THIRD SESSION—NINTH PARLIAMENT

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, June 22, 1903.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 204) to amend the Acts relating to the naturalization of aliens.—Right Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

ROYAL COMMISSIONS ON TRANSPORTATION AND HYDRAULIC CONCESSIONS.

The PRIME MINISTER (Right Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called I promised my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax) that I would, to-day, give him some information in regard to the two commissions that the government has organized, the first upon the transportation question, and the second on the hydraulic concessions granted in the Yukon. In regard to the first of these commissions the House is already aware that our intention was that it should be composed of Sir William Van Horne, Mr. John Bertram and Mr. Harry Kennedy. Mr. Kennedy has signified that it is impossible for him to attend to the duties of the commission and therefore we have selected in his place Mr. Fry of Quebec. Mr. John Bertram has accepted without any qualification. When Sir Wm. Van Horne was first approached upon the subject he expressed his willingness to give his valuable services to this commission. Since that time Sir Wm. Van Horne intimated to my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Sutherland) that owing to other duties and some family matters he doubted whether he would be able to accept the labour of the commission and rather asked the hon. Minister of Public Works to be relieved of the duties and the qualified consent that he had given. We would not accept this implied suggestion from Sir Wm. Van Harne that he should be relieved and we still hope that we will be able to secure to the country the valuable services he can render upon such a commission as that.

In regard to the second commission, that is the commission on the Treadgold and other concessions in the Yukon, Mr. Justice Britton has been appointed a commissioner and has accepted. We had thought of appointing another gentleman but on account of differences of opinion and the fact that probably he could hardly serve for the term which we proposed to give him we have thought it proper to ask the services of Chief Justice Killam of the Supreme Court of Manitoba, whose consent we have not yet received.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

ON THE ORDER FOR PRIVATE BILLS.

Mr. A. A. C. LaRIVIERE (Provencher). Before taking up the debate on Private Bills I would suggest that we take those Bills which have come from the Senate, which have been amended there and to which amendments, I believe, there is no objection, so that these Bills can receive their third reading. There are also two Bills on the paper for their second reading and these Bills, when read a second time, can be referred to their respective committees.

The PRIME MINISTER. The government can have no suggestion to offer in regard to this proposition, nor can they assent to it. This is a matter which is in the hands of hon. gentlemen interested in Private Bills. So far as my own feeling goes. I cannot see any objection to the suggestion of my hon. friend (Mr. LaRivière) being adopted.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. We might take from No. 7 on the Order paper down to the end of the list. There are four or five Bills.

The PRIME MINISTER. It is proposed to take certain Bills which come from the Senate and as to which there will be no objection. If there is any discussion they will have to stand and await their turn in the order in which they appear.

Mr. LaRIVIERE moved :

That Orders Nos. 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12 and 13 be now read.

Motion agreed to.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (No. 202) to incorporate the Missionary Society of the Church of England in Canada.—Mr. Russell.

Bill (No. 203) respecting the Toronto, Hamilton and Buffalo Railway Company.—Mr. Calvert.

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC RAILWAY.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 64) to incorporate the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company.—Mr. McCarthy.

On section 4,

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like to ask what will be the total length of the proposed line, so that we may understand what proportion the capital stock bears to the length of the line ?

Mr. McCARTHY. The proposed line is to run from Moncton to Quebec ; from Quebec south of Lake Abitibi, north of Lake Nipigon to Winnipeg ; thence to Edmonton ; thence through the Pine River Pass, or such other pass as may be more practicable, to Port Simpson. My hon. friend will have from that as correct information as I will be able to give him as to the mileage. I suppose it would be in the neighbourhood of from 3,500 to 4,000 miles, speaking without any definite information on the subject ; geographically, I think it would be about that distance.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The capitalization then amounts to $20,000 a mile, as I understand it, so far as the share capital is concerned, and there is provision later on for very large bonding powers. Might I ask whether or not the bonding powers and the power to issue guaranteed or preferred stock have in any way been cut down or restricted by the Railway Committee ?

Mr. McCARTHY. I think no change was made by the Railway Committee in respect to clause 13, being the bond issue clause.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that the capitalization of the road is very high.

Mr. McCARTHY. That was changed. The capitalization asked for was greater than that given—no ; I beg my hon. friend's pardon, it is not ; the capitalization asked for was $75,000,000 and the capitalization granted was $75,000,000.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). For the road as originally projected the capitalization would be about $20,000, so far as the share capital is concerned. In view of the change that was made by the committee in the location, that has been somewhat cut down, but apparently it is at least $20,000 per mile at present. You are to add to that the bonding powers contained in section 15, which amount to $30,000 per mile on the Quebec section ; $30,000 on the woodland section ; $20,000 on the prairie section, and $50,000 on the mountain section. You have in addition to that, section 6, which provides that the company may issue guaranteed or preferred stock not exceeding $10,000 per mile. So that you have under section 4 a capitalization of $20,000 per mile ; under section 6 an additional capitalization of $10,000 per mile, and then you have bonding powers varying from $20,000 to $50,000 per mile. Upon the prairie sections, which I suppose will be the cheapest to construct, you have a capitalization of $50,000 per mile.

Mr. McCARTHY. Is my hon. friend speaking from the reprinted Bill or the original Bill ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am speaking from the original Bill, but I have a reprint here which does not show any change in that.

Mr. McCARTHY. We have taken the trouble to have it reprinted again, and section 6 of the original Bill was struck out by the committee.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It would have been very much more convenient if the reprint had been distributed. I am not aware that I have received one.

Mr. McCARTHY. My hon. friend understands that the reprinting was done as a matter of courtesy. There are a number of copies in the distribution office.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not regard it as a matter of courtesy at all. I think it is the right of every member of this House to have a copy of the Bill as reprinted.

Mr. McCARTHY. I mean that it was a matter of courtesy, because we were not ordered to reprint.

Mr. CLARKE. We have only copies of the Bill as originally printed. Surely we have a right to have copies of it as it was amended by the Railway Committee before we discuss it ?

Mr. McCARTHY. There are any number of them in the distribution office.

Mr. CLARKE. I move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again, for the purpose of having copies of this Bill as reprinted distributed among the members.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Will the hon. member look in his file and see if he has not got it ? Everybody else has a copy.

Mr. CLARKE. I have only a copy of the original Bill.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Before this clause is adopted, I would like to repeat what I have already said, except the reference to clause 6, which has apparently been struck out, although there was no information in my possession indicating that, at the time I rose.

Mr. McCARTHY. Was not the reprinted Bill on my hon. friend's file ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). No, I do not find it. In view of what my hon. friend from North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) has said, and looking at the Bill as it is reprinted, it appears that the capital stock of the company is placed at $75,000,000 ; and section 13, formerly section 15, referring to the bond issue, remains, I think, in exactly the same terms as at first proposed. On the whole 3,500 miles of road the capitalization will be $20,000 per mile and the bonding powers from $20,000 to $50,000 per mile. Therefore, the capitalization of this road varies from $40,000 to $70,000 per mile. The prairie section, which I presume is the cheapest portion in point of construction, has a capitalization of $40,000 per mile. It would seem to me that this is an unusually high capitalization. I say that especially in view of the fact that we were told—if I may be permitted to refer to what took place a few days ago—that the cost of building the Canadian Northern Railway through the prairie country would not exceed, according to the estimates of the engineers of that railway, more than $18,000 per mile, which included $3,000 per mile for equipment, or a cost of construction of $15,000 per mile. We have every right to assume that that estimate is sufficient, because it was not in the interest of the Canadian Northern Company to make it any less than the actual cost. The estimate given by the engineers of the government was, I think, one or two thousand dollars under the amount I have named.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Eighteen thousand two hundred dollars was one and $18,800 the other.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax), I did not think they were so nearly alike ; and, as I am reminded by my hon. friend from West Toronto (Mr. Clarke), the cost of that particular portion of the road was said to be increased by reason of the fact that there were a number of very expensive bridges to be built. Now, if the Canadian Northern Company can build and equip its road for $18,000 per mile through the prairie section, why should this House give the Grand Trunk Pacific a capitalization of $40,000 per mile over the same country? I do not think we ought to pass this clause until some sufficient reason is given by the promoters of the Bill or by my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals why this high capitalization in respect to that portion of the road—indeed, in respect to the whole road—is demanded by this company. I am not in favour of unduly restricting this or any other company in the matter of capitalization, because I am well aware that capital seeking investment in undertakings of this kind must have some reasonable margin. But my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals, speaking, I presume for the government, has taken the position in the House that unduly high capitalization restricts and impedes any control over rates which may be afterwards exercised by either the Governor in Council, the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, or the proposed board of railway commissioners. Therefore, if this road should not cost to build and equip more than $18,000 per mile, and we give the company powers of capitalization extending to $40,000 a mile, may we not reasonably expect that there will be less power to control its rates in the future than if we restrict the capitalization to something like the amount the road may be presumed to cost? For my part, I would like to hear some more definite explanation, some good reason for giving this very large capitalization, before I would be inclined to agree in giving this company powers conferred on it by sections 4 to 13 of the Bill.

There is another consideration which should be perhaps mentioned at present. This company, having a capitalization, under section 4, of $75,000,000, is not bound, if I understand the provisions of the Bill, to construct any particular portion of the road. The only requirement to keep the charter in operation is that which is contained in section 33:

> If the construction of the railway is not commenced and $3,000,000 is not expended thereon within two years after the passing of this Act, and or if the railway is not finished and put into operation within seven years after the passing of this Act, the powers conferred upon the company by parliament shall cease and be null and void as respects so much of the railway as then remains uncompleted.

If that be the only provision—and it is the only one I find in the Bill—this result will necessarily follow, namely, that this company, having the power to fix its capital at $75,000,000, under section 4, may possibly build not more than 1,500 or 1,000 miles of railway, and, therefore, its capitalization—if the capital stock be fixed at $75,000,000—may be run as high as $50,000 per mile or even more. It does seem to me that some safeguard should also be taken with respect to that particular feature of the Bill, and I would ask my hon. friend to explain the grounds on which it is considered necessary to give to this company what must be regarded at present as a very excessive capitalization.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am unable to understand how my hon. friend arrives at the conclusion that this Bill establishes a capitalization of $40,000 share stock per mile, in respect of the prairie section. We have in this Bill dealt with the question of capitalization precisely as we have dealt with it in other Bills, or as nearly as possible. We have not thought that, comparing the amount of shares, capitalization which we authorized the Canadian Northern Railway to issue, with the amount authorized in this Bill, that we are here authorizing any larger proportion than we did in the case of the Canadian Northern Railway. The hon. gentleman should take into account the fact that we are authorizing by this measure the construction of 3,000 miles of railway, at least 1,600 to 1,800 of which will be through a very difficult and expensive country. The distance from Quebec to Winnipeg is estimated to be some 1,500 miles. That country, as you know, is exceedingly rough, through which it will cost very much more money to build a line, than through the prairie section, and a little west of Winnipeg you get into a hilly district and have to travel through an expensive and difficult country to reach Port Simpson. Taking the mileage from ocean to ocean at 3,000, we have allowed $25,000 per mile upon it. It would be quite inaccurate to say that we have allowed $40,000 per mile of share stock to issue. We are simply authorizing $25,000 per mile. There would not require to be so much issued in respect of the prairie section as of the other. There would require to be as much again issued, perhaps more, in respect of the Quebec and the mountain sections as of the prairie section, so that, comparing the proposal approved by the committee with the proposal approved by the government in the case of the Canadian Northern Railway, when dealing with the system of less than 1,500 miles —800 miles built and 700 to be built—we have dealt in no different way with the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway than we did with the other. It was thought, upon mature consideration, that the limited capitalization we allowed there was not excessive. If the hon. gentleman is basing his criticism upon the assumption that we are authorizing stock to issue to the amount of $40,000 per mile, I think I have made it clear that his estimate in that regard is excessive.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not think the hon. gentleman has correctly apprehended the purport of my remarks. I pointed out that in the Bill as originally introduced, there was a capitalization of $25,000 per mile. Assuming that the line from Moncton should be built, that capitalization might possibly be reduced to the vicinity of $20,000 per mile. But in addition there is something else you have to take into consideration, when you contemplate any attempt to control the rates in the future, and that is the bonding powers which are contained in section 13. Under section 4, you have a capitalization of $20,000 per mile, or $25,000, and it might be $50,000 per mile, because the company is not obliged to build the whole of its road. It may only build 1,500 miles, and then, under section 4, it will have a capitalization of $50,000 per mile. You will have not only capital stock issued to the extent of $75,000,000, but also bonds to the extent of $35,000 per mile on the eastern, and $30,000 per mile on the Quebec section, and $30,000 per mile on the woodland section, and $20,000 per mile on the prairie, and $50,000 per mile on the mountain section. These are matters which will have to be taken into consideration by the government in future when they come to deal with the question of controlling the rates. I say that the capitalization, including the bonding power under section 13, ought to bear some reasonable proportion to the cost of the road, and I do not think that the capitalization, including in that term the bonding powers, does bear a reasonable proportion to the cost of the road, even as stated by the hon. the Minister of Railways. He pointed out that some portions of the road will be very expensive to build. But the bonding powers are proportionately increased in those portions. In respect of the mountain section, you have a bonding power of $50,000 per mile. I am taking the prairie section simply as an illustration, because we have some data with regard to the construction of a road in that country, which we have not with regard to other portions. If it be true, as has been stated on the authority of engineers of the Canadian Northern Railway and the Department of Railways and Canals, that you can build and equip a road for $18,000 per mile in the prairie section, why are you enabling this company to issue bonds to the extent of $20,000 per mile and also to issue stock to the extent of $20,000 per mile on that section as well? Does my hon. friend think that when that stock is issued—and it may be issued under an arrangement with the construction company for a very small percentage of its value—does he think that when this stock gets into the hands of bona fide holders, who may have paid from 60 to 100 cents in the dollar for it, and you have bonds to the amount of $20,000 per mile as well, that will not have some effect on the exercise by the Railway Committee of the Privy Council or the Board of Railway Commissioners of discretion as to what rates are to be charged? It seems to me that powers of that kind are calculated to have a very important influence upon the control of rates in the future; and I, for one, raise my voice in protest against granting to this railway, or any other railway, powers so largely in excess of what the actual cost of the road is supposed to be. I am not raising this point for the first time; I do not select this road to raise it against; I have endeavoured during the past two sessions to raise this question with regard to every railway charter that has come before this House. And I must say that I know of no charter that has come before us for some time past that has granted powers of capitalization that seem to me so very excessive as those it is proposed to confer upon this company.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. One word in reply to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden, Halifax). I did not, in my remarks I made a moment ago, address myself to the contention the hon. gentleman is now making, because, I confess, my attention being called away to the point I dealt with, I did not apprehend that he was adding the bond issue to the capital stock issue. When he does that, the statement he makes with regard to the total amount per mile would not be unreasonable. But I have this to say upon that subject—that I have as strong an objection as any member of this committee to the authorizing of excessive stock and bond issues. I have contended in the Railway Committee as strongly as I could to keep down these figures, to keep them within reasonable bounds. And, in the present instance, I am not going to deny—it cannot be denied—that the fact of the issue of a large quantity of shares added to the exercise of extensive bonding powers will necessarily bear upon the business of the road, and, will, to the extent to which it is excessive, unreasonably burden the business of the country. One cannot possibly shut his eyes to that fact. But I want to point out, at the same time, that that very result is one of the necessary incidents of railroad building by corporations in this country. You cannot build them otherwise. If the country is so adverse to taking up the construction of these particular roads by the general government, if the country will prefer that the work shall be done by a company, then, you have to put the instruments into the company's hands to enable them to raise the money. And I wish to say, in my opinion, they cannot finance upon the dollar for dollar basis of the bare value of the stock and bonds. No company has ever done it, and no company, probably, will ever be able to do it. Before the company is put upon its feet, you must offer special inducements to financial men to put their money into it. Of course, when the road is running and has become a paying concern, people look back upon what might have been done, and say that it could have been made a success without such a large share capital upon which to pay dividends, and such a large bond issue upon which to pay interest. That is true enough. But before the enterprise is established, before the company is on its feet, you must go to capitalists and offer bonds at large discounts and offer shares as a sort of bonus to get the people to put their money into it. So, if it is necessary—and it is necessary—to build these roads without the action or intervention of the government, it is necessary at the same time to recognize that you must give them the opportunity and the means to get the money required for the purpose of construction. That is my answer to my hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax), and I take it that it cannot possibly be gainsaid. What was the case with regard to the Canadian Pacific Railway? With all their cash subsidy and land subsidy, they found it necessary to issue millions of their shares at twenty-five cents on the dollar. And, taking one issue with another, probably the whole $60,000,000 was issued at not more than fifty cents at the outset. And, in the case of the bonds, I suppose they were obliged to dispose of them at a discount. I do not know at what discount, but I have no doubt there was one. So, it is impossible to make a calculation upon the basis of dollar for dollar. And if the country wants the road to be built by the Grand Trunk or any concern associated with the Grand Trunk, it must put that concern in the same position as the Canadian Northern to raise money and carry the enterprise through.

Mr. DAVIS. I have just a word to say with reference to the statement made by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax) that the Railway Committee would take into consideration both the bond issue and the stock issue of this railway company in regulating rates. I think it should be an understanding, in discussing this matter, that, so far as the stock issue is concerned, it should not have any effect whatever upon the Railway Committee in the regulation of rates. If my hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax) will look into the records of American railways, he will find that they are all regulated by railway commissioners, and that about one-half the stock of railways pays no dividends and is not taken into consideration by the commissioners in regulating the rates. All we have to do is to say that people who lend money on mortgage are to be considered, for it is a well known fact that it is the money raised upon the bonds that constructs the railway, and the stock is a speculative element and should not be taken into consideration in fixing rates. So, if we see to it that the bonding power is not too high, we should not bother our heads about the stock. If the people put their money into the stock, they put it there as they do into any other enterprise, and they take all the chances.

Mr. BOURASSA. I am glad of the light that has been thrown by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair) upon our precious system of granting charters, especially to companies of such importance as the one now under consideration. As the hon. minister has said, it may be that it will not be possible for any company to construct a railway of this importance without being given large facilities for the raising of money, both so far as the investment of capital is concerned and the issuing of mortgage bonds. But if the rumour is true that this government is going to guarantee the bonds of this railway to the extent of $20,000 per mile, or any other amount, a good deal of the argument of the hon. minister is destroyed, because if the guarantee of the government is given, there is no doubt that these difficulties the hon. gentleman has pointed out in the way of the promoters of this company will disappear. But the authorized capital will remain.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That would have to be considered.

Mr. BOURASSA. But is the government ready to give the assurance that they will force the company to cut down the bonding privilege ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The point must be given due weight.

Mr. BOURASSA. That is the assurance given——

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair) in giving any assurance with regard to this important matter would speak a little louder I should be glad. We could not hear what he said.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I was saying that it is a matter the government would have to consider and deal with, provided they come to the conclusion that they would give aid in any form to the company. They would have to consider the question of bond issue, undoubtedly ; and it was because no one was in a position to say whether or not the government would give assistance in any way to this company that we had to deal with the amount of stock and bonds as a committee.

Mr. BOURASSA. I am glad of the explanation given by the hon. minister. It is reassuring. But, the fact remains that we are saddling upon the people, for all time to come, just as heavy a burden for the people of the country through which this railway shall run as the Canadian Pacific Railway has been so far, unless we take proper precautions to safeguard the interests of the people in the future. I most deeply regret—and I am not going to repeat what I said on a former occasion with regard to the Canadian Northern—that before giving support to this Bill, as seems to be the case, the government did not make up its mind to adopt a new railway policy for this country.

Mr. TALBOT. One of the reasons given by the hon. Minister of Railways for granting such large bonding powers to the Grand Trunk Pacific, is that the part of the country through which the road will be built from Quebec to Winnipeg is very rough. I think that the hon. Minister of Railways has before him now sufficient reports of first-class engineers to demonstrate that, if a different route be chosen, the whole of that part of the line could be built within a one per cent gradient. I believe the hon. minister has that information before him now. We are told by the promoter of the Bill, my hon. friend from North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), that the railway will be built fifty miles south of Lake Abitibi, Now, in that case they are choosing the worst part of the country, because they are going over the height of land instead of going north of Lake Abitibi. If they went north they would find a perfectly level country for their road-bed all the way. I think this is the proper time to look into this matter and if this company is going to be subsidized to such a large extent by the government for the whole route, the company should be compelled to pass through that portion of country where the route would be shortest and the easiest to build.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If I may be allowed to repeat an observation which I made when this Bill was before the committee, I would say that I do not see the wisdom of discussing the question of government aid in connection with this charter. For myself I have declined to discuss the two things together, and I do not admit for a moment that in passing this charter in its present form, if we do pass it, the government are committed to anything whatever. If the government decide to grant aid to the Grand Trunk Pacific, then, when the measure concerning that aid comes down, this charter must be adapted to the government aid. Therefore, I fail to see the wisdom of connecting the two subjects. In supporting this charter in its general character, I do not thereby commit myself to anything in the world, either regarding its location or anything else which has any relation to government aid. The two questions, to my mind at all events, are absolutely separate.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Will the hon. gentleman permit me one word? In what way would the hon. gentleman adapt the charter to the altered conditions? Would he do it by amending the charter?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Certainly, if this charter does not conform to the conditions which the government require, then this charter must either be amended or dropped. Before the government will agree to grant aid the government must insist upon the charter conforming to the conditions which they lay down.

Mr. McCREARY. Does the Finance Minister mean to say that if we agree to guarantee the bonds of this road, by a subsequent Bill we would have power to reduce the bonding powers contained in its present charter?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I take it that if this charter had at that time become law we would have to amend it. But I take it that this charter would not become law until the close of the session, and it will stand open like every other matter which has not passed its final stage. If the policy of the government should not be in harmony with the route, or with the bonding privilege, or anything else, then it is not the policy of the government that must change, but it is the charter that must change.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Then would it not be more convenient to let the Bill stand until the policy of the government is announced? According to the hon. gentleman's own statement that would be the logical course.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. To my mind that is entirely a question for the promoter of the Bill. We are not urging the Bill.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). But the Bill is being urged on, and the House has to deal with it; and the question is whether the House should deal with it, having first obtained such information from the government as we are reasonably entitled to, having regard to the importance of this undertaking and its effect upon the general scheme of railway transportation in Canada. My hon. friend the Minister of Finance says that if government aid is proposed, then all these provisions may be amended. But would it not be a more convenient course to put the House in possession of such information as, according to the hon. gentleman's statement we may reasonably expect, and then at a later date in the session we could deal with the Bill, having obtained that information, and being enabled to deal with it from all possible standpoints?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My answer is that I think we have to deal with this Bill in the same manner as any other railway charter, utterly irrespective of the question of subsidy or aid. Other companies come here for charters, we do not insist upon discussing the question of subsidy in connection with their charters. We give them the charter upon the ordinary terms of other charters, and leave the question of aid to be settled later on. I am willing to treat this company in precisely the same way as other companies. Let them take their charter for what it is worth. When we come to deal with subsidies, that is another matter.

Mr. McCARTHY. Having the Bill in charge, I must say to the committee what is common knowledge to every one: we discussed this charter for nine days in the Railway Committee, most fully and completely. All the questions which have been spoken of here to-day were before that committee and we discussed them at length. I think I am safe in saying that this Bill was more fully considered before that committee than any other Bill during the past fifteen years. Now we are in Committee of the Whole. I have no desire to stop the discussion, the Bill can be discussed as fully as possible, but I must ask the committee to permit it to go through, remodelling the Bill as the committee may see fit. We are now on section 4 of the Bill, and it is not fair, except for the purpose of argument, to couple this section with the question of bonds, and ask for an answer now. This section capitalizes the company at $75,000,000. I submit to the committee that this is a fair and reasonable capitalization. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company has a capital now of $85,000,000. We must not mix up the bonds and capital stock, they are entirely distinct things. A person who buys stock knows what he is buying, and a person who buys bonds knows what he is buying. They are not a part of the capital, and my hon. friend showed that he was aware of that when he joined the two. I say in view of the fact that the Canadian Pacific Railway is capitalized at $85,000,000, it is only fair that we should be given the capital we ask for. I do not think it is an over-capitalization at all, I think it is a fair capitalization, and I ask the committee to let this section pass.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It does not appear to me that it is at all necessary or important, from the standpoint which has been urged by the other side, that this Bill should stand. If the government decide to come to the assistance of the Grand Trunk Pacific, it can only do so by an Act of parliament, and when that Act of Parniament is proposed, it can declare and lay down the route upon which the line shall be built, and authorize the Grand Trunk Pacific to build its line according to the route indicated in that measure instead of according to the route laid down in this charter. That is not unusual legislation; that will be effective legislation. Then as to any other terms, as to the capitalization, we would have regard to that in the Bill which we would submit to the consideration of the House, and under which we would be asking parliament to assist this undertaking. I see no difficulty. The Grand Trunk Pacific will take this charter, and if they do not get the assistance they can go on, and they are entitled to go on with it, the same as any other company that comes to parliament. The committee has to deal with this Bill from all points of view, and when we as a government have reached a conclusion as to the course we will take, if it becomes necessary to make any material change in any respect in the charter of this company, we must do so by amending the charter in declaring the routes and other questions upon which the aid is to be given and under which the company is to be authorized to build by means of this aid.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Whether this company receives government aid or not, I say that its capitalization, under which we will include the bonding powers, ought to bear some reasonable proportion to the cost of the road, and I am taking the prairie section as an illustration. My hon. friend from Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis) says that the stock and the grant capitalized by way of stock has nothing to do with the question. I point out to my hon. friend that if you take for example the case of the Candian Pacific Railway to-day, let us assume that the stock of that railway was disposed of at a very small figure at first, it is chiefly now in the hands of bona fide holders, not of the people to whom it was issued in the first instance. If the proposed board of railway commissioners should have the power to deal with the rates fixed by the railway, when the railway is completed it would be influenced, beyond doubt, by the fact that this stock at the present time has been paying dividends, that it is in the hands of bona fide owners who paid for it, and the rates imposed by the railway company on the products of the west would perhaps be fixed at a higher amount than if the capitalization had been a smaller amount in the first instance. I am putting it like that, by way of illustration. If you build this Grand Trunk Pacific Railway and you capitalize it by means of a stock and bond issue for double the amount it would cost to construct the road the result which I have indicated will follow. That stock is issued under arrangements that are very well known. Even where there is no power to issue below par it is very often issued by means of an agreement between a construction company and a railway company, and then only a small portion of the par value is really paid for the stock in the first instance. Stock passes into the hands of people who pay par for it and the railway goes on and prospers and pays a dividend upon that stock. It is impossible to make me believe that the fact of that over-capitalization will not have some effect upon the rates which shall be levied on the railway in future. It is absolutely inconceivable that such a power will not be exercised by the company and the time to be careful about a matter of that kind is now, when the Bill is going through the House. When this Bill has passed through the House it is extremely improbable that any change of the character which has been suggested will be made in it, and we will find the company secure in its rights to issue stock and bonds to the extent of $40,000 per mile to build and equip a portion of the road which will only cost $18,000 per mile. I am willing to withdraw any objection I have to this apparently excessive capitalization if it can be shown that any one of the arguments that have been addressed to the House on the subject is fallacious, but until that is done I must persist in my objection to a capitalization of the kind which is proposed in this Bill.

Mr. McCARTHY. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden, Halifax) will see that the bonding privilege on the prairie section is only $20,000 per mile. That is the method by which every corporation raises money for the purpose of construction.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is to become of the capital stock?

Mr. McCARTHY. I was going to ask the hon. gentleman that question myself. What would become of the capital stock if it were put upon the market and offered for sale, if we eliminated the government from the question altogether ?

Mr. BELL. Why should you have this power then ?

Mr. McCARTHY. Because by the bonds you are only placing a mortgage on the road for so many years, and when you sell your stock you can pay off your mortgage. It is absolutely unfair to classify the stock and bonds together as capitalization. With the money raised on the bonds you build your road, then you pay off your mortage by selling your stock.

Mr. BELL. Out of profits.

Mr. DAVIS. Can the hon. gentleman give an instance where that has been done ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). My hon. friend from Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis) is asking the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) a question.

Mr. McCARTHY. I cannot give the hon. gentleman an instance.

Mr. McCREARY. The promoter of this Bill says that we discussed it for nine days in the Railway Committee. I recollect very well that we did so ; but, at the same time, it was understood that when we came to the House we could make any alteration in this Bill if we so desired in regard to the bonding powers or the capitalization. The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair) says that we can almost make a new charter when we bring down the Bill granting aid to this road, that we can make such changes in regard to the bonding powers and capital stock as will practically amount to the making of a new charter. I have only been in this House for three sessions, but during that time such a course has never been pursued as that which the hon. minister has suggested. I cannot recall a single instance in which a Bill was amended in the way that the hon. minister suggests when bringing down the Bill granting aid to the road, and it seems to me that the time to discuss this Bill is now and the place here. If this road is going to be constructed for the purpose of establishing another bond between the eastern people and the western people and of carrying freight from the east to the west and the west to the east, it has to be able to compete successfully with the Canadian Pacific Railway. Any one who has studied the question knows that the Canadian Pacific Railway is able to handle all the traffic that is offered between the great lakes and the seaboard. An ordinary single track road can take eighteen trains per day.

Mr. CLARKE. One way ?

Mr. McCREARY. Both ways. The Canadian Pacific Railway do not carry during the summer north of Lake Superior, I am informed, more than one and a half trains per day. It is not necessary to go into this. In my opinion it was a very unfortunate statement to make to say that the Canadian Pacific Railway is capitalized for $80,000 per mile. The very reason that the Grand Trunk Pacific are asking the country to assist in the construction of this road is to get rid of the octopus created by the capitalization of the Canadian Pacific Railway. The Canadian Pacific Railway was built at a time when it was a little dangerous to invest money in the western country, when the Hudson's Bay Company and other great corporations that had been in possession of the country for years were saying that it was not a habitable country. The Canadian Pacific Railway went into the North-west at a time when it was difficult to get anybody to go into business there. There are people, who, twenty years ago, could not be induced to invest a dollar in Winnipeg, who are putting up warehouses five and six stories high in that city to-day. It is a different proposition now. It is a financial proposition now, and wise men will now invest their money in the west. The proposed bonding power should be reduced from 25 to 50 per cent upon this road if we ever hope to get that relief from freight rates that we anticipate from its construction. I heard the estimate given the other day that $18,000 per mile would build the Canadian Northern from Grandview to Edmonton and for a distance one hundred miles east of Prince Albert, and it was somewhat of a surprise to me. I know that grading was done a couple of years ago for from 11¼ to 11½ cents per yard. I have heard that this work is now being charged for at the rate of 22 cents per yard, which seems high. Perhaps this charge is made for station work in the neighbourhood of a muskeg. Eighteen thousand dollars a mile for the construction and equipment of that road is exceptionally high. It should be fixed at $15,000 per mile, $12,000 for construction and $3,000 for equipment. The bonding powers proposed to be allowed to this road should be reduced from 25 to 50 per cent, in my opinion, if it is going to give the relief that we expect from its construction.

Mr. HEYD. Mr. Chairman, before this clause is put I may be permitted to say one or two words in connection with it from the standpoint from which I view it. When the Bill was before the committee and when the committee had discussed it for eight or nine days I took the position that it was the duty of the committee to pass any charter that the Grand Trunk Railway asked for, as, I then believed it was intended as a commercial undertaking in the interests of the Grand Trunk Railway Company and incidentally in the interest of Canada. But, the proposition has been changed. The length of the road has been materially increased. The company is now compelled to build a railway in the form of a horseshoe hundreds of miles longer than that which was originally intended. I am still of the opinion that if the Grand Trunk Railway Company has been willing to accept the charter as amended it should be passed. Ultimately the government will be held responsible for the manner in which it deals with this railway. If it shall be found necessary to change the course of the line and to reduce the bonding power, that responsibility, I take it, will fall upon the government, and whether we vote for this charter now or whether we amend it, ultimately the government will have to assume the responsibility of looking after the interest of the country with respect to this railway. It is almost a waste of time for us to discuss the matter here, assuming that I am correct in my contention that the government are prepared to make recommendations and changes and enter into an agreement with the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway whereby on certain conditions they must build such a road under such capitalization and under such bonding powers. That responsibility they will, as a government, have to take. They must look to their supporters and to the sympathy of members on the other side to assist them in carrying it through this House. I am exceedingly desirous that a railway should be built across this country at the cheapest possible cost, so as to do the most good to the people of Canada and in order that freight may be carried at the lowest possible rate. The people of Canada will expect the present government to see that their interests in this matter are conserved.

Mr. BOURASSA. To my mind the doctrine announced by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Heyd) is simply monstrous. He asks parliament to abdicate its responsibility in a matter of this kind and to saddle it on the shoulders of the government. Well, the government is nothing but a committee of this House, and to hold that it should take the responsibility of doing what it likes, after legislation has been passed by this parliament, is a monstrous doctrine. As a matter of fact, such a thing has been done too often in the past. I regret to say, I cannot agree with the Minister of Railways and Canals that we should deal with this charter just as we have dealt with other charters, because, even supposing that we have been in the wrong in dealing with other charters, that is no reason why we should perpetrate wrong doing. But, Sir, this charter is out of comparison more important than any other charter which this parliament has been called upon to discuss for the last fifteen years, and it is the imperative duty of this House to examine the whole question, and to insert such conditions in the charter as are needed in the interests of the country. So far as the capital is concerned I will not venture to express any strong opinion on that, but I do think that the contention raised by the leader of the opposition is perfectly sound. The Minister of Railways and Canals said that we should allow all facilities for these people to raise money, because, leaving aside the question of government aid they may have some difficulty in getting the money. It is a fact, however, that this Grand Trunk Railway Pacific road has much more assurance than ever the Canadian Pacific Railway had at its commencement, that it is going to be a paying investment after some time. Then the company will have a capital of $75,000,000 and it will have to pay a dividend on that. Surely when the people of the west or the people of the east will come before the Railway Commission and ask for some relief from excessive rates, the expenditure on the road will have to be considered and the dividend that will have to be paid above and over that expenditure must also be taken into account. Therefore the fact that there will be an exaggerated capital will work to the deteriment of the people at large. I beg to move seconded by Mr. Angers :

That the capital of $75,000,000 be reduced to $60,000,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The question raised by the leader of the opposition is no doubt an important one, and if it be discussed on its merits apart from other considerations, I think it should receive the careful attention of the House. But, Sir, I do not know of any reason, and I have heard of no reason why this charter should be treated differently from any other charter that has been considered by parliament. The question as to what should be the bonding privileges and the stock capital of any company to which we are granting a charter is an important one. But, comparing this with other charters that have been granted in the past, and even during the present session, the Railway Committee considered that in giving bonding powers of $30,000 per mile on the most difficult sections, and $20,000 per mile on the prairie section, it was going to the fullest extreme possible that they would be warranted, in reducing the privileges granted. Notwithstanding the wild statements that are made in the House and out of it as to the cost of railways, if we take the experience of railway building in Canada and the United States, no member of this House who is conversant with the subject will pretend to say that this road could be built, equipped, and put in proper condition for commercial business at anything like the amount we are granting as bonding privileges. There is no person who can point to a railway in existence that has been built and equipped as a road of this description would have to be, for $20,000 a mile on the prairie section and $30,000 on the other sections. It has been customary in the Railway Committee of this House to grant $40,000 a mile at least in districts such as are traversed by this railway, and that has been cut down to $30,000 a mile, which means a very great difference. In my opinion the estimates given as to roads first built is very low, and I think that any person who has studied this question will find that the figures mentioned in this Bill are also very low. We know from the experience of the Canadian Pacific Railway and other roads, that, through these different sections this road cannot be built for the amount of the bonding privileges. Considering the matter apart from anything that might happen in the future with regard to aid, and considering the scheme on its merits, in my opinion the bonding privilege, reduced as it has been below what is usually granted, is an exceedingly low bonding power if this is a bona fide company and is going to carry on the work. They cannot put it in the same position as the Canadian Pacific Railway or the Intercolonial Railway or any other railway in Canada for the amount we are granting here as a bonding privilege. The only other means they have for raising money under this charter is by the issue of capital stock, and even that amount has been reduced below what has been previously allowed in such charters. I am sure that no person who has had experience in railway matters will consider that there is a greater privilege granted for raising money under this charter than is sufficient to put the road in reasonable and proper shape. This very matter has been very carefully considered by the Railway Committee, and for my part, I am prepared to support the clause as is now before the House. Our action should not be based upon any prejudice or upon any rumour, but upon the actual experience of railway corporations in the past, and upon the actual knowledge we have as to the cost of railways through the different sections of the country.

Mr. DAVIS. If the principle were adopted, as laid down by the leader of the opposition, that the railway commission in arranging rates, should take into consideration the capital stock of a company so as to enable it to pay a dividend on its shares, then the shares of every railway in the country would be worth 100 cents on the dollar. If the principle is adopted that the company has to pay a dividend on every share, the shares would be worth 100 cents on the dollar. There is railroad stock in the United States, as I suppose there is also in this country, that is not worth 10 cents on the dollar. Therefore, in arranging the rates, the amount of stock issued by the company is never taken into consideration. If the hon. gentleman refers to the report of the Interstate Commerce Commission, he will find that half the railroad stock in the United States last year, and close on half this year, paid no dividend at all. The railroads in the United States are controlled not only by the Interstate Commission, but by commission in every state. In fixing the rates, they have never taken into account the amount of capitalization; and in discussing the question here, I do not think we should approve of any principle of that kind.

Mr. BARKER. When one listens to some hon. gentlemen who speak in this House, one would fancy that it made not the slightest difference what the amount of capital allowed to a company of this kind should be—whether it should be $50,000,000, $75,000,000 or $100,000,000. These same gentlemen when they appear before the public, after a company has been created, will talk very glibly about the iniquity and mischief of over-capitalization and watered stock, which ultimately wrings so much more money out of the pockets of the public; because it goes without saying that the larger the capital, the more will be required for dividends. It is all very well to take up a Bill such as the one we have before us, and say there is nothing mischievous in it. But I desire to point out one clause in the present Railway Act, which the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals proposes to re-enact in the Bill which he has before the House, and which to my mind has a very strong bearing on such questions as the one we are now discussing, that is, whether the amount of stock allowed to any company should be reasonable, having regard to the work to be accomplished. I refer to the following clause, which is taken from the Railway Act of 1888, which is now in force:

> The directors of the company elected by the shareholders may make and issue, as paid up stock, shares in the company, whether subscribed for or not, and may allot and hand over such stock in payment for right of way, plant, rolling stock or materials of any kind, and also for the services of contractors and engineers; and such issue and allotment of stock shall be binding on the company, and such stock shall not be assessable for calls.

There is not an hon. gentleman in this House who does not know exactly what this is intended to accomplish. A company such as is proposed to be created here will have at its back certain gentlemen ordinarily called promoters, and it is not an uncommon thing for such companies to have connected with them, not only promoters, but a construction company, who will be the contractors; and you may find, when you authorize a company of this kind to issue $75,000,000 of stock, that $10,000,000 or $15,000,000 of that may be given as a present to half-a-dozen gentlemen who may appear as a separate corporation for the purpose of constructing one or more sections of the railway. It is all very well to say that it matters very little what the amount of this stock may be. I think it matters a great deal, especially in the light of the section which I have read, that stock may be issued without a dollar being paid on it—practically as a present to those who may be supposed to have been of service to the railway. One hon. gentleman suggests that we should leave all this to the government. I do not think a government should assume such a responsibility, even if this House allowed them to do so. The fact that under the law stock can be issued without a dollar being paid upon it, makes it of imperative necessity that this parliament should take extreme care that no more stock should be allowed to be issued than is necessary for the work.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman has called attention to a clause in the Railway Commission Bill, as originally introduced; but he must have forgotten that I stated to the committee that that had been taken just as it was from the existing law, that I was not satisfied with it, and that I proposed to make material changes in it; and if he will turn to the new Bill of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company, section 11, he will find those changes embodied in that section. The first question to be asked in considering a section of this kind is this: Is it reasonable or proper that any stock should be given for property which is bona fide of value? I think the general run of opinion is that that is a power which might properly be exercised. It could be done in an indirect way by a nominal exchange of money and the taking of stock; and it is really better to authorize the thing with the proper safeguards. This is the clause which it seems to me contains the proper safeguard:

> The directors of the company elected by the shareholders may make and issue as paid-up stock, shares in the company, whether subscribed for or not, and may allot and hand over in payment for plant, rolling stock, docks, elevators, wharfs, warehouses, vessels, or materials of any kind, or as consideration for rights, powers and privileges acquired and also for the bona fide claims of contractors and engineers, such an amount of such stock as shall be a fair and bona fide value for the property purchased, or for the rights, powers and privileges acquired, or services rendered, as aforesaid, other than promotion services, due regard being had to the then market value of the stock, and such issue and allotment of stock shall be binding on the company, and such stock shall not be assessable for calls.

That clause is the one which I would propose to insert in the Railway Commission Bill; and when this Grand Trunk Bill was before the Railway Committee, I had the committee substitute that for the ordinary clause which is to be found in the Railway Act. Before I sit down, I would like to say a word in answer to my hon. friend from Selkirk (Mr. McCreary) and also in answer to my hon. friend from Labelle (Mr. Bourassa). My hon. friend from Selkirk says that in his experience he never knew such a proposition being made to parliament as that which I made a moment ago, to this effect, that if the government decided that it would in any form aid the Grand Trunk Pacific enterprise, it could, in presenting to parliament a Bill authorizing the granting of such aid, make such amendments in regard to route and other conditions as it deemed advisable and as commended themselves to the approval of parliament and the country. My hon. friend has not known of a case of that kind ever being proposed to parliament. Well, we are all familiar with that case of the Canadian Pacific Railway. In the Bill which was introduced to parliament for the purpose of authorizing the construction of that road, by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company so-called, the company itself was created by that Bill, and all the conditions as contained in the contract between the government and the company were incorporated in it. That is precisely what will be done in the case of the Grand Trunk Pacific if the government decides to render it assistance, and a very proper and effective method it would be of doing it. I cannot see the slightest objection to that; and in deciding on the route by which the railway must be constructed, and on the terms and conditions generally, if the company is to receive that aid, the government would be exercising a very wise power. My hon. friend from Labelle says that would be handing everything over to the government. He is quite mistaken in that. Every proceeding involving the expenditure of money or the granting of aid must be initiated by the government. They must take the responsibility of presenting it to parliament, and it is for parliament to say whether it will give its approval or not. It is for the government to initiate and for parliament to approve or to withhold its approval. So that there is nothing whatever in the suggestion which ought to disentitle it to the assent of this committee. I entirely agree with my hon. colleague the Minister of Finance in that contention. It does not appear to me that the company could carry this enterprise through unless it receives government assistance, and it will be for the government to say on what terms such aid, if any, should be granted.

The PRIME MINISTER. The policy usually followed in matters of this kind is to adopt the report of the committee to which the Bill has been referred. The committee is the proper place in which to investigate all questions in connection with such a Bill, and we are informed that special attention was there given to it, more in fact than to any other which has come before parliament for several years. Therefore, unless a very strong and substantial reason is given why we should depart from the usual course, we ought to follow the safe rule and abide by the report of the committee. The only point made against that report is that the road has been over capitalized, and that if such a large capitalization were allowed, we could not possibly afterwards control the rates. I would put this question to my hon.

friend from Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) or any other member of the House: Does he believe that this road is being over capitalized? Does he think that the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway can build the road even with the capitalization fixed by this Bill? I think, on the contrary, that the country would have reason to be thankful if the Grand Trunk Pacific could build such a road as is here contemplated according to the provisions of this Bill. It is true that they have taken the power to issue stock to the extent of $75,000,000 and to bond the road to a large amount, but does my hon. friend believe that the $75,000,000 stock, if put upon the market, will realize that amount? He knows that it will not. The country ought to be very thankful indeed to the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway if they should build this railway from Moncton to the Pacific coast with the resources provided for in this Bill. What will take place? They have undertaken to build such a railway from Moncton to Quebec, from Quebec to Winnipeg, and from Winnipeg to Fort Simpson. I say that if they succeed in carrying out such an enterprise under this Bill, without any government aid, they will have performed a feat of great magnitude without cost to the country. But they will probably come to the government for assistance. Then, as has been pointed out by my hon. colleagues the Minister of Railways and the Minister of Finance, the terms upon which the government may grant assistance will have to be considered. But because this charter is passed, it does not follow that the government is bound to grant any assistance. If the government chooses either to build the railway itself or have it built by a company—either the Grand Trunk Pacific or any other company—then the terms will have to be submitted to parliament and carefully considered. But until then there is nothing to be said against the argument of the hon. Minister of Finance, that this charter has to be treated as any other charter. If it were not a charter for such a gigantic road, it would have got through before now, but the magnitude of the enterprise excites attention. That, however, should not lead us to imagine that the charter is not such a one as is every day reported by the Railway Committee and passed by this House. I may add that the amendment of my hon. friend from Labelle is not in order.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The hon. Minister of Finance has said that it does not matter what the charter is that we are giving this company, and that the government, before granting it any aid, could alter the line and the terms and conditions. My hon. friend from Selkirk (Mr. McCreary) said that this was extraordinary legislation, and that it was the first of the kind he had ever heard of. Well, Mr. Chairman, it is the first legislation of the kind I have heard of. But the hon. Minister of Railways completely floored my hon. friend by producing a Bill, the Canadian Pacific Railway Bill, which, he said, was formed on the same lines. Let me point out that it is not formed on any such lines at all. The Canadian Pacific Railway Bill was for the purpose of ratifying a contract made by several individuals, to wit, George Stephen, Duncan MacIntyre, R. B. Angus and some other capitalists in England, with the Minister of Railways to build a certain railway, and under that contract they were given a charter to do so. But how could the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway enter into any contract with the government for the building of a railway except such a railway as is defined in this Bill, and on the conditions therein stipulated? The company is bound by its Act of incorporation. It cannot go outside of that. It cannot enter into a contract to do anything else than is expressly stipulated in its charter. It has no entity outside of its Act of incorporation, and therefore it cannot contract with the government as ordinary individuals could. In the case of the Canadian Pacific Railway, the government granted a subsidy for building a railway from Winnipeg to Victoria, and they got from parliament the power to enter into a contract with the railway company, which had been incorporated for the purpose of building that road. But this case is different. The Grand Trunk Pacific Railway is given by this Bill the power to build a certain defined line on certain conditions, and it could not make any contract with the government which would vary that line or in any other way alter the conditions of its charter. Therefore, I do not see how the contention of the hon. Minister of Finance and the hon. Minister of Railways can hold, namely, that after the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway is given its charter the government may enter into an arrangement with it which would not be in accord with the conditions of that charter. I say that this is new legislation. But the Minister of Finance says it is quite time enough to consider the question whether the government will subsidize this road or not, and on what terms, when that question comes before the House, and that the only thing we are called upon to deal with just now is whether we are giving this company an excessive bonding power. I can remember well the arguments formerly made use of by the hon. Postmaster General (Hon. Sir William Mulock), when he denounced what he called the folly of the late government in allowing over capitalization in the case of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and predicted that when the rates were being fixed or if ever that road should be taken over by the government, the country would have to pay for that over capitalization. I took a different view at that time, and I cannot say that I have considerably altered my opinion since. The parties who invest money in railways will look to the security they are receiving for their investment. What security would investors have in the undertaking now being considered ? First of all, there is the bonding power on the prairie section of $20,000 per mile, then there is the bonding power on the other sections, apart from the mountain, of $30,000 per mile, and on the mountain section of $50,000 per mile. The value of these bonds will be fixed by the value of the undertaking and the subsidy given by the government, and in my opinion—in which I differ a little from my hon. friend the leader of the opposition and my hon. friends the Minister of Railways and the Postmaster General—whether the bonding power be fixed at $20,000 per mile or $200,000 per mile would not matter so far as the investing public is concerned. Then, as to the fixing of rates afterwards, the commission would take into consideration not the watered stock, not the fancied amount of bonds issued, or any other securities placed upon the undertaking ; they should fix the rates upon the value of the undertaking itself, and its earnings, and that should be the only consideration. The amount that is issued, may affect the feeling of the commissioners in determining the value of the undertaking. That certainly is the view that has been taken by the present government ; it was the view taken by the Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair) and by the Postmaster General (Hon. Sir William Mulock), and asserted again and again before the committee. The amount of capital issued must have a little influence in determining the rates. But if the board properly inquire into this subject, it ought not to have that effect. Now what is the amount really available for the building of this road ? The only amount available for the prairie section—and I am sorry to be obliged to differ from so many hon. gentlemen who have spoken on the subject—is $20,000 a mile. It is true, you may give stock ; you may give it to the contractors for building. But they will get the full amount of their pay for the work they do in the cash realized from the bonds, and the value of the stock will amount to nothing. The only effect it can have is to remain as an incubus upon the undertaking, which, at some time, may influence a board in fixing the rates of charges upon the road.

Mr. BARKER. The hon. Minister of Railways has told us that the clause to which he has referred is one which he proposed to put into the General Railway Act.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I propose to ask the committee.

Mr. BARKER. I quite understand—the minister intends to suggest such a thing. The only difference between this section and the one in the Act seems to be this, that the directors shall only give what is a fair and bona fide value, according to the opinion of the directors, for the service rendered. I really do not think that will be much protection to the public. In the case I have put, the construction company will be so intimately connected with the directors, if it will not consist of the same individuals, that there will be no difference of opinion between those who are to give the stock and those who are to receive it as to what would be the bona fide and fair value. They will have the whole matter to settle among themselves. I do not think that this alters in the least the effect of the clause as it already stands in the Act. No body of directors, when they pass a resolution to give a large amount of stock to the construction company, ever give anything but what purports to be a bona fide and fair value, so far as the resolution goes. They do not commit frauds, they only take a generous view of what the construction company and those interested should receive ; and in that way, the stocks are watered and enormously increased beyond what they ought to be. That is the only point I am making and the only point I am referring to, and I refer to it not to discuss this clause, but because of its effect upon the amount of capital the committee should authorize the company to issue. The question of capital should be considered with regard to its effect upon the rates the public will have to pay to the company. It is a very important question. There is no doubt that the heavier the stock, the more the public, sooner or later, will have to pay for the services given. I understand the hon. member for South Lanark (Hon. Mr. Haggart) to say that this is a trifle. But I think that the public, as a whole, look upon it as a very serious question. Therefore, we ought to know from the government what really is required for this undertaking. I presume that the government know, very closely, what ought to be allowed for each section of the road. We ought to have some particulars, some more definite information as to how this amount of $75,000,000 has been arrived at. Why do they want that sum ? And would not $50,000,000 be adequate ?

Mr. OLIVER. The question has been discussed as to the danger of over-capitalization of railways in connection with this clause. In the Railway Committee, I have always been one of those alluded to by the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Haggart) as always opposing over-capitalization, and for the reason he has stated, that, in my opinion, the Railway Commission, in fixing rates, would naturally take into consideration the amount of capital on which dividend in one form or another, would have to be paid out of the earnings of the railway. It seems to me that is correct, because, if parliament authorizes issues of a certain amount, either stock or bonds, parliament is certainly a party to that issue, and could not, as a matter of good faith, stand in the way of a possibility of dividends being paid upon those stocks and bonds.

I may say that, in holding that view in the Railway Committee, I did not have very much support. The large majority of the committee always went against that opinion, and never hesitated, so far as I know, to give any capitalization to any company that wanted it. Now, it seems to me that if we had been ready and willing to give every company that came along the limited capitalization that is asked, it is rather a fool time to begin changing our view when a legitimate enterprise with a meritorious proposition comes before parliament. If the House will, even on this occasion, lay down a certain policy as to the amount of capital that is to be permitted to a railway company, and apply it from now on, even beginning with this enterprise, I should be inclined to support the proposition. But if the criticism offered is made only because of fear that this proposition is likely to be of some effect, that it is likely to have practical results—if what is really opposition is put forward in the form of criticism—then, as one of those who believe in the merits of the scheme and the necessity of its being carried out, I would be compelled to support the scheme as it is, even under the accusation of agreeing to over-capitalization. I do not claim to be more clever than other hon. members of this House, but it seems to me that I can follow quite clearly the proposition of the Minister of Railways, that when assistance is proposed to be given, it will be possible to restrict the operations of these powers that we are now giving to the company, that it will be possible then to make an arrangement, to make a bonding agreement, with the company that we are now creating, that it shall exercise such powers as we are now giving them only to the amount that we then agree to allow them. It seems to me that that would be possible and proper. So, while I would be glad, and while I think it would be a proper thing, for the House, even now, to decide upon a policy whereby no railway company should be permitted, either under the name of stock or bonds, to be over-capitalized, I am not prepared to be a party to opposition to this scheme, to single it out from all others and apply a principle which has never been applied before, and which we have no assurance will ever be applied again—taking the stand that the protection I desire to provide for the public interest can be provided at the time the assistance is given, if assistance is to be given. At that time, I would propose to hold the government strictly to account for the measure and the manner of assistance given. But at the present, I feel that, as a supporter of the scheme, I would not be justified in supporting what would appear to be rather opposition than criticism.

Another word on another phase of the fact. It seems to me there is a misapprehension as to the full effect of giving large powers in the matter of issuing stock and bonds. It has been held repeatedly that it was necessary to give large powers to issue stock and bonds in order to enable an enterprise to succeed. Now, I am not a capitalist, and I am not familiar with the workings of railways or railway promotion; but it strikes me that if a railroad project, which in itself was meritorious, were permitted by parliament to issue only a limited amount of stock and bonds, I would feel much more like investing my money in that scheme than in one which was permitted to issue a practically unlimited amount of stock and bonds. It strikes me we are not adding to the credit of a railway enterprise by giving it excessive bonding powers, or powers to issue stock, but quite the contrary.

Mr. GOURLEY. I have listened with great pleasure to this debate. I have as a rule disagreed with the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) with reference to capitalization, because I think that a company simply asking for a right to build a railway ought not be injured in the money markets by any small or narrow view of capitalization. But just as I got ready to agree with my hon. friend from Alberta on this Bill—because I think this Bill stands upon an entirely different footing—then I regretted to see the hon. gentleman hedging a bit. I would have been much better pleased if he had brought a more strenuous political life into this debate. Now, my hon. friend the leader of the opposition, I think, has suggested a course that we should adopt. It is idle for the government to wink at the idea that there is to be no other corollary to this Bill, because it is simply asking us to shut our eyes to the fact. We know that another Bill is coming down as a supplement to this Bill, and therefore my hon. leader made the good point that we should consider these two Bills together. I will admit as a lawyer that the proposition of the Minister of Railways and Canals and of the Minister of Finance is perfectly correct. In a subsidy Bill we can put in any conditions we like, and if this company is going to ask the government to aid that railway, they have got to accept the conditions in the Subsidy Bill, otherwise the government will say: You have got your charter, go along and build your railway; but if you are to receive assistance from the government, you must accept such a charter as we give you. There is another general principle. If there are two or more statutes on the same subject, the last one must control the others. Therefore I see no difficulty on that point, it is merely a matter of legislative courtesy. I think it would be better to have both these Bills before us so that we could deal with them together, because then we should not be giving this company powers to-day which we would have to modify to-morrow. Therefore, I think the suggestion of the leader of the opposition is an eminently practical one. Now, with regard to capitalization, as a general rule, I would give a company the most generous capitalization provided they were not going to receive aid, because as a rule it takes them a while to finance the matter, and after all, the stock of the company may never be worth a cent. But in view of the fact that we know there is coming down a generous Subsidy Bill in connection with this railway, the stock of this company is in an entirely different position from the stock of a company which has no prospect of any such assistance. I undertake to say that the Mackenzie & Mann railway stock for that 1,250 miles is to-day of considerable value. Any man of intelligence would give a considerable price for every share in that 1,250 miles of railway, because we have generously guaranteed it, and it will be of value at once in the market. If that is so, then the very instant that we give a guarantee to the Grand Trunk Pacific, supposing our aid assumed the character of a guarantee, that stock will immediately be of value, because the building of a railway is assured at once, and financial men will at once conclude that it is going to be a success. We have seen the Canadian Pacific Railway as a pioneer; their stock to-day is one of the best investments in Canada. I have no doubt that this Grand Trunk Pacific stock will at once command a good price in the market, and within three or four years more it will be at par, because with generous support I have no doubt the road will be built very quickly. Now then when we are passing a Bill where the stock is going to have a real value at once, you must deal with that stock in a different manner from the speculative stock you give to a company where you may never have the railway built. Consequently, I agree with those hon. gentlemen who say that we ought to take the two Bills together in order to make a just bargain, and I think the Minister of Railways and Canals would be dealing courteously with this committee if he would agree to that.

Clause 2, of section 4, carried on division.

On section 11,

The directors of the company elected by the shareholders may make and issue as paid-up stock, shares in the company, whether subscribed for or not, and may allot and hand over in payment for plant, rolling stock, docks, elevators, wharfs, warehouses, vessels, or materials of any kind, or as consideration for rights, powers and privileges acquired and also for the bona fide claims of contractors and engineers, such an amount of such as shall be a fair and bona fide value for the property purchased, or for the rights, powers and privileges acquired, or services rendered, as aforesaid, other than promotion services, due regard being had to the then market value of the stock, and such issue and allotment of stock shall be binding on the company, and such stock shall not be assessable for calls.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is intended by the expression 'due regard being had to the then market value of the stock ?' There does not seem to be any great element of precaution in that. The stock would very likely, at that particular time, have no value whatever. Should there not be some provision that the value of the services should bear some proportion to the par value of the stock ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden, Halifax) does not surely imagine that the stock of the Grand Trunk Pacific or any other undertaking would be taken at par in satisfaction of a bona fide claim of any kind at that early stage. I do not know how else you are going to regulate the issue of the stock paid up in exchange for property acquired, plant, or anything else than by the precaution which is included here.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not think this amounts to any precaution at all, and I do not think that the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals can point out in what way it does amount to any precaution, or in what way it controls the amount of stock that may be given for any services rendered or property acquired.

Mr. McCARTHY. It prevents stock being given for promotion services.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It may prevent stock being given for promotion services, but it does not do anything else. The stock given will get into the hands of those who care to take it for a nominal amount. If this is not possible, I would like to have the hon. minister show me how it is not possible, because I think I know the English language and it is a perfectly feasible thing under the terms of this section that that should be done.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I grant that it is a difficult thing to make provision for unless you omit it altogether. If you forbid giving stock what is to prevent anybody who wants a thousand dollars' worth of stock for services valued at $1,000 or $2,000 from securing it ? All he has to do is to pay his $2,000 into the hands of the company and get his stock, and the company will hand him back his $2,000 for his services. If the directors are satisfied, how are you going to prevent it ? By what legislation are you going to prevent that being done ? This section affords some protection particularly as respects the handing out of stock for promotion purposes. That it absolutely forbids altogether. When it comes to other services there would be some value attached to these services, and it will be determined by agreement between the parties.

Mr. GOURLEY. Could you not put in a minimum price ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You could not very well do that.

Mr. GOURLEY. Could you not say at less than so much ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not know that that would be very effective. The stock might not be worth ten cents. You would not want to put that into the Bill.

Mr. BELL. It almost seems to me that this provision would prevent the stock being used in this way at all. If it is only to be issued to the extent and at a value to be determined by the then market value it is altogether likely that the stock at this stage of the undertaking would not be listed and would not have any market value whatever, and if any genuine concern should receive it in payment for any services given it might involve them in difficulties which would have to be determined by litigation. I imagine that this clause in the Bill is one that will lead to no transactions.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You would prefer this to the state of the law as it now is ?

Mr. BELL. Yes.

Mr. BARKER. I would like to suggest to the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals that it would be better to drop out the words 'or services rendered.' Why cannot the company pay in cash for services rendered to it instead of giving big lumps of stock ? It is not a question of $1,000 or $2,000 as the hon. minister suggests. This clause is used for a very much more extensive issue of stock. If the company has really received some services from a contractor beyond the performance of his contract, if the contractor has done something in the way of service to be compensated, let the company pay for that in cash and then they will probably pay what is really honestly due to the man. This is simply an encouragement to throw into the hands of people large blocks of stock upon which no money has been paid or is intended to be paid and it would be better to eliminate these words from the clause altogether. This was not always in the law. It was put in some years ago so as to allow people to hold stock without paying for it.

Mr. COCHRANE. It has been in the Act since 1888.

Mr. BARKER. I do not see any objection to paying for the right of way in stock, because you have a fixed value for the right of way and you value the stock at a reasonable price; but where you take the question of services performed by somebody for the company which services may be performed by some man who has financial influence and who has enabled the company to float perhaps $20,000,000 or $30,000,000 of bonds, the compensation that that man would think fair for his services would be an enormous sum, and I think the company should be obliged to settle with such people in cash and not in watered stock handed over to be a burden for all time on the company. I would further ask the minister, whether this clause as it stands would not permit the directors to give perferred stock as well as common stock for the services.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Personally I have no objection to the suggestion of the hon. member if the committee desire to make the restriction. I do not know what my hon. friend (Mr. McCarthy) would say with regard to that portion of the clause, but I would be in favour of striking it out.

Mr. BARKER. I think it would be an improvement.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am inclined to think that it would be applicable to preferred shares.

Mr. McCARTHY. Why should a distinction be made as against this company? The wording is practically the same as section 39 of the General Railway Act which has been in force since 1888.

Mr. BARKER. I mean in regard to all companies and not to this one in particular.

Mr. McCARTHY. If the Bill of the Minister of Railways and Canals includes that provision it will apply to this road the same as to any other road. I ask the committee to pass this and then let the minister if he wishes to, consider the suggestion of the hon. minister for Hamilton to insert it in the General Railway Bill.

Mr. BARKER. I do not know that it would override a clause of this charter.

Mr. McCARTHY. No railway charter contains a clause such as the hon. member for Hamilton suggests, and I do not see why it should be inserted in this particular Bill. There are more restrictions already in this respect in this Bill than in any other Bill.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Except some.

Mr. BARKER. Strike it out of this charter altogether and settle it by the General Railway Act.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. If you strike out this clause altogether it may injure the project. If it is found that it does not conform to the provisions of the new Railway Act it can be amended later.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. I understood that the only reason the committee had for inserting the clause was that this charter was not only a railway charter, but that it gives power to construct docks, elevators, warehouses and to run ships which would not be included in the General Railway Act. For instance they might run a steamship service in competition with the Canadian Pacific Railway. Were it not that these other things were included in the charter I would not have voted for this clause.

Mr. BARKER. There is no reason why they should not be covered by the General Railway Act.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. This clause does not allow remuneration for services except to engineers or contractors, and I would regret if the clause were interfered with because in my experience of building railroads I have found it most valuable where your stocks or securities are not very good, and I regret to say that many of them are not good. In the case of the Georgian Bay branch of the Grand Trunk Railway, a lot of local enthusiasts, of whom I was one, built 200 miles, and we were only too happy to get the Grand Trunk Railway to take it over subsequently and operate it. We had no money in our early days and we issued stock and bonds for this purpose and we found it a very useful clause. In the days of the railway boom in Ontario we invested our money in building railway lines and we were glad to unload them afterwards on the Canadian Pacific and the Grand Trunk Railway. I got cured of it, but I learned a little about railways and the value of stock and bonds. Our great trouble always was to get in the unsuspecting capitalists whom we are now so much afraid we will impose upon. I believe that if the railway commission is worth a cent it will protect us, and that we, therefore, need not destroy one of the resources that is indispensable to build a railway line. I myself helped to pass this sort of a clause in 1888, and the Conservative government adopted it, and since that time, notwithstanding the thousands of miles of railway that have been built, we have not found any abuse coming from it. In the new clause which the Minister of Railways and Canals proposes in the Railway Act he still further restricts these powers. Is not this clause the same as the Minister of Railways and Canals will have in the new Railway Act.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is founded on it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Does not the clause as it stands at present render it perfectly possible to give any proportion whatever of the capital stock of the railway company, as a bonus for placing the bonds. Would not that be feasible if you leave in the words 'or services rendered.'

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, it is covered by services rendered, except promotion services.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Has that been struck out ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No. I said if the committee thought proper. I am not wedded to it at all.

Mr. CLARKE. Why not strike it out ?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. According to the rules of the House, an amendment cannot be made to a private Bill without one day's notice being given.

Mr. BARKER. I think in any case this should be non-preference stock.

Mr. McCARTHY. The answer applies which I gave to the hon. gentleman before. Section 39 of the Railway Act is exactly the same as this, and has been in force since 1888.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The observation of my hon. friend from North Simcoe would be perfectly pertinent if the general Railway Act made provision for the issue of preference stock; but as it does not do that, his remarks have not very much importance.

Mr. McCARTHY. I do not think it makes provision for the issue of any kind of stock.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Then, this clause has an entirely different application from that in the Railway Act; because this Bill gives power to issue preference stock, and clause 11 is sufficiently comprehensive in its terms to include preference stock. I think the clause should certainly be amended in the way suggested by my hon. friend from Hamilton. I do not see what reasonable objection there can be on the part of promoters, because every object intended to be served by section 11 could be satisfied by limiting it to common stock.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. I quite agree with the hon. leader of the opposition that if there is any doubt, it should be made clear that common stock is meant, and I think the promoters would consent to that.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Would you not allow a contractor to be paid with preference stock ?

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. The object of issuing preference stock is to give a security, which is better than common stock. I imagine it could not have been contemplated by the promoters to ask for this, because it is a departure. I have not known that power to be given before. I certainly would vote against preference stock being allowed to be given; but if the committee thought differently, I would want to have it made plain that it could be either preference stock or common stock. There are serious reasons, I think, why a preferred security should not be applied in that way. The directors could apply bonds on their own responsibility without legislative authority. When the Bill went through the Railway Committee, no question of this sort was raised. If it had been, I certainly would have opposed the inclusion of preference stock.

Mr. GOURLEY. Is there a clause in the general Railway Act allowing the issue of preference shares ?

Mr. McCARTHY. No, nor common shares either.

Mr. GOURLEY. Then, this must be limited to common stock.

Mr. McCARTHY. With all due deference to the hon. leader of the opposition, I do not think his argument is good or valid. The interpretation clause does not contain the word 'stock,' and does not define or confine it. Whether it would be common stock or preference stock may be a debatable question; but there is no limitation in the Railway Act, which has been in force since 1888, so that I think the arguments which I advanced in answer to the hon. member for Hamilton are substantial. Of course, what the hon. member for South Norfolk says as to preferred stock not being used in this way in his experience is very strong. If it has not been so used, I do not suppose it will be used in this case. But I do not know what the intention of the promoters may be.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I cannot say that I look with favour on this method of using the stock; but I must confess that it would be particularly objectionable to my mind to use preference stock in this way. I think my hon. friend would do well to consent to the inclusion of the words, 'shares in the common stock of the company,' in the second line of the clause, so that it will be applicable to the ordinary or common shares.

Mr. McCARTHY. Let that clause stand.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The amendment could be made by unanimous consent.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I think not.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think anything can be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The reason for a day's notice being required is this. This is a private Bill, and there might be outside parties who, knowing that the Bill was to come before the committee to-day, and knowing this rule, would be absent, and hence could not be heard.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Outside parties could not be heard, anyway.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. They could through their representatives.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. The Deputy Speaker is quite right in saying that we ought not to do anything in the way of amending a clause without notice, though I am quite sure we could do anything in Committee of the Whole by common consent. I remember the same question arising in connection with the London and Port Stanley Railway Bill, in which amendments were made by the member in charge of the Bill, with the common consent of the committee.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I will just read the rule.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Before you read the rule, might I be permitted to suggest that these rules for the business of the House are made for the governance and convenience of the members of the House, and not for the governance or convenience of any persons outside of the House.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Knowing that there is a rule which prevents important amendments being made in the Committee of the Whole, some members might not make it a point to be present as they otherwise would if they thought that any important amendment could be made. The rule is as follows :

No important amendment may be pressed to any private Bill in the Committee of the Whole House or at the third reading of the Bill unless one day's notice of the same shall have been given.

Bourinot says that the correct course is to refer the Bill back to the Select Committee to which it had been previously sent.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What is the object of our going into committee at all if we cannot change the Bill ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Let me also say that the logical result of your ruling, Mr. Chairman, is that we never could suspend the rules of the House unless we had every member present in his seat.

Mr. McCARTHY. I would ask to let the matter stand until I can find out whether the amendment is of importance or not. I do not know whether the promoters will consider it important or not.

Section allowed to stand.

On section 12, describing line of railway.

Mr. CLARKE. In the notice of application for charter, the eastern terminus was fixed at Gravenhurst. What has caused the company to change it to Moncton ? Also I find that this section, No. 12, contains these words :

Thence in a north-westerly and westerly direction passing to the north of Lake Nipigon, in the province of Ontario, to a point at or near the city of Winnipeg ; thence westerly and north-westerly, passing through or near Battleford, Edmonton and Dunvegan, or by such other more feasible route as is hereafter located, but following in a general direction that herein indicated, and by way of either the Peace River pass, or the Pine River pass, or such other pass in the Rocky Mountains as is found most convenient and practicable, to Port Simpson or Bute Inlet, or such other port on the Pacific coast between the said points as is considered more accessible and better adapted for the purposes of the company.

What does that mean ? Does it mean that they can go practically where they please so long as they get to the Pacific coast ? Is that the idea ? Will the hon. gentleman please answer these two questions—why was the eastern terminus removed from Gravenhurst to Moncton, and what is the meaning of these words I have just read ?

Mr. McCARTHY. I may inform the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clarke) that I am not in the confidence of the managers of the Grand Trunk.

Mr. CLARKE. Do you know anybody who is ?

Mr. McCARTHY. I am not able to tell why the terminus was removed. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Clarke) is a member of the Railway Committee and he remembers the discussion which took place at the time the eastern terminus was fixed at Moncton. So far as the other question was concerned, this is the usual clause inserted in a railway Bill. It permits construction from ' at or near' a certain point to ' at or near' another point. The reasons for this are obvious. A railway company when applying for a charter, cannot lay down their routes specifically. The protection of the public lies in the power of the Governor in Council or Minister of Railways and Canals, for every railway must locate its line, and that location must be approved.

Mr. FOWLER. I would like to ask the hon. promoter of this Bill whether it is the intention that this line shall be carried through the state of Maine in going from the province of New Brunswick to the province of Quebec ?

Mr. McCARTHY. As I understand the Bill, the only power given is to construct the line in Canada, I know of no other intentions on the part of the company. If such an intention exists, it has never been communicated to me. So far as I know, the intention is to build the line in Canada.

Mr. FOWLER. I do not think the hon. gentleman (Mr. McCarthy) has given a fair answer to my civil question, in giving the information he has given just now. I am quite aware, though the hon. gentleman may not be, that this parliament would have no authority to give the Grand Trunk people power to build through the state of Maine, and that is the only thing the promoter has given in answer to my question. And the point covered by my question was a point of some importance.

Mr. McCARTHY. I do not think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fowler) could have heard the last two sentences of what I said.

Mr. FOWLER. I say it is a matter of some importance to the people of New Brunswick, and to the people of the province of Quebec as well, to know if it is the intention of the Grand Trunk Company, in carrying their line from Moncton up through the province of New Brunswick and Quebec to the city of Quebec, to build through the state of Maine or not. It would make a difference in the length of the route and also in the direction, and I think it is only right that the intention of the company should be stated to the House and to the country. And, if the hon. promoter of the Bill has not that information at hand he will have the opportunity to procure it from the persons who are behind this Bill before eight o'clock.

Mr. McCARTHY. As I said, I am not going to build this road. So far as the intention has been communicated to me, the intention is to build the road through Canada—it is to be an all-Canadian road.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not observe anywhere in the Bill any obligation on the company to build any one of these sections. I think the Bill leaves it entirely open to build any of the sections the company sees fit to build. Is that the understanding of the Railway Committee when they reported the Bill ?

Mr. McCARTHY. Several motions were moved in the committee as to the constructions of these sections—first that they should be constructed simultaneously, then, one two, or three sections simultaneously. The committee had several votes on the subject, but the clause was left as the hon. gentlemen now find it. Of course, it was considerably different from what it was as introduced. But it was affirmed in this point by the committee after discussion, and, I think, four or five votes.

Mr. WADE. I may say that I myself moved an amendment to this clause providing for the simultaneous construction of all the sections, meeting the very objection taken by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax). It was urged in the committee at the time that if there was no aid given to the company it would not be fair to dictate to them what sections of the road it should build, and it was thought better to leave that until the Bill was introduced giving aid to the company, if such a Bill were introduced. We were told that if such a Bill were presented, we should have a full opportunity of discussing the matter and urging that the road should be constructed simultaneously from end to end. With that understanding, I asked to be allowed to withdraw the amendment I proposed. But, the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) objected to that, and there was a vote taken on my amendment much against my will, with the result that it was defeated. But I do not say that the vote upon that amendment represented the views of the committee at the time, because a great many of the members voted against the amendment I proposed simply because they desired to have the matter brought up when the subsidy is discussed, if a subsidy Bill is brought before parliament. I think that some undue and improper comments have been made, and the country is not fully aware of what has taken place in the committee. We have not receded from our position in the slightest degree that there should be some guarantee that the whole line should be built; at the same time it aids the construction, and it seems to me that if this were done, it would meet many of the objections brought forward this afternoon.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No doubt a great deal of the embarrassment felt by many of the members in dealing with the Bill had its source in the impression which had become general that this company would have aid in some form or other from the government. It was my endeavour, as it was the endeavour of other members of the committee to dissociate that question from the question before the committee. It might be ultimately that aid would be given, and it might be that it would not; and it was only fair to deal with this Bill upon the basis that no aid would be given, inasmuch as it might not be given. It would not be fair to hamper the Bill with conditions which we would not impose upon another company.

Mr. CLARKE. Were not the company obliged to shift the terminus a thousand miles east of where they originally intended to have it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That was the action of the committee. I was not in favour of it; but the committee felt disposed to do it and did it.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Were not the members of this House justified in the belief they formed with regard to the prospect of government assistance to the road by the eloquent speech delivered by Sir Charles Rivers Wilson before the committee, wherein he distinctly said that he expected that the government were going to build the road?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not know whether my hon. friend (Mr. Hughes, Victoria) expects an answer to that question or not. It did not alter my mind upon the question of what would be a proper action on the part of the committee. It was for the reason that the committee did not think that it ought to impose conditions, there not being any assurance that government assistance would be given, that the motion moved by my hon. friend from Annapolis (Mr. Wade) was voted down as also were other motions of the same character. I treated it simply as any other company asking for a charter would be treated, and I think that that is the principle upon which we ought to deal with this Bill to-day.

Mr. WADE.

Mr. FOWLER. I do not entirely agree with what the hon. member for Annapolis (Mr. Wade) has said that, as this is only a Bill providing for a charter, we have no right to impose conditions. When this company come here and ask for a charter they are asking for certain privileges which it is in the power of this House to grant them, and if we have a right to grant them, we certainly have a right to impose upon the company the conditions which we believe to be in the best interest of the country. We have a right to impose any conditions we see fit; and it seems to me this is a very reasonable condition, and the only test of its reasonableness is whether it is in the best interest of the country.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Would the hon. gentleman treat a Bill of this kind precisely on the same basis, whether the company was to get any assistance or not? Would he annex conditions in the same way and oblige the company to go on and construct the work without any public aid whatever, just as he would if we were giving it aid?

Mr. FOWLER. I may say this, that in the case of the company receiving pecuniary assistance such as the minister speaks of, the conditions you would impose might be more onerous than the conditions you would impose when they were only asking for a charter. It depends entirely on what you are giving them as to what conditions you would have a right to impose. It is all a question of reasonableness after all. That is the standpoint from which I look at this question, when we are asked to say whether this company shall begin simultaneously at these different points, because they have divided this railway into different sections. Now they must have had some object in view when they made that division. Why not consider the railway as a whole? Why not come here and ask for a charter over this line as a whole, to run from Port Simpson to Moncton? Then the matter might be in a different position. But here they have divided their line into sections, and therefore they would have a perfect right, according to their charter, to ask for aid to build the prairie section, the section that would pay for itself, and leave the other sections unbuilt. Therefore we see this extension that was given as a sop to the maritime provinces, this extension from Quebec——

Mr. WADE. We should not complain if it has been given.

Mr. FOWLER. But if it is no good then we have a right to complain; if it does not fill the bill we have a right to complain. If it does not remedy the grievance which we are complaining of, then we have a right to complain, and that is the point I wish this committee to consider. Because there is no assurance, there is nothing in the charter which compels these people to build from Quebec down to Moncton, and therefore if they are honest about this——

Mr. WADE. Would the hon. gentleman allow me to ask him a question ? Does he complain because the Bill has been changed. and the eastern terminus has been made at Moncton instead of Quebec ?

Mr. FOWLER. I have no objection whatever to the extension down to Moncton, I am in perfect accord with that; but I want something more than a mere provision in the charter to assure me that it is going to be built. That may suit the hon. gentleman for Annapolis (Mr. Wade), but it does not suit me. I want to say here and now that the conduct of the gentlemen who were promoting this Bill before the Railway Committee was not such as to impress me with much confidence in their bona fides. I want to say that the lack of frankness with which these gentlemen replied to the reasonable questions that were asked them by men who were there representing their constituents, impressed me that they were not bona fide in their intention to build from Quebec down to Moncton.

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

On section 12,

Mr. GOURLEY. Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) asked me to move the amendment of which he gave notice as follows :

That the said Bill be referred back to the Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines, with instructions to add to the said Bill, after section 13 of said Bill, the following :—

Provided that in the event of the company receiving from the government of Canada any assistance, either by way of subsidies, moneys, land grants, guarantees, loans, or in any other manner whatever, the work of construction on the Quebec section be commenced simultaneously with the work on the woodland and prairie sections and be completed and put in operation simultaneously therewith and before the company exercise any of the powers conferred upon it by section 33 of the present Act in respect to 'lease and running powers over other railways.'

Mr. McCARTHY. That motion might very well be moved when we are going into committee, but not while we are in committee.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. An hon. member may move that the committee refer back at any stage.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. Chairman, let me call your attention to the fact that the hon. gentleman's motion is to refer back to the Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines not to the House. Your jurisdiction only is to receive a motion that this committee rise and report progress. This motion should have been moved in amendment to motion that the Speaker leave the Chair.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The rule is that the hon. gentleman cannot move now. The amendment is out of order.

Mr. GOURLEY. May I ask the ground for your ruling, Mr. Chairman ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. As I understand the point taken it is that this motion must be moved when the Speaker is in the Chair, and not when the House is in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. We have not the power to move in this committee that a certain Bill shall be referred to a committee of the House, but while the Speaker is in the Chair, this motion should have been made that the Bill be referred back.

Mr. OLIVER. Before this section passes, I wish to offer some remarks to the committee. I do not think, as a member representing a constituency deeply interested in this Grand Trunk Pacific scheme, in the project as a whole, and in its success, that I can support the passage of this clause through the House, as it stands. I objected to a certain provision in it in the Railway Committee, and I feel so strongly on the subject that I feel compelled to register my objection against it in the Committee of the Whole. I have more faith in the commercial success of this proposed Grand Trunk Pacific scheme than many of those who have already spoken on it seem to have. While they supported it in a measure, they declared themselves as of the opinion that it was not within the bounds of possibility that it should be a commercial success. For my part, if I did not think the scheme was a good one in the interest of the people of Canada and that it contains the elements of financial success, I would not have abused the position which I hold in parliament of voting for it or supporting it. Believing that this is a good proposition for the country at large, and that it is a practicable business proposition, I feel bound to do my part at any rate to leave the proposition in a position whereby it shall have a reasonable chance, both of benefiting the country and turning out to the financial benefit of those interested in it. As I understood the policy of the government in regard to this scheme, as stated by the right hon. Prime Minister before the Bill was introduced, it was that there should be a transcontinental railway extending from tide water to tide water. To secure this transcontinental railway extending from tide water to tide water entirely on Canadian territory, it was expected that this country, according to the sanction of parliament, would be prepared to make very considerable financial sacrifices. I am sure that parliament agreed as to the desirability of having a transcontinental railway entirely on Canadian territory extending from tide water to tide water, and not only from tide water to tide water, but from tide water on one shore to tide water and open navigation all the year around on the other shore. If this is desirable, and every body will agree that it is desirable, then it is most desirable that the shortest possible line between an all the year around ocean port on the Atlantic and an all year round ocean port on the Pacific should be chosen. It is necessary that this should be in the interests of the people who require to use the road, and it is just as necessary on the part of the people who are to own and operate the road. Every mile of length more than is absolutely necessary means increased cost in the building and increased cost in the operation. Somebody has to pay for that. It may be that the company is willing to agree to an unnecessary lengthening of the line, believing that the country will pay for the extra cost of building and operating that unnecessary length. And the company are perfectly right in believing that it is the country, either the national treasury or the producer who is to use the road in order to get his products to market, who actually has to pay this extra cost. If that should be the case, then when parliament is defining the route and the terminal points of this road, it is the duty of parliament to define the shortest route and the most available and suitable terminal points. I cannot support the section as it stands, which provides that the eastern terminus of this great transcontinental road shall be at a point where there is no ocean port ; where there is no possibility of making an ocean port, and which will entail an unnecessary construction of 100 miles to reach a Canadian winter port, and a consequent increased cost of hauling. Owing to the number of rulings which have been made here to-day, I cannot tell whether I would be in order in moving a motion or not, but I propose to lay before the committee the suggestion that the word 'Moncton' be changed to 'St. John,' so that parliament shall become responsible for indicating the eastern ocean port of this transcontinental road at the nearest and best port that Canada has in consideration of distance and other matters. I do not see how parliament can justify itself if it gives assistance towards the construction of a railway, the whole purpose of whose existence shall be to give Canadian ocean port facilities the year round, and then allow that road to be constructed to a point where there is no ocean port, and which is 100 miles from the nearest available ocean port, the construction of which to that point would increase the haul by about 200 miles.

Mr. GOURLEY. I want to move an amendment to that clause 12.

Mr. McCARTHY. I object.

Mr. OLIVER.

Mr. GOURLEY. Then I beg to give notice that on the third reading of the Bill I shall move that the Bill be recommitted for the purpose of inserting the following amendment :

Provided that in the event of the company receiving from the government of Canada any assistance, either by way of subsidies, moneys, land grants, guarantees, loans or in any other manner whatever, the work of construction on the eastern section be commenced simultaneously with the work on the Quebec, woodland and prairie sections and be completed and put in operation simultaneously therewith and before the company exercise any of the powers conferred upon it by section 33 of the present Act in respect to lease and running power over other railways.

I can assure the promoter of this Bill that all we in the maritime provinces are desirous for is that we shall be assured that this Grand Trunk Railway, which has received from Canada enormous grants of money, shall have a Canadian eastern terminal, and so far as I am concerned I am willing that it shall receive more aid, provided it shall become a national highway in the true sense of the word. I would suggest to the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) that he should leave to the maritime members to determine upon the question of the eastern terminus. I would be perfectly willing to take his judgment with reference to the terminus in Alberta, but he ought to reciprocate, and take our judgment as to the eastern terminus. We do not propose that the road should stop at Moncton, because there is no very great sea-port there, but what we do wish is that there may be some common point in the maritime provinces upon which we can agree, and if the Grand Trunk Railway comes to Moncton we shall take chances afterwards as to which is the best port, whether it shall be Country Harbour, St. John or Halifax. I am not sectional enough to be wedded to any of these ports. All I want is that the products of this great country shall be sent to the markets of the world through a Canadian port, no matter which it be. I want the gentlemen from the west to be Canadians first. At this time in the history of Canada we should not know that there is a west or an east. For my part, I do not know that there is any boundary between Nova Scotia, New Brunswick or Ontario ; I know nothing about provincial boundaries, excepting as regards little provincial affairs with regard to the administration of mere local funds.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. GOURLEY. There are no boundaries in this country for me except the Canadian boundary from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and from the 49th parallel to the Arctic ocean. This is all the country a Canadian should know, and every Canadian must reach that standard and be prepared to do everything that will develop Canada as a whole. We must understand that this railway company has already a large system of railways operated in Canada. If this company had no port at Portland, I would be in a different position ; but it has enormous terminals there, and so far as I am concerned, I believe that by proposing to come to Moncton the Grand Trunk Railway are simply dragging a red herring in front of our noses so that when they get their charter and have their line built to Montreal, they will give the go-by to the maritime provinces and say : Gentlemen, we have terminals at Portland, and we will use them. I can understand the promoters of this Bill being blinded by their surroundings ; I can understand one or two gentlemen in this House being blinded by their associations with the Grand Trunk Railway, but I cannot believe that the ordinary member from Ontario or from the west can be blinded by such considerations. I quite understand that any Canadian in this parliament should think and think only of making the Grand Trunk use a Canadian port. The time has come, and parliament might as well know it first as last, when the people of Canada will not put up any longer with a foreign port being used to export the great products of Canada. I am willing to vote any amount of money to develop the west; but I want the western members to see that it is a disgrace to Canada to have the great products of the west shipped at Portland. What will the world think of Canada if we use a foreign port ? It will say that Canada is crippled in its geographical area. It is a scandal to Canada, and will give a bad impression of the country abroad. Notwithstanding the fact that we have the best ocean ports if only they are exploited and used. The other day it was alleged in the Railway Committee that because Halifax or St. John was over 150 or 200 miles apart, farther from the west than Portland, that was an answer to the proposition to use a maritime province port. But I am prepared to show that two or three hundred miles at the end of a long haul is not the slightest objection. There are railroads in the United States which will carry the products of the country 3,000 miles as cheaply as other railroads will carry them 2,500 miles. Therefore, the gentleman who said that 200 miles of haul was going to destroy the value of a maritime province port as a great entrepot of this country, was not right in his statistics nor right in his heart—he was wrong at both ends. Now, Sir, I undertake to say that the time has come when this House should give the Grand Trunk formal notice, giving them one, two, or three years to make preparation to leave Portland. Is not this time for doing that, when they are coming to parliament asking us to make this system, which has hitherto been a purely Ontario system, a great north-western system ? They are asking us to extend their system into the great territories of the west, to enable them to bring grain down and dump it at Portland. In the early days when the Grand Trunk Company got its charter, there was not in Canada the national feeling that exists today ; the provinces were not confederated, there was very little hope that we would arrive at our present stage of development, and the Grand Trunk was allowed to make its entrepot at Portland. But now that is all changed. Canada has become a great country stretching from one ocean to the other, and there is no reason why the Grand Trunk should not be told, if you want this charter, you will have to take it on the express and clear condition that you shall use a Canadian port. I am in favour of the motion of the hon. member for King's, N.B. (Mr. Fowler), but it is inadequate. I do not care how many clauses you put into the charter, requiring the Grand Trunk to take their freight to a maritime province port. Unless the shipper routes them that way, it is no protection, because the Grand Trunk can give the shipper a wink, and say, route all your stuff to Portland. We must meet this question like lawyers and men, in a way that will make it impossible for the Grand Trunk to budge from a Canadian port. Turn this question around. Suppose the Grand Trunk came here asking us to make Seattle, in Washington, their dumping port on the Pacific coast. I would fight as strongly for you in the west as you should be fighting for us. You expect us to stand up as one man and say that our Pacific slope shall not be abandoned, and the United States coast used and exploited by a great Canadian concern against the interests of Canada. In the same way I want all the members of this House to stand up and say that the maritime province ports of this country must be exploited and developed for the purpose of rounding out this confederation. I am bound to tell you that the whole maritime provinces are aroused over this question. I was home two or three weeks ago, and I never heard a question so thoroughly discussed up and down the streets, in Halifax, in Amherst, in Truro, as this question ; and every merchant, every workingman, every man in the streets, was of the opinion that the time had come when the maritime provinces should stand up for their rights. I remember when the Canadian Pacific Railway was built, the Conservative party with which I was identified, had to meet the charge of all that money being expended in the western country.

Mr. McCREARY. How about the Intercolonial ?

Mr. GOURLEY. Of course, that was our answer. I do not care where the money is spent if it is necessary that we should have a national highway over Canada, and we voted in support of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. CLARKE. Why not extend the Intercolonial westward ?

Mr. GOURLEY. I am willing to do that; I am willing to do anything. But what we want is two transcontinental lines. Extending the Intercolonial westward will not help it. Here is this great Grand Trunk Railway, with its ramifications all through the heart of the country, whose place can never be taken by any other railway. It has the command of a great body of internal trade which no other railway can get; and we want to make the Grand Trunk take the whole of that enormous trade which it commands and dump it at a Canadian port. Ultimately we shall have to have some control over the rates of these great transcontinental lines; and perhaps the best way would be for the government to extend westward the road which they own, and in that way they would control these great lines in spite of fate. But that is not the question we are dealing with at present. If every man in this House takes a firm stand on this question, I am persuaded that Canada will occupy a better position than it does to-day. I do not care a fig about politics. I am a party man, as a rule, but on this question, when the interests of the country are at stake, I am not a party man. I think the proper course is to agree upon some common point; and if the Grand Trunk goes to Moncton, the men who are managing the line may be left to find the best port to use as a summer and winter port. If the men who are asking these enormous sums from Canada will come forward and say, we will make our port in the maritime provinces, the process of leaving Portland will have begun, and it will be gradually abandoned without any stringent or strong measures, which I would be averse to, because the Grand Trunk put its terminus at Portland in early times with the consent of parliament. We must give them consideration on that ground. I would be willing to go far to compensate them for any loss they might incur in moving their terminals to Canada; but they must come to Canada, and that is the universal feeling in the maritime provinces. I am a Unionist, but if it comes to this, that any portion of this country is not going to be dealt fairly with by the country as a whole, I feel bound to insist that the rights of every part of the country should be respected. We in the maritime provinces have stood by the west, we have advocated the spending of money in order to develop the west, and we do so still, but it must be understood that the maritime provinces shall receive the support of the rest of Canada in their desire to make our all the year round Atlantic port on the Canadian coast. The whole thing simply amounts to this. If you are not going to carry out the compact of confederation, it is idle to have a confederation. If we are to make of confederation the success we hope to make it, we must see that justice is done to every portion of it, we must see that the union is maintained in its integrity, and that each and every province has its rights and privileges respected. I hope that the province of Quebec, the great province of Ontario, and the whole of the west will stand by the maritime provinces in the appeal we are now making.

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend from Colchester (Mr. Gourley) has spoken quite eloquently on the desirability of our having a Canadian national winter port instead of Portland. That is my idea as much as his, and it is because I desire to see such a result that I refuse to endorse a proposition which would unquestionably prevent its being achieved. This road must be given the shortest line to a Canadian port or commercial reasons will prevent it from using that port. Either St. John is that port or we have none. It is therefore our duty, if we have any such ambition, to provide that this road shall run to St. John and not run around 200 miles. But if the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway is built from Quebec to Moncton and if traffic is ever carried to a Canadian winter port, that carriage will be 200 miles longer than it need be. That certainly means that the freight will not be carried over that road. We may use means which will compel to a certain extent the use of our own roads to our own ports, but there is a limit beyond which we cannot compel trade to follow our channels, and that limit is passed if we compel freight to be carried 200 miles out of its way in a total distance of about 400 miles. The Intercolonial Railway is acknowledged to be working at the greatest possible commercial disadvantage because it does not run to St. John by the nearest possible route. Are we to repeat to-day the error made twenty years ago by allowing that port of St. John, which is Canada's nearest all the year around ocean port, to be hampered by chartering a railway to run around it a distance of about 200 miles? Those who uphold such a proposition can only do it on the supposition that the Grand Trunk Railway will never be built between Quebec and Moncton. I would be very sorry to support such a proposition; and it is because I cannot support it that I take the liberty of forcing my opinion on the House at this stage. I look upon this as a great national question. Although I am not from the maritime provinces, it is just as dear to my heart to see a Canadian port handle Canadian trade as it can be to the heart of any one down by the sea. But if that be our ambition, we must take the proper means to achieve it, and when we are giving a charter to and aiding a railway, let us do so in such a way that it will have a reasonable chance to accomplish the object we all desire to see achieved.

Mr. LOGAN. My hon. friend from Alberta (Mr. Oliver) is not very conversant with the geography of the maritime provinces. I agree with the hon. member for Colchester that we would not presume in the maritime provinces to dictate the course of any railway through the district of Alberta and set our views in that connection against those of my hon. friend. The first proposition of the Grand Trunk Railway was to build a road from Quebec and then use the Intercolonial Railway to Halifax. Having taken some little trouble to ascertain the distances between certain points, I find that the difference in distances between Chaudière Junction and Moncton by the Intercolonial Railway and by the proposed route from Chaudière Junction to Moncton, in as direct a line as possible, is 129 miles. We save 129 miles by building the road from Chaudière to Moncton in as straight line as possible.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. How far is the whole distance from Quebec to Moncton ?

Mr. LOGAN. Three hundred and sixty-eight miles by the proposed route from Chaudière to Moncton, and it is 497 miles by the Intercolonial Railway. This shows a saving of 129 miles on the proposed route to Moncton from Chaudière as compared with the Intercolonial Railway. What I want to point out to my hon. friend from Alberta is this, that coming from Chaudière to Moncton this road will pass through or near Chipman, N.B., and from Chipman there is a road already constructed to a point on the Intercolonial Railway near the city of St. John, so that when you are building this direct line from Chaudière to Moncton, you come within fifty miles of St. John. Therefore my hon. friend's contention that we should use the port of St. John is met by the fact that the road will be completed to St. John when the proposed line is built to the town of Chipman.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I find by the Intercolonial time table that the distance from Quebec to Moncton to which he refers is 488 miles.

Mr. LOGAN. Then the leader of the opposition corroborates my original statement. Now, I say if you build the road from Chaudière to Chipman you are then within about fifty miles of the city of St. John. If you contend that the port of St. John must be used for heavy freght, then you have your line to that port. But everybody admits that passenger traffic will actually come from the port of Halifax. Do you imagine, Mr. Chairman, that passengers coming from Liverpool to this country would desire to pass the port of Halifax and go on 300 miles through the tides of the Bay of Fundy to the city of St. John, when they could get off at Halifax and proceed west by rail ? Everybody admits that Halifax is the proper port for passenger traffic. Now, by building a road from Chipman to Moncton, a distance of less than fifty miles, you have got a railway from Chipman to Halifax. So when you build to this given point of Chipman, you swerve to the right fifty miles to St. John, and to the left fifty miles to Moncton, where you join the Intercolonial and proceed to Halifax. We do not claim that Moncton is a port, of course, it is nothing of the kind; but it is a given point from which the traffic will travel to Halifax, and if you swerve off from Chipman, freight traffic will be taken down to St. John. Let me repeat this once more. You leave Chaudière and go down to the point called Chipman. When you reach Chipman you are within fifty miles of St. John on the right and fifty miles from Moncton on the left. Now, Mr. Hays, the distinguished manager of the Grand Trunk, in his statement before the Railway Committee, said that he could fill half a dozen ports with the traffic from the west. Then why do you want to confine it to the one port of St. John ? I am not here to make any criticism about the capabilities of the port of St. John, it has got the Canadian Pacific Railway terminus there at the present time, but I am here to state that there is no better port in the world than the port of Halifax. It has no high tides, it has no currents, it has no ice, it is a magnificent port, one of the most magnificent ports in the world. Now, by going to Chipman you can utilize the two ports, and if Mr. Hays' statement is correct that he can fill six ports, then you have more than one port, because you can go to Halifax as well as St. John, and my hon. friend from Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) reminds me that there is also the magnificent harbour known as Country Harbour. I want to point out another thing, that when you come from the west to the east, you are 300 miles nearer to Liverpool when you get to Halifax than you are at St. John. When you get to Halifax you are on the ocean, you are out at sea, but when you get to St. John you are in the Bay of Fundy, which has sometimes tricky tides. Therefore it seems to me that in insisting that this terminus be made at the city of Moncton, you provide for utilizing the two great ports of Halifax and St. John—also Country Harbour.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the distance from Chaudière to Moncton by the short line ?

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). It is 129 miles shorter.

