ontario, and the farmers of that province have taken more interest in it than the farmers of any other part of the Dominion. Last year there were several amendments proposed to the existing legislation in respect to cattle-guards. The hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) proposed an amendment, and when we came to consider it we found that the phraseology of that amendment was defective, perhaps from the reason indicated to-night by the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker) who, in speaking on another section, said in effect that it was desirable that changes made in the legislation should be in such a form that farmers and ordinary men who are not accustomed, like lawyers, to examining legal phraseology, should be able to understand exactly what the statute meant. Now, whether it was the ambiguous terms of the amendment of the hon. member for Lincoln or for some other reason, there has been a great deal of difficulty in ascertaining the exact meaning of that amendment, and a difference of opinion as to whether it remedies the evil which we are all seeking to remedy. In dealing with this question we must not treat it as a party question, we must find the phraseology that will accomplish the purpose that we have in view. Our purpose is to place the onus in the right quarter. Hitherto the result of litigation has been almost invariably that the farmer found himself out of court. Now what we want to do by this legislation is to place the onus upon the railway company when cattle are killed or injured. Without debating this question at great length, because it has been threshed out over and over again, I propose to offer an amendment which, to some extent, embodies much of the phraseology which the Minister of Railways, after a great deal of pains and attention, has suggested. While I have used to some extent the careful and exact phraseology of the Minister of Railways, still I do not think it goes to the root of the matter, or goes as far as the farmers desire and is necessary. I have gone a little farther, and I propose to read to the committee the amendment which I suggest, and in which I think all will concur. My amendment which I move as a subsection to section 197, reads as follows :

> When any cattle or other animals at large upon the highway or otherwise, get upon the property of the company and are killed or injured by a train, the owner of such animals so killed or injured shall be entitled to recover the amount of such loss or injury against the company in any action in any court of competent jurisdiction, unless the company in the opinion of the court or jury trying the case establishes that such animal got at large through negligence or wilful neglect or omission of the owner or his agent, or of the custodian of such animal or his agent ; but the fact that such animal was not in charge of some competent person or persons shall not for the purpose of this subsection, deprive the owner of his right to recover.

I submit that is a good clear cut amendment which both sides can concur in, and which will exactly meet the situation.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That would more properly be moved as subsection 4 to section 237. I wish to move an amendment such as I have handed to you, Mr. Chairman. I beg to move :

> That subsection three of section 237, line three, be amended by inserting after the word 'train' the words 'at such point of intersection,' and to add as subsection four the following :
> 4. Whenever any cattle, at large upon the highway or otherwise, get upon the property of the company and are killed or injured by a train, the owner of such cattle so killed or injured, shall be entitled to recover the amount of such loss or injury against the company in an action in any court of competent jurisdiction, if in the opinion of the judge, who tries the action, such cattle got at large without any negligent or wilful act or omission of the owner or his agent, or of the custodian of such cattle or his agent, and got upon the railway by reason of fences, gates and cattle-guards not being erected and maintained by the company as required by this Act.

I move this as an amendment which has commended itself to my mind after giving the subject a good deal of consideration and with every desire to go as far as I think parliament can properly go in meeting the wishes and demands of the people who are interested in this question. I am well aware that the feeling is extremely strong, more particularly in sections of the province of Ontario. It seems to me further that the question is one of a character that might fairly be regarded as an open question in the House and as one upon which hon. members on both sides might very fairly vote according to their judgment with regard to the consideration that the Bill in which this section is being embodied is a government Bill. I would think, that, probably, under existing circumstances, having regard to the differences of opinion and to the different judgments, because men will differ upon the same facts, of hon. members, it would be fair to all parties that they should vote upon the different principles that are submitted in regard to this Bill as open questions. My objection to the motion which the hon. member for North Essex (Mr. Sutherland) has moved is that I think it imposes too great a responsibility upon the railway company when it insists that the railway company shall establish negligence on the part of the owner of the cattle. We had a case which was dealt with yesterday in which we placed the onus upon the railway company of showing that where fire occurred the equipment of the locomotive was such as was required by law and that the fire had been caused through no defect in the apparatus used for the purpose of preventing fires. We imposed that obligation upon the railway company of rebutting and showing that it was not guilty of negligence. In a case like the present one, dealing with all interests and all parties fairly, it appears to me that it is unjust to ask that the railway company shall give evidence or actual proof that the farmer was guilty of negligence in allowing his cattle to run unattended when it must be physically and morally and actually impossible that the railway company can have any knowledge upon the question. The owner of the cattle, or the persons in charge of the cattle, are the only persons who can know whether or not they have been negligent and it is easy for them to show that they have not been negligent and in showing that they have not been negligent they will be entitled to recover. Under the other clause they might recover although they had been negligent and although they were not in justice entitled to recover, because the railway company might fail to establish the actual facts.

Mr. LANCASTER. I am surprised a little that the hon. gentleman for North Essex (Mr. Sutherland) so poorly bears out the statement of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals that we heard last night to the effect that hon. gentlemen on this side of the House have not assisted in improving this Bill, but, that hon. gentlemen on his own side of the House by going to him privately had been able to do a great deal in assisting him to amend this Bill. At the time the hon. gentleman made that statement it struck me that if it had not been for the opposition very few amendments would have been made to this Bill in favour of the people. All the amendments which have been made to this Bill in favour of the people have emanated from this side of the House. When the hon. minister said that amendments had been made at the suggestion of hon. gentlemen opposite it struck me that he must have been referring to amendments in favour of the railways, and I think the hon. member for North Essex has proved I was right about that, because, notwithstanding the assertion of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals yesterday and notwithstanding the assertion of the hon. member for North Essex, we find that the hon. member for North Essex has to come here to-night and invoke the aid of members of the opposition in order to compel the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals to do what a humble member of the opposition for three sessions has been trying to compel him to do. The member for North Essex (Mr. Sutherland) knew that unless he got the assistance of the opposition in this House who are sincere in the matter, he could not prevail on the Minister of Railways and Canals to make the amendment. I may say at the outset that I will support the amendment.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. LANCASTER. I do not believe in treating these gentlemen opposite in the same spirit as they have treated me. For three sessions I have urged this matter on the attention of parliament, but I have obtained no support from the minister or from the member for North Essex. I hope that the next time the hon. minister and the hon. member (Mr. Sutherland) believe in the justice of a proposition which emanates from this side of the House, they will not wait for three long years to do what is right in the interest of the farmers of this country. Now, I am generous enough to congratulate the member for North Essex for coming to our relief, if he wants to put it that way, and assisting us to put into force a law which the majority on this side of the House have been urging for the last three years. Let me tell the hon. gentleman that there is not a particle of difference in the legal effect of the amendment which he has introduced and the one which I have been introducing for the last three sessions. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sutherland) knows that full well, but I want to bring another matter to the attention of the Minister of Railways and Canals and of the House, which requires amendment, and I think all will agree that it is a thing which does require amendment. Let me first tell the hon. member for North Essex that he need not have been afraid, when he refused to let me say a few words, he having the floor, he need not have been afraid that I was going to steal his thunder. I had not the remotest idea of moving an amendment different to his when I rose in my place and I had no idea of depriving him of the kudos of moving his amendment. I am not looking for that kind of cheap glory that some members on the other side of the House may be looking for, and may think I am looking for. Since I was elected to serve the people of the electoral district of Lincoln and Niagara I have endeavoured to do my duty and it matters not to me from what source legislation may come, if it be in the interest of the people I shall support it. I have no doubt that if I had moved an amendment exactly the same as he has moved he would feel it his duty to his party to oppose it acting on his record, but I am not made of that kind of stuff and therefore I will be glad that we on this side of the House have been able to convince the minister and his supporters that this long standing grievance of the farmers ought be remedied now. But the hon. member for North Essex has not provided an effectual cure, and it will therefore be necessary to move an amendment in regard to section 237. When the proper time comes I shall move to strike out the words 'or straying upon the railway' in the last line of that section. The hon. member for North Essex in his hurry to prepare his amendment has not looked into the whole law carefully. If he paid one-tenth as much attention to this matter as some members on this side have, he would have discovered for himself if the Minister of Railways did not tell him, that there are a few words in section 237 which seriously interfere with the good effect of his amendment. The Minister of Railways and Canals promised to remedy the grievances of the farmers in this respect last session, but he kept that pledge the same as he and his government have been keeping other pledges since 1896. He puts in section 237 a provision that a farmer must have sufficient help to keep the animals from straying on the railway tracks, and now, in view of this amendment he tries to make the farmer be a cattle-guard himself. When he first introduced this Bill into the House instead of remedying the grievances of the farmers, you will be surprised to hear that he not only compelled the farmer to have control of the animals at the point of intersection and to see them safely across the track, but he added the words that the farmer shall have sufficient help to prevent the animals from straying upon the railway. Now, this is an additional burden on the farmers. What are the cattle-guards there for if not to stop the animals from straying on the railway. I am bound to tell the hon. member for North Essex that in order to make this legislation workable he must help me to strike out these words 'from straying upon the railway' so that the Act will not be inconsistent, and so that judges may not disagree as to what these two sections mean when you take them together. We must have some language in this Act which will be understood by the farmers and which they will not have to get lawyers to construe for them. The hon. member for North Essex has not been able to see that this section has to be amended in order to make his amendment workable. Because of the want of his eye-glasses or for some other reason he has overlooked the fact that these words still remain in the Bill, placing an additional burden on the farmer and compelling him to have enough people at the point of intersection to prevent the animals from straying on the railway, notwithstanding that cattle-guards are there for that purpose. We have had already three amendments proposed by the Minister of Railways and Canals trying to get this cattle-guard legislation in proper shape, and at last, after deep consultation between the farmers from North Essex and the Minister of Railways and Canals we have this fourth drawn section which I am glad to say is the best of the lot, and which I think will be supported on this side of the House. What the Minister of Railways and Canals has done up to date is to endeavour to impose additional burdens upon the farmers instead of remedying their acknowledged grievances, but now he seems to be on the right track and for my part I am disposed to help him out and to make his ideas workable. In the first place I want the Minister of Railways and Canals to tell us why he added these words 'or straying upon the railway.' Why does he come to this House and state that he is giving cattle-guards that will be suitable and sufficient and at the same time provide that the farmer who heretofore had to prevent the animals from loitering at the point of intersection, has now to prevent them from straying upon the railway while the cattle-guards are there to prevent them from straying, if the law he is introducing is of any good? I could understand it if the hon. minister has been assisted by the railway lawyers in drawing this section; because they want a conflict of sections. The railway companies are interested in having laws passed which are not easy to understand, and about which the courts will disagree. The farmer cannot afford to go to law with the railway companies on doubtful matters if he expects to have any part of his farm left. The railway companies like to have laws which are doubtful in meaning, which will result in lawsuits, and the Minister of Railways and Canals has added clauses here which will make this law inconsistent with itself, so that if a farmer goes to court and sues the railway company for the loss of an animal as a result of the absence of these cattle-guards, the judge will be obliged to say to the plaintiff's counsel, it is a grave question whether you or the railway company is most to blame, because at the same session and in the same Railway Bill that is supposed to give the remedy, an amendment has been inserted at the instance of the Minister of Railways and Canals which makes the remedy doubtful.

Mr. COWAN. I understand that the hon. gentleman argues that the amendment of the hon. member for North Essex is a little inconsistent with section 237?

Mr. LANCASTER. The hon. member for North Essex has moved as an amendment a separate clause, and the clause before this House contains these words, 'or straying on the railway' which were not in the law until this session, but which are now being put in by the Minister of Railways.

Mr. COWAN. I do not just understand wherein the inconsistency lies, from listening to the hon. member.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. He has not got to that point yet.

Mr. LANCASTER. That means that the Minister of Railways does not understand it either. And as the hon. member for South Essex is so very fond of interrupting every body, if he still says he cannot understand me, I cannot help it; the fault must be with his own intelligence. I think every body else in the House who is not biased on this matter understands what I mean. I think there are laymen in the House who understand me perhaps better than the lawyer from South Essex. I am satisfied that the Minister of Railways knows what I mean, and that he must have had some reason for putting in these words 'or straying on the railway.' They never were there until this year.

Mr. COWAN. I am not rising for the purpose of interrupting. I just wish to ask a question.

Mr. LANCASTER. I think the hon. member is rising just to bother me. If he wants to ask me any question, I am willing to be cross-examined, if it will do him any good.

Mr. COWAN. I do not want to cross-examine. I simply rise because I do not grasp the point the hon. gentleman is making. I would be glad if he would make it clear wherein there is inconsistency between the amendment moved by the hon. member for North Essex and section 237 ?

Mr. LANCASTER. If the hon. member will listen, I will endeavour to tell him; but if he insists on talking to himself and jumping up like a jack-in-the-box, I do not suppose I can make him understand it. The hon. member for North Essex has introduced an amendment which puts a liability on the railway to pay for the animal notwithstanding that no human being was in control of it, if it gets on the track and is killed by the railway. The section, as the Minister of Railways has amended it—and this is a new law, added by the Minister of Railways this year—provides that the farmer must not only have enough competent people to prevent the animal loitering at the point of intersection, but even from straying on the railway. If the hon. member for South Essex was a judge, who would he say was entitled to recover under these circumstances ?

Mr. COWAN. The hon. member for Lincoln has asked me a question. What I would like to do is to read the few last lines of the amendment of the hon. member for North Essex :

> But the fact that such animal was not in charge of some competent person or persons, shall not, for the purpose of this subsection, deprive the owner of his right to recover.

Mr. LANCASTER. The hon. member for South Essex asked me wherein the amendment of the hon. member for North Essex was inconsistent with section 237. The Minister of Railways has added words which require that the farmer must not only have sufficient help to prevent the animals loitering at the point of intersection, but even from going on the railway, which is the very thing the cattle-guards are intended to stop. So that if you have accidents, which both the hon. member for North Essex and I are trying to prevent, unless you strike out these words 'or straying on the railway,' you are making a nonsensical law which can be read one minute in favour of the farmer and the next minute in favour of the railway company. Both parties will be in fault, both will have contributed, and the complainant will not be able to recover. The farmer will have to be the complainant. He cannot stop the train from running and make the railway company sue. The train keeps on killing the cattle and the farmer is to blame if he did not have sufficient help to stop the animal from going on the railway, and the railway is to blame for not having cattle-guards. We must be sensible, and I am glad that the hon. member for North Essex (Mr. Sutherland) is at last in the frame of mind to accept sensible legislation, and I submit to him my amendment, hoping that he will accept it in the spirit in which I accepted his, and let the farmers have their grievances remedied, no matter who gets the credit.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (North Essex). The hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) seems desirous to pick a quarrel with me because I would not make way for him after I had risen to move my amendment. Are we to understand that every time an hon. gentleman on this side or the other happens to rise to make a motion or to speak to some motion before the Chair, he must make way for the hon. member for Lincoln, if that hon. gentleman desires to speak ? This is the third time to-night that he has expressed his displeasure because he was not given precedence when he desired to address the House.

Mr. LANCASTER. Talk to the hon. member for South Essex (Mr. Cowan).

Mr. SUTHERLAND (Essex). I am addressing the hon. member who has just spoken, and I wish him to understand that when I rise and have the floor, I do not propose to give way even to so important a personage as the hon. member for Lincoln. I do not propose to allow myself to be sidetracked by him and resume my seat to suit his pleasure or convenience. In his desire to pose as a friend of the farmer, the hon. gentleman said that no amendment to this Bill had emanated from this side at all. Why, within the last couple of hours, one of the most important, perhaps the most important, that has yet come up was the amendment moved by my hon. friend from South Essex (Mr. Cowan).

Mr. LANCASTER. I said before to-night.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (Essex). The hon. gentleman is mistaken. He did not say before to-night, and 'Hansard' will bear me out.

Mr. LANCASTER. I certainly intended to say so, and I maintain that I did say so.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (Essex). The great difficulty with the hon. member for Lincoln is this, that when he addresses the House he effervesces to such an extent that he scarcely knows what he is talking about. He undertook to say that I had suddenly discovered an interest in this Bill. Well, no one knows better than the hon. gentleman that last year I was watching this Bill very carefully and moved an amendment in the Railway Committee along the same lines as that which I moved to-night. Last year also I moved this amendment to his own measure: 'Unless in the opinion of the court or jury, the owner of such animals shall have been guilty of negligence, but no presumption of negligence shall arise by reason of the animal being unattended on the highway.' If the hon. member for Lincoln had received that amendment in the spirit in which he should have received it, we would have had that substantial measure of improvement made last year to the law, but he would not accept it. He was so anxious to get the measure through in the shape he wished that he would not accept any reasonable suggestion. I have been watching this Bill as closely as the hon. gentleman, and the fact that I moved a resolution last year similar to the one I have moved to-night is proof of this.

Mr. LANCASTER. Does the hon. gentleman say that he moved that in the Railway Committee last year?

Mr. SUTHERLAND (Essex). That is what I said.

Mr. LANCASTER. Was it voted on?

Mr. SUTHERLAND (Essex). It was.

Mr. LANCASTER. I think the hon. gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (Essex). My hon. friend is again wrong. My hon. friend from Cornwall (Mr. Pringle) whom I see in the House will remember that after he moved this amendment: 'Without any negligence or default on the part of the owner or person to whose care or keeping such animal has been entrusted.' I moved the amendment I have just read, and it was disposed of by the Railway Committee. The hon. gentleman further insinuated that I am a railway or corporation lawyer and am attempting to deal with this matter from that standpoint. Well, Mr. Chairman, I am satisfied that no corporation or railway will be very well pleased with my amendment, and it is quite as stringent as the amendment he has suggested and perhaps more so. But apparently the hon. gentleman—for the reason I gave a few minutes ago, namely, that he gets too heated and excited—is unable to appreciate the force of the amendment I have suggested. It is perfectly clear that the latter part of the amendment quite obviates the difficulty which the hon. gentleman sees in section 1 of this section which I am proposing to amend.

Mr. LANCASTER. Will the hon. gentleman tell us whether he thinks that these words 'or straying upon a railway' ought to be in subsection 1?

Mr. SUTHERLAND (Essex). I think they are quite covered by my amendment.

Mr. LANCASTER. Do they strengthen the hon. gentleman's amendment or weaken it?

Mr. SUTHERLAND (Essex). I do not think they affect it one way or the other.

Mr. LANCASTER. The fact that the farmer himself now is bound to prevent the animals straying upon the railway does not affect the hon. gentleman's amendment?

Mr. SUTHERLAND (Essex). No. What I am providing is that the fact that the animals are not attended shall not take away the right of action from the farmer.

Mr. LANCASTER. Will the hon. gentleman tell us whether he does not think that the very object he seeks to gain by his amendment would be better served by striking out those words? Why should the farmer not only be bound to prevent the animals loitering at the point of intersection, but also prevent them from straying on the railway track?

Mr. SUTHERLAND (Essex). I am not dealing with that section in that sense at all. Whether that section stands with or without those words, the amendment I propose will cover it, and the hon. gentleman knows that to be the fact.

Mr. LANCASTER. I know the very opposite might be argued.

Mr. COWAN. As the hon. gentleman has favoured me with some choice flowers from his rhetorical conservatory, such as describing me as a Jack-in-the-box, besides showering on me like complimentary epithets, I shall try and enlighten him to a certain extent upon some matters in connection with this section which, I am sorry to say, the hon. member for Lincoln apparently does not understand. The section is one which I venture to say every hon. member of this House who has listened to the hon. member is convinced he does not understand. Before proceeding further, however, I wish to assure the hon. member for Lincoln that I entirely absolve him from any responsibility for my lack of comprehension to which he has referred. If he has brains to understand, he certainly has not given any evidence of it. Judging by his attempted argument, he is not over blessed with that commodity, and I will go a step further and tell him that his ability to transmit what may be in his own mind to the minds of others has not been displayed at any time to any considerable extent. I therefore quite absolve the hon. member from any responsibility for the so-called arguments which he attempted to make and any lack of comprehension to which he has referred. Now, it seems to me that that subsection 1 of section 237 is quite clear. For the benefit of those members of the committee who have not the Railway Bill before them, I will read it :

No horses, sheep, swine or other cattle shall be permitted to be at large on any highway within half a mile of the intersection of such highway with any railway at rail level——

—this is the old law, and a very proper one, for cattle have no business to be on the highway within half a mile of the highway, unless they are in charge of some competent person, or unless without the negligence of the owner they chance to be there—— —unless such cattle are in charge of some competent person or persons, to prevent their loitering or stopping on such highway at such intersection, or straying upon the railway.

Now, the whole principle of the railway law is that cattle shall not be within half a mile of the railway unless they are in charge of some competent person. But there is an exception, and that exception is when without negligence and without fault of the owner of these cattle they are at large upon the highway within half a mile of the railway. In that event, there is no liability on the part of the railway. The hon. member for North Essex, following out this year the principles he enunciated last year, and which, I can tell the hon. member for Lincoln the hon. member for North Essex has enunciated and followed ever since he became a respected member of this House, moved this amendment and put in the express exception in order to meet just such cases as the hon. member for Lincoln's imagination led him to believe might arise. And that was, as I read it before—this is subsection 1 of section 237—but the fact that such cattle or other animals are not in charge of some competent person or persons shall not deprive the owner of his right of recovery. That is as plain as the English language can make it.

Mr. LANCASTER. We all know that.

Mr. COWAN. I am glad you know it.

Mr. LANCASTER. I knew it before the hon. gentleman (Mr. Cowan) did.

Mr. COWAN. If you had only let me tell you when you were on your feet, you would have known it now.

Mr. LANCASTER. I knew it twenty years ago.

Mr. COWAN. I should have thought that the knowledge that the hon. gentleman has carried about with him for twenty years might have leaked out of him when he was trying to bestow some of his wisdom upon this House to-night. Now, this is the hon. member who says he knew this twenty years ago who now rises and says it is not true——

Mr. LANCASTER. No, I did not.

Mr. COWAN. You may not have intended it, and I was surprised when you did it—but you did it.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Address the Chair.

Mr. COWAN. I beg the Chairman's pardon.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. It will take a certain sting out of the discussion if hon. members, when speaking, address the Chair.

Mr. COWAN. I most humbly apologize, Mr. Chairman. I do not always follow the hon. member for Lincoln—in fact I rarely do—but under the influence of his example there are some bad habits which I naturally fall into. If the hon. member for Lincoln knew this twenty years ago, why not adopt it ? Why was it necessary for him to spend half an hour heaping abuse, or trying to heap abuse, upon the hon. member for North Essex, using the words as 'cheap glory' in referring to the hon. gentleman's motives, simply because the hon. member for North Essex moved an amendment which the hon. member for Lincoln himself accepts, which he says is a fit and proper amendment. Yet, having accepted it, he says that the man who proposes it is simply trying to get cheap glory, leaving it to be inferred that he, the hon. member for Lincoln is the great hero struggling for the rights of the people. But, he says, any man who brings forward anything with which I agree, is a cheap glory man, but I am the man who is trying to secure the rights of the people. I want to say to the hon. member for Lincoln—and I say it in all kindness, because we are the best of friends personally—that it is an exceedingly bad habit he has got into of thinking that no other man ever heard of a railroad case, and that he is the encyclopaedia of railroad law. And I want to tell him that the longer he talks the more completely he dispels that impression.

Mr. SPROULE. I cannot agree with this proposed amendment, because I think it leaves the law still very defective. I have always taken the ground that it is an improper provision in the law which compels the farmer to keep his cattle within an enclosure if they happen to be within half a mile of the railway. I come from a section of the country that, until of recent years was comparatively a wilderness and where most of the cattle were grazed in the bush. When a farmer owns a hundred acres of land for which he paid and which happens to be unenclosed, it seems most unjust to deprive him of the right of pasturing his cattle on that property because the railway happens to be within half a mile. When the amendment was made to the law before, I believed it wrong, and I believe so still. Let me refer to a portion of Ontario where the land is not all agricultural land. I speak of Manitoulin Island. Many years ago, the government of the province of Ontario sent men furnished with grass and clover seed to seed down that Island. This was done that the land might furnish grazing ground for the farmers. Perhaps eight-tenths of the land of that island can never be cultivatable. There are one or two charters in existence giving parties the right to build railways across that island. Suppose these railways are built, what are the farmers to do ? This land is not enclosed, but is rough, rocky land, good pasture because it has been seeded down, but not cultivable. Are the farmers to be deprived of the advantage of pasturing their cattle there because a railway company happens to build a railway across the island ? I say that would be unreasonable. This clause, if it is pasesd, will unduly deprive the farmers of Manitoulin of the right they now enjoy. Again, in New Ontario, where railways are being pushed for colonization purposes, you will find a thousand acres unfenced for every acre fenced. The farmers who go there as pioneers are taking in cattle in large numbers, and these cattle will be grazing in the bush year after year until the land is cleared and fenced in. Perhaps, for twenty years that will be the case. But, as soon as a railway extends into that new section, the farmers will be in danger of having their cattle impounded if they use for pasture the land they have purchased from the government and for which they have paid. Then I come to the North-west. Passing through there last fall I found that cattle in thousands and tens of thousands were being pastured upon the prairie. Every farmer who allowed his cattle to run there was violating the law. These men have taken up their homesteads, in some instances have bought their pre-emptions, but on account of this provision in the law they are not able to enjoy their property. I say the onus should be put upon the railway company and not upon the farmers. So far as this amendment changes the old law, it does not meet the requirements of the case. To that extent the law will still be defective unless it is amended so as to provide that the railway company shall fence their line, and that the farmer shall have the right to allow his cattle to run at large on the highway or on his own property, or on lands that are not fit for cultivation.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Would it be a breach of this law for a farmer in the North-west to let his cattle run on the prairies ?

Mr. SPROULE. It would be, if they were within half a mile of the railway.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Does the hon. gentleman know that we have a special law in the North-west Territories ?

Mr. SPROULE. Your herd law makes no difference, it only provides for herding cattle. But there are not perhaps ten per cent of the farmers going into that new country who have any enclosure for their cattle.

Mr. DOUGLAS. The hon. gentleman does not understand the law in the North-west. That law provides that when cattle appear upon the track, either by night or by day, the railway engineers have to slow their train or blow the whistle, whether there is any person in charge of the cattle or not, and if the railway destroys the cattle it has to pay the damages.

Mr. SPROULE. Suppose they do both, and cattle are killed, does the hon. member not think that the farmer who allowed his cattle to graze upon the highway within half a mile of the railroad, is violating this section ?

Mr. DOUGLAS. It must be remembered that there is no highway in the case, the farmer has not got the highway, so the argument of the hon. member is wholly inapplicable. The farmer does not buy the highway, if he allows his cattle to stray on the highway and feed upon it, we are not doing an injury to the farmer if we ask him to keep them off half a mile from the railroad.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. member says they have no highway in that country.

Mr. DOUGLAS. No, they have highways, and where there are highways this law is applicable. The hon. member referred to the Manitoulin Islands, a rocky country that cannot be fenced. He may take us all over the Dominion, but it is not possible to frame a law that will apply to every kind of country and protect the interests of the farmer. If these people cannot fence their land they are in the same position as the people in the Territories, and we cannot hope to frame a law that will be applicable to every foot of the prairie country. I see no objection to the application of the law——

Mr. SPROULE. If the hon. gentleman is through asking a question—I think I have the floor. I want to say to the hon. member that I have conversed with many farmers in his own country, and they hold exactly the same opinion with regard to this as I do, they believe that they are unfairly dealt with on account of this law, that they are restricted in their rights. In the province of Ontario to-day, over four-fifths of its area, the farmer under this law cannot enjoy the rights to which he is fairly entitled. There is only a small portion of Ontario to-day that is old-settled and well fenced, and wherever highways exist within half a mile of a railway, if a farmer allows his cattle to be at large on that highway and they stray off, his cattle are liable to be impounded under this law.

Mr. LENNOX. It must be gratifying to members on both sides of the House that we have now come to a conclusion upon what is probably the most difficult point to deal with in connection with this Bill. I appreciate the way the Minister of Railways and Canals put it when he said that we need not have any cleavage with regard to party in this matter. I think we can all feel pleased that we have come to a pretty good understanding. Now the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster), who initiated the agitation with regard to this matter in this House, and who has done more than any one else to keep it prominently before the public, I feel inclined to accept his suggestion, being satisfied he has given a great deal of consideration to the case, and in consequence I feel inclined to accept the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Essex (Mr. Sutherland). I understand that substantially it embodies the idea which the member for Lincoln has been advocating during three sessions. Recognizing his leadership, and I am proud to be under his leadership in this matter, I am inclined to accept his suggestions. I acknowledge also that the Minister of Railways and Canals has bestowed a large amount of care and attention upon this Bill, although in some cases he does not appear to have had as complete a grasp of the situation as we could wish. Although the member for Lincoln has been for three years endeavouring to remedy this evil, the member for Essex has to-night brought in an amendment which I think meets the case. It does not matter who it is that voices the principle, who it is that frames the words, so long as they secure the object we have in view. We are all in exceedingly good humour, and I have to congratulate the hon. member for Lincoln upon his complete success to-night. I want to congratulate the farmers of this country too, upon the fact that through the able leadership of the hon. member for Lincoln, supported indefatigably by hon. members on this side of the House, they to-night, have the satisfaction of knowing that after the long and arduous struggle, not always supported by hon. gentlemen opposite, we have succeeded in bringing about a reasonable measure of redress. There are matters, which I think, being in a good frame of mind now, we might reasonably accept as compromises. I suggest to the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals that he might accept now without further discussion the amendment as proposed by the hon. member for Lincoln ; that is to strike out the words 'or straying upon the railway.' I submit that these words will not be necessary to the section and that they are to some extent inconsistent with the phraseology of the amendment proposed and in this way we will probably get over a difficulty. I wish to say, in harmony with what the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) says, that, whilst I am prepared in deference to the suggestion of the hon. member for Lincoln to accept this amendment, I am not at all prepared to give it as my opinion that this will be found in the end to be completely satisfactory. I accept it as a measure of redress to which the farmers are entitled, and I believe it will be an improvement upon the law, but, I do not believe, looking at it hurridly, that it will be a complete remedy, but as a measure of that relief to which the farming community are entitled I am prepared to accept it. I might just say, without pressing the view at all upon the hon. member for Essex, that I do not quite see the meaning of the words 'or otherwise' where they occur in this way : Whenever any cattle at large upon I do not quite see the meaning of the words would refer to the case of cattle being in some place other than the highway.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If they strayed upon the company's property.

Mr. LENNOX. There are those cases where they are in a pasture field and they stray from one field to another, and then get upon the railway property. Does the hon. minister propose to cover cases of that kind ?

Mr. WADE. I feel like placing myself on record on this amendment. I think the amendment proposed by the hon. minister is amply sufficient to meet all the rights and interests of the farmers. It is carefully drawn, and I think it places a proper burden upon the railway company and gives proper relief for the farmer. It leaves the burden of proof upon the farmer that he has not been negligent in taking care of his cattle. I think that burden of proof should be on him, because the knowledge is within him alone. It was upon the same principle that we placed the burden of proof upon the railway companies of showing that they had proper fire screens in their smokestacks and that the screens had not been punched out. We put the burden of proof upon them because the knowledge of the matter is within the railway company. There is one feature of the amendment proposed by the hon. member for North Essex (Mr. Sutherland) which I object to, and it is the feature which puts the burden of proof upon the railway, because it would be almost impossible, in many cases, for the railroad company to become possessed of the facts. Now, it does seem to me that hon. gentlemen upon both sides of the House, in their zeal to protect the interests of the farmers, which is most commendable, have forgotten a very important class of people, and those are the employees of the railway companies and the travelling public. I think it is proper legislation to put upon each party, that is the farmer and the railway company, the strongest obligation possible that they will keep their cattle and their trains from coming into contact, because, there is damage not only to the cattle of the farmer and damage not only to the rolling stock of the company, but there is danger to the lives and property of the public and servants of the railway company. Therefore, if we leave the burden upon the farmer of seeing that his cattle have not improperly strayed upon the land of the railway company, I think that is all that is required. As regards the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) surely he will not undertake to convince us that the amendment moved by the hon. member for North Essex does not meet that case entirely and completely. I was glad to see that in one sense he was ready to adopt the amendment that was proposed by the hon. member for North Essex, but it does seem to me that when he tried to propose that little amendment which would have no effect whatever, he was not acting in accordance with his professions. There is only one question that I would desire now to ask the committee to consider earnestly as I deem it to be one of the greatest importance. That is, are we acting in the interests of the farmers when we relieve them from a reasonable care, and place the burden of proving that they have not been careful upon the shoulders of parties who may not be able to prove that at all, because the knowledge will be entirely within the farmer himself? If the farmer has not been negligent it is the easiest thing in the world for him to prove it. A short time ago I brought action against a railway company for a farmer for the destruction of a herd of cattle. He had not been negligent although his cattle had escaped upon the highway, and the court so found, and he recovered damages for his cattle. So he will always recover. But when you put it the other way, you are not only putting the railway company at a disadvantage, and I do not care so much about that, but you are putting the travelling public and the employees on the railway train also at a disadvantage.

Mr. McCARTHY. The hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) opened his remarks by saying that he was content to accept the statement or opinion of the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) to the effect that this amendment was the same in effect and in its result the same as the proposed amendment of the hon. member for Lincoln. He also said that he was proud to be a follower of such a leader. It struck me then that he should have sung that good old hymn :

> Lead kindly light,
> Amid the encircling gloom, lead thou me on.

Mr. HENDERSON. Go on and sing it all.

Mr. McCARTHY. I will leave it to the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) to go on and sing it if he desires. The hon. gentleman managed to lead himself out of that encircling gloom, but he got into a maze and concluded his speech by stating that the amendment of the member for North Essex was the same as the hon. member for Lincoln's amendment, but at the same time it was defective, and he only accepted it on behalf of the farmers for what it was worth. It would occur to any reasonable person that the remarks of the hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) are inconsistent, for either this amendment is the same as the amendment of that hon. gentleman or it is not. I think it is not the same. I think it goes further. I think the amendment of the hon. member (Mr. Sutherland) gives greater advantages to the farmers, and it contains provisions which the Bill of the hon. member for Lincoln neglected to incorporate, and let it be remembered that when these amendments were suggested by the member for North Essex last year, the member for Lincoln refused to accept them. In view of that refusal the farmers of this country were delayed in receiving the relief which they will get by this amendment to-night.

Mr. LANCASTER. I contradict that. I cannot allow the hon. member to say in my presence that I refused to accept anything from the hon. member from North Essex; he never offered me any amendment.

Mr. McCARTHY. Well, I have heard the statement of the member for North Essex as to that, and I have heard the statement of the member for Lincoln, and I leave it to the judgment of this committee to say which is correct. In the meantime I maintain that I am right.

Mr. LANCASTER. You ought to be ashamed of yourself.

Mr. McCARTHY. The hon. member (Mr. Lancaster) is much disturbed to-night; he seems to have lost something; I hope he is not fretting about that 'cheap glory' which he talks so much about. I think he might remain quiet. If he is entitled to the credit that the member for South Simcoe claimed for him, no one on this side of the House wants to deprive him of it. I say on the full responsibility of the position which I occupy, that had the hon. member (Mr. Lancaster) conducted himself in a different way when he was pressing this Bill in the House he would have met with much greater success. Let me cite as an example of his conduct what occurred in the Railway Committee this year. A resolution was moved by myself in that committee suggesting that the Bill of the hon. member (Mr. Lancaster) should not then be pressed, because as we were going to amend the Railway Act this session his Bill would be repealed and so it would become abortive. The hon. member (Mr. Lancaster) poo-pooed that idea, and he said that we were simply humbugging the farmers and that this Railway Bill would not pass this session. I ventured to remark that I was quite prepared to accept the statement of the Minister of Railways and Canals that this legislation would be proceeded with and that the remedy for the grievances complained of would be supplied, but the member for Lincoln would not hear of such a thing.

Mr. LANCASTER. Was there a remedy in the Bill which was laid on the Table of the House by the Minister of Railways and Canals.

Mr. McCARTHY. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Lancaster) is again getting excited. The Bill was then on the Table of the House and had been for months.

Mr. LANCASTER. Did it remedy the grievance; the grievance was not remedied until to-night ?

Mr. McCARTHY. I hope the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lancaster) will display that ability which he lays claim to when he does not get excited. He knows that when we were discussing his Bill in the Railway Committee the Bill of the Minister of Railways and Canals was before the House.

Mr. LANCASTER. Did it contain a remedy for this grievance.

Mr. McCARTHY. No, and it was then stated that it did not contain a remedy for the grievance, but it was promised that it would contain that remedy. If I may be permitted to say so I take the credit to myself that I moved the first resolution that was placed upon record which recognized the grievance and declared that it should be remedied.

Mr. LANCASTER. Oh.

Mr. McCARTHY. The hon. gentleman may laugh, but he knows it is a fact, and that resolution which was carried in the Railway Committee by a majority of some thirty is moved in this House to-night and is accepted by the member for Lincoln and is going to become law. I do not claim any undue amount of credit in respect to this matter, but I do say that when members on the other side state that no gentleman on this side have supported a remedy for this grievance, they are stating that which is absolutely untrue.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. McCARTHY. From the very first time that the farming community of this country demanded relief from this grievance we on this side of the House have proclaimed that we were prepared to promote and to support a remedy for that grievance. Last session the member for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) accepted the idea that a commission should be appointed and that was one cause of the delay.

Mr. LANCASTER. I did nothing of the kind.

Mr. McCARTHY. I then stated in this House that if no other arrangement could be made I was prepared to support the Bill of the hon. member (Mr. Lancaster) and notwithstanding that we are sometimes told that the constituents which we represent have been betrayed. I am proud to think to-night that the faith which we reposed in the Minister of Railways and Canals and the government has been amply vindicated, and to-night the grievances which it was promised would be relieved are relieved in the most ample and complete way by the submission of a measure which goes much farther in the interest of the farmers of Canada than any proposition which the member for Lincoln ever dreamt of placing before this House.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Amendment of (Mr. Sutherland of Essex) agreed to.

Amendment of (Hon. Mr. Blair) negatived.

Mr. LANCASTER. There is an amendment of mine still before the chair.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. member (Mr. Lancaster) has asked again and again why the words were inserted in 237 'from straying on the railway.' He got quite excited over the propriety of my having inserted these words in this Bill. It is quite true that the words are not in the existing law, but the main proposition in the existing law is that which requires that the animals shall be properly attended by competent persons. The fact that the words were added, that a competent person should be in charge so as to prevent the animals loitering on such highway or straying on the railway, only indicates what might happen if this competent attendance were not provided. The hon. gentleman said I put in these words because of the possibility of the animals straying on the railway owing to there being no cattle guards there. Well, there are two or three reasons why it might be well to indicate what the cattle should be prevented from doing. We know as a matter of fact that cattle-guards are not always placed on the railway. The protection of the public requires that that attendance should be there to prevent the cattle going on the railway, even if there is no cattle-guard. The interest involved is not only the interest of the farmer if his animal happens to get killed, or the interest of the railway company. The interest of the public is in preventing the animals going on the railway so as to avoid injury to property and perhaps loss of life. We know that there are not always cattle-guards, and even if there are, we know also that these guards are not absolutely perfect in their operation, and do not provide absolute protection. In spite of the cattle-guards, animals are able to effect an entrance on the company's property, so that in any case it is well that the public should be notified that their business is to have proper attendance to look after the cattle when at the point of intersection, and that if they do not look after them, they may stray on the railway and be killed. Apart from all that, there would be no reason in asking that these words be struck out, because the section which I have moved, if carried, would fix the liability of the company, quite irrespective of whether the attendance were there or not, because that section provided that the railway company would be liable if the farmer had not been negligent. So that either with the amendment which the committee has adopted or with the amendment which I proposed before its adoption, the effect of these words or the language of this clause would not have the slightest bearing. I cannot therefore see any good reason why this amendment should be adopted. It is quite unnecessary, and I would object very strongly to it.

Mr. JABEL ROBINSON. Just one point, I think, has not been touched upon in regard to the amendment of the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster). I do not think the farmers themselves are anxious that their cattle should stray on the road. If they turn their cattle out improperly on the highway, and they stray on the railway and get killed, I do not think they should recover money from the railway company. But there are occasions, as everybody knows when cattle will break out of their pastures and get on to the highways, and if they do, is the farmer to have four or five men to look after them ? The farmer does not know that they are on the highway, and it would be impossible to prove that they got there through any negligence on his part. Farmers sometimes pasture their cattle a long distance from home, and the cattle, being anxious to get back home, will break through the best of fences. So that we want to provide that if they do get on the highway without the farmers' knowledge or consent, and are killed, he will have redress if there are no cattle-guards.

Mr. LENNOX. The Minister of Railways has in effect told us that these words, 'or straying upon the highway' are harmless, that they have very little effect except for the purpose of pointing out the condition of affairs, and that, having regard to the amendment which we have just adopted, they cannot do any harm.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They would not do any harm anyway. They are only descriptive.

Mr. LENNOX. I am of a different opinion. The section as it was before had a specific meaning, that was, that there was to be some competent person in charge of the cattle for the purpose of taking them across the railway at the point of intersection and preventing them loitering on the highway. That is the principle upon which we have worked for many years. It is the correct principle. It has nothing to do with the question of cattle-guards. We have defined within what limits the company shall be liable, and within what limits the proprietor shall have a right to recover; but if we leave these words in, we open the door to litigation, and the old difficulties will be repeated, it may be with this variation, that the proprietor will be more likely to win than he was in the past. What this parliament should do now and for ever, if it possibly can, is to prevent this for ever-recurring litigation, and this uncertainty as to the rights of the people. If you leave these words in, the effect is this. You say to the railway company and to the public, on either hand, and although with one hand we extend protection to the farmers in the way of cattle-guards, with the other hand we bring in this clause, which means that it is not necessary for the railway company to have sufficient cattle-guards. That is in line with what the minister says. He says it may happen that the cattle-guards will not be sufficient. I say we have provided that the railway companies must have sufficient cattle--guards; that was the old law and presumably the new law of to-night, and if you leave in the statute the words that are now there to prevent the cattle straying on the railway, you mean that they will stray there because there is nothing to prevent them, and you induce the railway company to set up the defence that notwithstanding the other provisions of the Act, there is no absolute liability on their part to have safe and sufficient cattle-guards at the point of intersection.

Mr. SCOTT. Will the hon. gentleman permit me to ask him a question ? Does he not think that it is possible to imagine on behalf of the railway company such a thing as excusable negligence. This is what we have provided for on behalf of the farmer. Is it not also possible in regard to the railway company in relation to cattle-guards.

Mr. LENNOX. It is, but I fail to see what effect that has on my argument.

Mr. SCOTT. I will point out. In a case of excusable negligence where the railway company did not have proper cattle-guards, these words 'or straying on the railway,' would be not only applicable, but very necessary.

Mr. LENNOX. What I am endeavouring to point out is this, that if the other provision is to work out in the way I think it will, the railway company will be excused in the case where the court and jury think they ought to be excused. What we are dealing with here is the provision that when cattle are being driven along the highway they shall be in charge of some person for the purpose of preventing their stopping or loitering upon the railway crossings, and not for the purpose of excusing the railway companies for not having fences or cattle-guards. We will be renewing the old troubles if you enact this legislation in its present shape. I shall not urge this matter any further. I have discharged my duty and I am confident that my statements will be verified by the results. I have warned the government, and I warn hon. gentlemen opposite as well. They have adopted to-night the principle which has been agitated during the last two sessions by hon. members on this side, and if it is not a case of stealing thunder from this side and merely wanting to make a show, they will have to face the music and vote for this amendment.

Mr. GERMAN. In reply to the hon. gentleman, let me say that I do not want to steal his thunder, but I am going to vote against this amendment. I represent a county in which there are as many highway crossings by railways as in any county in the Dominion, and probably more. It is the centre of the Grand Trunk lines at the Niagara frontier, but I have ever held that I would not support any proposition which would allow farmers to let their cattle run at large on the public highway within a half mile of the railway track. I have continually opposed that. I opposed it when the Bill of the hon. member for Lincoln was before the committee. I there gave my reasons for believing that this Bill was wrong, and the same reasons still exist. In my opinion, the proposition of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals to-night was a fairer one than the motion made by the hon. member for North Essex, which the committee saw fit to adopt. So far as the present amendment is concerned, it simply suggests that three words be stricken out of this clause. This would dispense with the necessity of having cattle in charge of a competent person to prevent their straying on to the railway track. But there must be, under the section, a competent person in charge of the cattle, when they are within half a mile of the railway, and even, under the amendment of the hon. member for North Essex (Mr. Sutherland), the farmer, whose cattle were not in charge of a competent person, and were destroyed at the intersection between a highway and a railway, cannot recover damage. If the cattle are in charge of a competent person, that person can without difficulty keep them off the right of way, and that is what he should do. If he does not, I do not think the farmer should get compensation. But, if cattle accidently get on the public highway and then stray on to the railway track, because of insufficient cattle-guards, then the farmer should be compensated. That is the proposition I have always supported and support to-night, but I am strongly convinced that if cattle are on the highway, within half a mile of the junction of the highway with the railway, they should be in charge of a competent individual who will prevent their straying on to the track.

Mr. LANCASTER. The hon. gentleman seems to urge that having a competent person in charge to prevent cattle loitering upon the intersection is the same thing as having a competent person to prevent their straying on to the railroad track. It is an entirely different matter, and that is one of the points where the difficulty comes in. One small boy may be quite sufficient to prevent a herd of cattle from stopping or loitering on the intersection of a railway with a highway, where there are proper cattle-guards, but he would be wholly incompetent to control them where there are no cattle-guards.

Mr. BARKER. I am sorry that I must differ from hon. gentlemen on this side. This section has been on the statutes over fifty years. Some thirty-five years ago a county judge, in the county of Brant, I think, placed a construction upon it which has not been followed by any other judge in Ontario since. Dozens of decisions are in the books upon the meaning of this section. As to the term 'person in charge' the courts for years have held that the person must be one competent to take care of cattle and prevent them from loitering. Therefore putting the word 'competent' in does not add anything to the law as construed by the courts, but simply expresses in plain English what the section means. As to the other words, about straying upon the railway property, it has been distinctly held over and over again that the section would have the same result without those words. Courts have held that a cow or horse which is loitering upon a railway crossing without being in charge of some one, is illegally there; and if it then strays upon the railway track, the owner cannot recover. Therefore, the courts have held that the meaning of the original section is precisely as if the term 'competent person' were in it and as if these words 'straying on the railway' were there also.

Mr. LENNOX. I must say, in reply to the hon. member for Hamilton, that he has misapprehended what I have been saying upon the question. I attach no significance to the word 'competent.' What I have endeavoured to point out is that to provide that persons must be in charge to prevent cattle from loitering upon a railway at its intersection with the highway, is an entirely different thing from providing that there shall be such a force in charge as will prevent them, where there is an opening upon either side, from straying up and down the railway track. The hon. gentleman says that there are quite a number of decisions in the case of animals killed at the intersection.

Mr. BARKER. No, I said that the same law applied where they strayed over the railway track and were killed there.

Mr. LANCASTER. If the hon. gentleman had waited I would have said that too. I am quite prepared to accept what the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker) said with regard to the legal liability. But the reason I attach importance to these words—particularly bearing in mind the enactment we have so far adopted, and the probable result of these enactments—is that it means, if it means anything that these decisions will no longer prevail.

Amendment (Mr. Lancaster) negatived.

On section 197—fences, gates and cattle-guards.

Mr. LANCASTER. I wish to propose an amendment which I am not sure that hon. gentlemen on the other side have seen the minister about, as I have not heard any suggestion from the minister or any body else that the amendment was necessary. I think, however, in view of the decision rendered by the Supreme Court about a year and a half ago, hon. members will consider it that some such amendment as this is needed. The case is that of James vs. Grand Trunk Railway Company, arising in the county of Wentworth, in the township of Saltfleet. I do not know whether the minister's attention has been drawn to it, but, if he does not say that it has I will go on and explain. The result of that case is to put a very queer construction upon these sections of the law, a construction which, I am sure, parliament never intended. The courts of Ontario held unanimously on one side. His Lordship Judge Street tried the case, and the court of appeal of Ontario unanimously confirmed his decision, that the fences to be built between the railway and the adjoining property are boundary fences. The present Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, then Mr. Justice Tachereau, concurred in the decision of the court of appeal. He said he could not see but that the reasons given by the court of appeal of Ontario were unassailable. But the other four judges of the Supreme Court thought differently, and put a very narrow construction upon the law, a construction not intended by parliament, I feel sure. Now the words of this section are the words of the old law——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Perhaps it would be better that I should place the hon. minister's proposed amendments before the committee. He proposes to strike out sections 197, 198 and 199 as printed in the Bill, and substitute therefor the following:

> The company shall erect and maintain upon the railway, fences, gates and cattle-guards as follows:—Fences of a minimum height of four feet six inches on each side of the railway, and swing gates in such fences of the minimum height aforesaid, with proper hinges and fastenings, at farm crossings; provided that sliding or hurdle gates already constructed may be maintained, but shall not hereafter be renewed; cattle-guards on each side of the railway at every highway crossing at rail level of the rails. The railway fences at every such crossing shall be turned into the respective cattle-guards on each side of the highway.
> 2. Such fences, gates and cattle-guards shall be suitable and sufficient to prevent cattle and other animals from getting on the track.

Mr. WADE. If the hon. member (Mr. Lancaster) will permit me, I would like to ask the minister if he would accept an amendment which I will offer to that section by——

Mr. LANCASTER. I suppose, Mr. Chairman, that we on this side of the House have some rights. I have an amendment before the Chair. And, as I have received but scant courtesy from hon. members opposite, I think I had better do business according to my own lights and not according to their suggestions. I say that the decision of the Supreme Court puts a very narrow and unsatisfactory, and surprising construction—if I may be allowed, with all due deference to the Supreme Court to say so, and I suppose I have a right to use such language in this House—upon the law with regard to these fences.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What words?

Mr. LANCASTER. The words declaring what these fences are to be. I am moving amendments which will say what fences they are. It is my intention to move that section 197 be amended by striking out the words 'fences' at the end of the third line, and inserting in lieu the words 'division line and boundary fences between the lands of the company and the adjoining owners' and striking out the word 'railway' in the line and boundary fences between the lands of the company.' I think that everybody expected the decision of the Supreme Court to be the same as that given unanimously by the judges of Ontario. The report of Judge Street is to be found in Ontario reports, volume 31, and that judgment was confirmed by the court of appeal in which Chief Justice Armour, justices Osler and Lister wrote judgments, and Justice Moss, the present chief justice agreeing but not writing any language of his own. The case that arose is this: What might have been used as a cattle-pass if so arranged, but was a water-course which was dry in summer, ran under the railway track. The railway company, instead of fencing across that and continuing their line fence between the adjoining farm and themselves, turned their fences into the abutment of this culvert. The result was that the farmer's animals escaped from the field, under the track, not on the track, got upon the highway and so to the railway track, and were killed by a railway train on the track near their owner's property. The courts of Ontario held that the cattle escaped because there was no fence, and the farmer was entitled to recover. This, I think hon. members will agree was a reasonable decision. Mr. Justice Tachereau concurred, but the other four judges reversed the decision and put a limited construction upon the word 'fence.' Their decision is to be found in Supreme Court reports, volume 31. That decision says that the statute does not require the company to have boundary line or division fences, but only such fences as will prevent the cattle getting on the railway. And they gave a restricted meaning to the word 'railway' to mean the surface of the railway track. So, under this decision all that the company would be bound to do would be to prevent the cattle getting on the railway track, not from getting on their property. It was argued that the interpretation clause defined the word 'railway' as including the property and works of the company. But Mr. Justice Sedgewick, who wrote the judgment in which three of the others concurred, based his decision upon the fact that the words 'property and works' mentioned in the interpretation clause would not include the land of the company not used for actually running the trains. The present Chief Justice Taschereau dissented, and agreed with all the Ontario judges. If this holds good, the railway companies in future would not be obliged to fence their property, but only the top of their track. So, where there is a watercourse or anything of that kind under the track, and the company do not continue their fences in front of it, if the animals escape and get into trouble, the railway companies are not responsible.

As Chief Justice Armour pointed out, it must have been intended by the parliament of Canada that they must fence against the adjoining owner, they were obliged to fence absolutely all their property against the adjoining owners sufficient to keep their animals from getting upon the adjoining property. The Supreme Court however decided that they are not obliged to fence all their own property, but only the surface of their track. So, if hon. gentlemen agree that they ought to be obliged to fence all their property, and to keep animals from getting under their track as well as over it, that they ought to fence land covered with water as well as dry land, and that they are obliged to fence their property from the adjoining owners, then this amendment of mine will carry that object into effect. If we do not make this amendment we are bound by the decision of the Supreme Court, unless we read out the Supreme Court decision by changing the wording of the statute. I have used in this amendment the very words which Mr. Justice Sedgewick said would have to be in the statute to accomplish the result. He pointed out that the words were not 'division line or boundary fences,' they were only fences, and that the railway was only bound to fence the surface where the track was, so if they kept the animals from getting on the top of the railway they did all that was necessary. If this committee is of opinion that they should fence all their property, if they think that construction put upon the old law by the Ontario judges was correct, then we are obliged to change the language of this section, and then I assume that the committee will accept this amendment. I think parliament intended that they should make division line or boundary fences, that is, fences between them and the adjoining owners. So I have used these adjectives to get round the decision of the Supreme Court, and intead of the word 'railway' I have used the words 'land of the adjoining owners.'

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. In the case which the Supreme Court adjudicated upon and which the hon. gentleman has mentioned, the cattle strayed through and under one of the company's culverts and got around upon their right of way and on the track because there was no fence placed along the railway at that place. They left this open space in their fences through which the cattle strayed upon the property of other people and ultimately got upon the company's lands. Now it would be thought that under the law as it stands to-day the railway company were bound to fence along their line so that cattle could not get upon their track; that is the spirit and intention of the Act. This decision we have to accept as good law, but we have made ample provision in the present Bill for all that. The law now makes the company liable for all cattle lost that were straying from the adjoining land, whether they have got a fence ten feet high or not. Whether the fence is on the division line or not, the company has got to pay for cattle which get upon its right of way from adjoining lands. The reason of that is because we wanted to remove the possibility of any of these questions arising which have prevented owners of cattle from getting damages from the company because their cattle had strayed off on to other lands and from those other lands had got upon the railway. I say the company is bound to pay for cattle killed or injured upon the railway, where they have strayed off on adjoining lands.

Mr. LANCASTER. Where is the declaration that applies to adjoining owners ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The law provides that the fences must be suitable and sufficient to keep the cattle.

Mr. LANCASTER. The law provided that when this decision of the Supreme Court was given, but it is the kind of fences that was involved and where they should be, and the Supreme Court has decided that these fences need not be sufficient to keep the cattle from getting under the track but only sufficient to keep them from getting over it. Now, the declaration that they must have these fences was the same before the Supreme Court gave that decision.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They never provided that in the previous law.

Mr. LANCASTER. The previous section had exactly the same words; of course there were other words in the section that are not applicable to this point. Section 194, the old statute, says :

Fences shall be erected and maintained on each side of the railway through each township, of the height and strength of an ordinary division fence.

The court said that these words 'fences' of the height of an ordinary division fence' with proper gates and fastenings, were not sufficient. Now the words 'fences on each side of the railway,' were the words when the Supreme Court gave that decision, and the court has held that fences on each side of the railway do not protect the farmer from his animals getting under the track but only upon the surface.

Mr. RUSSELL. In this amended Bill there are entirely different words used which would seem to exactly meet the point that has been decided.

Mr. LANCASTER. What section of the Bill ?

Mr. RUSSELL. Subsection 2 of section 197 says that the fences are to be suitable and sufficient to prevent cattle and other animals from getting on the railway.

Mr. LANCASTER. These words were in the old law.

Fences shall be erected and maintained on each side of the railway, through such township, of the height and strength of an ordinary division fence, with openings or gates or bars or sliding or hurdle gates of sufficient width for the purposes thereof, with proper fastenings at farm crossings of the railway, and also cattle-guards at all highway crossings suitable and sufficient to prevent cattle and other animals from getting on the railway.

The provision was virtually the same as we have it in the Bill :

Fences, of a minimum height of four feet six inches, on each side of the railway, and swing, or sliding gates, therein, of the said minimum height, with proper fastenings, at farm crossings.

Mr. RUSSELL. I was looking at the old Act and I find that the language is not the same as it is in the Bill which is before the committee. If it had been, it seems to me that would have been a surprising decision for the Supreme Court to give. If the statute had said that such fences and gates should be suitable and sufficient to prevent cattle from getting on the railway, and the fences were manifestly not suitable to prevent cattle from getting on the railway to say as the Supreme Court judgment according to the hon. gentleman did, that the company was not liable, seems to me to be perfectly absurd. I do not think the words 'suitable and sufficient to prevent cattle and other animals from getting on the railway' are to be found in the old statute.

Mr. LANCASTER. The Supreme Court and the court of appeal both agree that the fences were to be sufficient to prevent the animals from getting on the railway track, but what the Supreme Court said was that they need not be sufficient to keep them off the other railway property.

Mr. RUSSELL. I do not wonder at the hon. gentleman being very much surprised at the judgment given.

Mr. LANCASTER. The hon. gentleman would be surprised if he read it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Lancaster) has asked us to insert some additional words in this clause so as to prevent cattle from getting under the railway. What is the objection to allowing cattle to get under the railway ?

Mr. LANCASTER. That is what happened in the James case.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not at all; that would not necessarily follow.

Mr. LANCASTER. But it did follow.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What reason would there be in saying that providing the railway has sufficient fences to keep cattle getting on the railway they must in addition to that have fences to prevent cattle from getting under the railway ?

Mr. LANCASTER. I will tell the hon. gentleman what happened in the James case and it will happen in other cases unless the railway company makes provision against it. Mr. James owned land at one side of the railway and another man owned land on the other side of the railway.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That does not make any difference.

Mr. LANCASTER. It does make a difference to the man who loses his animals. The hon. minister does not care about that, but I do. Mr. James thought that the company were bound to fence against him. They did not fence the culvert. Water ran through in the spring, but in the summer it was dry. The railway company chose to stop fencing when they got to the culvert and ran the fence in at half right angles to the culvert. The result was that Mr. James' animals got upon a neighbour's property, the neighbour did not keep the gate shut and they got upon the highway and got into trouble.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. When all the facts and circumstances are looked at there must have been some question about their straying on the property of the railway company and there must have been some question of contributory negligence on the part of the owner. When the law says that a railway company must fence so as to prevent cattle from getting upon the railway, if they do fence sufficiently and the cattle are prevented no damage can occur. If they do not do that and the cattle are killed upon the railway they are liable. Somebody has to take the responsibility of deciding whether the hon. gentleman is right or whether I am right. The hon. gentleman has stated his position and there is no occasion for him to repeat it over and over again.

Mr. LANCASTER. There is if the hon. minister does not understand me.

Mr. GERMAN. If the hon. minister will look at Mr. Justice Sedgewick's decision he will see that the hon. member for Lincoln is quite wrong. Mr. Justice Sedgewick in his decision said:

> The horses in question were admitted to be at large upon the highway within half a mile of its intersection with the line of railway. They were in charge of no one so as to prevent their loitering or stopping on the highway at the point of intersection. It was at that point they were killed and the owner has not therefore any right of action by reason of such killing.

Mr. BARKER. I think both hon. gentlemen are right. My hon. friend from Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) says quite correctly that the animals had escaped under the railway to a neighbour's farm, thence to the highway and thence upon the railway; so that, both provisions of the law came in. I would like to suggest to my hon. friend from Lincoln to consider what would be the effect upon a large number of farmers if the railway were fenced in the way he proposes. The hon. gentleman must know that there are many farmers who have the privilege of allowing their cattle to pass under the small culverts and bridges from one side of the railway to the other. This is of very great value indeed and if you compel the railway company to fence out all these places the balance of convenience would be vastly against a large number of farmers.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. How could a horse or a cow be killed if the railway erected proper fences to prevent cattle from getting upon their right of way?

Mr. LANCASTER.

Mr. BARKER. If you compel the railway company to fence its gullies and valleys the farmer who has a valuable privilege in allowing his cattle to pass through will be deprived of that. There are a great many streams that the railway will have to fence and it is almost impossible to do that.

Mr. LENNOX. Of course, as the hon. minister says, this is a matter for which he has taken responsibility and having directed his attention to it I will be satisfied to leave it at that. The point, I understand that is involved in the case that is referred to or that arises under this subsection is as to what the meaning of the words contained in this subsection is:

> Such fences and gates shall be suitable and sufficient to prevent cattle and other animals from getting on the railway.

I do not pretend to be familiar with the case that has been cited, although I knew that it had been decided. A somewhat startling decision was given by the Supreme Court reversing the decision of the court of appeal. It is provided definitely enough that they must have sufficient fences to prevent cattle getting on the railway, and the only possible way in which the Supreme Court could come to a conclusion, that this is not a complete provision for a continuous fence along each side of the railway property, is that it speaks of the railway as distinct from the railway property. I happen to have been told the opinion of some of the judges of the Court of Appeal on that Supreme Court judgment, and that is the only way, as I understand it that, they can account for it. By the use of the word 'railway' as distinguished from the words 'railway property' it may be that the railway company was not under the old Act compelled to make a continuous fence from one end of their property to the other. The hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker) always presents his views in a very moderate and well-considered way and there is no doubt much as to what he says in reference to the inconvenience that might in some instances arise. One case which I have in mind is this: I have a property on one side of the railway which is rented to a farmer and a Mr. Cook has a property on the other side. There is a large bridge with stone abutments and a stream of considerable size. The railway company does not continue their fence across this stream and the result is that the cattle of one farmer cross the stream and get on the farm of the other and there is constant difficulty between them. One of these farmers has been driving the cattle that improperly came upon his land on to the highway, and if the cattle wandered a quarter of a mile further and got on to the level crossing and are killed, the railway company would not be liable although the original cause of the cattle being on the highway was that they did not carry a continuous fence along their property. Cases of this kind must necessarily arise and it would be well to have this matter dealt with.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I could not do what the hon. gentleman suggests.

Mr. LENNOX. I will not press it upon the minister unduly. I have no doubt that the minister has taken great care in the consideration of this matter, but I would submit to him that provision should be made for the case in the nature I have indicated. If the wording of the new Act is the same as the old, the judgment of the Supreme Court will continue to prevail until there is an appeal to the Privy Council; which might reverse it. An hon. gentleman on the other side (Mr. Russell) for whose opinion I have the very greatest respect says that the wording in this section is different from the wording of the old. I will not take time in arguing the point, but I may say, that while the grouping of the clauses is different, I do not see any difference in the wording.

Mr. MACLEAN. I happen to be interested in a property on which there are 350 yards of a viaduct and it is a very valuable privilege to have free access under this viaduct by reason of the fact that the railway has no fence on either side of this land. I know of half a dozen other instances where the same privilege now exists. The people own the property on both sides of the bed of the river and they go freely under the viaduct whereas if fences were there it would be a great inconvenience to them.

Mr. WADE. I would take the liberty of moving some slight amendments. I move to insert after the word 'cattle-guards' in the fifth clause, the words 'approved of by the board,' and to strike out of subsection 2 the words 'and cattle-guards.' My reason for asking for that is this, that as the section is now framed we are asking an impossibility of the company. It is perfectly proper to ask them to have a fence sufficient to keep the cattle off the road; but it has been demonstrated by a commission during the past year, what we all knew before, that it is impossible to get a cattle-guard which will keep the cattle off the road. Therefore I submit that it is unfair to put that section in, and I would ask the minister to accept this amendment. It seems to me that it is fair and reasonable.

Mr. McCARTHY. The difficulty is that you have defined in another section what a fence is to be.

Mr. WADE. I propose to amend the clauses so as to say that the cattle-guards shall be approved by the board, and the fences and gates shall be sufficient to prevent cattle and other animals from getting on the railway.

Mr. GERMAN. In view of the amendment which we have passed already, I do not think it is necessary to amend this section in the way proposed.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think the hon. gentleman has doubtless judged that the disposition of the committee is rather unfriendly to his motion.

Amendment of Mr. Wade negatived, and amendment of the Minister of Railways agreed to.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I propose to strike out some words in the third division of section 197 with reference to gates. On still further consideration, I think it would be better to leave it to the commission to judge whether hinges or sliding gates are the proper kind of gates, and if they find that they are not, they have the power under the Bill to condemn them and to specify what other gates shall be used. I propose that the clause shall read:

> Swing gates and such fences of the minimum height aforesaid, with proper fastenings, at farm crossings, provided that sliding or hurdle gates already constructed may be maintained but shall not hereafter be renewed if so ordered by the board.

Mr. LENNOX. Will the minister make it read, 'unless ordered by the board,' so that the farmers will not have to come to Ottawa to get the permission of the board?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think it is better as it is. It will let the existing conditions continue, unless the board orders otherwise. I have correspondence upon the subject from people who are decidedly opposed to doing away with the hurdle gates, and who say that they are very useful.

Mr. BARKER. Why not use the words 'shall not hereafter be renewed unless permitted by the board'?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That would require immediate action, if you had hurdle gates in order to continue them. If the merits are against their continued use, the board will determine not to allow them.

Mr. BARKER. What the hon. gentleman would like is to put it upon the railway companies to obtain the permission and not upon the farmers to object. If a company wanted permission to renew the gates, they would have to apply to the board.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is the difference between the two propositions. I must confess to a decided preference for my method. These gates have been used for years and we are hearing now, for the first time of any complaint. Is it desirable that we should proceed upon the assumption that the objections are well taken? I do not think they are, and we ought to allow the condition of things to continue until the board has satisfied itself that it ought not to continue.

Section, as amended, agreed to.

On section 198,

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I move that the following be substituted for this section :

Whenever a railway passes through any locality in which the lands on either side are not improved by settlers and inclosed, the company shall not be required to erect and maintain such fences, gates and cattle-guards unless the board otherwise orders or directs.

That was the law before.

Mr. LENNOX. By what section was it the law before ? The law was that where a township was opened up and set apart for settlement, the railways were bound to fence. According to this section, if you happen to strike a couple of vacant lots on either side of the railway, the company will not be bound to fence unless the board directs it.

Mr. BARKER. How would it do to say 'district' instead of 'locality,' and say 'on both sides.'

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The principle is this, and it is the law everywhere else if not in Ontario. If an owner of land has cleared his ground, he would naturally put up his fences and the company would have to fence in front and on their right of way. I cannot see any advantage in requiring a fence to be erected on the other side of the track, if there is no settlement and nothing but an unoccupied wilderness.

Mr. BARKER. The cattle will be pasturing on both sides although the people are living only on one side.

Mr. LENNOX. It is not a question of wilderness, but of a vacant lot on each side of the railway. In such a case the railway company shall not be bound to fence unless ordered by the board. Take this case. There is a property of say 200 acres, which has not been cleared or improved. It belongs to some one who does not reside in the neighbourhood. There is running across the further end of that lot a public highway. On that public highway the cattle are allowed to run and they cannot approach within half a mile of the railway. They stray into that vacant property from the highway thence get on to the track and are killed, and the owner has no redress. This is another way of minimizing the benefits we are getting for the farmers through the fight we are putting up in their behalf. It is a most unfair proposal.

Mr. SPROULE. You might go to Ontario, even the old settled parts, and you would find large sections of swamp lands where some of the lots are unoccupied. A farmer could not allow his cattle out to graze on the highway or this unsettled land without the danger of having his cattle killed, and under this clause he would have no redress. In the newer settlements, every farmer turns his cattle out into the bush and they run at large, in any direction. If the company is not compelled to fence its property, they will be sure to get on to the track, and if injured, the owner has no recourse. This will be a great injustice to the farmer who is the pioneer of the country.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think that the case is serious at all. In sections of the country such as are described here, there are no fences, and you never hear of cattle being killed. They are not so apt to stray on to the railway tracks.

Mr. SPROULE. I can tell the hon. minister that if he will allow forty-eight hours delay, I will get twenty-five or thirty cases from the county I represent where animals have been killed on the track under just such circumstances as would make it impossible, if this amendment passed for the owners to get a dollar. For instance, go into the township of Proton, in the county of Grey or Amaranth or Melancthon, where the large swamps are, though it is an old settled country. The same danger would exist there in many places.

Mr. LENNOX. There is not a township in the province of Ontario in which cases could not be found of this kind. I think that we should not, without good and sufficient cause, depart from the old form of the statute. The law was sufficiently favourable to the railway companies and afforded no more than enough protection to the people. There is no good reason advanced for the proposed change. I venture to say that the people, not only in Ontario, but of the whole Dominion, will be surprised when they learn to-morrow morning that such a proposition was made. If the hon. minister will allow this to stand for forty-eight hours, we can have petitions here from every part of Ontario against any such legislation.

Amendment (Hon. Mr. Blair) agreed to. Yeas, 22 ; nays, 10.

Mr. BLAIN. This Bill has been amended so many times—and I suppose it was necessary—that it is almost impossible to keep track of it. I would like to ask the hon. minister if there is any provision in it for the better protection of level crossings in towns, cities and villages.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not know what the hon. gentleman means by 'better protection.' Complete and ample protection is provided for.

Mr. BLAIN. Is any change to be made in the existing law to give better protection at railway crossings.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think perhaps it might be said to be improved somewhat in that regard.

Mr. BLAIN. Perhaps the hon. minister would tell us in what respect it is improved ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have given the board full power to require anything and everything that they may deem necessary for the protection of these crossings. We have not confined them or limited them in any way. It would be impossible, I think, to employ language which would give ampler control than is given the board under the Bill. It is possible that the Railway Committee of the Privy Council may have been a little derelict in its duty, so far as the exercise of its power in this respect was concerned. It may have been that their opportunities of going about the country and seeing how the different localities were protected were not sufficient. That might be a reason why they would not be as likely to give this protection in as full and ample a measure as the proposed commission would be likely to do.

Mr. BLAIN. I would ask the minister to consider this clause :

> Every company shall provide and maintain at all level crossings within cities, towns and villages whether incorporated or otherwise, such gates, electric bells or subways as may be sufficient for the protection of persons using the streets or highways.

Let me give the hon. minister an example of the need that exists for better protection than is now afforded. The Grand Trunk Company has expended a large sum on their main line between Toronto and Hamilton, and now that company, and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, who also use the line, are running very fast trains between Hamilton and Toronto. At the different railway crossings in my own county and others between Hamilton and Toronto the danger is considerably increased. In the villages along the lake shore, like Port Credit, customers coming have to cross the railway. I understand that in this present Bill, the hon. minister has provided that a railway company shall have the right to run trains through a town not merely at six miles an hour, as under the present law but at ten miles an hour. Yet he has made no provision for further protection for passers-by at the railway crossings.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That protection is to be provided by the board, and the board has been empowered to do the very things the hon. gentleman has mentioned in his amendment. We cannot do more than that.

Mr. BLAIN. We could put it in the Bill and make it law, instead of leaving it to the board.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It would not be made any more law than we have already made it. The hon. gentleman wants to put in the Bill a provision that a railway company shall be compelled to provide suitable and sufficient—or words equivalent to that—protection by means of gates, watchmen, or some other method. But that is the law now. Somebody must determine when it is necessary that there shall be more protection and what form that protection is to take. If you re-enact it a dozen times, you give it no more power. I can assure the hon. gentleman his amendment is not necessary. At the same time I recognize the necessity that ample power should be conferred upon the board in these matters. But we have already provided for that.

Mr. BLAIN. Would the hon. minister answer this one question ? Under the Bill as it is before the House now, is it provided that the crossings shall be better protected than under the old Railway Act ? I cannot understand it if it is so.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Under the enactment of this Bill, they may be better protected.

Mr. BLAIN. It depends entirely upon the good will of the board.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You could not gain anything by simply passing a section providing that street crossings on the level shall be better protected than they are now. On the other hand, you cannot make the clause more definite or complete than that which has been passed by the committee. There are differences in the requirements of different localities and in the protection needed. Some need less, and some need more.

Mr. LANCASTER. I would suggest that he insert the words 'or watchman.'

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am opposed to this amendment, not because it is not necessary, but because the provisions are already covered by existing enactments.

Mr. LANCASTER. The minister means that because the board has power to order these things they are all there ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. LANCASTER. That is not the same thing as to the proposed amendment. The amendment makes these provisions obligatory. In the one case this parliament is delegating to the board power to do what they may think fit; in the other case we are laying down a rule to guide the board.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. INGRAM. At the request of the hon. member for Vancouver (Mr. Smith) and Mr. Hall, representative of the railway employees of Canada, I have been asked to move an amendment to section 211 with respect to the equipment of cars. I understand the hon. member for Vancouver is ill, and that is the reason he has asked me to move this amendment :

That section 211 is hereby amended by adding thereto the following :—

All box freight cars built in Canada for use on the Canadian railways after the passing of this Act shall be provided with the following attachments for the security of railway employees ;

Outside ladders, on the opposite ends and sides of each car, projecting below the frame of the car, with one step or rung of the ladders below the frame, the ladders being placed close to the ends and sides to which they are attached ;

Hand grips placed anglewise over the ladders of each box car and so arranged as to assist persons in climbing on the roof by means of the ladder ;

All cars built prior to the passing of this Act shall be fitted to comply with subsection five of this section on or before the 31st day of July, 1905.

I have carefully read the evidence that was given before the hon. gentleman at the time the representatives of the several railway companies and the representatives of the employees gave evidence. I find that certain gentlemen belonging to the companies have stated that the railway employees of Canada are opposed to the amendment I have just read. I can contradict that statement by some sixty resolutions that I hold in my hand, passed by the railway employees of this country at all the railway centres in British Columbia, the North-west Territories, Manitoba, Ontario, Quebec and the eastern provinces. In these resolutions the railway employees declare themselves most decidedly in favour of this amendment. I have read the evidence carefully, and I am able to make that statement. It is not the officers of a railway company or the men employed in shops who are in a position to judge as to whether this amendment is a proper thing. The only men who are competent to judge of that are the men who have to use these ladders when they climb on and off the cars. I know of my own personal knowledge that the side ladders are absolutely necessary on all box cars. I find in the city of Winnipeg that nearly all the foreign cars which come in to that city are supplied with side ladders. I am in a position to say that the Canada Southern division of the Michigan Central Railway have these side ladders on their cars. The great objects that are sought by railway companies in this country are to lessen the curves, to increase the capacity of their rolling stock, to draw as large trains as possible and to get them over the road as quickly as they can. Now the object of these side ladders is to enable the conductor on these long freight trains, when they are approaching a station, instead of waiting for the train to haul up at the station and stop, he gets out of the caboose at the rear of the train, climbs up on top, and passes over the entire train in order that he may be at the station as soon as the train stops and get off and get his orders. When he gets his orders he starts out his train. The conductor cannot possibly stop for the caboose to come along when the train is running at quite a speed. The object of the side ladders is to enable him to get on top of that train without running the danger of climbing up from the end where he might possibly fall off and be run over. He gets up on the side ladder because it is safer and handier, and by the same means he gets on top of the cars and passes back to his caboose. By adopting that method he is saving time and gets the train faster over the road, instead of having the train slacken up for him to get on as was stated in the evidence here. Therefore, notwithstanding the statements made in this evidence to the contrary, it is abundantly shown that these side ladders are required.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The subject of these side ladders has been much considered by me. I had the benefit of hearing people representing the railways and some representing the operatives, and I felt much embarrassed in trying to come to a conclusion as to whether the disadvantages or the advantages of the side ladders preponderated. The more I heard on the question the more I felt that this parliament was not capable of determining a question of that kind, but that the board which is to be charged with these duties could much better be trusted to settle this question. Now, we have under our general railway law given full power to the board, which is authorized to see that all proper appliances are provided for the safety of the employees; they must see that the trains are safely equipped, and that the appliances are altered from time to time when in their judgment they may deem it necessary. When we here require that a particular sort of appliance should be adopted we are making it imperative upon the companies that they should continue to adopt these appliances and a continual change in the railway law of this parliament will be required in order that the improvements should be in general use. That is not a desirable state of things. I think the object would be much better served by leaving this contentious question to be determined by the board, which could take the best means of ascertaining what are the real facts of the matter. Therefore, I would urge the hon. gentleman not to press the motion he has mentioned here, because I think it is one we would not be justified in adopting.

Mr. LANCASTER. If the hon. minister will say that the law should not be as the hon. member for East Elgin (Mr. Ingram) has stated, that these ladders should not be on the cars, I would agree that we should not put this amendment in, but I cannot agree with his reason that we should refrain from adopting such a provision because we might have to repeal this provision if some better contrivance were found in future. It would not be any more trouble to do so than to pass some of the private Bills that go through this House pretty hurriedly sometimes and some of which involve in some ways much larger questions than this.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have heard both sides, and I have not been able to make up my mind one way or the other. I was far from concluding that it would be a safe thing to do because, we know where engines are shunting trains in the yards and where the cars are approaching one another, taking all the precautions that you can, persons who are hanging on the side of the car, perhaps on a dark night, might be struck and if they are struck they would likely be fatally struck under such circumstances. There are various reasons that could be urged against it.

Mr. INGRAM. All of which do not amount to anything.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. After listening to the discussion as closely as I could, I was unable to reach a satisfactory conclusion in my own mind. Therefore, I could not recommend the committee to adopt the amendment.

Mr. LANCASTER. I think the 200 and odd members of this House could come to a conclusion upon this question with the information that the hon. minister has in his possession. I think we are delegating a great deal too much to this board. I think we will require 300 men and not three to carry out all that we are delegating to the board. It was never contemplated in the beginning that we were going to delegate everything to this board.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think this parliament is well equipped to determine such a question.

Mr. LANCASTER. There may be somethings, of course, such as the question of preventing discrimination in rates, that we want the board to deal with, but questions in regard to mechanical appliances should not be referred to the board. If the board is to be bothered with matters of that kind and is expected to give attention to them in the same way that another commission would I do not think it will have much time to deal with some of the important questions referred to it. If the hon. minister proposed to refer this question to two or three men to report to this House I could see some sense in a reference of that kind for the purpose of gathering the facts. It was even suggested seriously by an hon. gentleman on the opposite side that we should leave it to the commission to say what shall be a suitable and sufficient cattle-guard. If this board is not able to do its work well it will be our fault because we have imposed so many duties upon it. If we do agree that these ladders should be put upon the cars it would be well to say so in the Bill as proposed by the hon. member for East Elgin.

Mr. SPROULE. It seems to me that the parties above all others who will either be benefited or injured by this appliance are the train men, and if they desire it they should have it because they are the people who are running the danger all the time. They are the parties who would be injured in the event of the appliance being an improper one, but practical experience convinces them that it would be a benefit to them.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They do not agree.

Mr. SPROULE. The very fact that the number of resolutions mentioned by the hon. member for East Elgin has been passed is pretty conclusive evidence that the great bulk of the employees of the companies do agree as to the advisability of adopting that appliance and I think we ought to accept that as sufficient. It is not something that is very expensive to the companies, and therefore it could not be objectionable upon that ground.

Mr. INGRAM. Some years ago the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean) introduced a Bill containing this same section and the former member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey) had a Bill in this House for a number of years, both of these Bills were referred to a select committee to inquire into all these matters. The select committee did inquire into them, and I think you will find on carefully reading over the evidence submitted to the committee that this is one of the things that the railway employees want. I know that the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway Companies both opposed it. They were the only companies that really opposed it. Other companies are doing this now. They find no trouble at all. The great difficulty with the employees is that they have no opportunity of coming and presenting their case the same as the railway companies have, and further, if the railway companies take a very strong stand against this particular kind of legislation the employees are a little backward about coming to a place of this character and differing with the companies on so important a question as this. That is the reason I feel that their side of the case should be presented to this House, and I think hon. gentlemen on both sides who are representatives of railway centres from which these resolutions come, will find that between now and later on the railway employees residing in their particular constituencies are very strong upon this line of legislation. The hon. minister speaks of referring this question to the board. If the hon. gentleman will look at section 211 he will see that he has specifically defined matters of equipment that must be provided. What greater injustice would it be to specify this particular class of equipment in the same way as the others are specified? If the request of the employees, who are certainly the ones interested as it is a matter of life and death to them, is granted, it will impose, it is true, some expense upon the railway companies. These side ladders are for trains not for yards, and when the gentlemen in the committee mentioned about the difficulty of getting up on the side ladders they did not know what they were talking about. They professed to be railway officials but they had prejudiced minds. The yardmen are very little on top of the cars in the yards, but every one knows that the trainmen of this country have risk enough to undergo without imposing risks on them that can be avoided. I have simply done my duty in carrying out the request of the gentleman from Nanaimo (Mr. Smith) and backing it up with my personal opinion on this legislation. Having done that the responsibility must rest with the minister and the government for refusing these men the legislation that they have passed some sixty resolutions in favour of.

Mr. MACLEAN. I agree with what the hon. gentleman from Elgin (Mr. Ingram) has said. I happen to represent a large railway centre and the men asked that a Bill of this kind should be passed, and some years ago I took up the question. We were told then that it should be delayed until we saw the result of the experiment in the United States, but we are no further ahead to-day than we were seven or eight years ago. In the United States they gave the railway companies a certain number of years to provide safety equipment and the brakemen in the United States are in consequence in a better position than they are in Canada. It is useless to leave this to a board to haggle over; the only proper thing to do is to put it in a law in the statute-book. The Brotherhood of Trainmen have passed resolutions all through the Dominion in favour of this, and it is time we should pay some heed to the request of men who risk their lives in the operations of railways in this country.

Mr. PUTTEE. There is no room for doubt as to the position of the railway employees on this question. For the last two years this matter has been before the trainmen, and I have never heard any objection on the part of the employees to this Bill. I was recently on one of the sections of a large company in the east, where an attempt had been made to get an expression of opinion from the employees opposed to this Bill, and I may say that expressions of opinion coming from companies professing to give the opinion of the employees on a measure of this kind, should always be taken with a great deal of caution. On this particular section there had been an attempt made to have the employees give expressions of opinion against this Bill, and out of 211 men, 210 were in favour of it, and one did not care, because, as he said, it did not affect him. It is my experience that the men are unanimously in favour of this Bill. My opinion is that included among safety appliances there should be a full length rail on the top edge of box cars. This rail would give a chance to the man grasping at something, should he fall, and in the matter of life and death like this, we should give the railway employee every possible chance. As a matter of fact, wherever expense is to be incurred, the railway companies are very apt not to carry out the suggestions of the men. I do not think the railway companies would have any cause of complaint if we ordered this, and I do not think that the expense would amount to much. Neither do I think that the opposition of the railway companies ought to be given too much weight in a matter of this kind, and I trust that the Minister of Railways will see his way to introduce this provision for the safety of the men.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This matter was fully threshed out, and statements were made pro and con, and I do not hesitate to say that there was by no means any satisfactory evidence that this appliance had been determined upon as suitable or as in the interests of the employees of the railway. The Master Car Builders' Association represents the interests of all who are running trains, and this association have enforced the use throughout the United States of almost every safety appliance that was necessary in the interests of the employees. They are regarded as an association of such authority, that the law of most of the states of the union declares that what they endorse as a proper appliance must be used upon the cars. They have not approved of this side ladder.

Mr. INGRAM. That was in the evidence, but I would like to see the proof of that statement. In the interchange of foreign cars the side ladders are used.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. In the interchange of American cars there are some with side ladders and some without, and the Master Car Builders' Association have not required the side ladder. It has been left an open question, and that shows that the association has not been able to conclude that it was a device which would add additional safety to the men.

The fact that the cars that are coming into this country and the cars that are in this country are not uniform in this respect is an important consideration to be taken into account in the passage of such a law as this. We ought not to require that these ladders should be placed on our cars when innumerable cars are coming from the United States in the course of traffic which have not these ladders upon them. If they all had the ladders, I presume that the danger would be minimized. But as there are probably as many cars without ladders as with them, if we required all cars to have them on, we would have to exclude the cars from the United States, or we would subject the employees to still greater dangers. It is a question which we ought to be very cautious about legislating upon. It is all very well to say that some association has called upon us to do it; but these local associations do not exhaust the subject, and do not always come to right conclusions. If this device was all that is claimed for it by my hon. friend opposite, the Master Car Builders' Association would have adopted it in the United States. I do not think we need discuss the matter further. The hon. gentleman has stated his case and I have replied, and I think we might now pass the clause.

Mr. INGRAM. This may not be a very important question to the hon. gentleman, but it is a serious question to the railway employees of this country. It is a matter of life and death to them; and when the hon. gentleman undertakes to reflect upon the intelligence of the trainmen of this country and tells them that they do not know what they want, I think he is going entirely too far.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What does the hon. gentleman mean ? I did not say that they did not know what they were talking about, and I would thank the hon. gentleman not to put words in my mouth which I did not use.

Mr. INGRAM. I am simply drawing an inference from what the hon. gentleman said.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You have no right to draw that inference.

Mr. INGRAM. When a question comes up in this House involving the rights of the workingmen of this country and is treated in a sneering manner by some hon. gentlemen opposite, I want to say that these men have as much right to be treated with consideration in this parliament as any other men.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have as much consideration for the rights and interests of the workingmen as the hon. gentleman has.

Mr. INGRAM. Then the hon. gentleman should not try to prevent me putting their case before this House. Who are the master car builders ? They are mechanics who have worked in the workshops of this country. Many of them never mounted a car in their life. The trainmen who are mounting the cars night and day, in fair weather and bad weather, who take their lives in their hands, are to be told that they do not know how to mount these cars, but that they must mount them in the most dangerous way, forsooth, because the master car builders do not favour these side ladders. I know from personal experience the inconvenience that these men have to suffer. I have thousands of times mounted the railway cars of this country, and I am not ashamed of it. While doing that I associated with just as intelligent men as those I have associated with in this House—men who are as capable of understanding their requirements as hon. gentlemen in this House are capable of understanding theirs. There are college-bred men occupying positions on trains in this country, men who are as capable to be representatives in this House as hon. gentlemen who are here. And are these men to be told that they do not know what they want, that they are entirely mistaken, and that the Master Car Builders' Association know better what they require than they do themselves ? I tell you it is a matter of life and death to these men. It may be of more interest to the hon. gentleman to have the railway companies pay larger dividends instead of supplying the things that are necessary to protect the lives and limbs of their employees. I have read all this evidence given by certain railway officials, and I say that the statements made there are not justified by the facts. I challenge the hon. minister to appoint a special committee and have the railway employees come here, and see whether these statements are true or false. It is all very well for the large corporations to oppose side ladders because they have adopted end ladders. All I have to say is that if the employees do not know better than the companies what they require, then God help the employees. I have nothing to say against the railway companies, because it is as much in their interest to protect their employees, and not have loss of life and limb from time to time. Hon. gentlemen will find, if they look at the statistics, that railway employees have suffered accidents either by falling off cars or by coupling cars. I do feel indignant when I am told that I have stated my case once or twice, and that ought to be sufficient. When the general election comes round and that is the time these men look for redress, they will inquire from their representative whether he is Grit or Tory, if he has supported this legislation, and they will tell him that they look upon it as an important piece of legislation and such as justify them in only voting for candidates who will support the legislation they require.

Mr. MACLEAN. We are dealing with a Bill governing railway matters. We have introduced clauses to protect shareholders, bondholders, farmers and passengers. The proposal is now made, at the request of the railway men, that certain clauses ought to be put in the Bill for the protection of the men who operate these railways, and we are told that we are wasting time in considering their rights. I protest against that and appeal to the hon. Minister of Labour whether it is not his duty to see that the men who work upon these trains are protected. They have asked year after year parliament to intervene. I introduced legislation in this respect years ago, but on one argument or another it was always side-tracked, and no progress made. Every time I brought it up, some insufficient reason has been given why adequate protection should not be afforded the men who operated the roads. I appeal to the hon. minister, if he is not in a position to give an answer now, to take time to consider this question, which involves the lives and safety of those men. Similar protection is given in other countries. In England the main feature of railway legislation is to secure the safety of the lives of the public and the men who operate the train, and the result is that there are fewer railway accidents in England than in any other country. This is largely due to the fact that parliament has made such provision as will not only protect the lives of the passengers but of the men who operate the trains.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have no reason to continue the discussion any later and we might as well stop at this stage. It is very evident that I cannot get the Bill finally disposed of tonight, and I therefore move that the committee report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. BLAIN. When will the Bill be taken up again ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It will be the first order at our next sitting.

Progress reported.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. SPROULE. What will be the business for to-morrow ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This Railway Bill and one or two Bills on the Order Paper that may be dealt with, and if we reach Supply we will take up the estimates of the Department of the Interior.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 1.40 a.m. Thursday.

Mr. INGRAM.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, July 9, 1903.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

QUESTIONS.

RAILWAY CARRIAGE OF MAILS.

Mr. WILSON asked :

1. Have those railways subsidized or bonused, from the year 1896 to May 1st, 1903, which have received more than $3,200 per mile, been carrying mails free, according to the agreement upon which the subsidies were granted ?

2. If not, is it the intention of the government to enforce the terms upon which the subsidies were granted, and compel these roads to carry the mails free from the date of the issuing of the subsidies ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Sir William Mulock). It is not the case that any railways that have received aid from the government, under legislation passed since 1896, have not complied with all the conditions attaching to such aids, but they have rendered the services required to be rendered under the terms of any aids granted to them.

A KING'S WAREHOUSE AT WINNIPEG.

Mr. LaRIVIERE asked :

1. Has the honourable the Minister of Customs received the following letter from C. N. Bell, Esq., secretary of the Winnipeg Board of Trade ?

The Honourable William Paterson, Minister of Customs,
Ottawa, Ont.

Sir,—I have the honour, by direction, to give you herewith a copy of a resolution passed at a general meeting of this board, held on the 30th of June, viz.: 'Resolved, that this board represent to the Dominion government the necessity and advisability of the Customs Department establishing and maintaining a King's warehouse in Winnipeg.'

In explanation, I beg to inform you that the customs sufferance warehouses, but especially the one at the Canadian Pacific Railway station, are crowded with imported goods, a large percentage of which have remained there, according to a detailed statement of the railway company, for periods varying from ten days to six months, to the detriment of the business of the general importing public.

As King's warehouses are in existence in eastern provinces, at ports minor in importance to Winnipeg, which now ranges as third as to revenue importance in the Dominion, this board are satisfied that you will at once see that Winnipeg is entitled to be placed on a proper footing in this direction.

2. Will a King's warehouse be established in Winnipeg at an early date ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Hon. Wm. Paterson) :

1. The Minister of Customs has received the letter referred to. It is the duty of transportation companies and importers to provide warehouse accommodation for imported goods. It is open to the railway companies to relieve the crowding of their warehouses by requiring prompt entry of imported goods at the customs-house.

2. The customs examining warehouse at Winnipeg is a King's warehouse. The question as to extending this warehouse is undecided.

IMMIGRATION EXPENDITURE.

Mr. WILSON asked :

What was the total expenditure made by the Dominion of Canada on immigration from the 1st of July, 1902, to the 30th June, 1903 ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton). The total expenditure in connection with immigration during the year ended the 30th June, 1903, was $560,857.45. This sum includes letters of credit in favour of the High Commissioner, London, England, and Commissioner of Immigration, Winnipeg, in regard to which statements of expenditure have not yet been received up to the end of June, but it is expected that all moneys advanced to them will be expended.

OTTAWA IMPROVEMENT COMMISSION.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding) moved that the House do to-morrow go into committee to consider the following resolution :—

That it is expedient to amend chapter 10 of the statutes of 1899, intituled : ' An Act respecting the city of Ottawa,' as follows :—

1. The period during which the sum of sixty thousand dollars annually, referred to in section 1 of chapter 10 of the statutes of 1899, may be paid, shall be a period not exceeding twenty years from the first day of July, one thousand eight hundred and ninety-nine, instead of a period not exceeding ten years from said day, as provided in said section.

2. The commission may borrow from time to time, on debentures of the commission, bearing interest at a rate not exceeding four per cent per annum ; which debentures the commission is hereby authorized to issue ; such sum or sums of money, not exceeding in the whole two hundred and fifty thousand dollars, as may be required to enable the commission to purchase land or to carry into effect any scheme of improvements and undertakings requiring a larger outlay than would be available out of the annual income of the commission, or for both purposes. Providing always that no money shall be borrowed by the commission except with the previous consent of the Governor in Council.

3. No debentures shall be issued by the commission for a period extending beyond the 1st day of July, in the year one thousand nine hundred and nineteen. The debentures issued under the authority of this Act shall be paid and redeemed by the commission in equal annual instalments, beginning at the expiration of one year from the date of the issue thereof. So that the total amount of the debentures so issued shall be fully paid and redeemed on or before the said first day of July, one thousand nine hundred and nineteen.

4. The principal of the debentures issued under this Act, and the interest thereon, shall be a first charge and lien upon the income of the commission from whatever source derived. And the commission shall each year set apart and appropriate such amount of such income as shall be required to pay and discharge the principal and interest of such debentures as shall fall due and become payable during such year.

The word ' year ' in this section means the period beginning on the first day of July, in one year, and ending on the 30th day of June in the next year.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman should give his explanation now.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is only the first stage. It merely sets the day for further consideration.

Mr. SPROULE. It has happened, I think, more frequently than otherwise that the explanation is given on the resolution, and not on the Bill.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is when the motion is made to go into committee on the resolution, not at this stage.

Motion agreed to.

DOMINION NOTES SECURITY.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE moved that the House do to-morrow go into committee to consider the following resolution:—

1. Resolved, that it is expedient to provide that the security to be held by the Minister of Finance and Receiver General, for the redemption of Dominion notes, issued and outstanding at any one time, up to and including thirty million dollars, shall be an amount in gold, or in gold and securities of Canada ; the principal or interest of such securities being guaranteed by the government of the United Kingdom, equal to not less than twenty-five per cent of the amount of such notes so issued and outstanding. The amount so to be held in gold to be not less than fifteen per cent of such amount so issued and outstanding. And for the redemption of Dominion notes issued in excess of thirty million dollars, an amount in gold equal to such excess.

2. That all expenses incurred or required to be paid in connection with the engraving, printing or preparation of Dominion notes, or the signing, issue or redemption thereof, shall be paid out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada. And in case the amount held as security for the redemption of Dominion notes should not be sufficient to pay the Dominion notes presented for redemption ; or in case the amount so held should be reduced below the amount required to be held, as provided in the aforegoing resolution, the Governor in Council may raise by way of loan, temporary or otherwise, such sum of money as may be necessary to pay such notes ; or to provide the amount required to be held as security for the redemption of Dominion notes issued and outstanding.

Motion agreed to.

STEAMBOAT INSPECTION.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Hon. Raymond Préfontaine) moved that the House do to-morrow go into committee to consider the following resolution :—

Resolved, that it is expedient to amend the Steamboat Inspection Act, to make provision for the abrogation of steamboat inspection fees and dues; and for the better regulation of yachts propelled by gas, fluid, naphtha or electric motors.

Motion agreed to.

CERTIFICATES TO MASTERS AND MATES OF SHIPS.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES moved that the House do to-morrow go into committee to consider the following resolution :—

Resolved, that it is expedient to further amend the Act respecting certificates to masters and mates of ships, by making provision for a new certificate called a 'Home Trade Certificate;' and to otherwise amend the said Act.

Motion agreed to.

RAILWAY ACT, 1903.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 21) to amend and consolidate the law respecting railways.—The Minister of Railways and Canals.

Mr. MACLEAN. I wish to call the attention of the committee to section 264 which deals with passenger traffic on railways. I think the time has arrived when this legislature ought to define what the maximum passenger rate on our railways shall be. The fact is that railways which operate in Canada and the United States carry the people for two cents a mile in the United States and when they cross the boundary they charge the Canadian people three cents a mile. For fifty years railways have been running in Canada and the standard passenger rate per mile has never been changed whereas the freight rates have been cut in two during that period. In New York State some years ago the New York Central applied for certain legislation in connection with a branch line, and the legislature consented to pass the Bill provided the passenger rate was not over two cents a mile. That was made the rate for a small branch of the New York Central, and the company accepted it over all its line running through New York State. The same thing has happened in Michigan where the Grand Trunk passes. The legislature made it a two cent a mile passenger rate and all the railways in that state have had to accept it. In Europe passenger rates have been greatly reduced and are much lower in Europe than in America. One great object of cheap travel is that labour can move from place to place where it may obtain work. In Canada the passenger rates are altogether too high and we need not expect the North-west to be settled as it would be if passenger rates on railways were reduced. Cheap travel tends to promote business and to bind the country together. It will pay the railways to have a two cent rate because the statistics prove that if you reduce the price of anything the consumption increases, and so if you reduce the railway rate, travel will increase. We know that in connection with the post offices of every country, whenever you reduce the postal rate you increase the revenue and you increase the efficiency of the service. If there should be some loss to the railways by reducing the rate, and I do not admit it, that loss should be made up on the freight rates if it has to be made up at all. A large portion of our community use the railways mainly for travel and for fifty years they have had no consideration and never will until parliament steps in and compels our railways to reduce the passenger rate. It is said that the rates on the Canadian Pacific Railway cannot be interfered with because of their charter, but the rates on the Canadian Northern Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway can be reduced and if you fix the maximum rates on these lines at two cents a mile the Canadian Pacific Railway will have to accept it, and I believe they will be glad to accept it.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Let me put the hon. gentleman in order. There is nothing before the committee. Mr. Maclean moves that we return to the consideration of clause 264.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. MACLEAN. I call the attention of the House to a short editorial which appeared in the 'Farmers' Weekly Sun.' It says :

The distance from Detroit to Chicago via the Grand Trunk Railway is 319 miles, and the single fare is $6.25. The distance from Detroit to Toronto is 226 miles, and the single fare is $6.60. The reason for the lower fare to Chicago, though the distance is ninety-three miles greater, is that the legislature of Michigan has fixed the passenger rate through that State at two cents per mile, while the rate in Ontario is three cents per mile. The Grand Trunk Railway in Michigan received not one dollar of public aid. The Grand Trunk Railway in Canada received enormous loans from our government, and to-day owes us for principal and interest of loans made to it and to Ontario lines which it absorbed nearly $50,000,000. Is our our parliament doing anything to-day to secure for the people of Canada the same passenger rate over the Grand Trunk Railway as that road gives to the people of Michigan? It is doing nothing in that direction. On the contrary, according to Hon. Mr. Préfontaine, the Dominion government proposes to take many millions more of our money and give it to the company which charges us fifty per cent more for passenger rates than it charges our neighbours across the line.

Is it not humiliating that in this country where we have given the Grand Trunk Railway $50,000,000 of public money, they charge us three cents a mile to travel while they only charge two cents to the people of the United States who never gave them a cent? If we are to go on in this paternal way subsidizing railroads let us take a leaf out of the book of our neighbours and let us compel the railways to carry our people for two cents a mile. The New York Central Railway has a valuable franchise in this country in connection with the old Canada Southern and it is carrying the people of the state of New York for two cents a mile, but the moment it crosses the Canadian border it charges our people three cents. That is not creditable to this parliament and should not be allowed to continue. The 'Montreal Witness' of a few days ago says editorially :

In connection with the foolish, not to say almost criminal, prodigality with which successive governments have given bonuses to all and sundry, especially railway and bridge promoters, a Toronto contemporary points out that half of the St. Clair tunnel which is in the state of Michigan has been assessed for the present year by the board of state tax commissioners for $1,800,000, and the tax for 1903 that has been levied upon this assessment is $24,640. On the other hand, the tax on the half of the tunnel which lies in Ontario is only $753. The railway fare over the Grand Trunk Railway on the Michigan side of the river is two cents a mile ; on the Ontario side it is three cents a mile. For the 2·23 miles of the St. Clair frontier tunnel built in Canada the Grand Trunk Railway received a subsidy of $375,000, but received no public aid for the portion which is in the United States territory. This is a little story of a kind that has been infinitely repeated, and it carries its own moral.

I intend to test this question in the House both now and later on. At a later stage of the Bill, I shall propose an amendment to the effect that the maximum passenger tariff rate shall not exceed two cents a mile. Such a rate would be in the interests of the people and of the railways and go a long way to promote the interchange of business and give the people what they are entitled to. They have a penny per mile travel all over England. In Australia and Hungary, where the railways are owned by the government, people travel at less than a cent a mile, and that has been found to pay. The experience of European countries, especially Austria and Hungary, is that every reduction in the rates has resulted in profits to the railway as well as to the people.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. First-class fares ?

Mr. MACLEAN. No, but they have a rate lower than one cent a mile, which allows labour to go wherever there is work to be had. What I repeat is that the experience of every country in Europe shows that where the government has reduced the rate of passenger travel, the result has been beneficial both to the railways and the public. There has been no agitation in the states of New York and Michigan for the reduction of passenger travel there. The great companies have accepted the reduction and find that their business has increased enormously. But people will say, New York is much more thickly populated than Ontario. My reply to this is that in New York there are many more lines of railway, and each railway in that state has comparatively no more travel than any railway in Ontario. Yet not one of them has ever asked that the rate be put back to three cents or raised to any extent whatever.

Mr. DAVIS. Suppose you were to take a cent off the passenger rate, would you not have to add it on to the freight rates ? The railway companies have to live.

Mr. MACLEAN. If you reduce the cost of travel you increase the income. That is proved by the post office and every public statistics where reductions have taken place. But even if it should have to come out of the freight receipts, why should not the people who travel be entitled to as much consideration as those who use the railways for the purposes of freight ? Are not the people who settle in the North-west entitled to a reasonable rate when they want to travel east. At present the rates are almost prohibitive, and that is one of the great grievances complained of in that country. I am not advocating something which has not stood the test of experience. Experience has proved that a reduction in the passenger rates works both in the interests of the railway companies and the public. It is humiliating that in this country, where we have given the railway companies so much public money and such great franchises, where we have assisted them by providing terminal facilities at our ocean ports, we should get nothing in return in the way of reduced charges for railway travel. I propose to insert a subclause to section 264 to this effect : 'The maximum passenger travel shall not exceed two cents a mile.'

Mr. HEYD. Is that two-cent rate universal in the United States ?

Mr. MACLEAN. No, it is a matter of state control, as far as I can gather ; but all through the states of New York and Michigan, they have a two-cent rate.

Mr. DAVIS. Are those rates fixed by the railway commission or are they incorporated in the Railway Acts ?

Mr. MACLEAN. The two-cent passenger rate in New York was due to a small amendment to a single Bill which went through the legislature at Albany. There was an agreement with a certain road to carry people at the rate of two cents a mile. The New York Central Railway applied to incorporate this road with its own, and the state legislature said : You may take it if you will extend that two-cent rate over all your system. The New York Central Railway accepted this offer and all the other railway companies followed suit. In the state of Michigan, there is an Act of the legislature providing that every road running across that state shall charge a two-cent rate.

Mr. McCREARY. I hope the hon. gentleman, when he brings down his amendment to this Bill, will furnish the statistics on which he bases his argument. He has selected two of the most thickly populated states of the union and the most thickly populated portions of those states as an illustration of his argument. While I would like to see the rate reduced if possible to one cent a mile, we ought not to do anything which would not be reasonable, and the hon. gentleman ought to be able to inform us what induced the legislatures of New York and Michigan to reduce those rates. He ought to inform us what is the number of passengers per mile per day that is carried over railways in those states, also the payment of train hands, the cost of labour and other matters. As a matter of fact, while in the west we have higher rates for ordinary traffic, we have low rates in other respects. We have rates for immigrants coming in from the boundary line, which average about one cent per mile as far as Edmonton, over all the railways. That is a lower rate than is prevalent in the United States. Our passenger rates from Winnipeg to the east are as low as from points in North Dakota and Minnesota to the east, and any person who wants to travel east during certain seasons of the year can get a rate of about two cents per mile.