Mr. TUCKER. I would like to say a few words also on this question. It always appeared to me that we were doing the proper thing in assisting the farmers in the west to relieve themselves of their surplus grain. To do that it is necessary, if we are to compete with the American lines, to afford as cheap a rate as the United States can give. Now, I believe in running a straight line from a point a hundred miles east of Lake Nipissing straight to Quebec. Certainly it will run through a good country, a country that will be settled in the future, and a country from which I believe the railway will derive a good profit before long. Now, the great point for the maritime province people to consider is the route to be followed between Quebec and a maritime port. For myself I am in favour of the port of St. John. I am in favour of it because I am well acquainted with the advantages that that port possesses over any other. I do not say that our port is more handsome than any other, but I think that it affords shipping facilities of the very best order. Its excellence has been approved by disinterested men who reported in its favour for cattle shipment. The officers that were sent out by the British government admitted that there was no port on the Atlantic coast, which included every port in the United States, that possesses advantages for the shipment of cattle equal to those afforded by the port of St. John. I think the opinion of these disinterested men may be taken to be as near the truth as possible. I believe that if the line ran to St. John it would be better for the merchants of Canada. I do not say anything against the idea of turning off and running to Moncton; but no man in this House can persuade me that it is advantageous, after reaching Moncton, to go 189 miles farther, a distance which is practically unnecessary. From Chipman to St. John the distance, we are told, is fifty miles; we are also told that it is fifty miles from Chipman to Moncton. I think the distance will be found shorter to St. John than to Moncton. However, when they arrive at St. John, goods can go on board ship, but when they arrive at Moncton, they have 189 miles further to go. Then we must consider that the cheapness of the transportation of these goods to Great Britain is the principal feature when we are endeavouring to compete with American lines. The freight can be carried from St. John to Liverpool as cheaply as it can be carried from Halifax to Liverpool. If there is any advantage, it is in favour of St. John. People who send steamers to St. John on speculation, irrespective of grain or other goods, are always sure of getting a cargo of deals, it matters not in what season of the year. For this reason, I oppose building a line that is adapted to business for only six months in the year while the other six months it will benefit the United States. Let us benefit ourselves all we can, consistently with the interest of business.

Mr. OLIVER. My geography, perhaps, is not as accurate as that of some of my critics, yet I do not think they came out very well in the display. I would like to say that in the figures I have taken down there is this difference; the present route by the Intercolonial Railway between Quebec and Halifax is 129 miles longer than the proposed route across the province of New Brunswick. Passengers, then, using the present Intercolonial Railway to Halifax have to travel 129 miles further than they would have to travel if this Moncton proposition is carried out. But, if I do not mistake the facts, even adopting the suggestion made by the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Logan), freight will have to be carried about 100 miles further than it otherwise would be required to be carried in order to reach St. John. That is to say, taking a direct line, or as direct as possible, down the St. John valley to St. John, approximately, 100 miles shorter than going around even by Chipman, as he says. Now, I submit, that, as between 100 miles longer for freight and 129 miles longer for passengers, the interests of this country would be in favour of the shorter freight route instead of the shorter passenger route.

Mr. WADE. May I ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) a question? How does he make out that the freight route to St. John is 100 miles more? Where does he get his figures? I contend that his figures are not correct.

Mr. OLIVER. It is 89 miles from St. John to Moncton. This proposed point to Chipman is 50 miles from Moncton and 50 miles from St. John. Now, it must, therefore, be in the neighbourhood of 50 miles on the way from Moncton towards St. John. But it is 89 miles by a direct line from St. John to Moncton by rail. Then any point 50 miles from St. John and 50 miles from Moncton must be about half of 89 miles from St. John.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh,

Mr. OLIVER. I am stating my position in answer to the hon. member for Annapolis (Mr. Wade), who asked me to give the basis of my calculation. According to my calculation, the position is as I state.

Mr. TALBOT. Have you seen the map?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, I think I know as much about the map as the hon. member (Mr. Talbot). If Chipman is approximately about half as far east of St. John as Moncton is, it takes that much difference to get to Chipman, and that much back, and take the two together it makes approximately 100 miles. That can be noticed on the map as easily as it can be figured out, and there is no question about it. Let me further point out that the suggestion of running the road direct to Moncton involves the crossing of certain divides and lengthening of the road beyond an actual air line; whereas the proposition to follow the St. John river as much as possible gives not only a shorter line, but, probably a better grade. Now, if it is a matter of so little account that the road shall reach the ocean port, that it shall go to a certain point and be spider-legged from there, why not just as well go to St. John and then take a short run around to Moncton and to Halifax. It is no further to St. John from Moncton than it is from Moncton to St. John—I think hon. members will admit that at least. Then it is a reasonable proposition that the freight shall be carried to Moncton and then carried to St. John.

Mr. WADE. No, no.

Mr. OLIVER. That was the argument before the Railway Committee. It is not Chipman which is desired to be the terminus.

Mr. LOGAN. They have to go to Chipman to get to Moncton.

Mr. OLIVER. That is no argument. There is a road down the St. John valley, so that it is just as far from Chipman to St. John. If it is so easy to run back from Moncton to St. John, it is as easy to run forward from St. John to Moncton. And what we who are interested in this railway from the point of view of those who furnish the traffic of the road and so are interested in the cost of service over the road, would ask is, wherever you run your road, run it by the nearest all Canadian air line to a Canadian port—and that is St. John. It is not something that is to be decided in the future. Those cities have been there for a hundred years. The port of St. John is the best available port on the Bay of Fundy according to the facts before us. Why should we wait to find out something more ? Why spend years in waiting to find out, why spend millions of money to find out something which is known and known beyond peradventure for many years ?

Now, I would like to speak on the subject of sectionalism. It has been hinted that those who ask that the shortest route should be adopted are sectionalists, and the interest of the west and that of the east are said to be in conflict. In this case, the interest of the west and the interest of the east are one. I claim that the interest of both parties is to get the shortest line from the source of travel to the ocean port, from the ocean port to the field of supply. I did not raise this question of sectionalism. I stand here accused of sectionalism. Will the House believe me when I say that the members who set out to advocate this most remarkable proposition to go to Moncton, do not represent any part of the province in which it is proposed to run this road. If that is not sectionalism, I would like to be told what it is. We do not stand to be accused of sectionalism, by these hon. members at any rate, who, not being in a position to have the road built into their province, attempt to dictate to this great country where that road shall have its terminus. There is sectionalism for you. And not the provinces which must furnish the traffic for the railway, but the province which hopes to benefit from the traffic over the railway which nature has decided shall not be built within its limits. These gentlemen have appealed to the House on grounds of patriotism and nationalism. I hope they will take these appeals to themselves, because they are more fitting subjects for appeals of this kind than those of us who ask that this greatest of national questions that have come before parliament in recent years be decided on the broadest and most unquestionably national ground.

Mr. EMMERSON. I am sure if I were to attempt to discuss the geography of Alberta I would make as many mistakes as has my hon. friend (Mr. Oliver), who has just taken his seat, in his reference to New Brunswick. At considerable pains I have worked out the distances by the several proposed routes. I find that from Chaudière by way of Connor's Station, Edmundston, Boiestown and Moncton, the distance is 340 miles. A portion of this mileage is fixed by actual railways now constructed. There would be 276 miles of railway to be surveyed. Adding the usual percentage for curves, it would make the distance 368 miles. This information is obtained from what would be considered the most reliable sources in this Dominion. If you go by way of Connor's Station, Edmundston and Nashwaak bridge route, you have precisely the same result, 368 miles. The St. John river route will commence at Edmundston and run down the valley of St. John and reach Woodstock. It would then strike back through the country. It would go down the valley of the St. John to Fredericton, which is some 60 odd miles, and if it did not it would have to go to Fredericton junction and follow down, paralleling the present Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. WILMOT. Not at all.

Mr. EMMERSON. My hon. friend from Sunbury (Mr. Wilmot) says not at all. I am sure it would not go down through Sunbury, because if it did it would be inundated two months in the year at least. It could not go down the western shore of the St. John river, because the gradients would be such as would make it an impossible route. It would have to go back from the river and follow a line parallel to the Canadian Pacific Railway line. The distance by the route that is proposed via Connor's, Edmundston, Woodstock, Fredericton, Chipman and Norton would be, to St. John, 437 miles. You must go around by Chipman, utilizing the Chipman line and going down over the Intercolonial from Norton to St. John. The distance, as I have said, is 437 miles. I am going to point out the difference between what is known as the Chipman route and the western banks of the St. John river route, which is practically the present route of the Canadian Pacific Railway ; that is by way of Woodstock and McAdam. The distance is 398 miles.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Is that around by McAdam ?

Mr. EMMERSON. It must strike in somewhere near Harvey.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You are using the present route of the Canadian Pacific Railway ?

Mr. EMMERSON. You would have to go down nearly 60 miles paralleling the Canadian Pacific Railway to St. John. I am giving the exact mileage, but it would depend very largely upon whether the route would end on the present line of the Canadian Pacific Railway at Harvey or Fredericton junction. If at Fredericton junction the distance would not be so great. If at Harvey it would be some miles longer.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What would it be doing at Harvey ? It is not going through the state of Maine.

Mr. EMMERSON. It would go over from Woodstock.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. To Harvey ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Is Harvey not in Canada ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. EMMERSON. Well, then Fredericton juncton would be the junction point. That would be many miles from the boundary line of Maine.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Harvey is about half way between McAdam junction and Fredericton junction ?

Mr. HALE. Would it not be shorter to go down the valley of the St. John river to Fredericton ?

Mr. EMMERSON. It is exactly 39 miles shorter. If you were to go down the St. John river, you would find yourself on the western bank of the St. John river at Carleton port, which is not possible. You would have to get on the eastern banks of the St. John river into the city proper. They have not sufficient room for ships and they have no terminal facilities on the western side of the harbour, and it would be out of the question to attempt to have enlarged terminal facilities on the western side of St. John river harbour, the Canadian Pacific having exclusive advantages there. If you were to attempt to go on the west side, you would only save 39 miles. By going around by Chipman you are within a certain distance of Moncton, and if Canada is to aid a railway, and with that magnificent harbour of Halifax and with the advantages of St. John harbour, because I do not wish to minimize the advantages which St. John possesses, and from the standpoint of Mr. Hays there would be more traffic than any one harbour could handle, I think this route is entitled to consideration. Now, summarizing distances, by way of Chipman down to Boiestown it would be 368 miles to Moncton. By the Nashwaak bridge route it would be precisely, or practically, the same distance to Moncton. The Boiestown route was the route surveyed by Mr. Hartley, an engineer who surveyed that route previous to confederation. The present route of the Intercolonial Railway was known as the Major Robinson route. He surveyed it through the northern section of the province. Mr. Hartley surveyed what is known as the central route right up through the rich valley of the St. John. There is one thing that must not be lost sight of in this matter. I do not think that sectional differences should prevail, but I do say that if Canada is to aid in the construction of a railway on Canadian soil and covering the shortest possible distance, if the railway is constructed by the Chipman route it would open up the best sections of the country. I think I can speak for New Brunswick, having a knowledge of it that few have had the opportunity to possess, and as far as New Brunswick is concerned this route via Chipman will develop and open up one of the best sections of the country that we have, rich in mineral resources and fertile agricultural lands. It would open up and develop a country which to-day, by reason of the want of railway facilities, is lying undeveloped. The mere distance of 37 miles should have no weight when compared with the vast advantages which would accrue from this route. It would be absurd to talk of running a railway to St. John parallel to the present Canadian Pacific Railway, and if the suggestions of some hon. gentlemen were carried out, it would be tantamount to the building of a parallel line. As one of the representatives of New Brunswick, I certainly strongly urge, as I have already strongly urged, the adoption of Moncton as the terminal point in eastern Canada.

Mr. ANGERS. Did you say 176 miles ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I think it is 176 miles from Moncton to Halifax by the present route of the Intercolonial Railway.

An hon. MEMBER. One hundred and eighty-five miles.

Mr. EMMERSON. Very well. It is absurd to talk about going to Moncton and running back over the Intercolonial Railway to St. John, a distance of eighty-nine miles, because if my hon. friend from Alberta (Mr. Oliver) would prepare a little map for himself he would at once see how it is possible to get to St. John in a very much easier way by adopting the present Central system and a portion of the Intercolonial Railway. That is the route that the engineers have spoken of, and that is the route which practical railway men have approved. I have said that the distance from the Chaudière to Moncton by either of the central routes would be 368 miles, whereas the distance between the Chaudière Junction and Moncton by the present route of the Intercolonial Railway is 497 3-10 miles, showing a saving of 129 3-10 miles. If you go down and parallel the Canadian Pacific Railway following the western banks of the St. John river, far from the banks, and in a country which from my knowledge is not available for easy railway construction, you would only save thirty-seven miles difference as between these two routes. I feel certain that if sectional views were to prevail so far as the province of New Brunswick is concerned, the views of the people who understand the geographical and topographical conditions of the country are practically all in favour of the adoption of the route via Moncton as against the adoption of the western route paralleling the Canadian Pacific Railway to St. John.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. EMMERSON. If there were any sectional ideas prevailing, I can quite understand that possibly the city of St. John would naturally favour the route on the western side of the St. John river, but St. John is not the whole of the province of New Brunswick and no one need run away with that idea. Whatever may be the views of the citizens of St. John, they are not by any means the views of the people of the province of New Brunswick in this particular at least.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. CLARKE. Might I ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Emmerson) if he has considered what effect, if any, the construction of this proposed line will have upon the Intercolonial Railway so far as freight and passenger traffic are concerned ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I do not fancy that it would have any great, or even any material effect because by reason of the Canadian Pacific Railway route between Montreal and St. John; St. John has the advantage in securing the traffic. But the great traffic which the Intercolonial Railway possesses, is peculiar to itself and one which it must necessarily retain. The Intercolonial Railway skirts the shores of the St. Lawrence; it runs at the head of those rich harbours and bays in northern New Brunswick which are teeming with fish. That traffic will always belong to the Intercolonial Railway. It runs through a rich agricultural country; a country rich in lumber resources as every one knows. That traffic would not meet with any material depreciation. We must of course conclude that the traffic on this new line will be through traffic, and unfortunately the Intercolonial Railway has not possessed that through traffic to any considerable extent. That is another strong reason why the Intercolonial Railway would not lose that which it never has had.

Mr. ROCHE (Halifax). I would not have addressed the committee were it not that my hon. friend from St. John has made an appeal for his city and spoken of his great faith in it.

The theological definition of faith is :

Faith is the substance of things hoped for ;
The evidence of things not seen.

I prefer in material matters to walk by sight and not by faith. Now, Sir, I do not desire to set up Halifax as a rival of St. John. I do not wish to excite any feelings of emulation even. In the past, when St. John has been mentioned it has always been supposed that there was a considerable amount of rivalry on the part of Halifax. I shall not take any sectional view of the question at all, but I wish to impress upon the committee the duty of selecting a common place of distribution and that place has been named by many of the speakers to be the common centre of Moncton, through which the lines will radiate to whatever points are available. From Moncton you can go to St. John; you can go to Pictou; you can go to Halifax; you can go to Sydney; you can go to Country Harbour or any other place. I say that in Nova Scotia and Halifax we have a right to expect a participation in the benefits derived from through freight from any part of the country whereever it may be, and we ask for no more than that. We ask for no monopoly, we ask for no invidious selection of our own port, but we do ask that all may participate and that we shall merely have that share of the trade of the country that nature has destined for us. But I would say that if you would undertake to carry these goods for shipment to the port of St. John you will remember that this is not a terminus. The object of taking these goods to the sea-board is for shipment to Europe, and therefore in that link of ocean navigation when you bring your goods to the harbour of Halifax it balances the difference which may be against Halifax in the matter of railroad carriage, because when you come to the port of Halifax in your steamer you have 300 miles to go up the Bay of Fundy to St. John, a most difficult bit of navigation in the winter time. St. John is 300 miles further from Europe than is Halifax, and therefore in the in-going and out-going trip you have 600 miles more of most difficult navigation in the winter season, which is the season when these goods will be shipped from a maritime province port, if they are ever carried over this railway. From the knowledge which I have of this matter, I can say that these 600 miles of difficult navigation for these large steamers is a balance over expenses if you carried the freight twice between Moncton and Halifax to ship from that port. I think it would be much cheaper to ship from Halifax than from St. John, although St. John may be a few miles nearer on the railway.

Mr. EMMERSON. Having furnished the House with some figures, possibly it would be fair if I gave the details on which those figures were based. This information was obtained by me in the Railway Department. From Chaudiere to Edmundston in the county of Madawaska, New Brunswick, the distance is 162 miles. From Edmundston to Plaster Rock, on the Tobique river, by way of St. Leonards, the distance is 48 miles. From Plaster Rock to Boiestown, the distance is 55 miles. From Boiestown to Moncton by way of Berry's Mills the distance is 75 miles. The totals 340 miles. 276 of the mileage is unsurveyed country. The rule of engineers is to add 10 per cent for curves. Therefore, adding 28 miles to the 340 miles makes 368 miles. The Nashwaak Bridge route is somewhat nearer Fredericton than the Boiestown route. From Chaudiere to St. John via Fredericton on the left or western side of the river, the distances are: from Chaudiere to Edmundston, 162 miles; from Edmundston to Fredericton, 170 miles by the Canadian Pacific Railway mileage; and from Fredericton to St. John, 66 miles, by the present route of the Canadian Pacific Railway. I think probably on account of gradings this route would be somewhat lengthened. The total mileage of the last route is 398 miles as against 437 miles by way of Chipman to Norton, on the Intercolonial Railway, and back to the Canadian Pacific Railway, landing you on the eastern bank of the St. John harbour.

Mr. BARKER. What is the distance from Chaudiere to St. John by way of Woodstock and Harvey?

Mr. EMMERSON. I took it by Fredericton Junction. I give that as 398 miles.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I did not propose nor do I propose to take any part in the discussion so far as it appears to be a question between the relative claims of Halifax, St. John and Moncton. I think that partakes too much of a sectional character to interest this committee, and I am sure that we are not contributing to the estimation in which we would like to be held in this House by entering upon those controversies under the circumstances as they exist to-night. When this Bill was before the Railway Committee, I did not offer any objection to the strongly expressed desire of the members, chiefly from Nova Scotia, and one at least from New Brunswick, that Moncton should be made the terminus of this new line, and I will tell you why I did not. Not because I did not feel that it was a very important question; not because I did not feel that there were very grave reasons why it would not be to the interest of Canada from a national point of view that that question should be settled; but because I was satisfied in my own mind that that was not the place or the occasion on which a question of that kind should be settled. Nor do I think that to-night or this committee is the time or the place when a question of this kind can be properly determined. This committee can accept neither the statement made by my hon. friend from Westmoreland (Mr. Emmerson) nor the statement of my hon. friend from Cumberland (Mr. Logan) as to the distances between the points mentioned, or as to the best routes to select between Chaudiere and the ocean. We are not possessed of the information necessary to enable us to decide those questions. No surveys have been made; no one can say what circuitous route might have to be taken in order to place the terminus of this line at Moncton; and this committee would not be safely guided by acting on such representations, though made in good faith, and in every confidence that they are correct, in the absence of sufficient data. This committee would not be wise in being guided to a definite conclusion without further information on those points. I am not disposed, then, to engage in any controversy on this question, but I leave it for the present where my hon. friends have left it, and I make bold to say that when this question comes to be finally determined, no government is strong enough to determine it other than in the true national interests of Canada. When this question comes to be determined, it will be determined only after there has been a complete and thorough survey of the whole ground. If it comes to be necessary in the interest of Canada as a whole, to build another competing line with the Intercolonial Railway, for which I do not see any necessity at the present time, the government must be sure that it founds its conclusions on evidence that will be complete, conclusive and satisfactory as to the proper route to select. While I will not take any part in this controversy, I feel bound to say to my hon. friends who have cast reflection on either the capacity or the efficiency or the national character of the port of St. John, that they have not been warranted in the statements they have made, and I am sorry my hon. friends have taken this occasion to make these reflections. My hon. friend from Cumberland spoke of the tricky tides of the Bay of Fundy. I want to know what is the data on which my hon. friend considers himself justified in so characterizing that great waterway. Let him take up the returns made from time to time, reliable returns, and see what is the nature of the casualties which have occurred in that bay, and I venture to say that there is no bay on the whole northern coast of this continent which has been so free from accidents, so free from casualties, and so safe to navigate as the Bay of Fundy. I am not going to make any reflections on the harbour of Halifax. I do not know that I could do it, but I would not do it if I could, because it is not a question which ought to be raised in this manner before this committee, and holding the opinion I do, I would not raise it if I were ever so much in position to do so.

Another hon. gentleman has talked about the small size of the harbour and its lack of capacity to handle traffic. No one who knows anything about St. John would make that statement. It is quite true that there has been a congestion of traffic in that port. But why ? Because the harbour has been dependent almost entirely on the expenditures made by the people of St. John themselves to provide traffic facilities. But we have plenty of room to provide additional accommodation. There is no end to the amount of business which can be done, but there is a limit to the capacity of the people to put their hands into their pockets and provide facilities, and it is because the people have not been able to provide traffic facilities in a greater measure that the complaint is made concerning congestion of shipping. I do not know where my hon. friend gets his measurements. He says it is 300 miles more or less from Europe further to the port of St. John than to the port of Halifax. I am amazed to hear such a statement. If I could cross the Bay of Fundy on boat and go to Halifax, it would not be more than 120 to 130 miles at the most in a direct line. We do not propose to take those steamers over the land, but my hon. friend has forgotten that it is not going to be necessary, in the interests of the business of Canada, for a steamer loading at the port of St. John for Europe to go all the way round the coast of Nova Scotia until she comes to the harbour of Halifax. She will put right out and get across in less than half the distance which my hon. friend says has to be traversed more to reach the port of St. John than Halfax. But there is no doubt whatever on this point, that the harbour of St. John is accessible, is free from ice, is in every respect a safe harbour and is capable of expansion to any degree which the business of the country will require for some time to come, and when the question comes to be considered commercially, it will not be found necessary to decide it in the way some hon. gentlemen propose who have expressed their opinions here to-night.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). I think that this discussion is out of place and untimely, but when it comes to be a question of comparison between the merits of the harbour of St. John and those of Halifax, I cannot refrain from taking a part in the discussion. After this charter is granted and the government decide to assist the company, it will be time to say what route should be adopted. No person of sound mind would for a moment think of comparing Halifax to St. John. You can spend millions of dollars on St. John and you will never make it but a small mud hole in comparison with Halifax. It is only the other day that a big steamer was wrecked in the harbour itself, because it had not room to turn around and get to its proper mooring. The harbour of Halifax has been claimed by the best navigators who ever frequented the ports of North America, to be equal to any in the world except that of Rio in South America and Sydney in New South Wales. You come in from the sea and in half an hour you are into a safe, commodious harbour, with an ordinary rise and fall of from four and a half feet and in spring tides six feet. You get your load and go away, and in half an hour are out on the ocean. You have a clear course to go wherever you want, whereas in the harbour of St. John you have a thirty feet rise and fall of the tide, and when that tide is out, it is not a very desirable place for steamers to go to. If that port is to be the terminus of this road, it would be better that this road were never built.

Mr. TUCKER. Referring to what my hon. friend who has just spoken has said regarding St. John harbour, I would like to say a few words. The harbour of St. John has had some of the largest men-of-war—the great standard of Halifax—in it and they lay there with perfect safety. I agree with my hon. friend that Halifax harbour, when you get into it, is all right, but he can give no instance in the port of St. John and that so-called terrible place the Bay of Fundy, of a number of lives or vessels lost, although the tonnage and the shipping going to that port has far exceeded that in the port of Halifax. This has strengthened the hands of the merchants and underwriters. What is the matter with the St. Lawrence, with its insurance rates unusually high and a number of ships constantly going ashore ? I see sometimes in reading the papers, that as many as four ships have gone ashore in the one day. But you do not find anything of that kind in the port of St. John. Ships move in and out with perfect safety, and they have nothing at all to interfere with them. We have plenty of tide but not more than Bristol.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). The ships must anchor outside until the tide rises.

Mr. TUCKER. Not at all, they can come in at all times, and thanks to the government, the present bar is to be removed. That will be done as soon as a dredge is built for that purpose. The world was not made in a day. Six years ago there was no grain shipped from the port of St. John, but the people living there had such confidence in the capabilities of that port that they put their hands into their pockets and spent $750,000 in the construction of the present wharfs and gave for the use of the Canadian Pacific Railway, to assist their coming into our port, property which, in the books of that company, is valued at a million dollars. The progress of St. John within the last six years has been simply wonderful. I feel sure that for every hundred bushels shipped from St. John, not more than one is shipped from Halifax. Such is the difference between the two ports, and the port of Halifax was amply assisted by the late government. Elevators and wharfs were built, and railways were brought down into the city and everything that could be done was done for the young child, but it did nothing for the good of the country. The merchants of our country and farmers are not shipping their produce to Great Britain from Halifax, and I doubt whether they will do so in the future.

Mr. WADE. It is very much to be regretted that this discussion should have been provoked by the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver). The question was before the committee and thoroughly discussed the other day, and a test vote taken, which resulted in the Bill being reported to the House in the form in which it now stands. All hon. gentlemen are aware that when this Bill was presented to the House the eastern terminus named was the city of Quebec. The maritime province members almost to a man joined together before the committee in urging that Moncton should be the eastern terminus of the road for the present. The discussion took place in the presence of the promoters of the Bill, the authorities of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company, and that discussion seemed to convince them that Moncton was the proper place for them to have for their eastern terminus. And they, of their own motion amended the Bill and presented it to the House in that form. After long and careful discussion, this was adopted by the Railway Committee, and the Bill was so reported to the House. Now, it does seem to me unfortunate that the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) should provoke a discussion here to-night which can result in no good, for there is no resolution before the committee, merely for the purpose of airing his views as to what is best for the maritime provinces. I believe that all the representatives for Nova Scotia, and I think the members from Prince Edward Island also, and nearly every member from the province of New Brunswick, are in a better position to judge what is best for the eastern end of the Dominion than is my hon. friend from the west. If we were to attempt to interfere with his territory in the slightest degree we should hear from him, and I think we may well ask him to allow us to manage our own affairs in this direction. The hon. gentleman's argument is that this will not be a national railway, because Moncton is not a port. Nobody ever contended that it was. The hon. gentleman is reviving once more the old discussion about Halifax and St. John. The relative merits of St. John and Halifax have been gone over on the floor of this House and in every part of the eastern half of the Dominion until every one is tired and sick of the subject. And one reason why we have never accomplished anything in the lower provinces is that as soon as anything is proposed to be done, this controversy is provoked, it neutralizes the efforts of those who seek to accomplish something and so nothing is gained. When we met and agreed upon Moncton as the objective point, we thought we had got rid of this discussion; and I believe we had until the hon. gentleman brought it up again. The position taken by the maritime provinces is this, and I think it was fair—first, we recognized that the west must be developed and the duty devolves upon the government of providing increased facilities for the removal of its products. We do not say to the west: We wish to compel your products to come to a maritime province port, or that we are going to control your route of freight in any way or to ask you a fraction of a cent more on freight for your goods than if they were going by any other way; but we will leave you to ship your goods in any way you see fit so as to get to your market in the cheapest possible way. But we have a right to say further, and we do say: If this Dominion is to spend an enormous amount of money for the purpose of developing the west, we in the maritime provinces have a right to a share of that expenditure; we have a right to see to it that our interests are guarded as well as those in the west. If we are willing to concede everything to them and take the position that we do not wish to injure them, we think we are right in making the demand we are making and that we are going to stand for, namely the extension of this road to Moncton if the road is to be aided by the government. It is stated that the Intercolonial Railway was built for the benefit of the maritime provinces, and that is one of the things that it is very hard for a Nova Scotian to stand. The Intercolonial Railway was not built for us, and accomplished no good for us. We were not the people who were sought to be benefited by it. It was located around by the north shore of New Brunswick. Why? Some said it was so located for military purposes, and some that it was to enhance the value of the property of some individual. Whatever may have been the object, the results were the same to us. The Intercolonial Railway has accomplished no good for us, on the contrary, it has been a vast injury and a hindrance to our progress. Why? Because it enabled the merchants and manufacturers of Montreal, Toronto and other centres in the old Canadas to come down with their products and compete with our manufacturers and drive out of business nearly all our wholesale merchants. They have had the use of the Intercolonial Railway, they have had the cheap rates, we have not had the benefit of these rates, because we have nothing to ship that the older provinces are willing to take from us. And, so far as the farmers of Nova Scotia are concerned, the products of Ontario and the west come down and compete with our products to the injury of our Nova Scotia farmers. It is true, we get cheap rates on coal, but how far west can we send coal? We do not get it farther west than Montreal, and we could send it to that port by water even if the Intercolonial had never been built. We have been injured by this line and it took us twenty-five years to adapt ourselves to the position we were placed in by the building of that road. When the Canadian Pacific Railway was built, we were then promised a short line of railway across the province of New Brunswick to Salisbury near Moncton. That was taken from us, and the road was built across the state of Maine to the city of St. John, receiving government aid, and we were left without any connection in that direction. And now comes this project to build another transcontinental road; and we say that if it is to be carried through with government aid, we put forward our claims, and we deny that the fact of the construction of the Intercolonial Railway should be quoted against us. We want a short line from Moncton to Chaudière, and we are entitled to it. We have agreed to that, so far as we are concerned. When we get to Moncton we are on the Intercolonial and have a direct line to the city of Halifax. I am sorry that any hon. gentleman here has seen fit to say anything against either great port. That is unwise. I believe it is better for us to praise our country rather than to decry it. I am willing to agree to everything the hon. gentleman from St. John has said with regard to his harbour. It is true they can ship a great deal of grain from there. I am willing to agree to everything he said and also to go further and to say that within the last few weeks it has given promise of being a great game preserve, for we have had moose wandering around it. I do not say that in any unpleasant way, or as detracting from the merits of St. John harbour. I know what they can do there in the way of handling freight. The new road, however, can not be brought in upon the western side of St. John harbour, for all the available space there is occupied by the Canadian Pacific Railway. They must come in on the eastern side, and, to do that, they must come down by way of Chipman upon the line we have indicated.

I do not know that it is necessary for me to refer at any length to the subject of national spirit and the building up of a national highway, these are good terms, and I like to hear them. But the national highway that we want is the one that will serve the whole Dominion. If the west want an outlet for the product of the west on merely commercial basis you should not lay a single rail east of Winnipeg, but should divert the traffic by way of the United States. Are we prepared to do that? I believe we are not. I believe we are prepared, as a Dominion, to make sacrifices in order to prevent that being done. We are willing to say to the west that we want to make this a continuing Dominion, to prevent the Dominion breaking up in the future when the interests have changed from what they are now. For that reason we have urged strongly, and will urge strongly, that the terminus of this road shall be at Moncton. And I appeal to the fair-play and spirit of justice of the hon. members if the provinces of Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick are not entitled to some consideration. There is no talk of any injury to St. John if they get there. If this road with an increased distance of thirty-seven miles over a direct line, gets to St. John, I do not think the city of St. John has anything to complain of. While I am on my feet, let me give expression to what my views are on the subject.

I believe that the freight going over this road will in the natural course of events, gravitate to St. John; I believe just as firmly that the passenger traffic and the mails must go through Halifax. If a fast line service is ever constructed for the Dominion of Canada it must run from the port of Halifax. When you have those things, and when in addition you have the port of Quebec properly equipped with a perfect freight service there, and the port of Montreal properly equipped, and the St. Lawrence river properly equipped, and dredged, and put in proper condition, then you are in the best position to take care of the freight that is coming from the west. It is madness for us to suppose that we can be able to divert the whole traffic from the port of Portland. If the officers of the Grand Trunk Railway Company came before this committee to-night and said that it was their intention to pull up their terminus at Portland, I could not credit it, because they need this terminus in order to take care of their business. We cannot compel them to leave Portland, and I don't think we should ask them to do it; I doubt if it would be in the interest of the western country for them to do it. But when we are providing this road, we should provide that as much freight as possible should go through Canadian channels and be shipped from Canadian ports. Let us lay no stress upon shipping, either in or out. Now we are labouring under some disadvantages. Let me tell hon. gentlemen of the anomalous position that exists with regard to the freight from the maritime provinces going west. A gentleman told me the other day that he had a certain class of heavy freight to ship from Halifax to Toronto, and he found that he could ship it cheaper from Halifax to Liverpool and back to Ontario as through freight, and save money by the transaction. That is how we are circumstanced with regard to these freights. We are simply asking for justice for the lower provinces. I regret that the question of rival ports has been brought up. There was no necessity for it, because the company themselves say they are willing to go down to Moncton. They have put that in their Bill, and why should we try to disturb it. The hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) talks about an increase of distance of 176 miles to Halifax. Nobody is talking about taking freight to Halifax. Let the freight go to St. John if it will.

Mr. TUCKER. Why would you go a longer way round when you can reach your objective point much shorter, and at the same time compete more successfully with cheaper lines ?

Mr. WADE. I will answer the hon. gentleman by saying to him that we do not propose to do anything of the sort. We do not propose to go by a longer line. The route they would be compelled to take in order to get from the western side of the harbour of St. John will be thirty-seven miles longer than if they went by Chipman to the eastern side, and if St. John can be put in that position surely they have the right to raise this sectional cry. I deprecate it, I am sorry it has been made. We are agreed upon a given point, and I thought we had buried for ever this senseless war that has existed between Halifax and St. John for years and years, and which is paralyzing the efforts of the representatives of the two provinces in this parliament whenever we attempt to do anything for the two provinces. I appeal to them now to let this matter drop. Let us go forward, having agreed upon the neutral point, and then let the traffic and the travel go from there where it will. If it goes to St. John from Chipman, let St. John have it ; if the travel goes to Halifax, that is the proper place for it to go to. We must meet upon common ground, and we must yield in these matters. If we cannot get everything we want in this world we must be satisfied to take what we can get, bearing in mind that there are others in the world beside ourselves.

Mr. GOURLEY. I have been delighted with the remarks of the hon. member for Annapolis (Mr. Wade). They have the right ring. I think a maritime province man should be big enough to say : Let any port in the maritime province win in the game ; bring your route to the maritime provinces and let God and nature determine the port. People are easily caught by catch phrases. Start a catch phrase up in this country and it takes away all the argument you can make in a year. One hon. gentleman deprecates paralleling the Intercolonial. Why, we want railways in this country paralleling every eight or ten miles. Parallel railways every eight or ten miles and you bring in population, you bring in industry, and you produce wealth. I had an opportunity the other day to discuss this question of parallel lines. I found in the great states of Ohio and Illinois that they have paralleled railways to a wonderful extent. The state of Illinois has about 60,000 square miles, and they have between 14,000 and 15,000 miles of railway packed into that 60,000 square miles, while the whole of Canada has barely 18,000 miles. Well, you never heard the people of Ohio complain about their lines being parallel.

An hon. MEMBER. Who built their lines?

Mr. GOURLEY. That is not part of my argument at the present time. I want to show that just as you parallel lines and build them close together, you develop the country, you get an enormous population, and you get great empire states. Now Ohio has 14,000 miles of railway, with a population of nearly 5,000,000, almost as many people as exist in the whole Dominion of Canada. Why ? Because they have paralleled the whole state with railways and enabled five millions of people to live in that state, and to develop the business and wealth of that country. The great trouble with Canada is that notwithstanding our enormous resources we cannot get the country developed, and therefore we cannot have population. I think we should imitate the state of Illinois in this respect, with its 14,000 miles of railway in 60,000 square miles of territory. Why, Sir, the province of Ontario, with 256,000 square miles of territory, has no more than 4,000 or 5,000 miles of railway. You people of Ontario ought to be ashamed talking about keeping railways apart, you have not got any railways in the province of Ontario. Still I am bound to say that you people of Ontario have got more railways than we have in the province of Nova Scotia. We are uncivilized in Nova Scotia, we are uncivilized in New Brunswick, because we have got no railways. A railway to-day is a great civilizer. We have got clergymen in our province, they are civilizers, but we have not got railways. Now, I want to see the Intercolonial paralleled, for the very instant you parallel it, you will have what has occurred in Ohio. Just in proportion as the railways of Ohio were paralleled the value of stocks increased. Twenty or thirty years ago when the railways of Ohio were few and far between, the stocks were scarcely of any value, now they are all first-class, and every railroad to-day is paying dividends in the state of Ohio.

Mr. McCARTHY. Are these railways all confined to the limits of the state of Ohio ?

Mr. GOURLEY. I am talking about the number of railways in the state of Ohio.

Mr. McCARTHY. How can you say they paid dividends in the state of Ohio ?

Mr. GOURLEY. I say that so far as the railways in Ohio are concerned, the abundance of traffic enables them to pay their way. Now then let me say another thing in reference to the state of Illinois which is the great middle state of the west. That state has something like 53,000 square miles. It has about 13,000 miles of railway and there are almost 5,000,000 people in it. These two states, Ohio and Illinois, have 27,000 or 28,000 miles of railway, almost double the mileage of railways in Canada, and they have only about one half the territory of the province of Ontario. Now then I want to bring this home so that our people will stop this infernal nonsense of talking about paralleling railways. We want to parallel our railways every ten miles before we can take our position as a country of progress and enterprise. When we get the Intercolonial Railway paralleled every ten miles through New Brunswick, I will undertake to say that hon. gentlemen will not have a word to say about the Intercolonial Railway paying or not paying, because the construction of parallel railways will give a stimulus to the enterprise of that province. It is a barren province to-day. The whole interior of the country has to be opened up and you cannot have progress without railways. A man will not go 100 miles from a railway, invest his money and undertake to do business. You must have railways. The great modern civilizer is the railway. I am going to ask this House to give us some bonuses in the county of Colchester. You may think that because we have sea routes we are necessarily in a position to dispense with railways. The contrary is the fact. There is another thing that I want to mention. In Germany and on the continent of Europe where they have great canals, it has been found that wherever there was a canal running from one city to another it would not pay, but wherever that canal was paralleled by a railway, both paid. The railway helped the canal and the canal helped the railway. You will find that in the report that was issued by the Senate which took the testimony of the most competent men on this continent in reference to transportation. If I propounded that to the wise men of this House they would say it is impossible, and yet competent men came before a committee of the Senate and showed that in Germany canals that had not paid, on being paralleled by railways were found to pay. What was the explanation ? The explanation was that the canal carried the heavy freight which was not a paying freight to the railway, while the railway carried the light freight which was not a source of profit on the canal. Consequently, both paid. You want a railway to be paralleled every five or ten miles and the parallel lines will pay. I do not want to hear any more of that nonsense that we hear in the Railway Committee, and all over the country, about paralleling railways. We want railways to be paralleled every ten miles. I want hon. gentlemen to look into the statistics of Ohio and Illinois. They afford magnificent food for any one who takes the trouble to look into this question of railway building. Ohio and Illinois are the wealthiest states in the union, barring the state of New York. In these great states manufacturing and agriculture have reached a high point, and the reason is that both manufacturers and farmers find themselves near railways. The farmers do not have to carry their grain thirty or forty miles to a railway as in our country. We compel farmers in this country to cart their grain thirty or forty miles to a railway and expect them to make money. I was ashamed this summer when you asked those immigrants to come out to this country, because, instead of having railways to enable them to ship their first crop to the markets of the world, you had them dumped down 300 or 400 miles from a railroad and you expect to maintain the reputation of Canada under circumstances of that kind. Some hon. gentlemen in the committee have spoken of Halifax as being far away. Halifax is a port which will beat Portland in distance and it will secure the business if the people of Canada understand the problem and appreciate the advantages which they possess. We want air lines with heavy rails, big cars and no gradients. Then we will have the same conditions as those which exist in the United States. There it is found that railways will give you the advantage of a long haul. With these heavy rails and big cars they will haul your grain 2,500 miles for exactly the same rate as that which they will haul it for 2,000 miles or less. The long haul cuts down the distance, and under similar conditions in this country 200 or 300 miles will make no difference. The railways will deliver freights at the same rate at Halifax as at Quebec. This is the question and this is the problem that has been worked out in the United States, and if it had been otherwise no state in the west, such as Nebraska, could possibly compete with a state farther east. In this country we talk about making a national port and it is said that Portland is 100 miles nearer than Halifax. The man who makes that statement does not do any credit to his head or his heart. I was glad that the hon. member for Annapolis made the point that he did make. I am persuaded, while I have no sectional or unkind word to say about any part of Canada, that the Intercolonial Railway has been a better commercial investment to the people of Ontario than it has been to the people of the maritime provinces.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to rise to a point of order. I would not with all respect try to stop my hon. friend's eloquence, but he has given notice of a motion that he intends to move which is in amendment to the clause which is now under discussion. I understand the address which he is delivering is in criticism of the clause as it now exists. To strike out the whole clause would not be in order. No motion is before you to strike out the clause and the discussion is upon the question whether the clause will be adopted or not. As has already been said, it is in the nature of an agreement whereby Moncton was named as the terminus, and that agreement has not been sought to be set aside. I assume then that the hon. gentleman should confine this discussion properly to this clause.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Gourley) is extending beyond the clause. Of course, he is not discussing the notice of motion, because he simply read it and handed it to the clerk. I hope hon. members who are discussing this clause will confine themselves to it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think my hon. friend (Mr. Gourley) is perfectly in order. Some remarks have been made by the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) against the scope of this clause and the remarks of the hon. member for Colchester are in support of the clause as it stands. It may be he wants something further added to it, but he is arguing in favour of the clause to that extent.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I did not say the hon. gentleman was out of order, but I gave a warning to the committee to keep as closely as possible to the consideration of the clause.

Mr. GOURLEY. I do not want to have to argue that the Intercolonial Railway is a disadvantage to Nova Scotia or an advantage to Ontario, but I want the people of Ontario to understand that we in Nova Scotia regard it more as a national necessity in favour of Ontario than in favour of Nova Scotia. I undertake to say that the people of Ontario get infinitely more out of the investment in the Intercolonial Railway than do the people of Nova Scotia. We are not a manufacturing people ; we buy your products and we have nothing to send you in return, except it be coal. I do not like a discussion on this line, because I think that our policy should be a policy for all Canada and not for any province or provinces. The Intercolonial Railway was a political necessity, just as the Canadian Pacific Railway was a national necessity, and fortunately both of these enterprises will in time turn out to be great commercial successes. If this great railway system is to be brought to the maritime provinces, I want that it shall be so hedged that the point of export will be in the maritime provinces and not at Portland. This is the most important debate in this parliament since I have been a member, because it points to a broadening of the national life of our country. While this country sends its goods to a foreign port for shipment we never can have a national sentiment, and this debate is worth a dozen debates on tupenny-hapenny subjects which it never would make a difference whether decided one way or the other. This is a national debate calculated to give national ideas to the people of Canada, and to direct their attention towards looking at Canada as a whole. If the debate has promoted that feeling, it will have advanced the interests of Canada in an immeasurable degree.

Mr. PRINGLE. This clause was discussed for several days in the committee, and one day the maritime province members got together and reached the conclusion that they would be perfectly satisfied if the terminus of this road was fixed at Moncton. While this discussion may be very interesting, I do not know that it is of any benefit to Canada. We heard to-night the hon. member for Victoria (Hon. Mr. Ross), an ex-member of the Liberal government, telling us that the port of St. John was a mud hole, that no sane man would ever advocate it as a terminus, and that if St. John were to be the terminus, then the road had better never be built. It is detrimental to the interests of this country that a man occupying the prominent position of the member for Victoria should state in this parliament that one of our principal seaports is a mud hole.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). The member for what Victoria ?

Mr. PRINGLE. Victoria, N.S. On the other hand, we have had hon. members to get up and tell us that Halifax is not suitable. Now, Sir, under clause 12 of this Bill the company is simply given the right to build a certain line of railway. There is nothing to compel the company to build any particular section of that road, and whether they build it or not, it is entirely permissive. We want to know what the government policy is in regard to this road, and we have a right to know it. Time and again in the committee it was asked that the government should announce their policy in connection with the Grand Trunk Pacific, so that we might discuss the Bill intelligently. It may be that the government do not intend to give one dollar of subsidy to the Grand Trunk Pacific ; and if that be the case, then we know from those who are promoting the Bill that they will not build a mile of the railway. It may be that the government intend to subsidize that portion from Quebec westward, or it may be from Moncton westward, but whatever their policy be, until the announcement of it is made to the House, it is waste of time for us to discuss the Bill.

It seems to me that the proper course to pursue is to let this Bill go on, and when the government announces its policy then we can better know what we are doing in respect to this measure.

Mr. OLIVER. If I believed that this discussion was profitless I would show the strength of my conviction by not taking part in it. I do not take that view, however, and in fact the discussion so far has brought out in one instance such very remarkable propositions that it is just as well to make allusion to them. If I viewed the matter as does the hon. member for Annapolis (Mr. Wade) I would not have raised this discussion to-night, but I do not view it in that way and I hope the House and the country do not view it in that way. That hon. gentleman set forth the idea, that so far as the members from the maritime provinces were concerned they were prepared to let the North-west get out its grain in any way it liked but they demanded their share of the general expenditure. It was a matter of expenditure to them, and not a matter of transportation. If that is their point of view, it is no wonder that they demand that the railway shall go to a place that is not a port rather than to a nearer place that is a port. It is of course a pity that any section of the members of this House by acting together cannot provide a policy for the House and the country—it is a pity, possibly, from their point of view. But I humbly submit that the people whose exertions will furnish the traffic for the railroad are more interested in the length of the railroad, the location of the railroad, and the terminus of the railroad, than any other set of men in the country; because they will pay their share towards building the railroad, and after it is built they will be the people who will keep it going. Whether they live in the west or in the east, the people who are expected to furnish the traffic of the railroad are the people who should have some say as to the length of the railway, the cost of the haul, and the terminus of the railway. They do not get together in a caucus in order to force any policy on the House and the country. They have taken for granted that this would be treated as a national matter, and that justice would be done in the premises. It seems that this is not to be the case, but that the road is to be lengthened, it may be ninety-five miles or it may 185 miles; but it is to be lengthened, because it has been so decided by gentlemen who represent provinces into which the railroad will not run. This is the proposition which is placed before the House and the country; I hope the hon. gentlemen who support it are proud of their position. I do not endorse it, and I would not like to be thought guilty of supporting such a proposition. Let me ask the hon. gentleman who said that the Intercolonial was an injury to the maritime provinces, if that is so, why, in heaven's name, does he want another road built to the maritime provinces ? Surely, it would be better to tear up the rails of the Intercolonial than to ask for another railway to be built there. I never before heard such a statement made in this House in regard to a national question. Let me tell the House that to-day the town of Edmonton, which is the jumping off place in the North-west Territories, is using, in the town waterworks, boilers and engines from the Robb Engineering Works, of Amherst, Nova Scotia. There is trade to be done between the west and the east, and the maritime provinces are interested in having the best possible transportation facilities, and it is no more to the best interests of the maritime provinces, nor any section of them that this national railway should be lengthened one mile, than it is to the interests of the people of the North-west or any other part of Canada. If there has been trouble between Halifax and St. John in the past, I certainly would be glad to see it cease. I believe that because of those differences in the past the port of Portland has had the benefit, and if this suggestion, which has been made ostensibly on behalf of the maritime provinces, is carried out, the port of Portland will continue to have the benefit. An hon. gentleman has spoken of this arrangement as a compromise, if you please, between Halifax and St. John. I have heard of the compromise between the old man and his wife. There were always quarreling as to how the blankets should be divided, and at last there was a compromise and the old lady took the blankets. It appears to me that is about the nature of this compromise. Halifax and St. John have compromised by providing that the railroad shall run some 100 miles distant from St. John. I have been convinced by the facts stated by the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Emmerson) that there is merit in the proposition to run this proposed line to Chipman, in New Brunswick. His figures are so carefully calculated and his facts so clearly set forth that there can be no doubt about it. The House will understand that it does not make a particle of difference to the argument I have taken the liberty of putting forward how the railroad shall get to St. John. The point is that it shall get to St. John by the shortest possible route. By whatever route it reaches St. John, it will be shorter than a route to any other practicable ocean port in Canada. The hon. gentleman says that if the road is built by way of Chipman to Moncton it will only be within fifty miles of St. John. Then my suggestion is that if there is to be a compromise, and if we are to do away with all this difficulty that has existed between the different sections of the maritime provinces, as well as the difficulty that has probably arisen between the maritime provinces and other sections of the Dominion, let it be provided that the Grand Trunk shall run that little fifty miles from Chipman to St. John. Surely that is a fairer compromise for everybody and better for the whole country than the proposal that it should run from Chipman to Moncton, from which point the freight would have to be carried 185 miles further to get to Halifax, or 95 miles back to get to St. John.

Mr. A. E. KEMP. I do not rise to discuss the merits of the question so much as to challenge a statement or two which fell from the lips of my hon. friend from Annapolis (Mr. Wade) and which I do not think should go without being challenged. The hon. gentleman said that the Intercolonial Railway had not been of any use to the people of the maritime provinces, that it would have been better for them had that road not been built. He stated that after the Intercolonial had been built, the manufacturers and merchants of the west went to the maritime provinces and closed out their manufacturers and merchants. Previous to the building of the Intercolonial Railway, so far as I am informed, the manufactures which the people of the maritime provinces used, which they did not themselves manufacture, came largely from the United States. The manufactures which came from the provinces of Ontario and Quebec replaced those from the United States. If the hon. gentleman will consider the matter further, I think he will see that he did not pay a very great compliment to the manufacturers and merchants of the maritime provinces who, so far as my knowledge of them goes, are shrewd men, and quite competent to compete with those from Quebec and Ontario, when the conditions are equal. When the hon. gentleman says that the west sends everything to the maritime provinces and the maritime provinces sends nothing to the west, he is very much in error. The products of Sydney, New Glasgow, Yarmouth, St. John, Moncton, Halifax, Amherst, and other centres of the maritime provinces are to be found in the provinces of Quebec and Ontario and the North-west, and some of the finest industries this country possesses are to be found in those maritime cities. I rose merely to challenge the statements which the hon. gentleman made. I think that the Intercolonial Railway was a necessity of confederation, and I believe that it has operated to the mutual advantage of the people of the east and the west, and certainly we must all admit that an interprovincial trade is much preferable to a trade between this country and the United States.

Mr. EMMERSON. I rise merely to correct a misapprehension of some remark I made regarding the harbour of St. John. I do not wish to be understood as having any way depreciated the capacity of that harbour. What I had in my mind—which possibly I may not have expressed as clearly as I should—was the fact that the Canadian Pacific Railway have exclusive privileges—and I use the word advisedly and in its broadest sense—on the western side of the harbour, and that it would be necessary for the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway to provide terminal facilities on the eastern side of the harbour. It would therefore be very much more to the advantage to the Grand Trunk Railway to go around even thirty-seven miles more by way of Chipman in order to reach that point than to go down the valley of St. John, paralleling the Canadian Pacific Railway, and reaching only the western side of the harbour. St. John has a splendid harbour and great room for expansion, and I certainly deprecate the references made to the respective advantages or disadvantages of Halifax and St. John. As the hon. member for Annapolis has remarked, the Intercolonial Railway has been somewhat of a disadvantage to the province of Nova Scotia, but I do not think he wished to include the whole of the maritime provinces when he made that remark, because he stated that it was the influence of northern New Brunswick which very largely controlled the location of that road. On a former occasion I referred to the advantage which the Intercolonial Railway has been in cementing old Canada with the maritime provinces, and I will not further refer to that subject. In conclusion, it seems to me that this route, with its thirty-seven miles to Moncton, in addition to what it might be to St. John, is one that will meet the interests, not merely of the maritime provinces, but of Canada as a whole.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I agree with my hon. friend in regretting that any reflection should be cast upon either the harbour of Halifax or St. John. So far as St. John is concerned, I myself, a year ago last December, saw five ocean steamers loading there at one time. That would be sufficient to dissipate any idea that the harbour is not capable of being made the winter port or one of the winter ports of Canada. At the same time I do not want it to be said that I agree with some hon. gentlemen who seem to think that the harbour of Halifax is not fitted to be the winter port or one of the winter ports of this country. The advantages of that harbour have been stated fully by a number of hon. gentlemen so that I need not repeat what they have said. I shall confine myself to stating that there is no port on this side of the Atlantic which is better, and I do not know one that is as good. In addition I can tell my hon. friend from Alberta that some ten or twelve years ago Halifax took more trade from Ontario and the west than it had steamers to accommodate.

Mr. OLIVER. I did not make any insinuation against the port of Halifax.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I know that the hon. gentleman is too broad-minded to do anything of the kind, but I think a number of hon. gentlemen to-night were unduly exercised about some jealousy between the two ports. Let me assure the House that among the business men of Halifax there is no jealousy of St. John. On the contrary they would like to see it prosper. While they would like to see their own port become the winter port, they would prefer that St. John should have this advantage rather than an American port, and I am confident that a similar sentiment prevails among the business men of St. John with regard to Halifax. The business men in both cities are ready to support any project which will make either the winter port of Canada to the exclusion of any foreign harbour, and I do not think that my hon. friend from Alberta exactly understood the purport of the remarks of the hon. member for Annapolis having reference to the expenditure. I was listening with a great deal of attention to the remarks of my hon. friend from Annapolis, and while he used the word 'expenditure,' I understood his remark to mean that the people of the maritime provinces—if you are going to spend much more on the transcontinental—want to share the benefits of that expenditure in the way of transportation facilities. That is the view which my hon. friend from Annapolis presented to the House. The question presents itself to us in this way. Suppose that we built the transcontinental and that it should be diverted 200 miles on this side of Edmonton to Portland in the United States, and thus cut off from Edmonton and its vicinity the benefits of this railway, what they would otherwise enjoy, I think that my hon. friend from Alberta would have something to say if he were not going to get any transportation facilities. The people of the maritime provinces have to look at it in this way. If we are to have another great transcontinental railway, it should have its winter port in this country. In the maritime provinces only can you find a winter port, and they are naturally anxious that the trade should not be diverted to any other country but should be, as far as the commercial conditions warrant, extended to some open port in the maritime provinces. I know that the hon. member for Alberta has expressed himself frankly in favour of that policy to-night and his only objection had regard to the additional length of this line in its extension to St. John. I only make this remark to give to him the benefit of the view which suggests itself, and not unnaturally, to some gentlemen of the maritime provinces. As the promoters have seen fit to assent to Moncton and as there will be no difficulty whatever I suppose to their obtaining additional power to extend from Chipman to St. John, we might leave the matter as at present and indulge in future discussion at some other time, should the government see fit to bring down a measure and ask the House to consent to it.

Mr. HALE. I wish to correct a statement made, both in the Railway Committee and here, to the effect that the maritime provinces members were called together and decided on Moncton as the terminus of this road. This is not the case, because there are several members of the maritime provinces who never heard anything about this matter until they heard it at the Railway Committee, and therefore it was not possible for them to agree to Moncton as the terminus. Let me here say for the benefit of this committee, that there is no other possible route for this road except from Quebec via Connors and the valley of St. John river to Fredericton and thence to Chipman and St. John. I think that is the proper route, and that is the only route that can possibly be built successfully. And, so far as the harbour of St. John is concerned, it does not need any person on this committee or in this House to advocate its good qualities to those who know anything about it. It is only those who are acquainted with the harbour of St. John who will attempt to say that it is not capable of doing all the business that may be brought there.

On section 13—bond issue,

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). With regard to this clause, I wish to be understood as repeating the observations I made with regard to clause 4, dealing with the subject of capital stock. As I referred to this clause somewhat fully in the remarks I made, I shall not repeat here what I said, except to say that I regard the proposed capitalization of this company as altogether excessive. It seems to me that the government, in taking the responsibility of permitting the Bill to pass in this way can hardly be regarded as having given that consideration to the reasons which have been already brought to the attention of the House which I think their importance demands.

On section 15—power to make changes in steamship business,

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There is a model clause for this, is there not? Is this the usual clause?

Mr. McCARTHY. It is practically the same. I would not go so far as to say it was exactly the same. The Canadian Pacific Railway have it, the Winnipeg and Hudson's Bay have it, the Hudson's Bay and Pacific have it, and the Canada Atlantic have it.

On section 16,

The company may purchase, lease or otherwise acquire, hold, enjoy and manage, as well in Canada as in such other places as are deemed expedient for the purposes of the company, and either in the name of the company or in the name of a trustee or trustees for the company, such lands, water lots, wharfs, docks, dock yards, slips, warehouses, elevators, offices and other buildings as it finds necessary and convenient for its purposes; and may construct any of such works or buildings and sell or otherwise dispose thereof for the purposes of the company ; and may carry on the business of warehousemen and wharfingers, and charge wharfage and other dues for the use of any such property ; and may take and hold, either in the name of the company or in the name of some person as trustee for the company, and dispose of, shares in any incorporated company having for one of its objects the exercise of any of the powers hereby conferred upon the company, and may enter into any agreements with any such company respecting the use of any of the property of such company.

2. If the company cannot agree with the owner for the purchase of any property in Canada required for wharfs, docks, dock yards, slips or elevators to be used in connection with the railway, it may cause a map or plan and book of reference to be made of such property, and all the provisions of sections 107 to 111, inclusive, of the Railway Act shall apply to the subject matter of this subsection and to the obtaining of such property and determining the compensation payable therefor.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). This section seems to give very wide powers. As I understand it, it would enable this company to hold all the shares of the Bell Telephone Company of Canada, or, indeed, of all the telephone companies in the country, and all the shares of all the telegraph companies too. The words I refer to are 'and may take and hold, either in the name of the company or in the name of some person as trustee for the company, and dispose of, shares in any incorporated company having for one of its objects the exercise of any of the powers hereby conferred upon the company.'

Mr. McCARTHY. The hon. member (Mr. Borden, Halifax) will see that early in the section are the words 'for the purposes of the company.' It could not be deemed expedient, for the purposes of the company, to own the whole stock of the Bell Telephone Company or of all the telegraph companies in Canada.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not think that quite covers what I am talking about. I will read, leaving out the unnecessary words. 'The company may purchase as well in Canada as in such other places as are deemed expedient for the purposes of the company'—the words to which the hon. gentleman refers only to places other than Canada, and the company would be the judge of what would be expedient. I do not at present see that the clause controls in any way, with respect to matters to which I refer.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. If it is expedient.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It is only a question of place.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I think the words 'may purchase, lease or otherwise acquire, hold, enjoy and manage as well in Canada as in such other places as are deemed expedient,' are governed by the words 'for the purposes of the company' It is evidently intended to be for the purpose of the company. I suggest to put after the word 'manage,' 'for the purposes of the company.'

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If that suggestion were carried out it would modify the meaning down to the end of the 53rd line. Then after that do you not proceed without any qualification 'and may carry on the business of warehouse men and wharfingers and charge wharfage and other dues for the use of such property'?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. That is intended.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It seems to me that the words to which I call attention were not intended to give the company the absolute right to hold a majority of the shares of any telephone company. It would hardly be necessary in the interests of the promoters of the Bill to desire such wide powers as are contained in these words.

Mr. BARKER. It is necessary to be careful about this, because this same form of language is creeping into a number of Bills, and no language could be broader.

Mr. McCARTHY. In section 17 of the original Bill a great many larger powers were asked, and at the suggestion of the minister it was remodelled. I think that was one of the clauses that were left to be settled between the solicitor of the railway company and the minister. The clauses now in the Bill were settled. I should have thought that the objects referred to would only be the objects conferred in this section, and not the objects generally conferred in the Bill.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Suppose we put it in that way, instead of the word 'hereby' you say 'by this section.'

Mr. McCARTHY. I have no objection.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). What is the meaning of the words in the second line 'as well in Canada as in such other places?'

Mr. McCARTHY. We might need a wharf or a dock in another country besides Canada.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). For what purpose ?

Mr. McCARTHY. For the purpose of carrying on the business of the company.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I presume the intention is to run a steamship line to the old country.

Mr. McCARTHY. Yes, or to Japan or China. Perhaps the hon. gentleman would allow this section to pass.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Let it stand and get your amendment ready.

Mr. McCARTHY. I cannot see what advantage is to be gained by the amendment suggested. I would rather not have the clause interfered with without consultation, if it is possible to get it through without.

Mr. BARKER. My objection is this, that if you can find some company that has got a number of powers, one company in this Act, you can agree with that company as to all its powers.

And may take and hold either in the name of the company or in the name of some person as trustee for the company, and dispose of shares in any incorporate company——

That is in the whole company.

—having for one of its objects the exercise of any of the powers hereby conferred upon the company.

Now, if you find a company that has got any one of the powers that this company has, you may take shares in the whole of that other company. Surely that is not intended.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. This is a very usual clause. I have sent for the Joint Stock Companies Act, I think I can find it in the Joint Stock Companies Act.

Mr. BARKER. Quite possibly, but I think it is very objectionable.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Still, it is to be found in all the other Bills and if it is a usual clause in the Companies Act, I do not see why we should single this out.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The position I understood the hon. member for Simcoe to take was this, that the word 'hereby' was intended to limit the powers to the objects set forth in section 16. I said I was perfectly willing to accept that, provided it had some words that would make it perfectly plain. I was proposing to move that we strike out the word 'hereby' and substitute the words 'by this section.'

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. I think there is no doubt but that they are general. If you look at subsection 2 of clause 22, they could buy up all the telegraph and telephone lines in the country if they wished to. It says:

The company may construct, maintain, control and operate telegraph and telephone lines upon and along its railway and branches; and may establish offices for and undertake the transmission of messages for the public by any of its lines, and collect tolls therefor; and for any of the said purposes may enter into agreements with any other company, or may lease the company's lines or any portion thereof, and may connect its lines with the lines of any companies having authority to operate telegraph or telephone lines, and may enter into arrangements with any such companies for the exchange and transmission of messages or for the working in whole or in part of the lines of the company.

2. The company may construct, maintain and operate any other lines of telegraph and telephone, not exceeding one hundred miles in length in any one case, from any point on the lines constructed or to be constructed along the line of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, to connect such lines with any other lines of telegraph or telephone in Canada; and may also construct, maintain and operate telegraph and telephone lines from its western terminus or termini to any point on Vancouver Island, and for this purpose may lay submarine lines of telegraph and telephone between such points.

That is a special power given to this company. Under that, I think there is no doubt they could buy up all the telegraph and telephone lines in the country. I remember calling attention to this clause in the committee. Although it was passed, I take the same view as the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax) does that it will be general. I think it is general, and I do not see any reason why it should be required. Clause 16, is a special clause about wharfs, &c., and there is no objection about buying up steamers, and so on. I think it would be well to confine the section to the powers given in section 16. It was not intended that this company should be given the power to go and buy up telegraph and telephone lines. We have never knowingly granted in any Bills we have passed, any such power.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. My hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Tisdale) will realize how important it is with a Bill of this character not to do anything that will have the effect of interfering with the powers that are intended to be conferred. This point was considered in the committee, and the solicitor of the company was present. This clause was a matter of special consideration, and I apprehend under the circumstances, we cannot go very far wrong by passing a clause of this description which only confers powers that the general company's Act would give.

Mr. GOURLEY. Do you find that in the General Companies Act?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I am looking for it now.

The PRIME MINISTER. Let the section stand and we will come back to it later on.

Section allowed to stand.

On section 17,

The company may, for the purposes of its railway and steamships and in connection with its business,—

(a.) build, purchase, lease or otherwise acquire, manage or control, at such points or places along its railway or any branch thereof, or at any ports or places of call of any of its steamships such buildings as it deems advisable for hotels and restaurants; and may purchase, lease and hold the land necessary for such purposes; and may carry on business in connection therewith, and afford such facilities as may tend to the comfort and convenience of the travelling public; and may let any such building for such purposes; and may acquire, hold and dispose of shares in any incorporated company having for one of its objects the exercise of any of the powers by this section conferred upon the company, and enter into agreements with any such company respecting any of such building, lands, facilities or business ;

(b.) purchase, lease and hold lands required for, and lay out, establish and manage parks and pleasure grounds, and give a lease thereof to, or contract with, any person for the use thereof upon such terms as the company deems expedient.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I see that the phrase 'by this section conferred' is used, while in the preceding section the word 'hereby' is used. The hon. leader of the opposition was pointing out that the words should be 'by this section.'

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The language of this section is extremely comprehensive :

May acquire, hold and dispose of shares in any incorporated company having for one of its objects the exercise of any of the powers by this section conferred upon the company.

Mr. McCARTHY. That is quite a frequent clause.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It may be frequent, but I doubt very much the wisdom of it, because, where you have a number of companies incorporated embracing a large number of objects, if you include in these charters language of this kind you give almost unlimited powers of amalgamation.

Section agreed to.

On section 24, subsection 2,

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is this section giving general telegraph and telephone lines usual in these railway charters ?

Mr. McCARTHY. In connection with their business.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). This does not seem to restrict it to the company's business. You give them power to collect tolls from the public, and so forth.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. This matter was very carefully considered in committee. You give them the usual powers that are given to other railway companies, and then you give them power to make a line 100 miles long, but only for the purpose of connecting with other telegraph or telephone lines, and on Vancouver island the committee considered it reasonable to do that.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It is just as I said : Power to do a general telephone and telegraph business.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Within certain limits. It is quite apparent that the intention was to give them the power, in so far as their line and its branches are concerned, to have telegraph and telephone lines, and if they desire to utilize these lines for general purposes, then they have the right to do so, but governed by the General Railway Act. They get power to construct lines not exceeding 100 miles in length.

Mr. CLARKE. Must they keep the poles on their own right of way ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes, with the exception of the lines 100 miles in length.

Mr. CLARKE. What does that mean ? Does it mean that they can go up and down the streets of a municipality, provided their lines did not exceed 100 miles in length ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. They could not without the consent of the municipality.

Mr. CLARKE. But they apparently can by this Bill.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. But under the Railway Act, the amendment of 1899, it must be with the consent of the municipality.

Mr. CLARKE. But that is changed by the Bill which the solicitor of the railway has before the House.

Section agreed to.

Powers, development of lands, water power, &c. ; construction of dams and buldings for electricity ; shares in other companies ; shares in mining companies.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It seems to me these are extremely wide powers. What is the object in giving the company power, for example, to enter into mining and timber speculations ?

Mr. McCARTHY. The hon. gentleman will find similar clauses in quite a number of charters. The idea of the committee seems to be that it has been found useful in the development of that western country to grant such powers. The Canada Eastern, The Canadian Pacific, the Toronto and Hudson Bay, the Edmonton and Slave Lake, the Port Dover, Brantford and Berlin, and the Bay of Quinte Railways have all clauses of a similar character. So that there is ample precedent for this clause. It was very fully considered in the committee, and the form of it was somewhat changed.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I must say that I think these powers are extremely wide, whether they have been granted in other cases or not. The company is authorized to enter into the business of supplying water, and electricity for light, heat and power, provided it has a surplus of these things; and it can very easily establish a surplus if it wants to. It can also take, hold, and dispose of shares in any company incorporated for any of these purposes. It is authorized to acquire, develop, work, and dispose of mines, mining rights, timber and timber lands. It is also authorized to crush, smelt, reduce, amalgamate or otherwise treat and dispose of ores; engage in general mining and lumber operations, or in the manufacture and sale of the products thereof. It seems to me that these objects are very foreign indeed to the general scope of a railway charter. However much they may have been granted to companies in the past, I think it is not advisable, even in the interests of the company, to confer such wide and extensive powers.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Will the hon. gentleman who has charge of the Bill quote a similar section to this ?

Mr. McCARTHY. The Act to incorporate the Lake Superior and Hudson Bay Railway Company provides :

The company may, in connection with its undertaking and for the purposes of its business, erect, use, or manage, or aid and subscribe toward works, machinery and plant for the generation, transmission and distribution of electric power and energy ; acquire and utilize water powers and dispose of the same, either directly or by converting the same into electric or other power and energy.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Does that say that the company may sell its surplus power ?

Mr. McCARTHY. No, this is much more restricted.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). This provides that the company may engage in these businesses for any other purpose than the purposes of the company.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. If this company developed electricity on the line of the railway, it might be very convenient for the people in the vicinity of the railway to have an opportunity of purchasing electric light.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I think it would be very convenient, but the promoter of the Bill said that there were ample precedents for this clause. We are asking for these precedents, and we have not had them.

Mr. BARKER. Does the minister think it would be advisable to authorize this company to engage in gold mining or lead mining ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I do not think it would be very detrimental to the public interest that they should contribute to the development of mines on their line of railway, because, while they would be creating traffic for themselves, they would be contributing to works of public utility. This is not a railway through a settled part of the country, but is more in the nature of a colonization scheme.

Mr. BARKER. I suppose the minister is arguing that way on the ground that this company will construct this railway with their own funds.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I like to deal with these matters as we meet them, and when we come to the question of funds, I dare say my hon. friend will be heard from.

Mr. McCARTHY. In the charter of the Ottawa and Northern Railway Company it is provided :

The company may in connection with its railway and for the purposes of its undertaking,—

(a.) acquire, use, and dispose of any property, water powers and other powers, rights, easements and privileges, for the purpose of or in connection with the production, manufacture or supply of electricity for heat, light and power and for any other purpose for which the same may be used ;

(b.) produce, manufacture, use, supply and dispose of electricity for traction, light, heat and power, and for any other purpose, for which the same may be used ;

(c.) locate, lease, acquire, work, and sell mines, minerals, mining rights, timber and timber lands, and develop such mines and crush, smelt, reduce, amalgamate and dispose of the ores and products of any mines, whether belonging to the company or not ; and acquire, use, and dispose of all buildings, machinery and plant requisite or necessary for carrying on or operating the said lines.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). While subsection 'a' may be restricted to some extent, it is not very much restricted at the end, and subsection 'b' is not restricted at all. My hon. friend the Minister of Justice suggests that the effect of this section would be to develop the country through which the railway passes. It might have that effect, or it might have exactly the opposite effect ; because a company of this kind possessing these enormous powers, in addition to having complete control over the only line of railway passing through the country, might rather tend to discourage competition. People who were disposed to enter into mining, lumbering, or smelting operations might be deterred from doing so for the very reason that an enormous corporation like this might place them rather at a disadvantage in any undertaking which they might otherwise be disposed to engage in. For example suppose you had a district in which there are coal mines. A company, which is owning practically the only railway in that section, would have an enormous advantage over any other corporation or person. It seems to me not good policy to give this company power to engage in general commercial enterprises. We might as well give it power to engage in banking or in manufacturing, which would not be much foreign to its general undertaking with the powers conferred by this section.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals has always restricted such powers and I cannot see how he let this clause pass through the Railway Committee.

Mr. McCARTHY. In the Kootenay and Arrowhead Railway Company, just the same powers were given, and that was a charter passed this session.

On section 26,

The company may construct, acquire and operate tramways or other ways for the transportation of ore and other freight.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Should not the local or municipal authorities have notice of any application under this section before the company receives power to construct such tramways.

Mr. McCARTHY. Notice is published in the 'Gazette.'

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). My hon. friend knows what publication in the 'Gazette' means. It might be published in the 'Gazette' and none of these concerned would know anything about it.

Mr. McCARTHY. The 'Gazette' is the medium by which all official notices are given. This is practically an exact copy of what was put in the Canadian Pacific Railway Bill sixty-one Victoria, chapter sixty.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). This gives the copy a omnibus charter to build an electric road over the entire country.

Mr. McCARTHY. A tramway.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). A tramway may be operated by steam or by electricity.

Mr. McCARTHY. The general Act limits it to ten miles.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Not a tramway. it limits branches to six miles, but this is not a branch but it is a regular railway.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. The view of the committee was this. Tramway is a pretty well understood definition. It is something much simpler and cheaper than a railway and nobody would be foolish enough to contruct it except in a new country where we would want it for temporary use before the quantity of work would justify the building of a railway. You cannot afford to build a tramway where there is any work for a railway. A tramway is not a railway. You can put a mule on it or a span of horses.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). A street railway is a tramway.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. No, it is a street railway, and the Electric Railway Act applies. That is the intention of putting it in at all events.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am not so clear about that. Why would not an ordinary street railway operated by electricity be comprised within the meaning of this section ?

Mr. BELL. It is 'for the transportation of ore or other freight.'

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. They could not make such a road without the consent of the municipality. Besides, they could not carry passengers.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). We should limit it to ten miles ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). This wording gives them power to construct tramways, and in some parts of Canada an ordinary street railway is called a tramway. In the maritime provinces that is quite common. In fact the electric street railway in Halifax is called a tramway, and the company that runs it is called the Halifax Electric Tramway Company. These tramways are unrestricted as to distance and may be operated by any motive power whatever. Does the hon. Minister of Justice think they are restricted ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. No, I think the hon. gentleman is right.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It seems to me that it ought to be restricted in some way, as to distance at least. Otherwise the company will have a charter to build tramways all over Canada.

Mr. Hughes (Victoria). The clause read by the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) limited it to ten miles.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. These tramways must be approved, not by Order in Council, but by the Railway Committee of the Privy Council. I think hon. gentlemen will find the same power given to the Canadian Northern and the Canadian Pacific Railway. In a new country, very often, there is need for a cheap means of transporting freight, particularly in the mining and lumbering sections. But if you were to confine this to the carrying of ore, the company would not be free to carry back to the mines the supplies that were needed. Tram-roads are very useful, and facilities should be afforded for their consideration.

Mr. McCARTHY. Surely, there is ample protection in the latter part of this clause. A plan must be filed with the Department of Railways and Canals and the route of the tramway must be approved by the Railway Committee of the Privy Council. It is not likely that they would allow an electric railway line entirely apart from the purposes of this road to be operated by this company. And not only that, but notice must be given by publication in the 'Canada Gazette' and to every other company operating a railway in the locality of the intention to build one of these tramways.

Mr. BARKER. Then, why not leave it to the general provisions of the Railway Act on that subject ?

Mr. McCARTHY. That only provides for branch lines, and so there might be some question about these tram-roads.

Mr. CLARKE. If it is so necessary to give notice in writing to every railway company in the section, surely, if there is a municipal organization covering the railway proposed to be exploited, they should be given notice also. Why give notice to the railway company and not to the municipality ?

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. The provisions of the Railway Act apply.

Mr. CLARKE. I am asking the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) the question and I would like an answer from him.

Mr. McCARTHY. Well, it is information the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clarke) wants, I suppose ? He is not merely trying to trap me ? I think that the suggestion of the hon. member for South Norfolk (Hon. Mr. Tisdale) is right—that the Railway Act applies and that notice would have to be given. If notice were not given, and that fact were brought to the attention of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, the application would not be granted.

Mr. CLARKE. Surely, the hon. gentleman (Mr. McCarthy) might suggest that these words be added 'notice to be given in writing to the municipalities affected.'

Mr. McCARTHY. I must say that I think there is ample protection provided in the clause.

Mr. CLARKE. I do not know whether there is or not, but I am bound to accept the statement of the hon. gentleman (Mr. McCarthy. But it seems to me unreasonable that the railway companies which are the creatures of this parliament are to be notified of the intention of the company to construct tramways, municipalities through which the tramways are to pass, need not be notified at all.

Mr. McCARTHY. By the general Railway Act, they cannot commence construction without the consent of the municipalities.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). While the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) is hunting up a clause relating to that point, I would suggest to the Minister of Justice (Hon. Mr. Fitzpatrick), who, I presume, is looking after the Bill in the absence of the Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair)—and I must say I think it strange that the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals is not here to superintend this very important measure, but leave it to the promoter of the Bill and the Minister of Justice, neither of whom seem very familiar with the circumstances or with the clauses of the Bill—I would suggest to the Minister of Justice that a limit of length of these tramways should be introduced into this section. Ten miles, I think, was mentioned in the Bill referred to by the hon. member for Simcoe. I know that the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals is very strong on this point. I am satisfied that this clause was not brought to his attention when it was going through the committee, or he would not have allowed the Bill to pass in the committee without fixing a limit of distance.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I think what my hon. friend (Mr. Hughes, Victoria) says, makes against his own argument. There must have been some cause shown why this unlimited power should be given. It was allowed to go through the committee without change, and, I do not know of any argument having been advanced for changing it.

Mr. CLARKE. Will the hon. Minister of Justice say that the rights of municipalities will be protected under the clause without amendment ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I was going to say that it very frequently happens that municipalities are interested in application made before the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, and as a member of that committee I see that municipalities are invariably represented. I was just looking through the Railway Act to see under what section they are notified, but I do not see anything making it necessary to notify the municipality, except as the public are notified through the 'Canada Gazette.'

Mr. CLARKE. I would ask the hon. minister if he does not think it passing strange, to say the least of it, that the railway companies must be specially notified, while the municipalities, which certainly are as much interested in the construction of these trams, are not to be notified ? And, is there anything unreasonable in suggesting that, in those places where the company proposes to extend its line, the municipalities, if there are any, should be notified. I think the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) is looking over the existing Act to see whether the interested municipalities in this respect are protected or not. But may I ask the Minister of Justice if the Railway Committee of the Privy Council will not be superseded by the Bill that is now passing through the House under the direction of the Minister of Railways and Canals ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes, it will.

Mr. CLARKE. There are provisions in that Bill which give extraordinary power. And when —(if I may be permitted to refer to the matter now)—when some of its clauses were being considered, we were told that the way to protect the rights of municipalities was by provisions in the special Acts that are passed in this House from time to time. I am sure the hon. Minister of Justice will bear testimony to that. If it is not a hardship that the railway companies who may be interested are to be notified, surely, it cannot be a hardship to make it necessary that the municipalities through which these trams are to be constructed, shall be notified, and, if they have objections to offer, that they may be heard. I would like also to ask what is the meaning of the words 'other ways' in the first line of this section, which reads, 'the company may construct, acquire and operate tramways or other ways?'

Mr. McCREARY. The obvious intention of this section is simply to enable them to carry freight and supplies to and from the camp, or from any mining properties. The question raised by the hon. gentleman would never come up. Wherever there is a municipality organized there are always other methods provided for carrying freight.

Mr. CLARKE. There are municipalities in the older sections of Ontario, densely populated, that have no tramways at all.

Mr. McCARTHY. I say where there is a municipality there are other means of transporting supplies in and out, such as by ordinary cartage. In a locality where lumbering operations are carried on, the simplest plan is to put in a tramway. That is all that is contemplated here.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I am satisfied that the words 'or other ways' would allow the construction of a railway.

Mr. McCARTHY. Then the General Railway Act comes in.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). You can build a railway six miles long without the authority of the Railway Act, and this will give the company permission to build a line 100 miles long, if they wish.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. If it was a railway it would come under the operation of the Railway Act.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Any railway company can build a branch six miles long without having the word 'branch' mentioned in its charter. But when you want to build a branch line from any point to any other point, they are always put in the Bill. Now, not only do we limit the number of miles these branches should be constructed, but the minister is particular to have the places mentioned from which they start and to which they go. That is not done in this Bill at all.

Mr. CLARKE. Does the Minister of Justice say that under this clause the rights of municipalities are fully protected?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I think that under this clause, with the General Railway Act, the municipalities would be protected. I would not consider it possible for a moment that the Railway Committee would consider a question in which the interest of a municipality was concerned without notice having been given to the municipality.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Should there not be some restriction as to the length of these tramways? Is it desirable to give an unlimited right as to distance?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I apprehend, speaking somewhat without knowledge, that the intention of the company was to have tramways constructed for the purpose of enabling them to communicate with the mines and other works of that description, and that they wanted to erect cheap means of conveyance to get to them. I apprehend that is what they have in view. It was never intended to give to the company the right to do anything except to operate such lines or ways of communication.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). If this road was running through the British Columbia mountains and there was a mine fifteen or twenty miles away, under this Bill they need not come here for any authority, for this would give them power to build a track.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. They could not go one inch beyond the line of their railway without having some authority from this parliament to do so. I am willing to defer absolutely to the opinion of the leader of the opposition on that point.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Supposing there is a mining company in one of these valleys, and in order to get that ore out it is necessary to build a wooden tramway. Is it necessary to come to this House to get a charter?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The mining company might do that if they choose, but the railway company could not do it.

Mr. BARKER. Could not they go twenty miles on their own land?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Of course they could on their own land, but I say they could not go beyond their own right of way. But I do not anticipate they would own twenty miles on each side of the road.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). They have power to buy for the purposes of the company.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. On their own land they can do it. They might buy all the land in the neighbourhood for the purpose of reaching this mine.

Mr. McCARTHY. Hon. gentlemen see that it only applies to ore or freight. It cannot be considered, therefore, to be a railway.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). In the Canadian Pacific Railway Bill they are limited to ten miles.

Mr. GALLIHER. In British Columbia we would be very glad if the company could extend its line twenty miles beyond the main line in order to reach a mine. We won't kick in British Columbia.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Make it fifty miles if necessary, but let us have some restriction.

Mr. FRASER. I suppose the object is to get freight. If it is fifty miles by tramway what is the difference, so long as they are opening up the country, and getting freight? It helps every body, no body is going to be injured. It is in the interest of the railway, in the interest of the company and in the interest of the mining.

Mr. CLARKE. What is the meaning of the words 'for the transportation of ore and other freight'? Would not that give them the right to construct the tramway for the purpose of bringing other freight?

Mr. FRASER. It would permit them to build a tramway or any other way on which to carry ore, or freight of any kind, such as lumber.

Mr. CLARKE. Will the hon. gentleman say as a legal gentleman that this section would confine the construction of these tramways to the mountainous country, or a country where mining was going on?

Mr. FRASER. I should think so.

Mr. CLARKE. What about hauling grain on tramways in the prairie section, hauling any agricultural produce?

Mr. FRASER. There might be such a case. But if it was nothing but a tramway, what is the difference, even if you carry grain of any kind, provided you help the people in that district?

Mr. CLARKE. Then the idea is that this is not to be confined to mining countries, and that a tram can be built on any part of this line to an unlimited length.

Mr. FRASER. To carry ores and freight, any supplies to the mines or out of them.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). The member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser)) is very plausible. He may take the same stand here to-night as in every Bill that has been before this House for years. The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals has been very particular to limit this to certain distances.

Mr. FRASER. That is the railway.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). No, not the railway. The railway could only go six miles without special permission. We are giving them power to build a tramway.

Mr. FRASER. No.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). We are certainly giving them power to build a tramway. The words 'other way' will include a railway.

Mr. FRASER. No.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). A railway is another way.

Mr. FRASER. No, no.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). What is it then?

Mr. FRASER. It is a lesser way than a tramway.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). No, I understand the meaning of the English language as well as the hon. member for Guysborough does.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. But not the Gaelic.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I do not know about the Gaelic—perhaps the Gaelic, too.

Mr. FRASER. That would be putting the greater before the less.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). We have clauses drawn by lawyers with the idea of obtaining certain powers without having to come back here for them. I maintain that every solitary station along the main line and branches of that road could have its tramway or electric road.

Mr. McCARTHY. Subject to the approval of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Everything is subject to the Railway Committee of the Privy Council. They have to file their plans before they can build a branch of any kind. They can build an electric road from every station along the line.

Mr. McCARTHY. Is it reasonable to make a statement of that kind? When they come before the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, is it reasonable to suppose that such a state of affairs would exist? It cannot possibly exist. You have to keep in mind what is intended by the clause. It specifically says for the purpose of getting out ore or other freight.

Mr. CLARKE. Or other freight, which means everything.

Mr. McCARTHY. Jurisdiction is given to the Railway Committee of the Privy Council to sanction this power.

Mr. CLARKE. Is it intended that the jurisdiction of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council shall be perpetuated after the railway commission is appointed? I do not know whether the railway committee is to be abolished or not.

Mr. McCARTHY. As I understand it, this railway commission will have jurisdiction, and the matter will then be in the hands of independent persons.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Lawyers for these railway companies—I care not whether it is the Grand Trunk Pacific, or the Canadian Pacific Railway, or the Canadian Northern—draft these Bills in such a way that they get all the powers it is possible for them to get. They are a perfect nuisance at the Railway Committee, as every one knows.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Do not be offensive.

Mr. HUGHES. Every one knows it.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I know it is hard on the lawyers, but it is the only chance we have of getting even with them. I think this clause should be held over until we get the opinion of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, who does know something about railway legislation.

Mr. CLARKE. I would be content with the opinion of the hon. Minister of Justice. I want to be clear myself, personally, as to the meaning of this word 'tramway,' how far it extends, and what powers are given to the company to construct tramways. I am prepared to take an expression of opinion from the hon. Minister of Justice in respect to the matter.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I understand it to mean purely and simply that when you give to this railway company these facilities for collecting freight, in my judgment, you substitute this for the ordinary method of collecting freight by means of vehicles and horses.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Under this clause would this railway company have authority to construct a tramway or other way from any of its stations to run 30, 40 or 50 miles across the prairies or up the mountain valleys for the collection of freight ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I cannot see that there is any limit put upon their right here.

Mr. CLARKE. This road, I understand, will run into the ancient city of Quebec, of which the hon. Minister of Justice is the representative.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I hope it will.

Mr. CLARKE. I understand it is going down there. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Justice if this company will have the right to construct tramways in Quebec city ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. No.

Mr. CLARKE. Or in any other city ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. No.

Mr. CLARKE. Why not ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I consider that the municipality would have sufficient control to prevent that being done without the consent of the municipality having first been obtained. That is a power that would have to be exercised subject to the decision of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council.

Mr. CLARKE. I hope the hon. Minister of Justice will assist us when the general Railway Bill is being considered in insisting that the board of railway commissioners to be appointed shall not have power to override the rights of municipalities in this matter.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). In all fairness, the matter should be considered, and the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals should be consulted in connection with this question. I know he objects to this provision. In this Bill there is a clause limiting the company in the location of its main line to a line 30 miles away from another main line. Under this section that 30 miles is wiped out entirely. The company may construct tramways from every station along the line as far as they choose to go. These tramways would constitute a railway, in which event they would come under the general Railway Act.

Mr. CLARKE. I would like, with the permission of the committee, to call the attention of the hon. Minister of Justice to a section that will probably be embodied in the General Railway Act, which makes provision that a railway may be carried along or across any existing highway, leave having first been obtained from the board as hereinafter provided. The Railway Committee of the Privy Council have now the power to give all of these rights which are being asked for in this clause ; and the Board of Railway Commissioners, under the new Railway Act, can give the right to this company to construct a tramway upon, over, or across any highway, the only condition being that they shall not obstruct the passage of vehicles or close up the entrance to a man's house. I would like to draw the attention of the hon. Minister of Justice to this clause, in view of the proposed clause that is going into the Railway Act. We are trying to prepare an amendment to section 184, of the Railway Bill to meet the views of those who believe that the rights of municipalities should not be taken away from them.

Mr. McCARTHY. It has been suggested that the word 'ways' might mean rope walks.

Mr. CLARKE. Would it not mean waterways ?

Mr. McCARTHY. Or any other kind of way.

Mr. CLARKE. Would it not mean a waterway ?

Mr. McCARTHY. It could not mean a waterway, seriously.

Mr. CLARKE. Why not ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It is not limited in its construction.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). This clause should be allowed to stand.

Mr. CLARKE. In view of the extraordinary privileges we are giving the company, it is not unreasonable that we should be able to understand exactly what rights are to be reserved to this railway commission and whether the municipalities are going to be protected. Unless I have the opinion of the Minister of Justice to the contrary, I shall rest firmly under the opinion that this clause practically filches from every municipality in the country the right to protest against any tramway coming in, along or upon its highway, without its consent.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I do not like to commit myself to a legal opinion without considering it, and giving an opinion which I think would be of some value.

Mr. CLARKE. It is because we place so much reliance in the opinion of the Minister of Justice that we wish to proceed slowly and let this clause stand.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I am not in charge of the Bill.

Mr. McCARTHY. Let it stand.

Section allowed to stand.

On section 27,

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). May I ask what is the idea of including the word 'mills' in this section ?

Mr. McCARTHY. The precedent for this is to be found in 2 Edward VII, chapter 15, an Act relating to the Canadian Northern Railway Company.

Mr. CLARKE. That does not give the company power to operate mills.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). When I said a moment ago that this company might be allowed to engage in banking business, I did not know there was something approaching it. I see they are allowed to make advances to settlers.

Mr. BARKER. That is a loan company.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Yes. What is the meaning of having the word 'mills' here.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I think I would drop the word 'mills' myself.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would be inclined to drop it also.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It has been found very desirable that railway companies should have that power. For instance, it would be in the interest of the company and in the interest of the settlers to have a saw mill. Some railway companies have come back for amendments to include this power, and this is confined for the purposes of the company.

Mr. BARKER. There is nothing in this clause about the purposes of the company.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I think this section applies only to the purpose of the company. I think the Canadian Pacific came back to get legislation to enable it to encourage mining by going into smelting.

Mr. BARKER. All the clauses the hon. gentleman has referred to in other charters have been for the purposes of the company.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. This clause would be a distinct advantage to the country in promoting settlement; but perhaps mills might be cut off.

Mr. DAVIS. Mills are very necessary.

Mr. McCARTHY. The other clause was not changed, but this clause was discussed at length in the Railway Committee, and we amended it subject to the approval of the Minister of Railways; and in view of the precedents which I have referred to, I think I am not unreasonable in asking that it should be allowed to pass in the form in which it now is.

Mr. CLARKE. Have the Canadian Pacific and the Canadian Northern power to construct mills ?

Mr. McCARTHY. They have power to construct mills, and as a matter of fact they are operating lumber mills.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The word is not restricted in any way in this clause, so that the company might operate woollen mills or cotton mills. The hon. gentleman had better accept the suggestion of the Minister of Justice, and strike that word out.

Mr. McCARTHY. I do not think the hon. gentleman should ask me to do that. If we were a thousand miles from nowhere, the company would have to get timber to construct bridges, and it is only fair that it should have power to operate mills.

Mr. ROSAMOND. Under that clause it might have all the mills in creation—saw mills, woollen mills, cotton mills, gin mills, and every other kind of mills. I think the hon. gentleman should take the suggestion of the Minister of Justice and drop the word 'mills.'

Mr. BARKER. Any railway company can put up a mill for its own purposes. We do not want provision for that in the statute.

Mr. McCARTHY. If we were four or five hundred miles away in the country, and our own mill was constructed, the hon. gentleman would not say that we could not give settlers the advantage of it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). But this section apparently would authorize the operation of a woollen mill or a cotton mill in the city of Quebec. My hon. friend the Minister of Justice might find some difficulty in his own constituency when some of his own supporters were met with the competition of this company by the erection of some of its mills there.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I think the development of the west owes a great deal to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company for erecting saw mills and for building smelters to encourage the mining industry, when private capital would not do it. I think no possible harm could result, but it would be greatly to the interest of the country, if this power were given to this company. There is no intention, of course, to start woollen mills or cotton mills, but for these two particular purposes which I have mentioned, I think it is necessary that it should have that power.

Mr. CLARKE. If you would confine the meaning of the clause to saw mills, there would be no objection.

Mr. FRASER. The first words in the section control its meaning. 'The company may, for the purpose of promoting the settlement and cultivation of any lands served by its railway or branch lines.' Everything is subject to promoting settlement and cultivating land.

Mr. CLARKE. If the hon. gentleman will read the whole clause, he will see that it does not bear that interpretation. If this is to be a railway company, it should not go into milling and manufactures of all kinds. There ought to be some limit.

Mr. ROSAMOND. I think that this clause ought to stand. It also authorizes the railway to be a trust and loan company.

Mr. McCARTHY. We will limit the clause to saw mills and grist mills and other similar works.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 35—Power to acquire stock in other companies.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). This is a very extraordinary power, is it not? I would ask the Minister of Justice what he thinks about it. Does it not confer unusually wide power, and is it not in direct contravention of a clause of the Railway Act?

Mr. McCARTHY. Under 2 Edward vii, chapter 46, section 15, it is provided;—

> The company may acquire, hold and dispose of stock and bonds in any other company, provided that such powers shall not be exercised unless and until the directors have been expressly authorized by a by-law passed by them for the purpose and sanctioned by a vote of not less than two-thirds in value of the shareholders present or represented by proxy at a special or general meeting of the company duly called for the purpose of considering the subject of such by-law, and such by-law shall be subject to the approval of the Governor in Council.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What company received these powers?

Mr. McCARTHY. The Canada Eastern.

Mr. BARKER. But the hon. gentleman (Mr. McCarthy) knows that there is a clause in the General Railway Act prohibiting a railway company from acquiring stock of another railway company under a penalty of $1,000 against any director who takes part in such a transaction. A provision such as the hon. gentleman has read, may have crept into one special Act, but this general clause is to prevent the very thing so permitted. The object is to prevent railway companies from buying up the stock of other companies appointing friendly boards and so doing away with competition. This was discussed on Friday last, and I think the Minister of Railways and Canals approved of that provision in the General Railway Act. The provision inserted in this Bill would enable this company to buy up all the small lines on its route, even provinical railways, and do away with all competition.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. This penalty is against a director, if he makes this purchase with the funds of the company.

Mr. BARKER. As a director, it could only be with the funds of the company.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. But one director could not bind another.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). But this enables a company to buy with its own funds stock in other railway companies to an unlimited extent.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I fancy the clause referred to in the General Railway Act is clause 276, which provides:—

> No company shall, either directly or indirectly, employ any of its funds in the purchase of its own stock, or in the acquisition of any shares, lands or other securities issued by any other railway company in Canada.

And the clause following, No. 277, provides for the penalty.

Mr. BARKER. The reason certain companies were allowed to acquire stock in other companies was because they had obtained long, almost perpetual leases and afterwards were allowed to acquire the stocks. But the object of the general provision is manifestly to prevent one company buying up another and so doing away with competition.

Mr. McCARTHY. In view of this general provision can this section be read as applying to any railway company?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Why not make it clear by saying 'any company not being a railway company'?

Mr. McCARTHY. The general section provides that this shall not be done, but only excludes companies which have the power. It does not cover companies which may hereafter acquire power.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I am afraid that would hardly do. It says :

But this shall not affect the powers or rights which any company in Canada now has or possesses by virtue of any special Act——

And so on, that Act must be read in the present, and would be considered applicable to companies that got special Acts of parliament, I think. It would be better to adopt the suggestion of the Minister of Finance and insert words excluding railway companies.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Why not leave it over and look into the matter ? But even then they could buy up a bank or any other company.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I was just going to suggest that.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I was going to ask my hon. friend who runs the financial end of the government whether they could do that in the case of a bank.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. They could buy up the stock.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Shall the section read :—

The company may acquire, hold, guarantee, pledge and dispose of stocks and bonds or other securities of any company other than a railway company, upon such terms——

And so on ? Carried.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I want this carried on a division, for I object to the principle of any company being allowed to buy stock in another company. I do not wish to obstruct the objects of this company, but I do not see why it is necessary to grant such a power, and I object to the principle of any railway company or any other company being granted such extensive powers as these.

Section agreed to, on division.

On section 31, subsection 3,

The company may unite with, or enter into any agreement with any other company, corporation or person for the construction or maintenance of any such bridge and the approaches thereto, as a joint work, or for the joint working, control, management and use thereof.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). In regard to this section, I beg to suggest to the government, not to the promoter of the Bill, that in the construction of any bridge across any large streams in the North-west, or any part of the country where the railway company gets a subsidy, the government should see to it that the bridge is constructed so that it may be a passenger bridge as well as a railway bridge, and that the bridge should either be free or the tolls should be fixed low.

On section 32,

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). We have in the past added to a number of Bills some provision respecting passes through the mountains, that where there is only room for one road the other companies should have the right to use the tracks of the pioneer company. We have done that year after year in all roads going through mountain passes.

SUPPLY—CONCURRENCE.

House proceeded to consider resolutions reported from Committee of Supply.

Resolutions reported, read the second time, and agreed to.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 205) respecting the Western Alberta Railway Company.—Mr. Campbell.

On motion of the Minister of Finance, House adjourned at 1.20 a.m., Tuesday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

OTTAWA, Tuesday, June 23, 1903.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

BRANDON, SASKATCHEWAN AND HUDSON BAY RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. T. O. DAVIS (Saskatchewan). I beg to move, seconded by Mr. Galliher :

That that portion of the 16th report of the Select Standing Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines reporting the preamble of the Bill (No. 157) to incorporate the Brandon, Saskatchewan and Hudson Bay Railway Company, not proven ; be referred back to the said committee for further consideration.

This Bill came up at the end of the meeting of the Railway Committee to-day and when the motion on the preamble was put by the Chairman I demanded that the yeas and nays be taken. The requisite number of members stood up, but the Chairman did not take the yeas and nays and declared the preamble lost. I consider that the Bill should go back for further consideration.

Mr. R. LEMIEUX (Gaspé). I might explain, that in the absence of the hon. member for London (Mr. Hyman) I acted as Chairman of the Railway Committee this morning. The question was put to the committee whether the preamble should be adopted or not on three different occasions and each time the committee answered almost unanimously against the preamble. At the request of my hon. friend (Mr. Davis) I asked the gentlemen who were in the committee to rise for and against the preamble. Five members were in favour of the preamble and fifteen against. Then the hon. gentleman asked that the yeas and nays be taken. One o'clock sounded and I declared the preamble lost. I suggested to the hon. gentleman that the yeas and nays be taken as the members would rise from their seats, because I would have to call the whole list otherwise, which I thought was not necessary. The sentiment of the committee was taken and it was nearly unanimously against the preamble.

Mr. W. A. GALLIHER (Yale). I may say that I was one of the five who stood up in favour of the preamble. The facts are as stated by the hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Lemieux) who was Chairman of the committee, but in seconding the motion I may say that if my hon. friend (Mr. Davis) thinks that some—I would hardly call it injustice has been done him—if he thinks it would be fairer to him to take the yeas and nays in the usual way I do not see any objection to that being done. I am bound to say that the feeling of the committee seemed to be against the Bill at the time, but nevertheless I think that the Bill should be referred back in order that it may receive the usual treatment.

Mr. D. HENDERSON (Halton). From the moment this Bill was introduced in the committee the sentiment of the members was clearly against it. No attempt was made by the promoter of the Bill to show that there was any probability of the road being constructed. The clause describing the route was so badly worded that it was impossible for the members of the committee to determine where at least one branch of the road was intended to be run. The Chairman of the committee has stated the case very fairly. There was a clear response from the committee in the ordinary way signifying nay to the preamble. As the Chairman of the committee has stated only five members rose in favour of it and fifteen in opposition. The hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis) no doubt did ask for the yeas and nays, and the Chairman of the committee fairly offered to have the yeas and nays taken in the way he has described—not in the usual way, by calling the roll, and each man responding for himself, but by asking those who were in favour of the preamble to stand up, and the clerk would record their names, intending then to ask those who were opposed to the preamble to rise in order that their names might be recorded by the clerk, just as a vote in this chamber is recorded by the clerk of the House. This would have saved considerable time, as it could have been done much more quickly—the hour of one o'clock having nearly arrived—than calling a roll of 150 or 160 names, the greater majority of whom were absent. To my mind the committee expressed its opinion, and expressed it very decidedly as being opposed to the granting of this charter, and I see no reason for asking that the Bill be referred back any more than any other Bill which had not received the approval of the Railway Committee. I consider that the Chairman of the committee acted with all fairness to the promoter of the Bill, and the yeas and nays would have been recorded in the manner I have indicated had not the hon. member for Saskatchewan himself decidedly objected.

Mr. DAVIS. I suppose I may have a word in closing this discussion. As to the merits of the Bill, I do not think they are before us at the present time, although the hon. gentleman has seen fit to go into them. The case is this. The chairman of the committee seems to have got it into his head that it is a standing rule that the committee should adjourn at one o'clock. So far as I know, there is no such rule at all, and when I asked for the yeas and nays I think I had a right to do so; and I now ask that the Bill be sent back, because of its not having been fairly treated in that respect.

Motion agreed to.

ADULTERATION OF BUTTER.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Hon. Sydney Fisher) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 207) to prevent the improper marking of butter and the manufacture or sale of adulterated butter.

Mr. SPROULE. Explain.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. This is the Bill founded on the resolution which passed the House the other night.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

POST OFFICE AMENDMENT ACT.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. James Sutherland). In the absence of the hon. the Postmaster General, I move for leave to introduce a Bill (No. 208) to amend the Post Office Act.

Mr. E. F. CLARKE. Explain it.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The Bill deals with the salaries of certain officials of the department, and also provides for reducing the postage on newspapers.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Should not this Bill be introduced by a resolution?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That would have to be determined after we knew the contents of the Bill. A Bill referring to salaries need not necessarily be a money Bill. It need not be of any avail unless parliament provides the money. It is like an amendment to the Civil Service Act, which does not require to be preceded by a resolution.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. If it is for a reduction of salaries, I do not think it would require a resolution.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Before the second reading we will see as to that.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. It is with the understanding that if necessary a resolution will be introduced.

Mr. SPEAKER. In the meantime we will see whether the Bill comes under the rule. In reading over the Bill, it seemed to me that it was similar to the Civil Service Act, which is not introduced by a resolution.

Mr. SPROULE. One portion of it provides for a reduction of postage on newspapers, which must mean a reduction of the revenue.

The PRIME MINISTER. That does not require a resolution.

Mr. SPEAKER. An increase of the revenue requires a resolution, but not a reduction.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

RETIRING ALLOWANCES FOR JUDGES.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick) moved that the House do, on Thursday next, go into committee to consider the following resolution :—

Resolved, that it is expedient to amend the Supreme and Exchequer Courts Acts, the Exchequer Court Act, and the Act respecting judges of provincial courts, and to provide as follows:—

1. If any judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, or of the Exchequer Court of Canada, or of any Superior Court in Canada, resigns his office, His Majesty may, by letters patent under the great seal, reciting such judge's age and period of service, grant unto him an annuity equal to the salary of the office held by him at the time of his resignation ; to commence immediately after his resignation ; and to continue thenceforth during his natural life ; provided such judge has (a) attained the age of seventy-five years, and continued in office as judge of one or more of the said courts, or as such judge and as stipendiary magistrate of the North-west Territories, for twenty years or upwards ; or (b) attained the age of seventy years, and continued in office as judge of one or more of the said courts for twenty-five years or upwards ; or (c) continued in office as judge of one or more of the said courts for thirty years or upwards.

2. If any judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, or of the Exchequer Court of Canada, or of a Superior Court of any of the provinces of Canada, resigns or has heretofore resigned his office as such judge, to accept the office of lieutenant governor of a province, and if he serves, or has served as such lieutenant governor, and is not otherwise eligible for any retiring annuity, as such judge, His Majesty may, at any time after the expiration of the term of service of such judge as lieutenant governor, grant unto such judge an annuity equal to two-thirds of the salary annexed to the judicial office which he held at the time of his resignation ; to commence immediately upon the issue of such letters patent, and to continue thenceforth during his natural life.

3. Every county court judge who has attained the age of eighty years shall be compulsorily retired ; and to any judge who is so retired, or who, having attained the age of seventy-five years, resigns his office, and who in either case has continued in office for a period of twenty-five years or upwards, His Majesty may grant an annuity equal to the salary of the office held by him at the time of his retirement ; or if he has continued in office as such judge for a less period than twenty-five years, equal to two-thirds of such salary ; provided that to any such judge who is so compulsorily retired, or who so resigns within years after the passing of the Act based upon these resolutions, there may be granted an annuity equal to the full salary of the office held by him at the time of his retirement or resignation, irrespective of the number of years he has continued in office.

4. If any judge of a county court, after having continued in office for a period of thirty-five years, and become afflicted with some permanent infirmity, disabling him from the due execution of his office, resigns his office, His Majesty may, by letters patent under the great seal of Canada, grant to him a pension equal to the salary of his office at the time of his retirement ; the said annuity to commence immediately after his retirement, and to continue thenceforth during his natural life.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. I would ask the Minister of Justice if we may expect soon to have a similar resolution with regard to an increase of the salaries of the judges ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. That is another and a different matter.

WEST LORNE ACCIDENT.

Mr. E. F. CLARKE. Before the Orders of the Day are proceeded with, I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals if he is yet prepared to lay on the Table the report of the commission appointed to inquire into the cause of the railway accident at West Lorne ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have the report ready, and with the consent of the House I would move that an Order of the House issue for the laying on the Table of the report of the commissioner appointed to examine into the West Lorne railway accident.

Motion agreed to.

THE TREADGOLD CONCESSION.

Mr. BELL. Before the Orders of the Day are proceeded with, I would like to ask if the Department of the Interior has sent any instructions to Dawson affecting the representation of the Treadgold claims ?

The PRIME MINISTER. I am not so informed.

INTERIM SUPPLY BILL.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I desire to take the necessary steps to introduce a Supply Bill to give effect to the voting of the supplementary estimates which hon. gentlemen opposite were courteous enough to facilitate the passing of. Owing to an error that was discovered in the vote of one of the departments, it became necessary to change the resolution, and therefore the Supply Bill was not proceeded with yesterday. I would now move :

That the House resolve itself into Committee of Ways and Means to consider a supply to be granted to His Majesty.

Motion agreed to, and the House went into committee to consider the following resolution :

Resolved that a sum not exceeding $1,384,016.51 be granted to His Majesty out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada to meet certain expenses of the public service for the financial year ending the 30th of June, 1903.

Resolution reported, read the first and second time, and agreed to.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 206) for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money required to drfray certain expenses of the public service for the financial year ending the 30th June, 1902.

Motion agreed to, read the first and second time, considered in committee, reported, read the third time and passed.

THIRD READING.

RAILWAY ACT, 1903.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 21) to amend and consolidate the laws respecting railways.—The Minister of Railways and Canals.

On section 184,

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair). This section stood over. I propose to change the section, acting upon the suggestion of the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Clarke). I will read the clause as it will stand, if amended as I propose :

The railway may be carried upon, along or across any existing highway upon leave therefor having been first obtained from the board as hereinafter provided. But the board shall not grant leave to any company to carry any street railway or tramway or any railway operated or to be operated as a street railway or tramway, along any highway which is within the limits of any city or incorporated town until the company shall have first obtained the consent therefor by a by-law of the municipal authority of such city or incorporated town.

Mr. LANCASTER. I am not opposing that amendment so far as it goes ; but it only goes half way, in my opinion. That emphasizes the fact, if any emphasis were required—and I do not think it was necessary—that, so far as this Act is concerned a steam railway could be operated along any highway without the consent of the municipality. I greet with appreciation the amendment suggested by the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Clarke) and I congratulate the minister upon accepting it. But while I entirely agree with it, I am even more opposed to steam railways running upon highways of municipalities than I am to electric tramways. This section provides that a railway may be carried upon, along, or across any existing highway. This section was changed from its original form. The hon. minister said it was only the difference between tweedledum and tweedledee, but I am confident that I am right in saying that as the clause originally stood, the onus was more in favour of the railway company exercising this right—this pretended right—than it was under the old Act. I desire to amend this section by striking out the words 'upon, along or' in the first subsection as amended by the minister. Under my amendment a railway could not be carried upon or along the highway, but could only cross it. Without detaining the committee at length with my reasons, I may say that the principle I advocate is the same as that favoured by the hon. member for West Toronto and the gentleman with whom he has been advising in getting the minister to accept the amendment providing that tramways or electric roads should not be allowed to operate in municipalities without the consent of the municipal authorities. But, with all due deference, I would suggest that if the committee were to accept my amendment, there would be no need for the amendment of the hon. member for West Toronto, for it would prevent the operation of any railway upon a highway in any municipality not only cities and towns without the consent of those who own the highway. Now, I am bound to emphasize to-day the point I made when this matter was under discussion before, because, the more I think of it the more sure I am that I am right. My contention is that this parliament has no right to empower anybody to interfere with the highways, except so far as it may be necessary for carrying on a work which this parliament has the power to authorize. The highways are vested in the provincial authorities and are delegated by them to the municipal authorities. This parliament is ultra vires if it attempts, without the consent of the provincial and municipal authorities, to interfere with these highways, unless for the necessary work of carrying out an undertaking which this parliament has the power to authorize. I wish to put myself clear with the committee, I state plainly that this parliament can authorize a railway to be built and can authorize the use of the highway necessary for the construction of that railway; but, any use of the highway that is not necessary for the construction of the railway cannot be authorized by this parliament. If it is not necessary for the railway to cross a highway, this parliament has no power to say upon what terms the municipal authorities shall allow the use of the highway. If further argument were necessary, I might point out to the House what the Ontario Railway Law is. That Act is passed by the provincial legislature which controls the highway. It provides that no railway shall be carried along existing highways and shall only cross a highway without the consent of the proper municipal authorities. When we consider how the provincial authorities here guard the rights of the people on the highways, may we not ask ourselves if we are not doing an almost outrageous thing in undertaking to authorize the Railway Committee, which is the creature of this parliament, to allow railways to pass upon or along highways without the consent of the municipal authorities? This provincial law that I have quoted is the enactment of that authority which, under the British North America Act, owns and controls the highway. That authority has seen fit to enact that no railway shall go along or upon the highway, but may merely cross the same without the consent of the municipal authorities. And we are asked to enact here, as if we knew what we were doing, that a railway may not only cross, but may run upon and along a highway if the commissioners, who derive their authority only from this parliament, choose to say so. As I said the other day, there is no doubt in my mind that we are passing legislation that we have no power to pass in attempting to interfere with the highway without the consent of the municipal authorities or the provincial authorities from which the municipalities get their power. We have the right to control so far as it is necessary for the carrying out of any work that we have the power to authorize. It is necessary for any railway almost to cross highways. But our legislation is ultra vires if it goes further. The House may be willing and the minister may be willing to pass such legislation; but though I cannot stop them, I am bound to put myself upon record as clearly as I can, giving my reasons, in protest against such legislation, first upon the ground that it is ultra vires of this parliament. Besides the question of whether it is intra vires or ultra vires, I want to point out that in my judgment it would be a very improvident and improper thing for this parliament to undertake to interfere with the control of highways, because that would at once involve a contest with the provincial legislature as well as with the municipal authorities. The municipal authorities are given their power by the provincial legislature to say what shall be done with the highways and who shall control them. We all know that if a highway is out of repair the municipal authorities are responsible for the consequences, any township that is incorporated is responsible for keeping its highways in good repair, it is bound to protect travellers in passage over the highway, to keep the highways open and in proper use for the public, and it has this control by authority given it by the provincial legislature. So that outside the question of whether the provision is intra vires or ultra vires, it would be improvident for us to undertake to say, by a commission which we constitute, that any interference can be made with these highways without the consent of the municipal authorities, or of the provincial legislature which gives that power to the municipal authorities.

As I said a moment ago, a railway must sometimes cross a highway, but it need not do any more. If it is desired to use the highway for any other purpose than merely to cross it, it must be because the railway is going to try to do something that the municipality does not want it to do. If it is necessary to give a railway power to do more than cross a highway, if it is wanted to give this commission power to enable a railway to do more than cross a highway, it must be because the railway may want to force their way along a highway and do something more than merely to cross it without the consent of those who control the highway. That, I say, is something this parliament ought not to be a party to; and in my judgment, if a case of conflict should arise and was carried to the highest court of the empire, this authority proposed to be given would be decided to be ultra vires. Therefore, I move to strike out these words 'upon, along or,' so that the railway may only cross an existing highway. That is plenty of power to give these commissioners. They may have to decide under what terms the railway shall cross a highway, because that may be necessary. I want, moreover, to tell the minister that the Electric Railway Act of the province of Ontario also provides the same thing. There is a General Railway Act in the province of Ontario relating to steam railways, and as near as you can make it, their legislation is analogous to the Act now before us. That is the General Railway Act that has always been in force before we had any electric railways, and which I have quoted. There is also an Electric Railway Act which does not even allow electric railways to be used upon highways without the consent of the municipal authorities. So that if this legislation passes, undertaking in this wide way to allow these commissioners to give power to railways to interfere with the provincial and municipal control of highways, there is going to be trouble made in this country that will take a great deal of expense and a good many years of litigation, perhaps, finally to decide; and there is no doubt in my opinion that it will be held to be ultra vires. But, as I said, even if it is not so held, it is an improvident and wrong thing for us to interfere with the municipal control of highways.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think I have stated more than once that I cannot agree with the hon. gentleman's views that this power is one which the parliament of Canada cannot lawfully exercise. I think the power is intra vires of the parliament of Canada, and I think this power may be more than assumed when we remember all the years that this law has been upon the statute-book.

Mr. LANCASTER. That does not prove anything.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I say it does. It proves that no one has ever thought it worth while to raise the contention in all the controversies that have arisen, and they have been innumerable.

Mr. LANCASTER. Has that question ever arisen?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If it has arisen, it has never been carried to any court; and if no body has raised the question in the courts that this provision is ultra vires of the parliament of Canada, I say there is almost an irresistible presumption that if any lawyer had thought that the point could be successfully raised it would have been raised long before this. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I have no hesitation at all in promoting this legislation so far as its being within the legislative competency of this parliament is concerned. Now, I readily consented to the amendment which the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Clarke) asked me to consider, because it had reference to the question of the operation of electric tramways within cities and towns. I think there is a very good case to be made out in favour of the fullest authority being vested in the municipal corporation of the city or town to say whether, where, when and how their streets should be occupied. When an aggregation of people are crowded into a large town or city, the dangers, risks, annoyances and property losses that are often occasioned by these railways, are of such importance, and the questions raised are of such magnitude, municipally speaking, that I think it well the corporate authority of such city or town should be consulted before these works are laid down. Moreover, I do not myself sympathize very heartily with the idea of this parliament concerning itself with legislation respecting the construction and operation of tramways in cities. These are essentially local questions, and I do not think, except in the most exceptional cases, that parliament ought to give any countenance at all to the requests made to us to legislate respecting them. These are the two reasons which led me to accept the suggestion that was offered by the hon. member for Toronto.

Now, I cannot go any further. I cannot go to the extent which the hon. gentleman asks me to go, because I think it would be unwise to do so. I have had a good deal of experience as to the operation of this clause respecting highways generally throughout the country, during the years in which I have acted on the Railway Committee, and I know of no instance in which the Railway Committee was called upon to decide these cases in which we had not before us the representatives of the city, town or other municipal corporation, and in which we did not hear their objections, if they had any, and gave them every consideration. There is no doubt at all that the commission would act exactly in the same way. They would have no interest in doing anything else than to meet the reasonable wishes and the reasonable objections which these municipal officers might make. Now when you are reasonably assured that the commission will exercise all due care, it is not well to treat this question as if they would only desire to meet the wishes of the railway company without any regard to the views of the municipal authorities. It is not well to treat the question in that way, in view of the fact that this parliament has, during its existence, thought it well that this power should reside somewhere of determining whether or not a railway should use a public highway in any given case. That power I think ought to continue to reside in some supreme authority. I think, therefore, it would be unwise for parliament to say that all the highways of the country should be excluded from use by railway corporations unless and until the municipal authorities gave permission to use them. I hope the hon. gentleman will not press his motion, because if he does, it will be my duty to ask the committee to reject it.

Mr. LANCASTER. I know there is a good deal in what the minister has said, but I desire to say that I had considered all these things before I made this motion. I am not saying for a minute but what the Railway Committee in the past has considered the municipality's representations, but there is a difference between the municipality being the judge of the case as distinguished from being one of the parties interested. The hon. minister's enactment would put the municipality down as one of the parties whose rights were in dispute and who is at the mercy of the railway commission. I say that the municipality's position is beyond that. The municipality controls the highway and this parliament has no right to say that we will allow you to control the highway if you do what we tell you, and we will be the judge as to the manner in which you control it. This railway commission will look at the question as a board composed of honest men acting in the interests of the whole of Canada. It may consider that in the interests of Canada it would be necessary to force some municipality, whether city or town, or village or township, to allow a steam railway to run up its main street. The commission might say: We know that it makes ducks and drakes out of the town, we know it is going to ruin your principal business street, we know it is going to destroy your town, we know it is going to disarrange everything and cause the people to pull up stakes and leave, we know that this is against the wishes of everybody in the neighbourhood, but in the interests of the railway which is going to run from the Atlantic to the Pacific, or, it may be, a shorter distance, and because it would cost them too much money to go anywhere else, you must allow them to use your main street to get through the town. Has not the municipality the right to say: We do not want the railway here? You must buy your way if you are going through the town and you cannot use our main street for the purposes of the road. They have the power under the law to say that they do not want their streets used for railway purposes. This parliament has the right to say that the municipality shall not have the right to interfere with the railway going along and that it must allow the railway to cross the street. That commission can force a municipality to allow a railway to cross its streets and there is provision made in the Act for all the machinery necessary to carry out that authority. But, to go further and say that a municipality is wrong in not allowing its streets to be used for railway purposes and to say that this commission shall have power to say that it will override the municipality's wishes and to force the municipality to allow its streets to be used for railway purposes is placing power where it has no right to be and where this parliament cannot put it. By assuming authority we do not give ourselves that authority. The British North America Act has settled that question. By passing an Act saying that we can do this we do not make our Act any more valid or binding, even if it had been in existence for fifty years, if we did not have the power. This question has never been decided by the highest court and I am still of the opinion that if it were decided the Act would be held to be ultra vires in so far as it forces a municipality to allow its streets to be used against its will by any authority constituted by this parliament. Although the hon. minister is very willing now to allow some of the municipalities to control electric roads which are matters of local importance in his opinion does the hon. minister think that an electric road is as dangerous, as obnoxious and as damaging for a municipality to have upon its streets as a steam railway? The municipality should, I admit, have control of electric roads and it should not be obliged to have electric roads run along its streets without its consent. The hon. minister believes that is right and says that the Bill is now to be amended in order that it shall not interfere with the municipality's control of its streets in so far as electric railways or tramways are concerned, because he thinks the municipality should have control over them. That being the case I ask this committee to say how much more ought we to say that the municipalities ought to be consulted and not the board of railway commissioners as to whether or not a steam railway shall run upon its streets or highways. With all deference to the hon. minister and because I believe I am right upon this question I cannot withdraw my amendment and I must ask the committee to pass upon it.

Amendment to the amendment (Mr. Lancaster) negatived.

Mr. SPROULE. Would the amendment of the hon. minister apply to cities and incorporated towns only or would it apply to rural municipalities as well?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Only to cities and incorporated towns.

Amendment (Hon. Mr. Blair) agreed to, and section, as amended, agreed to.

On section 185,

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS moved:

That section 185 be amended by adding after the word 'obstruction' the following words 'unless otherwise directed by the board.'

Section as amended, agreed to.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am not yet in a position to take up the drainage sections or the fences, gates and cattle-guard sections. I propose that the committee shall pass to section 202.

Mr. LANCASTER. Before we proceed with that section, I would like to ask the hon. minister if he is redrawing the sections relating to fences, gates and cattle-guards or are they to be as printed in the Bill? I have several amendments to propose and to make them sensible it would be necessary for me to know if the sections are to be re-drawn.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am redrawing them.

Mr. LANCASTER. May I ask the hon. minister to let me have a copy of the redrawn sections ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will before we go into committee upon it.

Mr. LANCASTER. Is section 196 relating to farm crossings, to be redrawn ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think that possibly there may be changes in that.

On subsection 1, section 202—headway of bridges and tunnels,

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I move :

To insert after the word 'portions' in the last line the words 'portions of any such structure thereafter constructed'; and to add at the end of the section the words : 'unless by leave of the board.' In the first subsection to strike out the words 'in order to comply with the provisions of this section.' In subsection three to strike out the words 'the Governor in Council upon the recommendation of' in the first line ; on the fourth line to strike out the word 'so'; and to strike out all the words after 'air-brakes' to the end of the section.

The section will then read :

The board may exempt from the operation of this section any bridge, tunnel, erection, or structure, over, through, or under which no trains are run except such as are equipped with air brakes.

Section, as amended, agreed to.

On section 203—leave of board required in certain cases before construction,

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I move to strike out the words in brackets in the first section (other than structures included in the provisions of sections 177 to 190, inclusive, concerning railway crossings, navigable waters, and highway crossings). I propose to add after the word 'Board' at the end of subsection 1 :

Unless such construction, reconstruction or alteration is made in accordance with standard specifications and plans approved of by the board.

Mr. SPROULE. Does not that leave it entirely to the discretion of the board ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

On section 206—appointment of inspecting engineers,

Mr. LENNOX. I notice that this section provides that inspecting engineers may be appointed by the minister or the board. I think it would be better to confine that appointment to the responsible minister, as it is not, I suppose, a matter of immediate urgency at any time.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is no doubt that it is well for the minister to have the power of appointing an inspecting engineer with the approval of Council; but there are many duties devolving upon the board which make it important that they also should have that power. Some sudden emergency might call for the immediate appointment of an inspecting engineer, during the absence of the minister, and it would very much tie the hands of the board if they were not empowered to make such an appointment, as it is their duty to see that the provisions of the Act are carried out, and that the safety and security of the railways are looked after.

Mr. LENNOX. Perhaps I do not quite apprehend the way these appointments are made. I took it for granted that there would be a certain number of inspecting engineers appointed when the Act went into force, and that these would be available for instructions from the board; and I think that, unless there is some difficulty in the way which I do not apprehend, the selection and appointment of these men would be better left in the hands of the minister, but that they should be subject, so far as their duties are concerned, from time to time, to the control of the board.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman will observe that the approval of council will be necessary to the appointment by the board as well as by the minister. Of course, the minister, representing the Railway Department, would make the recommendation just as he does now. I apprehend that the hon. gentleman is right in thinking that there would have to be a small staff of permanent engineers from whom the inspecting engineers employed by the board would be taken. I think it would be well, however, that they should be persons recommended by the board.

Mr. SPROULE. Is it contemplated that the board may appoint an engineer in any certain locality to inspect any specific piece of work rather than take an engineer a long distance to do it ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is the intention.

On section 207, subsection 4.—inspection of railway.

Mr. BARKER. That makes the board absolutely bound by the report of the engineer.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If the board is not satisfied with his report, they can send another engineer or two others to revise it.

Mr. BARKER. Even though the inspecting engineer did not report favourably, it would be better to let the board take the responsibility of deciding on the question. They might give a conditional order. They might give an order to allow the company to open for freight and not for passengers.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. In actual practice it would happen more frequently that the road is open before it is quite ready than that a refusal to allow it to open is given when it is. My experience is that companies say their road is in working shape and ready to be passed, and when we send out our engineers they report, in quite a number of instances that it is not. The engineer states the reasons why he considers the road not ready ; and if his reasons are not considered sufficient, the board can send out another officer. But as a rule it will be found that the engineer's report will state the facts.

Mr. BARKER. I know as a fact that sometimes an engineer is sent out by the department who may not be a man of great experience. He goes 400 or 500 miles to inspect a bit of work, he is unfavourably impressed and makes an adverse report, and you give notice to the company. Surely it would be better to say that the company's engineer and the inspecting engineer should appear before the board and the board should hear both parties and take the responsibility of deciding.

Mr. LENNOX. This does not give the board a fair opportunity of having the question decided whether the railway is ready or not. If the clause were worded so that the inspector would make a report to the board and the board would hear both parties, that would give protection to the public and the necessary degree of protection to the company. It might happen that the engineer would be a young man, technical, very zealous, and make an adverse report, and although he may have to state the facts on which his judgment is founded, yet it should be left to the board to consider the whole matter and give its decision, I would suggest that the latter part of the clause be amended.

Mr. SPROULE. The section provides that the engineer shall state the grounds for his opinion and the company shall be entitled to notice thereof, and the board shall refuse such application in whole or in part, and may direct a further inspection and report.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I would be willing to strike out the word 'shall' and insert the word 'may.' I move that the word 'shall' in forty-seventh line be struck out and the word 'may' inserted in its place.

Subsection, as amended, agreed to.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is a condition I wish to provide for by making a new subsection. Very often, before these roads are in shape to do business or carry passengers, it is necessary that they could be used for carrying freight—freight for the prosecution of the works and that sort of thing. I propose to insert the following as subsection 6, making the subsection 6 subsection 7 :—

The board, upon being satisfied that public convenience will be served thereby, may, after obtaining the report of an inspecting engineer, allow the company to carry freight traffic over any portion of the railway not open for passenger traffic in accordance with the preceding provisions of this section.

Amendment agreed to.

On section 211. Safety appliances on trains.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The opening words of this section are 'every company shall provide and cause to be used on all trains the best and most efficient obtainable apparatus, appliances and means.' I move that this be altered to read 'modern and efficient apparatus' and so on.

Mr. BARKER. Would not the words 'most efficient' be better ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Of course, the supposition is that the latest is the best. I think it will be found that when the company gets modern things they will get the best things, otherwise they would not continue to use them.

Mr. BARKER. It would appear to have the effect of compelling them almost to get the most modern, though they may not be the best.

Mr. LENNOX. I think it is paring down the old Act a little too much. The appliances may be perfectly modern and still not be safe.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They have got to be, not only modern, but efficient.

Mr. LANCASTER. The old Act said that they must use such apparatus as would 'afford good and sufficient means.' There is a little difference between efficient and sufficient. It might be modern and efficient, yet not be as good as possible.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. It would be hardly fair to compel the railway company to use the best apparatus, so long as they used one that is efficient.

Mr. LENNOX. I do not think it reasonable to ask the company to be constantly changing. But I would call the minister's attention to this point, that unless he sees some good reason for changing the wording of the old Act, it is inadvisable to make an alteration. He knows perfectly well that we have had from time to time judicial decisions upon these statutes, as they have been in force for a long time ; they have received a judicial construction, and it is unsafe to make an alteration in the wording unless there is a necessity for it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman is right in his general proposition, and I have not violated the spirit of the principle, so far as I know. I think that where the words have acquired a distinct meaning and have been found to answer all purposes, it is desirable to retain them. But in the present instance I think there is a good reason for making a change in the construction of this section. The words 'good and sufficient' are not terms that I think have been subjected to any judicial interpretation. I think they could be improved, I think the word 'efficient' is better than 'sufficient,' it is a stronger term, and we need not hesitate to use strong terms when we are regulating the means of guarding life and property more securely. The word 'modern' is not open to the interpretation that some gentlemen have put upon it. It does not mean that all apparatus must necessarily be of modern invention; it only means that it must be of modern use, that it must be an up-to-date apparatus, an apparatus which is used generally on first class railways. Railways are using a good many devices that are efficient, and yet are very old; that is, they have been invented a long time.

Mr. LANCASTER. I think the words 'best and most efficient obtainable' correctly express what we want to bring about.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is hardly fair to say that every railway should be compelled to use the very best, because the best might be more than efficient; it might be very expensive, and it would be unduly loading a railway to require the company to go to the expense of getting the very best, when an up-to-date and an efficient appliance would be all that is required, all that anybody could reasonably ask for. There are grades in value and grades in cost, and when you ask them to use the very best, you are taking an extreme ground.

Mr. LENNOX. I agree with the minister that it would be unfair to compel the company to be constantly changing and to adopt the latest invention, merely because it was the most modern. If they procure what is the best at the time, that ought to be in compliance with the Act. But I call the hon. minister's attention again to this matter, and I think there is more reason now than I thought of when I was speaking before for preserving the wording of the old Act. We have had a number of decisions in regard to setting fire.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There are provisions later on covering that.

Mr. LENNOX. Are there express provisions?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. LENNOX. If there are specific provisions as the hon. minister says in reference to railway engines throwing fire, I do not know that I have any objection to this particular clause.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. There is a good deal in what the hon. gentleman says, where you require the best or most efficient appliances. Would not that apply in case of fire to the other?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That comes later on. This section relates more particularly to the means of making travel secure for passengers on trains.

Mr. BARKER. It is very important not to use words here that would imply that the appliances must be effectual for the purpose; otherwise, you would make the railway the guarantor of the safety of passengers. It has never been held that they must provide appliances that will effect these objects. They can only do their best to do so.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I thing the word 'efficient' is not objected to. I have had it under discussion with railway people, both the employers and the operating staff, and they see no objection to the word 'efficient.' I beg to move that subsection (a) be amended by striking out the word 'the' before the word 'train' in the second line and substituting the word 'any passenger.'

Mr. LANCASTER. Does not the hon. minister think it would be well to leave it as it is? Of course, the consequences of an accident to a freight train are not so disastrous as in the case of a passenger train, but still there are lives upon a freight train. The safety of a freight train requires that communication shall be easily obtainable between the conductor and the engine driver. The wreck of a freight train for want of such communication might cause a disaster to a passenger train in which many lives might be lost.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It would not be practicable to make this provision apply to freight trains. There is nothing yet devised to provide such communication.

Mr. LANCASTER. There is a bell-rope on most freight trains.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is a very short freight train on which there is a bell-rope. When you come to haul fifty or sixty cars, some flat cars and some box cars, you will find it quite impossible to have a rope that can be relied upon. That is the universal judgment of railway people. I know it is the judgment of our own people. I have had occasion to have the subject considered by them.

Mr. BARKER. Does this cover the case of a mixed train ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, any train that is taking passengers. I beg to move also :

That subsection (b) be amended by striking out, in line five, all the words from 'including' to the word 'possible' in the eighth line and submitting the following : 'Including the power, drive wheel, brake and appliances for operating the train brake system upon the locomotive and having a sufficient number of cars in every train so equipped with power or train brakes that the engineer on the locomotive drawing such train can control the speed or bring it to a stop in the quickest and best manner possible without requiring the brakesman to use the common hand-brake for that purpose.

These clauses which are being incorporated in the Bill now are clauses which are to be found in a Bill introduced during the present session which was promoted by some of the railway employees.

Subsection, as amended, agreed to.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I move to strike out subsections 3 and 4 and to insert after the word 'train' in the second line :

Couplers which couple automatically by impact and which can be uncoupled without the necessity of going in between the cars.

I move to strike out in subsections (d) and (e) lines 11 to 15 and to substitute therefor :

Provided that the company shall not be obliged to equip all trains with the power drive wheel brake or air-brakes as provided in subsection (d) of this section, nor to equip the cars with automatic couplers as provided in subsection (c) of this section before the first day of January, 1906.

I may say that the association wished the limit to be 1905 and the railways wanted it 1907, and I think that perhaps we arrived at a fair date by taking 1906.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Suppose that some improved appliances were discovered, they would still have to go on using these appliances.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes. This House of Commons passed a Bill once if not twice containing this power brake clause, and it seems to favour the idea that it should be used. We are therefore not making a new departure. I propose to ask the committee to insert in subsection 2 the following :

Every company shall adopt and use upon all of its rolling stock such height of draw-bars as the board may determine in accordance with any standard from time to time adopted by competent railway authorities.

Mr. BARKER. What does the minister mean by a competent railway authority ? Would it be Sir William Van Horne, or Sir Thomas Shaughnessy, or Mr. Hays ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What is called the Master Car Builders' Association regulates these things generally. It is a United States organization, and I did not like to mention the name in the Bill, but it does regulate all these questions as to what shall be the standard with regard to such appliances.

Mr. BARKER. If the Master Car Builders of the United States adopted some patent, we would have to follow them, although we might have a better one of our own. Would it not be better to leave this to the commissioners than to some railway authority which nobody knows ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The Master Car Builders are an association of very high standing. That is a general name given to a sort of final railway court of appeal.

Section agreed to.

On section 212—power of board respecting train equipment,

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I move to insert after the word 'section,' in the fifth line, the following :

And may, by general regulation or in any particular case, on good cause shown, exempt the company from using on its railways or any portion thereof any of the appliances in the last preceding section mentioned, and may from time to time extend the period within which such appliances shall be used.

I also move to insert the following as subsection 2 :

2. The board shall endeavour to provide for uniformity in the construction of rolling stock to be used upon the railway, and for uniformity of rules for the operation and running of trains; and may make regulations designating the number of men to be employed upon trains, or providing that coal shall be used on all locomotives instead of wood in any district, and generally providing for the protection and safety of the public, of property, and of the employees of the company with respect to the running and operation of trains by the company.

Mr. LENNOX. I want to call attention to a point which I mentioned the other day. It is not for the purpose of obstructing the measure, because we are all anxious to get through with it as soon as possible. I do not know how it may be with the hon. member for South Lanark (Hon. Mr. Haggart) and the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker), both of whom, I believe, are familiar with railway matters and railway law ; but I may tell the hon. minister that, although I am very anxious to follow these matters, with these amendments coming in without any previous notice, it is impossible for me to grasp their meaning so as to know whether they are such as we ought to agree to or not. I suggested the other day that if the hon. minister would furnish the hon. leader of the opposition with half a dozen copies of proposed amendments, where they are long, this would enable us to give him the benefit of our views, which I assume the hon. minister wishes to have.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I recognize that there is a great deal of force in what my hon. friend says, and the committee have displayed a great deal of indulgence in the matter. But it is entirely unavoidable. I have been giving a good deal of attention to this measure outside of the House, almost every spare moment I could get, in obtaining the views of railway people and of those who have special grievances, and who thought something ought to be done in this Bill to remedy them. I have listened most carefully and attentively to what they have had to say on all sides, and wherever their suggestions have commended themselves to my judgment, I have given them effect. It is the general desire, I think, on all hands that we should have the Bill in as workable a shape as possible; and my intention is, immediately after it passes this committee, to have the Bill reprinted and put into the hands of hon. members; and after it is reprinted, if hon. members will take the trouble to go over it, and desire to have any section reconsidered, or to be informed on any question connected with the Bill, I will not place any obstacle in the way. I invite suggestions from the members of the committee, and I shall be glad, when they have the whole measure before them, to have them call attention to any defects which it exhibits.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I would suggest that the Bill be reprinted and distributed to the members of the House before it passes through the committee, so that they will have an opportunity of looking over it and making suggestions before it is reported to the House.

Mr. BARKER. I think what the hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) has suggested would be desirable in addition to the reprinting of the Bill; that is, wherever there is a material amendment to be moved, the minister should hand to the leader of the opposition one or two or half a dozen copies, and thus a good deal of time could probably be saved.

Amendment agreed to, and section, as amended, agreed to.

On section 213—bell and whistle on locomotive,

Mr. GERMAN. Before that section is passed, I desire to move an amendment. There is a certain danger to property adjoining a line of railway from which under existing conditions there is really no escape. There has been a good deal of discussion in reference to cattle-guards. Sufficient cattle-guards are necessary, but people owning stock have an opportunity of taking some reasonable precaution to protect their cattle, even when there is an insufficient cattle-guard, by preventing them straying on the public highway. There has been a discussion of the subject of drainage, and there is a reasonable opportunity to the owners of land to have their property drained by an application to the Railway Committee of the Privy Council. But there is a danger arising from fire occurring from sparks and cinders escaping from locomotives from which the farming community have no protection. The difficulty lies here. Most of the locomotives which are in use in this country are not equipped with proper and sufficient fire screens.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman is not speaking to the clause under consideration.

Mr. GERMAN. Yes, I am proposing to amend that clause by providing that the railway companies shall equip their locomotive engines with proper fire screens.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That amendment will come in better on subclause E of clause 24, which was allowed to stand, and which deals with devices on engines to avoid fires. I would ask my hon. friend to hold his amendment over until we go back to that clause.

Mr. GERMAN. I have no objection to keep my amendment back at the hon. minister's request and on his assurance that I will be given an opportunity to present it when the clause he suggests comes up for consideration.

On section 225,

A watchman shall be stationed at every crossing where two main lines of railway cross each other at rail level and no train shall proceed over such crossing until signal has been made to the conductor or engineer thereof that the way is clear; provided always that in the case of an electric street railway car crossing an electric street railway track, it shall be the duty of the conductor, before crossing, to go forward and see that the track to be crossed is clear, before giving the signal to the motorman that the way is clear and to proceed.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I move to revise that so that it shall read:

No train or engine shall pass over any crossing where two main lines of railway cross each other at rail level until a proper signal has been received by the conductor or engineer in charge of such train or engine, from a competent person or watchman in charge of such crossing that the way is clear; provided always that in the case of an electric street railway car crossing any railway track not otherwise properly protected, it shall be the duty of the conductor before crossing to go forward and see that the track to be crossed is clear, before giving the signal to the motorman that the way is clear and to proceed.

Mr. LENNOX. The necessity of having a watchman at the crossing is a matter of implication. You say the engineer shall not cross until he has received a signal from the watchman or other competent person in charge that the way is clear. Do you think that is as good as it was before ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is better or I would not suggest it.

Mr. LENNOX. It is not as explicit.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not put the responsibility on the watchman but on the train hands and on the people who are crossing. They must not cross without this signal. The company will see to it that they have watchmen in charge because they cannot cross until that signal is given showing that the coast is clear.

Mr. LENNOX. I know what the argument is, but I think it would be better as it was before.

Mr. LANCASTER. Would it not be better to expressly declare what the amendment proposes by implication that a watchman shall give the signal?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There must be a signal given and the train cannot cross unless it is given.

Mr. LANCASTER. Would it not be better to say that the signal must be given by a watchman stationed at the crossing ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. In the first place he is not stationed at the crossing, and besides that there are various other means of sufficiently protecting a crossing than having a watchman. There are electric signals and bells which are being very generally used and which do not necessitate the actual presence of a watchman. We want to have a sufficient signal no matter by whom or by what means it is given.

Mr. LANCASTER. What I am thinking about is not only the signal to the train hands, but the signal to any one approaching the crossing. There might be danger in that case, and a warning should be given to those approaching as well as to the train hands unless this section is only to apply to a railway crossing where there is no highway.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Where there are two railways crossing one another it is a particularly dangerous thing.

Mr. LANCASTER. As a rule there is no highway at such a crossing, but there might be.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There might be but it is not customary. The railway companies try to avoid it if they can.

Section, as amended, agreed to.

North-west Mounted Police—pay of force, $182,500.

Mr. CLARKE. May I ask the right hon. gentleman to give us some information respecting this.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). My hon. friend will see from the map all the posts marked which we have at present in the North-west Territories, and there are some new ones on the Mackenzie river. They extend from the frontier of Manitoba along the boundary line and are chiefly in the McLeod district. There are altogether eighty different stations. We have a new post at Athabasca lake and we are building a post at the mouth of the Mackenzie river. Inspector Considine left in the month of May last to install a station there. The duties of the Mounted Police are well understood. We thought at one time that we might decrease the force but we have found it extremely difficult in view of constant applications from the settlers. This appropriation is for 500 men at $800 a year per man, including maintenance pay and everything else. The force is composed of : one commissioner, stationed at Regina; one assistant commissioner; nine superintendents ; 24 inspectors ; 2 surgeons ; 70 sergeants; 30 corporals and 363 constables. The pay of the commissioner is $2,600; assistant commissioner, $1,600; superintendents, $1,400 each; inspectors, $1,000 each; 1 surgeon at $1.200 and one at $1,400 ; sergeants from $1 to $2 a day; corporals, 85 cents; constables, from 50 cents a day to $40 a month. In addition to the two surgeons we have to call in contract surgeons whom we pay at the rate of $60 per month and who are allowed to engage in private practice.

Mr. BELL. How many Indian scouts ?

The PRIME MINISTER. We have very few Indian scouts at present; they are chiefly white men.

North-west Mounted Police—pay of Yukon force, $170,000.

Mr. CLARKE. How many men have we in the Yukon ?

The PRIME MINISTER. We have an increase of $50,000 in that item. Two or three days ago I had to take an appropriation of $150,000 to cover the expenditure of this year. These estimates were taken for 250 men, but some eighteen months ago we received notice which turned out to be true that a sort of conspiracy had been hatched at Skagway with the intention of rushing the country. They were said to be American sympathizers, but I think really they were simply men of more or less loose morals who wanted to make a raid upon the Yukon. We sent an additional force of fifty men, but nothing came of the affair. I am sorry that we have not found it possible to withdraw these men. At present we have thirty-five posts in the Yukon between White Horse and Fort Cudahy, including two posts on the Dawson trail behind Pyramid harbour. These men do almost everything. They assist in the collection of the royalties, the collection of customs; they assist the bush rangers, the timber inspectors, the magistrates; they guard the court-house and the banks; they serve notices and do all kinds of work, and I am glad to say that the reports we have of them are very satisfactory. I do not foresee that it will be possible for us to decrease this force, and the total appropriation of $500,000 means about $1,600 for each man.

Mr. SPROULE. Do they receive additional pay for extra work ?

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes. The pay of 300 officers and men is $170,000; subsistence for 300 men at eighty cents per day, $87,600; forrage, $40,000; fuel and light, $42,400; clothing, repairs and renewals, horses, dogs, arms and ammunition, medical stores, stationery, billeting and contingencies, $70,000; buildings, $25,000—they put up their own buildings; transport $65,000—making a total of $500,000.

Mr. CLARKE. What is the pay of the force serving in the Yukon ?

The PRIME MINISTER. I am going to give it now. One assistant commissioner, at $1,600; two superintendents, at $1,400 each; nine inspectors, at $1,000 each; four surgeons—two at $1,400, two at $1,000; special allowance to sixteen officers, at $1.25 per day each; command allowance to the assistant commissioner, at $2 per day; twenty-two sergeants, at from $1 to $1.50 per day each; special allowance, at 75 cents per day each; twenty corporals, regular allowance, at 85 cents per day each, and special allowance, at 50 cents per day each; two hundred constables, at an average of $1.10 per day each; forty-two special constables, at an average of $50 per month. In addition, there is working pay for mechanics, &c., for which we make a special estimate of $12,355.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood the minister to say that the mounted police were employed for special work, such as collecting customs duties, looking after timber, and so forth. Are they paid anything extra for this work ?

The PRIME MINISTER. No.

Mr. SPROULE. For instance, they deliver the mails and collect customs duties. Is there not an allowance made by the other departments for this work ?

The PRIME MINISTER. The Department of the Mounted Police pays nothing extra, but I think the Customs Department and the Post Office Department pay something.

Mr. SPROULE. And that goes to the individual members of the force who do the work ?

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes. If the members of the committee are interested in seeing some of the work that is done by the police, I lay on the Table some photographs taken by themselves.

Mr. SPROULE. Is it intended to keep up the same number of men as usual in the Territories ?

The PRIME MINISTER. I am sorry to say that I see no possibility at this moment of decreasing the force. I think myself that the force might be somewhat decreased in the older settlements in the North-west Territories, and, that in the near future we must compel these settlements to take care of themselves. But at present when we take men from the older districts, we require them farther north, and I cannot say that we contemplate any reduction in the force for some time to come.

Compensation to members of the North-west Mounted Police for injuries received in the discharge of duty, $2,000.

Mr. CLARKE. Is this a vote taken annually for this purpose, or are there specific cases ?

The PRIME MINISTER. It is a vote taken annually, an estimated appropriation which we judge to be sufficient for the number of casualties that occur.

Mr. SPROULE. How much did you pay out last year ?

The PRIME MINISTER. One thousand nine hundred and fifty-two dollars and seventy-five cents. This is to compensate men for injuries received in the performance of duty. I will give you some instances: broken and deformed leg, broken and deformed arm, broken leg, concussion and loss of sight, rupture, varicose vein, and so on. These men receive a small compensation—in one case $73, in another $109, in another $219, &c. The amount of compensation is fixed by a board of the police themselves.

Salaries and contingent expenses of the Senate, $74,726.

Mr. SPROULE. There is an increase here of $1,700.

Mr. SPEAKER. I am not responsible for this part of the estimates. I understand that the Senate have sent these estimates to the government, and that they have been accepted.

Mr. TAYLOR. Has this item decreased or increased during the last few years ?

Mr. SPEAKER. I do not know whether it has increased or not.

Mr. TAYLOR. I see in the estimates of two years ago that you asked for $63,188 for the Senate, which shows an increase of $11,000 since the last two years. Are there more Senators ?

Mr. SPEAKER. I am not aware that the number has increased. The Senate is responsible for this.

Mr. TAYLOR. Is the Senate not represented by a minister of the Crown to give explanations here ?

House of Commons, $222,782.50.

Mr. SPEAKER. With regard to the increase of $20,000, this year we are asking in the one vote $60,000 for the debates. We were in the habit of asking for only $40,000 in the main estimates, but in the supplementaries we asked $20,000. At the suggestion of the hon. leader of the opposition last year, we are putting this year in the main estimates the sum of $60,000 instead of $40,000. There is a decrease of $750 in the salaries of the House of Commons, so that the increase is only with regard to the publishing of the debates.

Mr. LEMIEUX. After what has been said by the Speaker, I wish to say that those who read the French version of the debates have noticed this year a remarkable improvement over preceding years. We have this year the best staff of translators we ever had, and I must compliment Mr. Speaker on the efficiency of the staff.

Mr. SPEAKER. I am always very willing to receive compliments, but in this instance they are due to the Debates Committee.

Mr. TAYLOR. I see here an item 'Estimate of the sergeant at arms as approved, $40,302.50.' Who approves of the sergeant at arms estimates ?

Mr. SPEAKER. I do.

Mr. SPROULE. What is that for ?

Mr. SPEAKER. Expenses in connection with messengers and the House generally.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to draw the attention of Mr. Speaker to the fact that in one of the rooms which is used by six members, there are only two lamps and there are no desks, only plain tables. There is not a place in which we can put away any papers. I applied to the sergeant at arms and he said that he had no authority to furnish anything. Then I applied to Mr. Speaker, but whether he forgot all about it or not, we have not seen any improvement since. We ought to have some better convenience for doing our work. At least we should have sufficient lights, and it would be only right to furnish desks or some convenience for putting away papers.

Mr. SPEAKER. I may say with regard to the desks, that they are generally supplied by the Public Works Department and are not under the control of the Speaker, though, of course, we may make some time some small expense in connection with buying desks. As a rule, however, they are under the control of the Public Works Department, and I think that I did call the attention of the department to my hon. friend's complaint and will be glad to do so again.

Mr. SPROULE. When we apply to the Minister of Public Works he says that he has nothing to do with it, and when we apply to Mr. Speaker, he refers us to the Public Works Department. One shifts the responsibility on to the other and we do not know where to go. It used to be the sergeant at arms who had to do with these matters, but he has nothing to do with them now.

Mr. SPEAKER. There has been no change in that respect. Last year the room now occupied by the members from Toronto was furnished by the Public Works Department. I do not think that we ever supplied any of the rooms with furniture. All the new rooms we had last year were supplied by the Public Works Department.

Mr. TAYLOR. And the lights also ?

Mr. SPEAKER. We can get the lights supplied by our own staff, and I shall be very glad to have justice done to the hon. gentleman and see that he has a sufficient number of lights.

Mr. SPROULE. We shall be very grateful. I notice that the room occupied by the Toronto members is very well furnished. I have no objection to that, but I think that others ought to be treated in the same way.

Mr. SPEAKER. The other day I was in the room of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries and found it very badly furnished. I suppose he would be very glad also to have some changes made, and I shall be glad to do all in my power with the limited means at my disposal.

Mr. TAYLOR. I see that the estimates of the sergeant at arms in 1897 was $33,858, and it is now $40,800, an increase of $7,000.

Mr. SPEAKER. The explanation, I am told by the chief clerk, is that we estimated for a session of one hundred days, and now we are estimating for a session of one hundred and thirty days. But we are not spending more money; in fact we are spending less this year.

Mr. LENNOX. I presume this is about the only opportunity we have of speaking our minds to the hon. Speaker of the House. The hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) has referred to the furnishing of room 56, of which room I am one of the occupants. Of course, we all like to have good furniture, but I am always afraid to advocate anything in the line of extravagance, or even generous expenditure, because we find it our duty to be constantly telling the government to keep within reasonable limits. Therefore, though I want to make it clear that I have great taste for really good furniture—for elegant furniture, if you like—still, having regard to the fact that this is an extravagant government and liable to err on these lines, I wish to be distinctly understood as saying nothing whatever about it.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I desire to bring the attention of Mr. Speaker, though I do not know whether it comes within his purview to the disgraceful condition of the bathrooms downstairs. I give credit to those who deserve it for what has been accomplished in the way of improvement within recent years. At the same time, the place is nothing to what the House of Commons should have. The whole arrangement down stairs is very unsatisfactory. Another point is with regard to the messengers of the House. Messengers with impunity use the washroom set apart for members of the House, and associate with members. And I would draw the attention of the Speaker to the fact that many of these messengers impose upon two or three good-natured ones of their own class. The large amount of work is done by very few, while the others sun themselves in ease and luxury.

Mr. SPEAKER. I am glad the hon. gentleman (Mr. Hughes, Victoria) has called attention to this matter.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I do it publicly.

Mr. SPEAKER. I never knew the complaint made before, but I will give instructions suitable to the case.

Library of the parliament—salaries and officers of the library, $17,462.50.

Mr. SPROULE. There is an increase here of $332.50.

Mr. SPEAKER. I understand that this is for the regular statutory increases.

Legislation—general—printing, printing paper and binding, $125,000.

Mr. LENNOX. There is an increase of $15,000 here.

Mr. SPEAKER. That item is not entirely under my control, but is more under the control of the Joint Committee on the printing of parliament. But I am informed that this increase is due to the fact that the number of volumes that we have to print has increased. The expense in connection with the vote is simply in payment of the Printing Bureau for the printing of our documents.

Mr. TAYLOR. Is any of the printing done outside ?

Mr. LENNOX. No, it is all done at the Printing Bureau.

Mr. SPROULE. What percentage of all our printing is done in the Bureau ?

Mr. SPEAKER. I cannot give that information. I can only speak with regard to the printing done for the House. All the money expended last year was expended with the Printing Bureau.

Mr. SPROULE. A discussion took place in the Upper Chamber the other day, and I was surprised to learn the large percentage of public printing that is not done in the Bureau—about 50 per cent if my memory serves me well.

Mr. PARMELEE. No.

Mr. SPROULE. I think there was a trifle over 50 per cent done outside. It has always seemed to me that either we should have our printing done at the Printing Bureau, or we should have it done some other way. I do not think it is justifiable to allow a portion of the work to be distributed amongst the newspapers, very often at extravagant prices. There can be no doubt that, as the figures have been analysed by those who are experts in these matters, the price we pay for outside printing is very high. If the Bureau is not large enough, we should enlarge it; if it has not plant enough we should provide more plant. But we ought not to continue the dual system of having a Printing Bureau and still have work done outside.

Mr. PARMELEE. The hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) is entirely wrong in the supposition that 50 per cent of the printing of parliament is done outside of the Bureau. As a matter of fact nearly all the printing of parliament is done in the Bureau. It does happen, once in a while in a congestion of work, owing to the lateness with which the reports are prepared, one or two of the departments find it necessary to get their work done outside. I agree with the hon. member for East Grey that, as far as possible, the public printing ought to be done in the Government Printing Office. But I do not agree with him in his statement that when we do go outside we pay extravagant or extortionate prices. I think that the prices obtained from outside contractors will compare very favourably with the cost of work done in the Printing Bureau.

Mr. SPROULE. I remember that an analysis was made some time ago, and the facts as set forth by those who might be regarded as experts in printing showed that the prices of work done outside were nearly double of what we paid at the Bureau. As to the statement that only a small proportion of the printing is done outside of the Bureau, that does not agree with the figures given in the Senate the other day. I am sure that my memory is not so far astray.

Mr. PARMELEE. It included newspaper advertising.

Mr. SPROULE. It is true that it included advertisements in newspapers, but it was pretty nearly 50 per cent of all we paid for printing and publishing.

Mr. PARMELEE. That is where the hon. member (Mr. Sproule) has been led astray. He has not separated the two accounts. In the Auditor General's Report appears what is paid to each newspaper receiving the government patronage. But a very large proportion of that is for advertising and not for printing.

Mr. SPROULE. What is advertising but printing ?

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Parmelee) as chairman of the Printing Committee, says with fair correctness, that the printing of parliament is done in the Printing Bureau. But if he takes into account all the printing done for the government, he will find the statement of Sir Mackenzie Bowell—who is a printer and usually scrutinizes these matters carefully—made in the other House is in accordance with the statement of my hon. friend from East Grey, that the government printing done outside the Bureau amounts to more than that done in the Bureau. Here is the statement as published :

Sir Mackenzie Bowell stated that the extent to which the government had carried the abuses of the patronage system had run high up into the tens of thousands of dollars. One paper in Montreal had received $100,000 and could not exist without this patronage ; one of the ministers was deeply interested in it, it even being stated that he was a director.

I presume that it is the Minister of Agriculture, who is a director of the Montreal 'Herald,' and the Montreal 'Herald' received last year over $100,000 for printing for the government.

He gave figures, showing that in five years this paper had received $97,790, entirely in contravention of the Act. He read a few of the sums paid newspapers supporting the government. During the year ending 30th of June, printing and advertising cost $383,164, while the departmental printing cost $383,000.

When our hon. friends opposite sat on this side of the House they condemned the Conservative government because a little printing was done outside, but now we find that they have paid out $383,000 to outside newspapers, and $100,000 to the Montreal 'Herald,' of which one of the ministers is a director.

So that government papers received a little more than the legitimate printing at the bureau. The Halifax 'Chronicle,' once Mr. Fielding's paper, received $8,853 in the year ending 30th of June, 1902; the St. John 'Telegraph' received over $18,000, of which $17,000 was for lithographing, which the law provided should be done at the bureau ; the Winnipeg 'Free Press,' well known as the Minister of the Interior's organ, received $2,693. Mr. Templeman's paper only received $490, but he did not grumble, as in outlying districts all printing could not be done at the bureau.

Now, there was a charge made in the other House that this government was not only violating their pledges but violating the law as well, in order to give patronage to papers in which it is openly stated by Sir Mackenzie Bowell, in the other House, that ministers are interested, one in the Winnipeg 'Free Press,' one in the Montreal 'Herald,' and besides, there was the Finance Minister's paper, though he did not know whether it got any of the printing.

Mr. FRASER. I remember last year the Minister of the Interior distinctly claimed that he had no interest in that paper, I know nothing at all about the Montreal 'Herald.' But I rise to call attention to the fact that these papers do no printing, perhaps they may do some lithographing. But what the papers get is largely for advertising for the Department of Public Works and other departments. I know myself, so far as the 'Morning Chronicle' is concerned, that they do no printing, they have no printing department, they cannot print anything except the paper. It is for advertising and perhaps lithographing that these sums are paid out, and they cannot be put down in the same category as printing done at the Bureau. I do not know whether the Bureau is as well equipped as it ought to be, but I think we ought to be careful in increasing it, for the reason that a large part of the work it has to do must necessarily be done during the time parliament is in session; and to put on a large plant that would not be busy all the year round might not be the best course for the government to adopt.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) is not correct when he says this is all for advertising. He must surely remember that only last year the Postmaster General told us that a large portion of the work belonging to the Post Office Department was done in Montreal.

Mr. FRASER. I only spoke of the Halifax 'Chronicle,' I know nothing about the other papers.

Mr. SPROULE. Well, I was speaking with reference to advertising as well as printing, and the statement I made was even under the mark, for I find that we paid about $300,000 a year for work done at the Bureau and we paid $383,000 for work done outside the Bureau. Therefore, when I said that we paid about fifty per cent of the money that is paid for that kind of work outside the Bureau, I was under the mark, because instead of fifty per cent we paid a good deal over that. My complaint is that this work ought to be done in the Bureau if we pretend to keep up a Printing Bureau for the purpose of doing government printing.

Mr. COCHRANE. In reference to the Montreal 'Herald,' would any gentleman pretend to tell me that $97,000 was paid to that paper for advertising alone? Now, it looks to me rather suspicious, to say the least, that a paper in which the Minister of Agriculture is a large stockholder—we are informed he is a director of it—should get so large an amount for printing. That paper is undoubtedly patronized by the government of which he is a member.

Mr. REID (Grenville). It looks very fishy.

Mr. COCHRANE. I think it is more than fishy. It looks as if there were some suckers around that department. I should think the government would feel rather ashamed to face that fact, that a paper in Montreal in which a minister of the Crown is a large stockholder—and I challenge contradiction of the statement—but whether a stockholder or not, that paper is getting $97,000 for printing. The Chairman of the Printing Committee tells us it is for advertising. Now, I think the hon. gentleman will take that back and correct his statement. I say that the rule should apply that where so large an amount of money is expended in printing it should be let out by contract. All things being equal, I am not disposed to criticise the government for letting their friends have it, I am not disposed to criticise the government for spending small amounts to papers that are supporting them. as the papers do something for it. But when it comes to paying nearly $100,000 I say they should draw the line, and retrace thteir steps, and rectify the mistakes they have made during the last seven years.

Mr. PARMELEE. Hon. gentlemen on the other side persist in confusing accounts that are paid for printing and accounts that are paid for advertising. As a matter of fact, a very small portion of the public printing is done outside the Bureau, and when it is done outside the Bureau it is because the Bureau is congested with work and is not able to turn it out in proper time and shape. The Bureau is fairly well equipped. As everybody knows, this is a growing time, and during the last ten or fifteen years the amount of printing done for parliament has probably doubled, while the Bureau has not been increased in order to keep pace with the increased public printing and the printing of all sorts in connection with the departments of the government. Now, when the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) says that the Montreal 'Herald' has been paid $100,000 a year for printing and advertising, he does not make the distinction between printing and advertising. But I venture to say that he is entirely wrong in his figures. The Montreal 'Herald' has never been paid any such amount.

Mr. TAYLOR. For five years.

Mr. PARMELEE. Well, I think the hon. gentleman did not make that very clear.

Mr. TAYLOR. I read Sir Mackenzie Bowell's statement in the Senate.

Mr. PARMELEE. I understood the hon. gentleman to say it was for one year. For five years, possibly he is in the main correct. But I can say this, that all the public printing done outside the Bureau has been done at reasonable prices, and not at fourteen prices, as we know were charged some years ago by printers who did printing for the government when our friends the enemy were in power.

Mr. SPROULE. I think that is quite a gratuitous statement. In analysing these accounts, we found that in some cases the parties were paid double prices and treble prices for printing, and to say the government get value for it, is to say what we did not find by actual inquiry when we had the accounts brought before us. As to the statement of the hon. gentleman about the very small percentage of printing done outside, could that hon. gentleman tell us how much of it is done outside? I have heard some similar statements made in that connection in this House, but when we come to look into them closely we find that they are not borne out in fact at all but that the very reverse is the case and that a very large percentage of this work has been done outside. I remember that one or two years ago the statement was made that there was practically no printing done in connection with the department of the hon. Postmaster General and that afterwards the hon. Postmaster General himself admitted that a large proportion of the work was done in Montreal. Hon. members, when speaking upon a subject of that kind, ought to speak of what they know and they ought to give the source from which they get their information, because we want rather a reasoned judgment than the ipse dixit of any hon. member.

Mr. HOLMES. The hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) is absolutely wrong in so far as he charges that exorbitant prices were paid to the Montreal 'Herald.'

Mr. SPROULE. I did not mention the Montreal 'Herald' at all. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Holmes) need not put up a man of straw and then knock him over.

Mr. HOLMES. Some hon. members have been alluding to the accounts of the Montreal 'Herald.' The accounts of the Montreal 'Herald' were investigated before the Public Accounts Committee last year, or two years ago, and they are being investigated at the present time, and I venture to say that the committee will find that only fair and reasonable charges have been made in connection with that expenditure. It was proved before the House, and the statement was made by the Chairman of the Printing Committee, that the Hamilton 'Spectator' had received fourteen prices for job work which was let out by the late government. On general principles I believe that the Bureau ought to do all the printing that it is possible to do, and I believe that is what it is doing at the present time. If the hon. gentleman will take up the report of the King's Printer, he will find that he repeats the complaint that he has made year after year that the facilities at the Bureau are not adequate for turning out all the printing that is required to be done for the various departments in connection with the printing of parliament. The Bureau, at the time it was erected, was too small to meet the demands made upon it, and with the increased demands which have arisen since then, it is absolutely impossible to turn out the work required by this parliament. I am not justifying the giving of work to outside offices unless it is absolutely necessary. In regard to the charges that are made, hon. members must remember that these are for lithographing work as well as printing. The Bureau does not do lithographing work. Lithographing work is a separate branch of printing, and has to be done in outside offices. I venture to say that if hon. members make an examination of the accounts in the Public Accounts Committee, they will find that the charges made for work done are the ordinary charges for commercial work in any city in the Dominion.

Mr. LENNOX. It is very refreshing to hear the hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Holmes) give us his little lecture. He is an hon. gentleman, I believe, who is eminently capable of that kind of thing, but in dealing with a business matter it may, perhaps, be better to deal with it upon some business basis. For any hon. member of this House to get up for the purpose of making the plea that years ago some government paid a large price for work similar to this, is to make a very poor plea indeed. I think if the hon. gentleman cannot make a better plea on behalf of the government than to go back to the olden days and resurrect something without proof, as a matter of fact, —but, even if you admit it to be a fact—if he cannot give any better argument than that, he only weakens the case that he endeavours to support. It is not a question at all of what other governments have done. This government came into power pledged that they would do a great deal better than any government which preceded it.

Mr. HOLMES. So they did.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. FRASER. And they had not much of a task.

Mr. LENNOX. Is there anything the matter with hon. gentlemen over there ?

An hon. MEMBER. Keep cool.

Mr. LENNOX. I can keep cool. I want to say what meets with the concurrence of every sensible business man, and it is that it is time we were done absolutely and for ever with this miserable, petty plea brought forward from time to time, 'you did the same thing.'

Mr. HOLMES. You had better set an example on that side of the House.

Mr. LENNOX. I do not know to what the hon. gentleman alludes. He may think he makes a telling point by that, but I cannot see what relevancy it has to what I am discussing. If the hon. gentleman contends that this is a good and proper method, why then, I feel to a certain extent set down and knocked out, and for this reason : The hon. gentleman is a very high authority on all questions, on business questions, on questions of printing, on questions of morality, and I believe on questions of religion, but I do not understand him to seriously contend that is a proper course for any government to pursue.

Mr. SPROULE. In reference to printing, the hon. member for West Huron made the statement that I referred to the printing done by the Montreal 'Herald.' I never spoke of the Montreal 'Herald' at all. What I referred to was a sheet distributed for immigration purposes and which was brought before the Public Accounts Committee. I think, if I remember correctly, that sheet cost something like $800 or $1,000 to print. I have heard from practical printers, who have been in the business for years and years, that we paid more than three prices for that work. It was, I think, literally admitted that there were very large prices paid for it, even by hon. members on that side of the House who were trying to put up the best possible defence they could at the time. If we are to regard this as an example of what we may expect to find in other branches in connection with government printing, I said that we were justified in coming to the conclusion that we were paying out a very great deal of money for printing and that we got very little in return.

Contingent expenses in connection with voters' lists, $20,000.

Mr. SPROULE. What is that to be used for now ?

Mr. SPEAKER. I understand that when we approach the end of parliament, the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery has to provide for more expenses in connection with procuring and printing of the voters' lists. That is the reason why the amount is larger than the amount voted last year.

Mr. SPROULE. Why do you want any more than you had last year? You will not print any more voters' lists.

Mr. SPEAKER. I understand that when the parliament becomes older, when we come near the end of the parliament, as next year we will be very near the end of the parliament, we are supposed to expend more money.

Mr. SPROULE. I suppose that is to provide for the coming elections, because, otherwise we would not want to spend $20,000 upon the lists this year. They will not be held until two years hence.

Mr. COCHRANE. Mr. Chairman, this is an item that we used to hear a good deal about, and we were told that it was all going to be changed when we adopted the voters' lists that are provided by each of the provinces. I used to hear a good deal about the expensive Dominion franchise, when hon. gentlemen opposite were on this side of the House. That is one of the items they used to hound us about when the party that I support was on the ministerial benches. You have a Dominion Franchise Act now under which the voters' list is provided, in the province of Ontario at least, of which I am speaking, by the municipalities. These lists are corrected by the judges and revised in readiness for an election at any time. Now, we have the same expense exactly and there is not a word from the government side of the House in reference to that expense, not even from the hon. Minister of Customs (Hon. Mr. Paterson) who used to challenge this expenditure and point out to the House and to the electors how extravagant it was to spend all that money when it could be remedied. He has applied the remedy, and he sits smiling to think that the same amount of money is being expended that he denounced when in opposition.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. It was awful in those days.

Mr. COCHRANE. You are spending twice as much and it is all right.

Mr. SPROULE. This amount is too little to print the voters' list and too much to print the lists for the by-elections.

Mr. SPEAKER. I understand that it was the unanimous wish of the House some years ago that the lists required for by-elections should be printed.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Are some of your members to get lucrative jobs?

Mr. SPEAKER. Not that I know of.

Mr. SPROULE. Judging by this large vote the only explanation is that a lot of these hon. gentlemen opposite are going to get their reward.

Mr. SPEAKER.

Mr. HENDERSON. There cannot possibly be a dollar required for printing the voters' lists in Ontario or any of the older provinces where the lists are made up each year. It might be that in Manitoba you would require to print the list for a by-election, but certainly not in the other provinces.

Mr. SPEAKER. I understand that the Bill as introduced did not provide for the printing of these lists, and at the request of the Hon. Mr. Montague an amendment was made providing that this printing should be done.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Is this printing done outside of the Bureau?

Mr. SPEAKER. No. All the printing for the House of Commons is done at the Bureau.

Mr. SPROULE. I understand that you have to pay a certain sum to the clerks of municipalities for furnishing these lists?

Mr. SPEAKER. The clerk of the Crown in Chancery buys these lists every year. This is provided for by law.

Mr. BELL. The preparation of the voters' list for the Lisgar election cost $5,680.46. If that is to be the price for each constituency then the system under the late Conservative government was much less expensive. The commissioner who had charge of the work in Lisgar got $600; thirty-five registration clerks, $1,137; the Winnipeg 'Free Press' for printing $875.64. Some one appears to have applied the pruning knife because the accounts rendered amounted to $7,321.28 and the amount paid was $5,680.46. It is a most monstrously extravagant way of proceeding. In this case you are asking a vote of $20,000 and that would provide for three or four by-elections even in the province of Manitoba. If the elections are held in other provinces I cannot see where the expense comes in.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have no information with regard to the Lisgar election, but I will be happy to get it for the hon. gentleman.

Mr. OSLER. Is there any reason why there should be an increase this year from $12,000 to $20,000? Was the vote sufficient last year?

Mr. SPEAKER. It was sufficient last year, but I am told that at the end of a parliament it is customary to take a larger vote for this purpose.

Mr. OSLER. There must be something in view or surely you would not increase this vote more than double. It seems to be out of all reason, but seeing the pleasant smile of Mr. Speaker, I suppose we will have to let this pass.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I cannot understand why Mr. Speaker says that this vote is increased at the end of a parliament. The rule is that there are more by-elections at the beginning of a parliament than at the end of a parliament.

Mr. SPEAKER. In the past it has been customary at the end of each parliament to take a larger sum for this vote and we are simply following the precedent.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I admit that the last session of a parliament would provide a larger amount for by-elections than the session immediately after a general election. If this vote is taken in expectation of a general election, it is all right.

Mr. SPEAKER. I understand that a certain amount is provided for the first year, and a certain amount for each subsequent year, as required. It is gradual.

Mr. TAYLOR. We are ready for a general election.

To pay customs and other officers for services in compiling and forwarding daily reports in connection with the Fisheries Intelligence Bureau for the season 1902, $270.

Mr. REID (Grenville). What is that for ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. This amount is voted every year. These reports give us information in regard to the United States fishing fleet. The allowance of each officer is placed at $15.

Mr. TAYLOR. In item 16 of the main estimates I find : 'Salaries, including R. E Tyrwhitt at $950, and L. Bance at $1,400, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act.' I would like to inquire of the minister when this Mr. Bance went into the department, if he has passed the qualifying examination, and why he is receiving $1,400 salary.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That item has been voted.

Mr. TAYLOR. I understood that we could ask any question we liked on these estimates, and I want to make this inquiry. I want to know who this Mr. Bance is, and why he is put over the heads of older officials.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Mr. Bance was recommended by the officers of the department as an expert French translator. He has been in the department eleven years, and has had charge of all the French correspondence of the department, and he was recommended for a first-class clerkship. The amount was recommended by the minister and voted by the House when the item was called.

Mr. TAYLOR. Did he pass the qualifying examination ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AID FISHERIES. I am informed that he passed all the examinations.

Mr. TAYLOR. I am informed that he did not pass the qualifying examination.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am informed he did. I will inquire and give the hon. gentleman the information.

Fisheries—further amount required for construction of new steamers in British Columbia, $9,000.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. In 1901-2, $50,000 was placed in the estimates for the construction of a steamer in British Columbia. Of this amount $11,290 lapsed. The vessel has been completed and has been accepted by the department—the 'Kestrel'—and the amount due is $9,000.

Mr. EARLE. What was the total cost of the 'Kestrel ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Seventy-two thousand dollars.

Mr. COCHRANE. Was it built by contract ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Are there any steamers engaged in the fisheries service on the lakes ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I gave a list at a previous sitting of the committee. There are two vessels employed on the lakes, the 'Petrel' and the Bayfield.' The 'Bayfield' is on the Georgian Bay or Lake Superior, and the 'Petrel' is doing fisheries service.

Mr. THOMSON (North Grey). I understood that the 'Bayfield' was sold.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We sold the old 'Bayfield.' The new 'Bayfield' used to be the 'Lord Stanley.'

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I regret that I did not hear the statement of the hon. minister the other night in regard to the fishery inspectors in the province of Ontario. Will he kindly tell us what the duties of those inspectors are, and why they are maintained, since the Dominion government has surrendered its right to control the fisheries, and what their functions are.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We went over this question at the last sitting of the committee, and I thought we had covered all the ground.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). What are the duties of these officers ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. They were stated so many times in the last sittings of the committee that I did not think that it would be necessary to repeat them. According to the judgment of the Privy Council, the fishery rights and privileges belong to the provinces but the Dominion government must see to the enforcement of the laws and regulations; and pending a settlement of the difficulty between the Dominion and provincial governments, we are carrying out the judgment of the Privy Council as interpreted by the Department of Justice. Three inspectors or overseers have been named for Ontario. Their duties are to see that the regulations are carried out.

Mr. SPROULE. Last year we were told that we were on the eve of a settlement.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The government is prepared for a settlement. All that is required is an agreement between the provincial and the Dominion governments for a submission of the case to the Supreme Court, so as to have a legal interpretation of this judgment.

Mr. SPROULE. Would it not be better to reach an agreement by a conference ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That is rather difficult. The best mode is to agree on a case and submit it to the Supreme Court for interpretation. We had representatives here from the provincial government on the question of increased subsidies, and during the conference this question of the fisheries was discussed, and we decided that a submission of a case to the Supreme Court would be the most reasonable way of arriving at a settlement.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Do these officers visit the various localities and fishing centres ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. If the hon. gentleman will read their report in the blue-book of the Marine and Fisheries Department of 1902, he will make himself familiar with what they are doing. They are obliged to go around the districts assigned to them and see that the regulations are observed in the lakes and rivers.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I happen to come from a riding where there are a great many inland lakes, and I have never heard of any of these gentlemen visiting them. These lakes extend for a chain of 150 miles, and you might as well look for a needle in a hay stack as try to detect any infraction of the law by sending an inspector there. The only way would be to have local officers appointed, who would live on the lake shore and could see from their window what is going on. If the hon. minister wants to know what these gentleman do, I can tell him that some of them take a very active part in elections. I have seen them at work in my own riding, and perhaps their labours in that respect have been charged up.

Hon. Mr. PREFONTAINE.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There are many local inspectors appointed by the provincial government.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Did the hon. minister find out anything about that $100 to which I referred the other evening ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There was nothing paid.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. member for West Hastings (Mr. Porter) informed me that my hon. friend from Grenville made a mistake in the name. He referred to a man named Collins, but the party who made the protest against him was Cornelius Mullen, and he was promised by Hurley that if he would sign that protest, he would get him a contract to get out buoys. If you will look into the Auditor General's report you will find that Mr. Mullen got his pay.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Did Cornelius Mullen receive $100 ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. If he did the work, he must have been paid. The hon. gentleman surely does not expect me to carry in my head payments made two years ago. I have my officers and they have to look into the books to find out.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I did not expect the hon. gentleman to know anything about it because he was not in the department at the time, but I gave him notice Friday last.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. You gave me notice about a man named Collins and now it appears the name is Mullen.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I explained the circumstances. I referred to $100 having been paid to some man in the county of East Hastings, and I supposed that his name was Collins.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I find in the Auditor General's Report for 1901-2 an item C. Mullens, Belleville, for the season of 1901, $33.

Mr. REID (Grenville). For putting out buoys ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR. Where ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. In some of the waters of that section.

Mr. TAYLOR. That is a portion of the payment. The hon. member for West Hastings says that the arrangement was that C. Mullens should get $100. He was promised a job and he got it.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. He must have got left on the job.

Mr. TAYLOR. No, this is only a portion. This goes to show that the affidavit made by Mr. Hurley is contradicted, for the ex-Minister of Marine and Fisheries made a statement, on the strength of what Mr. Hurley said, that Mr. Hurley had nothing to do with it. Now, Mullens tells Mr. Porter's partner that Mr. Hurley recommended him for a job, and he got the job of putting out buoys, and was paid for it.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Mr. Hurley had nothing to do with it.

Mr. TAYLOR. He got the job on Mr. Hurley's recommendation.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We had nothing to do with Hurley. The buoys are put out under contract, the service being under a special officer of the department.

Mr. TAYLOR. This is the first time Mullens has had this contract. Who recommended him ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. He got it by open tender.

Mr. TAYLOR. Will the hon. minister bring down the tender and contract of Mullens ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The hon. minister will remember that I brought the matter up the other night and the statement was made that Mr. Hurley was the means of having a protest entered against the hon. member for West Hastings. And I understood from the statement made in the House that the protest was made by a man named C. Mullens. After that statement had been made in the House, the hon. minister in charge of the department notified Mr. Hurley, and immediately got an affidavit from Mr. Hurley, the fishery inspector, who was charged with having arranged for this protest, declaring that there was no truth whatever in the statement that he had promised Mullens $100, or any other amount. It was taken for granted that that affidavit was true. But now we find that Mullens was engaged in accordance with the statement made by the hon. member to put out these buoys, and he was paid for doing the work, and this is shown by the Auditor General's Report. Of course, it does not show in this one item an amount of $100. Now, the worst part of the whole matter is that the payment of this man proves that the statement made by the hon. member for West Hastings was true and that the affidavit of Mr. Hurley was false, and I would like to have the minister state if these are not the facts in their proper sequence.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No such inference can fairly be drawn from the facts as that drawn by the hon. member (Mr. Reid, Grenville). A man gets a contract in fair competition to do some work for the department. At first it was said to be one Collins ; now it appears that it is Mullens. Mullens and Collins are so mixed up that there is neither head nor tail to the statements——

Mr. REID (Grenville). The minister need not work himself up in this fashion. Mullens was the man.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Then let it be Mullens. If the information possessed by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Reid, Grenville) about Mullens is as accurate as that about Collins, some hon. members of the committee will draw their own inference. It seems that Mullens' name has been mentioned in connection with some transaction that I know nothing about, and that nobody seems to know anything about. The mere fact that a man gets $33 for services to the department, service that is rendered in the ordinary way, does not show anything whatever. Mr. Hurley whose name has been mentioned, has had nothing to do with it.

Mr. TAYLOR. How does the hon. minister know that ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It is not part of the duties of Mr. Hurley to have anything to do with these matters. There is an officer of the department in charge of the buoys. Mr. Fraser, I think is in charge of this service.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. gentleman says that this was done by tender and contract. Will he bring down the documents ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I have already told the committee that I will bring them down.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The hon. minister makes light of this because I mentioned the name the other evening as Collins. But the hon. minister who had charge of the department followed it up by speaking of the man as Collins. It is treating the matter in rather a small spirit to try to wiggle out of it by dwelling on the mistake of names. Now, Mullens is prepared to make affidavit that the agreement was what has been stated, notwithstanding what the minister has said, and notwithstanding the affidavit of Mr. Hurley, produced here last session.

Mr. THOMSON (Grey). Since questions have been asked in regard to the steamers employed on the lakes, I would like to ask the hon. minister with regard to the steamer 'Bayfield,' employed on the Georgian bay. I have a few questions on the Order Paper, but I would like the hon. minister to answer them now, if convenient ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I have the answers to the questions ready, and I have sent for the paper. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Thomson, Grey) desires, I will be able to give him the information in a moment.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I understand that a steamer has been purchased lately for service on the St. Lawrence, a steamer named the 'Alaska.' What is she to be employed at ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I will get the information more definitely. I know there was a small boat bought lately to do the work of sweeping out the channel between Montreal and Kingston.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I understood that the steamer 'Scout' was on the river.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The 'Scout' does not do this work of sweeping out the channel, but a different class of work entirely.

Mr. WILSON. How many fishery overseers are appointed by this government for the province of Ontario ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Three inspectors and overseers, they are the same thing.

Mr. WILSON. Where do they live ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Hon. gentleman will find full information regarding these officers by reading their reports, which are to be found on pages 12 and 13 of the report of the department.

Mr. BENNETT. Where do they live ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Mr. Hurley lives at Belleville, Mr. Duncan at Marchville, Ont., and Mr. Shepherd at Toronto.

Mr. LENNOX. Is this inspector Hurley that has been referred to so frequently, also an official of the Ontario government ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not know that he is.

Mr. LENNOX. I understand that these three men, employed by the Dominion government, are also deriving an income from the Ontario government. I am not prepared to prove that, perhaps the Minister of Marine and Fisheries would be able to tell us definitely whether that is the case or not. But we have the fact that Mr. Hurley is receiving from the Dominion government $1,200 a year, and we have also the fact that he received $255.51 for travelling allowances, making a total of $1,455.51 for the period of one year. I find by looking at the Public Accounts that during that year Mr. Hurley also received for expenses in connection with the census of the Dominion of Canada, $155, and for revising the returns, whatever that may mean, $178, making a total for that item of $333. Now, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries is new in the department that he has the honour to preside over, and we expect that he has come to that office with a great deal of ardour to do what is right and to remedy any evils that he may find. I hope I have only to call his attention to the fact that this official has been receiving two salaries where he is only entitled to one, to see the hon. gentleman set about at once to remedy the evil. I am sure he will come to the conclusion that it is a most iniquitous thing to allow that gentleman, while receiving full pay and travelling allowances for services as fishery inspector to receive in addition this $333. I assume this money has peen paid, and perhaps the minister would not be able to control it. But I point out to the minister a remedy that is in his own hands. We are voting the full allowance for his salary, and out of that salary it would be proper for the minister to deduct this $333. In this way the minister will have an opportunity to show him that no official in his department, at all events, shall be paid twice over for his services.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I understand a steamer has been purchased, as the minister states, to be employed in sweeping the channel. Now the minister will find on inquiring in his department that the steamer 'Scout' was built by the government two or three years ago, and at that time it was stated that she was to be used for the placing of buoys between Montreal and Kingston, and to look after the channel generally. Now this steamer the 'Scout,' is well adapted for that purpose, because she was built for it. But the minister knows that if she only looked after placing the buoys she would not have more than two weeks work in the whole season. She is running up and down the river between Montreal and Kingston, and could easily do any sweeping of the channel. She is better built than any other boat for that purpose. I have not the slightest doubt that this new boat, the 'Alaska,' which is being put on by the government will create an extra and constant expense. I would like to have some further explanation given whether he really means that the 'Alaska' is merely to be used to follow the 'Scout' up and down the river, and is being used practically as a pleasure yacht during the whole season.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I was misinformed when I told the committee that this boat had been bought. She has been rented for six or seven weeks for the purpose of sweeping the channel, a work which the 'Scout' cannot do. Now we have retained the services of the captain of the 'Alaska,' and have put on some men of the crew of the 'Scout' to help the 'Alaska' in the work she is doing in sweeping the channel, which is of a temporary character.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Then I understand that the statements publicly made around the St. Lawrence that the 'Alaska' has been purchased or is to be purchased by the department, are not correct ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. They are absolutely incorrect. The amount expended on repairs to the 'Bayfield' during the last six years was $6,571.89. The steamer 'Bayfield' has been sold to Messrs. John Harrison & Son for $3,250, the highest offer. The intended disposal of the 'Bayfield' was generally known and that was the only favourable offer received. The sale was confirmed by Order in Council on the 14th of March, 1903.

Mr. THOMSON (Grey). We have expended $6,571 for repairing this vessel within the last six years and we sell her by private sale for $3,250. I do not think this is satisfactory. I am sure that when the matter goes out to the people of North Grey it will not create a favourable impression in the minds of the friends of the hon. gentleman opposite in that vicinity. What makes it more deplorable is the fact that this boat has been sold by private sale.

Mr. BENNETT. Was the sale made since the hon. minister came into the department ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It was made on the 14th March, 1903, after I came into office.

Mr. TAYLOR. By tender ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. As regards the repairs that were made to the boat, if we had been obliged to charter another boat there it would have cost more than $6,571. The boat was found in such bad condition that it was considered better to dispose of her than to continue spending money in repairing her.

Mr. THOMSON (Grey). What was the justification for selling that boat by private sale ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It was well known since last fall that the boat was for sale and we had many offers. The highest offer which was received near the opening of navigation was that of Messrs. John Harrison & Son and after consultation with the officers of the department who recommended that the sale should be made, the offer of Messrs. Harrison & Son was accepted.

Mr. BENNETT. What is the length of the 'Bayfield'?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. 92 feet.

Mr. BENNETT. I happen to have known something about this vessel for years, and I must say that I am surprised that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, right at his entrance to office, should have performed the act he has, namely, of handing over this boat to a party friend and a strong partisan without public competition. This boat, I am bound to say, if it had been offered for sale on the open market, instead of bringing $3,250 would have brought twice that amount. She was a vessel with heavy machinery and a vessel which for many years had been kept in first class repair. This boat has been employed on the surveys on lake Superior and Huron and the Georgian bay, putting out in all kinds of wind and weather and yet the hon. minister as one of his first official acts does this : Without exposing this boat to public competition and sale, without giving any notice to the general public that the boat was for sale, allows pressure to be brought to bear upon him by party friends and practically makes a present of this boat to party friends, Messrs. Harrison & Sons, who are the strongest party friends the hon. gentleman has in the town of Owen Sound. This is only on a par, except that it is more exaggerated, with the job that was perpetrated in the same town a few years ago when the steamer 'Petrel' was handed over to a party friend and I think it was Mr. Harrison who got it. I think I am right in the name, but perhaps it was a different man. The hon. minister must give some information to the committee as to what steps he took in the public interest, not in the interest of Messrs. Harrison & Sons and some party friends up there, to find out what was a fair price for this boat. Who made the report as to the value of the boat ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The report as to the value of the boat and the condition in which she was, was made by Mr. W. J. Stewart the officer in charge of the hydrographic survey. He condemned the boat, and he refused to go to Lake Superior in her. That boat has never done service on Lake Superior as she was unfit for such service. He informed the department before I took charge that another boat should be procured. The 'Lord Stanley' would have gone on the survey on the lakes during the season of 1902, if she had not been rented to the Department of Public Works for the trip made west by the late Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte). It was well known all over the country that the 'Bayfield' was unfit for service and that she was unfit for sale. Mr. Stewart tried to sell her and asked for offers.

Mr. BENNETT. Where was the boat employed last year ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. At the entrance to Lake Superior, but she could not go into the lake and that is the reason why Mr. Stewart recommended that she should be replaced by another boat and that she should be disposed of. We found the 'Lord Stanley' ready to undertake that work. She had been undergoing repairs in the works at Sorel. It was recommended by the officers of the department that we should ask for prices for the 'Bayfield', we looked around, we got different prices and we sold her to the highest bidder.

Mr. BENNETT. Who else put in tenders for the boat besides Messrs. Harrison & Son, since the hon. minister has said in the most emphatic way that after looking around and receiving a number of tenders they found that of Messrs. Harrison & Son the highest ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) must not put words into my mouth that I did not say. I said that there were offers made. I know of one in particular, although I do not remember the name, that was made to me. I consulted Mr. Stewart in regard to it, and Mr. Stewart said to me: You had better wait as we may have a better offer than that. After that we got this offer of Messrs. Harrison & Sons and after a good deal of discussion about it during which we tried, as I remember perfectly well, to get a little more, we accepted the offer. I consulted the hon. ex-Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Hon. Mr. Sutherland) who knew more about it than I did. He knew the circumstances of the purchase of the 'Lord Stanley' to replace this boat. After due consideration the 'Bayfield' was sold to Messrs. Harrison & Son for the price which has been mentioned and the sale was confirmed by Order in Council.

Mr. BENNETT. Well, there is nothing very astonishing in the minister making a statement that the sale was confirmed by Order in Council. Surely, if the hon. gentleman's colleagues had any confidence in him, when he made his report, they would confirm it. I am not reflecting on the hon. minister directly or suggesting that he profited by the sale, but I do say, that the hon. minister gave an exhibition of weakness when he permitted his party friends at Owen Sound to crack the whip over his head and force him into doing what was wrong. The hon. minister knows very well that he is not disposing of his private property but the property of the people of the Dominion, and that he has no business to give this property to his party friends because pressure is brought to bear upon him to induce him to make the sale. I can tell the hon. minister that if there had been a public sale this boat would have brought twice the amount he received for it and it lies at the door of the hon. minister that he has been a party to a wrong act on the part of his department towards the people of this Dominion in allowing himself at the crack of the whip in the hands of party friends in the town of Owen Sound to dispose of a property that was worth double the amount for which it is sold. As an excuse the minister tells us that Mr. Stewart reported that the vessel was unfit for service on Lake Superior. I can well believe that Mr. Stewart would not care to trust the lives of himself and his men in that boat on Lake Superior during the late fall. But the fact that a boat is not fit for service on a tempestuous lake is no reason why she should be handed over to a party friend at his own price. There are other lakes where she could be utilized. On the shores of the Georgian bay where this boat is well and favourably known it will be an excellent piece of campaign literature when we are able to tell the people that the government practically made a present of this valuable steamer to a party hack.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am glad the hon. gentleman has something to find fault with the government for.

Mr. THOMSON (North Grey). I corroborate what has been said by the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) I was asked to place this question on the Order Paper because in the town of Owen Sound no one knew to whom the boat was sold or what she was sold for, and that will give an idea of the publicity which the minister gave to the sale of the 'Bayfield.' She is a magnificent steamer in first-class repair, and if she were put on the market she would bring double the price the government received for her. I do not know of any better campaign literature for the Conservatives than to be able to show to the people the reckless and improvident manner in which the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and the government transact the business of the country.

Mr. HUGHES Victoria). There is a more important side to it than a mere piece of campaign literature. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries must remember that he is merely the servant of the people and he will have to learn that he will not get off with impunity when he perpetrates jobs like this. What qualification had Mr. Stewart to pronounce on the fitness of this boat.

Mr. BENNETT. He is a surveyor.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). He is not an engineer at all. Who is this Mr. Stewart ?

Mr. HOLMES. He is a good Conservative; he is not a supporter of this government.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Mr. Stewart is the engineer in charge of the hydrographic survey of that part of Ontario. He is an old employee of the department and if the hon. gentleman will look at 'Hansard' he will find that some years ago Mr. Stewart was praised by Sir Charles Tupper himself as being one of the ablest engineers in the department.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). For valuing ships ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Oh, well, I do not think it takes any extraordinary ability to value a ship of that kind, since we have got the opinion of the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) who put a value on it, and also the member for North Grey (Mr. Thomson) who said it was worth double what we got for it. I am informed by my officers that Messrs. Harrison & Son were so dissatisfied with the purchase that they wanted to return the boat and get their money back a few days after the sale.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh !

Mr. THOMSON (North Grey). Any ordinary business man would have sold this boat by public tender, and that is what the Minister of Marine and Fisheries should have done. I want a direct answer to the question why he did not advertise this boat for sale; also the amount of money expended on her for repairs twelve months prior to the sale.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I have answered that for the last six years $6,571.89 have been spent on her for repairs.

Mr. THOMSON (North Grey). How much last year ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It is an average of about $1,000 a year. I have not got the books of the department here and I cannot say what was spent on her last year, but I can get that information. If I had been asked for the expenditure for one year I would have obtained it and given it just as readily as for six years.

Mr. THOMSON (North Grey). The minister did not tell me why he did not advertise that vessel for sale.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Purely and simply to avoid expense.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh !

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Hon. gentlemen do not seem to recognize what it would cost to advertise an article for sale in a dozen or two dozen or perhaps three dozen newspapers. The boat was pronounced worthless by the officer and if we spent $1,000 or may be $2,000 in advertising——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Rot.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It might cost $2,000. If we advertised only in the Liberal papers we would be censured and if we advertised in all the newspapers it would cost a very large sum. I am informed that the engineer is a most respectable and a most efficient officer. He reported to me that the vessel was worthless and seeing that it would cost so much for advertising, offers were taken, and I remember that one was lower than the offer of Harrison & Son.

Mr. BENNETT. Who is that ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not remember the name.

Mr. THOMSON (North Grey). I must confess that the defence made by the minister for the disposal of this boat in such a way is a mighty weak one.

Mr. LENNOX. Let me ask the minister some things that he can tell. He tells us that it would cost a matter of $2,000 or $3,000 to advertise this boat for sale in the newspapers. That in itself indicates the extravagance of this government. Although the hon. gentleman is new in the department I presume he knows something of the inward workings of the government, and when he tells us that it would cost this large amount of money to advertise the sale of a boat he knows that the government is accustomed to make such reckless expenditure. It is something for the people to pause over and think about, that a Minister of the Crown, when dealing with a piece of property that he wants us to believe was only worth $3,000 pledges his position as a Minister of the Crown that he honestly believed it would cost from $2,000 to $3,000 to advertise in the newspapers the sale of that vessel.

Mr. GALLIHER. He did not say that. He said from $1,000 to $2,000.

Mr. LENNOX. It does not make the slightest difference whether it was $1,000 or $2,000. Put it at $500, if you like. It illustrates the same extravagant way of dealing with these questions, the same want of either judgment or candour. It must be well known to any business man that in a port like Owen Sound, and in the neighbouring ports of Midland and Collingwood, having in them men who would be open to a reasonable transaction such as the purchase of a vessel like this, it would be amply sufficient to advertise in one newspaper in each of these towns at an expenditure of $10 or $15, perhaps not more than $5, in order to ensure an ample number of tenders—not from servants and supporters of the government, but from honest men willing to give a fair price for a good vessel such as this was. I say it does not commend itself to the common sense of this committee, and it will not commend itself to the common sense of the people when it goes forth, that a minister of the Crown in order to bolster up a bad case, tried to lead us to believe that the advertising of this vessel would cost $2,000.

Mr. THOMSON (North Grey). Will the minister tell us how he would advertise that vessel to make it cost $2,000 ?

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Go to the Montreal 'Herald.' That would cost $1,000.

Mr. THOMSON (North Grey). I do not think the Montreal 'Herald' would be the proper paper in which to advertise the sale of a vessel in the Georgian bay. I think if it were advertised in the 'Globe' and the 'Mail' and in a trade journal, that would be sufficient, and that would not cost more than $25 or $50. When the minister, in order to defend this deal, which is a deplorable one, gets up and states that it would cost $1,000 to advertise the sale of that vessel, his case is very weak indeed. and I am sure the country will view it in that light.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). What did the minister do with the furnishings ? Did they go with the ship ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. They were put on the other vessel, the new 'Bayfield.'

Mr. BENNETT. I find on reference to the minister's report that he has been misled as to the size of this boat, because that report says :

> The 'Bayfield' is a wooden steamer 110 feet long, 18 feet wide, and 9 feet deep. Mr. W. J. Stewart is in charge of the hydrographic survey, and has as his assistants Messrs. F. Anderson and R. T. Tyrwhitt. Captain A. M. McGregor is the sailing master of the 'Bayfield,' and the crew consists of nineteen men in addition. The steamer on April 27, went to the rescue of the tugs 'Heather Belle,' and 'Shawanagha,' who were in distress in the ice at Owen Sound. The 'Bayfield' resumed the survey about May 5 and was employed in surveying the shores of Lake Huron during the whole of the season. The steamer was placed in winter quarters on October 25.

What does that show ? It shows that the vessel, instead of being some ninety feet in length, as the minister stated, is one hundred and ten feet in length ; and it shows that she had such powerful machinery that she was strong enough to go into the ice and help out these two tugs. I do not know the 'Heather Belle,' but I know the 'Shawanagha,' which is a large-sized boat. I want the minister to understand that when he came to this House, he came here against the expressed wish of a large part of the Liberal party ; he came with the great 'Herald' and the greater 'Witness' saying that he was a dangerous man, and his actions in this matter prove that he is a very dangerous man. If the minister had put this boat up at public auction at Midland or Collingwood, instead of bringing $3,200, she would have brought double that amount. It is nothing more nor less than a political job, connived at, aided and abetted by the minister, and the people in Owen Sound and Midland and around the Georgian bay, where this boat is well known, will judge the minister as one who is prepared to do not what is in the interest of the people, but what is in the interest of the party hacks and party friends who surround him.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. minister stated a few minutes ago that the reason he did not advertise this boat was that he wished to save expense. Now, this government profess to be a business government. I ask the minister how any farmer would dispose of some surplus stock which he wanted to get rid of. He would go to a printer and get out one hundred or two hundred handbills. If the minister had done that, it would have cost $2 or $3, or perhaps $5. He could have sent these to his officers at Midland or Owen Sound, and they would have distributed them. These hand-bills would have announced that this boat would be sold by public auction on a certain day, and there would have been competition in purchasing her. The people of this country trusted the minister with that piece of their property, expecting that when it was no longer fit for service he would get the most he could for it. Did he do what any practical business man would have done, who had some surplus stock which he wanted to get rid of ? Hon. gentlemen who know that boat say that it is worth two or three times what the hon. minister sold it for to one of his political friends. I will guarantee that the engines and boilers of that boat could be sold for as much as the hon. gentleman got for the whole vessel. The bare fact is there, and the country can see it, that the hon. gentleman has handed over a valuable piece of the people's property to a political friend for half its value. He said he had another offer, but he does not remember who made it. Is it not on record in the department ? This whole transaction is an outrage, and the opposition will not be doing its duty if it does not bring in a motion censuring the government for it. Instead of putting the boat up for sale by public auction or tender, the hon. gentleman receives in a corner of his office this gentleman from Owen Sound, who wanted this boat for a particular purpose, and lets him have it. I venture to say that there was not a business man in Owen Sound who knew that the boat was for sale, except this political friend who wanted her for a special purpose, and the government handed the boat over to him. This is the way this business government, who profess to be an honest government, are trafficking politically with the property of the people of this country. I would feel untrue to my position, as a representative of the people, if I were to see the public property sacrificed in this way without making a protest. Is there a minister of the Crown who will get up and justify the course followed, or say he deals in this way with the people's property ?

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). The hon. minister said he had a lower offer from another party. What is the name of the party who made that offer ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not remember the name but will furnish it to the committee tomorrow with the report of the engineer and everything else.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Has the hon. minister the offer of this man and the report of Mr. Stewart ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Of course, all papers connected with the sale will be put before the House.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Has he not also a letter from Mr. Harrison wanting him to take the property back and shedding a few tears over it ?