Mr. MACLEAN. I presented the facts which the hon. gentleman inquires for to the House on a former occasion, and they will be found in 'Hansard.' My hon. friend refers to the special rates given immigrants and others. But what I want to see is a rate for general travel. There are all kinds of cut rates. The press have the privilege of travelling at a two-cent rate per mile, commercial travellers at 2¼, and a great many other people get incidental reduction, but what I want is a maximum passenger rate for the ordinary individual and not a number of preferred classes. Let us have equal and equitable treatment for every one. It may be that if the railway companies to-day would cut off their passes, which they give to people who furnish them with freights, and if they would do away with the preferred rates which they give many classes, they would be able to give a general rate of two cents per mile. I have seen a good deal of railway travelling in this country, and the only man who seems to be treated without consideration is the man who pays the top fare and cannot get into a Pullman car. I have travelled considerably up and down the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway, and I have seen the way in which these companies treat the ordinary traveller who pays three cents a mile and has to get into the ordinary first-class coach. He is not treated as he ought to be. He it is who keeps up the railways, furnishing the greatest amount of traffic, and yet he has not had one iota of consideration for fifty years. As I have told you, we have cut down freight rates time and again. There is no way to secure the reduction which I propose but by putting it on the statute-book. The railways will bluff you every time; they will jolly you along one way or another. But place this on the statute-book, and I pledge my reputation for prophecy, whatever it may be, the railways will not lose a dollar. On the contrary, the reduction will be in their own interest. But they will never make this reduction unless we compel them to do so. You must do what the state of New York did. What the state of Michigan did. And the argument does not hold that the reduction benefits the railways because these are thickly populated states. In thickly populated states there are a great many railroads, while, in our own Northwest, while there is a sparse population, there is a comparatively small railway mileage.

Mr. McCREARY. But it makes a difference in the number of passengers per mile.

Mr. MACLEAN. But where the passenger rates are reduced the consumption of passenger traffic—if I may use that expression—increases. Why, that is what makes the world go round in a commercial sense; it is the basis of our progress—reduce the price and you increase the consumption. We have given the Grand Trunk already $50,000,000 of the peoples' money. We have given the Canadian Pacific between $100,000,000 and $200,000,000 of the people's money. And I am told that we are to give the Grand Trunk $135,000,000 more of the people's money. And we have not got a single concession for the people who travel for all those grants. Now is the time to make a deal with the Grand Trunk, when it is proposed to give them this immense bonus. One condition of the contract with them should be that the maximum passenger rate should be two cents per mile, I have had a great deal of communication with the people of this country on one question or another that I happened to have raised in this House, but on no question have I met with so much approval and encouragement from the ordinary citizens as in regard to this question of railway travel. People want cheaper traffic and they are entitled to it, and they are not proposing——

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am afraid the hon. gentleman is making light of the telephone.

Mr. MACLEAN. The telephone is a pretty good thing too. And the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals thinks it is a pretty good thing, I believe. It is a very profitable enterprise in this country, is the telephone business. And the railroad business is profitable too. That being the case, there is no reason why this legislature should not intervene on behalf of the people. It is our duty to intervene. And I intend to test this House on this question both now and at a later stage, for that is what we are entitled to. It is what the people of other countries get by insisting on it, and it is a thing that we shall never get unless we put our demands squarely on the statute-book.

Mr. DAVIS. The hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean) is great on theory, but his theories will not work out in practice. Of course, some parts of this country are thickly populated, and his theory might work out well enough there; but the great part of our country is sparsely settled and his theory could not be put in practice as affecting those portions. We are about appointing a railway commission. But, if you are going to cover all the details by the Act that we are now passing, what will be left for the commission to do? The safest thing for us to do is to leave these matters in the hands of these commisssioners. They will be in a better position——

The accidental breaking of glass in the ceiling of the Chamber here interrupted the proceedings for a few minutes.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Will the committee please come to order.

Mr. DAVIS. When the interruption took place, I was saying that, to my mind, there was not much use in appointing a railway commission if all the details with regard to the management of the railways were to be put in the Railway Bill. The hon. member for East York has cited the case of the state of New York with reference to railway rates. In that case the rates were incorporated in the Railway Act of the state. But if the hon. gentleman will take the trouble to study the facts with regard to all the states of the union, he will find out that in more than two-thirds of those states the rates are placed under the control of the railway commission of the state. So, I think we are safe in leaving the matter under the control of the commission here. While I would like to see the people get as low rates as they can, I could not support the amendment. You cannot run the railways without money. They have to pay interest, they have to pay their fixed charges, if nothing on their stock, and they have to pay their running expenses. In order to do that they must have revenue, and if you are going to take it off the passenger rate you will have to put it on the freight rate. So how much better off will the people be? The hon. gentleman may pose as the champion of the people's rights, but when the people begin to understand that the hon. gentleman wants to take it off their collar and put it on their vest, they will see there is not much in his argument.

Mr. MACLEAN. The hon. gentleman stated a moment ago that this might work in some of the populous states of the United States, but not in Canada. Now, if he will support me, I will make my amendment cover Ontario, Quebec and the maritime provinces only, and leave the North-west country at the present rate. Would he like to have that? He has not answered my argument at all. I said the reduction in the passenger rate, wherever it has been tried throughout the world, results in an increase of revenue to the company, therefore the reduction will not necessarily come out of the freight rates. We could teach the railway companies something by reducing the rate on the Intercolonial, where we have the control, to two cents a mile. That would force all the competing roads to come down to the same rate.

Mr. HEYD. What effect would that have?

Mr. MACLEAN. It would make the other roads come to that rate, exactly what has happened in the state of New York.

Mr. HEYD. Last year the earnings from passenger traffic on the Intercolonial were $1,770,000. If we reduce that by 33⅓ per cent, which would be the equivalent of reducing the rate from three cents to two cents a mile, you would at once cut off $600,000. The net earnings on the road last year was $96,000. If the hon. gentleman's idea is carried out, there would result a loss on the Intercolonial of over $600,000.

Mr. MACLEAN. The hon. gentleman need only apply that argument to the reduction of postage to see where he would land. He is a Liberal, or professes to be, and one of the doctrines which the Liberals have advocated for years in fiscal matters, is that if you reduce the price you increase the consumption, and you benefit both sides. He can talk as he likes. I am not defending a theory, I am giving evidence which has been brought out in other countries showing that where a reduction in the passenger rate has taken place there has been a corresponding increase in the revenue to make it up.

Mr. HEYD. Why not reduce it down to one cent, then?

Mr. MACLEAN. Well, I will again refer the hon. gentleman to the Post Office Department. Formerly it cost a shilling to carry a letter, a reduction was made by steps until it got down to the penny letter, all over the empire.

Mr. RUSSELL. It would require very careful calculation to find out what the effect of the reduction would be. That is a calculation that only the board of railway commissioners would be qualified to make, and it is one which this House is apparently disqualified to make.

Mr. MACLEAN. It is just such a calculation as the people of New York and Michigan have made through their legislatures, and has been vindicated by results. The experiment in the post office was made by the parliament of Great Britain and the parliament of Canada, and not by any commission. We have had fifty years' experience of three cents a mile on railroads; is the time never to come when we are to have a reduction? Are we never to have a reasonable railroad travel in this country? The commission can study the question and report to parliament upon it. But I do not propose to give up my functions as a member of parliament to a commission. I have made up my mind on the subject, I have studied the question fully for a number of years, and I am convinced that I am right. I hope the hon. gentlemen in this House will study the question and see if they cannot get some more light on it.

Mr. RUSSELL. If the hon. gentleman has made so many calculations, let him give them to us.

Mr. MACLEAN. I have given them time after time. The statement I make is this, that the governments in Europe which control their railway rates have felt themselves justified in reducing the passenger rate in consequence of the experience they have acquired that reduced rates meant more traffic. The evidence is there, and the proof of the success of the experiment is that there is no agitation in any states of the union where they have a two cent passenger rate, to put up the rate. I am not doing this, as some hon. gentlemen have intimated, for some ulterior purpose; I am bringing this subject up here in a simple, direct way. I do not want to have my motives impugned as have been done by some hon. gentlemen. I may be a little ahead of my time, but if a person is ahead of his time he has a right to be heard, even in this House, and to give a reason for the faith that is in him. I have given a reason why the House should study this question, and I have given a reason why my amendment should be made part of the Railway Act of this country.

Mr. DAVIS. If the hon. gentleman's theory is right that a lower passenger rate per mile would increase the earning power of the roads, how is it that the very clever men at the head of the railroads of this country have not adopted a two cent rate long ago? The hon. gentleman appears to place his judgment above the judgment of all the railroad men of this country, because none of them appear to be convinced that they would increase the earning power of their roads by adopting a rate of two cents per mile for passengers.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Mr. Maclean moves to add a subsection to section 264, which will read as follows:

> The maximum passenger tariff shall not exceed two cents a mile.

Mr. SPROULE. In justice to the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean), we must give him the credit of having persistently advocated this rate before the House, although it has been somewhat unpopular. It is one that may not meet with the approval of the railway companies, and may not meet with the approval of the majority of the members of this House; but at least this must be said in his behalf, that so far as we can judge he is sincere in his belief that it would result in no great harm to the railway companies, and would not much affect their earnings, and at the same time it would be a substantial benefit to the travelling public. He has given data to substantiate the allegations he has made. He has quoted statistics of travel in the state of New York. Now the state of New York might be regarded as not furnishing a fair comparison for Canada because it is much more populous even than Ontario. But as the hon. member says, the travel is divided up amongst a larger number of railways, and therefore the proportionate travel in Canada would be in all probability quite as great for each as the proportion of travel even in the state of New York. But if that comparison is not thought to be fair, let us go to Michigan, with a population very much like that of the province of Ontario. It is settled in much the same way, and is not more thickly populated than Ontario. If in the state of Michigan the railway companies can carry on their operations by charging only two cents a mile, and make in pay, it seems to me their case furnishes a strong argument that the same thing could be done in the province of Ontario. I have no doubt whatever that if a reduction of one cent a mile was made on the ordinary travel, it would result in an increase of at least one-third more travel. Why are so many people deprived of the advantage of travel who otherwise would do so? It is because of the want of means to enable them to travel. If you reduce the cost you will increase the traffic. If you reduce it one-third, you will undoubtedly increase the number of people who will travel over the railroads. Now, take the railway from Toronto to Windsor, about 220 miles. It is stated, and I believe the statement is correct, coming from the source it does, that you pay as much to travel from Toronto to Windsor as you do from Detroit to Chicago, a distance of 290 miles. The conditions in Northern Indiana and southern Michigan are very much the same as in that portion of the country between Windsor and Toronto. The country is as thickly settled in the province of Ontario as either in northern Indiana or southern Michigan and if you look at the trains as you pass along you will find that the number travelling is very much the same. It may be said that that is an argument against my contention that if you reduce the rates there will be more travel, but if you take the time when three cents a mile was the rate you will find that the travel was not as heavy in northern Indiana and southern Michigan as it was after a reduction was made to the extent of one cent a mile. The amount of travel is much greater on account of it. Why is it that the Grand Trunk Railway which passes through the province of Ontario charge the Ontario farmer or traveller, no matter what locality he comes from, three cents a mile, notwithstanding the fact that the road has been heavily subsidized in this country, while the same road goes across the border where it gets no assistance from the state and charges the citizen of that country only two cents a mile for the same accommodation ? Passenger traffic is not like freight; the traveller walks on the train and walks off again, and it costs the company nothing to load or unload. If a party desired to ship his goods a distance of 3,000 miles the company would give him a reduction on account of the long distance. They would not charge him the same rate per ton upon his goods as if they were shipped a distance of 100 miles. They would give a reduction on account of increased mileage, but it is not so with ordinary passenger travel. The passenger pays his three cents a mile whether he is travelling ten miles, fifty miles, one hundred miles, or three hundred miles, while, if freight is to be carried, the railway will give a substantial reduction on account of mileage. The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals and other hon. members of this House have defended the provision in the Railway Bill giving the railway commission the right to make a distinction in the case of the transportation of freight for long distances as compared with short distances, but, for the traveller there is no reduction made unless at certain competing points where competition between railway companies or competition between steamboats and railways compels the railway to make a reduction. This being the case it seems to me, that, while I do not think the hon. gentleman's resolution can properly apply to all sections of the country, I think it could apply to the great province of Ontario at least, which is as thickly settled as the state of Michigan or the state of New York, leaving out the great cities in these two states, and where the travel is just as great proportionately to the number of people as it is in the state of Michigan or the state of New York. There is no doubt whatever that a large proportion, if not all, of the loss sustained by a reduction of the passenger rate to the extent of one cent a mile would be made up by the increased number who would travel.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Chairman, it appears to me that if we were to fix the rate at two cents a mile and if we appoint a railway commission and the railway commission makes an investigation and finds that the earning power of the company is not sufficient, taking this reduction into consideration, to pay the fixed charges on the road besides the running expenses, the railway commission would then have to raise the freight rates, because it would have no power to increase passenger rates. That being the case, according to the argument advanced by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) and the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean) you would force the farmer who does not travel at all——

Mr. MACLEAN. He should travel.

Mr. DAVIS. To pay for some gentlemen down east to travel as much as they like.

Mr. SPROULE. Suppose that one hundred men were travelling on the railway and that the railway company charged them $3 each, suppose they reduced that to $2 each, that would be $100 of a loss. If thirty-three more men travelled would you not make up your earnings ? You would not require to add it to the freight rates at all.

Mr. DAVIS. We have no guarantee that thirty-three more men would travel except the hon. gentleman's statement.

Mr. SPROULE. We do know this——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order, order; this is quite irregular.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Each hon. gentleman should make his speech and after his speech is finished he should sit down and allow some other hon. gentleman to answer it.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Davis) asked a question and he is willing to allow me an opportunity of answering it. I was about to say that where the railway companies give special rates for certain days it is a well known fact that there is a very large increase in the amount of traffic, and so, upon the same parity of reasoning, we might come to the conclusion that if you reduce the rates the amount of travel would be increased proportionately.

Mr. DAVIS. I am quite willing to admit that if the railway company made a special rate for one, two, or three days the public will take advantage of it, but that does not warrant us in coming to the conclusion that if you have a special rate for twelve months in the year, people are going to travel all the time. The hon. gentleman assumes that thirty-three more men out of one hundred are going to travel, but it is only an assumption on his part. To my mind it is much better to leave this matter under the control of the railway commission. When they are seized of the facts they can come to a conclusion, and if they do come to the conclusion that it is advisable to reduce the rate to two cents a mile they will direct that such a reduction be made. That is what we are appointing them to do. We expect them to make a reasonable rate in reference to passengers and also in regard to freight. If we were to adopt a flat rate of two cents a mile I know how it would affect the people in my part of the country. As a matter of fact there are some portions of the Canadian Pacific Railway which do not pay at all, while there are other portions of the road which pay much better, and these have to make up what the company lose on the portions that do not pay. If we reduced the earning power of the road by reducing the passenger rate on the Canadian Pacific Railway what would it mean ? It would mean that we would have a large increase perhaps in the rates on the traffic that would ship over that road and the government, having no control over the freight rates, we would have to suffer. We paid $3,500,000 to carry the wheat last year from Winnipeg to Port Arthur. I would like to ask the hon. member for East Grey, or the hon. member for East York, how many of the producers of that wheat travel up and down the country. Virtually they do not travel at all, and those who are producing the wealth of the country would be taxed for the benefit of the gentlemen who do the travelling and who want to take a few holidays.

Mr. HEYD. Do the railway statistics justify any change at all ? I am quite willing to admit that it would be an agreeable thing to the people to be allowed to travel at two cents a mile. I suppose a larger number would be willing to travel at one cent a mile, and that the number would be increased very much more if they were allowed to travel for nothing. How would it affect the railway companies ? Take the report of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals and he says that the entire earnings of the railways from passenger traffic last year was $22,000,000 and from freight traffic $53,000,000. Suppose we reduce that $22,000,000 by reducing the amount per mile at which passengers can travel and what will be the result ? At three cents per mile the actual net earnings of the railway companies last year were $26,000,000. The capital of the companies was $1,098,000,000, so that the earnings were a little over 2 per cent on our Canadian railways. I do not think any of us would say that with an invested capital of $1,098,000,000, 2 per cent is too much. I doubt if we were engaged in the railway business we would be content with a dividend of 2 per cent, but if we reduced those earnings by reducing the rate from 3 to 2 cents a mile it would reduce the earnings to $19,000,000, or there would be a loss of one-quarter of a cent in the dividend so that the dividend would be 1¾ per cent. When we realize the immense sum of money it takes to build and equip a railway, and when we find what the financial results are on all our railways at the end of the year, that they actually cannot declare a dividend of more than 2 per cent, then the 3 cent rate appears to me to be comparatively small. It may appear that some railways are making money on the 3 cent rate, but there is no doubt that some are losing and if the doctrine of my hon. friend (Mr. Maclean) were applied the Canadian railways would be $500,000 behind last year. It may be a desirable thing to have a rate of two cents per mile but to my mind the Canadian railways cannot afford to carry passengers at a less rate than they are charging to-day.

Amendment (Mr. Maclean) negatived.

On section 279,

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We were considering in connection with subclause 3 an amendment to the effect that in case the railway company discovered any fraud in the line of a shipper putting high priced freights in a car along with freights of a lower standard, the company should have the right to add 50 per cent or any other reasonable percentage on their ordinary freight charge as a penalty upon the wrong-doer. It was suggested that if that were done one or more of the penalizing clauses should be struck out so that the shipper acting fraudulently in this manner should not be subject to the penalties named in the Act which might be enforced by a court, and also to the increased rate of freight which could be charged. I have considered the matter, and I am convinced that the effect of enabling the company to exact an additional charge for the freight in such a case, would be more deterrent than any other mode of imposing a penalty. As a matter of fact these penalties are not very much if at all enforced; the railway companies do not follow them up by complaining, and as a result the person who perpetrates this fraud escapes. This is not a question in which the railway companies are alone interested, but it is a question in which the general public and honest shippers have also great interest. Mr. Maclean in one of his reports says that this has become a very great grievance, and he thought some remedy ought be applied to stop it. Most of the shippers ship from their own sidings and it is impossible to detect this fraud in many cases so that it is often successfully perpetrated. Suppose a man is shipping one hundred barrels of flour, he might put in half a dozen barrels filled with articles which should pay a very much higher rate. It is only occasionally that discovery is made and the opinion of persons with whom I have discussed the question is that it would be better to make the penalty higher than lower. I do not think it would be well for us to strike out any of the other penalties, because in my opinion they are not any more severe than they ought to be. I may say that the penalties mentioned in this Act are very much lower than the corresponding penalties in the United States; indeed some penalties which we fix at $1,000 are $10,000 or $20,000 in the United States. If after an experience of this clause there are good reasons why it should not be continued in the law, parliament can at any time eliminate that feature of the measure.

Mr. KEMP. I regret to have to take up the time of the committee in regard to this matter again, but my excuse is that it seems to strike at the very root of the principle upon which the agitation was carried on for the appointment of a railway commission. The minister has stated that this penalty is to meet extreme cases which perhaps may not occur frequently, and he has cited a case in which flour, which is shipped at a comparatively low rate of freight, might have included in that carload of flour several barrels of expensive merchandise. A condition of affairs similar to that might exist. But we all know that the railroads, not actually entirely under the law, have had inspectors in their employ for many years past for the purpose of preventing fraud of this kind; and when we think of the watchfulness of the railways, the cleverness of their officers, the way their inspectors watch every move of the shippers, we can well understand what the hon. minister says, how impossible it would be for that to happen except in very rare cases. As the minister says, this is to meet extreme cases; but all the shippers of the country would come under this clause and you would have all the intricacies of the classifications to deal with. I would like for a few minutes to draw attention to the history of the agitation which led up to the idea of a railway commission in this country. The press of the country, headed, I think I may say, by a very able journalist in Toronto, a friend of the minister for many years past, has long felt that a railway commission was necessary. That gentleman whose name I need not mention has said to me on many occasions that his aim and object was to have a railway commission appointed. He is very well informed upon the subject, and his pen has written many clever articles upon it. The whole agitation with respect to a railway commission was based upon the idea that it would be for the purpose of dealing with freight rates and freight classifications. When the first draft of this Bill was introduced into the House last year, it was a very much larger, and more extensive and more complicated measure than the present one. It was at once noticed by those who had advocated a commission that the proposed commission was for the purpose of dealing with a great number of matters which had not been agitated in the public press, and in regard to which the public had not expressed any opinion. Coming, then, to the part of this Bill which deals with the subject of tolls and tariffs, I contend that the clause which the minister wishes to add to section 3, in addition to the penalties there named, which I do not object to, strikes at the root of the whole difficulty, or a great part of it, which we have had to deal with in this country. There have been grievances on the part of the public with respect to freight rates, and I would like to take up the attention of the House for a few minutes in reading what the public opinion on this question in the city of Toronto, representing the shippers of the province of Ontario, was in the year 1900. I made these observations when I had the honour of being president of the Board of Trade of Toronto, and they were endorsed unanimously by that board, not at a meeting of the council of the board, but at a public meeting of the board. I read these remarks to show what led up to this agitation with respect to tolls, classifications, &c. This is what I said:

> I feel I would exceed my duties if, in the discussion of this question, I should voice sentiments which were not strictly a fair interpretation of views prevailing in this city and vicinity. It is necessary, in order to come to any conclusion with a degree of fairness, to have in view the frequent and unreasonable demands and charges made against railway corporations, resulting often in placing out of court, not only those who are guilty of such inconsistencies, but also hampering others who desire to approach matters of difference with the utmost fairness.
> During the past few years there has been a noticeable tendency on the part of our railways, in order to increase their revenue, to steadily advance freight rates to the utmost limit of what it is deemed in their judgment the 'traffic will stand'; also to withdraw from shippers privileges which they have hitherto enjoyed, and to enforce new regulations favourable to themselves, and frequently of corresponding disadvantage to shippers.
> The situation has been particularly favourable to the railways, as they have enjoyed almost absolute authority in dealing with the public, who have come to look upon them largely as supreme in everything which affects their own interests.
> The determination to explore a field which was beyond the jurisdiction of common carriers, resulted in bringing to the attention of the public, through the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, a discussion regarding extra rates over and above regular freight tariffs on petroleum products, and the desire to charge an extra 50 per cent under the owners' risk rule, is also illustrative of a wrong interpretation of what was expedient on the part of the railways.
> The strict adherence to the most severe interpretation of every rule jointly framed by the railways, not leaving opportunities for special treatment when occasion warrants, which would exist if only one road were interested, has a tendency to cultivate a spirit of restless antipathy against the railways, which is a natural result in a democrative country like this.

I would also like to refer to the opinion of Mr. Peleg Howland, a gentleman who is at the head of the wholesale hardware firm of H. S. Howland, Sons & Company, Limited, the largest wholesale hardware firm perhaps in Toronto. He said in 1900:

In spite of your partially successful efforts, freight discrimination against this city, on the part of the railroad companies, continues.

The difficulties of doing business in the Northwest country are intensified by the seeming determination of these companies to compel the distribution of all goods through Winnipeg, by granting special traders' rates outward from that place.

Whether relief will come from the appointment of a railroad commission, which seems to be foreshadowed, will depend largely upon its composition and powers.

To be of any value, its members must be men absolutely incorruptible, of more than ordinary determination, and furnished with power to enforce their decisions. A judicial body whose judgments must be referred to government, will be practically useless.

Sentiments along the same line were expressed by Lieutenant Colonel John I. Davidson, of the wholesale grocery firm of Davidson & Hay, Limited, of Toronto. I would like also to call the attention of the minister to the correspondence which passed between himself and Mr. Hugh Blain, of the firm of Eby, Blain & Company, wholesale grocers, of Toronto, in the year 1900, in respect to leaving it in the power of the railway companies to charge 50 per cent in addition to the ordinary rates which they are entitled to collect. This correspondence was brought about in consequence of the attempt of the railways to bring into effect a classification which enabled them to charge that 50 per cent extra on goods which they claimed came under the owners' risk clause. That clause had been approved by the Governor in Council for a number of years, but the railways had not acted upon it until then. I may say that all these gentlemen to whom I have referred are friends of this government and are representative men in trade and commerce, well qualified to speak on this question. This letter of Mr. Blain is addressed to the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, and is as follows :

Toronto, April 19th, 1900.

Hon. A. G. Blair,
Minister of Railways and Canals,
Parliament Buildings,
Ottawa, Ont.

Dear Sir,—On the 5th inst. I wrote you a letter, under instruction from the Freight Rates Committee of the Board of Trade, complaining of a rule adopted by the Canadian Joint Freight Association, under which the railways have recently been charging 50 per cent additional for the carriage of goods more or less subject to being broken, pilfered or otherwise damaged, unless shipped at "owner's risk.' It was then pointed out how irritating this clause was to the people throughout the country, and the request was made that the matter should receive your earliest possible attention. The rule is apparently being continued by the railway companies, and the effect can only be most exasperating.

The only attention, however, that this communication has so far received is a formal acknowledgment from yourself when received, and a similar acknowledgment received from your secretary a week ago. This matter is of the utmost importance to the whole country, and demands prompt attention, and I am instructed by the committee to again draw your attention to the character of the communication which has been forwarded to you, and to request that you should give the matter the earliest possible attention. We naturally look to the government of the country for protection from such outrageous treatment by these corporations, and if we cannot get protection through the medium which is obviously the only reasonable one to appeal the first, we will have to see what public discussion will do to arouse a proper sense in the community of the outrage that is being perpetrated, in the hope that we may in this way obtain relief.

As particularly requested in my former letter, we would like to know on what authority this rule is based. There is apparently nothing in the Railway Act to justify it. The members of our board are urging for another meeting of the committee, and the chairman is anxious to hear from you before calling the committee together.

Awaiting the honour of an early reply,

I am yours truly,
(Sgd.) EDGAR A. WILLS.
Secretary.

Dictated by Mr. Hugh Blain,
Chairman of the Committee.

The result of that correspondence was this. I do not know exactly what pressure was brought to bear upon the Minister of Railways at that time by the railway company ; but at any rate these companies saw that the idea of their being allowed to enforce a penalty of 50 per cent over and above their tolls was so unpopular that they discontinued the charge, and although the law is there, they have not seen fit to exact that penalty from shippers. This Bill was framed for the purpose of regulating tolls, and as regards subsection 3 of section 279, I may say that I am perfectly willing that the shipper should be subjected to the same penalty as the railway company. I am not objecting to that, although it must be remembered that in the old Act no such penalty exists and that there has been none against the shipper up to this particular time. The hon. minister, however, in this Bill sees fit to exact a penalty of $100 to $1,000 where a shipper falsely, with intent to defraud, bills goods in order to get a lower rate of freight than he is entitled to. I do not object to that, because that is a penalty which would be subject to the jurisdiction of the court. The shipper charged with this offence must be brought before the proper tribunal and given a proper trial ; but to put it in the power of the railway companies—knowing, as we do, their tendency to exact fines and tolls which are unfair and illegal, knowing how impossible it is to ever get compensation from them, knowing how many shippers and thousands of dollars of claims against railway companies which it is impossible to collect—and I am talking now from personal experience—knowing all these things, I say that to put in a clause of that character just in order to meet a few extreme cases is most unfair. We know the difficulty of making a proper classification and the liability of clerks to make mistakes. There is not one shipper in five hundred who has ever seen this classification which is made by the railway companies. It was never submitted to the public for consideration. The railway companies never asked the public to pass upon it. In this book there are three thousand different items, and not one shipper in five hundred has ever seen the book. So that every day there are chances of misunderstandings and mistakes which are not wilful. There are, however, opportunities for dishonest men to evade the law, and these should come under the section which provides a penalty of from $100 to $1,000 to be inflicted by the courts; but to give a railway company, in addition to that, the power to collect of its own motion a penalty for the improper classification of freight according to the law which they made themselves—to enable them to inflict a penalty of 50 per cent in addition to the regular freight rate in such cases, is an outrage. I have already drawn the attention of the hon. minister to the fact that this classification has not been authorized by the Governor in Council, and the hon. minister referred to it as an unjustifiable step on the part of the railway company.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I referred to their issuing it without authority.

Mr. KEMP. The hon. minister deserves a great deal of credit. He has shown a great deal of courage. He has taken great pains in preparing this Bill. I have admired the stand he has taken. He has not allowed himself to be put aside by either the railway companies or the shippers or the public, and he evidently intends to treat the public fairly; but the public have not had facilities for reaching the ear of the minister to the same extent as the railway companies. In the brief of the railway companies, this very principle I am discussing is plainly put forward. Here is the report which the representatives of the railway companies put before the minister some weeks ago. They distinctly point out in their memorandum No. 1 some of the matters over which the board should not have jurisdiction. Among these are claims against the companies to recover back tolls alleged to be improper, claims for improper discrimination in the carriage of traffic, and for breaches of various provisions respecting tolls, and claims of the companies against the shippers. That is the stand they take, and it is an unreasonable one. I do not object to the shipper being subjected to a penalty for false billing, but I object to him being made subject to a double penalty. If this Bill passes, I expect that the commission will be appointed. It will not be very long before we have another session. As soon as the commission is appointed, let it take up this question of classification. The people will then have a tribunal before which they can come, such as they never had before, and they can there submit their views with respect to classification. But to say, as is done by this amendment, that this classification, in regard to which the public have never been heard, shall not only be binding on the shipper, but have attached to it this unreasonable proposition is not right. If the hon. minister could hear the views of the merchants and shippers all over the country, in every town and village, he would see the force of my plea. How many of these classifications are distributed throughout the country? Not one shipper in five hundred has ever seen one of them. Yet every shipper is to be bound by it. Taking all the circumstances into consideration, I hope that the hon. minister will not insist upon his amendment. If next session he should find that it is necessary to provide for a double penalty against the shipper, then let him bring forward a provision to that effect. But now, with the reform already effected, let us pause until the public have an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I understand that the hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Kemp) objects to the amendment that has been proposed, on the ground that the fine is sufficient and that the double penalty should not be charged.

Mr. KEMP. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL. As I read this section, it seems all right. It is directed against the man who by means of false billing, false classification, false report of weight or any other means shall 'knowingly, wilfully, or shall willingly suffer or permit any person or persons to obtain transportation for goods at less than the regular toll' and subjects him to a penalty of not more than $1,000, nor less than $100. And the amendment provides, in addition, that the shipper shall be subject to double the rate of the freight to be charged. It seems to me that any one who is guilty of the crimes mentioned, false billing, false classification, false report of weight, and who wilfully tries to impose upon the railway by these means can hardly be subject to too heavy a penalty. The case mentioned by the hon. member for East Toronto, of a clerk not knowing the classification, and making a mistake would not come under this section at all, for the offence must be wilful, and must have for its object the defrauding of the company before the clause can apply. I do not think the penalty provided by the section and the amendment is too heavy, because one guilty of such acts should be most severely punished.

Mr. KEMP. Might I explain to the hon. member for West York (Mr. Campbell) a matter with regard to which I do not think he sees as I do. I may not be able to make it clear, but I will try. As I said, and as he understands, I do not object to the section as it stood originally, but what I object to is the double penalty which can be exacted by the railway company without reference to the commission. One accused under subsection 3, as it stands, comes within the jurisdiction of the commission, or a magistrate to be tried. But under the amendment, it is left in the power of the railway company to seize the goods. They are as likely to make mistakes as a shipper is,—perhaps more so. And yet, without the intervention of a magistrate or any other tribunal, the company would be in a position to exact the penalty, for they have control of the goods. And even though they might be wrong, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Campbell) knows how difficult it is to get a refund from railways when the money is once in their hands. If the shipper were brought before a magistrate, or before the commission to have the case tried and decided, it would not be so serious. But under this amendment, it is left to the railway company to decide the case without the intervention of any court.

Mr. WADE. This amendment is in the interest of the honest shipper. Suppose two men doing business side by side; one ships his goods properly and the other makes a false classification. In such a case the dishonest man has a great advantage over the honest man. For that reason I am in favour of the amendment proposed. As has been pointed out, the section does not affect the man who makes a mistake, therefore the argument of the hon. member for East Toronto on that point is to be set aside. That hon. gentleman says that very few men ever saw this classification. It is not necessary for the shipper to see the classification all he has to do is to correctly describe his goods and the classification is made for him. If he has correctly described his goods, there can be no penalty and he cannot be made liable. This is meant for people who, for instance, describe loaded cartridge shells as bolts and nuts, or pickles in glass and baking powder and spices as vinegar and coffee; electric goods as hardware; liquors as canned goods, and so on. It is intended to meet the case of men who send out a carload described as hay, but which includes smoked meats and other commodities, or a carload described as settlers' effects, afterwards found to contain over a hundred packages of groceries and hardware, that under true classification would have added over $128 to the freight. These are the men we are trying to get at, and we are doing it in the interest of the honest shipper. These false descriptions of goods are by no means of rare occurrence. The complaint is general from one end of the country to the other. And, for my part, if one of the penalties is to be dropped, I would rather drop the thousand dollars and keep the penalty provided for in the amendment, for it is quick in its operation and will do more in a month to check the evil complained of than the other will do in years. For the railway company would be very slow to proceed to enforce a fine or penalty against one of its customers. It would sooner suffer the loss than do so, especially where there is strong competition. If we were only trying to protect the railway company, we might leave the section as it stands, feeling that if the railway companies do not look after their own interest, the fault is their own. But we are trying to protect the honest shipper against the dishonest shipper. And I do not see why any of us should feel bound to stand up here and advocate the rights of men who wilfully describe their goods wrongly in order to get a cheaper rate of freight than they are entitled to.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My hon. friend (Mr. Kemp) makes the point that this thing can occur but seldom, and that we are establishing a principle of a serious character when there is no real need for our doing so. I do not know what my hon friend's information on that question may be, but I would not think he had wide knowledge unless he had taken pains to inquire of the railway companies on the subject. But I can point out to him that Mr. McLean, whose business it was to make very careful inquiry into all matters of railway interest when he was advising us on the subject of a railway commission, and who had no particular leaning, I presume, either for or against the railway companies, felt it his duty to advise us that this was a grievance of very considerable magnitude, that it was attracting a great deal of attention, and that honest shippers were very desirous that, so far as possible, protection should be afforded them against dishonest shippers. My hon. friend has read some instances to give the committee an idea of the nature of this sort of fraud. I am told that the cases are of very frequent occurrence indeed, that the tendency is growing, and that it needs to be stopped, not in the interests of the railway company alone—though they might fairly, as a matter of justice, apply to this parliament to put means into their hands whereby imposition and fraud upon them could be prevented—but in the interests of the business community at large. We may well consider that interest as paramount, and one that we ought to serve. I am surprised to hear from my hon. friend that this suggestion is unpopular in Toronto and meets with such indignation. I cannot conceive that any body would be offended or dissatisfied with this legislation if he were an honest shipper; and I am sure my hon. friend is not doing justice to the business people of Toronto when he says that there is such widespread dissatisfaction with this proposal. I think the hon. gentleman would find that even in Toronto the business men would be prepared to support any legislation which would prevent this class of fraud from being perpetrated. It is a monstrous wrong upon honest men that this thing should go on. I think I made out my case clearly when I spoke to the committee before, and the hon. gentleman did not succeed in answering it. I showed that it is an extremely difficult thing for the railways to follow it up. They may open the barrels, or boxes, or cases, when they are shipped at some central point, or some large station where they have a large staff of clerks. But even then they could only examine an occasional box, or barrel, or package, even in those large centres where the cars are loaded. But when the cars are loaded at a remote point, or on private sidings alongside the factory or warehouse, they cannot follow up the fraud. At best they can only have inspection made of a limited number of packages, so as to test the character of the whole.

Mr. KEMP. In regard to remote sidings as the hon. gentleman mentioned, will he not admit that at remote sidings there are not usually merchants who carry on an extensive business, and consequently it is not likely that expensive hardware would be put into a carload of hay or flour ? It is not at these points that the railways have agents and inspectors.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Granted, but the hon. gentleman must remember that if you take a carload of boxes or barrels it would not be possible to have an inspection that would cover anything more than a sample here and there. But we know, if there is a deliberate purpose to defraud, with what ingenuity the shipper will place his goods or his packages so as if possible to remove suspicion. At the very best therefore the company cannot make anything but a limited inspection of the goods that are being forwarded. I think the hon. gentleman is in error when he speaks about the dissatisfaction among business men. He has referred to the facts connected with the issue of that freight classification, and the difficulties which they complain of as to changes in the classification. No doubt there has been a great deal of dissatisfaction in the classification, with the manner perhaps in which it is done, with the way in which they put out these freight classifications without authority. But that is a totally different subject. There is no connection between the classification and these persons who are perpetrating frauds, except in a very indirect way. Nobody need make any mistake about the classification. The shipper has it entirely in his own hands to make the shipment properly, to bill the goods in accordance with the classification. There is no reason why he should complain of this clause, or of the penalties which it is proposed to impose upon the fraudulent shopper. If he wants to do business honestly it is much easier for him to act honestly than dishonestly. The subject of classification is one which we have thoroughly dealt with in this Bill. The hon. gentleman will remember that the board have entire control of the subject. I think I can safely say that in no legislation which has been passed in any state of the neighbouring republic have they got the same comprehensive grasp of the matter of classification as we have here. Now the hon. gentleman seems to think that an innocent shipper coming into this country would be subjected to these penalties. There is no reason for any such fear. A man must have an intent to perpetrate a fraud, or else he is not subject to the additional toll. We could not safeguard the innocent shipper any better than we have done. I take it that nobody can possibly complain of this proposed amendment who does not sympathize with men who wish to act dishonestly. It is not in the interest of the public at large that people should be afforded an opportunity of committing fraud, or that they should be free from penalties when they do commit fraud upon railway companies any more than if the fraud was committed against a private individual.

Mr. KEMP. May I ask the minister a question as to how this extra penalty will be collected ? Does the hon. minister claim that under this amendment a man will be tried before a magistrate or the commission? Or does he understand, as I understand, that the company may act arbitrarily, and that they may be able to collect this additional amount the same as the ordinary freight rate before the goods are delivered ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman is not referring now to the penalty which we are imposing.

Mr. KEMP. I am satisfied with the original penalty.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If the railway company discovers that any person has been billing falsely, or has been shipping in the fraudulent way which has been described, they may make a demand upon the shipper to pay this extra fifty per cent advance upon the toll, and the shipper would be obliged, if he wanted to get his goods at once, to pay that fifty per cent on receiving them. He would not need to resort to legal proceedings to get the goods, or to compel the surrender of the goods to him by the company if he paid that amount. But having paid that amount under protest, he then has several courses open to him from which he can choose. If he did not wish to take any legal proceedings against the railway company to recover that amount, he could apply to the board of railway commissioners and the board would have power to make an order to compel the refund of that amount. All he would suffer would be the temporary deprivation of that extra fifty per cent, if he were wrongfully charged with fraud. Then he might have another remedy. He might apply to a solicitor to take a writ of replevin, or a process similar to that—I do not know what the procedure is in Ontario—and seize the articles upon tendering the amount which he claimed was due, and have the thing fought out in that way. There are various ways in which the matter could be tried out; but undoubtedly, before he could compel the voluntary surrender of the goods, he would have to pay the amount the company charged.

Mr. KEMP. That is what I understood. The way I understand the amendment to section 3, the man would be properly tried before a proper tribunal, he would not be left entirely in the hands of the railway company. Now, I want to say that the railway company is just as liable to make mistakes as the shipper, and more liable, because the railways employ clerks and employ inspectors who frequently make great mistakes in regard to this classification. Does the minister think that after a man has paid the $5 or $10 that the railways might collect under this amendment, the shipper is going to take the trouble to employ a lawyer and go before a legal tribunal? From personal experience, and the experience of other gentlemen in this House, we know that it is often better to abandon a claim against a railway than to go to expensive litigation with them, or take any trouble about it. The whole policy of the railways is to make it as troublesome as possible for any man to collect money from them, no matter how legitimate the claim may be, with the idea that the shipper will abandon his claim and drop it. There will be thousands and thousands of claims arising out of this all the time. The hon. minister says: Let the people bill honestly and they will not be subject to this penalty. I am all the time hearing the idea put forth that all the shippers are dishonest. I am tired of that sort of talk. We know very well that the machinery that the railways have is of such a character that you cannot get at the man who performs the act and it is very exasperating. Shippers are at their wits' end all the time to know what to do in regard to it. How is a man going to bill his goods and know that he will bill them right? Under the classification every article is divided and subdivided under many different heads. Under hardware there are fifty divisions or more. I see in this book five or six pages of divisions and subdivisions of hardware. Even in the article of hobby-horses there are nine or ten different divisions and subdivisions. everything is divided and subdivided. Before passing such a stringent law, let the public have the opportunity of going before the commission and discussing this classification. May I ask the hon. minister if this great evil which he now puts forth with so much strength and ability on behalf of the railway companies has been such that the railway companies have suggested this amendment to him?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Mr. McLean suggested it to me first in his report.

Mr. KEMP. The railways suggested it within the last few weeks did they not?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. KEMP. Up to that time had the railways made any representations to the hon. minister in reference to this grievance which has been so much talked of to-day?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I never heard from them about it.

Mr. KEMP. Here we have this great cry of the hon. minister about this grievance that the railways have against the public and now we have the hon. minister saying that they never, until a few weeks ago, came before him and called it to his attention. Is not that a proof that he should allow this matter to rest until next session and until the appointment of a commission so that the public can have an opportunity of going before this impartial tribunal and stating their views in regard to this classification, a classification in regard to which the public has not been heard and in regard to which they want to be heard?

Mr. REID (Grenville). I listened to the speech of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals and I must say that I judge it to be simply the speech of a lawyer or of a gentleman who has never had any business experience in the way of shipping.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I never did have.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I speak as one who has had a little experience in shipping. This clause, I think, is a very unjust one. The hon. member for Annapolis (Mr. Wade) stated that in the case of settlers' effects a farmer might ship some groceries or articles of that kind in his car and thus commit a wrong.

Mr. WADE. 103 packages of groceries.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Admitting that to be a fact, suppose a farmer were to ship——

Mr. WADE. This was not a farmer.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Suppose a settler were going from Ontario to Manitoba and when putting his effects into the car he decided, in addition, to take up some groceries that he would require when he went there. Does the hon. member (Mr. Wade) think it would be a crime to put those groceries into that car and consign them as settlers' effects ?

Mr. WADE. That is not the case that I referred to.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Under this section he would be committing a fraud, and the minute the car arrived at its destination and the agent reported that he had found groceries in the car the settler would be liable to $1,000 fine. That would be a great hardship. Supposing a person were shipping some groceries, of some kind or another, some of which are packed in tins and some in bottles. There is a different classification of bottles. The one is charged for at a higher rate than the other. A merchant might innocently ship three cases of goods——

Mr. WADE. Have you ever seen whiskey in tins ?

Mr. REID (Grenville). Yes, I have seen whiskey in tins. It does not make any difference, whether it is whiskey or what it is. If the merchant consigned three cases of merchandise the agent would bill them at the proper rate whether they were in tins or whether they were in packages.

Mr. WADE. Does the hon. gentleman think it would be right to bill enamel ware as tinware ?

Mr. REID (Grenville). I do not say that would be right, but the person billing it might bill it as five or ten cases of merchandise or hardware without really intending to commit a wrong and not knowing that these articles were classified differently; yet, for billing it in that way he would be liable to $1,000 fine. I have never heard of any complaints whatever from the railways in regard to billing. In fact, the agents know exactly what manufacturers are producing. They know how they put up their goods, and they look after the billing so that they can protect themselves. The hon. minister states that Mr. McLean is the gentleman who recommended this. I believe he received his information from the railway companies. They are always anxious to get clauses of this kind in that will protect them. I believe he should have asked some of the leading merchants and shippers and farmers of this country to consult with him in order to see what was actually necessary and to give them a chance to have their rights protected as well. In this instance the hon. minister is not protecting the shipper at all, and he is not protecting the farmer.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am willing to meet the suggestion of the hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Kemp) if this is satisfactory to him. I suggest that we strike out the words I proposed to insert and substitute the following :—

The board may make regulations providing that any such person——

That is the biller.

Shall in addition to the regular toll be liable to pay to the company such further toll, not exceeding fifty per cent of the regular charge.

That will give the commission an opportunity of studying the question and they may make a regulation requiring that an additional toll shall be paid.

Mr. KEMP. Do I understand the hon. minister to say that this leaves it to the judgment of the commission and that they may make such a regulation if they think it right and proper ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They are not required to do it, but they may.

Mr. KEMP. Were they required to do it before ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, they were not required. It was provided in the original amendment that the shipper should be liable. I understand that the hon. member desired that an opportunity should be afforded by the lapse of time to have this classification looked into by the board. I am meeting his view by this change.

Mr. KEMP. I think the hon. minister is fair in regard to this matter. He thoroughly understands that I do not want to obstruct the Bill in any way. I want to emphasize the fact again, that I believe in the $1,000 penalty; I believe that dishonest shippers ought be penalized, but what I want is that the public now entering on this new regime will have an opportunity of being heard; an opportunity which they have not had under the Railway Committee of the Privy Council. I would like to have it made clear that the minister means that the board will have the power, after looking into this matter, to insert such a clause. That is the meaning of it ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is it.

Mr. LENNOX. Is the committee to understand that the question of the $1,000 penalty is left to the board, or only the question of the increased tolls ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Only the question of increased toll, and it is not a fixed $1,000 penalty; it is a varying penalty in the judgment of the tribunal before which the person may be charged.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The shipper will have a right to appeal from the railway company.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The board has power to inquire into it and to refund the amount.

On section 238—weeds on company's land—company must remove, &c.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I propose to add after the heading 'prevention of the liability for fires' the following:

The company shall at all times maintain and keep its right of way free and clear of any inflammable matter.

Subsection 2. Whenever any fire starts upon the right of way of the company and spreads to the adjoining property, or whenever a fire is started in any property adjoining the right of way or the property of the company, by a spark from a locomotive; in any action for damages resulting from any such fire the burden of proof that any such fire was not caused by the negligence of the company, shall be upon the company.

Mr. TAYLOR. What does the minister mean by 'inflammable' matter?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Any matter that would take fire.

Mr. TAYLOR. What about ties and lumber that they are obliged to keep along the track?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is part of their business. This refers to stray inflammable stuff on their right of way.

Mr. L. P. DEMERS (St. John and Iberville). I beg to move the following amendment:

Whenever damage is caused to any lands and fences, plantations or buildings and their contents by fire started by a railway locomotive, the company making use of such locomotive shall be responsible for such damage and may be sued for the recovery of such damage in any court of competent jurisdiction.

The amendment of the Minister of Railways does not change the law as it stands now. It only changes the law as to the evidence, but not as to the responsibility of the company. The purpose of my amendment is to change the law as to the responsibility of the company. Under the amendment of the minister, although it may be proved that the company started the fire and burned the property, they are not responsible if they bring their own employees and prove that their locomotives were properly constructed. The House will see at once that the position of the farmer or the proprietor who has suffered from the fire is very precarious under such a law, and that it would be unwise for him to bring up a lawsuit against the company under such conditions, because the result would depend upon the evidence which is in the hands of the defendant. As I have already explained to the House when I moved last session, and this session the second reading of my Bill, this very same question has been brought up in the Imperial House of Commons. In 1900, a Bill similar to the amendment I now move was presented to the English House of Commons and in spite of the opposition of the leader of the House, such was the feeling in England on this matter, that the second reading of that Bill was carried by a vote of 303 against 80. I do not know why this measure has not since become law in England, if it be not on account of the delay in parliamentary procedure there. Whatever be the case, we are not obliged to wait in Canada until the English people have adopted such a law if we once come to the conclusion that it is a proper law for us to enact here. I hold that the railway companies are enjoying a privilege in this respect which they should not enjoy. I find that according to common law of all the provinces the railway companies are responsible. The Privy Council in the case of Roy vs. the Canadian Pacific Railway has decided that the common law of England and the common law of France, which we follow in the province of Quebec, are similar on this point, and that it is only because the power of parliament is supreme that railway companies are not responsible in such a case. Judge Blackburn, in the case of Jones vs. Festiniog Railway Company, said:

The general rule of common law is correctly given in Fletcher v. Rylands, that when a man brings or uses a thing of a dangerous nature on his own land he must keep it in at his own peril, and is liable for the consequence if it escapes and does injury to his neighbour. Here the defendants were using a locomotive engine with no express parliamentary power making lawful that use, and they are therefore at common law bound to keep the engines from doing injury; and if the sparks escape and cause damage, the defendants are liable for the consequence, though no actual negligence be shown on their part.

This is very clear. If you use a locomotive, and if parliament has not given you that special power, though its use may be perfectly lawful, and though the locomotive may be as perfect as it can be, though you have not been negligent at all according to the common law of England and also of France, you are responsible if you cause damage to another. This is the principle of common law, based upon the Roman law, that you must not cause any damage to another, that you must not make a use of your property so as to interfere with the rights of others. The railway companies have the right to the enjoyment of their property, their track and their lands, but they have not the right to injure the property of their neighbours. They have no more right to throw sparks on the land of another than any one has a right to throw stones on the property of his neighbour. This same measure was brought into the English House of Commons in the session of 1900, and that House expressed its approval of it by a vote of 303 to 80. I think this amendment should be adopted for the protection of the farmers, and all who wish that the railway companies shall not be put above the common law of this country should vote in favour of it. This is the proper time, when we are revising the Railway Act. If this law is not adopted to-day, it will be adopted later on, there is no doubt about it, but it may take some years.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I heartily concur in the remarks that have been made by the hon. member for St. John and Iberville (Mr. Demers). I think his amendment should be adopted, because, as he has said, even in England, public opinion is ripe for such a change in the law. I have read very carefully the debates which took place in the House of Commons in England, in 1900 when this law was proposed there, because I was personally interested in the case of Roy vs. the Canadian Pacific Railway, which went before the Privy Council. I do not see why this parliament, when granting special privileges to railway companies, should not bind them to respect, not the privileges, but the rights by common law of the riparian proprietors. When a locomotive emits sparks and causes injury to neighbouring lands or houses or barns, the company should be liable in damages for such injury. I therefore concur heartily in the remarks made by my hon. friend, and I hope that the House will agree to this amendment. If it does not pass this year, it will come up every session until we have the principle sanctioned by this parliament, that the railway company shall not enjoy any special privileges as regards this very important matter.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The amendment which was moved by me is to the effect that the company shall be obliged to disprove negligence. It is very difficult to prove negligence against a railway company under such circumstances, so much so that people who have suffered damage for loss in this way, as a general rule fail to secure any redress from the company, because they have no means of establishing by proof that the company failed to use the best and most modern appliances and equipment for the purpose of preventing sparks flying from their locomotives. Therefore, the principle which governs has been modified to this extent, that the company shall be liable for fires caused by sparks from locomotives in the event of their failing to prove that they were not guilty of negligence either as to the way in which they used their locomotive or as to the condition in which the locomotive was. My hon. friend proposes to revolutionize the law and the principles which govern altogether. He proposes to have it enacted that wherever a railway company traversing the country causes a fire to take place, no matter how innocently, no matter how fully the company may have complied with every condition and every requirement of the law they shall, because they caused the fire, make good the damage. The principle of the common law, as my hon. friend stated, is this, that when parliament incorporates a railway company and authorizes it to run railway trains, it necessarily implies that the company may exercise, if it does so properly, the powers which have been conferred upon it by law; and if, in the lawful exercise of such powers, it necessarily does damage to anybody, that damage follows as a necessary consequence of the lawful exercise of that power, and therefore the company should not be liable to make it good. That is the principle of the common law, and that principle I would not feel just now like recommending the committee to deviate from.

Mr. BELCOURT. I am in favour of the amendment proposed by my hon. friend from St. John and Iberville (Mr. Demers). When this matter was up before, I stated my views. Until the judgment of the Privy Council in the Canadian Pacific Railway vs. Roy, I always entertained the opinion that section 288 of the Railway Act (1888), covered the case, and that, in the province of Quebec at all events, railway companies were responsible for the damages which they caused through the loss of buildings by fires caused by sparks from their engines.

Mr. LEMIEUX. That was the universal jurisprudence until that decision.

Mr. BELCOURT. Yes, and I think that that jurisprudence was justified by the provisions of section 288:

> Company not Relieved from legal Liability by Inspection or anything done hereunder.
> No inspection had under this Act, and nothing in this Act contained, and nothing done or ordered or omitted to be done or ordered, under or by virtue of the provisions of this Act, shall relieve, or be construed to relieve, any company of or from any liability or responsibility resting upon it by law, either towards Her Majesty or towards any person, or the wife or husband, parent or child, executor or administrator, tutor or curator, heir or personal representative of any person, for anything done or omitted to be done by such company, or for any wrongful act, neglect or default, misfeasance, malfeasance or nonfeasance, of such company, or in any manner or way to lessen such liability or responsibility, or in any way to weaken or diminish the liability or responsibility of any such company, under the laws in force in the province in which such liability or responsibility arises.

In the province of Quebec it has been a subject of contention whether a railway, exercising a trade which is of a dengerous character, was responsible for damages, and the weight of opinion was that, under the French law—which provides that any person who exercises a calling or trade of a dangerous character does so at their own risk and is responsible for the damages, whether the most modern appliances were used or not, and whether or not everything was done to prevent accidents—the railway companies were responsible. The simple fact of exercising a trade which is dangerous makes the person exercising it responsible for all damages resulting from the exercise of such trade. He exercises it at his own peril, irrespective of the question whether he shows negligence or not. Under that principle of the French law, coupled with the provision of section 288, which says that nothing shall diminish the liability or responsibility of any company under the laws of the province where such responsibility or liability exists, the railway companies, in the province of Quebec, were held responsible for the damages caused by sparks from their engines. That jurisprudence was set aside by the decision of the Privy Council in the Canadian Pacific Railway and Roy.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The Privy Council said that their decision was according to the law in the province of Quebec.

Mr. BELCOURT. Quite so, and for that reason I think that the time has come when this parliament should accept the principle which in my opinion governs in the French law, and make the railway companies responsible for the accidents due to the dangerous nature of their operation, irrespective of the question of negligence. When a company is exercising a dangerous occupation, it is doing so for its own benefit, and not for the benefit of the public. In fact, in many instances, these railways are a detriment to the public and particularly to the farmer. It is no advantage for a farmer to have his land cut up by a railway and be subjected, from one end of the year to the other, to all the inconveniences which follow the operation of a railway ; and therefore it seems to me that when damage is caused, it should be paid by the person who benefits from the operation of the thing causing the damage. In ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, it will be impossible for a farmer to establish negligence on the part of the railway company, and why should he be compelled, not only to put up with the annoyance of having a railway pass through his property, but also with the risk of having his buildings destroyed by fire and the loss which such fires may cause to him. It seems to me that the amendment is justified by law and equity and should be enacted, particularly at present, when railways are so numerous and the danger from fire has so increased. In dealing with matters of this kind, it is well to know what has been done elsewhere. In England the feeling has grown very largely that railway companies should be made liable for every accident due to their operation. In 1900, a measure was submitted in the Imperial House of Commons to this effect, which passed its second reading but did not go any further.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Never heard of it since.

Mr. BELCOURT. Possibly, but the hon. gentleman knows how difficult it is in the Imperial House of Commons to have a measure of this sort adopted. In any event, there was a very large majority of the House voted for the second reading in 1900.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. A majority of those present at the time.

Mr. BELCOURT. I take it that the fact that the second reading was voted by a large majority is pretty good evidence that the feeling of the House was in favour of the Bill ; and the fact that it did not become law is no answer to my contention. At all events, I give this fact to the committee for what it is worth, and I am not one of those who think that we should adopt or refuse to adopt legislation simply because a precedent has been set in either respect elsewhere. I base my support for this amendment on the ground that it is based on a good principle in law, which is to-day sanctioned by many courts in the British colonies, as for instance in cases where damages are caused by the operation of a nuisance. Take the case of a sawmill operated in a city. It has been frequently held that the people in the neighbourhood are entitled to damages caused by the vibration and smoke, and in many instances people have been granted injunctions to restrain corporations from exercising businesses of that sort. Take the case of a livery stable in the city of Montreal.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The case of Drysdale ?

Mr. BELCOURT. Yes, Mr. Drysdale had a livery stable on St. Denis street which is an important residential section of the city, and he was restrained by the courts from carrying on his business because of the bad odour from the stable.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Is there any analogy between that case and the present one ?

Mr. BELCOURT. Yes, there is this analogy that in each case the parties are carrying on a business which is dangerous or a nuisance, and should either be restrained from doing it or be made responsible.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. But parliament gave a charter to the railway company which it did not do to Mr. Drysdale.

Mr. BELCOURT. Quite true, but if the railway company, in the exercise of its functions, causes damage, why should it not be responsible ? The principle is as old as the hills, as old as the Roman law, that you must not use your property so as to cause damage to others. There is no principle in law which has been more universally adopted by all civilized countries than this, and it seems to me that the amendment of my hon. friend from St. John's and Iberville is based upon that principle.

Mr. McCARTHY. I think that the effect of the amendment of the hon. member for St. John's and Iberville will be to alter the law as it has existed for years.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Not at all. It will be reverting to the law.

Mr. McCARTHY. That may be the case in the province of Quebec, but the highest Court of Appeal has declared that its judgment in Roy and the Canadian Pacific Railway was according to the law as it has always existed in the province of Quebec and elsewhere. I am unable to see any injustice in the law as it stands, and as it has been interpreted by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, and I think it is much better to leave the law as it has been settled by that court. It is very desirable that there should be stability in our laws and jurisprudence, and I think we should hesitate before unsettling what the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council has decided.

Mr. LANCASTER. I am in favour of this amendment. I believe that we should have a universal law throughout the Dominion with regard to this matter. It was quite clear that the judgment of the Privy Council, in the case of Roy and the Canadian Pacific Railway, contradicts what, hitherto had been declared by our courts to be the law in the province of Quebec and to be what the legislature of that province intended, and in that sense this judgment operates injustice to that province. It is equally unjust to the province of Ontario because each province ought to enjoy the same rights.

Mr. BELCOURT. I hope my hon. friend does not understand me to mean that this amendment should apply only to the province of Quebec ?

Mr. LANCASTER. It is generally conceded in the province of Quebec that the law as it is now is unjust to the people of that province. In other words, if that province had the power to make the law they would make it different from what we have made it. I can see the justice of that so far as the province of Quebec goes, and I can see the fairness of the law to be put into effect here and practically rescind or repeal the law of the Dominion as declared by the decision of the Privy Council. There is another reason why I think it would be well for the railway companies themselves to have the law changed in this way. Under the amendment proposed by the Minister of Railways and Canals the onus is simply put upon the railway to prove that they were not negligent. In that case all they would have to do would be to call experts—and they have plenty of them always at hand—to show that they are using the best appliances, and that, therefore, there was no negligence——

Mr. McCARTHY. May I ask the hon. gentleman a question ? Would that satisfy the amendment of the Minister of Railways and Canals ? Would it not be necessary for them to call the servants or employees who were in charge of the engine at the time ?

Mr. LANCASTER. That is partly what they would do, of course. I was trying to see how this would work out practically in court, for that is what we must do here—find out how the parties' rights would work out in court if there was a fire and the party damaged brought action. First, the railway company would bring in experts to prove that the engine was made in the best way. Then they would call the fireman and engine driver to show that the proper appliances were on the engine and all that kind of thing. That is, the company would call the employees who are interested in showing that they had carried out the instructions given them. I am not going to suggest that these employees would perjure themselves, but, of course, they would not be likely to notice their own negligence. And, as any evidence on the other side would have to depend upon a knowledge of facts within control of the company, the judge would simply have to decide on the weight of evidence though it might not necessarily be evidence clearly true. Besides, if it is not well settled that the railway must pay under any circumstances, the effect will be that the railways that do the best they can to avoid fires will be paying for railways that are careless. In this way : If it were fairly settled and fairly understod by judges and arbitrators settling the damages to be paid to landowners for land taken for the construction of the railway, that a man could not necessarily recover for damage to property or buildings due to sparks from the locomotives—if it were fairly understood that negligence must be proved before damages could be recovered in such cases—that fact would have to be taken into consideration and allowed for the landowner when his lands were being taken. It would be just the same as with the drainage law. If the works of the company interfere with the drainage and so injure the property, that fact is taken into consideration and damages are allowed. Whether the damage is from water or from fire, the railway is the cause of the damage, and there should be an allowance in one case as in the other. And, if the farmer cannot recover piece by piece as the damage from fire occurs—if he is not paid by the job, so to speak—he must recover in a lump sum for the danger he is likely to be subject to. In that case, a careful company, one not likely to cause one-tenth as many fires as another would, yet have to pay just as much in damages as a more careless company, for the arbitrators would have no means of differentiating between companies in that way and would be obliged to make allowance for this prospective damage on the basis of common experience and allow it as compensation when the lands are taken. But if we settle it that companies are to pay as they burn up crops or effect other injury by fire, this element would be eliminated in assessing the damage of lands through which the railway runs. And so it would be sound legislation to enact clearly that the companies are to be responsible absolutely for the damage they do in the way suggested by the hon. member who moved the amendment. That amendment would be preferable to the one proposed by the minister.

Mr. JABEL ROBINSON. I do not wish to prolong this discussion, but I have a word or two to say in favour of the amendment proposed by the hon. member for St. John's and Iberville (Mr. Demers). The farmers of my county, and, I suppose of every county, lose heavily every year by fires caused by locomotives. And it is almost impossible to get anything from the company. And, if you go into court to prove that the fire was due to the negligence of the company's employees, you must risk all your property in the attempt, for, when they are sued by a farmer in such a case, the railway company carry the case from court to court to defeat him. A farmer's whole property is placed in jeopardy if he attempts to recover damages, no matter how clear it may be that the fire was due to sparks from the locomotive. Something should be done to compel the railway companies to be careful, and, when they are not careful, but burn down our crops, fences and buildings, they should be compelled to pay. In the county of Kent only last summer, I saw from four to five acres of standing timber and a field of grain burning. The farmer could not prove that the fire originated from the railway engine, though everybody knew that that was the cause of it. The consequence was that the farmer had to suffer the loss. I think the Minister of Railways ought to take up this matter seriously and consent to this amendment moved by the hon. member for St. John's and Iberville (Mr. Demers).

Mr. MACLAREN (Huntingdon). I would not have risen to speak if the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Robinson) who is a layman, had not set me an example by speaking before I did. It is not my intention to deal with the legal aspect of the question, but taking a broad common sense view of it. I quite agree with the remarks of those who favour the amendment. It means simply this, that if any man who is engaged in an occupation causes damage, he should pay for the damage. I sympathize with those legal gentlemen who have spoken about the difficulty of proving their case from the employees of the defendant. I have had some experience in that line in a case that happened some time ago. In my own village a young lawyer had brought a case before the court, and the only person he had to examine was the defendant. After the defendant was examined he said: Your honour, that is my case. The judge was an older practitioner than the young lawyer; he leaned over the desk and said to him: I will give you some advice, always be very careful in taking a case where you have got to rely entirely on the evidence of the defendant. I think that is a good principle of law, at least it is a common sense view. I think people who suffer damage from a railway ought to be very careful in taking a case where they rely altogether upon the employees of the defendant, who would be the parties who caused the damage if they had left their smoke-stack open, or something of that kind. Other countries are looking into this matter as well as Canada. In the United States, that country which has so many railways and which takes such precautions in the interest of the people, we find that the states of Connecticut, Maine, Massachusetts, Wisconsin and South Carolina, have adopted laws similar to the amendment which the hon. member for St. Johns and Iberville is introducing. The significant fact has been mentioned by some speakers that the House of Commons in England, without being lashed up to it by any party whip, passed by such a large majority the second reading of this Bill. There must be some reason for it, and I should take it as being the free expression of opinion of the English House of Commons. I do not know why it could have passed the second reading by such a large majority as was mentioned, 220, unless there was a very strong feeling in its favour. I am in favour of the amendment, and I intend to support it.

Mr. GOURLEY. If this amendment is adopted, it will change the whole course of common law in Canada, let us well understand that. Now, I have great respect for the legal ability of the hon. gentleman from St. John's and Iberville (Mr. Demers), whom I have had the pleasure of knowing intimately; I have great respect for his judgment and legal knowledge, and would willingly support any measure that he brought forward, were I not constrained to oppose it on strictly legal grounds. Now, with regard to our friends across the border, I have often noticed that they would pass a law today, the courts would discuss it, and in three or four years it would disappear from the statute-book, and they would go back to the sound principles of the common law, which they inherited from the old country. We ought not to depart from the common law of this country, unless for the most cogent and sound reasons. I have listened to the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) with great deference on many occasions, but I do not think that he puts this question to-day in a very strong light. He was talking about a trial in court. Why, we have the same difficulty in every case we try. Very often we cannot make out our case. I have had dozens of cases where I knew my client was right, but I was unable to prove my points, therefore the court had to rule against me. Would it be wise for me, because I failed in my evidence, to come to parliament and ask them to pass a law to enable me to get damages under circumstances where I had failed to meet the requirements of the law ? All that I understand to be alleged in favour of this amendment, is that it is difficult in some cases to make out your case against the railway company. Is this parliament going to adopt as a sound reason for legislation, that because a man fails to make out his case it must be made easier for him to do so ? There may be hardship, but hardship is the common argument that makes bad law. Whenever a man commences to talk about hardship, and desires parliament to legislate to remove the hardship, then he is inviting us to make a bad law. There is always hardship, and always will be, in the administration of any system of law. You never can get any principle of law that will fit every particular case. The common law of England says that damages must be awarded and paid, if the railway company does damage. But suppose you fail to show that the railway company has caused damage do you want this parliament to pronounce judgment against the railway company because there was a failure of evidence ? But I go further. I was a student of civil law at one time, and I say, with all deference to those gentlemen who are practising the civil law, that I will not defer to them in the knowledge of the principles of civil law. I undertake to say, after reading the judgment of the Privy Council, that it is a correct exposition of the civil law of Rome, as it is of the common law of this country. Therefore, these hon. gentlemen from Quebec are asking us not only to repeal the civil law, but also the common law of this country. I say that is a position this parliament ought not to take. The whole point is this : We charter a railway company, or any other company, and give it the necessary rights to carry on its business. Now, remember I am talking to lawyers and men of common sense. I don't want to hear any layman get up in this parliament and differentiate himself from a lawyer, when we are talking about common sense. The law is the essence of common sense, and a man who has common sense and who has good judgment, is always a good lawyer. I want this parliament to understand that when we charter a railway company to run a railway, we charter it with the implied agreement that it will run that railway without doing wrong to any individual. They are bound to build the railway and to run it according to the latest improvements, with the most correct appliances. If we pass a law saying they shall be liable for damages, without proof of negligence we are acting without common sense and without common honesty, and that is what is sought to be done here. We charter a railway company, the company take our charter and build their line, use the best engines and cars, then when an accident happens, if they can show that they have done all that the law requires them to do, the law says they are not liable, because there is no negligence.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Even if they killed the hon. gentleman with the best appliances, they would not be liable ?

Mr. GOURLEY. They are not liable ,unless they have committed negligence in some way, unless they have done some wrong, that is the basic principle. This is a very important question, and must not be treated flippantly, as some people have sought to treat it. This is a very serious proposition of law.

Mr. DEMERS (St. John's and Iberville). Does not the common law say that they are liable if they do not keep their fire on their own property ?

Mr. GOURLEY. I am not bound to answer that question. The hon. gentleman had his brief as counsel. Why did he not go into court and show this to the court and to the judge ? Do not ask me a question like that. That was a question for the court, and what I understand now is that you want to alter the law because you tried your case badly. I do not propose to blame the common law of England for the blunders that counsel may make. I have made mistakes myself in trying cases, but I have never dreamed of coming to parliament to get my blunders corrected. I have always concealed them and said nothing about them. We are asked to change the common law of England, and hon. gentlemen are urging the judgment of the Privy Council in support of the change. I will undertake to say that any student who reads that judgment which is attacked will see that it is one of the most admirable deliverances that has ever been pronounced in any court in this country ; and for us to be called upon to change the whole law of this empire, because somebody has tried his case badly is to ask something that we should not be willing to concede. According to the statement of the hon. member for St. John's and Iberville (Mr. Demers) there was something that was not presented to the court. There was some evidence that was not presented, and if the evidence was not presented to the court the court certainly could not decide upon that which it did not have before it. I will undertake to say, in view of the interruption of the hon. gentleman, that the case was not tried well. I say let the law stand, and let the next man who tries this case do it properly. I am sure if my hon. friend from Gaspé (Mr. Lemieux) had been associated with the trial of that case the evidence would have been perfect.

Mr. BELCOURT. May I ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Gourley) a question ? I would ask him if he could point out the difference between his attitude now and the attitude he took in reference to cattle-guards ?

Mr. GOURLEY. I have not taken any attitude at all in reference to cattle-guards.

Mr. BELCOURT. Did he not take the ground in refernce to cattle-guards that the railway companies should be responsible for every accident ?

Mr. GOURLEY. I have never spoken on the subject. You will always find me advocating to-day the same principles as I have advocated previously. I am not twisting around from one principle to another. Now, I appeal to all lawyers in this House and to all common sense men——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. GOURLEY—to stand by this principle of the common law and not repeal this Bill.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.) I am not a lawyer, but I claim to have a little common sense and in this respect, I think common sense overrides the law, and that people who suffer from negligence and carelessness on the part of railway companies should be protected. Common sense is superior to the law and there are many cases where the law is not the essence of common sense.

At six o'clock, the House took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. There is a new clause moved by the Minister of Railways and Canals and an amendment to that clause by the hon member (Mr. Demers). Is the House ready for the question ?

Mr. LENNOX. I do not think we are ready for either of these questions at present. I want to call your attention to the fact that on the 26th June last when this section was being considered, I moved the following amendment :

> Every company shall also, by a sufficient number of its employees to ensure the safe carrying out of the same, from time to time and as often as occasion therefor arises, and at the season of the year appearing to be the most safe and suitable for carrying out the work, burn or otherwise destroy or dispose of, all dry grass, weeds, decayed and decaying matter of every kind, and all waste material, refuse and rubbish, upon their right of way and lands, so as to prevent as far as possible fire accidentally originating upon and spreading from such right of way or lands, to the prejudice of the owners and occupiers of adjoining lands; and for every day during which the company neglects to comply with the provisions of this subsection, it shall incur a penalty of two dollars, to be recovered with costs in any court of competent jurisdiction, by any interested person suing therefor.

Have you got that amendment yet, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I have not.

Mr. LENNOX. It appears in 'Hansard,' page 5,554, and the Minister of Railways and Canals intimated to me at the time that he would take it into consideration.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The section to which you refer is section 238 and that has been carried. We are now discussing an entirely new section.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is a clause which says that the company shall keep all inflammable matter from its right of way and I think that meets the intention of my hon friend (Mr. Lennox).

Mr. LENNOX. I want to state my case and get your ruling, Mr. Chairman, and I think I will get a favourable ruling if you will let me be heard.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will afford the hon. gentleman every opportunity to have his amendment pronounced upon by the House.

Mr. LENNOX. I take the position that my amendment moved on the 26th June, has not been disposed of, and until it is disposed of the section cannot be carried. The minister explained at the time that there were other gentlemen who had similar amendments and that they would all be considered together. As this is an amendment to the original section, I want to have it pronounced upon now.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Section 238 has been carried.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is no doubt that the hon. member has correctly stated the matter. He rose when section 238 was under consideration and read the amendment which he proposed to move. I see in 'Hansard' what I said was this :

> We are not at present dealing with the fire clauses. If there is any question of cutting out the long dry grass beside the track, there will be discussion of that question on a motion which is to be moved by one of the hon. gentlemen from the west. Perhaps that will be the more appropriate occasion.

I understand that my hon. friend fell into that suggestion, and gave notice that he intended to move this amendment. Of course he could not then move the amendment, because the opportunity had not arisen for him to move it. It was not germane to the subject under consideration. Therefore he did not move it, but gave notice that he proposed to move it. The whole subject is now before the committee, and this is the occasion to which I pointed. This amendment which I have moved is an amendment which, after consideration of the different propositions which have been made, including my hon. friend's, I have had drafted. If my hon. friend is not quite satisfied with that, it is open to him to move his amendment; but it cannot be a question of any importance whether he moves it first or second, so long as he moves it. It is a distinct subject from that which we are now at. We are now at the question whether or not the company shall be liable for fires caused by the locomotives, with or without negligence. The hon. gentleman's motion, which touches the question of the removal of rubbish and all sorts of inflammable material, is another question.

Mr. LENNOX. I must take issue with the hon. minister as to whether my amendment is germane to the section or not. I submit that this is the only place where it can properly come in. Section 238 provides that the company shall cause all thistles and other noxious weeds to be cut down, and provides a penalty in case the company fail to do it. I said:

I propose to move the following subsection three of this clause.

I then read the resolution and the minister suggested the postponement. It was then six o'clock, and the committee rose. When the business of the commitee was resumed at eight o'clock, I rose and addressed myself to the question of the motion that was then before the House, on section 238. I spoke at some length, and explained why my amendment was necessary. The Minister of Railways and Canals then said:

Amendments in regard to this matter have been suggested by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Scott) the member for St. John's and Iberville (Mr. Demers) and my hon. friend (Mr. Lennox). If it be agreeable to the committee I would like to name a day, say Thursday next, when I would invite the gentlemen interested in this subject to be present to discuss it. In the meantime if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lennox) permits me, I will study his motion meanwhile and perhaps a good deal of time could be saved.

I agreed with that. I wish to have your ruling on this matter, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. When the hon. gentleman proposed to move to amend section 238, the hon. minister said that was not the proper place for it, that he was preparing a motion or amendment dealing with that question at some future time, and it would then be the proper time for the hon. gentleman to bring up this amendment. I understand that the motion in my hand is the motion to which the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals referred, and therefore this is the proper time for the hon. gentleman to move his amendment, leaving section 238 as it is.

Mr. LENNOX. With all respect to you, Mr. Chairman, you are not dealing with the question which I am submitting. I said that I had made my motion on the 26th of June, but it was put over. That motion has not been discussed, and it is the first motion before the Chair now. I wish your ruling on that question, and I will abide by it.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. If the motion was placed before the House and the House became seized of it, it would be reported in 'Hansard' as having been received and put by me. Your amendment did not become a question before the committee, because it was not read by me.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. member did not hand the motion to the Chairman. After what I said on the subject, he coincided with that, and handed his motion to the gentleman who was assisting me.

Mr. SPROULE. If the motion was read and handed to the Chair, unless the Chair ruled that the motion was out of order as an amendment to this clause, it must be before the House.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What is the necessity of taking up time with that discussion?

Mr. SPROULE. It is the question of a member's right to move an amendment to any clause he desires, and unless the Chairman rules that the amendment is not a proper amendment to that clause, it must be before the committee.

Mr. RUSSELL. I understand, Mr. Chairman, that you have already ruled on the application of the hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox). I am anxious to make a few observations on the main question. I understand that it has been contended that the amendment moved by the hon. member for St. John's and Iberville affects to make some change——

Mr. LENNOX. I rise to a point of order. I do not propose to drop this matter until I get a ruling.

Some hon. MEMBERS. It has been ruled on twice.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. My ruling is that, so far as my memory serves me—and I think it is fairly good—the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Lennox) amendment did not become a question. It was not handed to me. I never read it or presented it to the committee. Therefore, the committee were not seized of it, and consequently it is not a question before the committee.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Chairman, I hope you will excuse me for standing while you stood; I was afraid that if I sat down I should not be able to get the floor again.

Mr. LENNOX. Mr. Chairman——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. LENNOX. If the chairman calls order, I will sit down——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I have already given my ruling that the amendment did not become a question and consequently was not in possession of the committee.

Mr. RUSSELL. I was proceeding to say that there seems to be an impression on the part of some hon. members that the amendment moved by the hon. member for St. John's and Iberville affects to change the principle of the common law. Now, my impression from the little reading I have been able to do on this line, is that the amendment does not depart from the common law at all, but simply reaffirms the principles of the common law of England as it exists to-day, and I do not understand that it differs in this respect from the civil law of old Rome. So, I think we are entirely one, both civilians and common law lawyers, on the point that if a man brings a peculiarly dangerous object on his land the effect of which is to do some damage to his neighbour, he is liable for the damage to his neighbour no matter how prudently he may have behaved, what precautions he may have taken, or how entirely clear of negligence, culpable or otherwise he may prove himself to be. My hon. friend from Colchester will remember the learned article of Sir Frederick Pollock in the 'Law Quarterly Review,' which he afterwards embodied in his work or torts, in which he entered into the whole question largely upon the basis of the case of Fletcher vs. Rylands to show how clearly it was the case that if a man brought an object of a dangerous character upon his land and his act resulted in injury to his neighbour he was liable for the injury so caused. I would like to quote a brief extract from Sir Frederick Pollock's book, and his words show that the decisions have clearly covered the very point now in controversy:

> The decisions of our own time have settled that one who brings fire in dangerous proximity to his neighbour's property, in such ways as by running locomotive engines on a railway without express statutory authority, or bringng a traction engine on the highway, does it at his own peril.

So, if a railway company, instead of being a corporation with a charter from parliament and having express statutory authority to run locomotives upon its railway were an individual and undertook to run locomotives without such statutory authority, and damage resulted to the property of adjacent owners, it would undoubtedly be liable. An individual running a locomotive train across his own property would certainly be liable if damage were caused by sparks from the locomotive, no matter how carefully he ran the locomotive, no matter what screens he used, no matter what devices he employed or what precautions he adopted. So, it is not by virtue of the common law that railway companies are enabled to do this with impunity, it is because they are empowered by statute, and thus they have express authority to do these things. If a statute which incorporates a company gives them power to run locomotives we do not infringe that permission if we say they shall run them under the limitations that would apply to a private individual if he wanted to do the same thing. So the hon. member for St. John's and Iberville is simply asking to apply the common law of England and the civil law which is the same to this proposition of running the engines of these companies. The common law does superadd to this that in spite of the express authority given to railway companies, if they do not run their engines in a careful manner, if they run them in a negligent manner, they are liable, in spite of the express authorization given to them to run the locomotives. The common law it is which gives the right of action, the statute law it is which gives the immunity where it is enjoyed by a railway company. The law, then, will be as we choose to make it, and it is a matter of ethics that we shall make it, a matter of common fair play, and justice. It is open to us to make it what we please, but, of course, it is our duty to make it square with the requirements of justice and the public welfare. Now, it may be argued that when we incorporate railway companies and give them power to run engines and trains, we do so, not for their benefit merely, but for the benefit of the public at large, and it may be said that necessarily, in some instances, in spite of all diligence, in spite of the use of the best appliances on the railway, somebody's property must be injured. It is plausible to argue that in such a case you must simply let the damage lie where it falls. But let us consider this case in its simplest form by taking as an example the Intercolonial. For the benefit of the public generally, the government runs the Intercolonial for hundreds of miles from Montreal to Halifax. Now, it may happen that, no matter what precautions are taken, somebody's property is going to be injured. If some poor man's crop is damaged or his house burned down because of inevitable accident as a result of the operation of the line, ought the damage to be borne by the poor man whose property has been injured or by the general public? I say there cannot be any question about that; the public at large, the government of the Dominion should pay that man for the damage caused and the injury done to him in the prosecution of an object that is being prosecuted for the benefit of the whole country. If that is true in the case of the Intercolonial, I cannot see why we should not pursue the analogy in the case of all companies we incorporate. The public at large should in one shape or other bear the loss. That is to say, the railway companies would have to be responsible. If the railway companies are made responsible, they will assess the cost upon the public in the charges they make, and, in the last analysis, it will be the public that will bear the burden.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I have always been told that the underlying principle of the British constitution is that parliament is supreme. If parliament is supreme when it grants privileges and rights to the railway companies I do not see why it should not equally be supreme in protecting individuals. It has been hinted this afternoon that the amendment now proposed by the hon. member for St. John's and Iberville had the effect of over-riding the common law by the civil law of Quebec. That is a mistake. I have here the report of the Privy Council in the famous case of Roy vs. The Canadian Pacific Railway. Here is the judgment of the Privy Council, as given by Lord Cairns :

This permission, of course, does not authorize the thing to be done negligently or even unnecessarily to cause damage to others. Much was argued by the learned counsel for the respondent as to the peculiar jurisprudence of Quebec ; but in truth there is no such difference between the law of England and the law of Quebec in this respect, as he seemed to suppose. The law of England, equally with the law of the province in question, affirms the maxim 'Sic utere tuo ut alienum non lædas,' but the previous state of the law, whether in Quebec, or France, or England, cannot render inoperative the positive enactment of a statute, and the whole case turns, not upon what was the common law of either country, but what is the true construction of plain words authorizing the doing of the very thing complained of.

Therefore, the judgment of the Privy Council in that case was not to the effect of maintaining the common law, as was explained, but of maintaining the statutory law. Well, if by a statutory law a company enjoys special privileges, why not by another statutory enactment give an individual the same privileges ? In other words, I say that if you give these companies immense powers, if you give them large privileges, I do not see why you should not give the farmer, whose properties are riparian to the property of the company, the rights enjoyed by this same company.

Amendment (Mr. L. P. Demers) agreed to.

Mr. KEMP. I would like to ask the Minister of Railways and Canals if he has drafted the amendment in regard to notifying certain incorporated boards of trade of the changes which might take place from time to time. He promised to do so a few days ago.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I did not undertake to introduce an amendment on the subject. The hon. gentleman mentioned the subject and asked if I would consider it, and I told him I would; but I did not say I would introduce an amendment.

Mr. KEMP. I understood from the minister, and my understanding is confirmed by reading Hansard that he would bring in a modified form of an amendment which I gave him.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If I did make any promise of that kind, I have not carried it out.

Mr. KEMP. It is plain on 'Hansard.' I am afraid he is weakening a little now. If he reads 'Hansard' he will see that he committed himself to bringing in a resolution with regard to that matter. I did not move an amendment because I felt so satisfied that the minister would attend to it himself.

Mr. LENNOX. I move as a subsection to section 238, the following :—

Every company shall also, by a sufficient number of its employees to ensure the safe carrying out of the same, from time to time and as often as occasion therefor arises, and at the season of the year appearing to be the most safe and suitable for carrying out the work, burn or otherwise destroy or dispose of all dry grass, weeds, decayed and decaying matter of every kind, and all waste material, refuse and rubbish, upon their right of way and lands, so as to prevent as far as possible fire accidentally originating upon and spreading from such right of way or lands, to the prejudice of the owners and occupiers of adjoining lands ; and for every day during which the company neglects to comply with the provisions of this subsection it shall incur a penalty of two dollars, to be recovered with costs in any court of competent jurisdiction by any interested person sung therefor. And during such time as the company fails to comply with the provisions of this subsection, such company shall, in addition to the foregoing penalties, be liable for all damage occasioned to the owner or occupier of such lands adjoining the said right of way or lands, to be recovered with costs in any court of competent jurisdiction by the person or persons injured.

This is not a condition that would be burdensome upon the railways. Some railways practically comply with it very fairly at the present time, and it is probably in their interest to do so. The railways in the neighbourhood where I live have been in the habit of burning the useless materials from time to time for their own protection, therefore, so far as they are concerned, I do not think this is absolutely necessary. But that is not the case with reference to every railway company. As the committee will notice, it is not a thing that is at all difficult for railways to comply with, provided they do it at suitable seasons of the year. In general outline, I have used the same words as the minister has adopted in reference to cutting thistles and weeds, in subsection 2 of this section. Since moving the amendments the other day I have added a clause and make a new provision, with reference to recovering damages in case of the fire spreading to the adjoining property through the neglect of the company. It is certainly in harmony with what we have done this afternoon and it is not as stringent, perhaps, as the provision which has been adopted. It merely provides that if the railway company neglect to take steps to prevent fires from originating on their property they shall be liable to the owner or occupier of the land adjoining for the damage occasioned.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I may point out to the hon. gentleman that the amendment to which he refers is no improvement upon the clause which the committee have already adopted because the amendment I moved this afternoon in a very few words covers all the hon. gentleman's motion does :

> The company shall at all times maintain and keep its right of way free and clear of all inflammable matter.

The hon. gentleman's motion differs from this in that it names the classes of inflammable matter that ought to be removed ; beyond that it does not vary. All the matter that the hon. gentleman mentions is inflammable matter or is liable to be inflammable matter at certain seasons of the year, and all such is covered by the section as adopted. The balance of the hon. gentleman's amendment relates to the question of penalty. Well, the penalty clauses of the Bill apply to any infraction of this section, and if there is a continuance of such infraction of the law, from day to day, each day constitutes a distinct offence and subjects the company and its officers to a distinct penalty. I do not see any reason why the hon. gentleman should press the motion. I had his amendment before me and we considered it in connection with other motions that were made on the question of fire protection. The words that I have quoted seem to contain all that we require. It is true that the hon. gentleman points out that section 238 contains very much the same words, and is framed in the same manner as his motion in regard to the failure of the company to remove thistles and noxious weeds. The reason why we put both the offence and the penalty in this section was that it was so framed in the old Act. It had been in the law for many years. In this, however, we are creating a new offence; that is, neglect or refusal to remove all inflammable matter and we have made it applicable to the ordinary penal clauses of the Bill. I think the hon. gentleman's ground is more than covered.

Mr. LENNOX. In reply to what the hon. gentleman has said I may say that under certain circumstances I would probably be disposed to accept the suggestion of the hon. minister. I must say that I do not feel so well disposed to it at this moment as I would on ordinary occasions. I am disposed to allow everybody to speak and to finish what he may have to say and if I had been allowed to state the facts as I understood them, I do not think this difficulty would have arisen. I sat down in deference to the chairman and that hon. gentleman did not see fit to accept what I knew to be a fact.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I did not object to the hon. gentleman speaking.

Mr. LENNOX. I exonerate the hon. minister absolutely and I must say that on more than one occasion the hon. minister has come to the rescue and given us fair-play. I think there is a distinction between what I am aiming at and what the hon. minister has covered by the amendment he has made. I refer to the position I stand in now not for the purpose of intimating that I am going to be cranky because I did not get my own way and going to get back at the hon. gentleman, but I do think if my amendment had been considered at the same time as the hon. minister's, we could have incorporated them very satisfactorily together. The second subsection, of course, deals with something that is growing. The very fact of it being cut occasions a certain amount of dead material which the section I am proposing disposes of, thus preventing the accumulation of dry material that is likely to cause fire. It may possibly be that the very strong language used by the hon. minister in his amendment covers very wide ground. The word 'inflammable' covers probably more than was intended. The word 'inflammable' will embrace railway ties. There is no doubt about their being inflammable. Webster says 'inflammable' means capable of being set on fire, 'capable of being easily enkindled.' 'susceptible of combustion.' Ties are certainly capable of being set on fire, of being easily enkindled and they are susceptible of combustion. If I have any fault to find with the clause just passed I would say that it is probably too broad and is unfair to the railway company. I was not in a position at the time to call attention to my amendment but I do submit that this makes a distinct provision upon an important point in reference to the action of the railway company. There is a distinct pointing out of what the railway companies shall do. This is not an extreme provision and it is going to result in increased safety to the people proceeding along the railway and the people who own the adjoining land. Now, I think that even if we can come to the conclusion that the section as enacted by the hon .minister will cover the ground, yet defining just what the company should do and leading to increased vigilance upon their part, the section which I propose ought to be passed.

Amendment (Mr. Lennox) negatived; yeas, 25; nays, 44.

Section, as amended, agreed to.

Mr. SCOTT moved that the committee revert to the consideration of section 24.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. SCOTT. I did not see the proposition moved by the Minister of Railways and Canals in reference to fire-guards before it was adopted by the committee. That provision empowers the board of railway commissioners to order such fire-guards as are required in any part of the country. I am free to say that the method of legislation suggested by the minister is a better method than the one suggested in the amendment which I moved, at least it is more in harmony with the general character of the Bill, but in order to afford a proper fire-guard it will be necessary for the company to go off its right of way and the board may not feel authorized—unless given specific authority to do so—to order the companies to go off the right of way. A fire-guard was constructed last year conjointly by the North-west government and the railway company, which is a ploughed furrow 300 feet from the centre of the track on either side and eight feet wide. As the board might not think itself empowered to direct the company to go off its right of way, I propose to submit the following amendment :

Provided in respect of fire-guards ordered by the board to be maintained by the company, the company may, subject to any law of a province or the North-west Territories enter upon land not owned by it, and no claim for damages shall be maintained against the company for any act done in compliance with the order of the board ; and provided further that neglect or failure by the company to comply with any such order shall be an offence under the Act punishable, on summary conviction, by a fine not exceeding one thousand dollars ($1,000).

It may be that the minister is not able to say at the present moment whether he can adopt this suggestion, but as the Bill is to be reprinted and brought before the committee again he might consider it in the meantime.

Mr. OSLER. My recollection is that for the past year or two the territorial government has been making these fire-guards under an arrangement with the railways whereby the railways paid so much per mile. It would be rather a pity if an agreement of that sort should be interfered with by this Bill.

Mr. SCOTT. There is an existing arrangement between the North-west government and the company, but the arrangement is not satisfactory to the government, and the government has given notice to the company that the arrangement will terminate at the end of this year.

Mr. OSLER. It might perhaps be possible to modify that arrangement. It seems to me that it would be wise to leave it open, that such an arrangement can be made. It would I think be a satisfactory solution to the difficulty.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am quite unable to express any opinion upon the amendment of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Scott) at the present time. It is certainly novel in that it proposes to authorize the taking of land of other people without compensation. The Bill will be reprinted and the hon. gentleman (Mr. Scott) will have an opportunity of asking the committee to consider his amendment.

Mr. DAVIS moved that the committee revert to the consideration of clause 51.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS. I have an amendment to move to this clause with respect to the granting of charters to the railway. My amendment is as follows :

Parties applying for railway charters shall apply in writing to the board, and their application shall contain full particulars as to the route to be traversed by the road ; also as to powers requested, and all other information in connection with the same. The applicant shall pay to the board such sum of money as the board shall deem sufficient to make an investigation. The board shall send a competent person to investigate and report to the board. Such report shall contain a description of the country through which the road is supposed to run, as to the approximate cost of the road, the other charters granted in said territory, and all other information in connection with the proposition. Said report shall be forwarded to the Minister of Railways who shall have the same printed and placed in the hands of the members of the railway committee when the Bill comes up for consideration.

It is generally agreed that something has to be done in the near future in connection with the granting of railway charters by this House. I think that has been demonstrated during this session. There are only two ways open to us, either to adopt the American system and make the charters as free as air or to adopt some such system as I propose. A party comes with a Bill before the Railway Committee, hangs up a map with a line or two on it, and gives the committee very little information. The members have to take the word of the promoter as to the character of the country through which the road is to run, its approximate cost, and everything else about it. The promoters sometimes ask bonding powers up to $20,000 a mile, and when some member of the committee asks why they wish such large bonding powers, their reply is that the country is rocky, or something of that kind. In fact, there is no information before the committee to enable the members intelligently to discuss the Bill. Under the provision I propose, parties wishing to get a railway charter have to show their bona fides, in the first place, by putting up a sum of money in the hands of the railway commission to pay the cost of an investigation. The railway commission will send out an engineer to investigate whether there is any necessity for the road. If he finds that there is no necessity for it, he will so report. If he finds that there is, he will report upon the character of the country, the approximate cost of the road, whether there is any other charter for that part of the country, and whether the proposed charter is likely to interfere with vested rights. If that were done, and the report were handed to the minister and printed and placed in the hands of members when any application for a charter comes before the Railway Committee, it would enable the members to deal intelligently with the application. It would be a great improvement on the present condition of things. We are told that there is a great deal of charter-mongering going on. This would put a stop to that, because parties applying for charters would have to put up a sum of money with the railway commissioners before they could make an application at all. When parties come to this House and ask for franchises to build railroads all over the country, the government and the members of this House should know exactly what to say to those people. If some one goes to a loan company and makes an application for a loan of a sum of money, the company does not hand out the money without sending its inspector to see what the property on which the loan is to be made is like. We should be in the same position when an application is made for a railway charter. We should know everything in regard to the character of the country and in regard to the proposed railway. If the minister and the House will accept this amendment, it will be a big improvement on the old system.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. A motion must first be made that liberty be granted for the amendment to be considered.

Mr. DAVIS. I will leave this motion in the hands of the minister for his consideration, and we can take it up later on.

Motion of Mr. Davis to reconsider section 224 negatived.

Mr. HENDERSON. As the motion of the hon. member has been made, I think it might as well be considered now. I was just going to say that this looks like a case of Satan reproving sin. If there is an offender in the House along the line of the amendment which the hon. gentleman has moved, it is the hon. gentleman himself.

Mr. SCOTT. He repents.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am glad to know that he has repented. I will simply ask that when this matter comes before the committee again, the same provision shall be made to apply to all applications for extensions of time. It seems to me that the hon. member, having exploited the whole North-west and secured charters north, south, east and west, now wants to cut out everybody else, and be the sole possessor of that great lone land. No doubt he is very wise, but I think this House should guard the interests of others; and when he comes to ask for extensions of time for those numerous charters which he has already obtained, I hope the committee will see that exactly the same information is provided by him with respect to them as is to be provided in the case of new charters.

Mr. SPROULE. I rise to a point of order. I want to know if this motion is before the House. It was read by the hon. gentleman who moved it, but was not read from the Chair, and yet we go on and debate it.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. That is not the question that is being debated. The hon. gentleman made a motion to reconsider section 224, and, speaking on that motion, he read a proposed amendment; but it was not placed in my hands, and consequently it did not come in.

Mr. SPROULE. I thought he was debating the motion he read, and giving reasons why we should adopt either that or the American system.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. He was giving reasons, I understand, why the committee should reconsider section 224.

Mr. INGRAM. As I understand it, there is nothing before the Chair at this moment.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I declared the amendment lost which the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis) proposed, namely, to return to section 224.

Mr. SPROULE. What became of the notice of the amendment of the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson).

Mr. HENDERSON. I will attend to that amendment when the time comes up.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. A motion made by an hon. gentleman is not before the committee until it is placed in my hands and read by me. After it is read by me, the ownership is taken out of the hands of the hon. member, and it becomes the property of the committee, and the mover has no power to withdraw it afterwards except by leave of the committee. Until an amendment is read by me, it is the same as an ordinary piece of paper, whether put in my hands or not.

Mr. INGRAM. Last night, Mr. Chairman, I placed a motion in your hands, which you read to the House. The hon. minister was kind enough to allow the matter to stand over, and I propose taking it up now if he has no objection. The amendment I moved last night was to section 211. Today, however, a conference was held, at which the Postmaster General, the Minister of Labour, and Mr. Hall, who represents the railway men of Canada, and myself assisted. The hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Smith) was not able to attend. This conference decided upon an amendment to section 211, which is largely on the lines of that introduced by the hon. member for East York some years ago. So far as I am personally concerned, I am willing to withdraw the amendment I moved last night in order that some hon. gentleman on the government side may introduce the amendment agreed upon by this conference to-day. That amendment will meet the views of the railway employees of Canada and I hope the hon. minister will see his way to accept it, and if so, his course of action will be highly appreciated by the railway men of Canada as also will that of this House in adopting it. I beg leave, therefore, to move for leave to withdraw the amendment that I made last night.

Amendment withdrawn.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (Essex). I beg to move that the following section be added to section 211 :—

All box freight cars built in Canada, for use on Canadian railways, after the passing of this Act, shall be provided with the following attachments for the security of railway employees, viz :—

(a.) outside ladders, on two of the diagonally opposite ends and sides of each car, projecting below the frame of the car, with one step or rung of the ladder below the frame, the ladders being placed close to the ends and sides to which they are attached ;

(b.) hand grips placed anglewise over the ladders of each box car and so arranged as to assist persons in climbing on the roof by means of the ladder ;

All cars built prior to the passing of this Act shall be fitted with such attachments on or before the 31st of December, 1905 ; provided, that if there should, at any time, be any other improved side attachment which, in the opinion of the board, is better calculated to promote the safety of the train hands, then the board may require any of such cars not already fitted with the side attachments first mentioned to be fitted with said improved attachment.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This will dispose of all the sections of the Bill. The understanding is that the Bill as amended is to be reprinted, and the committee will be asked to sit again to complete its work. I cannot say that it is proposed to revise the sections again, but if anything has escaped attention, we will be prepared to give reasonable opportunity to bring the matter up, I would not encourage the idea of extensive revision, and I hope that hon. members will not think it necessary, for we know how impossible it is to reach finality in legislation of this kind. Before asking the committee to close its labours for the present, I wish personally to convey to hon. members on both sides my appreciation of the manner in which they have endeavoured to assist me in the treatment of this Bill in committee. I have no reason to complain of the manner in which the various clauses have been criticised. I think there has been a fair and honest disposition on the part of hon. gentlemen on both sides to give us the benefit of their best judgment on the Bill and make it as perfect as possible. I move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Progress reported.

SUPPLY.

House again in Committee of Supply.

Indians—Ontario and Quebec—further amount required for relief and medical attendance, $2,500.

Mr. OSLER. About a month ago a gentleman came here from England, who was connected, I think, with the oldest society in existence having relations to the Indians on this North American continent, a society that was chartered in Cromwell's time. I was surprised to find how deep an interest they took in the Indians of this country. That gentleman came to Ottawa and called on the department, and was delighted with the reception he received. He came to Toronto with me, and I introduced him to Mr. Boyle and others interested in Indian matters. He went to Brantford and stayed there a week, studying the condition of the Indians on the Brantford reserve. He wrote me a note regretting that he was not able to come here on his return home after his visit, but saying that he was exceedingly satisfied and very much pleased with the condition of the Indians and with the care they received. But there was one point to which he took objection, and that is a point I brought up here two or three years ago at the request of a gentleman who takes great interest in them, Mr. Hamilton, of Toronto. This gentleman from England said he found on the reserve that the medical man lived miles away, that the medical man appointed a substitute who was also away from the reserve, and the substitute appointed a substitute for himself, and this latter was the only man living on the reserve to whom the Indians could go in case of sickness. He thought that was a very serious matter, and constituted a grave defect in the administration of Indian affairs, as regards that particular reserve.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I remember that the hon. gentleman brought this matter to my attention. I am not able at present to say that I have a very distinct recollection of the details which he gave me. But I can tell him now that I will give the matter immediate attention.

Mr. OSLER. This gentleman who came here to visit the Indians says that the Indians felt keenly that they were being neglected. With this exception, he expressed the very highest approval of the administration so far as he observed it. The chief medical man, I understand, is Dr. Secord. Would the minister say what salary he gets, and what salary is paid to his deputies ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The salary paid Dr. Secord is $2,800. He arranges for his assistants himself, and pays them out of his own salary.

Mr. OSLER. Surely that is a very unwise method. If he appoints his own assistants it may be taken for granted that they are not highly paid men. As the chief medical officer does not live on the reserve but lives twelve miles away, it is necessary that there should be an assistant. I do not think it is right that the doctor should have the appointment of his assistant when he has to pay him out of his own salary.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The difficulty mentioned by my hon. friend is not one that can be arranged very easily. It is difficult to get a medical man of good standing and ability to take up Indian work, and live upon the reserve and devote himself to it. The arrangement is the result of the experience of the department in past years, but I admit it is open to objection. I can promise the hon. member that I will see if a better arrangement can be made.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the assistant not live upon the reserve ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Under the arrangement he is required to live upon the reserve.

Mr. SPROULE. But I understand that he does not live on the reserve. I hold that a medical man twelve miles away cannot take proper care of the Indians in case of sickness, and the case is still worse when the assistant is away. This is not a thing that can be farmed out with good results, because the party who hires the assistant has in all probability a very large rake-off. Therefore, the assistant will do his work in a perfunctory manner, and as little of it as possible.

Mr. LENNOX. The minister forgot to tell us whether these assistants are duly qualified practitioners.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The assistant is a qualified practitioner.

Mr. LENNOX. Does the hon. minister think it is acting with prudence as regards these people to leave it in such a position that the medical officer draws a salary of $2,800 a year ? He farms it out to a regular practitioner who does not permanently reside upon the reserve and that gentleman has the right to send students to look after the Indians and take his place. It comes down to this that we are paying $2,800 a year, probably not too much for this service, which in the end is performed by students.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The hon. gentleman is under a misapprehension in regard to the payment of the salary. The payment is made out of the Indian fund and with the consent of the band. The arrangement is approved by the band that pays the money. The department has not received any complaints from the Indians. Notwithstanding that, I quite admit that it is an arrangement that requires to be looked into and fully considered.

Mr. OSLER. I spoke from the statement that this gentleman made to me after he had been nearly a week on the reserve. The complaints came directly from the Indians to him. This gentleman, Mr. Wigram, was nearly a week on the reserve observing for himself. He was exceedingly pleased with everything in connection with the band and the one complaint of the Indians was that they were neglected in their medical attendance. He found that the doctor who is in charge does not live upon the reserve. His deputy was away for an indefinite period and his deputy had appointed a deputy to act for him while he was away. That deputy may have been a student, and if he was a student he probably would be appointed without pay. While it is quite true that Dr. Secord draws money that may come from the Indian fund, I do not think that is a reason why the money should not be properly administered. I am glad that the hon. minister says that he will take the matter up. I think he will find that the case is as I have stated, and that the condition of the medical service on the reserve is not satisfactory.

Mr. LENNOX. I do not want the hon. minister to understand me as complaining about the amount. I merely suggested that the person who is performing the service is not probably receiving the money, and therefore, the service would not be performed so well. Even if the government were directly paying the money, if more money were required I would not have any complaint to make at all.

Mr. SPROULE. I would regard the plan as a very bad one for more reasons than one. The first reason is that it is very improper for a medical man to farm out work of that kind, and money spent in that way is not wisely spent. The second is that the poor Indian is paying out of this fund a consideration for proper medical attendance which he is not getting. It is said that the assistant resides on the reserve but the complaint of the Indians was that the assistant was away for several weeks and that he sent a substitute in his place. Who is the substitute ? He is likely to be a student of one or two years standing, who takes this opportunity of acquiring some knowledge of practice, because he has no legal right to practice except by going to see a patient under some medical man and that medical man could not charge for that service if the patient disputed the bill. But he is not in the proper sense a practitioner and the Indian is obliged to depend upon the service of a student, who perhaps has no proper knowledge of his profession at all. Now, the original practitioner receives a large amount of money out of the Indian fund. He gets $2,800 a year, when in reality the Indian may not have $100 worth of service from the medical branch, because the service of a student of one or two years standing would not be regarded amongst civilized and intelligent people in any portion of this country as a proper practice of the profession, nor would it be regarded as a fulfilment of a contract to provide medical attendance on a railway or a public work.

Mr. BENNETT. Who is the agent at the St. Peters' reserve in Manitoba ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The Rev. John Semmens.

Mr. BENNETT. What is his age ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I have not the record just at hand, but he is a man of fifty-two or fifty-three.

Mr. BENNETT. Does he live on the reserve, or how far away from it ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. His instructions are that he has to live on the reserve. I believe he does so.

Mr. BENNETT. Is there a general controller or commissioner who has supervision of the agents like this gentleman, Mr. Bell, in that district ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The general inspector of the district is Mr. S. J. Jackson, of Stonewall.

Mr. BENNETT. How old is he ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. About fifty-five.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not think that we have properly finished the subject. Since it has been brought to the attention of the hon. minister is he not prepared to say that he will discontinue a system so unjust and improper, because, it seems to me as a medical man, that it is a very great injustice to the Indians.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The question of medical attendance upon Indians is always a difficult question. You never can satisfy Indians that they are being properly attended to medically. The more medical attendance that is provided the more they want. Their demands grow in proportion to the supply, and it is always a very difficult matter to satisfy Indians upon that particular question. As hon. gentlemen can see the tendency is towards growth in the expenditure for medical attendance. It is difficult to get a good practitioner to reside on the reserve and devote himself to it. I am not satisfied that the arrangement upon the reserve is not a fairly good one ; at the same time I am quite satisfied after all that has been said that this is a subject for careful consideration. I am satisfied that there is an objection to the system of allowing a physician to employ his own agent and to fix the remuneration. I appreciate fully the force of what hon. gentlemen have said and I will look into the matter and see if any improvement can be made.

Mr. OSLER. Does the hon. minister think that if he finds this case as I have stated it he might give a promise that the pay of the physician shall be made through the government and not through the head man who lives twelve or fifteen miles away from the reserve ? You can never have a system satisfactory to the Indians until that is done. There is no consideration required on that point at all.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. My hon. friend will hardly ask me to make a positive promise that a change will be made until I know it can be carried out.

Mr. OSLER. Three years ago the complaint was made and the minister promised that he would look into it. To-night that complaint is made stronger than ever. It is so manifest that the system is wrong that it requires no considration at all.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I went over the whole matter very carefully with the medical gentleman at the time and no complaint has been made since. I was under the impression that everything was satisfactory.

Mr. OSLER. Such a system could not be satisfactory.

Mr. SPROULE. The Indians are paying sufficient money to have a qualified medical man to attend them. Two thousand eight hundred dollars a year is a very good salary for that kind of practice. The system of farming out a practice is bad, because the person who is employed usually gets a small salary and is liable to do his work in a perfunctory manner. No medical man should be allowed to attend the Indians unless he is duly certified to practice in any part of the country. The medical man should be a lawfully qualified practitioner and not a student who perhaps may have little knowledge of his profession. I admit that it is the experience of medical men that it is hard to please the Indians and that sometimes they think they are sick when they are not sick at all, but an intelligent practitioner can easily discover that and should tell the Indian that he is not sick if such be the case. I am told that they are sometimes put off with a dose of salts, which if it does not do them any good will not do them any harm, but even that is not a good system. A medical man who thoroughly knows his profession ought to have dignity and confidence enough in himself to tell the Indian that he does not require medicine if such be the case. If you allow such a system to continue on the Indian reserves you are liable to get quacks or charlatans when the Indians are paying enough money to get a qualified practitioner. The minister must see that the system is bad and he should at once make a change.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Shall the item be adopted.

Mr. SPROULE. No. If the minister does not give us an answer we must insist on knowing what he is going to do before the item is passed. The minister might as well understand early as late that we will not be treated as if we had no rights in this House.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The hon. gentleman knows that he cannot expect me to give a positive promise now. I can tell him that I will recommend such a change as will seem to me to be desirable in the line of a complete and satisfactory medical attendance. There are a great many Indian reserves in Canada and I cannot be expected to have intimate knowledge of the details of what is going on in each reserve. The matter was gone into carefully some years ago and inasmuch as the inspector of the Indian agencies has not called my attention to any complaints since that time, it was reasonable to expect that the matters were then placed on a satisfactory basis. I am informed that the department has no reason to suppose that the medical service has been inefficient. There was an outbreak of small-pox in that reserve last year and I am informed that it was handled with great skill and was stamped out in a very short time. I will look into the matter carefully and I will make the best arrangement I can.

Mr. SPROULE. Is it not reasonable to expect that the minister will say that the medical attendants on these reserves shall be properly qualified practitioners. There is no family in this country who is paying for a doctor and who would be treated by physicians who are not duly qualified. The minister ought at least to be prepared to say that he will supply properly qualified physicians to these Indians. As to whether he should live on the reserve or off it, it seems to me that it does not require very great intelligence to discern how difficult it would be for a medical man living twelve miles from the reserve to do justice to the Indians. It would put the Indians to a great deal of inconvenience in cases of emergency, or at certain seasons of the year when the roads are bad; whereas a medical man living on the reserve would be available at an hour's notice. I think it is not too much to ask the hon. gentleman to see that, as the Indian fund provides sufficient to give the Indians a properly qualified practitioner, they should have one.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. If I gave the promise the hon. gentleman asks, it might involve the prohibition of medical students going on the reserve at all to assist in attending to the Indians, and I do not know that that would be a good thing. I may say to my hon. friend that the medical practitioner on the reserve has to be appointed with the consent of the council of the band, which is composed of men of a considerable degree of intelligence, who know what should be done in a case of that kind. To make the change proposed might involve bringing some of the Indians down here to consult with them. I would rather put myself in the position of not making the promise than to make it, and not be able to carry it out. All I can say is that I will do the best I can, both for the Indians and with the fund.

Mr. SPROULE. I would submit to the hon. minister this question in his own case; if he were sending for a medical man to whom he was paying a good fee for his services, and some student who might not have studied for two years were sent to him, would he be satisfied to pay for the services of that student as much as he would for the services of a well qualified medical man? The same rule ought to apply to the Indians who are paying out of their fund the full compensation for the attendance of a well qualified medical man. We are told that even the assistant was not on the reserve for a week, but sent another to do his work, and that is what we complain of. So far as we know, there is no properly qualified medical man to do the work. If the work must be farmed out, it should at least be given to a professional man who understands his business, because full compensation is being paid for the attendance of such a man.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Is this man allowed also to attend to other practice in Brantford?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Does not the hon. minister think that is unfair to the other practitioners in the city of Brantford? Does he not think that it is a reasonable request that this man, who is paid $2,800 a year for attending the Indians, should not be allowed to interfere with the practice of the other physicians in the city of Brantford? If this were done, this man would be able to give to the Indians the proper attendance they require. Will the minister promise that he will see that this physician shall not be permitted to engage in other practice than among the Indians ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I am afraid I cannot promise that. As to the effect on the other physicians in the city of Brantford, all I can say is that I have never looked at the matter from that standpoint. I have been administering the affairs of the department for the benefit of the Indians. I do not know that it is a serious matter to the other physicians in the city of Brantford that he gets a salary. I have never heard a complaint raised on their behalf until my hon. friend has raised it to-night. I have discussed this subject quite frequently with my hon. friend from South Brant (Mr. Heyd), who I am glad to see here, and who is perhaps more familiar with the reserve than any one else, and I have never heard that point raised in my conversations with him. In nine cases out of ten, the Indian physicians will find that the work they do for the Indians is a small part of their practice. In some places it is a small part, and in other places a large part; but I doubt very much if it is practicable to carry out the principle which the hon. gentleman suggests.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I do not mean that it should apply to all the physicians attending Indians. In cases where the salary is very small, it would hardly be expected; but in a case like this, where the medical man is receiving a salary of $2,800 a year, I think the minister might fairly apply the principle; because there is no doubt that this man has a decided advantage over the other physicians practicing in Brantford. When was he appointed to this position ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The exact date is not to hand at present, but it was about six years ago.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Was he appointed at the same salary, or has it been increased since ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The same salary.

Mr. REID (Grenville). In this case the hon. minister is deviating from another principle that was adopted by hon. gentlemen opposite not only when in opposition, but since the present government came into power. I know that when hon. gentlemen opposite were in opposition, they objected to any physician practicing who held a government appointment. Let me cite the instance of the physicians in the Kingston penitentiary. When that appointment was given to Dr. Phelan, he had to give up his practice, and although he was one of the leading physicians in Kingston he accepted a position at $1,800 a year, and gave up his other practice. Why, therefore, is this physician in Brantford allowed to practice in opposition to the other physicians in that town ? I ask that he be put into the same position as other physicians who have been given government appointments, and be compelled to give up his other practice.

Mr. HEYD. I was not present when this discussion began and do not know just what has been said, but I can plead a legitimate excuse because I was attending the redistribution committee, giving some testimony with regard to a matter of considerable importance to myself. As I have personal knowledge of the facts, I would ask permission of the House to explain this matter. I can do so all the more strenuously because I believe that the present conditions, under which our Indian friends are supplied with doctors, are the best that can be devised. I have no personal interest at stake, and am simply influenced by my regard for the welfare of the Indians. There is one objection to having the Indian physician a resident on the reserve. You cannot get a first-class man to go there with his family, because there is no social intercourse for his wife and no suitable schools for his children. For these reasons a first-class man will not go and live there for the salary, although it appears high to some hon. gentlemen opposite. You must have a married man to begin with. That is absolutely necessary on the reserve. In order that these four thousand Indians should be provided with proper medical attendance, you must have a first-class man, a married man, who is conscientious and whose moral character is beyond reproach. In order that these people should be properly treated, that doctor must have a qualified assistant, who will look after the ordinary cases of disease while he attends to the most serious ones. The present physician, Dr. Secord, has a qualified assistant, who is also a married man and who lives on the reserve constantly and is, therefore, in close touch with the people.

Mr. BENNETT. What is his name ?

Mr. HEYD. He is a son of the gentleman who represents Haldimand in the local legislature. His name is Holmes. He is a qualified doctor and is constantly on the reserve. He was a student who had just passed and was about qualifying for his degree, when he was given this position by Dr. Secord. There is, therefore, not much left out of his government salary, after Dr. Secord pays this young man who is his assistant. The reserve covers some sixty-four square miles, and the physician's practice requires some rough driving, which an ordinary physician has not the slightest conception of. I do not think that the Indians could have a better doctor than Dr. Secord. All the serious cases he looks after himself personally, and is recognized as eminently well qualified to do so, and he has a qualified man to look after the others. Dr. Secord drives to the reserve, some four or five times a week, stays there over night, and looks after the more serious cases, while his assistant, who is a qualified physician, looks after the others. I do not know how the Indians could be better served. I can testify to the conscientious way in which the physicians discharge their duty. If you were to limit Dr. Secord to his practice on the reserve, he would not take the position nor would any other physician of his standing, because there would not be enough money in it left, after paying for the three horses which he requires in order to attend properly to the work. Our Indians are being better served by their physicians to-day than they were ever before. Their hygienic condition is being constantly improved under the wise supervision of Dr. Secord and his assistant, and any charges made against him have been simply evolved out of political consideration.

Mr. BENNETT. He is quite a politician.

Mr. HEYD. He was until he was appointed, but since then he does not meddle with politics ; and I can say, to the credit of all the civil servants in Brantford, that they are absolutely loyal to the men who pay them, and leave politics alone. The best proof of that is the fact that when this government assumed office, the civil servants were all Conservatives in the town of Brantford, and not one of them has been removed.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The hon. gentleman states that the reason why it was necessary to employ Dr. Secord is because it required an upright and honourable man to fill the position, and it was impossible to get a man of that kind to live on the reserve.

Mr. HEYD. I did not say that.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The hon. gentleman said it would be impossible to get a first-class practitioner and an upright, honourable man to live on the reserve. I think that that is a very unfair reflection on Dr. Holmes, who is living on the reserve and who is a married man. Surely it is hardly fair that the hon. gentleman should thus reflect on the character of Dr. Holmes, who is living there with his family. If this Dr. Holmes is qualified to practice on the reserve, and if he be an upright and honourable man and is willing to live on the reserve, he should get the salary for doing the work; and if so, I am sure he would not try to do any outside practice.

Mr. HEYD. I am sure that Dr. Holmes would not think that I have reflected on his character at all. I have said that he is well qualified. He is still a young man and married, and when the time comes, when Dr. Secord will give up the position as a matter of convenience to himself, I shall be most happy, if it should be in my power, to recommend Dr. Holmes for the position. Under the present conditions, we have the benefit of the services of Dr. Holmes and in addition those of Dr. Secord, who is a physician of a great many years' experience. What particular benefit would accrue by letting Dr. Secord go, and naming Dr. Holmes in his place, when we now have them both at the same money? I do not think that the Indians would prefer that, and that would not effect any saving to the country. We have all that Dr. Holmes can give, and the two do not cost any more than if Dr. Holmes were appointed and he had it all to himself. I am not saying anything against Dr. Holmes, but he has not had the experience of Dr. Secord, who is one of the most experienced physicians in Brantford. The Doctors in Brantford do not object to the arrangement. I would recommend the government to leave things as they are.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The hon. member for South Brant (Mr. Heyd) says the physicians in Brantford do not object to this arrangement. He knows very well that if he recommended Dr. Secord for the position, as no doubt he did, it would be useless for any physician in Brantford to object to Dr. Secord, because his objection would be taken no notice of. The hon. minister states that it is impossible to get a qualified practitioner to live among the Indians and attend to them. And now the hon. member for South Brant tells us that there is a qualified practitioner living among the Indians and attending to them, and doing the work well. This gentleman is doing all the work, but he has to give up a certain amount of his salary to Dr. Secord, for he knows that if he did not do so he could not hold the position. So long as Dr. Secord wishes to take the bonus, the other man must pay it and say nothing, or he will lose the position. The other physicians of Brantford, whether Liberals or Conservatives, know that it would be useless to enter any protest. It is the duty of the hon. member for South Brant to protect the other physicians in Brantford instead of trying to give this one man a bonus by farming out this position. Where the government pay a sufficient salary for the physician to do this work, that salary should go to the man who is doing the work, and another physician should not take a bonus from the man who actually does the work. It is quite true that there might be serious cases in which a consultation would be required. In that case, the doctor on the reserve could call in Dr. Secord or any other person he wished, and pay him a fee out of his salary. But I think it is most unfair that the man who is doing the work should only receive a small portion of the salary. I am not reflecting on Dr. Secord ; I do not know that gentleman at all. I have no doubt that he is the best physician in Brantford. But what I object to is his being allowed to hold this position and farming it out in this way, thus getting a bonus to compete against other doctors in his city. The government themselves have set a precedent in the case of Dr. Phelan, who was appointed physician to the Kingston penitentiary. He is not allowed to practice. Why then, should this physician be allowed to practice outside of the position he has. I do not think it is unfair to ask that the position should be given to some one, Dr. Secord or any other, I have no objection to Dr. Secord—with the understanding that he is to live on the reserve as Dr. Holmes does, and attend to the Indians.

Mr. HEYD. It is a curious thing that the one who lives in Brantford, knows the doctors in the city, knows the circumstances of the case, knows exactly the political effect upon himself if he offends the doctors of that city, or if he does not do the best thing in the interest of the citizens and the Indians, is to be instructed by a gentleman who lives two hundred miles away, who knows nothing of the conditions, and represents no grievance. If the doctors do not like the arrangement I am pretty sure to hear of it; if the Indians do not like it, they will not keep that fact to themselves; and if the gentleman on the reserve does not like it I am sure he will very soon tell me so. But there is no dissatisfaction. The man on the reserve is getting the wages to be given him by Dr. Secord, which is a large portion of the salary. If he got the appointment he would have to employ some one to relieve him of a certain portion of the labour. The Indians have the advice and constant supervision of one of the ablest and most experienced physicians in Brantford, the constant attendance of Dr. Holmes, the attendance at times of students and a great deal of medicine, all for $2,800.

Mr. OSLER. The hon. member for South Brant was not present when I brought this matter up. I explained that a gentleman of high position in England, Mr. Wigram, who is much interested in Indian affairs, came with a letter to me. I tried to find the hon. member for South Brant here, as I told Mr. Wigram that that hon. gentleman would put him on the track of getting the information he wanted. Mr. Wigram went to Brantford and spent some days on the reserve. One of his objects was to find out whether the funds of the Indians were being wasted or not. He afterwards wrote me from New York, expressing regret that he could not come back this way and telling me that he was highly pleased with everything he saw on the reserve except one point which he thought ought to be remedied. He found that the doctor lived miles away, that the doctor appointed a substitute, but that substitute was not then on the reserve and was away for an indefinite period, and had in turn appointed a substitute. This was one thing that caused dissatisfaction among the Indians. And it appears to me quite clear that this is a thing that ought to be remedied. I realize that it might be difficult to get the consulting physician to live upon the reserve. But I do contend that the pay of the man who lives upon the reserve should be made direct from the Indian Department and not from a local doctor. The natural tendency of a doctor in such a case would be to get the service done as cheaply as possible. The Minister of the Interior said it was impossible to get a qualified man to live on the reserve. I agreed with him that it was a difficult thing. But the member for Brantford (Mr. Heyd) says there is a most respectable and well qualified man living on the reserve with his family. That does away with the only answer the minister could give.

Mr. HEYD. Dr. Holmes is a young physician who has not had the necessary experience to take supervision over a large reserve like that. I do not know what he gets. He gets the house he lives in, and I think he gets $1,200 or 1,500 a year. I do not think there is more than $1,000 left for Dr. Secord.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Will the minister say that he will give Dr. Holmes the position, or else ask Dr. Secord to live on the reserve ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. In the first place I did not say that there was not a qualified practitioner on the reserve. I said that the assistant who lived on the reserve was a qualified practitioner. I have stated also at the beginning of the discussion, that it was difficult to get a qualified man to live on the reserve, and my hon. friend from Brantford has explained why, and he has fuller knowledge of the matter than I have. I am not prepared to say that I will make any change in the arrangement in that respect, but I will look into the matter and see if any improvement can be made.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Who was the physician previous to Dr. Secord ?

Mr. HEYD. Dr. Langrel was appointed by the late government. He discharged the duties for a good many years, until finally he got tired and resigned and went to Hamilton to live. He left the reserve in charge of his two sons, young men who had not had much experience. The present government appointed Dr. Secord, who was appointed before I entered the House.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Were these two young men qualified practitioners when they were on the reserve ?

Mr. HEYD. They had no regular status there, they were simply discharging the work of their father who had left the reserve. Dr. Secord employed several gentlemen to assist him until finally he got Dr. Holmes, who has had much experience, who is respectable and qualified, and in a few years will be able to take charge of the 4,000 people, when he also will have to employ an assistant. By that time very likely Dr. Secord will have resigned the job, and I shall be happy to recommend Dr. Holmes.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I see in addition to Dr. Secord's salary that he gets $2,055 for extras.

Mr. HEYD. No, $300 for special medicine. He supplies all the drugs for the whole of that reserve. When they want castor oil to grease their wagons they generally go to the doctor and get it. These Indians want expensive drugs, they want quinine. The government allows $300 for medical supplies, and they cost about $600.

Mr. BENNETT. On the one side there seems to be a complaint from the Indians as voiced through the gentleman referred to by the hon. gentleman from West Toronto.

Mr. HEYD. The Indians are not complaining.

Mr. BENNETT. But the hon. member from West Toronto gave the testimony of a gentleman saying they were complaining.

Mr. HEYD. You must bear in mind the conditions under which he visited the reserve and the short time he was there. At present there is very little sickness on the reserve, as there seldom is in the summer time.

Mr. BENNETT. The Indians complain that Dr. Secord, who receives a large salary, farms out the work to another gentleman, to Dr. Holmes, but the trouble does not end there, because Dr. Holmes won't stay on the reserve, and he farms out the work to another gentleman, who, when he gets weary, goes over to Brantford, and the consequence is that the Indians are left without any physician. Now on referring to the Auditor General's Report, I find that this Dr. L. Secord, when he does not want to go down to the reserve to attend to the duties for which he is paid $2,800, he sends down Dr. E. R. Secord, his partner, I suppose.

Mr. HEYD. That is his son who had just graduated from McGill College.

Mr. BENNETT. And living at home with his father.

Mr. HEYD. And who took five first class scholarships. He was employed by the Indian Department to go down and stamp out a small-pox epidemic on the reserve. The city of Brantford employed him to do the same thing in Brantford. As Dr. Secord could not expose himself to the contagion of small-pox and visit the rest of the Indians he hired his son to do that, and he stamped out the small-pox on the reserve in about four weeks.

Mr. OSLER. I thought the objection that had been made by the hon. gentleman to the other doctor was that he was a young man and now he is backing up the employment of a young man without experience.

Mr. HEYD. Could you expect the doctor to expose himself to small-pox and then look after the other Indians on the reserve ?

Mr. OSLER. The hon. gentleman objected that Dr. Secord's substitute was a young man living on the reserve and that he had no experience.

Mr. HEYD. Dr. Secord could not attend to the small-pox patients and look after the other Indians as well.

Mr. OSLER. I am not objecting to that. This is a question of experience. An epidemic of small-pox is a very serious thing, but while the hon. gentleman says that it is wise and defensible to send a man just fresh from McGill who has taken half a dozen medals and scholarships and who is certainly a gentleman of not much experience to stamp out an epidemic of small-pox he objects to the other young man because of the lack of experience.

Mr. HEYD. The best evidence of his ability is that he cured all the people of small-pox and stamped the disease out of the reserve.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Did he do that in four weeks ?

Mr. HEYD. In about four weeks. There were about twenty Indians ill with small-pox, they were all isolated and had to be taken care of in tents, they were all cured and the small-pox was stamped out of the reserve. It is more difficult to treat Indians in cases of this kind than whites, because the Indians are less careful.

Mr. BENNETT. I think it is rather hard on the funds of this Indian tribe that they should be encroached upon by the rapacity of this Secord family. First, there is Dr. Secord, sr., with $2,800 a year and $300 extra. He does not like to go down to the reserve because there is a contagious disease there, and so he farms it out to Dr. Secord, jr., and the young man picks up no less a sum than $810 for his services. I suppose he was at home enjoying a holiday. It turned out at the expense of the Indians to be a very profitable one to him. But, it also turned out that they had to have another gentleman to assist him and Dr. Weir is called in. He is paid $75. Then Dr. Bryans is called in from Toronto, and he is paid $20. Young Dr. Secord gets $85 to pay his board on the reserve. Then he travels back and forward between the reserve and the city of Brantford where he has another job on hand, as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Heyd) tells us, and he is allowed $36.50 for livery hire. Then, there is travel of agent and physician, $39.15; livery hire for Dr. Weir, $21; interpreter for physician, $29; horse-hire and livery, $51.25, and there are other sums. It does seem a farce. Here is a gentleman paid $2,800 to act as physician to the reserve, and as these men have no votes and can only remonstrate with the department, what do the department do ? They simply graft the Secord family and the rest of these Grit physicians, as I suppose they are all friends of the hon. member for South Brant (Mr. Heyd)——

Mr. HEYD. Not one of them.

Mr. BENNETT. The Secords not ?

Mr. HEYD. No.

Mr. BENNETT. Dr. Secord was known as a cyclone in western Ontario politics for years. He was as well known, though I may not say in the same manner, as Cap. Sullivan and hon. gentlemen know how well known Cap. Sullivan is. Of course, Dr. Secord is not in the same category as Cap. Sullivan.

Mr. HEYD. Have you any authority for making any reflections upon Dr. Secord's character ? I think you have a good cheek to stand up and make such an attack upon a decent man.

Mr. BENNETT. I say that he was not in the same category as Cap. Sullivan.

Mr. HEYD. Why connect him with Cap. Sullivan at all ?

Mr. BENNETT. I say that he was a prominent politican in western Ontario.

Mr. HEYD. You used the words 'Cap. Sullivan' in the sense of a reflection upon Dr. Secord.

Mr. BENNETT. The hon. gentleman need not be so captious about Cap. Sullivan. The hon. gentleman slept under the same roof as Cap. Sullivan, and was cheek by jowl with him. I saw them all in western Ontario myself and with a minister too. Do not go back on Cap. Sullivan now. The hon. gentleman was a chum of Cap. Sullivan as were some of the ministers. Now, let us get back to the question that we have been discussing. A gentleman from England goes over the reserve. The Indians point with pride to their farms and this gentleman admires them. Everything is satisfactory except the case of the physician. No wonder there is dissatisfaction. As soon as a case of illness exists there what happens ? The son is sent down.

Mr. GALLIHER. Would the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) allow me to ask him a question ?

Mr. BENNETT. Certainly, forty.

Mr. GALLIHER. Would you consider that it was wise or prudent on the part of the department, or of Dr. Secord himself, when he was attending other patients on the reserve that were not affected by small-pox, to go and attend small-pox patients ?

Mr. BENNETT. I have a ready answer to that.

Mr. GALLIHER. Answer that question.

Mr. BENNETT. Dr. Secord, jr., was living with his father in the city of Brantford. He went back and forward between the city and the reserve every day and met his father at the table. Was there no danger of contagion in that ?

Mr. GALLIHER. The hon. member is merely assuming that ? He is not stating the facts at all. He is drawing upon his imagination just as the hon. member for East Grey drew upon his imagination when he said that the Dr. who was there as the substitute for Dr. Holmes, he had reason to suppose was not a duly qualified medical practitioner. I say that it is just as reasonable to suppose that the substitute for Dr. Holmes who went there was a duly qualified medical practitioner although probably a young man. If the hon. gentleman went to a court of law upon a supposititious case and attempted to press the case before the judge he would be very quickly told to stop, to get down to facts and to speak of what he knew or of what his witnesses knew in regard to the case. There is no use of any hon. gentleman in this House undertaking to criticise a matter when he is basing his criticism upon assumption and not upon facts. If hon. gentlemen are going to indulge in criticism of that sort their criticism will have no weight with the hon. Minister of the Interior or with the members of the government or with people at large. They must base their criticism upon facts and not upon supposition.

Mr. BENNETT. I am sure the hon. minister will be obliged to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Galliher) for obstructing his estimates. We can stay here as long as hon. gentlemen can. If the hon. gentleman will persist in obstructing, I suppose we will be here until October. I am not sure that this Dr. Secord did return to his father's house, but the hon. gentleman (Mr. Heyd) says that he was a young man who had just returned from college and he either returned to his father's house or this is a fraudulent livery Bill. I do not think it is. I do not assume for a moment that it is. Does not the hon. gentleman think that if he were one of these noble braves with a Dr. paid $2,800 a year, and having one assistant, with that assistant being away and having to bring down these two gentlemen from Brantford and a third from Toronto and if at the same time he had to pay the piper to the extent of the whole bill he would come to the conclusion that it was high time that this physician who was paid to attend to the cases on the reserve did attend to them ? It is only fair that these remonstrances of these Indians should be listened to.

Mr. HEYD. The Indians did not remonstrate ; they are satisfied. It was the Indian agent that was appointed by the late government who did this in the interest of the Indians, and the Indians are satisfied and I do not see why you should whine about it.

Mr. BENNETT. I hope the minister will at least promise that he will see that this doctor attends to the duties of his office if another outbreak should occur.

Mr. SCOTT. I have no acquaintance with Dr. Secord, of Brantford, but I have heard with considerable regret the sneering manner in which my hon. friend (Mr. Bennett) spoke about what he termed the rapacious Secord family. While I do not know Dr. Secord, I was well acquainted for years with a very estimable brother of his, who was one of the pioneers of Regina, a very capable barrister, who was for a number of years a member of the North-west Territories legislature and one of the chief props of my honoured predecessor in the representation of West Assiniboia. I repeat that it is with extreme regret that I heard the member for Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) making sneering remarks about the Secord family. The member of the family whom I knew was a most respected and estimable gentleman.

Mr. BENNETT. I care very little about what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Scott) may think of what I said, and so his sympathy is lost on me.

Mr. HEYD. There is this in it. If a gentleman who occupies a seat in this House attacks the private character of men who have no chance to defend themselves, that member must expect not to have the respect of his fellow-members. If I choose to shield myself behind my position as a member to asperse the character of my neighbours, I should not feel very proud of myself.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Hear, hear.

Mr. HEYD. What has been said on the other side of the House is the result of an absolute want of knowledge of the facts of the case. The character of Dr. Secord and his family has been aspersed by men who know nothing about him.

Mr. BENNETT. I said nothing about Dr. Secord, but I said that the Indians were dissatisfied. I said that Dr. Secord was a most active politician, and the member for Brantford and the Minister of Customs will not deny that.

Mr. HEYD. He was mayor of the city of Brantford.

Mr. BENNETT. He was a very prominent politician.

Mr. HEYD. A most respected gentleman.

Mr. BENNETT. I did not asperse Dr. Secord's character except it be an aspersion on his character to say that he is a prominent Liberal.

Mr. SCOTT. This 'rapacious Secord family!'

Mr. BENNETT. Well, when he gets $2,800 a year and when he did not give a little patronage to some other Liberal doctor in his city but gave it to his own son, it shows that there was at least a good greed about it.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I have heard nothing said which would prove to my satisfaction that Dr. Secord has not performed his duties properly. It is true that a complaint was made to a medical gentleman who visited the reserve, and when that complaint was called to my attention by a respected member of the House, I at once said that I would have it looked into. I do not for a moment admit that that complaint indicates that there is any defect in the medical attendance on the reserve. I know something about Indians, and I can say that it is probable that if a visit were made to any reserve under such circumstances, it is likely that complaints would be made which might not on investigation be well founded. I will not admit that Dr. Secord was in any respect neglectful of his duties. I simply say that I will investigate the complaint and see if there is any improvement to make. For some years I have had to administer matters relating to quarantine, and the result of my experience leads me to be very greatly surprised at the fact that upon this reserve, with an outbreak of thirty-three cases of small-pox, the entire expense of coping with it was only $4,600, in addition to the ordinary medical expense. Any person who has experience will say that this was a phenomenally low charge for handling such an outbreak. My hon. friend from Selkirk (Mr. McCreary) and other members who have had experience in matters of this kind, will agree with me in that statement. Furthermore, the men in charge of this matter are perfectly competent. Mr. Cameron, the Indian agent has experience since his appointment in 1891, and he is one of the best and most competent and reliable agents in the service. Mr. Cameron had entire charge of what was done there for the department. It was his business to see that no unnecessary expenditure was incurred. Let me tell my hon. friends that upon this reserve there is a board of health, composed of very intelligent members of the Indian tribe; there is also an Indian council, and they supervise, along with our officers, the work of this quarantine and the payment of the accounts by the government. No complaint has reached the department in regard to the amounts paid. Mr. Cameron, if it amounts to anything, is not a politician of the government, but a man appointed by our predecessors. We have him, we have the medical superintendent, we have the Indian board of health, we have the Indian council, and not one of these has made a complaint. My hon. friends may rest easy that in that respect their anxiety as to Indian funds are not well founded.

Mr. COCHRANE. It is a new doctrine to me that we are to be criticised because we see fit to challenge the estimates of any minister in this House. What are the facts of the case? I could not help admiring how sincere our hon. friend from South Brant (Mr. Heyd) was. He was so sincere, and he was so sincere. It put me in mind of what I used to hear, that we always had suspicion of people who protested so much.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.) Louder.

Mr. COCHRANE. Well, just possess your soul in patience. My voice is my own, and I will use it as I like.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.) It is very squeaky.

Mr. COCHRANE. And if the hon. gentleman does not want to hear, there is a door, and he can walk out. The facts of the case are these. The Indian fund was used to pay a physician. He is eminent, I daresay, and he got $2,800 to attend to the medical wants of that tribe of Indians. We had to have an old experienced man, because a young man, Dr. Holmes, was not competent. I think Dr. Holmes should have that money. He has passed his medical examination, he is married and is living on the reserve. I repudiate the idea that a man requires to be an old fogey to be a qualified medical man. In my part of the country it is the young men who are generally the up-to-date clever men, while the old fogeys are not up-to-date. Dr. Holmes is living on the reserve, and is attending to the Indians as well as he can. When a critical case arose he was sent down and it cost $800 more, as I understand, in consequence. And yet my hon. friend from South Brant says that our friends who are living 200 miles away should not say anything about it. But we never entered a protest when the hon. gentleman from British Columbia, who lives 3,000 miles away, came to the hon. gentleman's relief. He was then as mild and meek as a sucking baby. What more do we want than we find in the records of the Auditor General's Report? When there was a serious case on the reserve, and an old experienced man was wanted to attend to it, a young man just fresh from college was sent to attend to the case, and the hon. gentleman said, we are satisfied. If we were in control of the government and were doing such a job, would he have been satisfied? He would have said it was bribery and corruption. You know deep down in your hearts that you have gone back on everything you advocated in opposition. I want the Minister of Customs to mention one principle that he supported when in opposition that he has not violated.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I will not take up the time of the committee in recounting all the principles that we have kept. That would take too long.

Mr. COCHRANE. You could do it in five minutes.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. It is well to have criticisms of these accounts; we do not object to that. But perhaps the criticisms of hon. gentlemen opposite are not so much required in this instance as they will be when we come to items involving the expenditure of the people's money by this government. These accounts have been paid out of the Indians' money.

Mr. COCHRANE. Therefore you would let people steal it.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. And they have passed an audit, quite as intelligent an audit as that which is being bestowed upon it here, judging from the remarks of some of the gentlemen. This account came before the council of the Six Nation Indians. It is their money, and they are particular how their money shall be expended. They are the ones who made the request and who pay the accounts. When an account comes before them, they scrutinize it. That was done in this case. They saw that the account was right, and they sent it to the government and asked that it be paid. And after all that has been done, some hon. gentlemen in this House feel it incumbent upon them to rise and criticise this account. There are items to come to which criticism might be devoted, which have not passed the scrutiny of any auditing body. But this item has passed the scrutiny of the auditing body that pays the money, and they themselves ask us to pay it. The minister tells me, and I have no doubt he is correct, that he has had no representations from the Indians at all against this arrangement in regard to the medical attendance on the reserve. Any one acquainted with the Indian character, and who knows the independence of the Six Nation Indians, as I do, knows very well that if there is any cause of complaint it is not long before the department hears of it. In a case of this kind, where there are 3,000 or 4,000 Indians governed by a council of very intelligent men, many of them educated, when they have expressed no dissatisfaction, I cannot see that there can be any strong criticism lodged against this expenditure or against anything connected with the medical attendance of the Six Nation Indians. It is their own money, they audit it, and it would not be paid without their sanction.

Mr. COCHRANE. If they are so intelligent and so well able to look after their own interests, why not allow them to select their own physician?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Their physician is not forced upon them.

Mr. COCHRANE. You appoint him.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Certainly, under an arrangement between the government and the Indians, who are their wards, but the government do not over-ride the Indian council; and if any representations were made to the government by the council, through the Indian agent, that the Indians were not satisfied, the minister would look into them. No complaint however has ever been made, and hon. gentlemen opposite evidently do not understand the question. But no doubt there are some items in the estimates upon which they will be able to do a little better.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The position which the hon. minister takes is hardly fair. He knows that the government appoint the physician and that the Indians must accept him.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Not without protest.

Mr. HEYD. The Indians petitioned that Dr. Secord should be appointed.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The government appoint him, and the Indians have to accept him, though it may be possible that they have not protested. The hon. the Minister of the Interior took the ground that the opposition were trying to reflect upon Dr. Secord. That is not the case. But what we are objecting to is that Dr. Secord should be allowed to farm out the work. All we ask the minister to do is to give the position to the doctor now on the reserve, at the salary paid to Dr. Secord, of $2,850 if necessary. But as Dr. Holmes is doing this work for $1,200 as stated by the hon. member for Brant——

Mr. HEYD. I do not know what he gets.

Mr. REID (Grenville). He is not getting $2,800. Why not give him the position as a small increase on the salary he is now getting and allow the Indians to benefit by the amount paid Dr. Secord for services he is really not performing. Another statement made by the hon. member for Brant was that this small-pox epidemic lasted for some four weeks.

Mr. HEYD. I do not know how long it lasted. I thought that Dr. Secord was getting $50 a week, and if he was paid $800, that represented sixteen weeks.

Mr. REID (Grenville). He was getting $10 a day, and was paid for eighty-one days. That was three and one-half months, which the small-pox epidemic must have lasted.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Eighty-one days is not three and a half months.

Mr. REID (Grenville)). It is very nearly three months. At any rate it is much longer than the hon. member for Brant stated. And there is hardly any small-pox epidemic which lasts much longer than about four weeks. I cannot understand why so much was paid. Another point raised by the hon. member for Brant was that we required to have an old, experienced practitioner appointed. But in this case a man was sent without any experience who, according to the theory of the hon. member for Brant, should not have been allowed to treat these most serious cases because of his youth and inexperience. Does not the hon. member then consider that the government did an injustice to the Indians in sending this young man to treat them when the cases were so serious. In my opinion, a young practitioner who has just taken his degree and has had the benefit of the experience of the older practitioners given him through his medical education, is better qualified for the position ; and for that reason I believe that Dr. Holmes is the man best qualified to attend to the Indians. But the two statements of the hon. member for Brant contradict each other.

Mr. HEYD. This discussion convinces me how careful I am not to exaggerate. I said Dr. Secord attended about sixteen small-pox patients, and I find that he actually attended forty-three during twelve weeks.

Mr. BENNETT. You said sixteen.

Mr. HEYD. I made a mistake. He attended forty-three, for which he got $800, and his qualifications are best proved by the fact that he cured them all and stamped the disease out of the reserve.

Mr. REID (Grenville). What was the predecessor of Dr. Secord paid ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The same salary.

Mr. BENNETT. How many pupils in the Elkhorn Indian school ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The total on the atendance roll is eight-five and the average attendance is seventy.

Mr. BENNETT. What is the cost per head of keeping those children there ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I will tell the hon. gentleman in a moment.

Mr. BENNETT. I may tell the hon. minister that I have found out what I wished to learn. The expense of conducting this Elkhorn industrial school was, in round numbers $20,000. So that the average cost of keeping each inmate was $300 a year.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. My hon. friend will understand that when he jumps from one item to another it necessary involves a little delay in looking up the facts. We were discussing the Indian affairs of Ontario, and this school is in the North-west. The average attendance at the Elkhorn industrial school is 70, and the average cost for maintenance of the inmates, not including the expenses connected with the building is about $200.

Mr. BENNETT. If the whole cost is $20,000 for the institution and the average attendance is 70, that is very nearly $300 a head. That goes to support what I have been told—that this school is very extravagantly conducted.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The $20,000 referred to includes the amount spent in repairs and equipment of the building. Exclusive of this the average of this is about $200.

Mr. BENNETT. What is paid to the matron of the establishment ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The wife of the principal is his assistant, and she receives $500 a year.

Mr. BENNETT. Was there any increase in the principal's salary ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. He gets $1,000—I do not think there has been any increase.

Mr. BENNETT. I was informed that he was advanced $250 last year, and that the matron is paid much more than at any other school, and these are among the reasons why the cost of this institution is so very high.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not think there has been any change in the principal's salary, but I will undertake to give my hon. friend the information when we come to that vote. I am satisfied however, that there has been no increase in the principal's salary, though possibly there may have been an increase in the salary of his wife.

Mr. BENNETT. I have had my attention drawn to the fact that while other schools are run at an average cost of $110 per pupil, this one, by reason of lack of business management runs up over $250.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The cost of maintaining the Elkhorn industrial school has been higher than it ought to be. I may say that one of the difficulties of the system of industrial schools is that it is not always possible to get pupils from the reserve to make up the quota for the school. The Elkhorn school for some considerable time found difficulty in getting the number of pupils it was entitled to, and the result was that the per capita expense was larger than it would otherwise have been. There has been a good deal of correspondence between the schools and the officers of the department, but my understanding is that now matters have been reduced to satisfactory basis and the expense is about the same as that of other schools.

Mr. BENNETT. Are they restricted to Indian children, or are half-breeds admitted?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. They are restricted to Indian children. The hon. member will understand that in law an Indian child is the child of a treaty Indian.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Was the resignation of Dr. Langrel voluntary, or was he requested to resign ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It was voluntary.

Indians—Manitoba and North-west Territories, $25,070.

Mr. LENNOX. Will the hon. minister explain how this is made up ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Last year there was a small-pox epidemic all over the west and we had a great deal of expense and trouble in connection with it. Up to date the expenditure has been $8,000 with some accounts still to come in. We estimate $10,000 for that. Then, there is $5,000 for the relief of Indians outside the treaty limits. The estimates for the fiscal year 1902-3 did not contain an item for this service, possibly because of oversight on the part of officers of the department. The demands made upon the department for Indians for whom they had not funds have increased. We have $5,000 in the main estimates for this year, and this $5,000 is a corresponding item for last year. The Hudson's Bay Company have paid for the relief from their posts in the north $3,000 and the total accounts are expected to amount to $5,000. The next item is $6,000 which arises in this way : When we make our estimates for supplies of beef to furnish the Indians, we base them upon the prices which the officers of the department estimate will have to be paid. But, last year the prices went up before the contract was let, and there is a difference of about $6,000 which we have to provide for. Then there is $1,070 to pay the Indians of the Qu'Appelle district for loss they sustained through the burning of their threshing machines and a certain amount of wheat.

The Indians on this reserve are the best Indians in the North-west Territories. They are under the charge of an extremely efficient agent, and they follow agriculture to a much greater extent than any other Indians. They purchased a threshing machine with their own money, and last year I think they raised about 47,000 bushels of wheat. They are the most progressive Indians we have. They suffered an accident in the burning of their threshing machine, and the agent recommended that we should give them a small sum to recompense them for the loss they had sustained, and this the department decided to do. Then there is an item of $3,000 required for these purposes. We had to send out a commission to settle the half-breed claims under treaty No. 8. Treaty No. 8 is a new treaty with the Indians in the district north of Edmonton, where we have within the last two or three years brought the Indians under treaty limits and obtained possession of the territory. We send out a man every year to make payments. The commission went out for the purpose of settling with the half-breeds and to issue scrip two or three years ago. In the first place, the country is of vast extent, and the population is scattered. When the commission went up there for the purpose of taking evidence with regard to the half-breed claims, some of the half-breeds were away hunting and fishing in different parts of the country, they did not all get there, and another officer went next year to take evidence. There are still some left, and for the purpose of clearing them all up we send this officer up there. I do not think it is likely we shall have to send him again. Another item is for the purpose of paying the salary of the medical officer. There is no physician resident in that whole country. One of the arrangements that was made at the time the treaty was entered into with the Indians was that when we sent our officer up there to pay the treaty money we would send a medical man along with him, so that when the Indians came to receive their money, if there were any among them seriously ill, they could bring them there to receive medical treatment at the same time. That was a stipulation specially made at the time the treaty was entered into. That is one of the things to which the Indians attach the most importance, and which we have endeavoured to carry out as well as we can. It is difficult to get a medical man to go there, and we have made an arrangement with an officer of the mounted police who is acquainted with the country, who is also a competent medical man, and knows the Indians very well, hence a very desirable man. He has undertaken to perform this service if we give him a special vote of $1,200 a year for that purpose. We cannot expect any man to undertake such a duty unless we give him a liberal allowance, because it involves a long and dangerous journey. After a good deal of discussion we made an arrangement with Dr. West to undertake that work, and in pursuance of the arrangement we are paying him $1,000 for ten months' service to June 30, 1903. Then there is a sum of $500 for the purpose of paying a veterinary inspector of cattle. I may say that in the last five or six years we have succeeded in getting the Indians to go into cattle raising, they take much more kindly to cattle raising than to wheat raising. Their herds have now reached such an extent that we find it necessary to have the veterinary go around and make an inspection of the herds every year.

Mr. SPROULE. Sometimes they kill their cattle and eat them.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There have been a few cases of that kind, but on the whole, if the hon. gentleman will look at the report of the Indian Department this year he will find that the improvement they have made is very gratifying, especially in those cases where we have endeavoured to introduce cattle. Some bands of Indians have absolutely refused to undertake agriculture of the ordinary kind, but they take very kindly to cattle raising. I think that as a result of the introduction of cattle raising among them, in the course of six or seven years we will be able to dispense with rations altogether. The next item is $600 for the purpose of increasing the salary of the inspector who goes north for the purpose of paying the Indians under treaty No. 8. He has been receiving $1,200, and I think he ought to receive $1,800. He has proved himself a competent man to do that work. I did not feel disposed to recommend an increase of his salary until he had performed the work at least once, and he having done so, we find that he is quite competent. That makes up the total of $25,000 for which the hon. gentleman asked explanations.

Mr. WILMOT. Has the minister's attention been directed to a petition from the Indians on the St. John river and the St. Mary's river? They sent a petition complaining of the management of their affairs. As to the merits of the petition I am not prepared to speak. The chief took a trip down to Ottawa clothed in the uniform of his office. I would urge the minister to look into the petition.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There was such a petition as my hon. friend refers to, which was sent to our agent there. He made an explanation which the deputy considered as satisfactory. If the hon. gentleman requires any further investigation, I will have it done.

Some resolutions reported.

ADJOURNMENT—BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. SPROULE. I understand that the hon. gentlemen opposite had a very interesting and secret conference to-day to settle their policy. Is the hon. Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding) prepared to give us or the country any information regarding the policy that will be submitted to this House?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am afraid I cannot gratify my hon. friend's womanly curiosity. Is he prepared to give us any information in regard to the secret conference which he and his friends have had?

Mr. SPROULE. Yes, we were endeavouring to devise ways and means to frustrate the rascality of this government.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not wonder that the hon. gentleman has at last admitted that because they have been making efforts for years without any success whatever, and even at this late day we wish them all good luck in the matter

Mr. SPROULE. May I ask the hon. gentleman what we may expect to do tomorrow ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We will resume the estimates of the hon. Minister of the Interior.

Mr. SPROULE. Will that be all ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If we should be fortunate enough to get through we will take some other business, but judging from the progress that has been made this evening perhaps it will take some little time.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11.50 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, July 10, 1903.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

THE ROYAL ASSENT.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have the honour to inform the House that I have received the following letter :

Ottawa, July 9, 1903.

Sir,—I have the honour to inform you that His Excellency the Governor General will proceed to the Senate Chamber on Friday the tenth instant at five o'clock p.m., for the purpose of giving assent to certain Bills which have passed the Senate and House of Commons during the present session.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,

F. S. MAUDE, Major,
Governor General's Secretary.

THE POST OFFICE SAVINGS BANK.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 220) respecting the Government Post Office Savings Bank. He said : This is the Bill of which I made mention some time ago. It is composed of a single clause, and provides that there shall be a reserve of 10 per cent in gold or guaranteed debentures on the amount of the deposits in the government savings banks.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN.

Mr. THOMAS EARLE (Victoria, B.C.). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries if that correspondence has yet been brought down which was asked for some two months ago, and which has been promised to me on several occasions ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Hon. Raymond Préfontaine). I really thought it was on the Table of the House, because I signed the papers about six days ago. I will see about it.

SUPPLY—THE BARR COLONY.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding) moved that the House again go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. E. F. CLARKE (West Toronto). Mr. Speaker, before you leave the Chair, I wish to draw the attention of the hon. Minister of the Interior to a statement which was made in the North-west Legislative Assembly some days ago by the Premier in respect to what are known as the Barr colonists. In view of the very large immigration which is taking place into this country, I think it is of the very highest importance that when serious statements are made respecting mismanagement and the non-fulfilment of pledges on the part of those who promote large immigration schemes, it is the duty of the government to make an exhaustive examination into them. Especially is this the case in the matter to which I desire to draw the attention of the hon. minister, because, if my information is correct, the statement which was made is a very serious one, and it was made by a gentleman who is well and favourably known throughout the country, a gentleman who has had a good deal of parliamentary experience, and who, I am sure, in making the statement, has kept well within the mark. The Barr colony is one of the first large bodies of English immigrants who have been induced to come and settle in the North-west Territories. That class of immigration is a most desirable class, and it would be a great misfortune indeed if, because of incorrect or untruthful statements or unfulfilled promises, the hopes of the immigrants were not to be realized. It is a notorious fact that many statements have been made in Canadian, as well as in British newspapers, by those who profess to be of the Barr colony, expressive of their dissatisfaction with the treatment which they have received. I think statements of that kind ought to be discounted to some extent ; but when a responsible gentleman like the Premier of the North-west Territories makes such a statement as I propose to present to the House, I think it is the bounden duty of the government to make an exhaustive examination into it, and to lay the facts before the people as quickly as possible. I will not take up the time of the House, but I will merely read the statement which has been handed to me, and which is taken from the Regina 'Leader' of July 2nd. The matter was evidently being discussed in the territorial legislature, and this is the report of Mr. Haultain's remarks in closing the discussion :

Mr. Haultain closed the debate in a few words. Referring to Mr. Clinkskill's speech with reference to Mr. Barr, the premier said he did not wish to use his position in the House to make charges against Mr. Barr when the gentleman could not be present to reply. At the same time, he thought some remarks on the subject ought to be made, and had very properly been made. From conversation he had had with members of the colony on the trail between Saskatoon and Battleford, he was convinced there had been some gross mismanageemnt in connection with the colony, and something worse than gross mismanagement in certain financial dealings with it. The Dominion government by allowing Mr. Barr to reserve a certain number of townships had to that extent recognized the scheme, and it was the duty of that government to have all the charges cleared up by a thorough investigation. He said this was in the interests of the territories, and in the interests of some of the best immigrants that ever came into the country.

If this is a correct report of the statement made by Mr. Haultain, I think there cannot be two opinions as to the advisability of having some person make an exhaustive examination into the charges alleged. I think it is due to Mr. Barr, who is at the head of the colony ; it is due to the government, who set aside certain townships for the use of the colonists ; and it is due to the country, because if the allegations which are made are not disposed of satisfactorily, they will prevent that tide of immigration coming from the old country which we all sincerely desire. I wish to ascertain from the hon. Minister of the Interior what has been done, or what he intends to do, to clear this matter up. He is aware, of course, of the statements which have been made in the papers in the old country by members of the Barr colony expressing their dissatisfaction with some of the arrangements made.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton). Mr. Speaker, the statement which was made by Mr. Haultain in the North-west assembly, and to which my hon. friend has called attention, has not been brought to my attention before to-day. The relations between the department and Mr. Barr of the Barr colony, are extremely simple. Mr. Barr conceived a scheme of inducing a large number of people to settle in the North-west. He represented to the department that there would be difficulty in carrying out the scheme unless the department agreed that it would hold available for homestead entry by the persons whom he would select a certain amount of land for a certain number of months. That has been done in some other cases for some other people, generally with results that were not unsatisfactory, although at present, owing to the largely increased influx of settlers, it is a practice which the department may not be able to follow in the future. There did not seem, however, to be any difficulty in making this arrangement with Mr. Barr, but the only arrangement which the department had with that gentleman was that it would hold a certain amount of land a certain length of time, for the purpose of granting applications for homestead entries within that tract to those whose names Mr. Barr would furnish, subject to the reservation that the applications should be on behalf of bona fide persons desiring to settle. That arrangement was continued at the instance of the Deputy Minister of the Interior who was in England. The department saw difficulties in carrying the scheme into effect, but the House will understand that in matters relating to immigration, where you have to deal with human beings, who think they know best, and are not always willing to accept advice, we very often have to do what we ourselves would not have suggested in order to avoid losing a considerable amount of immigration. In this case we would have preferred that these settlers had come to our officers in London and put themselves in their hands. Had they done this, they would have been handled better and with less trouble and there would have been no dissatisfaction. They, however, would not do that. The Deputy Minister of the Interior was in London at the time, and after considerable correspondence by cable, he advised that it would be better in the long run to give way to their proposition, because if we had refused, we would, in all probability, have been advertised as discouraging settlement, and this would have had an injurious influence on intending emigrants. As I felt considerable doubt of the ability of Mr. Barr to handle these people, I gave instructions to the officers of my department to make precisely the same preparations to handle this colony as if Mr. Barr had nothing to do with it. The people who undertook to handle that colony were not sufficiently experienced, they did not know what had to be done in the North-west on the arrival of a large party of that kind, and I instructed the officers of my department to take the same steps as if these people were depending on the government officials solely to look after them. My officers did so, but of course they could not interfere until the colonists made up their minds to abandon Mr. Barr. Our officers stood aside until called in, and then they did whatever was necessary. I have not had before me any complaints whatever regarding the nature of the services granted by the officers of my department. On the contrary, I think it was generally admitted that they showed zeal and efficiency, and under all the circumstances were very successful. Tents were planted at regular distances and every attempt made to prevent unnecessary suffering, but of course one could easily understand that, in the case of a large number of people coming from England, who had previously no experience of hardship of any kind, they would necessarily have to go through what they would consider hardships, but what the average Canadian or what members of this House would endure cheerfully and not think twice about it. So far as financial relations are concerned, there were none between Mr. Barr and the department. Our arrangement simply consisted in the fact that we held a certain quantity of land for a certain length of time at the disposal of these colonists. We have no knowledge whatever of any financial relations which did exist between them and Mr. Barr. They made their own arrangements with Mr. Barr, in London, England. Any of them who took the trouble to consult the officers of my department in London were told that there was no necessity to employ Mr. Barr or anybody else, but that they could make their applications directly without charge, except the ordinary government fee, so that the financial arrangements, if any, between the members of the colony and Mr. Barr were voluntary arrangements made in London, without the co-operation of the officers of the government of their knowledge as regards details. We know at present nothing whatever about Mr. Barr's financial arrangements except that it has transpired, in the course of correspondence, that he received a commission from the steamship companies. Hon. members will, therefore, see that there is nothing before the department to justify any investigation at present. It is somewhat difficult to see how an investigation can be held into the financial arrangements made in London, England, by this colony with Mr. Barr, especially in the absence of Mr. Barr, who, I understand, is not now in the colony.

Mr. CLARKE. He is in Winnipeg.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It would be difficult, under the circumstances, to make a satisfactory investigation. I quite recognize what my hon. friend says that if there are distinct allegations of impropriety in connection with the financial relations between the members of the colony and Mr. Barr himself, it would be well that these should be cleared up as fully as possible, but whether the facts which can be brought before us will be sufficient to justify our going into an inquiry, I could not say at the moment. I will undertake to procure the debate, if it is reported, to which my hon. friend referred, and endeavour to find out upon what specific facts and allegations, any charges of impropriety are based, and then determine whether I can properly go on with an investigation or not. Possibly I may have that information before my estimates are through.

Mr. H. LENNOX (South Simcoe). This matter is one of more than ordinary importance because it involves very largely the question as to what kind of immigration we shall have in the future. It was announced that this settlement of Barr colonists was the most satisfactory scheme of immigration which we had up to that time, and that they were the best class of colonists who had ever come into Canada. I do not think that time has led us to change our opinion in that regard, but just in proportion as they were a superior class of immigrants, the attention of the public, both here and at home, was directed to this scheme. And it is all important that, whatever we may do, we shall make it clear to the people of Great Britain that the representations made to immigrants in Canada will be substantially carried out, that whatever prospects are held forth to people coming to settle in our great west will, in the main, be realized. Now, this matter, of course, might have taken the position of being quite unconnected with the government. But, as Mr. Haultain points out, it does appear that the government was to some extent connected with it. And it further appears, by the statement of the Minister of the Interior, that that was the fact. Mr. Haultain says that the Dominion government, by allowing Mr. Barr to reserve a certain number of townships, to that extent recognized the scheme; and so it was the duty of the government to have all the charges cleared up by a thorough investigation. I understood the Minister of the Interior to say—though I am sorry to say, I cannot at all times hear at this distance what is said—that probably he would determine upon an investigation. I understood him to say also that there were difficulties in the way of investigation. It will appear perfectly clear, I think, from this statement of the minister, that, although the department did not get complete control of that colonization scheme, it was so far connected with it as that it must be held to a large extent responsible for the success of the scheme. And, whether they are held in the strict sense responsible, whether it would be fair for the people or the members of this House to hold that government strictly to account in this matter, I think the hon. minister in control of the department will recognize, as a matter of public interest, as a matter affecting the settlement of the west, that in the future it is essential that the government and the department should take such active measures as will make it clear that whenever immigrants come from any land, particularly when a superior class of immigrants come from Great Britain, if there is an error at all, it shall be an error on the side of paying them too much attention, of seeing too carefully to the meeting of their wants, rather than that any of their wants or reasonable requirements should be neglected. I do not wish to criticise this as though it were a party question in the sense of trying to reflect unduly upon the department. I only want to impress upon the department the necessity of immediately taking such active measures as will, as far as possible, mitigate or do away with evils of that kind. The minister says that a certain amount of land was reserved. That seems to be one of the main difficulties spoken of in the address I have just referred to. How that land was reserved, I do not know. Mr. Haultain holds the government to some account for what they did by allowing Mr. Barr to reserve a certain number of townships. Now, whether that was reserved for Mr. Barr individually or not, I am not in a position to know either by what I have just quoted or by the language of the minister; but it appears to be the difficulty. And the department appears to have had difficulty from the very first. The minister says it would have been better if the colony could have come directly through the London Immigration Office. There is where I think—I do not say it in any carping way—the department made a mistake. There is where I differ from the Minister of the Interior when he says that if they had taken the former attitude it might possibly have been that the colonists would have been discouraged and we might have lost that immigration. The fertility of the west, the vast inducements the west offers to immigrants will attract a tide of immigration quite fast enough for the settlement of the country, if we pursue such a line that when these men come in they will not be disappointed of their reasonable expectations. There is nothing, to my mind, more important than that when there is immigration aided and authorized by the government or by any person occupying a semi-or quasi-official position, there shall be no picture of the west more glowing than the circumstances permit of. We know perfectly well that these colonists, when they came, were disappointed that the preparations were not sufficient, that they grumbled almost immediately, that they met with difficulties of which they had not been apprised, that they found difficulties which had no right to exist and difficulties that would not have existed if proper precautions had been taken. And I am here to say that no more disastrous policy could be pursued than that of professing to receive immigrants, particularly a good class of immigrants, if we are not in a position to realize the expectation formed from the pictures presented to them, I must say, and I do not say it so much for the purpose of complaining of what has gone by, as for the purpose of pointing out to the department what is the true line of policy for the future, that it is not wise for the government to mix itself up with any scheme of immigration which it does not completely and effectively control. That, as I understand him, the Minister of the Interior admitted to-day. He tells us that the department had not the complete control over that scheme, that they ought to have had, and for that reason the scheme was not so successful as it ought to have been, that if these immigrants had placed themselves in direct communication with and under the direct guidance of the officials of the Dominion government, more satisfactory results would have been obtained. I point out that it is the duty of the government, if they identify themselves with any scheme of immigration, that they shall have complete control of the matter, and, having that complete control that they shall so manage the colonization scheme as that no unsatisfactory reports shall go back to the country from which the immigrants come. The Minister of the Interior points out that he has no knowledge of the financial arrangements entered into by Mr. Barr with the colonists. There again, I venture to say, the administration has not taken the proper course. Once the government identified themselves with the scheme, they became responsible to these colonists for carrying out that scheme in good faith. We must remember that the people of Great Britain, finding that the government was to some extent identified with the movement, without ascertaining too closely how far, would rely upon the good faith of the government as a pledge of security to these people when they landed in this country. Therefore it was unwise, it was injudicious, it was regrettable that the department, having identified themselves with the scheme, did not at all events insist that it should have control of the financial arrangements, and that no private speculator, or exploiter, should prey upon the credulity of these people coming from the old land, as it is alleged Mr. Barr has done, to the great disappointment of these people, and to the great and permanent disadvantage of the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. A. C. BELL (Pictou). I suppose that what is said by the Minister of the Interior that he has no precise knowledge of the relations between Mr. Barr and the colonists, and particularly of their financial arrangement, must be accepted as a very strong reason why there is not ground at this moment for an investigation. At the present time the matter of immigration is of such great importance, perhaps the most important matter we have engaging our attention, that it will excuse a certain amount of solicitude on the part of the members of this House in seeing that nothing whatever should be done to prejudice what is by far the most desirable class of immigrants we could hope to receive in this country. Of course, the House, perhaps, knows even less than the Minister of the Interior as to the financial arrangements made between Mr. Barr and the persons whom he induced to come to this country. But from statements I have seen in the press, I would infer that there must have been something unsatisfactory in the financial arrangements made by Mr. Barr with them ; for if I am not mistaken, I have seen it recently stated that Mr. Barr, in arriving at a settlement with these colonists at Saskatoon, or some point in that neighbourhood, had refunded to them, or to some of them, certain sums of money which he had no doubt received from them. Now if that be the case, there must have been some ground for dissatisfaction on the part of these immigrants, as apparently their reasoning prevailed so far with Mr. Barr, the promoter of this movement, that he found it expedient to refund certain moneys that he had received at their hands. That being the case, it seems to me the government, or the department over which the hon. gentleman presides, should at once make it their business to ascertain as quickly and as completely as possible if there was anything improper in the relations which existed between this gentleman and the immigrants whom he induced to come to this country. The great care that is being taken by the government, and in which they are supported, I think, by every one wishing well to Canada, and hoping to see the growth of Canada made as rapid as possible in the future, would show how exceedingly important it is that we should do nothing whatever to prejudice any one of British birth or nationality, who may be looking forward to leaving his home, against coming to Canada. Now the proportion which we are to-day receiving of British immigrants is very satisfactory, we are apparently gaining at a very rapid rate in the proportion in which our immigrants of British origin bear to immigrants who are at this time going into the United States, and, of course, the United States is our great rival for that class of immigration which we consider so very desirable.

There is one thing which apparently the British immigrant, when he goes abroad, is exceedingly prompt to take advantage of, and that is the columns of the British press. In the mother country we find that journals of the very highest class, the London 'Times' and other first-class journals, seem to look upon it as a duty to open their columns to anything whatever in the nature of a complaint that may be offered by any British subject who has recently gone abroad. It would seem to be quite characteristic of these British immigrants to resort very promptly to this means of ventilating any grievance, either real or imaginary, which they conceive to exist. The consequence is of course, that, having this habit of appealing to their fellow citizens at home through the press, and through the most respectable journals of that country, one or two dissatisfied immigrants coming into Canada are capable of doing an enormous amount of harm in prejudicing the people of the British islands against Canada ; they are capable of doing an enormous amount to nullify the great and proper efforts being made by the Department of the Interior, for the government of Canada, to secure the confidence of the British people and to turn the feet of intending immigrants in this direction. I think we ought to pay the greatest possible attention to anything that may even unwarrantably excite suspicion or dissatisfaction in the minds of immigrants. The Minister of the Interior has very properly, to my mind, observed that difficulties or comparative hardships that may be looked upon by our own people as trifling matters of every day occurrence, might be regarded by people coming from the old country, and by a class which perhaps never had occasion to rough it, as great hardships. No doubt a short acquaintance with Canada and a short experience in our western country has already taught these people to look with comparative indifference upon circumstances and upon features of apparent hardship which perhaps to them at first seemed very disagreeable indeed. The main point is this, that while receiving their first and early impressions at a time when they have not acquired such experience as would enable them to judge carefully and to speak impartially, they are prompt to speak without waiting to acquire that experience or that maturity of judgment ; they become so dissatisfied that they are at once placed in a position in which they become capable of exciting a strong feeling of dissatisfaction and suspicion on the part of the great mass of people in the mother country who, we have reason to believe from time to time, are thinking about changing their homes and coming to this country.

Now it would seem to me that, with the very large and well organized machinery which the government has instituted in the mother country for the purpose of reaching the ears of intending immigrants, a machinery which covers to a large extent the whole of the British islands, there is no reason why any gentleman should be allowed to take a position in connection with immigrants to this country which Mr. Barr seems to have taken. I would imagine that the middle man, the organizer of such an expedition, is entirely unnecessary at this moment in handling the immigrants who are looking towards Canada. In fact it would appear from what has transpired in connection with the Barr colony that there is a great and real danger that the interference of such a person is mischievious, and that the immigrants would be in better hands if they continued to place their confidence in, and to receive their advice from, the officers of the department. For that reason I think it would require great caution on the part of the government before they entered into any arrangement whatever with Mr. Barr, or any other gentleman who undertook to do what he seems to have done in this case, in the direction of assigning to him any portion of the homestead lands of our country, as in this case was done by setting apart certain townships. It would appear from the whole history of this expedition that whatever purpose might have been intended by setting apart these townships so as to keep the Barr colonists together, and to form an all British settlement, it was to a very serious extent at least defeated by the result of the experience of these colonists. If I am not mistaken, a very large portion of the party which set out for Canada under Mr. Barr's leadership, did not eventually settle down in that part of the Dominion which was assigned to them by the Department of the Interior. I understand that only a comparatively limited portion of the party finally took up the lands in the townships which had been allotted to them. If I am not mistaken, I think quite a considerable portion of them found themselves quite as well suited and made settlements at some points some hundreds of miles on this side of that portion of the Dominion which had been set apart for their use.

There is another point in connection with the Barr colonists that seems to be of very great importance and that is the fact that quite a considerable number of these immigrants, instead of proceeding to the lands which were set apart for them and homesteading there, adopted what I think is the much wiser course of going into the employment of farmers already settled in Canada whereby they would have the advantage of acquiring a knowledge of the ways of the country and of acquiring that experience without which no man in the west can hope to be a successful farmer. It seems to me that instead of locating lands in certain portions of the country upon which large bodies of immigrants might settle down in compact bodies of all British settlements it would be much more important and more likely to conduce to the advantage both of the immigrants and of the country if the opposite course were followed and if an effort were made, instead of placing these men in compact settlements, to scatter them about as much as possible among older settlers who have acquired an experience of Canadian conditions and have learned how to make a success of farming in this country. That process of settlement which seems much more desirable than the one adopted by Mr. Barr is one which would entirely exclude gentlemen like Mr. Barr from this work of colonization. It would be a work which would be more properly done through the Department of the Interior. That department, with all its machinery and with its officials in the mother country and in Canada, could deal with the immigrant individually when he came to this country and it could place him upon a farm where he would have the advantage of Canadian neighbours with a large acquaintance of Canadian conditions, and better still, it might, if possible, induce him to accept employment with a farmer in this country as a hired man and thus enable him to acquire a knowledge of Canadian conditions which would practically guarantee success when the time came that he could take up his work as a farmer in Canada. The fact which I mentioned in my first remarks that representations had been made that Mr. Barr has refunded certain sums of money to the members of his party would seem to show that there was really something in the contract or arrangement made between Mr. Barr and the colonists which was faulty and it is unfortunate that this was accomplished by Mr. Barr in consequence of the standing and position he secured with the department, which so far endorsed his scheme as to set apart and put into the hands of this gentleman a large amount of Canadian territory for the exclusive use of his party. There can be no doubt that a gentleman, when he went to a party of intending immigrants, would have a better chance of procuring their consent to his proposal if he went with the endorsation of the Department of the Interior and of the Canadian government, and were in a position to say: I have so far acquired the endorsation of the Canadian government that they have seen fit to interfere with the ordinary course of their methods in settling the lands of Canada by assigning to me certain townships in the western portion of the country. It does seem to me to be of the last necessity that the government should never in any case at all set its seal upon arrangements of this character, which, as the hon. Minister of the Interior has very properly observed, are to the last degree unnecessary. There is no occasion for a gentleman like Mr. Barr, with his very limited knowledge of our country, to go into this transaction with the impression that he can better organize a party and better conduct it to homes in the west than the officials of the Dominion government. The facts of this case would seem to argue that the interference of persons of this character is to say the least of it mischievous and that the government, instead of encouraging anything of that kind, would rather be serving the interests of the country if it would discredit the efforts of gentlemen like Mr. Barr, and confine the work of immigration largely to the officials of the department to work with their sanction and consent and for whose actions the government would be held responsible to the people, to this House and to the immigrants themselves. The whole circumstances would seem to apply the necessity that the government should as soon as possible acquire absolute knowledge of this transaction. There may be very little ground whatever for the statements that are being made, but the fact that they are being made and circulated in the mother country is an important fact, because it is interfering with the success of our immigration system, a system upon which the people of Canada are spending a large amount of money and a system to which they look with a great deal of confidence to fill up Canada with a British population. I do not think I need say anything more beyond this that these irregular immigration agents like Mr. Barr should be discouraged and that everything done with the consent of the department should be done by the officials of the department so that the control of the movement will be in the hands of the government and the government will be responsible for any miscarriage or bad result.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Mr. Speaker, we were glad to learn from the hon. Minister of the Interior (Hon. Mr. Sifton) that the relations between the government and Mr. Barr were of so simple a character. It may be said, however, after what has fallen from the lips of the hon. Minister of the Interior that his remarks would indicate that Mr. Barr, even under these circumstances, must have had a very considerable influence and control over these settlers and that with the sanction of the government, because, the very fact that the lands were set aside for him and that settlers must apparently have some recourse to him or make some application to him, would obviously give him a control and influence over these settlers which would make him a very important personage in connection with the immigration movement. My hon. friend the Minister of the Interior has also said that this difficulty presented itself to the department: If this movement should be discouraged it could be said that the government were discouraging the movement of population towards Canada. That is very true, but if the department should also look at the opposite side; if there is a movement here of this character and the results are so disastrous that the misfortunes of the colony are advertised, or are likely to be advertised, throughout the mother country to the deteriment of Canada, that would be even a more unfortunate result than the one which be pointed out as possible if the government did not lend encouragement to this movement. But, I would like to point out to the hon. minister, that, according to a published interview with the Canadian commissioner of immigration, the relations between the department and Mr. Barr were not quite of that scant character to which he adverted. In the 'Canadian Gazette' of the 28th of May, there is an interview with Mr. Preston to which no doubt the hon. minister's attention has been directed. The interview was originally given to the representative of the 'Westminster Gazette' and has been copied from the 'Westminster Gazette' into the 'Canadian Gazette' a copy of which I have here. Mr. Preston in an interview, used the following language in regard to Mr. Barr and with regard to this movement.

> The adverse reports that have been sent about with respect to this party of Mr. Barr's are quite devoid of truth, and calculated to do both Mr. Barr and the Canadian Emigration Department a deal of harm. The history of the collection of the All-British party of nearly 2,000 persons which Mr. Barr is conducting through to the Saskatchewan Valley is a very simple tale to relate, and contains nothing of which any one connected with the venture need feel ashamed. In response to a request by Mr. Barr, the Dominion government set apart a location in Saskatchewan, the area of which comprised some of the most magnificent land in the whole of Western Canada. Having secured his allotment, Mr. Barr came over to Europe and proceeded with his propaganda.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Will my hon. friend send me the interview; I have not seen it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I will give it to the hon. minister as soon as I have concluded. That statement purports to emanate from Mr. Preston and as published in the Westminster 'Gazette' it seems to indicate that Mr. Barr in the first place made all his arrangements with the Canadian government and then went over to start his propaganda for the purpose of inducing this immigration movement; and, that Mr. Barr from the first was practically indicated by the Canadian government as a special immigration agent for the purpose of bringing these people to western Canada. I do not know whether that is a fact or not—of course I do not know if Mr. Preston made use of these words, but that is the statement of the case as presented to the representative of the Westminster 'Gazette' if the words of that representative are to be believed; and that is the statement that appears in the Canadian 'Gazette' of the 28th of May. I would have thought that under these circumstances it would have been the duty of the government to make the fullest possible enquiry into the character, capacity, and ability of Mr. Barr before lending himself to a movement of that kind and before allowing him to superintend such a large immigration as that of 2,000 people from the British Isles. I do not know whether or not the Minister of the Interior or his officers made any such investigation or inquiry, and I do not want to do Mr. Barr any injustice because he is not here to answer for himself; but we know that there have been reports repeatedly circulated through the press of this country which would seem to indicate that the government in giving to Mr. Barr the control of this expedition had not made a careful investigation into his record or into his capacity to conduct a large movement of this kind. Then the interview proceeds with something that seems to me to be very much more significant than what I have read. Mr. Preston continues as follows :—

Arrangements were made with the Elder-Dempster Line, by which Mr. Barr was to receive a commission on the bookings of his party, just in the same way as any other booking office would have acted towards any emigration agent. Under this arrangement he will probably receive 25s. per emigrant. He made no secret whatever to the Canadian government that he was to be remunerated in this way. In granting this concession to Mr. Barr, our government had no intention to divest itself of any responsibility in connection with the constituent elements of the party. It was specially laid down that they were all going out to engage in agricultural pursuits. In point of fact the emigrants paid their entrance fees for their homesteads through myself.

The statement is made here, that under an arrangement with the Elder Dempster line to which the Canadian government was a consenting party, Mr. Barr was to receive a commission of twenty-five shillings per immigrant. I can hardly believe myself that any such arrangement could have been made or that the Canadian government was a consenting party to it.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There is nothing at all to indicate that the Canadian government had anything to do with the payment of a commission by the Elder Dempster Company; we had absolutely nothing to do with it. When I was making my statement I said that we were informed that the commission had been paid.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It does not say by whom the arrangement was made and it is quite open to what the minister suggests; that in the first place it was entirely an arrangement between Mr. Barr and the steamship company, although that is not perfectly plain from the words. However, under some arrangement made by some person, he was to receive twenty-five shillings per head from the Elder Dempster line, and the significant part of it is that he made no secret to the Canadian government that he was to be remunerated in this way. It seems to have been part of the arrangement made in London (when Mr. Barr went forward for the purpose of conducting this propaganda as it is called). that Mr. Barr was to receive a commission of twenty-five shillings per head upon each of these immigrants, amounting to the sum—if there were 2,000 of them—of about $12,-000; that he made no secret of this to the Canadian government, and that the Canadian government were fully aware of it. If Mr. Preston's statements are correctly reported and if they are to be believed, it does seem to me that the relations between the Canadian government and Mr. Barr were not quite of that simple character which the Minister of the Interior would seek to impress upon the House to-day. Further on Mr. Preston delivers himself as follows :—

When asked what was the answer to the stories of lack of provisions and the collapse of transport that have been circulated, Mr. Preston said : That they are absolutely untrue. From the very first the Canadian government had had this party in charge. Quite independently of Mr. Barr's own arrangements, we were getting ready for it months before it started.

That, of course, is in accordance with one portion of the minister's remarks to-day, but it also shows that before any immigrant was approached on the other side the Canadian government had a perfect understanding with Mr. Barr and had authorized him in every way to proceed with this propaganda and to bring the people to this country. Mr. Preston further says, and this is a very significant passage :

So perfect was our organization that not an hour's delay at any point—not even at Winnipeg, from which came such disquieting news some time ago—was experienced in the passing through of the four special trains containing the Barr colonists right on to their objective.

Mr. Preston further stated that it was quite untrue that Mr. Barr had appointed himself exclusive provision agent to the party. They did not buy through him at all, nor did he receive a commission on their purchases.

With regard to Mr. Barr's remuneration Mr. Preston added : 'He will also probably receive —the matter has not yet been settled—seven shillings per emigrant from the Canadian government. Altogether he may get about £3,000 in commission for the party. But whatever the amount may be, it is no more than would be paid to any one else for the same class of emigrants ; and against his receipts must be put very large disbursements.

I would point out to the Minister of the Interior that this is distinctly in addition to the twenty-five shillings per head which he was to receive from the steamship line. Then Mr. Preston continues as follows :

In regard to Mr. Barr, I have only to say in conclusion that the department has welcomed his intervention, and are perfectly satisfied of his honourable conduct in the whole matter.

It is to be observed that a gentleman very eminent in public life in the North-west Territories; a gentleman who is usually noted for his moderation in language, has made statements in the North-west Assembly which are entirely at variance with the concluding part of the passage which I have read. And considering the very significent passage which occurs in Mr. Haultain's remarks; considering the statements of the Canadian Commissioner of Immigration which I have just read to the House, I would not be inclined to agree with the Minister of the Interior when he says that there is nothing in this matter for the Canadian government to investigate. If what is set forth in Mr. Haultain's statement can be sustained; if there is any ground for Mr. Haultain's statement, and we must assume that there is; then, considering the relations that have existed up to almost the present time between Mr. Barr and the Canadian government, I venture to think that there is the best possible ground for some investigation of this matter; because, so far as these people are concerned, Mr. Barr was in effect acting as the paid agent of the Canadian government; and if it is true that he has done any wrong to these people, that he has been guilty of any fraudulent act towards them, or of over-reaching them, if it is true that they came to this country not imagining that any commission was paid to Mr. Barr, I think that the government, having regard to the charge made against the conduct of its agent by so eminent a man as Mr. Haultain, ought to take the very earliest opportunity to investigate the truth or falsity of these statements. If they are proved to be false, the government should lose no time in publishing that fact throughout the length and breadth of the mother country; and if they are proved to be true, they should lose no time in assuring the people of the mother country that no such arrangement will in future be entered into by the Canadian government with a person of whose character and record they have so little knowledge as they seem to have had of the gentleman who conducted this party. I think my hon. friend from West Toronto is to be commended for having brought this matter to the attention of the House. It has occupied the attention of the public press for a long time, and it does seem to me, notwithstanding what has been urged by the hon. Minister of the Interior, that there is, in the statements of Mr. Haultain and of the chief commissioner of immigration of this government in the United Kingdom, the best possible ground for a thorough, speedy and prompt investigation.

Mr. S. E. GOURLEY (Colchester). Mr. Speaker, I concur in every word that has fallen from the lips of the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Borden). Wisely or unwisely, truthfully or untruthfully, the people of Canada and the people of England, believe that Mr. Barr, was the agent of the government of Canada. That is the crucial point in this matter. Very often people get an erroneous idea; but when once that idea is entertained by the people, it must be removed from their minds before the conclusion which they have reached will be erased. I am persuaded that the public impression is pretty widespread, not only in Canada but in England, and in all countries from which we expect immigration, that the government of Canada has had an unworthy agreement of some kind with Mr. Barr. If that is not true—and I hope for the sake of the government of Canada and the people of Canada that it is not true—then no people should be more interested than the government of Canada, no man should be more interested than the Minister of the Interior, in having the matter thoroughly and completely investigated, in order that there may be no shade of doubt in any man's mind that the government of Canada have acted honestly and honourably by the men it has invited to become citizens of this country. I was pained yesterday to read that Mr. Barr had been publicly pelted with rotten eggs in a most disgraceful way at the town of Regina, by the populace, or by a number of people, who claimed that they had been wronged by him. I say that is pelting the government of Canada. The pelting of Mr. Barr, in the eyes of the public of Europe, will be the pelting of the hon. Minister of the Interior. I would be very sorry to have a personal insult of that kind offered to any man in the cabinet, because it is an insult offered to me as a citizen of this country. I want the government to be, like Caesar's wife, above suspicion. It is an awful assumption to make, but we are bound constitutionally to make assumptions of a very sweeping character sometimes. I desire to read a few words which were uttered lately by Mr. Haultain in another place; and we know that Mr. Haultain is not a partisan. I do not know particularly what politics he has. He seems to be a North-west man; and we know that the gentlemen from the North-west who are in this House, are ahead of the public in many instances, which is perhaps a very good thing to say of any men. Mr. Haultain is a North-west man; and, occupying the responsible position he does, he is charged with maintaining the character and reputation of that country, and with looking after its interests; and he can do that in no better way than in seeing that every immigrant that comes to settle in the North-west is treated in an honest and honourable manner by the government of Canada. I want to see millions of people come and settle in this country, and I want to know that when they do come, they will send out favourable accounts of the country in the letters which they write to their friends. These will influence immigration, more than anything, the hon. minister can do, because they will reflect the settler's impressions of the country, its government, its laws, and its administration of justice. According to the tales that are going around, Mr. Barr is looked upon as the representative of this government, and his conduct will reflect on the fair fame and integrity of Canada. Therefore, the Minister of the Interior should be the first person to feel sensitive on this point. The government's attempt to treat this matter lightly will not be borne. The people will not permit their honour to be sullied at any time, especially when they are spending large sums of money for immigration purposes. The expenditure of that money is probably one of the best investments Canada can make; but charge that expenditure with the slightest taint, and for every dollar spent, $25 will not recompense the country for the injury it will do. Therefore when Mr. Haultain, the premier of the North-west, in whose country these immigrants will settle, charges this government, with, in some way, creating this impression on the minds of the immigrants, I care not how improperly it was created, that Mr. Barr was acting as their agent, it is their duty to clear the matter up. That impression exists, and the hon. gentleman can see that it exists, if he reads the papers of yesterday. The people of this country are a quiet people, not accustomed to be boisterous, but accustomed to wait for the vindication of justice in the courts on all occasions; but I venture to say that if this government does not look out for itself, manifestations will take place all over the country, similar to that which took place at Regina; because when the people do not get justice and fair play, there is sufficient sense of right in the British bosom to cause them to resist violations of the constitution and to resort to rotten eggs, as was done at Regina yesterday.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Hear, hear.

Mr. GOURLEY. I am glad that the hon. Postmaster General is aroused on this matter, and I apprehend that when he says 'hear, hear,' he realizes that a great wrong has been done by the government of which he is a member, and is determined on behalf of the great province of Ontario to see that it is remedied.

Mr. CLARKE. The Minister of Labour?

Mr. GOURLEY. Yes, and there are a number of excellent labourers in my county who tell me, that this minister, does not righteously represent the interests of labour in this country. Mr. Haultain says that the Dominion government, by allowing Mr. Barr to reserve a certain number of townships had to that extent recognized the scheme. I ask the minister, did the government allow Mr. Barr to reserve certain townships in the vicinity of those which were allotted to immigrants who were coming to this country? If he did, he did that which was a gross wrong. He enabled Mr. Barr to bring a number of settlers here, who would give value to the land reserved by him, and in that manner, a bargain was entered into, which wes most unjust to the people. No private individual should be allowed to make one dollar out of an immigration scheme. Better vote twice the money we do, if necessary, to encourage immigration, but be careful to preserve the poor immigrants from the machinations or the boodler. Let us keep these poor people out of the toils of the boodlers and speculators and grafters.

Mr. SCOTT. Does the hon. member interpret Mr. Haultain's statement to mean that Mr. Haultain believed Mr. Barr was to be permitted to make money out of the reserving of land for the colonists?

Mr. GOURLEY. Mr. Haultain used very guarded language. I shall read it to the hon. gentleman, and he may draw his own conclusion as I am drawing mine. Mr. Haultain said:

> He did not wish to use his position in the House to make charges against Mr. Barr when that gentleman could not be present to reply. At the same time he thought that some remarks on the subject ought to be made and had very properly been made. From conversations he had had with members of the colony on the train, between Saskatchewan and Battleford, he was convinced that there had been some gross mismanagement in connection with the colony, and something worse than gross mismanagement in certain financial dealings with it.

My hon. friend may draw his own conclusions. Mr. Haultain went on to add:

> The Dominion government, by allowing Mr. Barr to reserve a certain number of townships for them, had to that extent recognized the scheme, and it was the duty of that government to have all the charges cleared up by a thorough investigation.

The hon. the Minister of the Interior may consider himself innocent, but what do the people think of the matter? What do the people of England, Scotland, Ireland, Germany and Austria think of it? It is the public opinion of those countries with which we have to deal. The hon. minister may treat this matter with a smile, but how do the relatives of the people who came here consider it? When these colonists write home and say that they have been defrauded by the government of this country, and by Mr. Barr, what will these people think? I do not wish to make any sweeping charges against anybody, but Mr. Barr was recognized in Europe as the agent of the government. He occupied perhaps a stronger position as the agent of the government than Mr. Preston. Mr. Preston is the acknowledged agent of the government in England, and if he should do anything, that could be charged against him, this government would be compelled at once to have an investigation. Well, I undertake to say that this reverend clergyman, occupied in the minds of the people of England a stronger position, as an agent of this country, than even Mr. Preston. Everybody knows in what esteem these clergymen are held in England. England owes its vast domains in Africa and Asia largely to the missionary. It owes its influence largely to these men from Oxford and Cambridge, who are the possessors of fortunes, and who use their money, not for their personal benefit, but in promoting settlement in those countries. South Africa was largely brought under the flag of England by Mr. McKenzie, one of the most accomplished clergymen who ever left the old country; and I have no doubt that the people of England regarded Mr. Barr as a high minded, wealthy gentleman, who, in the interests of the empire, without any low desire of making money for himself, was bringing out colonists to settle in this, the empire's principal colony. They never dreamed that he was other than a philanthropist, a religious enthusiast, who desired to help this empire and its people and was spending his own fortune to promote the welfare of Canada and the empire.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Preston's interview would disabuse the minds of the English people of that mistaken impression.

Mr. GOURLEY. I will undertake to say, knowing the history of England, knowing what has been done by English clergymen, as imperialists, in the work of settling the empire, that the very instant Mr. Barr appeared in any part of England, he would be regarded as one of the missionary priests who were devoting their energies to spreading the influence of the empire wherever they could. Hundreds of the clergymen of England, are doing this, every day, to their honour be it said, and Mr. Barr is the only clergyman of the Church of England I have ever heard of, who has prostituted his position for the purpose of making money out of the poor people. I believe that association has corrupted this gentleman, who might otherwise have been an honourable man. Possibly his contact with the government of Canada, in some way brought him from the high level of a clergyman of the Church of England down to the low level of a Canadian boodler. I ask you, Mr. Chairman——

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). Address the Chair as Mr. Speaker.

Mr. GOURLEY. My hon. friend from Victoria (Hon. Mr. Ross), whom I regard very kindly, and whose face is usually a picture of repose and kindness—I wonder why that countenance which often reminds me, when the hon. gentleman is half asleep, very much of the Madonna——

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). It is difficult to refrain from calling the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that he has three times addressed Mr. Speaker as Mr. Chairman.

Mr. GOURLEY—is so much disturbed. Surely that does not cause that intense ruffling of the spirit which I see depicted in the physiognomy of my hon. friend. It must be the political knife which cuts that hon. gentleman this afternoon. Nothing else could so distort that countenance, which is usually marked by a peaceful, somnolent calm. I was proceeding to say that the association of this clergyman with the government of Canada was either unfortunate for the government or the clergyman—either one or the other.

An hon. MEMBER. Both.

Mr. GOURLEY. Well, take it that way. There is only one thing to do. The hon. the Minister of the Interior seems to think that this is a little get-up of our friends over here. Let me tell him that there is a bigger get-up from the North-west, if we can believe the reports. Is it not extraordinary news we have had within a day or so from that lovely capital of the North-west; must not my hon. friends from the North-west blush to learn that these colonists, these people, usually so law-abiding, should have been so aroused, that they felt the necessity of taking the law into their own hands, as is done by our friends across the line? How these people must have suffered when we find a number of them so aroused as to threaten to resort to lynch law; and it may possibly happen that these people will become so exasperated that they will break loose from the traditions of the empire, and forget that there are courts in this country where justice is administered. I call upon the government, in the interests of Canada, in the interests of the immigrants, to have the fullest investigation, so that, if they are innocent they can honourably part company with Mr. Barr. I do not know whether the hon. the Minister of the Interior ever met Mr. Barr. I happened to meet him at a hotel in Ottawa this winter, and I must tell you, Sir, at once, that when I heard him talking flippantly, without the slightest sense of propriety, about this movement, I saw at once that the government had made a most serious mistake in having anything to do with him. And when somebody told me he was a clergyman, I was shocked. And soon after upon meeting a person who knew him, this person told me: 'He is a sharper.' And that is exactly the opinion I formed of the man when I met him at table at the Russell House. If the Postmaster General (Hon. Sir William Mulock) or the Finance Minister (Hon. Mr. Fielding) had had an interview with him, I am sure they would have had enough knowledge of human nature and enough shrewdness to know that Mr. Barr was not the man to entrust with the honour of Canada—for the ambassador carries the honour of his country—and the government did entrust him with the honour of Canada when they employed him to go up and down England, Scotland and Ireland to represent Canada, to solicit from these people their time and their fortunes to come to Canada and build up this country. Therefore, I hope that the government, in the interest of this great movement, will choose his agents with more discretion. For there is no movement that should be guarded with more care than the immigration movement. We want immigrants. We have territory for millions of people. For my part, I have never failed to do what I could to encourage the immigrant to come to this country, to make him believe that Canada is the fairest home to be found on the face of this whole earth. I want every man to come to Canada. And no member of my party, thank God, has every said a word against his country. No member of that party has gone up and down throughout the length and breadth of Canada for ten years, as was done by some hon. gentleman opposite, decrying Canada and proclaiming that immigrants should seek a home in any other country on earth but this. I would not stay one hour with a party that would pursue such a policy. Since hon. gentlemen opposite came into power, we on this side have given them a fair chance to do the work the people expect of them. Wherever I am, I proclaim the glories of Canada. I am often criticised for being too intense a Canadian. But I venture to say, that in ten years, the man who loves his country, and uniformly proclaims that love will be in a better position, than the man who hedges, and doubts the possibilities and the future of this country. The young men are coming forward, and will soon be in possession and control of the affairs of Canada, and every young man, I meet, is seized of the idea, of the greatness, the imperial proportions, the magnificent opportunities and potentialities of this beloved Canada.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton). If the House will extend its courtesy to me for a moment I would like to make a few remarks with regard to matters that have arisen in the course of the debate. In the first place, it is evident that our hon. friends on the other side are under the impression that this colony of people coming from England have been in some way ill treated, subjected to a reception which is likely to discourage other immigrants from coming. I wish to say that I do not believe that, since the first ship sailed up the St. Lawrence river, any body of immigrants have come to Canada who have been treated with the same lavish care as that bestowed upon this colony. They have received an amount of attention that no settlers that I ever heard of have received in any part of Canada before. The most elaborate preparations were made by the department, and hon. gentlemen will find, if they will inquire of men upon the ground who are acquainted with the circumstances of the case, that there has been no attempt in any way whatever to criticise the organization or the work of the department in taking care of these immigrants. We did what never was done before in connection with any party of immigrants—sent out people to put up tents furnished with stoves and put caretakers in attendance. These tents stood twenty miles apart in the colonists' route, so that they might be properly taken care of. The people who settled Manitoba did not have government tents to sleep in. I have seen them in hundreds and thousands going out in their wagons and sleeping under the wagons no matter what the weather was. But, as I say, these colonists were treated with the most elaborate care. And if hon. gentlemen will take the trouble to inquire they will find that every person familiar with the facts of the case will agree with what was stated in a debate in the Northwest Assembly, a copy of which has just been placed in my hands, an extract from which I will read to show that the Immigration Department has done everything which human foresight could devise to provide a proper reception for these immigrants. I quote from the Regina 'Leader' of July 2nd. Mr. Clinkskill, while attacking Mr. Barr—and, I may say, it seems to be popular to attack Mr. Barr just now—added:

> He could not speak too highly of the action of the Immigration Department and the trouble that had been taken by the department. From the time of the arrival of the colonists to the time they were settled on their homesteads the government had done everything in its power.

In addition to doing everything in our power to take care of these people when they arrived and to see that they were transported to their farms, and that their homesteads were found and located for them, we provided farming instructors to teach them the method of putting in and taking care of their crops. So that, so far as that point is concerned, I do not think there is any necessity for defense. But I may add, while I am on this point, that the immigration officials of the government in England are likely to have more trouble in answering the statements of the members of the opposition in this House and elsewhere with regard to the immigration than they are to meet any statements made by members of the Barr colony or any other English settlers in Canada. I object not at all to the statement of my hon. friend from West Toronto (Mr. Clarke) or to some of the other statements made. But statements which indicate that English immigrants coming here are ill-treated or not properly received are the worst and most difficult to meet on the part of our immigration agents in the old country. The anxiety some of our hon. friends express for the success of immigration would be better shown by refraining from making statements which cannot be justified. Now, a word or two with regard to the promises made or engagements entered into by the government with these people. The government entered into no engagement whatever with these people except that they would give them homesteads within a certain tract of land. They did reserve and give homesteads in that tract to any who wanted them. A considerable number of these people found, as we knew they would find when they came here, that they did not want to take up homesteads in that tract. We did the best we could to find homesteads for them in other places. It has been stated that a large number have returned to England and have complained of the treatment they received. I have the statement of the officer who is in charge of these people that not a single original Barr colonist has returned to England. That statement was made on the 16th June, about twenty days ago. The statements made in the press in regard to this matter as a rule, are simply wild statements. Our friends on the other side of the House should not take up statements of this kind, assume that they are true and hold the government responsible for the condition of things which they show, making speeches in this House which are taken up in England as made by responsible men——

Mr. CLARKE. Does the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Sifton) find anything in the paper he read from to contradict statements made by Mr. Haultain.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. What statement ?

Mr. CLARKE. The statements presented by him in the legislature.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. What part of it ? Mr. Haultain made a speech——

Mr. CLARKE. The whole statement. Will the hon. Minister of the Interior read that statement ? I will send him a copy now.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (reading)

> The Premier said he did not wish to use his position in the House to make charges against Mr. Barr when that gentleman could not be present to reply. At the same time, he thought some remarks on the subject ought to be made and had very properly been made. From conversation he had had with members of the colony on the trail between Saskatoon and Battleford, he was convinced there had been some gross mismanagement in connection with the colony, and something worse than gross mismanagement in certain financial dealings with it. The Dominion government, by allowing Mr. Barr to reserve a certain number of townships had to that extent recognized the scheme, and it was the duty of that government to have all the charges cleared up by a thorough investigation. He said this was in the interests of the territories and in the interests of some of the best immigrants that ever came into the country.

My hon. friend asked me if I was contradicting Mr. Haultain. I am not prepared to contradict Mr. Haultain. He expressed his opinion and he is entitled to it. Possibly his opinion may be correct, but the grounds of his opinion have not been laid before me, and therefore, until they have been, I am entitled to entertain my own opinion.

Mr. CLARKE. Probably the hon. gentle man did not hear me. He stated to the House that he had received a newspaper containing a report of the debate, and he read from a paper that Mr. Clinkskill stated that great care and attention had been paid to the immigrants, and I asked him if he found anything in the debate contradicting the assertions made by the premier?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I was referring to the action of the department, and I say the fact is that the department has done everything it was possible to do on behalf of these immigrants. We have dealt with them in the most careful and considerate way, and my hon. friends on the other side of the House could not, if they desired to do so, lay their finger upon a single thing that ought to have been done which was not done in connection with the arrangements or the reception of these immigrants. Now the point which the hon. gentleman originally drew attention to, and to which I find no fault, is the apparent allegation that there has been financial dealings between members of the colony and Mr. Barr himself, and that Mr. Barr has not dealt properly with them. In so far as that is concerned, as I have already said in reply to the hon. gentleman, I have no information, and can therefore express no opinion. But so far as the relations of the department with these people are concerned, I have to say that we have not been in default in any respect whatever, and that no member of the colony, so far as I know, has stated that the government has been at fault or has been in default in its dealings with them. My hon. friend, the leader of the opposition, has made a laboured attempt to show that the statement I made in my first remarks regarding the relations between Mr. Barr, the colony, and Mr. Barr and the department, was not correct. I have to repeat that the statement which I made was absolutely correct.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I did not say it was incorrect. All I said was that it did not seem to be quite consistent with the statement of the Commissioner of Immigration.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The hon. gentleman's argument appeared designed to leave upon the minds of the members of the House the impression that my statement was not accurate. I have simply to say that my statement was accurate in every possible respect. I may say en passant that I did not assume, in stating the position as I did, that I am bound by a newspaper report of statements of one of the officers of the department, which may or may not be correctly reported. But the facts are precisely as I have stated, that the relations of the department with Mr. Barr consisted simply in the fact that we reserved certain lands in pursuance of the arrangements which we made with Mr. Barr, and Mr. Barr has not received any commission from the Department of the Interior in any way, shape or form, and no agreement exists between the department and Mr. Barr to pay him anything. If Mr. Preston did make any statement that indicated the contrary, his statement was to that extent incorrect. The deputy minister made the arrangement himself, and he informs me that he refused to make any arrangement for compensation. The only thing in the world that the department did, so far as Mr. Barr was concerned, was to say, if you secure settlers for these lands before a certain date, we will accept entries for them. Mr. Barr paid his money, he produced his settlers, and they made their entry, and the result is that we have at the present time something over 1,800 homestead entries from good and substantial people, some of the best people, as Mr. Haultain said, that ever went into the North-west. As my colonial agent reports, not a single one of these immigrants has returned to England. So I do not see that there is anything unsatisfactory in the nature of the transaction, nor do I see any reason why it should be criticised adversely. It is, no doubt, unfortunate that the financial arrangements between Mr. Barr and the people he brought out turned out as they did. It would be more satisfactory if he had been able to remain with the colony and to close the matter up. But no member of that colony has laid any complaints before the department, no member of the colony has said to the department, we have been misled, we have paid this money for which we have got no value. Therefore, nothing has been done which would justify the Department of the Interior in ordering an investigation. The position at the present time is that the affair has been successfully carried out. In so far as Mr. Barr and his people are concerned, and the financial arrangements originally entered into between them, if they have been severed, they have been severed voluntarily by the people and Mr. Barr, and Mr. Barr has refunded any money which he may have had that belonged to these people. If, therefore, the position is such that an investigation is demanded, then certainly the information ought to be placed before the department which would justify such an investigation, but up to the present time that has not been done.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). With the indulgence of the House, I would like to say one or two words in respect to what has just fallen from the Minister of the Interior. He accused me of having made a laboured statement to show that he was incorrect. I did not make any laboured statement, or any statement at all, to show that he was incorrect, but I brought to his attention, as it was my right and duty to do, the fact that the statement of his chief commissioner of immigration in England was entirely different to that which he made in the House, and entirely different to that which he has made to the House just now. My hon. friend says he is not responsible for the utterances of Mr. Preston. He is responsible for the utterances of Mr. Preston when Mr. Preston undertakes to speak as commissioner of immigration for Canada.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. My hon. friend is now making a statement wholly incorrect. I did not say that I was not responsible for the utterances of Mr. Preston, I said I was not responsible for his reported utterances, which might or might not be correct. If the hon. gentleman wishes to criticise my utterances, he should take the trouble to listen to what I said.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I listened carefully to the hon. gentleman, and I gathered from his statement what I said to the House a moment ago. If he did not mean that, I am glad to know it. I think under the circumstances it would be his duty to communicate at once by telegram with his chief commissioner in London and find whether that chief commissioner did make a statement which is diametrically opposed to the statement of the Minister of the Interior in the House to-day. That at least is due to the House, and due to the country, and to the government of which the hon. gentleman is a member, and more than that, to himself. Now it is a remarkable thing that the chief commissioner of immigration in England should have made this statement, if he has made it, and we find it reported in the 'Canadian Gazette' in London, a reputable journal, we find it copied in the 'Westminster Gazette,' another reputable journal, that Mr. Barr was to receive seven shillings apiece for each of these immigrants. My hon. friend does not say that he is not to receive anything.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes, I do.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Well, he did not state that to the House.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes, I did.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. I marked his words most particularly. He said that his deputy minister had not made any agreement——

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Not at all, the hon. gentleman is making a statement that is wholly incorrect. I stated as clearly as the English language would allow that there was no such arrangement for the payment of any money to Mr. Barr, and I then followed it up by saying that my deputy minister had so informed me.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Well, I understood the hon. gentleman to say nothing of the kind, but to use the language which I have quoted, and I say that after hearing his very emphatic statement made just now——

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. 'Hansard' will show.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am perfectly aware of that, that is not special news to us. The hon. gentleman is not enlightening us in any way by stating that 'Hansard' will show. We knew that before he made the remark.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It will enlighten the hon. gentleman when he reads it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). This is, I think, notwithstanding the very flippant way in which the hon. gentleman is disposed to treat it, a matter of some serious concern, because, we have Mr. Preston reported in two leading journals of the mother country as having stated that the government was to pay to Mr. Barr seven shillings per head for these immigrants. We have that published through the length and breadth of the United Kingdom, and if that statement is incorrect which was made as far back as the 28th of May, how does it happen that no contradiction has been made in the 'Canadian Gazette' or in some leading journal in the mother country? I suppose the hon. minister's attention or the attention of some of his officials has been drawn to this interview. I would suppose that the officers in charge of the administration of his department would keep track of information of this kind relating to the Department of the Interior, and I have not the slightest doubt that this came to the attention of some officer of his department, although, of course I accept without the slightest hesitation the statement of the hon. gentleman that he knew of it for the first time to-day. If we have a right to assume that, how does it happen that up to this time not the slightest contradiction of Mr. Preston's statement has been made? How does it happen that no officer of the Department of the Interior has called the attention of Mr. Preston to the fact that he has made a very serious and misleading statement in the press of the mother country and which is to be found in the newspaper which I have just read to the House? The hon. minister thinks that the opposition are to be censured for bringing this matter to the attention of the government, that we ought to apologize, as has been suggested, for bringing the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that one of his officers is reported as publishing through a leading paper in the mother country a statement diametrically opposed to that which he has given to the House to-day. I should think the hon. gentleman would be glad to have his attention called to the subject in order that he might tell Mr. Preston that the statement made by him was a statement that had no foundation in fact. Instead of that he seems to be a little pettish on the subject, a little irritable, and he talks about the attempts made to show that what he has said is incorrect. Some one is incorrect. There is no doubt that either Mr. Preston is incorrect or the hon. minister is incorrect, and we assume in the House, of course, taking the hon. gentleman's statement, that it is Mr. Preston who is incorrect. I say that if Mr. Preston is incorrect the sooner he is corrected the better, because the hon. gentleman cannot conceal from the people of this country the fact that there has been a great deal of scandal in connection with this immigration, and when coupled with that we have the fact that the people of the British Isles are informed that Mr. Barr was in the pay of this government I do not think it is necessary for the hon. gentleman to show the pettishness he has done in regard to this matter or the spirit in which he has dealt with it in making the speech which he has just made to this House. I think it is of importance to this country that incorrect statements should not be published in the mother country by Mr. Preston acting as chief commissioner of the Canadian government in respect to immigration. I repeat that statement. I withdraw nothing from it. I say that in bringing this matter to the attention of the House my hon. friend from West Toronto (Mr. Clarke) has done no more than his duty and now that these facts have been brought to his attention he would have failed absolutely in his duty as a public man and as a member of this House if he had not brought this matter to the attention of this House and the country.

Mr. BELL. Did I understand the hon. minister to make the statement that the department have received 1,800 homestead entries from the Barr colonists?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I will give my hon. friend (Mr. Bell) the number in a moment—it is 1823.

Mr. BELL. Now, the deputy minister in giving evidence in the course of this session before the Committee on Agriculture said—

Mr. SPEAKER. I would call the attention of the hon. member (Mr. Bell) to the fact that he has already spoken.

Mr. BELL. I think several other hon. gentlemen have already spoken.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I would prefer to give the hon. gentleman the information if he wishes to ask for it.

Mr. BELL. The statement was made by Mr. Smart, Deputy Minister of the Interior before the Committee on Agriculture that out of 1,500 or 1,600 entries, only about 500 of these colonists had settled in the colony and on the adjacent lands.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. When was that statement made?

Mr. BELL. On the 3rd of June, 1903.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I suppose they have been making entries since that time ?

Mr. BELL. The deputy minister claimed that up to that time they had made some 1,500 or 1,600 entries.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We have received from the people who came in Mr. Barr's party altogether, according to the returns that were furnished to me yesterday, 1,823 entries, but of course they are not all on the reserve. They were made at different places. If they decided to go elsewhere we facilitate them in doing so.

Mr. BELL. I suppose the hon. minister can bring down the returns to which he has just referred ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The information was furnished by the department to me yesterday.

Mr. BELL. Could the hon. minister lay that on the Table ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes, if the hon. gentleman desires it.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Sir William Mulock). I do not wish to take up the time of the House, but I would just call the attention of the House to what Mr. Preston is reported to have said in the 'Canadian Gazette' from which the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax) has quoted. I understood the hon. leader of the opposition to allege that the statement of Mr. Preston was that Mr. Barr was to receive from the Canadian government seven shillings per head for the immigrants he brought to Canada.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I read his statement and I read it seven shillings per head. He said the amount had not been finally settled. I read the exact words.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman read the statement and commented upon it and in his comment he ventured to depart from the statement. I merely wish to emphasize the fact that his comment suggesting that Mr. Preston had stated that the government intended to pay seven shillings per head is not borne out by the quotation. The hon. gentleman pretended to suggest that there was some conflict of statement between the hon. Minister of the Interior (Hon. Mr. Sifton) and Mr. Preston inasmuch as the hon. Minister of the Interior had laid it down beyond any question there was no foundation for the statement that Mr. Barr was to be paid by the Canadian government seven shillings per head or anything per head, and that Mr. Preston's statement was at variance with the statement of the hon. minister. That is the suggestion of the hon. leader of the opposition and his suggestion is a development of the statement of Mr. Preston. His comment and inference are far greater than are warranted by the statement of Mr. Preston. I find that Mr. Preston said at the most, according to the report 'he will also probably receive' not that he will receive, but that 'he will also probably receive' and then it goes on to say 'the matter has not yet been settled.'