Mr. BENNETT. No, it was Stratton who shed the tears.

Mr. SPROULE. This would not be so objectionable were it not the second time that the same thing has been done in Owen Sound. Only the year before last there was another transaction of a similar nature. The 'Petrel' was sold for about $2,000, and I have a letter in my possession saying that it was sold for one-third its value or less. Had an advertisement been put in the paper at Owen Sound, which would have cost fifty cents, that boat would have brought $5,000 or $6,000. I brought that transaction to the attention of the House, and I asked that in future, whenever any property belonging to the government was to be sold, some public notice should be given so that the country might get a reasonable return. This year we have a similar transaction again. The 'Petrel' was bought by one Harrison, not the same gentleman who has bought this boat, but also a strong friend of the government. I ask again that in future some public notice should be advertised. I have a letter in my possession with reference to this boat, which says distinctly that if it had been known in Owen Sound that she was for sale, she could have been sold for three times the money, but that nobody was made aware of the sale. We have sold this boat for $3,250 and have paid $50,000 for another boat to take her place. This boat had been kept up from year to year, and a few years ago it was stated that she was practically as good as new. She was in splendid repair and in good condition, and this is the first time we ever heard of her being otherwise.

Mr. BENNETT. In the Auditor General's Report for last year, I find that over $3,000 was spent by the department on this boat in one year. On this same steamer, the 'Bayfield,' $3,000 were spent, according to the report of the Auditor General, in 1901. In the report of 1902, I find the following expenditures on the steamer 'Bayfield.' John Harrison got $66 out of her; Carey & Co., London, got $107.80 ; Lewis Rice & Son, Toronto, got $102; A. M. McGregor, was paid $140 for labour of fitting her out; Maitland Rixon & Co., got $18.50 for lumber; Andrew Malcolm, Kincardine, got $35 for oak wainscotting; John Nisbit, Owen Sound, got $665 for labour, and the North American Bent Chair Company were paid $1,850 for work and supplies of all kinds for this boat; and Rickard Bros., of Owen Sound, for painting and graining, received $203. Yet in the face of the fact that all this money was spent last year, over $3,000 on this boat, the hon. minister was so weak that when his friends came down and cracked the whip over his head, he sold her to them for $3,200. I would ask the hon. minister this question, whether a deed of a certain water frontage in the town of Midland has been granted to Pratt & Co., coal dealers ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It is under consideration.

Mr. BENNETT. I can tell the hon. gentleman how much under consideration it is, that the parties have already erected a $20,000 dock on the property—a property which the town had bought on the understanding that the piece in dispute would pass to it. What is the consideration these people are paying ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I have stated that this water front has not been granted, and the hon. gentleman has no right to ask me what consideration has been paid.

Mr. BENNETT. I asked what consideration is in the deed. The parties have made an offer to the department which the department is considering. What is the money consideration which has been offered for this water front ? What money consideration has been offered for this water frontage ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. These things are done in different ways. Sometimes a person applying for a foreshore makes an application purely and simply for a foreshore, leaving it to the government to decide the amount to be charged for the concession. Others make a direct offer, which is taken into consideration by the government. In this case, I think there was no direct offer made by these gentlemen. That is probably the reason why the matter is under consideration, because we must learn what value we should put upon the concession.

Mr. BENNETT. I can state, for the benefit of the hon. minister that——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I do not think that we shall arrive at anything definite by departing so widely from the question before the Chair. The item under discussion is the amount required for the construction of new steamers in British Columbia. I cannot see the connection between that and the foreshore in Midland.

Mr. BENNETT. We shall hear more of the foreshore. The hon. minister shall hear more of it in that town. And the hon. minister must have given a promise, because these people have erected their dock at the cost of $20,000 on this property. Going back to the question of the vessel. I think a good deal is to be said as to why the minister should be voted money to construct vessels. He has some good vessels—that is, his department has, though he seems to regard them as his own—and he accepted a great deal of responsibility when he permitted his party friends to force him (I am charitable enough to believe that he must have been forced) to sell this vessel for $3,200, when no less than $3,000 had been spent in repairs upon her only last year. Had there been a fair, honest, open, aboveboard sale of this vessel, she would have brought, as my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) said, three times that amount. I am sure that the vessel, from what I have known of her in the past, and knowing that $3,000 was spent on her last year, would have sold for far more than double the amount that was actually obtained for her. So long as the hon. minister is in the position he now occupies, if he conducts the affairs of his department in this unbusiness like manner, he deserves, and, so far as I am concerned, he will receive, the censure of this side of the House.

Mr. CLARKE. I am sorry I was not here when this discussion commenced, and so have not had the advantage of hearing all that has been said. But I would recall to the attention of the minister some statements he made on assuming the office that he now holds. We had the statement from him that it was the intention of the department to establish the nucleus of a Canadian navy and to have training ships on the great lakes, and also on the Atlantic and the Pacific. It seems to me that, if it is the intention of the government to establish a naval force on our inland waters, the government lost a golden opportunity when it failed to retain this vessel to be used as one of its training ships. She was a staunch vessel, sea-worthy in every particular, and in view of the fact that $3,000 of the people's money had been spent, only a few months before, in putting her in good repair, it was little short of criminal not to retain that vessel as one of the means of making the nucleus of a navy upon the lakes. I reiterate and reaffirm what has been said by my hon. friends on this side, that this transaction was most unbusiness like and most unfair to the country, that a vessel that has done such service as the 'Bayfield' has done, and that has been maintained in a state of efficiency year after year at the expense of the country, when being put out of commission was not offered publicly for sale, so that the people interested might have an opportunity to bid upon her. If this practice is to prevail, and I am afraid, from what I can gather, that it prevails in other departments of the public service—the public money must be frittered away instead of being spent to the best advantage. Business methods are not being adopted by this so-called business government in directing the affairs of the country. I am sorry that the minister has neglected a manifest duty in not endeavouring to get the highest possible price for this vessel if her term of public service was to be closed. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman what he is doing towards establishing a naval service on the lakes? Does he intend to have training ships? If so, will he buy second-hand vessels, or does he intend to get some out-of-date vessels of the imperial navy in order to establish this naval force on our inland waters as well as upon the ocean?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The matter of the naval reserve is under consideration. It is being studied, just as the question of the militia reserve is being studied. I do not think that anything practical will be done in reference to this matter before next year. The two projects require a good deal of study as to the cost involved and as to how the whole scheme is to be carried out. So, we have not considered yet whether we shall buy old vessels or construct new ones. That is a question upon which information must be gathered, that we may establish the military service upon the best and most advantageous conditions——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I think I must call the hon. minister (Hon. Mr. Préfontaine) to order. I do not think the discussion upon which he has entered has any relation to this item. Therefore, I would ask the committee to come back to the item and discuss the propriety of voting the sum of $9,000 for constructing new steamers in British Columbia.

Mr. SPROULE. I must come to the defence of the hon. minister. I have a very distinct recollection that when we were dealing with these items in the main estimates, a general discussion was not gone into at the time, because it was said that when we came to the supplementary estimates, in dealing with any one item, we could travel over the whole field, and discuss not only this branch of the service, but the other. Therefore, I respectfully submit that any member of this House is justly entitled to travel outside the record of this particular item.

Mr. TAYLOR. And we are discussing item 93, which covers not only this amount, but several others, and opens up practically the whole service of the department.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Of course, if there has been an agreement between the minister and the committee as to liberty to be granted in this discussion, I do not wish to interfere. My business is to point out the rule, and allow the minister to make his own arrangement.

Mr. THOMSON (Grey). To return to the point under discussion, I do not require the amount expended on the vessel last year, for the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) has given that from the Auditor General's Report—over $3,000 spent in repairs of this vessel last year. Yet, she is sold by private sale for no greater sum than was spent in repairs for one year. It is possible for a minister to make a mistake, and for one mistake we would not criticise very severly. But this kind of thing has been repeated. The hon. minister will not even tell us now that such a thing will not take place again. When the estimates for supply were under discussion the other evening, we found out that he was paying from one hundred to one hundred and fifty per cent more for supplies than would be charged in any retail hardware store. We asked him if he would publicly call for tenders in future, and he would give us no satisfaction, but said in effect, that he would do as he liked in the matter. I think it is to be regretted that an hon. gentleman holding so high a position in the government of Canada should allow the funds of this country to be frittered away in the manner which characterizes the administration of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Will the hon. minister bring down the names of the gentlemen who tendered for this vessel ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I said I would.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). No, he said he would bring down the letter of Mr. Harrison.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I beg pardon, I said I would bring down all the papers.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). What preliminary conversations or correspondence did the hon. gentleman have with this Harrison firm about this ship ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I did not know them, never saw them in my life.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I think the minister has carried on the deal at somebody else's direction. Who gave him the direction to make this deal ? We would not for a moment charge the minister with knowing anything about Owen Sound people. It must be some one in Ontario that arranged the deal. I would like to know all the particulars that the minister can furnish us.

Mr. THOMSON (Grey). There is another pertinent question. I would like to know if the Liberal candidate in the late by-election was the one who recommended the sale of this vessel at this figure ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I could not tell the hon. gentleman. I never saw the man in my life, and had no communication with him, directly or indirectly.

Mr. THOMSON (Grey). I am simply asking the question : Was the sale of this vessel recommended by the Liberal candidate in the late by-election ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I repeat that I have had no communication whatever with the gentleman to whom the hon. gentleman alludes. I do not know him at all, received no letters from him, had no correspondence with him whatever.

Mr. THOMSON (Grey). Who recommended the sale of the vessel ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Mr. Stewart recommended it.

Mr. THOMSON (Grey). Was it the minister who recommended the sale of this vessel to Harrison and Sons ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I took the responsibility, along with my colleagues, on the recommendation of the officers of the department, who told me the vessel was useless, and that the sooner we disposed of it the better; that the price offered was fair and reasonable, and that it was the highest price that we could get for it.

Mr. THOMSON (Grey). Were the officials who, in 1891, advised the expenditure of $3,000 on this vessel to put it in first class repair, the same officials who tell him today that this vessel was useless ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It was repaired in the previous season to do the work in the next season of 1902, and the officials stated that it would cost more than $3,000 to charter another vessel. The fact that $3,000 was spent on her during the season of 1901 shows that the vessel must have been a very poor one to require such extensive repairs in order to fit her for the season of 1902. She would not have been put in commission, I am informed, in 1902 if the 'Lord Stanley' had not been used by the Department of Public Works.

Mr. THOMSON (Grey). Will the minister answer why he recommended that the vessel should be sold by private sale instead of by public tender ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Because I thought it was in the public interest to do so.

Mr. CLARKE. Did this whole transaction occur by accident? Did the minister receive, without any previous communication, a letter from Mr. Stewart saying: You had better sell this vessel to these gentlemen, it is the best we can do; it is true we have not asked anybody to make a bid, but if we can get $3,000 it is my advice to take it and get rid of her as quickly as possible? I would like the hon. gentleman to answer that question. Does he think that was a business-like proposition that this vessel, on which more than $3,000 had been expended the previous year, was no good after that, or that she was only worth $3,000? The hon. gentleman has said that $3,000 was spent on the vessel the previous year. What was it expended for? The hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) read out some of the items of the expenditure, including wainscotting put in the cabin. Were thirty-five men required to do duty on her as a crew in the previous season? Are there any reports in the department as to the condition in which the vessel was at the end of navigation in 1902? Surely if the hon. gentleman hopes to pose as the equal in business capacity with his colleagues in the ministry, he will have to make a better showing than he does in this business. How does it happen that this transaction was done behind doors?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. If the hon. gentleman had been here at the beginning of the discussion he would have heard what I have repeated several times, that when I entered the department in the fall of 1902 they were considering the service for the next season, and it was recommended to me by the officials of the department that we would have to replace the steamer 'Bayfield' on the survey on Lake Superior, by the 'Lord Stanley,' which had been bought the year previous especially to do that service. Then in providing for repairs of the different steamers belonging to the department, nothing was provided for the steamer 'Bayfield' because it was recommended by the officials to dispose of her. That is what I learned in the department. Mr. Stewart, I understand, the engineer in charge of the hydrographic survey in that part of Ontario, tried, as he informed me, to sell the boat. He notified, I think, everybody that he met that the boat was for sale. That is the report he made to me.

Mr. CLARKE. A report in writing?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes. I have said that I would bring all these reports before the House. Everything was done above-board. Hon. gentlemen will see by the papers that the whole transaction was done in good faith and as I have said just now, for the sake of the public interest and nothing else. If the officers had supposed that they would be able to sell the vessel for a higher price by advertising her for sale, they would have advised me to that effect. But that would have entailed considerable expense, and we would not get a cent more for the vessel. Under these circumstances, when we received the offer from Harrison and Son, we took the precaution to get more reports concerning the vessel, and it was after their offer had been in the department for a few days that the matter was closed. I consulted with the officer who had been in charge of this part of Ontario, who is one of the most competent and honest officers in the department. After taking all these precautions, if anybody thinks the department has been cheated, well, I could understand there would be a reason for prolonging this discussion. But I do not see that there was anything out of the usual course except that public tenders were not asked for, and they were not asked for because they would have entailed a large expenditure. We sold the vessel under the best conditions possible.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Are the government steamers inspected by government officials every year, their boilers, hulls and so on?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I forgot to mention that the vessel was condemned by the inspector.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Will the minister bring that report down to-morrow?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes.

Mr. LEFURGEY. What is the name of the vessel that was put on in place of this one?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The 'Bayfield.' It used to be the 'Lord Stanley.'

Mr. LEFURGEY. What price was paid for the 'Bayfield'?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am informed the 'Bayfield' was bought in 1902 for $45,000.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I understood the minister to say a moment ago that the very fact that $3,000 was spent on the former steamer in repairs in one year was proof that she was no good. I cannot understand that reasoning at all. I understand there is $1,000 being spent now on this new boat, so that, according to the hon. minister, she is very rapidly deteriorating. I would like the hon. minister to explain this line of reasoning in saying that $3,000 being spent on a boat proves that she was no good.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. My reasoning is very simple and any one would understand it except the hon. gentleman. It depends entirely on the value of the boat. If you put $3,000 on a boat that is not worth more than $3,000 it is a waste of money, but if you put $10,000 on a boat which is worth $50,000 and improve her by so much it is not a waste of money if you make her suitable for the service she is required to perform. The 'Lord Stanley' was repaired at the works at Sorel in order to fit her for the work she was intended to perform on the great lakes. There had to be special rooms provided for the engineers, a special surveying bridge, and the necessary apparatus to do the work that she was destined to do.

Mr. THOMSON (Grey). How much was spent on this vessel at Sorel ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I think between $8,000 and $10,000.

Mr. THOMSON (Grey). I do not understand the reasoning of the hon. minister. It seems to me that if the argument which he has advanced in regard to expending $3,000 on the 'Bayfield' holds good, we have a serious charge against him for purchasing this vessel called the 'Lord Stanley.' He tells us that the boat cost $45,000 and that they expended $8,000 in repairing this vessel at Sorel. I find in the Auditor General's Report that the Polson Company received $3,200 for further repairs to the 'Lord Stanley,' which makes over $11,000 expended on the 'Lord Stanley.' This vessel cannot have been in very good repair. Now, we are not complaining about the purchase of the 'Lord Stanley,' but when the hon. minister declares that he sold the 'Bayfield' in the public interest we claim that he did not, because, if he had sold it in the public interest he would have sold it by tender and not by private sale. A dollar would have paid for an advertisement in the Owen Sound newspapers, it would have brought a number of people interested in the sale together and the result would have been that the vessel would probably have brought three times the amount he received. I do not consider that the hon. minister was acting in the public interest in disposing of that vessel by private sale. I would ask the hon. minister why he purchased the 'Lord Stanley' if what he says about the 'Bayfield' is right and why it was necessary to spend $11,000 in repairing that vessel before he could put her into commission.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The same officers who recommended that we should offer for sale the steamer that was perfectly useless, recommended that the 'Lord Stanley' should be repaired. As regards the repairs made at the Polson Company, it is very easy for an hon. gentleman to pick out an item and make a great fuss about it. These repairs were purely and simply the result of an accident by which the boat broke her propeller. She had to be repaired and we paid the market price for these repairs. She also injured her stern post.

Mr. THOMSON (Grey). Does the hon. minister say that it would cost $3,200 to buy a new propeller ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. And a stern post.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I understand the hon. minister is prepared to bring down some data to-morrow, I should like to have the report of the inspector of hulls, boilers and engines.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I will bring down all the papers I have. If I knew what papers were in the records of the department I would say at once what they are. I know there are reports in the department on this question and I will bring them down.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). There should be reports in the department for every year during which this steamer has been in commission. The reports of the inspector of hulls and boilers and the history of the vessel should be in the hon. gentleman's department in black and white, and I want them.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. You shall have them.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). And I want more than that. I understand that there is the old 'Bayfield' that has been sold and there is a new 'Bayfield II.' Was 'Bayfield II' formerly the 'Lord Stanley' ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I want the history of the 'Lord Stanley' also.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Certainly.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I want the reports of the engineers which are in the department, showing the condition of this vessel each year for four or five years back.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I cannot give it for four or five years because we only bought the 'Lord Stanley' last year.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). No matter when the hon. minister bought her. The hon. minister did not buy her on the American side. If she has been in commission in Canada, her record is in the department.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We have the record of the boat in the department, but as regards any history of the boat I cannot undertake to give the history of a boat that was not the property of the department.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Every one horse tug boat in the country has a history in the department.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. What history does the hon. gentleman want ?

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). The nature of the ship, her dimensions, tonnage, and the condition of her hull and boilers.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That is published in the public documents.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I would like to have brought down here the history of these two vessels for five years back.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The history of these vessels is all in the reports of the department.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). We want it.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It was put before the House at the beginning of the session.

Mr. CLARKE. The hon. minister said that to expend $3,000 on a vessel like the 'Bayfield' was practically a waste of public money. Am I repeating correctly what the hon. minister said ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Considering her value.

Mr. CLARKE. I understand from the hon. minister that the officers who recommended the expenditure of that $3,000 which, according to the hon. minister was a waste of public money, were the same officers who recommended her sale after the money had been expended on her for $3,000.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I told the committee, if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clarke) had been here, that the officers of the department in the year 1901 recommended that this boat should be put in commission in the following year and that she needed to be repaired. They considered that in wasting $3,000, if I may so term it, in repairing the boat they were doing right because they had no other boat at their disposal. If they had chartered another boat it would have cost them $6,000 or $8,000 according to size and suitability of the steamer.

Mr. CLARKE. Were these the same gentlemen who recommended the purchase of the 'Lord Stanley' ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I cannot tell the hon. gentleman if they were the same persons. We have in the department many officers and they are not all consulted at the same time.

Mr. CLARKE. Is it not rather a serious situation that a vessel like the 'Lord Stanley,' purchased for $40,000 or $45,000, should immediately require an expenditure of $12,000 or $15,000 upon her to fit her for the services that she was to be engaged in ? We want information as to her tonnage, her engine power, the condition of the boilers and so on. If the minister admits that we wasted money on the 'Bayfield' last year then we have the right to scrutinize most closely the expenditure which the minister is about to make on other vessels.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The 'Lord Stanley' was built in England or Scotland as a very strong tow boat. We bought her from Davie at Point Lévis for $45,000, and I think she cost over $80,000. She was in perfect order as regards engines and hull, and everything connected with her, but we had to fit her out for the special work of the hydrographic service adding an upper deck and chart house.

Mr. BENNETT. Is she larger than the 'Bayfield ?'

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am informed that she is about double the size.

Mr. BENNETT. Is the 'Lord Stanley' 220 feet ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am informed she is twice the strength and about twice the size of the 'Bayfield.'

Mr. BENNETT. Oh, no.

Mr. CLARKE. Was there any particular reason why the name should be changed ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No, except that we wanted to retain the name of 'Bayfield,' who first started the hydrographic survey in Canada.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Will the minister be good enough to give us the report recommending the repairs to the 'Bayfield.' He told us that information was laid on the Table at the beginning of the session. In what was the information contained.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The report of the department was laid on the Table of the House which contains reports of steamboat inspectors. The inspection of Dominion steamers of the department is made by an officer specially appointed for that purpose. It is not deemed necessary to publish his reports but they are on record in the department.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). It shows nothing of the kind. The minister must understand that his smirking and smiling will not get his estimates through. The people of this country may submit to being robbed and skinned and fleeced for a time, but the opposition will let the minister know about it. I must say in all kindness to the minister that I do not like the manner in which he tries to smile the matter off. The people of this country are supposed to run this little show and if the minister does not understand it we will teach him. He is there only temporarily.

An hon. MEMBER. Permanently.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). No. We will be over there in a little while and then the business of the country will be run properly. I want the report recommending the $3,000 expenditure on this ship within the last year. Will the minister bring that down.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I said so ten times.

Mr. THOMSON (North Grey). Is the minister going to lay down the policy that he will dispose of a vessel belonging to the government for the amount she cost in the previous year to repair. If that is his policy he should sell the 'Lord Stanley' for $11,000.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. THOMSON (North Grey). Is that to be the policy of the minister ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I have no policy in the matter.

Mr. THOMSON (North Grey). What policy did the minister adopt when he sold the 'Bayfield' for $3,000, just what she cost to repair the previous year ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Public interest.

Mr. THOMSON (North Grey). And sold it by private sale.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Public interest, as I have stated.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Under what item is the minister going to give to-morrow all this information that we have asked to-night. It is not that we suspect him of being slippery in trying to evade his promises, but I would like to know under what item he will give the explanation.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I never said I would give an explanation. I said I would file the documents as soon as they were copied. They will be put on the Table of the House.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). The minister will have to give the information from his place in the House and his estimates will not go through until he does.

Mr. TAYLOR. The minister told us a moment ago that he would find Mr. Hurley's report on page 41 of the annual report of the department and the other night he told us that Mr. Hurley only made verbal reports. At page 41 there is the deputy minister's report in which he relates some information that I presume Mr. Hurley furnished him, but there is no report from Mr. Hurley. Mr. Hurley lives in Belleville and he knows the Americans caught bass and he told the deputy minister so, and the deputy reported it, but that is not a report from Mr. Hurley. We want to see Mr. Hurley's written reports to the department. I want the minister to explain why he made that statement to the House, that in his report we would find the report made by Mr. Hurley.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I made no such statement. I said that Mr. Hurley's report was contained in the report of the deputy minister.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I find in the report the deputy minister says :

> Inspector J. M. Hurley, of Belleville, reports that sporting fish were very plentiful this year, especially so in the Bay of Quinte, Trent and other large rivers.

What are sporting fish ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Surely the hon. gentleman is not going to expect me to give him a description of every fish. I will not do it, because I do not know it.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). He says further :

> Bass, trout and maskinongé were extremely abundant in the bay and lakes and on the rivers inland, where the coarse heads, viz., pike, pickerel, bull-fish, suckers, &c., do not go. On Trent and Moira rivers, pike, pickerel, &c., are numerous at the mouth and a few miles up the rivers until stopped by the dams. There are neither bass nor maskinongé there, but up the rivers the sporting fish are plentiful.

I think the minister should explain what all this means, because it is nonsense to me. The report goes on :

> I think the fishways would be disastrous to sporting fish in these rivers, as they would allow rough fish——

Another term, I do not know what it means—— > —to go up, and they would infest the spawning grounds of the game fish.

What are game fish ? Then he says :

> There is not enough supervision in the district, as one overseer has over two hundred miles to look after. There should be a steam yacht for that section to enable the local officers to do their work.

Has the minister provided a steam yacht for the gentlemen to cruise around Lake Ontario ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I hope the minister will endeavour to find out what game fish, sporting fish, rough fish, and coarse fish are ?

Mr. BENNETT. May I ask the minister the date of the report of the engineer condemning the 'Bayfield'?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. If I knew the date, I would give the report.

Mr. BENNETT. Was there a report made last fall by any person condemning the 'Bayfield'?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There must have been. I will bring all the papers.

Mr. BENNETT. I find in the minister's report, dated December, 1902, on page 18, the following reference to the 'Bayfield':

> The 'Bayfield' is a wooden steamer 110 feet long, 18 feet wide, and 9 feet deep. The steamer was engaged in the hydrographic survey on Lake Superior during the season of 1902. Mr. W. J. Stewart is in charge of this work. Captain A. M. McGregor is the sailing master of the 'Bayfield,' and the crew consists of nineteen men in addition.

There is not a single word in this report about the vessel being unseaworthy, but it states that she had been all summer, with a crew of over twenty men, on the exposed waters of Lake Superior. The minister had better admit the corn, that the clamps were put on him pretty hard, and that he was made to give this boat to John Harrison & Son, of Owen Sound, for $3,000.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman does not mean to convey to the committee that there is anything in the report stating that the vessel was seaworthy. The report only gives the list of the different boats in the possession of the department without stating in what condition they were.

Mr. BENNETT. But if the boat had been in such a bad condition, why did the minister not state it in his report?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It is not the place to mention it at all.

Mr. BENNETT. That was probably the minister's view of what a report should be —to mention nothing.

Mr. TAYLOR. The minister stated a moment ago that he had not Mr. Hurley's report. If he turns to page 5127 of 'Hansard,' he will find that he stated the other night:

> I have here Mr. Hurley's report on page xli of the Blue-book.

There is nothing of the kind there.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman is playing on words, just as he plays on figures from the Auditor General's Report. What I stated was correct, that the report of Mr. Hurley is contained in the report of the deputy minister of Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria).

Further amount required for the Canadian Fishery Exhibit, $1,800.

Mr. TAYLOR. Will the minister explain this?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. This sum is required to make necessary repairs to the fishery exhibit in Ottawa. For many years there had been no repairs, and the specimens were being destroyed and some new ones were necessary.

Mr. TAYLOR. This money is to be spent between now and the 30th of June. It must have been expended already, and the minister ought to have the details.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We are fixing up everything. I would invite the hon. gentleman to visit the exhibit.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. gentleman ought to be able to tell us how he spent the money.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I have stated how it was spent. It was spent in securing specimens, installing them, overhauling and papering the room, electric light and all that was necessary.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. gentleman must have a detailed statement.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I have no detailed statement.

Mr. TAYLOR. Surely the hon. gentleman is not asking for $1,800 without being able to furnish the particulars.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. If the hon. gentleman desires such a statement, I shall produce it, but I will have to give a statement of a lot of small sums spent on repairs and overhauling generally.

Mr. TAYLOR. It is not usual for heads of departments to ask for money without having the details.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I have not got them.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then let the item stand.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am informed by the officers of the department that the installing of the electric light, the painting and the rearranging of the fittings in the laboratory take up nearly the whole of the sum.

Mr. CLARKE. It is surely not a business like proposition to ask the committee to vote $1,800 on such an explanation as the hon. minister has given. He says that the installation of the electric lights and the fitting up of the laboratory have cost nearly the total sum asked for. It is not unreasonable that we should require more information.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am informed by my officers that there is such a statement and it will be produced at once. We will let the item stand in the mean time.

Item allowed to stand.

To pay collectors of customs for services in connection with the issuing of fishing licenses to the United States vessels in 1902, $505.72.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The officers are allowed 5 per cent, and the collection amounted to $10,114.

Mr. SPROULE. We have not had a statement yet as to how this business is conducted. I understand that the Dominion regulates the size of the meshes and appoints a number of inspectors to see that the law is enforced and that no fish are caught out of the proper season. Who gets the revenue, and if it is divided, what proportion goes to the Dominion and what to the provinces ? I understood a year or two ago that it was to be paid into a common fund, and that was to be afterwards divided in some way.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The revenue for 1901-2 was as follows : Ontario, $373 ; Quebec, $3,498 ; Nova Scotia, $6,062 ; New Brunswick, $11,658 ; Prince Edward Island, $1,829 ; Manitoba, $2,279 ; North-west Territories, $946 ; British Columbia, $41,178 ; Yukon, $1,110. License to United States fishing vessels, $11,000. Total, $79,169.58.

Mr. SPROULE. From what source do you receive that revenue ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. From licenses and fines.

Mr. SPROULE. We get no revenue from licenses in Ontario at all ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No.

Mr. TAYLOR. You get only $300 revenue in Ontario and you are paying nearly $4,000 for salaries to the overseers.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We are obliged, under the law to pay it.

Mr. TAYLOR. You are not obliged to keep Mr. Hurley and Mr. Shepherd.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Mr. Hurley is a very disagreable person to the hon. gentleman, but he is doing good work.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). If he is doing such good work, would the hon. minister bring down a report of his good work ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I think the hon. gentleman is unreasonable. It may take five or six weeks to prepare such a report.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Has he got the report in his department ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes, and as soon as possible I will have it copied.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). The hon. gentleman can bring down the original paper ? I venture to say that Mr. Hurley has not spent five weeks in visiting the lakes, and it could not have taken him very long to make a report.

Mr. SPROULE. I was not complaining of the smallness of the revenue, nor that the work was not properly done, but was urging that at as early a date as possible we should reach some understanding with the provinces as to our rights and duties in connection with the fisheries, and whether we are not entitled to more revenue than we are receiving. The government ought to direct its attention towards a settlement as early as possible, so that we may know what our duties are and what revenue we are likely to derive in the future.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) is perfectly right, but he should not blame the present government or the present Minister of Marine and Fisheries. The question was pending before the courts for nearly three years before it was finally decided by the Privy Council in 1897 or 1898—I do not know exactly the date. But the judgment has left the Dominion government and the governments of the provinces in much the same position as before as regards certain questions. There are certain points still in dispute, because there is a difference of opinion with regard to the interpretation of the judgment. So, as I explained, we are face to face with another case before the courts. We are trying to arrange amicably to submit a case to the Supreme Court, but that has not been decided yet. There has been conference after conference, and, as I said, there are piles of documents on the subject in my department and in the Department of Justice. Many opinions have been asked and given, but we have not yet been able to come to an understanding with the provinces. I hope that within a few days after the end of the session, we shall be in a position to submit to the Supreme Court a case upon the points in dispute. Until that is settled, we are obliged to have a modus vivendi, and this we are carrying out in good faith. The department is most anxious that the question should be settled as soon as possible—it is in the interest of all parties. For instance, British Columbia is making a claim upon the Dominion for a large amount. There is, no doubt, a sum of money due to that province, but to ascertain the amount, you must know what the judgment means in certain points. Meantime we are acting as administrators for the province of British Columbia, with their consent. The question cannot be allowed to remain in the present position, for it is not fair either to the Dominion.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. minister seems not to be able to draw a distinction between complaining and asking for information. I respectfully submit that I have not made a complaint to-night, but I have endeavoured in a most courteous way to elicit information. And I was the more justified in asking for information to-night because practically the same statement was made last year as the hon. minister has just given to the committee, that, in a few days it was hoped by conference to have all these matters arranged. If my memory is not at fault, the decision of the Privy Council was given in 1898 or 1899. Now, is it too much to expect that between 1899 and 1903 some understanding should be reached with the provinces with regard to this important question ? Particularly in view of the fact that we have a Supreme Court that was established for the settlement of these very questions between the provinces and the Dominion ? The government have a right at any time to state a case and submit it to the Supreme Court and ask an opinion with regard to it. This can be done at any time. Therefore, I think that there has been unnecessary delay in this matter. But in saying that, I do not want the hon. minister to say that I am unnecessarily criticising what has been done, but only endeavouring to find in what state the negotiations are for the time and when we may hope to have them finally completed.

Mr. HACKETT. Would the hon. minister state the points still at issue between the provinces and the Dominion on this fishery question ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Different provinces have sent memoranda of their cases, and the Department of Justice would have to choose between the different points and claims made so as to find a common ground of discussion before the Supreme Court. I cannot give the hon. gentleman (Mr. Hackett), on the spur of the moment, the information he desires.

Mr. HACKETT. Is it not true that the government of the Privy Council gave the inland fisheries exclusively to the provinces? I understand that the provinces are now claiming territorial rights—that is, the maritime provinces are claiming all within the three-mile limit around the coast. That is the point, I think to be decided. Has the government of Prince Edward Island made a claim for refund of moneys collected by the Dominion ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I know that there is such a question pending between the Dominion government and the provincial government of Prince Edward Island.

Mr. TAYLOR. One item is allowed to stand for information that the minister has promised to bring down to-morrow. I think that, having voted so much money this evening, and having worked last night till two o'clock, we might now adjourn.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentlemen were courteous and obliging last evening and I appreciate that. I would suggest that there are just one or two items left in the estimates of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, which might be taken up, and, if any information is desired with regard to them, the hon. minister will be ready to bring it down. I think we would make so much more progress if we proceed in that way. It is not late yet.

Mr TAYLOR. I do not think the hon. minister will make greater progress in that way.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There is an item in the supplementary estimates of $1,800. I am willing to leave that there. But there is another item in the main estimates, at page 61, item 715—construction of lighthouses and aids to navigation $322,000.

Mr. TAYLOR. But that is only one of a number of items making up item 175, and the whole are discussable upon this particular vote.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There is no objection to that.

Mr. TAYLOR. The same is true with reference to this item No. 93 of the supplementaries, of which this vote of $1,800 stands.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. If I remember well, when this item of $322,000 was left in the main estimates, the other items had been all adopted, and this item was left because the committee wanted the detailed information with regard to the works that were intended to be carried out during next season. I procured a statement of these different works in detail. I think the item is not one that can be very much discussed—simply whether these aids to navigation are necessary or unnecessary. They have all been undertaken on the advice of the chief engineer of the department, and most of them have been asked for by the people interested in navigation. I think there can be very little room for discussion under this item.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. minister does not seem to understand my statement. Though all except this one vote were passed, it was understood that all voted in item 175 were discussable when the item came up. I know there are several members who want to speak upon this item 175, and some of them are not here to-night. I ask that this item stand, and also the one concerning which my hon. friend from Victoria is promised information to-morrow. We will allow the $1,800 in the supplementaries to pass, with the understanding that it will be discussable later on.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The Minister of Inland Revenue has a few items which he would like to get passed. They are not controversial, and his officers have been here for the whole evening. Take item 229.

Mr. TAYLOR. That is too heavy an item to take up to-night. There is a large increase to discuss.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I can explain it to the satisfaction of the committee. I have been waiting here all the evening to get some of my items through.

Mr. TAYLOR. If we take it up we shall get into trouble, I fear.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I do not want any trouble, but I want fair play. I would like to pass some of these items. In fact I have been so much delayed that some of my employees will have to wait a few days to be paid.

Mr. TAYLOR. We will give you money enough to-morrow.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Well, we can say that the hon. gentlemen were very good last evening, and I wish they would go on being good. However, if they refuse, I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Some resolutions reported.

ADJOURNMENT—BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding) moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. SPROULE. What business will be taken up to-morrow ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The Minister of Railways will invite the attention of the committee again to the Bill respecting railways. It is a very long Bill, and we hope to make sufficient progress to-morrow almost to complete it.

Mr. TAYLOR. I would suggest that the government send that Bill to a special committee. We have lost ten or twelve days discussing it now, and if the balance of the Bill were left to a committee of three or four members on each side, they could put it into shape while the rest of the House was doing other work. We have lost, I think, ten days on that Bill, and have made very little progress, it is but little more than half way through. Let the hon. gentlemen who take an interest on that Bill thresh it out in committee.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Perhaps my hon. friend will be good enough to renew that suggestion when the Minister of Railways is in his place to-morrow.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11.55 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, June 24, 1903.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Hon. Sydney Fisher). Mr. Speaker, I desire to rise to a question of privilege. I notice in the Ottawa 'Citizen's' report of what occurred in the House last night that the hon. member for East Northumberland (Mr. Cochrane) stated that the Hon. Sydney Fisher was a director of the Montreal 'Herald' Company. I wish to state most emphatically that this is not the case, that I have not been a director of the Montreal 'Herald' Company since I have been a minister of the Crown ; and, furthermore, when I became a minister of the Crown I disposed of my stock in that company, and have had no connection with it in a pecuniary way since.

Mr. SPROULE. I may say that I understood the hon. member for East Northumberland to say that it was understood. He did not say whether it was correct or not.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The report in the 'Citizen' states it most unqualifiedly.

Mr. SPROULE. He did not say whether it was correct or not.

THE PRINTING COMMITTEE.

Mr. C. H. PARMELEE (Shefford). Mr. Speaker, in rising to move concurrence in the third report of the Joint Committee of both Houses on the Printing of Parliament, I desire to make a brief explanation. Following a practice which has grown up, the committee ventured to recommend to this House the purchase of a certain number of copies of a book entitled 'Decisions of Speakers of the House of Commons.' The committee felt justified in taking that position, relying upon the validity of the precedents which had been established in 1893, 1895, 1896 and 1898, when reports of a similar character had been concurred in by this House. My attention has been called to the constitutional aspect of a procedure of that kind. The committee is prepared to assert all its rights and to exercise all the powers that are given to it; but, on the other hand, it has no desire whatever to insidiously undermine the British constitution. It seems to me that when the committee makes a recommendation of this kind, and it is concurred in by the House, we strike at one of the fundamental principles of the constitution in respect to the appropriation of public moneys. It is a well known principle of the constitution that all appropriations of public funds and public revenues have to be initiated by the Crown and have to be brought down to this House by means of a message from His Excellency the Governor General. This question has never been definitely settled, though at one time or another it has been brought up in this House. I would be very glad, as chairman of the committee, as I am sure all members of the committee would be, if this question were settled for all time to come on lines that would guide us as to our future action. There is no doubt that the Printing Committee has full power with respect to the printing of parliament, but I am not aware that any other powers are conferred on the committee. While on my feet, I might say that very often motions are made in this House to authorize the printing of parliamentary documents. Even that, I believe, is irregular, because I think that under the powers vested in the committee all motions respecting public and parliamentary printing should first be considered by that committee, and be brought before the House in the form of a report from us. In moving the adoption of the report, I have decided, for the reasons I have stated, to drop the particular clause recommending the purchase of books, which, logically, should be followed by an appropriation of money. I beg to move, seconded by Mr. Cowan :

That the third report of the Joint Committee of both Houses on the Printing of Parliament be concurred in, save and except the last paragraph, recommending the purchase of a book entitled 'Decisions of Speakers of the House of Commons.'

Motion agreed to.

THE ROYAL ASSENT.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have the honour to inform the House that I have received the following letter from His Excellency the Governor General's secretary :

Ottawa, 24th June, 1903.

Sir,—I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Sir Henri E. Taschereau, acting as deputy to His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber on Thursday, the 25th inst., at 4 o'clock p.m., for the purpose of giving assent to certain bills which have passed the Senate and House of Commons during the present session.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
F. S. MAUDE, Major,
Governor General's Secretary.

QUESTIONS.

REPRESENTATION IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Mr. LEFURGEY—by Mr. Hackett—asked :

Has the government taken any steps to obtain the opinion of the law officers of the Crown with regard to the points brought forward by the government of New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island on the question of representation in this House, viz.: the objection of the government of New Brunswick in connection with the proposed Redistribution Bill applying to that province ; and the protest of the government of Prince Edward Island against having the number of members from that province in the House of Commons reduced below six ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick). The government have consulted the Department of Justice in respect to the points brought forward by the governments of New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island on the question of representation in this House, and the opinion given by the Department of Justice has been sustained by the Supreme Court on a reference to that court.

EXPERIMENTAL FARM—MISS HAGAR.

Mr. TALBOT asked :

1. Is a Miss Hagar employed at the Central Experimental Farm ?
2. How long has she been in Canada ?
3. Who recommended her ?
4. What is her occupation ?
5. How long has she been employed ?
6. What salary does she receive ?
7. Has any addition, or change, in any of the buildings on the farm been made on her account ?
8. What is the cost of such addition, or change ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Hon. Sydney Fisher) :

1. A Miss Hagar is temporarily employed at the Central Experimental Farm.
2. About eight months.
3. She was recommended as having had a thorough training in botany and other branches of natural science at Owens College, Manchester, England, by Professor Weiss, one of the professors in that institution of learning, and by Professor Marshall Ward, professor of botany in Cambridge University, England. She was also recommended by Professor H. T. Bovey, Dean of the Faculty of Applied Science, McGill University, Montreal.
4. She has been engaged in special expert work in making up for the director of experimental farms records of the large collections of trees and shrubs at the Central farm and cataloguing the collection of herbaceous plants, also in compiling scientific details on varieties of cereals, the action of fertilizers, and other topics for the use of the director, for bulletin purposes, and for his evidence before the Committee on Agriculture and Colonization of the House of Commons; detail work which had unavoidably run into arrears, owing to the ever-increasing press of work under which the director labours.

5. Since the middle of March last.

6. Forty dollars a month.

7. No addition; but some slight changes have been made in a room in the office building for her accommodation.

8. The cost of the changes made on Miss Hagar's account has been about ten dollars.

OWEN SOUND HARBOUR.

Mr. THOMSON (Grey) asked :

1. What are the names of the party, or parties, who measured and valued lot number 13, on the east side of West street, and north of Front street, required for the improvements to harbour at Owen Sound ? What are the names of the party, or parties, who measured and valued water lot at mouth of the Polawatamie river, and transferred to Harrison & Sons ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. James Sutherland) :

1. Lot No. 13, on the east side of West street and north of Front street, is not Indian land.

2. John Mackenzie, of Presqu'isle, in the county of Grey, examined and valued a marsh lot near the mouth of the Polawatamie river, in the town plot of Brook, which was sold by the Department of Indian Affairs to John Harrison.

CAPACITY OF DREDGES.

Mr. THOMSON (Grey) asked :

What is the capacity of the dredge working at Midland ; and what is the capacity of the dredge working at Penetanguishene ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. James Sutherland). The capacity of a dredge depends altogether from two circumstances, viz :

1. The nature of the material to be dredged.

2. The distance of towing to the dumping ground.

In Midland, the daily average was as follows : In clay and sand, 672 yards per day; in clay and slabs, 480 yards per day; in clay and boulders, 400 yards per day; in clay and hard-pan, 480 yards per day; the towing distance was three miles.

In Penetanguishene, the average was 56⅔ yards per hour, or close on 600 yards per day. The towing distance was two miles.

IMMIGRANTS—QUEBEC.

Mr. WILSON asked :

1. How many immigrants arrived at the port of Quebec during the month of May, 1903 ?

2. How many were rejected by the medical inspecting officer of the government ?

3. What became of those so rejected ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. James Sutherland) :

|---|---|
| 1. For Canada ..... .... | 13,057 |
| For the United States .... | 2,646 |
| Total .. .... ..... .. | 15,703 |

2. Six—five destined for Canada and one for the United States.

3. All deported to countries whence they came.

FUEL CONTRACTS.

Mr. CLARKE asked :

Has any allowance of interest been made on overdue and unpaid accounts to persons who held contracts for supplying fuel to the public institutions of the Dominion ? If so, what amounts have been allowed or paid, and to whom ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. James Sutherland). Not by the Department of Public Works.

Mr. CLARKE. By any other department ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Not that I know of.

CUSTOMS DEPARTMENT.

Mr. MONK—by Mr. Taylor—asked :

1. How many men were employed by the Customs Department at each port in the Dominion on the first day of May, 1900 ?

2. How many of said men were transferred to the statistical staff at Ottawa between 1st May and 1st September, 1900 ?

3. How many men were in the employ of the Customs Department at each of the ports of the Dominion on the first day of May, 1903 ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Hon. Wm. Paterson). It would have been more regular to move for a return, but if the House consents I can have tabulated reply put in 'Hansard' without reading same.

Mr. SPEAKER. It would be more in order to have a motion made and the reply laid on the Table as a return.

Mr. TAYLOR. I move that an order of the House do issue for a list of men employed by the Customs Department, as set forth in question published in the Orders of the Day.

Motion agreed to, and return laid on Table.

CHIEF CLERK OF CORRESPONDENCE.

Mr. LENNOX asked :

What is the name of the chief clerk of correspondence, at a salary of $1,800 a year, mentioned and referred to in the estimates for the year ending 30th June, 1904, page 20 ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair). The name is F. A. Dixon.

ROSEAU RIVER RESERVE.

Mr. LaRIVIERE asked :

1. How many lots were sold at auction out of the Roseau River Indian reserve ?

2. What is the description and acreage of each lot, the name of purchaser, and the price of the same per acre ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. James Sutherland) :

1. There were eleven sections and three lots sold.

2. The attached statement gives the description and acreage of each lot, name of purchaser, and the price of same per acre.

MAIL SERVICE, EMERSON BRANCH.

Mr. LaRIVIERE asked :

1. Is it the intention to organize a daily mail service all along the line of the Emerson branch of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and have regular mail cars in connection therewith?

2. Will a regular daily mail service be organized along the south-eastern branch of the Canadian Northern Railway as soon as a daily train is secured for that service ?

3. Will a tri-weekly mail service soon be organized between Emerson, Ridgeville and Overstone, in the electoral district of Provencher ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. James Sutherland) :

1. This matter is at present engaging the attention of the department.

2. This question will receive due consideration when a daily train service is inaugurated.

3. No application has been received.

ST. BONIFACE MONEY ORDER OFFICE.

Mr. LaRIVIERE asked :

1. How long is it since the money order office of the town of St. Boniface has been closed, and for what reason ?

2. Would it not be advisable to reorganize that office, and open a post office savings bank in connection therewith ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. James Sutherland) : Money order business was temporarily suspended at St. Boniface on the first instant owing to certain irregularities in the post office accounts, but will probably be resumed at an early date. The postmaster at Winnipeg has meantime been instructed to pay orders on St. Boniface. St. Boniface is already a savings bank office, and saving bank business will also be resumed as soon as possible.

MARTIN JEROME. M.P.P.

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette) asked :

Has Martin Jerome, M.P.P., in the employment of the Department of the Interior, as homestead inspector, or forest ranger, been authorized to tell the Mennonites of the village of Hochstadt that they will get no free permits to cut timber for fuel unless they vote for the opposition candidate at the coming local election in Manitoba ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. James Sutherland). No.

MR. L. W. HERCHMER'S PENSION.

Mr. SCOTT—by Mr. Macpherson—asked :

1. Has the right honourable the Prime Minister received a copy of a resolution adopted by the North-west legislature, on motion of Dr. DeVeber (Lethbridge) and Mr. R. S. Lake (Grenfell), on Monday, 15th June, 1903, in the following terms :—

Resolved, that in view of the long and eminent services rendered to the North-west Territories by Mr. Lawrence W. Herchmer, during the fourteen years he was in command of the North-west Mounted Police, this House is of the opinion that as a special case Mr. Herchmer's pension might be increased and made equal to the sum which he would have enjoyed as retiring allowance, had he come under the provisions of the Officers' Pension Act (N.W. M.P.) now in force.

2. Will the government take action to meet the suggestion expressed by the resolution ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) :

I have not seen the resolution on which Mr. Scott makes his inquiry, but I understand that one has been passed by the local legislature of the character indicated in question.

Lt.-Col. L. W. Herchmer was superannuated from the 1st August, 1900, on an allowance of $1,144 per annum, representing twenty-two fiftieths of his salary as commissioner of the North-west mounted police—his service having been twenty-two years.

The Officers' Pension Bill came into effect on the 1st July, 1902. Had the Act been in force when Col. Herchmer was retired, he would have received a pension of $1,584 per annum, instead of $1,144 under the Superannuation Act—a difference in his favour of $440 a year, but it is not intended to make the Act retroactive.

BRITISH PREFERENCE TARIFF.

Mr. SCOTT—by Mr. Macpherson—asked :

1. Has the government obtained information of a payment of duty made at Montreal, in August, 1902, upon the consignment of seven cases (numbered 4364, 4365, 4366, 4367, 4368, 4369 and 4370, respectively) of German goods known as Stransky steel ware, billed from New York to the Smith-Ferguson Company, limited, Regina, N.W.T., particulars of which consignment were supplied to the honourable the Minister of Customs in this House on the 14th of May last ; and from which consignment Richard Blain, Esq., the honourable member for Peel, in September last, at Regina, bought one teapot and alleged later, publicly, that the Regina merchant 'who brought it in told me he got the benefit of the preference on it' ?

2. If so, was the duty on the consignment paid under the general tariff, or under the preferential tariff ; and did, or did not, Mr. Blain's German teapot come in improperly and obtain the benefit of the British preference ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Hon. Wm. Paterson) :

Stransky & Company paid duty at Montreal in August, 1902, under the general tariff, without rebate of duty under the preferential tariff, on a consignment of seven cases of German goods, numbered 4364, 4365, 4366, 4367, 4368, 4369 and 4370, containing coffee pots and other enamelled hollow-ware, the packages being marked on the invoices 'Regina, N.W.T.'

RAILWAY ACT, 1903.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 21) to amend and consolidate the laws respecting railways.—The Minister of Railways and Canals.

On section 227,

No train shall pass in or through any thickly peopled portion of any city, town or village, at a speed greater than six miles an hour, unless the track is fenced in the manner prescribed by this Act.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair). I propose to amend this section, first by striking out the word 'six' and inserting the word 'ten'; second, by inserting after the word 'fenced' the words 'or properly protected'; and, third, by adding at the end of the section the words 'unless permission is given by some regulation or order of the board, the board may limit such speed in any case to any rate which it deems expedient.'

Mr. LANCASTER. I would ask the minister to explain exactly what is meant by these words 'or properly protected.' The old law from which this section is copied had not these words. I am afraid the section will be too wide to be much of a protection to the public upon the highway, if it is changed in the way proposed, unless we have something in the subsequent sections of the Act providing proper and adequate protection. The law as it is to-day allows no running at a higher rate than six miles an hour unless the track is properly fenced. I see that the minister is increasing that to ten miles an hour. Under the clause as the hon. minister proposes to amend it, even if the track is not fenced, the railways escape liability if the track is 'properly protected.' I do not know what that means, and I doubt very much whether the committee does? I do not know any section of the Act providing for definite, proper protection on highway crossings. A great many different kinds of crossings may be made. But, in the earlier part of the Act, the minister told us that this would be made all right in the part we are now dealing with. We should have a definite, easily understood law, so that the people may know what their rights are throughout the Dominion at the ordinary highway crossings. We know that, if some town or thickly populated municipality goes to the expense and makes an appeal to the board, the board is likely to make some special order about it. But what about the ordinary highway crossing where the people have to go back and forward in pursuance of their ordinary avocation? What is the protection there? What does this provide in the case of a farmer hauling his grain to market, making a proper use of the highway and meeting with an accident because a train is running at a speed greater than ten miles an hour? Who is to say what his rights are? There will be nothing in the Act to say what the protection should be. If we had the law as it is to-day it is easily interpreted, for everybody knows what proper fencing is, or, if not, he can find out. With all due deference to the hon. minister I think the way in which the law was first put before us is much better than it will be with the insertion of these words, 'or properly protected.' This Act requires the track to be fenced at railway crossings. Then, why not make them make the railways liable if they do not comply with the law. But if the amendment prevails, the railways will not be practically liable for accidents if they fail to comply with the law. The law will not be carried out, because nobody can know whether the track is 'properly protected' or not. If this Act is going to provide that highway crossings must be fenced in a certain way, then the company ought to be responsible if they do not fence their tracks in that way. Before I sit down I would like to say that I do not think the words proposed to be added to the section ought to be accepted. If these words are adopted the effect will be that prima facie, the company are bound to protect these crossings in a certain way, yet, if the board chooses, it can give them permission to do otherwise. I do not think there ought to be one law for one township and another law for another; one law for one county and a different law for another county. I am against delegating to the board control of matters of this kind. I am as much in favour of the primary objects of the Bill—the appointing of a commission to deal with those matters that have been causing so much discussion in the country—as is the hon. minister or any other member of this House. But this is a matter that ought not to go to a commission, the power to say what should be the proper protection of ordinary crossings. The way it is now proposed, the board may fix the rate of speed over a crossing. I say that the ordinary every day person in this country ought to know that is a proper rate of speed at an ordinary crossing, whether it is well protected or not, at which a train should run. Now, the minister proposes to let them out of the fencing in the manner prescribed by this Act, if they protect it in the manner prescribed by this Act. I do not know anything in this Act requiring any protection, and I am contending that either these words 'or protected as required by this Act' should be cut out, or else that there should be some well defined protection required at every crossing in the thickly populated parts of cities, towns and villages. The ordinary inhabitant as he comes to town and has to cross these tracks, is entitled to know what is the rate of speed at which trains are allowed to run, and this is allowed to be changed as now proposed, so that not only can the rate be as prescribed by this Act, which does not specifically describe it, but the power of fixing the rate is delegated to a commission. That must be what the minister has in his mind, that the board of commissioners are to settle what the rate of speed must be. Now, there should be a chance for the everyday man to know what the rates are, he ought to have a right to see that this Act is carried out definitely and clearly in every place.

Mr. COWAN. Do you not think the Sunday man ought to have that right as well as the everyday man ?

Mr. LANCASTER. The everyday man goes out on Sunday. The hon. gentleman travels as much on Sunday as I do, and I think we are both everyday men. I think the hon. gentleman knows what I mean. A man interested in the drainage which he brought up the other day is not able to come down to Ottawa and see these commissioners on every little matter that may require his attention, and which may be of importance to him though not to others. Now here is a section that is meant to be a guide, that is meant to be a prima facie rule. What does it amount to ? How can any one tell what it means without invoking the aid of this commission ? I do not think this commission ought to have the power to say that in any village, city or town the trains should exceed a certain rate, notwithstanding that they are breaking the provisions of the Act that require certain protection in the way of fencing. I think if we had the section put in this Bill as drawn by the minister originally, we would have a much better enactment. I say that unless it can be improved upon, unless it can be shown to be unreasonable or unworkable, then that provision ought not to be amended. It would then read clearly and distinctly that they could not exceed ten miles an hour unless the track was fenced in the manner prescribed by the Act. That would be all that ought to prevail. If they can disregard the fencing as required by the Act, and this Act does not require them to protect in any particular way, then make them responsible for it. The minister is proposing to delegate to the board power to limit such speed to any rate which it deems expedient. He is undertaking to fix it at not less than ten miles. I think it should be fixed so that the board cannot change it at their mere whim.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I did not think so much could be said upon the subject of these words 'or other protection.' It is a larger theme than I had imagined. I do not attach a great deal of importance to the words 'or other protection.' They were put in there because the fencing is not always possible, and fencing is not the only mode in which protection may be given. No trouble has ever arisen, but as a matter of fact there are places which require to be protected, and which are protected, without fencing, and it was thought well in going over the Bill again to enable them to provide other protection which the board should think sufficient and ample for the purpose. The hon. gentleman objects to such enormous power being given to the board. Well, that is a very trifling power compared with many of the powers which are conferred upon the board. I am not at all alarmed that the power will be abused in any shape or form. It is necessary that in all classes of this character there should be some elasticity, or if there cannot be elasticity under the Act itself, then some working tribunal should have the opportunity of saying when they should insist upon the outside limit or when they may modify or minimize that limit. When we had a little talk the other day about the rate of speed at which trains should run through cities and towns, two or three hon. gentlemen opposite suggested that the rate should be fixed and that the board should be given no right to limit the speed because railways run a great deal faster than they used to. The rate which we have fixed here is the rate which is allowed street railways to run on all streets in the cities of Canada, so far as I know. This rate can be run without any danger to the public, because that is not a minimum but a maximum speed. In the amendment which we propose here we are allowing the board to diminish that rate in any proper case. The hon. gentleman has argued as though the board were given by this section power to exceed that rate. That is not the fact, it is the other way. Now what harm is there in enabling the board, in a proper case, to reduce this limit of speed according to their judgment ?

Mr. LANCASTER. Does the minister say that this amendment does not allow them to increase the rate ? It does not say 'reduce,' it says 'limit.'

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. As we had it originally the Act provided that no train should be run at a speed greater than six miles an hour, we propose to make it ten miles an hour. I was wrong in thinking that this provision did not allow them to increase the speed. The board may 'may limit such speed in any case to any rate which it deems expedient.' That may be open to the view that they would have permission to increase it.

Mr. LANCASTER. If the minister will change 'limit' to 'decrease' he would meet my argument.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is no reason why you should not allow the board in any case to determine whether the rate might be higher or lower. In any proper case to be investigated, we are satisfied that the power would be safely and wisely exercised.

Mr. CLARKE. May I ask the hon. minister if there has been any general demand for the amendment which the hon. minister proposes to increase the rate of speed at which trains may pass through any thickly peopled portion of any city, town or village from six miles an hour to ten miles an hour?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have not heard of any general demand. Considering the relative rates of speed and what they were when this six miles was first fixed I think ten miles an hour is not an unreasonable extension. Then we have the additional fact that with the appliances which are now available you can stop a train in fifty or sixty feet and sometimes in less than that, whereas, under the old method you could not stop a train in four or five times that distance.

Mr. CLARKE. I am not aware whether the application of automatic brakes would lessen the danger if the rate at which the train is allowed to run through thickly populated portions of cities is increased from six to ten miles an hour, but I think it would be only fair if the hon. minister allows this rate of speed to be increased that he should make it incumbent upon the railway company to provide all necessary protection at level crossings. It is within the knowledge of the hon. minister, that, unfortunately, even at the rate of six miles an hour, many accidents occur at level crossings in cities. I am satisfied, that, if the rate is increased from six to ten miles an hour, more accidents will occur unless the hon. minister makes provision that the railway company shall provide the necessary protection at these level crossings. That is the only safeguard that will preserve lives from being lost. There are dozens and dozens of level railway crossings in the great cities. Railways have been permitted to come in under certain conditions. One of these conditions was that the maximum rate of speed should not be greater than six miles an hour, and it is a very serious thing to increase that rate to ten miles an hour unless the hon. minister makes provision at the same time that railway companies shall give all necessary protection at these level crossings. It would be a substantial advantage to the railway company to be allowed to increase the rate of speed, but an additional danger would be imposed upon the public. Therefore, I think the public ought to be protected to the extent at least of obliging the railway company to provide the necessary gates and watchmen at level crossings. I would ask the hon. minister if he does not think that is a reasonable request to make especially as regards the thickly populated parts of cities?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If there is any increase in the danger it would be the duty of the board of railway commissioners to say that additional or necessary protection should be provided. That is what the board is constituted for. It will insist upon it that all the means that are required to ensure the protection and safety of the public shall be adopted by the railway company. It is the business of the board to do that.

Mr. CLARKE. I do not understand it in that way. The clause reads as follows:

No train shall pass in or through any thickly peopled portion of any city, town or village, at a speed greater than ten miles an hour, unless the track is fenced or properly protected in the manner prescribed by this Act.

The train may proceed through a thickly peopled part of a municipality at the rate of ten miles an hour, but it must not pass at a greater rate unless permission is afforded.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have a section dealing with that which imposes the duty upon the board to see that the company does all that is necessary in order to protect the public at a highway crossing. Section 186 provides that:

The board may by order grant such application upon such terms and conditions as to protection, safety and convenience of the public, as it may deem expedient, or it may order that the highway be carried over or under the railway, or be temporarily or permanently diverted, and that such work be executed, watchmen or other persons employed, or measures taken as under the circumstances appear to the board best adapted to remove or diminish the danger or obstruction arising or likely to arise therefrom.

All these things are in the power of the board.

Mr. CLARKE. Does the hon. minister consider that the provisions of section 186 deal with crossings that have been in existence for years and that are not protected?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. These clauses all deal with such crossings whether a railway is about to be constructed or is already constructed. Section 187 says.

The board may order the company within a specified time to submit to the board a plan and profile of such portion of the railway, and may upon such submission, make any order in respect thereto as in the previous section provided.

Mr. LANCASTER. Is that not limited to an application for leave to construct?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, I do not think so. Section 187 deals with the case of a railway already constructed.

Mr. CLARKE. Does section 187 cover the case we are discussing?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE. Section 187 says:

Where the railway is already constructed upon, along or across any highway, the board may order the company within a specified time to submit to the board a plan and profile of such portion of the railway, and may, upon such submission, make any order in respect thereto as in the previous section provided.

Does that mean that, where, in the opinion of the commissioners, there should be additional protection, or the necessary protection provided at level crossings it is within the power of the commissioners to order that such protection shall be provided?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, the board may order any additional protection of any kind. There is no doubt about that. This power is exercised constantly. We have cases brought up in the Railway Committee of the Privy Council frequently in which it is alleged that a crossing is hazardous. Whether it is due to the rate of speed, or to an obstruction, or to any other cause, when it is known to be hazardous the board of railway commissioners will have power to impose any conditions by way of protection that it chooses.

Mr. CLARKE. The hazard is very much increased by the increase in rate of speed and there are many crossings as the hon. minister knows that have no protection now. If the Bill permits the rate to be increased in thickly populated districts of cities from six to ten miles an hour, additional protection will be required ; and I think, if it is in the interests of the railway company that the speed should be accelerated, it is only fair that the railway company should pay the cost of the extra protection at these level crossings. The hon. gentleman is no doubt aware that there has been a great deal of correspondence with the department in respect to the danger of level crossings even with the rate of speed which has prevailed in the past. In respect to the speed of street railway cars, in nine cases out of ten, these cars stop before they cross the main thoroughfares.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I venture to say that they do not stop.

Mr. CLARKE. In thickly populated parts of the city they stop before they come to the crossings to take on passengers, and that is the reason there is not so much danger.

Mr. COWAN. Thickly populated within the meaning of the law would mean the residential portion of the city as well. It would not mean the business portion only.

Mr. CLARKE. If the speed is allowed to be doubled under this Act in thickly populated portions of a city, it should be incumbent on the railway to provide the necessary protection over and above what is necessary now.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If the additional rate of speed is, in the judgment of the board more dangerous, it is their duty to order additional protection. You cannot do anything more than that.

Mr. FOWLER. Is it the intention to define the words 'properly protected' ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Proper protection would be such protection as the board may deem necessary for the safety of the public.

Mr. FOWLER. Would it not be better to say in the Bill that 'proper protection' meant gates or watchmen ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think not. If you define 'proper protection' you will limit it.

Mr. FOWLER. For instance, in my own town these electric bells are not proper protection in any sense of the term. The noise on the street prevents the bell being heard, and it seems to me that they should be done away with. The rate of speed at a crossing often greatly exceeds six or ten miles an hour ; it is not unusual to see them running at a speed of 50 miles an hour over a crossing.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If the hon. gentleman had much to do with the preparation of this Bill he would be of opinion that it is much better not to define what proper protection means.

Mr. FOWLER. Some one must define it, if it is not defined in the Act.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That, among other things, is what the board is constituted for. The Act requires the adoption of all methods that will ensure protection, and as these methods vary at different places, and different times, the board must have discretion.

Mr. FOWLER. I cannot agree with the minister. It seems to me there are only two effective methods of protection ; one by automatic gates, and the other by watchmen, and you can easily define this protection. There has been no loss of life in my town, but there have been some serious accidents which would have been prevented if we had gates and watchmen instead of the bell alarm. The Bill should define what 'proper protection' is.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If there are only two methods of proper protection, then the commissioners would know of it and order it.

Mr. FOWLER. Why not put it in the Bill ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Because you will weaken your Bill if you do. The present Act provides for proper protection in such manner as the railway company requires ; there is no definition, and it has been found to work well. If the board has discretion, they may impose the most stringent measures where such measures are necessary. My hon. friend (Mr. Fowler) says that in some localities the protection by electric bells is useless.

Mr. FOWLER. I did not say useless, but I say it is not efficient.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman says that the noise prevents the bells being heard, but there must be something wrong in the way the appliance is constructed or some defect in it, because it should ring at the crossing, and I cannot imagine that there would be such an enormous volume of traffic in Sussex as to prevent the bell being heard.

Mr. FOWLER. Take the case of a deaf man; his life should be protected just the same as a man who had perfect hearing.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Certainly.

Mr. FOWLER. A slightly deaf man on a loaded wagon, travelling over a hard road would not hear the sound of the bell, because of the noise of the wagon. If you have a watchman or an automatic gate, he could not get over past the barrier.

Mr. LANCASTER. In the subsection which deals with the prevention of one train colliding with another, the Bill provides that a watchman should be there to give warning. You can just as well define what protection shall be afforded to foot passengers or vehicles using a crossing. I agree with my hon. friend that watchmen and gates are the proper protection. My experience is that where you have 100 accidents now, you would not have more than one if there was a watchman at the crossing. I do not believe that we should assume that this commission can decide what is proper protection any better than the 214 members of this House. We come from all parts of the Dominion, and we know how the people live as well as this commission of three men can know; we know what they are complaining of; we are in touch with our constituents; and we know what to do in regard to these unfortunate cases. People are killed too often by railway trains at these crossings, and the mere fact that the railway companies may have to pay some damages does not make it right. People do not want to have to run the risk, when they send their children to school, of having them killed, instead of coming home at night. We have inaugurated fast travel, and we are not thinking of the people who have to use the highways every day, and every minute of the day. If this Act is going to allow of a speed greater than has heretofore existed, we shall make no mistake in requiring railway companies to place watchmen at crossings in thickly populated portions of cities and towns. People talking together on the public highway, as they have a perfect right to do, might come to the track without hearing an approaching train. If a watchman were there, whose business would be to hold up his hand and stop those people by some sign, an accident would not occur; and if the railroads are desirous of their trains travelling faster than they have been and they are to be commended to a certain extent for doing that in the interests of the public—still they must not do it at the cost of human life. The only people who would object to this provision for a watchman would be the railway companies, on the score of expense. At these crossings they would have to employ a watchman at probably $1.50 a day—perhaps some men who lost a limb or been injured in their service, and whom they ought to pension. In England, men who have lost an arm or a leg in the service of a railway company, instead of being pensioned, are usually employed as watchmen, in which capacity they do something to protect life and at the same time do something for their employers. If this section is allowed to stand until we come to the end of the Bill, and if the members of this House will study it, I think they will almost unanimously agree with me that the proper thing, instead of leaving the protection of life entirely to the board, will be for us to have the Act say 'unless a watchman is stationed at these crossings to give warning of the approach of trains.' We are better able to decide the matter ourselves than the board, and the railway companies ought not to complain if that is done.

Mr. LENNOX. The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, in dealing with this section, and replying to the arguments advanced, tells us that in all cases there will be ample protection provided by the board. I understand that this is a case in which the board is not to interfere at all; it is a case taken out of the jurisdiction of the board. The hon. minister shakes his head, meaning that I am not right. I will, however, read the section:

> No train shall pass in or through any thickly peopled portion of any city, town or village, at a speed greater than ten miles an hour, unless the track is fenced or properly protected.

The minister says that the board will see to it that the track is fenced or is properly protected. As I am pointing out, this is a case in which the railway company desires to run their trains at a greater speed than ten miles an hour. They can do so if the track is fenced as prescribed by the Act, or is properly protected. In other words, the railway company do not need to come to the board to get permission to run twenty miles an hour, so long as the track is fenced as prescribed by the Act, or is otherwise properly protected. Leave the question of properly protected out of consideration for the moment. We have this state of facts, that if the railway company have their line fenced in the manner prescribed by the Act, they can run just as fast as they like. How does the jurisdiction of the court come in then? We give the company permission to run their trains up to ten miles an hour without the track being fenced or protected at all. The point we have to consider as a committee is this : is it wise or safe to give to the railway companies, without requiring them to come to the board at all, and without fencing their lines in the manner prescribed by the Act, the right to run in populous places at a speed greater than six miles an hour or up to ten miles an hour ? The old Act said six miles an hour. We are jumping from six miles to ten miles. That is a pretty serious matter in itself. But we are taking another step. We are saying that if the railway is properly fenced or protected, it may run at a speed exceeding ten miles an hour. We are also adding at the end of the section :

Unless permission is given by some regulation or order of the board.

Now, what is the meaning of that ? It is not a case, mark you, of where the railway is properly protected or fenced. It is a case of where it is not properly fenced or protected. It is a case of where it is not fenced or protected at all. That is the sense of the section. If the railway is not fenced, the trains can run up to ten miles an hour ; and if the company come to the board in a case in which the track is not fenced or protected, the board can give them permission to run at any greater speed that the board think fit. That is the meaning of the section, and that is a power which it is not safe to give to any board or body of men without this parliament considering first, very carefully, what the result of that legislation will be. The minister has been arguing that the board will protect and will order the fence. That is not what we are dealing with. This is a case in which there is no fence or protection, and in which the board can give permission to run trains at any speed they think fit. Is that wise to do ? I am not going to repeat the arguments made by other hon. gentlemen on this side, but I want to add that, aside from these points, I am altogether in harmony with the proposition which has been enunciated so often, and do not want to confer on any board any power which we can as safely and as well exercise ourselves.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My hon. friend is discussing this under a misapprehension. The only difference between this Bill and the existing law, either as regards fenced or unfenced localities or the control and regulation by this board and the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, is that we are giving a train, where the place is not properly fenced, the privilege of running ten miles an hour in place of six. That is all the difference.

Mr. LENNOX. We are giving the board power to say further——

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Undoubtedly, we are allowing the board to say that in a place where it would be perfectly safe to exceed ten miles an hour, the trains may do it. Would it not be really impossible for this parliament, I do not care what the individual knowledge of the members may be—every member may have as full a grasp of the subject as the hon. gentleman—to equal the capability of the board of railway commissioners, who will be obliged to make themselves acquainted with the particular facts and circumstances of each case, and will know exactly what they are dealing with. My hon. friends are simply discussing this from a general standpoint. We are perfectly willing to take the general view of parliament on the question, but having laid down certain general rules which may safely be worked up to, we are willing to entrust the carrying out of these general rules to a tribunal, which will be perfectly experienced, which will have ample means of obtaining full knowledge, and will have no other interest than that of the public, and we are confident that such a tribunal will do what is best in the public interest, having every regard for public safety. The power we are conferring upon this board is precisely the same as that which has been conferred upon the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, with the exception that we allow the board a greater latitude in certain cases than is allowed the committee, but I presume that this point was not very much considered or that additional power would have been given the Railway Committee. Under this Bill you have, in the first place, sections 186 and 187, which give the board of commissioners control of the way in which any railway may use any highway, either in crossing or running along. A railway cannot use the highway without submitting to the conditions which the board may impose, and in every case the board will, no doubt, impose such conditions as are necessary. In addition the board has general power to make an order regarding the rolling stock, apparatus, appliance, signals, methods, devices and other works which may be required for the proper protection of the public and the public property and the employees. There is a power which covers the whole field and leaves nothing to be said on the whole subject.

Mr. FOWLER. I cannot conceive of any thickly populated portion of a town or village, where a crossing is unprotected, through which it would be safe for a train to run faster than ten miles an hour, but it would be possible for the board to authorize it to run fifty or sixty miles an hour or up to its full running speed. I do not see that ten miles an hour would be such a rate of speed as would endanger life any more than six, but I do not see why the board should be given any latitude at all with respect to this matter.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Do you know any reason why it should not ?

Mr. FOWLER. Because that is the greatest rate of speed at which it would be safe for a train to be allowed to run through a thickly populated town or village where the crossing is unprotected.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Will my hon. friend give me a definition of what he means by thickly populated? Is it not possible for the utmost range of judgment to be exercised as to what that is? One person might think that a thickly populated district would be such a one as my hon friend lives in. Another would not think a district was thickly populated except such as you find in the heart of Montreal and Toronto. One might properly say that a speed of ten miles would be a legitimate rate through the most thickly populated districts. Then in a district one quarter as thickly populated, the speed might be twelve or fifteen miles an hour, just as well as not. We know that ten miles an hour is permitted to all our street railways, and there are districts through which they run with perfect safety sometimes twice that speed? In some of the well-settled and populated suburbs of Montreal and Ottawa, they run at the rate of twenty miles and thirty an hour and more. Why should they not be allowed to do so? If it be proper to allow them to do that in a given place, why should there not be some authority which would be allowed to decide that point? Why arbitrarily make a limit which would be absolutely unsuited in one district and entirely appropriate in another? Why deprive this board of exercising its judgment in a particular case where it might safely exercise it?

Mr. FOWLER. I cannot agree at all with the hon. minister because it seems to me that the section of the original Act shows clearly what is meant.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. And it has never been lived up to. Nobody ever thinks of such a thing—it is not reasonable.

Mr. FOWLER. I do not see that.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It was about as fast as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fowler) could walk.

Mr. FOWLER. Well, I might have walked six miles an hour at one time, but I would hardly undertake to do it now. I do not see any particular harm in increasing the rate under this section to ten miles an hour. But the words 'thickly peopled portion' make a distinction between the centre of the town and the outskirts of the town I can understand that a train could run through the outskirts of a town or village at forty miles an hour and not endanger human life any more than in running through the country. But the Act recognizes a difference between the 'thickly peopled' parts of a town and the rest. Take, for instance, the town in which I live, and which the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals knows very well. People are constantly passing over the crossing there, as the railway runs through the centre of the town.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Would the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fowler) consider that the expression 'thickly peopled' would mean the same whether it was applied to a town or to a city?

Mr. FOWLER. No.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yet, what the hon. gentleman urges is that we should make one rule to arbitrarily govern both.

Mr. FOWLER. But the rule is laid down here, and the hon. minister is keeping that in the Act.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Certainly.

Mr. LANCASTER. I might just as well ask the hon. minister what he means by the words 'thickly peopled' in that Bill.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. According to my judgment you might have a 'thickly peopled' portion of the smallest village and a 'thickly peopled' portion of the largest city; and in the first case you might not have ten people, and in the second you might have a thousand. But my hon. friend would require that precisely the same rule should be laid down arbitrarily for all cases. I say there is no reason in that. Give to your board the discretion of saying whether they shall allow a wider limit in one case than in another.

Mr. LENNOX. I wish to call the hon. minister's attention again to what has been already said, and to his reply. The hon. minister favours a certain amount of elasticity in this Act. I recognize that as quite right in some portions of the Bill. The hon. gentleman also says that the argument brought against this section has been general. Now, the argument I am endeavouring to submit is not general but specific. And we are dealing with a specific state of things; we are not dealing with anything that will be induced by any order or regulation of the board, but with something that we are now specifically defining. We are taking the case where the railway is passing through a thickly peopled part of a town or village, and there are no gates, fences or guards of any kind. The statute says that, in that case, the railway shall be at liberty to run at a rate of ten miles an hour. That is what the section says, and that is a question which the committee has to consider now, whether it is wise——

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lennox) say that they could run without gates or any other protection ?

Mr. LENNOX. Without anything, as I read the section.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman does not find that there.

Mr. LENNOX. I will read the section as the hon. minister proposes to amend it—

No train shall pass in or through any thickly peopled portion of any city, town or village, at a speed greater than ten miles an hour, unless the track is fenced in the manner prescribed by this Act, or properly protected.

Is not that saying in as plain language as can possibly be used that, the railway is at liberty to run, not having a fence or other protection, up to a speed of ten miles an hour ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

Mr. LENNOX. Then, I do not know the meaning of the language of any statute.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman knows the meaning of the language, but he has not in mind the other portions of the Bill. He cannot believe that we should incorporate in every provision everything relating to We are not now providing for highway crossings—we have done that. You must not ings—we have done that. You must not eliminate other provisions of the Act from consideration if you wish to understand the meaning of any section. But, that is just what the hon. gentleman is doing. This simply deals with the rate of speed in going through thickly peopled portion of any city or town. But, if you go back to section 184, you find it provided that a railway shall not be carried along or across a highway without the protection ordered by the board, or until the board shall have declared what protection is proper for that crossing. Or, if, at any future time, application is made for protection, the board may deal with it, and order suitable means for protection to be provided. That is a distinct and separate question from this. Let us not confuse the two.

Mr. LENNOX. I understand the minister to say that this does not deal with streets or crossings ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This does not, because we have dealt with that.

Mr. LENNOX. Then it must apply to the other parts of a city, town or village—for instance, where the railway passes between buildings. Now, the case provided for here is where there is no special protection provided by the railway company, for the section expressly says so.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If the hon. gentleman will pardon me, I do not know of any of the older portions of Canada in which the Bill does not provide for fences. The Bill says that fencing shall be erected, and there will be no portion of any district where the railway goes through what may be called improved land or settled land, where the railway company is not obliged to fence in the track on both sides. We may not have passed that—those sections may be further on.

Mr. LENNOX. Yes, we have come to that.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think those sections were allowed to stand. But we are providing amply for that. I cannot imagine a case in which, on a highway, in a city, town or village, there will not be a fence or other suitable protection. But a man may have a wall along his garden. That would not be a fence as provided for the highway, but surely it would not be necessary to erect a fence alongside the wall. The existing law provided that there should be a fence and did not allow for such a case as I have just cited, or where, for instance, a very heavy hedge would serve the purpose of a fence. The board will pass on all these things. So, in this way, we have provision for points between the highways. Now, as to highways, we require that these crossings shall only take place under the conditions determined by the board, and we think it is proper and necessary, when the board is satisfied that protection to life calls for the adoption of a certain device, that that device should be provided.

Mr. LENNOX. I do not take the same view as the minister, and I think that upon reflection he will not take the view that this does not apply to crossings of highways. It is true, as he says, that there is a provision in the earlier part of the Act for general fencing of the railway from end to end when the territory is laid off and open to settlement. If this section has any meaning at all it is that in passing through a city, town or village where people are travelling along the streets, the railway train shall not pass faster than a certain speed unless there is some guard or fence to prevent the people running under the train. It can have no other meaning than that the intersections of streets or highways shall be fenced in order to guard the public. Now, without gates or guards of any kind the train can run up to a speed of ten miles an hour.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Unless the board allows them, they cannot cross the street at all without gates.

Mr. LENNOX. Once having the right to run their trains upon a railway, the ordinary rights of passage from place to place under their charter, they have no more need to come to the board to regulate their speed when they run ten miles an hour than when they run only one mile an hour. If they want to run at a speed greater than ten miles an hour they have two alternatives: They have a right to erect gates or guards, which I admit would have to be conformed to the regulations of the board; or they have a right to come to the board and ask for permission to run at a higher rate of speed. If they erect gates on each side which conform with the description here, they do not need to come to the board at all.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They have no right to run beyond ten miles an hour unless they get the permission of the board.

Mr. LENNOX. The section says they can run at the rate of ten miles if they have their track fenced, they can run ten miles an hour without street protection of any kind. There is no provision in the Act respecting fencing across the streets; therefore, without coming to the board at all, they can run at a higher speed than ten miles an hour. If they come to the board the provision is 'or unless provision is made by some regulation or order of the board.' The minister says that that permission is coupled with a regulation by the board. I submit there is no such provision in the statute. This board is the creature of a statute, it has no power beyond that which is conferred upon it by statute. The statute gives a railway company the right to come to the board and ask them for an increased rate of speed. I submit it is not intended by the section that the board shall prescribe any directions by which the railway company shall be governed. It is inconsistent with the contention that the railway company should fence the road, because it is all a part of the section with which we are now dealing. It is putting in the hands of the board a power which we have not considered right in the past, a power to say that the railway company may run at a greater speed than ten miles an hour when no protection is provided for the public. The minister says: Why not give the board power to increase the rate of speed. The reason I submit why we should not give the board this power is that we have on the statute-book a regulation limiting the rate to six miles an hour, and the minister says that there has been no general movement in the direction of increasing the rate of speed. Therefore I say that finding upon the statute-book a regulation limiting the rate to six miles an hour, it is not wise to give railway companies the increased power from six miles to ten miles, and in addition, to confer upon this board the power to give an unlimited right beyond that ten miles.

Amendment (Hon. Mr. Blair) agreed to.

On section 229, clause 2,

In every case of a violation of this section, every such officer, servant or agent who has under or subject to his control, management or direction, any engine, tender or car which, or any portion of which, is allowed to stand on such highway, longer than the time specified in this section, is liable on summary conviction to a penalty not exceeding fifty dollars, and the company is also liable for each violation, to a like penalty; provided always that if such alleged violation is in the opinion of the court excusable, the action for the penalty may be dismissed but with costs in any event against the company.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS moved to strike out the words 'servant or agent' on the second line, and insert after the word 'has' on the same line the word 'directly.' Also to insert after the word 'is' on the fourth line the words 'wilfully or negligently.'

Mr. LANCASTER. Why should these words go in? I do not think that is a good amendment. The Bill requires that this shall not be done. If a man does not do his duty you make it necessary to prove that his remissness has not been wilful or negligent. If it is required that these people are to do certain things it should be assumed that they are responsible if these things are not done. If it is necessary for them to show that they are incapacitated in any way from carrying out the law the onus should be on them. If you expect them to carry out the duty laid upon them you should not put it in the power of any company or any person to say: we did not do our duty but you cannot prove that we failed in our duty wilfully or negligently.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I would suppose that if an engine were to break down on the highway or to be snowed under a snowbank on a highway it would be rather hard to hold the company or the men responsible.

Mr. FOWLER. You provide for that in the latter part of subsection 2 by the words 'provided always that if such alleged violation is in the opinion of the court excusable.' It seems to me that the section as it stands in the Bill is all right, and if you introduce the words you propose you are going to spoil it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Strike it out.

Mr. KENDALL. I would like to ask the hon. minister if the Bill makes any provision to prevent the public from being held up by a shunting engine at a crossing?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, that is what we are doing.

Mr. KENDALL. In this section ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. KENDALL. I do not see any evidence of it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Well, that is what I think we are doing. Perhaps we have failed, but we are trying to do that. I beg to move that subsection 2 be amended by striking out the words at the end of the section 'but with costs in any event against the company.'

Mr. FOWLER. I do not think these words should be struck out, because, how is anyone bringing the action to know that there is an excuse on the part of the railway company until the matter has come before the court ? I think the hon. minister is putting an unfair burden upon the person who has been obstructed upon the highway. I think that the hon. minister should leave that section as it is now providing that costs in any event shall be against the company.

Mr. LANCASTER. Leave it as printed, because, prima facie, there has been a breach and if the company has an indulgence given it by the court it should pay the costs.

Mr. GALLIHER. I think you should leave the matter in the discretion of the court.

Mr. LANCASTER. Not when there has been a breach.

Mr. GALLIHER. If the court says that the breach is excusable surely the costs should be in the discretion of the court.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I would rather strike the whole section out than say as the present Bill says, that the cost shall be in any event against the company.

Mr. FOWLER. I do not know but that the suggestion of the hon. member for Yale and Cariboo (Mr. Galliher) is a good one. The question of cost should be left to the discretion of the court. I would like to know what the hon. minister thinks about it. I do not think it should be struck out and left in such a position that the party making the complaint should get no costs where his action was shown to be justifiable. If it is left within the discretion of the court then, it is merely a matter of spite on the part of the person bringing the action, the court will not give him his costs, but if it is shown that his action is justifiable and if it is found that the obstruction is excusable, then the court will give costs to the complainant.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Does the hon. gentleman agree with the suggestion of the hon. member for Yale and Cariboo, that it ought to be left in the discretion of the court ?

Mr. FOWLER. Yes, absolutely.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Then, he will agree with my amendment to strike these words out.

Mr. LANCASTER. No, because if you struck them out the complainant would not get costs at all.

Mr. LENNOX. In Ontario costs will follow the event.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think so.

Mr. LANCASTER. The person bringing the action might fail because of the indulgence given to the company, but he ought to get his costs because he is justified in laying the information. Therefore, I think the hon. member for Yale and Cariboo is quite right in saying that costs should be within the discretion of the court.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am quite agreeable to the question of costs being left in the discretion of the court.

Mr. FOWLER. Strike out the words 'but with costs in any event against the company' and insert in lieu thereof 'and costs shall be in the discretion of the court.'

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS moved :

That subsection two be amended by striking out the words 'but with costs in any event against the company' and inserting in lieu thereof 'and costs shall be in the discretion of the court.'

Section, as amended, agreed to.

On section 224,

Mr. PORTER. I was not in the House when section 224 of this Bill was considered, and I desire to call the attention of the minister to a matter which, I think, ought to be provided for by that section. This section provides :

The bell with which the engine is furnished shall be rung, or (except within the limits of cities or incorporated towns) the whistle sounded, at the distance of at least eighty rods from every place at which the railway crosses or is carried along any highway, and be kept ringing, or except as aforesaid, be sounded at short intervals, until the engine has crossed such highway.

In towns or cities or villages where railways pass, very frequently two and perhaps three, and in a case I know of four streets are crossed by the railway within a distance of eighty rods. I had occasion to try a case last fall with the Bay of Quinté Railway in which the court had to construe the section of the old Act which is similar to this. In that particular case the railway started from the Rathbun Company's works and before it reached what is known as the Kingston road, it had to cross diagonally four streets in the town. Leaving the Rathbun Company's works the whistle was sounded and they kept on ringing the bell and sounding the whistle until the engine had crossed the first street. That sounding of the whistle and that ringing of the bell was all within eighty roads of the Kingston road, but they ceased blowing the whistle and ceased ringing the bell after the engine had crossed the first street and they contended before the court that under this section they were not obliged to sound the whistle or ring the bell after crossing the first street it being within eighty rods of the Kingston road. A person passing on the Kingston road was struck by the train and seriously injured, his horse killed and his wagon demolished. The case was tried before Sir John Boyd and he held that the railway company having sounded the whistle and having rung the bell until the engine had crossed the first highway they had complied with the section of the statute, and they were not obliged to sound the whistle or ring the bell when crossing the intermediate streets, they being within eighty rods of the first crossing. It seemed to me to be a very hard ruling, but nevertheless the case was argued as ably as I could, and that was the decision. This being the construction placed upon the law by the courts, it appears to me that this clause should be amended so as to obviate such a ruling in future. I invite the attention of the minister to the matter.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Did the hon. gentleman appeal the case ?

Mr. PORTER. I did not appeal the case. I had no occasion to appeal it because the case went to the jury. The judge found that there was sufficient evidence to send the case to the jury and the jury beat the judge.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. PORTER. But in the judge's charge, he charged the jury that the company had performed its whole duty; the jury took the opposite view and held that the railway company had not performed its duty. They gave a verdict against the railway company and the railway company did not see fit to appeal. I would suggest that this section should be so amended as to compel the railway to sound the bell at every crossing.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is what it means.

Mr. PORTER. That is what is intended no doubt, but the opposite construction was placed upon it by the court.

Mr. GALLIHER. By the judge ; the jury set him right.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not see how it could possibly admit of such an interpretation ; I do not think you could use any language that could be clearer.

Mr. PORTER. Stress was laid by the court on the expression 'and to be kept ringing until the engine has crossed such highway.'

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That means every highway.

Mr. PORTER. That was my contention and the judge said, no.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Would it be held that this provision of the Act is complied with if a train started to go one hundred miles and rang the bell before starting, and not afterwards?

Mr. PORTER. That was not the holding. It was that if the whistle was sounded, eighty rods from the first highway it need not be sounded again on a highway within that eighty rods.

Mr. KENDALL. Would the minister be kind enough to point out to me where in this Bill the public are protected against a careless engineer who runs a train backward and forward on a crossing for say half an hour ? I know of a case where the public are delayed almost every day from fifteen minutes to half an hour by the shunting of cars across a highway.

Mr. MACLEAN. On what railway ?

Mr. KENDALL. The Dominion Coal Company's Railway, and the Intercolonial Railway.

Mr. MACLEAN. This Bill does not apply to the Intercolonial Railway.

Mr. KENDALL. It applies to the Dominion Coal Company's line.

Mr. FOWLER. The Intercolonial Railway is one of the worst offenders in that respect. I have known them to hold up traffic at a crossing for nearly half an hour.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am afraid that my hon. friend has a very sharp eye for any little sins of omission or commission on the Intercolonial Railway.

Mr. FOWLER. I do not think the minister is justified in saying that, because I have criticised the Intercolonial Railway very little since I have been in this House.

Mr. LANCASTER. Not half as much as it deserved.

Mr. FOWLER. Not half as much as it deserved.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not half as much as you think you might, I suppose.

Mr. FOWLER. Perhaps not half as much as I might in justice. I have suffered in the same way as the hon. member for Cape Breton, and I trust that the minister will, through his employees prevent that in future.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is no doubt that the employees are very often at fault. I do not see how you can stop engines from going backward and forward on highways as long as highways and trains exist. We provide that a train shall not stand at a crossing for longer than five minutes at one time, and that is not unreasonable.

Mr. KENDALL. That does not meet the case.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I suppose the only way to meet the case would be to stop the railway.

Mr. KENDALL. The station agent should be empowered to insist that the man on the locomotive should make reasonable provision for the passage of the traffic which accumulates at crossings. Again and again I have seen a number of vehicles stopped for half an hour while these cars were being shunted backward and forward. Provision should be made to prevent that.

Mr. MACLEAN. I will give the minister a case in point, where there ought to be a better regulation of the running of trains. There is a crossing in my constituency which is just at the exit of the Grand Trunk yard at East Toronto village. All the shunting tracks there converge on the main line, and the sorting of freight trains takes place. This is done so rapidly, the trains running backward and forward at intervals of only a few seconds, that there is no chance for vehicles to cross. I have seen from twelve to twenty vehicles stopped at that particular point and prevented from crossing by this shunting. The board ought to have power to compel these trains to check up, say every second time, long enough to allow vehicles to cross.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The board has that power.

Mr. FOWLER. This section of the Bill will not meet the case brought forward by the hon. member for Cape Breton (Mr. Kendall), because it does not apply to the Intercolonial Railway at all, and we who live along the line of that railway will have no redress in case of traffic being obstructed.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You will be able to get at it more easily than through the board.

Mr. FOWLER. It does not have much effect, though.

Mr. LANCASTER. Does the minister believe that it will be easier to bring the Intercolonial Railway to time than the railways controlled by this board ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. LANCASTER. Then I think he is fortifying the argument of the hon. gentlemen on this side against clothing the board with all these powers.

Mr. FOWLER. It might be easy for the hon. member for Cape Breton and those who think with him politically to bring the Intercolonial Railway to time, but the members on this side of the House may not find it so easy until we have a change of government.

Mr. MACLEAN. Will the minister tell me what clause protects the public in case of shunting ?

An hon. MEMBER. Section 229.

Mr. MACLEAN. That does not do it at all. That refers to a train standing on a crossing. There are ten tracks at the point I refer to, and if you get across one you are pocketed among the others. The trains keep going up and down the different tracks and completely block the traffic. I have been held at that crossing for over half an hour. The Bill does not protect the public in a case of that kind. I ask the minister to put in a small clause giving the board power to make a regulation to meet such a case.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think we might insert, in section 229, at the end of the first clause, these words :

Or by so using the tracks in the shunting as to obstruct public traffic for a longer period than three minutes at one time.

Mr. KENDALL. I scarcely think that meets the objection. They might obstruct the traffic for three minutes and then, after the intermission of a minute, obstruct it again.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They must allow the traffic to get across. If they do not allow sufficient time for the traffic to get across, they are obstructing.

Amendment agreed to.

On section 233—telegraphs and telephones,

Mr. MACLEAN. In connection with sections 233 and 234, I think there should be a clause of this kind :

The company shall, subject to the approval of the board, grant equal telephone entrance to its stations to all individuals or telephone companies asking therefor. For every case of violation of this section, the servant or agent who has charge of the station is liable on a summary conviction to a fine of $100, and the company is also liable for such violation to a fine of $500. Any contract between the company and a telephone company or individual for exclusive telephone entrance to a station is declared to be illegal.

I am now bringing up a question which is a substantial grievance existing all over this country to-day. It is a fact that the Grand Trunk, the Canadian Pacific and the Canadian Northern companies have entered into contracts with the Bell Telephone Company, whereby that company has an exclusive entrance into all the stations of these three great railways. The result is that if a municipality establishes a telephone system, as the two thriving towns of Port Arthur and Fort William have done, or if the farmers of any locality, when they cannot get a satisfactory service from the Bell Telephone Company, establish a telephone service of their own, they are denied entrance to the railway stations of these railways. I say that should not be, but the railway companies should be compelled to give a telephone entrance to their stations to all persons applying for it on equal terms. In the township of Markham, in my constituency, and in the adjoining township of Pickering, in West Ontario, the farmers for a long time wanted telephone communication, and could not get it from the Bell Telephone Company. At last eighteen farmers and storekeepers in that neighbourhood united and established their own telephone system. Every one of them was a good customer of the Canadian Pacific Railway, travelled over it and gave it their freight; and when they established this private telephone line and asked for a connection with the Locust Hill station of the Canadian Pacific Railway, they were told that they could not have it, that the agreement to which I have referred precluded it. The result is that these people cannot have telephone access to the station to ask whether the train is on time, whether their freight has arrived, or any other question in connection with the traffic of the railway.

The agreement to which I have referred is against public policy. I consulted eminent counsel and obtained the opinion that it was illegal. I had the company indicted before the grand jury, but the judge held that it was doubtful whether the charge held or not, and instructed the grand jury to dismiss the case, or have the indictment drawn in a different way. If that be the case, surely the law ought to be amended. Let me state another instance, and I am sorry that the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Dyment) is not here to back me up. The two thriving towns of Port Arthur and Fort William established a very satisfactory telephone system, owned by the municipalities, on the same lines as those followed by municipalities in Great Britain, yet although these two towns are on the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and do almost all their business with that railway, they are deprived of telephone access to the two stations in these places. That has occurred more or less all over Canada, and if we are to encourage the establishment of municipal telephone systems in this country, the law must be changed and the farmers in the municipalities must be given access to the railway station for telephone purposes. There is nothing of so much importance to the farming community to-day as the establishment of rural telephones. It has done a great deal in the United States to make life on the farm interesting and enjoyable, but if these people, who are forcing the monopoly to cut down its rates, are not to be allowed to bring their lines into the railway stations, they will not be able to do business. Half the telephone business of the farmers has to do with questions of freight, and the farmers can only get the information they desire by having free access to the railway stations. I have heard it argued in this House that this would interfere with the management of railways, because it would take up too much of the time of the station agent, and interfere with his other duties, but he need not answer the telephone at all unless when he is doing nothing else. Besides any man is free to go into a station and ask about his goods and the arrival and departure of trains, and why should he not have equal liberty to put these questions through a telephone? There is nothing unfair in this, and in any case surely the railway company is in a position to employ a boy or girl to answer these telephone calls. The other day I heard a gentleman say, in discussing this question, not very far from here, that if any attempt were made in the west to prevent the farmers having access with their telephones to railway stations, there would soon be cutting of wires. Well, when the telephone system is extended to that country, not a single line except the Bell Telephone Company will have access to the railway stations. Is it right that these railway companies, which have obtained enormous franchises from this country, should discriminate against any body who wants telephone access to their stattions? It is not in the interests of the farmers, it is not in the interests of the people who have given these railway companies immense subsidies and franchises.

Mr. CLARKE. It is questionable if it is in the interest of the railway companies.

Mr. MACLEAN. It is not in the interest of the railway companies themselves. As I pointed out in a telegram I sent to Sir Thomas Shaughnessey, surely you do not intend to treat in this way the people who are your best customers, who furnish traffic to your road, and who are simply asking the privilege of telephone access to your station. To-day there are private lines waiting the decision of parliament on this question.

Mr. COWAN. Do you want every private line to have access to the railway stations?

Mr. MACLEAN. I have made it subject to the approval of the board. If you build a line to the station and wish to speak over it to the railway agent, to ask about your freight, why should you not be free to do so ? A man can make the inquiry by entering the door, why should he not be allowed to speak through a hole in the wall, when it can be done so much more expeditiously.

Mr. GALLIHER. But do not have it a private line.

Mr. MACLEAN. Well, the Bell line is a private line. I do not see how else you can define it.

Mr. GALLIHER. Oh, no.

Mr. MACLEAN. It is a line owned by a private corporation.

Mr. GALLIHER. For the use of the public.

Mr. MACLEAN. But a private line should have as much right as a corporation line with regard to access to a railway station. Let the hon. gentleman (Mr. Galliher) suggest how it can be done otherwise than it is done here. All I want is not to discriminate against one line in favour of another. I want this nefarious agreement between the Canadian Pacific and the Grant Trunk and the Bell Telephone Company declared to be against public policy. In my Bill I propose to provide that any contract between a telephone company and a railway company giving exclusive access to the railway station, be declared illegal. And it ought to be declared illegal in the interest of the farming community and the business community, and for the general progress of the country. Nothing will do so much for the country as the cheapening of telephone communication. And here is this agreement made last year. Representatives of the company have said it is only a renewal of a former agreement. And the Bell Telephone Company got a year's grace from this parliament last year, and the Minister of Justice gave a pledge to the people of the country that he would bring in a law regulating the operation of the telephone companies, but so far, that law is not forthcoming. I have introduced a Bill of that kind, which is now before a sub-committee. I do not know that it will ever reach the House. But, now that the hon. minister has brought in a Bill dealing with railways, and now that we are considering the clause dealing with telegraphs and telephones, I appeal to the minister to take my suggestion and incorporate in his Bill this clause, or a clause having a similar effect.