Mr. CLARKE. Read the whole of it.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clarke) permit me to read it ? I am trying to read the report of his statement. 'He will also probably receive—the matter has not yet been settled—seven shillings per emigrant from the Canadian government.' Then, the hon. leader of the opposition, forgetting that Mr. Preston said that he would 'probably' receive and forgetting that Mr. Preston said the matter had not been settled proceeds to attribute to Mr. Preston the positive statement that the government had promised to pay seven shillings per head. That is something that an officer 3,000 miles away cannot know and that is the way such a qualified statement as this can be developed in a few moments into a positive allegation. Surely the hon. leader of the opposition is forgetting that at a meeting of the Committee on Agriculture to which the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Bell) alluded the Deputy Minister of the Interior was examined. I was not present at that meeting, but I am told that the deputy minister was examined on that question and upon that question he stated in the most explicit language that the government had not agreed to pay Mr. Barr any money per head for these colonists and that that statement of Mr. Smart was duly reported in the press of Canada. And yet in the face of that, and the qualified doubting statement of an officer, the leader of the opposition pretends to allege that a certain sum must have been agreed upon to be paid. That is not a fair argument for the leader of the opposition to make, and a closer regard to accuracy would give much greater weight to any argument that may be advanced for the enlightenment of this House or the country.

Mr. G. W. FOWLER (King's, N.B.). It is rather amusing to find the Minister of the Interior adopting the tone he has adopted in lecturing hon. gentlemen on this side of the House for making any criticism whatever of anything that occurs in his department. Has the Department of the Interior during the hon. gentleman's incumbency of office been conducted in such a manner as to preclude criticism ? Has not the air been full of rumours too with respect to mismanagement in the Yukon? Is there not now a commission appointed to investigate into the affairs of the Yukon ; have not the newspapers for several months past been full of complaints with respect to this Barr colony? And yet we are not to mention the matter here because we are told it is going to have a serious effect upon immigration into this country. Why, Sir, Premier Haultain of the North-west Territories made a stronger statement in the North-west Assembly. He having met these colonists on their trek from Saskatoon to Battleford; having talked to them and having heard their complaints, he the premier of that country says that these are grave charges against this government, and that in the interest of the country these charges should be investigated. Mr. Haultain very clearly and very distinctly connects the government with Mr. Barr in this matter. I believe that it is in the interest of truth and it should be stated that after the mischief had been done, after this man Barr had been sent as an agent to England and allowed to make all sorts of wild and gross misstatements in regard to the conditions that the immigrants would find in Canada; after all this had been done and the people were brought here, I do believe that the department made an honest effort to try and make the conditions as easy for these immigrants as possible. I was in Winnipeg and visited the immigration office there and I am satisfied from the statements to me that the officers were doing honestly what they could to make things as easy for these immigrants as possible. But the mischief had already been done, and it was not the officers at Winnipeg who were to blame, but it was the officers higher placed in the department who made this arrangement, Mr. Preston made his statement which appeared in the 'Canadian Gazette' on the 28th of May at the very time when the Minister of the Interior was in London, and I have no doubt he was in daily communication with his officer Mr. Preston, and I have no doubt that he read the 'Canadian Gazette.' It is a sort of quasi government organ, I believe, and it is looked upon of course as speaking with authority on Canadian matters in England and I assume the minister read the statement. At all events he should have read it and in the absence of any contrary statement I believe he did.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I stated in reply to the leader of the opposition and I state now that my attention was never called to the interview in question until this afternoon. I was in London at the time I believe. I did not occupy much of my time in reading newspapers, but whether I did or not I did not see that interview and I never saw the statements contained in it until now.

Mr. FOWLER. It may be that the minister's social duties were so great as to deprive him of the opportunity of reading the newspapers, and of course I must accept the statement that he did not see the interview in question. But Mr. Preston must have seen the interview and he has not contradicted it, and therefore we must take it for granted that the interview represents exactly what Mr. Preston said. The Minister of the Interior, as he has admitted, is responsible for the statements of his agent Mr. Preston. Mr. Preston of course gave us the impression last year that he was as big a man as the Minister of the Interior himself.

Mr. CLARKE. An understudy.

Mr. FOWLER. Yes a sort of understudy to the minister. At all events it is perfectly true that the Minister of the Interior cannot divest himself of the responsibility for whatever failure there may be in connection with this Barr colony. Mr. Preston says in his uncontradicted statement that they were in constant communication with Mr. Barr from the outset, and on the 28th of May, long after the immigrants had shown themselves to be thoroughly dissatisfied with Mr. Barr's leadership and had repudiated him and driven him out of the colony; even after that, Mr. Preston the responsible head of the immigration office in London states that they were perfectly satisfied with Mr. Barr. Therefore they would make Mr. Barr their agent even by that endorsation alone, so that the department is absolutely responsible for everything this man Barr has done. The complaint we make is that they took this man up without knowing anything of his character, and without taking precautions that he would not make statements to the immigrants which were grossly misleading, and induce them to come here under false pretenses. And now the minister insinuates that we are unpatriotic because we draw the attention of the country to the misconduct of the Department of the Interior in this respect. If we had no other justification, the statement that is made by Mr. Haultain the Premier of the North-west Territories, is sufficient in itself. He says:—

Mr. DAVIS. Read it again.

Mr. FOWLER. It cannot be read too often and I should think that the member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis) would have interest enough in that country from which he comes——

Mr. BENNETT. He has got all he can.

Mr. DAVIS. I have not got as much as you have yet; you better sing small.

Mr. FOWLER. These railways that the member for Saskatchewan has in that country would not be much good to him if there is a black eye given to immigration. Mr. Haultain says:

> From conversations he had with members of the colony on the trail between Saskatoon and Battleford he was convinced there had been gross mismanagement.

That is strong language coming from the premier of the Territories. Gross mismanagement by whom? Was it by Mr Barr? Well, if it be, Mr. Barr is the accredited agent of the Department of the Interior according to Mr. Preston. Therefore, if there had been gross mismanagement by Mr. Barr it was gross mismanagement by the Department of the Interior, because the department is responsible for its agents.

That there had been some gross mismanagement in connection with the colony and something worse than gross mismanagement in certain financial dealings with it.

And yet the Minister of the Interior is actually surprised that this matter should be referred to, and he says there is no need for investigation. Well, the Minister of the Interior told us that he did not read the papers in London, but surely he must read them at home to know what is going on, and if he does he must know that there has been a great deal of complaint in connection with this Barr enterprise. Mr. Haultain, who occupies a very high position in the North-west Territories, a man who is moderate in his views, and who is not inclined to make strong statements unless he has strong reasons behind them. Mr. Haultain's view is not the same as that of the Minister of the Interior, that there is no necessity for an investigation. It is quite the contrary. He says :

The Dominion government, by allowing Mr. Barr to reserve a certain number of townships, had to that extent recognized the scheme.

But we had stronger statements than that in the statements made by Mr. Preston. He stated that the government were cognizant of every step taken by Mr. Barr from beginning to end, that before he floated his scheme he went to the government and obtained their approval, and their consent to his taking up these townships. And yet the Minister of the Interior tried to fix the responsibility on Mr. Barr and to make out that his department was not responsible, and that there was nothing to submit to an investigation. Mr. Haultain thinks otherwise. He says :

It was the duty of that government to have all the charges cleared up by a thorough investigation.

Not the sort of investigation that we are promised in the Yukon matter. I suppose that if we were going to have an investigation parallel with that, the government would have to appoint say the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis) as a commissioner. Mr. Haultain went on to say :

It was in the interest of the territories and in the interest of some of the best immigrants that had ever come into the country.

I have no doubt there are splendid immigrants among those people ; I daresay they are all good immigrants. But they were brought in under false pretenses by this man Barr, who, as the hon. member for Colchester says, is a disgrace to his cloth. The hon. Minister of Labour thought it incumbent upon him to read a lesson to the hon. leader of the opposition, and he attempted to show, by garbled statements with respect to this interview with Mr. Preston, that the hon. leader of the opposition was drawing too strong an inference from what Mr. Preston said. Let us see. These are Mr. Preston's words with regard to Mr. Barr's remuneration :

He will also probably receive—the matter has not yet been settled—seven shillings per immigrant from the Canadian government. Altogether he may get about £3,000 in commission for the party.

SUPPLY—THE BARR COLONY.

Mr. FOWLER. When interrupted by the summons of the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, I was referring to the statement made by the hon. the Minister of Labour and his attempt to prove that the hon. the leader of the opposition drew a wrong inference from the Preston interview. That interview we must accept as authentic. The proof of its authenticity is beyond all question. Mr. Preston says :

> He will also probably receive—the matter has not yet been settled—seven shillings per immigrant from the Canadian government.

The only inference, Mr. Speaker, that can be drawn from that statement is that an amount was to be paid, but what that amount was to be had not yet been settled. Mr. Preston speaks in another place :

> It being the custom to pay to agents obtaining immigrants a certain percentage per head.

I think that is what the department does when immigrants are brought from the United States. The agents are allowed $3 per head, and evidently this man was to get a certain amount, probably seven shillings per head. It may be that now, on account of these complaints, the government will not pay him anything. Certainly they should not, under the circumstances. I fail to understand why the hon. the Minister of the Interior should have thought fit to censure hon. members on this side for bringing this matter up. Why, we would be remiss in our duty if we did not ; we would lay ourselves open to censure for having failed to do our duty. I find in the Toronto 'News' of July 9th, the following despatch from Winnipeg :

> As to his future plans, Mr. Barr was noncommittal, saying these were yet indefinite but it was possible he might bring out more immigrants.

So well satisfied apparently was the government with Mr. Barr that he is on the point of bringing out more immigrants. Yet, we are to be censured by the hon. the Minister of the Interior for venturing to criticise this thing in the House. The hon. the minister would evidently like to be in the position of the Czar of all the Russias, against whom, when he issues an edict, no man dare say a word. That might suit the hon. gentleman, and he might find it convenient to put the country under martial law. The hon. gentleman will have to look after the newspapers, for they are committing the unpardonable sin of daring to criticise the conduct of his own department. Unquestionably this is a matter that should have, as Mr. Haultain says, a most thorough investigation. It is incumbent on the Department of the Interior to clear itself of these charges, because the charges made against Mr. Barr are actually made against the Department of the Interior, which made him its agent. Could there be any doubt in any man's mind as to the agency existing between Mr. Barr and the Department of the Interior ? What are the facts ? This man Barr, before he did anything at all, went to the Department of the Interior and arranged to have a block of homesteads reserved for him and his colony. Then he went to the Canadian Pacific Railway and got a reserve of certain lands adjoining these homesteads. Then, from the very inception of this scheme, Mr. Barr was in constant communication with the government. The government knew everything that was going on, and approved of his plans. The government insisted upon knowing all about the character of the immigrants he was bringing in. Mr. Preston said :

> In granting this concession to Mr. Barr, our government had no intention of divesting itself of its responsibility.

But they had the same responsibility as if Mr. Preston himself, or any other agent in the employ of the department, had got up that colony. Mr. Preston said : 'We do not wish to divest ourselves of any responsibility.' The hon. the Minister of the Interior to-day, however, declines to assume any responsibility. Mr. Preston further said :

> The immigrants paid their entrance fees to the homesteads through myself, and so perfect was our organization that not an hour's delay at any point, not even at Winnipeg, from which came such disquieting news some time ago, was experienced in passing through.

We know better than that. We know that it was a long time before these people could be moved. We know that there was a great deal of trouble and difficulty while they were camped at Saskatoon, and that no proper arrangements were made for their removal. They were told by Mr. Barr—and that must have been with the knowledge of Mr. Preston, because he says the government were perfectly cognizant of everything connected with the transaction—that houses would be ready for them and that teams would be on hand to carry them from Saskatoon to their homesteads, and that a certain amount of ploughing had been done. Not one of these houses were built, and tents had to be provided for these people when they arrived at their destination. The statement of Mr. Preston, therefore, with respect to the arrangements made, is absolutely untrue. After these people were dumped down by Mr. Barr, in Saskatoon, the department did take hold of them and do what it could under the circumstances. It is not for what the department did for these people, after they were dumped at Saskatoon, that we are criticising it, but because the hon. minister and his officers were not aware that this was simply a money making scheme of Mr. Barr, and that he was gulling these people all through. A considerable number of those colonists were certainly not suited to agricultural life at all, and had not the slightest conception of what it meant. Some of them had never been outside the city of London, except on Hampstead Hill. I do not see how the government can escape responsibility, and we demand an investigation, in order to have those responsible brought to account. Instead of its being an injury to the country to have this matter criticised, it will be for the good of the country to show the outside world that when there is anything wrong we are willing to investigate and make it right. It is the bounden duty of the hon. minister to see that a thorough investigation be made at once by a responsible party, and that compensation be given those who have been wronged, and punishment be meted out to the guilty.

Mr. T. O. DAVIS (Saskatchewan). The opposition may congratulate themselves upon the fact that they have kicked up quite a disturbance, which they think, perhaps, may have the effect of interfering with the good work that is being done by the Minister of the Interior in promoting immigration. I quite sympathize with the opposition. They have been fishing all session, and up to the present time they have been able to catch nothing. But they think now they have hooked a small minnow——

An hon. MEMBER. A bar.

Mr. DAVIS. They think they have got a little fish in the shape of this trouble they have made this afternoon. The whole thing is a tempest in a teapot, and they have gone far afield to connect Mr. Barr with the government in this immigration scheme. I am not going to discuss any of the statements made by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fowler) who has just taken his seat, nor the hon. member for Colchester (Mr. Gourley). But I do think the leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax), who occupies a very responsible position in this House has gone a little far afield in trying to misquote the statements made by the Minister of the Interior, and also the statements made in the 'Canadian Gazette' as to what Mr. Preston said in the old country. The leader of the opposition made the positive statement that the government had agreed to give Mr. Barr seven shillings for each immigrant that he brought out, and that Mr. Preston said so. He never said anything of the kind——

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I beg the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Davis) pardon. I read exactly what Mr. Preston did say.

Mr. DAVIS. I accept the statement of the hon. gentleman. But it appears to me that it was as clear as the English language could make it that Mr. Preston did not say what has been attributed to him, but he said that the matter had not been settled but they might probably give seven shillings a head. However, as I said, the whole case is a tempest in a teapot. I would like to review the whole case.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. DAVIS. I am interested in this matter, and I venture to say I know as much about it, and perhaps a good deal more, than some of the hon. gentlemen who have been speaking on the other side. I am in communication all the time with the gentlemen connected with the colonists. I met Mr. Barr when he arrived with his colony at St. John, and all the colonists that I spoke to were well seized of the fact that the government had nothing to do with Mr. Barr, that he was going on his own responsibility, and had no connection with the government. This Mr. Barr, an English clergyman, came to the department and said he intended to bring out a colony of Englishmen. Of course, we are anxious, as hon. gentlemen opposite are anxious, to get English immigrants into Canada. The department treated Mr. Barr courteously and set aside a certain quantity of land for the colonists he intended to bring in. Mr. Barr brought the colonists in and the government had nothing to do with him, but they did all they could to facilitate the settlement of these colonists. That is proven by the gentleman who brought this question up in the North-west assembly, Mr. Clinkskill. He stated that the government had done everything they could to make things easy for the colonists on their arrival in Canada. This gentleman, Mr. Clinkskill, who started all this disturbance, is a strong Conservative. If he could have made out anything against the government he would have been glad to do it. But he declared in the assembly that the government and its officials had done everything possible for these colonists. And Mr. Haultain made a statement, he made no charge, but simply a rambling statement in reply to Mr. Clinkskill and suggested that the case should be investigated. What is there to investigate? The government is not concerned in the matter so far as I can see, except that they did what they could to facilitate the settlement of these people in Canada. Some of the statements made by hon. gentlemen opposite may have the effect of checking the stream of immigration to this country. So far as the people of the North-west are concerned, they will not thank these gentlemen for the statements they have made this afternoon. One gentleman, for instance, said that the Barr colony had not proven a success. As a matter of fact it is a success. The fact that Mr. Barr as head of the colony has been ousted, to use the common expression, does not prove that the colony is not successful. I have a letter from Mr. Lloyd, who is in charge of the colony, and he assures me that the colonists are doing all right, making their entries and going ahead. If there were any charges to be made, Mr. Lloyd would probably be the man to make them. If there had been anything unpleasant, would not he have written to the minister or somebody else asking for an investigation? But there is nothing in his letters about these gentlemen having been swindled out of their money by Mr. Barr. He wrote to me that the colonists wanted a post office. The Postmaster General sent up an inspector to look over the situation, and the result is that they have their post office. They get everything they ask for. The Minister of the Interior has even sent up a sub-agent to receive their entries, so that they may not have to drive sixty or seventy miles to make them. The colonists have nothing against the government; they are not grumbling at all. There may be some grumbling in connection with Mr. Barr, but Mr. Barr and the government are separate people. If when Mr. Barr, an English clergyman, came here to Ottawa and said he was organizing a colony of British immigrants, the minister had not treated him as he did, and if he had not set aside these lands, what a howl would have been raised by hon. gentlemen opposite. They would have raised a debate lasting even longer than this one, and would have declared that we did not approve of British immigrants, that no immigrants would suit us, but Doukhobors and Galicians and so on, as they have said over and over again. The Immigration Department, under the control of the hon. Minister of the Interior has proved most successful. It makes hon. gentlemen opposite sore to find that 120,000 good immigrants were brought into this country last year, particularly when they contrast this with the feeble efforts put forth by their own friends when they were in office. These hon. gentlemen are always looking for a weak point in this government, but, so far as what they have been talking about this afternoon is concerned, there is very little capital in it all for them. Why did Mr. Clinkskill bring this matter up in the territorial assembly? Hon. gentlemen opposite read the newspapers, so they must have been made aware that when Mr. Barr got to Saskatoon, he and Mr. Clinkskill had a falling out which nearly ended in a free fight. Mr. Clinkskill would naturally feel a little sore; so he went down to the meeting of the assembly and made these statements against Mr. Barr. There was not a word, mark you, against the government though Mr. Clinkskill is a strong Conservative. Mr. Haultain answered in a general way that there should be an investigation. There is nothing in that; he makes no charges. And now hon. gentlemen opposite take it up and make it the subject of half a day's debate in the hope that they may be able to show that there is something wrong and that they may stop immigration coming into the country. They could occupy their time more profitably in discussing other subjects. No doubt, what they have said will make good newspaper articles for their press, and it will be wired across to Britain to make sensational articles there. So far as the benefit of Canada is concerned, these hon. gentlemen opposite are not doing a friendly act, and they are very far from helping us to settle the prairies of the west.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). The hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis) seems to think that the opposition have done something wrong in bringing this matter before the House, and characterizes the conduct of hon. gentlemen on this side as raising a tempest in a teapot. Is that what he calls the remarks of the premier of the territories made in the legislative assembly a few days ago? Has he no respect for the high position of Mr. Haultain and the views he expressed, that he should characterize this as a tempest in a teapot?

Mr. DAVIS. I want to tell the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) that no doubt the premier of the North-west Territories is trying to assist hon. gentlemen opposite to kick up some kind of a disturbance. He is doing it all the time.

Mr. SPROULE. Mr. Haultain made a statement in reference to facts that came under his own observation. He said he had received information at first hand, and therefore he was justified in making the grave charges which he did, charges of financial mismanagement, even of crookedness.

Mr. SCOTT. Did Mr. Haultain, in his speech in the assembly, say that the government was connected directly or indirectly with any of these financial transactions?

Mr. SPROULE. He said that the government's connection with it demanded a searching inquiry, in the interests of immigration and in the interests of the North-west Territories, so as either to substantiate the charges or disprove them. Yet the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis) says it is only a tempest in a teapot.

Mr. DAVIS. The colony were well pleased with the fact that the government had nothing to do with Mr. Barr.

Mr. SPROULE. Where did they so express themselves, and when? It was not in the provinces, because we never saw anything to that effect. But they associated the Rev. Mr. Barr with the operations carried on by the government, and does the member for Saskatchewan take the ground that there was no connection between Mr. Barr and the government? No connection after Mr. Barr had succeeded in getting the government to set apart several townships of land for the purpose of enabling him to colonize it, and to get a commission for so doing, for the purpose of enabling him to get a rake-off out of it, under the garb of philanthropy, when bringing people from the old country here under misrepresentation and delusion? Yet we are told that it is only a tempest in a teapot. He says the Barr colony was a great success, and he says that in face of the fact that we are told by a reporter from that country that only 500 out of the 2,000 have settled in that colony. What became of the other 1,500? They were like the children of Israel who wandered forty years in the wilderness, and when they got to the promised land very few were remaining of those who left their homes. Then it was not an unqualified success. These men discovered, when they reached the promised land which was represented to them as a land flowing with milk and honey, that they had been misled and deceived. The Minister of the Interior says he thinks it is a very improper thing that the opposition should bring this matter to the attention of the House and the country. Why, if nothing else was accomplished in bringing this matter to the attention of the minister than to give him an opportunity of knowing what he did not know before, which he admits himself he did not know, I say if nothing else was accomplished but to enable him to contradict the allegations which were made in the 'Canadian Gazette' in London, then we are justified in bringing it before the House. He declared that the statements that appeared in the 'Gazette' were incorrect in almost every particular, but he admits that he had not seen these statements, and knew nothing of them until they were brought to his attention in the House to-day. So, if nothing else was accomplished than to give him an opportunity of denying these statements it certainly justifies us in doing what we have done. In my judgment there is nothing more detrimental to the country, or to the interests of immigration, than to allow the people who come here to be misled. Is it a fact that these people were or were not misled? Take their own statements for it. What are a few of their statements? They declare that they were told that they were coming to a country where they would have a railway at their door, and they find there is no railway within a hundred miles of them. Were they not misled in that particular? This is their own public statement, made to the whole world, that they were told they were coming to a country where they would have the convenience of a railway at their door; they were going to be planted on land as rich as could be found anywhere in the world; they were going to enter into the enjoyment of homes prepared for them by Mr. Barr and the Canadian government; they were going to enjoy the comforts of life, teams were to be provided for them, the necessaries of life provided for them, some ploughing done. They were brought out in the spring of the year so that they might sow their grain and be ready for reaping it in a few months hence. Yet in all these respects they were the victims of a delusion and a snare—no soil broken up, no homes built, no teams provided, no railway for hundreds of miles of the locality where they were settled. Is it to be said that we are doing wrong in trying to set this matter right? I ask the question again. Did the Rev. Mr. Barr mislead these people? Who is the Rev. Mr. Barr? He is one of the governments agents? Under whose aegis was he acting? Under the aegis of the Department of the Interior, under the aegis of the government. Very naturally these poor immigrants would say that this man must be regarded as a respectable and a truthful man, otherwise he would not be employed by the Canadian government. Therefore they have a right to assume that the representations he made were correct. Now, I say the very fact that he was acting under the government, under Mr. Preston, the immigration agent, that he was acting with the knowledge and consent of the government, was calculated to mislead these people into relying on his statements. If these statements were correct, there could be no harm done, but if the statements were incorrect, and these people were induced to come to this country through misrepresentation, then I say this government must be held responsible, and the Minister of the Interior must share that responsibility.

Mr. SCOTT. The colonists make no such claim.

Mr. SPROULE. The colonists declare they were deceived.

Mr. SCOTT. By whom?

Mr. SPROULE. By the Rev. Mr. Barr, and the Rev. Mr. Barr was an agent of the government, and they had a right to assume that the government would not send out an agent there that would mislead them.

Mr. SCOTT. I venture to say there is not one colonist who claims that Mr. Barr was the government agent.

Mr. SPROULE. I saw a statement that appeared in one of the western papers, a statement made by one of the colonists, who deliberately claimed that they were deceived.

Mr. SCOTT. Not by a government agent?

Mr. SPROULE. By Mr. Barr, and I say Mr. Barr was a government agent, he was acting under the government, acting with the knowledge of the government, he got land set apart for that purpose from the government, he was given the duty of colonizing that land, and was given a rake-off that was going to him for his philanthropic work. So the hon. gentleman should restrain himself.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Mr. Barr never got any land from the government in any shape or form.

Mr. SPROULE. Did he not get a portion of the land to be set apart to be colonized?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No.

Mr. SPROULE. The minister himself stated that the department assigned a certain number of townships to him.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I presume the hon. gentleman would like to know the facts. The homestead law permits any person over eighteen years of age, and possessing certain qualifications, to take up a homestead, and that is done under the direction of the Minister of the Interior, and I consented to an arrangement whereby a certain number of quarter sections were held in the names of persons whose names Mr. Barr had furnished to the department, and they were permitted to take up these homesteads.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the hon. Minister of the Interior not admit that a certain number of sections were reserved and for what purpose ? For Barr's colonists ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. For homesteading.

Mr. SPROULE. For homesteading by Barr's colonists.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. For homesteading.

Mr. SPROULE. What does the premier of the North-west Territories say ?

The Dominion government, by allowing Mr. Barr to reserve a certain number of townships——

Who allowed him to reserve these townships ? Who had the right or power to give him authority to reserve them ? They would not have been reserved if the hon. Minister of the Interior had not reserved them, and if the authority had not gone out from the Department of the Interior, under the Land Act there could not have been a quarter section reserved anywhere.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That is not disputed. I say the land was not given to Mr. Barr. I say it was given for homesteading.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not hear what the hon. minister says.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I said that Mr. Barr did not get the land. the land was reserved for homesteaders who took it up and got it.

Mr. SPROULE. The land was reserved for the homesteaders that Mr. Barr was to take there. Suppose I had gone up there as a homesteader, could I have taken up land in that locality ? I was told that people went up into that locality and were not allowed to get a homestead there.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. My hon. friend is quite wrong because we did reserve a certain proportion of homesteads for miscellaneous settlers who might go to that locality. We reserved one-quarter section because we knew certain persons might go in there, and being of a somewhat turbulent nature, like my hon. friend, they might desire to make trouble if they could not get land there.

Mr. SPROULE. Is that not an admission that there was a reservation made for Mr. Barr ? You reserved out of the reservation for Mr. Barr a certain proportion for the public. The rest of the reservation was for Mr. Barr, who is going in there with the authority of the government. What did Mr. Haultain say :

The Dominion government, by allowing Mr. Barr to reserve a certain number of townships had to that extent recognized the scheme.

They recognized the scheme by their own act in reserving that land for Mr. Barr, and they enabled Mr. Barr to mislead the colony and to deceive the people who came out, for the purpose of making the rake-off that he got out of it. What are the statements that these people make ? They say that Mr. Barr told them that each man must provide himself with a tent or he would provide it, for which he would make a charge of $10. That was not part of the contract entered into with the party when they left England. They rebelled against that because it was said that these tents would cost them $500, whereas they were to be provided by Barr. Was that statement correct or incorrect ? If that statement was incorrect, and if these colonists were misled to that extent, then the hon. Minister of the Interior should be thankful for having the matter called to his attention so as to give them an opportunity of setting the matter right, of clearing the suspicion that attaches to his department in connection with the transaction, and of making the responsibility rest where it should rest.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. If my hon. friend will permit me, hon. gentlemen have my most profound gratitude.

Mr. SPROULE. Well, I think there will be more than the hon. gentleman who will be grateful for what has been done here to-day. The poor deceived Barr colonists will be grateful for it, because they will know that somebody has to account for the nefarious transactions that were carried on and under the ægis of the government when they were misled into coming from their homes thousands of miles to settle here. What object had Barr in view which induced him to prosecute this pilanthropic work ? Was it pure philanthropy ? Because he was a minister of the gospel, one would naturally suppose that it was, but the facts that were brought to light afterwards showed that it was not pure philanthropy, that there was a good deal of selfishness in it, and that it was the profits that were being looked for. Who were interested in these profits ? I was wondering in reading over the statement made by Mr. Preston, that it is customary to allow seven shillings per head for these men, although the hon. minister says Barr is not going to be allowed anything, whether there was any party outside of Barr receiving a portion of the prospective rake-off. That is a question which the hon. minister is bound to set at rest by a proper inquiry. If those under his authority are implicated in it, all the worse, and the sooner it is known, the better. It is evident that Barr understood that he was to receive that amount and that he would receive emoluments from other sources; otherwise he would not have acted as he did.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

QUEBEC, NEW BRUNSWICK AND NOVA SCOTIA RAILWAY COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 135) to incorporate the Quebec, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia Railway Company.—Mr. Logan.

Hon. Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. Chairman, before you proceed with this Bill, I wish to state with respect to the amendment of which I gave the necessary notice and which appears upon the Order paper, that I may not find it necessary to move it. I have no objection to the Bill going on, as I understand there has been an agreement come to by which the promoters of this Bill will move an amendment that will satisfy the Quebec and New Brunswick Railway Company. Therefore, with the consent of the House the Bill may proceed, and that amendment can be moved at the end of clause 7. With that understanding I have no objection to the Bill going on.

On section 7,

Mr. LOGAN. In accordance with the agreement referred to, I beg to move:

Provided always that the location of the line of railway to be built by the company hereby incorporated shall not at any point be nearer than five miles from the line of railway now or hereafter built or located by the Quebec and New Brunswick Railway Company except with the consent of the latter company or of the Governor General in Council.

Amendment agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

SUPPLY—THE BARR COLONY.

The House resumed debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Fielding for the House to go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). When you left the Chair at six o'clock, Mr. Speaker, I was asking the question: What object had the Rev. Mr. Barr in view of taking up this apparently philanthropic work? The fact that heretofore he had been a minister of the gospel would naturally suggest to one's mind his desire to do good to humanity, and from the promptings of a generous and Christian nature he might have been induced to embark upon such an enterprise for the good of his fellowman without any expectation of a worldly return to himself. Had that been the case one would have been reluctant to believe many of the unfavourable accounts that have been given of Mr. Barr's operations during the time he was bringing these people to the country; but if we examine into it to ascertain whether he might not have been prompted by some selfishly lucrative object, I think we will come to the conclusion that unless there was a profit somewhere or other he would not have engaged in the enterprise. Now, from whom was he likely to receive the profit, if profit he expected. We are told that he got $6 a head for the immigrants as commission from the steamship company, and if he had nothing more than that it would give him $12,000 on two thousand people, which in itself would be a very substantial salary for a year's operations. It may be said that the Rev. Mr. Barr was obliged to undergo very large expense. I claim that this cannot be because so far as the emigration part of it was concerned, it was practically done by the chief emigration agent in England, W. T. R. Preston. Although Mr. Barr gathered up this large crowd, he was not under great expense while doing so. Now, if the surmise of W. T. R. Preston be correct, that Mr. Barr was to get seven shillings each for the immigrants, and I have no doubt that the understanding come to between him and Preston was to that effect, then he would realize $3,500 from that source and that would give him $15,500. That would be a pretty comfortable return for a year's operations. But in addition to that we are told that Mr. Barr compelled these poor people to buy tents from him for which he charged $10 apiece. The minister of the Interior told us that this colony was taken in hand by the Emigration Department from the time they were gathered together in England until they were landed at their destination in the North-west. The expenses in this connection were borne by the Canadian government and not by Mr. Barr. It is said that Mr. Barr purchased these tents for less than $5, and, therefore, supposing that they bought 1,000 tents, he had a clear rake-off of $5 apiece, or $5,000 in all. Therefore, he must have been in $20,500 for his business operations for the year. This was a pretty good compensation to him for the work he was supposed to have undertaken for the sake of philanthropy. When we find a minister of the gospel abandoning his religious calling and taking up a work of this kind for an apparently philanthrophic motive, and when we find that there is a profit coming out of the business, we will have to seek for some other real aim on his part than the humanitarian.

Mr. SCOTT. He says that he is out of pocket $10,000.

Mr. SPROULE. There were a great many statements made by the Rev. Mr. Barr which were declared by those colonists to be absolutely untrue. How do we know whether this is true or false? But we do know that he got six dollars a head from the steamship companies, which was $12,000, and that there was some understanding between him and Mr. Preston that he was to get some kind of rake-off from the department.

Mr. SCOTT. Did he get it?

Mr. SPROULE. I am not saying whether he got it or not. The Minister of the Interior denies that he got it. But there was an understanding that he was to get something from that source, whether he got it or not. Then, if it be a fact, as it was publicly stated by one of the Barr colonists, that he compelled them to buy a thousand tents at ten dollars apiece, which could be purchased anywhere at five dollars apiece, he made something out of that. These statements, so far as I know, have not been successfully contradicted by Mr. Barr, and, therefore, I have a right to assume that there must be some truth in them. So that it is quite clear that it was not on account of his philanthropy that this gentleman took up this work. I am afraid we are obliged to conclude that it was the mercenary nature he possesses, the disposition to make money, the love of filthy lucre, the almighty dollar, and the broad acre, that induced him to go into this scheme. There may be some other sources from which he was to receive returns that we know nothing about. The government tell us that they reserved a certain number of sections of this land. For what purpose? Was it to be sold to Mr. Barr after he colonized the district? What arrangement had he with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company? I have no doubt that he was quite sharp enough as a business man to make as good a bargain with the railway company as he made with the government. How do we know that he had not an understanding with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to purchase land from them at $3 an acre? If he planted these colonists on the odd-numbered sections, the value of this other land would be enhanced, and would rapidly run up to $5 an acre. Very likely he would have the extra profits resulting from that. Then he may have purchased other sections from the government, either directly or through his friends. I have no doubt that if a careful inquiry were made, we would find other sources besides those which we know about, whereby the Rev. Mr. Barr expected to make large sums of money; because he seems to be exactly that kind of character—a man who has abandoned his religious calling and gone into this business under the guise of philanthropy and sympathy for the down-trodden, with the deliberate purpose of deceiving the people. I say that we may reasonably come to the conclusion that there are other bad features of his conduct that have not been brought to light, and that can only be ascertained by an inquiry. Whether that inquiry should be by commission or otherwise I am not prepared to say; but I agree with Mr. Haultain that the matter is too glaringly suspicious and irregular to be allowed to pass over in silence; and the Department of the Interior must lie under the odium that attaches to their connection with the transaction unless they clear it up in some way or other.

The next question to ask, the answer to which would be interesting if we could ascertain it, is, who were his associates? I have no doubt that practically the Rev. Mr. Barr was only a stool pigeon. There are many transactions in which there are silent and sleeping partners, who share in the profits and cover up their tracks as best they can; and it would be interesting to know whether the Rev. Mr. Barr had any associates, or whether he got all the profits himself. How much did he make out of this transaction? To what extent was he supported in it by the Minister of the Interior and the Immigration Department? We do know this, that these 2,000 immigrants, whom the Minister of the Interior tells us were brought by Mr. Barr, and the bringing of whom the government had nothing to do with, were counted among the 126,000 immigrants the government boasts of having brought to the country during the last year, at a cost of $560,000. The government will take credit to themselves for bringing these 2,000 people out. It was said by the Minister of the Interior that the Barr colonists were every one satisfied. Where are they to-day? Are they on their colony? If they were satisfied in every particular, would you not expect to find them there? They left England to go there. They believed that was to be their future home, where they would live for the remainder of their days; but some of them did not survey the promised land from Pisgah's top. Where are they to-day? Some of them, I am told, folded up their tents in the night, like the Egyptians, and left the country. You will find many of them to-day in the United States, although we paid the steamship companies $6 a head to bring them to Canada. That is the immigration business carried on by the department, for which we are told we ought to glorify the Minister of the Interior. But I say, where are these colonists to-day? Echo answers where. Less than 500 of them are to be found in that colony. That is the best evidence that they could not be satisfied, that they were dissatisfied, that whatever connection the government had with the Rev. Mr. Barr, it was not creditable either to him or to the country, and that is a strong reason why there should be an investigation so as to clear the skirts of the department and the government of any wrong-doing if they can succeed in doing so. Why should not that investigation go on? The Minister of the Interior said this was a very important article that appeared in the 'Canadian Gazette,' but he never noticed it, because he was too busily engaged in other important work. What was that important work? We are told that he was engaged in looking after the Alaskan boundary. Some are uncharitable enough to say that he spent part of the time in looking after the Treadgold concession, and satisfying some of the people who are interested in that matter that their money was safe. It may be that he was engaged in looking after one or both of these matters.

At any rate, he admits that he was too busily engaged to notice this matter. Can he then blame us if we give him an opportunity to clear up these scandals, for which he and his department are held responsible? Instead of blaming, he ought to be very grateful to us. What officers of the Dominion government assisted Mr. Barr? Mr. W. T. R. Preston evidently did, for one. He was the officer who gave the information. The business is carried on under his direction. Mr. Preston was responsible to the department, and the minister is responsible to this House, and we are endeavouring to hold them to that responsibility. For these reasons, we should have a searching inquiry. There is probably much to be brought out of which we do not know anything to-day. It may be that a portion of the statements made are incorrect, but if so, the sooner that is known the better. These charges are discrediting the country generally. I need not say anything of the class of immigrants which were brought out, but I am told that many of them were picked up from the slums of London indiscriminately, and will be of little use in this country. I shall not say anything more on that point, but it is one regarding which inquiry might be had. In view of the reports we have had, in view of the serious charge implied in the statement of the hon. member for Halton, who was with these colonists and got information from them, we are justified in saying that this is too serious a matter to be passed over in silence. Nothing less than an inquiry by a commission or otherwise to ascertain the exact facts will satisfy either this House or the people.

Mr. DAVID HENDERSON (Halton). I do not propose, Mr. Speaker, to detain the House at any length. I have heard so much about Mr. Barr that I deem it my duty to say a word in his defence. I must confess that I feel at a loss to understand how it is possible for this man to have gone so far astray as to be guilty of all the charges imputed to him. I remember about fifty years ago, in the riding which I represent, a short distance from where I was brought up, the father of this Mr. Barr was an honoured minister in the Presbyterian Church, and I have no doubt gave his son a proper education and careful training. How, then, are you to account for this man going so far astray? Where did he become contaminated? It is an unfortunate thing in this country that the moment a man, no matter what his early life may have been, no matter what may have been his training, comes into contact with the Interior Department, he at once becomes contaminated. That is the history all the way through. Look at the Treadgold concession, look at all these other scandals which have been floating around the administration of that department. I cannot account for the downfall of this man in any other way. He was of respectable parentage, had an honourable rearing, received a good training, but he had the misfortune to come in contact with some of the officials of the Interior Department—a department which seems to be permeated with everything that is not good—and in that way he has been led astray, and now these people are endeavouring to throw the whole responsibility upon this man, whom you would naturally suppose to be innocent. I confess that I am at a loss to understand it in any other way, and I trust that it will warn other people to be very careful indeed about having anything to do with the Department of the Interior in Canada.

GOVERNMENT TRANSPORTATION POLICY.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Before you leave the Chair, Sir, I wish to draw the attention of the government to an item which appeared in the speech from the Throne:

> The great influx of population into our Northwestern territories and the very large additional areas of fertile land which are being brought under cultivation combine to further press upon us the need for increased transportation facilities for the forwarding of our grain and other products to the markets of the world, through Canadian channels. The whole question of transportation and terminal facilities continues to occupy much attention, and my government will immediately appoint a commission of experienced men to report on the subject.

It is about eighteen weeks ago since that statement was put in the mouth of His Excellency by the government, and notwithstanding the reports throughout the country that an arrangement has been made with certain parties for the purpose of building railways into the North-west Territories, and the statement by the right hon. the First Minister that a commission had been appointed to look into the question of transportation facilities, this House has not yet been informed as to the policy of the government with reference to the first matter and as to the personnel of the commission to inquire into transportation facilities. The organs supporting the government have published what they say is the policy of the government on the question of building railways into the North-west. On reading that publication, I expected that the government would in a day or two have announced its policy, and I would ask whether the hon. gentleman who is now leading the House is prepared to state what that policy is? If he is not prepared to do so, when may we expect a declaration on behalf of the government, as it is certainly high time they took the country into their confidence?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon Sir William Mulock). No objection whatever can be taken to the inquiry of my hon. friend with regard to the very important questions to which he has referred. Unfortunately, there has been a difficulty in obtaining commissioners such as the country would desire. The position of commissioner was offered to a gentleman of great experience, and for a considerable length of time he was unable to give an answer. It was deemed so important that his services, if possible, should be secured, that no other arrangement was made to secure some one in his place, the hope being entertained that sooner or later he would be able to accept the office. Within a very short time he has written to the minister expressing his doubt as to the ability to proceed at present, and has put us in the position of either having to make another appointment or wait a little longer to see if he will accept. I am sure that the hon. gentleman would be the last one to wish that the country should lose, if it is at all possible to secure them, the services of Sir William Van Horne in this matter. I have not had, within the last few days, any conversation with my hon. colleague the Minister of Public Works, but will bring the matter to his attention, and perhaps on Monday we will be able to speak more definitely regarding the choice of commissioners.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. And what reply can the hon. gentleman make to the question I put regarding the policy of the government in the matter of furnishing transportation facilities to the North-west?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Does the hon. gentleman refer to the railway transportation facilities? I understood him to refer first to the commission——

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I referred to both.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. With regard to the latter question, that is a matter on which the premier will have to make an announcement, and he is not present.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. We hope it will be soon.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have no doubt it will be soon. If we used the form which was so much used in other days, we would promise it for to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. 'At the next sitting of the House.'

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Not quite at the next sitting, but in a few days.

VENTILATION OF CHAMBER.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR (South Leeds). I regret that the hon. Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Sutherland) is not in his place. Three or four weeks ago, when this chamber was very warm, as it is to-night, I suggested that the chamber should be ventilated as it was in former years when we had a summer session, by opening these windows. If you will look at the thermometer to your right, Mr. Speaker, you will see that it stands at 82 degrees, but if you go into No. 16, No. 6 or any other part of the House you will find the temperature not above 75 degrees. Why is that? Simply because we are not getting a mouthful of fresh air from the outside. We have now been here for four months and the prospects are that we shall be here for many weeks yet, owing purely to——

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Obstruction.

Mr. TAYLOR. Obstruction if you like —obstruction by hon. gentlemen who sit behind the minister? There has been no obstruction by hon. gentlemen on this side.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. TAYLOR. This opposition have not criticised fully many of the estimates that have gone through. We are here to-day simply because immediately after the House rose last year the ministers left their offices and went hither and thither over this country and other countries, and, though they called the House together late this year, they were not ready with important Bills. We have been here for four months, and what has been done? Nothing. And why? Simply because not one of the ministers has been ready to go on with the business of the country. They are all at sixes and sevens among themselves. Where is the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Bill that should have been announced months ago? Where is the Redistribution Bill?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Where is the hon. gentleman's leader ?

Mr. TAYLOR. What has our leader got to do with it ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. He is engaged in trying to settle the Redistribution Bill.

Mr. TAYLOR. Why is it in committee at this late date ? Our leader was ready to meet hon. gentlemen opposite at any time. But no committee was appointed for a long time, and when it was appointed how soon was it called together ? The delay is not due to the leader of the opposition or to gentlemen associated with him, but it is due to the dilatoriness of hon. gentlemen opposite. It has been the same with every measure in the hands of the ministers. Though we have been here four months, they are coming down day after day with important measures that ought to have been introduced at the opening of the session. It is practically cruelty to animals to keep members in this chamber at this date with no ventilation. I hope the ministers will have a consultation among themselves, and see if something cannot be done to improve the ventilation of this chamber. The engineer tells the Minister of Public Works that if these windows are opened the fans are no good. There are a couple of fans in No. 16, and they have the effect of keeping hon. gentlemen opposite cool. But here in the chamber we have no ventilation and in No. 6 we have no fans to keep us cool. We are in a sweat-box here. But we can stand the sweat-box as long as hon. gentlemen opposite can. Why, the ministers will not come into this chamber themselves. One or two of them told me that they would not come in to-night.

Mr. LENNOX. It is made too hot for them.

Mr. TAYLOR. It is a crying shame that we have been kept here for four months and practically no business done, owing to the delay caused by a government that are not ready with their measures, everything at sixes and sevens, everything drifting as may, and nobody to steer the ship of state. If they could do nothing better, the government might propose to adjourn for a couple of months until the hot weather is over, then call us together again and finish up legislation. By that time, they might agree among themselves what measure they will bring down and push through. They can put through any measure they please because they have a following behind them that is strong enough to enable them to have their own way. This faithful opposition is doing its duty in criticising rascalities and extravagances of this government. But we do not offer criticism that the acts of the government would fully justify. We should be here for another four months if we did our full duty in exposing the doings of this government. And we will do our duty before we go home. If they have no consideration for us, they should have some consideration for their own supporters and give us a cooler chamber, and this can easily be done simply by opening the windows. I hope the hon. gentleman who leads the House will talk to the Minister of Public Works and show him that in order to have a proper temperature here we must have fresh air from the outside.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Department of Indian Affairs—Ontario and Quebec—relief, medical attendance and medicines, Quebec, $4,480.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Hon. gentlemen will understand that the amount in the resolution as put from the Chair is one-fifth less than the amount in the printed estimates. This is due to the fact that one-fifth of each of these amounts has already been voted.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Perhaps it will facilitate the discussion if the chairman will read the amount as it is in the printed estimates, then, when the vote is to be passed, read the resolution.

Mr. SPROULE. How would that be ? I am afraid you would get into an awkward mess. How could we reduce it by one-fifth by the resolution after we have passed these items already ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The resolution as it stands in the hands of the clerk is not the resolution which is in the estimates, but making allowance for the one-fifth difference it is all plain sailing. One-fifth of these estimates has been passed of the amount standing in the printed estimates, but only four-fifths stand in the resolution in the clerk's hands.

Relief, medical attendance and medicines, Quebec, $1,600.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The committee will see that the total vote for Ontario and Quebec is the same as last year with the exception that there is a decrease of $1,080.

Mr. OSLER. Would the minister tell us how that money is distributed ? After the discussion we had last night on the salaries of medical officers, I think we should be more careful to ascertain whether medical men are paid on the same system as the medical men in Brantford. I would like to know how much of this item is expended for salaries, and to whom the money is paid.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. To Dr. Jule Constantin, $500; to Dr. A. Simard, $50 ; to Dr. J. A. Claveau, $200 ; to Dr. F. W. McCartney, $80. The amount paid for relief is between $2,000 and $3,000.

Relief, medical attendance and medicines, Ontario, $2,000.

Mr. OSLER. Give us the particulars of that.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The salaries paid to medical men in Ontaria are: Dr. J. W. McIntosh, $184; Dr. J. A. Arthur, $75; Dr. J. A. McEwan, $300; Dr. G. H. Mitchell, $80.

Blankets and clothing, Ontario and Quebec, $500.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There are bands that have no fund, and this small vote of $500 is provided for supplying blankets and clothing whenever it is necessary. Blankets are supplied under contract.

Schools, Ontario, Quebec and the maritime provinces, $44,890.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The number of day schools in Ontario is 71, industrial and boarding schools 6, aggregate number of pupils enrolled at the day schools 2,183, aggregate number of pupils enrolled at industrial schools 477, average attendance in day schools 1,043, average attendance at industrial schools 426. Forty-three of the 71 day schools in Ontario are supported wholly or in part by legislative grant and the remainder from the funds of the bands that are interested. In Quebec the number of day schools is 17, aggregate number of pupils 782, average attendance 369. The whole cost is paid by legislative grant. In New Brunswick the number of day schools is six, aggregate number of pupils in attendance 143, and the average number in attendance 69. These are provided for by government grant. In Prince Edward Island there is one school, number of pupils 26, and average attendance 12.

Mr. FOWLER. Where are these schools situated in the province of New Brunswick ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. In New Brunswick the schools are as follows: Burnt Church, Big Cove, Eel ground, Kingsclear, St. Mary's, Tobique.

Mr. FOWLER. Are these schools outside of the general school system of the province ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. And the teachers are paid entirely from this fund ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes.

Mr. OSLER. What principle is adopted in appointing the teachers to Indian schools?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It is pretty hard to say there is any general principle applying to the whole province.

Mr. OSLER. Generally, what qualification do the teachers require ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Generally speaking, an attempt is made to get teachers qualified under the laws of the province where they are to be employed, and they are appointed generally on the recommendation of the agent. It is impossible to carry out this principle in its entirety. There are many cases where it is impossible to get qualified teachers at the salaries paid or under the condition that they must go upon the reserve.

Mr. FOWLER. Do you appoint Indians as teachers ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Not generally. There are a few Indian teachers.

Mr. FOWLER. What is the average cost of each of these New Brunswick schools ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The average cost is $250.

Salaries of chiefs, Cape Croker, and Gibson and Agent, St. Regis, $150.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There are three chiefs. Some years ago, after a great deal of trouble, the department got a number of the Oka Indians to go to Gibson in the province of Ontario, but we have been unable to induce the remainder to go. The chief looks after them there and we pay him $50 a year. The same is true of the chief of the other band and also in the case of the St. Regis band we now pay the chief $50 a year.

Payment of the Robinson Treaty Indians, $16,806.

Mr. FOWLER. What is this.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It is a payment of $4 per head to the Indians under the Robinson treaty who surrendered their lands in the place where they originally lived.

Survey of Indian reserves, $500.

Mr. BENNETT. I draw the attention of the minister to the fact that no policy has yet been settled upon in reference to the sales of the islands lying south of Moose Deer Point on the Georgian bay. There are hundreds of islands there and they are anxiously sought for by Canadians and Americans who desire to build summer residences. It is admitted that the islands north of Moose Deer Point are under the control of the Ontario government, but the title to those south of that point has been in dispute. I would like to ask the minister whether any arrangement has been come to with the province of Ontario as to the ownership of these islands. If such an arrangement has been arrived at I would impress upon the minister that at a very early date he should sell these islands, and that the sale should be by public auction and not by private tender. If the sale were conducted at Midland or Penetanguishene, to which places there are excellent railway facilities, very considerable prices could be secured at public auction.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Shortly after I took office I caused a survey to be made of these islands. I was proceeding to take the necessary steps to have them sold when the Ontario government protested on the ground that the islands south of Moose Deer point belonged to them. We are fairly well satisfied that they belong to the Indian Department in trust for the Indians, but that can only be settled by an appeal to the courts. I have discussed the question a number of times with the representatives of Ontario, but as there are a great many questions unsettled between that province and the Dominion it is difficult to get any one question referred for settlement without all the rest. Two years ago I had the whole subject of dispute carefully investigated by two very capable officers of the department who made a confidential report. I am desirous of having these questions in dispute referred to a joint commission. The Ontario government do not oppose any serious objection to a joint commission, but we have not as yet been able to come to an agreement. I appreciate what my hon. friend (Mr. Bennett) said, that whereas some years ago there was no large demand for these islands it may now be desirable that they should be placed upon the market. I hope to have these matters in dispute settled as soon as possible.

Mr. BENNETT. I think perhaps the province of Ontario and this government could come to an arrangement by which the islands might be sold and the proceeds credited to the Indian fund, and if it were afterwards held that the province of Ontario was entitled to the money it could be recouped. Campers now go on these islands and fires spread, and the islands are rapidly deteriorating from the aesthetic point of view which makes them less desirable for summer residences. If any sale does take place I impress upon the minister to have it by public auction and not by tender.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I am indisposed to think that an arrangement could be made for the sale of the islands and the money afterwards applied as may be decided upon by competent authority. I have not pressed an arrangement of that kind because, although occasionally we do have inquiries, there was nothing before me that indicated any special demands for these islands. I note what the hon. gentleman says about selling them by auction. I may say that the experience of the department has not been altogether to the effect that sales by auction were more satisfactory than sales by tender, but I will give the suggestion of the hon. member (Mr. Bennett) due consideration before anything is done.

Mr. BENNETT. I hope an arrangement may be come to soon because if a sale is held by auction during the coming fall I think considerable purchases would be made and the purchasers could go on with the erection of their residences in the winter or early spring. May I ask the minister what islands if any have been disposed of during the past year, below Moose Deer point ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. At this moment I cannot say exactly. My hon. friend will remember that an application was made for two islands, which were sold. To the best of my recollection some two or three others were sold, and they were sold after we had received letters from the Crown Lands Department of the province of Ontario, saying that there was no objection to the sale, we agreeing on our part to hold the money until it should be decided later how it should be disposed of.

Mr. VROOMAN. I would like to bring to the notice of the minister a case that occurred in my own constituency. A small island in Pigeon lake was sold by Mr. Boyd, a wealthy man, to a poor man, who paid for the island and went on it and built a house. Some time afterwards Mr. Boyd found that he did not own the island, and paid the money back. The man was very desirous of getting a title to the island, and referred the matter to the department here ; but the department replied that no title could be given to him because the island belonged to the Indians. In view of the fact that these islands, according to this discussion, can be disposed of, I do not see why this poor man cannot get a remedy.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The island referred to by the hon. gentleman consists of Indian lands that have not been surrendered. The department has no authority to sell any islands that have not been surrendered by the Indian band. After the surrender is executed we hold the land in trust and sell it. The only thing we could do would be to apply to the band for a surrender of that particular island. Whenever it is surrendered, the department will endeavour to protect the right of this man, and see that no one else gets it.

Mr. VROOMAN. It will be a great satisfaction to this man if he receives that information from the department.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I am told by the deputy that that is the position the department has taken.

Mr. CLANCY. I wish to call the minister's attention to a matter that came to my notice recently in connection with the Walpole island band. The case is shortly this : A man named Johnston, some ten years ago adopted a young Indian boy seven years of age. The father of the boy was then dead ; his mother is still a widow. The child was adopted, not under any writing, but by an agreement with the mother. The boy's name is Sand. He was kept until last April or May, between nine and ten years, when he was turned out. Even a portion of his clothing was retained by this man Johnston or his wife. During that whole period the child has been sent little or no time to school, and has been kept all the time at work. He is now sixteen years of age, and has been turned adrift without either schooling or any other provision being made for him. Johnston also drew the boy's annuity during the period he was with him, which, so far as I can find out, was about $3.50 a year. I took some pains to question the mother as to whether she had ever assented to this. She said she had never assented to it, that Johnston had managed, by giving the child as one of his own household, to receive the annuity. I made further inquiry as to whether the boy had disobeyed or whether there had been some quarrel or difference to cause the boy to be turned out. The mother informed me that the boy had gone to a tea meeting, and when he returned home, he found the door locked against him, they would not let him in, and he remained out all night. She tells me that an application was made to the department to have an inquiry, and that the agent, Mr. McDougall, had informed her that there would be no inquiry into the matter. He accepted the statement of Johnston, who is the wealthiest Indian on the island, who has acquired a good deal of property, and is quite responsible in that way. If the facts are as I have stated, it is certainly a very aggravated case. The boy's mother informs me that if there is an investigation, she is prepared to make these statements good. I would suggest that the investigation be held by some other person than the Indian agent. I do not care to give my reasons for saying that, nor do I want it understood that it implies any reflection.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The ordinary course in such a case would be for the inspector to be instructed to investigate and report upon his first visit to the reserve. If I understand my hon. friend aright, the matter was referred to the agent, and he declined to do anything. We will write to the agent and obtain a statement of the facts, and, if on that statement nothing can be done, we will have the inspector look into the case on his first visit to the reserve. The hon. gentleman will see that it is pretty difficult to tell the Indian to take this boy back unless he is willing to do it. The grievance is obvious but the remedy is not quite so obvious. Possibly, with the influence of the inspector, something may be done.

Mr. CLANCY. Is it not possible that this man, who failed to carry out the agreement, could be compelled to make some restitution ? It may be difficult to make him take the boy back.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Such a contract would have no legal validity. But the circumstances may justify the department in withholding this man's annuity, if he be entitled to one, until we secure the amount he collected in the shape of the boy's annuity, so that a refund would be secured.

Mr. CLANCY. There might be some doubt about the validity of the contract, but in cases of that kind arising outside of Indians it is obviously clear that where a child is kept and it is proved that there was even a verbal arrangement, and also proved that the child was deprived of schooling, there would be not only an equitable but possibly a legal claim against the person who adopted the child.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Between white people, such a verbal arrangement would have no legal effect. The agreement would have to be embodied in a formal legal instrument, properly executed.

Mr. CLANCY. Will the hon. gentleman have the matter investigated right away ? There has already been correspondence with the department, and I think that the correspondence has been principally the agent's view of the case. I do not care to say more than I have said, but I think that an investigation ought to take place before some one other than the agent.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. My deputy tells me that the inspector looked into the matter a short time ago. I will have the correspondence brought before me and give instructions to the inspector to investigate and report.

Mr. BELL. What Indian schools are there in Nova Scotia ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There are eleven days schools. The average attendance is eighty-nine. They are all supported by government grant. There is one at Bear river, county of Digby, $300 ; one at Eskasoni, $300 ; Cape Breton, $200 ; one at Sydney, C.B. ; Middle river, Victoria, $200 ; New Germany, $300 ; Queen's county, $300 ; Salmon river, Richmond, $250 ; Whycocomagh, Inverness, $200 ; Shubenacadie, Hants, $300 ; Indian Cove, Pictou, $300 ; Milbrook, Colchester, $250.

Mr. BELL. Are all the expenses paid by the department ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes, including the teachers salaries.

Mr. BELL. And the buildings ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There is no general rule with regard to the buildings. We have from time to time voted money for buildings.

Mr. KAULBACH. What is the salary for the school at New Germany ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. $300.

Indian land management fund, $14,000.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The history of the Indian fund is very complicated. Some years ago it was thought that the expenditure had impaired some of the funds, which were trust funds held for certain services. One of the funds impaired was the Indian Land Management Fund. The result of the inquiry some years ago showed the total amount by which the fund has been impaired, and an Order in Council was passed by the late government providing that an annual payment of $14,000 should be voted for a number of years for the purpose of recouping the fund and putting it back into the position into which it was and ought to be. When the plan of gradual restitution of this fund was put into operation, the capital was as follows.

July 1, 1892.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. ..$ 72,788
" 1902.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. 177,171

So that the fund has increased during the ten years by $104,000.

This fund, the Indian land management fund, would be restored in about twenty years, by an annual payment of about $14,000, to the position in which it originally stood. Hon. gentlemen understand that the fund originally arose from percentages on the sales of Indian property. It came into the hands of the government as a trust fund. But, through non-observance of the rule that only the interest should be expended, the department impaired the fund.

To provide for the erection of lockup at St. Regis, $500.

Mr. CLANCY. I see that a similar amount to this was voted last year.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes, but we did not build the lock-up. We have had a good deal of difficulty on this reserve, as the hon. gentleman knows. Two years ago the difficulty became quite serious. The St. Regis Indians are of a somewhat turbulent character, and they give the department a good deal of trouble. A little over a year ago, some of the Indians undertook to take possession of islands in the St. Lawrence which had been leased a long time ago, it is true, but on investigation I found that the leases were sound, and the parties had gone into possession—and we had to take legal proceedings and notified them that if they went any further we would proceed against them very seriously. Our officer said that we ought to have a lock-up on the reserve and some changes in the administration. I am going about the changes slowly. The state of feeling now is much better, and I shall probably carry out my intention with regard to the lock-up this year. I did not think it prudent to do so last year. If the lock-up had been built so soon after the other proceedings, the exasperation of these people might have led to some trouble. Having asserted the law, so far as the islands were concerned, I thought I had done enough and had better let the lock-up stand until this year.

Mr. SPROULE. Was there no lock-up there before ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No ; it was talked about, but never built.

General legal expenses, $3,500.

Mr. BLAIN. We would like some explanation as to this.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. This is to cover the expense of defending Indians when they are accused of criminal offences. In all very serious cases, where we have to employ counsel, this is done through the Justice Department, and, of course, we have to pay.

Mr. BLAIN. To whom were the amounts paid last year ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. About $1,000 was paid, mainly in the defence of an Indian tried in Hull.

Mr. BLAIN. What legal firm was it paid to ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I have not the name at hand, but I will get it a little later.

Mr. BLAIN. May I ask for information with regard to items in the Auditor General's Report, at page J--163, moneys paid to E. Stewart, forestry inspector. Do I understand that Mr. E. Stewart is in the hon. minister's department ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It must be the same man—yes.

Mr. BLAIN. Is he paid a stated salary ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes ; by the Interior Department—not by the Indian Department. I am told by the officers of the department that Mr. Stewart was instructed to make certain valuations for the Indian Department, being the officer most capable for doing it that we had available at the time, and this money was paid for expenses.

Mr. BLAIN. These payments include : Valuing White Fish river reserve, $70.55 ; valuing White Fish island, $69.35.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I am assured by the officers of the department that Mr. Stewart received nothing but travelling expenses. Of course, as Mr. Stewart is in the civil service and receives a regular salary—he is paid $2,500 a year—it would be illegal for any branch of the government to pay him anything further as salary or fees. So the hon. gentleman will see that it is quite impossible that he should have been paid anything except his expenses.

Mr. BLAIN. This gentleman is receiving a very large salary in the hon. minister's department. The hon. minister tells us that the payment to which I have just called attention is for travelling expenses. It does not so appear in the Auditor General's Report. Would the hon. minister tell us where, in the Auditor General's Report, a detailed statement of these expenses is to be found ? This gentleman is receiving a very large salary of $2,500——

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The amount of his salary had nothing to do with his expenses. He gets a salary for his entire time. The Indian Department, requiring certain reserves to be valued, I presume got authority that Mr. Stewart should be directed to do the work. Of course, he could not charge his expenses to the Interior Department, for they had nothing to do with it. We practically took his time from the Interior Department, got him to do the work and paid his expenses. The hon. gentleman will see that there is more than one item :

E. Stewart, forestry inspector, Interior Department, travelling expenses : arbitration Gros Cap reserve, $84.60 ; valuing White Fish River reserve, $70.55 ; valuing White Fish Island, $69.35, $224.50.

These are three distinct services.

Nova Scotia—relief and seed grain for Indians, $2,700.

Mr. SPROULE. Is that item put in every year because you are sure you will need it, or only because you want to have it available ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The amount expended in 1901-2 was $2,699. A large proportion of the Indians have to be given some small supply, which is however cut down to the lowest possible notch. Those who have land ready for cultivation are given a small quantity of seed.

Mr. BLAIN. Why is the minister asking for $3,500 for legal expenses, when the amount expended last year was only $1,000 ? Does he anticipate some further trouble ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The vote for legal expenses is merely a general estimate. When we have three or four cases in the course of a year, we have to pay the expenses out of something, and if we do not have this vote we will not have the money. This is a maximum estimate. If we do not need the money we do not expend it. The amount is arrived at by the experience of the department in past years.

Mr. BLAIN. How much has been expended each year for the last four or five years ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I have no way of getting at the exact amounts. The reason we ask for this vote is because last year the department was embarrassed in finding itself liable to pay these amounts, and being obliged to hold over the accounts until a vote could be obtained. I always take a vote every year for $1,000; sometimes we do not use it, and sometimes we spend it all. It is a vote for protection purposes for the defence of the Indians. That is done under the Department of Justice, who employ counsel, and decide whether it is a proper case in which to employ counsel. That department taxes the bill of costs, certifies to the correctness of the amount and it is paid.

Mr. BLAIN. I understood the minister to say that there was only one case last year. Would he give us the particulars of that case ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The case was that of an Indian tried at Hull for murder. I am told that the Bill of the lawyers employed was taxed in the usual way by the Department of Justice.

Mr. SPROULE. How much was the amount of the bill ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. About $1,000. The current year's account does not appear in the Auditor General's Report yet.

Mr. SPROULE. Does that include the witnesses fees and everything else ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. All the expenses were about $1,000.

Mr. SPROULE. How much of that would be for solicitors' fees and how much for the other disbursements ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I have not got the figures here. But if the hon. gentleman desires to have that information I will get it.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to see that.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. This is the case of an Indian named Waby who killed one McCabe up near the headwaters of the Ottawa river. The Indian was brought down here to Hull to be tried, and while he was here, the court-house was burned, and he was removed to Montreal, but brought back again to be tried. A great number of the witnesses had to be brought from the upper waters of the Ottawa river, which necessitated a large expenditure. This case was one that attracted a good deal of attention, Mr. McCabe being a man of some importance in the district in connection with the fur trading business, and the case was a hard fought case. The crown was under obligation to defend this man. The expense was somewhat large by reason of the fact that in the province of Quebec they had a mixed jury, that is to say, one-half English and one-half French. We had to have two counsel also, one French and one English, and an interpreter. These costs were all fixed in the regular way. I think the gentlemen who defended this prisoner were allowed $25 a day during the course of the trial. The bill was taxed according to the practice that has prevailed in the Department of Justice for many years, and I am safe in saying that all the taxation that has been done—I do not claim any credit for it myself, because that is something I never interfere with—it is done by the officials of the department, and the hon. gentleman will see by referring to the bill that nothing was allowed except that to which the counsel are honestly entitled. The whole taxation was done by Mr. Gisborne, and done with the greatest possible care.

Mr. BENNETT. Did I understand that the counsel were only allowed $25 each ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Each of them $25 a day.

Mr. BENNETT. How much was the total disbursement altogether for counsel and witness fees ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. My hon. friend will admit that it is absolutely impossible to bear in mind the details of an account of that description. This occurred at least a year and a half ago.

Mr. BENNETT. I assume the hon. minister has the figures showing what it cost up to date.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The Bill comes to us in detail, it is taxed in the Department of Justice and then sent back for payment to the Indian Department. The Bill can be produced here.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We will give the exact details if the hon. gentleman desires it.

Mr. BENNETT. Who are the counsel ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Mr. Devlin, of Hull, was one, and Mr. Decarie, of Montreal, was another.

Mr. BENNETT. Could Mr. Devlin not speak both English and French ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I think there are about three or four counsel in Quebec who will undertake to conduct trials in English and French.

Mr. BLAIN. How much was voted for this service last year ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The same amount.

Mr. BLAIN. The hon. minister should be able to give us the information as to how much has been expended on legal services by the department during the last five years.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I could not give it to the hon. gentleman, but I will have the information looked up.

Mr. BLAIN. Last year there was an exceptional trial and the item was about $1,000. I am not complaining about that, but I think it is only fair to the committee, when the hon. gentleman is asking for a vote of $3,500 and when last year there was only $1,000 expended and that an exceptional expenditure, that the hon. gentleman should give us some further explanation. In only one year during the last six years has $1,000 been expended. There is a general complaint that outside of this department large expenses are paid for legal services. It seems to me that it would be better to vote only double the amount expended last year rather than to vote $3,500.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The amount voted does not make the least difference in the amount that the department has to pay. Cases come before me constantly and the Department of Justice has to decide in each of these whether it is a proper case to defend or not. If it is a proper case for the department to defend, the determination to defend it is not based on the fact as to whether we have a vote or as to whether we have not. After it is decided to defend the case the Department of Justice designates the lawyer to take charge of it and the next step is that the Department of Justice certifies the Bill and sends it to us to pay. If we have not sufficient money to pay it we would have to ask for a supplementary vote. This is a mere estimate on the part of the officers of the department, and they have estimated it at what they believe to be a perfectly safe amount. If circumstances require us to pay this amount we will pay it, and if they do not of course the vote will lapse.

Mr. BLAIN. It is not a usual practice to vote nearly three times as much as the average yearly expenditure has been. If hon. gentlemen did that in every department the estimates would be three times as much.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The vote might be $100 and we might only pay out $5.

Mr. BLAIN. I understand that. The hon. minister might as well say that his department needs $1.000 because the expenditure has been $1,000. Yet, he comes down and asks for a vote of $3,500. Surely it has not been customary to pursue a policy of that kind. I admit this item is not a very large one, but it seems to me that some little mischief might creep into the department as a result of a vote of this kind.

Mr. SPROULE. I wish to ask some questions about the item of 'relief and seed grain, $2,700.' I did not hear that item called.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Holmes). It was called several times.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am sure the hon. Minister of the Interior will give the information.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Last year we expended $2,699 and we are asking for practically the same amount this year. This expenditure was for relief, providing the actual necessaries of life, some seed grain and a small amount has been paid out during the last two years for fertilizers.

Mr. SPROULE. Does it not seem a little strange that you should include fertilizers in the item for relief, and seed grain ?

Medical attendance and medicines, $3,700.

Mr. SPROULE. I understand that this is a new item. Would the hon. minister tell us if they have a regular medical man, and if so, how much the department pay him ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. This vote is $3,700. The expenditure for this service during the past three years has been as follows :

|---|---|
| 1899-1900.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | $2,892 44 |
| 1900-1901.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 3,676 58 |
| 1901-1902.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 3,696 16 |

The salaries paid to the physicians were as follows : Dr. C. P. Bisset, Victoria county, $125 ; Dr. Jacques, King's county, $50 ; Dr. Morse, Lunenburg, $50 ; Dr. Macaulay, Inverness, $75 ; Dr. Hugh N. MacDonald, Inverness, $75 ; Dr. D. McDonald, Victoria county, $325 ; Dr. McIntyre, Cape Breton county, $250 ; Dr. W. H. McDonald, Antigonish, $150 ; Dr. McLean, Hants, $150 ; Dr. McMillan, Pictou, $75 ; Dr. Marsh, Lunenburg, $75 ; Dr. Russell Withers, Annapolis, $50 ; Dr. Yorston, Colchester, $150 ; Dr. Black, Hants, $50 ; Dr. Elkins, $60 ; Dr. Love, $150 ; Dr. Smith, $100. The variation in the amounts that are paid is accounted for by the fact that as nearly as possible they are paid for the amount of work that they do. There is a great deal of difficulty and there is constant correspondence between the department and these doctors in regard to salary. It is a very difficult service to carry on, but the attempt of the department is as far as possible to grade the salaries by the amount of work they have to do.

Mr. SPROULE. Do you pay them by the visit or by the year ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We pay them by the year in each case. The officers of the department have based the amount upon the accounts which were rendered in former years.

Mr. SPROULE. If there should be an epidemic of small-pox on a reserve would the medical officer only get his salary of $300 a year.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. He gets the same salary right along. I have in one or two cases allowed a certain amount extra to be paid when an epidemic of small-pox broke out.

Mr. SPROULE. Does this salary include the supply of medicine as well.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes.

Indians, Manitoba, North-west Territories, $841,921.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I will make a general statement as to this vote. As to the annuities, they are payable to the Indians under treaty, and the amount only varies by the number of Indians. There is a vote for $7,949 for agricultural implements which is $4,000 less than last year. Each Indian agent makes up a detailed bill showing every particular item which he requires, and sends it to the commissioner at Winnipeg, who sends it down here.

Mr. SPROULE. How are all these supplies purchased ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The purchases generally in the Indian Department are made by tender. We have printed schedules and we advertise it once a year, and let the contract. There are some few things that are purchased from dealers in the vicinity of the reserve, it is cheaper to pay the retail price there than to buy them here and ship them up. We ask a vote of $20,295 for live stock for the Indians. This vote is a little less than last year. I have increased that vote since I came to office considerably in pursuance of the policy of inducing what we regard as the more troublesome Indians to go into stock raising. The last report of the Indian Department shows that the results are very encouraging. We send pedigreed stock to the reserve, and my information is that about the best grade stock that can be found in the North-west Territories is to be found upon some of the Indian reserves as a result of the policy which was inaugurated by the late government and which I have extended as the late government intended to extend it if it was found to be successful. The Indians in the Calgary district, the Bloods, Piegans and Blackfeet, the most dangerous and difficult Indians to manage, have been induced to go into the cattle raising to a very considerable extent, and I think that in five or six years perhaps we shall be able to discontinue the practice of giving rations altogether as a result of the policy we are following in this respect.

Mr. SPROULE. How do you purchase this $20,000 worth of live stock?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We simply purchase from different breeders and dealers and pay the current price. The cattle have to pass inspection.

Mr. BENNETT. How is the allotment made—per capita or according to the wants of the particular tribe ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It is a sort of paternal arrangement. The difficulty in past years on a considerable number of the reserves has been to get the Indians to take the cattle on any terms and agree to look after them. As my hon. friend has said, they probably kill them and eat them in a short time. We have been giving them cattle as fast as they manifest a disposition to look after them and take proper care of them. Some Indians go into wheat raising and others into cattle raising, and we endeavour to consult their habits in carrying out the policy of the department.

Mr. BENNETT. I find on page J—15 of the Auditor General's Report that three of the largest amounts expended for live stock were on the Blackfoot, Blood and Piegan reserves. Are they all south of Calgary ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. They are all in the neighbourhood of Calgary.

Mr. BENNETT. How is it that the grants for these three tribes were so large as compared with the others ? Two of them run to nearly $4,000 each, and the others to about $3,000.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It is only lately that we have been able to do anything with these reserves. They are large bands of Indians. I would like my hon. friend to look into the report in regard to them.

Mr. BENNETT. I happened to be at Macleod last fall and I saw a number of these Indians in the town. They were selling hay. They certainly presented a much more civilized appearance than most of the Indians one sees in the west. From what I heard, they have a very desirable reserve for raising cattle; and it seemed odd that though cattle raising is being carried on more extensively in the neighbourhood of Macleod than in any other part of the country they should be so far behind. They were Bloods and I think Blackfeet. It seems odd that they should require such a very large expenditure, as compared with other reserves.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It is only within the last few years that these Indians have been willing to take the cattle upon condition of looking after them. They are not yet by any means making use of all the grazing privileges on their reserves. For instance, it is only lately that we have made arrangements with regard to the Piegan reserve, on condition of the Indians leasing a portion of the reserve for grazing purposes.

Mr. BENNETT. Where are the Piegans?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Nine miles south-west of Macleod.

Mr. SPROULE. What do you do with the Indians who kill their cattle and eat them ? Do you punish them in any way ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That is a matter of individual discretion on the part of the agent. You cannot apply any hard and fast rule. We believe it would not be wise to incur any disaffection on the part of the Blood Indians on that account; and the agent, in dealing with the matter, requires to bring to bear his knowledge of the Indian character and to take into account the circumstances of the case.

Mr. SPROULE. Did you supply the Sarcee Indians with any cattle last year ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No, they refused to take them.

Mr. SPROULE. I noticed one cow on the reserve, seven or eight miles west of Calgary; and if they took care of all their reserve stock as they did that cow, I do not believe it would be prudent to supply them.

Mr. BENNETT. Are the supplies of tea and other groceries which are distributed among the different tribes, bought by tender and public competition ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes. The supplies generally are advertised at the head office of the department under schedules.

Mr. BENNETT. I ask that question because I see that political friends of the government in Ottawa and Toronto alone seem to furnish the supplies.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I must say that the political friends of the government do not profit very much from the Indian supplies, because I do not think the prices could be cut any closer than they are. The schedules are known to the trade all over the country, and the competition is very close.

Mr. BLAIN. Might I ask how the agricultural implements are purchased ? Is it by tender ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Most of them are purchased on the ground from agents. The number of implements purchased is comparatively small, so that it is very difficult to buy them in bulk. The prices are practically the same to all parties, because agricultural implements are sold on schedule prices.

Mr. BENNETT. I see that $20,000 in round figures was paid for beef on the Blood agency last year. Were tenders called for that ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes, that is all purchased by tender. This vote represents the general supplies we are required to furnish the Indians, when they are paid their treaty money under the treaties on the various reserves. There are large quantities of bacon, beef, tea, flour, tobacco, ammunition and twine and a small quantity of medicine. Large quantities are purchased by tenders. The increase to the vote for schools is due to increased attendance. The vote for surveys is due to the fact that occasionally we have an Indian reserve surrendered, and we have to survey it and advertise it for sale by public tender. The increase in general expenses is due to a number of small items, and to some increases in salaries.

Mr. SPROULE. You have an increase of $1,300 in the grist and saw-mill, are you building a new mill ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No, but we had to purchase an engine for the grist-mill, Crooked Lake Reserve, as the old one was condemned by the government inspector.

Mr. BLAIN. Has it always been the custom to supply building materials to the Indians ? I see some correspondence with the Auditor General on that point.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Not generally.

Mr. BLAIN. Is this a new item entirely?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It is not customary to furnish building material for the Indians' houses. I presume this is for the work in connection with the agency buildings.

Indians, British Columbia, $137,910.

Mr. TAYLOR. We were to stop here.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No, item 189 is a small item, and we might as well pass it. It is only the salary and expenses of the inspector.

Indians, general, $10,200.

Mr. TAYLOR. It is understood that the item regarding British Columbia will stand, and, if any hon. gentleman not present wishes to ask questions about any other items, he will be at liberty to do so.

Mr. SPROULE. As to the inspector of Indian agencies, I see an estimate here for the salary of J. A. Macrae. I thought we were told that when Mr. Wadsworth was allowed to go, we were to do without an inspector of Indian agencies.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. This is only an inspector for the province of Ontario. Mr. Wadsworth was inspector for the North-west Territories, Mr. Macrae who has been in office for a great many years, was formerly in the North-west Territories, but was brought down here. He is one of the inspectors for the older provinces, and makes inspections from time to time, pays annuity money, and so on.

Mr. SPROULE. But I understood that when Mr. Wadsworth was allowed to go the hon. minister said that he would do away with that office. I am told that since then, instead of the office being done away with, there are two men doing the work that Mr. Wadsworth did, and that they are not only paid salaries, but get amounts from other branches as well.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Mr. Wadsworth was superannuated in connection with the general rearrangement of the work. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) is misinformed if he has been told that two men are doing the work this officer used to do. It is quite the other way—only part of one man's time is devoted to that work. I have personal knowledge of the facts, and can speak of the efficiency of the service.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to have this item stand, and the hon. gentleman bring me the information with regard to it.

Mr. TAYLOR. It can be brought down on the British Columbia item, and allow it to be discussed then.

Some resolutions reported.

ADJOURNMENT—BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. SPROULE. Before the House adjourns, I would ask the hon. minister who is leading the House at present if he would be good enough to tell us when the government hope to make its statement to the House regarding its railway policy. We see a good deal about it in the press. It seems to me it is hardly dealing fairly with the House if the government is not prepared to lay its policy before the House, that it should give it to the country through its own press. I think the hon. gentleman should be able to tell us that now. There must be some conclusion reached.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. As an old journalist, I would advise my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) not to place too much reliance upon statements in the press as regards matters of this kind. At present we are not in a position to say anything to the House, but if there was anything to say, I would anticipate that the Prime Minister would make a statement next week.

Mr. SPROULE. What business may we expect to take up next Monday ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There are several Bills and resolutions on the Order Paper to be dealt with, and, if we reach supply, we will go on with the estimates of the Minister of the Interior.

Mr. TAYLOR. Private Bills will have to be dealt with ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR. Is the Grand Trunk Railway Bill coming up ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am not in a position to speak for that Bill, but I think not.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 10.55 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, July 13, 1903.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

THE TREADGOLD CONCESSION.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). I have a telegram from Dawson making some inquiry as to representations on the areas which are included in the Treadgold concession. The telegram evidently refers to some statement made by the hon. the Minister of the Interior in the House, to which my own attention has not been directed. It states that the hon. gentleman recently informed the House that Mr. Treadgold and his associates were relieved from representation, owing to the faulty construction of the Order in Council of April, 1902, by the Gold Commissioner. The telegram asserts that this is incorrect, and that in September, 1901, the Gold Commissioner returned the representation money to Mr. Treadgold, thus relieving him from representation. I do not know whether the hon. gentleman is prepared to reply now, but if not, would he be good enough to reply to-morrow ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton). I gave an answer the other day in accordance with the information in the hands of the department to the question put by the hon. member for Pictou, N.S. (Mr. Bell). I would not be in a position to say anything about the details without consulting the records. I shall look at the 'Hansard' report and make a statement.

PUBLIC AND REFORMATORY PRISONS.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 221) respecting public and reformatory prisons. He said : This Bill is introduced at the instance of the hon. the Attorney General of Ontario. The hon. gentleman sent a letter informing me that the government of Ontario were now prepared to amalgamate the Ontario reformatory with the boys' industrial schools, and this Bill is intended to facilitate the transfer from one to the other. In addition, this Bill will apply to all certified industrial schools of the province, so that when the reformatory is full, the boys may be sent to an industrial school.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

NICOLA, KAMLOOPS AND SIMILKAMEEN RAILWAY COMPANY.

Bill (No. 211) respecting the Nicola, Kamloops and Similkameen Railway Company, was considered in committee and reported without amendment.

On motion for third reading.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not see that this Bill has any effect whatever except to bring the proposed railway or undertaking of the company under the jurisdiction of this parliament by declaring it to be for the general advantage of Canada. Of course the Railway Committee had the Bill under consideration, and some reason must have been found for making this declaration. But, it does seem to me that perhaps a little more caution might very well be exercised with regard to companies that come before us for this purpose. It was very frankly stated by the Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair) that the general policy of this government was to bring every railway in Canada under the jurisdiction of the government by declaring it to be for the general advantage of Canada. That wholesale way of dealing with the matter hardly seems consistent with the spirit of the British North America Act. I remember that the Minister of Justice, four or five sessions ago, declared, on one occasion, that this government would not be a party to making declarations of this kind unless the circumstances justified doing so. But, I think my hon. friend's view, then expressed, has been widely departed from by the government, as proven by instances arising every day in this House. It has been suggested, if I remember distinctly, by the Attorney General of Ontario, that, before declarations of this kind are made, some judicial inquiry should be made, and some opportunity given to the provinces to state their views and have the question determined as to whether or not the particular railway should properly be subject to the jurisdiction of the provincial parliament. I would be inclined to think that the suggestion offered by that hon. gentleman might offer some food for thought to this government. So far as my experience of legislation during the years I have been in parliament is concerned, it has simply amounted to this—that almost any railway in the country can come here and get a declaration of this kind.

Mr. CLARKE. And tramways.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Yes, and even tramways can come here and get a declaration that their works should by this means be brought under the jurisdiction of this parliament. I am not contending that there may not be some cases—several cases—in which it is proper to do this ; but the fault I am inclined to find is that we do it without very much consideration, we do it without sufficient reason, so far as I can understand. I do not know whether this matter has been under the consideration of my right hon. friend the Prime Minister (Right Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier), but in days gone by he has been a very strong upholder of provincial rights ; and this is one of the cases in which provincial rights, so far as railways are concerned can be very much interfered with, and are being interfered with. And, according to the pronouncement made during the present session, made by the Minister of Railways and Canals, if I understood him correctly, it was declared that it was the policy of the government to bring every railway within the jurisdiction of this parliament by declaring its undertakng to be for the general advantage of Canada. Unless better reasons than I have yet heard up to the present time can be advanced, I am not prepared to concur in this course. I take this opportunity of presenting very briefly, my views, because this Bill is for the sole purpose of having the undertaking of this company declared to be for the general advantage of Canada. I do not know whether or not it may properly be classed within that category. I am bound to assume that the Railway Committee have sufficient grounds for reporting the Bill in this form, and I am not making any criticism on the undertaking of this company, for I do not know enough about it to justify me in doing so. I merely take this opportunity of bringing the matter to the attention of the government, and particularly of my right hon. friend who leads the government and to say that I think the suggestions that have been made might well justify some different course from that which we have been pursuing during several sessions with regard to this matter.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I am not aware that the Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair) has expressed the very broad opinion attributed to him by my hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax) I will have to consult with my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals as to that. But pending the discussion I may have with him on the point, I may say that the policy of the government is not at all as apprehended by the hon. leader of the opposition. We have been in the past, and we are still, the upholders of provincial rights, and would hesitate long before we would lay hands on anything which properly belongs to the sphere of actions of the provinces. Some twenty years ago—I think it was in 1882, or perhaps in 1883—the policy was laid down by the government of the day that all railways connecting with the trunk lines of Canada, the Grand Trunk and the Canadian Pacific, should be considered as coming under the jurisdiction of this parliament, being considered works for the general advantage of Canada. Perhaps there was a good deal to be said in favour of the proposition at that time, and there may be still something to be said in favour of it. If a railway connects directly with one of the great trunk lines, unless this rule were to apply, the traffic on the main line would be under the control of the Canadian parliament, and then on the branch line, under the control of the provincial legislature. So far as that goes, I am not aware that the principle which was laid down was ever challenged very seriously in this House. The government is not prepared, Mr. Chairman, to assume jurisdiction over provincial charters ; but in matters of this kind, the government has seen fit not to interfere with the policy that any railway connecting with the Grand Trunk or the Canadian Pacific should be declared to be for the general advantage of Canada. And, so far as I know, the only reason why the Railway Committee agreed to declare the railway referred to in this Bill to be a work for the general advantage of Canada is that it connects with the Canadian Pacific Railway. If any objection is raised when legislation of that kind is asked, we would expect the parties interested, the local authorities, would apply to us and make their objection. But, when no objections are made—and I understood none were made on this occasion—I do not think it would be wise for parliament to interfere and not grant the power. If there were parties in British Columbia who found fault with this legislation and came here and desired to be heard, it would be our duty to listen to their representations. But I understand that no party in the province chiefly interested found fault, and that is why we allowed it to go on. There are some other cases to which our attention has been brought, for instance, the case of the first order of Private Bills, the Bill to incorporate the Toronto and Hamilton Railway Company ; and we have had that matter under consideration and propose to give our opinion before it is proceeded with any further.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN (East York). The right hon. Premier (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) says that the charge has not been proven that he or his party has interfered with provincial rights. The Attorney General of Ontario has stated in Toronto that there has been an invasion of provincial rights by this parliament, and he has deputed a very learned counsel, so I understand, Mr. Irving, once a member of this House to come here and make these representations. The 'Globe' newspaper has also made the charge that provincial rights, and especially municipal rights, have been invaded by this parliament. In a great many instances attempts have been made by private corporations to evade provincial rule, to evade municipal control, by means of legislative grants in this House. Another flagrant case was that of one of the power companies at Niagara, which came to this parliament to secure powers that it could not obtain in the province of Ontario, and powers which enabled it to invade the rights of the city of Toronto and other cities, so far as they are concerned. The right hon. gentleman now lays down the doctrine that he and his government have no responsibility unless some local parties protest. I disagree with the doctrine altogether. I hold that the government of the day are responsible for everything that takes place in this parliament, and if there is an invasion of provincial rights, they are responsible for it. Especially it is the duty of the Minister of Justice to advise this parliament, and to advise committees, and they cannot escape the responsibility by saying that somebody did not appear before the committee or before the House to protest. As I said before, there has been this invasion of provincial rights, the Attorney General of Ontario has so declared, and he has sent a special representative to Ottawa to put in a protest. We have seen the question raised in this House, and we see the municipalities of all Canada are up in arms to-day against the threatened invasion of their rights by the federal power, and for that invasion the government must be held responsible.

Mr. DAVID HENDERSON (Halton). I have listened with considerable interest to the remarks of the right hon. the Prime Minister with reference to this Bill. I may say that in the Railway Committee the point which was raised by the leader of the opposition, was discussed at considerable length; my recollection is that the Minister of Railways then referred to the fact that a protest had come from the province of Ontario as well as from his own province against legislation of this kind. Now to my mind it is a clear invasion of the rights of the province of British Columbia for us to deal with this charter. We know comparatively little of the character of the Bill that we are making a Dominion statute. I have scanned the Bill, it is a statute of British Columbia of 1891, a Bill which contains some thirty-one clauses. The language of that Bill is very different from the language usually employed in railway Bills in this parliament. There also appears to have been an amendment to that charter granted during 1903. The statutes are not available, because I presume they have not yet been issued. Even the files of the Bills in the library do not contain the Bill (No. 38) that amends the British Columbia Charter of 1891. Therefore, we are utterly in the dark as to the character of the Bill, we are utterly in the dark as to the character of the legislation that we are enacting. There is no doubt that this is a live question to-day, how far this parliament is going to interfere with the rights of the provinces. I know in my own province it is a live question, and one that we will hear a great deal more about in the very near future, unless legislation in this House takes a different course from what it has taken in the last few years. I did propose in the Railway Committee an amendment to this Bill, providing that the legislation here sought for should have no force or effect, and should not go into operation until it had been sanctioned and approved by the legislature of British Columbia. In that way I thought we could excuse ourselves for making the enactment which is here proposed, because if the British Columbia legislature, after we had passed the Bill, sanctioned and approved of it, then I fail to see that the same complaint could be made of interference with their rights. I gave notice the following day after the Railway Committee sat that when this Bill came up for the third reading I would move an amendment; but after hearing what the Prime Minister has said to-day, and seeing that the government is now prepared to accept the whole responsibility of this invasion of provincial rights, I decline to move my amendment.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick). I have noted two statements made by the hon. gentleman who has just spoken (Mr. Henderson). He said in the first instance that he knew nothing whatever of the character of this Bill, and then he proceeded to add that it was a clear invasion of provincial rights. I think, in view of those statements my hon. friend may readily be excused for not moving his amendment.

Mr. W. A. GALLIHER (Cariboo). This Bill is in my name. I must say I admire the persistence of the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson), for he raised his voice in opposition to it when it was first brought before the Railway Committee, and was referred to a sub-committee to report. The sub-committee reported favourably on the Bill without amendment. When that report was adopted by the committee, my hon. friend again raised his voice against it. So I say I admire his persistence, although it has been of little avail so far. Now the province of British Columbia is not complaining at all with regard to this Bill. In fact I think if my hon. friend who has just spoken will look at section 216, of the Railway Act, he will see that it is an open question, when a line of railway like this connects with a trunk line of railway running out of the province, whether it is not by virtue of that fact under the control of the Dominion government and becomes a work for the general benefit of Canada. However, we did not wish that there should be any doubt upon the question, and hence the Bill was brought forward. As to the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Halton, it would seem to me a strange proceeding for this parliament to pass an Act incorporating a railway company, or declaring an existing railway company incorporated by provincial legislation, an Act for the general advantage of Canada, and after doing so we should say, we will refer it back to the provincial legislature to see if they are agreeable to our doing it. It seems to me we would be stultifying ourselves. This Bill is similar to a number of others. It charters a railway that will connect with a trunk line, namely the Canadian Pacific Railway. The amendment of 1903, which the hon. gentleman has spoken of, was an amendment with regard to the extension of time, if I recollect correctly.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What is the principal object of the Bill ?

Mr. GALLIHER. So far as I understand, the railway, if constructed, is to connect with the Canadian Pacific Railway at Kamloops. That I think is the chief reason. As I said before, it seems to me that it is an open question whether the fact of its coming under section 216 of the Railway Act does not make it a work for the general advantage of Canada.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. We have the opinion of the Minister of Railways that there is no doubt as to what the law was.

Mr. GALLIHER. I would certainly treat that with all respect.

Mr. C. B. HEYD (South Brant). There has been a great deal of discussion in the Railway Committee as well as in the House in respect to this phrase 'for the general advantage of Canada,' and our friends on the other side of the House have constituted themselves the champions of provincial rights. It is a curious thing that the party that has always upheld the doctrine of provincial rights are being placed by our friends on the other side in the position of those who are trying to usurp from the provinces certain powers which they possess. This feeling has been worked up assiduously by our friends on the other side and in their newspapers, and the various municipalities are really beginning to believe that there is a determined attempt being made by the government to take away from the provinces and the municipalities rights which belong to them. I received a communication from the municipality of Brantford asking me to see that their rights were not interfered with by this government as if there were a determined attempt on the part of this government to deprive them of their municipal rights. I wrote back to my friends in Brantford saying that there was no desire or disposition to interfere with rights belonging to the municipalities and the provinces, that nothing could be farther from the intention of the government than to take away from the provinces and municipalities any rights that belong to them, that the Liberal party would be the last to think of doing that, that they had been the defenders of provincial rights in past years, and therefore, that they could rest in peace, feeling assured that this parliament would not interfere with municipal or provincial rights. I take this position now, that if there is any doubt at all as to what our legal rights are, if we are going to err let us err in favour of the provinces. Let them manage their affairs as far as possible and let us not interfere with provincial or municipal rights. I know it is not the intention of the government nor of any hon. gentleman on this side of the House to interfere in the slightest degree with the doctrine of provincial rights, apprehension in regard to which is being worked up by our friends on the other side of the House, for political purposes. Such an interference is entirely contrary to the principles of their party and contrary to the principles of the party to which I belong.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the third time, and passed.

Such bounty shall only be payable in respect of binder twine manufactured on or after the 1st day of September, 1902. ## SECURITY FOR DOMINION NOTES.

House in Committee on the following proposed resolutions :

1. That it is expedient to provide that the security to be held by the Minister of Finance and Receiver General, for the redemption of Dominion notes, issued and outstanding at any one time, up to and including thirty million dollars, shall be an amount in gold, or in gold and securities of Canada, the principal or interest of such securities being guaranteed by the government of the United Kingdom, equal to not less than twenty-five per cent of the amount of such notes so issued and outstanding, the amount so to be held in gold to be not less than fifteen per cent of such amount so issued and outstanding ; and for the redemption of Dominion notes, issued in excess of thirty million dollars, an amount in gold equal to such excess.

2. That all expenses incurred or required to be paid in connection with the engraving, printing or preparation of Dominion notes, or the signing, issue or redemption thereof, shall be paid out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada. And in case the amount held as security for the redemption of Dominion notes should not be sufficient to pay the Dominion notes presented for redemption, or in case the amount so held should be reduced below the amount required to be held, as provided in the aforegoing resolution, the Governor in Council may raise by way of loan, temporary or otherwise, such sum of money as may be necessary to pay such notes, or to provide the amount required to be held as security for the redemption of Dominion notes issued and outstanding.—The Minister of Finance.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). Mr. Chairman. This is a resolution of which some announcement was made and upon which some explanations were given at an earlier stage of the session. I am glad to know that so far as my information goes the change proposed is one which has met with the general approval of financial men. The resolution proposes to increase the amount of Dominion notes which we are at liberty to issue with a twenty-five per cent reserve from $20,000,000 to $30,000,000. Our currency is to a large extent a paper currency as a matter of convenience, but it rests upon a safe gold basis. It is understood that we shall have a reasonable proportion of gold at all times in reserve to meet demands that may be made for the redemption of notes. Just what amount of notes we may properly issue in this way would have some reasonable regard to the general growth, development and progress of the country. We have not made any change in the limit since 1880, twenty-three years ago, when the amount was fixed at $20,000,000. By the legislation of that time we were authorized to issue $20,000,000 having as a reserve twenty-five per cent, either in gold or imperial guaranteed debentures, being the equivalent of gold. For all sums over that amount we have been obliged to hold dollar for dollar. As the country grows and we have larger wealth and larger resources, it is only reasonable to assume that that limit may be increased. I think we would be justified at present in making the limit larger, but in matters of this kind it is always well to proceed slowly and cautiously.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. How much does the minister propose to increase it ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The present law is that we may issue $20,000,000 on a reserve of 25 per cent. We propose to increase it to $30,000,000 on a reserve of 25 per cent.

Mr. MACLEAN. Does the hon. gentleman propose to issue five dollar notes, and thus increase the denomination of his issue ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That very point is under consideration, but it is not touched by the resolution because it is a matter of regulation.

Mr. MACLEAN. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am not prepared to say that we may not before the year is out issue a five dollar note if the demands of the country are as great as we imagine they will be. I am inclined to think that we may have to do what my hon. friend (Mr. Maclean) suggests. The denomination of note will not, of course, affect the amount to be issued. We can issue a four dollar note as we do at present, but it has been represented to us that the five dollar note is more convenient than the four. It is a mere matter of business and if we find that the banks are not able to issue enough 'fives,' we may supply the five dollar note instead of the four, or continue to issue the four.

Mr. HENDERSON. The country would not hail with any degree of satisfaction any further issue of four dollar notes, because they are much disliked by the business community and the banks. They look so much like a 'one' that when money is being hurriedly passed, mistakes are made. I believe the Minister of Finance will have the gratitude of the country if he discontinues the issue of four dollar bills.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That matter was brought to my notice some time ago, and although I thought there was a substantial difference, still, having regard to the representations made to me by business men, I caused a change to be made in the form of the four dollar note which I think makes the distinction clearer. So far as that point is concerned, I think we have met the criticism. But on the point of public convenience I think that the five dollar note is more convenient than the four.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is so strong in our mind that we may find it necessary to issue a five dollar note. In the year 1880, when the limit of $20,000,000 was fixed, the total circulation of Dominion notes was only $13,500,000, so that the limit then fixed was about 50 per cent in excess of the total circulation. But things have so changed that to-day we have a circulation of $39,000,000. That in some degree is a measure of the progress of the country since that time. At the time the limit was fixed at $20,000,000, our revenue was $23,300,000, so that the limit was close up to our revenue. To-day when we are proposing to fix the limit at $30,000,000, our revenue, I am glad to say, for the year just closed will be in the neighbourhood of $66,000,000. It will therefore be seen that we are adopting a moderate and conservative policy in the extent of our increase. As an indication of the wealth of the country I may say that in 1880 the deposits in chartered banks was $76,000,000, whereas the deposits in the chartered banks at the close of last year was $370,000,000. The total trade of the country in 1880--and it is for the convenience of this total trade that this currency system is needed—our total trade in 1880 was $174,000,000, whereas in the year just closed it was about $450,000,000. These few figures show in a striking way the great progress that has been made in the trade, in the commerce, and in the wealth and resources of Canada since 1880, and it would be seen that in making this proposal we are on very safe and sound lines.

Mr. ROBINSON (West Elgin). Can the minister issue a larger denomination than the five dollar notes ?—why not issue 'tens'?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If the public demand existed there is no reason why we should not do it, but as a matter of fact the banks issue the 'tens' and I have so far had no representations that there is any shortage of them. We did have representations made at the height of the currency demand last autumn that there was some anxiety as to the banks supplying the currency; however, if it were found necessary there is no reason why we should not issue 'tens' or any denomination the public might require.

Mr. ROBINSON (West Elgin). I think it would be better for the government to issue all the bills. If you did so you would make money out of it because no doubt a great many bills are lost and destroyed and I think the people should have the benefit of that.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The position of the matter as I understand is this: The present circulation of Dominion notes amounts to $39,000,000. There is a reserve of gold or Dominion securities guaranteed by the government of the United Kingdom of not less than $24,000,000 against that.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. About that.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The result of the proposed legislation will be to decrease the amount of that security by $7,500,000 ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). So that in place of holding $24,000,000 against the $39,000,000 you would hold against it about $16,500,000 ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is substantially correct.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Does the hon. gentleman think it is wise to make so large a reduction in the securities which we hold ? I suppose that he does regard it as prudent or he would not have brought this measure down, but it does strike me that the reduction by nearly one-third in the gold and other securities which we hold on account of this circulation is a pretty important matter. It is true of course that the commerce of the country is developing to a very large extent; it is true of course that our revenue is larger than in 1880; but I suppose we have to consider this question from the standpoint of all possible contingencies, and we must consider what the effect would be in a time of financial stress. I would like to have the view of the minister with regard to that.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I may say that the step now taken has been taken only after most careful consideration and consultation with the most eminent financiers of the country, because in matters of this sort we should take care that we make no mistake. If this Bill were to be considered entirely by itself, the figures I have given as to the great growth of the country would show that there is ample reason for the expansion. I may mention incidentally—though I think the Bill would stand on its own merits—that as a matter of fact while we are increasing our circulation in one form, yet we are adding to our reserves of gold a special reservation for the savings banks. Of the $7,500,000, which we could issue under this provision, we propose to set apart about $6,000,000 at once as a special reserve for our savings bank deposits; in respect to which we have never had any reserve whatever. Irrespective of that, however, the degree of reserve which we would have even under this Bill will be so much beyond what the legal reserve is; so much beyond what at any time any of my predecessors expected to hold, that there is no danger whatever. I can assure my hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax) that before reaching this conclusion I have had careful consultation not only with my deputy who is an expert in the matter, but also with other financial men. As I have pointed out we are taking advantage of that in a measure which I shall call your attention to in a few moments. We are proposing to set apart $6,000,000 of that sum of money and to ear-mark it as a security for the savings banks—we are not taking it away from the general securities for the obligations of the Canadian people.

Mr. HENDERSON. Does the minister expect to increase the currency for circulation by the operation of this measure ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If we were to take full advantage of the Bill and to deal with this Bill alone, the effect of it would be that we would have the right on an issue of $30,000,000 to have a reserve of $7,500,000. Instead of having $20,000,000 with a reserve of $5,000,000, we issue $30,000,000, with a reserve of $7,500,000. The net increase not to be covered by reserve, will be $7,500,000, and we claim that we would be amply justified if we took that and applied it to the general business of the country. We would still have a larger reserve than any Finance Minister hitherto has found it necessary as a matter of law to establish. But while we take this power under this Act, we propose by another measure which is to follow it to set apart $6,000,000 of that amount, and, instead of using it in the general business of the country we will ear-mark it, and hold it as a security for the savings banks. The actual increase of the loaning power of the government under this will be insignificant, perhaps $1,000,000 or $1,500,000.

Mr. HENDERSON. I understood that the object of this measure was to increase the circulation, which I think the requirements of the country would justify. I agree with the hon. member for West Elgin that there is an abundance of $5-bills in the country, in comparison with other bills, but I am sure that it would meet with the approval of the banks as well as the general public if a large number of $10 and $20 bills were put in circulation.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. With regard to the general question of an increase of the circulation, I can assure my hon. friend that we are anticipating and preparing for it. We have power to issue an unlimited circulation with dollar for dollar in gold over the $30,000,000, and we shall be prepared to meet the demands of the circulation in that way.

Mr. MACLEAN. The government should have no hesitation in issuing $5 notes. The $5 note issued by the government will obtain recognition not only all over this country, but also in the United States. There is no trouble now in passing the $1 and $2 federal notes in the United States, and a great many of our people going into that country take Dominion notes with them. But the moment they present a Canadian bank note, it is refused.

Mr. CHARLTON. Is the hon. gentleman sure that is the case ?

Mr. MACLEAN. I have often experienced it. I have often seen Canadian bank-notes refused, but if our people go there with $5 federal notes, they will have no trouble in passing them at par. I am surprised to hear the hon. member for North Norfolk saying that Canadian bank-notes are not rejected in the United States.

Mr. CHARLTON. I merely asked a question.

Mr. MACLEAN. A larger circulation is required in this country to-day, and I think the government are taking a very good step in meeting that requirement, and they will make no mistake if they provide for a generous issue of $5 federal notes.

Mr. CLANCY. I would ask the Finance Minister if it has been the custom of the government to use any part of the reserve in the past ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No part of the legal reserve has ever been used. It has always been maintained up to the full standard required by the statute.

Mr. CLANCY. Then I do not understand what increased security is offered to the people.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I may remind my hon. friend that though there is a legal reserve which must always be maintained, we usually carry somewhat more, which we are able to use in times of stringency.

Mr. CLANCY. What excess has there been over the legal reserve ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. At this moment we hold between $3,000,000 and $4,000,000 over and above the legal reserve.

Mr. CHARLTON. I may venture to remark upon the assertion made by my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Maclean), that Dominion notes of the denomination of $5 pass current in all parts of the United States, that the hon. gentleman is no doubt mistaken. Banks in the United States are not allowed to handle Canadian currency at all.

Mr. MACLEAN. I was not speaking of the banks.

Mr. CHARLTON. There is a tax of two per cent on any other currency than that of the United States which the banks may handle; and you cannot dispose of such currency in any bank of the United States. It may go into the hands of the merchants on the frontier who have facilities for sending it over to Canada for redemption; but the use of Canadian currency in the United States is rendered impossible by the discrimination against its use by the laws of the land. This is a matter of no importance, however, and had it not been that the hon. gentleman called me down rather summarily for my ignorance on the subject, I would have had nothing to say in regard to it. I have one suggestion, not of any great importance, which I would like to submit to the Finance Minister, that is, as to the name of these notes. Instead of calling them notes of the Dominion of Canada, which is simply the corporate name of the union of our various provinces, it would be simpler and probably just as well to drop the word 'Dominion,' and designate them as the notes of Canada. I make this suggestion for what it is worth.

Mr. MACLEAN. In answer to the hon. member for North Norfolk, I must give my own experience in the United States, not with banks, but with business people there, which is that they do commonly reject Canadian bank-notes. On the other hand, there is an immense circulation of United States notes in Canada, where there is no tax upon them. I believe there are millions and millions of the currency of the United States government in circulation in Canada, to the great benefit of the United States and to the detriment of our own banks and Canadian currency. It is time that we had some legislation in Canada to prevent the circulation of American notes in this country. We are glad to have the Americans come here and spend their money; but this American currency is not sent back to the United States, but is continued here year after year. While American silver is largely circulated in Canada, they will not accept Canadian silver with the King's head on it in the United States; it is turned down there every day. They put a blight on it, so to speak. The hon. member for North Norfolk would be talking to the point if he said that what they do in the United States we should do in Canada. He is always justifying something that is done in the United States, but he does not advise us what we should do in this country in the way of retaliation.

Mr. FRASER. I do not think there are as many American notes in this country as the hon. member says. A short time ago, when I had occasion to go to Chicago, I found it necessary to go to three banks in Ottawa before I could get $50 in American notes. A certain amount of American notes are brought to Canada by persons who for the last few years have been living in the United States, and came to spend their holidays here or send money to their friends. In that way a fair amount of Yankee currency comes to Canada, but the amount is not very large. Only a certain number of our banks will take the American currency at its face value. That is largely the way any Yankee bills that are in Canada come in. Our people are not paying their bills in American currency.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. I do not think that the hon. Minister of Finance needs any suggestion about the form of Dominion notes; but for the information of the hon. member for North Norfolk, let me tell him that you cannot make Canada promise to pay money, you can only make the Dominion of Canada, because the Dominion of Canada is the corporate name of Canada. I am more proud of the name of Dominion of Canada than Canada alone, because the Dominion means all of Canada. As a legal and financial proposition, the change could not be made. The Americans are not acquainted with our system of bank currency and will not look at our bank bills unless the promise to pay be made by the Dominion of Canada. It would be a great convenience to have $5 Dominion bills, because $4 bills are inconvenient to make change. I agree with my hon. friend from Guysborough that we should not put any tax on American money. It is good money, and it is given to us in payment of what we sell. For people with such a large country, the Americans are very narrow in their currency regulations; and they suffer for it. They tax their banks very high for the circulation which these banks are allowed to make. They compel them to have a dollar government security for every dollar of currency they issue, and that is one of the reasons of their burdensome regulations; but many of the financiers are considering the question of establishing a banking system there similar to that in force here.

Mr. CHARLTON. I can quite appreciate the conservative feeling of my hon. friend for South Norfolk (Hon. Mr. Tisdale) with reference to the detention of the full name 'The Dominion of Canada,' but I cannot agree with him as to its being essential or necessary to do so. I shall take the liberty of reading to my hon. friend an extract from the British North America Act, which will be quite as good an authority as his own dictum:

3. It shall be lawful for the Queen, by and with the advice of Her Majesty's most honourable Privy Council, to declare by proclamation that, on and after a day therein appointed, not being more than six months after the passing of this Act, the provinces of Canada, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick shall form and be one Dominion under the name of Canada ; and on and after that day those three provinces shall form and be one Dominion under that name accordingly

4. The subsequent provisions of this Act shall, unless it is otherwise expressed or implied, commence and have effect on and after the union, that is to say, on and after the day appointed for the union taking effect in the Queen's proclamation ; and in the same provisions, unless it is otherwise expressed or implied, the name Canada shall be taken to mean Canada as constituted under this Act.

5. Canada shall be divided into four provinces, named Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick.

So that this land we live in and are so proud of is not 'the Dominion of Canada,' but 'Canada.' We had better stick to the name 'Canada' and discard Dominion. Canada is a grand name, designating a mighty country and noble people, and will answer our purpose quite well.

With regard to the statement of the member for East York (Mr. Maclean), that I am always engaged in belittling things Canadian and using my efforts in this House for purposes adverse to Canadian interests, I would say to that hon. gentleman that I might quite properly raise a point of order upon the use in this House of old and musty chestnuts. The thing has not the merit of novelty, it would not have had it twenty-five years ago, when it was wont to be used from time to time by hon. gentlemen opposite who were at a disadvantage in argument, but it ought to be out of date at present. However, the hon. gentleman is quite welcome to all the comfort he can get from it.

With regard to allowing American currency to circulate in this country it would be a misfortune to Canada to adopt the restrictive policy of the United States. It would be greatly to the advantage of business interests in that country if Canadian money were allowed to circulate there. It is no evidence of breadth of mind or good business views that Canadian money is not allowed circulation there. We have shown aptitude for acquiring money and have sense enough to want all we can get ; and if American currency can be used for the purposes of money, the more we can get of it from travellers and others who buy Canadian products, the better for us. It is a narrow policy which will not take good money wherever it may come from. We should take all we can get and lay our plans, so far as we legitimately and honestly can, to get more.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. My hon. friend is mixing up finance with geography. The name is 'Canada' geographically, but politically and commercially 'Dominion of Canada' is the corporate name.

Mr. ROBINSON (West Elgin). I take exception with the hon. member for North Norfolk. I think Dominion a splendid name. And I should be very sorry indeed to see the word 'Dominion' left out of Canada's title. We have the Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, we have other kingdoms in different parts of the world ; but I do not think any country can show a name as good as 'The Dominion of Canada.' People like money, and no doubt our people are glad to see Americans come in here with money to spend. But, unfortunately for us, when our money goes into the United States it does not pass at its face value. Why should we be so generous as to take their money at par when they insist upon a discount for ours ? I was travelling a few years ago in the United States, and wanted to pay for my berth in the sleeping car for the night. I had not sufficient currency to pay the conductor for the berth, so handed him a Canadian ten-dollar bill. Every gentleman has not a ten-dollar bill in his pocket when he wants it, unfortunately. This bill happened to be one of the Bank of Montreal issue. The conductor did not know anything about the Bank of Montreal. When I told him that the stock was worth two dollars for one, he looked at me as though I came from the Cannibal islands, and said : 'There is a discount of 25 per cent on this bill.' I said : 'Surely you are not going to demand that discount on the promise to pay of one of the best banks in Canada ?' But when he persisted, I said : 'Have you a first class car on this train ?' And when he told me that there was a first class car, I said : 'Give me back my ten-dollar bill.' He did not do it, but he took it away and brought me back my change, $7.50, in silver, and I had to go all the distance with the annoyance of carrying about those big silver dollars. This illustrates the advantage of our own country issuing ten and twenty-dollar bills. For probably that conductor would have heard something about Canada, and, seeing a bill issued by this Dominion, he might be willing to take it at its face value. We ought to have Dominion bills of larger denominations than those now issued. The public would get the benefit of it if we issued our own money ; and I would like to see the government issue all the money, and issue it in the name of 'The Dominion of Canada.'

Mr. WRIGHT. I wish to say just a word about the circulation of American money. It is a good thing for us to get all the American money we can. With so much of it coming in, how is it that it does not flood this country ? Let me tell you how the merchants get rid of the American money they take in. The Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway run into the United States. So all the merchants have to do when they get a quantity of American money on their hands is to use it to pay freight bills to either of these roads. These companies take American money at par and send it out to the United States to pay their own bills. So the American money we get in goes out of the country without the least trouble to our merchants.

Mr. MACPHERSON. I do not wish to take up the time of the House in discussing the questions that have arisen in connection with this resolution, but I would like to suggest the advisability of forgetting the notes for a while and going into the gold question. Instead of issuing ten-dollar bills we should be issuing five and ten-dollar gold pieces. Last year we produced $21,000,000 of gold in this Dominion, all of which went over to the American side. We produced also $2,280,900 worth of silver, all of which, I believe, went out of our country. The year before last we produced nearly $25,000,000 worth of gold, and also $2,900,000 worth of silver, all of which has gone to enrich the United States. I think it is high time our people were looking to a gold and silver currency, and not to continue to look outside to the British or the Americans for our gold. I understand that the question of a mint is practically settled. But I would like to see us make more progress in this matter of a gold currency.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. The two languages, French and English, are official in this country. All our documents in this House must be printed in both languages. So I think it would be fair to have the new issue printed partly in French and partly in English. I think it would not interfere with the happiness of this country if the French language were recognized in this way as it is on other occasions so far as our parliamentary documents are concerned.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure). I think the idea expressed by the hon. member for St. Mary's, Montreal (Hon. Mr. Tarte), is certainly deserving of consideration. But it is more a sentimental than a practical question. But the suggestion made by the hon. member from North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) is especially deserving of attention on the part of the Minister of Finance. The words 'Dominion of Canada' have been translated in French by 'Puissance du Canada.' Great difficulty was found in choosing a French word having just the meaning of the word 'Dominion' in connection with the name of Canada. It is now admitted that the word 'Puissance' does not convey just the meaning of the word 'Dominion.' Therefore, I think the word 'Dominion' might well be left out. Let the word 'Canada' stand alone, and it would be accepted by the French and English alike, and would simplify matters very much.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Has not my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding) a word to say in answer to my question? I would like to have a 'yes' or 'no.'

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is not my habit to give a 'yes' or 'no' to a new question. I can only say that any suggestions from the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Tarte) on this subject or any other shall receive careful consideration. But if he demands a 'yes' or 'no,' surely he has forgotten the ministerial reserve which was at one time so important. Unfortunately, we are not so free to say 'yes' or 'no' as the hon. gentleman is.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. The answer is not very clear. I perfectly admit that the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Fielding) has not said 'yes' and has not said 'no.' Diplomacy is all right, but a clear statement, either now or later, would be welcome indeed. The question is worthy of some consideration, unless I am very much mistaken.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have assured the hon. gentleman that this and all other suggestions offered I shall feel it my duty to fully consider. But if I do not answer 'yes' or 'no,' it is for reasons that the hon. gentleman, as an ex-minister, can fully appreciate.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I am pleased now.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Notwithstanding what my hon. friend the Minister of Finance has observed, it does seem to me that the course he proposes may at some time in the future weaken our position in regard to the currency. Taking the amount the Minister of Finance has mentioned, $39,000,000, our reserve at the present time amounts to 65 per cent of the total issue of currency. Under the arrangement he proposes, our reserve will amount to 45 per cent of the total issue of the currency. Of course, if the amount of currency should be reduced to $30,000,000, it will stand, so far as proportion is concerned, at what it is now, 25 per cent in each case. But in that case there is $7,500,000 for which we provide no reserve whatever, in addition to the amount now standing without any reserve. I have no doubt that my hon. friend the Minister of Finance and his officials have considered this very carefully, but I think it cannot be disputed that our position is weakened to the extent I have mentioned, and we must surely call a reduction of the gold reserve from 65 per cent to 45 per cent a weakening of our position. We are forced to take that view of it when we consider the possibilities of the future without looking solely at the business conditions that prevail today.

Resolutions reported, read the first and second time and agreed to.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 222) respecting Dominion notes.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

THE OTTAWA IMPROVEMENT COMMISSION.

House in committee on the following resolutions:

That it is expedient to amend chapter 10 of the statutes of 1899, intituled : ' An Act respecting the city of Ottawa,' as follows :—

1. The period during which the sum of sixty thousand dollars annually, referred to in section 1 of chapter 10 of the statutes of 1899, may be paid, shall be a period not exceeding twenty years from the first day of July, one thousand eight hundred and ninety-nine, instead of a period not exceeding ten years from said day, as provided in said section.

2. The commission may borrow from time to time, on debentures of the commission, bearing interest at a rate not exceeding four per cent per annum ; which debentures the commission is hereby authorized to issue ; such sum or sums of money, not exceeding in the whole two hundred and fifty thousand dollars, as may be required to enable the commission to purchase land or to carry into effect any scheme of improvements and undertakings requiring a larger outlay than would be available out of the annual income of the commission, or for both purposes. Providing always that no money shall be borrowed by the commission except with the previous consent of the Governor in Council.

3. No debentures shall be issued by the commission for a period extending beyond the first day of July, in the year one thousand nine hundred and nineteen. The debentures issued under the authority of this Act shall be paid and redeemed by the commission in equal annual instalments, beginning at the expiration of one year from the date of the issue thereof. So that the total amount of the debentures so issued shall be fully paid and redeemed on or before the said first day of July, one thousand nine hundred and nineteen.

4. The principal of the debentures issued under this Act, and the interest thereon, shall be a first charge and lien upon the income of the commission from whatever source derived. And the commission shall each year set apart and appropriate such amount of such income as shall be required to pay and discharge the principal and interest of such debentures as shall fall due and become payable during such year. The word ' year ' in this section means the period beginning on the first day of July, in one year, and ending on the 30th day of June in the next year.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). Some years ago the government presented to the House a proposal to the effect that the time had arrived when we should take some action as a government and parliament in recognition of the position of Ottawa as the capital of the Dominion. While in its municipal affairs it stood to us in no other relation than any other city of equal size and equal population, still, inasmuch as it was the capital of the Dominion, the whole Dominion was interested in seeing it developed with some regard to beauty ; and the idea was advanced that we should contribute a moderate sum from the Dominion revenues with the view of improving the city. It was not contemplated that this grant from the Dominion should in any way reduce the burdens of the city of Ottawa, although those who are residents of Ottawa can bear testimony that it is a pretty liberally taxed city. The people have been enterprising and progressive, they have made a good many improvements themselves, and they are rather smartly taxed for it. The object of our legislation therefore, was not to diminish any of their burdens, but rather to enable them, or enable the community at large, to do some things which perhaps they could not do by themselves. Accordingly a Bill was introduced authorizing a grant of $60,000 for a period of ten years. A portion of that money was not in the position of a new grant, for we were paying the city of Ottawa $15,000 a year as our contribution for the water service and other similar services; and it was arranged that that sum, instead of being paid to the municipality of Ottawa should thereafter be paid to a commission, and that we should add to that the sum of $45,000, thus making a grant of $60,000 per annum. That grant was passed, I think, by practically a unanimous vote of this House. Since then a very considerable amount of work has been done, and I am sure that those who have had an opportunity of inspecting the improvements that have been made will agree with me that much has already been done in the way of improving the city of Ottawa. The grant, however, is for a limited period of ten years. I have no doubt we will generally agree without a moment's hesitation that at the expiry of the ten years any government which might be in power would probably move for continuing the grant. We have thought therefore that as it is likely the grant will be continued under any circumstances, we might well anticipate its continuance, and by legislation at this session put the Ottawa Improvement Commission in a position to undertake some work on a larger scale than they could hope to undertake if they were limited to the ten year grant. The further proposal therefore is to increase the grant from ten years, from 1899, when it was made, to a period of twenty years from the original date, twenty years instead of ten years. The advantage of this to the commissioners will be that, with the certain knowledge that the grant will be so continued, they may capitalize a portion of the grant and raise a reasonable sum of money to enable them to purchase land and to do some things that they could not do out of the ordinary grant.

It may be remembered that the number of the commission was enlarged at the last session of parliament. My desire and the desire of my colleagues was that it should not be a purely local organization composed merely of gentlemen living in the city of Ottawa who took a warm interest in the matter ; we desired that the commission should also include a number of gentlemen representing the outlying community. Therefore we added the names of some gentlemen not living in Ottawa, not in any way specially connected with Ottawa, but gentlemen who were prepared to take an interest in Ottawa from the broader point of view of its being the national capital. If the House shall grant the commissioners this extension which we are now proposing, they contemplate issuing bonds to the amount of $250,000, to enable them, as I said a moment ago, to purchase land and do some things on a larger scale than they could do if they had only the expectation of a ten years' grant. They contemplate asking the city of Ottawa to turn over to them the beautiful Rockliffe park. I take it for granted the city of Ottawa would be willing to do that, although that is a matter which the city authorities must determine for themselves. But beyond the limits of Rockliffe park there is a considerable area of land well wooded and beautifully situated, which might well make an addition to the park. The commissioners have taken options on a portion of that property, and I think they are in a position to obtain another portion; however, I am not quite clear that they have a formal option. A large portion of this land is owned by Mr. Keefer, the eminent engineer, an elderly gentleman now, and I believe that he has kept this land for several years intact with the idea that the commission would desire it. He has given them an option on this land which seems fair and reasonable. However, at our suggestion, the commissioners have appointed valuators to report on the value of the land, and if the scheme is carried out, only such price as these independent valuators report will be paid.

Another point in which we have advised the commission to take special action is in regard to the employment of a landscape gardener. While we have the highest admiration for the work that is already done and for the engineer who has charge of it, while we believe good work has been done, still we think that if there is to be a scheme of improvement that we can all feel proud of, it would be well that the commissioners should have hereafter the advice and assistance of some man who has had large experience in other communities in laying out grounds of an ornamental character. The commissioners, acting upon our suggestion, have, I understood, employed for consultation, an eminent artist who has had great experience in this direction, in laying out parks and lands elsewhere, and who, I believe, is now acting with the commissioners in maturing a satisfactory scheme. We have every reason to believe that, in the hands of the commissioners, and with the advice of the gentlemen whom they have consulted, if we give them the enlarged grant which it is proposed, they will be able to enlarge their operations, and that within a comparatively short time, within the time of those of us who are still members of this House and even of the older gentlemen who are present to-day, we may reasonably hope to see still further improvements, and to see the city of Ottawa embellished in a manner worthy of the capital of the Dominion of Canada. I do not know whether there is any special feature of the work of the commission upon which information may be given. I have been furnished with the statements as to the operations which have been carried on, the amount of money they have expended and so forth and I shall be very glad to give any further information that may be desired by the committee.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like to ask the hon. gentleman how the commission is constituted and by what authority the commissioners are appointed?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The Mayor of the city of Ottawa has a seat on the board ex-officio by reason of the fact that a portion of the annual grant which is nominally put in the shape of a grant from the Dominion parliament really represents the sum previously agreed upon and paid for water service, and as representing an interest of that character as well as because of the fact that he is Mayor of the city it is proper that he should hold a seat on the board. Otherwise the members are all appointed by the Governor in Council. The chairman of the commission is Mr. Henry N. Bate. The first commissioners were, Mr. Henry N. Bate, who has been chosen chairman, Mr. Joseph Riopelle, of Ottawa, Mr. C. R. Cunningham, of Ottawa, with the Mayor of the city. Since that time we have added Sir Wm. Hingston, of Montreal, Senator J. P. B. Casgrain, of Montreal, Senator Frost, of Smith's Falls and Mr. Geo. O'Keefe, Police Magistrate, of the city of Ottawa.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Has the commission any income other than is derived from this grant?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, but if they should receive anything by way of bequest or otherwise, we provide that all issues of bonds shall be a first charge upon it. At the present time they have no sources of income except this grant.

Mr. HEYD. Are the services of the commissioners gratuitous?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin). Will this commission act independently of the city council?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, the mayor of the city is the link between the municipal authorities and the commission, but the board is entirely independent.

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin). Will that commission have power to remove the lumber piles beyond the limits of the corporation?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am afraid not.

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin). The city runs the risk of being burned down every time a breeze springs up.

Mr. MACLEAN. I wish to endorse what the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Robinson) says. We are expending a great deal of money in the capital of the country. We are embarking upon a park scheme. We are following on the lines adopted at Washington, but at Washington they went one further and took control of the city. The experiment there has proved most successful. Washington is now held up as the best administered city in the United States. As a matter of fact the city of Ottawa is not doing what it ought to do to entitle it to retain the capital at this place. Its laws in regard to fires and in regard to allowing lumber to be piled within its limits are not such as to discourage the people of Canada in any further enlargement of the buildings here. We do not know the day when this parliament House will be burnt up by reason of these lumber piles. We do not know the day when some one of the departmental buildings will be burned. In a short time we may have to spread these buildings over the city and unless the city is willing to administer the affairs of the municipality as they should be administered, and to provide proper fire protection, the capital, as far as the public of Canada is concerned, is in jeopardy, and I think the time has come when the government, or somebody representing the government, ought to impress upon the city of Ottawa that if we are to make this the capital of the country it is encumbent upon the city that it shall do everything possible to prevent a recurrence of these disastrous fires we have had and especially to prevent fires of the character that threaten to destroy the valuable records and public buildings of the country.

Mr. CHARLTON. The hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean) in his remarks upon the city government of Ottawa, makes a statement in reference to one of the largest industries of this city which is repeatedly made, which is seldom controverted and which is, in my opinion, to a very large extent unjustifiable. He speaks of the lumber interest of this city as being a menace to the safety of the city because of the fact that it exists here and that the product of that industry is stored here. I do not agree with the hon. gentleman, and this is a subject about which I have some knowledge. I am acquainted with various large lumbering cities of the United States, and in not one of these places is the business barred from the limits of the city. In not one of these places is the business discriminated against and in not one of these places are the gentlemen engaged in it attacked as public enemies. Take the cities of Saginaw and Bay City, cities with 120,000 inhabitants, where lumber is the chief industry, the lumber is piled throughout the city wherever the mills are situated. It is not found to be a menace, it is not found to be productive of disastrous conflagrations. Take the cities of Buffalo, Chicago and Tonawanda, places where enormous quantities of lumber are transhipped; in Tonawanda 300,000,000 feet a year, in Buffalo more than 300,000,000 feet a year, and in Chicago 1,500,000,000 feet a year are handled. All this is stored and handled within the limits of the city, and in none of these cases is this lumber found to be a menace to property. Insurance is effected in these places at the rate of 1 per cent. The great fire which devastated this city originated on the other side of the river. Its origin had nothing to do with the lumber interests. It swept down to the brink of the river and the wind forced it across the river. Had it taken a foot hold in the heart of Ottawa it would have swept the city out of existence without reference to the lumber piles at all. It happened to strike the lumber and of course the lumber was burned. In the last lumber fire the devastation resulted from the failure of the city waterworks system. At a critical moment the principal main gave out, the waterworks pumping house was flooded with water, and the fire department were not able to cope with the conflagration. This city is largely dependent upon this great interest, and this great interest is being unfairly dealt with by a large section of the people of this city. I did not feel like sitting here and hearing these attacks being made upon it, and these statements in regard to its being a menace to the safety of the city and in regard to the assertion that it is necessary to remove it and that it is necessary to deprive these gentlemen, upon whom the prosperity of the city to a great extent depends, of the facilities of doing business at all. Give Ottawa a properly equipped waterworks system and the dangers from lumber conflagrations will be minimized and the city will be protected as well from conflagrations in other respects. In regard to the government of this city by commission, there is a good deal to be said for that. The city of Washington is governed by a commission. The city provides half the revenue and the government provides the other half. There is no trouble about politics in Washington. There is no trouble as to what side the civil service shall vote upon, because none of the civil servants have votes. Washington has no representation in the national legislature. I think the plan has contributed to the welfare of the country. I think it is quite likely that Ottawa, if governed in the same way by a commission, with a committee of this House acting with a committee of the city under an arrangement that the federal government and the city should each contribute a certain proportion of the expense, and with an arrangement that Ottawa shall be barred out from all participation in political elections for the Dominion parliament, it might be well governed. Perhaps the thing is worth considering.

Mr. LOGAN. I am glad to be able to agree with the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) as far as the latter part of his remarks are concerned, but in reference to the first part I must, as one member of this House, entirely dissent. This matter of the lumber menace to the city of Ottawa is to my mind a very grave one, and it is a particularly serious one when we consider the proposal to give a very large sum of the people's money towards beautifying this our capital city. The city council carried a by-law unanimously forbidding the piling of lumber in the city of Ottawa. Therefore, why should not this by-law which is enacted be carried out? If we are to expend large sums of money, as is now proposed, in the city of Ottawa, surely it becomes the duty of the government to insist that the by-law which has been sanctioned by the city council should be carried into effect and that this menace—I think it is well called a menace—to the city of Ottawa should be removed. There is no use in trying to beautify the city in one part and to allow it to be disfigured in other parts. There is no use in our beautifying the city if this danger is allowed to exist at every man's door. I may say to my hon. friend from North Norfolk that the first of the more recent conflagrations would never have reached the proportion it did, had it not been for the lumber piles along the Ottawa river, and, as regards the last fire, the city was only saved by reason of the fact that the wind happened to change. Had there been a strong wind blowing from the direction of the lumber piles the city would have been swept out of existence. We are asked now to vote thousands of the money of the people to beautify this city, but at the same time we know that this menace to the city is allowed to remain in spite of the fact that the aldermen of Ottawa have voted that that menace shall be removed. It seems to me that this is the proper time for the Minister of Finance and for the government to confer with the municipal authorities of Ottawa and to ascertain just where we are in this matter. I, for one, representing a constituency that is hundreds of miles from the city of Ottawa, entirely concur in the proposition that we should beautify this capital city of Canada. I believe it is our duty to make it a city that we ourselves may be proud of, and that also those who come here from all parts of the world on diplomatic and other business, may have reason to admire. I quite agree that we should make Ottawa as far as possible the Washington of the North. But, Sir, while I believe this, I also believe that we should not proceed further in this matter until steps are taken to prevent the daily violation of the by-law which has been adopted by the city council of the city of Ottawa. As to placing Ottawa under a commission, that is a large question, and one on which I do not feel competent to express an opinion, but with the experience of Washington before us, it seems to me that this matter should secure the careful consideration of the government in order to ascertain whether it would not be in the best interests of Canada that the capital of the country should be controlled by a commission appointed by the government, and therefore practically controlled by the government.

Mr. CHARLTON.

Resolutions reported, read the first and second time, and agreed to.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 223) further to amend the Act of 1899, respecting the city of Ottawa.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

PENNY BANKS.

Bill (No. 198) respecting Penny Banks read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). I would perhaps facilitate the treatment of this Bill if I would remind hon. members who may not have been present of what I said when I gave some general explanations, as to the purpose of the Bill. We were asked a year ago to give a charter to a savings bank under the name of 'The Penny Bank.' It was thought wise that we should not give a special charter to the organization which then sought it, but that we should endeavour to so frame a Bill that it might be made use of by any organization of a like character. The gentlemen who asked for incorporation then, and who were citizens of Toronto connected with benevolent enterprises, very cheerfully agreed to this. During the recess we had this Bill drafted, and it is intended to serve their purpose and also to be available for any other organizations of like character. It is not intended that these should be banks having any capital. They are benevolent organizations and all you require is sufficient security that the funds coming in shall be honestly dealt with. Practically they become collecting agencies for the government savings bank, in as much as all the moneys they receive must be turned over to the Dominion savings banks; they are only permitted to retain a small sum to deal with their daily transactions. There are one or two organizations in the city of Toronto which expect to come under the operation of this Bill at once, and if any similar societies are found elsewhere, they will be able to obtain incorporation by letters patent in the same way as letters patent are issued under the Joint Stock Companies Act.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is this founded on legislation which exists in any other country at the present time?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am not sure that it is, and yet I think that my hon. friend will see that it is well guarded and is quite safe.

On section 4,

Mr. HENDERSON. Will the parties who intend to incorporate one of these banks have to apply for an Act of parliament ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No. Under section 3 of the Bill, the Governor in Council may issue letters patent.

On section 13,

Mr. FOWLER. You have this general clause providing that 'the board may, from time to time, make by-laws not contrary to law, relating to the conduct of the affairs of the bank, including among others the following.' Why do you want the words 'among others,' here, when you have at the end of the section a general clause covering the entire business of the bank ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not see that these words are of any importance either way. I do not think they make the section either better or worse. It would probably be just as well without them.

Mr. FOWLER. I am suggesting an improvement by the omission of those words.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE moved that the words 'among others' in the third line of the section be struck out.

Amendment agreed to, and section as amended agreed to.

On section 16,

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the meaning of the last sentence :

A subscriber, who ceases to be a subscriber, otherwise than by payment of his subscription, ceases to be a member of the bank.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This clause was suggested by the Toronto gentlemen. The idea is that a subscriber who ceased to be a subscriber would have no responsibility beyond his subscription. The idea is that by ceasing to be a subscriber, he does not cease to be a member of the bank.

Mr. FOWLER. But he only gets his membership by virtue of his subscription.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. He may be a subscriber but not a member. The idea is that if a man who is a subscriber, wishes to cease to be a subscriber, he may still be a member.

Mr. FOWLER. If he ceased to be a subscriber, would he not cease to be a member ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I shall give that clause further consideration. It was prepared by the Toronto solicitor, and does not seem very clear.

Section allowed to stand.

On section 20,

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is the expression 'voluntary workers' elsewhere ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There may be persons connected with the association who are not prepared to subscribe. They may be necessary for working out the organization. These persons may be represented on the board although they have no financial responsibility.

On section 22,—certain payments in good faith valid.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Are the by-laws required to be submitted to the Governor General in Council or approved by any authority ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, that is provided in section 4.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The language of this section is pretty comprehensive.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is because we are dealing with children and others who are not legally responsible. If section 4 is not broad enough, we may have to redraft it.

Mr. FOWLER. This implies that if the depositor should die or become insane, and the money were paid by the bank to somebody presenting the bank book without any other authority, the bank would be free from liability. In the case of the ordinary banks an administrator is appointed——

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The section is certainly broad.

Mr. FOWLER. It strikes me it is rather too broad. What the hon. minister says with regard to paying the depositor whether a child or a grown person is quite right—the depositor has a right to be paid. But where the depositor is dead, it is important that there should be some check upon the bank.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I grant my hon. friend (Mr. Fowler) that the clause is very broad. But, considering the character of the business, that is, perhaps, inevitable. This is intended to avoid litigation over small sums of money. These gentlemen are acting in good faith, and they have no personal interest. These concerns are not carried on for profit. It would be inconvenient if they were obliged to have litigation over every small sum of money left by a deceased depositor.

Mr. FOWLER. Why not make a limit as is done in the case of a savings bank ? Those institutions can pay up to $200 without administration, if the depositor dies intestate. The limit of deposit in these banks is $300. Why not limit the amount allowed to be paid under this section to $100 ? It would not be right that the expense of administration should be incurred for $100, but over that, there should be the ordinary precautions——

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think that some qualification of that kind might be inserted. Small sums might be paid as provided in the section, but, in the case of larger sums, the usual proceedings should be followed. I think that suggestion of my hon. friend is a good one, and I will gladly accept the amendment. I move that the section be amended by inserting the words 'not exceeding one hundred dollars' after the words 'any payment of the whole or part of any deposit or any interest thereon.'

Amendment agreed to.

On section 23,

The bank may of the moneys received on deposit by it hold for the purpose of paying withdrawals such amount as the directors determine not exceeding the sum of five per cent of the total amount of deposits in the bank, and all moneys received on deposit and on hand at any time in excess of such amount shall be deposited by the bank in a government savings bank or in a post office savings bank to the credit of the bank. Interest on the amounts from time to time at the credit of the bank in the said government savings bank or post office savings bank shall be allowed and credited half yearly to the account of the bank at a rate to be from time to time fixed and determined by the Minister of Finance and Receiver General, such rate not to exceed one-half of one per cent in advance of the rate then payable to depositors in the said government savings bank or post office savings bank.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is really intended to pay the working expenses. To that extent the government aid them and encourage thrift.

On section 25, no powers as to notes, loans, real estate, and trading.

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin). How are they going to pay interest if they are not allowed to lend money ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It will be provided later on that their own money, as distinct from the money of the depositors, they may invest. But the money of depositors they must put in the savings bank.

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin). Will not the chartered banks be allowed to do this business ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It would not suit them at all.

On section 26,

The bank may acquire the assets and assume the liabilities of any existing savings association for benevolent purposes.

Mr. FOWLER. It strikes me that that should be subject to the control of the Governor in Council, if they are going to assume the liabilities as well as take over the assets——

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. These are not incorporated associations, but merely private organizations carrying on business in a free and easy way. And, if they arrange among themselves I do not see why we should interfere in the matter.

Mr. FOWLER. You are empowering them to assume the liabilities as well as take over the assets, and that might be an unfairness to the depositors of the penny bank. It is possible that even a benevolent association might be badly in the hole financially, and to take it over would be an injury to the depositors. It would be better to provide for that in some way.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think that, in view of the character of the business, as it is a benevolent and not a money making business, we could trust these people to protect each other. Of course, it is possible that the difficulty suggested by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fowler) might arise, but I do not think it is sufficiently real to make necessary the provisions suggested.

Section 26, subsection 3,

Until the portion of such assets which consists of securities is converted into cash, such securities shall be deposited with the Minister of Finance and Receiver General, pending the realization thereof into cash as aforesaid ; provided, however, that the said minister shall not incur any liability or responsibility in respect thereof, or in connection with any sale thereof.

Mr. FOWLER. It seems to me that my objection is well taken, because subclauses 2 and 3 seem both to intimate that it is possible there might be liabilities that would be in excess of the assets, that the assets might not be equal to the cash. I think before this new bank should have power to take over an existing institution the affairs of that institution should be examined by the Finance Department.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I will note my hon. friend's suggestion for consideration later on.

Section 29,

The bank may invest the moneys of the guarantee fund in, or lend such moneys upon the following securities and investments, that is to say :

(c.) Shares in the capital stock of any incorporated trust company doing business in Canada, having, according to its then last preceding annual statement submitted to its shareholders, a reserve fund or rest amounting to at least twenty per cent of its capital, and having its stock marketable above par.

Mr. FOWLER. I think in view of the late experience of trust companies, in Canada, it is well to strike that out.

Thes MINISTER OF FINANCE. I would like my hon. friend to observe that this is not the depositors' money at all, we are not allowing them to handle a cent of the depositors' money in this way. This is merely their own contribution to the guarantee fund, and they should have a greater liberty in that respect than if it were trust money.

It is not in any sense trust money, or the depositors' money.

Mr. FOWLER. True, but this guarantee fund may be swept away by bad investment in some trust company. We ought to have a reasonable restriction, though we have to make it much broader than a trust fund.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Well, if there is any particular class of securities which is not sound, I have no desire to put them in. But as it is not the depositors' money but the bank's own money raised for a guarantee fund, we should give them greater freedom in order that they may earn interest thereon, and thus be able to earn working expenses.

Mr. FOWLER. At the same time there seems to be a pretty wide range of securities, some of which seem objectionable in view of past experience.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I should be glad to hear any discussion of that whole section regarding the investing power, and at the end, let the clause remain in committee. I am anxious to have it made reasonable. At the same time I would like the hon. gentleman to bear in mind this important distinction that it is not the depositors' money at all.

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin). To whom are the managers of this bank to give security ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This guarantee fund becomes the security.

On section 33,

Mr. FOWLER. I think it would be well to have three officers subscribe.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Under the Bank Act we accept the certificate of two officers. It may not be convenient always to have three.

On section 34,

Mr. FOWLER. I see there is no provision made for an audit. I suppose that will be provided for by the by-laws. That is the intention is it ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. Would it not be as well to provide in the Bill that an audit shall be made by a chartered accountant ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That will be left to be provided for by their own by-laws. We have no provision for auditing the affairs of any bank. We must leave that to themselves.

Mr. FOWLER. Would it not be as well to have the provision that a proper audit of the accounts shall be made ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I will take note of that for consideration.

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin). Will these banks be subject to government inspection ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Banks are not subject to inspection.

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin). Will these be subject to inspection by a government official ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, they will be in the same position as an ordinary chartered bank. They are bound to make returns. If these returns are honestly made well and good ; if they are dishonestly made the penitentiary looms up before the parties.

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin). It is a great pity that these banks are not subject to government inspection. Quite possibly we would not have had so many failures as we have had if banks had been subject to inspection.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is a very debatable question.

On section 38,

Mr. FOWLER. I would make a suggestion in reference to this matter of an audit. I would suggest that section 33 be amended so that there will be at the commencement of each year an audit made by a chartered accountant, and that he shall append to this statement that is to be made to the minister his certificate that this is a correct statement.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The suggestion that there shall be an examination by a chartered accountant is well worthy of consideration, but it must be distinctly understood that the accountant acts for the bank and not for the government. We do not wish to assume responsibility for inspecting these organizations at all. It would be proper that they should by their own by-laws cause an audit to be made by a chartered accountant. I think the suggestion is well worthy of consideration, and I will note it.

Mr. FOWLER. I do not mean that the department shall assume any responsibility for this audit. This section 38 would operate to subject the accountant to punishment if the certificate were incorrect.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, I beg to move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. HENDERSON. Before the committee rises I would ask the hon. Minister of Finance to revert to section 9. Provision is made that the organization must be completed and that the certificate of the treasury board permitting the bank to carry on business shall be issued within a year from the date of the letters patent incorporating the bank, and also that in the event of the bank not obtaining a certificate from the treasury board within that time the letters patent of the corporation and all rights shall cease. Would it not be wise to make some provision to revive what had been done without going through the whole procedure again. It is customary for a chartered bank in such a case as that to come to the House of Commons and ask for an extension of time. If there were some simple provision to that made here it might be the means of reviving the work that had been commenced, but had not been consummated within a year.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In the case of a chartered bank they would have to come to parliament and get an extension. In this case all they would have to do would be to make application to the Governor in Council for letters patent to be renewed and as the Governor in Council is always on hand there would not be very much delay.

Mr. HENDERSON. I thought there was no provision made here for a renewal ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. They would not need any renewal ; they would simply start afresh.

Mr. HENDERSON. But they would have to go to all the expense again.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is not much expense. The means of organization are very simple here.

Progress reported.

INSPECTION AND SALE OF SEEDS.

House in committee on Bill (No. 200) respecting the inspection and sale of seeds. —The Minister of Agriculture.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. (Hon. Sydney Fisher). Mr. Chairman, I think, perhaps, before this Bill is proceeded with section by section, that you will allow me to say a few words in general explanation of it. When the Bill was first introduced I was asked for an explanation, and I gave a very short one which satisfied the House at that time. But, I think I may say, this is a Bill involving a very considerable question, and one which is of very considerable importance to the agricultural community of this country. Therefore, it may not be out of place on my part to say a few words in regard to the events which have led up to the introduction of this Bill. Every one who is interested in agriculture knows well the great quantity of weeds that exist in our cultivated lands. I am well within the mark in saying that one of the greatest difficulties that our farmers have to contend with is in fighting the battle against weeds. A great deal of the best farm land is well cultivated and we have clean fields, and clean crops, but it is a deplorable fact that in certain lands there are a great number of bad weeds. At agricultural meetings throughout the country, this question has constantly come up and the speakers are frequently being asked how the weeds may be dealt with, and as to how new weeds come to be introduced. This has led to a very thorough discussion with reference to the control of the sale of seeds in order to secure that weed seeds should not be distributed with good seeds. I do not say that this is the only way in which weeds are distributed, but at the same time the attention of those interested in agricultural progress having been called to the question, investigation was had to ascertain to what extent weeds were being distributed through the ordinary sale of seeds. I undertook, as Minister of Agriculture, to start an investigation into this question two years ago. I secured the services of Mr. Clarke, who is a graduate of Guelph college, and who had given considerable attention to this subject. After thoroughly discussing the question with Prof. Robertson, we established what is commonly known as a seed laboratory for the testing of seeds and the investigation of all matters concerning them. This is a machinery which has been established in other countries, but it had never before been attempted in Canada. We secured samples of the ordinary seeds of commerce and we found a startling condition of affairs. While a great many of the seeds sold by the merchants and even by the smaller store keepers were quite good, there was found to be a very considerable proportion which were largely adulterated with weed seeds and with the seeds of plants which were not those supposed to be purchased. There was also a large proportion of the seeds which were true to name, but which were not germinable. This latter defect is a comparatively trifling one, although serious enough in many samples which we obtained. But the distribution of the seeds of noxious weeds to farmers who believe they are buying goods seeds is a most serious matter and it conduces to inflict almost incalculable loss on the farmers. When you reflect that a farmer does not get the results of his sowing for nearly a year, and that if the seed is bad he loses a whole year's work, you will see that it is a very serious blow to agricultural operations. It is still worse when he finds that instead of sowing his land with the seeds of what should turn out to be a profitable crop, he has been sowing the seeds of noxious and pestiferous weeds which may take him years to eradicate. One can well understand the incalculable loss inflicted on the farmers of the country in that way. In other countries efforts have been made to protect the farmers from the results of the trade in bad or impure or imperfect seeds. In England, in Germany, in Switzerland and in other countries, attention has been directed to this matter, and various forms of legislation have been adopted. In some of the states of the Union they have recognized the magnitude of the evil, and they have tried to lessen it by legislation. In Manitoba, and I think the North-west Territories, various ordinances have been adopted, but in Canada there has been no general attempt up to the present time to deal with this matter at all. I have become fully satisfied that the time has arrived when in the interests of the farmers of the country it is necessary that this parliament should try to protect them in their business in this regard, and to minimize as much as possible the evils which have resulted from the condition of affairs I have described.

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Mr. Chairman, when you left the Chair, at six o'clock, I was explaining shortly what had led up to the introduction of the Bill now before the committee. I need not again go over that ground, except to state that this Bill is for the purpose of protecting farmers and others who purchase seeds from paying for what they do not intend to buy, and and from having sold to them under the name of good seeds the seeds of noxious and pernicious weeds. For many years back, at public meetings in which agricultural subjects have been discussed amongst the farmers of the land, constant inquiries with regard to the distribution of weeds in the country, the foulness of our land, and the purity of the seeds sold by the trade, have been made of the speakers and the officials of the various agricultural departments who have been present at those meetings. These questions aroused such interest throughout the country that they seemed worthy of a thorough investigation, and some two years ago the officers of my department took up the matter with me. We concluded to hold an investigation, for the purpose of which I was able to secure the services of Mr. Clarke, who is now in charge of the seed laboratory here, and who had a good deal of training in this direction at Guelph, and in other ways. The result was the discovery of a condition of affairs which at first sight was rather startling. It was found, not only, that a great many of the seeds sold to the farmers were infertile or not germinable, but also that great quantities of the seeds of noxious weeds were included in the samples for sale. We made arrangements to test thoroughly the samples of seeds so as to see just what their quality was, as gathered from all over the country. I may say that the samples obtained were generally from small dealers who sold direct to the farmers, and I daresay would be hardly entirely representative of the trade in seeds on the part of the best seed-producers in Canada. No doubt a great many of the best known seed firms in Canada sell direct to the farmers without the intervention of local dealers or salesmen, and I dare say that if a large number of samples of their seeds were to be tested, their average quality would be found to be much higher than the average quality of the samples we collected. Still, the samples we collected were those of the seeds which are sold to the farmers of the country in the ordinary course of trade, and therefore they do fairly represent the class of goods which the average farmer is obtaining and paying for. The samples obtained, as was stated in the bulletin issued last year on this subject, showed two or three things very markedly : first, that in many instances a large proportion of the seeds sold were not germinable—would not grow. That is a comparatively minor fault, although the investigation showed that the farmers were buying and paying for a great deal that was of no value. Next, it showed that in the samples of seeds a large proportion were not what they were represented to be, but included not only infertile seeds, but also dirt and foulness of various kinds. That, too, was a bad enough thing ; but it was not so great a hurt to the farmer as the greater wrong of selling the seeds of noxious weeds. In this the farmer suffers a loss which is most incalculable. He gets not only what is of no value to him, but what is going to cause immense loss, very likely for years, and not only to himself, but to all his neighbours in the locality in which he lives, for it may be but a short time before that noxious weed possesses a great portion of the land in which it is sown. There is no doubt that by means of the sale of seeds in Canada a considerable number of noxious weeds have been spread in parts of the country where previously they were not known at all. Once estabished, they have spread over the land and have possessed it to a large extent. The condition of affairs seems to me to call for a remedy, and I believe the only effective remedy is legislation by the parliament of Canada dealing with this trade. Far be it from me to wish to interfere with the trade more than is absolutely necessary in the interest of those whom we desire to protect. I would be sorry to interfere in any way with legitimate trade, and I do not believe that this Bill, as proposed, with such modifications in it as the current of discussion may bring about, will interfere with legitimate trade. But I am desirous that this Bill should be so framed, as to interfere with illegitimate trade, so as to protect the purchasers of seeds from being imposed upon, either intentionally or unintentionally, by people who are handling seeds for sale in the country. Some may think—my hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson) may take this ground—that this is too paternal legislation. The hon. gentleman has accused me of introducing grandfatherly legislation. Well, I can endure the taunt from my hon.

friend if I place in the hands of the farmer machinery which is going to have the effect of protecting his fields from the introduction of noxious weeds, enabling him more clearly and easily to ascertain the exact value of what he is purchasing, and providing him with a remedy against the person who is selling him so evil a thing as impure, adulterated or ungerminable seeds for sowing on his land. I do not wish at all to claim every detail of this Bill as being perfect. I may say that the Bill has been drawn after careful study and investigation, not of one month or a few months, but of a couple of years, and it has been drawn after more or less consultation with seedsmen as well as farmers. I fully appreciate that there are some provisions in the Bill which the trade object to—some provisions which perhaps can be so modified as not to interfere with the trade as much as they appear on the service to do. I should be glad of suggestions which would make the Bill more perfect in that respect, so long as its essential purpose is not defeated or interfered with. I may say that a few weeks ago I received a deputation of the seedsmen of Canada, who on the introduction of this Bill learned something of its provisions, and came here to discuss with me its details. In that discussion they made propositions and pointed out provisions which they thought unduly interfered with their trade. I would be only too glad to have a thorough discussion of these points in committee, with the view of making such modifications in the Bill as to meet the views of the trade without affecting its primary object. I think that can best be done by threshing out the details of the Bill in the Committee of the Whole. I do not for a moment wish the committee to suppose that in every detail this Bill must pass or even should pass just as it is printed. After discussion, I shall be prepared to accept some amendments, which the House may deem desirable, or may possibly propose some, and I should like to have a most complete discussion. I am satisfied that the agricultural interests of Canada require a Bill of this kind. During last winter and fall, we had pretty thorough discussions of this subject at the meetings of the farmers' institutes all over the country, and my views were pretty fairly endorsed. In some cases formal resolutions were adopted and forwarded me, and in other cases the institute workers and speakers reported that the meetings they addressed were strongly in favour of legislation in this direction. No definite instructions were sent me because the meetings seemed to think that the officers in my department, with the information at their hands, would be able to frame a satisfactory measure. I might say that legislation in the United States and England and on the continent of Europe has been studied in order that we might obtain from it some guidance in the framing of this Bill. We have also studied the results of seed testings in the different countries in order to see what might be necessary for the protection of the farmers in the seed trade. I am sorry that to-night my hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Bruce) is not here. I hoped he would have been here as I told him last week I would have to take this Bill up on the first occasion when it was reached, but as he is head of one of the largest seed firms in this country and consequently deeply interested in this measure, I shall not ask to have the Bill moved out of committee until my hon. friend is present to give us the benefit of his advice.

On section 2,

This Act shall come into operation on the first day of September, 1903.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It has been represented to me that the seedsmen have, to a large extent, laid in their supplies for the coming season, and it would be impossible for them to carry on their trade, under the provisions of this Act, without having longer warning. I shall let this clause stand a little while with the intention of putting in a later date than the 1st of September. It cannot come into operation the 1st of July this year, and the first of September next will be perhaps a little too soon for the trade to adapt itself to new conditions. The probability is I will make the date the 1st of July next year, but shall let the clause stand until I have some expression of opinion on the subject from members of the committee.

Mr. ROSS (Ontario). I would suggest that this Bill should not come into force until next year. It is rather a new thing to have the seed trade governed in the way the hon. minister wishes. I think it a very proper measure. If the Bill can be worked out, I think it will be in the interests of the seed trade and the seed-growers. The first of September, however, will be too soon to have it come into force. The seed will be harvested, threshed, and probably in the market for sale about the 1st of August. Under the circumstances, it would be almost impossible for the trade to offer seed such as this Bill calls for by the 1st of September, and the hon. minister would do better not to bring the Bill into operation before next year. In the meantime the discussion could go on and serve as notice to the trade that it would become operative next year.

On section 3, seeds to be free from seeds of certain weeds.

Mr. ROSS (Ontario). Are there many of those weeds found in the seeds of Canada?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have here a statement which would show that there are not. This list of seeds is made up as being weeds which, in the view of experts, are the most dangerous and the most difficult to eradicate from the soil if once brought into it. In our investigation, under Mr. Clarke's supervision we had about five hundred samples of seed collected, and I have here a statement showing the percentage of seeds of weeds mentioned in section 3, in the different samples :

IN RED CLOVER, 1902.

| | Per Cent. |
|---|---|
| Wild mustard | ·6 |
| Ox-eyed daisy | ·6 |
| Penny cress | ·6 |
| Ragweed | 2·4 |

1903, RED CLOVER.

|---|---|
| Mustard | ·1½ |
| Hare's ear mustard | ·3 |

1902, ALSIKE CLOVER.

|---|---|
| Wild mustard | 2·2 |
| Ox-eye daisy | 5:5 |

1903, ALSIKE CLOVER.

|---|---|
| Ox-eye daisy | 6·5 |

1902, TIMOTHY.

|---|---|
| Ox-eye daisy | 5·3 |
| Field sow thistle | 3·3 |
| Ergot | 4·6 |

1903, TIMOTHY.

|---|---|
| Wild mustard | 2·0 |
| Ox-eye daisy | 8·1 |
| Ergot | 1·4 |

I hope I have made it clear that these figures show, not the proportion of these weed seeds in the samples, but the number of samples in which these weed seeds were found. These were all the samples which showed any of these seeds in the two years' investigations, embracing over five hundred samples. So I think there is no doubt that it would be quite easy for the seed dealers of this country to live up to the provisions of this clause, and, in selling goods, not to sell seeds containing these weeds. Under a regulation which we propose to issue under section 18 of the Act, we propose to make a provision allowing a very small number of any one of these seeds—that is, it will not tell against the sample if a certain small number of these seeds are found.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. There is a weed which I see prevailing pretty extensively in the province of Quebec, and which is coming into eastern Ontario. It is a tall weed with a handsome purple flower. What is it ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. At what time is it in flower ?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. It is in flower now.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Is it not a blue flower blooming close to the stalk of a large branching weed ?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Yes.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That is what we call chicory. It is pretty prevalent in the province of Quebec.

Mr. CHARLTON. Is it difficult to eradicate ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think not if it is taken properly. It is not a weed the seeds of which we ever find in samples of seeds as sold.

Mr. McGOWAN. There is a very bad weed we call switch grass. The hon. minister ought to stop the sale of that also.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. My hon. friend (Mr. McGowan) will see that the seed of switch grass is not one of those seeds which it is at all difficult to detect. It can easily be removed from clover or alsike seed by fanning. So it is never mixed in with these seeds as sold. This is directed particularly against those seeds which the ordinary farmer buying seeds cannot easily distinguish. But the seed which my hon. friend speaks of, any farmer would observe if it were present among timothy or clover seed that he intended to buy.

Mr. McGOWAN. But the hon. gentleman has included mustard, which is quite a large seed and easily detected, and wild oats also. I suppose that this Bill is intended to regulate the sale of turnip seed and rape seed, not grass seed only ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes.

Mr. McGOWAN. I think it would be better to include switch grass, which is one of the worst weeds we have.

Mr. HENDERSON. In discussing this clause of the Bill, I think we must read it along with section 6, in order to properly understand what the minister proposes to do. Section 3 provides :

> No person shall sell, or offer, expose or have in his possession for sale, for the purpose of seeding, any seeds of cereals, grasses, clovers, forage plants or vegetables, unless they are free from seeds of the following weeds:

And section 6 provides :

> The provisions contained in this Act shall not apply to
>
> (a.) Any person growing or selling seeds for the purpose of food, or,
> (b.) Any person selling seeds direct to merchants to be cleaned and graded before being offered for sale for the purpose of seeding.

In my previous criticism of the hon. minister's course one might have thought that I considered the minister too much inclined to paternalism in dealing with the farmers, having their products inspected at every turn. I may say that in this case he is not quite paternal enough. To my mind he is going about this whole matter in a wrong way, and I trust he will excuse me for saying so. Had he commenced at the root of the matter, instead of taking the seed after it is threshed and put upon the market, I think he would have accomplished a great deal more. We know very well that throughout the province of Ontario—and I assume it is very much the same in every province—all the farms are not fouled with noxious weeds. You will find farmers who are careful, who have been careful for a long series of years, and upon whose farms practically none of these weeds are to be found. But other farms you will find literally covered—such farms as we often see travelling through the country on the railroad. One weed, that with the yellow flower, wild mustard, is observable in many parts of the country. To my mind the minister should rather have taken the other view, and made provision in his Bill that only from clean farms should seeds be sold for seeding purposes—I mean clover or grass seed—and put a penalty upon any farmer who would sell seeds for sowing that were produced on a farm that was known to be fouled with noxious weeds. I can quite understand that the hon. minister would accomplish something if he would proceed in that way. A man who has a farm literally covered with wild mustard should not be permitted to sell seed to his neighbour, or sell it to a seed merchant to be sold again, because it would be sure to foul other farms as it had fouled his own. Surely if the question of seed can be dealt with at all, we could control it by preventing the sale from the farms where it is known that these noxious weeds are growing, and only make it legal for a man to sell seed for sowing purposes off a farm that he knows to be clean and free from weeds. I speak, of course, with reference to Canadian seeds, to seeds produced on Canadian farms. We could not in that way control imported seeds, and I regret very much that we are obliged to import so large a quantity. I fail to see why we should not produce, for example, all the clover and timothy in this country that we require. There is a considerable quantity produced in certain sections of the country, and perhaps if there was more encouragement given to those who produce a pure seed, there would be more seed grown in the country. No doubt we import a considerable amount of seed, and possibly some portion of that is exported again. I trust that we are not sowing so much seed imported from the United States as at first we might think. At any rate so far as Canadian seeds are concerned, I would like the minister to look at the matter in this light that instead of imposing a fine upon the man who is selling the seeds and who of necessity has to take his chances in buying them, he would take some steps to secure the seed merchant from the necessity of cleaning these seeds by preventing the man who has a farm fouled with noxious seeds from taking his seed to market and selling it to the seed merchant. That is my general idea of the whole question, and I think more can be accomplished in that way than by the enactment he is providing for.

Mr. HENDERSON.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. My hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson), I am glad to see, thinks that some paternalism at all events is useful, and he is willing to endorse a certain dose of it. I am in hopes that before we get through with this discussion, he will agree with me that the provisions of this Bill are about the right kind of paternalism that we require. But my hon. friend has proposed a much more drastic measure than I am proposing, and one which I have not felt that I could propose to the House, either in the hope of carrying it or of making it effective if carried. After all, I am not quite sure that even if it were carried, it would be entirely fair. My hon. friend has instanced wild mustard in the grain crops of the country. It is far too prevalent, I know ; but my hon. friend may not know, though I think he does, that mustard seed can be very speedily separated from grain. A man might have his farm foul with mustard, and still be able to sell a perfectly clean sample of oats, or barley or wheat, cleaning it by a very simple manipulation before he puts it on the market. As a matter of fact there are some seeds very easy to separate, and others very difficult to get out of samples to be sold. The seed merchants, people who handle seeds, have facilities and have apparatus for cleaning grain, and it is part of their business to do that work. The ordinary farmer who raises grain, who raises clover or timothy, has not generally got those facilities, it is not part of his business, and it would be a great hardship to require him to do it. The seed merchant need not buy from the farmer whose land he knows to be fouled with bad seed, and if he did not, those farmers would very soon cease to attempt placing their grain on the market at all, but would sell their product for feed or feed it at home. I think the provisions of the Bill will accomplish more than the proposition of my hon. friend would do, even if it could be passed in this House.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The provisions of this Bill are of considerable importance. We cannot go through large portions of the province of Ontario without observing that there is a large mixture of foul seed in the grain of the country. I think I never saw so much mustard in the fields of Canada as I have seen this year. Still, it appears to me that there are some things in this Bill that will bear with undue harshness upon the dealers in seeds. I have seen samples of various kinds of weeds, some of which are mentioned in this Bill, and from what I can learn, no means have yet been discovered of separating completely those foul seeds from out of the grain ; unless they are different in size and conformation they will go through the screen, and that makes the grain worthless. This Bill makes it illegal for a man to have bad seeds for sale, and in that respect it is rather hard on dealers in seeds who may not be experts themselves, and may not be able to detect the various foul seeds that are found, especially in clover. A man may buy seed believing it to be all right and have it in his possession for sale. I doubt if any dealers in seeds in Ontario are willing to buy any seed for sale, or for the purpose of sowing, knowing it to be mixed with the seed of weeds. But they may become possessors of such mixed seed innocently, and by this measure they are liable to a heavy fine. If in some way a measure could be made to reach those who knowingly have weeds growing upon their farm, and who sell this foul seed with their grain, it would be a fairer measure than it stands at present.

Mr. CLANCY. I fully sympathize with the object of this Bill. I think anything workable that can be passed in the direction indicated by the Bill, is desirable legislation. But I fear that in order to give effect to this Bill in certain quarters, the Minister of Agriculture has gone so far as to make it unduly harsh in another quarter. It is a very difficult thing, I admit, to draw the line between who is and who is not a seller of seeds. The hon. gentleman will see that he necessarily includes every farmer in the country in some of the provisions of this rather drastic legislation. Now the hon. gentleman as a farmer himself knows that there is a good deal of seed of the various classes mentioned here that never goes through the hands of either the wholesale or the retail dealer. He knows very well, and he has said as much this evening, that there are certain classes of foul seed which get among the farmers' grain without any fault of theirs. If they do discover them they have no means of eradicating them and therefore it would be a very great hardship if you were to enforce sections 3 and 4. If I may be permitted to refer in advance to section 4, I would call attention to the fact that it provides that:

> No person shall sell, or offer, expose or have in his possession for sale any seeds of timothy, red clover or alsike, or any mixture of the said seeds, unless each and every receptacle, package, sack or bag containing such seeds is marked in a plain and indelible manner.
> (a.) With the initials of the Christian names, and the full surname and address of the wholesale or retail seller.

Every farmer in the country who exchanges with or sells to his neighbour which is the most common practice will be liable to the penalty of this law. It is a common practice for farmers to go around amongst each other hunting for seed. Thus, by reason of these foul seeds being difficult to discover and by reason of the farmer having no means of clearing them out, it would be a great hardship to subject them to the provisions of this Bill. Then, the hon. minister knows perfectly well that no farmer would have the receptacles, bags, boxes, or packages, which are designated here. He does not have such things. He has only the ordinary grain bags that he uses. My hon. friend (Mr. Fowler) who is a lawyer says: 'Let him ge them. It is not an easy thing for the farmer to get them.' That is not the custom of the farmer. It is entirely out of his routine of work. The farmer simply sells his grain or exchanges it with his neighbour and if this Bill were applied every one of these persons would come under its provisions. It seems to me that the hon. minister ought to confine the provisions of this Bill to persons engaged as dealers. It would greatly minimize the evil effects that would come from sowing foul seeds and it would give relief to a class of persons who will find it difficult to comply with the law. Even in the exceptions the farmer is not relieved from its provisions:

> Any person selling seeds direct to merchants to be cleaned and graded before being offered for sale for the purpose of seeding.

Well, he cannot tell. He has practically no exemption there beyond the exemption that applies if he sells for the purpose of food. I venture to say that in many cases there is no inquiry made as to whether grain is sold for food or not. The farmer goes into market with a load of grain. In many cases seed dealers are shippers as well. They ship large quantities that they do not make any pretense of selling for seed at all. Yet, immense quantities are bought for seed and the farmer sells in the ordinary way to a grain buyer who is also a seed dealer. He does not sell it for seed; he sells it generally. He simply sells it and he is liable unless he can prove that he did not sell it for seed. The provisions of section 4, it seems to me, impose impossible penalties upon the farmer.

Mr. FOWLER. I must disagree entirely with the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) in respect to this matter. I see no reason in the world why farmers who sell seed should not be put under the same penalty as a dealer who sells impure seed. I think this Bill is in the right direction and that the hon. Minister of Agriculture is to be congratulated upon having produced such a Bill. Let any man go through the country, through Ontario, or through the maritime provinces and he will find nearly every farm he passes is polluted with these foul seeds. This is becoming a very serious matter, and I think this step has not been taken one day too soon. Of course, there will be hardships. There are always hardships, but private interests must give way to public good and I think the farmer should be put upon the same plane as the dealer in connection with this matter. As to what the hon. member for Bothwell has said about the farmer selling his load of grain being liable, he is not liable if he sells that grain generally without selling it for seed. It is impossible to interpret the Act in the way the hon. member for Bothwell does. He is not liable unless he sells his grain for seed and he should be exactly under the same penalties as the ordinary dealer if he sells it for seed.

Mr. ROSS (Ontario). Mr. Chairman, I think it will be conceded that one of the most valuable products we have in Canada is our seed grain, especially in Ontario. By degrees, in the years to come the trade thinks, at any rate, that a large quantity if not the most of the wheat produced in Canada will be grown on the western prairies. This will make the seed crop—the grass and clover crop of Ontario—more valuable from year to year and the area will constantly extend. Under these circumstances I can readily see that it is absolutely necessary that some law should be put in force in order to regulate the sale of such an important farm product as seeds. The hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) said that the hon. minister should go farther and provide that the farmer should clean his soil and that he should cut the noxious weeds or if possible pull them out. I understand that in Ontario we already have a law dealing with noxious weeds not only on the roadway but on the farms, but I am told it is not lived up to. I think, perhaps, that may be on account of the fact that the responsibility of inforcing the law is placed upon the municipalities and the municipalities do not accept their responsibility in that connection. The three great seeds which are most largely grown in Ontario are red clover, alsike and timothy. I have been told that we, in Ontario, are the largest producers of alsike clover in the world. Standing in that position it is absolutely necessary that we should have some standard of excellence with the view of bringing this product up to the finest seed that can be grown in the world. We grow some very fine samples, but when it comes a year in which weeds are prolific and when they grow rapidly they oftentimes fill up the crop and unless they are cut down at a particular season of the year, or unless they can try and cut them from the top of the clover, there is apt to be a quantity of foul seed with the clover seed. One seed that is found in nearly all of it is the mustard. Particularly will mustard be found in red clover and alsike. I have seen samples of timothy with mustard in, but it is a rare thing to get mustard in timothy because in cleaning it the mustard seed runs back over the sieve and the timothy drops through. Timothy seed will have an occasional mustard but it will have other seeds which are a very great hindrance to the growing crop. The ox-eye daisy has been mentioned. This seed it very common in timothy. We have also a little wild flax occasionally. I handle seeds myself and I often see samples of seeds with 'thistle' in them. It seems to be very common in the 'timothy,' but I do not think you can get any thistle in alsike or in red clover. No one can travel throughout this country and look at the grasses and the clover without seeing in some cases large quantities of those noxious weeds. Somebody must be responsible for that. The provincial legislation on the subject does not appear to work, but a law like this which would get at the root of the evil will, I believe, be acceptable to the trade and to the farmers. I would, however, suggest that in line 8 of clause 3 after the word 'seeding' there should be inserted the words 'within the Dominion of Canada.'

No person shall sell or offer, expose or have in his possession for sale for the purpose of seeding within the Dominion of Canada, any seeds, &c.

In connection with these seeds that are brought to the man who wholesales them, he cleans the seeds as a rule and he sells the best. At certain seasons of the year he has a lot of stuff left which you may call 'cleanings,' and these are shipped out of the country. I am told by a seedsman that they are not sold within the country, but they are exported because there is a demand for them in the old land where they are used for mixing purposes. I am told that a certain amount of weeds are put with the other grasses, but that they cannot grow some of the seeds which we have here to the perfection they do in this country, and that under these circumstances these cleanings find a good market outside of Canada. I would therefore suggest that the clause be amended as I have indicated. If the amendment be made, the seedsman could not have these seeds in his possession for sale; he could have them for export purposes, but he could not have them for sale for domestic purposes, whereas under the Bill as it now stands he could not have them in his possession for any purpose. He would therefore have to burn this stuff which has value for export. These 'cleanings' are not shipped out of the country on consignment. It is not like the apple trade in that respect. Apples are shipped to Liverpool or Glasgow on consignment and sold at public auction, but I am informed that there is not a bushel of seed shipped out of Canada on commission. If we prevent this stuff being sold in Canada, there should be no reason for a man having to destroy it if he can find a value for it outside of the country.

Mr. CLANCY. My hon. friend must have lost his vision or else he lives in a strange part of the country, because I appeal to any farmer in this House if it is not the rarest thing possible to find mustard in a meadow of alsike, red clover, or timothy. Occasionally it may occur but it is very rare. It does not follow that the land is not saturated with the seed of these weeds that may lie in the soil for years and years, but it does not come up until the ground is disturbed. The strange thing about it is that this seed seldom appears in a meadow. My hon. friend has had a strange experience if he has seen meadows in this country polluted with the foul weeds to which he refers. I do not agree with the hon. gentleman for King's (Mr. Fowler) that the farmers can readily comply with the provisions of section 4. I would have no hesitation in accepting the hon. gentleman's opinion on a question of law, but he will excuse me I hope if I hesitate to accept his opinion on a question affecting the farmers of this country. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Fowler) has no experience in the matter, but I can tell him that it will be practically impossible for the farmers to comply with the provisions of this Bill which require him to have his initials and surname in full upon the receptacle of every bushel of seed he sells to his neighbour.

Mr. FOWLER. Can't he write.

Mr. CLANCY. I would not cast such a reflection as my hon. friend does upon the farmers of this country.

Mr. FOWLER. It is you who have cast a reflection on them.

Mr. CLANCY. Not at all. I am simply pointing out that it is highly inconvenient and that it is absolutely unnecessary. I say that it is impossible also for the farmer to have the designation of every grade of seed stamped. A farmer would have to be supplied with quite a number of appliances before he could sell a bushel of clover or timothy to his neighbour. The minister must see how inconvenient this would be and I am sure he will modify it. I have no objection to pass stringent measures with regard to seed dealers who have all the appliances at hand, but I do think that it would be unnecessary and useless to impose such conditions on farmers who sell or exchange thousands and thousands of bushels of seeds between themselves.

Mr. FOWLER. The argument of the hon. gentleman is a strong reason why the Bill should be allowed to remain as it is. If thousands and thousands of bushels of seeds are exchanged or sold between farmers, it means that thousands and thousands of acres of land are exposed to be fouled by bad seeds. If it were only an occasional thing it might be overlooked, but if it is such an extensive practice as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) makes out, then the provisions of the Bill should be enforced. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) thinks that it would be a great task for the farmer to put his name upon the receptacle containing the seed, but I believe that the farmers of Canada are so well educated that they would have no difficulty in doing that. I am surprised that my hon. friend (Mr. Clancy) who poses as a farmer in this House should cast such a slur upon the farmers of Canada. It would be a long time before I would do that sort of thing. I do not think the hon. gentleman weighed well his words when he made use of them. With regard to the name of the seed, surely the farmer would know the kind of seed he was selling, having its name and grade on the bag. He would be a strange sort of farmer if he did not know whether the seed he was selling was good seed or poor seed. I do not see any difficulty in the matter. It is so simple to me that I am surprised that the hon. gentleman should take the exception to it that he does. I think I am about as much a farmer as the hon. member for Bothwell. I understand that he lives in a town and has a farm in the country. I am pretty much in the same position. I think I have as much knowledge of farming as he has, and I trust that the minister will not be influenced by the statements of the hon. member for Bothwell, but will leave the Bill just as it is.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. As the discussion is entirely on the fourth section of the Bill, I think it would be better for the committee to carry the third section, and then the discussion will be in order.

Mr. CLANCY. The two sections are so intimately connected that they cannot be discussed very well apart.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. If it is the will of the committee, we will discuss the two together and pass the two together.

Mr. GILMOUR. This Bill is in the right direction, and if it can be complied with, will be a great boon to the country. The farmer can comply with the law in this way. He can see before he cuts his crop, whether there is foul seed in it or not. He can tell better when it is growing than he can after it is threshed. In the latter case the seedsman is the only person who has the proper machinery to test the seeds. I believe the firm of the hon. member for Hamilton for the past thirty-five years have been the foremost seedsmen in the land, and have always had the name of selling the purest seeds, and I think he should be consulted in this matter. I am sorry he is not present, and I think the hon. minister would do well to let the Bill stand until the hon. member for Hamilton can be present. I do not think a merchant or a lawyer can tell how these seeds can be cleaned. It is a question that lies between such a man as the hon. member for Hamilton and the farmer. Even the minister himself could not decide the matter as well as these two combined.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I quite agree with the hon. member for East Middlesex (Mr. Gilmour). I would not presume to give an opinion such as the hon. member for Hamilton could give on this question, and it is only because I have had the advantage of expert knowledge at my disposal as a minister that I am able to take part in the discussion as intelligently as I have been trying to do. One or two points have been brought out which I would like to refer to. It is true that a great many of the dealers are not experts, and the farmers cannot be expected to be. But they can see their fields, and the object of section 3 is largely to cause the dealers absolutely to refuse to buy seeds from farmers who have had these weeds in their fields. Some of these seeds even an expert dealer with the best machinery would find it very difficult indeed to remove from timothy or clover seeds. But with this clause in operation, I believe, the seed dealers will refuse to buy from farmers who have these weeds in their land; and that is the chief objection I have to the amendment of my hon. friend from South Ontario (Mr. Ross), who proposes to introduce into this clause words which would confine its operation to the trade in Canada. If we can cause the seed dealers to refuse to buy from the farmers who have these weeds in their land, we shall take the best step I believe towards purifying the seeds sold in the ordinary commerce of the country. If the dealers are allowed to buy these seeds for export, they will still continue to buy them from farmers who have foul land; and though they may not sell them in Canada, we will to a great extent be deprived of the benefit of this clause. When we come to clause 4, I shall be disposed to modify that so that its provisions shall not apply to the export trade, but I think it is very important that clause 3 should apply to all the trade in the country including the export trade. My hon. friend from Bothwell spoke a few minutes ago with regard to a farmer selling seed for food and not knowing what it was used for after he sold it. If a farmer sold a hundred or a thousand bushels of oats to a grain dealer for ordinary food purposes, and not for seed purposes, he would not be responsible. If a merchant chooses to clean a supply of oats and then marked and sold them wrongfully under section 3 of this Act, he would be responsible. Section 6 covers the sale by the farmer, not only for the purposes of food, but also to a dealer to be recleaned and sold for seed purposes. In such cases the farmer is not responsible.

Mr. CLANCY. What about section 4?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. If one farmer buys seed from another, the seller can easily be relieved from the necessity of complying with this Bill by making a special agreement, and if he chooses to sell without making any such agreement he ought to be responsible for the quality of his seed just as the merchant is.

Mr. CLANCY. But according to section 4, the farmer would be responsible even if he sold pure seed, unless each sack or bag was marked as indicated in this clause. The hon. minister has pointed out this section only refers to grass seed, but it is in such seeds that the foul seeds are most difficult to discern. Under this section a farmer could not go to his neighbour and buy a bushel of clover seed and take it home and sow it, without subjecting his neighbour to the penalties therein provided. The hon. gentleman knows that two farmers would not sit down and write a special agreement absolving the seller.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. member for Middlesex (Mr. Gilmour) spoke about dealers not being experts. I am glad to say that we have been able in our city laboratory to provide machinery by which any dealer may reasonably be expected to become an expert. We have taken steps to provide specimens of all these weed seeds mentioned in this Bill, so that the seed merchants can get these specimens at a trifling cost and be able, with the aid of a magnifying glass and an ordinary sheet of paper, to examine their seeds and recognize the weeds very clearly. We also have instructions prepared, which may be had for the asking, so that the merchants may without difficulty test seeds for their germinating power.

Mr. WRIGHT. One fault found with this Bill is that it would prevent one farmer from selling to his neighbour. It seems to me there need be no difficulty about that. Suppose a farmer wants to buy from his neighbour. The neighbour says: You understand what the law is; if I sell you this grain for seed I shall be responsible unless my bags are marked with my initials and the grade: I will not sell you this grain for seed, but if you want to buy four or five bushels I will sell it to you. So the man can buy it and do what he likes with it. He gets seed that he knows to be good, and is perfectly satisfied. I cannot see any difficulty as to this branch of the subject at all. As a dealer in seeds for thirty-two years I regard this as one of the most important measures for our farmers ever introduced in this Dominion parliament. If there is one thing with which we have had more trouble than any other it is with the selling of clover and timothy seed. The farmers in our section are anxious to use clover. They sow it with every crop, in order that, after the grain crop is harvested, they may let it grow and then turn it over in the fall to enrich the soil. This seeding of clover is one of the most important features of their farming, but the difficulty is in getting foul seed, particularly mustard seed. As the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) says, it is rare to find mustard seed growing in timothy, yet, as he says, that seed will remain in the ground for ten, fifteen, or perhaps as much as twenty years, and yet germinate when you turn up the soil. Farmers will give almost any price if they can be sure of getting good seed, seed that is perfectly pure and clean. Therefore, I think this Bill is in the right direction. As to exporting foul seed, I cannot agree with my hon. friend from Ontario (Mr. Ross). We should be obliged to export good seed, just as we export good butter or cheese. We want to have a reputation for first-class seed. I suppose there are a number of dealers here to-night, and I would appeal to them if it is not true that when we are buying seeds, say mangel seeds, the traveller will tell us the name of the grower in Belgium or France. We know the names of the best growers. They have a reputation, and that reputation sells their seeds. Why should we not have a reputation in the old country for our seeds, just as some of these European growers have a reputation in this country ? Certainly we should do all in our power to prevent foul seed being exported and sold as coming from this country.

Mr. SPROULE. It is impossible it this Bill becomes law but that many farmers will violate that law. It is the custom for farmers everywhere to sell seed. They grow it and sell it for seed, because they get a few cents a bushel more profit. In my county a large number of farmers sell seed to farmers, but as well many sell it to seedsmen. This provides that the farmer shall not 'offer, expose or have in his possession for sale for the purpose of seeding' any of these seeds, except as provided in this Bill. It will be impossible to carry out this law without many farmers coming under its penalties. They will regard it as a very great hardship. I admit the desirability of trying to prevent the use of seed containing an admixture of the seeds of noxious weeds. The minister said his aim was to have seedsmen not buy seeds from farmers who have dirty seed. If farmers who have dirty seed are prevented from selling, nine-tenths of them will suffer. Not one case in ten, or perhaps, even in twenty, if they sold for seed, but would come under the penalties of this Act. If you carry out the law, you stop the only market the farmers have. You compel them then to sell to the seedsmen only. Nobody could purchase except for the purpose of exportation. The Bill provides that No. 1 grade of seed must have 90 per cent of germinable seed. The hon. minister says that they have a system at the Experimental Farm, which any farmer could learn, to test the germinating power of the seed. Farmers will not go into that very much. I have heard this talked up at farmers' institutes, and so on——

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I was referring to seed merchants when I spoke of that.

Mr. SPROULE. How can the farmers designate the seeds under these regulations, as grading No. 1, No. 2 or No. 3, when many of them do not know these weed seeds when they see them ? I happen to have my office in a drug store where they buy seed year after year. And when a farmer is told that there are certain weed seeds in the seed he is selling, he is as likely as not to say : 'What are they like ; I do not know them ?' Then the seed is spread out on a paper on the counter and the weed seeds shown to him. These men are innocent as to violating the law, because they do not know the appearance of many of these minor seeds. It may be said that they could furnish themselves with a glass. I do not know that every farmer will do that. But even with that, he could not test how much of his seed is germinable seed. I notice the minister has not included turnip seed under this Bill. I find of late years a good deal of the wild mustard that is distributed amongst farmers is distributed in turnip seed. Almost every year where turnips are growing we find wild mustard growing in the field. I have looked at it, but I frankly confess that I am not sure that I can tell at a glance the difference between mustard and some other seeds. If the farmer finds that what he has bought for turnip or grass seed is full of ox-eye daisies, and he desires to enter an action against the seedsman for damages, could he, provided that law passes, sustain that action. Under this law, if there is more than the designated percentage of weed seeds, I venture to say, as a layman, that the seedsman would not be liable for damages to the purchaser. He would be liable only to the penalties of the law, but not for damages as well. I see this young man shaking his head at it ; I do not know what significance there is in that. I do not know what his experience may be in seeds, or his legal knowledge, that would justify dissent from my statement. But I venture to say that there are lawyers in this House who will hold that the seedsman would not be liable to an action for damages in the event of his selling seeds after this law was passed, even though there was no specific contract entered into guaranteeing that these goods were absolutely pure.

Mr. ROSS (Ontario). It would be a difficult thing, in fact almost impossible, to tell mustard from turnip seed, especially in some varieties. But in clause 12 the samples of this seed are to be taken within seven days of the sale, therefore, suppose a man sells his seed two or three months before it is required for sale, if it is out of his possession for seven days, according to that clause he is not responsible, and the man in whose possession it is found is responsible. This is a matter, however, that we can discuss later on. Now, with regard to the inspection of seeds. We have an inspection of grain, and I may safely say there is no grain, especially in this country, that it is not graded when inspected for export. It is graded No. 1, No. 2, No. 3. It is very seldom they will take rejected grain, the grain is all graded. You notice how Manitoba grades come down, No. 1 hard, No. 2 hard, No. 1 northern, No. 2 northern, and so on down the list. But if some of that grain happens to be frosted they will call it No. 1 frosted, or No. 2 frosted, because it will have some frosted wheat in it. Grain is inspected that way, and I think the seed law can be worked out in the same way. It is no more hardship for the farmer or the dealer to have his grain inspected, than it is for the dealer to have his seed inspected. Now, there are two places in which the dealer can sell his goods. In the first place he has the home market, and in the next place he has the export market, and those who are in the trade know that the export market is by far the largest market for Canada. It is a trade worth looking after. Tens of thousands of bushels of clover seed are shipped out of this country. It is frequently bought in the United States, and is shipped out. It is a superior quality to that which is grown anywhere on this continent.

Mr. SPROULE. Who is it that buys for export? Is it not the seedsman, who sells to the farmers again?

Mr. ROSS (Ontario). Yes, but it often happens that the Ontario crop is a superior quality, superior to the crop in Wisconsin, or Indiana, or some of those states. The large market in the States for seeds is Toledo, and the merchants will probably export our prime Canadian clover seed and alsike, and they may be able to bring in American clover to take its place, because they have to pay the farmer a larger price for the Canadian seed. Under these circumstances you can see that the export market is a very large market in Canada. I cannot agree with the hon. member for Renfrew (Mr. Wright) that there would be any injustice in allowing the rejected seed to be exported. What are you going to do with these cleanings that come out of this seed? The seed must be cleaned up to a certain standard. The seedsman makes perhaps three, or four, or five grades of alsike, he will have a name for each grade.

Mr. CLANCY. Are there as many grades as that?

Mr. ROSS (Ontario). Yes, as high as six grades of alsike. Alsike is a variable crop. One year when the crop is poor I have seen myself eight or ten different samples, no two of them alike, every grade different from the others. An exporter sends these samples home to the old country or to Germany, and he sells upon these samples. Now, in cleaning these samples he has a lot of stuff that comes out and is rejected. That is known as an inferior seed. People in other countries, if they choose to buy this seed, know what they are buying, it does not ruin the reputation of Canadian seed because a good deal of our best seed has been shipped every year, and still they may want this refuse seed, which is worth anywhere from one to three cents a pound. Why not let that trade go on? It is not going to ruin our grain trade, because they know that we grow good seeds here. I cannot see why that seed should be burned up or destroyed, or that the seedsmen should not be allowed to sell it in a foreign country. I would say, don't let it be sold in Canada, because there is a trade beyond Canada, and if the foreign trade is stopped because the seed is bad, then the alternative would be to destroy the seed or burn it up. Under these circumstances I think my proposition to insert 'sale of these seeds within the Dominion of Canada' is a proper one. I would ask the minister if he has found any vegetables in weeds which are injurious, otherwise than turnip seed, which might contain mustard?

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin). The Minister of Agriculture is to be congratulated in introducing this Bill. If he will make this Bill workable and succeed in eradicating foul seeds from this country so that our fields will grow nothing but what is sown on them, he will double the value of our farms. I am satisfied that the foul weeds grown in this country compose more than half of our crops. Though the minister may not be able to accomplish that much, still he is taking a step in the right direction. But we want to make this Bill so that it will not be obnoxious to the farmers and to people who raise seeds in this country. Now this section 4 says distinctly that the farmer must have his christian name and surname on the bag of grain that he exposes for sale. Well, the farmers can all read and write, there is no doubt about that, but they have not all got bags with their names on. Again, farmers oftentimes sell to each other. Farmers that live miles from a town, or miles from a seedsman, often sell to each other. Any farmer who has a farm with a reputation for being a clean farm, and has no foul weeds in it, or none to speak of, can always sell his seed at home, whether it be seed wheat, or barley, or oats, or anything else. The neighbours all round go there to purchase seed on the farm's reputation. Consequently he has no trouble to get rid of his crop. But if there should be a few foul seeds in that grain, he is under a penalty if he sells it, unless he takes it to a seedsman. It will amount to this, that we shall have to establish seedsmen in every township. We will have to take our grain and our seeds of all kinds to them, before we can dispose of it, and have it run through mills in order to decide the question whether it is clean. I invariably run my seed wheat two or three times through a fanning mill in order to get it perfectly clean. There is some grain that it is impossible to clean thoroughly from foul seed. So if there is one foul seed in the grain—I do not see any margin left, it must all be pure and clean—the farmer is responsible. But it is utterly impossible to take every foul seed out of a bag of clover or timothy or anything else. I remember one time purchasing a very choice variety of wheat from a seedsman in Toronto. He wrote and asked me if I would let him have the wheat that I produced from that seed. I told him I would do so, but when I threshed that wheat I found that there were some wild pea seeds in it. As I had told him I would let him have the seed I felt bound to do so. Myself and my boys went down on our knees and picked out every wild pea there was in that twenty bushels of wheat so particular was I in regard to my reputation for selling seed containing no foul seeds. Unfortunately many of us are not so particular and we must have a strict law to eradicate noxious weeds from our fields. I want to protect the farmer in this matter. The farmer generally looks out for himself, but I want to make sure that he is not made the victim of the seedsman. As I said before, and as the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) has stated, oftentimes they are not seedsmen proper who purchase the seed but druggists and men who deal in all kinds of produce in the villages and towns. They have no facilities for cleaning it up. If the passage of this Bill will induce some men in each township to get screens that will properly take out every foul seed and compel the farmers to take their seed to that man before sowing it and get it thoroughly cleaned the farmers will be well paid for going there. Although I would like to see the Bill passed I would like to have it amended so as to be made workable. I think it will do a great deal of good in this country if it will result in improving the quality of our seeds.

Mr. MACLEAN. I think the Bill has a good object in view, and I am inclined to support it. I happen to know something of land where there are a lot of noxious weeds and the result is that there are some farms that are not worth $20 or $30 while neighbouring farms are worth three or four times that amount and these neighbouring farms will be worth six times that if it were not for these farms adjoining being filled with these noxious weeds. Something must be done to eradicate them, and I do not see any way of doing it except by legislation. It is a strange thing to note that when legislation is introduced in the interests of the farmer it is sure to meet with opposition on the ground that it is against the farmer. There is a certain hardship in it no doubt, but I think it is a very reasonable provision. I do not think any farmer should be justified in doing wrong. He should not pass bad money because the law is against him and he should not sell bad seed for the same reason. I think if he sells bad seed he should be made amenable to the law the same as any other person.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Maclean) forgets that he is under penalty whether he sells bad seed or not.

Mr. MACLEAN. The farmers should not enjoy a preferred position any more than anybody else. What we want is a law that will in some measure stop the spread of these foul seeds and the depreciation in value of farms all over the country, and if we can have a reasonable law that does not involve too much hardship it would be a very good thing, and I would like to see it go through the House. It is in the interest of the farmers. Progress is being made in regard to farming which is largely due to legislation on the part of the various bodies in the direction of improving farming. We are doing something in this country and we have done something in the way of improving agriculture. We have succeeded in accomplishing a good deal, but yet, whenever a proposition is put forward to improve the position of the farmer the objection is taken that some how it is going to work to the injury of the farmer. It is for the farmer's good. It may work some injury but if there is a law for the general good the farmers should be made subject to that law the same as other people.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, I am thoroughly in accord with the purpose of this Bill. There seem to be difficulties in the way of it being workable. A good deal has been said about farmers and farmers interests being protected. It may not be generally known how the large bulk of seeds of the country are marketed. The large bulk of the seeds are sold to small dealers throughout the country, some engaged in other businesses, such as the drug business, who buy direct from the farmers. Many of these men buy from and sell again to the farmers and thousands of these men who are now in business would probably be put out of business by the operation of this Bill as it stands at present. There would be very few instances in which the men engaged in this business would be found to be seed experts or analysts. Yet, by the operation of this Bill a man buying seed of a farmer and believing it to be pure, might be liable to incur the penalties of this Bill if upon a sample being drawn and sent to a seed analyst it were found to contain weed seeds. Provision is made for the grading of seed. Who is to grade it ? Who is to say whether seed is No. 1, No. 2, or No. 3 ? I just throw these observations out to show some of the difficulties that are in the way. I would suppose that facilities should be provided by the experimental farm so that every one engaged in dealing in seeds could gain as accurate a knowledge as possible of the character of weed seeds that are found more particularly in turnip and clover seeds. I obtained a number of samples myself for one person engaged in this business. But, you would need to do more than this; you would need to provide some practical instruction in order that the dealer might be able to test samples of seeds submitted to him for sale. Without some provision of this kind the operation of the Bill would lead to great difficulties all over the country. The result of which would be that people engaged in this business would practically be put out of business. I would not throw any obstacle in the way of making it a practicable measure as far as possible, but a thorough ventilation of it in all its phases, ought to be made in the committee.

Mr. J. GIRARD (Chicoutimi and Saguenay) (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, the Bill now under discussion is the most important that has ever been submitted to parliament in the interest of the farmers. It is a well known fact in the province of Quebec and throughout Canada, that the worst evil farmers have to contend with is the spread of weed seeds. They come on us unawares, spread like wildfire, and attempts to eradicate them, which generally end in failure, require a heavy expenditure.

As stated by the hon. Minister of Agriculture, for a long time past, farmers' clubs and farmers generally have urged on our public men the need of a law which would enable them to put a stop to the spread of weed seeds. I have much pleasure in congratulating the hon. minister on having prepared a Bill which seems to me to cover pretty well the whole ground, and which, I expect, will have the desired result. However, the Bill should not deal merely with weed seeds; it should deal also with the germinating power of seed grain. It is contended that this Bill goes a little too far. To my mind, weed seeds are not any better than poisonous substances. The law regulating the sale of these substances by druggists is very strict; however, its need for the protection of the public is generally admitted. I cannot see why we should not have a law just as strict to prevent growers and sellers of noxious seeds from palming them on the community, for they are poison to the land, and the land is the source of all agricultural wealth. It is most important that the latter should be provided with the best seeds available, since efforts to convince them of the desirability of growing their own grain and grass seeds have failed.

It has also been contended that this Bill will impose on the farmer conditions, as mentioned in the various sections, which he cannot comply with, besides entailing heavy expenses. The farmer sees his crops growing; he is in a position to judge of the quality of the grain. Therefore he is at fault if he does not instruct the buyer as to the quality of the product; and for the same reason later on, the wholesale or retail dealer will offer for sale inferior seeds, without advising the buyer. Should the proposed Bill do away with the neglectful habits, to say the least, of many of our farmers and seedsmen, that would be, to my mind a good reason for carrying it through. These neglectful habits have become too general; we should endeavour to correct them, if possible; and consequently I think, the provisions of the Bill should apply to producers as well as to sellers of poor seeds. Under the provisions of the Bill, both the farmer and the dealer are compelled to have their seeds inspected before putting them on the market; or else they have to advise the buyer of the facts. Otherwise, they are liable to pay heavy fines, which is only fair, to my mind.

It has also been stated that under the provisions of this Bill, seedsmen will be liable to heavy penalties on account of the many requirements which are therein laid down. I know of farmers and farmers' clubs who have purchased seed grain grown in other parts of the country specially with a view to improving their crops, and these seeds failed to germinate, the result being a total loss for the too confident buyer. And the dealer would allege that he acted in good faith, that he had not guaranteed anything, and would leave the farmer suffer the whole loss. Is that fair, Mr. Chairman, should not the seller be held responsible under such circumstances? By providing that the producer and seller shall guarantee the germinating power of the seeds they supply and making them liable for any losses inflicted on the buyer through these inferior seeds, we shall be protecting farmers to a great extent against a ruinous evil.

I am a farmer myself; I have the honour to represent a newly settled and rapidly developing district. Its virgin lands certainly do not contain any foul seeds; and nevertheless, we are already obliged to wage war on weeds, which spread rapidly, as we are buying from outside, large quantities of agricultural seeds. I am glad to acknowledge that generally Canadian seeds are not as foul as others; but a large proportion, all the same, is not absolutely pure.

Once more I congratulate the hon. Minister of Agriculture on having had the good sense and courage to introduce this Bill, heedless of unpopularity (should unpopularity attach to it); for his intention is, by means of a judicious and strict law to protect to the utmost limit possible the great farming interests of the country.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I may say that I have had the pleasure of meeting some of the electors of my hon. friend (Mr. Girard) in the district of Lake St. John and Chicoutimi, and amongst the requests in favour of a Bill of this kind, has come most urgently a request from his county. There the people are cultivating land, which is comparatively speaking, new, in a district of extreme richness and fertility and great possibilities for agricultural development, and where fortunately up to the present time they are not troubled with weeds as we in the older parts of Canada are. I can appreciate well their extreme desire to be protected from the introduction of the bad weeds which the older parts of Canada are suffering from to such an extent. There are one or two points in the discussion which it would be as well to clear up as there seems to be a misconception about them. Section 3 which is under discussion is applicable to all cereals, grasses, clovers forage plants or vegetables. That includes certain very bad weeds which have been picked out by the experts as being the weeds that no seed sold in Canada ought to contain for whatever purpose they are sold. Section 4 deals with only the seeds of timothy, red clover and alsike and does not apply to the seeds of ordinary cereals. A good deal of the discussion has turned on the farmers sale of large seeds, meaning the ordinary grain seeds. Section 4 does not apply to that, and consequently the farmers can carry on that trade without being liable to the penalties under the Act. Section 4, however, does apply to the farmer who sells his neighbour red clover, alsike or timothy, and he is obliged to put his name upon the package and the name of the seed and the grade. My hon. friend from Bothwell said that even if the farmer sold a practically pure seed he was liable to the penalty. He is only liable if he refuses to write his name or put the name of the seed on the package. If he puts the grade on he declares what kind of seed it is and he will not be liable to the penalty. Surely it is not too much to ask the farmer when he has to put his name on it to state the kind of seed, and if he is selling pure seed to put the grade on it. I cannot consider that this would be any hardship. If he is selling his seed to his neighbour which does contain adulterated seed he ought to be liable to the penalty just as anybody else who undertakes to sell such seeds. I am not prepared to advocate that the farmer should be free from the responsibility which he himself expects should attach to another person when the course of trade is reversed.

Mr. ROSS (Ontario). Who would be better able than the farmer himself who grows the seed to judge whether it is pure or not?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, and if he knows that his field is free from weeds he can say that his seed is free from weeds. I do not think any person would complain of the farmer being liable to the penalty under the circumstances.

Mr. CLANCY. Many farmers who have grown grain all their lives are not able to draw the distinction which would enable them to grade it. It is only an expert who can do that.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We have provided ourselves with the necessary machinery for properly grading seeds, and if a farmer chooses to send his samples of seed to the laboratory we can tell him what it contains.

Mr. CLANCY. Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that before a farmer could sell a bushel of clover seed to his nearest neighbour, he would be compelled to send it down here to have a report made upon it? If that is the case, let me tell the hon. gentleman that it is absolute nonsense.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman may choose to say so. If the farmer wants to sell his seed as No. 1 quality, he can sell it as such by sending a sample of it and getting it graded as No. 1. If he thinks he is not safe in selling it as No. 1, he can grade it as No. 2. I confess that I have not yet seen an amendment to this clause which would accomplish what my hon. friend wishes, and at the same time retain the efficiency of the Act; nor have I been able to draw up such an amendment. If the hon. gentleman will draw up a clause which will do so, I shall be glad to accept it. The explanation which I have given will show how the farmer can protect himself if he wants to enter into this kind of trade. The hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Richardson) spoke a few minutes ago of the very large proportion of seeds sold in that way between farmers. I venture to say, so far as grass seeds, clover, alsike and timothy are concerned, that except for a small portion of western Ontario, the great bulk of these seeds pass through the hands of the wholesale seed dealers all over Canada.

Mr. CLANCY. I am endeavouring to make the Bill as perfect as possible without being harassing, and I think the hon. gentleman has found the solution of the difficulty I am pointing out. The hon. gentleman is quite right in saying that in only a small portion of the whole Dominion of Canada is the seed sold other than through wholesale dealers. If that be the case, why not confine the Bill to the seed dealers, who compose 99 per cent of those who are dealing with seed, and exempt the farmers from these regulations which it is impossible for them to fulfil, seeing that only a small section of them would be affected?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman suggests that as a compromise, which is worthy of consideration, although I fear that the farmers in that part of the country who want to buy seeds from their neighbours would not be altogether satisfied with the proposal. However, as I said at the beginning of the discussion, that I wanted suggestions, and as I do not wish to lay myself open to the accusation of being unduly set in my opinion, I am quite willing to take that suggestion into consideration. It will, however, come into section 4, and when we come to that section, we can let it stand, to see if any such amendment can be worked out with safety.

Mr. HENDERSON. I would ask the minister what he thinks of striking out the word 'vegetables'? In reading section 4, I am at a loss as to what is the true meaning of the Act. It is a question in my mind whether it is the package, the sack, or the bag from which the seed is sold that must be stamped, or whether it is the receptacle into which the merchant puts the seed for the farmer to take it away? If it is the latter, it would involve such an enormous amount of work as to make it almost impracticable. If the grade of the seed and the name of the seller had to be stamped on all these little five-cent packages of cabbage seed, onion seed and other small garden seed.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. My hon. friend will find that the word 'vegetables' does not occur in section 4, which requires the marking on the package. It occurs in section 3 only.

Mr. HENDERSON. Well, what about striking out the word 'vegetables'?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I understand that the word 'vegetables' is required for the purpose of covering the seeds of roots which are used for farm purposes, such as turnips, mangolds, carrots, and rape. In mangold seeds, I believe that wild oats not infrequently occur. Of course, it may be said that in the root crops, where the land is thoroughly hoed, the destruction of weeds is not very difficult, and if the word 'vegetables' were struck out, it would not interfere seriously with the aim of the Bill. At the same time, it was thought well to include that word and make the Bill applicable to these root crops so far as section 3 is concerned.

Mr. ROBINSON (West Elgin). I suppose the minister is aware that some seeds will not grow after they are two years old. Has he made any provision for them?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The grading shows. Grade No. 1 requires, therefore, that there should be 90 per cent of good growing seeds in the sample sold.

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin). How is it possible for the purchaser to know old seed from new? There are some seeds, such as parsnips, which will not grow the second year. It would be as injurious to the farmer to sow a crop and not have it come up as to sow foul seed.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. If a seedsman sells seeds which will not grow, he certainly is injuring the purchaser. The dealer and the purchaser can always test the seed. If a purchaser buys seed and has any suspicion of it, he can send a sample to the laboratory here and have it tested for germination just as well as for weeds. Or he may test it himself. It is a simple thing to take 100 or 200 seeds and germinate them in a piece of blotting paper moistened at a certain temperature. In a day or two, or a week or two, according to the seed he is testing, he will see what percentage are good. If he then wishes to take out a prosecution, his safest way is to send samples of seed to the laboratory, because the report of the laboratory will be conclusive proof. But he can test the seeds at home, and then swear what percentage was not germinable.

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin). But usually the purchaser of the seeds has not time to germinate them. He wants to put them in the ground as soon as he gets them. I think that the seller ought to be responsible for the growing. I heard the hon. member for South Ontario (Mr. Ross), a few moments ago, describing the different grade of seeds growing in his county—1st, 2nd, 3rd, 4th, 5th and 6th of one particular seed. He said that grade 6 was such inferior stuff that there was no difficulty in shipping it to Europe and finding a sale for it. But, for heaven's sake, make a law to prevent such seeds being sold in England, because that will give a bad name to all Canadian seed.

Mr. ROSS (Ontario). I think my hon. friend from Elgin (Mr. Robinson) misunderstood me. When the alsike crop is harvested and threshed, you will find sometimes a dozen samples entirely different. Of course, you could mix them up and make one sample, or you could make several samples. They would all have some measure of goodness, but some of them might have what is called ungerminable seed. It is only when the crop is uneven, when the season has been bad, that that sort of thing would occur. It does not always follow that because seed does not grow the seedsman or the seller is at fault. No one can guarantee seed to grow. If the weather, soil, and other conditions are right, the seed will germinate if good; but if the proper conditions are not present, that seed will not germinate, or only a very small proportion. That is particularly true of garden seed. I was going to ask the hon. minster whether the term 'vegetable' included garden seeds which are sold in small quantities, such as lettuce, cress and cabbage seeds?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes.

Mr. ROSS (Ontario). Because they are largely sold in packages; and although seedmen collect them every year, there are sometimes complaints from the customers that they did not think the seed was good, because it did not come up. But that does not always follow. If you have not the conditions of weather, soil, &c., you will not get good results.

Mr. C. ANGERS (Charlevoix). (Translation). Mr. Chairman, with the indulgence of the House, I wish to join with the hon. member for Chicoutimi and Saguenay (Mr. Girard) in congratulating the hon. Minister of Agriculture on having introduced the Bill now before us. I think it will have a most decisive effect in checking the spread of weed seeds ; it would be wasting time to urge this point any further. However, I shall venture to suggest an amendment for the hon. minister's consideration, which would render it more effective. Its effect would be to protect certain parts at least of the province of Quebec against frauds inflicted on its farmers and which the latter, to my knowledge, are unable to detect beforehand. I refer to the sale of grain for seed which is not suitable for that purpose. It is to my knowledge that in the counties of Charlevoix and Chicoutimi and Saguenay, some years ago, a considerable quantity of rye was sold as spring rye, while it was an autumn variety. I know of farmers who after having sown, ten, fifteen and twenty bushels of this, did not reap a bushel the next autumn and found out to their sorrow that they had completely lost their time and money.

I remember that last year a large quantity of wheat was sold for seed, and after germinating the grain did not make enough growth to give a crop. In other words, farmers are too often deceived as to the quality of the seed grain they buy. The evil I am pointing out may be difficult to do away with ; however, I think the hon. minister, with the practical turn of mind for which he is noted, will realize the importance of my suggestion and the need for providing a remedy.

It may be objected that farmers can protect themselves by requiring a guarantee from the dealer as to the quality of the seed grain he sells. Practically, that guarantee, does not amount to much. In the first place, many farmers buy with implicit confidence and do not require any guarantee whatever. Besides, dealers have become cautious. They are careful to have printed on their invoices the words : 'Without any guarantee.' That has occurred on several occasions to my knowledge.

Therefore, it would be desirable, to my mind, to amend the Bill in such a way as to compel the dealer to ascertain the germinative power of wheat, rye and other grains which he has for sale. Such a clause might be drafted so as to protect also the farmer who, having asked for seed to be used in the spring, gets instead, seed which can be used for autumn sowing only, a practice very little followed in the province of Quebec.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Hon. Mr. Fisher.) (Translation). The point raised by the hon. member for Charlevoix is surely worthy of our most serious consideration. I shall ascertain whether it is practical to draft an amendment on the lines stated by him. I must admit frankly that this Bill does not go quite as far as I would wish, but it should not be forgotten that we must learn to walk before we can run. True, this Bill does not provide for the farmers as much protection as I would have liked. I would have preferred one more comprehensive ; but it seems to me it is about all we can do just now. I may say to my hon. friend (Mr. Angers) that I shall be glad to consider his suggestion and to comply with his request if it appears to me possible to do so.

On section 3,

Mr. BELL. It seems to me that the minister ought to take into consideration the objection made to including vegetable seeds under section 3. It will be almost impossible to conduct the seed business as it has been conducted in Canada if this Bill comes into effect, so far as concerns the seeds sold in small quantities for garden use. The Bill should be confined to the seed sold for what is generally known as field culture, such as mangles, sugar beets, turnips, and rape, if necessary. But to apply this law to seeds sold in small packages would be absolutely impossible. These seeds are, for the most part, sold to the trade in very clean form. I do not think there is much adulteration. Probably the only defect would be failure to germinate a proper proportion. At the same time, they do, as a rule germinate sufficiently to satisfy all purposes of garden crops. I believe the trade is united in being opposed to the inclusion of the small garden seeds, and I think the hon. minister should give weight to their views. I suppose this Bill would include flower seeds ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No.

Mr. BELL. If flower seeds are excluded, there would be almost equally good reason for excluding these garden seeds. The minister could frame a clause which would have the effect of restricting this Bill to seeds sold for field purposes. It would be impossible to apply it to the trade in garden seeds. after having experience of the Bill for a few years, it might be possible to put in a clause then to cover this other branch of the trade.

Mr. GILMOUR. I do not see the need of including turnips and mangels, for they are sowed in rows, and weeds can be destroyed. The same is true of garden seeds. But it is quite different with grain or clover.

Mr. McGOWAN.. I would protest against the exclusion of most of these that are called garden seeds. There is more wild mustard distributed in rape and turnip seed than in any other way, because we cannot distinguish it. The Bill should apply to field vegetables at least.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. In view of the objections raised, I may say that I have not been anxious to include ordinary vegetable seeds as sold in small packages, though I think it would be very easy for the seed merchants to have these seeds cleaned and to sell them so that they would conform to this Act. I sympathize with my hon. friend from Centre Wellington (Mr. McGowan) who wishes turnip and rape seed to be included under the Bill, for I know that a great deal of mustard is distributed in seed sold under these names. It is very hard to distinguish mustard from turnip or rape seed, and I have been told that it is even mixed with them intentionally. I would be glad to allow this section to stand with a view to preparing an amendment to cover the point raised by my hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Bell) who desires the ordinary garden vegetable seeds not to be included.

Mr. ROSS (Ontario). We import practically all our mangel, turnip and carrot seeds, and these should be especially provided for, to secure their purity. Some amendment might be prepared so that we could regulate this trade in a wholesale way before the seeds were put in packages and provide how long they shall stay out for sale. I am not prepared to advise the minister in regard to that, but if the Bill is to stand, that might be taken into consideration. For instance, you sell a package of seeds for five cents; and, if it is not up to the standard required by the law the penalty may be $100. That is an enormous penalty for the sale of a five-cent package of seeds. Under these circumstances, it would naturally be suggested that these seeds be exempt from the operation of the law. As to the suggestion I gave to the minister with regard to the export trade, do I understand that that trade is provided for in another section of the Bill?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, section 4.

Mr. SPROULE. So far as this section 3 is concerned, either the Act will be a dead letter, or else farmers who sell seed, as many of them do, will be liable to the penalties of the Act. The custom of buying and selling seed among farmers exists in my section of the country, and the ordinary farmer cannot say what is pure seed, nor can he grade his seed with any certainty of knowing what he is doing. He has not machinery to clean it, and, even if he had, there is no machinery that will certainly remove all these weed seeds from grass and clover seeds. The seeds are of the same size and very much the same shape, and you may screen the seed as often as you like, but you cannot remove all these impurities. There is an establishment within twenty feet of my office where they have been handling seeds for years, and they have as good and modern machinery for cleaning seeds as there is in this country. Yet, seeds from that source, believed to be as pure as they can be made, contain a great many of these weed seeds. The seed sold by the farmer cannot be free from these weed seeds. And no farmer selling to his neighbour will enter into contract to supply pure seed.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The farmer can sell seed to the dealer without being subject to this law.

Mr. SPROULE. But the dealer who buys it is often a retail dealer who sells it to the farmer without being cleaned at all, and such a dealer cannot grade the seed.

Mr. MONK. I have not made a careful examination of the Bill of the Minister of Agriculture, but I heard part of the remarks made by the hon. member for Charlevoix (Mr. Angers), and I am afraid this Bill will greatly interfere with the farmers. We are not prepared for that kind of legislation now. It is an interference with the liberty of trade amongst the farmers, although perhaps the object of the Bill is good. For that reason I protest against this section at the present time.