Mr. ROSS (Ontario). I notice that in these clauses relating to telegraphs and telephones, the position of the government is satisfactorily guarded. The government may have the exclusive use of telephone and telegraph lines, and the government may erect telegraph or telephone lines on the railway's right of way. But since these sections were formed, a new element has sprung up in the country. That element is the telephone business. The telephone is extending throughout all the country districts. The matter which the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean) speaks of was a very live question in the riding next to mine last season. But the matter the hon. gentleman speaks of, the agreement between the railway companies and the telephone companies, was of such a nature that it precluded the farmers from obtaining connection with the railway station by their own independent line of telephone. Now, I seriously think that, as the telephone is to be such an important factor in our home life, we should see to it that the rights of the people in it are carefully guarded. I cannot see, for my part, why an independent telephone line should not have communication with the railway station. In many places throughout this country the railway station is practically the centre of the district. It is there the goods are carried to and it is from there the goods are taken ; and the communication of the people seems to be naturally with the railway station. And, the people being accustomed to the use of the telephone, I cannot see any difference between a person calling up the railway station by telephone and one going in at the door to ask a question of the station master. However, if it is thought to be too great a hardship to place upon the agent at the station the duty of answering the telephone, why not allow an arrangement whereby an independent line or lines could keep an operator there for their one purpose ? Some arrangement of that kind should be made in the interests of the public. I have been thinking over the telephone business of the country, and I am not sure that the government should not own the trunk telephone lines and allow anybody to communicate over them who desires to do so. That is a question, of course, which will come up in the future. But we have telephone lines widely in use now, and the use is rapidly extending. It is a cheap means of communication as it is now carried on. In the western states, I am told, the farmers, even use the top wire of their fences for telephoning, and when they come to a highway crossing, they simply elevate the wire. It offers a very convenient way for the farmers to communicate with one another. Of course, it is not suitable for long distances, but, over short distances it works very well. There is no doubt that the telephone is with us to stay, and it is bound to be the medium of communication for the people.. Any law that interferes with the rights of the people in the use of the telephone matter, should be cancelled.

Mr. WRIGHT. There is a point to which the attention of the government should be drawn, but which I have not heard mentioned so far. I am in the electric business and am planting poles about the streets of our town and know the difficulties we have to contend with, both with the people and also with the telephone and telegraph companies. We have gone to a great deal of expense in our town improving our streets, putting down nice boulevards, macadamizing the roads, laying concrete sidewalks, and generally trying to improve and beautify the town in every way. And it is most objectionable to have the telegraph company plant hideous poles wherever they see fit, not painted, but covered over with all kinds of notices, advertisements of patent medicines and so on. Something should be done to compel these people to put up uniform poles and paint them, and also to prevent them planting them where they are objectionable to the people. We paint our poles, but the telegraph people refuse to do so. These poles are an eyesore on our most travelled thoroughfare. We think that something should be done to bring these poles under the control of the government or somebody so that these people may be obliged to make these poles look as respectable as they can be made, and also to place them where they will be least objectionable. We think also that it is not necessary that the telegraph poles should be on the principal street of the town. We do not object to the telephone poles, because they are used by every one. But the telegraph poles can just as well be put on the back streets. As to the main line leading to the office, which naturally would be on a main street, we would not object to the poles. But, except for this, there is no reason why they should occupy the most prominent place in our town.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). This discussion impresses upon me the necessity of the government taking a step in advance, as has been done in other countries. In New South Wales, the telephone system throughout that whole state, including the city of Sydney, with a population much larger than that of any city of the Dominion, is owned by the government. In New Zealand, the government owns the telegraphs, and they also own their railways, and that is something that we also should have in the interest of the people of the Dominion.

Mr. ROSS (Ontario). While I agree with much that is in the motion of the hon. member for East York, I think that some of its provisions are rather drastic. I do not know that I should go so far as to enact a fine against the operator in case he refused to answer the telephone. It seems to me they would obey the law without a penalty. I suppose, however, you could hardly have a law without a penalty, but it struck me, as I listened to the amendment that the penalty seemed rather hard upon the operator, and, perhaps, upon the company.

Mr. MACLEAN. I have made this amendment on the lines of section 229, where there is a clause for a penalty in case of violation. I do not insist on the large sum of $50 and $500, if there is some kind of penalty. But I want to say in the last clause that any existing contracts of this nature are declared illegal. Now, I may be told that I will be interfering with existing rights. But as a matter of fact this contract is felt by the railway companies to be so bad that they have put into it a clause themselves which will enable them to cancel it. I believe, Sir Thomas Shaughnessy is ashamed of it to-day, and is only waiting for an opportunity to cancel it, because it is so unfair towards the people who patronize his road. So if it is urged that to declare this contract illegal would interfere with any vested rights, I have only to say that the companies themselves have guarded themselves by inserting a clause that they can declare it off. While I am on my feet, I wish also to point out that in many places where these independent lines have been started, there is no Bell Telephone Company there, and yet the Bell Telephone Company debars independent lines from coming into the stations. These telephone lines run several miles from the railroad stations, to little centres twelve miles from the stations, where store-keepers, farmers and drovers wish to be in communication with the station, but they cannot get access to that station by reason of the agreement with the Bell Telephone Company. If that be the case, surely in all justice we ought to give these drovers, these farmers, and these traders, a right to use an independent telephone line in obtaining information from the railway stations.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Is this amendment a subsection or is it an amendment to the section ?

Mr. MACLEAN. I will leave that to the minister to determine.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman proposes, I understand, to provide a penalty as a subclause to 234.

Mr. MACLEAN. In addition to (B) which deals with telegraph and telephones, in any way the hon. gentleman likes.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is certainly not germane to the subjects referred to in either of the two sections.

Mr. MACLEAN. It is germane to telephones.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not see how it would be a subclause to either of the other two.

Mr. MACLEAN. I did not say a subclause, it is to amend the section coming under B, which deals with telegraphs and telephones.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am not going to deal with that, that is a private motion. The question arises whether this committee is ready to adopt such a proposition as the hon. gentleman has made. I am compelled to state to the committee what I think are objections to it. I think it would disfigure the whole Bill if we were to add to it a clause of this character. The hon. gentleman proposes that 'subject to the approval of the board, the railway company shall grant equal telephone entrance to its stations to all individuals or telephone companies asking therefor.' Now, is that not a very serious proposition, that railway companies shall grant equal telephone entrance to all telephone companies and to all individuals ? In the first place, the suggestion that any individual may claim the privilege of using the railway company's offices for this purpose, is so extreme and so indefensible a proposition, that I do not think it requires to be thought over very much.

Mr. MACLEAN. Does the hon. gentleman recollect that all this is subject to the approval of his own board, which has his confidence ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I trust the parliament of Canada is not going to put upon record any declaration that the board will have to consider and determine whether individuals shall have the right to claim entrance to the stations of railroad companies. It is an utterly absurd proposition, it is entirely in violation of all principle. What right has this parliament to say that A, B, C and D may take possession of the property of a railway company, or of the accommodation which a railway company affords in their business, that telephone companies may come in and use their property, 'free gratis for nothing,' heat, light, room, wall space, accommodation, all for nothing ? What kind of a proposition is that ? It is not merely socialistic, it is confiscatory. You incorporate a railway company for the purpose of conducting a railway business; what right have you to say that they shall be under compulsion to allow their offices to be used by anybody that a telephone company may want to send there for the purpose of tendering a telephone message, that they shall provide wall space for that telephone, office room for a clerk or agent, that they shall bear out of their own pockets the expense ? The telephone company is a prosperous institution, it is a uesful and important institution, and necessary for the business of the country, contributory to the success and prosperity of the country; but are you going to allow it to call upon the railway company to pay the expense of the telephone company doing its own business ? Now, the hon. gentleman does not seriously mean to ask this committee to consider a proposition of that kind.

Mr. MACLEAN. I never was more serious in my life, but I do not think the hon. gentleman is.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). If one individual, then 15,000 or 20,000 may be allowed the same privilege.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think it would be unfair to limit it to 20,000. I think the hon. gentleman would not be satisfied with less than 100,000. What I think would solve the whole problem, without taking anybody's property or time, or imposing any duties upon anybody else, which they do not want to assume from a business point of view, would be to permit somebody living in the immediate locality, in the neighbourhood of the station—as the hon. gentleman said, these stations are generally in populous towns, somewhere near the centre of the town—let the telephone company have a telephone in some place handy to the station, and when somebody wants to do business, let him go into the office and pay the agent for doing it, pay as they ought to pay. That would be a reasonable suggestion, and there would be no occasion then for confiscating anybody's property. There is no limit. I do not know where my hon. friend would stop in his socialistic legislation. The word 'radical' does not begin to express it.

Mr. MACLEAN. Go on, go on.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. And then does any one but my hon. friend suppose that a contract or agreement which has been made between a telephone company and a railway is illegal ?

Mr. MACLEAN. An agreement against public policy ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Against public policy ?

Mr. MACLEAN. Yes.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My hon. friend is to be the final tribunal to determine what public policy is.

Mr. MACLEAN. As much as the hon. gentleman is.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My hon. friend is not willing to have anybody but himself have an opinion on this subject.

Mr. MACLEAN. Yes, he is.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. He is not willing to admit that there is any room to doubt the reasonableness of his opinion and he is going to ask parliament to declare that a binding contract made under the law is illegal. My hon. friend tells us that the Canadian Pacific Railway themselves are ashamed of the contract they made with the Bell Telephone Company. My hon. friend no doubt has communicated with the president of the Canadian Pacific Railway and has been informed that such is the case because he would not say so if he did not believe it. If they are ashamed why do they not seek for some mode of escape ? Under a clause of this contract that my hon. friend wants this parliament to declare to be illegal when it is illegal, provision is made that by notice either party may terminate the agreement. This shameful agreement which the Canadian Pacific Railway admittedly avow is one that they are ashamed of has a clause which will enable them to terminate it. Terminate it and it is all over and you do not need to ask parliament to discredit itself by assuming to declare that a contract which is valid and legal is illegal. My hon. friend, with his extreme, radical ideas, says that this is against public policy. There is no reason for such legislation at all. These people can proceed upon a business basis, pay their money like men, have somebody at hand at the station to go in and get the information they want and answer their calls. My hon. friend asserts that the machinery of a great parliament shall be employed in doing something which it would only be justified in doing under the most extreme circumstances. My hon. friend has told us the remedy. It is at hand and these people can employ it at any time they please. I shall trust that parliament will not feel called upon to proceed any further with the consideration of the amendment proposed by my hon. friend.

Mr. MACLEAN. Mr. Chairman, I have had a good deal of this kind of badinage from the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals in connection with these propositions which I have introduced into this House, but I intend to follow him and to meet him on this question before the people of Ontario. He will have to settle with his supporters from Ontario for what he has said here to-day, and the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) will have to settle with the people of Ontario for the nonsense that the hon. minster has spoken here to-day. The hon. gentleman has spoken as the attorney of the telephone companies, as a holder of telephone stock, and not as Minister of Railways and Canals, protecting public interests. He says that such a proposition as this disgraces the Bill. Let me read section 278 of the hon. gentleman's Bill :

> Every company which grants any facilities for the carriage of goods by express to any incorporated express company or person, shall grant equal facilities, on equal terms and conditions, to any other incorporated express company which demands the same.

Is that socialistic ? Is that radical ? Is that allowing equal terms to all ? What he said of me he said of his own Bill. Has he any explanation to offer to the committee ? Has he any excuse to offer to the committee or to the farmers of this country for this socialistic, this confiscatory legislation ? He uses the latest Oxford and Cambridge accent of the word 'confiscatory,' and I agree with him in that.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am glad that the hon. gentleman agrees with me in something.

Mr. MACLEAN. That the way for these people to do, the hon. minister says, is to put a telephone in some house adjoining the sation and get somebody from the station to attend to it. The way the answers are got to-day is through the Bell Telephone Company having a telephone in every station in this country. The railway companies are only too glad to allow them in, to give wall space and to give the necessary service to answer the calls. But by reason of this contract they say that no one else shall get in. The Grand Trunk Railway, Canadian Pacific Railway and Canadian Northern are allowed free telephones in consideration of that concession. They all get something for the exclusive use of the stations, but they get it at the expense of their own customers. If the people of Canada, who want this question of telephone service settled, insist upon their representatives in this House voting for this socialistic proposition, this radical proposition, they will get what they want and the question will be settled in the public interest. I would like the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals to go to any place in the county of York and talk as he has talked here to-day, or, I would like the right hon. Prime Minister to go with his entourage, including the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, and speak in the same manner as the hon. minister has spoken here to-day.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I would not be the least bit afraid to.

Mr. MACLEAN. We will meet the hon. minister there. He has asked his followers to throw this reasonable proposition out. I have brought it forward in a reasonable way, I have based it on a clause already in the Bill, I have done it in the public interest. I do not think it is socialistic, but I think it is right. Such legislation is demanded by the country to-day. Are the farmers of Canada not to have the same privileges that the farmers of the United States enjoy ? The people in the North-west Territories are rising to the importance of having telephone lines all through the west and we are inviting immigrants to come and settle upon our western lands. Are we to tell them that they are not to be treated in the same way as they are treated in Europe in regard to telephones ? Does the right hon. leader of the government not know that in Europe, in Norway and Sweden, in Germany and elsewhere, where the people own their telephones, everybody has the right of access to the railway station to telephone and inquire as to the shipment of his goods. Moreover, they have their telephone for eight, ten and twelve dollars a year, while the Bell Telephone Company, which is protected by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, is charging the people of Canada $25, $30, $40, $50, $60, and up to $100 a year for a similar service. I pay $175 a year for my telephone service.

Mr. GALLIHER. It is cheap at that.

Mr. MACLEAN. It is cheap at that and I can pay it. But, I have neighbours who cannot pay it. I know a gentleman living six miles out of the city who implored the Bell Telephone Company to give him telephone connection. Doctors, who are subject to call at all hours of the night are unable to secure a telephone service. My neighbour is a veterinary surgeon and horses are driven from five to twenty miles every night to his place by people who want him to go out and attend to their sick cattle. He cannot get telephone connection for less than $150 a year. This may be a radical proposition, it may be a socialistic proposition, but it deals with a crying grievance all over this country and that grievance is the attitude of the Bell Telephone Company towards the people. It is manifestly opportune to introduce this subject in connection with the railway law which is before the House, but the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals says that to do something in the interests of the people who transact business with railways is socialistic and confiscatory. I do not agree with him and I do not think hon. gentlemen opposite agree with the attitude of the hon. minister. I have had conversations with a great many of them and I have had letters from a great many people on this subject. I have spent a good deal of time in dealing with this question. In dealing with this question before a special committee not far away from here I have had paid lawyers of the Bell Telephone Company holding me up day after day and not allowing me to make any progress. I may not be able to make any progress here, but there is a higher court in this country, the court of the people. The people are thinking about this condition of affairs and I am going to talk to the people all over the province of Ontario. I am just beginning a career in connection with it. I do not know whether it will amount to much or little, but I am going to the people of Ontario to discuss this question with them. I have discussed it in the press and I have had a certain amount of recognition, but I am going on the stump if there is an election coming on and I want to meet the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals on the stump in Ontario, and hear him tell the people that legislation dealing with these telephone companies and compelling a railway company to give equal terms to all telephone organizations is bad legislation, is radical legislation, and is disfiguring his Bill. Is not his Bill disfigured by some other things ? I am not disfiguring his Bill. I am giving him credit for his Bill. I am giving the minister credit that he is attempting for the first time to give a broad general Act dealing with the railway question. I congratulate the Prime Minister and his colleagues on having the courage to bring in a Bill of this kind and I am willing to help them to perfect it.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. MACLEAN. In no way have I tried to block that Bill. I am only trying to help them perfect it in the interests of the people. But, because I am doing that, I am told I am doing something socialistic, and something against public policy. Well, I am not. I tell the Minister of Railways and Canals that if he persists in the attitude he has taken here to-day, all I want is to meet him in the province of Ontario. I want him to come to Locust Hill in the township of Markham, in my county where there is a Liberal majority of 300 and if they do not knock that township out of my county—I can meet the Minister of Railways and Canals in that township and I can knock that 300 Liberal majority to smithereens on that one question alone.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I hope my hon. friend (Mr. Maclean) will not insist on this challenge until after the session.

Mr. MACLEAN. All right ; we will have it then.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. As it is six o'clock, and as I am unable to continue with the Bill after recess, I will move that the committee rise and report progress.

Motion agreed to, and progress reported.

CANADIAN NORTHERN RAILWAY.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 209) respecting certain aid for the extension of the Canadian Northern Railway.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at Eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

MARCONI WIRELESS TELEGRAPH COMPANY.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 131) to incorporate the Marconi Wireless Telegraph Company of Canada, Limited.—Mr. McIsaac.

Mr. WADE. Going back to section 12 I see that the words 'with the approval of the Governor General in Council' have been added to this clause as it appears in the original Bill. I cannot imagine how these words got in there, because it would be a most extraordinary provision that you would have to get the consent of the Governor General in Council to do what in substance you are incorporated to do. It certainly was not the intention of the committee that these words should be in the clause, and if I am in order I will move that they be struck out.

Mr. SPROULE. It was at the suggestion of the Minister of Railways that these words were put in. Would it not be well to wait till he comes?

Mr. WADE. No, he did not suggest them. I do not know where they came from. I would appeal to the intelligence of the committee whether they should be put in.

Mr. SPROULE. As the section provides for laying wires across streams, it would seem as if the assent of the Governor in Council would be necessary.

Mr. WADE. There would be no objection to insert words providing that the company should get leave from the Governor in Council to cross any navigable water; but it certainly was never the intention that they should have to go to the Governor in Council to get leave to construct any part of their works.

Mr. SPROULE. What does the Minister of Justice say?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I say that when a Bill comes here reported from the committee, I would be very loth to interfere with it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I may say that the Bill was very carefully considered in the Railway Committee. I remember that there was a very full discussion of this clause as well as the other clauses.

Mr. HENDERSON. There seems to be no member of the committee able to say whether the amendment is or is not what the Railway Committee approved of. I have no reason to doubt that the clerk of the committee was very careful in writing in the amendment; but as there seems to be a doubt whether it expresses the intention of the committee or not, I think the proper course is to send the Bill back to the Railway Committee, where the question could be settled in a few minutes. Very often, when a clause is to be redrafted or an amendment made, it is left with the Chairman of the committee and the Minister of Railways to draft a clause to meet the views of the committee. That is done for convenience and to save time, and it may be that this clause was drafted in that way. Therefore, I think the safe course is to let the Bill go back to the committee for further consideration.

Motion withdrawn, and Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

CENTURY LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 175) respecting the Century Life Insurance Company.—Mr. Morrison.

On section 1,

Mr. WALTER SCOTT. I wish, by consent, to propose an amendment to the first clause—an addition of a subclause in these words:

> Provided that the liability of any person who at the time of the passing of this Act may be indebted to the company by subscription in the shares of the company or otherwise, shall not be affected by this Act, and any such liability shall be held to be the same as if this Act had not been passed.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. There is a rule which prevents important amendments being made to private Bills in the committee of the whole without giving one day's notice.

Mr. SPROULE. Let the committee rise, and give notice of the amendment.

Mr. SCOTT moved that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to, and progress reported.

CANADIAN TRANSPORTATION AND STORAGE COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 176) to incorporate the Canadian Transportation and Storage Company.—Mr. German.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. This gives the provisional directors all the powers of permanent directors.

Mr. MACLEAN. What is the object of this company?

Mr. CAMPBELL. To erect elevators at Port Colborne and put on a line of boats to carry grain from Port Colborne to Montreal, and also from the upper lakes down to Port Colborne. The intention is to transport the products of the North-west down through the St. Lawrence canals to Montreal. It is impossible for steamers that come down the upper lakes to pass through the canals, as they draw from eighteen to twenty feet of water, and the depth of the canals is only fourteen feet. The object is to erect large elevators at Port Colborne and then put on a line of boats of full canal size to carry the grain to Montreal. The power is also taken to construct steamers on the upper lakes to carry the grain to Port Colborne.

Mr. MACLEAN. How will this affect the improvements which the Minister of Public Works contemplates making to the harbour at Port Colborne ?

Mr. CAMPBELL. The government, I understand, have deepened Port Colborne harbour to twenty or twenty-two feet, and have built a breakwater to protect the harbour from the storms on the lake. This company is asking for power to erect elevators and put on steamers to carry the grain down to Montreal.

Mr. SPROULE. The objectionable part is that you are giving to the provisional directors the power of collecting money, depositing it in bank and taking it out and using it, without being elected. These are powers we never give provisional directors, and I see no reason why we should do so in this case.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE moved that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to, and progress reported.

ALGONQUIN LUMBER AND POWER COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 165) to incorporate the Algonquin Lumber and Power Company.—Mr. Gould.

Mr. MACLEAN. I would ask the Minister of Justice if it is usual to allow a company to increase its capital stock to any amount, as this company is allowed to do under section 4 ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick). I do not see how we could very well object to allowing a trading company to increase their capital stock, if they pay it up and subject themselves to the usual conditions.

Mr. MACLEAN. Might it not be required to make application to increase its capital ? A bank, if it wants to increase its capital must file a statement, receive approval and everything of that kind. I do not know that I have ever seen a clause like this go through in any private Bill before.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. An ordinary trading company, such as this, is very different from a bank. And a bank does not need to make application to parliament for increase of its capital——

Mr. MACLEAN. But it has to make application under a general Act.

Bill reported ; read the third time, and passed.

SECOND READING.

Bill (No. 205) respecting the Western Alberta Railway Company.—Mr. Campbell.

SUPPLY—LETTER OF MR. W. McCRANEY, EX-M.P.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Hon. Wm. Paterson) moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. JABEL ROBINSON (West Elgin). Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a word. I was always under the impression, and I think most farmers hold the same view, that parliament was instituted for the purpose of legislating in the interest of the whole people. But we find now that grafters are imposing upon the government, and working the government for their own special interest. The cry comes not only from the Yukon, but from British Columbia. I have received an open letter to-day. No doubt most of the members have received a copy of the same. It is from British Columbia, and is signed by Mr. W. McCraney, ex-M.P. for Halton. I take the liberty of reading part of it to the House.

Mr. HEYD. Oh, do not ; we know all about it.

Mr. ROBINSON (West Elgin). It will do hon. members good to hear it :

> Moved by positive duty to true Liberal principles, I take the liberty of writing you. The question in my mind and in hundreds more of Liberals here is, has it come to this that the great unchangeable principles of true liberalism as held by Robert Baldwin, Chief Justice Dorion, Joseph Howe, George Brown, Alexander Mackenzie, Oliver Mowat and Wilfrid Laurier, men of the very highest ideals of public and private morality, duty, character, honour, honesty, unselfish, noble, patriotic citizenship, shall be dragged down to low expediency, and here in this constituency become articles of merchandise and for securing spoils for this Vancouver Tammany ring ? The leaders of the ring are Boss Robert Kelly, Robert G. Macpherson, D. G. McDonald, alias McDonnell (see Toronto 'Globe,' September 16, 1898. 'The ringers run to earth.')
> Frank Burnett and Norman McLean, who are not Liberals, and never were any more than for what they could scheme out of it. These men are simply opportunists, after railway charters to barter in, mining concessions, Yukon supplies without public tender (as in the past six years)——

Mr. TALBOT. The hon. gentleman is reading statements reflecting on the character of a member of this House. I do not think that should be allowed.

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin). If it reflects on the hon. gentleman, I will not read another word.

Mr. TALBOT. I raise the point of order.

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin). I think, Mr. Speaker, I have read enough. You can all read it. If the hon. gentleman takes exception to it——

Mr. SPEAKER. I must call the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that he is not permitted by the rules of this House to read anything which imputes motives to members of the House.

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin). I do not think there is any member of this House implicated—I hope not.

Mr. TALBOT. The name of a member of this House is mentioned in that letter read by the hon. gentleman who is now standing up, and I ask your ruling. It is mentioned several times in the letter.

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin). If the hon. gentleman takes exception to it, I will not read it.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Read it.

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin)—(reading) :

If this is correct, is the government prepared to consider the interests of Vancouver first, as against a ring of franchise hunters, as in the case of Deadman's Island, which the government were practically giving away on a lease of twenty-five years at $500 per year, when the real value of a twenty years lease of that valuable property is $5,000 a year or more.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not think I need read any more. I do not wish to load 'Hansard' down with it. You can all read it, for I have just learned that every member of the House has got one. I just wish to say this, that we have so many grafters in Canada that it is almost impossible for this government, or any other government, to catch them, and it is time that some steps were taken to see that honesty prevails in this country.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Salaries of officers and inspectors of excise, &c., to provide for increases depending upon the result of excise examinations, $341,945.62.

Mr. BENNETT. When an item in reference to excise was up before, a question was raised as to the contract between the department and what is known as the Standard Chemical Company, of Longford, Ont. May I ask the minister if he has the contract now which he promised to lay on the Table ; and, furthermore, has the contract been renewed between the government and the Standard Chemical Company ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE (Hon. M. E. Bernier). If my hon. friend will wait a few minutes until we reach the item of $65,000 on the same page, I will give every explanation which he may require. Now, coming to this item, there is an increase of $14,516.25. That is made up of increases due to promotion examinations, regular increases, either statutory or increases which are granted annually to the different officers of the department, new appointments to replace officers who have died, been superannuated or removed, and appointments due to increase of business. There is another item of $655 which is due to granting increases which were not provided for in the estimates for current year. Another item of $200 is due to a change in the character of the office ; and finally, to provide for appointments to replace officers superannuated or dismissed. On the other hand, there are decreases due to—deaths, $2,700 ; superannuations, $3,200 ; retirements or dismissals, $4,350 ; amount voted that was not granted, $50 ; increases due to change in rank of officers, $5,290 ; total, $15,590, which deducted from $30,106.25, leaves $14,516.25.

Mr. WILSON. I would ask the minister the name of the excise officer in the town of Napanee, what his duties are, and what his salary is ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. The name of that officer is Mr. Anderson. He is the customs officer, and we pay him five per cent to collect the revenue of the Inland Revenue Department, which gives him $250.

Mr. WILSON. Are they paid quarterly, half-yearly, yearly, or how ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Yearly.

Mr. REID (Grenville). According to the Civil Service Act, is it necessary for men to pass the Civil Service examination to be appointed excise men in the Inland Revenue Department ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Yes, but in the case of deputy collectors, they are not required to pass such examination.

Mr. REID (Grenville). And then they are entitled to promotion ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. They are entitled to promotion if they pass the qualifying examination. In my opinion, which, perhaps, is not shared by every lawyer, two examinations are required, first, the preliminary for a certain position, and the qualifying for a higher rank. When an officer has been appointed to a position, if he wants to be promoted, he must pass the promotion examination.

Mr. REID (Grenville). All the officers except the deputy collector must pass an examination ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Yes, that is my opinion, but I must admit at the same time that this was not always the case.

Mr. REID (Grenville). As I understand the Civil Service Act it requires that collectors, excise men and all other officers must pass this examination ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Yes.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I would like to know if, since the hon. minister has been in office, he has made any appointments other than those that would come under this Act? Has he made any appointment to the position of collector of Inland Revenue from others than those who are entitled to promotion ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. There may be one or two exceptions of people having been appointed who were not in the service before. They were appointed collectors because they had passed their qualifying examination. It may have escaped my memory, but I think generally, that I have appointed men who have either passed their qualifying examination or their promotion examination and who were entitled to promotion.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I do not think the appointment of a man could escape the minister's memory very well, and for this reason : If there is a vacancy in his department and he requires the person selected to fill the position to have a certain qualification, certainly it would be impressed on him if he violated the Civil Service Act by appointing a man who did not possess that qualification. Therefore, I would like the hon. minister to say if he has violated the Civil Service Act ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Not to my knowledge.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The reason I asked the question was that the hon. minister knows that in my constituency he has kept the position of collector of Inland Revenue open for as I suppose a year or more. The position has not been filled and it has been currently reported that he intended appointing an outside gentleman who has not passed the examination and who has not been in the employ of the government. I would like to ask the hon. minister whether he intends violating the Civil Service Act so far as that is concerned ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I never heard the rumour that a stranger would be brought to Prescott to which place I have no doubt the hon. gentleman refers. The position was kept vacant for twelve months, or perhaps more, but the position was filled a few days ago by the promotion of Mr. Keilty, deputy collector, who has filled that position since the superannuation of the collector.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Then, the position has been finally filled ? In filling it by the appointment of Mr. Keilty who is a very capable man was it filled in accordance with the Civil Service Act ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Yes. I cannot say that Mr. Keilty had passed the qualifying examination, but he had passed the promotion examination and that would entitle him to the position.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I have no objection to Mr. Kelty, who is a very able man. In view of the fact that it is necessary that the man appointed to the position of collector of Inland Revenue must have been an officer of the service, the Act could easily be violated by simply appointing a man to the position of deputy and allowing him to act as collector.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. That is not my opinion.

Mr. REID (Grenville). In this case the hon. minister has filled the position in this way : When Mr. Keilty was appointed he said that he would simply appoint him deputy collector without requiring him to pass an examination of any kind. If a gentleman who is appointed deputy collector is allowed to keep the office open for a year, as in this case, and passes a simple promotion examination he can be appointed collector of the port. In that way, the Act has been violated. I would like to ask the hon. minister if that is not a way of getting around it.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. No, I think the hon. gentleman is mistaken altogether. First, Mr. Keilty was appointed an exciseman. After having passed the promotion examination as a third class officer he was appointed to the position of deputy collector and from that position to the position of collector.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The hon. minister knows that in that town if you have a collector you only require one deputy collector, and the hon. minister knows he got around the appointing of an excise man by appointing another deputy collector. Therefore, in that town he has two deputy collectors, and a collector. In that way the hon. minister got around the law in regard to the qualifications necessary for appointing an excise man. I would like to know if the work done in Prescott calls for the appointment of a second deputy collector ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. If there was a violation of the law it was violated the next day after it was passed. It has been the habit of the department since the law was passed to appoint deputy collectors belonging to Class A or Class B and according to the law no examination is required for either one or the other. This practice has been followed both by the present government and its predecessor and therefore there has been no new departure. This has been done since the law was enacted over 20 years ago. This is not the only place where deputy collectors are appointed. We have them in Montreal, Toronto, Windsor, Belleville and many other places ; in fact, this is the only available position for those who have not passed their examination. My own opinion is that this does not entitle gentlemen to be promoted to the position of collector unless they have qualified themselves afterwards, either by passing the qualifying examination or the promotion examination.

Mr. REID (Grenville). What I mean is this. In the town of Prescott, when the position of exciseman became vacant, the Civil Service Act required the minister to appoint a person who had passed the qualifying examination, and in order to get around that he appointed to the position of deputy collector a man who had never passed the civil service examination at all.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. That is the law.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I admit that. You can appoint him as deputy collector, but you immediately sent that gentleman out to fill the position of exciseman. That is overriding the Civil Service Act in every shape and form. Is not that a fact?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. If it is a fact, then it has been overridden hundreds of times. I have said that an exciseman is sometimes appointed temporarily until the examination takes place. If a man is to be appointed a deputy collector, neither qualifying nor promotion examination is required, but sometimes after they pass their examination they prefer to be appointed excisemen and then go up for their promotion examination. The only position open to those who have not passed their examination is that of deputy collector. We have done, and all governments have done the same thing, in appointing a man temporarily until the examination takes place.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I understand all that very well, but the minister is trying to get around the thing in hardly a fair way.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Not at all.

Mr. REID (Grenville). According to the minister's statement the deputy collector should have passed the promotion examination before he became collector. The minister has appointed another deputy collector since, and he therefore has a deputy collector there who has not passed the civil service examination, and who is filling the duties of exciseman.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Yes.

Mr. REID (Grenville). And the minister says that the appointment is made temporarily in order to give him a chance to qualify at the next civil service examination. If the law allows you to appoint a deputy collector who will fill the position of exciseman, then what is the good of the Civil Service Act in that respect?

Hon. Mr. COSTIGAN. I think there is a misunderstanding with regard to what the Civil Service Act is. I have studied the Act pretty carefully, and I have had some experience in administering it. To my mind, the Civil Service Act does not affect this appointment at all. There has been no violation of the Act in the appointment of this gentleman at Prescott; a gentleman whom I remember very well, and whom I know to be qualified for the position. I may say that I am glad to see that he has been appointed collector. The appointment of deputy collectors is made under a law passed by this parliament, and which requires no examination at all for that office. The only question about the promotion of officers in the Inland Revenue Department, outside of the first obligatory clause, which provides for their qualifying examination to get into the service, is arranged by regulations of the department. In this case Mr. Keilty might have been appointed at any time. He was eligible for that appointment. Though he might have been appointed deputy collector from the outside without passing an examination, he did not get into the department that way. He came into the department as a qualified exciseman, having passed the examination. He became a deputy collector legally, and he has now been appointed a collector legally, so that there is not the slightest violation of the Act at all. It is said that his place was filled by appointing a gentleman as deputy collector who has passed no examination. That may be. He did not require to pass an examination for that position. Whether wisely or unwisely, parliament has exempted deputy collectors of inland revenue, inspectors of weights and measures, city postmasters and one or two others, from passing the civil service examination, and so the Civil Service Act does not apply to them. It cannot be a violation of the Act, therefore, to appoint men who are eligible under the law as passed by this parliament. The appointment of Mr. Keilty is plainly a legal appointment in every sense according to the Civil Service Act. There is not a single section of that Act that can be quoted against it.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Judging from the tone of the remarks of the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Costigan) he wishes to leave the impression that I am finding fault with Mr. Keilty's appointment. I have stated to this House that I consider Mr. Keilty well qualified for the position, and I am glad to see him appointed. But the minister states that the appointment was legally made on account of Mr. Keilty being appointed an exciseman years ago. That may be. The hon. member (Hon. Mr. Costigan) knows the law so thoroughly that I would like him to explain how it is that you can appoint, without examination, a man as deputy collector to fill the position of exciseman, when the law says that an exciseman should pass an examination.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I wish to be perfectly understood, and I think I know something about the law. Mr. Keilty was promoted to the position of deputy collector after having passed the promotion examination. From that position he was raised to the position of collector. The only position in the excise service to which a person can be appointed without examination is that of deputy collector, and it has always been the custom in the department to appoint an exciseman temporarily until he could have an opportunity to pass the examination. There is nothing in the law which prevents a man who has passed his promotion examination, and has been an exciseman, to be appointed a deputy collector and then a collector, if the government wishes to appoint him. As the hon. member for Victoria (Hon. Mr. Costigan) has explained, there is the qualifying examination fixed by law and there is the promotion examination governed by the regulations of the department. I do not see how the hon. gentleman (Mr. Reid) can object to the appointment of Mr. Keilty.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I am not objecting.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. He was appointed because he was qualified according to the law, having passed, not the qualifying examination, but the promotion examination, which entitled him to a higher rank in the service.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The hon. gentleman does not seem yet to understand the question I asked, because he has not given me any answer whatever. I asked him if the position of exciseman required certain qualifications, or if candidates for that position had to pass a certain examination. Then I asked why he appointed a man in the town of Prescott who had never passed the civil service examination, and allowed him to act as an exciseman.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. There could be no objection to the appointment or promotion of Mr. Keilty. There was another man appointed in Prescott, Mr. White; he never passed any examination. He was appointed deputy collector. But when a man is appointed to any position, whatever may be the name of it, whether collector, deputy collector, exciseman, or any other, the duties he has to perform are assigned to him by his superior officer. The fact that a man is an exciseman does not imply that he is to be confined to the duties of an exciseman. The work is distributed by the collector or other superior officer, and the deputy collector may fulfil the duties of an exciseman.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The hon. minister has now admitted openly that so far as the position of exciseman is concerned, he can appoint any person whether he has passed any examination or not, or whether he is qualified for the position or not. He can override the Civil Service Act by appointing a deputy collector, and then telling the collector of inland revenue that the deputy collector is to fill the position of excise officer. That is practically the answer the hon. minister has given me. Such being the case, he has certainly been trying to override the Civil Service Act in the case of that appointment in the town of Prescott. I am glad to get his answer so fully and clearly, because it is evident that when it is really the wish of the minister to override the Civil Service Act, he can do so. I know that a great many people have been seeking positions in the department, and when I have told them that the minister could override the Act if he wished, and could appoint any one he chose, they would hardly believe it. But the minister owns that in this case he did get round the Act. When other vacancies occur, I hope he will not overlook the claims of other people by holding up the Civil Service Act as an obstacle, because he knows that for any position in the Inland Revenue Department it is not necessary for a candidate to pass the Civil Service Act, but that it is simply a dead letter so far as that department is concerned.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I am glad to have heard the criticism of my hon. friend. It might perhaps be proper to change the law; but I must tell the hon. gentleman that I have acted in accordance with the law. If I have done wrong, I have not been the first to do so. I have followed the example of my predecessors under the old regime and under the present regime. I have made no new departure in this case. If I had the time I might give a long list of those who have been appointed deputy collectors during the past twenty-five years or since the law was enacted. I have always tried not to violate the law; I have always tried to have those who want to enter the service pass the examination; but perhaps in one or two instances I have done what my predecessors did during the past twenty-five years.

Mr. REID (Grenville). My hon. friend would hardly, I think, be satisfied to justify his way of conducting the department by referring to his predecessors. I should have thought that when he took charge of the department, his duty would have been to try to live up to the law of the country, even if his predecessors violated it. If his predecessors did wrong, it would be surely more creditable to him to try to do right. I have not the slightest objection to Mr. White personally; he is a very fine young man; but what I want the people from Vancouver to Halifax to know is that the minister has admitted on the floor of the House——

Mr. HEYD. He has not admitted anything.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I beg pardon. The hon. minister has admitted on the floor of the House, that, so far as the Inland Revenue Department is concerned, it is not necessary for any man to pass any examination whatever in order to fill any position in the department. He explains that if he wants to fill any position in his department—exciseman or sorter or anything else—all he has to do is simply to appoint a man a deputy collector and tell the collector to assign to him the duties of an exciseman. In that way he can override the Civil Service Act and make it a dead letter. I think this should be thoroughly understood by people from one end of the Dominion to the other, so that when vacancies occur, everybody may know whether it is necessary to pass an examination or not. Am I not right in that ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I think my hon. friend is going a little too far. What he says is a fact, that the position of deputy collector is open under the law, which has been in force for twenty-five years, and through that door, we might fill all the positions in the department ; but that is not my fault, it is the law. Of course, if that were unduly taken advantage of, there would be an end of the Civil Service Act, but I am not aware that any undue advantage has been taken of this provision. The law was passed some twenty years ago and under it a certain number of deputy collectors were appointed, but I think that the hon. gentleman is going too far when he says that the law has been abused. It certainly has not been abused by me. I have always been anxious that those desirous of entering the service should pass the qualifying examination. There was no abuse of the law in Prescott. That is a large division and there were two deputy collectors there. In that town there are a distillery and a brewery, and when one of the positions became vacant, Mr. White was appointed a deputy collector, without passing any qualifying examination. If the law allows deputy collectors to be appointed without passing any examination, I cannot be blamed, and it is the duty of any member of parliament who objects to this, to move to amend the law.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The hon. minister admits what I have said, namely, that through the appointment of deputy collectors without examination, he can fill every position in the Inland Revenue Department. Am I right ?

Mr. HEYD. No, you are not right there.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I would like to understand if I am right when I say that the minister could first appoint a man a deputy collector, although he had not passed the qualifying examination, and then that man could be detailed to fill any other position, whether exciseman or any other.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I have already explained that after a man is appointed a deputy collector, his duties are assigned to him by the collector. If the collector finds that he is qualified to fulfil the duties of accountant, he may give him those duties to fulfil. If he finds that he is competent to fill the position of exciseman, he can give him that position, but that does not mean that from the moment the position of deputy collector is opened, every person can be admitted into the service through that door. That has never been done to my knowledge. We have appointed temporary officers pending their examination, and after they have passed their examination, we have made them excisemen, but the duties to be performed by each and every officer are assigned to him by the collector.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The hon. minister throws the whole responsibility on the collector. When this position of exciseman became vacant in the town of Prescott, it required a man with certain qualifications to fill it. If the man appointed to fill that vacancy had not the necessary qualifications, then the hon. minister should be man enough to take the responsibility, but he shelters himself behind his collector. But surely, if, when the position of exciseman became vacant in the town of Prescott, the hon. minister appointed a man as deputy collector, and that man was then assigned to the position of exciseman, the responsibility must fall on the hon. gentleman, and he should own up that it is he, and not the collector, who is responsible. The hon. minister says that such has been the law for the last twenty years, and he is not responsible, but he is there to see that the spirit and the intention of the law are carried out, and I believe that if we had the debates in the House when this Civil Service Act was passed, it would show that the understanding was that certain qualifications should be required of an exciseman. A customs officer in charge of a distillery requires certain qualifications. He must have sufficient education to enable him to pass the qualifying examination, and I find it strange that the Auditor General would pay the wages of a man who was appointed to fill the position of exciseman in a distillery, and who had not passed the qualifying examination. Take the case of Mr. White, the hon. minister appointed him a deputy collector and then he was put in the position of exciseman in a distillery or brewery, although he had not passed that qualifying examination which is required of excisemen. Let this practice be followed, and you could fill the Inland Revenue service with men who had not passed the qualifying examination, but who had simply been appointed deputy collectors and then assigned to fill other positions.

Excise—travelling expenses, rents, fuel, stationery, &c., $60,000.

Mr. TAYLOR. There is an increase of $5,000 here.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. This covers travelling expenses, rent, fuel, stationery, &c., for the entire outside branch of the excise service. The increased sum is necessitated by the opening up of new and the enlarged business of existing licensed manufactories, and additional expenditure for travelling in connection therewith. The expenditure last year was $55,010.

Mr. POPE. Have there been many cases of prosecution ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. No, there have been fewer seizures than in former years. Of course, some people have been caught distilling liquors in contravention of the law, but very few. The number has decreased in recent years, owing to the fact that we have, not a better, but a somewhat larger, preventive service.

Mr. POPE. Has the hon. gentleman the comparative figures of this year and the year before ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. No, I have not them here, but I know that the number is less.

Stamps for imported and Canadian tobacco, $35,000.

Mr. TAYLOR. There is an increase there of $3,000.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. We employ a larger staff, and the business has increased with the cigar and cigarette manufacture. This expenditure is recouped.

To enable the department to supply methylated spirits to manufacturers, the cost of which will be recouped by the manufacturers to whom it is supplied, and to pay for rent, light, power, freight, salaries, &c., $60,000.

Mr. BENNETT. Has that contract with the Standard Chemical Company been renewed, and, if so, for how long ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I explained to the House some time ago how it happened that this contract was made in 1898. In order to give the committee an opportunity to learn everything in connection with the contract, I will give all the explanation that can be obtained in the records of the department. This sum of $60,000 is to enable the department to purchase alcohol and wood naphtha for the manufacture of methylated spirits to supply manufacturers, and to pay for rent, light, power, freight, salaries, &c. The amount expended in the last fiscal year was $52,017.01. The manufacture of methylated spirits was taken over from the bonded manufacturers and carried on by the department as a protection to the revenue on July 1, 1888. It was known that methylated spirits was being used as a substitute for genuine potable spirits, which was objectionable not only from a revenue standpoint, but also on the ground of injury to the public health. It was thus deemed necessary to take sole control of this manufacture and to supply it to responsible persons for stated purposes. Two grades were established : No. 1, consisting of about 25 per cent of wood naphtha, and No. 2, consisting of about 50 per cent. Grade No. 1 is supplied to varnish and other manufacturers who have obtained the necessary permit from the department, and have entered into bond, with sureties in the sum of $2,000, that such spirits shall only be used for the purposes mentioned and on the premises described in their application. The present price of this grade is $1.10 per gallon. It is used in the manufacture of varnish, liquid glue, leather dressing, stove and shoe polish, &c. Grade No. 2 is supplied to the trade for burning and other purposes without the issue of a permit and without entering into bonds. This is due to the fact that the percentage of wood naphtha is so large that its use for potable purposes would be impossible. The present price is $1.50 per gallon. The reason for the price of the latter being higher than the better grade is the large quantity of wood naphtha used, which costs the department $1.40 per gallon as against 42 cents per gallon paid for alcohol. The quantity of both grades sold during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, was 52,835 standard gallons, and the balance of receipts over expenditure amounted to $23,755.47.

During the fiscal years shown below, wood naphtha was procured from the undermentioned firms at prices set opposite each name :

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). What is the American price for these two years ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. The last time we bought, in 1896-97, the price ranged from 78 cents to $1.08. In 1898-99 a contract was entered into with the Rathbun Company and the Standard Chemical Company, at $1.40 per standard gallon. We had to import, because the company were unable to supply the quantity we required. We imported from the United States for 90 cents, duty free per imperial proof gallon, the duty being $2.40 per gallon.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Was the price the minister quoted, 78 cents to $1.08, for the imperial or the wine gallon ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. For the imperial gallon. Since 1898 it was according to contract. Now the customs duty on wood alcohol has been the same as on the ordinary grain spirits, that is to say, $1.75 in 1886 ; $2 in 1890, $2.12½ in 1894, and $2.40 in 1897, since which time there has been no change. If we take the price of wood alcohol in the United States we must add the customs duty which is to be levied thereon. I was asked some time ago to give particulars with regard to the contract entered into between the department and the company. Here is a copy of the contract which was passed between the department and the Standard Chemical Company. I will read the document.

Mr. BENNETT. Never mind reading it. If the minister will let us see the contract, there is no necessity for reading it.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. (reading.)

The contract was made between the Rathbun Company of Deseronto, in the province of Ontario, a body corporate and politic, of the first part, and the Standard Chemical Company of Toronto, in the said province, a body corporate and politic, of the second part, the said two companies being hereafter referred to together as the said companies ; and Her Majesty the Queen, represented by the Minister of Inland Revenue of Canada of the third part.

Witness, that Her Majesty agrees to purchase from the said company for a period of five years from the 26th day of July, 1898, all the wood alcohol which may be required during that period by the Department of Inland Revenue of Canada for the methylation of spirits. The price to be paid by Her Majesty for such wood alcohol shall be $1.40 per standard gallon, inclusive of packages, f.o.b. cars at Deseronto and Fenelon Falls respectively. The said companies agree with Her Majesty that they or one of them shall and will from time to time furnish and deliver on cars as above, during the said period of five years, at and for the said price per standard gallon, such quantities of wood alcohol as are required for the said purpose and as shall be specified in any order or orders signed by the Minister or Commissioner of Inland Revenue or the secretary of the Department of Inland Revenue. The wood alcohol so furnished and delivered shall be of a strength and purity to be determined from time to time by the said minister or commissioner, and the said minister or commissioner may refuse the delivery of any supplies which, in their judgment, do not come up to the required standard. It is understood that the wood alcohol required by the department is to be supplied by the said companies in such proportion as may be mutually agreed upon between them, but the said companies are to be jointly liable to Her Majesty for the delivery of all such supplies as may be ordered in the manner aforesaid, and the orders for which are sent to either of the said companies. In the event of any supplies ordered not being furnished by the said companies or either of them, or not being up to the required standard, it is agreed that Her Majesty may purchase the like quantity of wood alcohol elsewhere, and may charge to the said companies the excess of price paid by Her Majesty over and above the price above specified.

This agreement shall cease to be binding upon any of the parties thereto should the government of Canada at any time during said period discontinue the manufacture of methylated spirits.

In witness whereof, &c,

That contract was signed for a period of five years. It will expire on the 26th of July next.

Mr. BENNETT. Does the minister intend to renew the contract ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. No, my intention is to buy from the companies which are in a position to supply a good article. We shall purchase wood naphtha the same as we buy alcohol from the distillers, viz., according to the production.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). What is the date of that report ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. July 26, 1898. The contract was to run five years.

Mr. BENNETT. It has taken a long time to answer the very simple question I asked the minister, namely, whether he intended to renew the contract.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I said no. The contract was not renewed, and I do not propose to renew it.

Mr, BENNETT. I congratulate the hon. minister on his backbone in not acceding to the wishes of some of the gentlemen who asked him to renew it. Will tenders be called for the supply of methylated spirits required by the department during the current year ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I do not think there are more than two companies which are in a position to supply wood alcohol, and as I do not propose to go to the United States or elsewhere to buy that article, I propose to buy it from the same companies or any other companies at the current prices in the same way as we buy grain alcohol to mix with the wood alcohol at one time from one distiller and at another time from another distiller, according to the quantity he has to sell.

Mr. BENNETT. If the hon. minister proposes that we shall be at the mercy of this combine I would suppose that he better try to get this contract renewed at the combination's own price. Is there any private party who permits himself to be at the mercy of any combination in this country ? I think the hon. minister will do well to secure prices from American or European firms, and if this combination which is composed of political friends of hon. gentlemen opposite are not prepared to sell this article at an honest living price, let outsiders have the benefit of the contract. The hon. minister raised the duty on this article from $2 to $2.40 a gallon. It will be a source of great satisfaction to the general public to know that the hon. minister, instead of renewing the contract, proposes to place himself within the grasp of this combination.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I think the hon. gentleman has misunderstood me. I do not know that any other company besides the Rathbun people and the Standard Chemical Company are in a position to supply that article.

Mr. BENNETT. They are one and the same. That came out in the debate a few weeks ago.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Yes, they were amalgamated at that time and I think they are still so.

Mr. BENNETT. That is right.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Then there is only one company. I am informed that other concerns propose to manufacture the same article and that is the reason why I do not feel inclined to ask for tenders. What would be the use of asking for tenders when there is now only one concern able to supply the article ?

Mr. BENNETT. The hon. gentleman will get the benefit of American competition and this would enable him to keep these people within honest prices.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I do not think it would be wise to bring in American competition, but if these gentlemen ask too much for this article we can go to the United States, as we have done in the past, or to Germany, France or elsewhere. The Standard Chemical Company, I understand, have already three or four and perhaps five manufactories in the country, three at least in Ontario, one in Quebec, and I am informed that they are going to start another. This company have never exacted more than the current price. If you take the figures running from 1886 to 1888 you will find that the average price ranged from $1.50 to $1.60 per gallon.

Mr. BENNETT. If the hon. minister will permit me I would inform him that the same company are selling the same article in Ottawa to-day for $1.05 per gallon and the department are paying $1.40 a gallon.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. That is a good reason why the contract should not be renewed. I have stated that I am not renewing the contract.

Mr. BLAIN. What quantity was furnished to the government under this contract ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. 25,768 gallons proof. The cost was $21,575.53.

Mr. HUGHES. How could that be at the rate of $1.40 per gallon ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. The figures quoted are proof gallons.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Who was appointed to fill the vacancy caused by the appointment of Mr. Keilty to be collector at Prescott ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. There has been no appointment up to the present.

Mr. REID (Grenville). When Mr. White was appointed that made two deputy collectors at Prescott. The hon. minister has been trying to carry out the Civil Service Act and the point I wish to make is that he could appoint any one to fill the position of deputy collector and that one or more deputy collectors could be appointed at the same port. According to the Civil Service Act there should be a collector, a deputy collector, and the balance of the officials at a port should be excisemen. In Perth I find that the hon. minister has one collector and six deputy collectors. Therefore, he is filling the position of excisemen with deputy collectors.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I think my hon. friend is entirely mistaken. All these deputy collectors are not stationed at Perth. They represent other localities in the division. I will give the names of these gentlemen and the stations where they are located. Mr. H. T. Noonan is the deputy collector at Perth; Mr. Thomas Clarke, deputy collector at Pembroke; Mr. W. E.

Rowan, deputy collector at Arnprior; Mr. W. Egan, deputy collector at Renfrew ; Mr. J. George, deputy collector at Eganville. When we have bonded warehouses in a certain locality in a division we place a deputy collector in charge of it. These gentlemen have not passed their examination and they would not likely do so because of the very small salaries that they are in receipt of. Some of these salaries are very small. One receives $187, another $53, and another, $269, &c. We appoint a deputy collector at the head office and at each outside place where we have a bonded warehouse to survey.

Mr. REID (Grenville). What difference does it make where he is, if he fills the position of exciseman ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. He is only the keeper of a warehouse in a certain locality, and that it requires no special qualification.

Mr. REID (Grenville). There is this man J. A. Wood, at Prescott. Is he a deputy collector ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. He is a deputy collector at Brockville. He is the brother of the late Controller of Inland Revenue.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Is Prescott the only place where you have two or more deputy collectors ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Oh, no. We have deputy collectors in class A and class B at Quebec and Montreal, and in fact in every important town we have several deputy collectors. Some of these officers are filling positions in the country districts in the same division. They have the survey of bonded warehouses and they are deputy collectors for the place they are in.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Has the minister any deputy collectors who fill the position of excisemen, the same as in the town of Prescott ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. The duties assigned to the deputy collector are not necessarily those of an exciseman. If a man is specially qualified, the collector would assign him to the duties of exciseman, and perhaps an exciseman may fill the duties of an accountant, if he is qualified. The title is nothing ; the collector selected the best men to perform the work.

Mr. REID (Grenville). It appears quite plain from what the minister says, that men are appointed as deputy collectors, but are filling the position that excisemen should fill.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Returning to the wood alcohol question. I suppose the minister knows that wood alcohol is now being sold at a much less price than formerly. The minister is aware that the price in the United States is much lower than here. Does he know the price in the United States at the present time ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. The last information I have is that it is $1.08 an imperial gallon.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). The minister is well aware that until recent years such by-products of wood alcohol as acetic acid and tar had practically little sale in Canada, owing to the introduction of the national policy these by-products have become more valuable and the price of wood alcohol has been reduced. I understand that these wood alcohol concerns sell the stuff to dealers all over the country at a little over $1 a gallon.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I know they are starting new manufactories.

Mr. THOMSON (North Grey). Is this wood alcohol produced by any others except the Rathbun Company and the Standard Chemical Company ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Not to my knowledge. Some time ago I received a letter from a Sault Ste. Marie company, stating that at some time in the future they would be able to supply a certain quantity of wood alcohol.

Mr. THOMSON (North Grey). When we discussed this matter before, the minister was asked if he would call for public tenders when this contract expired, and now that it is about to expire, I would ask him again if it is his intention to ask for tenders for the supply of this wood alcohol.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I have already given a full explanation with regard to that, but I will explain it again. The contract will expire on the 26th July next, and my intention is not to renew the contract. We will buy wood alcohol as we buy the grain alcohol, at the current price.

Mr. THOMSON (North Grey). But the question is, will you ask for tenders ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. No. I could not ask for tenders, and buy from the different producers, because, if one tender was accepted, we would have to buy from that firm only.

Mr. THOMSON (North Grey). We want to make it clear that the Minister of Inland Revenue intends to spend $35,000 of the money of the people for wood alcohol without asking for public tenders.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. If I asked for tenders now, who would tender ?

Mr. THOMSON (North Grey). This other firm which the hon. minister speaks of would be in a position to do so.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. If there are two this year, and there might be four or five next year, I think it would be better to wait until we have a chance of buying the article at the lowest price.

Mr. THOMSON (North Grey). We insist on asking for tenders for a $50 postal service, and yet the Minister of Inland Revenue says he will not ask for tenders for $40,000 or $50,000 worth of this article. Was there a deputation down here from this Standard Company, asking for a renewal of the contract ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Of course, some body came and asked if I would renew the contract, and I said I would not.

Mr. THOMSON (North Grey). Who came down and asked that question ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I think my hon. friend should be satisfied with my answer. I do not want to name any body who came to my department. If the hon. gentleman should come to my office and ask for something, I would not be bound to state in the House that he had been in my office. But some persons who was connected with that firm came to me, and I said I would not renew the contract.

Mr. BLAIN. Might I ask if any quantity of this wood alcohol was imported into the country last year ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. No.

Salaries of officers, inspectors and assistant inspectors of weights and measures, $61,051.

Mr. SPROULE. There is an increase here of $5,950.

Mr. SCOTT. Might I ask if this includes the salary of the chief inspector of weights and measures, Mr. Fyfe ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Yes, it is included. The increase is made up as follows : Chief inspector, James Fyfe, $2,500 ; salary of assistant inspector at Hamilton, S. W. Robins, $500 ; at Quebec, C. Knowles, $600 ; at Three Rivers, I. H. Beaulac, to replace Prévost, deceased, $500 ; at Winnipeg, J. G. Mager, formerly temporary, put on the permanent list, $600 ; and increases to those who have been in the service either as inspectors or as assistant inspectors, amounting to $1,350 ; less the amount of the salary of Prévost, $700 ; making a total increase of $5,950.

Mr. SCOTT. I would remind the hon. minister that since the beginning of this session, we had certain discussions about Mr. Fyfe, the chief inspector of weights and measures, in connection with what several of the members affected, believed to be an insolent reflection cast upon them in a certain report made to the deputy minister by Mr. Fyfe, about an automatic weighing device in which the grain threshers of Manitoba and the North-west Territories were interested. If I remember aright, I think it was indicated to the minister that those members who believed themselves to be affected by that insolent reference, would expect that at the proper time something in the nature of an apology would be tendered to them by this officer. I beg, therefore, to ask the minister if any steps have been taken by him or by his deputy to procure from Mr. Fyfe such an apology as would be deemed satisfactory to the members affected ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I have no doubt that if Mr. Fyfe, who I am sure is a gentleman, thought he had insulted any of these gentlemen from the west, he would be ready to retract and apologize. But I have read the remarks, and I think I have heard here remarks which were a great deal more insulting than the language which he used. Still, I will call the attention of Mr. Fyfe to the matter, and I think that if he finds that he has insulted any members of the House, or even any citizen in Manitoba or the North-west Territories, he will retract.

Mr. SCOTT. Well, I may remark that it is some five or six weeks since this question was discussed in this House, and the matter was brought to the attention of the minister, and I suppose that Mr. Fyfe's attention must also have been drawn to it ; and I have not yet had any intimation from any person that Mr. Fyfe had in contemplation any manner of apology for this reference. As there may be members here who are not aware of the reference made by this gentleman in an official report to members of this House, it may be well for me to place the matter again before this committee.

Mr. CLARKE. How came this statement to be made ?

Mr. SCOTT. Two years ago, and one year ago, and again this year, members on both sides of the House, from Manitoba and the North-west Territories, spoke of a certain automatic weighing device which the grain threshers of the western country have found it absolutely necessary to use, but which, up to the time of this session, the Department of Inland Revenue had refused to verify. It was, therefore, being used illegally. The result was that the threshers were not able legally to collect their accounts, but had to depend on the honour of the various individuals for whom they did work. The members from Manitoba and the North-west, a year ago were asked to go over to the Department of Inland Revenue to witness a test of this machine. The test was, I may say, absolutely satisfactory to all of us, and we understood at the time that it was satisfactory to the officers of the department. As a matter of fact the proper officer of the department, whose duty it was to adjudicate on the matter, was satisfied with it, and was willing to verify it; and, according to a document which was in the possession of the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. McCreary) when we were discussing this matter before, it appears that that officer did verify it, or, on his recommendation, it was verified according to law. It was explained by the minister that this officer was simply acting, not having been regularly appointed. Later, another appointment was made, that of Mr. Fyfe, who I understand was brought from Montreal, and he cancelled the recommendation of the gentleman who had been filling the office. The question was brought before the House again this session, by my hon. friend from Lisgar (Mr. Stewart), but in the meantime, there had been considerable correspondence going on between the owners of the patent and the officers of the department, and this correspondence was brought down in a return moved for by the hon. member for Lisgar. This return includes a report made by Mr. Fyfe, one of the paragraphs of which I shall read to the House:

> The members who are fighting that battle for the 'grain threshing scale' makers, do not seem to see that they are unknowingly occupying a false position.

Here is an officer of the department who says that members of this House are occupying a false position.

> Opposed to their own interests.

Those western members are, in the opinion of this officer, fools. I do not know that we can complain of his opinion, but we can complain of his expressing it officially in a report.

Mr. CLARKE. Is he a western man?

Mr. SCOTT. No, he is a Montreal man.

> Opposed to their own interests and the interests of those they represent? They have within reach an article that will meet the requirements of the law, which can be made by any manufacturer without royalty, and yet they are trying to force upon the farmers of the west an inferior machine that is patented and is the exclusive property of one manufacturer.

This is a reflection upon myself and colleagues, which may or may not be true, but at all events it is not the business of any subordinate officer of this department to make any such reflection, and I think that before we vote this salary, we should have the assurance that proper apologies will be made by him.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I have told my hon. friend that there might perhaps be a difference of opinion with regard to the application of the sentence he has just read, but I am convinced that if Mr. Fyfe is made aware that, in the opinion of certain members, he has been guilty of a want of courtesy or has expressed an opinion which might be construed by hon. gentlemen, who have a proper regard for their own dignity, as a reflection or an insult, he would be the first to apologize, for I have known Mr. Fyfe many years and have always known him to be a gentleman.

Mr. STEWART. Has their been an increase to his salary?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. No, he was appointed at the maximum, $2,500, and there is no increase.

Mr. STEWART. His salary should be decreased until he qualifies himself for the business. He is ignorant of the conditions and requirements of the west.

Mr. BOYD. The members from Manitoba and the North-west thoroughly understood the position they occupied and what they had to do in order to get relief for the men who were doing $5,000,000 worth of work for which they could not collect a cent; and if we were led into any misunderstanding with regard to that particular machine, it was the fault of the hon. minister and his officers who invited us to examine it. It was not due to any act on our part, but on the part of the hon. minister himself, and I consider that both the hon. gentleman and his deputy acquiesced in the remarks of Mr. Fyfe when they permitted such a report to pass through their hands and come down to this House. It is all very well for the minister and his deputy to sit here at Ottawa and make no move to enable threshing machine owners to collect the $5,000,000 worth of work above referred to, but when the members from the west endeavoured to have the machine which the minister and his deputy suggested would meet the requirements, this is the way in which this officer sees fit to refer to them. I claim that these members have a very strong case against this man, and this item should stand until we hear what he has to say with regard to the remarks he has made.

Mr. SCOTT. Is the hon. minister willing that the item should stand until we have some satisfaction?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I have already explained to my hon. friend that if he is convinced that this sentence of Mr. Fyfe conveys an insult, Mr. Fyfe will be the first to retract.

Mr. CLARKE. Might I ask the hon. gentleman has an explanation of this statement ever been asked for from Mr. Fyfe?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Never.

Mr. SCOTT. Is the hon. minister satisfied that the statement should go as it is?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. These hon. gentlemen are taking a new departure. When the first discussion took place, a Bill was passed to remedy the evils they complained of, and the law was made in such a way that these gentlemen will be provided with a weighing machine to be attached to the thrashing machine. The difficulty was settled in that way, but now they refuse to pay Mr. Fyfe his salary because he used certain language which they think is a serious reflection on them. Of course if they construe it as insulting, I shall call it to the attention of Mr. Fyfe, and I know that he is too much of a gentleman not to withdraw any statement which might possibly be construed as a reflection where none was intended.

Mr. CLARKE. Was any complaint made to the hon. minister before to-day of the language used by Mr. Fyfe ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. No, all that I heard was that he had made use of some language which was not very appropriate under the circumstances.

Mr. CLARKE. Is this the first complaint made to the hon. gentleman by members of the House of Commons who felt themselves aggrieved ?

Mr. BOYD. The remarks were read on the floor of this House, and the hon. minister understood very well that the members from Manitoba and the North-west were aggrieved. He was also shown that if there was any fault, he was the man who was to blame, and the reflection was really cast on him. We brought that to his attention, and the deputy minister understood it well. The whole matter is a piece of wrangling on the part of the officers of his department and he knows it well.

Mr. CLARKE. Does the hon. minister propose to take further action ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I propose to call Mr. Fyfe's attention to the sentence complained of and to the remarks of the hon. gentlemen who resent the language used, and I have no doubt that he will disclaim any intention to cast any reflection upon anybody and will willingly retract what he said.

Mr. BOYD. What does the hon. gentleman himself think ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I have already expressed my opinion. I am confident that Mr. Fyfe had not the remotest idea of conveying the impression which his remark has created and did not imagine that his language would be interpreted as it has been. And I repeat, I have too high an opinion of Mr. Fyfe to think for a moment that he would wittingly insult, without cause or reason, any of those gentlemen from the west. As regards the remark made by one of those hon. gentlemen that Mr. Fyfe was imported from Montreal, I can assure them that he was selected because he was considered the best man in the whole Dominion for the place, and I have already explained that he was recommended by politicians on both sides of the House, and by manufacturers and very important citizens in the whole Dominion.

Mr. BOYD. There was not an officer in the department equal to this gentleman ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I do not know of one.

Mr. BOYD. That is a pity.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I do not know that I could find one even in Manitoba or the North-west.

Mr. SCOTT. I raise no objection at all to this gentleman having been brought from Montreal. It is a matter of indifference to me whether he came from Montreal, Halifax, Vancouver, or Hull. I do not say here that these hon. members have been insulted by Mr. Fyfe. This sort of language might very well be used, and I imagine is very often used, in this House by gentlemen on one side with regard to the other, and no insult is meant, and, I suppose, no insult is taken. But when a subordinate officer in the department takes it upon himself to make remarks like these about members of this House, I think it is insolence on his part, and that is what I complain of. I do not complain of insult ; I think this officer has used insolent and impertinent language with regard to members of this House. He undertakes to say that members of this House are not properly representing their constituents ; that they go against the interests of their constituents and are trying to force upon them a class of machine that ought not to be forced upon them. He may be right, and I may be wrong. He has expressed his opinion. I think I am right. And I may say again, as has already been stated in this House that this device has given satisfaction to both farmers and threshers during all last season and practically during the season before. I am bound, in view of the position taken by the minister, to go a little further,—and I regret very much to have to do it—and ask this committee to refuse to vote the salary of this officer. I think we should have from Mr. Fyfe a proper apology for the insolence and impertinence of which he has been guilty. I move that this item be reduced by the amount of $2,500 which I understood the minister to say is the salary of this officer. I do not urge as the sole reason for this reduction of the item the impertinence of this officer to members of this House ; but if I am right in my opinion with regard to this matter, this officer is wrong and has shown that he is not competent to deal with the matters with which he is expected to deal, and is not a proper officer for the minister to retain.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I have glanced over the statement by this officer, and it certainly seems a very serious reflection upon the hon. members of this House from the North-west. He says :

> The members who are fighting the battle for the 'grain threshing scale' makers, do not seem to see that they are unknowingly occupying a false position opposed to their own interests and to the interests of those they represent.

This gentleman imported from Montreal must have become acquainted with the interest of the North-west far better than have these representatives who have been living there practically all their lives.

> They have within reach an article which will meet the requirements of law, which can be made by any manufacturer without royalty, and yet they are trying to force upon the farmer of the North-west——

These hon. gentlemen are accused by this officer of attempting to force upon the farmers of the North-west an implement which it is not in their interest to use—— > —an inferior machine that is patented and exclusive property of one manufacturer.

Then he closes :

> Shall the government succumb to legalize an illegally constructed machine, or shall the government make the manufacturer succumb to existing law and order based on well recognized scientific principles ?

I do not know this officer, but, it seems to me that language of this kind towards members of the House should not be allowed from any officer of the government. I would like to know what is the machine that he says they have within reach and that can be used without royalty ? I fancy that the machine he refers to and that he recommends is a machine that I heard of in the North-west and that was reported to me by farmers there to have been a teetotal failure. Would the hon. minister tell the committee what machine it is that this officer speaks of ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. What machine is it the hon. member (Mr. Hughes, Victoria) refers to ?

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). This officer has reported:

> They have within reach an article that will meet the requirements of law, which can be made by any manufacturer without royalty.

What is that machine ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. It is an automatic grain weigher, which is not perfect——

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). A perfect failure.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I am not ready to say so. Was it tried in the North-west ?

Mr. SCOTT.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I have been told by farmers who have tried it that it did not succeed.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. My information is that the invention was never tried. But I do not see why this discussion has come up, when we have settled the matter. I must say, in the first place, I have no prejudice against anybody, and I must say also that the inventor of the machine under discussion is a member of our staff, the inspector at Winnipeg. The inventor had every opportunity to push forward his machine, this machine could not be verified or inspected, according to the report of Mr. Fyfe. It is true that on one occasion Mr. Higman reported that that machine could be verified. But I have already stated here that Mr. Higman had no authority to do so. Since then, we have passed a law which will permit the use of any machine which we cannot now inspect, and I do not see why these hon. gentlemen should any longer complain. There remains the question of insult——

Mr. SCOTT. We are not complaining about the law. We are perfectly satisfied—at least I am—with the legislation which the hon. minister has introduced, for I think it entirely meets the difficulty of the threshers about whom we were talking.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I suppose the hon. gentleman (Mr. Scott) will give me credit for having done the best I could to remove the difficulties in the North-west. Now, I have told the hon. gentleman that I will see Mr. Fyfe and bring to his notice the accusation brought against him for the first time here. I do not see why his salary should be entirely cut off. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Scott) himself has suggested that Mr. Fyfe should retract. I will bring the matter to his attention. Perhaps he will claim, as many others might claim on reading his language, that there was nothing insulting in the language he used. I am quite sure that if he had been under the impression that these gentlemen would be offended, he would not have used that language.

Mr. SCOTT. As I have already stated that I do not contend that Mr. Fyfe offered an insult to the members of this House. But I do contend—and I would ask the minister himself what he thinks about it—that this language involves insolence and impertinence when applied by a subordinate officer to members of this House.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. No such meaning was intended, that is my honest conviction. I know Mr. Fyfe is a gentleman and he would not insult any man knowingly.

Amendment negatived, and item voted.

Adulteration of food and fertilizers, and the administration of the Act respecting fraudulent marking, $30,000.

Mr. BELL. I would ask the minister to inform the House how many public analysts are now employed in his department, and to give a list of the names of all those analysts throughout the country.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. We have as public analysts, Mr. Bowman at Halifax, Mr. Valade at Ottawa, Mr. Ellis at Toronto, Mr. Fiset at Quebec, Mr. Kenrick at Winnipeg, Mr. Harrison at London, Mr. Fagan at Vancouver, and Mr. Donald at Montreal. Mr. McFarlane is the chief analyst in Ottawa.

Mr. BELL. How many samples of food or other substances have been collected in the course of the past year and submitted to these analysts ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. The quantity of articles that were collected during the past year were : Fertilizer, 100; Paris green, 157; honey, 100; flavouring extract, 100; canned meats, 100; canned vegetables, 100. Collections were made in the following places :

In Halifax and vicinity : Commercial fertilizer, 10; Paris green, 16; honey, 10; flavouring extract, 10; canned meats, 10 ; canned vegetables, 10.

Prince Edward Island : Commercial fertilizer, 5; Paris green, 5; honey, 5; flavouring extract, 5; canned meats, 5; canned vegetables, 5.

St. John, N.B. : Commercial fertilizer, 10; Paris green, 16; honey, 10; flavouring extract, 10; canned meats, 10; canned vegetables, 10.

St. Hyacinthe : Commercial fertilizer, 10; Paris green, 16; honey, 10; flavouring extract, 10; canned meats, 10; canned vegetables, 10.

Montreal : Commercial fertilizer, 10; Paris green, 16; honey, 10; flavouring extract, 10; canned meats, 10; canned vegetables, 10.

Kingston : Commercial fertilizer, 10 ; Paris green, 16; honey, 10; flavouring extract, 10; canned meats, 10; canned vegetables, 10.

Toronto, about the same quantities ; London about the same ; Winnipeg about the same. At Calgary the quantity is less, and I will give the figures : Commercial fertilizer, 5; Paris green, 8; honey, 5; flavouring extract, 5; canned meats, 5; canned vegetables, 5.

British Columbia, the same as Toronto, Kingston and Montreal.

Mr. BELL. Where have these samples been analysed ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. The greatest part of them were analysed at the laboratory here.

Mr. BELL. How many analyses have been made by public analysts in the course of the past year, and what amount of money have they received from the department for their services ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Those analyses are not yet complete, and we cannot say yet how much it will cost.

Mr. BELL. I am referring to those made by public analysts.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. The work is not yet complete, and their accounts are not in and they are not paid yet.

Mr. BELL. Have all the public analysts been employed in the course of the past year ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. No.

Mr. BELL. Would the minister give me the names of those who were employed, and how many analyses have been submitted to them ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. The articles which have been submitted to the local analysts were : Halifax : Commercial fertilizers, 10 ; Paris green, 6 ; at Montreal, 10 and 16 ; at Toronto, 10 and 16 ; at Winnipeg, 10 and 16 ; at British Columbia, 10 and 16 ; and at London, 10 and 16.

Mr. BELL. Then I understand that nothing but fertilizers and Paris green have been submitted to the public analysts ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Yes, and the balance was analysed here at the laboratory branch.

Mr. BELL. Have any prosecutions been undertaken in consequence of the results of these analyses ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. No, not for the past two years, I am informed. We have punished transgressors without having recourse to the courts of law. We impose a certain penalty, which is paid by the parties in default ; it is the cost of the analyses and other expenses incurred by the department.

Mr. BELL. Does the minister find it easy to retain in his service these public analysts unless they get more employment ? The amount of work coming to them in the course of the past year is very small, therefore, their fees cannot be large. Have any complaints been made, or any difficulty experienced in keeping these professional men in the employment of the department under present conditions ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. That matter is under consideration. The law provides that these gentlemen, if they are public analysts, that is to say, if they have passed the required examination, shall be paid $300 a year. For one reason or another—I do not mean those I have named—gentlemen have been appointed or kept in the service notwithstanding the law which says that they must have passed their examination. In some instances we did not know by whom the analyses had been made. I intend to make a careful examination of the position in which we stand, for if we had to face a trial, I do not know what would be the consequences. Moreover, after the analyses have been made by a local analyst, they must be gone over again here in order to ascertain if the work has been properly done. That has the effect of doubling the expenses. I am not ready to say that I would change that system, but I have the matter under consideration.

Mr. BELL. Did I understand the hon. minister to say that each of these analysts is in receipt of a salary of $300 ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Yes, $300.

Mr. BELL. Whether he does any work for the department or not ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. If he does work he is paid for that besides the $300. The $300 is paid as a retainer.

Mr. BELL. What is paid to him for each analysis ? If a man analyses this year ten samples of fertilizer and fifteen or sixteen samples of Paris green, what scale of fees will be allowed for that work ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. The fee varies from $8 to $10 for each analysis.

Mr. BELL. What is the largest sum that any of these analysts has been in receipt of in years past ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Excluding the $300 they have been in receipt of from $1,000 to $1,300 to the best of my recollection. I see that in 1900, Mr. Kendrick, of Winnipeg, received $1,007.25 ; Mr. Edwards, of Montreal, $528 ; Mr. Ellis, of Toronto, $880; Mr. Bowman, of Halifax, $693; Mr. Fiset, of Quebec, $1,072; Mr. Valade, of Ottawa, $885; Mr. Harrison, of London, $1,052, and Mr. Turchot, of St. Hyacinthe, $525. On account of the qualifications of some of these analysts certain articles are sent to one rather than to another, and that will explain the difference in the amount earned by each of these gentlemen.

Mr. BELL. Is there any particular qualification required before a person is appointed an analyst ? Is there any examination to be submitted to by those from whom the selections are made ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. They must pass an examination before the board which is selected by the government. The members of the board are Dr. Girdwood, of Montreal; Dr. McGill, of the laboratory here, and Abbe Choquette, of St. Hyacinthe Seminary, who has replaced one of the professors in Ottawa University.

Mr. BELL. Could the hon. minister give me the amounts received by these gentlemen in the year 1902 ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Mr. Kenwick, of Winnipeg, received $428 ; Mr. Ellis, of Toronto, $558 ; Mr. Bowman, of Halifax, $634 ; Mr. Fiset, of Quebec, $560 ; Mr. Valade, of Ottawa, $494 ; Mr. Harrison, of London, $564 ; Mr. Fagan, of Victoria, $492 ; Mr. Turchot, $942, and Mr. Donald, who has been recently appointed, $80.

Mr. BELL. I thought that in every case they got at least $300 ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Mr. Donald was appointed at the end of the year and he only had a little work to do.

Mr. BELL. Apparently, from what the hon. minister has said, the cost of this work will be less than it has been in the past. Apparently the work now done by these public analysts is less than it has been. I notice that the vote is $5,000 larger than it was last year and that instead of asking for $25,000 the hon. minister is asking for $30,000.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. The reason why we are asking more this year is that we propose to make more analyses than were made a year or two ago. Last year we had barely enough money to meet the expenditure; in fact, we had to stop the collection of articles. We have had representations from some sections of the country asking that analyses of more articles should be made. That is the reason we are asking for this increase of $5,000.

Mr. BELL. I understand the intention is that these public analysts shall be employed more largely in the course of the coming year, or is it the intention to do more work in the department ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I cannot promise that. Since the law was passed providing for the analysis of food, large cities have provided themselves with laboratories. At the time when the Act was passed there were almost no public analysts, but now the cities of Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg, Victoria and some others of the large cities have provided themselves with analysts. The trouble we have had is that we have had to collect these samples and send them to a different portion of the country. The effect was to increase the expense because these articles were sent back to Ottawa and analysed a second time. My idea would be to have a more numerous staff at Ottawa so that analyses which must be made in cities like Toronto or Montreal and which were referred to the analyst here to be analysed a second time would be sent to Ottawa and the staff would do the work. This would obviate the necessity of paying twice for the analysis and we would then be in a position to collect more samples and make more analyses.

Mr. BELL. In cases in which you make an analysis in Ottawa it would be almost impossible for the department to undertake any prosecution, or in the event of the Department of Justice undertaking any prosecution, it would be almost impossible for the department to send its officers through the different provinces to give testimony and secure conviction. Would that not be a difficulty in case the analyses were to be conducted at the central laboratory at Ottawa ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Our experience is that sometimes we would be afraid to go before the court because we might be in a bad fix on account of the testimony which might be brought forward. I remember one case, in which the man who collected the samples did not remember where he had taken these samples because on the same day he had visited three firms in the same locality and he could not recollect where the samples had been bought. We lost our case. In other cases there might be a difference of opinion in regard to the analysis made in a certain city and the analysis made here. The result would be that if you brought the case before the court one analyst would give one kind of testimony and the other analyst would give another kind of testimony.

Mr. SPROULE. You would not have the chief analyst here giving testimony ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Yes, if there were a difference of opinion.

Mr. SPROULE. If there were an appeal to the chief analyst, but not in the prosecution.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Yes, if we had to institute a prosecution.

Mr. SPROULE. The prosecution would be instituted by the public analyst. If the party complained against desired to appeal he could appeal to the chief analyst here.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. But if the analysts did not agree ?

Mr. GALLERY. I wish to ask the minister if he has any inspectors who collect samples of alcoholic liquors with the view of having them analysed ? It would appear from the statement made here, that this very important matter has been entirely neglected by the Inland Revenue Department. The impure liquor which is consumed by, unfortunately, too many of our people, is far more detrimental to them than the impure foods which enter into consumption.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. What about cigarettes ?

Mr. GALLERY. The cigarette question has been disposed of for this year. Has the minister any reports from liquor inspectors, or has he any inspectors to collect samples of liquors for analysis ? I am strongly of the opinion that a great many more of our people are sent to an early grave through drinking alcoholic liquor, and especially impure liquor, than we have any idea of.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I do not care to debate the question of temperance or the question of cigarettes at this stage. I may tell my hon. friend (Mr. Gallery) that we have no special officer for this purpose, but I think we offer to the public every guarantee possible, because the liquor is distilled under the supervision of a competent officer, and it cannot be put on the market until two years has elapsed from the date of its manufacture. If the hon. gentleman called attention to the fact that liquors are imported from the other side in a raw state, where they are not bound to be kept for two years in bond, that would be a different matter.

Mr. GALLERY. It is my firm conviction that there is more adulterated liquor sold in Canada than there is pure liquor. Where are the officers to see whether alcoholic liquors are adulterated or not ? This is a very important matter, and one that should receive the attention of the hon. members of this House.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BELL. It is quite evident, from the fact that apparently no liquors were analysed last year, that the remarks of the hon. gentleman from St. Anne's (Mr. Gallery) are very much to the purpose. I think the hon. gentleman is right in suggesting that there is a great deal of adulteration of alcoholic liquors. Some time ago a bulletin was issued by the department giving the results of the analysis of imported and native wines, and if I remember aright at least one half of the articles collected by the officers and analysed were adulterated or defective in some manner. The point raised by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Gallery) is a very important one, and provision should be made to collect samples of liquor and have them examined.

Mr. GALLERY. I know, as a matter of fact, that in saloons and hotels throughout Canada liquors are sold that are not fit to be drunk. I believe it is most urgent that the Minister of Inland Revenue should take this matter into his serious consideration.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. The question is a very important one, and if sufficient money is voted I shall consider the necessity of collecting samples of these liquors and having them analysed.

Mr. ROSS (Ontario). I approve of the increased expenditure in connection with this branch of the Inland Revenue Department. The trade in canned stuffs is rapidly growing, and it is absolutely necessary that precautions should be taken to insure that canned pickles, meats, and vegetables, and such articles of food, are of pure quality. Indeed, under the circumstances, I think that the increased vote of $5,000 is not sufficient for the purpose. The member from Montreal, St. Anne's (Mr. Gallery), is perfectly right in what he says. If liquors are to be consumed in this country at all, then the people who drink them should know that they are as pure as it is possible to make them. I understood the minister to say that his department was analysing canned vegetables.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Yes.

Mr. ROSS (Ontario). What was the result of the analysis of these articles during the past year ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. It is not yet completed, but as soon as it is completed the results will be published in a bulletin.

Mr. GALLERY. It would appear that no analysis of liquors has been made by the department. I believe that the minister should put an appropriation in the estimates for this purpose, and I am quite sure that there is not a single member of this House who would object to it.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. GALLERY. Let the minister take money enough to pay five or six efficient liquor inspectors if necessary. I believe it to be his duty to see that this work is done.

Mr. MACLEAN. In European countries, where they derive a large revenue from alcoholic liquors, as we do in Canada, the different governments guarantee the purity of the liquor. In Germany, where they have a large revenue from spirits and beer, the government guarantees to the people the purity of these articles. The time has arrived when we in Canada should see that these alcoholic liquors, from which we receive a large revenue, should be guaranteed as to their purity. The suggestion of the hon. member from Montreal (Mr. Gallery) is a good one, and later on the minister should have some policy to announce with regard to it. In the United States they are spending a great deal of money to secure the purity of the food products of the people, and I trust that our Minister of Inland Revenue will move in the same line.

Mr. GALLERY.

Mr. SPROULE. How many fines were imposed during the past year for violations of the Act ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. There were no law suits taken, but when the parties were found guilty the department exacted a certain fine as well as the expenses of the analysis. The cases were settled out of court.

Mr. SPROULE. How many fines were imposed by the department ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. It is not easy to tell that off-hand, because these penalties are exacted by the collectors of the different divisions. I can bring down a statement if my hon. friend wishes.

Mr. SPROULE. Then you did not go into the courts at all ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. No.

Mr. SPROULE. Why not ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Because we are at liberty to settle these cases, provided the party who is found guilty is willing to do so. We can either impose a penalty or go into court.

Mr. SPROULE. Were any samples except fertilizers and Paris green taken last year ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Yes. There were 100 samples of fertilizers and 150 samples of Paris green. We had also honey, 100 samples ; flavouring extracts, 100 ; canned meat, 100 ; and canned vegetables, 100. These are now undergoing analysis. We have reports of canned meats and fertilizers, which have been published in the bulletin. The balance remains to be published.

Mr. SPROULE. These are all the articles of food or beverages collected during the past year ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. As I read the Act, you could not sustain a prosecution at all. The first clause provides how the samples shall be obtained by the outside analyst. He shall obtain three samples, one of which he shall put up and send to the department, one he shall give to the party handling or selling the goods, and the third he shall retain and examine himself. The prosecution must take place only after the analysis of the outside analyst, not after the analysis of the central analyst ; and if the prosecution is sustained and the party desires to appeal, he appeals to the chief analyst here, and not till then. I venture to say that you could not sustain a prosecution upon an analysis first obtained from the chief analyst. You might patch up a case and fix a penalty, and the individual breaking the law might be willing to pay it without going any further; but otherwise you could not sustain a prosecution. If the procedure as defined in the Act is not followed out by the department in the regular order, I do not think it could sustain a prosecution. For these reasons I think the Act is violated, and it is practically of little use. It is for this reason, I think, that we have had no prosecutions lately, and very little has been done in the last few years. My attention was called to this matter some time ago by an article in a paper published in Ottawa, called 'Events.' Whether the outside analysts are competent or not I do not know. I recommended one some years ago who had a certificate of competence from the University of Toronto, which I think was regarded as sufficient. If these analysts are not competent, I presume that their analyses could be attacked in court, and no prosecution based upon them could be maintained. I do not think the Act has been carried out according to its intention, and when the work has not been done, I do not see why $5,000 more is required to be spent.

Mr. GALLERY. I would like to ask the minister if it is his intention to provide for liquor inspection? There is more adulterated liquor sold in this country than there is of imported liquor.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I do not entirely share the opinion of my hon. friend from Grey with regard to the power of the analysts of the department in a law suit. I think that the Act makes the certificate of any analyst employed by the department as effective in court as that of the chief analyst.

My hon. friend asks why we have instituted no actions. The difficulty is this, that many of those analysts were appointed under a preceding Act and maintained in their positions though they never qualified themselves, and the analyses are made for them by outside people whom we do not know or control, so that the position may become embarrassing if we have to institute a lawsuit.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that Dr. Ellis of Toronto is not an analyst?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. No, he is known as being well qualified. I do not think I am bound to give the names, but if the hon. gentleman will call at my office I will give him the names of those who are not qualified. We have other instances in which, when the work of a particular analyst was revised by the chief analyst and his assistant here, there was quite a difference in the two reports. We have power to collect the cost of the analyses and the expenses of collection of samples, and when people are ready to pay rather than appear before the court, we are glad to settle their cases in that way. I may remark that before I took charge of the department, we expended a large sum of money in lawsuits and in almost every case we lost. I do not know the reason, but when we find parties at fault we punish them by making them pay a fine instead of bringing them before the court. In reply to the hon. member from Montreal (Mr. Gallery), if it is the desire of the House that liquor shall be analysed of course a large vote will be required. I know that there are stills in the country, and in order to put the law in force with regard to those liquors, which come under the provisions of the Adulterated Food and Liquor Act, and make more frequent analyses, we will of course require a larger sum of money. I shall consider that matter and bring it to the attention of my colleagues.

Mr. GALLERY. When has the department analysed any of this liquor?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. The last analysis of malt liquor was made in 1897, of wine in 1894, and distilled liquors in 1891.

Mr. GALLERY. This liquor which the hon. minister speaks of is not sold in the majority of saloons or restaurants. It is not the liquor that the people get to drink. But the liquor that I want analysed is what is sold in the corner saloons and is killing the people by wholesale. I am not speaking of the liquor brewed in the distilleries, which ought to be genuine, but of the liquor made out of chemicals and which is sold wholesale throughout the country.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. These liquors that were analysed, were collected everywhere, and some of them were adulterated. I cannot say if they were got at the corner stores or elsewhere, but they were not taken from the distilleries or breweries.

Mr. GALLERY. I would like to know who has control of this business?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. The local legislature.

Mr. GALLERY. Does the hon. minister not think that something should be done? We are spending millions of dollars to bring strangers into the country, and we are allowing more of our people to go to an early grave through drinking the liquor sold at these places then are carried off by any other cause. This liquor is poisonous and is killing our people wholesale, and it is high time the department should take some steps to put a stop to that traffic.

Mr. SPROULE. How many analysts are employed in the department here?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Two. We have Mr. McGill as assistant and Mr. Lemoine, besides Mr. McFarlane.

Mr. SPROULE. Do you propose to appoint any others ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. That is under consideration. I would prefer to have a larger staff here and diminish the number in some other places.

Mr. SPROULE. To my mind you are asking $5,000 more than you should. These men are all paid salaries from another source and therefore the expense here would not be increased if you employed them instead of outside men. Why do you require $5,000 more when these men are all paid a salary that covers all their expenses and all they are entitled to ? They do not get anything from the various analyses they make here but their salary is paid from another source.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. We have to analyse more articles than last year. And besides, when the articles are collected three or four times in the year, the expense of collection and inspection is larger, of course. The expenses of analysis are very large. The chemicals cost a large amount. I think the expenses of analysis are less when the analyses are made here than when they are made elsewhere. Besides we avoid the unnecessary expense of analysing the same thing twice which may sometimes occur. If we ask a further sum of $5,000, it is because last year we expended, within a few dollars, all the money voted, and, because we propose to analyse more articles. Having, if not complaints, demands from different sections of the country, we are bound to collect more articles and have them analysed than was done in the past. I have already explained, that, with regard to some articles we select the analyst who is best qualified to deal with that article. Of course, the expenses may be the same, but my opinion is that, if we had a larger staff here in Ottawa, the expenses might be reduced, or, at least the work might be performed in an easier way.

Mr. FOWLER. If a sample of some product is sent in for analysis, does the department make a charge ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. Why ? Why not make these analysis without charge for the benefit of the people ? Suppose it were suspected that some merchant was selling some article of food that was adulterated. If anybody wanted to have that analysed he would have to pay for it ? Why not have it free ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. If the attention of the department is called to some case of suspected adulteration, the food inspector collects the article, and the analysis is made without expense to the party.

Mr. FOWLER. But that gives everything away. Would it not be better, when a person suspects adulteration, that he should send a sample to the department and have an analysis made. I do not see any reason why that should not be done. I do not think the people would abuse such a system. The hon. minister had better make a note of the point and consider the desirability of making a change.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. We must have first the evidence as to how the sample was procured.

Mr. FOWLER. Let the party look after that himself. For instance, suppose the hon. member for Montreal, St. Anne's (Mr. Gallery) suspected that some saloon keeper in his constituency was selling adulterated liquor, and, in the interests of the people in his constituency—if there are any there indulge in alcoholic liquors—he wished to put an end to this adulteration. He would buy a bottle of the liquor and send it to the department, but the department would insist upon a fee of $5. But the hon. gentleman would look after the evidence as to its purchase and send the article in in such a way that the package could be identified. Then an examination should be made, and, if adulteration were established, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Gallery) could set the law in motion.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Under such circumstances, we charge nothing. But generally the officers of the department in any branch cannot receive from every section, samples——

Mr. FOWLER. How does the department distinguish ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. We have our own collectors. When the attention of the department is called to some section of the country where adulteration is suspected to be practiced, we send our food analyst to collect the samples. But we would not take any sample sent by anybody whom we do not know. We do not want to make an analysis for nothing. But if anybody has a complaint, he has only to call at the department or send, and the product will be analysed without charge.

Mr. FOWLER. But the department is making very large extra expense. It would be very much cheaper to allow the person making the complaint to send the suspected article to the department and have it analysed. I do not think the people of the country would use the opportunity of——

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I do not know, but I would be afraid of it.

Mr. FOWLER. I do not think there is the slightest danger. And it would be of general interest to the people to have some cheap and easy method for parties to be able to secure a test of food products. Then there is the question that the hon. member for Montreal, St. Anne's pointed out, and very properly pointed out, I think, in the interest of the people. It would not be necessary to appoint inspectors for the purpose, because any person could obtain samples of the liquors he suspects to be adulterated and send them to the department. The officer could make the analysis, and having satisfied his mind the adulterated liquors were offered for sale, he could, at least, inform the department, and they could send their officers and make an inspection and examination. I would like to ask the hon. minister what revenue he receives from fees for the analysis of food products in the department ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. The amount is very small. I will get the exact figures.

Mr. BOYD. In what way does the hon. minister consider the provincial authorities responsible for the quality of liquor being sold, and by what means they are supposed to inspect it ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I suppose the hon. gentleman (Mr. Boyd) knows that the provincial authorities have control of the liquor traffic.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Licenses.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Yes, but a man who is licensed can sell bad whisky or liquors. The local authorities can refuse a license if they like. But it is an entirely new case; this is the first time to my knowledge that the suggestion of a more rigid inspection of liquor has been brought before the House.

Mr. SPROULE. It was brought up several times some years ago.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. But never to my knowledge. I recognize the importance of the subject, and I will take note of what has been stated here to-night. If it is the wish of the House that a more rigid inspection should be made of the liquor sold in the country I, for one, will be ready to comply with that request. Of course, the amount to be voted will be larger if we are going to undertake to analyse any quantity of liquor sent in for inspection. I think my hon. friend (Mr. Fowler) is in error when he says that, if we were to inspect articles free of charge, the opportunity would not be very largely made use of by the people. Almost every day, I receive letters asking for the analysis by the department of samples of water. I should think we would have to double our staff if we analysed all the articles which might be sent under that system.

Mr. FOWLER. I suppose these waters are mineral waters ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Any kind of waters.

Mr. FOWLER. We are discussing now manufactured articles that are exposed for sale, liquors, waters, food. I think it is the duty of the department to examine all these free of charge. I was surprised to hear that a charge was imposed. I thought that this department was organized for the protection of the people, and the wider you make it the more the protection.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Then you would have to change the law.

Mr. LANCASTER. How is the poor man going to be protected ? A man might not be able to pay $5 to get an analysis. The poorer he is the cheaper goods he has to buy, and the cheaper the goods the more likely they are to be adulterated. As there are salaried men in the department who make these analyses, and as they are the servants of the public, it seems to me the analysis ought to be made free at the instance of any man bringing samples.

Mr. GALLERY. It is evident that if there is a good deal of adulterated liquor sold in this country, it must injuriously affect the revenue. I have been informed by good authority, in fact, I know that in Montreal a good deal of adulterated liquor is sold, liquor that is made out of drugs. It seems to me this is going to interfere with the revenue, and the minister should take the matter up and send inspectors into every saloon, restaurant and hotel to see if liquor is adulterated. That is the only way to get at it. I think every member is willing to vote money to pay for good inspectors to prevent adulteration.

Mr. SPROULE. Is it the intention of the government to dispense with the services of these men ? I think the minister gave us the names of nine of them.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Not now, the matter is under consideration. As long as the law remains as it is at present, these gentlemen have a right to receive the sum of $300 a year. In the past the amount was less, because we had no money to procure a certain quantity of articles, and we have been waiting till we have an opportunity of collecting four or five samples at the same time. Instead of collecting an article or two in one season and another article or two in another season, we collected, I think, ten on the same tour. Instead of sending the inspector twice or three times on a certain circuit, we wait until half the year is past so as to collect ten samples at one time, in order to reduce expenses.

Mr. HENDERSON. Could the minister tell us the amount of money collected during the last fiscal year, or in any one year, for infringements of the law ? He says he does not go into court but imposes a penalty. Now, it would be a guide to us as to what the department is accomplishing by all this expenditure of money, if we could ascertain the number of impurities that have been discovered in the various samples.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I cannot say off-hand what the amount is, but I will bring down the figures showing the fines which have been imposed within the last two or three years.

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not wish to give the minister that trouble, I thought he might perhaps have the figures under his hand.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I am informed that all this information is to be found in the bulletin which I have issued. I have here figures showing the number of samples collected in various years. In 1890 there were 573; 1892, 829; 1894, 1,021; 1895, 926; 1896, 1,265; 1897, 929; 1898, 879; 1899, 805; 1900, 756; 1901, 881; 1902, 883. In 1876, when the department was organized, the number of samples collected was 180.

Mr. FOWLER. Can the minister give us the figures of last year showing the amount received for samples examined ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Two hundred and eleven dollars.

Mr. SPROULE. That bears out what I said. Last year there were 883 samples collected, the year before 881, the year before 756, and before that 805, 879, 929, 1,265, showing that there were many more samples collected before, when a smaller amount of money was spent than are being collected now. So that it is not in consequence of the additional amount of work done that a larger amount of money is required. There must be some other explanation than that, because the figures which the hon. minister has given indicate that quite plainly. It must be on account of a change in the way of doing the work.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I have given the quantity of samples collected from 1887 down. The expenditure for each year corresponding with the years mentioned in the list I have given is as follows :—

| Year. | Expenditure. |
|---|---|
| 1887.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | $15,322 58 |
| 1888.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 24,817 00 |
| 1889.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 23,700 00 |
| 1890.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 23,259 00 |
| 1891.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 24,725 00 |
| 1892.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 23,387 00 |
| 1893.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 24,249 00 |
| 1894.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 24,006 00 |
| 1895.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 24,284 00 |
| 1896.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 24,312 00 |
| 1897.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 24,006 00 |
| 1898.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 24,940 00 |
| 1899.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 23,125 00 |
| 1900.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 24,577 00 |
| 1901.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 24,991 00 |
| 1902.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 24,998 00 |

So that my hon. friend will see that during the period from 1888 to the present time there is not much difference in the cost, although the number of samples collected is more numerous. The cost of this analysis, on account of a different process, is a little more. We had to rent a building two years ago, and the rent, instead of being paid by the Department of Public Works, was paid by our department.

Mr. SPROULE. Was that paid out of this vote ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Yes. And, of course, we have had the maintenance of that building to provide for.

Mr. SPROULE. You want to change the wording of this vote, or you cannot use the money for that purpose.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I can see no objection, because it forms part of this service.