On section 4,

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The intention is that in any particular transaction the person who sells will be liable to the penalty if he sells what he does not represent.

Mr. GILMOUR. Can he sell out of a bin?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. He would have to sell just what was marked on the bin. The country merchant or retailer buys from the wholesaler, then the country merchant or retailer would be responsible except as I propose to provide by an amendment, where the package has been sealed and the name of the wholesaler is upon it and it is sold without the seal being broken. I propose to amend by inserting after the words 'indelible manner' at the end of the first clause of section 4, the words 'either on the receptacle, package sack or bag itself, or on a label securely attached to said receptacle, package, sack or bag.' That allows a label to be attached to the bag instead of the bag itself being marked. This amendment is made in view of the objections which are urged by the wholesale trade who say that when they mark a bag for export especially, the receiver in the other country objects to the marking on the bag, and wants nothing to be on it except the address. But as long as the bag remains in this country it would have the label with this mark attached to it.

Mr. GILMOUR. Would the wholesaler be willing that this label should remain on the bag and used again ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I propose to offer an amendment with regard to the seal. In a transaction between the retailer and the purchaser, the wholesale merchant would not be liable for the receptacle which had a seal upon it which had been broken.

Mr. GILMOUR. Then whenever the seal is broken the second dealer is responsible ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, the only one responsible. The intention of the Act is to render the seller liable. If the retail merchant sells seeds the purchaser can attack him, but he cannot attack the wholesale dealer from whom the retailer has bought goods unless there is a package on which there is a seal unbroken, then the retail dealer would be free from responsibility, and the wholesale dealer would be responsible, but only when he sold a package with the unbroken seal.

Mr. McGOWAN. Will the wholesaler be allowed to get out of any responsibility in connection with this Bill ? Because most of the wholesale seedsmen have special arrangements to protect themselves from any liability ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think this will neutralize any non-warranty clause by which they might try to relieve themselves from a guarantee of the purity or goodness of the seed. Under this section no such clause would be recognized. But I am not a lawyer, and must speak with diffidence. I suppose that under the common law a person can make an agreement with another party to relieve himself of responsibility. But this Bill I think will do away with any release to the wholesaler under what is called a non-warranty clause.

Mr. McGOWAN. I am afraid it won't, unless you make special provision for it.

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin). In the section where I live, large quantities of American timothy seed come into the country to be sold. I would like to know whether the wholesaler or retailer would be responsible for the foul seed that might be found in it ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The retailer who sells to the farmer will be liable unless he is selling a package sealed with an unbroken seal. If he sells a package with an unbroken seal, then the wholesaler whose name is on that package would be liable; but if the seal is broken, or if he sells it out of the package in a small quantity, then the retailer would be liable.

Mr. ROSS (Ontario). Does the minister consider the grades are sufficient, grade No. 1, No. 2, No. 3 ? I suppose the intention of the Act is to make all seeds of uniform grades throughout the country.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. As nearly as possible.

Mr. ROSS (Ontario). As it is now, every seed dealer in the country has a name on his package. Sometimes they designate their seeds as 'fancy,' 'choice.' Sometimes they will use the names of furbearing animals, as the 'martin,' 'ermine,' 'lynx,' 'fox.' the names of birds, the 'canary,' 'blackbird,' and so on. This is a radical departure from that particular phase of the subject, and I should like to know from the minister whether his Bill will interfere with that part of the trade ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. If the hon. gentleman reads the latter part of this section he will see that it contains this provision :

> And the said mark may be accompanied by another designation or grade mark, provided that such designation or grade mark, is not inconsistent with, or marked more conspicuously than the one of the said four marks which is used on the said receptacle, package, sack or bag.

The section following defines what grade No. 1 must be, and what grade No. 2 must be, what grade No. 3 must be, and any merchant, if his grade No. 1 fulfils the conditions in section 5, can use any other mark that he chooses in addition to grade No. 1 to indicate the degree of the grade. He may say that it is superfine No. 1, or extra No. 1, or pure gold No. 1, or whatever he chooses, and he may have two or three grades of No. 1 under the definition in section 5 of No. 1 according to his ideas of the quality of his No. 1 grade. The same would apply to No. 2 and No. 3.

Mr. BELL. The fact of the matter is that under the present practice of the seed trade, instead of there being four grades as the hon. minister points out, there will be sixteen or twenty grades of timothy seeds.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I hardly think as many as that.

Mr. BELL. The practice of the trade is to sell fancy, choice, prime, strictly prime, and one or two lower grades. Now, every one of these would fulfil the requirements of this Bill. Fancy seed might be free from the particular weed seeds which are mentioned which must not occur in No. 1 seed and which is germinable to the extent of 90 degrees. Fancy seed, I might premise depends very largely on the appearance of the seed.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Not under this Bill.

Mr. BELL. Not under this Bill but in trade. The plumpness, the colour, the absence of shelled seed in timothy. These are the things that make the value in the estimation of the dealer. You may conceivably have fifteen or sixteen grades of timothy seed under the operation of this Bill and it would unquestionably lead to enormous confusion and difficulty. The merchant, might with perfect honesty offer to a dealer in this country or abroad seed and it might yet be very inferior seed. It might only be a prime seed and only come within 50 per cent of a fancy seed and it might comply with all the conditions expressed in this Bill. So that, it is going to be perfectly impossible for merchants to handle their seeds and if it can be done it will require some long experience. However, I understand from the hon. minister that it is not likely that this Bill is to become law this year.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I would not like to say that.

Mr. BELL. It will be very important that we discuss it fully and give the trade time to express their objections to it.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. By all means.

Mr. BELL. I think so, because if the Bill is made to apply beyond the wholesale dealer it will throw the trade into an awful state of confusion for one year at least, and I think the hon. minister should be careful to give the trade a year to become familiar with its provisions. This Bill should certainly not come into operation without a year's notice. In reference to the matter of marking, every package containing seeds must be identified at every stage of its progress with the name of the maker and a discription of the contents on the package. If the wholesaler sells a bag of timothy or clover to the retail merchant it will go to the retail merchant with the name of the wholesaler either marked upon the package or on a tag firmly attached to the package, then a description of the kind of seed and then the designation of the grade of seed. Between the wholesaler and the retailer there very often comes the jobber who buys from the wholesaler and sells to the retailer. When it comes into the hands of a jobber the liability on the part of the wholesaler ceases after seven days. This package would require to receive a new mark. It would then be marked with the name of the jobber. There would be a tag containing the name of the jobber, the name of the seed, the description of the seed and its grade. Then, it comes into the hands of the retailer and after seven days time the retailer would have no claim against the jobber. He is the man who is going to sell it to the public, and against whom the retail buyer would have no recourse after seven days. Then, it will require to be tagged again with the name of the retailer, the name of the seed and the grade. The consequence is that the package, after a short time will be covered over with marks and it will be absolutely impossible to mark the packages. Therefore it is quite clear that the adoption of a tag instead of a mark is absolutely essential because the bag will be covered with all these marks. The result of this will be that in the next season a bag which has a second hand value of fifteen or sixteen cents would practically be useless because it would have all over it the marks of the previous season and it would not be properly descriptive of the merchants name or of the contents. Unless some way of avoiding this difficulty were arrived at, the dealer would have an enormous quantity of bags which would be useless. In view of that, and in view of the fact that properly to comply with the terms of the Bill, this package will be required to be marked at every stage of its progress from the wholesaler to the jobber, then to the retailer and to the final purchaser or the customer who is going to use the seed, it is absolutely necessary that some way of getting over the difficulty of this marking should be arrived at.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. My hon. friend (Mr. Bell) apparently did not hear the amendment which was proposed to obviate the difficulty in regard to that.

Mr. BELL. That is to use a tag ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes.

Mr. BELL. I did hear that.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That disposes of the difficulty.

Mr. BELL. But did the hon. minister think of the difficulty this article would encounter in its progress in the trade ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. They would simply put a new tag on.

Mr. ROSS (Ontario). In view of the fact that there are heavy penalties in this Bill for the improper sale of seeds, what provision have you made for the retailer ? As I understand the transaction will go through something like this : The wholesaler will sell to the retailer a bag of turnip seed. It will probably have on it the tag of the wholesaler. The retailer puts that bag up for sale and he sells it in quantities ranging from half a pound to five or ten pounds. Does the tag remain on the bag until it is all sold and is it to be regarded as the guarantee of the wholesaler until it is all sold, or is the wholesaler relieved of his liability after seven days and does it then come upon the retailer ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes. The wholesaler will be relieved when the seal is once broken on the bag. As soon as the bag is opened, except for the taking of a sample from it, the wholesaler would be relieved because he could not be held responsible after the bag was opened. The wholesaler does not know what the retailer may do with the seed after he once opens the package.

Mr. MONK. The more I look on section 4 the more I think it is calculated to create a great disturbance as to the relations between farmers in the country. As I understand section 4 it would be impossible for farmers to deal amongst themselves in timothy and clover seeds. Some of these farmers are known in certain parts of the country as having excellent seed for sale and if they have to comply with all the requirements of section 4 it would be a great hardship for them. I do not think this Bill is workable, and if I am in order I would move that the committee rise.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Of course the hon. gentleman is quite in order in moving that the committee rise, but I must ask the committee to reject it. I am quite willing later on to ask the committee to rise, report progress, and ask to sit again, but as this motion of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) would practically dispose of the Bill for this session I cannot agree to it. The hon. gentleman says the Bill is not workable. He was not present at the earlier part of the session when I stated that I was not absolutely committed to the details of the Bill, and that I was quite prepared to receive suggestions, and if the Bill could be made more workable by these suggestions to adopt them. I do venture to think that the Bill is workable even in the form in which it stands. The objection which the hon. gentleman takes to this particular section has been discussed for some time, and so far I have not been convinced of the difficulties that my hon. friend points out. It is true that if a farmer sells to another farmer timothy or clover or alsike which he does not choose to mark with his own name, the name of the seed, and the grade, he will be liable to the penalties under the Act. The intention of the Bill is that the people who sell seeds shall be required to guarantee the quality of the seeds they sell. People who sell seeds shall be required in some way to guarantee them. If the farmers themselves chose to engage in the business I must confess that they should be liable to the same conditions that people who sell seeds ordinarily are obliged to live up to. I am quite willing to acknowledge that there might be an occasional case of hardship, but the instances would be very few indeed. I said to the hon. gentleman from Bothwell that if he would propose an amendment to this clause which would not interfere with the efficacy of the Act I would be very glad to consider that amendment, but so far no such amendment has been proposed, and I confess that I have not been able to work out an amendment which would accomplish that without interfering with the efficacy of the measure.

Mr. J. E. MARCIL (Bagot.) (Translation). Mr. Chairman, while approving of the principle of this Bill, and realizing the pressing need of legislation of this kind for the province of Quebec and the counties generally, with a view to the improvement of our seed grain; and while I am aware that large quanties of grain containing seeds of noxious weeds are offered for sale daily; I must disagree with the minister in regard to clauses 3 and 4 relative to trade between farmers. To my knowledge, in the county which I have the honour to represent, there is going on among the farmers an interchange of grains, from parish to parish, much to their benefit. But, under the provisions of the Bill now before the House, farmers taking part in this trade would be apt to pay pretty heavy penalties. To my mind, that would be unfair and would result in preventing farmers from carrying on a business profitable to themselves.

Then again, it does not seem fair to me to make the retailer liable to a penalty. The hon. minister is well aware that when the retailer receives the seeds from the wholesale dealer, he does not offer them for sale in the condition in which they reach him, that is to say, in closed bags or sacks. It will therefore be necessary for him to break the seals on these bags; and it seems to me it would be most unfair, on account of this simple act, to hold the retailer responsible for the quality of the seeds contained in the bags. I am inclined to believe that the minister, on thinking the matter over, will realize that he is doing an injustice to the retailers, especially those dealing in timothy and clover seeds, which are generally sold in small lots.

It would be unfair to hold the retail dealer responsible for the quality of the seed sold by the wholesale dealer, merely for the fact of his breaking the seals of the bags which contain these seeds. The hon. minister, I am assured, realizes that is of absolute necessity to amend this Bill in such a way as to protect the farmer who is anxious to secure good seed, and also to protect the merchant. It is important at the same time that the retail merchant be protected against the wholesale dealer, by relieving the former of any responsibility as to the quality of the seed contained in bags which he merely opened on receiving them from the wholesale dealer.

Mr. MONK (Translation). I am happy to find that the remarks I made concerning the Bill are endorsed by the hon. member for Bagot (Mr. Marcil). By reading over the other provisions of the Bill, one will readily perceive how arbitrary they are. Section 4, for instance, states the many conditions which the farmer has to comply with if he wishes to sell seeds. Those who are familiar with the habits of the farmers of the province of Quebec, and of Ontario, as well, will see at once how objectionable these provisions are. Not only would this section be very unpopular, but it would not be workable. The farmer who wished to sell a small quantity of seed, red clover seed, for instance, would have to put it in a special package and to label it with his initials, the name of the kind of seed, and also the name of one of the four grades mentioned. As every one will see, these provisions could not be worked easily. My hon. friend from Bagot and the minister himself who are acquainted with the habits of our country people know perfectly well that this law could not be worked. That is why I moved a few moments ago that the committee rise, to show our disapproval of the Bill, although, I admit, that disapproval should have been expressed at the time of the second reading. But, as I had to be away at the time, I take this opportunity of presenting the motion.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. In reply to the hon. gentleman who represents Bagot, I would say that the country merchant who retails seeds which he has bought from a wholesale dealer can protect himself under the provisions of this Bill by taking a sample of the seeds when he buys them, and if that sample is up to the quality marked on the package, he is then quite safe in selling them in the same way. If he finds that it is not up to the quality which the wholesale merchant has marked upon the package, he can have recourse against the wholesale merchant. Of course, if he neglects to take such a sample and goes on and sells the seeds by retail, after he has broken the seal on the package, he cannot come back on the wholesaler ; and it would be hardly fair that he should, because the seal having been broken, the wholesale dealer would not know whether the seed the retailer sold was that which he sold to the retailer or not. In that way the country storekeeper is quite able to protect himself from selling anything that is not what he represents it to be. In regard to the other matter, as I said to the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), I am quite open to suggestions with regard to this Bill, and I am quite willing to consider the question as to how the farmers dealing with one another in the way he and other members have described can be protected from unfair and improper incidence of the provisions of this Bill. But that is quite a different thing from the committee rising and rejecting the whole Bill. As I have said with regard to other sections, I am willing to let this section stand for further consideration, with a view of seeing how the farmers can be protected in the ordinary transactions between themselves. But I must ask the committee to reject the motion made by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier, and to go on and consider the other sections of the Bill with the same open mind with which we have discussed the Bill thus far.

Mr. MARCIL (Bagot.) (Translation). Before replying to the hon. minister, I wish to state to the hon. member for Jacques Cartier that I am not ready under the circumstances to support the motion he has just made, seeing that the hon. minister proposes to let section 4 stand for the present and to amend it in accordance with the views of the committee.

Now, to meet the objection made by the hon. minister, in reference to retail dealers, I wish to draw his attention to the fact that he possibly is not in as good a position as the merchants themselves to know exactly what is going on. It is likely enough to happen that the wholesaler, knowing that the retailer, by the mere fact of his breaking the seals, becomes responsible for the quality of the seeds, will put at the upper end of the bags, first quality grain, which will be classed No. 1, as required by law, while the middle and bottom layers will consist of seeds of third and fourth quality. Such frauds are frequent enough in the wholesale trade, and I may inform the minister that, on various occasions, country retailers have received bags of seed grain the upper layers of which were of first quality, while the lower layers were third quality.

If the practice is such to-day, it will continue in the future in spite of this law, and it would be unfair to hold the retailer responsible for the quality of the grain contained in the bags of which he broke the seals, considering that he is not in a position to find out whether that seed is or is not first quality. I trust the hon. Minister of Agriculture will think the matter over, and reach the conclusion that his Bill should be amended so as to protect the wholesale dealer and the country retailer.

Mr. GILMOUR. It seems to me that the retail dealer, in order to free himself from the responsibility of selling against the law, must take the sample in the presence of the wholesale merchant who has sold it to him. If he does not do that, he must be held responsible for it. That would appear to me from clause 11.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I intend to propose an amendment coming after section 8 to the effect that any person who sells seeds by wholesale shall not be liable for the seeds sold after the seal has been broken, unless when the seal has been broken a sample for an official test has been taken in the presence of two witnesses. I intend to propose that amendment to protect the wholesale dealer and to give the retail dealer a chance to protect himself. In reply to the hon. member for Bagot, I may say that it is well known that there is a little instrument, something like a pencil, which can be forced into a package of seeds, by which samples can be taken, not only from the top, but all through the bag. That little machine costs about twenty-five cents, and I do not think any country merchant will allow himself to be laid open to a charge, because he did not spend twenty-five cents to take the trouble to protect himself in that way. I appreciate, however, the necessity of protecting the retail dealers in the country just as much as the wholesale dealers who are selling to them. The provisions of the Bill, I hope, and the amendment which I am going to suggest, will cover these points, and I want to reiterate that I am only too glad to receive suggestions which remove the difficulties which necessarily gather around legislation of this kind. We have been fortunate enough on various occasions to thresh out various Bills to make them workable, and I have confidence that the intelligence and inventiveness of this committee will succeed in making this Bill as workable as we have made other Bills.

Mr. MONK. It is, I admit, late to move against the principle of the Bill, but still it is in accordance with the rules of the House to move now that the committee rise ; and as I and a great many other members of this House, who understand the wants of the rural population of the province of Quebec, disapprove of this legislation at the present time, although it may be useful at a later date, I wish to move—and I do it without any disrespect to the hon. minister—that the committee rise.

Mr. ROSS (South Ontario). Considering that nearly every member who has spoken on the Bill has conceded that there is a necessity for some law governing the seed trade of this country, I think the Bill should be proceeded with. When we consider that in the province of Ontario alone the hay and clover crop, exclusive of seed, is worth $30,000,000, we can see how important this Bill is. Under the circumstances, I think the best thing we can do is to go over the Bill and see just how far we agree with it, and how far we cannot agree. I confess that there are some things in the Bill which I consider might be improved ; but I, for one, feel that we should go on and see what can be done in the matter.

Mr. MONK. I appeal to my hon. friends who know the wants of the province of Quebec in regard to legislation of this kind. This legislation, however we might remodel it, would not be acceptable to the population there. I appeal to these hon. gentlemen to give their opinion on the Bill, which I do not think is suitable either to the province of Quebec or to the province of Ontario. I insist on my motion.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. My hon. friend takes the responsibility of challenging a Bill of this kind, which he does in the interest of the farmers of Quebec, and intimates thereby that the farmers of that province object to a Bill which is for the purpose of preventing their being sold bad seeds. The hon. gentleman is welcome to take that responsibility, and to go before the farmers of the province of Quebec with that responsibility on his shoulders. I challenge him to vote in this House in that pense. If the hon. gentleman and his friends choose to vote for the destruction of this Bill at this time, I warn him that the farmers of the province of Quebec will hold him responsible when he goes before them.

Mr. MONK. My hon. friend does not deceive anybody with this talk. I have seen by the gestures of his friends behind him that they have been appealing to him to give up this Bill. I have seen by the gestures of the hon. gentleman's friends behind him that they have been pressing him to abandon his Bill. Among those I have noticed, Mr. Speaker, himself, the hon. member for Laprairie (Mr. Monet) the hon. member for Verchères (Mr. Geoffrion) and the hon. member for Charlevoix (Mr. Angers). The opinion so clearly expressed by the hon. member for Bagot (Mr. Marcil) coupled with the attitude of these hon. gentlemen, is proof positive that the hon. minister is endeavouring, in a very clumsy way, to get rid of his Bill. Let him stand up like a man and defend his Bill or keep his peace, instead of trying to shelve on me the responsibility of the abandonment of that Bill, which his hon. friends behind him have been urging him the whole evening to give up.

Mr. D. MONET (Laprairie and Napierville.) (Translation). Mr. Chairman, there is a clear contradiction in the remarks made by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier. He apparently finds fault with the minister for not pressing his Bill through committee this evening. That is exactly what the minister wishes to do, while the hon. member is moving for the committee to rise and throw out the Bill entirely.

Mr. MONK (Translation). Is my hon. friend in favour of this Bill ?

Mr. MONET (Translation). Certainly. I have just risen to protest against the suggestion made by the hon. member that I was one of those who seemed to oppose the Bill. In the provinec of Quebec, as well as in all the other provinces which I had the pleasure to visit, weeds are present, and I am of opinion that such a law is needed to protect the farmers, especially in the newly settled districts where these noxious weeds have not yet taken a foothold. It is highly important that they should be kept out.

Mr. MONK (Translation). Does my hon. friend approve of section 4 of this Bill ?

Mr. MONET (Translation). I think there are sections which are too strict and which should be amended. But in view of the minister's willingness to let clauses 3 and 4 stand, for the purpose of considering various amendments suggested by members from the province of Quebec who spoke this evening, I think we should be satisfied.

We shall examine the provisions of the Bill and retain whatever is good in them, but the proposal of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) is a greater evil, as it rejects the Bill as a whole. Hon. members on the other side who have spoken have approved of the principle of the Bill. Now, what remains to be done is to look into the details and make the necessary changes. But my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier, while in favour of the Bill, would do away with it by having the committee rise without reporting progress.

The object of the Bill is good and approved by all: What remains to be done is to work out the details with a sincere determination to adopt the best possible means for the eradication of weed seeds from our fields. In the field of politics noxious weeds have to be endured; but such is not the case with the weeds on the farms.

Mr. MONK: My hon. friend from Laprairie says that hon. members on this side are in favour of the principle of the Bill. I was not present in the early part of the discussion, as I was on the Redistribution Committee, but if what my hon. friend says be the case, I am prepared to withdraw my motion. I would like, however, to know from my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture if he intends to carry the Bill through this session and to give us the amendments to those sections to which we have objected. Surely he is not afraid to tell us whether he intends to carry this Bill through with the changes for which we have been contending.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not know how often my hon. friend wishes me to express my intentions. I have already told the committee several times that, in my opinion, the time had arrived for the passage of a Bill of this kind, but that I was quite ready to discuss any amendments which might be suggested to improve the measure. I have said that I should be most happy to receive from the committee any suggestions towards making the Bill as perfect as possible.

Mr. CHAIRMAN (Mr. Fraser). Does the hon. gentleman from Jacques Cartier wish to withdraw his motion?

Mr. MONK. Does the hon. minister refuse to give me the information which I asked in a most respectful manner as to whether he intends this Bill to become law or not?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It does not lie with me to make it law. I am in the hands of the committee and propose to be guided by the evident desire of the House. If the Bill can be made such as will meet the approval of the House, it will no doubt become law; but if it cannot be put into such a shape as to commend itself to the approval of the House, I shall not attempt to force it through the House.

Mr. GILMOUR. I think what the hon. member for Jacques Cartier desired to know was whether the Bill shall become law this year. I understood the hon. minister to say that he does not intend to make it become law until July of next year.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. When we were discussing section 2, my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier was not present, but I then stated that I thought the date fixed in the Bill for bringing it into operation was too early, and that I would let that clause stand so that we might change the date later on.

Mr. CHAIRMAN (Mr. Fraser). Does the hon. member for Jacques Cartier wish to withdraw his motion?

Mr. MONK. In view of the declaration of the hon. minister that he intends completely changing his Bill, I beg to withdraw my motion.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I cannot accept a withdrawal on such terms. I have not said that I propose to change the entire character of the Bill.

Mr. MONK. If the hon. minister states that he has no intention of changing his Bill, I shall persist in my motion.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Neither have I made any such statement as that. Surely my hon. friend does not wish me to state over again what I have already declared so often. Let him either put his motion or withdraw it.

Mr. MONK. I persist in my motion.

Mr. BELL. There is evidently some confusion or misunderstanding. No doubt the general opinion of the committee is that this Bill is in the right direction. If we could secure a supply of pure seeds, which has a large percentage of germination, no doubt that would be most desirable, but the difficulty is in getting a workable measure. I have urged on the hon. minister to proceed slowly so as to avoid throwing a very important trade into a state of confusion.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. But the hon. gentleman's colleague does not want me to proceed at all.

Mr. BELL. I do not think that that is the intention of my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier. I rather understood that the hon. minister himself once or twice suggested asking the committee to rise and he has allowed one or two clauses to stand over, so that we might not make too much progress. That is in agreement with the sense of the House, which believes the result aimed at very desirable but very difficult of accomplishing. The more we look into the matter, the more we find that a great deal of care and elaboration will be necessary before the measure can be put into such a shape that it will be a benefit to the country. It is possible to pass the measure in such a shape that it will prove a dead letter. It would be looked upon as a very harsh thing if large penalties were enforced against persons who, to a certain extent, were innocent and were proceeding to carry on this business as it has been carried on for many years past. The difficulty of bringing home an offence to any particular person, I am sure the hon. minister has already realized, would be enormous. At the same time, we cannot make any great mistake in going on to consider the clause further. I do not anticipate that the minister will succeed in putting the Bill into such a shape as he will feel like making it an operative law in the course of the coming year. He could hardly do that at this late stage of the session. The House generally is disposed to take an interest in a Bill. Many members have taken part in the discussion and everybody has shown a desire to assist the minister and facilitate the progress of the Bill. Special attention has been paid to it by hon. members from the province of Quebec. One reason, no doubt, is that it will affect many people in that province. Timothy seed, of the best quality, we know is produced in Quebec, and many thousand bushels are marketed in Montreal every year. For my own part if the hon. minister does not desire to withdraw his Bill, if he will hold this section for further amendment, we might go through other sections without any great loss.

Mr. ROSS (Ontario). I have already said I am opposed to the motion of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), and I have already said that I did not think it would be wise to bring this Bill into force this year. As I have said the time for the seed trade is practically upon us and the conditions imposed by this Bill will, I do not say revolutionize, but change in some respects this important trade. Therefore, I think it would be wise to delay. If the minister needs a precedent, I would refer him to the case of the Fruit Marks Act which was brought in one session and discussed, and it was then decided that some such law was needed. The Bill was left over until the folllowing session. That law has been beneficial and the treatment of it might be taken as a precedent in this case.

Mr. CLANCY. I confess I am a little puzzled by the action of the Minister of Agriculture. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier asked what seems to me a very fair question—whether the minister would insist that the Bill should go through in its present shape. The hon. minister had declared that he had an open mind on the question, he invited fair discussion and said he was not averse to any reasonable amendments, but was entirely in the hands of the committee. My hon. friend from Jacques Cartier without uttering another sentence in view of the statements of the hon. minister, withdrew his amendment. To the surprise of everybody, the minister arose in something like a passion and declared that he would not allow the amendment to be withdrawn except on conditions laid down by himself. That seems a piece of pettishness on the part of the minister. I am in favour of any measure that will make for better conditions with regard to the subject dealt with by this Bill. But I would infinitely rather see the Bill stand over than have it pass in its present shape—and that is what the hon. minister means to insist upon, as is evident by his language in refusing to allow the hon. member for Jacques Cartier to withdraw his amendment. I will therefore vote for the amendment.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) has so completely misrepresented the position, unintentionally——

Mr. CLANCY. Order.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am in order. He has so completely misrepresented what has occurred that I have to put him right. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) came late into the discussion and not knowing what had been said began to criticise the Bill.

Mr. MONK. I did not criticise the Bill, I criticised section 4.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Which is part of the Bill. And my hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Bell) has stated what is quite correct—that until my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier entered the discussion everything was proceeding smoothly, hon. members offering suggestions which were discussed on both sides without antagonism or asperity. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier concluded his remarks by moving that the committee rise, which, as he knew, and everybody knows, is to kill the Bill. That was his obvious intention—his stated intention. I said I could not accept such a motion. I was willing to discuss the Bill in all its phases, but I was not ready to dispose of it in this way, and so asked the committee to reject the motion. After further discussion the hon. member for Jacques Cartier asked a question which I answered exactly in the sense I had stated to the committee in the earlier part of the evening. He then rose and stated, in essence, if not in the identical words I give, that, as I was going to completely change my Bill, he would withdraw his motion. I said I would not allow him to withdraw his motion on those terms, because I had not stated that I would completely change my Bill. That is the whole affair. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) will say frankly that he will withdraw his motion because it is an inexpedient motion, I am willing to agree to its withdrawal. But if he is going to try to release himself from the tight place in which he finds himself by putting words in my mouth that I never uttered. I will not allow him to withdraw his motion on those conditions.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. minister says that there has been practically no disagreement with the Bill. Why, several members expressed themselves as plainly as they could to the affect that the Bill would be unworkable. I said that for one, and I say it again. I would rather see the Bill defeated than passed in its present form. While I think it would be better for the farmers to have pure seed, I say that they cannot work under this Bill and carry on their operations as they carry them on today. Either the Bill must be a dead letter or the farmers will be punished for offences which they have no desire to commit. The hon. minister will not admit that he is going to change the Bill in any important particular——

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I did not say that.

Mr. SPROULE. He would not say that he would mend it seriously. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier is not out of place in making the motion he has made, and I shall support him.

Amendment (Mr. Monk), negatived.

On section 5,

Mr. CLANCY. This is subject to the same difficulties pointed out with regard to section 4, as it refers to these small seeds, and I take it that it is covered also by section 6, which covers all classes of cereals and small seeds. But the hon. gentleman will see that there is no escape so far as these small seeds are concerned under section 6, because in no case are they sold for food.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Section 5 simply defined the different grades. The definition of grades is necessary.

Mr. GILMOUR. Why do you use the word 'screening' instead of the word 'rejected,' to designate inferior seeds ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I was going to ask that the word 'rejected' be substituted for the word 'screenings,' in accordance with the suggestions of the seed dealers, who say that the word 'screenings' is not known to the trade, while the word 'rejected' is. I do not think we could well refuse to allow these seeds to be sold. I am told by the trade that there is a large sale outside of Canada for these 'screenings.'

Hon. Mr. FISHER.

Mr. CLANCY. Has the hon. gentleman made some inquiry as to the uses to which these screenings are put when they are exported ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am informed that some poor alsike clover seed is used for dyeing purposes. I think most of these seeds are sent to the western states and used on pasture land.

Mr. ROSS (Ontario). I think the word 'rejected' will more properly meet the minister's grade because, as we understand 'screenings' in the trade, 70 per cent of them would not germinate, and they would more properly be termed 'rejected.'

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It is a grade below No. 3.

Mr. ROSS (Ontario). Were these tests the minister referred to carried on over a series of years ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Over two years.

Mr. ROSS (Ontario). I noticed in the test for timothy that one sample in five days had seven per cent of germination, and in fourteen days the same sample had twenty-two per cent of germination. That was practically no good. Some of them were low, but most of them were high. I would ask the minister if the season in which this seed was taken was a good season for timothy seed, and was it grown in Canada or imported from the United States ? A large proportion of the timothy seed sold in Canada comes from the United States, especially that sold in Ontario, when we have a short crop. It might be that the germination for timothy seed is a little high. I see by the table he has prepared here that it runs largely from 70 per cent to 90 per cent. There would be a variation in the seasons. Timothy might be good one season and poor in another.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The tests of which I have spoken were taken in the spring of 1903, and the spring of 1902, they were the seeds grown the year before. They were taken both from imported and Canadian grown seed, I could not tell how many of each, but probably more Canadian grown seed than imported. But we cannot always tell where the seeds come from. While it may be a bad year for timothy seed in one district, it may be a good year in another district.

Mr. ROSS (Ontario). It is more than likely that the department germinated timothy seed which was unhulled and which was hulled. If it is timothy seed that had the rough outside coat on, then it is known as unhulled seed. Perhaps he could tell me whether there was any difference in the germinating power between non-hulled and hullled timothy seed.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Practically no great difference. As long as the seed was fresh it would germinate whether it was hulled or non-hulled.

Mr. MONET (Translation). Has the hon. gentleman an idea as to the number of officers it will be necessary to appoint in order to enforce this clause 5 ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Any person may take action under the Act.

Mr. MONET. Where will the officers charged with the enforcement of this Act be located ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We have no intention to appoint inspectors throughout the country. We will have only one or two officers in the laboratory here to examine the samples. Section 9 is for the purpose of authorizing them to take samples and if necessary that persons may be sent from the department at any time to enforce the Act but it is not the intention to appoint inspectors all over the country for the enforcement of the Act. The proposal is to provide machinery under the Act and let anybody take action for enforcing the penalties. In that connection the proposal is that the officers of the department shall be available for testing any samples of seed sent to them and their test will be regarded as prima facie evidence against the persons selling the seed. That is partly in the Act and partly in the regulations, which, under section 18, the Governor in Council is empowered to issue for the enforcement of the Act. I beg to move :

That the word 'rejected' be inserted instead of the word 'screenings' in subsection 2 of section 5.

Section, as amended, agreed to.

On section 6,

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Before adopting section 6, I wish to add a subclause. The section provides that :

The provisions contained in this Act shall not apply to

(a) any person growing or selling seeds for the purpose of seed ; or to

(b) any person selling seeds direct to merchants to be cleaned and graded before being offered for sale for the purpose of seeding.

It has been pointed out to me by persons engaged in the trade that they would buy seed and hold it in their warehouses for months before they would be able to clean it and that under these circumstances if seed was not held for the purpose of sale the person holding the seed should not be liable to the penalties of the Act.

Mr. CLANCY. How is the farmer, or the person selling the seed, to know whether it is to be recleaned and to be sold for seeding purposes ? Paragraph (b) may be all right but it seems to me to be rather vague.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The intention is that where a seed merchant buys seed from a farmer, if the seed has not been cleaned by the farmer and it is intended to be cleaned by the seed merchant, the farmer shall not be liable to the penalties of this Act. He could sell that seed in bulk without marking his name or putting the grade upon it, and if it were not pure he would not be liable to the penalties of this Act.

Mr. CLANCY. That destroys the whole effect of the section, because, if he were left perfectly free to sell it, all he would have to do would be to sell the seed and the person to whom he sold must take the responsibility of all the penalties that would follow. The person who sells does not know what disposition is to be made of it, and therefore he should not be asked to contemplate what disposition the man to whom he is selling it, is going to make of it. A difficulty is involved there and I think the person selling the seed under such conditions should be free and that the man who afterwards cleans and grades it and disposes of it for seed should be made to bear the penalties that would follow from an infraction of the law.

Mr. SPROULE. I think you might insert after the word 'merchants' the words 'who are in the trade' and then hold the merchant responsible for it afterwards. The farmer could not be held responsible any longer.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It is not intended that he should be. The intent certainly is that after the farmer sells the seed to the merchant he shall not be liable to the penalties of the Act.

Mr. SPROULE. After he has sold it for the purpose of being cleaned and graded he cannot know whether it is to be cleaned and graded or not. After he sells it his interest ceases.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. If we were to sell it to a person who was going to sell it again in the condition it was in when he sold it he should not be relieved.

Mr. CLANCY. How would he know ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I see what the hon. gentleman means.

Mr. ROSS (Ontario). Section (b) would work against the trade. I did not recognize it until now. The hon. minister explained that the farmer might sell his seed to the merchant to be cleaned and graded, but how is he going to provide for this case ? Some of the farmers clean the seeds, and I know from experience, that it is very unsatisfactory to buy uncleaned seeds from the farmers. A farmer might not clean the seed as it would be required for sale, but he would take the dirt and chaff out, and it would then be a presentable grade. Suppose the farmer sells that seed to the merchant and the merchant does not intend to offer it for sale at his store, but intends to sell it to the wholesaler who has a cleaning apparatus and who will resell it, I think it should be made clear that they could handle that seed from the farmer to the merchant and the merchant to the wholesaler, who recleans. If the word 'or' was added in the 37th line it might meet that case. Perhaps three-fourths of the seed that is offered to the merchant is what we would call cleaned seed, but it might not come up to the requirements of this law.

Mr. CLANCY. He incurs no penalty in buying, but only when he goes to sell.

Mr. ROSS (Ontario). In nine cases out of ten he passes the seed through a machine, and then it all comes out one grade after going through a process of mixing.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. If there is any responsibility on the farmer who sells to a merchant, I would not care to have the section passed in that form. I can understand that a case of the kind mentioned by the hon. member for Ontario may arise where the retail merchant in the country was simply a go-between from the farmer to the wholesale seedman, and he perhaps ought not be subject to a penalty.

Mr. ROSS (Ontario). I agree with the amendment offered by the Minister of Agriculture. I think it is a wise amendment. The alsike season runs from August to November, and during the busy season it is an utter impossibility to prepare this seed for market and grade it properly.

Mr. BELL. It often occurs that a merchant may buy a carload of seed and that he will frequently turn that carload over without it being in his possession a day. It would be quite impossible for him to test the germinating quality of that seed.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I presume the merchant would buy a sample and have it tested.

Mr. BELL. It is absolutely impossible to test the sample in the busy part of the season.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. If the carload of seed was not opened, the person who sold it to the merchant would would be liable.

Mr. BELL. Suppose the seller lived in the United States.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. If the transaction occurred in Canada he would be liable

Mr. BELL. But many of these carloads of seed are ordered by wire.

Mr. ROSS (Ontario).

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think the importer, when he imports from outside of the country, would have to be liable for the seed.

Mr. BELL. It might happen that the importer would have no possibility of ascertaining the germinating quality of the seed.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. If we allow the importing to go on without placing any liability on the importer, it would defeat the whole object of the Bill. I have it from several men of experience that a good seedsman can tell by the eye the germinating qualities of some seeds about as well as if he had made a test. There are some seeds that you cannot tell by looking at them, but there are a great many that you can tell; and they would know by the sample where they bought their seed. They would also very largely trust to the reputation of the people from whom they bought. If they once caught any person in that way, they would not buy from him again, and they would make it so that he could not again sell seeds in this country. If we were to receive imported seeds in the way suggested, I do not think to jail, but that is all.

Mr. ROSS (Ontario). How is the hon. minister going to deal with the American or English seedsmen who send seeds into this country by mail? Sometimes they have an agent going through the country, taking orders, and the goods are delivered afterwards. The agent may not be a responsible person from whom any one could recover. Is there anything in this Bill taking care of that part of the business?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The condition of affairs which the hon. gentleman has pointed out is somewhat familiar to me. I think the seeds sold by mail are chiefly garden and vegetable seeds; I do not think any great quantity of agricultural seeds are sold in that way. There are certain seed houses in the United States which send out considerable quantities of package seeds. It has been suggested that they should be excluded from the operation of this Act, and perhaps the fact stated by the hon. gentleman is one reason why they should be excluded. We might, however, meet that difficulty in one of two ways. The pedlar of the seeds in this country might be required to make a domicile here and be responsible for all the importations of the seeds he sold. I grant that sometimes the pedlar would not be a responsible person, and that it would be hard to get anything out of him. But sometimes they are responsible; very often they are farmers. Another way in which we might deal with the matter, if it is found to be a sufficiently prevalent practice to justify it, would be to require that seeds sold in that way should be entered at some particular port, where samples would be taken, and where they would be liable to penalty or confiscation if not up to their grade. I confess that that is one of those difficulties which I have not quite solved in dealing with this measure.

Section allowed to stand.

On section 7,

Mr. MORIN. I think the words 'hard labour' should be struck out of this section. Suppose a man should buy ten pounds of seeds or sell ten pounds of seeds he would be sent to jail at hard labour. I would suggest that the penalty be according to the amount of seeds sold. If a man sold a thousand pounds, it might be right enough for him to pay the penalty of $10; but if he sold ten pounds, that penalty would be severe. In our district we have no such place as hard labour; we can send a man to jail, but that is all.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. This clause is taken, I think verbatim, from the General Inspection Act, and the penalties are the same as they are there. I suppose we might strike out the words 'hard labour' if that penalty is thought to be too hard. But that portion of the clause, and also the amount of the fine running from $100 down to $10, is supposed to be left to the discretion of the magistrate who imposes the sentence.

Mr. BELL. It seems to me that it is rather an excessive penalty to make the minimum fine for each offence $10. If a person sold half a dozen packages of vegetable seeds, he would be liable to pay a fine of $10 for each package sold. That would impose an enormously heavy penalty for what would be a trifling injury.

Mr. MONET. I believe that fraud is the same thing, whether the amount of seed sold be large or small. I believe that the clause as it reads is all right, except perhaps that it is a little too harsh for the first offence. This is a new Act, and I suppose that everybody who will come under its provisions will be guilty for the first time. Suppose a person should be prosecuted under this Act. Suppose he should be brought to a justice of the peace, who would be very severe upon him and sentence him for the whole amount of the penalty, $100. The man is unable to pay that. So he will have to be condemned to jail, with or without hard labour. If this was his first offence, I think that sentence would be found to be very hard upon him. I would suggest that for the first offence, the accused should be dealt with very leniently, as this will be a new law and should not be too rigorously administered in the beginning. Let the justice of the peace be as severe as possible in the case of second or third offences, but not in the case of a first offence.

Mr. MORIN. The hon. the minister has said that we would leave the penalty to the discretion of the justice of the peace. I am a justice of the peace myself and I would advise the hon. minister not to trust them too much because some of them will be inclined to give too hard a dose. Justices of the peace are sometimes very crusty and will go the full length the law allows, when there is no necessity for it. Better not leave the matter entirely in their hands.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Does my hon. friend suggest that we should make a fixed penalty for each offence and leave no discretion to the magistrate?

Mr. MORIN. I would do that if I were in the hon. minister's place.

Mr. MONET. I do not think it would be right to impose a fixed penalty, because there might be differences in the guilt of the accused. At the same time the margin is rather large—from $10 to $100. Why not say from $10 to $25 or from $10 to $50.

Mr. MORIN. Or reduce it to $5.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I will let that section stand.

Section allowed to stand.

The person on whose behalf any seed is sold, offered, exposed or had in possession for sale, contrary to the provisions of the foregoing sections of this Act, shall be prima facie liable for the violation of this Act.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). In what case shall he not be liable?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. If he proves that it was sold by an agent not authorized or who tampered with it, without his knowledge or order, he would escape liability. But if his clerk or storeman sold it, he would be liable prima facie, and he would have to prove that his employees had acted contrary to his orders or had intentionally deceived him.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If that be the intention, far better to say so.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It does say so practically.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I should not think so. You have statutes in which a man is held liable even without any intention to violate the law and others in which the intention is necessary. I suppose section 8 is in the latter category.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It is reproduced from the General Inspection Act.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would be inclined to make the same criticism on that. It is very easy to say 'shall be liable for a violation of this Act unless he shall prove that the person acting on his behalf did so against his express orders or direction.'

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think the section practically throws the onus of proof on the person in charge of the business, whose subordinate may have sold the goods. The onus of proof is thrown on the principal to show that he was not personally responsible or guilty. This is the form adopted in several other Acts.

Section agreed to.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I wish to move that the following subsection be added :—

Any person who sells seed by wholesale in sealed packages, sacks or bags, to a retail vendor, shall not be liable for such seeds after the seal has been broken, unless such seal has been broken and a sample for official test is taken and inclosed in the sealed package in the presence of two non-interested witnesses.

That is for the purpose of protecting the wholesale dealer.

Amendment agreed to, and section as amended, agreed to.

On section 9,

Mr. MORIN. I would like to ask the hon. minister what a man has to do when the seeds are on railway premises ? Suppose the seeds are in a locked car, will the officer have a right to break the lock open ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. He would have to appeal to the officer of the railway company, I imagine, to open the car, and if the officer refused, he would have authority under this to break open the car.

Mr. ROSS (Ontario). I suppose the officer of the department would carry his authority with him and be able to show it to anybody who required it ?

Mr. HENDERSON. Who is going to see to the enforcement of this law ? Is the government going to appoint officers all over the country ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There is no such intention.

Mr. HENDERSON. It says 'Any person charged with the enforcement of this Act.' There must be some person charged. Who will it be ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The present intention is that any officer of the department as at present constituted who may wish to take samples, or who may have reason to suspect that adulterated or impure seeds are being sold, will have authority to take samples.

Mr. HENDERSON. Does the hon. minister mean the department here in Ottawa ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes.

Mr. HENDERSON. Suppose a carload of seed in Vancouver that is suspected to be impure, and of which samples have to be taken, is an officer to be sent to Vancouver ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I hardly think so.

Mr. HENDERSON. That is a sample of the whole Bill—unworkable.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Not at all.

On section 10—samples to be sent to official seed analyst.

Mr. SPROULE. Is it proposed to appoint a special seed analyst ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have already an officer in the seed laboratory. This is a part of the work.

Mr. HENDERSON. If we are going to have the thorough investigation we expect, thousands and tens of thousands of samples will be coming from all over the country. The analyst, in that case, is not going to be able to do all the work.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. If samples come in in great numbers, we must increase the staff of the laboratory. But that will show how necessary and justifiable is the law.

Mr. MONET. Would it not be better to say plainly in the law to what inspector the seed shall be sent ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. They will be sent to the seed analyst.

Mr. MONET. Is he appointed ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. He is an officer of my department who is doing the work. But he would have to be appointed seed analyst by Order in Council. It says : 'Such person as the Governor in Council appoints as an official seed analyst.'

On section 11—sample to be taken in presence of sellers or two witnesses, certificate to accompany sample.

Mr. SPROULE. How will these samples be sent in, by post ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. Free ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes. The official seed analyst will be an officer of the department, and these would come to the department free under the Postal Act.

On section 12—samples to be sent within seven days.

Mr. SPROULE. Suppose samples are not sent within the proper time, would that relieve the person selling the seed from any liability under the Act or prosecution for damages ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not think it would free him from an action for damages, but it would free him from penalties under this Act. I think there is no doubt about that.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Mr. Fisher proposes to amend this section by adding to it the words 'in default whereof no prosecution shall lie with respect to such deeds.'

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That might cover the point raised by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule). I think it would be better to leave that out.

On section 14—certificates of analysis as evidence,

Mr. SPROULE. Ought the minister not make some specific provisions for sealing up and sending in the seed ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I propose to submit regulations and rules for the taking of these samples, and the provisions the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) refers to will be included in these. Section 18 allows for that.

On section 15,

Any pecuniary penalty imposed under this Act shall, on recovery be payable one-half to the informant or complainant, and the other half to His Majesty.

Mr. ROSS (Ontario). I think that is objectionable—that a man should be able to come into your house or store and be able to prosecute, half the fine going to him. I think the fine should all go to the Crown under the circumstances of this case. I think under all circumstances the fine should go to the Crown.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I may say that the seed merchants who have approached me on this Bill, have objected to this clause, and I am quite willing to strike it out.

On section 17,

Mr. CLANCY. Do I understand that there can be no appeal to the county judge in the province of Ontario ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am not familiar with the nomenclature of the different courts of the province of Ontario. This clause as well as the other clauses, in regard to legal proceedings, have been taken from the General Inspection Act, which I presume provided for the courts in the different provinces.

Mr. BARKER. In Ontario the appeals from magistrates are always to the county court judges.

Mr. MONET. In the province of Quebec we have both a superior and a circuit court, so if you do not mention the court to which appeal is to be taken, we shall not know where to go. I think we should determine that in Quebec the appeal should be brought before the circuit court, because if brought before a superior court, the amount of costs might be very large and the sum involved very small.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. If the committee would allow, I would ask that that clause be allowed to stand for the opinion of the Minister of Justice.

Progress reported.

ADJOURNMENT—RESIGNATION OF HON. MR. BLAIR—BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding) moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Before the House adjourns I would like to know what business we may expect for tomorrow. I would also like to know from the Minister of Finance whether he has any information to give to the House with respect to an intimation which is very current that the Minister of Railways (Hon. A. G. Blair) has tendered his resignation. It is openly stated, as my hon. friend is no doubt aware, throughout the corridors of the House, that such an event has taken place. If it is true that he has tendered his resignation, perhaps the hon. gentleman will be good enough to give the House any information he has.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. As to the latter part of my hon. friend's question, I have not had the pleasure of seeing either the Prime Minister or the Minister of Railways this evening, and I am afraid I am not in a position to give him any information as to the question he has asked. As to the business to be taken up to-morrow, we may be able to take one or two Bills on the Order Paper at an early stage, and then we will ask the House to go into Committee of Supply, resuming consideration of the estimates of the Department of the Interior.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I understand there are certain resolutions upon the Order Paper with regard to the bounties on iron and steel and the bounties on lead.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Neither of them will be taken up to-morrow.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Perhaps before to-morrow evening my hon. friend may be able to get into communication with the Prime Minister or the Minister of Railways I do not think there will be any great difficulty on the subject. I appreciate the fact that perhaps he has not been very anxious to meet them this evening, and under the circumstances I accept his explanation as the best he could offer.

Mr. WILSON. Before the House adjourns, I wish to give notice that on motion to go into supply to-morrow I will bring up the question of immigration, which I intend to discuss.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Do I understand my hon. friend to give notice of a motion, or merely of a discussion ?

Mr. WILSON. A discussion, which may be followed by a motion.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12.50 a.m., Tuesday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, July 14, 1903.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

OTTAWA VALLEY RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier) moved :

That portion of the twenty-fourth report of the Select Standing Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph lines reporting the preamble of Bill (No. 59) respecting the Ottawa Valley Railway Company not proven, be referred back to the said committee for further consideration.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Explain.

Mr. MONK. I wish to give some explanation in regard to this motion. These explanations are somewhat useless to those members of the Railway Committee who have attended the discussion of this Bill ; but I must give the explanation in order to enlighten the House and obtain the favour of this motion. The Ottawa Valley Railway Company was incorporated several years ago, somewhere in the seventies, I think or 'eighties, and began operations by constructing a line from Lachine to St. Andrews. It operated that line for a certain time, when the line was found not to be a paying one and the railway was subsequently transferred, I believe, under some agreement, to the secretary-treasurer of the municipality, who operated it for a certain time. The company applied this year to parliament for power to extend this line from St. Andrews down through the county of Argenteuil by St. Placide, St. Benoit and St. Eustache, crossing a part of the county of Laval and part of the county of Jacques Cartier into the city of Montreal. When the Bill, which was a very simple one—for the line of railway does not extend for more than about forty miles—came up for consideration, several objections were raised. One was that there was a previous charter in favour of another company. But the merit of that objection was not very long sustained. There was, in fact some time before confederation—in 1856, if I mistake not—an Act passed by the old province of Canada, which was subsequently amended in 1859—having reference to the Carillon and Grenville Railway Company, giving that company power to construct a line through the county of Argenteuil, thence to some point in the county of Jacques Cartier near Point Claire or Lachine. The objection based upon this charter was not discovered to be well founded for two reasons. In the first place, the charter has become obsolete. There is no doubt about that. The company organized when the late Sir John Abbott was a young man, and never prosecuted its work and had manifested no intention of carrying the line down in the direction of Montreal. Furthermore, what rights it might have were possessed by the Ottawa River Navigation Company, which had only availed itself of these rights in order to make the connection between Grenville and Carillon and enable the navigation company to overcome the obstacle in its route between Ottawa and Montreal offered by the Grenville rapids. I say that that objection was easily disposed of. Well, the line contemplated, even in 1859 or 1856, as the case may be, went in the direction of Pointe Claire, or in the direction of Lachine, and not at all along the line contemplated by the present statute, which was through St. Placide, St. Benoit, St. Eustache, across Rivière des Prairies, through the counties of Laval and Jacques Cartier, and into the city of Montreal itself. I will not further detain the House with that objection, which, as I understood, was disposed of at once.

A more serious objection was raised founded upon the Canadian Statutes of 1894. In these statutes, under chapter 63, is found an Act respecting the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway, and without going into details of that Act, it is sufficient to say, for the purpose of my present argument, that that Act sanctions an agreement entered into between what I may call the celebrated Atlantic and Lake Superior Railroad, and this very railway company, the Ottawa Valley Railway, and under the terms of that agreement, which is schedule D of the Act, chapter 63, of 57-58 Victoria, it would seem that the Ottawa Valley Railway Company had transferred all its rights, powers and franchises to the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway Company in order to form one of its lines. When that objection was raised I was not prepared to meet it, but delay was given in order that the matter could be looked into as to whether the Ottawa Valley Railway Company really existed any more. In the agreement there were various conditions. The Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway was to transfer, within a delay of sixty days to the Ottawa Valley Railway, as a condition of its acquisition by the first named railway, a certain amount of bonds, a certain amount of shares and a certain amount in cash; failing which transfer within sixty days the agreement, to use the very terms of the schedule, would be null and void, and of no effect. It therefore became important to know whether that part of the agreement had been carried out, failing which the whole agreement became null and void and ceased to be in any way an objection against obtaining the powers which we sought by this Act. Proof was given that the agreement had not been carried out, and that therefore it was null and void and could not be invoked against our present application. It is necessary for me to point out that the proof was very complete. It consists in a certificate of the secretary treasurer of the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway, a party to that agreement, and formulated in the present terms :

I hereby certify that the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway Company did not within the delays mentioned in the agreement entered into with the Ottawa Valley Railway Company, on April 16, 1884, or at any time since making any payment or tender of payment on account of the purchase price mentioned in said agreement, either in cash, shares or bonds or otherwise, nor has the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway Company ever claimed or had possession of said Ottawa Valley Railway or any part thereof.

Then there was a letter from the president of the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway to the Hon. J. P. B. Casgrain, who is the attorney of the trustees and of the bondholders of the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway. In a letter dated the 2nd of July instant, he writes as follows :

Dear Sir,—The question having arisen as to the title of the Ottawa Valley Railway, I am desirous of learning from you at the earliest possible moment whether the trustees which you represent intend to take any steps towards claiming possession of that line.

As you are aware, the line was purchased by this company in 1894, but the conditions of purchase were not carried out by this company and nothing has been paid to the Ottawa Valley Company. Our company has always wished to carry out its obligations but circumstances have prevented it from doing so. Possession has never been taken of the Ottawa Valley Line, and the principal holder of the bonds of the Atlantic and Lake Superior Company assures me that they have no intention of taking any steps towards claiming the property as he does not consider that under the circumstances such steps would in any way benefit the bondholders. If you do not intend to take immediate steps towards claiming possession, the company will do what is considered best in its interests by cancelling the agreement of purchase or as it may be advised. Yours truly,

J. R. THIBAUDEAU, President,
Atlantic & Lake Superior Railway Co.

On behalf of the Hon. J. P. B. Casgrain, on the 2nd of July, to the Hon. Mr. Thibaudeau, the following letter was sent :

Dear Sir,—We are instructed by the attorney and representative of trustees for the bondholders of the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway Company, to acknowledge receipt of your letter of this date, and to inform you that he has no instructions from the trustees to act in the matter of the Ottawa Valley Railway Company. Yours faihfully,

McGIBBON, CASGRAIN, RYAN & MITCHELL,
Acting for the trustees for the bondholders.

Mr. McMullen, I may mention, Mr. Speaker, is the president of the Ottawa Valley Railway Company, and on the 2nd of July instant, being in Montreal, he also wrote to the Hon. J. P. B. Casgrain, representative of the bondholders of the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway Company. These letters were addressed to the Hon. Mr. Casgrain, because he is at present the only representative of the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway Company, acting, as he does, for the bondholders. This letter says :

Dear Sir,—A statement having been made before the Railway Committee of the House of Commons that the Ottawa Valley Railway was the property of the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway Company, under virtue of the deed of agreement between the two companies ratified by the parliament of Canada in 1894, I wish to call your attention to the last clause of that agreement, which provides that the agreement shall be null and void if the purchase price was not paid within sixty days of the ratification of the agreement. No payment of any kind in shares, bonds or cash was ever made and the agreement became null and void and no possession was ever claimed by the Atlantic and Lake Superior Company.

The Ottawa Valley Railway Company would be pleased to transfer its line even now if the Atlantic Company were prepared to pay for it, but without such preliminary action you can well understand that neither the Atlantic and Lake Superior Company or its bondholders will be allowed to take possession or be in any way recognized as having any rights whatever in connection with this railway.

Yours truly,
EDGAR McMULLEN,
President, O. V. R. Co.

On the 2nd of July an answer was sent on behalf of the trustee for the bondholders in the following terms :

Montreal, July 2, 1903.

Edgar McMullen, Esq.,
President Ottawa Valley Railway Company,
Montreal.

Dear Sir,—We are instructed by the attorney and representative of the trustees for the bondholders of the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway Company to acknowledge receipt of your letter of this date and to inform you that he has no instructions from the trustees to act in the matter of the Ottawa Valley Railway Company.

We remain, faithfully yours,
McGIBBON, CASGRAIN, RYAN & MITCHELL.

This was more than sufficient to establish that this agreement entered into in 1894 by the Ottawa Valley Railway Company, or this offer, because it was only an offer practically, to transfer these assets and this franchise to the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway Company never had any force or effect. There could be no doubt about that anyway, because, upon the allegation made by us that the transfer was never carried into effect, that the cash was never paid, that the bonds or shares were never handed over it would have been the duty of the opponents of this measure to establish that the agreement invoked against us was in full force and effect. I need not pursue that point of the case any further because I consider that it is proved beyond doubt that this agreement is null and void and can have no effect as against the application we are now making to parliament for power to carry our line into the city of Montreal. There was another objection of a graver nature and that objection was that Mr. Armstrong, who has been connected with several railway enterprises and who does not seem to meet with the general favour of this House, was connected with this scheme. I will say this, and it seems to me to be a reasonable view, that unless one can establish that Mr. Armstrong is a dishonest man, his having been connected with a railway which had failed to succeed is not a sufficient objection for refusing a company with which he may happen to be connected any reasonable application, and there must be something beyond the mere question of Mr. Armstrong's personality to defeat a very ordinary Bill, such as this one, not a very important one, such as the one which it was my duty to place before the committee. However, I was very anxious to go fully into the other objection, and I obtained from the secretary of the company a list of the shareholders of the company of the date of June 9, 1903. The largest shareholder, I may say, out of the 1,200 shares of the company, is Mr. Edgar McMullen, of Boston, who owns 1,055 shares. Nothing could be alleged against that gentleman. He is connected with capitalists in Boston and New York. He has a very honourable career as a man who has gone through the civil war with great honour, and as to his financial ability nothing has been or could be alleged against him. Twenty shares are owned by Mr. C. M. Thompson, a financial man of New York, worth several hundred thousand dollars, as my instructions are. Twenty shares are owned by Mr. T. A. Richardson, of New York, another financial gentleman of weight, twenty shares by Mr. A. P. Stevens, of Albany, vice-president and manager of the First National Bank of that city. The other shareholders are Canadians. Mr. H. W. Raphael, of Montreal, is well known to hon. members of this House. He owns twenty shares. He is a very responsible man in every way, and a man worthy of the confidence of this House. Mr. Raphael is known no doubt to the right hon. leader of the government (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier), as one of his strongest supporters. Mr. Henry W. McLaren, manufacturer of belting, of Montreal, a responsible man, owns twenty shares, five shares stand in the name of the estate of A. C. Wurtele, Montreal, ten shares in the name of the estate of Robert Watson ,of Montreal, ten shares in the name of Mr. W. C. E. Phillips, Rimouski, five shares in the name of Mr. L. G. J. Fosbrook, Sorel, five shares in the name of Mr. Archibald Campbell, Montreal, and ten shares in the name of the Hon. J. R. Thibaudeau, Montreal. I produced a certificate before the committee in order to be able to show that the shares stood in the names of men against whom I do not think anything can be alleged. That objection, I take it, was met by the production of an authentic certificate from the secretary treasurer of the company. The objection was raised that $300,000 of bonds had been issued by the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway Company, and that might be a lien upon this road although I do not think that any lawyer would present such an argument. I do not think that objection was pressed very seriously, because, as a matter of fact, in the evidence which was adduced before the committee it was shown that this railway never in any sense formed part of the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway. The agreement of 1894 never went into effect. It was alleged, it is true, that a sworn return had been made by the Hon. J. R. Thibaudeau to the Railway Department, and that from that sworn return it appeared that this railway really did form part of the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway system, but as against that we have the letter of Mr. Thibaudeau himself dated July 2 last, from the context of which letter it appears very clearly that he must have given that return, sworn as it may be, through inadvertence, and that the agreement of 1894 never has been carried into effect because he says so in express terms in his letter in which he inquired from the Hon. J. P. B. Casgrain, the trustee for the bondholders, whether the agreement will be carried into effect. As a matter of fact it had become null and void by the lapse of time, sixty days having passed without the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway Company having carried out its part of the agreement. This railway is a very necessary one. It passes through the county of Argenteuil. It crosses that county from one end of it to the other, it traverses the county of Two Mountains from end to end, and it will be of very great benefit to the counties of Laval and Jacques Cartier. We are ready, as was stated before the committee, to put a clause into this Bill which is now under the consideration of this House to the effect that the works must be begun within a year and that they must be terminated within three years. We went even farther. The suggestion was made to me I think, I may say, by the hon. member for Argenteuil (Mr. Christie) that for greater security, for a further guarantee, a provision should be inserted to the effect that a fixed amount of money should be spent upon the works within the very year within which the works had been begun. Under these circumstances I do not think it is possible for parliament to refuse the legislation which the Ottawa Valley Railway Company is applying for. I may say that the Bill was defeated in the Railway

Committee by a vote of thirty-eight to thirty-four and it is my duty to say that the apparent connection of Mr. Armstrong with this measure was the sole and unique cause of its defeat in the committee. There was no other cause; because under no circumstances since I have been a member of this House has a Bill of that kind having so much merit in it been defeated. On the documents produced, Mr. Armstrong had nothing to do with the Bill whatever, but it was the idea that he was possibly behind the Bill and that he might have some remote interest in it, which caused its defeat. I will go further, and it is my duty to say it to this House, that the personal animosity existing between the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Hon. Mr. Préfontaine) and Mr. Armstrong was the sole cause of the defeat of the Bill. It was in my charge and I have here a mass of correspondence which I have had with Colonel McMullen, the president of the company. My hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Préfontaine) although a political opponent of mine, is not my enemy I hope; and I am not his. But the hon. minister is an enemy of Mr. Armstrong, and because he is an enemy of Mr. Armstrong I am bound to say that he seems to use his official position in order to defeat a measure of this kind which is of interest to the public, and which is promoted by men who have never done the slightest harm to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. These four counties are consequently to be deprived of the chance, because it is a chance, of having this railway. I cannot vouch that the railway will be built or will be begun within a year, but on account of this personal animosity and in order to gratify it against Mr. Armstrong, the minister deprives these four counties of the chance of having the railway. Now, my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Préfontaine) knows that for years he was a personal friend of Mr. Armstrong. They have fallen out. I do not pretend to judge who is right or who is wrong, but until two years ago they were friends. They have had lawsuits, they have had difficulties, and they are at loggerheads now. But the Minister of Marine and Fisheries was for a long time closely connected with Mr. Armstrong in the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway Company and was a director of that company if I mistake not, and they were advancing together the interests of that company which to-day my hon. friend invokes against my application and against my Bill. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries and Mr. Armstrong were closely linked in promoting the Montreal Bridge Company as well as the Great Northern Railway Company, the Great Eastern Railway Company, the Montreal and Sorel Railway Company. I might go very much further upon this theme, but I do not wish to do so, because I do not wish more than is necessary to take up the time of this House, but I appeal to the members of this House and I ask: is it fair, under these circumstances, and in view of all the restrictions with which we have offered to surround this Bill—offering extraordinary guarantees that are not required in any other Bill and appearing as if instead of being straightforward men to be open to every kind of suspicion—is it fair under these circumstances that we should be deprived of reaping the advantage of all we have done in this matter. The committee was not a very large one this morning and I would like to have an opportunity of laying once more before that committee the merits of this application. My hon. friends who were present know that I represent the county of Jacques Cartier and supported this Bill. My hon. friend from Two Mountains (Mr. Ethier) on a previous occasion declared himself publicly to be in favour of this Bill with the restrictions which I think it is quite proper to impose. My hon. friend from Argenteuil (Mr. Christie) has met the Bill in a fair spirit. If at the end of the year nothing is done, the existence of the Act will probably induce other people to come forward and to begin the construction of this road which is absolutely necessary for that part of the country.

Mr. CHARLES MARCIL (Bonaventure). I deem it proper to explain why I took objection to this Bill from the very beginning. I find in the annual report of the Department of Railways and Canals the statement that the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway comprises the Baie des Chaleurs Railway; the Montreal Bridge Company; the Great Eastern Railway; and the Ottawa Valley Railway Company. The Baie des Chaleurs Railway runs through my constituency, and its history is familiar to this House, familiar to this country and more especially to the electors whom I have the honour to represent. The scandalous transactions in connection with the Baie des Chaleurs Railway in the past are too numerous to be rehearsed now. The Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway is merely a new name for the old concern. There is at the present time as far as we can ascertain, some $300,000 due to the people of Bonaventure, both Conservatives and Liberals, for right of way, labour and material supplied, and this money is due to poor people for the most part. When I saw that an application was made to this House to revive the Ottawa Valley charter which is comprised in this Atlantic and Lake Superior scheme, I thought it was my duty to my constituents to see that this Ottawa Valley line was not taken out of the Atlantic and Lake Superior system and put into another corporation, for the reason that the claims which the people of Bonaventure have are against the entire Atlantic and Lake Superior system which, as I have stated, comprised originally the Baie des Chaleurs section, the Great Eastern Railway section, the Montreal Bridge section, and the Ottawa Valley section; the whole forming links in a chain of railway which was to extend from Gaspé Basin to Sault Ste. Marie. The charter has lapsed; this House has refused with full knowledge to revive the charter of the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway Company. These debts remain unpaid and now an attempt is made to take out portions of this road, to give it new life, to turn it into an electric railway and to give it an entrance into the city of Montreal. The arguments advanced to the House by the member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) have been laid before the committee by him on two occasions. To-day, seventy-two members were present in the committee when the vote was taken, and by yeas and nays the majority declared that the case presented for this application was not a favourable one. I protest in my own name and in the name of the people I represent against the taking of the Ottawa Valley section out of the Atlantic and Lake Superior system until that concern has satisfied the legitimate debts which are due to my constituents. As long as this official report of the Railways and Canals Department of Canada shows that the Ottawa Valley section remains a portion of the Atlantic and Lake Superior system, no letter from Mr. Globensky, the secretary of the Ottawa Valley Company, and no letter from Senator Thibaudeau of the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway Company has weight against the official document which is in possession of members of this House.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure). So far as Mr. Armstrong is concerned, I may say that if I were to undertake to sketch before this House his doings in the county of Bonaventure, I would occupy most of the afternoon. But I consider that above him I owe a duty to my county, and it was for that reason that I took the stand which I did, and which I was glad to see ratified by the majority of the Railway Committee.

Mr. J. E. LEONARD (Laval.) (Translation). Mr. Speaker, having been detained in Montreal on professional business, I was unable to attend this morning's meeting of the Railway Committee, and consequently take part in the debate on the Bill which has just been reported by that committee, a Bill in which the constituency I represent is greatly interested.

I do not understand why my hon. friend from Bonaventure (Mr. Marcil), whose county, situated hundreds of miles away from Montreal, has interests totally foreign to those of the counties crossed by the projected line, should so oppose the Bill. I am always surprised to find how the members from the province of Quebec are lacking in spirit of co-operation which is found elsewhere, especially among the members from the western provinces. When their general interests are at stake, you will generally find these gentlemen from the west working together; while we, members from Quebec, are always at daggers-drawn. What has my hon. friend from Bonaventure to do with this question? We are here four members representing the constituencies interested in that road; two are supporters of the government, and two are members of the opposition. Out of the four, three are favourable to the road; as I feel confident that the hon. member for Argenteuil (Mr. Christie) is in its favour. Why should the name of Mr. Armstrong be mixed in this matter? We are cognizant of the ill-feeling which exists between that gentleman and the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Préfontaine) and the member for Bonaventure, but we have nothing to say to that. All that we ask is that the counties which we represent should have greater railway facilities with Montreal. That Bill, which is a private one and concerns the four counties I have just mentioned should be dealt with as all other such Bills, provided its object be considered just and reasonable. We are not asking favours from the government; we are not applying for a grant; no, all we ask is that these counties be dealt with in the same way as other counties throughout Canada, that they be not placed under a disadvantage. We represent these counties, we are competent to judge of their needs. After thoroughly going into the matter, we are in a position to say to the House and to the government that this railroad is needed. Does our application interfere with any vested rights? No. Then, it seems that it should be granted, whatever our political leanings. Because we are members of the opposition is not sufficient reason why we should not be treated in the same way as other members of the House.

The counties of Argenteuil, Two Mountains, Jacques Cartier and Laval are the richest in the province of Quebec; nevertheless, they are without railway communication with the commercial metropolis of Canada. When residents of those counties have to go to Montreal, to sell their produce on the markets of that city, they are compelled to drive distances of 25, 30 or even 40 miles. Is not that an abnormal position and greatly to the disadvantage of those people? It matters little whether this Bill is introduced by a supporter or by an opponent of the government; it matters little that among the promoters there should be personal enemies of some members on the other side of the House; if the reasons urged in its favour are good, all other considerations should be put aside.

Let the strictest terms be laid down for the purpose of protecting the road against any design on the part of schemers; let the Railway Committee, by a hard and fast rule make it impossible for the charter to be sold, and I for one shall not object in the least. I fail to see how, under the circumstances, the application of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) that the Bill be referred back to the Railway Committee for further consideration, could be refused.

Before taking my seat, Mr. Speaker, let me appeal to all my hon. colleagues from the province of Quebec, on both sides of the House, and urge them to show as much independence as the members from the west when the interests of their region are at stake, for which I praise them. When there is a Bill before the House of interest to the western country, these members do not mind the government; they think only of promoting the interests of the country they represent. I therefore appeal to my hon. colleagues from the province of Quebec and I request them to follow the example of the western members. I can assure them in perfect frankness that this Bill does not interfere in any way with vested rights and that it is worthy of their support. This Bill will give satisfaction to residents in the four counties which I mentioned, two of which are represented by Liberals and two by Conservatives. These counties, I insist on that point, are entitled to a fair treatment and to be put on the same footing as the other counties in Canada. For these reasons, I hope that the motion asking that the Bill be referred back to the Railway Committee be agreed to by this House.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Hon. Raymond Préfontaine). There were more than sentimental reasons which guided the committee this morning in deciding as it did on this measure. There are legal objections which in my mind are fatal to the Bill. The first objection is this, that by 55-56 Victoria, chapter 54, the Ottawa Valley Railway Company was incorporated. Under the general Railway Act the company had two years within which to commence its operations and seven years to finish them. This time has expired, and only seven miles of the railway are built, between St. Andrews and Lachute. These seven miles are not in operation, but quite the contrary ; they have been stripped of the rails, and there is only the roadbed left. The first section of that Act of incorporation gives the names of the incorporators : Charles N. Armstrong, W. C. E. Phillips, Robert Watson, Archibald Campbell and A. C. Wurtele. These gentlemen were constituted a company to construct the road. Section 3 provided :

> The company may lay out, construct and operate a railway of the gauge of four feet eight and one-half inches from St. Andrews to Carillon, and from Grenville to a point at or near Calumet on the Canadian Pacific Railway, and the undertaking hereby authorized is declared to be a work for the general advantage of Canada.

It is clearly shown by this Act that the construction of this railway was purely and simply a local matter. It is a piece of railway situated entirely in the province of Quebec, and mostly in the county of Argenteuil. As I have stated, seven miles of the railway were built between St. Andrews and Lachute, with money received from the parish of St. Andrews, $10,000, and subsidies received from the provincial government and the federal government. In 1894 an Act was passed by this parliament, 57-58 Victoria, chapter 63, by which an agreement entered into between the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway Company with the Ottawa Valley Railway Company, by which all the rights and privileges of the Ottawa Valley Railway Company were transferred to the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway Company, was ratified by parliament. Section 2 of that Act provides :

> The agreements made and entered into by the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway Company, for the purchase or lease of the Baie des Chaleurs Railway, the Great Eastern Railway, the Ottawa Valley Railway, and the Montreal bridge, and which are set out in the schedules to this Act, are hereby confirmed and made valid, so far as the respective parties thereto are concerned, and shall in all courts and places be taken and be held to be legal, valid and binding in all respects whatsoever upon the respective parties thereto.

The agreement is incorporated in the Act as schedule D. So that by that Act the Ottawa Valley Railway Company ceased to exist. It would have ceased to exist according to the general Railway Act in seven years after incorporation, that is to say, in 1899. Well, what was to be done ? If these gentlemen who bought out the rights of Mr. Armstrong had really intended to construct this railway it would have been very easy for them to have asked for a new Act or an Act to revive the Act of 1892. They are not doing that by this Bill—quite the contrary. They assume by the Bill which was thrown out by the committee this morning that the Ottawa Valley Railway Company is still in existence. They assume, therefore, that they can go on and build. By the first clause of the Bill it is clearly shown what their intention is :

> The Ottawa Valley Railway Company, hereinafter called 'the company,' may extend its line from St. Andrews to the city of Montreal, passing through the counties of Argenteuil, Two Mountains, Laval and Jacques Cartier ; and may also build branch lines to St. Côme and to connect with the Canada Atlantic Railway.

It may be asked, what is the reason that, instead of asking for an Act to revive the charter of 1892, they have proceeded in this way ? The reason is very clear. It is this, that by the original Act, 55-56 Victoria, Chapter 54, the Ottawa Valley Railway Company was authorized to buy the Atlantic and Lake Superior Company, and instead of that, it was the Atlantic and Lake Superior Company that bought the Ottawa Valley Railway Company so that by assuming to keep this charter in force, they make it appear that the Ottawa Valley Railway Company will buy the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway Company. These facts seem extraordinary, but they are not extraordinary to anybody who knows anything about Mr. C. N. Armstrong, who is the mainspring of this fake charter. It is not stated in the Bill where the railway is going to run except in a general way. All that is given is the indefinite information that it is to run through these counties. But everybody knows well that the counties of Argenteuil, Jacques Cartier, Two Mountains and Laval are provided with railways. Of course there is not a railway through every parish, but traversing these counties are the Canadian Pacific Railway, Canada Atlantic Railway, Great Northern and the Union Jacques Cartier. Besides these, there are electric roads to Montreal from points nearest that city, such as the county of Jacques Cartier. These reasons no doubt had some weight in the opinion of the committee this morning, since it rejected the Bill. But my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) says that the agreement of 1894 was never carried out, and he bases that statement on a certificate to that effect by Mr. Globensky. Well, whether it was carried out or not is a legal question, which, in the opinion of the committee, will have to be decided by the courts. What we have before us is the fact that in the reports of the railway department since 1894, the Ottawa Valley Railway has always been considered as having been merged in the Atlantic and Lake Superior system, and the proof of that is the sworn declaration made year after year by the Hon. J. R. Thibaudeau, president of the Atlantic and Lake Superior Company. Against this evidence we have only this certificate of Mr. Globensky. Such a certificate is not the best proof. Surely there should be minutes of the meetings of the board of directors of this Ottawa Valley Railway Company, surely there should be some documents to show that they put the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway Company into default to carry out the agreement stipulated in the statute 57-58 Victoria. But no such proof has been produced before the committee. For these two reasons, this Bill has no legal standing before the House. Such was the decision of the Railway Committee this morning. You cannot take away the rights of the Atlantic and Lake Superior Company to this property, nor can you take away the rights of its creditors. Since 1894 the Atlantic and Lake Superior Company have issued bonds on which certain people have advanced money. These people have not been paid, and a part of their security consists in this privilege of continuing this piece of road and in the seven miles constructed. They are also a guarantee to the creditors who are not bondholders. It is well known that there are in the hands of the Railway and Canals Department at present outstanding claims by labourers, boarding-house keepers, contractors, &c., to the amount of $300,000 against this company. How could it be possible, after the Atlantic and Lake Superior Company have bought this Ottawa Valley Railway Company and issued bonds on that part of the road and contracted debts—how could it be possible for parliament to take away this Ottawa Valley Railway from the system of the Atlantic and Lake Superior, constitute it an independent company, and give it the right to buy back the Atlantic and Lake Superior ? Under the circumstances, there is no cause at all for complaint. If the gentlemen interested in building a railway in that part of the country want to get a charter, it is easier for them to get it by coming to this House than by going to Mr. Armstrong and buying his pretended rights.

As regards Mr. McMullen, I have nothing to say against him, but he has told me that he bought out the rights of Mr. Armstrong, conditionally on a charter being granted, so that Mr. McMullen will not pay anything, because the shares which he has got are worth nothing. But if he wants a charter himself, all he has to do is to make a regular application just as anybody else would do. Reference has been made to my relations with Mr. Armstrong. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier has said that I have been Mr. Armstrong's intimate friend. I beg to deny that in toto, unless you would call an intimate friend a man who tries to ruin you. I, however, am not disposed to call an intimate friend a man who takes my money and will not pay it back. My connection with Mr. Armstrong consists in this, that I was dragged into endorsing a paper for railway enterprises in which he was interested, and beginning with $1,000 and $2,000, I got dragged into the extent of over $[illegible],000.

Mr. MONK. How much did he lose with the hon. minister ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. He could never lose anything. He never had a cent to lose in his life. To my knowledge he has judgments against him to the extent of $900,000. He is a very clever man, who can fool men who consider themselves more clever than they are, and he has taken in many people in that way. I am one of his victims, and I am still trying to recoup myself some $25,000 or $26,000 due me by him.

Mr. BENNETT. Give him a contract.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The connection I have with him is due simply to what I have said and I do not want to have anything more to do with him. I wish I had never had anything to do with him, and a great many people are in the same position. The people of the Baie Des Chaleurs and the south shore of the St. Lawrence wish they had never anything to do with him and his fake enterprises.

Mr. MONK. How about the South Shore?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. What does the hon. gentleman mean? He had nothing to do with the South Shore. He had something to do with the Montreal and Sorel Railway. He built that railway with subsidies from both governments and money borrowed in England, and never paid anybody. That railway was finally sold by the sheriff. I had nothing to do with it except to try and get the farmers paid for the land he had taken from them to make farm crossings. That Montreal and Sorel line was bought by the South Shore Railway Company, in which company I was not even a shareholder. So I do not know what the hon. gentleman wishes the House to infer when he speaks about the South Shore. That is a railway from which I am trying now to collect legitimate debts for which I have a judgment. For these reasons, and not at all because Mr. Armstrong is connected with it—though that would be sufficient, but the other reasons are stronger than that—I think the House will stand by the decision of the committee.

House divided on motion of Mr. Monk.

FISHERIES ACT AMENDMENT.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Hon. Raymond Préfontaine) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 224) to amend the Fisheries Act.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Will the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Préfontaine) be good enough to state briefly the purport of the Bill?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The Bill has three purposes. The first is to allow the use of explosives in the killing of whales and animals of that kind; the second to provide that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries shall be authorized to license the use of purse seines in the waters of the Pacific ocean; and the third to allow, by Order in Council, the use of trap-nets. This is the result of the work of a commission which was appointed a year or so ago.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Has the report of the commission to which the hon. minister referred been laid on the Table and printed?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It has never been laid on the Table. It is simply information for the department, collected from the different members from British Columbia.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is it the intention of the hon. minister to lay the report on the Table in order that we may be informed as to the nature of the suggestions made ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I suppose—yes, I will.

Mr. E. B. OSLER (West Toronto). As the minister proposes to bring in a Bill regarding fisheries, I would draw his attention to the fact that under the present system of licensing, salmon fishing in the rivers of Quebec and New Brunswick is practically being destroyed. This government is spending large sums of money every year for the purpose of increasing the fish in these rivers and protecting them. As a matter of fact, as the law stands, fish are decreasing in these rivers year after year. I can speak from my own experience, and I know it is the experience of all those who fish, that there is no salmon caught in the Restigouche, or in many other of the eastern rivers, that is not damaged by having his back fin practically cut off. Nine out of ten of the fish are so damaged as to show they have struggled to get through the nets and have been torn in getting through. If the government would do away with the fish-breeding altogether and take a little advice as to how these rivers should be protected, there would be more fish in those rivers ten times over, yes, fifty times over, than there are now. The nets, as I understand it, ought to be taken up over Sunday. As a matter of fact, they are not taken up. The nets in the mouth of the Restigouche are weighted nets, which, as I understand, is against the law; and they are not taken up from weeks' end to weeks' end. No salmon comes up that river without being damaged to such an extent that it is a melancholy thing to see a fish caught there by the fishermen who pay so much for the privilege of fishing and spend so much money in that district. If the government would investigate and have a report as to the condition of the sporting rivers, they would make a very material alteration in the licenses.

Mr. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Gaspé). Probably the hon. gentleman (Mr. Osler) is not aware that, so far as the province of Quebec at least is concerned, and I think the same is true of the other provinces, the salmon fisheries have been under the control of the provincial government since the judgment of the Privy Council. As regards the salmon fishery in the province of Quebec, and the New Brunswick and Gaspé Peninsula, the fish are better protected than ever before. The number of licenses has been decreased, and I must say that, through the great care of the commissioner of lands, forests and fisheries of the province of Quebec, the salmon fishery is becoming more and more important, because the fish are better protected and the license fees are higher. I have the honour to represent a county where salmon is plentiful, and perhaps the best in the world, notwithstanding what may be said by our friends from British Columbia, yet I have not previously heard it said that the salmon fishery is not increased and is not better protected than ever before.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

RESIGNATION OF THE HON. MR. BLAIR.

On the Orders of the Day being called,

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I have to inform the House that the Hon. Mr. Blair has tendered his resignation as a member of the cabinet and Minister of Railways, and that His Excellency the Governor General, who has been acquainted with the facts, has been pleased to accept his resignation. The ministerial explanations which are usually given in such cases will probably be given on Thursday next.

HON. MR. CHAMBERLAIN AND THE MILITIA ACT.

Mr. A. C. BELL (Pictou). Before the Orders of the Day are proceeded with, I would like to have the attention of the right hon. gentleman. I see by a special to the Montreal 'Herald' from London, this statement :

> Hon. Mr. Chamberlain has been invited by the Canadian government to discuss certain proposed amendments to the Canadian Militia Act. It is understood that these deal with the subject of appointing a Canadian commanding officer.

Might I ask the right hon. gentleman if he can confirm this statement, or if he has anything to say with reference to it ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Hon. Sir Frederick Borden). In answer to the hon. gentleman, I have to say that a short time ago the Hon. Mr. Chamberlain intimated that as he understood a militia Bill was to be put through the House, he would be glad if the Minister of Militia could, after the close of the present session, go to England and discuss the matter with him and with the Secretary of State for War. The First Minister has intimated his willingness that that should be done.

PRIVILEGE—THE COUNTY OF ELGIN AND THE REDISTRIBUTION.

Mr. A. B. INGRAM (East Elgin). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I rise to a question of privilege. The 'Globe' of Saturday last, July 11, 1903, contains the following report concerning the 'Division of Elgin' :

> There were four propositions before the committee with regard to Elgin. One proposition was to put St. Thomas as a whole in West Elgin; a second to divide it by the London and Port Stanley Railway east and west; the third to divide the city by the Michigan Central Railway, and last night Mr. Ingram proposed that the township of Yarmouth be divided by the Talbot road, running directly north of the city, leaving St. Thomas in the east and transferring North Dorchester, North Yarmouth, Southwold, Dunwich and Aldboro'. Mr. Ingram opposed the adoption of the provincial boundaries, on the ground that there would be too great an inequality in the population.

Ultimately the provincial boundaries were adopted, St. Thomas being placed in West Elgin. Mr. Borden reserved his right to move an amendment.

I desire to correct this report, and to say I did not propose or originate any of the propositions contained in this report of the 'Globe,' nor did any Conservative, so far as I know. And I am satisfied that the statement in the said article as to the origin of the propositions is without any foundation whatever.

STEAMBOAT INSPECTION.

House in committee on the following proposed resolution :

Resolved, That it is expedient to amend the Steamboat Inspection Act, to make provision for the abrogation of Steamboat Inspection Fees and Dues ; and for the better regulation of yachts propelled by gas, fluid, naphtha, or electric motors.—The Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Hon. Raymond Préfontaine). The resolution is clear in itself. The Bill founded on the resolution, though important, does not make any radical changes. As the committee is aware, the House decided early in the session to abolish the inspection fees, and in order to conform to that decision it has been found necessary to amend the Inspection Act, so as to make the abolition legal, otherwise, according to the statute, these inspection fees and dues are obligatory and must be paid, for the Governor in Council has no power to remit them. It is provided in the Bill that they can be reimposed by Order in Council, if at any time it is thought proper to do so. It will be remembered that the House at the same time abolished the tolls on canals for two years and at the same time abolished inspection fees and dues. The government do not intend to extend the operation of the Bill longer than two years. Section 3 of the Bill provides that section 3 of the Steamboat Inspection Act, 1898, is repealed. The part which is affected is found at the latter end of the section :

And no vessel propelled by gas, fluid, naphtha or electric motors shall be subject to any of the provisions of this Act, provided however that if any such steam yacht or any such vessel propelled by gas, fluid, naphtha or electric motors is over three tons gross tonnage; the obligation to carry one life buoy and to take the precautions against fire and to carry a life preserver for each person on board, hereinafter imposed upon all steamboats, shall be imposed; provided always that if any of the vessels mentioned in this section carries passengers for hire or remuneration of any kind, such vessels shall be deemed to be passenger steamboats for the time being and shall be subject to all the provisions of this Act.

Mr. SPROULE. What was the tonnage the hon. member mentioned ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Three tons. There is a new section introduced here, section 3 :

The Governor in Council may direct that this Act or certain provisions thereof shall apply to, or shall not apply to, any steamboat or class of steamboats registered elsewhere than in Canada, and may fix a rate or duty to be paid for the inspection of such steamboat or class of steamboats :—

(b) Provided, however, that when satisfactory evidence has been produced that no steamboat inspection fee or tax is levied on Canadian steam vessels trading to or from any country outside of Canada, the Governor in Council may direct that no steamboat inspection fee or tax be levied on steam vessels of such country going to and from Canada ;

(c) And it is further provided, that when satisfactory evidence has been produced that any country outside of Canada has steamboat inspection laws approximating the steamboat inspection law of Canada, and the steamboats of such country having unexpired certificates of inspection issued by the proper authorities of such country, the Governor in Council may direct that they shall be subject to no other inspection than may be necessary to satisfy the Canadian inspectors that the condition of the steamboat, her boilers, machinery and life-saving equipment are as stated in the current certificate of inspection ; but no such certificate of inspection shall be accepted as valid in Canada, except when held by steamboats of a country which has by its laws accorded to the steamboats of Canada going to and from such country the same privileges as is hereby accorded to steamboats of such country.

I suppose hon. members of the committee understand the question. This is to provide that there shall be no inspection in Canada of boats coming from a country which exacts no inspection of our boats. This matter has been reported to the department by vessel owners especially on the great lakes. Sometimes they have been asked to pay fees twice for the inspection of their boats. They were obliged by the United States, as they carried passengers to the United States, to pay inspection fees because we were charging American boats inspection fees. It has been agreed that if we charge no fees they will charge no fees.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The Americans charge no fees for inspection.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Well then we will not charge any.

Mr. SPROULE. I may say perhaps it is not apropos of this subject—that I had a long letter some time ago from a friend who lives near the Soo. He says that as a result of the regulations under which American vessels are admitted into Canada the Soo canal is practically strewn with the wrecks of old worn out hulks that are of no use and that are now only an obstruction to navigation. That ought not to be allowed. After a boat is practically worn out in the United States it is brought in here. I do not remember upon what ground he said these boats are brought in—it is used for a short time in Canada and then becomes completely disabled. Along the Canadian shore and sometimes in the channel these disabled boats are found to the great danger of navigation in that part of the country. In regard to inspection, I had a memorial recommending that there should be no inspection of boats that were below five tons. I see the hon. minister is putting it at three tons. That will be more favourable to the requirements of the public.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like to ask what is the exact meaning of the latter part of the resolution :

And for the better regulation of yachts propelled by gas, fluid, naphtha or electric motors.

Is it the intention to exempt them altogether from the operation of the Steamboat Inspection Act ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Under three tons.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). And in case they are not carriers of passengers ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes. They are obliged to carry life saving apparatus.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). They are at present ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Under the new law.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I did not quite gather from the hon. minister what provisions of the Steamboat Inspection Act would be applicable to yachts of less than three tons. I am under the impression that there has been some representation made by qualified engineers in regard to the effect of this proposed amendment of the law, and I would like to ascertain what the exact operation of the law will be when the proposed Bill is passed.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That will come under the next resolution.

Resolution reported, read the first and second time, and agreed to.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 225) to amend the Steamboat Inspection Act.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

CERTIFICATES TO MASTERS AND MATES OF SHIPS.

House in committee on the following proposed resolution :

Mr. SPROULE.

Resolved, That it is expedient to further amend the Act respecting Certificates to Masters and Mates of Ships, by making provision for a new Certificate called a 'Home Trade Certificate ;' and to otherwise amend the said Act.—The Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Hon Raymond Préfontaine). The whole of this Bill is new. There are only two changes made in the existing law by this amending Bill, namely : (1.) The introduction of a certificate for a 'Home Trade Voyages' the limits of a 'Coasting Trade Voyage' will not be changed by this Bill, but will be as wide as they were before this Bill becomes law. The extent of the home trade voyages is limited to the voyages along the eastern and western coasts of Canada. For instance, a Canadian home trade certificate would not allow a man to go to the West India Islands or South America, or to any port in the United States further south than the harbour of Portland, Maine, whereas, the now existing coast certificates allow a man to go to the West Indies or any port in the United States, either eastern or western, and, therefore, permits a vessel to go around the Horn from Halifax to Vancouver, or from Halifax to San Francisco. This Bill purely and simply amends the existing law so as to provide for the issue of this new certificate, and for the limits of a home trade voyage.

In the fourth section the provision of the existing law granting temporary certificates for the current season to a master to take charge of a steamer of ten tons has been altered so as to allow him to take charge of a steamer of twenty tons. This has been found necessary to meet the growing wants of the outlying territories, such as the North-west, Manitoba and part of British Columbia, where the carriage of freight is of supreme importance to the settlements, and where ordinary certificated masters will not serve, as the venturer could not pay them the wages they required. It is in the interest of these supplements to give a resident of the place who ventures his money in building a steamer to accommodate the traffic authority to take command of his vessel, provided he satisfies the examiner that he is quite competent to do so on the route over which he wants to ply. These are the only two points affected by this Bill. These amendments, the last one especially, have been asked by the people of the west.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is the home trade certificate granted for length of service or after examination, or both ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. After examination of course.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Does it depend to any extent on length of service ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The examination will remain the same or new regulations will have to be made, for this is in order not to exact the same qualifications for the home trade voyage as is expected for coasting voyages.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is this based on any legislation to be found in England or elsewhere ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I cannot state. The suggestion has come from the shipping and fishing interests.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). The regulations require for first-class certificates for foreign voyages ; six years sailing from a port in Canada. I knew of the case of a young man who went from New Zealand home as first mate. He came to Halifax to take charge of a ship to go out to New Zealand, but he would not be allowed to pass the examination because he was not sailing for six years out of a port in the Dominion. That regulation, I think, is still in existence.

Mr. SCOTT. I have been asked by the hon. gentleman from Selkirk (Mr. McCreary) who is unavoidably absent to-day, to bring to the attention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries a protest which has been addressed by a Manitoba gentleman who is engaged in the fishing trade on Lake Winnipeg. This gentleman writes to the member for Selkirk with regard to engineers' certificates, in the issue of which it is proposed to make a change. He says :

It does seem to me absurd that a fish-tug such as we have running, about five horse-power, should be compelled to carry a licensed engineer while a yacht with three times as much power, and three times as many valuable lives on her can go free or run without a licensed engineer. Those tugs have no one but fishermen on them, they carry no passengers, and as far as the steamboat interests here are concerned we would like to have the law left as it is, till we have an opportunity to look into it. We find it very difficult at present to conduct our business ; engineers have to be imported here every year, we have only about three months work, and to import an engineer every year for three months work will cost us about $300 per month. All that expense tacked on to a little fish-tug will simply make the running of fish-tugs in this country prohibitory. When I say $300 a month I know what I am saying. We have an engineer here from the east now ; we pay him $900 for the season. Few of the fish-tugs run more than two months and a-half. The license to fish runs out on 1st September, and as you know we do not get started to fish till well on in June.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 226) to amend the Act respecting certificates to masters and mates of ships.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

SUPPLY—IMMIGRATION.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton) moved that the House again go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. URIAH WILSON (Lennox). Mr. Speaker, before you leave the Chair I wish to call the attention of the House to a subject which I think is of very great importance to this country. It is not that we on this side of the House are opposed to immigration, because we would be very glad to see coming here a very much larger number of immigrants than we are getting at present provided they were of the right class ; but, what we do object to is that the government has not been particular enough in examining the kind of people they allow to come to this country. If I may be pardoned for referring to a statement made by the Minister of Agriculture the other night, I may say that my eyes were opened as never before to the system under which immigrants are allowed to come here. I was under the impression that these immigrants were inspected before they were allowed to land on our shores, but the Minister of Agriculture stated that his officers took no notice of what he called these smaller diseases such as trachoma, and that the only diseases which come under the attention of his department were such as small-pox and fever. If the ship reported a clean bill of health she was allowed to go through, no matter whether the immigrants were paupers, or criminals, or were suffering from disease generally. I was greatly astonished when I read the last report of the immigration commissioner at Washington wherein he referred in very strong terms to the kind of people we are allowing to come into this country. He showed that it was impossible for the Americans to keep them out of the United States without placing a numerous staff along the border. They first commenced by opening an office in Montreal which had control from Sault Ste. Marie to some port in Maine, but they found that was not sufficient and last December they had to appoint an inspector at Winnipeg, and last April they extended their system to Vancouver, because they found that a very undesirable class of immigrants were getting into the United States through what they called the back door of Canada. My attention was called to the report of the Immigration Department of the United States with reference to the number of immigrants that landed at the port of Quebec during the month of May. There were 2,627 who were, I suppose intended for the United States, and of these 2,584 were passed and forty-three detained. As I did not understand what 'detained' meant, I thought I would try and get the information by putting the following questions on the notice paper, which I did on the 24th of June :

1. How many immigrants arrived at the port of Quebec during the month of May, 1903 ?
2. How many were rejected by the medical inspecting officer of the government ?
3. What became of those so rejected ?

Mr. Sutherland answered for the Minister of the Interior, as follows :

|---|---|
| 1. For Canada.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 13,057 |
| For the United States.. .. .. .. | 2,646 |
| Total.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 15,703 |

2. Six—five destined for Canada and one for the United States.
3. All deported to countries whence they came.

I was not satisfied with that answer, because I did not think it satisfactorily disposed of the 43 who were detained. So I took the liberty of writing a letter to Dr. W. C. Billings, the medical health inspector at the port of Quebec. My letter was referred by him to Mr. Robert Watchorn, who is the head inspector at the port of Montreal; and I think that any one who has come in contact with Mr. Watchorn will say that he is a very capable officer, that he understands his business, and that, while courteous and obliging, he is very firm, and faithfully discharges the duties he is called on to perform. On the 1st of July, Mr. Watchorn sent me the following answer :

I take pleasure in inclosing herewith a rough draft of the cases examined by Dr. Billings during the month of May. You will observe that some forty-four cases were detained by him on their arrival at Quebec during the said month, seven of whom were deported, two are marked escaped. This is for want of adequate detention quarters, but since they escaped a very satisfactory arrangement has been made and no further incidents of the kind are expected.

The twenty-three released by the board of special inquiry have been released by direction of the commissioner general at Washington, and in every case a good and substantial bond has been furnished the government by the relatives of these twenty-three persons out of which the government will reimburse itself for any expense that may be imposed on any town, municipality, county, or state, should any of them become public charges. The balance are in the hospital, three have recovered, and eight are still being treated in the detention quarters at Quebec.

This letter shows how careful the government of the United States are as to the character of the immigrants they allow to enter their country ; and I have said before in this House, and I now repeat it, that I think this government ought to have a mutual understanding with the government of the United States on this subject. People who are not good enough to be citizens of the United States are not good enough to be citizens of Canada, and I think it would be a great improvement and save a great deal of unnecessary expense if the Minister of the Interior would endeavour to arrive at an understanding of that kind.

Now, I want to give some extracts from the report of the United States commissioner of immigration with reference to what has been done. I called attention two or three years ago to the state of things that existed in the United States some ten or fifteen years ago. Their hospitals and public institutions were getting filled up, and when they came to examine into the matter, they found that they were filled up almost entirely with foreigners. It was ascertained that Germany went so far as to take its criminals out of its jails and prisons, take them to the wharfs, put them on board ships, and send them to the United States. When the United States government became aware of this they proceeded to legislate on the subject, and they have become more particular every year since. The number of immigrants destined for the United States that have come through Canada for several years past has been as follows :

|---|---|
| In 1897.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 6,542 |
| " 1898.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 7,344 |
| " 1899.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 11,550 |
| " 1900.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 20,011 |
| " 1901.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 21,674 |
| " 1902.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 29,199 |

This shows, I think, conclusively, that the steamship agents in the old country are perfectly aware of the difference between the examination the immigrants undergo on going to the United States, and that which they undergo on coming to Canada. At the very last session of congress the regulations were considerably changed. The head-tax was increased from $1 to $2 ; so that instead of taxing the people of the United States to bring people into the country, congress taxes the ship companies or the immigrants for the privilege of coming into the country ; and they spend the money obtained in that way on the means of keeping undesirable immigrants out of the country. Congress also passed a measure, section 10 of which imposed a penalty of $100, to be collected by the secretary of the treasury, for each case of a diseased immigrant brought to an American port, provided that in his judgment the disease might have been detected by means of a medical examination at the port of embarkation. It is evident that the American people are deeply in earnest in this matter, and what we have to gain by not co-operating with them I fail to see. Mr. Watchorn cites a case, which was reported in the 'Montreal Star,' of a man and wife who wanted to go to the United States. The man was diseased while the woman apparently was healthy. She took her passage to New York, and he took his to Montreal. When he came to get his certificate from Mr. Watchorn, he was sent to the hospital. After he was there a short time, he recovered from his illness, and came back for a certificate to allow him to go to the United States. Mr. Watchorn asked him how he expected to make a living. After being satisfied on that point, and after the man had told him how he had come that way to go to the United States, Mr. Watchorn allowed him to go. This case shows that the agents in the old country are aware of the law that exists in the United States, and when they have a doubtful case they send it via Canada. This difficulty may have been remedied somewhat, because last December the government made an effort, in a feeble way, to have some inspection of people landed at our sea-ports.

But I want to give a quotation from the report of the Commissioner of Immigration of the United States which I think will be startling to the House and the country. This is from the report for the year ending 30th June, 1902, and will be found on page 39 of the report:

From this report it will be seen that those aliens classified as Canadian immigrants, but who are simply so classified to conceal their real intentions, furnish in the aggregate a greater amount of specific disease and general inadmissibility than all the immigrants examined at all the United States ocean ports of entry combined including Quebec, St. John and Halifax. At first glance this may be regarded as an extravagant statement, but an analysis of the records of all the above mentioned ports and a comparison thereof with the statistical records herewith submitted will amply attest its incontrovertibility.

It is not to be presumed that all of the 26,000 destined to Canada subsequently went to the United States; but it is not known beyond a doubt that very large numbers of them did enter the United States without any inspection whatever, and the extent to which the law was thus violated will not be fully appreciated until statistical information taken from the records made during the period of actual border inspection has been considered.

This was before they extended their inspection west. The agents in the old country seem to have been fully aware of the progress made by the Congress of the United States in passing laws prohibiting the entry of such kinds of immigrants to the United States, and they still passed these immigrants on and told them to go further west; and, as you see, after they passed the 'Soo,' they were free from any inspection by American officials. It therefore became necessary for the United States to establish offices at Winnipeg and Vancouver. Then Mr. Watchorn continues:

That a Canadian destination is given by a very large number of people from Europe who are diseased or likely to become public charges, as a subterfuge, there can be no doubt. Experience amply establishes that fact, but we have also the sworn statements of many rejected aliens to confirm that experience. Why they seek this mode of reaching the United States is easy to comprehend when they are seen, for in appearnace they are the very essence of all that is undesirable in the way of acquisitions to our population from foreign countries.

I have had the honour to represent the bureau in the capacity of an inspector of Chinese, Japanese, Mexicans, Canadians, and the various people of Europe, and I unhesitatingly assert that no human beings who ever came under my observation presented a more forlorn and hopelessly unimproved appearance than those who have attempted to enter the United States via the Canadian border during my incumbency of this office. The Canadian route to the United States is known to every unscrupulous agent in Europe, and is by that means made known to the very dregs of society, many of whom having been rejected at United States ports sought this easy mode of escaping the effect of official vigilance.

What has become of these people who have been rejected by the United States? The description of them given by Mr. Watchorn is such that no country under heaven would desire such people. We have a country second to none in climate, soil, mineral wealth and fisheries, and all we require is a good class of population to be equal, if not superior, to any country in the world. It is therefore a great mistake to allow the class of people thus described by Mr. Watchorn to be left on our shore. The United States, during last year, got 648,743 immigrants in the ordinary way. They came as steerage or second class. Then there came cabin aliens to the number of 82,055, making a total immigration into the United States of 730,798. Then there were 4,974 rejected for the following causes: There were 7 idiots; 27 insane persons; paupers or likely to become paupers, 3,944; loathsome or dangerous contagious diseases, 709; women for immoral purposes, 3; contract labour, 275, making in all 4,974. In addition, there were deported, after they had been in the country a year, 465 persons. I am now giving the statistics of the United States. In addition, there were rejected from Canada and Mexico 5,437 persons for various causes.

I then come to the port of Montreal, and have the report of Dr. James Barker, medical examiner. During the ten months of 1902 he examined 4,985 and rejected 2,028 for the following reasons: Prostitutes, 3; no certificate, 235; contract labour, 419; paupers or persons likely to become paupers, 812; insane, 10; idiots, 8; ex-convicts, 5; loathsome or contagious diseases, 406. Not one of these was deported, but all of them left on our hands to become part of our population, and I think a very undesirable part.

Mr. Watchorn was considered such a valuable officer by the department in Washington that last year they sent him to Europe to examine the conditions there. He made a report to the department, in which he pointed out in what a deplorable condition things were, in so far as Canada was concerned. Before emigrants are allowed to embark for the United States they have to pass a rigid medical examination. That this examination is pretty thorough is shown by the fact that only about two-thirds of one per cent were rejected when they landed in United States seaports. He reports as follows:

Dated Paris, France, August 22nd, 1902.

Through the courtesy of the manager of the Red Star line at Antwerp, I am able to present herewith a list of rejections at Antwerp, from January 1st to August 9th, 1902, for cause, to wit: trachoma, favus, &c. Of these 373 persons, not ten per cent were returned to their native homes, 'the remainder fell into the hands of Canadian steamship agents and disappeared.'

I found the examinations at Rotterdam to be equally effective, and the rejections approximately the same in percentage, and the rejected ones there were also reported to have been almost invariably taken up by Beaver Line agents and forwarded to Canada.

This seems to have been reduced to a practice. Those not fit to go to the United States are sent to Canada. There seems to be a society among the agents, and an arrangement by which badges are affixed to immigrants indicating by what route they are to be sent. And in this way we get all the diseased persons, while those who were healthy went to the United States. One gentleman told him that out of all the immigrants he sent out, he sent 1,230 to Canada and only 30 to the United States. Mr. Watchorn, in an interview with the Montreal 'Star' of June 3rd, gave the proper idea of what we should do:

With the co-operation of Canada we would preserve this continent of North America for the decent, the healthy and self-supporting from other lands.' This was the remark made by Mr. Robert Watchorn, United States immigration commissioner, to a 'Star' representative.

That is one of the most desirable things we could do—we should endeavour to keep this country for the honest, industrious and healthy people. Then, we should have a country in a few years that would develop and make rapid progress. But if we allow all classes to come in as they have done in the past, instead of going ahead, we shall certainly degenerate.