Minor revenues, Inland Revenue, $1,000.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. There is a reduction of $1,200 in this item.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I would like to ask the hon. minister if there have been any dismissals or removals or retirements from office of any of the permanent officers in his department, or who have been employed throughout the country ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. No dismissals.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Any retirements ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Perhaps one or two have asked for superannuation. There is a gentleman at Prescott, Mr. Dumbville, aged 73 or 74, who has asked for superannuation.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I understand there was a rearrangement of some of the offices in the hon. minister's department, the chief object being to get rid of certain officials, and, I presume, to put others in their places.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. There has been no change in the inside service for three years.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). In the outside service ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. No.

Excise—additional amount required for travelling expenses, rent, fuel, stationery, &c., $3,000.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Why is this additional amount required ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. The vote for the current fiscal year was $55,000. At the end of May the whole amount had been expended, and some accounts for that same month remained unpaid. This amount is required to meet the expenses up to the 1st of July. The vote for the next fiscal year has been increased to $60,000, in order that it shall not be necessary to ask for a supplementary vote. The revenue of the current year will exceed that of last year by over $1,000,000. The revenue from excise last year was $11,282,142. The revenue for the current year is expected to reach $12,250,000. Of course, the expenses are greater, because we have more officers, more surveys and more travelling expenses, and with the additional vote for the current year of $3,000, it will make the total cost $58,000. For next year we are asking $60,000 in round figures.

To reimburse E. Forrest, cashier of the Montreal Inland Revenue office, for moneys abstracted from his cash drawer and which he was called upon to make good, $85.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Who abstracted the money ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. During the year 1900 and prior thereto the cashier of the Montreal office suffered the purloining of a sum of money from the cash drawer. The original claim was for $135, but the collector, on investigating, was able to establish the fact that this sum named of $85 had been abstracted from the till during the cashier's absence. Of course, the cashier was the victim of the robbery, and he asked, with the consent of parliament, that he should be reimbursed in the sum of $85.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Was there any investigation made as to the circumstances of the robbery, or any effort made to bring the criminal to justice ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. One of the officers was arrested and, guilty or not, he was acquitted by the grand jury. Of course, we dismissed that officer.

To pay assistant inspector M. J. Kelly of Quebec, amount withheld by Inspector Bourassa, $159.90.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. The services of Mr. Bourassa, the inspector were dispensed with in November, 1896, and some time after, the department was advised that he had not paid the account of his assistant inspector, Mr. Kelly, for June and July, 1896. The department having paid the sum to the inspector, it was unable to pay it again to the assistant inspector. It is thought only just that the department should pay this amount to Mr. Kelly. Mr. Bourassa promised to pay it, provided the government would repay him what he had contributed to the superannuation fund, but as he had been dismissed for withholding the collections of the department, the refund could not be made. The shortage was $643.02, which was subsequently made good. The dismissal was made by Order in Council of October 27th, 1896. It appears that that assistant inspector was 200 miles below Quebec, and he was asked by the inspector to send his account receipted. He did so, and afterwards it was found that Bourassa had not only used the money of that poor man, but had used the money of the department as well.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Was this amount recovered from the sureties of Bourassa ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. No. The amount of the shortage was paid, but the department did not know then that he had kept Kelly's money.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Why do you not collect this sum from him ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I would not like to say too much, but I think it would be useless to collect from him. It might be somewhat difficult also, because the assistant inspector was imprudent in having sent the receipt without receiving the money.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That does not affect the question of the liability of inspector Bourassa in any way. Had he no sureties ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. The government had no security for him at the time.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Some one surely should be responsible to the government for this official.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. The system is quite different now.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I cannot quite understand why there should not have been a guarantee bond for Mr. Bourassa up to the time of his quitting the service.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. In 1894 the Guarantee Company notified the department that they would not be any longer responsible for that man, and the department took no notice of it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Why did not the department insist on a further guarantee of some kind ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. That was in 1894, and the system has been changed since. The department was notified in 1894 with regard to that particular officer, but the government took no notice of it, and the bond was not in force.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I suppose the minister could produce that notice ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I will do so.

To partially compensate Mr. A. Guay for the loss of a horse while engaged by assistant inspector Mayer on weights and measures business, $30.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. In order to keep down expenses the inspector at Winnipeg engaged a pair of horses from Mr. Guay, a farmer at St. Boniface, at $2 per day. Mr. Guay's team was used for ten days, the cost being $40 less than livery stable rates. During the journey one horse was attacked with inflammation of the lungs and subsequently died. The horse was driven during the whole journey of ten days. Its sickness was noticed on the fifth day, but was not supposed to be of a serious character. The claim is for half the value of the horse.

Further amount required for salaries of electric light inspectors, $800.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Why do you require any further amount ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. To pay for additional appointments that were not provided for in the estimates of the current year. We required an inspector at Three Rivers, and there is an electric plant at Shawinigan Falls, and we appointed a man at $500. We appointed another man at St. Hyacinthe, where there is an electric company, at a salary of $300.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What do those electric light inspectors do ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. They inspect meters.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Has the hon. gentleman any record that any of them really has examined a meter ?

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Yes. These meters are examined before they are put into the houses. The inspectors do not go from house to house, but go to the electric light plant and examine the meters there.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Here is the notice from the guarantee company :

London Guarantee and Accident Company. Policy No. 09246. Amount, $2,000.

Sir,—Please accept notice that the above-mentioned policy of guarantee of this company on the fidelity of Mr. P. E. Bourassa, inspector of weights and measures at Quebec, was cancelled on the 1st day of August, 1894, and that in accordance with the terms of said bond the liability of this company for acts committed by the said Bourassa finally ceased and terminated on that day.

C. D. RICHARDSON,
Manager.

To the Commissioner,
Inland Revenue Department,
Ottawa.

Mr. SPROULE. Was the department served with that notice before Bourassa committed the defalcation ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. It was committed afterwards. He was dismissed from the service in 1896. It was not a defalcation, but a breach of faith to that man. The balance owing to the department was paid, but he was no longer under the guarantee bond.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). When was the offence committed ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. In June and July, 1896. I do not think we could have recovered the amount under the guarantee bond, because under the regulations the assistant inspector need not give a receipt for the salary unless he is paid, and the inspector is not to accept the receipt without giving the money. They were both guilty, but as they were one hundred miles from each other, one had to begin, and the assistant inspector sent the receipt in order to get his money. The receipt was kept, but the money was never sent.

Mr. SPROULE. Outside of that, the defalcation was made good to the department ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Yes, $600 odd.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Why was this claim not paid before, or was it ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I understand they have been pressing it for several years.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Is the assistant inspector still in the service ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Yes, and he is a good officer.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Why was it not paid before ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I do not know. As soon as this came to my knowledge, I thought I had better submit the facts to parliament.

Mr. BENNETT. Might I ask the minister whether the duties of these electric light inspectors go beyond the inspection of meters ? Have they anything to do with the inspection of machinery or parts of machinery or any part of the electric light plant, and more particularly transformers ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. No, they have only to inspect the meters.

Mr. BENNETT. Well, I think some government in Canada, either the federal or the local, should supervise in some way these electric light plants all over the Dominion. I happened to be concerned in an electric light arbitration last winter, and in the course of the evidence it came out that owing to defective transformers a number of lives had been lost. Owing to defects in the different parts of the electric light plant, deaths have occurred. I think that these were attributable to the fact that the transformers, which regulate the power, had become practically worn out. There was one case in Ottawa where a man went to the stable to turn on the electric light and his dead body was found there. The department should undertake to have a rigid inspection of electric light plants wherever established.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). For fourteen years and a half we had an inspector of inland revenue in the province of Nova Scotia, but now we have none, and the work is being done by a man from St. John, New Brunswick. I am afraid to say anything about St. John after what I said the other night, but I have reason to believe that he is not very acceptable to those who are in the service of the Inland Revenue Department for the province of Nova Scotia, and a memorial signed by the members from Nova Scotia supporting the government has been sent in asking the hon. minister to provide the necessary sum in the supplementaries, so that we may have a proper officer appointed as inspector of Inland Revenue for Nova Scotia. Surely when we had one during fourteen years, we ought to have one now when our population has increased and there is greater necessity for his services.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. This matter is under consideration.

Mr. BENNETT. Has the inspection of electric light plants ever been brought to the hon. gentleman's notice.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Never. Under the law, the powers of the inspectors of electric lights are very limited. It would be very important that some inspection should be made of this plant, but this would require the services of a more competent man, a mechanical man of experience, and I do not know if, under the provision of the local law, there is not some inspection of these establishments provided for. Our inspector of electric lights would have no right to visit the plant.

Mr. BENNETT. The services of one man would do for the province of Ontario because the inspection of one plant once a year would suffice.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Would not that come under the Provincial Factory Act ?

Mr. BENNETT. I hardly know whether it would be the duty of the province to see to that or not, but it would be money well spent by the Dominion if a good man were appointed, say in Ontario. I think a good man could be secured at a salary of $1,500, who might go from one town to another and inspect the plant, whether owned by a municipality or a company. We have had three or four deaths in Ontario caused by a live wire. There was one in Ottawa and one in the town of Chesley. Owing to the defects in the transformers, or to their being worn out, so great a volume of power came over the wire that simply to touch it killed a man.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am not very familiar with the duties of electric light inspectors, but judging by the description given by the hon. minister they are rather of a nominal character, and the work that should be done by an electric light inspector is not really done at all. I have never yet discovered the actual benefit conferred on the community by means of the services such as are referred to in the item of $800. I can understand the testing of meters. Every meter is tested before it goes out, but that would surely occupy a very small portion of the year. The hon. minister is asking us to vote $800 for the salaries of two men—one at Three Rivers and one somewhere else.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. One $500 at Three Rivers, and one $300 at St. Hyacinthe.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). For the purpose of testing meters at these two places. How many hours a year will these gentlemen be employed ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I cannot say exactly. I understand that the same men are generally inspectors of gas and electricity. They inspect the gas meters and test the purity of the gas but they do not inspect electric meters except when called upon either by the company or by the one who uses the meter. They cannot touch the instrument except in the presence of the parties.

Mr. SPROULE. The law provides for inspection once a year ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Owing to fires or removals or other accidents, they may be called at any moment to inspect some meters.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Would it not be wise to have them make an inspection once a year of a certain number of meters at least, selected indifferently. Why is it desirable to restrict their inspection to cases where they are called in, because the majority of people are not aware that they have that right to call upon the services of the inspector.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. The law requires an inspection every five years.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Why not make it once a year ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Experience has shown that these meters do not require to be inspected oftener than once in five years. With regard to more frequent inspection, perhaps the users or the company would object. They do not like these instruments to be touched by any one. When properly inspected, they are fixed and nobody can touch them except with the consent of both parties, but the services of the inspector might be called upon at any moment on account of fires or removal or other accident so that he must be on the spot and charge a certain amount for the inspection. They have nothing to do with the repairing the meters—that is the affairs of the company. The inspector only waits until his services are called for to examine the meter when the parties disagree.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Of course, the insulation of wires and the adoption of other methods for the protection of life and property are really more important than the purposes which seem to be served by the Act at present.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I admit readily that a more rigid inspection of the installation and of how the wires are fixed would be very important. But, as the law is now, the officers have no duty except to inspect the meters, either gas or electric.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The fire insurance associations in some cities have what they call an inspection of these electric light installations. But, in some places, at least, I do not think the inspection amounts to anything, I know that in some parts of Nova Scotia with which I am more familiar, electric light installations have been made that are really of a dangerous character. I do not say that that is the case now, but I know that it has been the case in the past and it may be so now for all I know to the contrary. It depends, I suppose, to some extent on the person employed to do the work. It seems to me that it would be very desirable that these officers should be given duties, and they should be capable of performing those duties, more nearly concerning the safety of life and property. We know that in various parts of the Dominion men have been killed as the result of improper insulation of wires or through the proximity of telephone or telegraph wires. A telegraph or telephone wire may get broken and come in contact with an electric light wire, and a person passing along the street coming in contact with that wire may be killed. It does not seem to me that the precautions necessary to avoid accidents of that kind are in any way under the control or subject to the inspection of those officers. These matters are of greater importance than the duties performed by these officers at the present time—looking after meters, and, possibly testing the strength of the electric current. The minister might say whether this subject has been under consideration.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. The question is a very important one, and I thank the hon. leader of the opposition for having brought it to my attention. I shall carefully examine the law as it stands and see what can be done in the direction he has indicated.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Would not the trouble be that if the government undertook to say when wires were properly placed in a house, if anything resulted prejudicial to the owners, the government would be responsible ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I do not think it would be right to undertake the inspection of every house, but there might be an inspection with regard to plant and material. But at present the only duty assigned to our officers is to test these meters.

Mr. SPROULE. I think they go further than that sometimes, and that they ought to do so. One trouble with the electric light is that a plant for so many lights of say, sixteen candle-power is installed, and the light is not really more than eight candle-power. Who is to determine whether they are up to the standard or not ? The inspector does so when he comes around. There may be no meters in connection with the plant. In our plant there are none. The inspector goes to a store where the consumer has refused to accept the statement of the parties supplying the light, claiming that it is not up to the standard and decides that matter. But the trouble is that the inspectors are not always available. They ought to go round every year and be available at any time, for the light may be up to the standard to-night and very defective to-morrow night—it depends on how the dynamo is run and how many volts go through. That cannot be determined by the user of the light and he must depend on somebody else.

Adulteration of food—to pay Mr. J. M. Ferguson, barrister of Montreal, for professional services in connection with the preparation and drafting of amended Act 61 Vic. chapter 24. $100.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I suppose my hon friends of the legal profession will have no objection to passing this item. Mr. Ferguson was engaged for this work in 1898, he having special qualifications in his knowledge of the law with respect to the adulteration of food. He was selected by the minister at that time, Sir Henri Joly de Lotbiniere. I suppose these expenses should have been borne by the Department of Justice. The claim has been a long time pending. Fnally the case was submitted to the department of the Minister of Justice, and that department found that $100 was a fair and reasonable payment for these services. The drafting of the law called for the services of a member of the legal profession.

Mr. SPROULE. Why could not a law clerk draft it ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think a great deal too much outside assistance has been procured for such purposes as this.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. This is the only case in my department.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am not speaking of this department alone. We had a reference the other day to the very large sum paid for drafting the Railway Commission Bill now before the House. I am not going to say at present that there is not some justification for going outside occasionally. There may have been circumstances which made it necessary to do so in the case of the Railway Commission Bill. But I think there are men in the Department of Justice who are just as capable of drafting this Bill as the gentleman in Montreal, who was selected to do this work. We have a Department of Justice, with a very large staff, and I would like to know why a small Bill of this kind should not be sent to the Department of Justice, and prepared there instead of being sent to Montreal. There are officers in the Inland Revenue Department who know what is wanted, surely, and there is a properly organized Department of Justice with a large staff, and these gentlemen are left to employ their time as best they can, while the drafting of this measure is sent to Montreal. I regard a course of that kind and absolutely unjustifiable. I believe that if we had an inquiry made of the Deputy Minister of Justice and his assistants, not one of them would dare to say that this Bill could not have been prepared in the Department of Justice without overworking any man in that department. Under these circumstances I absolutely protest against work of this kind being sent out, when we have not only a Department of Justice, but a law clerk, and some times two or three in nearly every department of this government.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. We have none in our department.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). In nearly every department. I think there are two in the Railway Department. I am not finding any fault with that. But I am finding fault, when we have this enormous staff of lawyers in the public service, with paying men in the legal profession for work which could just as well have been done by the regular employees of this government.

Some resolutions reported.

ADJOURNMENT—INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Hon. Sydney Fisher) moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Before the House adjourns, I would like to state that the returns to which I called attention the other day were ordered on the following dates: On the 11th of May, 1903, I moved for returns respecting horses, hay and oats supplied to the Imperial government. On the same day I moved for certain documents in connection with the granting of provincial autonomy to the North-west Territories. On the 1st day of June, I moved for certain papers connected with the naturalization of foreigners in the North-west Territories. I give this information, because, when I mentioned these returns the other day, I was asked by the Postmaster General for the dates. Some six weeks have elapsed since the two first returns were moved for, and I think they should have been brought down before this. Before the House adjourns, I would like to know what business we may expect for to-morrow?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We will take up some minor Bills first, then the Railway Bill, and after that, supply for the Department of Agriculture.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12.45 a.m., Thursday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, June 25, 1903.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

QUESTIONS.

WEIGHING OF BUTTER AND CHEESE.

Mr. MONK asked:

1. What was the report of the investigation held by the Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce into the weighing of butter and cheese?
2. Who made the complaint, or charge, in respect to said weighing of butter and cheese?
3. Did the investigation made by the royal commissioner show that the complaint, or charges, were well founded?
4. What was the cost of said investigation?
5. Will the report, if there is a written report, be communicated to the House, and when?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Hon. Sydney Fisher). The Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce has not made out his report as commissioner to inquire into certain complaints as to the weights of butter and cheese. The complaints were made to the Department of Agriculture by a very large number of salesmen and others interested in the dairy trade. The investigation, not being reported on, it is premature to give an opinion as to the justice of the complaints. The cost so far is $428.95. The report will be laid on the Table of the House.

PURCHASES OF AMERICAN CATTLE BY BRITISH GOVERNMENT.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would ask whether the attention of the government has been directed to the following information published in this morning's Montreal 'Gazette':

The work of stocking Boer farms in South Africa with American dairy cattle is steadily proceeding, and a lucrative trade is being worked up. The steamer 'Atlantean,' which is now in port loading 2,000 tons of hay as export cargo for South Africa, will go from here to Galveston, Texas, to load dairy cattle for interior points in the Orange River Colony. The cattle are being sent to Africa by the British government to replace those which were either driven off or commandeered by the British during the war.

It is expected that the 'Atlantean' will carry between 2,000 and 2,500 head of cattle on this trip. This will be her second voyage to South Africa with cattle.

Every animal accepted is subjected to a rigid examination, the utmost care being taken by the British government that all cattle sent to Africa shall be of high class and without a blemish.

For these cattle good prices are being paid, and southern cattle dealers are reaping a harvest in consequence. Great care is, however, exercised in the selection, and instances are known where out of forty or fifty cattle offered only a very small proportion were accepted.

The interests of the British government in the cattle shipping business are being looked after by Major Maude, of Ottawa, and he in turn is represented by Mr. Kirtaw, of New York, who is now at the Windsor, superintending the shipment of the hay cargo on the 'Atlantean.'

When seen last evening Mr. Kirtaw said he was not in a position to speak definitely as to the cattle business, as he was not the official who has charge of the purchasing. He knew, however, that the business had grown to large proportions.

The trade had its inception soon after the end of the war, and as soon as the British government assumed control of African affairs and began to replace the herds of Boer cattle which had been driven away during the war. He expected that the 'Atlantean' would take about 2,500 head. They would be shipped to the interior of the country and gradually distributed.

I bring this to the attention of the government because it has occurred to me, from reading this paragraph, that here would be a very good opportunity indeed for the shipping of cattle from Canada, and that this restocking of Boer farms should, to a very considerable extent, be done by Canadian cattle raisers. Has the attention of the government been directed to the subject matter of this paragraph, and have any representations been made to the imperial government, pointing out the desirability of their obtaining shipments of this kind as far as possible from Canada?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Hon. Sydney Fisher). I may say that I was not aware of the statements contained in the paragraph cited, nor of the shipments in question. Immediately after it was announced that the imperial authorities were going to purchase cattle for the restocking of the Boer farms in South Africa most urgent representations were made by this government, through Lord Strathcona, to the imperial authorities that these purchases should be made in Canada, and explanations were given of what Canada could do in the way of supplying the demand. These representations were referred, by the Colonial Secretary of State, to the imperial officers in charge of the work, and we were informed that they would receive due consideration. A second time the attention of the imperial government was called to the fact that large purchases were being made in the United States on the lines indicated by this newspaper paragraph, but so far no attention has been paid by the imperial authorities to these representations.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. J. T. SCHELL (Glengarry). I rise, Mr. Speaker, to a question of privilege. On the 18th June instant the question was asked in this House, is J. T. Schell a member of the firm of McPherson & Schell? I may answer in reply to that inquiry, Yes.

The matter to which this inquiry refers is one which arose from an order given by a Mr. Scott to the firm mentioned. The said order was given for one hundred shooks for cheese boxes to be sent to Glasgow, Scotland. The order was given on paper headed 'Glasgow International Exhibition, 1901.' It was dated Ottawa, February 18th, 1901; signed W. D. Scott, Commissioner, per C. H. M. There was nothing to indicate that Mr. Scott was an officer of the Dominion government. In fact the terms of the order as received rather favoured the idea that Mr. Scott was a commissioner from the old country.

The order contained a request that a memorandum of the amount should be sent to Mr. Scott personally, not to any officer or department of the government. I may here state that the sum involved in this transaction is $4, with an additional $1.50 for package. At any rate, the order was received in my absence at Ottawa in the usual course of business, and was attended to by the manager of the business. The firm of which I am a member has before this refused orders which they knew to come from the Dominion government.

If any further evidence is required as to the understanding by our manager that the transaction was one with Mr. Scott personally, I may refer to the invoice, a press copy of which we have in our invoice book, and which is simply in this form:

|---|---|
| W. D. Scott, Ottawa, to 100 sets cheese hoops | $4 00 |
| Crating, &c | 1 50 |
| | $5 50 |

That same entry was carried through our books and posted in our ledger in exactly the same terms, as a transaction with Mr. Scott personally. The matter was carried through all our books and, when the payment was made more than a year afterwards, I was again absent from Alexandria, being engaged in attendance on this House, and the receipt of the payment is a simple entry in the cash book credited to Mr. W. D. Scott. The manner in which this payment was made I was not aware of any more than I was of the transaction itself. The first intimation I had of there being any transaction whatever with the Dominion government was the question raised on the 18th of June, as appearing on the Order Paper.

This is a simple and straightforward statement of the whole transaction, and I should say ought to strike any man of common sense as evidence of my entire ignorance of the transaction, and, therefore, of the absence of any intention to infringe upon any law relating to the independence of the members of this House. I submit myself and the whole matter to the judgment of this honourable House.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick). I move:

That the statement just read by Mr. Schell, the member for Glengarry, be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Motion agreed to.

REPORT PRESENTED.

Report of the Canadian Archives for the year 1902.—Hon. Mr. Fisher.

ELEVATOR ACCIDENT.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES (North Victoria). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I desire to draw your attention, Mr. Speaker, to the fact that one of the elevators, or lifts, as they are termed, running in this building, slipped yesterday. I was not aboard, but a number of possibly more valuable members were. These lifts should be so built that there would be no possibility of slipping. I draw your attention, Mr. Speaker, to this matter.

Mr. SPEAKER. These elevators are not under the care of the Speaker of the House.

HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS OF MONTREAL.

Bill (No. 201) to provide for further advances to the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal, was read the second time, and the House went into committee thereon.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). This Bill is entirely a reproduction of the resolutions which the committee has already dealt with. The matter was very fully discussed at the former sitting, and I do not think there is anything calling for notice, unless some hon. gentlemen desire further information.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is the Bill in exact accordance with the terms of the resolutions passed by the House?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If the hon. minister has the information at hand, would he please state the amount of advances, loans or assistance of any kind made since confederation to each of what may be called the great national ports of Canada? I do not know that I could reasonably expect him to have the information here, but if he has it, I would be glad if he would give it to me. I am not very familiar with the subject of these advances.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In the earlier discussion I stated what advances had been made to the harbour of Montreal under similar legislation to this during recent years, beginning with 1896. But I presume that what my hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax) asks for now relates to the harbour of Quebec and—well, what other harbours would be included in his question? I would like a definite statement, so that I can procure the information.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not know whether there have been loans or advances to other ports or not. Nor do I know of any source from which I could get the information in definite form. I thought possibly the hon. gentleman would have it in his department.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Of course, I can get the information. There were loans made under certain conditions to the port of Quebec, and I fancy these are the principal matters the hon. gentleman refers to. I cannot say off-hand whether loans have been made to other harbours. Generally speaking, I think not. Before the third reading of the Bill is taken, I will have the information at hand.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I refer more particularly to Toronto, Montreal, Quebec, Halifax and St. John.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think I can answer that. There has been nothing in the way of loans to the ports mentioned except in the cases of Montreal and Quebec. Whatever has been done for the other harbours has been done in the way of piers, dredging and other improvements of that nature.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the condition of the interest account on old loans to Montreal?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. On these loans the harbour commissioners of the port have paid their interest promptly. There are no arrears.

Mr. TAYLOR. That is not the case with Quebec.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Quebec has not yet paid.

On section 4,

Mr. REID (Grenville). I would like to ask the minister if the dry-dock in Montreal, known as Tate's dry-dock, belongs to the government ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is no dry-dock in Montreal contemplated by this Bill.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I understood, when I was in Montreal the other day, that the government owned what was originally Tate's dry-dock.

The PRIME MINISTER. That is a wharf built by the government down below, it is not a dry-dock.

Mr. REID (Grenville). It is not a dry-dock now ?

The PRIME MINISTER. Never was, and never will be.

Mr. REID (Grenville). That is strange, because when I was in Montreal the other day and had occasion to have a vessel taken out of the water, it was dried off in this dry-dock.

The PRIME MINISTER. That is a private dock.

Bill reported.

ADULTERATION OF BUTTER.

Bill (No. 207) to prohibit the importation, manufacture or sale of adulterated, process, or renovated butter, oleomargarine, butterine or other substitutes for butter and to prevent the improper marking of butter, read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

On section 3,

In this Act, unless the context otherwise requires,—

(a) 'Creamery' means a place where the milk or cream of not less than fifty cows is manufactured into butter ;

(b) 'Dairy' means a place where the milk or cream of less than fifty cows is manufactured into butter ;

(c) 'Butter' means the food product commonly known as butter, which is manufactured exclusively from milk or cream or both, with or without the addition of colouring matter, common salt or other harmless preservative ;

(d) 'Creamery butter' means butter which is manufactured in a creamery ;

(e) 'Dairy butter' means butter which is manufactured in a dairy.

(f) 'Renovated butter' or 'process butter' means any butter which has been melted, clarified or refined, and made to resemble butter.

Mr. POPE. I have not read this Bill, but I would ask the minister in regard to fixing the number at fifty cows in order to constitute a creamery, whether butter that is marked dairy butter would imply a lower grade of butter than creamery butter ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Hon. Sydney Fisher). I do not think it would. The object is to prevent what has been done in certain cases, and which is held to be a detriment to the export trade in butter. There is still in Canada some continuance of a practice which has generally been discontinued, of repacking small lots of butter into boxes or tubs, and marking it 'creamery,' and forwarding it as creamery butter. Now, our creamery butter has a certain standard, and if butter is not so made, but is marked 'creamery butter,' there is a danger that it will not be up to the reputation which has attached to creamery butter. Complaints have been made to my officers of these packages as damaging the reputation of our creamery butter, therefore, it is that we put in this definition of creamery butter.

Mr. POPE. I should say that it would be a reflection upon a farmer that had only forty-nine cows, if he was not permitted to mark his butter 'creamery butter,' although it may be made under the regular process of creamery manufacture. He would then come under the odium that might reflect upon butter stamped 'dairy.' The minister says that our butter has been injured to some extent. We should prevent that, but in safeguarding the reputation of our butter in England, we should be careful not to reflect upon a very good quality of butter that is made by individual farmers. After the experience of large dairying, we find now that the labour of carrying large quantities of milk to the factory has become so burdensome in some sections of the country that farmers are starting out with small separators and carrying the cream to the factory, and it is yet to be tested whether cream so collected is not going to produce a really first-class quality of butter. It is possible to collect this cream from large areas and manufacture it into a first-class quality of butter. Since the development of the dairy industry, in many parts of Canada we have to-day herds of fifty cows where we had not more than ten cows before. In passing this Act we should be careful to do nothing that would reflect upon the product of a man who has less than fifty cows, if it should be determined that their milk can be made under the regular creamery process into butter that will perhaps bring the highest price because the milk is not exposed to any other than the first-class conditions provided by the farmer.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I quite understand the objection the hon. gentleman (Mr. Pope) makes and there is some force in it. When we considered this section we found that we had to adopt a definite number. It would be very difficult in any other way to describe creamery butter. The ordinary acceptance of the term creamery butter is butter that is made in a co-operative factory and not on the individual farm. I understand fully that a great many private dairies make just as good butter as is made in any creamery or anywhere else in the country, but we certainly must acknowledge that when butter is made in very small lots and packed in a package it is almost impossible that it should have the character that creamery butter ordinarily has, and it was to avoid any such misrepresentation as is likely to occur under the present condition of affairs that we adopted this number as it would not be desirable to have any such butter sent forward under the name of creamery butter. I understand that the number fifty is rather an arbitrary number, but I do not know that we can get a much better number to serve the purpose. If we go much below fifty the dairies would be hardly of the character that the hon. gentleman has just described.

Mr. POPE. Is that not a good argument for making it a little lower—say twenty-five instead of fifty ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not know that I would object if we put it at twenty-five or thirty instead of fifty, although fifty seems to be a very reasonable number. I think, as a matter of fact, that a great deal of dairy butter is sold at as high a price as creamery butter. Where the dairy butter is of the character that the hon. gentleman has described I think it is its reputation that gives it that price, but where the dairy is of a smaller character and the product cannot conform to the necessary uniformity and equality required by the export trade it would hardly be entitled to be marked as creamery butter. I am not particularly wedded to this particular number, but we thought it was as safe a number as we could take.

Mr. POPE. Fifty cows would have a product sufficient to fill an ordinary package of fifty pounds, which would entitle a creamery to participate in the export trade.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. But perhaps a less number of cows hardly would.

Mr. POPE. I would suggest that it should be made a less number.

Mr. GILMOUR. The product of fifty cows kept where the creamery is situated would have a better chance of being converted into good butter than if the product were gathered from different farms and taken to a creamery. The cows would be kept in one place, they would be managed in the same way, and because of that they would produce better quality of butter than the butter which would be made from the product of scattered herds. It is too bad if, by reason of this Bill going into effect, butter so made should get the name or the status of a secondary article. If you must give names to the different varieties of butter you must endeavour to find some means whereby you shall not prejudice the kind of butter that I have spoken of in the minds of those who purchase it. There are farmers who keep about the number of cows that is mentioned in this subsection and who manufacture their own butter on their own farms. I believe that a better class of butter can be made in one dairy from the product of a single herd than can be made from the product of various herds.

Mr. HENDERSON. I quite sympathize with what has been said by the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Pope) and the hon. member for East Middlesex (Mr. Gilmour) I think, for various reasons and especially for the reasons that these two hon. gentlemen have suggested, that the number fifty in this subsection is too large. I have understood that one of the difficulties in establishing creameries in sections of the country where creameries have not at all become common was to get a sufficient number of people interested in the matter. I believe that if the law will permit butter made in a creamery with a less number of cows than fifty, to be marked and sold as creamery butter, it will assist people who may be interested in this matter to establish a creamery, where otherwise it would not be easily established, and for that reason and the reasons suggested by these hon. gentlemen I think, on further consideration the proposal I am about to make will meet with the views of the hon. minister. I beg to move that the word 'fifty' in subsection (a) be struck out and that the word 'twenty-five' be substituted in lieu thereof.

Mr. TAYLOR. Make it twenty.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am not particular whether it is twenty or twenty-five, but I thought it was quite sufficient if I split the number in two. It will then meet the case of a farmer who desires to put in the necessary plant and make creamery butter even if he only has forty or forty-five cows, or a less number than fifty, and it will meet the case of a neighbourhood where no creamery has been established and assist those who would be interested in it and who have perhaps ten, or fifteen cows, in getting a sufficient number to join together to start a creamery which might afterwards be enlarged so as to make an establishment taking the milk of perhaps 200 cows. I think the hon. minister is going to defeat the object he has in view by limiting this number to fifty, and depriving a certain number of people of the privilege in regard to selling their butter to which they are just as much entitled as others living in a section of the country where a larger number of people take an interest in the manufacture of creamery butter or where a farmer desires to enter into the manufacture of butter on his own account.

Mr. SPROULE. Any one who looks at the market will notice the distinction at once between these two kinds of butter. You can take up the paper and you will find that dairy butter is always from two to three cents below the price of creamery butter. Why you should make dairy butter that is made out of the product of forty-nine cows different from creamery butter that is made out of the product of fifty cows I do not understand. There is no doubt that you are branding it so as to make it inferior in the market. I have before me the Toronto 'World' of the 24th instant, and taking up the market report, I find this :

Butter, dairy, pound rolls, 17 cents ; butter, tubs, pound, 16 cents ; butter, creamery, pound rolls, 22 cents ; butter, creamery, boxes, 20 cents.

There is a difference between sixteen and twenty-two cents as between creamery butter in rolls and dairy butter in boxes. There are many individuals who have creameries that are run exactly upon the same principles as co-operative creameries, and in which the butter is made by specialists who have been instructed at experimental farms or other places and who are making butter in these private dairies which is just as good as creamery butter. Why you should make a distinction between that and the ordinary creamery butter I do not understand. It invariably commands a smaller figure in the market and to stamp it with something that is going to depreciate it in value is something that I think we should not do.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The amendment proposed by the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) to reduce the figure is certainly worthy of consideration, but I think we ought not to change it without very careful consideration and without a full understanding of the subject at issue. The motion implies that there is to be a distinction drawn and that the principle of the Bill in drawing that distinction is a correct principle. I believe nobody will gainsay that fact. The market reports for years have drawn a distinction between creamery and dairy butter, but, there is no definition as to where the line should be drawn at what is creamery and what is dairy butter. It is perfectly true that there is a good deal of dairy butter which is made just as well as creamery butter and which is of just as high a quality.

However, especially in the export trade there is a standard of creamery butter and a standard of dairy butter. All this Bill proposes to do is to draw the line where creamery butter and dairy butter are divided at the place of manufacture. In reply to the objections that have been taken as to the number of fifty cows, I may say that figure was adopted after considerable discussion and consideration and it is based to a certain extent on the fact that that figure has already been defined in Acts of this kind. In Manitoba a local Act declares that a creamery shall be a place where the milk of more than fifty cows is made into butter, and in New Zealand, there is a similar law. My hon. friend from Halton need not fear that this law will interfere with the establishment of creameries. No man would put money into the establishment of a creamery unless he believed that he would get more than fifty cows milk. As a general rule, about 200 cows is the least number on which a creamery is started. We have to obviate giving latitude for a larger amount of dairy butter being marked as creamery butter. When first class dairy butter is marked creamery butter, no evil arises, but when inferior dairy butter or repacked butter is shipped as creamery there is a decided danger to our export trade. Therefore some line of demarcation is necessary. There is no question but that where a farmer has fifty cows, he must be a superior farmer and his business would justify the employment of the best appliances and skill so that the chances are a hundred to one that the product of his dairy will be equal to creamery butter. On the other hand, where a farmer has a small number of cows it is just possible the standard of his butter may be sometimes doubtful. Therefore these large private dairies may be safely allowed to mark their butter 'creamery,' while the same rule would not apply to smaller dairies. When a man with a few cows really makes first class butter, in ninety-nine cases out of one hundred, he has a special local market and sells his butter on the reputation of his own name and not as creamery butter, and sometimes he gets a higher price for it than the price for export creamery butter. He will not suffer any detriment by this clause. I would strongly recommend the committee not to adopt any figure lower than 'fifty.'

Mr. WRIGHT. I cannot conceive what advantage would be gained by lowering the number of 'fifty' to 'twenty-five.'

Mr. COCHRANE. You are not a farmer.

Mr. WRIGHT. I am not a farmer ? I handle more butter than you ever saw.

Mr. COCHRANE. You do not make more than I do.

Mr. WRIGHT. Yes, I have made more than you ever saw. The fact of the matter is that no creamery is carried on with a smaller number than fifty cows. There is no money in it. The creamery butter is the butter that is exported and not the dairy butter. The dairy butter is very largely sold in the locality in which it is made. In fact in the rural districts it is almost impossible for the farmers to get butter to supply home consumption. Where cheese factories are numerous they have scarcely butter enough to supply the home demand. This butter therefore does not come into competition with creamery butter. The manufacturer of creamery butter has his own brand and he labels his butter by the name of the factory so that if his butter is really good, he has the reputation of producing a first class article and he sells his butter at a higher price. If you reduce the number below 'fifty' it would open the door for every one who thought that they had a fancy article to try and label it as creamery butter. No good would come from reducing the number below fifty.

Mr. COCHRANE. The Minister of Agriculture must realize that it is not the number of cows that makes the quality of the butter so much as the process by which the butter is made. There is no argument in the contention of the hon. member for Renfrew (Mr. Wright), who says that it would not pay to run a creamery with less than 200 cows. I admit that, because in the running of a creamery you have to hire all the labour whereas a farmer who has twenty-five or thirty cows utilizes the labour of his family, and he can produce just as good butter as creamery butter if he makes it under the same process. In my own locality we have a factory and when it is running on cheese the milk is made into cheese, and as soon as the factory closes the cream goes to the creamery. How could any cream be in as good condition after it is drawn six or seven miles to the creamery, as it would be if the farmer made his own milk into butter by the creamery process in his own dairy? This very fact should show the minister or anybody else that cream that is taken six or seven miles and churned in cans on the journey cannot be in as good condition as the milk that is made by the same process on your own farm. When the Experimental Farm was first established and creamery butter was first made there, they never had fifty cows on that farm, and yet I do not think that the Minister of Agriculture would want his butter branded as inferior to creamery butter although he did not have fifty cows. I would say to my hon. friend from Renfrew (Mr. Wright) with his boasted argument that he has made more butter than ever I have seen, that I did not know what made him such a sleek looking man; it is the amount of grease he handles. I want him to be careful in making his butter that some of his whiskers do not fall into it.

Mr. WRIGHT. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Cochrane) does not seem to know there are creameries which manufacture butter from milk. Every creamery does not gather in the cream and manufacture the butter from that, but there are a large number of creameries that take the milk and manufacture it into first class butter. It is the creamery butter that brings the highest price. It is the creamery butter made in the Renfrew creamery that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Cochrane) eats in the restaurant and finer butter you cannot find anywhere. It is the creamery butter made in the Renfrew creamery that His Royal Highness ate on the train going to Vancouver, and better butter he could not eat.

Mr. MACKIE. Do you make butter out of skim milk?

Mr. WRIGHT. No, we do not make butter out of skim milk, or otherwise I would not be so sleek.

Mr. TAYLOR. The fourth section of the Bill, which refers to the percentage of water in butter, applies to all butter, whether made in a creamery or in a dairy. I think that should be amended so as to apply only to creamery or dairy butter where there are over fifty cows.

Mr. ROBINSON (West Elgin). If butter made in a dairy is made by the same process as butter made in a creamery, it seems to me it should be called creamery butter. I happen to know where there are farmers' wives and daughters who make butter which is just as palatable and which commands as high a price as any creamery butter, and it seems to me that farmers who have twenty or twenty-five cows, and who make a first-class sample of dairy butter, should not be handicapped because they have not fifty cows as the Bill calls for. They should have the privilege of calling it creamery butter if they have the proper facilities for making it. I think the number of cows for creamery butter should be reduced to twenty-five.

Mr. MacLAREN. I agree with what the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Robinson) has said. I think it is right that butter which is not made by the latest process should be called dairy butter; but, if a farmer has twenty or twenty-five cows and uses cream separators in making butter, I think he should be allowed to call it creamery butter. In my section of the country that is generally the case. I would like the hon. minister to explain to the House how this process butter is made. In the United States, while oleomargarine and butterine are heavily taxed, there is only a small tax on process butter. I think the House should understand all about it.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I would ask the hon. gentleman to leave that aside until we decide upon the number of cows for a creamery. What I said a few minutes ago in reply to the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) covers the point raised by the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Robinson). Nobody knows better than I do that a number of private dairies make first-class butter, as good as creamery butter. At the same time, the market reports show that creamery butter commands a price which dairy butter does not.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again to-day. There is an intimation that an announcement is to be made to the House from the Senate.

Progress reported.

ADULTERATION OF BUTTER.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 207) to prohibit the importation, manufacture or sale of adulterated, process or renovated butter, oleomargarine, butterine, or other substitutes for butter; and to prevent the improper marking of butter.—The Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. SPROULE. I understand that we are on section 3 subsection A. I move as amendment to that:

'Creamery butter' means butter made by the ordinary creamery process, including the separation of the cream from the milk when fresh by the cream separator.

It seems to me that this is really the origin of creamery butter—the use of the cream separator. Whether there are many cows or few, if the butter is made upon the same principle and by essentially the same methods as the creamery uses, it ought not to be stamped with a name indicative of inferiority. This will affect a great many farmers who use the modern methods of making butter, including the use of the cream separator. Having ten, fifteen or twenty cows, they use the creamery appliances and the creamery methods. They send their sons and daughters to the Experimental Farm to receive instructions in making butter; and these young people come home and, when they engage in making butter on the farm, they follow the same lines as are followed in the creamery, have their dairies arranged in the same way and produce an article often as good as the creamery butter. They ought not to be compelled to call their butter by a name which will mark it as inferior to creamery butter and so reduce it in value by from two to four cents a pound.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). I was going to move an amendment on exactly the same lines as that of the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule). As his covers the ground so well, I shall not present mine. It seems to me that creamery butter is simply butter made from cream separated from the milk while it is sweet and manufactured at once into butter by the process followed in large factories. A definition of it such as the hon. member for East Grey has given seems to me far better than a definition based upon the number of cows kept. It would not matter if a man had only five cows, so long as the butter was made after the process approved of being the best. The definition of 'creamery,' it seems to me, ought to be one which would indicate the manufacture, not necessarily the number of cows that are kept.

Mr. MACLEAN. I do not see that the amendment moved by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) and supported by the hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. Smith) quite meets the case. These hon. gentlemen say that the process is the same as the creamery process, but it is not quite the same. The creamery is a large institution with everything up-to-date. It is distinct from a smaller concern, even if it be of the same kind, where they have not the same appliances and facilities. The process may be the same, but they have not the same facilities for carrying it out. Now, these creameries have succeeded the old dairy system, they have come out from the old style dairy and introduced this new system called the creamery system. By reason of this improved system, they have increased the price of butter, and are in a position to pay the farmers more for their cream. If so much good has come out of this process, as I believe it has, we ought to preserve all there is of good in it, and should be careful about allowing those who are in the old style dairy business to work under it. If the creamery people have gone out and made a superior brand, why should they not have the benefit of it? The farmers cannot complain. They have always called their butter dairy butter, and the mere use of the separator on a farm does not make a dairy into a creamery, to my mind. The definition of the hon. minister is not a systematic definition, but I would prefer it to that proposed by the hon. member for East Grey.

Mr. POPE. What would the hon. gentleman (Mr. Maclean) propose, if he does not agree with this amendment ?

Mr. MACLEAN. I cannot accept this amendment, and I would prefer what the hon. minister has proposed, though it is not a systematic definition.

Mr. POPE. What would the hon. gentleman prefer ?

Mr. MACLEAN. I would leave it as it is in the Bill, rather than accept the amendment.

Mr. SPROULE. I think that the difficulty with the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean) is that he is not aware of the fact that hundreds of cream separators are being sold to-day and that farmers own them.

Mr. MACLEAN. Oh, yes, I am. But what you say does not enable them to make creamery butter.

Mr. SPROULE. They make it on the same principle. They put in a supply of ice, they send their children to be instructed in the manufacture and they have their butter made in exactly the same way as it is made in the co-operative factories. But when they bring that butter to the market they are offered a price perhaps from two to four cents below that of creamery butter. The purchaser will tell them it is only dairy butter and will refer them to the prices in the daily papers, showing creamery butter so many cents a pound higher than dairy. I do not see why we should put an embargo on the individual farmer, when he is prepared to adopt the modern methods and make butter exactly as it is made in the large creameries, using care and intelligence in carrying out the process and making an article equal in quality with the other, so far as an expert can determine. By this Bill, we are going to put a stigma on that butter and reduce it in price as compared, it may be, with butter made by the same process on the farm alongside his own.

Mr. BELL. It seems to me that some way out of the difficulty might be found by the hon. minister. It is clear that it is going to be a difficult matter to define creamery so as to include all creamery butter and exclude the product of private dairies. The point on which the hon. member for East Grey has based his amendment is the use of the creamery separator. Of course, the cream separator is used in all creameries ; but I hardly think that one would undertake to define the whole process of the manufacture of creamery butter as the use of the cream separator in separating the cream from the milk. That would not satisfactorily define the creamery process, which involves the use of milk in such large quantities that it can be used as soon as it has reached the proper point of ripening. In a private dairy, the milk must be accumulated and the churning must be delayed so long that it is impossible to make butter of the gilt-edge quality that is turned out from the creamery. It has occurred to me, and I offer it as a suggestion to the hon. minister, that, possibly, the difficulty might be got over by making another grade. Instead of separating all into creamery and dairy, it would be better to recognize the efforts put forth by the farmers in procuring modern appliances and making butter by the best process, so that, in some instances, it is quite equal to the creamery butter. A second-class might be made called 'private creamery' or 'small creamery.' This would provide for the product of comparatively small dairies in which the creamery process is used as nearly as it can be reached by the small farmers.

Mr. GILMOUR. The hon. minister would have us define creamery butter as that made in a place where the milk of not less than fifty cows is used. In order to make it correct, it would be better that the term 'creamery' should be defined as a process deserving the name, and give them two classes of creamery butter, one the co-operative and the other the private creamery butter. This would define it exactly as it is. The manufacture is by the same process as that used in the co-operative creamery, and it deserves the name 'creamery' as much as the other though fewer cows may be used. While I am on my feet, I would like to ask the hon. minister the meaning of the term 'cow' in the Bill. The hon. minister bases this upon fifty cows, does he mean fifty head, or does he mean fifty times so much milk. In the management of our butter and cheese factories throughout the country the term 'cow' has been known and understood as 3,000 pounds of milk. That has been the term used and understood for forty years.

Mr. ROSS (Ontario). I think the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Bell) has probably come the nearest to the mark of any of the speakers in providing for the classification of butter. As an hon. member pointed out, it would not pay to run a creamery where you had the milk of less than fifty cows, that is what is known as a creamery. Clause (d) says that creamery butter means butter which is manufactured in a creamery. As has been pointed out, there are many farmers in the country who have not more than from twenty to forty cows. Under these circumstances, that class of people would be very well protected by calling their places private creameries. It is true, as the hon. member for East Gery (Mr. Sproule) has pointed out, that there are not only hundreds, but thousands of cream separators in use throughout this country. The milk is taken warm from the cow, and the cream is extracted by separators, and that cream is precisely of the same quality as is used in the larger creamery. But probably there may not be enough cream for that day's churning, hence it is held over till the next day, the result being that the cream thus held over, while it is very good, is not exactly the same as cream from the large creamery, which is manufactured on the day it is separated. I had the pleasure of going into a dairy last year, where I think they had an output of about 500 pounds of butter a week. It was beautiful butter, I had the pleasure of tasting it, and I am sure it was as nice as any creamery butter could be. But to my mind you could not designate that as a butter factory, or creamery. It seems to me there should be a sharp distinction drawn between the two, and that it would not be at all detrimental to the dairy interests if dairy butter were described as butter which is manufactured in a dairy. I am sure there is not a member of this House who wishes in any way to detract from the reputation of dairy butter. I have been buying dairy butter for probably twenty-five years, over the counter in my store, dealing with farmers and their wives nearly all my life. Under these circumstances, I have purchased a great deal of butter, and I have noticed during the last few years, say the last ten or fifteen years, a very material advance in the quality of butter produced by the farmers. There are many dairies in our section which are up-to-date, and have nearly all the requirements of a creamery, and turn out a magnificent article which goes direct to the large centres for consumption. Those people should be protected by making, as the member for Pictou (Mr. Bell) suggests, another class of butter called home creamery, or private creamery butter.

Mr. MACLAREN (Huntingdon). I come from a dairy county and know some thing about butter making. I quite agree with the members who think there ought to be a third class established. If that were done, I think that to constitute a butter factory the number of cows should be raised very much higher than it is in the Bill. Those who know anything about butter making know that you cannot run a creamery with fifty cows, nor even with 200 cows, that is, a profitable creamery. With anything less than 300 cows you cannot run a satisfactory creamery, because the apparatus is somewhat expensive, and you have to keep a first-class butter maker, and pay all the expenses you would in connection with a larger factory. I would suggest that if a third class were made, called a private creamery, for private creamery butter, you should raise the standard of the number of cows which would constitute a creamery or a butter factory. I quite agree with the member for Ontario (Mr. Ross) when he says that the quality of butter that we get from the farmers has very much improved. I thought the hon. gentleman was treading upon dangerous ground when he suggested there might have been a time when every farmer's wife and daughter did not make first-class butter, because with most farmers' wives and daughters it is a very tender subject for anybody to suggest that the butter they bring into a store is not the very best that was ever brought into the market. But I appreciate the difficulties of making a difference between creamery and dairy butter. My own experience is that probably those who buy these articles put a little too high a premium on the creamery butter as compared with the dairy butter. I myself have used dairy butter for the last fifteen years, and I prefer it to any creamery butter that I ever used, and have got it from the same man for all that time.

Mr. ROSS (Ontario). It is not spotted butter ?

Mr. MACLAREN (Huntingdon). No, we make better butter in Canada than they do across the line. I think the suggestion for a third class is a very good one, and I would suggest, in defining what a creamery is that it should mean a place where the milk of at least 200 cows is made into butter; then fix another class between dairy and creamery butter.

Mr. KAULBACH. I can scarcely agree with my hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Bell) in suggesting a second class for butter, because it strikes me that would tend rather to deteriorate the grade of butter manufactured by a creamery not coming under the purview of this Bill. It would be calling the second grade of butter an inferior grade, and in consequence of which it would bring in the market a smaller price, and would be prejudicial to the smaller butter factories that manufacture butter of as good a quality as that made in the larger creameries. The same method is employed for the manufacture of creamery butter not coming under this Act, only it is made in smaller quantities. The same appliances are used, and the article produced is of a quality equally as good as that made by a first class creamery. Now, I agree with my hon. friend from East Northumberland (Mr. Cochrane) who placed the matter very clearly. He said that where the cream is transferred from the farm to the creamery, some distance away it is injured in transit, and would not be as good as that which was made more directly at home into butter. I think that is reasonable, and I feel that we should give encouragement to the smaller manufacturers, and in no way put them at a disadvantage in the market by a clause in this Bill discriminating between dairy butter and creamery butter, which would seem to question whether the butter they produce is first class, by describing it as a second grade, and which would mean a second class price, an inferior price, while the third grade would mean a still lower price. I think that would affect materially these smaller industries that are now being encouraged in various parts of this Dominion. In my own county we are now introducing cream separators, which are making butter equal to anything that can be made in any part of Canada. We are beginning to export. That grade of butter, I fear, if placed on the market and called anything else than creamery butter, would bring a lesser price, and those who are manufacturing it would suffer a loss. Therefore, I cannot exactly agree with my hon. friend from Pictou in having butter graded as one, two and three.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). This is a case, I think, where every tub should sit upon its own bottom, where creamery butter should be marked creamery butter, and dairy butter should be marked dairy butter. There is one thing we have to look to, and that is the foreign market for Canadian butter. We cannot be too careful about the quality of the butter that we prepare for the market. It is a fact that the butter which comes from New Zealand brings from 2s. 6d. to 3s. sterling more than the butter which is exported from Canada. New Zealand butter comes next to Danish butter in the London market, and unless we look sharp and see that we prepare our butter carefully, our trade will suffer. It is very essential to pay attention to the kind of packages in which the butter is sent. They say that the packages in which the butter from New Zealand comes, helps as much to sell the butter as the quality of the butter itself. There is no doubt that there has been a great improvement made in the quality of dairy butter as compared with what it was in my early days. What would be considered good butter for the table then would scarcely be used in the kitchen to-day. We are getting very particular about our tastes. Our tastes have improved and we want high class butter for our table and good butter for our cooking. I have packed a great deal of butter for myself, and I have seen it packed for other people when I was serving my apprenticeship in other shops, and my experience was that the farmers, or the farmers' wives and daughters, prepared better butter for their own table generally than they would think of sending to the shops for sale.

Mr. KAULBACH. I disagree with my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Ross).

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). I am not afraid of calling a spade a spade, or of telling the truth when it is necessary to tell it. I think it would be a great mistake if we were to attempt to brand dairy butter in the same way as butter manufactured in a creamery. The great object we should have in view is to maintain the quality of our butter for the export trade. As to what we consume ourselves, we can manage that pretty well and suit ourselves as to what kind and quality of butter we like.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cardwell). Mr. Chairman, if I remember rightly for a great many years back, both the provincial and Dominion governments have been sending out lecturers to educate the people of the country how to make butter. I believe they have accomplished a great deal. There is hardly a farmer who has not gone to the expense of getting a cream separator and all the appliances that are used in creameries to-day. Very few farmers who went to that expense send their milk to the creameries, and there are a great many who live too far away from the creameries to profitably send it to them. This Bill is going to shut out hundreds of farmers who are not able to send their milk to the creameries. After this government and the provincial governments have gone to the expense of sending men through the country to lecture to the farmers, after the farmers have invested their money in cream separators, and especially in view of the fact that the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Hon. Mr. Fisher) acknowledges that a great deal of the butter made in the homes is equal to the butter made at the creameries, why should dairy butter be branded as worse butter than that which is made in the creamery? I think this is an injustice to the great bulk of the people. We have heard the merchants get up and say that they handle so much butter and that they will not buy that which is unfit for exportation. The passing of this Bill simply means taking the profit out of the farmer. If you pass the Bill, you put the merchant in a position to say: This is only dairy butter, and as such it is not as good as creamery butter. I do not think it is fair, after the governments of the provinces and the Dominion have spent money to educate the farmers how to make butter, that you should say that it must not be branded as creamery butter unless it is made at the factory. This is simply driving the butter making business into monopolies, and as soon as there are enough creameries to compel the people to send their cream to these establishments, farmers will be obliged to abandon the practise of making butter for their own use. Some of the merchants say that they will still have the local market. The next merchant gets up and says: You are using butter in the House of Commons that is made by the creameries. That is a fact, and the same is true of other places. If you declare by legislation that creamery butter is better than dairy butter, you are shutting dairy butter out of every place where it would otherwise be consumed. The appliances possessed by the farmers are the same as those used in the factories, and I think it would be a great injustice to the farmers of the Dominion to say that the butter made on the farm is inferior in quality to the butter made in factories. You might as well declare by legislation that a mechanic who makes vehicles in a village shop does not produce as good an article as that which can be manufactured in a large factory. The adoption of this Bill simply means legislating against the farmer who only keeps a few cows.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Considerable good, I think, will come out of this discussion. I am glad to see, while there has been a certain amount of criticism of the provisions of this Bill, and of this clause, there does not seem to me to be any unanimity as to what substitute shall be adopted. I appreciate very fully what my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Maclean) a few minutes ago said, and I do not know that I could add much to it, as to the good work which the creamery system has done for the dairy and butter interests of Canada. Anybody who is at all familar with the butter trade, knows how co-operative work in creameries has added to the trade and profits of the dairymen of the country.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cardwell). Have the creameries or the people who have been educated by the men the government sent out, and who have used modern appliances on the farm raised the quality of butter in this country?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The work which has been done by the various agencies for the purpose of expanding knowledge amongst the dairymen of the country is the basis of all the improvement, but the profits or the improvement could not have been as great had not co-operative dairying been adopted in Canada. I venture to say that if we were to leave co-operative dairying and go back to the old system of individual dairying there would be an immediate decrease of many millions of dollars in the profits of the dairymen and farmers of this country. Therefore, I consider that anything that is going to jeopardize or deteriorate the co-operative dairying of the country would be a very great hurt to the farmers and would interfere materially with their future progress.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cardwell). The hon. minister has a dairy at the Experimental Farm. I suppose he claims that the butter made there is as good as any creamery butter that is made?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think it is good butter.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cardwell). Well then, it has to be branded differently from creamery butter under this Bill, because the farm has not fifty cows. It is not only the farmers who will suffer as a result of this branding, but the experimental farm will lose also, unless they get fifty cows.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am glad the hon. gentleman has brought up that instance. It is an exact illustration of what I said a few minutes ago in regard to the best quality of dairy butter. The Experimental Farm dairy is a dairy. It is not a creamery, and yet that dairy butter sells in the city of Ottawa at a price considerably higher than any creamery butter sells for in Canada. That is the case with dozens, and I might say hundreds and perhaps even thousands of farmers in this country who make butter and who have made a reputation for themselves and for their excellent dairy butter, and who are selling it at a higher price than that which creamery butter brings.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cardwell). You say that it sells higher in Ottawa than any creamery butter in the country. If you export that to the old country would it have as good a brand as creamery butter, or will it have an inferior brand?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It will have to be branded dairy butter under this Act. If the old country market pays more for creamery than for that butter then it will have to be sold for less.

My point is that dairy butter made in the way butter is made on the Experimental Farm—and hundreds and perhaps thousands of our dairy men do make it in that way—is sold at a price at which you could not export it without losing money. They can sell it on their individual reputation at a higher price on the local market than they can sell it at for export. My hon. friend from Cardwell (Mr. Johnston) says it would be a great hardship if the butter of the farmers were to be marked dairy butter so that they could not get as good a price for it as if were creamery butter. This butter is sold to local dealers who know perfectly well whether it is dairy butter or creamery butter, and while to-day the dealers pay the makers the price of dairy butter, they have the right to mark that butter 'creamery butter' and to export it as such, but the farmer does not get the advantage of the two or three cents a pound difference and he will not get it in the future more than in the past. Because, even if he marketed his butter, under one of the amendments proposed by hon. gentlemen opposite, as creamery butter, the local dealer would say: I know that you make it yourself and that it is not creamery butter. If the dealer exports it as creamery butter, it is he who reaps the benefit and not the farmer. I am afraid that the suggestion of the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Bell), that we should have three classes instead of two would be a little cumbersome. The trade to-day has an established quotation for two kinds of butter, so that I fear the hon. gentleman's proposal is not practicable. The only reason that this Bill proposes to say what shall be creamery butter and what shall not be creamery butter, is that there has grown up a custom amongst certain people, of marketing dairy butter as creamery butter and that is dangerous to the reputation of our creamery butter. The object of this Bill is that that danger shall be averted. My hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) proposes.

Creamery butter shall be a butter manufactured by the ordinary creamery process including the separation of the cream from the milk when fresh by the cream separator.

I quite agree with the member for East York (Mr. Maclean) and the member for Pictou (Mr. Bell) that this definition would be far worse than the definition I have submitted as to the milk of a certain number of cows being required to constitute a creamery. It is true that most creamery butter is made from milk the butter fat of which has been separated from the other parts of the milk by the centrifugal separator. It is true that this system is used by a good many private dairies, but it is not the only means of separation by any means, and it is only one stage in the manufacture of butter. It is just as important that the cream should be properly ripened, that it should be churned at the exact state of ripeness in a proper kind of churn, and that other details of the manufacture should be carefully attended to. The definition of my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) is therefore not complete by any means. It is true that in many private dairies all these things are attended to as carefully as in a creamery, but the chances are that for general market purposes the product is not likely to be as perfectly uniform as the product of the creamery. The chief reason why our creamery butter commands a higher price on the market is largely because of its uniform quality. When a dealer orders a 100 tubs of creamery butter he knows that every tub of it is likely to be similar to every other tub, while if he orders twenty or fifty tubs of dairy butter the chances are that there will be a considerable variation of quality even in the individual tubs. That is one reason for believing that the size of the place where the butter is manufactured is an important element in considering whether the butter ought be marked creamery or dairy. Any definition such as that given by the member for East Grey must necessarily fail in that element of uniformity. I may state frankly to the committee that my officers and myself have tried to get a definition which would include some such definition as this offered by the hon. member (Mr. Sproule) but we have failed to find one which would be complete, and after careful consideration we have concluded that the definition relating to the number of cows which contribute milk to a factory is on the whole the better one. I am not yet convinced that the suggestion of the hon. member for Halton as to the line of demarcation is better than the one proposed in the Bill. I grant with my hon. friend from East York that the definition in the Bill is not perfect, but I have failed to find a definition that is more perfect.

Mr. MACLEAN. 200 cows would be a better definition.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. My hon. friend would be right if we were able to have more than two classes. The reason the number was limited to 50 cows was so as to include small creameries which in certain sections of the country are frequent, more frequent than is good for the dairy industry, and so as to include a few very large individual dairies where practically the process, the appliances, and the arrangements are all the same as in a creamery. My hon. friend from Lunenburg (Mr. Kaulbach) talks about creameries being started on a very small scale. I can assure him that co-operative creameries cannot be started successfully, unless they have a very considerable number of cows to supply the milk to them. It might be that somebody would start a creamery with from 50 to 100 cows, but if he did not largely increase that number in the second season, his creamery would have to go to the wall for lack of profit. Under these circumstances, it has not been proved to me that a better definition of the word 'creamery' can be adopted than the one which has been drawn up after consideration by the department.

Mr. ERB. As I come from a county which is very largely engaged in the dairying industry, I wish to say a few words with reference to this Bill. As I understand the Bill, it provides that the product of a butter factory, where the milk and the butter fat are separated at the factory and the cream is manufactured into butter, will be placed on the market under the same name as the product of another butter factory where the cream has been gathered from the farmers and brought to the factory and manufactured into butter, although the cream that has been gathered may in some instances be separated cream, in other instances cream raised from shallow vessels, and in other instances cream raised from deep cans or cans put in water. I would like, before going any further, to hear from the minister whether such would be the case.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There is nothing in the Bill to separate the different classes of creameries to which my hon. friend has referred. There are in this country a large number of creameries where the milk is brought to the creamery and there separated and churned. There is another class where the cream is separated from the milk at private farms, and the cream only is sent to the factories. There is nothing in the Bill to provide for separating these two classes.

Mr. ERB. Such being the case, I would have reason to object to this Bill being passed in its present form. Where cream is raised in different ways, and kept several days before it is gathered and manufactured into butter, I can easily see that the product cannot be so good as it would be if the cream were separated all in the same way, even though it were done by a private farmer. In the township where I live there is a farmer who keeps from 25 to 30 cows, who has a separator, who churns every day in the week, and who sends his butter to Toronto. That butter, he tells me, fetches the highest price. If this Bill is passed, he will have to label his butter dairy butter, although it is exactly the same as the best butter that is manufactured in large butter factories.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. May I ask my hon. friend in what way this Bill would prevent that?

Mr. ERB. I do not say that it would prevent it; but it would place the creamery butter at an advantage, although it might be inferior.

Mr. MacLAREN (Perth). It would be creamery butter, no matter whether the cream was gathered or separated. There is nothing in this Bill to interfere with that.

Mr. ERB. I do not think the hon. gentleman understands me rightly. I understand that the butter from such a factory would be labelled creamery butter, whether it was made from gathered cream or from separated cream. I claim that the one may be inferior to the other. The chances are that the butter from a factory where the separation takes place every day by a separator, would be better than the butter from a factory where that was not done, but no better than butter from a farm where it was manufactured on the latest scientific principles. I for my part cannot see any necessity for passing a Bill of this kind at all, apart from placing restrictions on the manufacture of adulterated butter. Apart from that, I think butter can be sold on its merits, as it has been up to the present. The minister tells us that the butter made on the Experimental Farm here fetches the highest price. It does that on its reputation, and I cannot see why the manufacturers of butter throughout the country cannot sell butter on its reputation. I think we are going altogether too far with legislation of this kind. The tendency is to place restrictions on trade. We are getting altogether too paternal; we have almost everything inspected now. In recent years we have had the Fruit Marks Act, twine inspection, and the time will come when we have almost everything inspected, even the clothing we wear, to see that it is what it is represented to be. I think we are going altogether too far in that direction.

Mr. McGOWAN. I would like to ask the minister if it is possible, by some system of inspection, to give certain parties the right to mark their butter as creamery butter. I am satisfied that there is some butter made in private creameries which is better than that made in butter factories; and if some system of inspection could be provided, it seems to me it would get over the difficulty and be an incentive to people to adopt better appliances and a better system of making butter.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I would not like to undertake to have inspectors appointed all over the country to inspect butter and decide whether it was creamery or dairy butter. I do not think that would be practicable.

Mr. WRIGHT. The hon. gentleman seems to think if this Bill passes, it will have an injurious effect on the farmers who make butter. It will not have an injurious effect at all. The time will come when there will not be a single pound of dairy butter made in this country. Forty-five or fifty years ago there was comparatively no cheese made in factories. That has been changed and we have now no home-made cheese. The same will be the case with dairy butter. In my part of the country farmers' wives find that they have enough to do without making butter, and those who send the milk to our factories, instead of making butter at home, buy it from us. You will find that in a short time there will be no dairy butter offered for sale.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cardwell). If this Act is going to have no beneficial effect, what is the use of passing it ?

Mr. WRIGHT. This is for the export trade. We want to know that our creamery butter is really creamery butter.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cardwell). At present, should this Bill pass, it would bar dairy-made butter from the old country market to a certain extent.

Mr. WRIGHT. There is none going there that amounts to anything.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cardwell). I think that you are mistaken.

Mr. WRIGHT. No, I am not, I know it.

Mr. POPE. I think that the remarks of the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat show that the best way to remedy all these matters is to let the market supply and demand take their course. He has proved that, without any special legislation whatever, we are getting out of the dairy manufacture of butter and will soon be completely out of it. It requires no legislation to bring that about. The same thing may be said of butter as of cheese. The manufacture in the co-operative building and the improvement of the quality have resulted in the improved articles securing the full market, so that there is something in the statement that we are inclined to be rather too paternal in our legislation. There is some common sense left yet in the agricultural community, and notwithstanding the severe criticism to which we hay-seeds are sometimes submitted, we have acquired sufficient common sense to come out about right occasionally in our life. If we find that we get more money from our milk when we put it into creameries than when we utilize it at home, we are going to put that milk into those creameries, and the butter manufactured there will establish its reputation without requiring the brand of any government. While this discussion has proved very beneficial, it would be well for us to consider more carefully whether we should adopt any clause that would have a branding effect on any class of butter manufactured in this country. It is not the home market that the hon. minister is afraid of. He knows that the home consumers would choose a good quality of butter and that it would be very largely dairy butter, which is complimentary of course to the manufacturers of dairy butter. The only reason of this measure is the export trade. The hon. gentleman is afraid of the reputation our butter may have abroad. It does seem to me we might get at that in some way without reflecting on all the butter consumed in our own market. The bulk of the butter made in the dairies is consumed at home, and we should be very careful how we interfere with that business. I would suggest that it would be better to allow this clause to stand and deal with the balance of the measure. If more time were given to consider the matter, we would perhaps arrive at a better solution.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am quite willing to let this clause stand, and I have no wish to force this measure through the House. It is a matter of the very greatest consequence for dairy interests, and I wish to have the Bill as perfect as possible. The definition in the Bill is the best we could devise after very careful consideration, and if a better solution can be suggested, I should be very glad to know it, but so far none better has been suggested. Before leaving this clause, I would like to refer to one or two remarks made by the hon. members for Cardwell and Compton. The hon. member for Cardwell asked me why this proposal was set down in the Bill. For several years back—to a less extent formerly necessary; but to a steadily increasing extent latterly—this matter has been brought to the attention of my department. It has also been discussed at various dairy association meetings in Canada. The exporters claim that to-day there is a considerable amount of inferior butter which is not creamery, in the ordinary acceptance of the term, but which is marked and exported as creamery butter, and is hurting the reputation of our creamery butter in the old country markets.

Mr. McGOWAN. Is it factory butter ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, it cannot be, because they tell me it is not creamery butter.

Mr. McGOWAN. Creamery and factory, I suppose, are the same ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. In the ordinary acceptance of the term, yes. Creamery butter is generally supposed to be made in a co-operative factory. This butter does not come from co-operative factories. Just where it does come from, I have not been able to find out. In some instances, I am told it is butter bought in some small quantities and packed into packages used for export. In other cases, it may be dairy, packed originally into packages used for export. But whichever it is, it is marked by the dealer as creamery butter, and is sent forward as such, and our reputation for creamery butter in Europe is being injured.

Mr. POPE. Is it renovated butter ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, that clause would only deal with butter which goes through a certain process of melting, washing and so on. This butter is not treated in that way.

Mr. POPE. Could we not deal with it that way?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I hardly think it would be possible. That is the reason why it is felt necessary we should provide that people should not put the word 'creamery' on a package which did not contain creamery butter, and therefore we have to define what creamery butter is. At present the term is wide and rather loose. The definition is generally accepted in the trade, but if one were to go into a court of law and try to prove what was creamery butter he would find it rather difficult. Therefore, a definition is required. The hon. member for Compton spoke as though under this Bill all butter must be marked. The Bill does not provide for that. It simply prohibits the putting on of the word 'creamery' on a package of butter, which does not come under the definition of creamery butter under this Bill. When a person has dairy or any other kind of butter, he need not mark it at all. He need not mark it creamery butter even if it is creamery butter, but this Bill forbids the improper use of the word 'creamery' on a package of butter which does not come under the definition of creamery butter under this Bill. It does not impose upon the ordinary dairy butter maker the necessity of stamping his goods 'dairy butter.' For that matter it does not impose upon the manufacturer of creamery butter the duty of stamping his butter with that name. It only provides that if any person puts the word 'creamery' on his goods when those goods are not 'creamery butter' as defined by this Bill, then he comes within the penalty of the Bill, and then only. I think, that, with that explanation, the committee will see that it is wise to adopt some definition of that kind and impose that obligation upon those who deal in certain classes of butter. I am quite ready to have the clause stand for the purpose of affording the opportunity to consider what better definition can be adopted.

Mr. SPROULE. I wish to say in defence of my own amendment that I come from a locality where the farmers have not yet changed their system, but from which large quantities of butter are sent every year, being purchased by the merchants. I think I shall be quite within the mark in saying that at least 10,000 packages a year are sent out, coming from farmers, many of whom are making butter on exactly the same principle as that used by the creameries. And, as the price of butter is regulated by the export price, the effect of the distinction here proposed must be to lower the price of their butter in the market. For, dairy butter will be regarded as of an inferior quality, and this is against every farmer in the country making his own butter, though many of them make quite as good a quality as is made in the factory. The attention of the minister has been drawn to the fact that the effect of this would be that the butter from the farm would have to be stamped 'dairy butter.'

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It does not force any one to stamp his butter at all. It only prohibits a producer of dairy butter from stamping his goods 'creamery butter.'

Mr. SPROULE. That is just what I object to. The farmer is not allowed to stamp his butter in such a way as to get the best price, and why that should be thought necessary, I do not understand. The hon. minister says that we have attained celebrity for the butter we turn out, yet he says that a better price is obtained for the butter made at the Experimental Farm than that made in the creameries. I have the Auditor General's Report before me, I find that last year the Experimental Farm sold their best butter at 22 cents per pound, and their next quality at 20 cents per pound. Will the hon. gentleman tell me that the creameries do not realize a better figure than that? To my own knowledge, several of them do. It is a serious interference with the rights of a farmer to prohibit him from stamping his butter 'creamery butter,' even though it is made by the most approved and modern method in a place of manufacture where they have ice and the best dairy appliances, and where they work upon exactly the same principles as is taught at the Experimental Farm. I see a good deal of wisdom in delay, because, no matter what you propose with regard to this point, there seems to be some objection to it. I admit that the amendment I have proposed is open to some objection, but I do not see just now how to overcome it. At the same time, I think it is decidedly preferable to the clause of the Bill. I think that if this Bill were allowed to pass with its paternalism, it would stamp as inferior every pound of butter turned out by the farmers of my section. And I am disposed to oppose it. It will do a great injustice to these people, and it is on their behalf that I speak.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cardwell). It seems to me that creamery butter should be defined so as to include butter made by means of the separator, as in the large factories. In our part of the country a good many people send milk to the factory in the summer time, but in the spring and fall they use their separators and make butter, which is called creamery butter, and which, as a matter of fact, is as good as any made in the factories, if properly taken care of. I know farmers who have from twenty to thirty cows who put their milk through the separator, make butter and do it up in one or two-pound packages, covered with paper as in the creameries, and it is sold on the market at just as good prices as that from the large creameries. Would it be fair to the people who have not facilities for getting to the factories, yet who have all the facilities that a factory can have and make as good an article, to compel them to sell their butter for less than that which is made in a creamery ? I think it would be an imposition on the farmers who are trying to make a good article and who are really turning out butter as good as that made in the factories. To make a mere arbitrary limit of fifty cows, would be unreasonable. Many people have not the means to keep fifty cows, but they may keep twenty-five or thirty, and they should have the same privileges as those who keep a larger number.

Mr. PUTTEE. Before we leave this section of the Bill, would it not be as well to have some explanation of subsection F, which reads :

> ' Renovated butter ' or 'process butter ' means any butter which has been melted, clarified or refined, and made to resemble butter.

Section 7 makes the manufacture of this butter illegal. I wish the minister would explain what is the intention and meaning of these two sections taken together. As I understand it, no foreign substance is added in making this process butter. Since the minister introduced his resolution in the House last week, I have had a communication from a fairly large produce firm in Winnipeg, who are making this kind of butter in the ordinary way of business. They take butter that is not good enough for the market and melt it down and remake it into butter, without—as I understand it—adding any foreign material. This seems to be an established business, and I am anxious to know whether the minister's Bill will outlaw that business in Winnipeg and elsewhere. Is that the meaning of the Act, and if so, what is the reason for it ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Renovated butter, or process butter, as it is here indifferently called, is a rather new product on this continent—certainly entirely new in Canada. In this process, butter, supposed to be of inferior quality, is melted until it is in the condition of oil. While in that condition, it is more or less skimmed, and afterwards plunged into cold water. When it is in the oily condition it is hot, and the process of cooling is made a sudden process for the purpose of getting it in what is called the granular form. It is then washed in milk or buttermilk, and treated very much as ordinary butter is treated in the churning process, and is made to resemble ordinary butter. So far as we know, there is no addition to it of any other matter. But the objection to it is that in that heating process, which reduces it to a condition of oil, it destroys the essential ingredients of the butter fat which makes good butter, and the result is that when it is made up afterwards by the churning process into butter, it does not contain the essential characteristics of the butter fat which make a good and lasting quality of butter. For the moment, when it is made up, it might deceive even a fairly good expert, although there are some qualities in it which are decidedly lacking. But it has been found as a matter of fact that in consequence of the treatment which is has gone through in the melting process it will not keep as well, and is not a wholesome and palatable article of food. The result is that where this process butter has been largely distributed as butter and under the name of butter, it has tended to hurt the reputation of good butter marked in the same way as this is marked.

In the United States the manufacture of this process, or ready-made butter, has become very considerable. At first in that country there were no restrictions upon it, everybody was allowed to carry on the manufacture just as they liked. The manufacture of it, however, has assumed such proportions and resulted so disastrously to the butter trade of the country, that the United States Congress passed severe restrictive legislation requiring a license for its manufacture and a license for its use, where used in public places, such as hotels, also a license for its sale. They attempted in every way to get rid of the danger which it really brought to the butter interests of the country. At the present time its manufacture is only beginning in Canada. I cannot say positively, but so far as our information goes, there are only two or three places where it has actually been manufactured in this country. If we do not adopt the prohibitive clauses of this Bill, there is no doubt that in the near future the manufacture will expand largely in our country, and we will be face to face with the same difficulties which the people of the United States had to face, and which they were only partially able to overcome by their restrictive and licensing system. If we now, in this session of parliament, adopt the prohibition which this Bill proposes, we will be entirely free from the menace to our butter trade which the United States have not been able entirely to get rid of. I therefore believe this measure to be necessary in the interests of the dairying interests of Canada, so that not only abroad, but at home, our butter may be known as pure butter, made entirely from cream, from the fat or milk of cream, and without having been treated in a way to destroy the essential qualities of the fat out of which butter is made. People will say, no doubt, that this is still nothing but butter. It is really not butter under the definition of butter which is commonly accepted in the community at large. Butter is made from butter fat which has never been melted, and which therefore retains in it certain characteristics which are destroyed by melting. This stuff is made from butter fat which has been melted, the melting process having destroyed certain characteristics and qualities in butter fat which are essential to its proper preservation in the form of butter. I venture to say that if we do not adopt the radical measure contained in this Bill now, we will be face to face with an accumulation of difficulties and dangers similar to those encountered in the United States, and that in the near future we will have to adopt severe restrictive measures which will be only half effective, whereas to-day we can adopt an absolutely effective measure which will accomplish the end desired of maintaining the integrity and good reputation of our dairy products.

Mr. POPE. I congratulate the minister on the change of heart that has come over him since I first heard him discuss butter questions in this House, when we were considering a measure to prevent oleomargarine entering into this country. If I were as malicious as I was in those days, I would take this occasion to flay the hon. gentleman with his own speech and his own language. However, I have learned to be more kindly disposed towards him, and I will only take this opportunity of reminding him of past history. Now, the minister has not altogether satisfied me where the impurity comes in in this process or renovated butter. This is an article I have only heard about or read about, but, as I understand, it is pure butter fat, there is no other composition in it but butter fat, there is no animal fat in it other than butter fat. It is manufactured by people in various parts of this country from butter that is not suitable for table use until it is renovated. This butter is made over under a process by which it is absolutely purified and made clean of all impurities, and is a perfectly healthy article, and its manufacture is a legitimate business. Of course, the man who makes butter in a creamery may object to that sort of competition. But if this article is only pure butter fat, as I understand it to be, if there is nothing added to it, if it is simply renovated butter, butter fat taken in an imperfect condition and made palatable and suitable for human food, I do not see why we should prohibit it. We might brand it, we might name it, we might characterize it; but why a man should be punished for taking an impure article and making it more suitable for human food than it was when he found it, without putting any impurities into it, but taking impurities out of it, I do not understand. It does seem as though we were going a long ways to punish the man who invests his money in that business.

Mr. LENNOX. I do not think it necessary for me to advance such arguments as have been advanced by hon. gentlemen on this side of the House principally, who have studied this matter with a great deal of care. I am much in sympathy with those who oppose the Bill on the ground that it seems to cast an undue reflection upon the quality of dairy butter. I recognize that the farmer is the person to be first considered in dealing with this matter. It is right perhaps that those who manufacture butter upon a large scale in factories should be considered too, but the basis of this industry is the farmer and his interest should be first considered. After hearing the discussion this afternoon and the other day, it does not appear to me that this measure will, for the time being, at all events, be in the interest of the farmer. I think it will tend detrimentally to the farmer, I think it will be found to put obstacles and difficulties in his way. There is another view of the matter which was presented by the hon. member for South Perth (Mr. Erb), and it is a view that I have ventured to present before in reference to the legislation in this House, which I ventured to suggest to the minister in introducing his Seeds Bill a few days ago. I think you are too anxious to introduce legislation to guide the farmers. I think they have a good amount of common sense themselves. I believe they apprehend what it is they need in order to advance their interests. I believe they will progress very favourably if you leave them alone to a certain extent, and I cannot help thinking that this legislation which is attempted to be introduced by the hon. Minister of Agriculture is not in the interest of the farmer, and is but another illustration of that paternal system of government which the hon. member for South Perth (Mr. Erb) alluded to.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Mr. Chairman, it is almost six o'clock, but I will say a word in reference to what has been said by the hon. member who has just taken his seat (Mr. Lennox). I can only assure him that this Bill is in the interest of the farmers of whom he has spoken. Protection to the creamery industry is just as much in the interest of the farmers as protection to what is called the dairy industry of this country. I suppose there are more dairy farmers taking their milk to creameries than there are making their milk into butter at home, and the product is greater from the factories than it is from the home dairies, but, still, even supposing that to be the case, nobody wishes that the one should be sacrificed in the interest of the other, and if I supposed that this Bill in any way sacrificed the interests of those farmers who do not take their milk to factories I would not advocate the adoption of its provisions. It is because I think it does secure their interests just as much as the interests of the others that I propose the provisions of this Bill. I will have to say a few words in regard to what the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Pope) said and, Mr. Chairman, I will ask you to call it six o'clock.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

On section 4,

Mr. McGOWAN. What is the British standard for water in butter under the Food Adulteration Act.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Under a recent regulation, 16 per cent of water is the limit allowed without the butter being called adulterated.

Mr. POPE. Does that include all the moisture there is in butter.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not believe there is any other moisture in butter except water.

Mr. McGOWAN. Fifteen per cent would be all right.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes.

Mr. HENDERSON. It seems to me that if we substitute the word 'moisture' for 'water' we will come nearer to what is intended. Some butter makers leave a certain amount of milk or cream in the butter which is very injurious inasmuch as the butter will the more readily sour, and in my opinion it would be better to exclude that than an undue quantity of water. I have thought this matter out, and I believe that if the word 'moisture' were substituted for 'water,' it would exclude everything of that character. I move that the word 'moisture' be substituted for the word 'water' in the second line of this section.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think that the hon. gentleman will change his mind on reflection. This means water by analysis. We have no standard by analysis of cream or of milk. Cream is a certain amount of water, a certain amount of fats and traces of various ingredients; milk is a certain amount of water, a certain amount of caseine, a certain amount of butter fat and so on. But the analysis as to the water shows water by itself. In practical analysis there is no such term as 'moisture,' but the term 'water' is well understood as an element unless we go into extreme chemical analysis where the constituent parts of water are resolved into hydrogen and oxygen; water is the element for all practical analytical purposes. After careful consideration and after the scientific analysis of a great many samples of butter, the authorities of England adopted 16 per cent of water as the limit which should be allowed. If we export to Great Britain butter which contains more than 16 per cent of water it would be condemned after analysis and it would be heralded to the world, not that Canadian butter contains so much water, but that it had been declared adulterated. Our competitors would make the most of that, and hence it is necessary that we should guard our trade against the exportation of butter which contains more than 16 per cent of water.

Mr. HENDERSON. When butter is not properly washed there is a certain amount of milk or cream left in it which is much more injurious to that butter than is water.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Hear, hear.

Mr. HENDERSON. I think that perhaps we should use some generic term that would cover not only the water in the butter, but also the milk or cream which should have been washed out of the butter in the making. I would be very glad to hear the opinion of a gentleman like my hon. friend from North Perth (Mr. Maclaren) who is an expert in matters of this kind.

Mr. MacLAREN (Perth). I might explain that I am not a butter maker, but I think I would rather have water in butter than sour butter-milk. I know that whey in cheese is a very bad thing, and I suppose that butter-milk has the same effect on the flavour of butter. I would like to know from the minister whether up to the present we have had many complaints with regard to our butter exported to England having too much moisture in it?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We had an instance not long ago in which it was declared that certain specimens of Canadian butter had been found to have been adulterated. When we followed that up we were led to believe that it was because there was too much water in it and we do not want that kind of thing to be repeated. It appears to me that when 16 per cent of water is found in Canadian butter, it is left there designedly for the purpose of trying to sell water for butter, and any person who does that should be prevented from doing it under a penalty in the interests of our butter trade. Canadian butter such as we have in Canada will not contain 16 per cent of water unless there is an intention to leave as much water as possible in the butter. I say that advisedly with reference not only to creamery butter, but to dairy butter also.

Mr. MacLAREN (Perth). Was it dairy butter or creamery butter which the hon. minister had reference to as having had too much water in England?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I cannot say. It was a specimen of Canadian butter.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). The minister stated the other evening that he had a number of tests made of different lots of butter, and he found that only one of the samples contained over 16 per cent of water. Were they all creamery samples, or were there samples also from a number of ordinary dairies ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I stated that a large number of samples had been collected and tested. In answer to the hon. member for Macdonald (Mr. Boyd), I stated that the samples which had been discussed in the Committee of Agriculture as having been analysed on the Experimental Farm were all creamery butter, but there were a large number of other samples analysed which included dairy butter. I find, on further investigation, that there were 150 samples analysed at the office of the Dominion analyst, most of them dairy butter. The average percentage of water in all these samples was only 8·97. The average in twelve creamery samples which were amongst them was 9·39, showing that the creamery samples had more water in them than the dairy samples. The creamery samples analysed at the Experimental Farm, 105 in number, averaged from 12 to 12½ per cent of water. There was only one sample in the lot which contained more than 16 per cent. Out of the 150 samples which were analysed by the Dominion analyst, there were two which contained over 16 per cent of water, and one of these at least was considered by the analyst to be adulterated. My hon. friend will therefore see that the statement I made with regard to the general analysis was absolutely correct, and it is proved pretty conclusively by this data that dairy butter generally contains less water than creamery butter, and therefore this provision implies no danger to the dairymen of the country.

Mr. ERB. Might I ask the minister whether he is in a position to tell us whether the enactment passed in Great Britain to which he referred as fixing the standard of butter, contains the word 'moisture' or the word 'water ?'

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It contains the word 'water.'

Mr. SPROULE. In view of the large number of analyses that have been made, and that very small percentage of samples found to contain water, it seems hardly worth while to pass a clause as this.

Mr. FRASER. I think it will be an excellent thing for the farmers to know that such is the law; and, secondly; as it is the law in Great Britain, it will be an excellent thing, in selling our butter there, to know that we have the same law, and the people of Great Britain will feel that they are getting good butter. For these two reasons, I think the clause should pass.

Mr. McLAREN (Perth). Is there not such a thing as having butter too dry ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, nobody disputes that.

Mr. MacLAREN (Perth). I would like to read an extract from a speech made a short time ago by Prof. Robertson :

> As to the amount of water in our butter, Canadian butter has one-seventh less water than that from Denmark. We want to keep our butter as near the line as the Englishman will pay twenty-three cents per pound for—and I say that because a dry butter is the poorest butter you have to eat.

So I think there should be something in this Bill to compel people not to have butter too dry as well as not to have it too wet.

Mr. BRODER. Properly made butter will have no such percentage of water in it as 16 per cent. Loose, flabby butter, that has no keeping qualities, might possibly have 16 per cent of water, but no properly made butter would have more than 8 per cent or 9 per cent, or perhaps in some cases 10 per cent. The class of butter which the Bill proposes to deal with would scarcely be merchantable on the market. The price obtained for it would soon prevent farmers making it. You cannot compel people to make good butter by Act of parliament, though you might prohibit them selling bad butter. It seems to me that it would be better to strike at the quality of the butter in some other way than by designating the percentage of water that may be in it. For instance, people who leave a good deal of moisture in the butter are apt to leave a large quantity of other materials, such as butter-milk, and the Bill does not touch that at all.

Mr. FRASER. Section 5 strikes at that.

Mr. BRODER. No, that has reference to process butter. The average farmer knows nothing about the percentage of water in the butter, and there ought to be some other way of striking at the poorer quality of butter. Perhaps the price would be the most effective way of getting at it.

Section agreed to.

On section 7,

Mr. POPE. I see no strong reason why we should prohibit the manufacture in Canada of process butter. When we prohibit the importation, of course, we give a certain amount of protection to our dairy industry, but as there is nothing injurious in process butter, I do not see why we should prevent its manufacture. There are farmers who, for one cause or another, manufacture butter not fit for export or home consumption, but by the application of the system known as process, this inferior and tainted butter is purified and made palatable and good food for the poorer classes in the cities, and I see, therefore, no reason why we should prohibit its manufacture. That it should be marked and sold for what it is, is quite right. No one can question the propriety of causing it to be marked process butter. I have not had the opportunity of discussing this question very widely, but in any discussion which it has been possible for me to have with producers, consumers and manufacturers, I have not found any one who could give any good reason why we should not manufacture process butter in Canada and expose it for sale as such.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am sorry the hon. gentleman takes this position. He has a large farm and is well known as a dairyman. The position he takes is one which, I think, would be a great danger to the dairy interests of Canada. We have the experience of the United States to warn us. Some years ago we absolutely prohibited the manufacture in Canada of oleomargarine, butterine and other substitutes for butter and I do not think that any body to-day doubts the wisdom of that law. If, at that time, we had licensed the manufacture of oleomargarine and butterine, we would have to-day the same condition of affairs as exists in the United States. Every body who has studied the general dairy work of the world knows that one of the reasons why the United States butter products do not command good prices in the English market is because they have been monkeying with their dairy process. They have been treating it lightly. They have been trying to sail as near the wind as they could, and the result has been that they have sailed so near the wind that the ship of their dairy trade has been capsized, while ours has sailed forward with favourable breezes to a successful passage and commanded a successful reception in the markets of the world. When we discover another menace to our dairy trade, we should treat it in the same way. We should stop it at once and not allow it to assume proportions which will make it more difficult to deal with in the future. That has been the case with regard to this process or renovated butter in the United States. They have allowed it to grow until it has assumed great proportions, and to-day the United States find that this process butter is seriously injuring their dairy interests.

Mr. SPROULE. Is it made out of anything other than butter ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, not to my knowledge.

I stated before dinner what I knew about the process, and I do not think that I need to go into that again. I admit, for the purpose of my argument, that it is made out of nothing but butter, or butter oil—except salt; but no extraneous substance. Now, the United States have been forced by the conditions of their dairy trade, with this article freely allowed to be manufactured in that country, to take action. They have taken the action they took with regard to oleomargarine and butterine; that is, to hedge the manufacturer about with restrictions. We did not do that with regard to oleomargarine and butterine; we took the course of absolutely forbidding their manufacture in this country. The reason that the United States could only restrict instead of prohibiting was that they had waited until the manufacture had assumed large proportions and had acquired vested rights and interests in their country which the legislatures could not ignore. It was only after a struggle of many, many years that the dairy farmers of the United States were able to force Congress to pass these restrictive measures with regard to oleomargarine and butterine, and, more lately, with regard to this process butter. The dairy farmers wanted to prohibit the manufacture of these articles; but, as I have said, the manufacture had assumed such large proportions that they were unable to attain that object and were obliged to be content with restrictions and licenses and the hedging about of the traffic, instead of its prohibition. We have been more fortunate with regard to oleomargarine and butterine, and I hope we shall be equally fortunate in our action with regard to process butter. Our experience with regard to oleomargarine and butterine has been extremely satisfactory, and I venture to hope that the House will immediately, without cavil and without dissent, take the same course with regard to this matter, and at once prohibit the manufacture of process butter in this country. I will go further and say that, judging from what I have heard and read with regard to the discussion of the question in the United States, the manufacture of process butter is just as great a menace to the true butter trade of the country as was the manufacutre of oleomargarine and butterine. The request to mark process butter as process butter and allow it to go forth marked with the name of Canada, as all butter from Canada must go forth, is a very insidious proposition. But the adoption of that course would tend to the destruction of our dairy trade. That process butter will go into the English market labelled as Canadian process butter ,if you like. But the consumers will not consider the difference between ordinary Canadian butter and Canadian process butter, but will confuse the two, and the discredit which will attach to Canadian process butter will affect the reputation of all our butter. In the United States, they require that skimmed cheese and filled cheese shall be marked as skimmed or filled cheese. But when it is sold in England, or elsewhere, it is known as American cheese. When a person gets a piece of that and eats it as American cheese, he is apt to say : 'This is poor stuff, and I do not want any more of it.' The next time he is offered even full-milk American cheese, he is likely to say :

'I tasted some American cheese the other day; I don't want any more.' The grocer may say: 'That was skimmed cheese, but this is full-milk cheese.' The customer will reply: 'I don't want to eat cheese from a country where they skim their milk to make cheese; I do not know what I am getting.' In Canada, there is no skim cheese, no oleomargarine or butterine, so that in the English market, when they find cheese or butter marked 'Canada,' they know that it is a pure article made from the full milk. As long as that is the case, our products will stand in the high position they now occupy. But, if we allow anything like this process butter to be distributed it will not be very long before our dairy interest will suffer; and the reason for it, will be easy to understand.

Mr. MACLEAN. I agree with a great deal of what the hon. minister (Hon. Mr. Fisher) has said. If we prevent the manufacture of this process butter there will be no market for bad butter, and it will have to rank as soap grease——

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Rank butter.

Mr. MACLEAN. Yes; rank butter as soap grease. If we pass this law, there will be no encouragement to our farmers to make bad butter. The thing to do is to stop the making of bad butter, not to rectify it after it is made. Butter melted is not butter, and is not a suitable food product and ought not to be allowed to be sold in the markets of this country.

On section 9,

No person shall sell or offer, expose or have in his possession for sale, any butter contained in any box, package or wrapper upon which the word 'creamery,' or any combination of words which includes the word 'creamery,' is branded or marked, unless the butter contained in the box, package or wrapper consists wholly of creamery butter manufactured at one place.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). I do not find in this Bill anything providing that the name of the factory shall appear upon the package. That seems to me very important, for if the name does not appear, it will not be possible to trace packages of butter not made in accordance with the Act, back to their source, and there will be no means of bringing to task those who seek to evade the Act. I would suggest that the following words be added at the end of this section: 'And is marked in a plain and indelible manner with the name and address of the creamery where made.' This provision has been found necessary in the Fruit Marks Act, and I see the hon. minister has made provision for it in the Seeds Control Act. It seems equally necessary in this case.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. My hon. friend (Mr. Smith, Wentworth) has brought up a question which was very thoroughly discussed in this House a few years ago, when the Act was passed for the registration of creameries. That Act was designed to enable creameries to be registered and have a number which could be put upon packages sent out, the number being a registered trade mark under provisions for that purpose. The proposition now put forward was thoroughly discussed, not only in the House, but in the dairy association meetings throughout the length and breadth of the country. The trade and the people who were engaged in the creamery work objected to that provision of the Bill, and it was left out when the Bill was made law. I am not aware that any change of mind has come to the people interested in the trade. The hon. gentleman has referred to several other Bills to which that provision applies. But in the case of these Bills, as in the case of the Creamery Registration Bill, the provisions were discussed by the people interested and the Bills were made in accordance with the decision come to. In this case we follow the opinion expressed in the dairy association.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). There may have been other reasons why the creamerymen did not want their name upon the packages. But really I do not see how it is possible that any creamery should be ashamed, so ashamed of their package that they would not be willing to have their name branded upon the package. It is the only means possible of carrying out the Act effectively.

On section 10,

Every person who, by himself or through the agency of another person, violates any of the provisions of this Act, shall, for each offence, upon summary conviction, be liable to a fine not exceeding four hundred dollars, and not less than ten dollars, together with the costs of prosecution, and, in default of payment of such fine and costs, shall be liable to imprisonment, with or without hard labour, for a term not exceeding three months, unless such fine and the costs of enforcing it are sooner paid.

Mr. FRASER. Does not the minister think that the maximum of $400 is too great—a difference between $10 and $400. A person might do that innocently in the first instance. I would be in favour of a fair fine. But the minister will see that that fine may be made $400 for the first offence as well as for the second.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The idea of putting the maximum at that figure is because violations of some provisions of this Act are most serious offences and must be deliberate and intentional, while other offences are comparatively trifling. Therefore, a wide margin had to be left between the maximum and the minimum. The judge will take these cases into consideration.

Mr. SPROULE. You had better make the larger penalty apply to the manufacture of process butter, and the smaller apply to the farmer who might be running what he required as a private creamery. You say 'every person who, by himself or through the agency of another person, violates any of the provisions of this Act' may be fined from $10 to $400. That seems an awful penalty to impose upon an individual who merely puts the word 'creamery' upon his butter which he regarded as equal in every respect to creamery butter, and as having been manufactured in the same way.

Mr. FRASER. I do not think it is fair that the first fine may be as large as the second. I believe in gradation of punishment. For example, I would put the high fine on any person who violated sections 5 and 6, who continues deliberately to mix acid, alkali, chemical or any other substance with his butter. I have seen acts of this kind where spite or something else led to complaints, and the judge had been induced to impose the fine.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It would be left to the discretion of the magistrate to fix the fine. He would take all these things into consideration.

Mr. FRASER. He will keep within the four corners of the statute, if he is inclined to be hard.

On section 11,

Mr. HENDERSON. I would like to ask the minister with reference to these words 'any person charged with the enforcement of this Act.' I presume that has reference to inspectors that will be appointed under the Act to see that its provisions are carried out. Is it the intention to have an inspector in every municipality, or how many inspectors will he have throughout the country for the purpose of enforcing the provisions of this Act?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It is not the intention of the department to appoint any inspectors, except perhaps to give power under this Act to certain officers now in the department to take steps in regard to it.

On section 13,

No appeal shall lie from a conviction under this Act except to a superior, county, circuit or district court, or the court of the sessions of the peace having jurisdiction where the conviction was had; and such appeal shall be brought, notice of appeal in writing given, recognizance entered into, or deposit made within ten days after the date of conviction; and such trial shall be heard, tried, adjudicated upon and decided, without the intervention of a jury, at such time and place as the court or judge hearing the trial appoints, within thirty days from the date of conviction, unless the said court or judge extends the time for hearing and decision beyond such thirty days; and in all other respects not provided for in this Act the procedure under part lviii of the Criminal Code, 1892, shall, so far as applicable, apply.

Mr. SPROULE.