But now I wish to come more particularly to a matter that, perhaps, interests us more directly. We have spent for immigration during the past year the hon. Minister of the Interior tells us, $560,857.45. I am a little at loss to know how he gets these figures. If you take the main estimates we passed for the year ending 30th June, 1903, you find the total vote was $445,000, made up as follows:—

|---|---|
| Salaries of agents and employees in Canada, Great Britain and foreign countries | $100,000 |
| Contingencies in Canada, Great Britain and foreign agencies and general immigration expenses, including salaries of extra clerks and head office | 333,000 |
| Women's National Immigration Society, Montreal | 1,000 |
| Girls' Home of Welcome, Winnipeg | 1,000 |
| Total | $445,000 |

Then, we find in the first supplementary estimates brought down: Immigration further amount required, $100,000. Then, in the second supplementary estimates for the same year, page three, immigration, $98,114. This makes a total of $643,114, or $82,254 more than the minister gave to me a few days ago as a total expenditure. I presume that the hon. minister, if he sees fit to answer me, will be able to give reasons for this difference.

I wish to take up the question of homesteading, because I find that the hon. minister lays a great deal of stress upon the homesteads. The department seem to think, judging from the evidence of the deputy minister, that by quoting the number of homesteads they prove that the immigrants who come to Canada remain here. The report is that 14,633 homesteads were taken up last year. But we must see where these homesteaders came from. In the first place there are Canadians, as follows:—

|---|---|
| From Ontario | 2,583 |
| Quebec | 316 |
| Nova Scotia | 81 |
| New Brunswick | 53 |
| Prince Edward Island | 35 |
| British Columbia | 32 |
| Manitoba | 661 |
| North-west Territories | 319 |
| Total | 4,080 |

These can hardly be spoken of as immigrants, that is people who come into our country from outside. Then, there are 1,158 who had previously entered. These added to the number of Canadians makes a total of 5,238, which is to be taken from the total of 14,633 homesteads, leaving 9,395 homesteads taken up by immigrants. You can multiply that by three or three and one-eighth, and still you will not account for one-half of the immigrants that are reported as having come to this country, for the report of the Minister of the Interior shows that 67,379 immigrants came into the country in 1901-2. As the government pretend to encourage only farmers or farm labourers to come to Canada, it would be supposed that a very large number would take up land and be found located in the North-west. But they are not to be found. For instance, the minister's report shows that 6,550 Galicians came into the country, but not one of them is shown as having homesteaded. Also there were 2,451 Scandinavians, and not one of these is among the homestead entries. We are spending a very large amount of money on immigration, and I fear we are hardly getting as much return as we have a right to expect. We have the Barr colony, which was investigater pretty thoroughly before the committee. We had Mr. Smart, the deputy minister, for several days before the committee, and I have not the report of his evidence. Of the 3rd June, 1903, Mr. Smart was before us, and he gave us the following information as I find at page twenty-three of that day's proceedings:

Q. How many homesteads have been applied for?—A. Up to the number of about 1,400 or 1,500.

Q. Who makes the declarations of entries for these persons ?—A. They are making them now.

Q. Themselves ?—A. Very largely themselves; most of them.

That is what Mr. Smart told the committee, and being the deputy minister, he ought to have known. But one of the officers of the department, Mr. Spears, I think is the name, wrote a letter to the Toronto 'Globe,' which appeared in the issue of June 18th, 1903. And he says, instead of their being, as Mr. Smart reported, 1,400 or 1,500 people taking up homesteads, only about 500 have settled in the colony and adjoining territory. They represent about 300 homesteads. The balance are scattered, a few having homesteaded. About 250 young men went out to work. Then there is this other matter that was discussed the other day about the amount that Mr. Barr got from the shipping companies, twenty-five shillings a head, and a reported interview with Mr. Preston, in which he said that he expected the government would pay Mr. Barr seven shillings a head in addition. Whether that is true or not, I do not know; but if it is true, Mr. Barr has made a very good thing out of it, especially when you remember that Mr. Smart stated in the committee that over ninety per cent of the men that Mr. Barr brought to this country would have come out had Mr. Barr never seen them.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we spend a very large amount of money in advertising and printing pamphlets amounting to $149,759. According to a report brought down to the committee, that amount was distributed as follows: In the United States, $70,664; Great Britain and Ireland, $62,923; Europe and Iceland, $6,682. Now let us see what results we get for this money. On the continent we have no agents, we have no agents in Gallicia, Germany, Hungary, Austria, Scandinavia, Russia, Finland, nor in other countries put down as miscellaneous from which immigrants come. Although we have no agents in those countries, still we got from them more than one-third of our immigration, at an outlay, so far as we have any account, $6,682. That is the amount spent to get 23,732 people from those European countries. Now we got, according to the report, 43,647 from all other countries, for which we paid in advertising, and pamphlets, $143,077. That does not include agents. This is only a small portion of the total cost, because, if I figure it out right, and I get my information from the estimates, we spent $643,000 last year on immigration; that is what the government asked for, at all events. We have salaried agents in this country, 120, costing $107,246. Then there was besides sixteen temporary officers at Ottawa who received $6,613. In addition to that we spent a good deal of money in my judgment foolishly, on newspapers. The Manitoba 'Free Press' supplied 110,000 copies, for which we paid $5,500, or five cents a piece. I would like to know what good that paper did for immigration. They got also for advertising nine months, $712.42; a total to the 'Free Press' of $6,228. The Toronto 'Star' furnished 5,000 copies of New Ontario, and got $500, or ten cents a piece. I have in my possession a circular issued by that paper, saying that we could buy it for $1.50 a year. There is another paper which seems to be a German paper, worth about $1 a year. It furnished 15,000 copies for $750, or five cents each. I suppose you could buy a better paper on the street for one cent. Then the Toronto 'Globe' furnished 1,000 copies for $770, or thirty-five cents a piece. I would like to know what use these papers have been for immigration purposes. A thousand copies of any particular paper for immigration purposes would be of no earthly use to distribute, because there is not enough of them. Besides, so far as I could gather from anything the deputy minister said, they were simply advertisements for which we paid an extraordinary price, and that were sent out for the benefit of people who want something nicer than ordinary literature.

Now we come to a matter that I think will require some explanation, that is our agents in the United States. We have agents employed both on commission and on salaries. A couple of years ago, I believe we had 500 immigration agents in the United States on commission; at the present time we have 280, according to the statement made by Mr. Smart in the committee. I asked him to give me a list of the agents and the amount of money each received, and I found when the list came down that there were just fifty of them who furnished any results for what they were paid. But I will come to that later on. Now then last year the total immigration to this country was 67,388 persons reported. I will quote from Mr. Smart's evidence given on May 29, 1903:

Q. In all there seems to be 67,388 persons reported ?—A. Yes.

Q. You do not intend to associate that number of persons with your agents in the respective countries ?—A. No, I cannot possibly do that.

Q. I suppose you cannot tell what proportion of them came in through the instrumentality of your agents ?—A. No, not directly. But I suppose with a good many of them they could be traced; but for a large number it would be almost impossible to say.

| Per Capita Cost. | 1901. | 1902. |
|---|---|---|
| Continent | $2 65 | $2 44 |
| British | 9 58 | 7 01 |
| United States | 7 96 | 6 74 |
| Average cost per capita | 6 11 | 5 29 |

Q. 7,902 miscellaneous immigrants; how many of these came in through the expenditure of money for immigration purposes ?—A. Very few.

Q. Very few ?—A. Yes.

Q. Immigration from the United States. Are you prepared to say that all of them came through your agents from United States ?—A. No.

Q. What proportion did come ?—A. A very large proportion.

Q. As a matter of fact are you prepared to say that these 26,000 people came through the efforts of your agents ?—A. Yes, I am prepared to say that considerable over one-half of the people came through the efforts of the department.

Now then he did not claim that we got more than one-half through the efforts of the department, and that will make it all the worse when we come to find the total that he claimed to have got. I have here a statement of the agents on salary, and the salaries run from $1,800 downward to $1,500, $1,200 and $900. I will single out a few examples to show how well we pay them for the services they render. There is Mr. C. A. Laurier, in Michigan, who seems to have got forty-six immigrants. His salary is $1,200, and his board and lodging amount to $467.75; his railway fare, $266. So that for these forty-six immigrants we paid $1,934. Then we have two agents operating in Ohio, Mr. Young and Mr. Williams, who got 225 immigrants. They had $1,200 each salary. Their board and lodging amounted to $1,168, their railway fares, $502, making a total of $4,070 for 225 immigrants. Then we have a Mr. MacLachlan, who seems to have got twenty-eight immigrants. He received $1,200 a year, his board and lodging amounted to $258.95, and his railway fare $625. That gentleman got $2,084 for bringing twenty-eight immigrants to this country.

The report that was made to the committee was that there were 23,721 immigrants brought in by the salaried agents. We have then a report of those brought in by the agents on commission. It was claimed that the commissioned agents brought in 3,822. That would make a total of 27,543 immigrants that were brought in by the agents that were on salary and the agents on commission. The yearly report of the Minister of the Interior says that there were 26,388 so that the report that was made to the committee represents that we got 1,155 more than we did according to the report of the hon. minister. I think that ought to be explained, and more especially should there be an explanation in connection with another matter that I will bring up in a few minutes. I want to call the attention of the government to some of the ridiculous amounts that were paid to agents on commission. We have Mr. William Ritchie, who in 1901 got $4,559. That appears in the evidence presented before the committee on Agriculture and Colonization last year. During the fiscal year 1901-1902 Mr. Ritchie received $1,896. The deputy Minister told us that he had discharged him because he was making too much money. It shows that if the system is right he did very wrong in dismissing him, but the system being wrong, I think he did right in dismissing him, and I think he would do right if he dismissed all the agents on commission. Mr. Bartholemew, during the year before last, received $1,851 commission, and last year $1,979 and that is the way it goes. I would like to point out that these immigrants are not brought in by the agents of the government. There are fifteen or twenty land companies operating in the North-west Territories who have large tracts of land and they have been putting forth extraordinary efforts to induce people to settle in the country so that they may be able to sell their lands to them. Mr. Turriff, who, I believe, is the land commissioner, in the Department of the Interior, was before the committee, and I would like to read some extracts from his evidence. Speaking of the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company he said :

I am not prepared to say just how many have gone in on their grant but last summer there were over 300 homesteads made in that part. They had gone in under the colonization scheme and I know they have put in over 1,000 settlers outside of their colonization scheme altogether for which they get no credit.

That would mean at least 2,000 people brought in by that company. Then, here is another company, the Canadian American Land Investment Company :

Q. And they were quite successful you admit? —A. Well, I know that in that part of the country a great many settlers have gone in during the last year or two.

Q. How many would you say ?—A. I should say within the last two years in that land district, the Alameda district which takes in township ten, speaking roughly, that between 4,000 and 5,000 homesteads entries have been made.

That would mean at least 12,000 people. Now, it seems to me that with fifteen or twenty land companies working in that country there must be a considerable amount of immigration work done by them. After the agent of the company had prevailed upon a man to emigrate to Canada, the North-west Territories government immigration agent on commission goes to him and says : If you take a ticket from me you will get your fare for less than if you do not. The intending immigrant will take an order from the commissioned agent and he will go to the railway company and get a ticket on that. The order given him by the agent is sent to Montreal and then sent back to the Department of the Interior. If the immigrant happens to be a man over 18 years of age the agent gets $3, if a woman over 18 years of age the agent gets $2 and for any person younger he gets $1. I look upon that money as being thrown away. These people are coming in as a result of the efforts of the land companies. The land agents are the people who do the work and the commissioned agents are the people who get the money. I have here a copy of a newspaper containing an advertisement of one of the land companies and it is a sample of the advertisements that they have been publishing all over the United States. These advertisements are not paid for by the government, but they are paid for by the land companies and after the land companies advertise their lands they send their agents to work amongst the people. After the land companies have induced people to come to this country to buy land these commissioned agents come along and reap the benefit of that work and the people of Canada are the poorer for it. I think it is folly for the government to spend so much money in the way they are spending it. I think it would be wise if the hon. minister would abolish altogether the system of employing agents on commission. In fact, I believe that the deputy minister has under consideration the possibility of doing away altogether with the commissioned agents because the fact that he reduced the number within two years from 500 to 280 and that only 50 have latterly done any work is a pretty good guarantee that they are of very little use. These 50 are only going to those parts of the country where the land agents have worked up the business for them, they give intending immigrants orders for tickets and draw the pay, they are benefited by that, and we are that much the poorer.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. WM. ROCHE (Halifax). Mr. Speaker, I am sorry it was so near six o'clock when I rose to speak, because I only intended to make a few observations upon one point or two in the speech of my hon. friend (Mr. Wilson). If he had been personally acquainted with the subject which he was discussing, and if the circumstances he related had taken place under his own observation, I would be disposed to pay a great deal of deference to the opinion of the hon. gentleman, but, as he obtained his information from a distant source and from channels which are subject to misrepresentation and distortion, I am compelled to fall back upon my own personal knowledge and to have some doubt with regard to the statements of my hon. friend and the conclusions which he has drawn. If I followed his argument correctly, it was that this government was blame-worthy for introducing a number of undesirable immigrants into this country, and that the expense of procuring those immigrants was disproportionate to their numbers and value. As to the question of expense, the means of procuring the immigrants, and the number of officials employed, the Minister of the Interior will no doubt deal with that. I think I may say without any egotism that so far as the immigrants are concerned who come to the port of Halifax, I have as good means of observing them as anybody else. From the fact that the port of Halifax is used by the immigrant steamers before the other ports in Canada are opened for navigation, the greater portion of the Galician immigrants arrived at that port on their way to the North-west Territories. I see every one of these immigrants in the vessel when the doctors go on board to examine them for contagious disease. I see them afterwards when they march in single file over the gangway and proceed to the dock. I see them afterwards when they are in the immigrant shed. We go amongst them and examine them when they are in little knots, and when they get out their cooking utensils and prepare their food for their families. They are examined again singly by the officials when they come to the wicket to exchange their tickets, and we see them when they go into the cars to take their departure for the North-west. Now, I think that a person who has an opportunity of examining these immigrants five or six times over, is as capable of forming an intelligent judgment as to them (if he has the right faculties) as one who has never seen them and who takes his information from hearsay. On the whole I think I have seen the majority of these immigrants for the past five years. Formerly they were introduced promiscuously into the United States with very little restriction. Now, the United States authorities have set up a standard of examination for the disease of the eyes called trachoma, and the American officials are very diligent in detecting and rejecting those who suffer from that disease. Until two years ago no test for that disease was made in Canada, and perhaps a number of Galicians and others suffering from trachoma got into the North-west and afterwards may have presented themselves on the borders of the United States for admission into that country. But those must have been immigrants who were introduced into Canada about two years ago, or they may have been immigrants who had been introduced through other ports than Halifax. Perhaps they are more lax in Montreal and Quebec than in Halifax, but certainly those people could not, in the numbers designated, have arrived in Canada under the regulations which now exist. The regulations now set up by the Canadian government are amply sufficient for the rejection of all those who are diseased, and for the securing of a proper class of immigrants, valuable to Canada. I have no doubt that there are some acute Democrats in the congress of the United States who sometimes point their fingers to the items of expenditure and say that there must be a very large amount expended for immigration, that the salaries of the officials appointed by the Republican government are very high and that they do not earn their money. I take it for granted that these officials are interested in their own salaries and that they wish to impress not only the skeptical people in the United States, but on some sceptical people in Canada also, that they are vigilant, and that the home of the brave and the land of the free shall not have a single star obscured or a single stripe displaced in all that glorious banner, in consequence of the admission of the diseased and the immoral, and the disaffected, and the unwelcome and undesirable that are hovering on the frontier of Canada and only awaiting a relaxation of the vigilance of the officials for them to make their descent upon that happy and favoured land. Hamburg is the port whence most of these continental European immigrants start for the western hemisphere, and when once it is reported there that the Canadian officials are extremely sharp in the detection of diseases, the steamship company which transports the immigrants is most viligant to send back inland any who are afflicted with a disease which may subject them to be returned. These immigrants are collected in large depots, and they are there examined by expert German doctors who are exceedingly particular. It is the interest of the steamship company not to run the risk of their transportation back should they be deported. Neither do the companies desire to break up the homes of those people who leave their farms and other avocations to come to the sea-board to take the ocean voyage. They have increased their viligance in consequence of the action of this government. Then on board the steamships they have experienced doctors who examine the passengers every day, and those who show traces of disease are set apart from the others and treated for the cure of any disease which may develop. These ships are amongst the largest in the world and have the best accommodation for passengers, and every appliance necessary to present the immigrants in as good shape as possible. At Halifax the immigrants are minutely examined by the port doctors. If they are found with infectious disease they are put into quarantine hospitals, and the ships are fumigated, and the families of diseased persons are carefully separated from the others. Then the immigrants are brought on shore and they are placed in sheds where they are examined by the United States officials and doctors. I have been with these doctors, and frequently there have been disputes between specialists of the ships and the specialists on shore as to whether the disease was really trachoma or as to whether it was some harmless disease contracted on the voyage. Then the question frequently arises as to whether the disease is curable or whether it demands the deportation of the patient. Frequently the doctors differ. Under the Canadian law those who are pronounced by the specialists to be capable of cure are allowed to remain under the treatment until it is determined whether they can be cured or not. If they can be cured they are allowed to enter Canada and if not they are sent back. When they are cured they are allowed to proceed to their destination. Under the Canadian law the examination is as rigid as that which takes place under the United States law. Every passenger is examined with the minutest care and it frequently happens that on account of one child in the family being afflicted with trachoma, an entire family of five or eight are deported to their country of origin.

Therefore the statistics which my hon. friend from Lennox has exhibited are no index of the number of passengers who were afflicted with diseases and sent back. You can divide the number at least by five. It is often very hard to see a large family sent back after spending a large part of their means, perhaps at the worst season of the year, to the place from which they came, because of the disease of one child. I have often been with the doctors when they saw the disease before it began to spread; and large families have been sent back by the American doctors simply on account of a trifling affection of the eyes of one little child. These people are not paupers, and they are not a diseased people who have been dumped on our shores by the passenger collectors of steamship companies; but they are people who are accustomed to have money sufficient to carry them to their destination and to support them for some time after they arrive there. Any one who has not $10 is not allowed to proceed. Frequently these people telegraph to their friends who have bettered themselves, and they send them money until they can earn some for themselves. Some of them are possessed of as much as $1,000. But they are a poor race of people. When they formerly came, they had a very quaint garb; and many of them, after a voyage on a vessel, were dirty and unkempt. But from the sanitary treatment they have received, they are clean and well clothed. I have often admired the care they took of their families, the attention they paid to their wives and children, and their state of morality. They are not at all like beasts herded together; but are neat, orderly and moral, well qualified for the ordinary occupations of citizenship and fully qualified to enter on the state of agricultural labourers who are so much required in the Northwest. We do not want clerks in this country; we do not want a collection of professional men, or men from cities who have no occupation or profession, but live on their wits. What we want are men and women who are accustomed to work in the fields from morning till night; and these people, both men and women, work in a manner which might well stir the emulation of some of our Canadia people. Having been acquainted with workingmen from my youth up, having been among farmers, farm hands, and workmen of all descriptions, I can say emphatically from my own observation that the statement of the hon. member for Lennox is altogether aside from the question, and presented an erroneous view of the qualities of these people. If the hon. gentleman were present among them and saw them, and heard the remarks he himself made, he would burn his books and go home, and never make another speech in parliament. Then, there is another stage. When these people leave the cars and go upon the farms, they immediately commence the hard work of the country. They belong to the very class we desire, those who begin at the very bottom and work their way up. If they own a piece of land, they immediately begin to cultivate it; but the first stage is the work for those who can give them employment to do the rough work of the country. I ask hon. gentlemen from the North-west if that is not the class of people who are wanted in that country. The farmers want men who are pioneers who come in contact with the soil, and prepare it for those who succeed. These men are not dressed in broadcloth, nor the women in silks and satins; but they are dressed in a way to fit them for a thrifty, industrious, orderly, quiet life on the farm, determined to make their own way in the world and build themselves up with the country. When these people are on their farms and have commenced their working life, then is the time to see whether the government has been justified or not in bringing them into the country. Parliamentarians are perhaps not the best informed on questions of this kind; but I have heard from interpreters of their own race, who have seen them on their farms, have witnessed their daily life, and can contrast their condition in Galicia and other countries from which they came with their condition in the North-west. They say that these people are infinitely improved; their children have become educated; their daughters are more refined; they have gathered about them little homesteads, and they are beginning to live as people do in luxurious America. There is every reason why we should be satisfied that these people form an integral part of our population. Therefore, I cannot condemn the government; therefore, I say that the opinions of the hon. member for Lennox are erroneous. I say, from my own observation and the knowledge which I have acquired, that he is altogether astray. I do not believe he wishes to condemn this government for what it has done. The expenditure in bringing them here is insignificant in comparison with the benefits derived from securing this large industrious population, which is suited to the needs of that new country which we are paying so much at the present time to develop. The minister will no doubt reply upon the other points of the question. But I thought it was my duty, as I had this knowledge, to give the House my own personal opinion, without any desire to shelter the government for wrong or to refute the hon. member for Lennox, but just to present that view of the question to which the House is entitled and upon which it can form its own judgment. I unhesitatingly pronounce my opinion that as the sources from which immigrants can be derived are so limited, the government should refuse to put obstacles in the way of immigrants coming to this country; and there is no class of people so desirable as the very class of agricultural labourers brought from Galicia and Hungary and the southern and western parts of Russia, which this government has fortunately secured at the present juncture in the history of Canada.

Mr. FRANK OLIVER (Alberta). Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member has called to witness representatives from the North-west in regard to this subject of immigration, it would hardly be in keeping if he did not receive a response. I would take the liberty of suggesting that the subject of immigration takes on different aspects according to the different points of view from which we regard it. It looks very different to a man in Halifax, who sees the immigrant pass from the steamer to the train, from what it does to the man who has to live alongside that immigrant for the rest of his natural life. I do not wish, however, to discuss particularly the feature of the question which has been treated by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Roche). Since I have had the privilege of being a member of this House I have taken the view that indiscriminate immigration was anything but a desirable policy for this country, and that selected emigration was by all means the policy we should follow. Let me call the attention of the House to the importance of the character of the immigrants coming to this country. These immigrants mainly come in for the purpose of settling in the North-west. It is in the nature of things that the country between the Lake of the Woods and the Rocky Mountains is destined, at no distant date, to dominate this Dominion. The House will relieve me from any imputation of talking bombast when I say this, because it must be admitted that with fifteen hundred miles of unbroken fertility in that country, every foot of which is suitable for cultivation and the profitable support of human life, there are bound to be more people there than can possibly find settlement in the east. The filling up of the North-west with settlers therefore is not merely a question of furnishing a market for the manufacturers and the traders of the east. It is not merely a question of filling that country with people who will produce wheat and buy manufactured goods. It is a question of the ultimate result of the efforts being put forward for the building up of a Canadian nationality, so that our children may form one of the great civilized nations of the world, and be one of the greatest forces in that civilization. This can never be accomplished if the preponderance of the population should be of such a class and character as will deteriorate rather than elevate the condition of our people and our country at large. It is the feeling of the people of the North-west that we should bring into that country a high class rather than a low class of immigrants. Our western people are convinced that it is in the highest degree necessary for the welfare of this Dominion that there should not be any deterioration in morality and intelligence and in civilization in the settlement of our western territories.

When I took the liberty of placing these views before the House some years ago, the reply was made that we must have settlers, we must have people to cultivate our prairie lands, and if we cannot get them from one class, we must get them from another. In my opinion, that argument was not good then ; but even if it were, it does not exist now. There are desirable people, our equals in every way, in civilization, intelligence, enterprise and aspirations, pouring into that country by the hundred thousand. We are, therefore, not dependent on picking up settlers wherever we can. We are getting settlers of a most desirable character, and every undesirable settler tends to keep out a desirable one. That is the point of view from which I regard immigration, and I believe it is from that point of view that the majority of the people from the North-west regard it. They do not want to see their institutions deteriorating. They do not want their political or social or municipal life to be placed at the mercy of people who do not understand their benefits or advantages. In any country whose government depends on the popular vote, every voter is a part of the governing body ; and in bringing people into the North-west, we are introducing people who will have as much to say in the government and the management of the country as we will ; and if the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Roche) thinks it is a good thing for this country that its destinies should be placed in the hands of those whose ideas and aspirations are not the same as ours, I certainly cannot agree with him. I believe in a vigorous immigration policy, such as has been pursued by the government of this country, but I believe that the success of that policy lies in the improved administration of the land and affairs generally in the North-west as make that country desirable for settlement to settlers of a high class. There is no need of depending on the less desirable class of immigration, when we can certainly get the more desirable class. It cannot be any longer a question as between immigration of an undesirable class and no immigration. The country has got beyond that point. It is now a question, as it possibly was not before, as between a less desirable and a more desirable class of immigration.

Mr. OLIVER.

Something has been said, I understand, about the paying of bounties or commissions to induce immigration. To my mind, if ever there was need for that system, that need has passed. The payment of bounties and commissions has a tendency to bring the less desirable rather than the more desirable class of people. The work of introducing immigration is carried on in many different ways. Some are better than others ; and I would take the liberty of suggesting to the House that there is a certain system being carried on to-day which is in every way desirable, a system which is producing the best possible results and which may very well be enlarged so as to continue these results. I speak of the system which is followed in one case by Mr. Swansen, who is especially an agent for the immigration of Scandinavians, more particularly of Swedish people. He is an enthusiast on the subject. His system of work is to go to the colonies of his countrymen in the United States and deal with the people personally and individually. He does not induce or ask any man to come whom he does not consider a desirable settler. Then, when he gathers together as large a party as he can handle well, he accompanies them right to the ground where he intends to locate them, he sees them located, takes an interest in them while they are preparing their new homes, and goes back for another party. That may seem a slow process of inducing immigration ; but I may tell the House that, as the result of the work of that one man applied in that way, there have been added to the population of the district which I represent some ten or fifteen thousand people, all of a character which does not admit of any question—intelligent, energetic enterprising people, people full of the highest aspirations of civilization. Another gentleman who carries on much the same work, is Mr. Adamson who goes to Scotland, selects his people there, brings them out, places them and goes back for more. What I suggest is that this system of selected immigration be extended and expanded, and be depended upon for the filling up of our country. That system I claim, coupled with satisfactory administration and with a sound railway policy for the development of our country, will bring as many immigrants as we can handle from year to year, as many as we can assimilate from year to year, as many as can be brought into the country with advantage from year to year ; and by that system we avoid any question arising from inducing the lame or the halt or the blind, or the mentally or physically or socially unfit.

Different ideas are held and expressed in regard to this great North-west. There is apt to be, on the one hand, an idea that the North-west does not matter, and the immigration that comes in does not matter so long as it goes to the North-west.

Another idea is that the North-west is so great that it does not matter either, for it will be all right in the end. Now the North-west is a great country; it is a large country; but it is not a country without limits or without limitations. That country gives great opportunities for the exercise of intelligence, energy and enterprise; but it does not provide intelligence, or energy, or enterprise. It gives an opportunity for the people who have these qualities, but if the people who have not these qualities fill up that country, then we have such a country as that from which they came. But, the North-west, as I said, has its limitations and its limits. It is not so large a country but that it can be filled up. We have not before us the prospect of continuously, and everlastingly, and for ever, pouring people into the North-west. It can be filled up, it will be filled up within a moderate period of time. And I say the responsibility rests upon this House and upon the government, upon any government that may be in power, to see that the people who fill up that North-west, who ultimately will dominate the affairs of this country, are of such a character as shall not lower the aspirations that we have or lessen the efforts we are putting forth for the improvement and advancement of this great Canada of ours. We spend hundreds of thousands, we spend millions year after year for the purpose of elevating the material, mental, social and political condition of our people; and is it to be said that from year to year, while we make this effort with one hand, we should, with the other hand, bring in a class of people who individually or collectively will doubly or trebly increase the task that is set us. Let me inform the House that there are already in the North-west some very serious social and political questions arising from this indiscriminate immigration, which, if they continue to increase will do to this country, in the west and in the east incalculable harm.

Now, as to the possibilities. Mention has been made of a certain class of immigrants who have come, and objection has been raised particularly to that class; and I believe the government is being held up to condemnation because of their efforts in bringing in that class of people. There is a mistake, I believe, in that regard, and many of those who are interested in the subject of immigration make that mistake. The government is not bringing in that class of people. It is not putting forth any effort to bring that class. These people are coming in because of the pressure behind and not because of the efforts put forward to draw them. And therein lies our greatest danger. It is because the conditions in the country in which they live are unfavourable, it is because there is continually pressure behind them, the pressure of political sentiment, the pressure of landlordism, the pressure of race and religion, that they are being driven out of that country into this. And we stand at the mercy of these people in their thousands, in their hundreds of thousands, and in their millions at no distant day. This, Mr. Speaker, is not a fancy picture, it is not a dream; it is a matter of fact. If my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Roche) speaks as an expert as regard to the appearance of these people, I take the liberty of saying that I speak as an expert in regard to the conditions that prevail in the country from which they come, having received the information from their own lips. There are millions of these people who live under conditions which tend to drive them out of their own country. They certainly find the conditions favourable here, and they are coming in in increasing numbers every year, without government assistance or government aid. This is the danger in which we stand, and this is the future of the immigration question which the House should be well aware of and should be prepared to deal with as I believe it will have to be dealt with.

As to the immigration that is coming from the United States, as I said in the beginning, this is the largest immigration we are getting, and is certainly the most desirable foreign immigration we are getting. The only immigration that could be more desirable would be that from the British islands. I do not speak of the movement of our own people to the North-west, for that is the most desirable of all, and that, I am glad to say, is a movement that is increasing from year to year. It is a pity that it had not started sooner, but thank God it has started at last, and we are getting our own people to settle in our own country. Canada has been the greatest emigration country in the world. We have sent more of our own people into foreign lands within the last thirty years in proportion to our total population, than any other country on earth, not barring Ireland. The fact is we have sent so many of our people into the United States within the last thirty years that of this tremendous immigration that is coming from the States, a very large proportion are our own people coming back, or their descendants. This fact shows to what a tremendous extent our people have gone to the States in previous years. Now I say these people are desirable, take them in the mass, desirable in every way. They are people of intelligence, of energy, of enterprise, of the highest aspiration. They speak the same language, they worship in the same churches, they have the same political ideals, although they have been enjoying different political institutions. Moreover, these people are the strongest objectors to the idea of indiscriminate immigration. They say they have suffered from that in the United States, and they will hold up both hands against such a policy in this country. We, in the west, believe in a vigorous immigration policy, but we do not believe in a policy of indiscriminate immigration. A policy of selected immigration will fill the North-west as fast as is good for the country, as fast as is good for the North-west, as fast as the people can be properly assimilated, and that is the policy we desire to uphold in this House. We cannot have that policy without a satisfactory administration of public affairs in the North-west, we cannot have it without a satisfactory policy of railway development in the North-west. We have had a satisfactory administration, we are having a policy of railway development. We believe that the North-west, and very soon all Canada, are entering upon an era of progress and prosperity, such as—it is usual to say, was never dreamed of—but such as was dreamed of twenty years ago, but was not realized then, for reasons which it is not necessary to mention, but which is being realized now to the fullest extent of the wildest dreamers of that day. Because of that fact, it is more than ever necessary that there should be a careful selection of the immigration that comes into our country. It is not now so much a matter of bringing them in as it is a matter of saying who we shall accept.

Mr. A. W. PUTTEE (Winnipeg). I entirely agree with the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) in his protest against indiscriminate immigration into this country, and in the sentiment that public money is practically worse than wasted if it is spent to increase that menace in the North-west. As a matter of fact, I believe it is a position generally conceded, most people will admit, that the immigration of four or five years ago was a decided hindrance, that it was a menace and a danger, and that we are all very glad that it has practically passed away and that the immigration at the present time is coming from better sources, and is of a better quality. At the same time, there is still need for close scrutiny. With the volume of immigration that is now coming into Canada, it seems to me that we should pay more attention to inspection and less attention to agents in the various countries. It must be admitted that where immigrants come in in large numbers, there is a proportion who are physically undesirable, and we are doing our own people an injustice by letting them come in, we are placing burdens upon our own people, we are endangering the health of the community, and in fact, endangering the general public good. Now, Mr. Speaker, in proportion to our population we are getting a tremendous immigration, far larger proportionately than that which has gone into the United States, two or three times as large. And as they have for years seen the necessity of very careful inspection, it behooves us to institute likewise a very careful inspection. As a matter of fact, we have a greater necessity for closer inspection than they have in the United States; because they have had for some years a policy of inspection, and as it has become generally known throughout Europe that it is troublesome and a waste of money for shipping agents to ship undesirables to the United States, the consequence is that a larger proportion will come to this country. Not only that, but a great many come to Canada first, with the expectation of being able to cross over the border into the United States. This has been recognized and attempted to be met, and now if you go to our stations in the interior of the country where railways terminate that connect with the United States, you will find the officials of their Immigration Department parading our platforms, watching every train that leaves for the United States. They are watching for the physically unfit, and when they succeed in stopping them from going into the United States that means that they are left in Canada. If we watched the ports and refused admission to all the undesirables wherever they were detected, that might serve the purpose, but practically that cannot be done. But the United States officials have found that it is not enough to watch the ports, and so they watch at our railway stations in Canada where lines connect with the United States. At a station some distance west of here, I saw two men on the platform looking carefully into the train. As the train approaches the border these officers of the United States Immigration Department board the train and communicate with all on board, to find out who have got tickets that have been given to them at a port of entry. If they find these people undesirable, they are advised for their own benefit to stay on this side of the line. Now unless we pay more attention to inspection, we are getting for our money something that we do not want, something that is going to be troublesome. The amount of money that is now being spent on immigration is very large indeed and I think it would be wise that the outside expenditure should be limited materially, and that more should be done inside in the way of inspection, and more assistance given to these immigrants in placing them on the land.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is the question of the quality of these immigrants. Unfortunately for us, Great Britain has not got a large rural population that we can draw from. The population in the rural districts there is stationary, one that would be hard to influence. In fact all the associations that surround them are such that it is difficult for Canadian agents to induce them to leave the country, and what is worse still, our agents do not pay a great deal of attention to that class. Unfortunately their principal work, heretofore and at present, is in the large cities of the old country.

Now, it must be apparent to anybody who gives any thought to the proposition at all that under the most favourable circumstances a very large proportion of the immigrants will be mechanics who will come to our cities. They come no doubt after having read the literature, thinking probably that they would like to take up farm life. As a matter of fact you will find that a very considerable proportion of them go to the cities and stay there. For several years in succession now we have been told on behalf of the government that it is not the policy of the government to encourage the immigration of mechanics, that they understand that they will come without being specially encouraged and that in fact they do not encourage them on the other side of the water. But, notwithstanding this the fact remains to-day that the greater part of the work of our immigration agents in Great Britain is done in the cities, and it is the mechanics in these cities who are encouraged to come to this country. What I complain of is that although our agents have been instructed by their superiors, they still continue to do this work, and to still continue to do it openly, and in fact during the last few months they have insulted some of the citizens of this country who have addressed the British public on the subject. I notice as an instance in the Ottawa 'Journal' of to-night this item, and this is but one example of what has been going on during the last few months :—

Toronto, July 14.—Fifty old country iron moulders and twenty core and pattern makers reached Toronto yesterday to take positions in the Canada foundry at Toronto Junction, where a strike is on. Upon learning the situation they did not go to work, but many of them attended a union meeting and related their experiences. They said they had been engaged on the understanding that there was no trouble, but that there was a great scarcity of moulders in Toronto. The men are unionists. Another batch of men arrived from Eastern Canada and were switched into the company's yards. They were not molested by the strikers.

Through various agencies during the last eighteen months hundreds of men have been induced to come to this country under such pretenses as that. They have been told that they were wanted, that there were large wages going here, that there were not men enough to do the work and that there was no trouble. The employers, notwithstanding the prosperity of the country have determined to keep wages down to the minimum at which they were previously, and to accomplish that they have been bringing in outside men to do the work. When this was in full swing at the end of last summer, and seeing the effect it was having on the industrial centres of this country, more especially Winnipeg, the mechanics there, as represented by the Trades and Labour Council, had a full statement of the case drawn up. They are mostly men who in their time were workmen in England or in some portion of the British Isles. They understand thoroughly the conditions existing in that country as they do in this country and they sent a full statement of the conditions here to the British press and it was widely published there. It was immediately replied to by our immigration officer in London, Mr. W. T. R. Preston. He contradicted the statement from top to bottom. Here is a man who does not know the conditions that exist at all contradicting men who know all about them. He practically tells the British public that the three men who indited the circular were paupers before they came to this country and that they have been liars ever since. That is a fair summing up of the statement of this agent to the representatives of labour in this country. I have the letters of that gentleman, I do not wish to read them all, but as a matter of fact that is a fair summary of the matter. Here is one sentence of Mr. Preston's letter, dated London, June 10, 1903 :—

In further proof of this contention it is not out of place to say that the three labour representatives who have signed the manifesto in question to the emigrating population of Great Britain are to-day living like princes in comparison to their positions prior to their arrival in Western Canada.

That is the letter of Mr. W. T. R. Preston to the British public contradicting the statement sent over by these men who were selected by the workers of Winnipeg to address the British public. This letter was published in the Manchester 'Guardian' of June 11, I understand. A reply has been sent to it and a very fair reply indeed. I think Mr. Preston should be notified that it is not in the interest of immigration even for him to continue this kind of campaign over there. I understand fully the influences that are at work behind him. Considering the nature of the contest that is going on between employer and employee I think the workmen should not have any interference from the government agent in carrying on their operations. But, there is another matter that I especially wish to draw the hon. minister's attention to and it is that the British public is being misled as to who are private immigration agents and who are immigration agents in the employ of the Dominion of Canada. There has been appearing in the want columns of the British press a small advertisement that reads like this :—

Immediate employment in Canada guaranteed. All kinds of competent labour, including moulders, boiler makers, machinists, carpenters, agriculturists, farm pupils ; also, domestic servants. No fees.—Canadian Labour Bureau, 13 Charing Cross, London.

The new address of the Canadian government office is this, or very near this. I believe the government office number is 17 while this is 13. It is so near to it that it mixes it up in the British mind, and the people there accept this as being a Dominion government advertisement. In addition to inviting mechanics of all kinds it also asks for farm pupils, something that we all condemn and have been condemning. I have had inquiries made as to whether or not this is under the official auspices of the Dominion government. There is another advertisement that reads very much in the same way :—

Immediate employment in Canada for ten paper box makers, ten paper bag makers (girls); also twenty-five of each class ; woodworkers, trimmers, blacksmiths, painters for carriage factory ; fare, £6. 19s. 7d.; no fees. Canadian Labour Bureau, 13 Charing Cross, London, S.W.

Although agent Preston has been so very quick and so very earnest in contradicting the statements that have been sent across on behalf of the workingmen of this country he allows this fraud to go on right under his eyes and does not say one word to enlighten the British public about it. The impression is that he is in collusion with this private labour bureau. The inference is warranted by the fact that although this is either his address or very near to it he makes no protest while he is so very keen to make a protest against any statement that is sent across from men who thoroughly understand the conditions here. It seems to me that it would warrant the inference that the Dominion government agent is countenancing this fraud upon the British public. That brings up the question as to whether there is some scheme to get a rake-off and as to who these statements are put forward by.

Mr. DAVIS. Would the hon. gentleman tell me if this appeared as reading matter in a newspaper, or was it an advertisement put in by some private bureau.

Mr. PUTTEE. I do not know who is putting it in the newspapers, but it has been appearing in the British newspapers for some months past. It states that it is by the Canadian Labour Bureau, 13 Charing Cross, London, S.W., and what I point out is that that address is practically the address of the Dominion government agent in London. If it is done by a private firm it is done to mislead the people into imagining that they are corresponding with the Dominion government agent, and I say that our agent in London should put that matter right at once. We have obtained immigration from the United States during the last year which is exactly suited for our country, and we have obtained some very good immigrants from Britain, but on the other hand we have obtained a very large percentage of immigrants who are anxious and determined to settle in the cities. That has rendered the condition in our cities alarming to the man who has to earn his living. In the city of Winnipeg it has had a very detrimental effect, the result being that the wage-earner has now to buy his supplies at increased prices while his wages have not increased. Is it not a fair argument to say that the workingmen of this country should be taxed to provide funds to keep immigrant agents in large cities in Europe for the purpose of inducing men to come out here to compete with them and to keep down their wages to a minimum. That is really the effect of this kind of policy. I state here on my responsibility, that there has been no scarcity in Canada of skilled mechanic labour. If you want proof of that, here it is. Whenever an article is scarce there is an immediate rise in the price of that article, but there has been no undue rise in the price of labour in this country. Wages have not increased to anything like the extent that the cost of living has increased. The very fact that the Postmaster General can find hundreds of people for his service who are willing and anxious to hang on to their jobs at $30 and $40 a month is positive proof that wages have not increased. The people who have come to Manitoba and who have settled on the land are heartily welcome, but I say again that the government has no business to spend public money in inducing the mechanic and ordinary city labourer to come to Canada under the impression that wages are so far higher here than in England and that the cost of living is lower. Why, Sir, we had it stated publicly in the papers by Mr. Preston, the Canadian agent, that in the city of Winnipeg the necessaries of life cost far less than they do in Great Britain. That is a most absurd statement and the only reason why he could possibly have made it was, that he thought the people who knew the real truth were not in a position to directly make a contradiction. It is outrageous to induce people to come into Canada by such a statement as that. I am sure that the Minister of the Interior is well informed of those things I have mentioned, and I trust he will again assure us that our agent in London, and other agents as well, will not only be instructed that they must not give undue colour to the information which they supply intending immigrants, but that they will also be told that they must carry out these instructions. There is no use bringing people out here under false pretenses and having them disillusionized on their arrival. It is a good deal better to tell people that they would have to work when they come here, and that it is safer for them to have some capital even if they are going to a homestead, than it is to set on foot the cock and bull story of Mr. Preston that all they have to do is to arrive at the nearest port in Canada and that then they are on the high road to prosperity. This gentleman stated that if he had $20,000 he could bring thousands of families out here and that they would at once start out on a prosperous career. That is no kind of story to place before people who when they arrive here will become disgusted and send back reports that will deter others from coming out.

It appears to be always the case that when there is a very large immigration to a country the ordinary precautions are pushed to one side. It is well known, that taking them on the whole, the Barr colonists were perhaps the finest and best class of people who ever came to this country in such numbers, and that they had more money than any similar number of immigrants who ever arrived here. And yet that colony of respectable people who had been well brought up in the old land were crowded together on board ship in a style that was not decent. That is an evidence of how prone transportation companies are, and government officials are for that matter, to break through the ordinary precautions when a large number of people are being handled. If that is the case even with steamship companies who have to conform to board of trade inspection before they leave British ports, is it not much more apt to be the case on this side considering the comparatively small amount of inspection which exists in this country. I claim that unless you are going to spend money to our own detriment, you have got to have some more strict scrutiny of immigrants than you have at the present time.

Mr. M. K. RICHARDSON (South Grey). There seems to be a consensus of opinion on both sides of the House that the great need of the immigration department at present is a more careful discrimination as to the character and the health and the adaptability of the immigrants who come to this country. Some years ago the feeling was very strong that we should fill up the great North-west as rapidly as possible with immigrants, and little thought was taken as to their character, their occupation, or their suitability for employment in Canada. We are now just beginning to realize the prophetic vision of these statesmen of thirty years ago who projected great enterprises for the opening up of our North-west. Men who foresaw and foretold that the time would come when that country would be opened up to the teeming millions of Europe, and when prospects would be offered to them which they never experienced in the old world. We are only now coming to realize that prophetic vision ; but we are coming to a point in our history when we should pause and consider whether the present management of that department of the government is as wise and prudent as it might be and ought to be. I think, from the evidence that has come out during the discussion this evening on both sides of the House, that it must be conceded that there is room, and vast room, for improvement. We have already had evidence of the undesirability of bringing out what we may almost call the sweepings of some of the European nationalities, men who are not desirable as citizens in any country in the old world, and whom their fellow-countrymen were quite willing to let go, no matter where they went to. But now we realize that it is necessary to the future of Canada that we should use more discrimination in regard to the class of men who are to become the future citizens of this country. We spend large sums of money annually for immigration purposes, and the question whether we get value for that money or not is not to be estimated in numbers of immigrants, but it may be estimated quite as much in the character of the class of immigrants we get. If we get a class of people who are undesirable, physically, mentally, from their national proclivities or from any other cause, we are not getting that value which we ought to have. I know that there has been a feeling expressed, and I entirely agree with it, that it is very desirable that we should get immigrants from the British isles, as they will more readily assimilate with the ideas, thoughts and feelings of Canadians.

It has been admitted by the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) that there is just one class of immigrants who are superior to them for the great North-west, that is, immigrants from the older provinces of Canada. We lose a large number of young men from our older provinces annually, and we may expect to lose them. It is necessary, when young men grow up, that they should leave their homes. 'Home-keeping youths have ever homely wits.' And there is a disposition everywhere among Anglo-Saxons to move about and see the world, and see whether they cannot better their condition. That movement will continue, and it is desirable that we should retain in this great Dominion of Canada as much as possible of that class of young men, especially the farming class, from Ontario and Quebec, who wish to move away from their homes and find other homes and prospects. It is very necessary that we should always bear in mind that one of the great dangers of the future of this country is that with our large extent of territory stretching from ocean to ocean there may arise a dissimilarity of interest or sentiment or aim ; and it is very necessary that we should endeavour as much as possible to infuse into the population of the great North-west some element that will carry with it a national sentiment, a feeling of love for Canada, something that will bind together the different parts of the country far better than telegraph lines, railway lines, commerce or anything else—a bond of kinship and national sentiment which shall tend to hold us together nationally, and give us larger and broader national views. What is it that gives us the greatest trouble with our fiscal policy at the present time ? Is it not the extent of our territory and the divergence of our interests ? We need a larger and a more national outlook, and we need to preserve it in the great North-west. We do not want the feeling to grow up among the people of the North-west that they can be better served by the United States or by cultivating commercial or fiscal relations with the United States. We rather want a national sentiment that will overlook to some extent these considerations, that will look from one end of the country to the other, and will ask what is best on the whole for this great Dominion of Canada. We want to subordinate local and even racial interests to the general interests of the country. These general interests can be served to some extent by promoting the settlement of the great North-west with our own young men, especially with the sons of the pioneers of these older provinces of Quebec and Ontario ; and this much I would claim for them, that whatever assistance may be given to any class of immigrants, none deserve more of this country than the sons of the pioneers of those older provinces.

It is also very desirable that we should have a good share—and I am glad to learn that we are obtaining it at present—of the immigration coming from the old country, especially from Great Britain. I know that there is a feeling sometimes expressed that people who come from the cities of Great Britain are not desirable immigrants ; but from my own personal knowledge I can say that men who have come from the city of London, who have been accustomed to indoor work, but who have brought out with them that native intelligence, industry and indomitable perseverance which pertains to our kin, have made a perfect success of farming operations in Canada, though they never were on a farm in their life before. I had the pleasure of transmitting a few days ago to the Minister of the Interior a letter from a man who only twelve months ago was in a London warehouse, where he said he had to dress like a duke on the salary of a dustman. But he made up his mind that he would come out to Canada, where, if he could not do anything else, he would go on the soil and try to make a living. He was told by one old man that he would soon be back again with his mother or his grandmother. But he describes how he came out and what he had learned within twelve months, and he said he was enjoying life amazingly in the North-west turning up the rich soil of Manitoba and driving a team across the prairie, an occupation which he had never followed before, and where he had found a new vigour, zest and interest in life such as he never experienced before. Men will be successful if they have the energy, the determination and the intelligence necessary, even though they have not been brought up to agricultural pursuits. There is great room for gathering, even from the cities of the old world, men of this class, who are tired of being slaves to indoor duties all their lives, and who will, if they have the opportunity, make a success of agricultural life. I read an extract from a North Cumberland paper only a week or so ago, the 'Penrith Observer,' which is largely circulated in the counties of Northumberland and Westmoreland, about a number of Barr colonists who had returned and who were complaining bitterly of the misrepresentations that had been made to them by the agencies which had induced them to come out, and also of their reception and treatment in Canada.

I only give the statement for what it is worth, and to show what reports are in circulation in the press of Great Britain. Although the Immigration Department may disclaim responsibility for the treatment of the Barr colonists in Canada, yet the people of the old country will not make any discrimination. They will simply take the reports from their countrymen who went to Canada, and who complained about being overcrowded on the steamers, and of not having been decently treated in the railway transportation across the country, and of being landed into a wilderness without any of the accommodations they had been promised, and will hold the government responsible. I am not imputing any mismanagement or remissness of duty to the department, but I merely point out the necessity of the government taking under its care and supervision every scheme of emigration, whether promoted by Mr. Barr or anybody else, because if there be any grounds for dissatisfaction, the fault will be charged against the Canadian officials and government rather than against the organizers of the emigration scheme. Therefore it is necessary that the government exercise careful supervision even over private colonization schemes, such as the Barr colony. I need not refer particularly to the statistics compiled and given to the House by the hon. member for Lennox (Mr. Wilson). They must convince every one of the necessity of our using much more careful oversight and discrimination in the character of the emigration we are getting. Our country has great resources and possibilities, but its progress and influence in the future will depend not so much on the numbers as on the character of the population. It is the individual qualities of our people which will tell in the formation of our character as a nation, and that greatness and influence which we all desire this Dominion should attain will only be secured by a more careful supervision and discrimination in our immigration policy.

Hon. Wm. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.) I think that we should bring this discussion to an end pretty soon; for if we continue to waste the time of this House much longer, we will have to send away home for our winter clothes. I was sorry to hear the speeches of the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) and the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Puttee). They come from a great country, but are very narrow in their ideas. It is about time that they should get some expansion in their views. They may rest assured that for all time to come our immigration will contain a certain percentage of the nationality to which these hon. gentlemen belong. The Irishman, the Englishman, the Scotchman and the Frenchman will come to us for generations yet just as well as these people from the continent of Europe. Those people from the continent come to Halifax, well clad and pay their way to the great North-west. Will these hon. gentlemen turn them back again as we do the Chinese? I say no, let them come and work out their living and destinies in this country. I am sorry to hear intelligent men preach such doctrines as we have had to listen to to-night. Those people to whom they allude come from the midst of civilization and bring with them the civilization and the characteristic of their native countries, and we should deal with them in a broad-minded and Christian spirit and not treat them as outcasts and publicans.

Mr. A. C. BELL (Pictou). The different opinions held by the hon. gentleman who has just addressed the House and the hon. members for Alberta and Winnipeg are due, no doubt, to the different standpoints from which they view the question of immigration. I suppose there never was a time when there was a greater temptation to promote immigration than there is in Canada to-day. The extent of our country and its wealth producing qualities are so immense that it will take a great many years to populate it at all adequately. Furthermore we have in every part of Canada such enormous resources, agricultural, mineral and industrial, that the statesmen of the day are naturally anxious to bring these resources in touch with the one element which is required to create national wealth and progress. All that Canada wants to-day is people. Without people, enormous as is her area and boundless as are her resources, she is still a comparatively small and weak community. It is therefore natural that Canada should hunger for people. To a certain extent it is not amiss that there should be occasionally such a remonstrance as we have had to-night from the hon. members from Alberta and Winnipeg. These gentlemen represent that part of Canada in which population is most desirable, and in which there are the greatest possibilities, and it is rather a remarkable circumstance that representatives from that part of Canada should raise a warning voice against our not being sufficiently discriminating in encouraging immigration. If such a warning were to come from one of the older provinces, it would not be so surprising; but it is rather surprising that it should come from that section of country which is suffering from lack of population. Has the government erred in the direction of bringing in undesirable people? Taking the report of the Immigration Department and the investigation carried on by the Committee on Immigration, it seems to me that no great attempt has been made to secure emigration from those portions of the continent of Europe from which we might possibly gather an undesirable class.

There is, as has been pointed out, a pressure upon these people which is sending them to the new world. But it is not the part of the programme of the Immigration Department of Canada, as I understand it, at this time to offer special inducements to these people to come, but the department is rather withdrawing its efforts from the centres of continental Europe and is confining them to the home islands and the United States. And therefore it seems to me that we are not, at present at least, erring in the wrong direction of making great efforts to gather in immigrants that the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) might consider an undesirable class. Now, apparently, all the money that has been spent by Canada in the matter of securing immigration has been not very adequately rewarded by increase of people. We have not seen the immigration into this country increase very largely, although for a great many years past it has been the policy of governments in Canada to spend money in a manner exceedingly liberal when we take into consideration what is really a comparatively limited revenue, the revenue of Canada. It will be found that in some years, owing, probably, to some circumstances which it might be exceedingly difficult to arrive at an understanding of, it requires a very much larger expenditure of money than in others to secure the arrival in Canada of an immigrant or a hundred immigrants. Looking over the figures as I find them in the published returns, the expenditure for many years past would represent an average of about $9 to $10 per head for immigrants brought into Canada. But there is an exception in 1900 in the number of immigrants secured, whether it be owing to some defect in the returns or some circumstances which, for the moment, controlled or had an adverse effect upon the immigration into Canada. The percentage of expense almost doubled. In that year it cost nearly twice as much as in other years—if the figures in the Year-book are reliable—to secure a given number of immigrants to this country. The figures showing the amount expended and the number of immigrants, as I took them from the returns are as follows:

| Year. | Expenditure. | No Immigrants. |
|---|---|---|
| 1898.. .. .. .. .. | $ 261,195 | 31,900 |
| 1899.. .. .. .. .. | 255,879 | 44,543 |
| 1900.. .. .. .. .. | 434,563 | 23,895 |
| 1901.. .. .. .. .. | 444,730 | 49,149 |
| 1902.. .. .. .. .. | 494,842 | 67,379 |

Taking all these figures, it will be found that it cost somewhere about $9 per head for the immigrants reported as arriving in this country. And, so far, I suppose we might say that the result was fairly satisfactory. For every immigrant who comes into Canada and makes a home here becomes at once a contributor to the revenue under our system of raising our revenue largely by indirect taxation, and, in very little more than a year that immigrant, if of the self-supporting class and not destined to become a burden upon the community, will have contributed nearly the sum of money it has cost to secure him. It is, therefore, not a bad proposition that the government should spend something like $9 per head to bring in immigrants, provided it secures a desirable class. And, generally speaking, I think it has been the policy of both parties in Canada for a number of years past to treat immigration as one of the most important things that could engage the attention of parliament. And to-day parties in Canada, I think, are united in justifying the government in expending money in a liberal manner in order to secure population for this country. The only matter about which there can be any question or dispute, and I presume the matter which the hon. member for Lennox (Mr. Wilson) had largely in mind when he introduced the subject to-day—a subject for years past to which he has given a great deal of attention to the great advantage of the House—was to look closely into the figures to discover if there was a defect in the mode of expenditure, to see if the returns set forth in the statistics of population coming into the country were correct, and if the results of the immigration expenditure were exactly what they purported to be. I think, that to a certain extent, my hon. friend from Lennox has been able to show that there is, perhaps, a leakage from Canada of some of the immigrants that were reported as coming into this country. All the persons who land at our ports as steerage passengers and who are destined for Canada or who assert that they are Canadian immigrants, I suppose, are included in the gross number of immigrants set down to the credit of the Immigration Department. But I think there can be no question at all that the authority quoted here to-day by the hon. member for Lennox, Mr. Watchorn who is the head of the United States service in Canada, goes to show that, to a certain extent at least, there has been on the part of some of the older and less desirable countries of Europe a disposition to send into Canada as Canadian immigrants a certain percentage of persons whose ultimate destination is not really Canada but the United States. And these, of course, would not take this means of reaching the United States if the more ordinary and easy avenue of direct immigration were open to them. Inspector Watchorn states that there were, last year, 26,000 immigrants landing in eastern ports in Canada and claiming to be destined for Canadian points, of whom, as he contends, a very large proportion were really trying to make their way into the United States by this roundabout route. It would not be a matter of any seriousness if these 26,000 persons chose to make their way through Canada and there were no objections to their entering the United States. It would only mean that the revenue of the steamers coming to our ports and the revenues of those persons who, in the course of their passage through this country are called upon to supply the wants of these immigrants would be benefited. We might look upon that immigration passing through Canada to the United States as just as important and valuable a class of traffic as any other that comes to our shores, and we should welcome it. But the point that has been made, not only this year, but in past years, by the hon. member for Lennox, and for which he has relied largely in the report of the United States officers who man the frontier and are found in all our ports and important railway stations, is that, to a certain extent the reason why these 26,000 people, or that portion going to the United States through Canada instead of going to the United States direct is that there are circumstances of a most undesirable character which compel them to use that avenue to the United States. Whereas a very small percentage of the immigrants who go by direct passage to the United States are rejected as undesirable, from either mental defect, poverty, or contagious or loathsome disease, the figures of this gentleman, Mr. Watchorn, go to show that a large percentage of that immigration from the continent of Europe which goes to the United States through Canada, or which he believes is on its way to the United States when it comes into Canada, is so affected with disease, or impoverished, or so defective in intellect, that the people would be rejected if they tried to make their way into the United States by the direct route; and so they choose Canada as a back door through which they can slip into the United States, escaping the vigilance of the officers whose duty it is to inspect these immigrants going into the United States.

Now, in connection with that matter which was discussed in this House last session, a Bill was passed in 1892, the operation of which I suppose comes under the care of the Minister of the Interior, which authorizes, for the first time, the government of Canada to deport such immigrants, to arrest them summarily without warrant, wherever they are found, and to deport them from the country. Now, it would be very interesting to learn to what extent that Act has been put in force, how far it is in operation in Canada to-day, and to what extent Canada is being purged from the dregs of the immigration which the officers of the United States refuse to receive, and which the people of Canada in years past have had reason to fear, after its rejection by the United States, was left to remain in Canada to the injury and danger of our population. It is highly important that these matters should be brought to the attention of the Minister of the Interior, and I shall look with a great deal of interest to his statement in reference to this point, because I hope he will make it clear that his department and the government are using all the powers given to them by the legislation which has been adopted in Canada in order to prevent the permanent settlement in Canada of any large proportion of the undesirable immigrants who have been refused by the United States officials.

Now, on this subject the testimony of Mr. Watchorn is singularly complete. He not only shows that there is a very much larger percentage of diseased and undesirable immigrants which come to Canada than that which goes to the United States, but he goes on to show in one of his pamphlets that actually, in the case of Italian immigrants, there is a system by which the desirable immigrants are selected and turned over to the Atlantic companies to be carried to the ports of the United States, whereas those of an undesirable character are sent north towards Rotterdam and Antwerp, and there, instead of going upon the boats of the trans-Atlantic Companies for the United States, are turned over to a Canadian company, to the Beaver Line, and are brought to Canada. He furnishes a large amount of evidence to show that not only was that the system of one agent among those who were soliciting immigrants for the steamship companies, but it is a recognized system. He speaks of a point in Switzerland which he describes as being a centre and headquarters of this traffic and he represents it to be so well organized that these immigrants are sent north towards the ports of the German Ocean where the shipping agents can discriminate and select them when they arrive at Antwerp and Rotterdam, and detect the undesirable immigrants and turn them over to the Beaver Line steamers plying to Canada, while the good immigrant who is not likely to be refused by the United States government comes across the Atlantic by the direct route to the United States ports. Now, if the vigilance of the officers of the United States in refusing to accept any part of this undesirable immigration, result in the deportation of all those who are undesirable and in sending them back to the country from which they had come out, of course it would not be a matter of great consequence to us in Canada. It would be a painful circumstance to those poor people, as has been mentioned by the hon. member from Halifax (Mr. Roche) who have been hoping to escape from the hard conditions of the old world to be sent back into what they looked upon as a condition of hopeless misery; it would be a painful thing to contemplate, and yet it would not do for this country to indulge in any sentiment that would induce us to offer an asylum to a class of immigrants that are rejected by our neighbours to the south.

The condition of things between the two countries is very different. The United States has long ago reached the point that it does not feel itself to be in urgent need of an increase of population by immigration. The people of the United States now feel that they are receiving immigrants in such abundance that they can afford to chose, and at present, instead of allowing immigrants to come freely into that country, and far from spending any money to secure them, they are now doing the very opposite, for they are spending money to select the immigration. The course of the two countries is dissimilar, and the consequence has been what might be reasonably expected, that an undesirable class of immigrants is finding its way into Canada with the ultimate intention probably of going into the United States. In reference to this matter the legislation which we passed at the last session enables us to guard ourselves from the danger of the introduction of loathsome disease into this country, provided the government of Canada is sufficiently wide awake to the danger, and makes sufficiently good use of the powers put into their hands by the parliament of this country. As I said, I shall wait with a great deal of interest to hear the statement in reference to that matter which I hope we will receive from the Minister of the Interior.

In reference to the matter which has been discussed here to-night to a certain extent, of the class of immigration which ought to be brought into this country, I notice there is a marked difference of opinion between at least one of the speakers who addressed the House and several others. I find there is voiced here an opinion which would go to show that the great want of Canada today is simply people to go upon the lands of this country, an agricultural population, and that there is no need of any other class of population; that Canada does not require mechanics, but requires agriculturists. Now, to my mind that is not exactly the case. We want agriculturists, it is true; we probably want them more than any other class in this country. We have conditions which will enable agriculturists, almost as soon as they arrive, to become producers, to become valuable factors in increasing the wealth of our country, in expanding the trade of our country, and in making themselves felt at once in the trade returns of the country. Probably there is no class of immigrants coming to this country who can sooner make desirable homes for themselves than the agriculturists. But it must be recollected that wherever you have a certain number of agriculturists, you necessarily must have to supply their wants and to do their work a certain percentage of mechanics as well. While it possibly may be true, as has been stated by the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Puttee) that there is not that increase in wages of labour in the west which would go to show that there is any scarcity of labour there, or any want of mechanics or handicraftsmen, I think the experience of those who live in the older provinces is in the opposite direction. In their experience, and within my knowledge at least, there has been a tendency in the older provinces for the wages of mechanics to advance constantly in the last few years. They have advanced so that now wages are reaching a point which used to be looked upon as solely characteristic of the newer portions of the west, and you will find to-day that mechanics in the province of Nova Scotia are receiving wages in certain trades averaging $4 a day. You cannot get any labourers as a rule under $1.50 a day, and in the case of such labourers they will very probably be inefficient. There are not such men as we used to be able to procure at one time in our province. They are largely made up of persons who would not be employed if the labour market were not comparatively bare. Therefore, I maintain that in the older provinces there is a large demand for labour. There is not only a demand for men but for women as well. It is unquestionably a fact that household service is absolutely out of the question and almost absolutely impossible to get in the older provinces of Canada. Therefore, it would seem that it would not be amiss even if the government did make it known to the people of the older countries that not only is there room on the farms of this country for people who are willing to work but that in the various trades and in domestic service there is ample room for a very large immigration indeed.

In connection with immigration to this country there is another matter which I would not like to pass over unmentioned and that is the fact that to my mind, although it has been asserted in this House on various occasions in recent years that exodus has ceased from the older parts of Canada, it is not the case that the exodus has ceased. It really seems to me as if the exodus from the older provinces of Canada is as great as ever it was. In connection with that matter it would almost seem as if it were proper that the government of Canada which is anxious to fill up with reasonable speed the fertile parts of the west should make some kind of an effort to divert the large stream of immigration which is flowing from the older parts of Canada to the United States, towards our west. If the Nova Scotian, or the New Brunswicker, or the citizen of Prince Edward Island wishes to go to the Saskatchewan valley, or to the neighbourhood of Edmonton, or to settle down to work upon a farm in the west he deos not meet with the same favourable treatment that a citizen of Europe or of England or of Scotland meets with. There are no reduced rates for him. I do not speak of the matter of assisted immigration, but if a citizen wishes to move from the older provinces of Canada to the west, if he wishes to take his family with him, if he wishes to take his domestic belongings, his furniture, he finds that he has to pay a very large and expensive railway charge before he can move his family from one part of Canada to another. It is the constant complaint from those from the older provinces who are moving into the North-west that while citizens of the United States and of other foreign countries who go into the west are favoured in the matter of railway rates, receiving, I am told, a rate over the railway of one cent per mile if they are land-seekers, both going and coming, people from the older provinces going into the North-west with the intention of becoming settlers are compelled to pay very nearly the ordinary rates of travel, that there is a great discrimination and that it is a very expensive process today for a man from the older parts of Canada to take his family and belongings into the west with him. I do not at all urge that the government should set up a migration department with the intention of removing people from the older provinces to the west. I would not be prepared to support any such process as that, but in view of the fact that there is unquestionably an enormous trend of people from the older provinces into the United States, it appears to me that the government would be well employed in making such conditions of railway travel and giving such advantages as would enable the people of the older provinces to make the acquaintance of the west and see how far it would be desirable for them to remove from the older parts of Canada and thus enable them to divert the movement from the older provinces of Canada to the United States towards western Canada. We are, in the older provinces, not at all convinced that the exodus has ceased. We have every reason to believe from the large number of unoccupied farms and the large number of strangers whom we see in our towns, because, while the population in the older counties may be about the same as it was, it is made up to a large extent of new people who are coming into these counties, that a large part of the older population is moving into the cities of New England and other parts of the United States. I do not say at all that it would be proper for the government to endeavour to divert the people of Nova Scotia or New Brunswick from these provinces and take them to the west, although I believe that in a great many cases it would be largely to the interest of the people of these older provinces many of whom are living under conditions which do not at all compare with the conditions under which they could live after having spent four or five years upon the rich, virgin soil of the west; still, I maintain there might be with very great advantage an inquiry made by the government, through the Department of the Interior which would enable the government to determine to what extent this movement of population from the eastern portions of Canada to the United States still goes on and enable it to do everything in its power to divert that movement from the United States to the North-west Territories. There is a discrimination against the citizens of the eastern provinces when he proposes to go to the North-west. He finds, that, whereas, the foreigner from Europe or the settler from the Unitel States is welcomed and every facility is put in his way to enable him to go with comfort, ease and cheapness to take up a home in the North-west, he is treated simply as a person who is perfectly well able to pay his way, and although he is, I think, by far the most desirable settler that can be found anywhere in the world to go into the North-west he finds that the transportation system of Canada is such as to discriminate against him. That is certainly not as it should be, but the reverse. It would be a very easy matter, to my mind, if a system of instruction were used to show to those persons who are dissatisfied with their conditions in the older parts of Canada the advantages of our own west; to secure a large proportion of these people and take them to the west. I do not know that the whole of them would choose, if a choice were left to them, to settle upon farms, but the men to be found in these older provinces are of the most adaptable character. The very large percentage of the population devotes itself to industrial occupations. The population produces a large percentage of mechanics and although the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Puttee) would seem to maintain that there was no need for any more mechanics in the country, it is impossible for me to make myself believe that any country which is increasing in population as fast as Manitoba and the North-west Territories does not present openings for a large increase in the percentage of mechanics. It is perfectly out of the question to suppose for a moment that where you have settled one hundred farmers you will not require ten or twelve men to minister to their wants just as they must be ministered to, because the farmer is a specialist. He is not a man who fills all his wants. His action is confined to the important business of producing as much wheat as he can out of the quarter section, or half section or section, which has been thrown into his hands. There is no country which offers such inducements for the farmer, and there is no country which offers such inducements to the mechanic whose business it is to minister to the wants of the farmer. Any one who travels through the older provinces may see on every hand evidence of a great movement of population. There appears to be a restless instinct in a man who is born on our eastern seaboard, which leads him to conclude in some fashion that there are prizes to be got by moving from home. It would seem almost as though a more restless population is not to be found in the world than that which occupies the eastern provinces of Canada. So soon as they come to manhood, so soon as they are masters of their trade and get their avocation, they seem to be prone to venture forth into new fields to explore the world and see what prizes are to be gathered. It is not uncommon, I regret to say, in the county in which I live, and it is the same in many other counties in the eastern provinces—to find farm after farm abandoned by the first settlers and now reverting into a state of wilderness. In these older provinces there is a country to which it would be the greatest possible advantage to Canada to bring in a population who would be content to farm upon these lands. They are not infertile. Although our country does not possess the amazing agricultural wealth of our western prairies it is still a fertile land. In no part of Canada to-day are to be found so many of the comforts and the pleasures and necessities of life, with the church and the school and the neighbour and everything that goes to render life pleasant and agreeable, as you will find in these older provinces. A long time must expire before one can suppose that even the most fertile part of the west can afford the settler a home in the same fashion that he would have it in the older provinces. There are features in that life which must make it attractive to one who is not a genuine pioneer, who is not prepared to rough it, who is not prepared to put up with a good many discomforts and a great many hours of loneliness in order to achieve success rapidly. There are conditions in these older provinces that would be most inviting to a large number of people who are living upon small holdings in the old country. If we could succeed in bringing upon the deserted farms of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, those who are at present living in Ireland and Scotland and England upon rented lands where they have to pay a large part of their earnings to the landlords, where they have learned that mixed farming to which our country is adapted, where they have learned to care for animals and where they have not acquired the desire for these huge crops, and these immensely wide fields of the west, but where they are accustomed to the smaller culture of smaller holdings—if that population could be induced into the eastern provinces to a certain extent, it would be well for Canada. I am afraid that there is a disposition to forget the needs of these older provinces and to devote nearly all the energy of the Immigration Department to the work of peopling the west. It is my experience that those who move from Nova Scotia to the west seem to have an ambition to get as far west as possible. If you talk to a person in the county of Pictou who is going to the west, he is not satisfied to go to the neighbourhood of Winnipeg; he has the idea to get as far west as he can, and the great desire of most of them is to stop nothing short of Edmonton. That disposition is not only common to those who are moving from the older provinces of Canada, but I think it characterizes the European immigrant as well, and if we could counteract that disposition and persuade a larger proportion of them to settle in the older provinces where they could procure at nominal prices farms which are perfectly capable of supporting a family in great comfort and of giving large returns to an industrious man who knows how to farm, we would be doing our country a great deal of service. It is true that our western friends are anticipating at a very early day the time when the balance of power in this country will be west of the great lakes, and they are reminding us constantly of it in this House. While they are a very fine people and while we would not like to see them disappointed in their aspirations—possibly if we have to have masters in this country we could not desire better than they—yet, I would think that it is very important to maintain the population of the eastern provinces without diminution. While it is desirable to see the west grow up it is just as desirable to see the population kept as large as possible in the eastern provinces. There are features in the west which we have not in the east, and there are features in the east which you cannot have in the west for a long time to come. There is a far more highly organized system of living in the east, which you cannot achieve in the west except by the expenditure of time and money. Therefore it is of the highest importance to Canada that the whole object of government should not be devoted to increase the population of the west, although I admit this to be a most desirable thing. It seems to me that if an effort were made to induce a large percentage of the immigrants to make their homes in the eastern provinces, Canada would be just as well served as she is at present by directing that tide of immigration to the far west. In speaking of the east I have to include Ontario, because while at one time we, in the maritime provinces, used to speak of Ontario as the west, I find that now when you get to the real west the people there speak of Ontario as the east. There is no question at all but that Ontario, Quebec and the maritime provinces are now the eastern part of this country. The condition of affairs in the whole east is that labour and population is being drained from it rapidly either into the manufacturing centres or to the virgin lands of the west, and there is an urgent cry in eastern Canada for labour. There is not in Ontario or in any part of the older provinces, anything like the number of men who are necessary to continue that condition of tillage which was formerly the rule. There is an urgent demand for labour in the older provinces and through sheer want of labour, a great deal of tillage which so largely contributes to the wealth and resources of the country, is being left undone.

The eastern part of Canada to-day is absolutely suffering from want of labour. That being the case, I must say that while we are willing to do everything in our power to build up the west, we really feel that the government of Canada should not neglect the east, and that some consideration should be given to the demand of the east for more people. I do not know that the government intends to be partial; but if any one takes up one of the atlases or one of the maps that are being published, he will find that while great prominence is given to the extraordinary, wide and wealthy country of the west, the older provinces are relegated to where they really fill the position that has been described as the shreds and patches of the confederation of Canada. A map has recently been published in which the plotting is done in such a fashion that all that delightful country in which I have my home seems to be moved some hundreds of miles towards the north pole, and is represented as lying away to the north of Winnipeg, Southern Alberta and Assiniboia. It is simply a result of the map-maker's method: instead of putting the centre of the forty-ninth parallel where it ought to be, about Lake Superior, it is placed away west of that, and the consequence is that the eastern provinces are set away up towards the north, which would naturally give one the idea that if he settled in that part of Canada he would be in danger of perishing from frost. Possibly that is an unintentional misrepresentation; possibly the necessity of utilizing and developing at the earliest date that country upon which we have spent so much money has unintentionally biased the map-maker's mode of thinking and feeling and depicting Canada when it is being presented to the population of Europe, from which we draw our immigrants. While we admit the greatness of the west, and join with those who express the hope to see that western country developed to an extent which will probably in the next fifteen or twenty years be most amazing and gratifying to those who live to see the results, still it seems to me that those of us who come from the east should occasionally raise our voices in this House and insist on having a certain amount of the attention of the Department of the Interior and of the government devoted to the work of keeping the population of these eastern provinces as much as possible at home; or, if it will not stay at home, diverting it to our own Northwest, and, in place of that population, bringing into the older provinces some of the people whom we can get from the British isles or the northern countries of Europe.

Perhaps the most desirable immigration going into the North-west to-day is that from the United States—that overflow, consisting partly of those who were once Canadians and who are coming back from the United States, and partly of those who have gone into Minnesota and Dakota for a time and are now moving into the North-west. That immigration is going into the country at such a rate that the government could probably dispense with some of the expenditure which they are devoting to attracting that immigration. The eastern provinces get none of that overflow, and the immigrants brought into this country from Europe by the machinery and the expenditure of the Dominion government do not stop in the eastern provinces, but are hurried off to the western part of Canada. But, in view of what has been done in some of our provinces in the east, I maintain that we cannot look upon that as a good thing, either for the immigrants themselves or for the country. There can be no doubt that if the Englishmen, Scotchmen, Irishmen, Finlanders or any other men from the northern part of Europe coming to Canada to make it their home, could be induced to spend a number of years in the eastern provinces, to become acclimatized, and to acquire a capacity of making homes for themselves anywhere, they could learn the business of living in Canada admirably in the older provinces, and then, if they moved to the west, they would go as very desirable settlers. There is no part of Canada where an immigrant could learn the duties of Canadian citizenship better than in the older provinces, where all the machinery necessary to make him a thoroughly well qualified Canadian citizen exists in great perfection. In the older provinces of Canada, while we have not the great fertility that exists in the west we have a capacity for maintaining a large population. The little province of Prince Edward Island maintains by far the largest population per mile that is to be found in any part of Canada. It has a population of fifty to the square mile, and if the most desirable parts of Canada had an equal density of population, Canada would contain a population of 100,000,000. Prince Edward Island is an exceedingly prosperous part of Canada ; it is a very fertile and productive country, and is most important to Canada. It has not only great powers of production, but those powers are being developed, not in that wasteful fashion that prevails in the west, where the whole business of the farmer is to produce enormous quantities of grain and ship it out of the country as rapidly as possible. In Prince Edward Island, as well as in a great part of the older provinces, you do not have that process of producing grain in enormous quantities and exporting it in a very wasteful fashion. You have, on the other hand, an organized industry. That grain is a raw material which is converted, through feeding, into butter, milk, cheese, pork and beef, and you have a condition of things far more valuable to the country in every respect than that in which we see the settler exhausting as rapidly as he can the fertility of his acres in order that he may export the grain he raises out of the country as rapidly as possible, and doing it all with the least expenditure of labour. In these eastern provinces we have conditions which make for the welfare of the country, and it would be to my mind most important that these older provinces should receive a large part of the care and interest of the government, and that as large a part as possible of the immigration to Canada should be turned into them and be induced to stay there as long as possible. I am pleased, of course, to note that at last we are beginning to receive a large increase in our immigration, and I am, to a certain extent, pleased to hear our friends from the west raise the note of warning against the admission into Canada of undesirable immigrants. I hope to hear from the Minister of the Interior that care is being taken to make use of the powers conferred upon his department by the legislation of this parliament to see that no undesirable immigrant is allowed to land in Canada, or, if he does, to see that he is deported. Great as is our power of assimilation, we cannot afford to receive disease, or filth, or weak intellects, or paupers. The attention of the minister should be directed to a careful sorting over of the people brought into Canada under the policy of the government. It is very gratifying to us to notice and to record the fact that even as compared with the United States our immigration has assumed such large proportions. In Canada we received last year some 65,000 immigrants, and the United States received something like 618,000. We have a population of about one-fifteenth that of the United States and are receiving immigrants to the extent of about one-ninth the number going to that country, so that towards Canada the emigration of the old world is being turned to an extent larger in proportion than to that country, which for the last fifty years or more has been the Mecca of every one who desired to improve his position by changing his country.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). I thought we would have heard from the hon. the Minister of the Interior. But for some reason or other he is not disposed to defend his policy or explain the weak features of it or say anything regarding it. I would have expected, after the arraignment of his policy by the hon. members for Alberta and Winnipeg, that he would have been disposed to say something in defence of the system of immigration which he has been conducting, and vigorously conducting, of late years. It has always seemed to me that we have erred very greatly with regard to our immigration policy. I admit that it is desirable our country should be filled up as rapidly as possible provided we get the right class to come to it, but I have always thought it much more important that we should use greater discrimination in our selection of immigrants than we have done in the past and be more anxious to have quality than quantity. We have a glorious heritage, but I regret that we are too anxious to fill it up rapidly as though it was utterly impossible ever to populate our immense prairies in the west. But while our fields appear to be illimitable, it will not be a great problem to fill them up, considering the overflow of population from eastern and continental countries seeking new worlds and the seventy million people to the south of us. We should therefore guard against being too eager to gain population irrespective of quality. Through our desire to populate our country rapidly, we are too ready to welcome the riff raff of every country in the world. Such a policy is not the best for the people who inhabit Canada to-day, nor will it bring about the best conditions for those who succeed us. The indiscriminate immigration that we are having to-day is to my mind full of menace to our people. It is one of the greatest of dangers that confront us. We are importing the undesirable elements of Europe and continental countries—people who know nothing about our institutions, who are not in any way to the manor born, who are aliens to the conditions of Canadian or American life, who are inbued with instincts and natures which have not in themselves any tendency to elevate humanity but rather to lower it in every particular. Yet such people are coming in by the hundred thousand, and every nation under the sun which desires to send its overflow to this country has our assistance. It does not matter whether these immigrants are diseased, or mentally or physically weak, they are welcome. Take the Doukhobors, we received them with open arms, just as we do the diseased or pauper classes who are bound to be a burden on our country. We count them all up and congratulate ourselves on their numbers and praise the government for the increase in immigration. We read week after week of such and such a steamer landing so many thousands in Halifax, and we do not ask who they are. We do not inquire whether they are physically, mentally or educationally suited to the country. Their elevation in the scale of morality or civilization appears to be a matter of indifference. We ask nothing of these important factors, but we say that the government are entitled to our thanks because two or three thousand of these Galicians or Doukhobors or Finns or Russian Jews or Poles or Mexicans have come to settle in Canada. Canada to-day is the dumping ground for the refuse of every country in the world. And the time will come, though it may not appear imminent now, when the social problems of life will press as heavily on us as they are doing to-day on the people in European and continental countries, and when it will tax the energy, ingenuity, intelligence, political astuteness and statesmanship of our people to provide some protection against the dangerous elements we are importing in such large numbers. The fear that our country will not be filled up soon enough is not well-founded. A comparison is usually made between our country and the western states, to show how rapidly their country was filled up—and how slowly ours. There is no use making comparisons between the settling of our western country and the filling up of the western states because the cases are not parallel, and you cannot draw any fair deduction from a comparison between them. It was not to be expected that our western country should fill up anything like as quickly as did the western states. The United States had, in the first place, a population of fifty or sixty million people, from which its unoccupied western states could draw settlement. In the eastern portion of that country, the population was becoming too dense and had to seek an outlet. The cities and towns and rural districts in the east were becoming overcrowded, and the surplus found a field for their energies in the attractive wheat fields of the west. It was therefore an easy matter to populate the western states, when they had these millions at home to draw from, besides the immigration from European and continental countries. Very naturally, with these sources from which to draw population, their country settled much more rapidly than ours. And because we have not been able to vie with them in rapidity of settlement, we are apt to think there is something wrong with the condition of our country or with the way in which we carry on our immigration. But I say that it is not a fair comparison, for they had fifty or sixty of millions of their own people to draw upon, while we had only three or four million. Many portions of their country were overcrowded while we were not overcrowded in any part of ours. Again, they had commerce in every part of the world, vessels going to all European countries, and naturally they would attract a larger number of people to their country than we would to ours. We were comparatively a home-staying people, having little commerce and little communication with European continental countries, and so could not be expected to draw from them as the United States did. Then, the United States had plenty of money to spend in immigration. She could spend hundreds of dollars where we could only spend dollars, so that in this respect also she has a great advantage.

We are reasoning on the same lines, while all these conditions have changed. We stand at the beginning of this new century faced by new conditions. The territory of the United States is crowded, and the people are looking for the virgin soil of new fields to settle upon, with conditions of climate, soil and institutions similar to their own. Therefore, we have now seventy-five millions of people to draw upon to fill up our country, whereas a few years ago the surplus population of the United States was settling in their own west. The advantages now offered by our country for a start in life are so much greater than those in any portion of the United States that, of necessity, the people must move to our country and settle here. We are glad to welcome these people, because we know they are very similar to ourselves. They are accustomed to the conditions of climate, soil and institutions of our country, and they can, with a little change of habit take up the responsibilities of life with us. And they make perhaps, some of the best settlers we can get. But they are coming whether we spend money among them or not. The land companies acting as immigration agents in St. Paul, Minneapolis, Duluth, Chicago, Detroit and Cleveland, companies that buy eighty, one hundred or two hundred thousand acres of land in Western Canada and sell it to the people of the United States through agencies in these great cities—these concerns have established themselves as immigration agents that are more profitable to us than any system of immigration that we can carry out in their country. That being the case, is it desirable that we should keep an army of immigration agents in the United States to-day? We are told that we have 280 agents who are working there upon commission and salary. If we were to dismiss every one of these but ten or twelve we should have plenty. And I believe we should have quite as many immigrants as are coming in to-day. They are making money out of us, but there is no reason why we should spend money for this purpose, because the immigrants would come in in any case. A few years ago we spent only $120,000 for immigration; and the oppositon of that day declared that this was too large an exepnditure. Last year we spent $560,000 and there is not half the need for the expenditure to-day that there was five, seven or ten years ago. Because of these other influences of which I have spoken which are sure to have immigrants whether our expenditure be great or small. We will get the immigrants in any case

Mr. SCOTT. And keep them. We used to lose them.

Mr. SPROULE. And keep them. There is no trouble in keeping the great bulk of them.

Mr. SCOTT. There used to be.

Mr. SPROULE. Because we had not the conditions of life that we have to-day. As we open up the country, build more railways, make the country more productive, and develop more manufacturing establishments that will give employment to people, there will be less trouble in keeping them. We are getting a very respectable class of people and we desire to get as many as we can of Irish, English, Scotch, German and French. All these we welcome because they make good and desirable immigrants. And I think we would be entitled to spend a reasonable amount of money to get a reasonable number of these people to come to our country. But we should exercise careful discrimination as to whom we allow to come in. I do not apprehend any danger from people of the races I have named, but I do apprehend danger from those coming from European continental countries where the degeneracy of human life is greater than in the others. If we exercised wiser precaution we would exclude many who now are allowed to come in. We find that last year we allowed to come in 3,934 paupers. I was struck with an experience I had a few weeks ago in Winnipeg. Three times in one day I was stopped in the streets by beggars. Who were they? Concerning two, I was told in most unmistakable way that they had landed in the country but lately and had nothing to live upon. I said: 'Why don't you go to work?' The answer was: 'The work here is not such as we have been accustomed to.' These are not the desirable class to have here. Then we admitted 704 diseased people. Have we not enough diseased at home, physically and mentally, persons who must remain forever a burden upon the charity of our people, filling our hospitals and almshouses, that we should take them from European countries? We are doing wrong in not exercising greater discrimination in preventing this class of immigration. We find that the United States rejected 4,534 from Canada and Mexico. What were they rejected for? They seemed to be good enough for Canada, but the United States rejected thm. We were told the other day that we sent back a few, but comparatively very few. There are a large number of these undesirable people in Canada to-day. We welcome people from England, from Ireland, Scotland, Germany or France, because we know what they are. They belong to the races to which we belong, they are men who will tend to the elevation of our population, and to the progress of our country. They are accustomed to our institutions, they are suitable to our climate, and we desire to get them. But there are many immigrants coming from continental countries that we do not desire to get, that we would be better without. Better a small population that are living under favourable conditions, that are happy and contented, than a country filled up with paupers. We are often told that we want population. If that is the great need to make a country great, go over to China and Japan and look at the conditions prevailing there—four hundred and fifty millions of people, the great bulk of whom are living in a condition worse than that of the brute beasts of our country, humanity almost too low to be called humanity, conditions of life below the lowest that prevail in our own country. Is that what you want to make of Canada. Is there nothing else to be desired but an immense population ? We must take into account how that population is employed, whether they are living in comfort, in contentment, whether they are educated. I say it is much better to be careful about the quality of our population; husband our broad acres for the overflow of our own country; be more careful about whom we allow to come in, and try to conduct the affairs of this country so that we may keep those who settle among us by affording them employment which will keep them happy and contented. In my judgment we need not incur a very heavy expenditure for immigration to-day, because we will get plenty of it whether we spend much or little. It is not the part of wisdom to send an army of immigration agents into foreign countries. We should be more careful to discriminate between those whom we allow to come into this country and those we keep out. Keep out those who are mentally and physically unsound and diseased. Above all things we should endeavour to keep that class of people out of our country. We have enough disease at home. The expenditure for immigration is entirely too large, in my judgment, and might be greatly cut down.

There is another thing to be regretted, and I have spoken of it before in this House. I have always regarded the custom of planting people in colonies as wrong. I think the immigrants should be mixed with our own people. We could teach them many things which it would be advantageous for them to know, but when you plant them in colonies they live according to the conditions of life at home, they are apt to keep all those habits which they brought with them from home and which might not be suitable for our country. We have not the opportunities of teaching them that we would have if they were mixed up with our own people. I believe there should be a fusion of races and population, and if we make a proper discrimination among those whom we allow to come here, the results cannot fail to be beneficial to Canada. We should never set apart so many townships for this colony and so many for that, so many for the Barr colony, or the Doukhobor colony, or the Galician colony, or the colony of Russian Jews. In my judgment that is wrong, and we will live to regret it. There is too much discrimination against our own Canadians. If we try to get people in from the United States, what do we do ? In the first place, we pay an agent a commission to bring them here. Suppose that agent goes over there and tries to bring in a family composed of ten individuals. There is a father and five sons. We pay him $3 a piece as commission to bring them here. Then take the mother, we pay $2 to bring her here; then take the three children and we pay $1 each, that is $23 to bring that family over here. We give them a ticket which enables them to get a reduction in transportation of at least $10. That makes $33 as the cost of bringing that family over here. Now take a family from Ontario, or Quebec, or Nova Scotia, or New Brunswick, or Prince Edward Island, how much do we pay them ? There is nothing for commission to get them to come. They desire to come, because they think they can better their situation. What assistance do we give them ? Not a dollar, but we give it to the foreigner. Therefore I say we are discriminating against our own people, who are the best people in the world that we could have to settle up that country. Again, we are sending out literature to all the world to induce immigrants to come here, but our maps are made over in Chicago. We have not intelligence and brains enough in Canada to make a map, and so the Minister of the Interior must go over to the United States and pay them Canadian money to make maps for us, which ought to be made at home. I do not care if we paid half as much more on a home-made map, so long as we spent our money at home. Let us keep our money and our labour in our own country, for our own people, and not spend it abroad. In these lines I think our immigration policy is deficient, and the people of Canada will condemn the Minister of the Interior and the department over which he presides for the way this immigration business is carried on. In my judgment it is wrong in many respects, and the government are entitled to censure for the system with which they are conducting the immigration business of our country to-day. It ought to be amended, it cannot be changed one hour too soon; otherwise, in the near future there will rise up a sentiment which no government can withstand, and which will oblige the government to change their system much more rapidly than they desire.

Mr. T. O. DAVIS (Saskatchewan). I am sorry to say that I did not have the pleasure of listening to all the remarks of the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Sproule), but I have heard enough of what he said, and of what has been said by other hon. gentleman on this question, to justify me in addressing the House for a few moments. The hon. gentleman has been discussing the question of the army of immigration agents that this government has employed at the present time in the United States. Now I want to say that from my knowledge of the army of immigration agents that have been employed in the United States, we are getting satisfactory results. He says that some years ago when his friends were in power they spent $100,000 on immigration, but, he did not tell the House what we got for the expenditure of that $100,000. I know what we got in one instance. We got a few Jew pedlars that were brought up to that country. Talk about paupers! I do not know what you would call them; they turned out to be criminals, because they were not long in the country before some of them were landed in the jails in Calgary, Winnipeg and other portions of Manitoba and the North-west Territories. As far as paupers are concerned my hon. friend said that he went to Winnipeg last year and that he saw a lot of paupers. He should have gone west previous to 1896. As a matter of fact we were nearly all paupers before the people turned the hon. gentleman and his friends out of power. There was scarcely any one else in the North-west Territories, and it is too bad that the hon. gentleman did not come up about that time. He goes on to say that he does not believe in colonies. Who introduced the system of colonies? The hon. gentleman's friends, and he, himself, because he was a member of the House at that time, first introduced the system of colonies, but the difference between their system of colonies and the system of this government is, that, whereas, every colony they established was starved out and the people had to leave, the colonies that are being introduced now are thriving and successful. I was amused to hear the hon. gentleman say that he believed in bringing in English immigrants. From the speech I heard the hon. gentleman make on a previous occasion, I did not think he was very much in favour of bringing in English immigrants into this country, because, speaking of a number of English immigrants that were brought in, he said that they were brought in from the slums of London.

Mr. SPROULE. When the hon. gentleman says I made use of any language that can reasonably be interpreted to mean that, I reply that I certainly never did.

Mr. DAVIS. I do not wish to allude to a previous debate, but if the hon. gentleman will read his speech delivered the other day he will see that I am correct. The hon. gentleman does not know what he does say.

Mr. SPROULE. I say it is entirely incorrect. I absolutely deny it.

Mr. DAVIS. If the hon. gentleman will refer to the debate on the Barr colony he will see that he said that a number of these colonists were taken from the slums of London. He objects to colonies. He says we want civilized people. Does he say that these people who were brought here by Mr. Barr, a lot of intelligent, clever and in many cases, wealthy people, are not civilized? I can tell the hon. gentleman that they are civilized, that they do not require to be spread over the country in order to be civilized and that if he will go up there and see them he will know that when making a statement of that kind he was speaking without a knowledge of the condition of these people. If the hon. gentleman really wants to encourage immigration from England to this country he is taking a very strange way of doing it by saying that a great many people that are brought in are paupers. My attention has been called to the debate in which the hon. gentleman made that statement to which I referred and I will read what the hon. gentleman said.

Mr. BELL. I rise to a question of order.

Mr. DAVIS. The hon. gentleman said:

> I need not say anything of the class of immigrants which were brought out, but I am told that many of them were picked up from the slums of London indiscriminately, and will be of little use in this country.

There is the hon. gentleman's own statement as to the character of the colonists brought out by this gentleman. The hon. gentleman seemed to have forgotten what he did say as to that, but the fact is that he has classed a lot of these very respectable people who have been brought out by Mr. Barr, who have settled in this country and who are doing well, as people who have been picked up in the slums of London.

Mr. SPROULE. I made that statement on the strength of what I saw in one of the papers. I have no reason to know whether it is correct or otherwise, but does the hon. gentleman say that to make the statement that many of them are brought from the slums of London justifies the allegation that I am opposed to immigrants coming from England?

Mr. DAVIS. If the hon. gentleman were as patriotic as he claims to be, if he were working in the interests of the country, if it were a fact that he wanted to settle the western country with English people in place of getting up in this House and making statements of that kind about people who are brought into the country he should inform himself as to the class of people which is being brought in.

Mr. SPROULE. I think I am tolerably well informed on that point.

Mr. DAVIS. An hon. gentleman assures me that if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) went up there and made that statement in the presence of some of these gentlemen there would be another battle of the Boyne. I want to read a statement by the Battleford 'Herald,' a paper published in the district in which the Barr colonists are settled, whose editor was in constant contact with them every day going into their tents and seeing what they were like. I may say that this is the leading Conservative paper of the district of Saskatchewan. The article reads as follows :

The Barr Colonists.

The Saskatchewan ' Herald ' of Battleford, the pioneer Conservative paper of the territories, in a recent issue pays a high tribute to the members of the colony promoted by Rev. I. M. Barr and also to the Department of the Interior for the able manner in which it extricated the colonists from the mishaps into which Mr. Barr had led them. The ' Herald ' says :

Where a few weeks ago there stood a couple of hundred bell-shaped tents, containing part of the British colony, there are to-day less than a dozen, and within the past few days nearly all the remaining Britishers, who have for various reasons not located, are now on lands which they have homesteaded. Many have small crops of potatoes and oats in, while others who delayed locating are now moving out their heavily laden wagons to their new homes.

Probably the most striking feature of the whole movement is the degree of perseverance shown by the new settlers. Despite troubles and trials brought on by being badly advised by the promoters of the colony, and weather as disagreeable as could be imagined, these people have, with the exception of two or three, all remained and braved the worst to reap the best.

Almost every difficulty in the way of the Britishers has now been removed by the government, who have decided no longer to allow Mr. Barr the right of looking after the people.

Through the efforts of Colonization Agent Speers all the difficulties which have been so prominent, have been removed and the Department of the Interior is to be congratulated on the able manner in which they rescued the sinking ship from destruction and put it afloat to glide on through years as prosperously as the picture of living in Western Canada was first painted.

That article appeared in a Conservative paper. I am sorry that the hon. gentleman has left his seat, because I am sure that after that he would come to the conclusion that these people were not taken from the slums of London, but that they are a very respectable lot of people.

Now, I want to say a few words in reference to the statements made by the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Bell) who spoke previous to the speech of the hon. member for East Grey. I would not refer to this except that the hon. member for Pictou alluded to the speech made by the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) and the speech made by the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Puttee). He alluded to these speeches as showing that perhaps western members were not satisfied with the class of immigrants they were getting in that country. I would gather from the speech of the hon. member for Pictou that he was not satisfied with a certain class of people going into that country, and he alluded to a certain class of immigrants brought in by the Department of the Interior and settled in colonies. Years ago when the Mennonites came into the west the same hard things were said against them, but to-day we have no better settlers than are these very same people. A few years ago a howl went up against the Galicians, and I am sorry to say that my hon. friend from Alberta (Mr. Oliver) joined in it, but to-day there is no person in the west who will say a word against the Galicians. They are a thrifty hard working people and they are helping us to build up that country. It was the open door in the United States which allowed every decent healthy man who could work to enter, that helped to build up that country. The back bone of the United States is not to be found in the people of the cities or those who work in the mines and go on strikes, but it is to be found in the farmers, especially the farmers of the west and they are the descendants of the men who were not acceptable to some people when first they landed on the American continent. We are getting a lot of these people from the western states into Canada, and I can assure the House that in view of their experience in the States we could have no better citizens. My hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Bell) said that the immigrants we brought to Canada cost us $9 a head. His figures are not correct, but suppose they were, let me remind him that every able bodied immigrant is worth $1,000 in cash, and as we got 125,000 last year who brought with them $12,000,000 in money and property, he will find that at $9 a head even, the investment is a good one. And yet, hon. gentlemen opposite are not satisfied. I wonder what would satisfy them? I suppose that if we reverted back to the old days when you brought a man into Canada by one road and he dodged out by another these gentlemen would be perfectly satisfied. They do not like to see a rush of immigration to the west. They do not like to see the progress and development of that country, because the fact is that the greater the development there the longer they will have to sit on the opposition benches to make pessimistic speeches. My hon. friend (Mr. Bell) is sometimes logical, but he got badly twisted in his speech to-night. He first told us that we should get the sons of the farmers in the east to settle in the west, and two minutes afterwards he said that we had not enough people in the east to carry on the ordinary tillage of the soil. I would like to know from the hon. gentleman how Canada is going to get rich by taking a dollar out of one pocket and putting it into another ? I would like to know from him how we are going to increase the wealth and population of Canada by removing it from one province to another ? He wanted us to spend money to take the people from the east to the west, and then he wanted us to spend money to bring them back to the east. That is neither logic nor common sense. Then the hon. gentleman tried to make out that some of the 125,000 immigrants which we got last year wandered into the United States. I can tell the hon. gentleman that I have been at the ports where these immigrants entered, and that my experience is that it would be very difficult indeed for an immigrant who comes to a Canadian port to evade the rigid examination made by the United States officers, and get back into the Republic. I may tell him also that the business people at these ports like to see the immigrants coming through Canada because they spend a certain amount of money there.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Are they loyal ?

Mr. DAVIS. You will have to ask my hon. friend from Grey (Mr. Sproule) that, because he is the custodian of all the loyalty that is to be found in the country. The hon. gentleman from Winnipeg (Mr. Puttee) complained that our immigrant agents in the old country were encouraging artisans and labouring men to come into Canada. Well, I have been living for twenty-three years in the west and I know the class of people who will succeed there, and I can tell the hon. gentleman (Mr. Puttee) that if a man is prepared to work and knows the value of a dollar, he will make a success in the west no matter what calling in life he followed before he came there. One of the most successful farmers in my district was a tailor in his early days, and we have another family of Scotchmen who never had hold of a plough before they came to that district, and to-day they are the most successful farmers we have. The people who are not successful there are the people who do not want to work. A few of these drift in and although we have a fertile soil and broad acres, yet if a man does not want to till the broad acres he cannot hope to succeed.

My hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Bell) stated that a great many Canadians were still leaving the country and finding their way across the line. I do not know where he got that information. From all the information I can get, I think that exodus has been completely stopped, and in place of our people going to the United States as they did a few years ago, when the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite drove them out, they are returning to the country as fast as they can come back. Of the people coming to my district, one-third at least are Canadians who left the country years ago, and some of them have told me that they left on account of the monopoly of the Canadian Pacific Railway and the land laws which were in force at that time. Now, they find things changed, and they are glad to come back to the country. If you want to make an immigration policy a success, you have to advertise. My hon. friend from Lennox (Mr. Wilson), who introduced this resolution, showed us a lot of papers, and he wished to lead the House to believe that we were wasting money in advertising. In the immigration business, as in any other business, you cannot be successful unless you do advertise. That is the foundation of all success. If we have a good country, we must let the people know what we have got, in newspapers, in pamphlets and in every other way. The next thing to do is to let the people see that the country can produce ; and that is what the government have done by showing at the fairs in the United States the classes of products which the country produces. The people naturally took an interest in these exhibits, and they are now coming in. My hon. friend says that the land companies are doing this immigration work, and that we need not do any more. But how did these land companies come in and invest their money ? Hon. gentlemen opposite were in power eighteen years, and I never heard of any land companies coming in during that time. The broad acres, instead of passing into the hands of the land companies in those days, were passing into the hands of the railway corporations, which have become rich in consequence. If these land companies are operating here, who can take the credit for that ? It is not hon. gentlemen opposite. If such a thing is true, the hon. Minister of the Interior and his department should get the credit for bringing that capital and those people into the country. Not only are they reaping the benefit, but the railway corporations to whom hon. gentlemen opposite gave millions of acres, are also getting the benefit, because their land which was formerly worth from fifty to sixty cents an acre, is selling for from $6 to $10 an acre to-day. With reference to what the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) has said, I never did agree with that hon. gentleman with reference to the class of immigration we are getting. I maintain that we are getting a good class of immigration. I said that in this House four or five years ago, and I think my statement has been borne out by the facts. These people are getting along, and are getting wealthy. While there may be something about the Doukhobors which we do not like, still only a few days ago they deposited in the bank $8,000 with which to get some things they wanted. The Galicians are going to make first-class settlers, and the next generation will be of such a character that the hon. member for East Grey would not know that they were Galicians.

Mr. SPROULE. How much did the Doukhobors try to corral last fall and deposit in the bank?

Mr. DAVIS. If my hon. friend had been there, he might have assisted. I say that the class of settlers we have got have been doing very well. We have been getting in good settlers. I do not generally deal in figures, but I have a few here which I have no doubt will please the hon. member for East Grey. I know he is interested, because he has told us that he would like to see more people coming in from the old country, although he has made speeches which, if sent there and circulated, would have the effect of frightening people from coming to this country. I do not think it was very patriotic. Alluding to what we are doing in Great Britain, in 1881-2 we got from the old country English settlers to the extent of 17,000, whereas in 1902-3 this number was increased to 41,000. My hon. friend must be pleased to know that the tide of immigration is setting in on this side, and if he would only make no more speeches of the kind he made the other day, we would be very well supplied. In 1891-2, 524 people left Glasgow for Canada. In 1902-3, 1,669 people left Glasgow for Canada, which shows that even in Scotland the good work has been going on. Last spring the hon. Minister of the Interior sent a lot of very respectable farmers, who had left England, Ireland and Scotland with very little means, and who had come to the North-west and made a good thing for themselves, to the old country, where they travelled around and met the right class of people ; and now we are getting the effects of that visit in increased immigration. If men can go over and tell their friends how they have prospered in this country, the people will take more stock in that than they will in advertising in newspapers. Some years ago the advertising was done in newspapers which the men we desired to get to this country never looked at. I do not know that the ordinary farmer who is likely to come out to Canada reads a three-dollar magazine. The Minister of the Interior and his staff have undertaken another system. They advertise in papers which the people read. There is no doubt that the 41,000 people we got last year will be increased to 100,000 in the near future, as the result of these various agencies. If the Minister of the Interior goes on in the way he has been doing, I anticipate that within two years, instead of having 125,000 people coming into that country, we shall have 300,000 coming in within the year. When the Minister of the Interior took hold of the department, there was no department at all. We were getting no immigrants. But after he had been in control for six or seven years, 125,000 people have come in at a very small expense. Hon. gentlemen opposite instead of criticising the Minister of the Interior, ought to express their satisfaction that he is doing good work for the country, and refrain from making speeches in which they allude to respectable people as being paupers gathered out of the slums.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. (Hon. Clifford Sifton). At this hour I am not going to detain the House with any very lengthy remarks upon the subject which has occupied our attention since five o'clock this afternoon, but there are a few matters concerning which it is only proper I should say a few words. Some of the remarks which were made by my hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Bell) require a little explanation, and I shall endeavour to make the facts clear. He referred to the expenditure per capita in the year 1900, and said that it was in the neighbourhood of $20 per head on the number of immigrants which came to Canada. My hon. friend has been misled by the fact that in that year a change was made in the method of keeping accounts from the calendar to the fiscal year, so that he has got the expenditure of the whole year on the number of immigrants who came in the half year. It is quite natural that my hon. friend should make this mistake, as the change in the method of keeping the statistics was not known. But I may tell him that the total cost that year was $9.22 and not $20 per head.