Mr. FRASER. You provide that a trial shall be heard without the intervention of a jury at such time and place as the court or judge may appoint, within thirty days from the date of conviction, unless the said court or judge extends the time. Why is it thirty days? Why put the party to the trouble of getting an order from the judge to extend the time until the court happens to meet? Why should it not be the next sitting of the court? If the judge does not come there, you have got to get an order to extend the time.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The legal clauses of this Act were copied from other Acts of a similar character. I do not see any particular objection, but I believe thirty days is the time limit given in such cases. I think the judge could extend the time.

Mr. FRASER. No doubt about that, but would it not be better to have it until the next term of court? Because, otherwise the party appealing must go to the judge and get an extension until the court meets. What charm is there about thirty days, that the case must be tried within thirty days? You are putting the appellant to the trouble of getting a judge's order to carry it on until the next term of the court.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have no objection to that change if the legal fraternity consider it is better. I want to make the proceeding as easy as possible for the litigant.

Section agreed to.

On section 15,

The Governor in Council may make such regulations as he considers necessary in order to secure the efficient enforcement and operation of this Act; and may by such regulations impose penalties not exceeding fifty dollars on any person offending against them; and the regulations so made shall be in force from the date of their publication in the 'Canada Gazette,' or from such other date as is specified in the proclamation in that behalf; and the violation of any such regulation shall be deemed an offence against this Act and punishable as such.

Mr. FRASER. I do not understand about this $50 fine. What is that imposed for? You have already made provision for imposing fines.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. These fines are fines to be imposed against persons offending against the regulations.

Mr. FRASER. But the regulations certainly contain nothing that is not in the Bill. They will be only for the efficient enforcement of the Act. Why is a fine of $50 put here when we have imposed fines for the violation of the Act? What penalty would there be for offending against them?

Mr. POPE. You have provided punishments in section 11.

Mr. FRASER. Yes, and you are imposing this penalty in addition as a punishment for offending against something that is not in the Act. I do not think the Governor in Council should have the power.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. This section empowers the Governor in Council to pass regulations for the proper enforcement of the Act. These regulations must be entirely in consonance with the provisions of the Act, but still they might provide certain things which the Act does not specifically provide.

Mr. FRASER. Not by way of penalties. This provides a penalty for the violation of these regulations which is not specifically provided in the Act. This section provides a penalty for breaking the regulations. Otherwise there would be no penalty for breaking the regulations but only for breaking the specific provisions of the Act.

Mr. TAYLOR. Is it the intention of the government to employ a staff of officers for the enforcement of this Act ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, there is no intention to appoint any officers who are not in the employ of the department. The intention is to authorize certain officers who are now in the dairy branch of the department to deal with the enforcement of the Act.

Mr. TAYLOR. I presume that under section 15, if the hon. gentleman deems it necessary, he can appoint an officer or two. It looks to me as if the Bill was simply for the purpose of making places for a few more officers.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That is not the intention.

On section 3, subsection (a),

Mr. POPE. Have we discovered anything that would assist in solving the difficulty there ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There was some discussion in regard to this and I think probably the sense of the committee will be that this subsection had better be adopted in the form in which it is at present. There has certainly been no substitute proposed which would meet the views of all.

Mr. MacLAREN (Perth). Would it be safe to reduce the number to twenty-five or thirty cows, particularly where there are separators ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I would not like to assume responsibility for that.

Mr. AVERY. Mr. Chairman, I think it would be an injustice to the farmers of the country to leave the Bill as it is at the present time. There are many farmers having fifteen or twenty cows making just as good butter as those who have fifty cows. I think it is an imposition on those people who have not fifty cows and who are trying to do as well as those who have fifty.

Mr. HENDERSON. The matter can be decided in a minute by the chairman simply putting to the committee the amendment which I moved.

Mr. POPE. A legitimate appeal was made to the hon. minister on behalf of a class of the community which is entitled to be considered. It would be well to follow up the efforts made by the hon. gentleman's department and by the provincial governments to encourage the use of a better system, in fact of the most approved system of buttermaking. All the larger farmers have adopted that system. Another circumstance which is very encouraging is that our farmers are beginning to send their sons and daughters to agricultural schools like the Guelph Agricultural College, where they are being equipped and qualified to conduct as good dairies at home as can be conducted on the co-operative plan. I think it should be our ambition to do all we can to encourage these home dairies because it is leading in the direction of a better class of farming. After the young people have qualified themselves for that I think it is a hardship that we should pass anything in this or any other Bill that in any way reflects upon the results of their labours or discourages the better part of dairying which is being taken up to quite an extent. In the section of country from which I come, there has been a marked improvement in this direction. I have lost some of the best patrons of my creamery, whose sons have gone to Guelph and equipped themselves for manufacturing butter at home. I think we should encourage that. If we can reduce the number of cows I think it would be acceptable to the committee, and I do not believe we would in any way violate the purpose of the Bill or the desire of the hon. minister. We quite appreciate that he believes himself to be in a delicate position in regard to the necessity of protecting as far as possible the quality of our butter produced for the export trade, and while I recognize that I think we can agree in placing the number of cows at twenty or twenty-five, which would prove satisfactory.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The question was discussed pretty well and I allowed the subsection to stand for further consideration. There really was no proposition put before the committee which seemed to suit hon. members generally. My hon. friend (Mr. Pope) himself, said that he was doubtful as to his original proposition to reduce the number to twenty-five. The hon. member for Halton (Mr Henderson) proposes twenty-five and now another hon. gentleman gets up and says it ought to be fifteen or twenty. Of course, these are difficult propositions which show that whatever the number chosen should be, there will be some objection and some possible idea that a hardship will arise in some individual instances. The object is to see that the word 'creamery' should not be put on butter which is not made on such a large scale as to bring about the most favourable conditions. If we lower this standard to fifteen or twenty cows we might as well wipe out the difference between dairy and creamery butter altogether.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. MacLAREN (Perth). In Western Canada there are hundreds of small dairies where they have only twenty or thirty cows and where they have been stamping their butter as 'creamery' for many years. Do not you think that it would be an injustice to legislate so as to prevent those people from carrying on their industry as they have been accustomed to ?

Mr. SHERRITT. How will you establish the fact that there will be not less than fifty cows ?

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.) Take a census.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. In the case of any prosecution under the Act that would have to be proved in the ordinary way.

Mr. HENDERSON. The hon. gentleman from Middlesex (Mr. Gilmour) has given his opinion as the result of forty years experience that in the language of butter makers, a cow means an animal that will produce 3,000 pounds of milk in a year. There is a marked difference between cows, because one animal may give 3,000 pounds and another 7,000 pounds of milk in a year. A good deal depends on what interpretation you are going to put on that word, and we should have the opinion of the Minister of Agriculture as to what his intention is, and how he thinks the Act will be read when it becomes law.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The intention is to count the number of heads of cattle. They may have the idea of 3,000 pounds of milk being the product of a cow in one part of the country and it may be totally different in another part of the country, but the number of heads can be easily counted.

SUPPLY—PURCHASE OF CATTLE FOR SOUTH AFRICA.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding) moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Hon. Mr. FISHER.

Mr. R. H. POPE (Compton). This afternoon the leader of the opposition called the attention of the government to the purchase by the British authorities of a large number of cattle in the United States for the restocking of Boer farms in South Africa. The Minister of Agriculture replied that a certain amount of correspondence had taken place between this government and Lord Strathcona and that certain representations had been made. We, upon this side of the House, and many people outside of the House, feel that this is so important a matter that it should have received more attention from the government, and to emphasize that fact I shall conclude with a motion. Now, Sir, we have heard a great deal on both sides of the water about preferential tariffs, and certain other things that will bring the colonies and the mother country more closely together. We believe there should be something more than sympathy, something more than a deep, loyal, patriotic feeling on the part of the colonies for the motherland, and on the part of the motherland for the colonies. I know of no better way to emphasize that desire than by the government of England, when it has an opportunity of doing business with the outside world, making an effort at least to do business with British colonies rather than with foreign nations. We have only one way of presenting our case before the British government or the British parliament, and that is through the government of our own country. After the splendid position Canada obtained in the British mind, after the close of the war in South Africa, as a result of the efforts Canada made on that occasion to emphasize her desire to maintain the British empire in its integrity, we cannot but feel that if the hon. Minister of Agriculture and the government to which he belongs had put forth a proper effort, we should have had some practical results, such as the purchase of these animals in Canada instead of in the country to the south of us. The hon. gentleman told us this afternoon that he had not even heard of this transaction. We remember a year or two ago when another important matter, the purchase of meat supplies for the British army, was before us, the hon. Minister of Agriculture confessed in this House that he had not heard of it. Well, we know that the hon. minister is not deaf, that it is possible for him to hear; we know that he is not illiterate, that he reads; we know that he is entrusted with an important department of the government; and yet it is strange that within gunshot of where we are now sitting, Major Maude, the agent of the British government in this matter, was living day in and day out; and the Minister of Agriculture and the government to which he belongs know nothing whatever of the purchase of this stock. I do not deny it. I am bound to accept the words of the hon. gentleman, and I do accept them to the fullest extent; but it is surprising to say the least. We find that this steamer, the 'Atlantean,' is at Montreal, loading 2,000 tons of hay, and that Mr. Kirtaw, of New York, their representative in the United States, is superintending the shipment. Can it be possible that this has not been known to the hon. Minister of Agriculture? We all remember what great credit was claimed for the Minister of Agriculture and his colleagues when they changed the regulations between this country and the United States, and claimed that they had thereby opened up a market for our stock. We remember how the flag again went up when they entered into negotiations with regard to the importation of diseased cattle, and how we were told that the prompt action of the Minister of Agriculture had saved this country. If those were matters of importance, surely an opportunity like this, which was heralded throughout this country months ago, should have reasonably called for a much greater effort than the hon. gentleman seems to have put forth. There could not have been a more opportune time than this very year, when every section of the country from which the hon. gentleman comes has been suffering from a severe drought. We know that our hay crop is not going to be more than 50 per cent of what it ought to be, and cattle are very cheap—just the kind that are best adapted for South Africa—better than the cattle of Texas or other southern states, where the cattle are poorly bred. There are thousands of cattle in our country seeking a market, and surely the hon. Minister of Agriculture and his colleagues could have afforded sufficient time to have urged on the gentleman who represents Great Britain in this matter, Major Maude, the value of our cattle, and thus have secured some relief for the people who have been suffering in the eastern part of the country. The hon. gentleman says he has not heard that there has been any exportation of cattle from this country. I think that under these circumstances we are justified in finding fault with the hon. gentleman and the government for neglect. True, he has been basking in the sunny climate of Japan, enjoying himself for weeks and weeks; but that was his desire. He went there, I presume, with the idea of doing good to Canada. But I expect that when the time arrives, it will turn out to be like his trip to England, where he was present when the negotiations were going on for the sale of army meat, and yet had not heard anything about it. So, when we come to find that the United States or some other country is getting the advantage of us in Japan, I suppose we shall find that the hon. gentleman has not heard of it, just as on this occasion he has not heard of the thousands of head of cattle that are being exported to South Africa to the great advantage of the people to the south of us.

It is not my intention to speak longer on this matter; I do not think it is necessary. I have drawn the attention of this House to the fact that the government have taken very little means to urge on the British authorities the great advantage it would be to this country to provide cattle for shipment to South Africa, and to the confession which the hon. minister made this afternoon, that he did not know anything about this matter, though on one occasion he had taken sufficient interest in it to communicate with Lord Strathcona. Perhaps he has had one communication, or he may have had a dozen, with Lord Strathcona; but he did not follow the matter up. It would have been more important, if the hon. minister had heard anything about it, to have gone to England himself rather than to Japan.

No doubt the hon. gentleman was an attractive personality when in Japan, but we would have been inclined to look with indulgence on his holiday there if he had done something for Canada. Had he obtained for the province of Quebec, and particularly the eastern section of that province, the material advantage which might have been obtained had proper efforts been made to secure for us the restocking of the Boer farms, we would not have concerned ourselves about that hon. gentleman's oriental experiences; but I trust that now that I have brought this matter to the attention of the House in the shape of an amendment to Supply, the government will lose no delay in communicating with Major Maud, who represents the imperial authorities in this country, and in taking every possible step to secure to our country the supplying of the cattle required. In the newspaper article describing this matter, it was said that these cattle are selected very carefully, that many are called but few are chosen. I have no doubt, from what I know of the cattle of Mexico and the south, that very few will be chosen. I do not know of any part of the world where you will get a more undesirable breed of cattle for the foundation of a dairy stock than in Mexico, Texas and the southern part of this continent. They have no good dairy stock. Their cattle are ill-bred animals, more or less filled with disease. But in this country we have just the quality required. The increase in the business of dairying has caused a wonderful increase in the breeding of dairy cattle so that our farmers in the eastern provinces have a large amount of dairy cattle on hand, which they cannot send out to their ranches in the west where they require cattle for the beef market, and which would be admirably suited for restocking the farms in South Africa, and could be had at very moderate prices.

I beg therefore to move that all the words after 'That' be struck out, and the following substituted:

This House regrets that the government have not taken more active measures for the purpose of protecting the interests of Canadian farmers and cattle dealers in connection with the purchase by the imperial government of cattle required for restocking the farmers in South Africa.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Hon. Sydney Fisher). I regret very much that the hon. gentleman did not see fit to give the government notice of the fact that he intended to move such an amendment. By his resolution he asks this House to say that the government has not taken sufficient steps to induce the imperial authorities to purchase in Canada stock for South Africa, and he has not given the government the opportunity of showing what steps it has taken. In other words he asks the House to condemn the government unheard —to pass a verdict without giving the government the opportunity of setting before the House in detail what it has done. I have not, in my experience in parliament, ever heard of a more unreasonable proposition, and I am astonished that an hon. gentleman of the political experience of the hon. member for Compton should have taken such a step. The hon. gentleman dwelt for some time on the answer I gave this afternoon to the hon. leader of the opposition, who then read this same newspaper extract to the House, but he evidently misunderstood or did not hear properly the answer I then gave. I stated that the government had taken steps to induce the imperial authorities to buy in Canada the stock required for South African farms, and I added that I had not seen or heard of this particular newspaper paragraph. The hon. gentleman, in commenting on this reply, gave the House to understand that I had said that I had not heard of any purchases of stock in the United States for South Africa. That is an entire misapprehension of what I said. The government knew long ago that the imperial authorities intended to restock the Boer farms. The moment that was announced by the terms of the Boer convention, this government took occasion to represent to the imperial authorities, through our High Commissioner in London, that Canada was the natural and the best field in which to buy that stock. Accompanying that representation there was a lengthy explanation why Canada is the best and most natural field for the purchase of that stock. An acknowledgment was received from the imperial authorities, and again the moment it was understood that the imperial authorities were purchasing stock elsewhere, the government sent forward another representation and again urged the British government to purchase the cattle in Canada and no where else. I regret that the hon. gentleman, by not giving me notice, has precluded me from being able to read these papers to the House. They would show a complete and thorough justification of the position of the government and a lack of justification on the part of the hon. gentleman in moving this resolution on a question on which he knows nothing and concerning which he denies the government the opportunity of stating the facts. Under these circumstances I must ask the House to vote down the resolution.

Mr. D. HENDERSON (Halton). I only intend to refer for a few minutes to the matter which has been brought to the attention of the House by my hon. friend from Compton (Mr. Pope). I do not think it requires many words to show that the government has been derelict in its duty in not making a greater effort to secure for the stock raisers of this country that market so recently opened up. We have been told by the hon. Minister of Agriculture that the government sent remonstrances to England through Lord Strathcona. Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that these remonstrances had so little weight that at present we find the agents of the British government in the United States buying cattle for export to South Africa, instead of meeting the wishes of the Canadian government which has done so much for Great Britain in the way of preference. Does he mean to tell us that after all these remonstrances, made, as he has told us, through the proper channel, the British government has quitely ignored them. Surely the influence of this government is much less indeed than any one would have expected.

The Minister of Agriculture and his colleagues have, time and again, boasted of what the government have done in the way of searching out new markets for the people of this country. I must confess that what we find now reported in the press—and there is every reason to believe it is absolutely correct—is not at all in keeping with the representations made by the government when they told the people how much interested they were in providing new markets for them, told them of their efforts and of the results those efforts would bring, above what had been secured by those who preceded them in the government of the Dominion. Now, one word with reference to the article itself and the representations it has made. We are told that the cattle are of a high class. Surely, the hon. gentleman will not contend for a moment that the people of the United States can furnish a higher class of cattle than the Dominion of Canada can. I have always understood that the people of the United States come to Canada to get their high-class cattle, and I believe there is a very large trade carried on by Canada in high-class cattle to be sent to the United States. Yet we find that the people of Great Britain are so ill-informed on this question that when they wish to secure high-class cattle for South Africa, instead of coming to Canada, where the Americans buy their best stock, they go to the United States whose people are purchasers from Canada. We are told that good prices are being paid. That is just the kind of market the Canadians wanted for their cattle, a market where good prices are paid. Yet, the government have allowed this market to slip out of their hands, I will not say without remonstrance, but without effectual remonstrance. Apparently, they have not been listened to. What is the matter with Great Britain that, after having received the privilege of our market under a 33⅓ per cent preference, they have nothing to give us in return or rather they treat us with contempt? We are told that the southern cattle dealers are reaping a harvest. That is very nice indeed. We ought to be reaping a harvest. The interest of the British government in these cattle purchases are being looked after by whom? Not by Americans, but by a paid official of this government, a man who is paid his salary by the people of this country. He is actually engaged to-day in assisting the British government to secure cattle in the United States to send to South Africa, and he is doing that whilst he is receiving his salary out of the coffers of the Dominion of Canada. I say we do not want any such officials. We ought to have men more loyal to the Dominion of Canada than to engage in any such transaction. I do not think it speaks well for Major Maude to be mixed up in this transaction in this way. I think that when he was asked by the British government to take charge of the purchase of cattle in the United States for South Africa, he should have said that, being an officer of the Dominion of Canada he thought it his duty to uphold the interest of the people of Canada rather than those of the people of the United States. I do not desire to say more. I think this is a lesson to us to be careful in the future what preferences we give to the mother country if, when an opportunity comes for an advantage to be afforded the people of Canada, we are to be treated in this manner which I might almost characterize as contemptuous.

Mr. SEYMOUR E. GOURLEY (Colchester). Mr. Speaker, I think that Canada little deserves this humiliation—for I regard it, and the people of Canada will regard it, as nothing less than a humiliation. This great colony of Canada, if reports be true, has been fêted in England for three or four years past on great public occasions. Yet, when there is any business that can be turned in the direction of Canada, unfortunately for us, there seems to be such incompetence either on this side of the Atlantic or on the other side, that the interests of Canada are sacrificed on every occasion. The remarks of the Minister of Agriculture, I think, shows the reason for the whole misunderstanding. Canada, he says, was the best field in which to buy that stock. He says that the Minister of Agriculture—with whom I have no quarrel up to the present time—said that Canada was the best field. That was the representation he made to the British government. Is that any representation to make to the stupid and incompetent people in the offices in England? I understood that we were living the strenuous life on this continent, especially in our politics.

If the Minister of Agriculture had led the strenuous life when he was dealing with this government at home, he would not have used only that gentle language, which, to my mind, invited the refusal that the British government returned to his request. He should know that our great trouble in dealing with the British government for the last seventy or eighty years has been that they have neglected every interest of Canada—they have neglected every colonial interest—until within the last five or ten years. The colonial offices in England and all the high offices there are filled with men who cared nothing about the colony until a few years ago, and are loath to take up the new doctrine of colonial ascendency. That being the case, the hon. Minister of Agriculture, who has visited England, ought to have known of this carelessness on the part of the government service of England with regard to the colonies—barring Mr. Joseph Chamberlain and a few of the great imperial-minded men who have recently come forward in the public life of that country. Fifty years ago, when the history of Canada could have been changed, when the greatness of Canada could have been made to run in parallel lines with the greatness of the United States, we were neglected by the government of England, and we were neglected by the government of Canada—because I am persuaded that if the government of Canada had led the people here to more strenuous maintenance of their position, if they had led the people to be more dignified in their political life and to demand recognition from England of the status of this great colony, we should not have been in the position we are in to-day. And now when we hear so much about the imperial feeling of England all this should be changed. I am an imperialist; I honour the traditions of the empire, and I can stand here on this occasion and offer the criticism I offer free from any charge of seeking to detract in any way from the greatness of the empire. I therefore, am in a position to charge against the Minister of Agriculture and the cabinet the absolute neglect of the public interest of this great country. Why did you not talk business to these tu-penny-ha'penny fellows over there? After sending them a mild and polite notice that you desired them to look after the interests of Canada, why did you not set the cable to work to tell them that Canada was not in a position to be neglected, that we hold the key to the British empire? I can understand how one of these officials in England felt when the Minister of Agriculture wrote that—I was going to say disgracefully, cowardly, message, and it was a cowardly message to send to these people in England. It was all right enough to begin with; there is nothing like opening negotiations with politeness. But when their answer was received the wires under the ocean should have been kept hot with indignant messages from the government of Canada, to let the people over there know that the day was past when a few little civil servants in England could neglect the interest of this great country.

The government of this country should be told that the hour is past, this government should tell the government of England that the hour is past, when, if Canada speaks and requests the attention of the government of England to our great interests, a few petty officials in Downing street can turn a deaf ear to our request. Why, Sir, I can pick out mechanics in the streets of Ottawa who would make more intelligent cabinet ministers than those who now run the English government. Yes, Sir, we must understand in this country that we occupy a much superior position to the public men in England. The members of this House of Commons are infinitely more intelligent on the general affairs of the empire than the aggregation composing the House of Commons in England; and the cabinet of Canada ought to occupy a prouder position than the imperial cabinet, because we have a wider outlook upon the affairs of the empire. Before a man could become a cabinet minister or a member of the English House of Commons, he should be brought to Canada and kept here for five years. He is not fit to administer the affairs of the empire until he has breathed the atmosphere of this great colony, until he has breathed the spirit of Liberalism, the high and dauntless courage that every man breathes who lives in this splendid country.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am persuaded that the government of this country is to blame for the whole thing. Because, being the government, and knowing the imperial sentiment that prevails, why did they not say to the government of England: You are asking us to give you battleships, you are asking us to help maintain your fleets, and you must do your duty by us? I say that public opinion in this country is ripe for that, I am ripe for that, because I do not wish to be a part of the empire unless I bear my proportion of its responsibilities; and when I bear my proportion of its responsibilities I want to be able to charge any official over there, whether he stands on the steps of the throne, or sits in the House of Commons, I want to talk to him from the same level and the same platform, and I can only do that when I pay my share of the cost of the empire. Now, Sir, I want to say to this government, I want to say to these stupid little jackasses in London, that the colonial empire could have been dominant over the whole earth, the colonial empire could have been greater than all the nations of the earth, if these little fellows in England had been big enough to look over the whole world, if they had had among them ten or fifteen men like Joseph Chamberlain fifteen years ago. What would have been the position of South Africa, of Canada to-day? Why, we would have filled the eyes of the world. But because Joseph Chamberlain cannot infuse a little of his own spirit into the rest of the cabinet of England, and into the civil service of that country, we occupy the humiliating position that we do to-day. When this government found that men so small were running the government in England, why did they not instruct Lord Strathcona to send an ultimatum to the English government telling them that if they want us in Canada to be loyal, to be true to the empire, if they want us to give them battleships, and to contribute to the permanency and glory of the empire, they must stand up and look after the rights of Canada, instead of looking after the rights of the Yankees across the way. This is the humiliation to the people of Canada beyond all compare, that Englishmen should think that there is only one country on this continent, and that is the United States, that Canada is an insignificant country, and that the United States contains and controls all the agricultural resources of this continent. That is a monstrous thing. Why, even the people of the United States themselves, I am told, have erected a line against the Texas fever. Why, the people of the United States will not allow these little scrub cattle from Texas to come beyond a certain line, they will not allow them to come up to Massachusetts or to Illinois, they have erected a line beyond which the Texas steers cannot come. They would have to be shipped out of Galveston if they were brought up north. Yet the British government will be permitted to go into that pest-ridden and fever-ridden country and buy their cattle, to the insult of this country. I charge upon the Minister of Agriculture an absolute lack of his duty. Why did he not summon parliament, if necessary, at once? When he saw this insult was perpetrated upon us, why was not the Governor General interviewed and requested to inform the English government that the time had passed when they could play this game upon Canada any longer?

Now, I am speaking for imperial unity, and I believe imperial unity could be brought about by telling English statesmen that they have got to control the public men of that country and their civil servants, and not permit them to insult the Canadian government. I am surprised that the Minister of Finance should permit himself to be so insulted. That is not the way of the true Nova Scotian, to permit himself to be insulted by a lot of those little fellows over in England. Why did not the cabinet meet and telegraph a protest: We are the government of Canada, and we don't propose that Major Maude, or any other officer is going to insult this government. It is a direct attack upon the dignity of the cabinet of Canada. I am surprised that the Minister of Finance did not at once take some means of resenting the insult put upon them by the British government, by informing the British government that if they wanted imperial feeling to exist in Canada, they must treat this country with respect. We are not to be subjected to eternal insult. The colonies have been subjected to insult for the last fifty years, and still we have been loyal and faithful to the empire's interests. But the time has gone by when we will stand it any longer. Since I have been in this parliament, I have endeavoured to awaken Canadian pride. Surely we who are descendants of an undaunted race, a race who dared all the dangers of a new country, surely that dauntless French race with which we are combined, surely these two races, we who are the greatest representatives of the human race, ought not in Canada, after enduring the toils we have endured to make Canada great, to permit any longer the affairs of this country to be run by those little men over in England. True, they do not represent the English people, because, as a rule, the cabinet of England, for the last fifty years has represented no body but the little tu'penny ha'penny men who happen to get into the cabinet by some chance or accident. Recollect, I always separate the English people from the English public men. The public men of England for the past sixty years have never truly represented the feeling of the English people. The people were always splendid and strong, but their cabinet ministers, like Gladstone and Salisbury, have permitted that Empire to be insulted by every Yankee, and Frenchman, and German whenever they wished, until the time came when it was dangerous for a man that had spirit to pick up his paper in the morning for fear he might read that some fresh insult had been heaped upon the British empire, and there was nobody to protest. Now, Mr. Chairman, I think the Minister of Agriculture ought to resign at once. He ought to resign on two grounds, first, to preserve his own self-respect, and as a protest against the insult that has been put upon this country by the English government; and secondly, in deference to the wishes of the people of Canada, who desire to see a stronger and more masterful minister in that department to deal with our public affairs.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). I am sure that the 645,000 farmers of Canada will be surprised to learn what is taking place in and around Ottawa, when they find that the Minister of Agriculture is wholly unaware of a matter in which they are so vitally interested. He seems to be a true Rip Van Winkle. Last year we had a similar question of great interest to the farmers of the west, in the beef contract. These contracts would have been most valuable for the farmers of the west and the farmers of Canada generally. He knew nothing about it. The business had been carried on in England. We were vitally interested in it, we might have taken advantage of it but we did not because the hon. Minister of Agriculture was practically asleep. Another very interesting item of information comes to our knowledge that practically one of the officials from Ottawa is engaged in a foreign country buying large numbers of cattle to restock the farms of South Africa when these cattle might as well have been purchased in Canada if proper representations had been made to the mother country and backed up by an efficient government. Where was our Minister of Agriculture? He was away in China and Japan hunting up markets and allowing the market right at home to slip away from him without any effort to secure it for the farmers of this country. He was away studying the Chinese. He can tell us all about the Geisha girls but he cannot tell us about the cattle purchased in the United States to be sent to South Africa. He is a valuable farmer for the people of Canada. Now, he comes forward and expresses surprise that this motion should be sprung upon the House. He even expressed surprise that such a motion should be moved. Will this not be a matter of great surprise to the farmers of Canada, and will they not regret that the government knowing of what is taking place around them in what the farmers of Canada are so vitally interested? It certainly will be a matter of great surprise. He had never seen, he said, a more unreasonable proposition submitted to this House than to say that we regretted what had occurred. Does he not regret it, and will the farmers of Canada not regret it, that stronger representations had not been made, because we have known it to be a fact that if proper representations were made to the imperial government in regard to anything in which Canada was vitally interested, where they could give assistance to Canada, if these representations were properly backed up, they have endeavoured to meet our views as far as possible? We have many instances of this and on no occasion have our efforts failed where such representations have been made as might have been made in this case. It is said that Canada was the very best field for the purchase of this kind of stock. I have no doubt of that whatever. England only requires to know that. I think that England treats Canada in a much more friendly way than she treats any foreign country, and she does this because Canada is her best colony. What is taking place in England from month to month is the best evidence of it. It is brought to our notice in a thousand different ways ; therefore, we are justified in coming to the conclusion that if there had been proper information in England, if proper representation had been made, and if they had been intelligently made and backed up by such force as the government could and should command, there is no doubt but that regard would have been paid to them, that there would have been some evidence of it to-day, and that farmers of Canada would have been benefiting by it at the present time. What do we want ? We want better markets. What was the hon. Minister of Agriculture doing in China and Japan for three or four months ? He was trying to get better markets and yet a market right at home is allowed to go and no attention is paid to it, though it is the best market in the world by our most important products and the most desirable market for the largest class of people in our country. Yet the government know nothing about it, pay no attention to it, but utterly disregard it. I have only to say that I am quite sure that this is another evidence that will bring it home to the farmers of Canada what an incompetent Minister of Agriculture they have. He is the steward of the people of Canada. How has he managed that stewardship ? Has he managed it in the interest of the farmers ? It must be evident to all that he is looking after his own interests rather than the interests of the farmers. He is travelling all over the country every year, he can tell us what has taken place in every part of the world, but he knows nothing of what is taking place right around him in Ottawa, and as regards the farmers of Canada, he knows very little. He is asleep when it comes to looking after the interests of Canada, but he seems to be well informed as to what is taking place in other parts of the world. I am satisfied that the farmers will regret and will be inclined to censure the hon. Minister of Agriculture and the government for their failure to make proper representations on this subject, and I do not think we are going too far to-night when we express the great regret that we feel that stronger representations have not been made, and which, if made, would undoubtedly have resulted in securing to the farmers of Canada an important market that has been enjoyed by the people of the United States on account of the carelessness, or indifference, or want of knowledge of the hon. Minister of Agriculture and the government.

Mr. H. J. LOGAN (Cumberland). Mr. Speaker, if the resolution had read that this House regrets that the imperial government has seen fit to purchase cattle in the United States of America, I think we would have had a unanimous expression of opinion by this parliament which might have had some effect upon the imperial government or upon the officials in the home office who have control of the purchase of these cattle. How has this motion been brought up ? It is an evidence of absolute partyism run wild. This afternoon the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax) asked a question across the floor of the House in reference to the report dealing with the purchase of American cattle and the reply which was given to him by the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Hon. Mr. Fisher) was that remonstrances had been sent to England, to our representative there, Lord Strathcona, asking him to protest against the buying of cattle in the United States for the restocking of Boer farms. The hon. minister further said that these remonstrances had been repeated, and yet, to-night, without giving any notice of the motion to be moved, the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Pope) brings this resolution in, regretting the fact that the Canadian government did not make more strenuous efforts to prevent the imperial government from buying American cattle. What does he, or the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule), know as to what remonstrances have been made by this government to the imperial government ? They have not asked for the papers to be brought down. They have given no notice of their intention to bring this motion before parliament so that the hon. minister might bring to the House the remonstrances he sent to England, or the letters he sent to Lord Strathcona. They have given him no opportunity to place these letters before the House, so that we are absolutely in the dark as to what these letters contain. Strong language has been recommended to be used to the imperial authorities. How do we know what language has been used to the imperial authorities when we have not the letters before us which were sent by the hon. Minister of Agriculture ? The hon. member for Colchester (Mr. Gourley) has given us an oration upon the littleness of the English ministers and officials. I regret that an hon. gentleman has seen fit to make these remarks here to-night. If they were contained in the columns of the New York 'Sun' a greater insult could not have been offered to the British nation than that which has been offered to it by a member in the House of Commons of Canada. Has it come to this that the representative of the old Tory party, the party that always thought it contained all the loyalty that could exist in Canada, is going to stand up in his place in parliament and say : Why did you not send them an ultimatum ? Why did you not say that if you want us to be loyal, support us ? The hon. gentleman says that if you want us to be loyal, buy our cattle. It is absolutely cattle loyalty the hon. gentleman wants. I contend, however much we may regret that the British government has not bought our cattle, that this government has done everything that is possible and everything that any selfrespecting government could do in regard to the matter. This government did not cringe and beg that something should be given to us, but has asked in a manly and straightforward way that these cattle should be bought in Canada. What are the facts? I am informed that at the conclusion of the Boer conference, when it was decided to supply a certain amount of money for the restocking of the Boer farms, the Minister of Agriculture of Canada communicated immediately with Lord Strathcona, the representative of Canada in England, and requested that an effort should be made to induce the British government to buy these cattle in Canada.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Hear, hear.

Mr. LOGAN. What more could the Minister of Agriculture have done at that time? Do these gentlemen opposite expect that he should have gone to England and held a gun at the head of the officials of the British government, and demanded that they should buy Canadian cattle? And what happened? When it afterwards came to the knowledge of the Minister of Agriculture that the British government were buying these cattle in the United States of America, he immediately sent a remonstrance to Lord Strathcona. What more could any Minister of Agriculture have done? There is no doubt that it is regrettable that the British government should have seen fit to buy these cattle in the United States. It is to be regretted that at a time when we were sending our sons to shed their blood on the veldts of South Africa, and when we were paying heavy contributions towards the Boer war; at a time when the people of the United States were singing long live Kruger, and were praying for the success of the Boers, when almost every newspaper in the United States was coming out in yellow journalism fashion condemning England, it is to be regretted that at such a time the British government were buying horses in the United States for the use of the British army. But, Sir, we must go about this matter in a dignified manner. This government could not in self respect have done more than was done by the Minister of Agriculture in the premises. I can only regret that the motion of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Pope), instead of being one of censure on the Minister of Agriculture and the government of Canada, is not a motion of regret that the British government did not see fit to buy these cattle in this portion of the British Empire, rather than in the United States.

Mr. E. D. SMITH (Wentworth). We have many things to complain of with regard to this matter. We have to regret that although the Minister of Agriculture sent a remonstrance to the British government, he did not recognize it as his duty to follow that remonstrance up, and as the member for Colchester has said, make the cables hot with messages to the British government endeavouring to induce them to buy these cattle in this country. This year and last year the government have asked for thousands of dollars to extend our markets in foreign countries, but surely they should have means at their hand to be informed of what the British government is doing in the way of purchasing supplies, and to bring these purchases to Canada. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Logan) has taxed the British government with being wrong, but the British government did exactly what any wise man would do; the British government pursued the policy which has been theirs for the last fifty years, of buying in the cheapest market. And, Sir, if the policy of the Conservative party had been adopted when they advocated a mutual preference, these cattle would have been bought in Canada and not in the United States. The Conservative party has maintained that the only sensible preference is a preference under which you get something for what you give, and if this government had adopted such a preference the English government would be buying from us to-day. There is no sentiment or sympathy in trade. The English people will buy in the best market. It is the boast of this government that as a result of the preference, England has bought more from us than she would otherwise have done, but in this very case, where the British government itself was the purchaser, it passed our doors and bought in a foreign market. Let this government negotiate for a mutual preference which will apply not only to the British Isles, but to the British colonies; such a preference as has been advocated by the Conservative party, and then we will not have to complain of this kind of thing happening in the future. That is the only way to make trade mutually advantageous.

Mr. A. BRODER (Dundas). The admission of the Minister of Agriculture that he was not taken by surprise as to the intention of the British government to buy these cattle in the United States, ought to have given him sufficient time to make out a better case than he seems to have made with the authorities in England in connection with this matter. He ought to bring down to the House the replies which he received to the remonstrances which he made to the British government, so that we may know the reason for purchasing these cattle in the United States. We must remember, Sir, that the British government has had some experience of doing business with the hon. gentleman's department in buying hay and oats, and perhaps that may be a reason why they did not care to buy cattle through his department.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BRODER. The hon. gentleman from Cumberland (Mr. Logan) is very willing to vote for a motion of censure on the British government, but he is very loath to censure those who are directly responsible for neglecting Canadian interests. We have a right to assume that if the Minister of Agriculture had made proper remonstrances to the British government, they would have given heed to them. But we cannot forget that the premier himself told the people of England that he did not want any return for the preference, and that the Minister of Agriculture, following in his leader's example, told the people the same thing when he was in England. Even a prominent official of this government who figured in political circles—in Liberal party circles some years ago in this country—he told an English chamber of commerce that the Canadian government did not want anything in return for the preference they gave to England. When you tell the English people, on one hand that you do not want anything, and then go back and tell them that you do, they do not know whether to believe you in the first instance or in the second. The position taken by the Prime Minister and by his Minister of Agriculture with regard to preference has placed them in a very sorry plight when they go to demand anything from the British government. Our hon. friend from Cumberland (Mr. Logan) says he would vote for a resolution censuring the English government. He would not give them any notice, though he wants notice given to this government. They might have some reasonable explanation to give why they did not buy your cattle. The hon. gentleman's loyalty is not very deep; it is hardly lip loyalty.

Mr. LOGAN. It is not cattle loyalty, then.

Mr. BRODER. It is on four feet, however, and would leave the country at any hour. The hon. gentleman would censure the British government without any notice, but he would not touch a hair on the head of the hon. Minister of Agriculture. I say there is one of two reasons why the British government have not bought our cattle: either they do not want to do business with the government of this country after the experience they have had, or else our cattle are not the cattle they want. This House has a right to know what reason the British government have given the authorities of this country why they do not want to buy our cattle. The English government over a year ago gave notice in the House of Commons, not only to this country, but to the world, that they intended to restock the farms in South Africa. There is no question that time enough was given to the government and people of this country to make a case. I suppose the Department of Agriculture is somewhat of an intelligence department, where people who want to learn anything about the agricultural products of this country can find out; but I suppose there has been some miscarriage of duty, and the British government have not been apprized of the position of this country or its ability to fill their orders in this respect. I think the minister owes to the House some explanation of the reasons that were given by the British government. He has seen fit not to give it to the House. He had notice at three o'clock this afternoon, on a question that was asked across the House, which drew the attention of the House and the country to the fact that the English government, through Major Maude, was purchasing or intending to purchase cattle in Texas for shipment to South Africa. The Canadian people have a perfect right to know what reason the English government have given the authorities of this country why Canadian cattle could not fill the bill instead of Texas cattle. They seem to think that the Canadian people are not in a position to fill these orders. It is the duty of the authorities of this country to disabuse their minds of that idea, if that is the case, and the hon. gentleman's department surely ought to be in a position to give them the necessary information. When we asked for papers at the beginning of this session in reference to some business that was done in England through this government, they actually refused to bring the papers down, because, they said, they had reference to business connected with the imperial government—through our department here. That being the case, it is a question whether, when we ask for this information, they will give it to us. I think our hon. friend who represents Cumberland had better transfer his loyalty from the English government to this government, and censure them. It might do them good.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Sir Wm. Mulock). I think, Mr. Speaker, the country has some reason to complain of the manner in which this subject has been brought before the House. At three o'clock this afternoon, the hon. leader of the opposition, on the calling of the Orders of the Day, read an item from a newspaper intimating the intention of the imperial government to purchase some cattle in the southern states for South Africa. My hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture stated then that he had caused communication to be sent to the Canadian representative in England, Lord Strathcona, requesting him to communicate to the imperial government how desirable it was that their purchases should be made in Canada. The leader of the opposition appeared to be satisfied with that explanation, and resumed his seat, without intimating in the slightest degree that either at a later stage to-day or at any subsequent period in the session he intended again to invite the attention of the House to the matter. And now, at nine o'clock at night, in the absence of the leader of the opposition, who appeared to be satisfied with the explanation, after the departments are closed, when documents cannot be produced, when it is not possible to give the exact language of the correspondence, the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Pope) gets up in the House, and, alluding again to a newspaper extract on the subject, moves a vote of censure on the Minister of Agriculture because the imperial government is not purchasing cattle for South Africa in Canada. The hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson), not knowing the tenor of the correspondence, more than what was stated by the Minister of Agriculture, not knowing the answers except as stated here, regrets that a different course was not pursued, that greater remonstrances were not presented to the British government, that a different line of action was not taken, not knowing what the line of action was. And then we have a wholesale attack on the history of the British government and their line of conduct from beginning to end. What midsummer madness has taken possession of the opposition that they must attack everything ? They attack the Minister of Agriculture ; they attack the government in Canada, a government which I suppose hon. gentlemen will admit has done more for Canada than any preceding government, a government that commands the confidence of the people of Canada more completely than any government before it.

An hon. MEMBER. It makes us smile.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes, the country is smiling under the influence of the government. Hon. gentlemen opposite condemn the British government. My hon. friend, Tory of Tories, the member for Colchester (Mr. Gourley) knows no limit to the attack he makes upon England and upon the history of England. The great ministers who have gone are nothing in his eyes, they have all been enemies to Canada and the empire—all Liliputian politicians. He had not a word to say for Gladstone nor for Salisbury. None of the great statesmen of the last fifty years came up to his ideas of a British statesman : Lord Russell, Lord Palmerston, Mr. Gladstone, and all the galaxy of men who filled the office of premier of England for the last fifty years failed to come up to his high ideal ; none of them represent his true conception of statesmanship. There is only one man who could have filled the office of premier of England to his satisfaction : unfortuntely for England, but fortunately for Canada, he is representing Colchester in the Canadian House of Commons. The Canadian government is only incidentally a subject of attack here. My hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) asks, what will the 640,000 farmers of Canada think of matters that are transpiring at Ottawa to-day ? Well, Sir, to quote the testimony of one of his hon. friends, it costs $28 a minute for every one who speaks in this House. Some of them may wonder whether they have got value for the many minutes the hon. member for East Grey and others have spoken. Why, each minute the hon. gentleman has spoken he has wasted the value of one of these Canadian cattle.

Mr. SPROULE. What about the Postmaster General ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. He is very economical of the people's time. He is a working man. When these 640,000 farmers are endeavouring to form an opinion on the proceedings at Ottawa, they will ask themselves this question : Is this remnant in opposition all that has survived of the glorious Conservative party in days gone by, which upheld in every shape the imperial connection between Great Britain and Canada ? What will they think of these members of the Tory party in this House who to-day cheer sentiments that point to the disintegration of the empire and the separation of Canada from Great Britain ? These hon. gentlemen never fail to take advantage of an opportunity to assail Great Britain because of what they call her ingratitude to Canada. The hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. Smith) in endeavouring to explain why Great Britain had not purchased these cattle in Canada said that it was no doubt because of her traditional policy of purchasing in the cheapest market. That is probably the true and honest explanation, but if that be so, how does the hon. member for Dundas (Mr. Broder) reconcile it with his own suggestion, that the imperial government did not care to have any business dealings with the Department of Agriculture. I do not believe, however, that when my hon. friend gave expression to that opinion, he believed in his heart that there was any justification for it, but he merely uttered it because it suggested itself to his mind as something smart to say for the moment. In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, the 640,000 farmers of Canada will come to the conclusion that the Conservative party at Ottawa must be completely bankrupt when they can waste the time of the House over such a trumpery resolution. Had they even asked for the papers and had the papers not shown that the Minister of Agriculture had done all that could have been expected, there would then have been some justification for a motion such as this, but they were very careful not to give my hon. colleague any opportunity of bringing down the papers, because they knew that the correspondence would cut away the ground from under their feet. But what do they care about the facts ? If the facts are against them, so much the worse for the facts. Knowing nothing whatever of the facts, without asking for the papers, practically declaring that they do not want to see them, with nothing whatever except the bald fact that England, for reasons of her own, has made purchase of cattle elsewhere than in Canada, they propose this absurd resolution—a resolution which really implies a censure on the imperial government. The hon. member for Colchester (Mr. Gourley) did not confine his criticisms to the past and gone but embraced the living within his range. Major Maude did not escape nor did the one man, to whom of all men of Canada is much indebted. I refer to Lord Strathcona. Is there any man to whom Canada is under a greater obligation to-day than Lord Strathcona? I need not remind you of what he has done for Canada. There is no man living who has a greater regard for the interests of Canada. Almost every day we have despatches telling us what he is doing for his country. In the day time and in the hours of night, his mind is ever occupied in thinking how he can best advance the interest of Canada; and when we put the case in the hands of Lord Strathcona, we placed it in the hands of one than whom no one was better fitted to secure for it the most favourable consideration. Lord Strathcona waited upon the colonial office and urged on it the desirability of making its purchases of cattle in Canada. He made the best case he could, and if he could not succeed, is there any man living who could have fared better? Of all men he is the one who would have the greatest claim on the gratitude of the imperial government for his many gifts and services, and who has acquired an influence in the imperial councils second to none.

Mr. GOURLEY. He made every dollar in Canada, and he is more indebted to Canada than Canada is to him.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am not speaking of the sources of his wealth.

Mr. POPE. He is our servant.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes, and a most worthy servant.

Mr. COCHRANE. No man in Canada abused Lord Strathcona more than did the hon. gentleman himself when sitting on this side, in connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I never alluded to Lord Strathcona in debate once in my life on the floor of this House.

Mr. COCHRANE. You abused the company with which he is connected.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No one will believe for a moment that Lord Strathcona neglected to use his best efforts on the present, as on all other occasions, to promote the interests of Canada with the imperial government. We may assume that everything possible was done, and the 640,000 farmers of this country will be of the opinion that the opposition have by this motion and the attacks which accompanied it made themselves supremely ridiculous.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK.

Mr. H. LENNOX (South Simcoe). The hon. the Postmaster General has, in a very violent address, spoken of people making themselves ridiculous, but it seems to me that he might better have applied that description to himself. The hon. gentleman has had considerable experience in parliament, he has travelled considerably in the interests of Canada, he has distinguished himself on the question of the postal rates, he has earned undying fame by that wonderful postal stamp of his own devising, with its marvellous text, and yet, with all these advantages, we now find him driven to the position of talking about everything that is not raised by this resolution and avoiding reference to anything that has been said with regard to it, in the hope that in this way he will divert the debate from its legitimate object. But the only thing he succeeded in doing was in making himself ridiculous. But before I say anything further with regard to the hon. minister, I want to give the reasons why I support this resolution. When I first heard it put, I was undecided whether to support it or not, because I had not heard the beginning of the discussion, and I waited to hear what the hon. the Minister of Agriculture had to say in his defence. I was greatly aided in concluding to support this resolution by the argument of the hon. minister. It is quite true perhaps that there was not much time for him to bring down the documents, but when we recollect that, in the course of the speech, he did not venture to tell us that he had made a serious, persistent effort or vigorous remonstrance to the British government, or that he had laid before the British government the true state of the facts, I think that we have some ground for believing that the motion is well founded.

We can assume, I suppose, that the hon. minister would put the case as strongly as it could be put. Taking the case as the hon. minister has stated it himself, has this House a right to be satisfied with the position in which we find ourselves with regard to this cattle question? The minister has said: We made a remonstrance with the British government; we urged upon them to consider the question of purchasing our cattle. Why, Sir, we have had, this very afternoon, a declaration from the hon. minister that our dairying industry is a great industry and that our dairy products are equal to those of any country in the world. And these are dairy cattle that are being purchased to-day. The Minister of Agriculture, though very lately from Japan, returned not very long ago from Great Britain. It was his duty, while there, to have laid before the British authorities so clearly that they would not forget it, that in Canada we have the means of supplying them with cattle as suitable for their purposes in South Africa as can be had anywhere. This is not a recent matter, as the hon. minister would have us to understand.

This cattle question began to be discussed and a policy was initiated almost immediately upon the close of the war, as was stated in this article. It was for the ministry then to make serious and determined efforts to bring before the British authorities such evidence as to leave them no room to doubt that it was possible for Canada, and convenient for Canada to supply what the British government desired to purchase. Now it has been said—and this is a point that the minister has not cleared up—that there is an indication that the ministry have not that influence that we would expect them to have with the British authorities. Otherwise these cattle would certainly have been purchased in Canada. How is it that, with the strong friendly feeling that exists between Great Britain and Canada at the present time, with the recollection of what Canada did within recent times to assist the mother country, with a knowledge of the recent development of Canada and the increase of her trade, that Britain goes to the United States to purchase cattle, when we have the very animals that she requires ready to be sold ? There must be some reason that the ministry dare not discuss, that the Postmaster General dared not discuss when he got up to talk, as he did, in a way to lead us away from the issues before us to matters that do not concern us. There is a reason, and it is that the government in Great Britain have reason to believe that they cannot get exactly fair, square treatment at the hands of the government in Canada. If there was any reason that the government dare put forward, it would have been mentioned here to-night. Failing to get a reason from the Minister of Agriculture or from the Postmaster General, strongly suggests and points out that the old question that has been before the British people, the manner in which they are treated in regard to the question of the oats purchased through this government, is still lingering in their minds—and they have no great desire to deal with the Minister of Agriculture again. Now, this is an important matter in view of the advertisement it gives Canada. We have Major Maude, engaged in this matter, and that fact advertised to the world. We have these circumstances to be quoted against the people of Canada wherever we are making an effort to extend our trade. It is little help to us that the Minister of Agriculture has been, as he says, endeavouring to extend our trade in Japan, so long as, in the meantime, the market that we would naturally expect, is not secured, the sales that we would naturally expect to make have been lost. Before I proceed to pay a little attention to the Postmaster General, let me speak of one other aspect of the question. An hon. gentleman on the other side of the House who spoke in a very vigorous manner, was concerned about the question of loyalty. He thought we were taking an improper position in intimating to Great Britain by this resolution that we wanted fair treatment. I want to say that Great Britain is a nation that loves fair play, that Britons will admire Canadians all the more for asserting themselves and showing that when we treat Britain well, we expect to be treated well in return. If there is an important point to be made in this discussion it is to let Britain understand, by the attitude, at all events, of the Liberal-Conservative party, that while there can be no doubt about the loyalty of Canadians, while we are ready to defend and support Great Britain in any just cause, at any time, at the sacrifice of either money or men, yet, when it comes to discuss business transactions, we expect that if we consider Great Britain as we have done and assist her in a pecuniary way, we will have fair treatment in return. And it is the duty of the Minister of Agriculture and of the whole administration to let the British government understand that we expect fair recognition when they are purchasing supplies that we are able to provide.

Now, the Postmaster General is troubled about the question of $28 a minute for the time of this House. He might take a little of that to himself. I think that if we were to count his speech at its proper value and contrast it with the $28 a minute, he would be considerably indebted to this country. This is not the first time the hon. Postmaster General has twitted hon. gentlemen on this side on this point. And, on each occasion, after referring to the time wasted in talking at $28 a minute, he proceeded to waste twenty minutes or half an hour at the same rate himself. He stated that he was economical. I grant that the Postmaster General is economical—wherever it suits his purpose. He is economical in certain branches of the Post Office Department, particularly where a man is to be ground down to the lowest pittance for good service rendered. But he is not economical when it comes to a large contract being let by the government of which he is a member, without tender and at extravagant prices, to creatures of the government. It is economy in these things that the people want and not that parsimonious economy which the Postmaster General indulges in to grind down persons engaged in the service of his department. The Postmaster General talks about the hon. member for Colchester (Mr. Gourley). He is afraid that that hon. gentleman is not sufficiently loyal. The word 'loyal' comes well indeed from the Postmaster General. Why, he is a member of a party which, for eighteen years, went through this country preaching various doctrines which would have led to a severance of Canada from the British empire. Talk of loyalty. He is one of the pillars of this administration which, when the South African question was new, when it was mooted that we should send assistance to Britain, when our grand Queen whose portrait I now behold——

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Hear, hear.

Mr. LENNOX. It would have been better if he had said, hear, hear, a little sooner. I say when that grand Queen was looking to her principal colony for support, were they the first? No, they were the last to consent to send reinforcements to South Africa. And yet these hon. gentlemen talk to this side of the House about loyalty. I want to say that is not a fair way of looking at it. The population of Canada are loyal to Britain to the core; but if there comes up a question between parties as to loyalty, it will never pay the Postmaster General to twit any man on this side of the House with disloyalty.

Now, as we have had no reason advanced why this motion should not carry, and no reason to justify the government in the attitude they have assumed, I need not take up any more time of the House. But there is another point. The Postmaster General made an excuse for not bringing down the papers. He says, oh, the departments are locked up. It was too late at eight or nine o'clock for him to get the papers. Yet every night we see them scurrying out and bringing in papers within half an hour, if they want to bring them in, but it takes an awfully long time to get them when they don't want to. On this question of the hay and oats contract, they absolutely refused to bring down the papers, and called upon their whole force to support them in denying us the fair and legitimate right we had upon that occasion. It is not encouraging for us to ask for papers from the hon. gentlemen, especially when the matter is of imminent importance. What occurred last night? Why, the leader of the opposition mentioned two cases where he had moved for papers two months ago and they were not yet brought down. I myself have been urging the government for papers ordered perhaps more than two months ago, and it is more than a month since the leader of the government announced they would be down within a day or two. They are not down yet. That is the experience we have had in asking the government to bring down papers.

Mr. R. E. MACPHERSON (Burrard). I believe the resolution condemns the government for not allowing the British government to buy cattle in our country for South Africa. I want to draw the attention of the House to an important statement I find in a newspaper, on that point. I hold in my hand a copy of the Calgary 'Herald' of June 6th, in which I read:

Another Big Cattle Shipment.

Sparrow & Johnston have just received from Mexico 1,100 head of yearling steers. They arrived at Calgary in excellent shape, after being fifteen days on the road. Only two head were lost, and these were killed accidentally. The cattle are looking well, and are believed to be an exceptionally fine bunch.

Now, why do not our hon. friends opposite condemn Canadians living in the North-west for buying cattle outside of Canada, as well as condemning our government and the British government for not buying cattle in Canada?

Mr. FRANK OLIVER (Alta.). When this debate started it seemed to be an attack upon the government here, before it proceeded far it turned into an attack upon the government across the water. It would appear, from the tenor of the arguments, as though there had not been any dealings between the two governments in the sale and purchase of Canadian produce. I want to put on record a fact that every body in the House knows, that owing to the exertions of the Minister and Department of Agriculture and the government generally, there have been transactions amounting to millions of dollars between the Canadian people and the British government, transactions which could not have taken place but for the exertions of the Department of Agriculture, headed by the present minister, transactions which could not have taken place had not the British government been willing and anxious as well as able to buy from Canada and from Canadians. If the Minister of Agriculture is to be condemned on every occasion when the government of Britain buys some article it requires outside the limits of Canada, this parliament will be doing nothing else from now until it is finally dissolved but passing resolutions of condemnation. The British government has to buy where it can buy best. It would not be fit to control the affairs of the empire if it did not do that. There can only be one reason why the British government has bought cattle outside of Canada on this occasion, when their attention was brought to the fact that Canada had cattle to sell. They bought where they could but the cattle they wanted at a lower price than Canada could furnish them. That fact has been brought out by the extract read by my hon. friend from Burrard (Mr. Macpherson). There is no doubt, cattle required for restocking the Boer farms are not the high grade cattle that are for sale in eastern Canada. A cheaper grade of cattle will answer the purpose, and are probably more acceptable; cattle which come from a climate more similar to that to which they are to be sent; cattle which are lower in price than that at which they could be purchased here. Can any one find fault with either the British government or the government of Canada for such a transaction? For my part it seems too bad that this House should be made an exhibition of before the country, by putting forward such a resolution, at such a time, giving rise to such a debate as we have heard to-night.

House divided on amendment (Mr. Pope).

Amendment (Mr. Pope) negatived, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Quarantine—salaries and contingencies of organized districts and public health in other districts, $170,220.

Mr. SPROULE. There is an increase of $60,220.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The increase is more apparent than real. In the estimates for the current year we had $110,000 for this service, but we were obliged the other day to come down and ask for a supplementary vote for $60,000, making the expenditure $170,000. The reason I was obliged to ask for this sum when we only asked for $110,000 last year was that this extra expenditure was due, as I explained when we were discussing the supplementary vote, to the continued prevalence of small-pox on our southern boundary in the United States, and to the necessity of guarding against its coming across the line, and also to a continuance of small-pox in the North-west Territories which we have been obliged to deal with, they having no provincial health authorities. The actual expenditure for the year ending June 30th last was $170,000. This year we found it amounted to $170,000 again, notwithstanding the expectation that the epidemic would die out and that we would not require such a large sum of money. Now, there seems to be no reason to believe that the epidemic is likely to die out during the ensuing year. If it does, we need not spend this money, but the appearances to-day are that it is just as likely to continue for the next year as it has continued during the current year. Under these circumstances we think it necessary to take the full amount experience has shown that we require during the last two years.

Mr. SPROULE. I think if I correctly understood the hon. minister, this large increase of $60,220 is all due to the epidemic of small-pox ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I said that there was no real increase over the amount expended during the current year at all.

Mr. SPROULE. No, but last year when we voted $110,000 that was regarded as sufficient. I understand the hon. minister to say that this is only an apparent increase. It is really an increase, because we were obliged to vote $60,000 in the supply estimates for the current year to supplement what was regarded last year as sufficient and now we have to provide an equal amount for next year. Then, there must be some very much larger demand than what was expected when it was thought we would not require so much money.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That was explained when I asked for the supply vote for the current year. We did not expect to require that money during the current year. When the estimates were made up for the current year the anticipation was that this epidemic would die out and that we would not require the extra expenditure. Experience has shown that it has not died out. On the contrary it has continued to be as great as it was last year and there is no indication of its decreasing, or that it is likely in the near future to decrease. We found that in this current year we had to spend just as much as we did last year, and we see no reason to believe that we will not have to spend as much during the ensuing year. The increase is apparent rather than real in comparison with the actual expenditure of this year. We are only asking for the same amount that has actually been expended this year and last year.

Mr. SPROULE. It seems to me that there is no evidence that we are succeeding with this expenditure and with our quarantine regulations in keeping out the disease because the number of cases that occur seems to be quite as large during the current year as it was last year, so that there are more instead of less.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not think that is correct.

Mr. SPROULE. My statement is borne out by the report of the Ontario Bureau of Health. The minister stated the other night that the disease could not have been imported from the other side of the line because only two municipalities had applied to the Dominion government to pay the expenses in connection with it. That may be, but I know of two cases myself that were so imported, and I am quite sure that there were a great many more.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. If such cases have occurred it must be that the patients came from the United States before the disease was apparent on them.

Mr. SPROULE. Since the minister made the statement in the House the other night, I have looked up the report, and I find that in almost every instance in Ontario the disease came from the other side of the line.

Mr. CLARKE. Has there been correspondence with the United States authorities with reference to this matter ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We get regular reports from the authorities as to the disease in the different states along the border.

Mr. CLARKE. Is the disease as prevalent in the United States as it was twelve months ago ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am informed that practically the condition is very much the same as it was last year.

Mr. CLARKE. Are there any places where the disease is particularly virulent ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We get weekly reports from the different states and they are on file in the department, but I have not examined them sufficiently to answer the question.

Mr. CLARKE. Has any of this additional expense been caused by the admission of diseased immigrants ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Not at all.

Mr. POPE. What provision is made to prevent unsound immigrants coming in ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The quarantine officials see that the immigrants are not afflicted with what are called quarantinable contagious diseases. In addition to that the immigration authorities have power under a recent special Act to check the influx of immigrants who may be in any way diseased or undesirable. That Act is administered by the Department of the Interior.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Are immigrants afflicted with trachoma prevented from entering Canada ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I believe that trachoma and favus are two diseases which are dealt with by the immigration authorities under this special Act ?

Mr. REID (Grenville). I notice quite a serious statement in to-day's 'Globe,' which I will read for the information of the minister.

TRACHOMA IS EPIDEMIC.

The Disease is Spreading in Buffalo.

Believed to Have Been Introduced by Foreigners Entering From Canada—One Man Arrested.

Buffalo, N.Y., June 24.—Trachoma is epidemic in this city. According to the statement of an official of the United States Marine Hospital, over 100 cases of the disease have been found among the employees of the Lackawanna Steel & Iron Company. A large number of cases of trachoma have been treated by local physicians in almost every section of the city. It is believed that the disease was brought here by foreigners who came into the country by way of Canada. Joseph Skool, an Italian with a bad attack of the disease, has been placed under arrest. He came from Brantford, Ont. The disease often leads to total blindness.

I draw the attention of the minister to that because the Americans may try to send these people back by way of Buffalo.

Mr. CLARKE. Are these diseases dealt with by the Agriculture Department or by the Interior Department ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Trachoma is not held to be a quarantinable disease in any country in the world, and it is not dealt with by the officers of my department.

Mr. CLARKE. Are there two medical staffs; one in the Interior Department and one in the Agriculture Department ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE. How many officers in the Agriculture Department are detailed to look after the epidemic of small-pox.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We have a number appointed temporarily all along the boundary line. I read the names the other night and they appear in 'Hansard.'

Mr. POPE. How do you draw a distinction between what diseases come under your department and what diseases come under the Interior Department?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Certain diseases have been declared by the International Quarantine service of various countries to be diseases which are quarantinable. An International Congress of medical men is held and they decide on what are quarantinable diseases, and every country adopts that.

Mr. POPE. Has that been the process in the United States ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, the quarantine regulations with reference to contagious diseases in the United States and Canada are the same.

Mr. CLARKE. What is the practice if one of the officers of the hon. gentleman's department finds a case for medical treatment which does not come under the quarantine diseases ? Does he keep his hands off the case or does he call for a medical officer from the Immigration Department ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. If my officers, on inspecting a ship coming from Europe, find no quarantinable or contagious diseases on board, they give the ship a clean bill of health and she passes to port. My officers examine all passengers, not recognizing any distinction between immigrants and others. When the ship comes to port, thte immigration officers through their medical officers make an inspection of the immigrants as to whether they are proper and suitable persons to come into this country.

Mr. CLARKE. What is the practice with regard to cases that may occur along the frontier.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not think there is any medical examination of immigrants coming from the United States, though I cannot speak positively as to that. The diseases which I have mentioned, trachoma and favus, are diseases which I understand do not flourish on this continent and are very little known here, but come from the congested parts of the old land.

Mr. REID (Grenville). In case an immigrant comes to this country say from the United States, and in the interior of the country is found by some local physician to be suffering from disease, would it not be well if it were generally understood that the physician would be paid a small reward for notifying the government, so that the government could get the immigrant out of the country as soon as possible ? Otherwise a case of this kind might simply be treated by the local doctor, and might remain in the country, causing the spread of the disease. I think if an arrangement of that kind were made, and it were generally made known throughout the Dominion, it would have a good effect.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I will draw the attention of the Minister of the Interior to the hon. gentleman's suggestion.

Mr. WILSON. What objection would there be to having the hon. gentleman's officers examine for these cases of trachoma ? I do not see why two officers should be at one port when one would be sufficient. Any person having that disease is rejected by the United States officials every time, and I do not think we want them in this country.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That is a question of practical administration. When a ship is detained at quarantine, all the passengers are detained. When the ship is free, the immigrants go ashore, where they can be handled by the immigration authorities better than my officers could handle them at the quarantine station. The rule is, I think, that diseased persons are returned immediately to the old land.

Mr. WILSON. No, sometimes they are taken to the hospital and are treated, and if they recover, are allowed to go on. The immigration officials allowed 181 to remain in this country which were rejected by the American officials. It seems to me that any immigrant who is not fitted to become a citizen of the United States is not fitted to become a citizen of Canada. If they reject them, I do not think we want them. Certainly, we are not so anxious to have population here that we are willing to take paupers, criminals, and people who are diseased in such a way that they are rejected by our neighbours.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. This would perhaps be more fitting in connection with the immigration item. I understand that while these diseases are not contagious, they are not dangerous to the whole community like small-pox and other quarantinable diseases. They are only carried by the use of towels, combs and similar things; and under ordinary supervision and segregation are not dangerous to general health and, therefore, it is permissible to bring people suffering from these diseases to the piers.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The reason I suggested the means I did of locating disease was this. A few days ago, there were some Greeks landed in this country, I think at Halifax, and they were simply sent from one place to another. They were really the most disgraceful lot of people I ever saw in this country. The municipalities sent them from one to another in order to get rid of them. The township of Matilda in the county of Dundas sent them to the township of Edwardsburg, and they were left along the roadside. They had a few rough tents, were very badly clothed, and appeared to have disease among them. They tried to get over to the United States, but the United States authorities were watching them. The Edwardsburg people moved them to Prescott, where they camped a couple of weeks, then moved further west.

Mr. CLARKE. Were those immigrants referred to passed by the officers at the vessels' side when they landed in this country?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not know where they came from, but if they came from Quebec or the maritime provinces they must have been passed by the quarantine officers.

Mr. WILSON. There is no officer in Montreal in connection with the Interior Department. There is one at Quebec, Halifax and St. John.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I may inform the hon. gentleman that the immigrants are all landed at Quebec.

Mr. PUTTEE. Has the hon. minister any reports respecting some 200 or 300 who were refused admission into North Dakota during March, and were turned back to Manitoba?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That matter is entirely in the hands of the immigration officials in the Department of the Interior, and I have no cognizance of it.

Mr. PUTTEE. Have you any medical officers there?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, but they would deal only with quarantinable diseases and would not interfere with the others.

Mr. CLARKE. I understand that this increase of from $50,000 to some $60,000 is due to outbreaks of quarantinable diseases in the United States?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, entirely to small-pox.

Mr. VROOMAN. I would infer that the department is hardly exercising sufficient vigilance with regard to trachoma. It appears that the American authorities will not allow people afflicted with this disease to cross their border. The fact that it is not a quarantinable disease makes it all the more serious, because these people are allowed to go around the country and mingle with others, and in that way the disease is communicated from one to the other. A dozen or so of them will use the same towel. Now is the time, before this disease has got a foothold in this country, when we should stamp it out by turning immigrants afflicted with it back, just as the Americans are doing.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I shall be very glad to repeat to my hon. colleague the Minister of the Interior the views of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. TAYLOR. I see by the Auditor General's Report, on page D—92-3, that the hon. gentleman has not at all improved upon the purchasing of supplies for Grosse Isle. I see one account here for $2,922, in which the prices paid are preposterous. I find that nineteen barrels of coal oil are charged for at thirty-two cents per gallon, and $1.25 for each barrel besides. In the case of goods purchased by tender, coal oil was got for sixteen or seventeen cents per gallon, and there was no charge for the barrels. Here is a charge for twenty-five gallons of linseed oil at $1.25, when every body knows that it retails at eighty cents. Gillet's lye, twelve boxes at twenty cents, the retail value of which is ten cents. Wringers, the hon. gentleman pays $8 for, and the best manufactured wringer sells at $4 retail. Forty-eight boxes of matches are charged at $7.80, when ten cents a box is all they are worth. One thousand one hundred and three and a half pounds of rope are charged at twenty cents, when it could be got anywhere at sixteen cents per pound. Why will the hon. gentleman persist in allowing his officers to pay these prices ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I gave instructions to the officers at Grosse Isle to scrutinize the accounts submitted, and see that the charges were in every case according to the usual value of the goods. I have no reason to suppose that these instructions were not carried out, but the particular items the hon. gentleman has read were purchased last year, before I gave the instructions.

Mr. TAYLOR. This account runs up to the 30th of June last year, and it was in the winter when we discussed the items last session. Here is an account for five flags at $50.55, and making and finishing eight yards of bunting, $35. Why are these flags required at Grosse Isle at a cost of $85 ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I confess I do not know the value of flags—I do not remember that I ever bought any. Of course, the price of a flag would depend upon its size and character of the material.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The total expenditure for this quarantine station at Gross Isle is between $55,000 and $60,000. As about one-half is paid for salaries, this leaves about $30,000 for supplies. This is a large amount, and I would like to know whether the hon. minister advertises for tenders ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. According to the Auditor General's Report the amount spent on Grosse Isle station is $32,482.58.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I see that I included the expenditures at St. John and some other places. But, I suppose about half the expenditure would be for supplies. These supplies must be furnished every year, and must include large quantities of ordinary staple goods. Are these supplies purchased by tender after advertisements in newspapers, or after circulars sent to dealers in the locality, parties recommended by persons in the constituency ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The supplies are purchased from people whose names are given to the officers there. The great bulk of the supplies are purchased in the city of Quebec, but some are procured in Montmagny, in which county Grosse Isle is situated.

Mr. REID (Grenville). This system would naturally lead to high prices being charged. I would appeal to the hon. minister to follow the system that is followed—or claimed to be—by some other departments, and ask for tenders, if it be only by sending out a form of tender to a number of those in the trade. For my part, I believe that by advertising in the newspapers the department will secure the best results. When goods are purchased under the system spoken of by the hon. minister, the seller is apt to charge the government more than an ordinary purchaser would have to pay. Of course, the Auditor General requires the accounts to be certified as fair and just. But the officer at the station naturally feels that he must accept the account. If he objects from time to time to these accounts, the dealer from whom they are bought will probably go to the member for the constituency, and being probably a strong supporter, will cause the member to appeal to the minister. Therefore, if the officer wishes to retain his position, he has no alternative but to certify the accounts as fair and just. This would account for some of the prices cited by the hon. member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor), which are certainly fifty per cent higher than a private purchaser would have to pay. If tenders were publicly called for, the government could buy their supplies at much cheaper rates.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I appreciate what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Reid, Grenville) says. I can only say that last year when the question came up I instructed the officer to scrutinize these accounts and only to pass such as they could certify to be fair and reasonable. I have no reason to suppose that my instructions have not been carried out. I am not prepared to discuss the details in these accounts, to show whether they are reasonable or not, because I do not know the circumstances. But I can assure the hon. gentleman that no officer would be dismissed or in any way interfered with in my department—and I believe the same is true of every other department—for refusing to certify to an unreasonable account. And no political pressure or any other pressure would be allowed to interefere with an officer doing his duty in that respect.

Mr. TAYLOR. But the hon. gentleman knows that 32 cents per gallon for coal oil by the barrel is simply outrageous.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It seems high.

Mr. TAYLOR. Why should not the hon. gentleman call for tenders, when we find one account here for $2,900 and another for about $1,000 ? Then turning to the next page I find that there are large accounts right through. I find a charge here of 6½ cents per pound for sugar. Surely, if the hon. gentleman had called for tenders he could have bought the best granulated sugar for $3.75 per hundred, as did one of the boats that was supplied. And I find a charge of 14 cents per pound for soap.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That must have been for carbolic disinfecting soap, or something of that kind. I find other soap at 5½ cents and 5 cents per pound.

Mr. TAYLOR. This may have been carbolic disinfecting soap, but you do not buy it elsewhere at so high a price. And here in Mr. Lesperence's accounts is a charge for practically two barrels of sugar at 6½ cents per pound. And so it goes all the way through. Surely the hon. gentleman did not carry out the promises he made last year. He tells us now that he simply instructed his officers to scrutinize these accounts. But why did he not advertise for tenders for these supplies? There are a lot of standard articles required here that should have been tendered for. Grosse Isle requires these supplies year after year, and why should one or two parties be called upon to furnish these supplies? The hon. minister, as I have said, might have got sugar at $3.75 per hundred and he could have got coal oil at 20 cents per gallon, instead of paying 32 cents per gallon as it is here with $1.25 for the barrel—a charge quite unknown to the trade. What officer will pass such an account as that? The people of this country have entrusted the hon. minister with their money to handle it just as carefully as if it were his own. He would not purchase at these prices for his own use; why then should he pay such prices when spending the money with which the public have entrusted him?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. When the hon. gentleman was last year examining the charges, the physician of Grosse Isle stated that he had purchased sugar for his own use at exactly the same price as that charged the government, and could not get it cheaper. I cannot speak as to prices for I have never purchased goods in that neighbourhood. There are a number of articles in these accounts which it would be quite impossible to purchase by tender. There might be some items which might properly be purchased by tender, and it is worth consideration whether some such arrangement might not be organized.

Mr. WILSON. How many officers have you down at Grosse Isle to whom you furnish uniforms?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Practically all of them.

Mr. WILSON. I see one item, overalls, twenty-eight sets at $4. That seems to be a very high price. An hon. gentlemen near me says seventy-five cents would be a big price.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think perhaps that is going to the other extreme, though I must say I never paid $4 myself for overalls. I do not know, however, what character these are, or what they are made of. They may be of some particular material to suit the officials down there.

Mr. TAYLOR. How many officials are there?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There are two doctors, fifteen or seventeen men connected with the steamers and who also work on shore managing the machinery. There is also the hospital staff, five men and two women, and there are two policemen and a carter.

Mr. TAYLOR. Is the carter uniformed too?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes. It was found long ago that where a large number of immigrants are landed it is important that the officials should be in uniform, so that they may impress the people as having authority over them. The whole staff has been maintained in uniform for many years, and I think it is a very good practice. The overalls would probably be an undress uniform.

Mr. WILSON. Does the department furnish more than one suit a year?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Only one suit a year.

Mr. WILSON. I believe the Interior Department allows a pair of pants to their officers; and you furnish overcoats, caps and everything of that kind.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am informed they get just one suit a year. It is made to order.

Mr. WILSON. I think you ought to let the contract.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. In a sense it is a contract, that is to say, the price was fixed years ago, and has been maintained ever since. It is the same price that has been paid ever since I have been in the office, and I do not know for how long before. While no tender was asked for, the cloth, and the price, and every detail were submitted when the contract was given. It is practically a contract, though it was never signed.

Mr. WILSON. But why should you give such prices? There are two suits at $35, three suits at $25, and so on. Those are better suits than a good many members of this House wear.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. But there is a lot of gold lace, and buttons, and things of that kind on these uniforms.

Mr. LAVELL. I see in the Auditor General's Report where eight yards of bunting are charged at $35.

Mr. AVERY. Did you ask for tenders for these overalls? The idea of paying $4 a pair for overalls that any store in Ottawa or in the country would readily sell for fifty cents, or seventy-five cents a piece.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We don't know that.

Mr. AVERY. It is time you did.

Mr. TAYLOR. There are $987.29 paid for uniforms. That is enough to uniform a small army. What is the number of the staff uniformed ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. About thirty altogether.

Mr. TAYLOR. Averaging about $30 a uniform, ladies and all.

Mr. CLARKE. I think we are entitled to some better explanation as to the value of these overalls. That price seems to reach over-all the others. $4.75 for a pair of overalls—they must be made of silk.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It is a suit of overalls.

Mr. CLARKE. A suit, I am informed, is worth about $1.50. Really, I think there ought to be a more close inspection of these accounts.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We do not know the material of which these overalls are made.

Mr. BLAIN. Out of that item of $170,000, what proportion is for supplies furnished ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. $90,000 of it is not for our organized quarantine stations at all, that leaves only $80,000 for the organized districts. Of that $90,000, practically none of it is for supplies, except perhaps a few vaccine points. In the organized districts there was an expenditure of $80,000 altogether. I would have to go over the books a little to get the particulars.

Mr. BLAIN. Just approximately.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. At Grosse Isle, which is the largest station, the supplies last year cost $7,500, out of a total of $32,000 which was spent that year.

Mr. AVERY. I see that pea-jackets are charged for at the rate of $14.25 each, which is an enormous price. We handle the best kind of pea-jackets, the most durable for men in the lumber business, and $4 to $5 is a good price for them. I think the hon. minister could get a much more reasonable price if he would take the trouble to ask for tenders, and it is only reasonable to ask him to do so when such immoderate prices are charged. There must be somebody getting a big rake-off out of it, and I think it is time the hon. minister put his foot down on such charges as these.

Mr. VROOMAN. I see at page D—92 of the Auditor General's Report a charge of $80 made for 160 vaccine tubes by Ed. Gauvreau, M.D., Quebec. Vaccine points are things that we get for ten cents a piece.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. These tubes contain ten vaccine tubes each. That makes the charge five cents a point.

Mr. VROOMAN. What we understand by a tube is a small glass tube with just enough vaccine in it to vaccinate one person.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. This is a large tube and contains ten vaccine tubes.

Mr. LAVELL. I see at page D—102 of the Auditor General's Report that 37,050 vaccine tubes are charged for at the rate of five cents each.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. These are points.

Mr. LAVELL. They are called tubes, and the charge is made by Dr. Bell, in Regina, at five cents a tube.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, the charge is five cents a tube. These are single tubes for each individual who is vaccinated. The others are large tubes, which contain ten of these single tubes.

Mr. LAVELL. It is most unfortunate that the report does not show it more definitely.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, the report of the Auditor General in that respect seems defective.

Mr. TAYLOR. Or the minister's explanation ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No.

Mr. TAYLOR. Perhaps we had better move for the acounts and have an inquiry.

Cattle quarantine and veterinary division, $100,000.

Mr. GILMOUR. What is the occasion of the increase here ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Here again the explanation is somewhat similar to what it was in the last item. We asked for $70,000 last year and in the estimates for this current year. That $70,000 was expected to cover everything connected with the contagious diseases of animals' branch in my department and amongst others things the charges in regard to slaughtering hogs affected with hog cholera. Unfortunately, during the last year there has been a very great prevalence of hog cholera in certain parts of the country, and we have had to pay out extremely large sums on that account. The consequence was that I was obliged to come down the other day and ask for a supplementary vote of $50,000 to cover the unusual and extra expenses, so that, as a matter of fact, this estimate instead of being an increase over this year is a decrease, inasmuch as I have had to expend $120,000 this year and I am only asking $100,000 for next year.

Mr. GILMOUR. In regard to cattle inspection, I would like to ask the hon. minister if he is taking any extra precautions this year in regard to cattle coming from away down south ? I noticed that Inspector Perry, of the North-west Mounted Police, in his report last year stated that the inspection was very lax at that time, and I understand that the chief inspector, Dr. Rutherford, went out west in May of last year to make an inspection. I see that in his report he says that a new trade has arisen out there and that a large numbers of cattle are being imported from away down south, from Montana, Mexico, and south of the Texas quarantine fever line, and that it is necessary that an inspection of these cattle should take place. He stated that it would be necessary to employ additional officers in order to make an efficient inspection. I would like to ask the hon. minister if steps are being taken to meet that necessity ? I ventured to say in the House some time ago that cattle had come from the south into our country and I rather think they are still coming. There is direct testimony before us now that cattle do come from south of the Texas fever quarantine line into our country. They have come up this year by thousands and nearly one-half of them died as soon as they were unloaded. Large numbers of them were dead in the cars. They were found to be weak and sickly. I think it is very necessary that a most efficient inspection should be made of cattle coming in that way. It is said that they were merely brought there for the purpose of grazing and then taken back at the end of the season.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There may be a few instances of that, but they are very few. In consequence of the visit of Dr. Rutherford to that section of the country, special arrangements have been made to watch these cattle and they are obliged to be accompanied by a certificate from the United States authorities that they do not come from the district infected with Texas fever and that they are free from disease. In addition to that they are inspected at our frontier when they come in.

Mr. GILMOUR. At all points.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. At all points at which they enter.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the minister say they do not come from Texas ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. They do not come from the infected parts of Texas. A portion of the northern part of Texas is north of the Texas fever line.

Hon. Mr. FISHER.

Mr. GILMOUR. Dr. Rutherford says in his report that some of these cattle, particularly those from Mexico, were brought from south of the United States Texas fever quarantine line, and he says :

> I deem it advisable to insist upon the production by all persons importing such cattle, of health certificates signed by officers of the United States Bureau of Animal Industries.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. These cattle are said to have come from Mexico, which is not in the United States.

Mr. GILMOUR. He says they came from south of the Texas fever line.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, but at the same time it is not part of the United States.

Mr. GILMOUR. That does not make any difference. I am not directing my words against the United States, particularly, but against cattle coming from any place which is infected with that disease.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. These cattle have first of all to pass through the gauntlet of the United States officers on the frontier between Mexico and the United States, and then they have to pass our officers on the border.

Mr. GILMOUR. I have more faith in our own officials than I have in the others. I do not think that a health warrant from American officials away down about Texas would be very valuable. I prefer our own inspection.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. These are officers of the United States Bureau of Animal Industries, the head of which is at Washington, and I believe he keeps his officers up to doing efficient work.

Mr. HACKETT. What is the meaning of 'veterinary divisions' in the item.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It includes everything in connection with quarantine and with dealing with cattle disease both on the frontier and in the country. On former occasions we had two or three votes for this purpose, but this year and last they have been included in one. For the last year or two we have been obliged to undertake a considerable amount of work in connection with the health of animals in the country.

Mr. TAYLOR. What duties does Dr. Couture of Quebec perform ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. He attends to the cattle quarantine at Lévis. and he also does any veterinary service for the department in the neighbourhood of Quebec.

Mr. TAYLOR. You pay Dr. Couture $1,000 a year, and he draws besides $564.70, or nearly $2 a day for ferry fares and cab-hire. You can cross the ferry at Lévis for five cents.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Dr. Couture practices in Quebec and he has to cross to Lévis and thence to the cattle quarantine, which is probably a mile from the ferry. He is obliged to visit the cattle quarantine every day and sometimes twice a day.

Mr. HACKETT. Is Dr. Pethick, of Prince Edward Island, a permanent officer ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes.

Mr. HACKETT. Has he discovered any tuberculosis in that province ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. For the last year or more we have not had any report of any cases of tuberculosis in Prince Edward Island.

Mr. HACKETT. Dr. Pethick has $50 a month salary. What do you allow him in the way of cab-hire ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. He gets an allowance per day for horse-hire. I suppose that some days he spends four or five times what is allowed him, and other days he might not spend anything at all.

Mr. LEFURGEY. How much is the allowance ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Thirty-two dollars and fifty cents a month.

Mr. LEFURGEY. You said that on some days he spends three or four times his average allowance for each day.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It is about $1.25 per day and I think that some days he might pay $4 or $5.

Mr. LEFURGEY. There is no such a thing as anybody paying $4 or $5 a day for the hire of a horse. In Prince Edward Island you can get a horse a whole day for $1.25.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. You certainly could not get it up here.

Mr. SPROULE. Has the hon. minister any information about the recent outbreak of hog cholera in Bruce ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am informed that probably it came from the county of Essex. I am informed that the cars that stopped there were loaded principally at Belle River and at Harrow in the county of Essex.

Mr. SPROULE. What means have been taken to stamp it out ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The usual course was pursued of stamping out this disease. All hogs which were affected or were in contact with affected hogs, were slaughtered, the premises were disinfected and the place quarantined.

Mr. SPROULE. How many were slaughtered ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Three hundred.

Mr. SPROULE. In such cases do you pay any proportion of the cost ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, of the diseased cattle, one-third, and of those in contact, three-fourths of their value.

Mr. SPROULE. How many outbreaks of hog cholera have occurred in Essex during the past year ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I believe there is no hog cholera known in Essex at the present time. Without giving the figures as absolute, I am informed that there were probably twenty outbreaks in the county of Essex during the past year.

Mr. SPROULE. Then it cannot be stamped out very well.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not undertake to say that it is stamped out. The misfortune has been that we have not absolutely stamped it out. We may stamp out the disease and have none in a certain county to-day, and to-morrow we may have an outbreak which may cost us $1,000. It is a most persistent and insidious disease, and we have not been able to adopt any plan for stamping it out.

Mr. SHERRITT. How do you account for it being more prevalent in Essex than in other counties ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. For one reason, I suppose that there are a great many hogs there. The disease has been there a long time, and although we have periods when there is no disease in Essex, the germs may remain, so that under conditions that are favourable to it, the disease breaks out.

Mr. SPROULE. Do you not think it unwise not to have the place quarantined, but to allow the disease to be spread over the country to localities where it has not existed before ? I notice every little while that there is hog cholera in Essex. To allow hogs to be taken from there to other parts of the country is only to spread the disease.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I would not like to characterize that county in that way. As a matter of fact, this year there has been more hog cholera in Kent than in Essex. Speaking generally, I do not think the other outbreaks in the county this year have been traced to Essex. The hon. gentleman speaks about quarantining. We do quarantine any section where the disease is found. We have quarantined whole townships, and have sometimes had bitter complaints about preventing people shipping their hogs. We have not done that except where we thought it absolutely necessary to prevent the spreading of the disease from the township to other parts of the country.

Mr. SPROULE. Then the quarantining could not have been very successful, for the fact is that the disease was brought from that county and broke out in Bruce. In speaking of the district in question, we refer to both Essex and Kent. The fact that the disease is so prevalent there may be due to the nearness of the United States or to the kind of food.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not think it is imported from the United States. As a matter of fact, very few hogs come in from the United States. In the old days, when more hogs were imported, perhaps that was why that part of the country became infected. At the present time I do not think that any hogs come from the United States. If they do, they are quarantined for five days at the frontier, which is more than the period of incubation of this disease. The disease breaks out occasionally without any reason that we can find out—not where they were quarantined, but some how or other it is carried to other parts of the country, where it breaks out, and we have a heavy bill for the slaughter of hogs.

Mr. SPROULE. What has been paid for the destruction of hogs during the last year, from this cause ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Up to the 19th of May, 10½ months, $33,-534.71.

Mr. CLANCY. I am afraid we can scarcely hope to be entirely free from hog cholera in the west. There is a general belief there that much of this disease is brought in from the United States. Whether that belief is well founded or not, I am not in possession of information that will enable me to say. I will only state the case as it appears. We have three railway trunk lines running through that western country. In the summer season the railways stop their trains at these stations and turn the hose on the hogs and wash them. That is said to be a source of the disease. Then, it is said that it is carried by dogs going through the country. We have had a very difficult experience in the west with hog cholera. I am prepared to say, from my own experience, that very stringent measures are taken by the officers of the department to do away with it. In spite of that, and what is thought to be a burdensome quarantine, which has apparently completely stamped it out, it breaks out again unexpectedly at some distance away. I have absolutely no more hope that you will get rid of hog cholera in the western part of Canada than you will get rid of small-pox for all time. In many parts of the country it is thought that there is a good deal of carelessness in this matter. We will find some cases where farmers are not willing to tell for the simple reason that they only get three-quarters of the value of their hogs that come in contact with the disease and a smaller sum where the hogs are diseased and have to be slaughtered, but notwithstanding all this, the people are on the alert and there is a strong feeling that the disease should not be allowed to get root in any locality.

Mr. SPROULE. Why not quarantine the locality infected with cholera ? There must be laxity somewhere when a carload from an infected locality can be brought to another section where there has never been hog cholera. In the United States localities infected with the Texas fever are quarantined and no intercourse is allowed between stock from that locality and stock in other places.

Mr. CLANCY. Surely the hon. gentleman would not propose to quarantine a locality on mere suspicion ? It is only suspected that the cholera broke out in consequence of this carload of hogs being brought from Essex.

Mr. SPROULE. The information I read was that the hogs were brought from Essex to feed on the whey and milk of the cheese factory and that it was among those hogs the cholera broke out.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It was not known at the time that there was any hog cholera in Essex county, and I would not like to quarantine a locality which was free from the disease. Essex county was free from the disease, as far as anybody could make out, when that shipment went from there to Huron. The disease was attributed to the shipment, but there was no disease in Essex at the time, nor was there any among the animals when they arrived at their new quarters. It would not be advisable or practicable to quarantine counties affected by hog cholera and treat them as portions of the south are treated with regard to Texas fever.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not know why the hon. minister would not be justified in doing so. If the history of the past shows that the cholera has broken out over and over again in a certain locality, that locality should be quarantined. England has quarantines, Canada and the United States on account of pleuro-pneumonia, and we would be only doing what other countries have regarded as wise and prudent.

Mr. HACKETT. I want to get a little further information about Doctor Pethick. He is engaged permanently. Is he allowed to engage in private practice ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Dr. Pethick is engaged at a salary of $600 per year, which justifies us in calling on him to do work for the department at any time, either in Prince Edward Island or the mainland, but he is allowed to practice for himself when not occupied in the work of the department.

Mr. HACKETT. According to the Auditor General's Report, page D—110, his salary for twelve months at $50, amounted to $600. He was paid horse-hire 313 days at $1.25. He must have had a horse every day of the year. Then for board he was paid $149.50; ferries, $1.70; railway fares, $2.25; disinfectants, $15.50; horse-hire, again, $17.50; telegrams, 75 cents; postage, $2; telephone, $2.75; two thermometers at $1.50; rent of telephone six months, $5; subscription to veterinary journal, $5. Total $1,195.22. Then when I turn to page D—106, I find there Dr. Pethick again, horse-hire, $2; railway and boat fare, $6.25; board, $15.75; rabbits, $2; cage, $1. What were these required for ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. For some inoculation experiments which Dr. Pethick was carrying on.

Mr. HACKETT. Is the hon. gentleman sure that they were not rabbits infected with tuberculosis, which required to be quarantined ? Telegrams, $3; telephone, 75 cents; postage, 50 cents; making in all over $2,000.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Not at all; only $1,200.

Mr. HACKETT. The hon. gentleman is right. But he was employed at $50 per month and his expenses were exactly equal to his salary.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. A very considerable amount of this expenditure was incurred by Dr. Pethick in an investigation on the mainland at Pictou of cattle disease. He was sent over by my orders to make an investigation regarding that disease. I informed the hon. gentleman a few minutes ago that Mr. Pethick's work is not confined to the island altogether. These items are for expenditures as well as for salary.

Mr. TAYLOR. There are only 313 working days in the year and he charges for 313 days' horse-hire.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am informed that he has an arrangement for horse-hire at $1.25 per day. Sometimes he spends a great deal more, and sometimes nothing at all.

Mr. BLAIN. What were the duties of Dr. Rutherford in England during last year ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Dr. Rutherford was sent to England the year before last to test cattle which were being exported from England to Canada—test them with tuberculin. An arrangement was made at the request of the importers of live stock to test them in England instead of at our quarantine here. And for two seasons that was carried out. Dr. Rutherford was there the first season and carried out the work.

Mr. BLAIN. Did he make a report to the department of the work done ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes. Regularly.

Mr. TAYLOR. I would like to say to the Minister of Agriculture and to the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Fielding) who is leading the House that my hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain) wanted to bring up the cold storage question on this item. I would suggest that this item be disposed of and that we discuss the cold storage question on another item. The census is the only one left.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I would like to say that when we do take up that discussion on the census item, I would like to discuss the two questions separately. I would like to discuss the questions arising under what are called Professor Robertson's votes, dispose of that and then discuss the census separately.

Mr. SPROULE. There may be some supplementaries.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not know of any supplementaries in my department on these items.

Some resolutions reported.

ADJOURNMENT—BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding) moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. SPROULE. What business will be taken up to-morrow ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair) is absent ; but if he is in the House to-morrow we shall probably resume consideration of his Bill, and afterwards go into supply, taking up the supplementary estimates for the current year, the items under the direction of the Minister of Public Works. If the Minister of Railways and Canals returns, he may desire to take up a portion of the day on his Bill.

Mr. TAYLOR. It would be better to go into supply first, and let the Minister of Railways and Canals take the latter part of the day. He has been taking the earlier part of the day hitherto.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If the hon. gentleman will promise me that when the proposal to go into supply is made we shall immediately go into supply, I will make a bargain with him.

NICOLA KAMLOOPS AND SIMILKAMEEN COAL AND RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. GALLIHER moved :

That the petition of the Nicola, Kamloops and Similkameen Coal and Railway Company presented to-day praying for an Act to confirm their charter be read and received forthwith, in accordance with the recommendation contained in the 14th report of the Select Standing Committee on Standing Orders.

Mr. SPROULE. This is an exceptional time to bring up such a matter.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. It can come up on 'motions' to-morrow.

Mr. GALLIHER. But the Committee on Standing Orders meets to-morrow and my reason for bringing the matter up now is that I wish it to be dealt with to-morrow and reported on. I spoke to Mr. Speaker with regard to it.

Mr. SPROULE. I have only to say that there should be some time when finality is reached with regard to these petitions. The rules are plain enough and are available for everyone who wishes to learn what they are. We met on the 12th of March, and it is now the 25th June. Yet these petitions are coming in as though this session were to go on perpetually. There should be some time when we reach finality with regard to these petitions.

Mr. GALLIHER. I may explain for the information of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) that some weeks ago I obtained the usual permission from the House to present the petition notwithstanding the fact that the time has elapsed. The delay in presenting it has arisen in this way—the Act had to be confirmed by the British Columbia government, because that company are asking in British Columbia for an extension of the time for the construction of their line, and there was delay until the Act was passed.

Mr. SPROULE. That would be an exceptional case.

Motion agreed to.

Motion to adjourn agreed to, and House adjourned at 1 a.m. Friday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, June 26, 1903.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS.

Mr. R. F. SUTHERLAND (North Essex) presented the first report of the Select Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, as follows :—

Friday, June 26, 1903.

The Select Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections beg leave to present the following their first report :

Your committee having considered the question referred to them by your honourable House, on the 25th instant, as to whether Mr. Schell, member for Glengarry, has infringed the law respecting the independence of parliament, beg to report as follows :

That the goods in question were sold by the firm of which Mr. Schell is a member, under a written order, to one W. D. Scott, who appeared from such order to be the agent of the Glasgow International Exhibition, 1901 ; that the goods were charged to the said Scott personally, and paid for by him ; that there was nothing to lead the vendors to believe, and they did not believe that they were dealing with the Dominion government, or any agent thereof.

From the evidence adduced, your committee find that the goods in question were sold by the firm of Macpherson & Schell to the said Scott personally, and there has, therefore, in the opinion of your committee, been no infringement of the law respecting the independence of parliament in this case.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

(Sgd.) R. F. SUTHERLAND,
Chairman.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 211) respecting the Nicola Kamloops and Similkameen Coal and Railway Company.—Mr. Galliher.

Bill (No. 212) to incorporate the Alliance Bank of Canada.—Mr. Russell.

PROVINCIAL AUTONOMY FOR THE NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I beg to lay on the Table of the House a return to an address of the House of Commons, dated the 11th of May, for documents relating to the granting of provincial autonomy to the North-west Territories. I believe this is a preliminary report, and that there are other papers coming.

DEATH OF MR. FARQUHARSON.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). It is my sad duty to inform the House of the death of one of our colleagues in the person of Mr. Donald Farquharson, member for West Queen's, P.E.I., I believe that, though Mr. Farquharson was well known on this side of the House, he was not so well known on the other side, as he entered the House late during the present parliament. He was elected to parliament during the session of 1902. But, not being in robust health at that time, he never took in parliament the position his undoubted talents would have won for him had he been in good condition physically. His health did not improve, and to-day I have the sad intelligence that he has departed this life. If Mr. Farquharson is not so well known as he would have been under more favourable conditions, everybody is aware that he had attained in his own province a high position, having discharged the duties of several most important situations to the satisfaction of the people he represented. All those who had the privilege of his acquaintance during the short time he was our colleague will agree with me that he won the good will and respect of all. His loss will be felt as the loss of one who, whether in low position or in high position, well discharged his duties as a good citizen and a good Canadian.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). I am sure that on this side of the House we all join in the expressions of regret which have been uttered by the Prime Minister with regard to the decease of Mr. Farquharson. I had not heard of his death until it was mentioned by the Prime Minister. He had not been long a member of this House, and had not an opportunity of displaying those abilities which raised him to the very front rank in his own province. I am sure he enjoyed the esteem and respect of every member of the House, whether they sit on the right or on the left of the Speaker.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN.

Mr. T. EARLE (Victoria, B.C.). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to ask the Minister of Marine and Fisheries whether the correspondence promised some time ago is yet ready, in reference to the lease of some portion of False creek, in British Columbia. It is now over two months since I asked for the correspondence, it has been promised on several occasions, but I have not yet seen it.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Hon. R. Préfontaine). I thought it would have been ready before now. I will inquire about it again to-day.

RAILWAY ACT, 1903.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 21) to amend and consolidate the laws respecting railways.—The Minister of Railways and Canals.

On section 234—telegraphs and telephones.

Mr. MACLEAN. I want to refer to this section for a moment or two. It is a very important section, and it brings up a question of great importance to the people of this country. I am not going to repeat my arguments, but I wish to refer to one or two things that were said in the discussion when the committee was last considering this section. The Minister of Railways said that this amendment of mine disfigured his Act. My answer to that is that two or three pages further on he has a clause exactly analogous, where he provides that no railway company shall discriminate between express companies, but that it shall give equal treatment to all. The effect of my amendment is to compel all railways to give all telephone companies equal treatment. He will say that there is some difference between an express company and a telephone company, and that the analogy is not quite complete. I grant that, but the analogy is sufficiently marked for the people to see that if there should be no discrimination in regard to express companies, there should be no discrimination in regard to telephone companies. I want to point out, as I pointed out the other day, how this affects a large section of the people of Canada. In my own county there was a private line of telephones which was refused access to the Canadian Pacific Railway telephone station. I wish to read the unfair agreement made by the Canadian Pacific Railway with the Bell Telephone Company, in order that the House may be seized of it:

This agreement executed in duplicate at the city of Montreal, in the province of Quebec, the first day of May, 1902: By and between the Bell Telephone Company of Canada, Limited, a body corporate having its principal offices in the said city, hereinafter called the Telephone Company, and

The Canadian Pacific Railway Company, a body corporate having its principal office in the said city, hereinafter called the Railway Company. Witnesseth:

That the said parties have covenanted and agreed as follows:

1. The Telephone Company will furnish to the Railway Company, at all points in the Dominion, and where it may now or hereafter have exchanges, telephone connections between the offices and stations of the Railway Company and the exchanges of the Telephone Company free of charge. It will also issue to the officials of the Railway Company annual passes of franks good over the long distance lines of the Telephone Company and free telephone exchange connection and maintain during the term of this contract a local exchange in the head office of the railway at Windsor street station, Montreal, affording communication with the different offices, as well as with the said local exchanges of the Telephone Company in the city of Montreal.