I want to say just a word or two with regard to the general question raised by the hon. member for Pictou with respect to the movement of population from the eastern provinces. I am not going to discuss the question as to what the policy of the government should be with regard to moving the people from the east to the west, because that has been discussed time and again, and there is in reality no serious difference of opinion in the House to-day. It is well settled that it is not wise for us to expend money moving people from one part of Canada to another. I have no hesitation in saying that so long as I am a responsible minister, I shall not be in favour of a policy of spending public money for the purpose of extending assistance to the citizens of the older provinces in order to enable them to move to another province. In the first place, because it would be depleting the population of the eastern provinces, and in the next place—and perhaps I regard that as the stronger reason—because it would be in a sense pauperizing our population, which would be an extremely unwise policy. I do not believe that the people of Canada desire that public money should be expended for the purpose of giving assistance to Canadians in the manner suggested; and so far as I am concerned, the giving of such assistance is wholly contrary to my ideas of a wise public policy. We have quite enough in this country of government assistance being extended in such a way as to remove from the individual that self reliance which is the foundation of all success, and I do not think it desirable that the Immigration Department should pursue work in that direction, which would tend further to sap that principle of self reliance without which there can be no success in any walk of life. One principle we have followed in the last seven years in connection with our immigration work has been that we have not given assistance to any person, except under the most pressing circumstances, and then when the circumstances were quite beyond the control of the person to whom the assistance was given. We find, as the result of our experience in dealing with people coming to this country, that the man who has started to come by means of government assistance is pauperised by the fact that he is imbued with the idea that if he does not succeed by his own efforts, the government will in some way see him through, and he is consequently not so desirable a settler as the man who comes determined to succeed by his own efforts and knows that no one will help him if he does not.

As regards the question of the difference in the cost of transporting the foreign emigrant from the sea-board to the North-west compared with the ordinary passenger or the native Canadian has to pay, I have from time to time attempted to get the railway companies to make some arrangement which would give the people of eastern Canada a similarly low rate as is given emigrants from foreign countries. Up to the present, however, the railway companies have not made any arrangements which can be described as fully satisfactory, although they have made arrangements for the moving of large numbers at certain seasons of the year at very low rates that the people who desire to come from Quebec, and particularly from Ontario, have been enabled to do so at just about as low a rate as the emigrants who come from the sea-board to the North-west.

My hon. friend referred to the movement of people from the eastern provinces to the United States, but if he will give the matter a little consideration he will come to the conclusion that this movement is not due to the fact that the people have not been made fully aware of the circumstances in the North-west or have not been supplied with all necessary information about that country. The reason is because they do not desire to follow an agricultural life. The reason is because they have been educated and schooled in such a way that, looking to the United States and seeing there opportunities for entering into various callings which they conceive more agreeable than the hard life on a farm, they decide to go there. We have had the same experience in the province of Ontario. Thousands of our young men educated in our high schools and grammar schools have gone to the United States, and no amount of effort on the part of any government in directing their attention to the agricultural resources of our North-west would have made any difference to them. At present, however, it seems that that movement has to some extent ceased, and there is a feeling on the part of our young men, particularly in the province of Ontario, in favour of agricultural life in the west. But it is because their views with regard to occupation have become changed, and they have been led to the conclusion that agricultural life in the North-west has possibilities with which they did not in former years credit it.

There have been very marked differences of opinion developed in the course of this debate, and inasmuch as no two members of this House have been able to express the same views with regard to our immigration policy, it can hardly be expected that the Department of the Interior will be able to satisfy the views of all the hon. gentlemen who have spoken. Upon the subject of the encouragement of the immigration of labourers, while I quite recognize what my hon. friend from Pictou says, that, under certain circumstances, it might be desirable to secure a movement of mechanics and labouring people other than agricultural labourers, to certain parts of Canada, yet the fullest consideration has not led me to the view that it would be wise to engage in encouraging such a movement. As a result, it has not been the policy of the department to encourage, nor has the department followed the practice to any extent whatever of encouraging, the movement of labourers to Canada, except agricultural labourers. We have not, under any circumstances encouraged or assisted in the movement of mechanics from any other country to Canada. But we have, especially during the last couple of years, devoted special attention to the encouragement of the immigration of agricultural labourers. So far as the remarks of my hon. friend from Winnipeg (Mr. Puttee) upon the class of people brought in is concerned, speaking particularly of the labourers who have been brought in, I cannot say I experience any great degree of sympathy with the views he has expressed. I am aware of the fact that certain organizations in Canada have persistently and consistently opposed immigration of all kinds under whatever restrictions or whatever policy. I am aware that these organizations, in some cases, have made strong statements as to the results. But, so far as the labouring people of the city of Winnipeg are concerned, whom my hon. friend represents, the prosperous and happy state they are in at the present time, enjoying an abundant demand for labour at liberal wages, is due almost, if not entirely, to the active immigration policy that has been followed by this government resulting in the opening up of the agricultural lands and the consequent growth of the city in which the workingmen reside. I can remember the time, possibly before my hon. friend was there, when the labouring men of Winnipeg were leaving the city; and it was because the agricultural population of the west was not increased, consequently the city was not growing and so there was no steady demand for labour. Since that time, owing entirely to the development of the agricultural lands of the west, the city of Winnipeg has been growing rapidly, and the very men who are opposing this immigration are the men who are reaping the greatest amount of benefit as a result of that work. And I venture to say for myself that I am prepared to take this stand, as I have done in the city of Winnipeg before these very men, and justify the policy I have followed: and I am prepared to show them that it is a policy from which they benefited more than any other people in Canada. My hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) has an original and highly interesting policy, if I am to gather that policy from the words he has addressed to us to-night. I take his suggestion to be to the effect that the government should take the money that we are spending for immigration purposes to furnish employment to the people at home. In other words, we should turn ourselves into a relief institution to pauperize the people of Canada by opening relief works instead of developing the country in a legitimate way.

Mr. SPROULE. I may say to the hon. Minister of the Interior (Hon. Mr. Sifton) that I certainly never intended to convey such an idea by anything I said. The hon. gentleman has misunderstood me, or else, I was not very clear in what I said. The only reference I made to anything of the kind was when I said that it was much better to have a country not with an immense population, but to have the people of the country industrially employed and living contented and happy.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I am a little like my hon. friend from Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis)—I am not surprised that my hon. friend from East Grey does not recollect exactly the statements he makes to the House, or may not have a very clear idea of the ideas he expressed. What he said was that we should take the money, instead of spending it on immigration and furnish employment to the people at home.

Mr. SPROULE. I deny that in toto. 'Hansard' when it comes up to-morrow will bear out what I say.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) did not intend to say it, I accept his statement of his intention. But he will surely admit that he sometimes makes mistakes, as he did in regard to what he said about the Barr colony the other day. It may be a matter of comparative indifference, what my recollection of the hon. gentleman's statement was. But let me point out that the policy of the department is to place these people upon lands in the western portion of Canada where they will be a developing and producing population and will become customers of the manufacturers of eastern Canada, who furnish employment to the labourers and mechanics, by giving them a market for the goods they produce—a legitimate proposition instead of a relief proposition or one that would pauperize the people at large.

I am not going to enlarge upon the fact of immigration into the western country; but just at this moment I desire to say a few words in regard to the class of people who are going there. I think that the 125,000 people who have landed in Canada and who, in the proportion, I should say of five to one, have gone westward and settled upon the lands of the North-west, would be surprised to learn, as they would from the remarks of the hon. member for Lennox (Mr. Wilson) and the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) and other gentlemen who have spoken in the same strain, that they are of diseased and criminal antecedents and are a most undesirable class of people. If these hon. gentlemen would take the trouble to go down, as my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Roche) has had the opportunity of doing, to see the kind of people they are talking about they would cease inflicting the pictures they customarily do upon the House in this connection. I make the statement that you cannot find anywhere, man for man, 125,000 better people than the 125,000 people who came to Canada during the past year. Take the people coming from the United States numbering something like 40,000 or 41,000. Any person who knows anything about these people knows that they are the very salt of the agricultural population of the United States. They are intelligent, capable, strong, healthy and progressive—the very class to make a successful developing population upon our western prairies. Of the English people who come I need say nothing. Our friends opposite, except when discussing the Barr colony, are very much in favour of the English immigration. But when we come to the continental immigration, we find objections taken, and we are told that these people belong to an undesirable class. But there is no class of people who come to Canada who are more capable of taking care of themselves than these very immigrants. They are the people who, of all others, from the day they land in the city of Winnipeg and are directed to the place they want to go, never give the officers of the department the least particle of trouble. Any gentleman acquainted with the movement of population in the North-west knows that the class who never give anybody any trouble and are never found trespassing upon the public for any support or assistance is this very class. So, I say in regard to the attitude taken by some hon. gentlemen toward these people, I take issue with them directly in their attacks. These immigrants are sober, intelligent, industrious self-reliant, and capable; and, according to the experience we have had for the last six or seven years of our work, there is no class of people that give the department less trouble or are more capable of taking care of themselves then these people are. If we did not receive that class of people where would the labourers come from? If it had not been for that class of people during the last three or four years, the magnificent crops that have been reaped in the North-west and have contributed to the wealth and prosperity of this country—and to which, is due, Sir, the great prosperity of Canada—would have lain on the ground, the grain would have been left in the fields to rot instead of being marketed and turned into the channels of commerce. These gentlemen appear to forget all these things. What happened last year, and the year before last? There was the very greatest difficulty, not only in the North-west, but in the province of Ontario, in securing the number of agricultural labourers that were necessary for the purpose of putting in the crops. This fall there will be the greatest difficulty for them in securing the number of labourers for the purpose of taking the crops off. Would the hon. gentleman have police stationed at Halifax to stop these labourers from landing, and allow the grain to rot for the want of their labour? That would be the statesmanlike policy the hon. gentlemen would like us to pursue; but I venture to say that inside of one week after a policy of that kind was pursued, the farmers of Ontario and the North-west would be prepared to vote this government out of power on account of its total lack of intelligence in dealing with a question of that kind.

Well, my hon. friend from Lennox (Mr. Wilson) is in serious trouble about the question of the health of the people that come in. It is a strange thing that nobody except the hon. member for Lennox and the United States inspector ever finds anything wrong with these people. Practically five-sixths of the people who go to the western prairies have passed through the hands of our immigration commissioner at Winnipeg, and nobody ever heard of their being ill or diseased. There is no suggestion that they do not belong to a desirable class of people so far as health is concerned. The only persons we hear that suggestion from is the hon. member for Lennox and his friend the United States inspector, Mr. Watchorn. If my understanding of the hon. gentleman's argument is correct, it is in effect that we should make such an arrangement as would allow the officers of the United States to decide who should come into Canada.

Mr. WILSON. I made no such statement. What I said was that we ought to enter into an arrangement with them, that we ought to have as much to say about it as the Americans, and that there should be a good understanding between the two governments.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That is precisely what I said. The hon. gentleman says that we should make an arrangement with the officers of the United States to the effect that if they thought a man was not desirable, we should also think that he was not desirable, and that consequently they should decide who should come into Canada. I have to say that as long as the department is under my charge the officers of the United States shall not decide who shall come into Canada, the officers of the Canadian government shall decide that. We consider that the officers of the Canadian government are just as competent as those of the United States government. We have power to make this inspection at the present time. A medical inspector is stationed at each of the ports of landing, a competent medical inspector. They are all presided over by a general inspector of first class professional attainments; and we have no reason whatever to believe that it is necessary that their inspection should be revised by officers of the United States.

Mr. WILSON. When was the medical inspector appointed at Montreal?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I cannot give the hon. gentleman the date.

Mr. WILSON. I may say that his deputy minister was before the committee as late as the 11th of June, and, according to his evidence, no one had been appointed there then.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The hon. gentleman may refer to the fact that the deputy minister stated there was no permanent appointment made. There has been an acting medical inspector since last December. So I say that so far as his proposition is concerned that we should put ourselves in the hands of the officers appointed by the United States Immigration Department and allow them to decide upon the management of our affairs, I do not approve of that suggestion, and I am not able to hold out any encouragement to my hon. friend that I am likely to follow it. If it can be shown in any way that the officers of the Department of the Interior, the medical officers appointed for the purpose of making this inspection, are not making their inspection properly, then I shall be happy to have my attention called to that fact.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman says: If it can be shown. How was it that there were 4,534 persons rejected by American officials on account of being diseased, and who proposed to go from Canada to the United States, if they had not already come in?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Where were they rejected?

Mr. SPROULE. They were rejected at the frontier.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Where?

Mr. SPROULE. Part, I understand, at Montreal, and part at Sault Ste. Marie, and others either in Winnipeg or at the boundary line.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. So that the hon. gentleman desires to argue that because, for their own purpose, it suits the Immigration Department of the United States to station inspectors all along the international boundary line from here to Vancouver, and they reject people that are passing from Canada to the United States for one reason or another, therefore we are to conclude that these are immigrants that were let in at the ocean ports by defective inspection on the part of our officers. Sir, I happen to know, as a matter of fact, that the inspector at Sault Ste. Marie would stop a man if he had a sore finger as soon as he appeared at the boundary line. There is no evidence whatever that these people are immigrants. It is known to be the policy at the present time of the Interior Department of the United States, for the purpose of carrying out the views of certain labour organizations in that country, as far as possible to discourage the movement of people into the United States. But what happens in connection with these officers? After these officers are appointed, you may be certain that when they make their reports they endeavour at least to make it appear that they have been doing something. They do not put in a report that would indicate that there has been nothing for them to do during the twelve months previous; and the result is, as every person knows who is familiar with what goes on wherever these officers are stationed, that people going from Canada are stopped on the most frivolous and ridiculous pretexts, they are stopped often times on the pretext that they have some disease. We do not propose to follow that policy, we do not propose to be dictated to in that respect by officers of the United States; we do not propose that they shall decide for us who are proper people and who are not to come into Canada. We think we can get officers who are just as competent as they are, and we do not feel that our inspection ought to be checked by the results of the inspections that are made by officers who may or may not be competent for the purpose. Let me further point out the system of inspection that is followed, and that was pointed out by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Roche). When a vessel enters the port the immigrants are examined by the port physician for all infectious diseases, then the physician of the Department of the Interior has instructions to make his examination, and when the immigrants land they are examined again. It is practically impossible that there should be any considerable number of people who would pass free of such inspection, for the simple reason that under our system, when people are landed from the ship, it is known where each group is going; they are taken in charge by officers of the department, and it is known practically where every man goes and what he does. So it is practically impossible, under our system, for any considerable number of people to stray away and avoid the inspection of our officers, and, as has been suggested, endeavour to get over the line under the pretext of having been destined for Canadian points.

I want to say a word or two in regard to the general plan of the work which we follow. A word or two will perhaps make more clear than a mere statement from myself respecting the results of the work, the fact that there is in reality a weeding out and selecting going on under our system of procuring immigrants, which is of the most effective character. In the United States and in England the system under which our advertising is carried on results in inquiries being made of our officers, and when these inquiries are made, either personally or by letter, the persons are advised to come to Canada or they are advised not to come, according to the view of the agent as to whether or not the person making the inquiry is a person who is suitable or a person likely to succeed. If, in the opinion of the agent, the person making the inquiry is not likely to succeed, he is advised not to come, and the result is that right at the primary point of our immigration system these inquiries are made, and that is the very best possible process of selection you could have. In regard to continental immigration, the work is carried on largely under the direction of the North Atlantic Trading Company, who are under contract with this government, who are a responsible company and who know perfectly well that if they send undesirable people they are liable to be sent back, and the expense of sending them back is charged to them.

Mr. MONK. How much per head does the North American Trading Company receive?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Five dollars for an adult and $3 for what is called a half ticket, or a ticket that is purchased for a person who is not an adult. This North Atlantic Trading Company is a responsible company under contract with the government. Our arrangement was made with them because of the fact that for several years the department had been in the habit of paying a bonus to steamship companies for this work on the continent of Europe. That policy was found unsatisfactory. It was found that we had no proper check on the class of people sent and we had no responsible body whose interest it would be to winnow out the persons who were undesirable and forward only the class of persons that we desired to get. After a good deal of discussion and consideration a contract was finally made with this company and the result is that during the last three years the work on the continent has been carried on under its supervision. The company does not make any special effort to stimulate immigration from the southern part of Europe but the most of its work is in the Scandinavian countries and of northern Europe. Although there is a certain amount of immigration that comes from central Europe there is not very much from southern Europe, none from Italy and practically none from France. The bulk of it comes from the countries north and east of those which I have mentioned. The North Atlantic Trading Company devote themselves chiefly to the Scandinavian countries. The immigrants which come as a result of their labours are listed and statements are sent to us showing the numbers, names and all particulars in regard to them so that we have an absolute check upon the people who are sent by that company. We know exactly who are sent to this country and in case any of these persons turn out to be undesirable we deport them and charge back against the company the cost of doing so. So, there is the very best system of weeding out and selecting that it would be possible to have. That is the reason why it is found, as the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Roche) has said, that when you come to look at these people you find that they are people who have been carefully selected. It is true that they are not all millionaires or college graduates, but, they are respectable, sober, intelligent and capable people and the result of their efforts after coming to this country shows that they possess these characteristics. I have very little more to say upon this subject, because I have only touched briefly, as I could only do at this hour of the evening, upon the important points that have been raised by the hon. gentlemen who have spoken in opposition to the policy of the department. I have just to say in general that I think, if hon. members of this House would give the subject a little consideration they will come to the conclusion that the result of the work of the department in connection with immigration during the last seven years has been that out of practically nothing we have built up a system under which we have been able to secure very large and very desirable acquisitions to our population. I think they will admit, however, that there is no work in all Canada at the present time which is more important or which is more conducive to the prosperity and greatness of the country and I think they will admit that anything that would stop the movement of population which is going on at the present time would be a national disaster to the Dominion of Canada. I cannot at this moment conceive anything which would have a more disastrous effect upon the Dominion of Canada than, for instance, at the end of this year to have it known that the movement of population and the filling up of our vacant lands, was about to cease and that this movement was about to stop. I do not think that any man who knows anything about the business situation of Canada would disagree with me when I say that it would be about the most disastrous thing that could possibly happen, and that it is the duty of the Department of the Interior to go on with the work which it has been carrying on, disregarding the more captious criticisms which have been made in regard to that work. Let me say one thing further and I will give to the members of the House my opinion on this subject which they can take for what it is worth. I have been identified with this work for six or seven years, and before I took office under this government I had an opportunity of paying some little attention to immigration work in connection with the government of the province of Manitoba of which I was a member, and more or less for the last ten or twelve years my attention has been directed to the subject. By devoting a very ordinary amount of intelligence to it, I think I should have been able in all that time to form an opinion that would be of some value. Whatever the value of that opinion may be I give it to the House for what it is worth. There are a great many people who think that at the present time, because attention has been directed to Canada, it is therefore unnecessary to spend any more money or keep up the work and the propaganda we are carrying on, that attention having been attracted to Canada to such an extent, if we ceased advertising and called in our agents the movement would keep on, that we would still continue to get about as many people in the country and that we might therefore look to continued accessions to our population without any further expenditure. I think that is an entire mistake. I think there could be no mistake possibly made which would be a greater mistake than that. I am perfectly convinced that if the Department of the Interior and other departments of the government withdrew from the work of encouraging immigration and disseminating information in regard to Canada and called in its agents within two years the movement would practically cease. We might get 10,000 or 15,000 or 20,000 people a year, but we would not get many more than that and they would be less desirable than the people we are getting in at the present time. It is the best of the people who come to-day.

Mr. BELL. May I ask the hon. minister how that statement that he has just made squares with the experience of the United States ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not think the experience of the United States is in point at all. I do not think that the United States have made any special effort to secure immigration. Any person who has at all considered that question knows perfectly well that the movement of population into the United States was not the result of any effort made on the part of the United States, but that does not prove that we would have the same experience. We know as a matter of fact that we have not had the same experience. I think I can prove to my hon. friend that my statement is correct and I can prove it by simply bringing to the attention of the hon. gentleman one thing that came to my attention. I thought it desirable in January to make an inspection of the immigration agencies in the United States and while I was there I inspected the agency at St. Paul. In that city we had an officer conducting an agency and when we came to examine his work we found the curious fact that he had received 200 fewer letters of inquiry during the month of December 1902 than he had in December 1901. I said to him : Every one here has been talking about the movement of population to the North-west, and the land companies have been filling the papers with advertisements, and I would have thought you would have five times the number of inquiries this month of December as compared with last. He replied : the explanation is very simple, we did not advertise in the month of November of this year and we did advertise in the month of November of last year; there was so much advertising by the land companies in the daily papers that I thought it would be safe not to advertise in the month of November, and possibly save that amount of money, but the result is that we have received 200 fewer letters. I mention this as an illustration of the fact that it is the experience of every officer in the department that just so soon as you stop advertising and circulating literature you stop getting inquiries, &c. I do not know that there is anything else that it is necessary to say, but I shall be glad to furnish information in detail when we go into Committee of Supply.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Immigration, $110,000.

Mr. WILSON. The minister stated the other day that the expenditure was $568,800, but the total amount asked for in the estimates is $643,000. What is the explanation of that ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The amount given in the answer was the amount which had been actually expended up to that time. When these supplementary estimates are passed and the bills paid the total expenditure will be $643,000.

Mr. WILSON. The answer was misleading because the minister must have known very well that the information I wanted was the actual expenditure.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We gave what we understood the hon. gentleman asked for.

Mr. MONK. The discussion on this matter has lasted for several hours and I believe a great deal of good has come of it. I would suggest in view of the lateness of the hour that we should pass this item and perhaps the two small ones, and that the item of $483,000 be reserved as there must be considerable discussion on it.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That suggestion is quite satisfactory.

Mr. WILSON. Will it be understood that we may discuss the whole thing at any time.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The vote is a general vote and includes everything.

Mr. SPROULE. How many agents are there in Great Britain and foreign countries ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The number is thirty-seven.

Mr. SPROULE. That number does not include the commission agents. It would be very interesting if the hon. gentleman could give us a list of all these agents, their names, where they are employed, their salaries, commissions and expenses.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I can give a list of the salaried agents now. It would take a little time to figure out the other information, but we can get it.

Mr. SPROULE. Could not the hon. gentleman furnish it within the next few days without taking the time to do it to-night ?

Mr. BOURASSA. I may say that at the beginning of the session, at my request, there was a report brought down to the House, giving the names of all the agents, their salaries and travelling expenses.

Mr. WILSON. My impression is that that was given to the committee so far as the United States agents were concerned. But I understand that the hon. member for East Grey wants the same information with regard to the old country agents. I understand that you have commission agents there.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Just a few. I understand that the hon. gentleman wants a list of the commission agents in Great Britain with the commissions they are paid ?

Mr. WILSON. Yes. We also want a list of the agents on salary, and their salaries and expenses.

Some resolutions reported.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. MONK. Will the hon. gentleman give us the order of business for to-morrow ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. One or two of the Bills on the Order Paper we may be able to take up. At an early stage we will resume Supply, and the Minister of the Interior will continue his estimates.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12.20 a.m., Wednesday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, July 15, 1903.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

THE ATLANTIC AND LAKE SUPERIOR RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. GEORGES BALL (Nicolet) moved that that portion of the eighth report of the Select Standing Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines, reporting the preamble of Bill (No. 36) respecting the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway Company not proven, be referred back to the said committee for further consideration.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Was not this motion disposed of yesterday ?

Mr. SPROULE. That was another Bill.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think that was concerning the Ottawa Valley Railway.

The PRIME MINISTER. I do not think any notice of motion was given, therefore I take the point of order.

Mr. BALL. It was given, and I am all right. This Bill is similar to that which was presented in the session of 1901, and the Mr. Galyndez who is mentioned therein is the same party who is presenting it this time. He was asking to revive the Bill of the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway, which had lapsed. His request was granted, and the Bill was revived with some amendments. Mr. Galyndez having shown his good faith in living up to the conditions of the previous Bill, the House should accept the present Bill without amendment. The proposition was to have the railway run from Sorel to Lévis, and from Paspebiac to Gaspé Basin, on the Baie des Chaleurs side. In 1899 the company asked the government for subsidies to enable them to finish the road. They asked for a subsidy from the River St. Francis to Chaudière Junction, or to the Quebec bridge, and again for subsidies from Caplin, on the Baie des Chaleurs side, to Gaspé Basin. The government then had not much confidence in the company, and I do not suppose they have much now. They did not want to grant the request entirely, but they granted subsidies for thirty miles of road from Caplin to Pasbebiac and from Pasbebiac to Gaspé Basin. subsidies were granted to another road not named. For the eastern portion, instead of granting aid to the Atlantic and Lake Superior, they granted aid to another company in which they had great confidence, the South Shore Railway Company, which was represented by a gentleman named Mr. Hyacinthe Beauchemin, of Sorel, who was representing Mr. Tourville, Mr. Leduc and Mr. G. M. Fortier. Mr. Beauchemin was the managing director. So the government, instead of granting subsidies from St. Francis to Chaudière Junction, granted them from Sorel to Lotbinière, a distance of eighty-two miles. The subsidies were apportioned as follows : 82 miles at $3,200 per mile, making $262,000 ; and for the bridge opposite Sorel, on the Richelieu river, $35,000 ; for building a bridge across the Yamaska river, $50,000; for building a bridge across the St. Francis river, $50,000; for building a bridge across the Nicolet river, $15,000; in addition to $16,000 voted before and paid which make $31,000. The Quebec government had previously granted to the same road $50,000 to erect a bridg opposite Sorel on the Richelieu river; about $80,000 to build a bridge on the St. Francis and Yamaska rivers ; and $32,000 for the Nicolet river bridge. The city of Sorel had also granted $50,000 for the same road, making in all $604,000. You would think that after all these favours from the government this company would have built the road very quickly. On the 27th of September, 1899, we had the pleasure in Nicolet of a visit from the right hon. Prime Minister (Right Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). He was invited to assist at the banquet to his old curé, Mr. Suzor, who had been fifty years in the priesthood. At that banquet and in the presence of about 300 priests, bishops, members of this House, members of the Quebec legislature, and especially the members for Yamaska, Arthabaska and Nicolet, the right hon. gentleman made a statement. After congratulating his old curé and friend on his long life in the priesthood and the friendly relations that had during that time existed with his curé, he turned towards the bishop and here is the statement he made :

(Translation.)

My Lord, I am happy to convey to you the good news that, in the fall of the year you will be able to travel by rail from Montreal to Nicolet, as the South Shore Railway will then be completed to Nicolet.

The bishop answered :

I am very happy to hear this good news from the mouth of the Prime Minister. I will take notice of it and I will remember in due time.

That was four years ago and not only has the road not been finished as far as Nicolet, but not one inch of the road has been built from Sorel to Nicolet. Some of the road has been built but it was built before that time. The subsidies granted for these eighty two miles of road covered the portion of twenty four miles which had already been built and for which subsidies had previously been paid ; subsidies therefore being paid twice for the same twenty four miles which are as follows : from Sorel to Yamaska—105-7 miles, from Yamaska to St. Francis, 6½ miles, and from Nicolet to St. Gregoire, 6¾ miles, or a little over twenty-four miles, leaving fifty-eight miles to be built. The portion from Sorel to Yamaska was built and trains were operated upon it. It was in good running order. From Yamaska to St. Francis the road was completed and all they had to do was to renew the ties. From Nicolet to St. Gregoire the road was in the same shape. The ties had to be renewed and at St. Gregoire a trestle had to be built. From St. Francis to Nicolet, eighteen miles, the dump was nearly all made and the right of way paid for. I suppose this will compensate for the 6½ miles and the 6¾ miles of road where the ties had to be renewed; so, that you may say that there were twenty-four miles completed, leaving fifty-nine miles yet to be built, and taking the subsidy of $604,000 for that portion it makes about $10,500 per mile. One would think that this road would have been built but it has not. Let us go now to the Baie des Chaleurs. I suppose some of my friends are very anxious to see me go down there. Mr. Galyndez got a portion of the charter of the company revived permitting the construction of thirty miles of the road from Cap Lin to Paspebiac. The government did not grant any more aid because they had no faith in that gentleman. What becomes of the portion from Paspebiac to Gaspé Basin ? There is a company formed to obtain a charter for that part of the road, not with the intention of building it, but to sell to Mr. Galyndez, as they think he is a responsible man to build the road. The name of that company is the Atlantic, Quebec and Western Railway Company. Is this company more bona fide than the South Shore Railway Company ? The Quebec, Atlantic and Western Company have a charter from the Quebec government which they allowed to lapse without even surveying a mile of the road, but this year they came here for a federal charter and the government was good enough to grant it. Now, Mr. Speaker, when you know the three companies that were granted subsidies you can easily judge which is the most meritorious. The South Shore Railway did not build an inch of the road, but deceived the government and deceived everybody else. Neither did the other company build the road, but Mr. Galyndez, between the summer of 1901 and the fall of 1902 completed his thirty miles of the road to the satisfaction of the government and to the satisfaction of the people of the vicinity as well. It is not asking too much that this charter should be revived. It may be said that this company owes a great deal of money to labourers. That is true. But, Sir, these people, if they were not living happy were at any rate sleeping all right. However, some time ago the member for Bonaventure (Mr. Marcil) thought that they lived too happily, and so he put a sword in their hearts and twisted it so as to shake them up. He created an agitation, called on them to file their accounts with the Dominion government and promised that they would be all paid. Well, since that time these people are not sleeping so well. Sometimes they wake up with a great hope that they are going to be paid but the next day they are disgusted when they find they are not. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Marcil) promised them lots of honey and milk, but he has not been able to deliver the goods. He wants to prevent Mr. Galyndez from building the road, and so to kill the cow which gives them the milk, and as for the honey he is acting like the bumblebee, which makes a good deal of noise, but very little honey. If he wants to make his constituents happy I will give him a little bit of advice. The Quebec government owes the company $110,000, and if the hon. gentleman, with his great prestige and influence, brings it to bear upon the Quebec government and persuades them to pay this money to the poor people they will be as happy as possible. Some one wanted to murder the Bill on its second reading and I telegraphed to Montreal to find out the exact amount the Quebec government owes to this company. I got this reply from the president of the company, dated the 14th of April last :

Geo. Ball, M.P.,
House of Commons,
Ottawa.

By the Conversion Act of 1897, the Quebec legislature converted the Baie des Chaleurs deferred land grant of 800,000 acres at seventeen and a-half cents making $140,000 in cash. Under guarantee agreement company deposited this amount with the government to be repaid as work progressed. About $30,000 was paid on account of wages and the balance of $110,000 has never been paid by the government although the work has been done.

It was specially set aside for payment of wages and help. Had the Quebec government carried out its obligation no workman would have waited a day for his money. The government refused to pay and refuse to allow the company to use it.

Now listen to this and it is most important :

The Dominion government has never paid a dollar of subsidies to the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway Company.

This government never paid a dollar, although they grumble a good deal and on the other hand they paid lots of money to the South Shore Railway Company without any grumbling.

While the shareholders have paid up more than half a million of dollars.

The company presented a petition of right to the Quebec government on the 7th of August, 1900, but received an answer on the 16th that the fiat would not be granted to them. So they kept the $110,000 to make a surplus every year.

Now, I would call on the Liberal party to help me to pass this Bill through. I have heard that it is a very fair party. On the 4th of April last I happened to put my hand on a newspaper called 'Le Canada,' and I read on the fourth page of that paper the programme of the Liberal party. I will read a part of that programme:

(Translation.)

Faithful as we are to the traditions of the Liberal party which we represent, we disclaim any idea of enslavement. As stated not long ago, in the House by our leader, Sir Wilfird Laurier, it is not a principle with us Liberals that all minds must be cast in the same mould, that all wheels must revolve in the same groove that we must act like a flock of sheep, and wherever one jumps, the others must follow. That is not our standard of excellence.

Now, gentlemen, here is an opportunity for you to show that you are in earnest. We will see whether the hon. gentlemen are all going to pass through the gap made by the hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Marcil) and the hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Lemieux), who have jumped past the wall, so far as the proprieties and the rules of this House are concerned, in their attempt to kill this Bill in the embryo.

Mr. SPEAKER. (Translation). I would ask the hon. gentleman to address the Chair.

Mr. BALL. Now, Mr. Speaker, do you not think we deserve to have this Bill granted, after what this paper says about the Liberal party? I would not sit down without saying a few words in regard to Mr. C. N. Armstrong. I am sure the House would not be pleased if I did not do so. I was here yesterday and heard the discussion, and I heard what some of the speakers said about that gentleman. I do not see what the Liberal party can have against Mr. Armstrong. He never says anything against them—never a word. All I know that he has done for the Liberal party has been that he gave $100,000 of the money of the Baie des Chaleurs Railway to Mr. Pacaud, of Quebec, to bring out the election in favour of the Liberal party; that is to say, the most of it went there, and the balance went to pay some of his Liberal friends' notes; and you would be very much surprised if I were to give you some of the names. My hon. friend here (Mr. E. F. Clarke) is afraid I will name some of them. He need not be afraid.

Mr. CHARLES MARCIL (Bonaventure). Mr. Speaker, I must object to this motion on the ground that this Bill came before the Railway Committee, was discussed at length there, and was thrown out both this year and the year before. I am sorry that the time of the House should be taken up again with this question; but I am unable to allow the statements of the hon. member for Nicolet (Mr. Ball) to go down on 'Hansard' without contradiction. I represent the constituency which is chiefly interested in this railway, though other constituencies are also interested in it, and I would not like the hon. gentleman's statements to go unanswered and unchallenged. I have the greatest respect for the hon. gentleman. I believe he himself is one of the victims of the gentleman he mentioned in his speech, and if I could assist him personally in any way, I would gladly do so. But we are now dealing with the public interests, and it is impossible for me to allow this Bill to go through, and to allow the charter of the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway Company to be revived, for reasons which are best known to the country and the House. The Bill under consideration at present is for the purpose of extending for five years the powers granted to the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway Company in 1893-4, which expired in 1899 and were partially revived in 1901. This Bill (No. 36), is to revive those powers, which gave the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway Company the right to build a road from Gaspé basin to Sault Ste. Marie. The report of the Railway Department says this was done by the company entering into an agreement with certain companies named for the purchase or lease of their railways, in whole or in part between the points named. Agreements were made by the company for the purchase of the Baie des Chaleurs Railway, for utilizing the bridge of the Montreal Bridge Company, for the purchase of the Great Eastern Railway between Yamaska and St. Gregoire, and for the purchase of the Ottawa Valley Railway between Lachute and St. Andrews, and ultimately extending to Sault Ste. Marie. This project has fallen to the ground years ago, the company has no legal existence, and the only railway that is operated is the old Baie des Chaleurs Railway. The Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway Company, in 1900, being unable to meet its obligations, unable to pay interest on the amount of money which had been advanced to it, transferred its road over to trustees represented by Mr. Galyndez, mentioned by the hon. member for Nicolet. These trustees have been operating the Baie des Chaleurs branch of the railway during the last three years. The rest of the railway never had any real existence. The Ottawa Valley portion was dealt with yesterday, the Montreal Bridge portion was dealt with by the House last year and was withdrawn from the Railway Committee this morning, so that the only portion of the road, which really has any existence, is the Baie des Chaleurs portion, and that is now transferred to trustees. In face of these facts, is it possible to revive all the powers of the company from Gaspé Basin to Sault Ste. Marie for five years, and to add to these powers the permission to this company to connect with the Grand Trunk Railway, the Jacques Cartier Union, the Grand Trunk Railway Pacific, the Canadian Northern Railway, the South Shore Railway, the Algoma Central, the Hudson Bay, the Central Counties Railway Company, the Guelph and Grenville and St. Chrysostôme Railway? Here is a company, which is to all intents practically insolvent, whose notes were sold last year, or the year before, in the city of Montreal at auction at five cents in the dollar, after having been negotiated at the Ville Marie Bank, and the negotiation of that paper brought about the failure of that bank and sent its cashier and the broker who negotiated the notes to the St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary for seven years each. These people, represented by Mr. C. N. Armstrong, who is the chief mover in this instance, are asking parliament to revive the charter. What have they done to entitle them to a revival? Let me speak of the Baie des Chaleurs section, with which I am most conversant and in which I am primarily interested. They took over that company and gave it a new name. They constructed thirty miles, and the hon. the Minister of Railways and Canals has to-day in his possession affidavits to the effect that $226,000 are due the people of Bonaventure for labour and material and right of way. This company has transferred the road to trustees. These trustees appealed to me after my election to try and induce the Dominion government to revive the subsidy on the thirty miles of road, which subsidy had not been paid, the Dominion government refusing to pay anything to Mr. Armstrong. Overlooking the fact that this company had been used as a political machine against me in the election, and looking solely to the interest of the county I have the honour to represent, I asked the government to revive that subsidy on the thirty miles of road. That was done, but it was especially stipulated that the payments should be made by the Railway Department, first, to the Hamilton Bridge Company for four bridges when erected; in the second place, to the trustees when they made proof of the work they had done; and the remainder to the labourers, according to their claims. These works have been completed as required by the engineer of the Railway Department. These trustees, without putting one dollar of their own money into this new work, secured an advance from the Banque Nationale and are now at the door of the Dominion treasury claiming $136,000 for the completion of this portion of the road, leaving but $16,000 to meet the $226,000 claims which I have mentioned. The hon. member for Nicolet (Mr. Ball) appeals to this House on behalf of Mr. Galyndez. I must say that since Mr. Galyndez has operated the road, he has paid his labourers and train men, which was a thing unheard of under the regime of Mr. Armstrong. But Mr. Galyndez put none of his own money into the building of the thirty miles. The only work done has been done out of the subsidy voted—Chap. 26 of 1901. It was my duty to oppose this claim of $136,000, leaving only $16,000 for labour. I thought that that was not fair to the people who had built the road. The trustees ask for not only the complete subsidies but a double subsidy, when two-thirds of the original work done by the people remains unpaid. I know that there was an understanding with the trustees that they should be paid for the work performed on the last thirty miles, but, as far, as I understood it and as far as the government understood it, that work consisted in putting up four bridges and building two miles of road. These two miles between New Carlisle and Paspebiac are not operated by this company, and yet we see in their accounts a claim for $136,000. It would be unfair and unjust and unbusinesslike to take into consideration this Bill, which was very properly thrown out by the Railway Committee. Some days ago Mr. Galyndez was called to Montreal to testify as witness in the case of John Mason vs. C. N. Armstrong. Mr. Galyndez stated that during the last three years he advanced sums ranging from $3,000 to $3,500 per annum to Mr. C. N. Armstrong, so that Mr. Armstrong has drawn in the last three years out of the Baie des Chaleurs subsidy the sum of $10,000, when $226,000 remained unpaid to the labourers who built the road, the farmers who gave the right of way, the boarding-house keepers who boarded the men, and the merchants who furnished the supplies. I want to point out this fact that nine-tenths of all the claims against the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway are from Conservatives in Bonaventure, who trusted Mr. Armstrong and his company. The hon. member for Nicolet (Mr. Ball) has said that no subsidy has been paid the Atlantic and Lake Superior Company. That is the case, because that company has no existence. But the various roads that go to make it up have received $1,643,644 from the Dominion and local governments. They have received from the federal government, $696,145; and from the local governmnt, $947,499; making a total of $1,643,644 for 100 miles; and $226,000 remain unpaid on thirty miles of that road alone. The claims on the seventy other miles I have never been able to induce the government to take up. The people of Bonaventure and Gaspé are anxious to have railway communications. The Conservative government of 1882 recognized that Gaspésia is entitled to railway communication and undertook to build the first twenty miles from Metapedia down to Gaspé, provided the cost should not exceed $300,000. No tender was offered below $300,000, and the following year the administration was induced to give over the construction of these twenty miles to a company. That was the beginning of the misfortunes of the Gaspé peninsula and the inauguration of the series of scandals which have since then become a by-word of the railway history of Canada.

I stand to-day representing that constituency, and I know that the constituency of my hon. friend from Gaspé, which adjoins mine, will ask what I ask. I ask this House to decide that the time has at last come when this government should see to it that the people of the peninsula of Gaspé, comprising the counties of Gaspé and Bonaventure, should have their fair share of justice, that some of the benefits that have been thrown so liberally, so generously to every nook and corner of this Dominion should be extended to that portion of Canada. The peninsula of Gaspé is inhabited by a hardy, worthy sea-faring people, whose ancestors were among the first to settle in Canada, the land having been discovered by Jacques Cartier himself. It is one of the oldest settled portions of Quebec and of the Dominion. The time has passed when that population should be left at the mercy of these railway schemers, railway promoters and all kinds of charter-mongers. I appeal now to the government to take up this question and to solve it once for all. The road has reached Paspebiac; let it be carried to Gaspé Basin. That is one of the most beautiful ports in North America. It is open ten months in the year. It was visited in 1860 by our present sovereign, then Prince of Wales. When ascending the St. Lawrence his ship and the accompanying fleet were caught in the storm, and they sought shelter in Gaspé Basin. Further up the coast we reach Paspebiac from which, during nine or ten months of every year, sailing vessels leave on trading voyages to the West Indies, South America, the Channel Islands and many other parts of the world. We have a magnificent soil; we have splendid fisheries; we have a climate unsurpassed. The hardy and worthy people living there numbering fifty thousand souls have done their share to build up the Dominion of Canada, they have contributed to the construction of our railways and our canals; and yet, in some of the remote parts of the peninsula of Gaspé, but for the mail carrier they would be altogether ignorant, so far as personal experience is concerned, of the very existence of this federal government. Is that the justice that should be meted out to these people? I ask that this motion be thrown out and that the time of this parliament be no more taken up with schemes of this kind; I ask that this chapter in the history of the peninsula be closed; and I appeal to the members of this House to extend to the Gaspé peninsula the justice to which it is entitled.

Mr. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Gaspé). I heartily concur in the remarks made by my hon. friend from Bonaventure (Mr. Marcil). I know that no more determined champion of our rights could be found, nor one more eloquent. He represents the sentiments and opinions of the vast majority of our electors. The county of Gaspé has been denied with a portion of the county of Bonaventure, the benefits of railway communications. I believe the time has come at last when the Dominion government should give our electors the help toward the construction of railways that they require. But the question before you, Mr. Speaker, is not the necessity of getting some help from the Dominion government for building said railway, because I am sure that my hon. friend (Mr. Marcil) and I can succeed in convincing the leader of the House and the next Minister of Railways and Canals that the Gaspé Peninsula is entitled to its railway. But, Sir, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ball), who represents the county of Nicolet, my old friend, asks this House to refer back to the Committee on Railways and Canals a Bill which has already been thrown out three times by that committee. I think it would be a reflection on the Railway Committee if this Bill were referred to them again. This question was discussed in 1899, when Mr. C. N. Armstrong, the chief mover in these railway schemes was present in the committee. I remember very well that Sir Charles Tupper, leader of the opposition at that time, was present. He did not know Mr. Armstrong, but he was simply humiliated on learning there and then the several nefarious schemes of Mr. Armstrong and nothing remained for him to do but to indignantly withdraw his support from him. Later on, Mr. Armstrong came back to get his charter revived. It was again thrown out by the committee. This year, my hon. friend (Mr. Ball) who, I know, is quite disinterested in his attitude, because he himself has been one of Mr. Armstrong's victims, has tried once more to have this charter revived. The hon. gentleman did his very best to convince the committee that the charter should be revived, but he knows very well that he could not succeed, and even had to withdraw his Bill.

Mr. BALL. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lemieux) permit me to ask him a question, in case he may not speak again? Has he heard that the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair) resigned because he heard that Mr. Armstrong was interested in the Grand Trunk Pacific Bill?

Mr. LEMIEUX. The question needs no answer, Mr. Speaker. To proceed with my argument, I was saying that the principle involved in this Bill has been voted down by the Railway Committee on three different occasions. I may say further, that the Baie des Chaleurs Railway question was settled by the electorate of the province of Quebec in the election of 1897. Would you believe it, the government of the province of Quebec, in 1897, while one of Mr. Armstrong's friends was Prime Minister—I refer to Mr. Flynn—gave Mr. Armstrong a guarantee of bonds to the amount of $8,000,000, to help him in reviving the very railway scheme that we are now discussing? The province of Quebec was shocked—yes, it was simply shocked—at the intention of the Flynn government to guarantee such an amount for Mr. Armstrong. And I may say that the verdict of the month of May, 1897, was nothing else but a vote of censure against the Quebec government for having dared to countenance such a scheme. Therefore, the sentiment of the electorate of my province is opposed to any railway scheme fathered by Mr. Armstrong or by any of his associates. The hon. gentleman has said that some other railway companies have been formed and intended to build the line from Paspebiac to Gaspé Basin. That is the case. When we saw that it was useless to expect anything from Mr. Armstrong, or from Mr. Galyndez, who has succeeded Mr. Armstrong, some of the gentlemen who are interested in the welfare of Gaspé Peninsula formed a company and obtained a charter from the Quebec government. Owing to the unsavoury railway schemes which originated in that part of the country during the last twenty-five years, the Quebec government, the Parent government, inserted in the Bill, a clause which was very stringent. The present Act of incorporation was granted under the following express conditions :

1. That the works authorized by this Act shall be commenced in good faith within a delay of two years from the sanctioning of this Act, such commencement to be evidenced by the construction of at least ten miles of road.

2. That the whole road shall be constructed within a delay of five years from the sanctioning of this Act.

3. In default of the accomplishment of either of these two conditions, such default shall, pleno jure, mean the forfeiture of all rights, powers and privileges granted by this Act.

4. This Act shall come into force by the proclamation of the Lieutenant Governor in Council after the company has given evidence of their ability to carry out the works authorized by this Act.

The delay for the beginning of this construction expired at the end of March last. On account of the South African war, the capitalists interested in this railway company could not raise the funds on the other side, and they had to ask the revival of their charter from the Quebec government. They went before the Lieutenant Governor in Council, as provided by the last section of the Act, and they gave him positive proof that the company was a bona fide one, and that they had the money necessary to construct the road. They deposited in the Bank of Montreal the sum of $50,000, which was quite sufficient for the preliminary works, and the proclamation issued. They went to work immediately, and I may say that during last winter they surveyed the whole line from Causapscal to Gaspé Basin. Then they came before this parliament in order to get a federal charter. To that federal charter was appended another condition, that not only this company should build in the interior of Gaspesia, but should build a branch line extending from Gaspé Basin to Paspebiac, following the shore. Therefore, this company has obtained from this parliament, with the help of my hon. friend from Bonaventure (Mr. Marcil), and through our common efforts, legislation under which this company will be obliged to build, not only in the interior, but also on the shore, thus giving to the people of the coast the link which was missing between Paspebiac and Gaspé Basin. But, Sir, as the hon. gentleman from Bonaventure has said, there are some difficulties in the way. The shore portion of the peninsula is a very difficult piece of work to construct, in the sense that it is very hard to build a line across so many rivers running into the Baie des Chaleurs between Paspebiac and Gaspé Basin. Therefore, the cost of construction, as will be shown by a report which has been prepared by a very intelligent surveyor and engineer, is very heavy. We intend to ask the government, and to insist, that this company be given a subsidy which will enable them to build that portion of the railway. In 1898, at my own request, the hon. the leader of the House inserted in the statute the ordinary subsidy given to railway companies, to be given to any company that would build that portion of the line extending between Paspebiac and Gaspé Basin. Any company could have been formed and, within a delay of five years, could have taken that subsidy. Well, no company was formed, because no company thought that the ordinary subsidy would build that line. I hope this year that, after seeing the report which will be presented to the government, they will be disposed to be more liberal and give to that section of the country the relief promised for so many years. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I conclude by saying that the Bill fathered by my hon. friend from Nicolet (Mr. Ball) should not be referred back to the Railway Committee, but the hon. gentleman and his friends should unite their efforts with ours in order to obtain from this government the help to a bona fide company which will enable it to build the section from Paspebiac to Gaspé Basin.

Mr. BALL. The member for Bonaventure (Mr. Marcil) has told a long story about all the Bills that were rejected. I do not want to follow him, but I may mention that none of these Bills were presented to this House by himself. As regards what the hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Lemieux) has said about the guarantee that Mr. C. N. Armstrong got from the Quebec government, I can give some interesting details about it. The Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway Company at that time included Mr. Préfontaine as a member, and Mr. Armstrong and Mr. Préfontaine made an arrangement with the Flynn government by which that government should guarantee the interest on $8,000,000, and they passed a deed of sale. But before the thing could be carried out, an election came on and the Flynn government was defeated. The company applied to the succeeding government to ratify the deed, but the government pretended that it was not legal, and they could not carry out an illegal contract of the late government.

So after a year or so of hesitation, being compelled by their friends more than by the company to come to terms, the government decided to pass a Bill of reference and to refer the question to the court of appeal, with the promise that if the court of appeals declared the contract made by the late government legal they would consent to carry it out. The Bill was passed and the question was referred to the court of appeal. The late Mr. Duffy and Mr. Archambault, then Attorney General, were both ministers of the government, and they appeared on behalf of the government, while Mr. Flynn, the ex-Prime Minister of Quebec, took the other side. The court decided unanimously that the deed was legal, and that the government must carry it out. In spite of that they have shown no disposition to carry it out. The company, during the time that Mr. Préfontaine was one of its directors, appealed for permission to sue the government and compel it to fulfil its contract, but they never could get a fiat from the Quebec government. That is the history of the scheme that hon. gentlemen are denouncing. I see that Mr. Armstrong is denounced. He was denounced yesterday by people who followed him as long as they could get something from him, but, now that they see that they cannot get anything more out of him, they will do nothing. I heard a list of railways read in which Mr. Armstrong was interested. I was very much surprised not to hear that he was in the Grand Trunk Pacific. It is only, I suppose, the hon. ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair) who heard that.

Motion (Mr. Ball) negatived.

(d.) From the first day of July, one thousand nine hundred and six, to the thirtieth day of June, one thousand nine hundred and seven, both inclusive, the bounties shall be thirty-five per centum of the amount fixed by the said chapter.

He said : I beg to state that His Excellency the Governor General, having been informed of the subject matter of this resolution recommends it to the consideration of the House.

PROCEDURE IN REGARD TO ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are taken up, I wish to bring to the attention of this House an incident which occurred last Friday night during your absence in reference to the practice of the House.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not know that there is anything so very amusing as to tickle hon. members before they know what I am going to say or whether it gives evidence of sapiency on their part to make such a demonstration in advance. I refer to the fact that when we reached the stage at which this House was about to adjourn, there was no Speaker or Deputy Speaker present, and the hon. Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding), who was then in charge of the House, instructed the Chairman of the committee of the House to take the Chair, and receive the report. Afterwards that hon. gentleman acted as Speaker, and adjourned the House. I am not aware that there is any authority either in law or practice which justifies that procedure. There is nothing so far as I know or can find either in the English rule or in our own giving authority to any member to adjourn the House other than the Speaker or the Deputy Speaker. The practice in England, as also here, is and has been that :

When the hour of adjournment comes either the Speaker or the Deputy Speaker adjourns the House on motion of the senior minister present.

Apparently, therefore, so far as we find, the House cannot be adjourned unless one of the above officials is present except as follows :

If the Speaker calls upon any member to take the Chair, the House being then sitting, and at a later stage the adjournment be moved such member shall have the power to adjourn the House in the usual way.

Therefore, technically, I assume that the House did not adjourn on Friday night last, really sat during Saturday and Sunday without transacting any business until 3 p.m. on the following Monday. The mace, however, should have remained on the Table. I take up 'Bourinot's Parliamentary Practice' and I find the following :

That the Speaker 'shall preside at all meetings of the House of Commons.' The 47th section makes provision for his absence for any reason from the Chair for forty-eight consecutive hours. In that case 'until the parliament of Canada otherwise provides the House may elect another of its members to act as speaker, and the member so elected shall, during the continuance of the absence of such speaker, have, and execute all the powers, privileges and duties of the Speaker.' The experience of the old Canada assembly showed the necessity of having such a provision in the Act, in case of the illness of the Speaker. For instance, on one occasion the House had to adjourn for some days, when the clerk had communicated to the House the fact of the Speaker's indisposition.

Mr. SPEAKER. I suppose the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) will conclude with a motion ?

Mr. SPROULE. I had not intended to do so, but if necessary, I will do so.

Mr. SPEAKER. It would be more regular.

Mr. SPROULE. Then I shall move one.

The House of Commons had no deputy speaker before the session of 1885 ; but, in pursuance of a statute in that behalf, whenever the Speaker from illness, or other cause, was obliged to leave the Chair, he called upon a member to take his place for the time being, and every order made and thing done under these circumstances was declared valid and effectual.

In 1885 the House adopted the English practice as far as possible with respect to the appointment of a Deputy Speaker. The chairman of committees, appointed at the beginning of every session as hereinafter set forth, acts as Deputy Speaker in conformity with the provisions of a statute——

That is chapter 20 of our statutes——

—passed to provide authority for the appointment of a deputy speaker and to give validity to all proceedings while the officer in question is in the Chair.

That Act provided that :

Whenever the Speaker of the House of Commons, from illness or other cause, finds it necessary to leave the Chair during any part of the sittings of said House, on any day, he may call upon the chairman of committees, or, in his absence upon any member of this House, to take the Chair and to act as Deputy Speaker during the remainder of such day, unless the Speaker shall himself resume the Chair before the close of the sittings for that day.

2. Whenever the House shall be informed by the clerk at the table of the unavoidable absence of Mr. Speaker, the chairman of committees, if present, shall take the Chair and shall perform the duties and exercise the authority of the Speaker in relation to all the proceedings of the House, as Deputy Speaker, until the meeting of the House on the next sitting day, and so on from day to day on the like information being given to the House until the House shall otherwise order : Provided, that if the House shall adjourn for more than twenty-four hours the Deputy Speaker shall continue to perform the duties and exercise the authority of Speaker for twenty-four hours only after such adjournment.

3. If at any time during a session of parliament the Speaker shall be temporarily absent from the House, and a Deputy Speaker shall thereupon perform the duties and exercise the authority of Speaker as hereinbefore provided, or pursuant to the standing orders or other order or resolution of the House, every act done and proceeding taken in or by the House in the exercise of its powers and authority, shall be as valid and effectual as if the Speaker himself were in the Chair; and every act done and warrant, order, or other document issued, signed or published by such Deputy Speaker, in relation to any proceedings of the House of Commons, or which under any statute would be done, issued, signed or published by the Speaker if then able to act, shall have the same effect and validity as if the same had been done, issued, signed or published by the Speaker for the time being.

At six o'clock, p.m., on the first of May, 1885, in accordance with the law, the Clerk informed the House of the unavoidable absence of Mr. Speaker Kirkpatrick, on account of serious illness in his family, and Mr. Daly, Chairman of Committees, took the Chair, and adjourned the House. The Speaker was obliged to be absent for two more sittings, and the Clerk every day informed the House of the fact as soon as it met, and the Deputy Speaker took the Chair and read prayers.

When the Speaker enters or leaves the House, the sergeant-at-arms precedes him with the mace, which will lie on the Table whilst he is in the Chair, and the House is consequently in session.

Then, with regard to the duties of the Speaker :

It is the duty of the Speaker to preside over all the deliberations of the House, and to enforce its rules and orders of which he is the guardian. He announces the business of the House in the order in which it should be taken up. . . . He receives and puts to the House, all motions that may be proposed by members in accordance with the rules and usages of parliament. He receives messages from the Senate &c., &c.

I claim that in the absence of any specific provision in our rules there is no authority whereby any member of the House or any official can call another member to the Chair, and that there is no person charged with that duty except the Speaker himself, or the deputy speaker in the absence of the speaker. I claim that when a person is appointed as a Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House, when he discharges such duties, he not being called to the Chair of the House, his authority ended there. It is said that where our rules do not specifically provide for carrying on the business of the House we may fall back upon the English rule bearing on the subject, but so far as I can find there is no English rule which would justify what has been done in this case. I desire to ask whether the Speaker has or has not the authority to delegate his powers to some one privately ? Even though that can be done by the Speaker, I draw attention to the fact that in this case it was not done by the Speaker but by a minister of the Crown, who certainly had no authority for doing so. I draw the attention of the Speaker and of the House to this matter so that we may know what is the rule, and so that we may not follow this as a precedent in the future. If it be necessary to make some provision for such a contingency, we should make the provision and not go on in this loose and irregular way. As I have said, I can find no rule for this even in the rules of the imperial House of Commons, and in doing what has been done we apparently have gone beyond the rule of the imperial parliament itself. The rule also says that that motion for adjournment having been made by the senior member of the government present, the Speaker shall put it from the Chair and declare it carried and the sergeant at arms shall precede the Speaker with the mace, which is the sign of authority, out of the chamber. That was not done in the present case because the Speaker was not present, and while the sergeant at arms carried the mace to the Speaker's quarters there was no Speaker to follow him as the member who occupied the Chair went off about his business.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Horrible.

Mr. SPROULE. I draw attention to this so that we may not get into the habit of doing what we have no warrant for under the rules of this House. I beg to move the adjournment of the House, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. HENRI BOURASSA (Labelle). I am afraid that the motive of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) is not so much to preserve the integrity of our rules as to ventilate a grudge against us all because we did not go on sitting on Saturday and Sunday, for had we sat on Sunday morning he might have an opportunity to address this House on some religious question just as he instructs us on secular questions during all the week days.

I would point out to the hon. gentleman that the English rules have been embodied in our own rules and if he will look at the Revised Statutes of Canada, Chap. 14, he will find the following :

1. Whenever the Speaker of the House of Commons, from illness or other cause, finds it necessary to leave the Chair during any part of the sittings of the said House, on any day, he may call upon the chairman of committees, or, in his absence upon any member of this House, to take the Chair and to act as Deputy Speaker during the remainder of such day, unless the Speaker shall himself resume the Chair before the close of the sittings for that day.

There is no doubt as to the right of the Speaker to call some one to the Chair, and as to the legality of any act done by the House under the presidency of the member who takes the place of the Speaker in his absence. Under rule 3, the Deputy Speaker has exactly the same right as the Speaker. The rule says that every act done by the Deputy Speaker is as valid as if it was done by the Speaker himself. Therefore, the Deputy Speaker has a perfect right to call any member of the House to take the Chair. The anomaly of the Deputy Speaker presiding over the Committee of the Whole and then acting as Speaker occurs every day. It is well understood that his personality changes for the time being, though happily it does not change entirely, and he has a perfect right to call any member of the House to act as chairman of the committee in presenting the report, and to take from that member the report of the committee while he acts as speaker of the House. Therefore, so far as that point is concerned, I think it is well settled.

Without being too personal, I would remind the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) that one who lives in a house of glass should not throw stones at his neighbour, even at the Speaker. If the hon. gentleman is so anxious to observe all the rules of the House, not only in the spirit, but in the letter, I would remind him of another rule which I confess is not observed by every member of the House. That is rule 18, which says :

Every member is bound to attend the service of the House unless leave of absence has been given him by the House.

I would remind the hon. gentleman that not even for the purpose of looking after the prosperity of the great order of which he is the grand master——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Grand sovereign.

Mr. BOURASSA. Oh, yes. I have such republican tendencies that I always forget the bigger titles. Not even in order to preserve the prosperity of that valuable order is a member allowed to take leave of absence without permission of the House, and go to its convention, and there not merely give lessons to the Speaker of this House, but give lessons in politeness to the King. I regret that the hon. gentleman has not chosen another of his colleagues to raise the point of order and give lessons to the Speaker on the observance of the laws in these matters, and I hope that before he again undertakes to teach respect for the laws to the Speaker, he will not again give such an example of rebellion as he has given in the last few days, at the same time breaking a rule of this House.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Mr. Speaker, one thing, at all events, is certain with regard to the motion which has been made by my hon. friend, that whether the law has been observed or whether it has been violated, no harm has been done to anybody. My hon. friend has, I think, drawn the true conclusion upon the question, that if the House was not legally adjourned on Friday night, it continued in session until some time between 12 o'clock and 1 o'clock, Monday night or Tuesday morning. The House may have been in session, not only on Saturday, but on Sunday. Even if it was, no harm was done, although nobody was present, and the House was adjourned effectively, if not legally. My hon. friend himself, I think, was present on Friday night, when it was adjourned or pretended to be adjourned. At all events, if I understand my hon. friend, he was anxious himself to adjourn. He did not want the House to go on sitting. On the other side of the House the conclusion had been come to that the House had sat long enough, and that a recess should take place. What more could be done ? As I am informed, the only thing to be done was to send for the Speaker, who at that time was in his room ; but the messenger, not finding him immediately, went for the Deputy Speaker. Both came, but it was too late ; my hon. friend from West Huron was too quick for them, and the mace had left the Table. For my part, I acquit the Sergeant-at-arms of any intention of breaking the constitution when he removed from the Table 'that bauble' as Cromwell styled it. I acquit also the Speaker and the Deputy Speaker of not being in the House at the time, they being in their rooms and liable to be sent for at any moment. But let us go one step further, and let us suppose that both the Speaker and the Deputy Speaker were unavoidably absent ; what was to be done under such circumstances ? Was the House to go on sitting for ever, though it wanted to adjourn, and was my hon. friend from East Grey himself to remain glued to his chair though he wanted to leave it ? I think myself that this is a case where necessity knows no law, and common sense must prevail. This is a case where common sense is law and law is common sense. If at any time during the session of the House it happens for any unavoidable cause that neither the Speaker nor the Deputy Speaker is in the House, then the House must go on sitting for ever, or some means must be found for giving effect to the will of the majority of the members present. I will recall to my hon. friend a precedent to show that when the law is imperfect and insufficient to serve the ends of common sense, the common sense of the House will assert itself. I forget the year, but the incident is well known, and ought to be well remembered by every member of this House. I think it was about 1881 or 1882, when Mr. Parnell was carrying on a policy of obstruction. At that time the cloture did not exist in England. When the House had been in session forty hours or thereabouts, Mr. Speaker Brand took the law into his own hands and put the question to adjourn the House, though it was against the rules of the House as existing at that time, and the question was voted upon and the House was adjourned. I am not aware that his action was ever reprimanded ; on the contrary, I think it was approved of by common consent. There was at the time no law on the subject, but the will of parliament could not be baulked for ever ; so common sense asserted itself, and Mr. Speaker Brand took the law into his own hands. I am not prepared to say whether or not our laws should be amended to meet such a contingency as I have just referred to. I was glad to hear the remarks of my hon. friend, that he has no blame either for the Speaker or the Deputy Speaker, but that he simply wanted to have a fair question answered. Whether or not under the circumstances the proceedings of the House were valid, and whether an adjournment could take place or not, is a matter which I do not consider of very great moment ; but if the House considers that there is a question to be investigated, perhaps it would be well to have some expression of opinion upon it from members who take an interest in the question. For my part, I cannot see that any law has been violated. I think that under the circumstances the adjournment was perfectly legal. I may say, moreover, that I understand that Mr. Speaker has power to call a member to replace him in the Chair, and that this may take place not only immediately, but in an hour or two hours or three hours—that he can say to a member, 'I want you to take my place at 9 o'clock or 10 o'clock,' as the case may be; and I do not think there is any impropriety in his so doing.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Of course, the Speaker in the Chair is a very different individual, so far as his powers are concerned, from the Speaker or the Deputy Speaker as the Chairman of a Committee; and while it is quite feasible, I suppose, for a Speaker to call a member to take his place and act as Speaker from that time till the adjournment of the House, it does not follow that the member of the House who has been called to take the chair of the committee as Deputy Speaker can proceed from the chair of the committee to the Speaker's chair, and fulfil all the functions which the Speaker could have fulfilled if in the chair. I think therefore my hon. friend from East Grey is quite right in bringing the matter to the attention of the House, because it concerns the dignity of the House and the order of our proceedings that the rules should be observed.

There was no occasion at all for any of the jeers in which my hon. friend from Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) indulged, because the matter was brought to the attention of the House in a very dignified and sensible manner by my hon. friend from Grey (Mr. Sproule). The construction placed upon the rule by my hon. friend from Labelle is most absurd. He says that the rule forbidding members from leaving the service of the House without permission means that they are not to leave the precincts of the House. No one has ever supposed that the rule had ever any such interpretation.

The House was effectively adjourned, and no harm was done, but still it is right that such matters should be brought to your attention, Mr. Speaker, and that we should have your ruling. No blame can be attached to you, Sir, or to your deputy because we have it, on the evidence of my hon. friend, that you were making all possible speed—he does not give the rate of speed, but it may have been a hundred yards in ten seconds—for the purpose of seeing that the House did not continue in session into the Sunday, as my hon. friend from Grey says it did.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). I understand that the hon. member for Grey did not express a desire to have any ruling, or that any action should be taken, but merely drew the attention of the House to the circumstance, so that what did happen, whether regular or irregular, will not be made a precedent. To that extent we all sympathize with the hon. gentleman, but I do not see any particular necessity for a ruling. We may rest content with the assurance that, as my hon, friend from Grey has drawn attention to what took place, there is no danger of its being made a precedent. The purpose which the hon. member had in view has been accomplished, and I have no doubt that he is quite satisfied.

Mr. SPROULE. My intention was not to reflect on Mr. Speaker or on any body else, but simply to point out what did take place in order that a re-occurrence of the incident might be avoided.

Motion (Mr. Sproule) to adjourn, negatived.

TREADGOLD COMMISSION.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like to ask the right hon. the Prime Minister whether or not the personnel of the Treadgold commission has been completed by the acceptance of Chief Justice Killam, to whom he referred on a former occasion.

The PRIME MINISTER. No, it has not.

THE TREADGOLD CONCESSION.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I brought to the attention of my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior, who is not in his seat at present, an inquiry addressed to me by means of a telegram from the Yukon, respecting the right of representation under the Treadgold concession. My hon. friend was good enough to say that he would give me an answer the next day, but evidently the matter has escaped his notice.

The PRIME MINISTER. I will take a note of it.

THE CRIMINAL CODE.

Bill (No. 215) further to amend the Criminal Code, 1892, was read the second time.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick) moved that the House go into committee on the Bill.

Mr. TAYLOR. I had a consultation with the hon. minister with reference to this Bill, and he said he would not proceed with it until the deputation, which I told him was coming, had waited on him. I was informed that the deputation would be here to-day or to-morrow.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. My hon. friend has accurately stated what took place. There are, however, certain clauses of the Bill, which are merely amendments of no great importance. We might deal with them and allow the others to stand until I have had an opportunity of hearing the deputation. Or I will allow the whole Bill to stand over.

Mr. TAYLOR. I was at a meeting of the wholesale hardware men last evening and they said that a deputation was coming with respect to another clause. There are practically only two contentious clauses, and it is hardly worth while to deal with any portion of the Bill until they are disposed of.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. There are some clauses affecting the questions of procedure which are not important and which must go through even if I have to drop the other two.

Motion agreed to, and House went into committee on the Bill.

On section 2,

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The amendment here is to add the word 'everyone' to the section as now drafted. The object is to remove certain doubts with respect to the applications to corporations of certain sections in which the words used are 'every one' and 'every person.' Practically the word 'everyone' includes corporations as well as individuals.

On schedule—75a and 75b :

75a. Every one is guilty of an offence and liable, on sumary conviction, to six months imprisonment, with or without hard labour, or to a fine not exceeding , and not less than , or to both, who wilfully—

(a.) deprives any other person of his employment, or

(b.) prevents any other person from being employed whether by himself or another, or

(c.) obstructs or annoys any other person, or his employer, in respect of the trade, business or employment of such other person, because such other person is an officer or man of the active militia ; or who dissuades any other person from enlisting in the active militia or any corps thereof, by threat of injury to him, in case he should so enlist, in respect of his trade, business or employment.

75b. It is hereby declared to be unlawful for any association or corporation, constituted or organized for the purpose of promoting the success of the trade, business or employment of the members thereof, by its constitution or by any rule, by-law, resolution, vote or regulation, to discriminate against any person because he is an officer or man of the active militia, in respect of the eligibility of such person for membership in such association or corporation, or in respect of his right to remain a member thereof, and any person who aids or abets in the enforcement of any such provision against a member of the active militia with intent to discriminate against him because of such membership, is guilty of an offence and liable on summary conviction, to imprisonment for six months, with or without hard labour, or to a fine not exceeding , and not less than , or to both.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I think that these two sections, 75a and 75b might be read and considered together. They are an innovation so far as our criminal law is concerned. They are intended to afford adequate protection to our militia. It has been represented to me that, during strikes, threats are made sometimes by employers that if a man remains with the militia and turns out to assist in suppressing disorder during this strike he will be dismissed from his employer's service. It has been represented also that, on other occasions, employers of men have been threatened so as to induce them to prevent their men from joining the militia where their services might be utilized in case of a strike. These clauses have been adopted from the criminal code of the State of New York. I do not know that I want these two clauses to be adopted now. The Bill must remain in committee, and I would like it to remain so that we may have time to consider the penalty to be imposed under these clauses.

Mr. CLARKE. Has the hon. minister had any complaints or objections to these clauses ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I have had one letter from a labour union in Montreal. But it was evident they did not understand the scope of the Bill at the time the letter was written. In answering it, I sent a copy of the Bill and have heard nothing further from them. But it is only fair, as this is an innovation and a new departure that the clauses should be allowed to remain over so that those who are interested may have an opportunity to make representation if they desire to do so.

Mr. MONK. Does the hon. minister know of any legislation of this kind outside of Canada ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I have just stated that I have adopted these sections from the Criminal Code of the State of New York.

Mr. MONK. My reason for asking is that section 75b seems to me a little vague. I do not know whether the present condition of affairs would draw the attention of the public to a matter which, perhaps it is better to leave to the judgment of the good citizens generally, because those who wish to evade the law, as the minister is aware, can find means of evading such a law as this. In fact it might be better to rely on public opinion than pass a law on this subject. At any rate I find sections 75a and 75b rather vague.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. My hon. friend (Mr. Monk) will remark that the object of the section is to impose a penalty upon any person who deprives another of employment or prevents another from being employed either by himself or another or obstructs such person or his employer in respect to the trade, business, or employment of such other person, because such other person is an officer or man of the active militia.

Mr. MONK. I think the principle is right——

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Better make that 'officer, non-commissioned officer or man.'

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). As to the scope of the sections, we shall have an opportunity of discussing them later. But, looking at the framing of them, we have subclause A, subclause B and then comes subclause C. I suppose that the words 'because such other person is an officer or man of the active militia,' are intended to qualify subclauses A and B as well as the preceding part of subclause C.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. It must be so, or the clause would remain inoperative.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). But the remaining portion of the clause seems to me not in the same line—it seems disconnected. You have three clauses stating an offence, then a qualifying clause stating the purpose which must be expressed or otherwise the offence is not constituted, and then 'or who dissuades any other person from enlisting in the active militia or any corps thereof by threat of injury to him, in case he should so enlist, in respect of his trade, business or employment.' It seems to me, that if you could make another subsection——

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. It would be better drafting.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think so.

Mr. BROCK. There is a converse to this clause. I think, that should be taken notice of. A militiaman is called out by the authorities, say in the city of Toronto, to guard the property of the citizens in case of a strike. The soldier, having friends amongst the unions, immediately afterwards sends in his resignation because he refuses to serve. You would punish the employer because he refuses to engage a man of that kind, but is there any punishment for the militiaman who refuses to be called out on occasions of that kind or refuses to remain in the militia because he has friends in the unions whom he does not wish to oppose?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The hon. Minister of Militia is more familiar than I am with the law on that point. But my recollection is that a man joins the colours for three years, and if, during that time he refuses to serve, he becomes liable to a penalty under the Enlistment Act. And he cannot resign. That is my understanding of the Militia Act.

Mr. BROCK. But I speak of something that actually took place. Immediately after the strike in Toronto some of the members of the militia who had been called out sent in their resignation. Whether they could do so legally or not, I do not know. But they declared their intention of not serving under the circumstances. But I believe there is no penalty for that.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). No officer should accept a man's resignation under such circumstances. A man has no authority to resign his position in the militia, and no officer is obliged to give him his discharge. A man enlists for three years and cannot leave the service during that time except by the consent of his officer. A man may be dismissed, or he is sometimes given his discharge for sufficient reasons, but he should not be given his discharge for such reasons as those mentioned by the hon. gentleman for Centre Toronto (Mr. Brock). I rather think the whole clause will do good in directing the attention of the employers of labour to the responsibility and duty resting upon them to encourage the militia. It is very common to find in cities and towns that militiamen employed by large firms are discouraged from remaining in the corps, instead of being encouraged, because the employers do not want to have anything to do with them in case they may be engaged in maintaining order or be called out to defend the country. The very men who will receive the most benefit from the protection that the militia affords we find not upholding the militia but trying to discourage their men from belonging to the corps.

Mr. MONK. As the hon. minister will admit, this is rather tentative legislation. But I think that the principle in 75a it would be made clearer by some modification of the section. I would make the suggestion to the Minister of Justice to stop at 75a for this year and leave out the other. I think that 75b is going a little far in declaring it unlawful for any association of any kind to discriminate against any of its members because they belong to the militia. I do not mean to say that it is not right to legislate in that sense, but it is entering upon a new field. I would suggest to the Minister of Justice that he should leave out 75a and be satisfied with 75b for the present. It is possible that some associations will find it necessary to discriminate, or to provide that its members should not belong to the militia, and I would not like to say that such a circumstance would not occur.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I am quite willing to consider the advisability of passing these sections which, as the hon. gentleman has properly said, are of a tentative character in legislation, but I do not think it would be proper for us to pass 75a and not pass 75b. 75a really imposes a penalty on the employer if he in any way interferes with the freedom of action of his employee with respect to joining the militia force; that is to say, it is a protection for the employee as against the employer. But on the other hand, if we impose penalties on the employer under these circumstances, is it quite fair to allow any combination of labour to discriminate against one of themselves because he happens to belong to the militia force? Why do you distinguish between the two? I am willing to allow the whole matter to be enlarged, because, as I said a moment ago, perhaps public opinion is not ripe for legislation of this sort. I thought it proper, however, to draw the attention of the House to it; but if we legislate as against the employer, I cannot see any reason to justify us in allowing the trades unions to go absolutely free.

Mr. CLARKE. I understand the minister to say that his object in proposing legislation of this kind was to prevent employers from discharging men who perform militia duties from time to time. Has any case come under the notice of the minister in which employers of labour have actually dismissed their men because they belonged to the Canadian militia, when they were called out ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I cannot say that such a case has come to my notice. But in connection with the recent troubles in Montreal, it has come to my notice that threats were made by employers against their employees because they were obliged to do service during the course of the strike. Representations were made to us in connection with these threats, and it was because of those representations that I have introduced these particular sections.

Mr. CLARKE. I understood from the hon. gentleman that, having drawn public attention to this question, he did not feel it necessary to insist upon passing these sections. I think the hon. gentleman is extremely wise in taking that course.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I am in the hands of the House on that subject. It is a matter to which I would like to call the attention of the public, and if there is any strong opinion one way or the other expressed between this time, and when the Bill comes up again for consideration, we will take that into account. But I must say that, speaking for myself, any attempt to interfere with our militia force is a thing that I would endeavour to prevent. That is my own feeling.

Mr. PUTTEE. Does the minister think that 75a covers the case entirely ? It seems to me it only applies when that relationship between employer and employee is already established. A considerable number of the largest employing concerns in the country insist upon men, before they become employees, signing an agreement that would probably keep them from joining the militia or any other institution that would be apt to take them away from their duties at any time. They insist on men, before becoming employees, signing an agreement that would debar them from either joining the militia or becoming municipal candidates, and that kind of thing, anything that would take them away from their duties at any specific times. Does 75a touch that matter at all ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I am not sure that the terms used are quite broad enough to meet the case put by the hon. gentleman. But while I may sympathize with the employer who would endeavour to prevent his employee from taking part in a municipal contest, I would have no sympathy with him if he endeavoured to interfere with the desire of his employee to join the militia force. If the hon. gentleman speaks of his own personal knowledge and says that there are employers who force men, before becoming employees, to enter into a contract obliging them not to enter the militia, I would be glad to deal with these gentlemen also.

Mr. PUTTEE. I do not know that in any of these agreements the word " militia " is used, but I would think such a contract would apply to the militia or to any other institution that a man desired to join. As a matter of fact, when an employer places an agreement of this kind before a man, the latter feels that he must have employment in any case, and he signs one of these agreements, and I should imagine that it restricted his liberty to join the militia.

Mr. BROCK. In a matter of this kind we must act with some fairness. If a merchant has some particular employment that requires the continuous time of a bookkeeper or a cashier, do you mean to tell me that if he said to that man, on entering his employment; I cannot give you this employment if you require to be absent for two weeks every year on the militia—do you mean to tell me that you would put that merchant into jail under those circumstances ? You would have half the merchants of Canada in jail, under certain circumstances. There are certain positions, not only in commercial companies, but in lawyers' offices and others, where at particular times it would mean the ruination of a man's business to take away some of his employees for weeks at a time. There are positions, I know in my own case there are positions, where it would be a serious loss if a clerk were to be called out at certain seasons of the year to drill. I think you would have to make some exceptions in cases of that kind.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. There are certainly two sides to this legislation. It may operate to the benefit of the militia force in Canada, and it may operate detrimentally; and it is because of the uncertainty in which I find myself that I do not insist upon pushing these sections through at the present time. I would like to have the benefit of some discussion on the subject, so as to see whether the object we have in view will be served by this legislation.

Mr. CLARKE. It strikes me that the best plan would be to have a special police force to do this duty. It would be unfair, in that case mentioned by my colleague from Toronto (Mr. Brock) to deprive merchants of the services of their men under all circumstances. What we should have is a sufficient number of regular troops or police in Canada which should be called upon to suppress cases of riot and cases of disorder.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I regret that I have to dissent absolutely from the view expressed that a regular soldier in any sense should be employed, or that Dominion policemen in any sense should be employed, to suppress disorder within the bounds of a municipality. It is all right enough in unorganized territories which are under the direct control of the Dominion government, to have a Dominion force to preserve law and order; but in municipalities like Toronto and Montreal, I insist that no regular soldier should be called out, other than as a member of the militia force of Canada, to preserve law and order. The sooner we teach the municipalities and business men of this country that each municipality must preserve its own law and order the better. In reference to the point made by the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Brock) that there are certain men who could not be spared to be called out with the militia, if that be so, then, the Militia Act is the place to have these men excepted. I can see no reason why a man occupying a position in a warehouse in Toronto should be exempted from serving his country. There are men exempted from military service, but I can see no reason why any man occupying any position in the city of Toronto should be exempted from serving his country when other people are obliged to do their duty and incur the odium and loss of time that necessarily falls to the lot of a man who becomes a member of the militia force. As a taxpayer of this country, I object to paying the expense of a regular force to be kept up through the length and breadth of this country to suppress disorders in cities and towns amongst communities that are not capable of preserving law and order themselves. The proper plan in a democratic country like Canada is as far as possible to depend upon the tolerant spirit and respect for law and order to be found in all communities in this country. We should depend upon the militia force which is the people's force rather than to attempt to emulate the policy of continental Europe in having large standing armies, because we must rely upon each man in this country to recruit as a militiaman and do his duty in the ranks.

Mr. ROBINSON (West Elgin). It would certainly be a very great hardship if the farmers of this country were subject to fine and imprisonment if they demurred to allowing their hired men and sons to be called out to perform military duties especially at this season of the year. Suppose they were called out now when the harvest is on, it would be a shame to punish a farmer by fine or imprisonment if he did not allow his hired man to go.

Mr. LEMIEUX. May I ask the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence what has become of the protest or petition sent from Montreal by the city council in regard to the expenditure incurred during the strikes in the month of May? I understand an account was filed which the city council refused to pay, and that a protest or perhaps a deputation, was sent to the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence asking the government to pay. Was there anything of that kind?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. There was a petition.

Mr. LEMIEUX. And the answer, if I understand well, was that the city council should themselves pay these expenses?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Certainly.

Mr. CLARKE. I did not hear the answer of the hon. minister.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The answer was that the city of Montreal should pay these bills itself.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The government has nothing to do with this matter.

Mr. ROSS (Ontario). I am afraid that if we went as far as the gallant colonel who represents Victoria (Mr. Hughes) suggests, we should have conscription in this country and the people would be compelled to serve in the militia. There are some people in this country who do not believe that everybody should be a soldier. There are some of us who are merchants and I heartily sympathize with the views expressed by the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Brock). For instance, while I am a merchant I am here attending to my duties as a member of parliament. I have managers and bookkeepers to do my business during my absence. If they should be military men and if they should be obliged to leave their duties during two or three weeks while I was absent performing my duties as a member of parliament who is there to look after my business? I cannot conceive that the proposed law is in the interests of the people; or at all events, there should be some modification so that under certain circumstances only it would come into operation. I am certain that it is the sense of every hon. member of this House that if war were to break out we should leave our shops and fight for our country, but that is not going to take place, we hope, for many long years, and we pray, never.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Hear, hear.

Mr. ROSS (Ontario). I know that in times of peace we should prepare for war, but we should prepare for it in an intelligent manner.

Mr. LENNOX. I have the greatest respect for the statements made by the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Clarke), and the suggestion he makes may be perfectly correct, but it occurred to me, that, probably, although quite in a proper direction as regards having a sufficient police force to control all municipal difficulties in a particular city or town, the section of the Bill as regards military matters goes farther than that. The suggestion of the hon. member for West Toronto would probably not be capable of being worked out under this section. In reference to the remark just made by the hon. member for South Ontario (Mr. Ross) I may say that I am not a military man myself and I have no desire to leave my office except I receive more remuneration in some other field. I recognize the truth of the saying that 'they also serve who only stand and wait.' I have been one of the waiters myself. It hardly meets the case to say that in the event of the country being invaded, or a great difficulty arising, we would then leave our shops and places of business and defend the country because there must be some preparation in the meantime. Raw recruits would not be very valuable in such a case as that, and although I recognize the importance of not interfering with the established avenues of trade and business any more than we can possibly avoid, still, there is the necessity of making some reasonable preparation in the meantime. We must also recognize that all of us must make more or less sacrifices in that direction. I do not know that this legislation should be passed at the present time. I think probably it is a matter that might very well be left over for a time until it has been considered. There are certain difficulties that have arisen in the past that it is designed to meet. I wish to direct attention to that point. I was told in reference to a certain organization by a man who is a member of the organization that the reason they did not want their men to join the militia force of the country, was that in case of a disturbance brethren would be called upon to fight against brethren. This is raising a very serious difficulty and probably the suggestion from the hon. member for West Toronto would meet that difficulty very effectually. Probably the difficulty that we meet at the present time as far as these organizations are concerned and their dread of having members of the same organization firing upon other members of the organization on the occasion of a strike would be eliminated by having a police force to control any difficulty that occurs throughout the country.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. It is very hard to expect that every municipality throughout the country should have a police force that would enable it to cope with difficulties in connection with riots. However, dealing with the matter we have in hand, I would like to point out to the committee the difficulty I have had because of the law that we have now in existence. Section 107 of the Militia Act provides that every officer or man in the militia who refuses when called upon to come to the aid of the civil power is liable to a penalty of $100. A man may be called upon to join his regiment and he may be in the employ of some one who would dismiss him if he did join. He has to face a fine in one hand and dismissal in the other.

Mr. CLARKE. He is between the devil and the deep sea.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. He is between the hon. gentleman's friend and the deep sea.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I know of a case where a man belonging to one of the crack regiments in Montreal was actually threatened with dismissal——

Mr. LEMIEUX. Was that the Cooke-Cole case ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Oh, no. That case was as to a question of etiquette. It was not of much concern to the country at large, but only to the two individuals concerned. I have a letter from a member of a crack corps in Montreal who was called out to protect the property of the citizens on the wharfs recently, and who exposed himself personally to a great deal of inconvenience, but he was threatened with dismissal by his employer. If he did not serve with his regiment he would be fined $100, and if he did serve he would be dismissed. It seems to me that is anomolous and that we ought to find some remedy for it. Of course you can depend largely upon the good sense and the spirit of patriotism of the merchants and employers of Toronto and Montreal and other great cities, but there are black sheep in every flock.

Mr. BROCK. In all my experience I have never known a case of the kind of which the minister speaks of. Of course it is possible that it may occur, but on the other side it must be remembered that employers are for the most part glad to have their men serve their country, although it may put them to great inconvenience. I have had as many as twenty men called out of my establishment at the one time, and in Montreal I had thirteen serving in the militia recently. I suppose it is needless for me to say that I did not threaten them with dismissal.

Mr. PUTTEE. I am informed that during the recent trouble in Montreal, some of the very men who asked for the militia to be called out and whose property they were protecting, refused to allow their employees to join the militia. In view of such a case as that the consideration that we are giving to this question to-day is justifiable. I do not attach much weight to the objections of these gentlemen who complain that in some cases it works great hardship on them. The farmer and the small trader have to allow their help to go and serve their country, and it is no greater hardship on the merchant who is obliged to part with his cashier for the time being. I believe in the principle that everybody in this country should be at perfect liberty to assume any public duty he wishes to ; I believe in leaving it to the judgment of the individual as to what he should or should not do under such circumstances.

Mr. OSLER. By passing this law you cannot change the nature of some men who will be mean and unpatriotic, but I am glad to say that the evil we are trying to remedy is not very widespread. If a man is so lacking in his sense of duty to this country that he will not allow his men to serve in the militia, he will adopt some other means of getting rid of them if they do join the force. It is a good thing to have the attention of the country drawn to this matter, but I agree with the minister that perhaps it would be wise to let it remain over for another year. If it be then found necessary we can adopt this law.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I can readily see that if an employer who wants to get rid of an employee for joining the militia he will find some other excuse for doing so, but however that may be, the fact that such a law as this will be on our statute-books will act as an object lesson and direct public attention against the employer who attempts to do such a thing. Any one who has ever undertaken to organize a regiment in a city or even in a rural municipality will find that sometimes employers object to their men being in the volunteer force. They take the purely selfish view of the case, but when their property is in danger they are very anxious to have the militia to protect it, or perhaps some of them would wish to have some other man's servants than their own in the force. As to what the hon. member for South Ontario said about wishing every one to be a soldier, I may say that I do not want every one to be a soldier, but I do want every soldier to be a citizen of the country, and I want our military force to be made up of citizen soldiery. I shall not argue the question as to the value of a citizen soldiery as compared with regular forces, but I have pointed out in this House long before the Boer war, that wherever a militia force equally armed came into contact with a regular force, the militia force invariably won. The French revolution is a notable instance of that. More than one-half of the men who won Waterloo on the British side were not sixty days in training. The Heights of Alma were stormed by men who were only three or four months under drill. I object emphatically to regular troops being called in to maintain law and order. I object to the municipal authorities of this country getting the notion that whenever there is a little riot probably due to their own mismanagement, all they have to do is to call out the regular troops. Let them feel that they must maintain law and order within their own border and there will be fewer riots and better spirit abroad among the people.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. We may allow these sections to remain in suspense.

On section 174,

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. My opinion is that the whip should be applied for certain classes of offences and therefore we have introduced the words 'to be whipped' in this section.

Mr. ROSS (Ontario). I think the minister is quite right and I would go further and say for certain offences they should be whipped in public.

Mr. LENNOX. The wording is that an offender may be sentenced to imprisonment for life and be whipped. I suppose it is during his life time he will be whipped.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The practice in the penitentiaries is that an offender will receive so many lashes on being admitted and then the other part of the punishment is given during different periods of his imprisonment. I think some of the whipping is done before the offender leaves the jail.

Mr. LENNOX. In this case he is not to leave the penitentiary at all, because he is sentenced for life ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. No, he would be there for life.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Is this whipping to be administered by an official or by a convict ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I speak subject to correction, but I think it would be by an official. I think there would be no possible justification for employing a convict for any such purpose.

Section 205 as heretofore amended.—By adding at the end of subsection six thereof, as enacted by chapter 42 of the statutes of 1901, the following paragraph :—

(c.) Any distribution by lot as prizes, among the members or ticket holders of any incorporated society established for the encouragement of art, of any paintings, drawings or other works of art : Provided always that such society has a license from the Secretary of State unrevoked and in full force permitting it to conduct such distributions, it being hereby enacted that the Secretary of State may grant such a license upon evidence to his satisfaction (1) that the society applying therefor is designed bona fide for the encouragement of art ; and (2) that under the constitution of the society the prizes to be distributed by it must consist solely of bona fide works of art, and must be themselves distributed by the society to the prize winners, and must not be repurchased by or on behalf of the society from the winers or from any person into whose hands they may come for money or other valuable consideration within two years after they are won ; and (3) that the constitution of the society prohibits the distribution or gift by it in any manner whatsoever, directly or indirectly, of prizes consisting of money or of any thing of value other than bona fide works of art as aforesaid ; and it being further enacted that such licenses shall continue in force for one year only from the date of issue, but may be renewed from year to year upon the application of the company, and that it shall be lawful for the Secretary of State, whenever it shall appear to him that any such society is being perverted from its legitimate purposes, to revoke and cancel the license issued to any such society, and that any action so taken by the Secretary of State shall be final and shall not be called in question by any society affected thereby. And provided further that in connection with such distribution the society shall have strictly and bona fide observed such provisions of its constitution and in no way directly or indirectly violated the same or any of them, or by advertisement or otherwise undertaken or announced that it would do anything contrary to such provisions.

Mr. MONK. Is this something new ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes. My hon. friend will remember the inconvenience which was occasioned in Montreal from the application of the old subsection (c) of section 6 of the Criminal Code. There were a series of lotteries running wide open at various street corners, to the detriment of the youth and to the disadvantage of the city generally. That subsection was repealed ; but the result of the repeal was to interfere with the operations of the Art Union of London ; and this amendment is introduced specially for the purpose of meeting that case and at the same time to legitimatize honest attempts to deal with works of art. The section was drafted in view of the representations made to me by the directors of the Art Union of London. It is for the House to say whether I have covered the case sufficiently to limit the operation of the section to the proper distribution of art works.

Mr. OSLER. The hon. gentleman has covered it if he will provide that the Secretary of State shall pass an examination as to his knowledge of art.

Mr. MONK. There may be some special necessity for this legislation, and I do not claim to be able to say whether it meets the case of the London Art Union or not. But I would suggest to the Minister of Justice that this legislation will expose the Secretary of State to a great many applications which will appear to be bona fide in every respect ; and if he sees fit to grant these applications, we shall have, I am afraid, a renewal in the city of Montreal of the evils to which the Minister of Justice has just referred. It is impossible to estimate the amount of evil that is done in the city of Montreal by these lotteries. I have seen it myself, and so have, I am sure, other members of this House who are familiar with the conditions that existed in the city of Montreal ; and unless there is some absolute necessity for meeting the case of the London Art Union, I would strongly appeal to the Minister of Justice to hold this clause in abeyance, and see if it is not possible to dispense with it, for the present at least. I know that parties will apply for the license referred to in this subsection, and give every apparent proof of good faith, and that those same parties will afterwards abuse that license ; and it is almost impossible for the authorities to reach them. That we should have a re-introduction into the city of Montreal of the lotteries that have desolated that city in the past, is something almost too dreadful to contemplate ; and if it is possible to avoid it, even in this legislation, introduced, I have no doubt, with the best intention, I would strongly appeal to the Minister of Justice to defer it.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I will do with this section as I have agreed to do with respect to those relating to cigarettes, and preferential dealing—allow it to stand over in the hope that public attention may be called to the matter. I believe I have surrounded this section with all the safeguards it requires. However, I am willing to let it stand over in the hope that the people interested in the matter will consider it. At the same time, I think, speaking from the limited knowledge I have, that the Art Union of London has done very good work in this country, and if it were possible for us, without subjecting the public to the inconvenience resulting from the system of lotteries as we have had them heretofore, to come to the aid of the directors of the Art Union, I am extremely anxious to do it.

Mr. MONK. It might perhaps be possible to do so by special legislation. Here you have an institution above suspicion, but any general legislation will open the door to abuse.

Mr. LEMIEUX. As my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier has said, we have had very serious and frequent complaints in Montreal about this evil of the lottery system. Until last year we have had many societies, which pretended to encourage art, but which were really gambling institutions. We found out that the paintings which they distributed to the prize winners, they immediately brought back. Last year, the good faith of the hon. the Secretary of State was taken advantage of, when he granted to a so-called colonization society of Montreal a charter by letters patent, which enabled them to sell some lots in the northern district of Montreal for colonization purposes. Under a clause in the letters patent, they subdivided the shares of the company and converted this so-called colonization society into an organized lottery. A charge was laid before the police magistrate of Montreal, and Mr. Justice Choquette sent one of the accused to jail for one year and another for fifteen months. This was the death knell of all those lotteries in Montreal. If the proposed section were passed, it would, to my mind, cover the case very clearly.

Mr. MONK. What my hon. friend from Gaspé says is quite correct, but at the same time this society to which he refers, succeeded, in spite of the lawsuits and the very great efforts made to suppress it, in carrying on its operations for a time and ruining many poor people—servant girls, employees and clerks—and I am afraid, in spite of what my hon. friend says, that if we adopt the proposed system, means will again be found of surprising the good faith of the hon. the Secretary of State, as was done in the instance I have referred to, and in which instance that hon. gentleman was not to blame in any way. These people will come to the government and say that if the London Art Union is given these privileges, they should be given like privileges, and they will succeed in wresting a license from the Secretary of State, and before the license can be cancelled, they will have got in their work and done great injury to the community.

Mr. BROCK. Will the hon. minister say when it would be proper for me to move the amendments to the Criminal Code in connection with preventions to cruelty of animals, which he promised to consider ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. My hon. friend may move them now and we can let them stand until the Bill is in committee again.

Mr. BROCK. I beg to move the following amendments :—

By inserting immediately after section 514 the following section :—

514 (a.) No cattle shall be carried in the same car, van, vehicle or vessel with larger cattle of another species, or with other cattle likely to attack or injure it, unless a suitable substantial partition, securely fastened in such car, van, vehicle or vessel, is placed and maintained therein, and is sufficiently strong to keep such first mentioned cattle securely separate from such larger or other cattle, or unless some other effectual means of keeping it so separate is provided, and any company or person owning or operating or in charge of any such car, van, vehicle or vessel, who knowingly and wilfully carries therein any cattle contrary to the provisions of this section is guilty of an offence and liable on summary conviction to a penalty not exceeding $100.

Section 514. By repealing subsection five thereof and substituting the following subsection :—

5. Every railway company, and every such owner or master of a vessel, having cattle in transit as aforesaid, shall provide in the car or vessel containing such cattle, sufficient dry, and otherwise suitable bedding for such cattle ; and when such cattle are unladen from a car for rest, water and feeding, the railway company then having charge of such car shall, unless it is impracticable so to do by reason of frost, clear the floor of such car and renew such bedding with clean material before reloading the car with cattle.

Section 515. By repealing subsection one thereof and substituting the following subsection :—

Any peace officer may, at any time, enter any premises or place where he has reasonable ground for believing that any car, van, or vehicle in respect of which any company or person has failed to comply with section 514, or section 514 (a) is to be found, or may enter any such car, van or vehicle, or any vessel in respect of which he has such reasonable ground for believing that any company or person has so failed, or may enter any premises or place whatsoever where he has reasonable ground for believing that any officer under this part is being or has been committed.

Amendments allowed to stand.

Mr. HENDERSON. There is only a minute or two before six o'clock, but I hope the minister will not object to answer a question. In the province of Ontario we have a law just such as is provided in this section. There is also power in the Municipal Act to regulate the sale of cigarettes, and, in the village in which I live no person is allowed to sell cigarettes without first taking out a license and paying therefor $75. But it is a common practice for the news-agent on the railway train passing through the village to come upon the platform in the evening, and more especially on Sunday night, and sell cigarettes from the platform of the train. He claims he has a right to do so notwithstanding the by-law or any law, because he is selling these cigarettes from a car on the Grand Trunk Railway. Could there be any law which would give a person the privilege of selling cigarettes from a railway train in any municipality where the sale of them is prohibited, except under license or regardless of the provisions of this statute ? Is there any such provision in the Railway Act or any other law ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. There is no provision that I know of ; and I do not think that any persons who would make a sale in contravention of this would enjoy any immunity merely because he sold from the platform of a railway train.

Mr. LENNOX. There is a little more in it than that. These people get a license for the sale of cigarettes, as I understand. The provincial government have power to delegate their authority to the local municipality, but they reserve the power also to give provincial licenses, and under those licenses the sale is carried on. If a person has the right to sell, it is easy to see the inconvenience of making that license depend upon municipal regulation. The news-agent does not know when he passes from one municipality to the other. If the sale was prohibited, it would be a different matter.

PRIVATE BILLS.

THE BROCKVILLE AND SAULT STE MARIE RAILWAY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 104) to incorporate the Brockville and Sault Ste Marie Railway Company.—Mr. Dyment.

Mr. TAYLOR. This Bill with two other Bills, Nos. 67 and 89, was referred to a sub-committee to hear creditors, and to take into consideration the course that should be adopted in dealing with them. It came before the Railway Committee yesterday. I was unavoidably absent from the committee, and some of my friends asked that the Bill be allowed to stand until I was present, seeing that I had charge of one of the other Bills. The sub-committee, as I understand, did not all concur in the report which was made to the Railway Committee. The Railway Committee also have amended the Bill. This sub-committee heard a number of creditors, parties who were instrumental in building the Brockville and Westport Railway. This railway got into difficulties and was sold, being bought in by some Americans. The road was sold by an order of the court, but the question is now in litigation as to whether the court had full powers to authorize the sale. However, the committee thought it was their duty to report a Bill authorizing and confirming the sale so far as they had a right to do so, but granting additional powers. I understood the sub-committee were agreed on all that. But I see the Bill has been amended by granting powers to bond the road for $10,000 a mile. That matter was discussed by the sub-committee, and it was agreed, as I understood, by all of them that a clause should be inserted in the Act providing that the proceeds of the sale of these bonds should be applied only for the betterment of the road. They have also amended the Bill by authorizing a stock capital of $500,000. The sub-committee discussed that also, and as I understood, some of them at least thought that the stock capital, if any was granted at all, should only amount to $160,000, the amount that was paid for the road, and that the company should not be capitalized for more than the road cost. Then some of the sub-committee—I do not see any of them present——

Mr. GALLIHER. I am here.

Mr. TAYLOR. I mean of my friends. I see opposite two hon. gentlemen who concurred no doubt in this report. The question was discussed as to the advisability of making some reference to the fact that there were claims on the road. Whether they were legal or not, was not the question. When this company came asking for additional powers, the question was whether the sub-committee should not hear these creditors, among whom were those who had supplied the right of way, others who had supplied the material for building the road, others who were contractors, and so forth; their claims amouting to a large sum. But there is no mention of that in the report. However, it was discussed, and my object now is to ask that the Bill be not proceeded with to-night, as I intend to give notice that when the Bill is dealt with again I shall move amendments to it. I therefore ask that the Bill be allowed to stand until I give notice of the amendments and have the matter tested in the House. I am satisfied that when the House comes thoroughly to understand the situation they will do more than simply to confirm the purchase by these gentlemen for $160,000. The law says that when parties purchase a road they must come to parliament and get confirmatory legislation. I think we should confirm that but go no further. I do not think it is right to give further bonding privileges, or give them any more capital stock. It is the duty of this parliament to recognize the claims of the creditors. This company had a charter and received a subsidy of $3,200 a mile. That subsidy was assigned to the late James Cooper, of Montreal, for the payment of rails, plates and spikes to equip the track. Only a portion of the subsidy has been earned, and that went to Mr. Cooper. There remains a balance of some $38,000 that has not been paid because the government retained it till the completion of the road. The road has never been completed, and that subsidy has lapsed. No doubt when this company go on and build the road according to the requirements of the government, the government will give the subsidy. That subsidy has been assigned, and the government have approved of the assignment to pay the subsidy over to the estate of the late James Cooper. He appeared before the sub-committee and stated his case. He has since died, but his estate will have the claim on this subsidy when it is earned. I have no doubt the government will revote this lapsed subsidy when the money is earned. But this company, when they complete the road, will have by this Bill the right to that subsidy, but there is no reference made in the report of the committee or in the Bill as amended that there is any claim for it. I think there should be some reference made of this. My hon. friend opposite nods his head to the suggestion I make to allow the Bill to stand until I have an opportunity to discuss it with other members of the committee who did not concur in the report as it has been made to the House. I do not know that they made a minority report, but I know they did not concur in the final report, or in the amendments that now appear in the Bill.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. James Sutherland). This Bill and the matters connected with it received a great deal of consideration. They are somewhat complicated, and it was thought best by the committee to refer the Bill to a sub-committee so that parties could be heard. I understand that it received careful and full consideration, and the Bill was passed by the committee on the report of the sub-committee. However, the hon. gentleman requests the privilege of giving notice of amendments that he wishes to propose. I do not see any objection to allowing the Bill to stand until the next day that Private Bills are considered.

On motion of Mr. Sproule, the debate was adjourned.

Mr. SPROULE. Has the hon. Minister of the Interior (Hon. Mr. Sifton) brought down the list he promised to give us of the agents?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton). Yes, I have it here. Does the hon. gentleman desire that I should read it?

Mr. SPROULE. Yes, it would be better. That is the only way we can get it on 'Hansard.'

Mr. MONK. Is that the whole list ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That is the whole list of the salaried agents in Europe and the United States, with their salaries and expenses; also the commissions paid. It does not include the commissions paid on the continent or in Great Britain.

Mr. MONK. I understood that there were 280 agents working on commission in the United States ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There are a great many agents given authority to act from time to time, but if they do not earn any commissions, their names do not appear on our books. There possibly may have been that number at one time, but during the past year the inspector removed the greater number of the commission agents on the ground that he did not think they were earning any money, and he has since re-arranged the list, so that at the present time I do not suppose that there are more than forty or fifty recognized by the department.

Mr. MONK. There must be some record in the department of those who have been working on commission during the year.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. My deputy minister informs me that in his evidence before the Committee on Agriculture he put in the whole list.

Mr. WILSON. I understand that two years ago there were 500 immigration agents on commission in the United States in the employ of Canada. Since that time the number has been reduced to 280, and the evidence brought down to the Committee on Agriculture showed that about fifty of them had earned something. I would like to know what is the use of keeping these people if they do nothing. I would like the minister to state what his policy is with regard to them for the future ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I fail to see what harm a man is doing who does not draw any money.

Mr. WILSON. What good is he ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. If he does not send us any immigrants to-day, he may do so to-morrow, and if he does not send any he does not get any money.

Mr. WILSON. If a man does not send an immigrant to the country in a year, what is the use of keeping him ? I dare say that he is loaded up with stationery and other things that cost the department something. I do not believe in keeping a lot of people who are not of any use. Are these agents on commission each furnished with literature for distribution, and if so, what amount of literature have they distributed in the United States ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It would be quite impossible for me to tell the hon. gentleman the exact quantity of literature distributed by each of the agents of the department. I presume that we could ascertain by a laborious search.

Mr. WILSON. I asked if you furnish each agent with a certain amount of literature ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I could not say whether we do or not. The inspector distributes such literature as he thinks desirable and useful.

Mr. WILSON. I think this is information which we ought to have. The hon. gentleman's deputy is here, and I think he ought to be able to get it from him.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It is quite impossible for the deputy minister or anybody else to state off-hand the exact amount of literature each agent has received from the department. If the members of the committee desire it, we will make an assiduous effort to procure that valuable information for my hon. friend, and bring it down.

Mr. SPROULE. It seems to me that we ought to be informed whether these agents who have sent no returns have been distributing the literature, whether it has been sent to them, and whether they incur any expense that has been paid by the department notwithstanding the fact that they have received no commission. The department surely has a record of what literature it distributes, and to whom it is distributed.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. All I can say is that literature is furnished under the direction of the inspectors to the salaried agents of the different states, and the salaried agents distribute the literature to the sub-agents whenever they think it can be usefully done. Whether we can get an exact record of what is sent to each sub-agent I am not at present able to say. Possibly it can be traced with a certain degree of accuracy. It would be quite a laborious operation, but if the committee desire that information, we will make an honest effort to get it.