2. The Railway Company will furnish annual passes to the officials of the Telephone Company over its own railway and telephone lines, and lines leased or controlled by said Railway Company, and will also furnish free transportation to the employees of the Telephone Company over said railway lines in Canada.

3. The Telephone Company shall have the exclusive right of placing telephone instruments, apparatus and wires in the several stations, offices and premises of the Railway Company throughout the Dominion of Canada, when the Telephone Company has or may during the life of this contract established telephone exchanges, it being understood in connection with new exchanges being established that the Railway Company will be given a fair service, sufficient for its business.

4. And each company, so far as it may properly do so, without prejudice to its own business, grants to the other company facilities for carrying its wires and lines through or over the poles, subways, bridges and other premises, on equitable terms, to be agreed upon. And the Railway Company will not grant similar facilities to any other Telephone Company.

5. The number of annual passes or franks, free telephone connections, and extent of free transportation shall be determined from time to time by the president of the Railway Company and the president of the Telephone Company, as the expansion of both companies may require, and such passes, franks and telephone connections shall only be issued on written application of an officer of either party, as designated by the president of each company.

6. The terms and conditions of this contract, as applying to the Canadian Pacific Railway, shall also apply to the Canadian Pacific Railway Telegraph Company, and it is further understood and agreed that where telephone connection with local exchanges is required for an office of either of the above, the agent for which carries on any other business, or acts as agent for any other company, he shall pay one-half the regular exchange rates, and the company or companies represented herein by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company shall pay nothing for their services.

7. This agreement shall remain in force for a period of eight years from the date hereof.

In witness whereof.

And so on. Now, what is the effect of this agreement that no company but the Bell Telephone Company, no private company operated by farmers or by municipalities, shall have any access to the railway stations of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, a company to which we have given, I do not know how many million acres of land, I do not know how many millions of dollars, I do not know how many other great franchises and privileges ?

I am glad to see the hon. Minister of the Interior (Hon. Mr. Sifton) here now and I wish to tell him that in the great North-west which we are opening up and developing and where the farmers are rapidly acquiring the telephone habit, if I may so term it, every one of these farmers who desires to build an independent line of his own and every community which desires to establish a municipal service is, by this contract, prohibited from entering any one of the railway stations in that country or of having telephone access to the railway to which the people had contributed such large sums of money. It is a nefarious contract, it is a contract contrary to public policy and I believe that in the courts it will be so held. I have attempted to have it so held, but I have not yet succeeded and I am appealing to parliament to declare that such contracts are illegal and against public policy. We are inviting people to go into the North-west to settle up the farms there, we are telling the farmers that they have the same privileges that farmers enjoy in the United States, but if this contract is allowed to remain they will never have the same privileges. For six or eight years to come they cannot have telephone communication with a railway station except through the monopoly called the Bell Telephone Company. As I pointed out the other day the citizens of the towns of Port Arthur and Fort William, which are very progressive towns, have succeeded in establishing a municipal telephone system. To-day they are denied access to the Canadian Pacific Railway station in both of these towns by reason of this monopoly contract. They have spent a great deal of money, they are all good customers of the Canadian Pacific Railway, they wish to do business with the station, they wish to know about their freight and things of that kind, but they cannot get into the Canadian Pacific Railway station with their telephone. I say this is a shame. I know the people will rebel against it and I heard a Liberal of this House say in one of the committee rooms the other day that if this is attempted in the North-west the people will rise and cut the wires. I do not wish to provoke anything of that kind but I wish to have an amendment made to the law which will forbid railway companies rom making any such contract as this to the detriment of the general public. It has been argued that if you allow everybody to place a telephone line in the station you will take up all the agent's time and it will also be said that the telephone instruments will occupy all the wall space in the station. that is not a fact. The fact is that the railway companies are only too glad to have telephone communication with the public, but they wish to have it through the Bell telephone monopoly. As a matter of fact in all great cities the railway companies have ten, twenty, thirty and even forty telephones in their stations for the use of the public so as to be able to give the public all sorts of information in regard to business. They are glad to answer all the calls that are made. There are other railways competing with them and they are only too glad to answer these calls. If there should be two telephones in a railway station, which I cannot think is likely, very little more wall space will be taken. There would be no more calls to answer if there were two companies having telephonic communication with the station instead of one. Therefore, that argument does not amount to anything. I am asking parliament to stop this discrimination and to compel these railway companies, in connection with telephones, to treat everybody alike just as we compel them to treat everybody alike in connection with express business. I am not asking for anything now that has not been promised to the people. The hon. Minister of Justice (Hon. Mr. Fitzpatrick) introduced a Bill last session dealing with the telephone question. He gave the people and the municipalities a solemn pledge—the pledge of a minister—that he would again introduce that Bill this session. He received a deputation representing all the municipalities of this country not long ago, he asked them for their views, they gave him their views and he said that on this information and the information that he had collected he intended to introduce to parliament a Bill dealing with telephones. Granting that, I may be told that the proper place to deal with this question is in connection with that Bill. That is the answer you always get. You raise a question now, but you should raise it in some other way and at some other time. You ought to raise it in connection with something else. I am raising it in connection with the railway companies because the railway companies are violating a great principle of public policy. We are, in this Bill, regulating railway companies in regard to their treatment of express companies. My idea is that the same kind of provisions should be put into that railway Bill preventing these railway companies from discriminating against the public as represented by different telephone lines whether they are owned by the Bell Telephone Company or any other company. Let me give one instance. The Locust Hill instance is not the only one. There are dozens of cases where efforts were made to establish local lines. The Bell telephone people refused for years to give any kind of a local service at Locust Hill at a moderate rate. They demanded an extortionate price and it was when the people built their own line and tried to get into the Locust Hill station with it that they forbade their entrance and said that they were going to build a line themselves. The same thing happened at Newtonville on the Grand Trunk between Toronto and Kingston. A number of people there, drovers, millers and farmers living eight, ten and twelve miles away from the station, established a line at their own expense. They ran it to the Grand Trunk station, they asked to get into the station to find out about their freight and about trains and things of that kind, but were told that they could not get into the station because of this contract with the Bell Telephone Company. The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair) said the other day that I was introducing something of a socialistic character. I do not know that this is socialistic. If it is I am not ashamed of it. The hon. minister also called me a radical. Is he a radical? Is he ashamed of being a radical, or is he a red-faced Tory? I do not want to throw these little jibes across the House. I remember that the great charge that the right hon. leader of the government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) made against me two years ago was that I was introducing something that was socialistic. He is always telling this House and the country that he is a Gladstone Liberal, that he has founded his policy upon the policy of the Liberal party in England and that he looks for the foundation stones of liberalism to the Liberal party of England. If the Liberal party in England is mixed up with anything to-day it is mixed up with measures that may be described as socialistic and radical. Sir Henry Campbell Bannerman gave out his portrait the other day as the leader of the radical wing of the Liberal party in England. They are not afraid to be called radicals or socialists because they demand square and fair treatment of the people. If there is a reason that the Liberal party have given for basing their claim to be called the Liberal party in this country it is that they have fought the people's battles in the past.

The PRIME MINISTER. Hear, hear.

Mr. MACLEAN. I cannot find that they have done anything of the kind. All I can find is that they are protectors of the corporations. They are protecting the corporations every day as against the rights of the people. They are not living up to their programme. They cannot justify themselves in being Liberals let alone being radicals or socialists. They are departing from all the principles that the right hon. leader laid down in former days. I hope the right hon. gentleman will give some attention to this Bill and to the amendment which I propose. I have been looking around the House to see if I could find the hon. member for West Ontario (Mr. Gould). Those who are aggrieved in connection with the Locust Hill incident are much more his constituents than they are mine and nearly all are supporters of the Liberal party. I had expected that the hon. member for West Ontario would be here to-day to assist me in asking for the adoption of this amendment. I may have to return to the subject again, but in the meantime, Mr. Chairman, I ask the committee through you, Sir, to accept this amendment as I propose it, or, to modify it in some way, but to accept the principle and most of all, I ask for the adoption of this amendment in the interest of the farming community of Canada, and more than any other section of the farming community, I ask that it be put into this Bill in the interest of the settlers who are going into the North-west. Nothing is of such vital importance to the farming community as telephone communication. I told the committee the other day, that hundreds of men come miles to summon a doctor through my telephone, or to summon a veterinary surgeon, and they do it because they cannot pay the exorbitant price that the Bell Telephone Company exacts. Why should we permit a company that is treating the people as the Bell Telephone Company is treating the public in a great many portions of the country to continue its exactions? Along its main line it asks as much as $150 for a telephone service. In the east end of Toronto it is asking the people $150 for a telephone service, and it is asking exorbitant rates in the west end for a telephone service. It is asking exorbitant rates all over the country. There is only one way to check this course of the telephone company, and that is to do away with the agreement that it has with the railways. This agreement gives it a monopoly. It entrenches it in its monopoly all over the country. It is in a position to demand these exorbitant rates, but let every body have access to the railway stations and companies will spring up that will compel the Bell Telephone Company to cut its rates in two and treat the public properly. I appeal to hon. members irrespective of party, I appeal irrespective of any class of the community, but simply on the ground of the general public interest to accept this amendment to compel the railway companies to afford equal treatment and no discrimination in the matter of telephones, just as we compel them to give equal treatment and no discrimination to express companies.

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin). Mr. Chairman, I am fully in accord with the amendment moved by the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean). I believe that a clause should be inserted in this Bill now, providing that all telephone companies may have access to railroad stations. The farmers of this country before very long will be using telephones to a very large extent. I am satisfied that our farmers will not sit idly by and allow the villages and towns alone to have the benefit of this great public convenience, the telephone system. I cannot see for the life of me why anyone should object to allowing all telephone companies to have access to the railway stations. In many of the states of the union a large percentage of the farmers are supplied with telephones. The top wire of the wire fences is made a conductor, and by placing a tube underneath, the telephone is taken from house to house at a cheap rate, averaging $10 or $12 a year. I believe that the farmers should have the benefit of cheap telephones and also rural mail delivery, and if the Minister of Railways and Canals does not accept the amendment of the member for East York (Mr. Maclean) I trust he will add some provision to his Bill which will have the same effect.

Mr. SPROULE. The desire of the present day is to economize time and labour, and our old system of doing business is rapidly giving way to the new. Telephones have been extended all over the older settled portions of the country, and they have proved to be of great advantage to the people generally. In my locality that is the case and it is the same in other localities. Sometimes there is a short telephone line and sometimes a long line, but in every case the farmers derive great benefit from them, as they are saved the trouble and loss of driving miles to town for market reports, for ascertaining if freight is at the station for them or not, for communicating with persons who come on the train to buy their produce, and the hundred and one other things which enter into the daily life of our farmers. The telephone system enables us to do our business with economy of time, economy of labour, and economy of expense, and yet the Minister of Railways and Canals would legislate so as to prevent a large section of our people in the country from reaping the advantages which may be gained by utilizing the railway offices, which after all are there for the public convenience. If one company is allowed to use railway stations why should not another. To deny this amendment is not only perpetuating discrimination, but also monopoly. Why should the Bell Telephone Company have a monopolistic right to do business, and why should other people be shut out. Those who are not fortunate enough to live on the line of the Bell Telephone Company in many cases wish to establish a line of their own, and why should we deny them the privilege of being able to utilize the conveniences afforded by these common carriers, the railway companies. The government are always declaring that they are opposed to monopolies. Here is an instance where they can put their declarations into practical effect. If the Minister of Railways and Canals refuses to avail of this opportunity, the people of the country will certainly think that he does not mean what he says when he declares himself as opposed to monopolies. Section 253 of this Bill says :—

Nor shall any company by any unreasonable delay or otherwise.

I submit that the prevention of the use of their stations for a telephone system is one of the things which would be included in that word ' otherwise.'

Nor shall any company, by any unreasonable delay or otherwise howsoever, make any difference in treatment in the receiving, loading, forwarding, unloading, or delivery of the goods of any particular person, or company, nor subject any particular person, or company, or any particular description of traffic, to any undue, or unreasonable, prejudice or disadvantage, in any respect whatsoever.

If you allow the users of the Bell Telephone to have access to the railway stations are you not discriminating against the users of another telephone system when you deny them this facility ? This is as clear a case of discrimination as there possibly can be, and yet this Bill professes to set its face against discrimination. I can tell the minister that the public will insist on getting the privilege which the amendment of the member for East York calls for. In my own locality there are two or three private 'phones, one of them ten or twelve miles long, and when the subscribers require to communicate with the railway station they are obliged to go to the trouble and delay of communicating with some one who has a 'phone on the Bell system, and they are put to the extra expense also because they have to pay tolls. That is very unfair. The telephone in my locality passes through a thickly populated country where there are cheese and butter factories, and saw mills, and yet the value of their telephone is largely depreciated by reason of the fact that they cannot communicate with the railway station. I can tell the minister and the government, that if they refuse this amendment to-day, public sentiment will, within a short time, compel them to accept it, and they might as well do so with a good grace now.

Mr. KENDALL. Does the member for York (Mr. Maclean) intend to have the number of telephones limited that may be placed in a railway office, and if so to what number would he restrict them ?

Mr. MACLEAN. Certainly, I intend that they should be limited and my amendment submits this subject to the approval of the railway commission. I do not want that a railway company should be compelled to allow every Tom, Dick or Harry to put up a telephone, but I had to word my amendment as it is worded because it is necessary from a legal point of view. Let it be at the discretion of the board of railway commissioners. As a matter of fact there will be only one line, or two lines at the most, and I have left it to the discretion of the board. If the board thinks that a railway is being inconvenienced they can make regulations at their discretion.

Mr. CARGILL. I think this amendment is in the right direction and the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean) is to be highly commended for submitting it to the consideration of the House. If the Minister of Railways and Canals has a sufficient interest in the rural population of this country to make ordinary concessions of this kind when they are asked for, it would be to his own advantage and to the advantage of the government. I do not see any good reason why the Bell Telephone Company should monopolize this particular business. If the people of any particular locality desire to have a telephone system in connection with the railroad station, I do not see why they should be prohibited from doing so. The only good reason I have heard urged against it is that it may interfere with the business of the railway company, but the Bill leaves that to the discretion of the commissioners, and as a matter of fact, business men in the large cities are able to communicate by telephone with the agents of the railway company in regard to freight matters and other railway business. If they want to make inquiry as to whether their freight is delivered at the station or anything of that kind, they call up the agent by phone, and ascertain in that way, instead of making a trip to the station. Why should a section of the rural community be denied the privilege of making connection in that way with a railway station ? This idea of putting in fifteen or twenty or one hundred telephones in one station is perfectly absurd. We do not ask for anything like that. But I think that any town or village or rural community should have the privilege of making connection with the railroad station, and not be prohibited because of arrangements made between the Bell Telephone Company and the railway company, which amount to a monopoly. The Minister of Railways the other evening accused the hon. member for East York of advocating socialistic views. If he was in this particular case I would prefer being socialistic to being monopolistic, because I do not think it is the right of any government to give such a company as the Bell Telephone Company the privilege of shutting out other classes of the community from enjoying the facilities for doing business to which they are entitled. I feel strongly on this matter, and I hope the Minister of Railways will, upon consideration, grant the amendment. There is an agitation prevailing throughout the length and breadth of the country in favour of rural mail delivery; electric railways are being built all through the country; and the day is coming when I believe the telephone system will prevail through all the rural municipalities in the country. In a county where there is sometimes only one town of any importance, called the county town, the farmers living at a distance of from ten to fifteen miles, would find a telephone system most convenient. Perhaps there is no doctor within more convenient distance. For about a mile and a quarter along each side of the road there are residing say ten families. Suppose those ten families clubbed together, and arranged to have a telephone system connected with one farm house. The cost would not exceed $25, so that each family would have telephone communication at a cost of $2.50 per annum. It would cost each of these farmers that much to hitch up his horse and buggy and make a trip to the county town to get a doctor to come out and attend a patient. Considering the matter in all its phases, I do not see why the government should not accept this amendment and embody it in the Bill. It is no hardship to any class of the community at all, except the Bell Telephone Company, which is of course anxious to prevent any others from engaging in the same kind of business. It might interfere with their profits. But that is not just what we are here for. We are here to represent the different classes of the community, and there is no class more deserving of consideration of this kind than the agricultural community.

Mr. OLIVER. I would just like to place before the House the condition in the district which I represent, as it exists in regard to telephone service, and as it will exist, within a few months if the agreement spoken of by the hon. member for East

York stands. In the town in which I live, and in the surrounding country, there is a telephone system, with about 300 phones. This system has been built up, partly by private enterprise and partly by government assistance. There are three towns upon the system, and there are three radial lines, with a fourth being built. In that country the railroad station is necessarily the centre of business, and it is an absolute necessity to the satisfactory use of that system, and to a satisfactory result for the money invested in it, that it should have connection with the railroad station. From Edmonton southward there is a succession of towns, varying from 200 to 500, and 5,000 inhabitants. Some of these have telephone systems and some have not. One I think is the Bell system; others have been proposing to put in municipal systems, and in others private enterprise has supplied the need. Recently the Bell Company has decided, I understand, to establish a through system from north to south of that district, a distance of about 350 miles, stringing all the towns along the railroad line and beyond the railroad line with its system. If that is done, it simply means that our system, having some 300 phones, will be cut off from the railroad station. The other villages and towns which intended to put in a municipal system will be absolutely prevented from doing so; other towns where there are private or local companies, will be put out of business, just as they will be at Edmonton; and the Bell Telephone Company will be established in sole control of the telephone business in all that territory, simply by the force of this agreement which has been entered into between them and the railway company. In that country there is only one railroad company, and if the Bell Telephone Company secures a binding agreement with that company, there will be only one telephone company. That means high rates, bad service, and everything it ought not to mean and does not need to mean. Because while a telephone company is to a certain extent a monopoly, there is not the expense connected with its establishment to make it such a monopoly as cannot be broken by private enterprise and capital. Leave the Bell Telephone Company on its own footing, and there is a possibility of regulating it by competition or the danger of competition; but if you entrench it behind the railway company by cutting off every other telephone system from communication with the railroad, you simply establish the Bell Telephone Company as a monopoly, and do the country that amount of damage. I do not wish to discuss the various points which have been raised by other members and which have been discussed very fully in the Railway Committee. There is no interference with any serious right or privilege of the railroad company. There is no interference that cannot be easily and adequately compensated for by a charge fixed for the introduction of a phone into the railroad office; and when the whole matter is left under the control of an independent commission, certainly the railroad company does not stand to suffer in any degree.

Mr. LENNOX. Mr. Chairman, this is a growing time, and this is a growing idea. I am quite prepared to admit that when I first took notice of this agitation, brought about in the first instance by the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean), I was not disposed to view it favourably. I recognized that in all these matters which are, if you like to so class them, radical departures from all preconceived ideas, the first feeling of the public is opposition. I would dislike as much as any one to be called a radical. I do not think there is anything very radical in my composition. I would dislike it as much as I would perhaps to be classed as a Liberal of the present day. But these are only questions of degree. We must approach this matter, not as a question of names or words bandied across the House, or from one member to another. This is a question of what is in the best interests of the community, what is necessary, and what is right.

Now, Sir, the question of discrimination enters very largely into this matter. In the consideration of this Railway Bill, the object, I hope, of both sides of the House is that there shall be no unjust discrimination. This is a matter that concerns the whole public; it is a matter intimately connected with the railway service; and it is as much a necessity that we should see to it that there shall not be any combination of two great interests, the Bell Telephone Company and the railway companies to unjustly discriminate against any portion of the public as it is, that we should see to it that there shall be no unjust discrimination on the part of the railway companies alone. Now, will this lead, and has it lead to unjust discrimination? Can there be any doubt of it? As long as you allow the present state of things to exist the railway companies and the Bell Telephone Company will so combine that they can force the people of a neighbourhood to use the Bell Telephone service at such rates as the company choose to ask. A more unjust system of discrimination, I think it would be hard for the most astute politician to imagine. In the interest of the public, it is necessary, not that we should confiscate the property of the railway companies but that we should say to them: If you are prepared to admit telephones into your office, you shall admit all telephone companies duly established on the same terms. This is not, as some have tried to show, an attempt to confiscate the property of the railway companies and force them to introduce into their offices instruments which they do not want to use. It only provides that if two or three are asking for the privilege, all shall be allowed the privilege upon the same terms. Now, is there any reason why that should not be done ? It has been said that there would be great inconvenience in carrying out this plan. I do not see that; perhaps some hon. gentleman can tell me where the inconvenience comes in. There are only a certain number of people to serve, and there will be no more, no matter how many telephone lines are used. Does any hon. gentleman imagine that in rural districts—and these are rural districts we are dealing with—that people are such fools that they are going to establish fifty telephone lines. Does any one suppose that they are going to 'line the walls' as some hon. gentleman has stated with instruments at their own expense where one or two telephone systems will serve ? The argument has only to be stated to show its absurdity. And does it matter to the railway company whether they have to answer two instruments or only one ? They are not answering the two instruments at the same time. Talking of the inconvenience and the number to be served, let us look at it in another way. In a rural district from twenty-five to fifty people have to be attended to by the officials of the railway company, but in a city, from twenty-five to fifty thousand people have to be answered and kept in touch with. So when he speaks of inconvenience, when he raises his most formidable argument against this proposal, and says that it will lead to confusion and possibly disaster in the working of the railway, it is seen that the argument of the hon. minister is without any sound basis. I contend, on the other hand that it would decrease the danger to the public, and overcome some of the troubles we have been contending with in the past. I have been thinking of this phase of the question only for a minute or two, but this idea has occurred to me—suppose a blockade upon the railway, a train storm-stayed at some distance from a railway station, but having telephone communication with this station and so with the farming community—and it is the farming community who must come to the rescue in such a case and keep the people who are blocked in from starving. This telephone communication might be found a great advantage even in our own province, how much more important in the west where the storms are greater and more dangerous ? What could be more important than that there should be at every railway station a means by which they could communicate with the surrounding country, and so be able to secure quickly the supplies of which the people stand in need? There would be a similar advantage in the case of accident upon the line. Suppose a disaster resulting in loss of life, and a severe injury or imminent peril to others. The more speedy the communication you can have with all parts of the country the better. Suppose some person injured and upon the point of death near this Locust Hill Station, and with his dearest relative three miles away. By the means of the communication proposed by the hon. member for East York, these two people could be brought together. This may be said to be a sentimental reason, but it is one that it would not be out of place for this parliament to consider. It is socialistic, radical, if you will. I am prepared to be branded radical or socialistic, though I am not prepared to be branded liberal of the present day, for these considerations. Now, when we study this bugaboo of radicalism, what does it mean, this thing that has been announced by the Minister of Railways and Canals as confiscation and as something else, a word which I will not even attempt to pronounce ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Give it up ?

Mr. LENNOX. Yes, I give it up. What does all this amount to, this charge that this means a confiscation of property and of rights ? We have throughout this Railway Bill which is now before us—and which, I trust, with the aid of the opposition, will be so framed as to be a monument to the credit of the Minister of Railways and Canals—many cases in which it is provided that the railway companies shall make certain reports of their doings. In the very next section we are to take up, I find that, under an amendment proposed, in the case of an accident, the railway company must report. What is this proposal that is before us but a proposal to report ? It is simply to facilitate the report in connection with the doings and the business of the railway. The people are not going to ask about a picnic in another township. What they want is means to communicate with the railway by which they can ask when a train that is overdue will arrive. A man wants to ask: 'you promised me a car, but it has not come ; I have been down to see about it five times, and I want to know if the car is there now.' Or : 'About that binder that was to have been there five days ago. My wheat is ready and is being destroyed by the lapse of time. You said the binder went astray, and I asked you to trace it up. Is it there yet ?' That is a report, and nothing but a report in connection with the legitimate and necessary business of the railway. And why should we not have a report to the people most interested by the most direct and most inexpensive means ? That is the way I view it, though I must admit I have not given this matter a great deal of consideration. What is it that, aside from terms and phrases, we should endeavour to do ? We should not try to drive the railway company to madness by imposing unfair conditions upon them——

An hon. MEMBER. No danger.

Mr. LENNOX. Probably not. We ought not to unjustly hamper their business. But the hon. member who has introduced this motion has done it in a reasonable way. Coming from this side of the House, we might assume that it would be done in a reasonable way. The hon. gentleman has not insisted that he knows everything about it. He has told the government he is willing that they should take the principle involved and modify it in such a way as the circumstances make necessary. But he has said what the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair) has advocated time and again—leave it to the discretion of the board. I quote from the hon. minister's language which he has so often used, for he has said over and over again, 'can not you depend upon the discretion of the board ?' I ask the minister now, can he depend upon the discretion of the board ? Will it be within the discretion of the board ? I have endeavoured to show that the refusal will create discrimination and build up and fortify an already huge monopoly. I have endeavoured to show that this is reasonable in the interest of the people. I am not arguing from the standpoint of the farmer only, all the people along the line are interested. I have argued on the basis of balancing the conveniences with the difficulties, without any reference to the charges of socialism. I have argued on the basis of what should be our great watchword, the greatest good to the greatest number.

The DEPUTY SPEAKER. Is the committee ready for the question ?

Mr. MACLEAN. We have given the government an opportunity to declare themselves, whether they intend to accept this amendment or not. As they have refused to say anything in the matter, I must call the attention of the Prime Minister and the public to a situation that may be created by this refusal to treat the public fairly. In the Daily 'Gleaner,' a paper published in Fredericton, N.B., I find this item in the issue of June 10 :

New Brunswick Telephone Company. Annual meeting yesterday. Officers elected. Dividend declared. Trunk line extension.

The annual meeting of the shareholders of the New Brunswick Telephone Company was held yesterday. The usual dividend of four per cent was declared for the year, and considerable routine business was transacted.

The old directors were re-elected as follows:—Hon. A. G. Blair, Ottawa ; C. F. Sise, Montreal ; President of the Bell Telephone Company, Montreal ; J. L. Black, Sackville ; Dr. A. A. Stockton, St. John ; W. T. Whitehead, M.P.P., and Senator Thompson, Fredericton.

At a subsequent meeting of the directors the following officers were elected : Hon. A. G. Blair, president ; J. L. Black, vice-president ; Hon. F. P. Thompson, managing director ; W. E. Smith, secretary and auditor.

During the past year the rates to subscribers were slightly increased, the company finding it impossible to conduct business at the old charge, owing to increased cost of maintenance.

Even with this increase the company's charges are much below those of any other company operating either in Canada or the United States.

Operations have been started on the extension of the trunk line system through Carleton, Victoria and Madawaska counties. This will be a copper metallic circuit, and the line will be completed and in operation on or about the 1st of January next. The company will then be in a position to give telephonic communication from all parts of the province to all points in Nova Scotia and the New England states, connecting at Portland and Boston with other telephone systems.

I call the attention of the Prime Minister to this fact, that the Minister of Railways in his government is a member of this great Bell Telephone Company, now dominating this country; and when I proposed an amendment to his Bill that the public shall be fairly treated, he rises and accuses me of being a socialist, a radical, as one who wants to disfigure his Bill. I want to read something more for the information of the Prime Minister, I am going to read from a paper called the Toronto 'World.' In a special despatch to that paper——

The PRIME MINISTER. Where from ?

Mr. MACLEAN. From St. John, N.B., dated June 12 :

St. John, N.B., June 12.—(Special)—A gentleman well informed on political and provincial matters, speaking to the 'World' to-day on telephone legislation, declared incidentally that Hon. A. G. Blair was the owner of a large quantity of highly remunerative shares in the New Brunswick Telephone Company (which is practically the Bell Telephone Company). When he was Premier of New Brunswick, there was given to himself and his brother-in-law, Hon. Mr. Snowball and Hon. Senator Thompson, his son-in-law, Mr. Randolph, and other relatives (under the name of New Brunswick Telephone Company), the exclusive telephone franchise for New Brunswick, so that the Bell Telephone Company had to buy them out on coming to this province.

Hon. Mr. Blair holds one-sixth of the stock, Senator Thompson one-third, said the 'World's' informant. 'The company's affairs are kept secret, but the facts became known to a few persons connected with the financial difficulties of Mr. Randolph a few years ago, in which a bank seized and sold his shares. One share of the original stock, is now represented by three shares, each of which is held at at least 270 per cent, making about 800 per cent, of present value, at a minimum estimate.

Mr. Blair is thought to derive the largest part of his large income from this stock (which is practically Bell stock).

Asked how he thought the telephone Bill now before the Dominion House would be supported, the 'World's' informant replied :

'Senator Thompson will be about the bitterest foe of telephone reform in the Senate, although Senator MacKay is president of the Bell Company, and Senator Kirchhoffer is largely interested. Mr. Blair will exert his opposition chiefly through Hon. Mr. Fitzpatrick, whose schemes he will in turn support, such as the Quebec Bridge Company, the St. Lawrence Power Company, &c.

Now, I did not want to bring this matter before the House, but it is before the House now, it is in the public press, and it is now on the 'Hansard.'

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Will you send the paper over to me?

Mr. MACLEAN. Yes. Under these circumstances, I say it is most unfortunate that it is the president of a company associated with the Bell Telephone monopoly who rises in this House and tells me, and the rest of us who are asking for some protection against the Bell Telephone Company, that we are urging something that is socialistic and doing something to disfigure a public Bill. We are doing nothing of the kind, we are doing something which we think to be in the public interest. I say it is contrary to British constitutional practice, it would not be allowed for one moment in England—for a minister to stand up in his place in the House and become the apologist of a company in which he is interested, a company from which he derives a certain portion of his income. I do not care if he did not have a dollar of income, if he merely held that stock and was interested in the company, it is against public policy that he should stand up in this House and be the apologist of that corporation. Now there has been a great deal said in this country about the conduct of our public men, and their relations to public questions, where their private interests become a question of public interest. In this matter I have based my statement altogether on the fact that the minister is the president of this company. I make no reference to other matters contained in this statement; but the mere fact of his being president of this company, and being associated with Mr. Sise, the head of the Bell Telephone Company, I say is against public policy, and it should not be allowed, and it ought to call for the minister's resignation. If the minister does not resign, the Prime Minister ought to ask him to resign. This is not an example to set before the people of this country, it is not an example to set before members of the legislature, it is not a good example to set before municipal councillors all over this country against whom charges are made that they are doing things in their own interest which are against the public interest. When they see the highest legislative body in this country, when they see cabinet ministers representing the people of Canada, when they see such things being done by a colleague of the Prime Minister, they will say that it justifies everything that has taken place in the legislatures, everything that has taken place in township and village councils that is wrong. I appeal to the Prime Minister if it is not true that in England such a thing would not be tolerated for a moment in the House of Commons. I want to tell the Prime Minister another thing. In these paragraphs I have read, the name of a Senator in the other branch of this parliament is mentioned, a great friend of the Liberal party, Senator McKay—I suppose I can use his name as it is mentioned in the document I have read. It is a peculiar thing that the very first Senator who was appointed by this government on coming into power was the gentleman who is the present vice-president of the Bell Telephone Company, and was at that time. The name of another Senator is mentioned who has also been appointed by this government. It is a peculiar thing that in some way there is an apparent political connection between the kind of protection accorded to the Bell Telephone Company by the government, by the House, and by this committee so far; it is a peculiar thing, I say, that this company, in its monopolistic tendencies, should be specially guarded in every way.

Now, I did not wish to say this to-day, but I am forced to say it in view of the way my amendment has been treated, in view of the way in which the Telephone Bill that I have introduced and is now before a committee of this House, is being treated. It is simply scandalous, and I will stand it no longer. I did not wish to take the stand I have taken to-day, but I am forced to take it, and I accept full responsibility for anything I have said or done. I can tell the Prime Minister that if he chooses to justify this conduct, I will be only too glad to meet him on any platform he likes to select; I especially invite him to come to West Ontario and to East York, where the people have had experience of this monopolistic treatment against the public interest, accorded to them by the Bell Telephone Company. I would like to meet the Postmaster General in his own county of North York, or any portion of Ontario. He is the Minister of Labour, the man who is going to give the farmers rural postal delivery. I am going to hold the Minister of Railways up to the British constitutional practice as observed in England, and which ought to be observed in this country. I say the Prime Minister ought to call for the resignation of his Minister of Railways in view of the simple fact I have brought to his attention to-day, that the Minister of Railways is interested in the New Brunswick Telephone Company as president, and that in opposing my amendment he has chosen to impute motives that he should not impute to any member who proposes something in the public interest. I leave it with the right hon. Prime Minister, I leave it with his colleagues, and I leave it with the people of Canada, to deal with it at the proper time.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). My hon. friend (Mr. Maclean) must pardon me, Mr. Chairman, if I cannot take him seriously upon this subject. My hon. friend, perhaps, has been advocating an idea which is deserving of consideration, and, for my part, I may tell him that I would have been gladly willing to have given it that consideration to which it is entitled upon its own merits.

Mr. MACLEAN. I waited long enough.

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend has not at all improved the inherent merit of his position by the speech which we have listened to and by the reckless charges he has thrown out. He is not fair. He must not abuse his advantages. My hon. friend invites me to go to East York, and he says that if I accept his invitation he will pulverize me. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to be pulverized. Why should I go to East York, where he would hold me up to the scorn of the electors, and where I would be pulverized by himself, morally, intellectually and in every other way? We can discuss this question here without the necessity of going to East York. We can discuss it just as well here as anywhere else. My hon. friend has said that it was a strange thing that Mr. Mackay was appointed to be a senator, and he commented upon the fact that he was a senator and president of the Bell Telephone Company. I do not know that it is a crime for anybody to be connected with the Bell Telephone Company or any other respectable company. Would my hon. friend say that it is a charge to be imputed to anybody that he is president of an enterprise that has done a great deal for the country, even though perhaps it has tried to take more from the public than my hon. friend thinks it ought to have taken? Does he believe that he can be taken seriously by hon. members on this side of the House, or by hon. members on the other side of the House, when advocating an idea which, as I said a moment ago, has some inherent merit in it, or does he think he is at all advancing his cause by making such silly charges as that? Does he believe that he is to be taken seriously when he says that the government ought not to have appointed a respectable citizen such as Mr. Mackay is because it happens that he is a member of the Bell Telephone Company? The Bell Telephone Company, my hon. friend will not deny, has been a good deal of service to the country.

Mr. MACLEAN. Hear, hear.

The PRIME MINISTER. Very well. My hon. friend says that it has taken too much toll from the public. That is a subject for consideration. But, at all events, I do not think the government made any mistake in calling Mr. Mackay to the Senate. If my hon. friend will take my word for it, I will tell him that I did not know that Mr. Mackay, when appointed a senator, was president of the Bell Telephone Company or that he was a member of it. That idea never entered into the consideration of the government in appointing him to the Senate. The same thing might be said in regard to Senator Thompson. It appears that Senator Thompson is a member of the telephone company, and my hon. friend says that my colleague the Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair) is also a member of the telephone company. That is the first intimation I have had of it, but I do not know that it is a crime for anybody to hold the stock of such a company as that. My hon. friend says that the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals ought to resign at once and that I should call upon him to resign, because he is connected with the telephone company. I must say that the views which I hold of the ethics of parliament do not agree with the views held by my hon. friend in regard to the ethics of parliament. My hon. friend says that he should resign because he has been the apologist of the company, which is before this House. That company is not before this House. My hon. friend the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals would be deserving of the censure of this House if, being the president of a company, he should be made the promoter of the interests of that company. But who has brought the Bell Telephone Company into this debate? It is not in this debate at all. This is a Bill of general interest, not for the profit or benefit of any company whatever, not for the profit or benefit of this company or of that company. It is a general Bill for the regulation of trade and commerce on railways. My hon. friend has introduced an amendment upon this subject, my hon. friend has asked parliament that what concerns the Bell Telephone Company should be grafted in this Bill, and because he has brought in that amendment declaring that that which concerns the Bell Telephone Company should be grafted in such a Bill as this, he says that forthwith the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals ought to resign. My hon. friend says that you will never find anything of the kind in England. He recalled the fact to me a moment ago that I claimed to be a Liberal of the British school. So I do claim to be a Liberal of the British school to-day, but I defy my hon. friend to bring anything forward to justify the position that he has taken.

Mr. MACLEAN. The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals would resign if he were in England.

The PRIME MINISTER. No such thing would take place in England. What takes place in England is this: If any member is connected with a company, he will not be allowed to promote the interests of that company on the floor of parliament, and if he does it, he is abusing the privilege of parliament; but, when there is legislation of a general character brought before parliament, no member is prevented from voting or exercising the privileges of his position because it so happens that he is a member of an incorporated company. My hon. friend will not find anything in the records of the British parliament to justify his contention. My hon. friend is altogether unwarranted in the assertion he made a moment ago that the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals is the main apologist of the Bell Telephone Company. I do not know that the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals has uttered a single word either as apologist or detractor of the Bell Telephone Company. I have not followed the discussion very closely, but I am sure I am within the judgment of the House when I say that the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals never uttered one word one way or the other. My hon. friend stated earlier in the debate that I was a Liberal. I do not know what he calls himself. I presume he is a Tory, but he told us that he was a Tory who acts as a Radical. I do not know whether he is a Radical Tory or a Tory Radical, but I rather believe that he is a Radical Tory, that he is one of those out-and-out Tories, whose instincts have always been to entrench upon the property of other people. That has been their habit in the old land, and in this land as well. But my hon. friend will allow me in this connection to say that I have looked with some suspicion on the legislation which he has introduced upon this subject. I accuse him formally, not of being a socialist, but of being a communist. I thought there was something in his Bill that smelt strongly of communism, because he has betrayed a tendency to commit depredations upon vested rights and the property of other people. My hon. friend has introduced an amendment which I find qualifies very much the Bill which he introduced. There is in the amendment a principle which is not in the Bill which he introduced. The amendment reads :

> The company shall, subject to the approval of the board, grant equal telephone entrance to its stations to all individuals or telephone companies asking therefor.

I call the attention of the committee to the words 'subject to the approval of the board.' This is a new feature which has dawned upon the mind of my hon. friend, and I must say it somewhat softens his communistic doctrines. Before that he wanted to commit a depredation upon the property of other parties outright without the qualification which he puts in now, and by which he says that this power shall be exercised only to the approval of the board. I see a great qualification in that, and if my hon. friend had proceeded differently, I would have been disposed to have taken over this amendment for future consideration.

Mr. MACLEAN. I gave the right hon. Prime Minister every opportunity to say that.

The PRIME MINISTER. But in view of the attitude of the hon. gentleman, and in view of the insulting language he has used towards hon. members of this House, there is nothing to do but to vote down his amendment.

Mr. HALE. Mr. Chairman, I do not rise for the purpose of taking any part in this debate, but I wish to correct a statement which has been made, and which has been read from a paper by the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean), to the effect that the way they discovered who the holders of the stock of this telephone company were was that Mr. Randolph had got into financial difficulties and that the stock was sold. I do not wish this statement to go broadcast through the country in that way, because it is a well known fact in our part of the country, whether it is here or not, that Mr. Randolph was not in financial difficulties, and therefore that the stock could not have been sold for that reason.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair). I expected that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Maclean) would, some time during the present session, read the statement which he has read to-day, because I saw that this story was being quite generally disseminated throughout the country. I have never been in the habit, in the course of my public career, of following up slanderous and defamatory statements as they appear in the newspaper press, because I have felt that I would have very little else to do if a certain class of newspaper men thought they would be likely to receive attention if they published statements that would have a scandalous and defamatory effect. Therefore, I have taken no notice of these things ; but the hon. gentleman, having read what he has read to-day, it is only fair that I should characterize it, as I can characterize it in the main, a tissue of wholly unfounded statements. It is true that I have been the holder of stock in the New Brunswick Telephone Company. If that is a crime, I have been guilty of that crime. It is true that I have been filling, since the organization of that company, a good many years ago and a good many years before I came to Ottawa, the position of president, not that I am receiving any salary from the company, for I have not received a dollar of salary from it. I was asked to take, in an honorary way, the position of president of the company, and when I came to Ottawa I saw no impropriety in my continuing in that position, without having had anything more to do with the management of the business than I had before I came here, or as much.

I have, therefore, to acknowledge that I am open to the accusation of having been connected with the company, and of being the president of that institution. It is also a fact that Mr. Sise, a gentleman known as

Colonel Sise, in Montreal, holds stock in that company. But when the hon. gentleman (Mr. Maclean) says that I am interested in and connected with the Bell Telephone Company, he states what he cannot have, and has not, the slightest authority for stating. It is absolutely and entirely incorrect. I cannot tell who are all the shareholders of the company. I did at one time know who they were, but I have not seen the share list for some time. But I have known that Colonel Sise is a shareholder, quite a considerable shareholder. He took stock in the company the same as others took stock in the company, so far as I know. But I hold no stock in the Bell Telephone Company, and if, because Colonel Sise is a shareholder in another company in which I have some stock; if that makes me a party interested financially or otherwise in the Bell Telephone Company, then I can only say that it is a very strange conclusion to draw from a very single and individually distinct fact. Therefore, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Maclean) has no warrant for saying that I have the slightest interest in the Bell Telephone Company any more than he has, perhaps not as much. I have not one dollar of stock in the Bell Telephone Company; I have never had and never expect to have. So far as their financial interests are concerned, or so far as their interests in any way are concerned, I am as indifferent to them as is the hon. gentleman opposite; quite as indifferent. The trouble with the hon. gentleman (Mr. Maclean) is that he cannot imagine any person can have an opinion upon any question which he raises, or upon any question of public moment, unless he be moved to that opinion through some private or personal interest of his own, or through some private or personal interest of his friends. That is the trouble with the hon. gentleman (Mr. Maclean). He cannot conceive it possible that any man, upon any public question can have an opinion which is not subordinate to some improper motive, or which is not instigated or suggested by some personal or individual interest.

Mr. CLANCY. Would the hon. minister permit me to ask him a question?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. CLANCY. Does the hon. gentleman think it conceivable that a minister of the Crown, having charge of a Bill; a government Bill that might trench upon the rights of a telephone company of which he was president; is it not conceivable that he might choose in favour of the company rather than the public interest?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What is that?

Mr. CLANCY. Is such a position not conceivable to the public, and a reasonable one?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. From what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Maclean) has stated, I do not think that any other telephone company in Canada could have any interest in opposing his motion except it would be the Bell Telephone Company, because the Bell Telephone Company is the company, according to his argument, upon which these monopolistic privileges have been conferred.

Mr. CLANCY. It would include all others would it not?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. How could it possibly include all others? The hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) cannot have followed the discussion with any attention, or else he would see that the argument is the other way. Now, if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Maclean) had been able to show that I was a stockholder, or that I was interested in a financial way in the Bell Telephone Company, he might have some ground for imputing to me the offence with which he has charged me: of being influenced in my view of this question because I was interested in the Bell Telephone Company. But I am not interested in the Bell Telephone Company to the extent of a five cent piece, and, therefore, whether the Bell Telephone Company do or do not continue to enjoy any advantages which they have derived from their contract, is a matter of complete indifference to me so far as that is concerned. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Maclean), in this statement, goes on to say that this company in New Brunswick—I will refer to that because I suppose I might as well meet the imputation now. He says:

> When he was Premier of New Brunswick the stock was given to himself and his brother-in-laws, the Hon. Mr. Snowball, and the Hon. Senator Thompson.

I had no stock given to me. I paid for the stock I got; I paid for it the same as other people; I paid for it out of my own means:

> And that they had an exclusive telegraph franchise from the New Brunswick government so that the Bell Telephone Company had to buy them out on coming to that province.

Let me show the utter fallacy of that statement. The Bell Telephone Company was in New Brunswick before the New Brunswick Telephone Company had any existence. Therefore, that statement falls to the ground. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Maclean) has been deceived in the representations that have been made to him, and he has caught them up without ascertaining or attempting to ascertain whether there was any foundation for them. But, nevertheless, he comes here and he makes a cold blooded accusation against me as being guilty of a breach of my duty such as would entitle him to demand that I should resign my place in the government of the country. He says that this company had an exclusive monopoly in New Brunswick. The company has not any exclusive monopoly at all in New Brunswick. Any other telephone company can be organized, and companies have been organized in New Brunswick. I will tell you what they have or what they had, lest it might be said that I withhold something. When the company got its charter, a great many years ago, in consideration of its building a long distance telephone, it was allowed the long distance privilege exclusively between certain towns for a term of years. They erected their lines according to the agreement between the government and the legislature and themselves but the exclusive privilege has long since expired, so that that company have no exclusive privilege, and when they had, it did not apply at all to the general telephone system in the province, because it was only a long distance privilege and did not apply to the cities and towns. He says further :

The company's affairs are kept secret, but the fact became known to a few persons connected with the financial difficulties of Mr. Randolph a few yars ago.

My hon. friend (Mr. Hale) has answered that. So far as Mr. Randolph is concerned, although he happened, while he lived, to be connected with me, and I am connected with the family ; every one in New Brunswick knows that Mr. Randolph had no financial troubles. Neither do I think that he or his family had any stock in the Bell Telephone Company. I am not aware that they had. All this jumbling together of these statements came from some source to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Maclean)—I almost suspect I know who it is. Some person who thought he was going to get some sort of a blow at me which would be injurious to me, has communicated with the hon. gentleman—that is, supposing it is a genuine despatch, and was not made up in the office of the newspaper in which it is published. However, I am willing to admit that it was a genuine despatch. So much for that. I will leave that just where it is. I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Maclean) ought, as a member of parliament ; I think at all events as a matter of fairness he ought to have, before he disseminates and before he takes the means which will disseminate all over this country accusatory statements of that kind which are calculated to affect a public man unfavourably wherever they are read ; he ought at least to have taken some little pains to verify the correctness of these statements. He told us that he read this very reluctantly and that he would rather not have read it. I did not see very much reluctance on his part. But whether that is so or not, he did not hesitate to publish it, and probably if he felt so very much adverse to disseminating these falsehoods, he would not have been so ready to make them public through the columns of his paper. I do not know whether it has a wide circulation or not, perhaps it has a limited circulation—but at all events he gave it all the circulation he could give it.

Coming now to the question before the committee. The hon. gentleman says that he waited to find out what was going to be done by the government. But the hon. gentleman heard on Saturday last what I had to say about it. I stated my view then, and I have not seen any reason to change that view from listening to the arguments that have been made. I felt that these arguments were not really addressed to the motion which is before the House. They were addressed upon the general proposition which perhaps might be put in such a form as would commend itself to parliament, but the motion in its present form is in such a state that it certainly cannot be accepted and made part of the law of the land. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Maclean) seems to be very much incensed at some bantering reference I made to his radicalism and social propensities, but I think the observation was fair enough in view of the attitude which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Maclean) has set up in this House upon so many occasions. The legislation he introduces is of such a character that I do not think any one would take the responsibility of fathering it who was a responsible individual. I stated on Saturday that I could not accept the motion introuduced by him, and i thought that was answer enough. I did not see that I was called upon to make any further reply. I stated the reasons why I could not accept it, and I think they are cogent reasons. He is not proposing legislation about some country districts ; he is not confining his legislation to out of the way places, but he is making his legislation general. I do not say that it would commend itself very much to my mind, even if it had been limited. He proposed :

That subject to the approval of the railway board a railway company shall grant equal telephone entries to its stations to all individuals or telephone companies asking therefor.

Now the only thing the board has to say is whether or not this law may be applied, whether or not the privilege, whenever applied for, shall be granted. They have nothing to do with the terms or conditions, as to what the telephone company ought to do or not to do in return, but what the board is asked to do is to approve of the proposition, and when they say yes, then the telephone goes in without any terms being provided.

Mr. CLARKE. Would not that be a matter within the jurisdiction of the commissioners under that resolution ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What ?

Mr. CLARKE. Do not these objections of the minister merely refer to matters of detail ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think so. Does the hon. gentleman ask us to frame an amendment for him that could be accepted ?

Mr. CLARKE. Under the proposed amendment the board, having the right to approve or disapprove, would insist on the terms upon which the additional telephone service would be put into the station.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The clause does not say so.

Mr. LANCASTER. If the board can say, you may or may not do this, does it not follow as a matter of course, that they can also say, you may do it on certain conditions ? Is not that a reasonable proposition ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They could if they were authorized by parliament to say on what conditions that should be done; but the amendment does not say so. It does not say, upon such terms and conditions as the board may deem right to impose.

Mr. CLARKE. Is it not in the discretion of the board to say whether permission shall be given or not ? That being the case, if the board thinks the terms and conditions are unreasonable, they can refuse to allow the telephones to be put in.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is no doubt they could refuse, and when they did refuse, that would be the end of it.

Mr. CLARKE. I think the very fact that the hon. member for East York proposes to give the commission discretion, is an evidence that he does not wish to deal harshly with the railway company. I think it is only fair to point that out.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is a matter of judgment. I think he has but one idea in his mind, that it should be imposed by law, subject to the regulation of the board, that any telephone company or any individual should have a right to put a telephone into a railway station and on the same terms. The board has not any discretion to vary the terms. There is a good deal more in this thing than most people imagine. No doubt there is on the part of a number of hon. gentlemen in this committee a feeling that it would be a great convenience in out of the way places if any telephone company doing business there were to be allowed the privilege of using the railway stations. But, after all said and done, these things can only be allowed under fair and reasonable conditions; and what have we to do with many of the things that have been suggested here as reasons for granting the privilege ? One gentleman says, here is a person living ten or twenty miles away, he ought to have the privilege of calling up the agent and finding out what the market reports are. Another gentleman says that a man living at a long distance from the station, instead of being compelled to go to the station, ought to have the privilege of calling up the station agent to find out whether some friends of his whom he expects, have arrived, or when they ought to arrive. Just imagine such a proceeding as compelling the putting up of a telephone in the railway office by anybody who may ask it. I have had some little experience of these telephones on the Intercolonial Railway, and I am bound to say that they are very much of an annoyance and a nuisance. People who know the advantage that is taken of these telephones, and the circumstances under which they are used, will be quite ready to admit that this imperious demand that the railway companies shall allow telephones to be put in their offices for the convenience of everybody, has not so much reason or fairness behind it as at first sight appears. We allowed telephones to be put into some of our offices on the Intercolonial Railway, not because they were of any convenience to us, but because it was claimed that they would be a convenience to the public. What was the result ? There is quite a village and a considerable settlement in the neighbourhood. The result was that the girls and boys, the men and women, were constantly calling up and repeating their inquiries as to when such and such a train was to come in, whether so and so had arrived, whether this, that, or the other thing had happened. After they got an answer, they would call up again, keeping the station agent in the office replying to questions which in nine cases out of ten were purely for curiosity. That is how they work in many country districts. The telephones are simply made a perfect nuisance. They are not used by any means largely for business purposes.

Mr. CLANCY. Does the hon. gentleman contend that because things like that occur, which occur with the best managed telephones throughout the country, we should discount the possibility of having legitimate business done over them ? The hon. gentleman has not urged any reason——

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have no objection to the hon. gentleman asking me a question, but he is making a speech.

Mr. CLANCY. I was going to ask the hon. gentleman this if he thinks that because he has offered simply the trifling reasons, the real and legitimate reasons ought not to be granted ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I say the real and legitimate reasons do not exist to the extent that hon. gentlemen think.

Mr. CLARKE. What answer has the hon. minister given to the statement of the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) respecting the condition of things that will be created in his district ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I did not understand the hon. gentleman to say that anything very serious has occurred in his district.

Mr. OLIVER. What I said was that there is a system of something over 300 phones, with three exchanges, with radial lines in three directions for about twenty miles each, and another line of about twenty miles under construction. The Bell Company have never been in that part of the country at all, but are now stringing a long distance phone from one end of the country to the other, and just as soon as that reaches Edmonton, that company will have exclusive rights to the Edmonton railway station, and the local system will be cut off if the company enforces its rights under this agreement. I can only say that such a thing would be an outrage, and I hope that we shall be protected against it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The Canadian Pacific Railway is not the only railway company that is going to be at Edmonton. It is the only one there at present.

Mr. CLARKE. The information could not be got from one railway station that could only be obtained from the other.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not know about that. It is very possible that any one who wanted to know something about the Canadian Pacific Railway could find it out at the other station. Why should not a railway company have a right to say what telephone it would prefer to use for its own purposes ? And why should it at the same time be compelled to admit other telephones, and to do it on the same terms ? They may be prepared to make fair and reasonable terms with the first telephone company that applies to them, and if another telephone company came along that had not any business connections and that they were not satisfied would serve them as well, why should they be obliged to admit it on exactly the same terms ?

Mr. CLARKE. For this very reason, that a great many people who are not patrons of the Bell Telephone Company desire to get information from the railway station ; and if a rural system, such as that referred to by the hon. member for East York and that referred to by the hon. member for Alberta, is established in these different places, they have a right, I think, to ask the government to afford them facilities at the railway stations. I am satisfied that the more the hon. minister considers this matter, the more he will realize that there is a great deal of foundation for the statement of the hon. member for East York that the public have the impression that they are being discriminated against because they are not subscribers to the Bell Telephone Company.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is no doubt that the Bell Telephone Company has the advantage, with its extensive lines and its far reaching connections, and it makes it difficult for any other system to exist alongside of it.

Mr. CLARKE. The telephone system is a monopoly, in its very nature, and the public are forced by the unfair exactions of that telephone company to establish other lines. These lines must be largely local, and a great deal of business done by these local lines would be done in connection with railway matters. I am sure that the hon. minister must see that if the agreement between the railway companies and the Bell Telephone Company is left undisturbed the monopoly which the Bell Telephone Company enjoys will be given a great deal longer life. The proposal is surely a reasonable one, that reasonable facilities should be given to these independent companies.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The case presented by the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver), is a case which does seem to be somewhat serious in the possibility of its results. But the question, after all, is very much larger than the question of the interest of the people in one locality. We must not shut our eyes to the fact that we cannot under any system of legislation—perhaps we ought not to if we could—advantageously nullify or impair the strength of any company such as the Bell Telephone Company. We hear a great deal about excessive and exorbitant rates ; I do not know that the rates are ; but I do not take a great deal of stock in these complaints. People are apt to think that these things should be done for nothing. But let them put their money into such a concern——

Mr. MACLEAN. That is exactly what they want to do.

Mr. MacLAREN (Perth). It is the service we want. So far as the rates are concerned, I for my part, do not object to them so much, if they will give us the service.

Mr. MACLEAN. Exorbitant rates and bad service go with monopoly.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have not heard very much complaint about the Bell service. I thought it was pretty good; it is a good service here.

Mr. MacLAREN (Perth). It may be pretty good here, but so far as the city of Toronto is concerned, it is a very bad service. Every one tells the same story.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I know they have a very up-to-date system here. You often find people coming along promoting companies and promising to do great things for the people. But the object, in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, is to be bought out by other companies or to make a little 'pull' out of the organization.

Mr. CLARKE. I am satisfied that if the hon. minister will consider the principle involved in the case, in view of the extensive powers given to the commission under the new Railway Act, he will agree that some latitude ought to be given in cases such as are mentioned by the hon. member for East York, to allow the commission to order that facilities be given to other exchanges than the Bell to put instruments into the railway stations. It is not in the public interest that the Bell Telephone Company should be permitted the exclusive privilege of placing instruments in the railway stations.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We do not give them any exclusive franchise. But I am looking at it from a railway point of view. While I am willing to keep the railways under strict control, I cannot shut my eyes to the fact that there is a disposition, and a growing disposition, throughout the country to regard the railway companies as having very slender rights, and to regard them as institutions to be jumped on. People are forgetting that, after all, though the railway companies have been granted these privileges, and even though their charter rights are very extensive, you do not find any of them in this country making a great deal of money.

Mr. CLARKE. You find some people in connection with them who appear to be pretty comfortable.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, but they are not the body of the shareholders. There are hundreds of shareholders outside of these people whose return is dependent upon the dividends which these companies pay. There may be some individuals who through some 'pull' get the special benefits from the railway companies. But the great body of shareholders, I think, are fairly entitled to consideration.

Mr. CLARKE. Then the hon. minister thinks it would impair the prospects of the shareholders of the company to have the proposal of the hon. member for East York carried out?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I cannot think it is fair play even to a railway company that you should say that any other company shall have the right, on demand, to put its telephone into the station and compel the clerks and agents of the railway company to serve those telephones.

Mr. CLARKE. I agree with a great deal that the hon. minister has said on that point. But I would, with all due respect to the hon. gentleman, submit to him what was said by the hon. member for East York when the matter was last discussed:

> I appeal to the minister to take my suggestion and incorporate in this Bill this clause, or a clause having a similar effect.

That was evidence that the hon. gentleman was not wedded to any particular form of words in which to frame his amendment, but rather wanted to present to the hon. minister a grievance which certainly exists in certain parts of the country, and to appeal to the minister, who has given this matter so much attention and from whom the public expects so much, to take the subject into consideration and frame an amendment which would vest in the commissioners the power which he thinks necessary—and which, I must say seems to me, to be plainly necessary—in cases of emergency, to allow the people to have additional telephonic communication with the railway stations. The hon. gentleman, of course, must have confidence in the proposition, which this House has affirmed on so many occasions, that the appointment of a commission will result in great good to the public. I think it is generally considered that, if a proper commission be appointed, the public will greatly benefit from its establishment and operations. And when the hon. member for East York proposes that the terms and conditions upon which additional telephonic communication may be allowed with the railway stations shall be left to the judgment of the commissioners, the minister may rest assured, as we are all assured, that not only the public interest, but the interests of the railways, will be served. Under the circumstances, I would most respectfully appeal to the hon. minister to give the matter consideration, and not to come to a decision to-day. Consideration of this Bill cannot be completed in less than two or three more sittings of the committee, and, before it is finished, he will be able to give the matter his attention. On every side there is a rising feeling throughout the country that the Bell Telephone Company ought not to be permitted, as they are permitted, to discriminate against the great body of people who are not their subscribers, by means of their arrangement with the railway companies. These railway companies enjoy great rights and privileges obtained from this parliament and from various provinces and municipalities. Many of these railways have been heavily bonused by the provinces and the municipalities. The people who pay these bonuses have some rights left, we hope. I think we can appeal to the hon. minister with confidence in this matter, to give the subject his serious consideration, and, if he does so, he will assuredly arrive at a compromise that will be satisfactory to the hon. member for East York, and will, at the same time, secure to the people the rights they are entitled to.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Clarke) has certainly made a very earnest appeal but he has not a great deal of mercy.

Mr. CLARKE. I have so much mercy that I would be glad to leave the framing of the amendment in the minister's own hands.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS—if he would impose upon me the consideration of questions coming up in this way. Certainly the amendment does not come forward in a form to make it obviously sound and complete. If the hon. gentleman thinks that I can, in the time when I am putting through this Bill, and with all the questions arising in connection with it, find time to consider and frame a proper amendment on new questions, I can hardly feel that he is in sympathy with my efforts or that he is taking a wholly reasonable view of what ought to be done.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. minister has a draftsman, has he not ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have a very able assistant. I do not know whether hon. gentlemen have applied their minds to this whole question or not; I doubt it. But I would feel called upon to apply my mind to it before I would take the responsibility of consenting, so far as I am concerned, to this going into the Bill. I wish to point out to my hon. friend (Mr. Clarke) two or three things that I was going on to say when he rose a moment ago. I want to discuss this thing fairly. You are proposing to impose upon the railway company the duty, if it allows one telephone company to put its telephone into the office, of allowing other telephones to be put in upon precisely the same terms.

Mr. CLARKE. No.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is the proposition.

Mr. CLARKE. Not unless the commissioners think it right.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is a question of yes or no. The proposition is that the railway company shall have no right to say upon what terms telephones shall be put into their stations unless they allow other telephones in on equally favourable terms. What would be the effect ? I know absolutely from my own knowledge that it is idle to say that a station agent can attend to two or three instruments as well as to one. I believe that is good railroad opinion. I know that some of my own officers hold that opinion. I have discussed the matter with the general manager of the Intercolonial Railway and the chief engineer; and they tell me that to attempt to pay attention and reply to and follow two or three telephones, would, in many instances, be fraught with danger. The station agent's business is to follow his ticker closely; he must not allow his attention to be diverted. He may answer the telephone once in a morning, but to multiply these calls would create a possible danger. That is a thing that must be considered. I think that the passing of a clause such as the hon. member (Mr. Maclean) has proposed would result in this—that the railway company would turn out every telephone, and we should have demands made upon us that they be compelled to admit them to their offices. They serve the great majority of the people, they are a direct convenience.

Mr. CLARKE. Will that cut out all the telephones ? Do you think the agent would not lose more time answering personal questions that will be asked in consequence ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. When it comes to a personal application, he would not have one question to forty he would have to answer otherwise. That would be the result if you were to force the companies to take them in, if you did not recognize ordinary business rules that govern in these transactions. If you try by some statutory enactment to overcome the disadvantages of a departure from ordinary principles, you are sure to land yourself in difficulty, and sure to fail. Supposing you got two or three instruments into an office, what time is the station agent going to have to attend to them all ?

Mr. CLARKE. That would be governed entirely by the regulations.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They have no power to do that, and you could not compel them to answer.

Mr. CLARKE. They are not bound to answer now.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, because it is a voluntary matter with them, it is a business matter, it is not something they have had forced upon them by outside pressure. I feel that while this may appear to be a very easy matter to dispose of, when you come to work it out, it is not so easy. I have no objection to saying that if I had the time at my disposal to think the matter over, I would see if I can make anything out of it. I may, before the Bill is finally disposed of, give it my attention. But if the hon. gentleman presses his amendment to-day I shall have to ask the committee to reject it.

Mr. CLARKE. I am satisfied from the spirit shown by the hon. gentleman that we may ask him to give this matter further consideration. I appeal to the minister to take my suggestion in regard to this Bill, and to frame a clause on the lines of my hon. friend's amendment. The hon. minister has met us very fairly and frankly, and we appreciate the enormous amount of labour he must have given in preparing and carrying this Bill through. I am sure he realizes as much as we do the immense importance this Bill will be to the public, and I think it would be a pity now, when the measure is being framed and the commission is being appointed, if the question of telephonic service in connection with the railway companies' stations was not given the fullest consideration. I am satisfied that he will allow the section to stand, and that he will ask my hon. friend to withdraw his amendment. In that case, suggestions will be made to the minister by the hon. member for East York and others that will enable him to overcome the difficulties which he sees, so that a reasonable measure of relief may be given to those who are desirous of using independent telephone companies. There are difficulties in the way of allowing an unlimited number of telephone companies in a railway office, and a plan might be suggested by which these difficulties could be minimized and a great advantage secured to the public. I ask the minister to let this section of the Bill stand for a few days.

Mr. SPROULE. I think after the suggestion of the minister the hon. member for East York might withdraw his amendment.

Mr. MACLEAN. No, let it stand.

Mr. SPROULE. I wish to say a word in regard to some observations made by the Prime Minister. He seemed to recognize that there was perhaps a good deal of merit in the contention, but owing to the way in which the amendment was presented to the House, he did not feel disposed to accept it. I hope, however, that, in his generous nature, and after thinking the matter over further, he will not allow the public interest to suffer because of the unfortunate way in which the amendment was presented.

The PRIME MINISTER. I told the Minister of Railways that I thought the amendment was worthy of consideration, but as it is drafted, I do not think it should be accepted by the committee. I think it should be now either withdrawn or voted down. But the Minister of Railways is quite willing to consider the idea.

Mr. CLARKE. Has the Prime Minister any objection to allowing the amendment to stand ?

The PRIME MINISTER. I think it had better be withdrawn or voted upon.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I may say that this is not an amendment to the section, it is proposed as a separate section, so that it can be allowed to stand.

Mr. MACLEAN. I cannot consent to withdraw my proposal. If the Prime Minister insists on a division now and he chooses to defeat it, he has a right to do so. As I have said, I was willing to assist the minister in every way, I invited him to take the suggestion, and if he had been a little conciliatory, things would not have come to the head that they have. I gave the Prime Minister every opportunity. If he thought the idea worthy of consideration, why did he not tell the House there was something in it ? But when the last moment arrived and the chairman was just about calling on the committee either to accept the amendment or vote it down, then I had to take measures to put the government in a penitential mood, because they are in a penitential mood now in consequence of the rather vigorous way which I had to adopt. I ask the minister and the leader of the House now, in view of all that has been said, to let my proposal stand until a later stage of the Bill. Perhaps it can be modified in some way to meet the objections of the Minister of Railways.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is clear it cannot stand, because it is not moved in amendment to any section under consideration, it is an independent amendment. What the hon. gentleman can do is to move it as a separate section before we get through with the Bill, and there would be no advantage taken of the fact that it is rejected as an amendment.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. An hon. member can withdraw a motion like this and reintroduce it at a future sitting of the committee; or, if the committee is favourable, he can introduce it between any other two sections.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am willing to consider it. I may tell the hon. member for East York (Mr. McLean) that I am willing to try and get an opportunity of thinking it out. I do not think there is much in it that is capable of being worked out, though I may turn out to be wrong.

Mr. MACLEAN. I will withdraw it on the understanding that I may introduce it again.

The PRIME MINISTER. This is a free parliament.

Mr. MACLEAN. But to bring it to a sense of freedom, you may sometimes have to use the sledge hammer.

The PRIME MINISTER. Withdraw.

Amendment withdrawn.

On section 235,

Every company shall, as soon as possible, and within forty-eight hours at the furthest, after the occurrence upon the railway belonging to such company, of any accident attended with serious personal injury to any person using the same, or whereby any bridge, culvert, viaduct, or tunnel on or of the railway has been broken or so damaged as to be impossible or unfit for immediate use, give notice thereof to the board; and every company which omits to give such notice shall forfeit to His Majesty the sum of two hundred dollars for every day during which the omission to give the same continues.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I propose to amend by inserting after the word 'which' the words 'wilfully or negligently.'

Mr. LANCASTER. I would ask the minister to abandon that amendment. It is on the same principle that we had up the other day, that is, putting the onus in the wrong place. Besides in this case it is not practicable. The minister will remember that the other day we had a similar question up, and after a while he conceded that it was correct to abandon the words. How is a company going to be wilful or negligent? How can you prove the wilful negligence of the company unless you fasten the Act upon some officer of the company? The minister will remember that a few sections back we discussed that question with regard to the way the onus was put, and the same thing applies here. 'And every company which wilfully and negligently omits to give such notice shall forfeit to His Majesty' and so on. How can you prove that they have omitted wilfully and negligently? If you are going to enforce the penalty you ought not to be obliged to prove what you will have great difficulty in proving that they have done it wilfully. If the Act is ordered to be done there is negligence if it is not done and it is almost impossible to convict a man of negligently refusing to do a thing if you have to prove that he was guilty of negligence.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I cannot agree with the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lancaster). I think it would be an extremely severe piece of legislation if, where there was no negligence, or wilfulness in the matter, we were to impose such a penalty as this. I must insist upon having these words put in.

Mr. LANCASTER. The word 'wilfully' is in the old Act, but the word 'negligently' is not, and the old Act has not been found to work well.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think this will strengthen the section very materially.

Mr. LANCASTER. The old Act required that you should prove a malicious omission. That was bad enough, but to say that they shall not be liable unless they do it wilfully or negligently would make it necessary for you to prove some kind of negligence to enable you to enforce the penalty. You could never secure a conviction.

Mr. LENNOX. The old section required that they should give notice within 48 hours. The section in the Bill as originally drawn provided that they should do it within 48 hours, but now, under the amendment, they have to do it immediately. There might be some meaning in having the word 'wilfully' inserted if they had 48 hours in which to give notice, but I do not see how it is possible to contend that the words 'wilfully' and 'negligently' properly come into the section as it is now proposed to be amended. If the company is bound immediately after the head officer of the company has received information of the occurrence to give notice to the board, it does not seem to me that the hon. minister has any ground for contending that there is any necessity for introducing such words as 'wilfully' or 'negligently' into the section. There is a specified time prescribed for their doing that and if that is thought to be too short give them a longer time, but when we prescribe the time it does not appear to be well that we should introduce words which would create such a vast uncertainty in regard to the matter. As a counsel of such large experience as the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, I need not call his attention particularly to the fact of the amount of litigation that these two words have occasioned. The uncertainty of construction and the great difficulty of determining specific cases from time to time that these two words have caused afford a sufficient reason for being very careful in introducing them except where they are absolutely necessary.

Section, as amended, agreed to.

On section 236,

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS moved:

That section 236 be amended by inserting after the word 'board' on the first line the words 'may by regulations declare the manner and form in which such information and notice shall be given and the class of such accident to which the last preceding section shall apply and may declare any such information so given to be privileged and the board.'

Mr. CLARKE. I would like to ask the hon. minister what this will really mean when the section becomes law. As the hon. minister is aware, I have drawn his attention once or twice to the question of the frequency of railway accidents which take place in this country and which are attended with loss of life, and I have suggested to the hon. minister the advisability of appointing an officer similar to the officers of the board of trade in England whose duty it shall be, in the case of an accident occurring, involving the loss of a human life, to proceed at once to make a thorough and complete investigation of the causes of the accident, to make a report, and if there is any negligence shown on the part of the officers or servants of the company they should forthwith be prosecuted. I think it absolutely necessary that some such provision shall be made in the law, and I would like to ask the hon. minister if this section 236 as amended will provide the necessary machinery. I would suggest that it should not be optional with the board, in case of fatal accident, whether an official shall be sent to inquire into the causes of the accident. The hon. minister has been good enough to order an investigation into two of the railway accidents which have occurred in this country during the past six or eight months, and I am sure I can speak with confidence when I say that the reports which have been presented by the commissioners have afforded the strongest possible testimony that is required as to the necessity of having some such officer as I have suggested appointed forthwith. I would like to ask the hon. minister if he is going to provide that there shall be such an officer and that he shall act on every occasion when an accident attended with loss of life occurs ? It ought not to within the purview, or within the right, of the commissioners to say when and where an officer shall be appointed.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is the intention. I think there should be an investigation into every accident attended with loss of life.

Mr. CLARKE. I understand from the amendment that the board may send an officer. I think it should be mandatory, that it should not be optional with the board, and that provision should be made in this Bill that in every case where loss of life results from a railway accident an official investigation should be held into the cause of the accident and a report made. Provision should also be made for the punishment of those who are derelict in their duty. The hon. minister knows from the reports he has received from the commissioners that they give the best possible reason why action should be taken in this matter.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I agree with my hon. friend (Mr. Clarke) in that. Where an accident occurs attended with loss of life there should be an investigation. That is the intention here.

Mr. CLARKE. If the section as amended makes provision for an immediate investigation and report into the cause of every railway accident involving a loss of life, that is all that I can ask for.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is what the section has been framed to ensure. I agree with the hon. gentleman that there ought to be in every case.

On section 238,

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I move to amend the section by striking out the words 'early in July in each year' and inserting 'in each year before the plants have sufficiently matured to seed.'

Mr. MACLEAN. This section mentions thistles and other noxious weeds. The two great pests in the railway districts in Ontario are sweet clover and mustard, and they are travelling along the railways at a rapid rate. I would move that the words 'mustard and sweet clover' be added after the word 'mustard.'

Mr. LENNOX. I do not know anything about the sweet clover, but I know that the wild mustard is getting to be a serious pest in Ontario.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There are different noxious weeds in different places, and I do not think that you can cover them all.

Mr. LENNOX. Is this sweet clover a weed ?

Mr. MACLEAN. It is a very injurious weed. On the Canadian Pacific Railway, east of Toronto, there are miles and miles of it, and it is a perfect pest. I believe it is mentioned in the Ontario Act as a noxious weed. The special pests in our portion of the country are thistles, mustard, and wild clover, and they ought be named in this section and destroyed by the railway companies.

Mr. CLARKE. It is undoubtedly a fact that this sweet clover is getting to be an unmitigated nuisance, and it seems to propagate with great rapidity.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Have you any doubt that it is a noxious weed ? If it is a noxious weed it is covered by the section.

Mr. CLARKE. A person is sometimes said to be on easy street when he is in clover, but I do not know whether this clover would be noxious or not.

Mr. MACLEAN. The Minister of Agriculture can tell us about that.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It is a very dangerous weed.

Mr. MACLEAN. And the Minister of Agriculture will bear me out in saying that it travels faster along the railway track than anywhere else, for what reason I cannot say.

Mr. CLARKE. It must have a pass.

Mr. MACLEAN. I would like to have it named in the clause because if it is named the roadmaster will tell his sectionmen to cut it down.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We might strike out the word 'thistles' and let the section read: 'All noxious weeds.'

Mr. LENNOX. I am pleased that the minister has made an alteration by putting in the words 'before the plants are sufficiently matured, to seed.' I think that is a decided improvement, but if you began to name the noxious weeds I am afraid you will make your law weaker instead of strengthening it. If you say all noxious weeds you will include them all.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). In the seed Bill of the Minister of Agriculture which is supposed to include all noxious weeds he does not mention the sweet clover, and if a question arose as to whether it was a noxious weed or not, that might be taken as an authority. This weed is sweeping widespread over the western part of Ontario and it certainly is a great nuisance.

Mr. LANCASTER. Sweet clover may not be classed as a noxious weed, and therefore it should be mentioned in the clause.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You could strike out the word 'thistle' and make it read 'all noxious weeds.'

Mr. HENDERSON. I would not approve of that because the thistle is not commonly called a weed, and if you do not name it I am afraid it would not come under the operation of the clause. The thistle has different characteristics from a weed, and there was no doubt a good reason for inserting it in the clause before. I would be in favour of retaining the word 'thistle' and also including sweet clover and wild mustard.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I would not set my opinion against that of the hon. member (Mr. Henderson) as to whether the thistle is a weed, but I think it is generally regarded as being injurious to land.

Mr. MACLEAN. Sweet clover is a very obnoxious weed and while I believe it is not included in the Bill of the Minister of Agriculture, yet it is included I think in the Ontario Act.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). I think it would be very offensive to Scotchmen and their descendants if you were to call the national emblem of their great country a weed. I may say that in our Peoples' Garden, at Halifax, of which we are very proud, as being perhaps the best for its size in the Dominion of Canada, it is cultivated and kept as an ornament; and I feel very much hurt myself that you would place that emblem of that great and glorious country in the class of weeds.

Mr. ROBINSON (West Elgin). Some thistles are comparatively harmless, such as the Scotch thistle, the Sow thistle, and the Russian thistle. The Canada thistle is the most harmful.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The Sow thistle and the Russian thistle are just about as bad as the Canada thistle.

Mr. HEYD. In the Minister of Agriculture's Bill regulating the sale of seeds, the Canada thistle is specially mentioned.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think we had better make the clause read: 'Every company shall cause thistles and all noxious weeds,' &c.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. LENNOX. I propose to move the following as subsection 3, of this clause:

Every company shall also, by a sufficient number of its employees to ensure the safe carrying out of the same, from time to time and as often as occasion therefor arises, and at the season of the year appearing to be the most safe and suitable for carrying out the work, burn or otherwise destroy or dispose of, all dry grass, weeds, decayed and decaying matter of every kind, and all waste material, refuse and rubbish, upon their right of way and lands, so as to prevent as far as possible fire accidentally originating upon and spreading from such right of way or lands, to the prejudice of the owners and occupiers of adjoining lands; and for every day during which the company neglects to comply with the provisions of this subsection, it shall incur a penalty of two dollars, to be recovered with costs in any court of competent jurisdiction, by any interested person suing therefor.

I may say that I am not especially wedded to the particular wording of this clause; but, from my observation and from what the farmers have told me, I think it is very much needed.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We are not at present dealing with the fire clauses. If there is any question of cutting out the long dry grass beside the track, there will be discussion of that question on a motion which is to be moved by one of the hon. gentlemen from the west. Perhaps that will be the more appropriate occasion.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

TORONTO AND HAMILTON RAILWAY COMPANY.

On the Order being called:

Resuming adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Campbell, that Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair for the House to go into Committee of the Whole on Bill (No. 147) to incorporate the Toronto and Hamilton Railway Company.

Mr. SPEAKER. Stand.

Mr. E. F. CLARKE (West Toronto). I would like to know if there is to be any arrangement under which we shall receive notice when this Bill is to go on ? I have an amendment to propose. I understand the parties are trying to get together and agree upon some amendments ?

Mr. SPEAKER. I understood from what the promoter of the Bill said that the Bill would probably come up on Monday.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Sir William Mulock). I believe there is a different arrangement. Representatives of the parties interested have been in conference with the member for West York (Mr. Campbell). And I understand that the Bill is not to come up before next Wednesday, and the hon. member for West York will not even then bring it up if the parties are not ready. So, I think my hon. friend (Mr. Clarke) may rely upon it not being ready before next Wednesday, and not even then unless the city of Toronto is satisfied.

Mr. CLARKE. That will be quite satisfactory, provided we get notice in time to give notice of amendments before the Bill is considered.

Order allowed to stand.

CENTURY LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 175) respecting the Century Life Insurance Company.—Mr. Morrison.

On section 3,

Mr. MORRISON. I find I am not able to go on with this Bill to-night. I, therefore move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to, and progress reported.

CANADIAN TRANSPORTATION AND STORAGE COMPANY.

House again went into committee on Bill (No. 176) to incorporate the Canadian Transportation and Storage Company.—Mr. German.

On section 2,

Mr. MACLEAN. Are there no changes in this section ? The Minister of Justice held this Bill up the other night explaining that some changes were to be made.

Mr. SPROULE. This Bill gives the provisional directors the right to act as though they had been elected directors. I understood the hon. Minister of Justice wanted to make some changes.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick). I must confess that this is not the sort of legislation that I would personally promote or approve of. This Bill was reported by the Committee on Banking and Commerce and we know that they have the advantage of the opinion of an expert in such matters, Mr. Fitzgerald, of the Finance Department. It seems that the Bill was very carefully examined and reported by the committee, that report being based upon the opinion of Mr. Fitzgerald. I do not want to put my opinion against the opinion of the experts, although I am clear in my own mind that such legislation ought not to be approved of.

Mr. SPROULE. We have so often refused this power, that it seems scarcely right that we should allow it to one company, having refused it to so many others.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I am informed that that is exactly the reverse of the case, that similar legislation is going through the House almost every day that such Bills have been allowed to pass for years.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I agree with the hon. Minister of Justice (Hon. Mr. Fitzpatrick) with regard to this. The object of creating provisional directors is to have some persons to organize the company. But this provides that they may do more.

Mr. SPROULE. The section provides that these directors 'shall have all the powers which are conferred upon directors of the company elected by the shareholders.'

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is not necessary to grant such powers in order to facilitate the organization of the company.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think that in view of the remarks of the hon. Minister of Justice and of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, perhaps the Bill had better be held in committee for further inquires on the point referred to. I do not remember this particular point being brought before the Committee on Banking and Commerce. I think it will be found that this is a copy of a clause in other Bills. If further consideration of the measure is postponed now I will see to it that this point is looked into.

Mr. SPROULE. Section 5 of the Bill may possibly help it out, for it provides :—

So soon as twenty per cent of the amount of the capital stock has been subscribed, and twenty per cent on such subscribed stock paid into one of the chartered banks in Canada, the provisional directors, or a majority of them, shall call a general meeting of the shareholders to be held at the head office of the company, for the purpose of electing directors of the company, and of transacting any other business which may be done at a shareholders' meeting.

That would seem to minimize the authority of the directors.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. But I would call attention to the fact that section 3 provides :—

The capital stock of the company shall be two million dollars, divided into shares of one hundred dollars each, and may be called up by the directors from time to time as they deem necessary.

So, you see, it leaves very large powers in the hands of the provisional directors. However, this is a matter that has been considered in committee, and I do not want to be constantly suggesting changes in these Bills. This was considered in the Banking and Commerce Committee, and, I understand, under the advice of an expert.

Mr. MACLEAN. The Minister of Justice is in an advisory position with regard to this House, and we are entitled to the benefit of his advice. And when he tenders it he is bound to stand to it and see it through. I am willing to take the advice of the Minister of Finance and leave the matter over to be looked into. If a clause such as is here proposed is wrong, even though it has been passed in other Bills, the Minister of Justice knows that it is an impolitic clause to have, and I hope the members of the government will have it modified in the right direction.

Mr. FRASER. Does the hon. Minister of Justice think that section 3 refers to provisional directors ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would point out that the provisional directors have all the powers of directors.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. That is the point.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think that perhaps this goes further than the committee intended. So far as I am concerned, I do not recollect any Bill similar to this passing the House.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I would like to point out that section 17 provides that sections 18 and 39 of the Companies' Clauses Act shall not apply to the company. Section 18 is the one that provides for the ten per cent being called up. So, if you look the whole Bill over and put the clauses together, there are many things to be carefully considered.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It would be better to let it remain in the committee for the present. I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to, and progress reported.

MONTREAL—LONGUEUIL BRIDGE COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 156) to incorporate the Montreal-Longueuil Bridge Company.—Mr. Geoffrion.

On section 8,

Mr. MACLEAN. When that Bill was befor the committee, I urged that the city of Montreal should have some voice in the regulation of the tolls. It is the entrance to the metropolis of Canada. The Bill provides for a roadway for vehicles and individuals, and for all kinds of passenger traffic as well as railway traffic. That being the case, I contend that the city of Montreal ought to have some voice in fixing the tolls that are to be imposed upon the public.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

THE ASSINIBOINE RIVER WATER POWER.

House in committee on Bill (No. 192) to enable the city of Winnipeg to utilize the Assiniboine river water power.—Mr. Puttee.

On section 4,

The city or its assignees or appointees as aforesaid may excavate, construct, operate, keep in repair and enlarge a canal (with locks if necessary) to connect the Assiniboine river with Lake Manitoba.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. When this Bill was discussed in the Private Bills Committee, I drew attention to one or two clauses of the Bill, and it was by mutual agreement with the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Puttee) that the Bill was allowed to pass the committee, with the understanding that we would discuss it in the House. These works that are to be undertaken by the city of Winnipeg may, if due precaution is not taken, interfere with navigation. The Board of Trade of Winnipeg has appointed a committee to examine this Bill, and I understand the attention of the government has been called to the probability that these works may interfere with navigation of the river, and have asked that neither in the construction of bridges nor in the construction of these works, shall the navigation of the Assiniboine river be interfered with. I hold in my hand a telegram signed by C. N. Bell, secretary of the Board of Trade of Winnipeg, in which he says :

Board committee on navigation of the Assiniboine river consider Bill No. 16 of advantage to navigation if lock is provided for.

They therefore insist that in all cases where these works are allowed to be done, locks should be provided in order that the navigation of the river may not be interfered with. The powers asked for by the city of Winnipeg extend to a very long distance from the city. They ask for power to construct a canal between the Assiniboine and Lake Manitoba, which is some sixty-five or sixty-six miles from the city of Winnipeg. I do not object to giving power to the city of Winnipeg to establish water connection between the Assiniboine and Lake Manitoba, but I would insist that the words between the brackets here shall be so changed as to compel the city to build locks on that canal in order to prevent the overflow of the lake into the Assiniboine river, and over the whole country between Lake Manitoba and the city of Winnipeg. Section 4 provides :

> The city, or its assignees or appointees, as aforesaid, may excavate, construct, operate, keep in repair and enlarge a canal (with locks, if necessary)——

I want to leave in the words 'with locks' and strike out the words 'if necessary.'

> —to connect the Assiniboine river with Lake Manitoba.

I believe that the city should be compelled to provide locks.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I have explained to the committee several times that no amendment can be made to a private Bill in Committee of the Whole without first giving a full day's notice of the intention to make such an amendment. That of course, refers to an important amendment. The correction of a clerical error or an unimportant amendment could be made, but I think it would be well for all hon. members of the House to remember that particular point. A full day's notice of an important amendment must be given before such an amendment can be made in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. I understood that rule and that is the reason why I explained that I allowed the Bill to pass before the committee on the understanding with the promoter that we would discuss it in the House, but since the rules have to be carried out, I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to, and progress reported.

COLUMBIA RIVER IMPROVEMENT COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 150) to incorporate the Columbia River Improvement Company.—Mr. Galliher.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick). Mr. Chairman, I would like to say to the promoter of this Bill that certain representations have been made to the government on behalf of the government of British Columbia in respect to the provisions of this Bill, and we would like to have the matter remain over for the purpose of considering a letter received today by the right hon. Prime Minister from the Prime Minister of British Columbia. I beg to move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to, and progress reported.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 197) respecting the Rocky Mountain Railway Company.—Mr. Costigan.

Bill (No. 46) respecting the Kingston and Pembroke Railway Company.—Mr. Harty.

Bill (No. 161) to confer on the Commissioner of Patents certain powers for the relief of the Woolf Valve Gear Company.—Mr. Belcourt.

RAILWAY ACT, 1903.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 21) to amend and consolidate the laws respecting railways.—The Minister of Railways and Canals.

On section 238,

Mr. LENNOX. Mr. Chairman, when six o'clock was reached, I had moved that a subsection to be known as subsection 3 should be added to section 238 of the Bill. The reason why I have brought this up without mentioning the matter to the hon. minister before was that until I had a copy of the amendments the hon. minister was introducing, I did not think it would be advisable to draft anything on this line. Subsection 2 points out that if a company fail to comply with the provisions of section 238 they shall 'incur a penalty of $2 for every day during which such company neglects to do anything which it is so required to do.' In drafting subsection 3, as proposed, I have endeavoured to adopt the same principle as laid down in subsection 2, but I have not thought it advisable to include in the subsection I am moving a provision as to a magistrate or justice of the peace who, according to subsection 2 :

> May cause all things to be done which the said company is so required to do, and for that purpose may enter by himself, and his assistants or workmen, upon such lands, and may recover the expenses and charges incurred in so doing, and the said penalty with costs in any court of competent jurisdiction.

I have thought that the burning of the dry grass and other accumulations should not be entrusted to anybody but the railway company and their officers. In proposing this subsection, I do so, from my knowledge not only of railways with which I am familiar but also of cases that I have been connected with myself, and cases which I have observed in the courts resulting from the damage caused by fire. The hon. member for Welland (Mr. German) has introduced a Bill dealing with the question of locomotive engines throwing sparks, and he also intimated the other night that he would probably introduce an amendment to some section of the Bill dealing with the question of locomotive engines by which I believe the onus would be thrown upon the railway to prove that everything that could be done to guard against fire had been done. In connection with the question of fire originating from locomotive engines I think one of the great sources of danger will be eliminated if something on this line is adopted requiring railway companies, as they do already in many instances, to my knowledge, to clean up their lines of railway by the burning of grass and of such material as is useless. When there is a claim for damage by the party interested the question arises as to whether the fire was caused by any defect in the appliances of the railway company, or whether it originated upon the railway property, or perhaps the property of an adjoining owner.——

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Amendments in regard to this matter have been suggested by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Scott) the member for St. Johns and Iberville (Mr. Demers) and by my hon. friend (Mr. Lennox). If it be agreeable to the committee I would like to name a day, say Thursday next, when I would invite the gentlemen interested in this subject to be present to discuss it. In the meantime if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lennox) permits me, I will study his motion meanwhile and perhaps a good deal of time could be saved.

Mr. LENNOX. I shall be very happy indeed to adopt the suggestion of the minister. I would direct his attention, however, to the manner in which the penalty is to be recovered. The provision is that it should be recovered by suit by any person interested in the matter. There is only a penalty of $2 a day, and while that in one sense might apply to the whole line of railway, yet I assume that the intention is that each party would be entitled to recover in respect to the section in which he is interested. I will not be present next Thursday as I have to attend to some law business, and if it would suit the minister I would like to have it deferred until another day.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will not press it on Thursday if the hon. gentleman is not present, but I think we will have to discuss the Bill that day.

On section 240,

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is a section in the old Act, section 288, which on first consideration I thought might be left out, but having considered it since, I think I will ask the committee to re-enact that section as it is in the existing Act and we will call it section 241 of this Act.

On section 242,

Mr. MACLEAN. All these by-laws of the company are made subject to the approval of the Governor in Council, except such as relate to tolls. I would suggest that the time-tables of the company, with regard to the arrival and departure of trains, be made subject to the approval of the board, as is the case in England, instead of the Governor in Council. There it is impossible for a railway company arbitrarily to change the time of the arrival and departure of trains, and I think the public should be in a position to appeal to the board of commissioners in a matter of this kind. Sometimes a railway company makes a radical change in its time table without consulting the public or giving the public an opportunity of being heard.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There are a good many other matters besides the arrival and departure of trains, and it might be well that the Governor in Council should determine whether or not these by-laws should be finally approved. Under section 245 the board must report upon them to the Governor in Council. The Governor in Council cannot act without such report, and you are practically reaching the same end as if you distinctly provided that they should be first submitted to the board.

Mr. MACLEAN. It is a round-about way. The practice in Great Britain is for the public to go straight to the board of trade and be heard. There are many parts of this country through which the railways run which at times do not get a sufficient railway service; many of the trains run through and do not stop. If there were some kind of appeal straight to the commissioners, it would save the Council a lot of trouble, and be of substantial advantage to the public. In England the railways cannot change their time-tables radically without the municipalities or other parties interested being heard. I merely throw out the suggestion.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The arranging of the time-tables is a very much more serious matter in England, where they carry millions where we only carry thousands.

Mr. LENNOX. I wish to call the minister's attention to another matter. There was a Bill introduced the other day by the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) which might be affected by this provision. The Bill provided that railway companies shall not exempt themselves from liability to their employees on account of accidents by reason of the rules which they may frame. Whether these rules are exclusively rules of the railway company as such, or rules of the insurance branch of the railway company, or partly both, I am not sure.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is no legal connection between the insurance company and the railway company.

Mr. LENNOX. I know they are quite distinct. But the company make certain rules as a railway company, and then there are certain rules of the insurance company. Of course, I should not be right in saying that the railway was an insurance company too. The insurance company is a distinct corporation of the employees of the railway company, and it is contributed to by the railway company.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think that as a rule they are voluntary associations.

Mr. LENNOX. The railway company got an Act through parliament establishing this as an insurance association. I am not sure whether this section conflicts or not. I do not see the hon. member for South Wellington here, but I am interested in his Bill, although not promoting it, and if the hon. minister says that in case of necessity we may come back to this section, that is all I require.

On section 246,

A printed copy of so much of any by-law, rule or regulation, as affects any person, other than the shareholders, or the officers, servants or employees of the company, shall be openly affixed, and kept affixed, to a conspicuous part of every station belonging to the company, so as to give public notice thereof to the persons interested therein or affected thereby ; and in the province of Quebec, such notice shall be published both in the English and French languages.

There are several sections in the province of Ontario where this provision with regard to the French language is seemingly as necessary as in the province of Quebec. I see that in several stations not far from Ottawa, Smith's Falls, for instance, the rules are printed in both languages. It is not a matter in which I am very much concerned, but the point may be worth considering.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It would be difficult to provide that.

Mr. LENNOX. I suppose the employees can read both languages.

On section 250,

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I move to amend that by striking out the word 'or' between the word 'president' and the word 'secretary,' and to insert after the word 'secretary,' 'or other executive officer.'

Mr. LENNOX. What is the meaning of 'executive officer' in that case ? That is pretty broad.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The executive officers are known by different names. In the Canadian Pacific Railway there is the chairman of the board, on the Grand Trunk, the general manager. In another company it may be the managing director. These are the executive heads.

Mr. LENNOX.

Mr. LANCASTER. Might I suggest that it should read 'or other officers having control of the seal of the company.' I suppose a by-law, rule or regulation would not be good without the seal of the company. It would be well to have some limit to the officers certifying in these cases, for with a word capable of so wide an interpretation as 'executive officer,' it might be certified by an officer not at all in high executive position. But if he were an officer in charge of the seal of the company, we should probably be right in assuming that he was an executive officer.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. But he must have custody of the seal, or he could not seal it. I do not want to limit it to the president and the secretary.

On section 251,

1. The company or the directors of the company, by by-law, or any such officer or officers of the company as are thereunto authorized by by-law of the company or directors, may from time to time prepare and issue tariffs of the tolls to be charged, as hereinafter provided, for all traffic carried by the company upon the railway, or in vessels, and may specify the persons to whom, the place where, and the manner in which, such tolls shall be paid.

2. All such by-laws shall be submitted to and approved by the board.

3. The board may approve such by-laws in whole or in part, or may change, alter or vary any of the provisions therein.

4. No tolls shall be charged by the company until a by-law authorizing the preparation and issue of tariffs of such tolls has been approved by the board, nor until the provisions of this Act have been complied with ; nor shall the company charge, levy or collect any money for any services as a common carrier, except subject to the provisions of this Act.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I move to amend this section by striking out from subsection 4 the words 'nor until the provisions of this Act have been complied with.' It seems necessary to make this change, because, on consideration hon. members will see that these words are very far-reaching. It would be unfair to say that because the company had not cleared up the right of way according to the requirements of the Act or because they had not repaired some small bridge on a branch line—questions having nothing to do with this question of tolls—they shall not be allowed to charge.

Mr. MACLEAN. Is this the same as the section of the old Act ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

Mr. LENNOX. I am not prepared to say that the hon. minister is not right in proposing to strike out these words. There is a good deal of force in his suggestion. The reference in this section is to sections 223 and 231 of the old Act. It is not easy to trace them, because there is a good deal of change in the arrangement.

Section 223 begins in this way :

Subject to the provisions and restrictions of this Act in the special Act contained.

Now that is not in any part of this section. Section 251 of this Bill begins :

The company or the directors of the company, by by-law, or any such officer or officers of the company as are thereunto authorized by by-law of the company or directors, may from time to time——

It is not made subject to the provisions of this Act we are now passing, or subject to the provisions of the special Act. I submit that both of these ought to be in. I am not sure but that the provisions of this Act may be controlled by what appears down at the end of the section, but so far as the special Act is concerned, I think it ought to be in. Then there is another matter that is not in this section, which I think ought to be referred to in a foot-note, that is section 227, the provision as to the inability of the company to collect tolls. The corresponding provision, I think, is found in section 237, of the old Act, although it is not referred to :

No toll shall be levied or taken until the by-law fixing such tolls has been approved of by the Governor in Council, or until after two weekly publications in the 'Canada Gazette' of such by-law and Order in Council approving thereof, nor shall any company levy or collect any money for services as a common carrier except subject to the provisions of this Act.

I want the minister to tell us whether he intends to leave out the provision as to the publication in the 'Canada Gazette,' or whether it is controlled by some other section.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman will find that very ample provision has been made for publication. He is now dealing with a portion of the Bill which I regard as one of its cardinal features, and which is based upon a totally different principle from the existing law. What he would have me put in has been left out in accordance with the scheme on which this Bill has been designed. It would be very inappropriate, and would only serve to confuse most men, and lead to misapprehension. If the hon. gentleman will compare this Bill with the old Act, he will see that they are absolutely dissimilar. So far as this class of cases is concerned, there are twenty-five or thirty new sections. The scheme of the present Bill is not, as it is in the old law, that the railway company shall fix and regulate the tolls subject to the Railway Committee of the Privy Council. In this Bill all the railway company is authorized to do is to prepare and issue a tariff. The words 'fixing and regulating tolls' are not to be found in any of the powers vested in the company, but they are to be found in the powers which are conferred upon the board, subject, of course, to the approval of the Governor in Council.

Mr. LENNOX. I think the minister misapprehends what I was aiming at. I was merely asking the minister to explain to us if it was now necessary that the publication should be had as before. I raised a question as to the effect of the special Act on the question of tolls. I think probably that should be made more clear in this Bill. I am not sure that it might not be controlled already by some of these sections. Now suppose that we pass here a special Act in which the western members are interested. They are greatly exercised over the question of tolls, and in granting charters they often raise the question of what the tolls shall be. There have been special provisions as to tolls, and when the Grand Trunk Pacific Act is completed and a guarantee is entered into by the government, then I apprehend there will be a special provision as to tolls incorporated in the Act. So it may happen that there will be a case where a special Act will govern and control the tolls. Well, if the special Act touches that question of tolls in any existing or future charter, then it would be in unfortunate conflict with this section, because it is left absolutely in the power of the board to deal with the question of tolls.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We are proposing here, so far as language will do it, that all the powers necessary in order to govern the rates shall be possessed by this board. I would not like to introduce anything that would cast any doubt or suspicion at all on the ample character of the powers of the board in that respect.

Mr. LENNOX. The board can revise the tolls either up or down. Now if a railway company had a special Act in which these rates are fixed by charter and these rates were lower than the board proposed to determine, then the special Act would govern. I think I have proposed a proper precaution, and having called the attention of the minister to it, I am willing to leave the point.

Mr. FOWLER. There should be a notice given to the general public of the intention to issue a new tariff of tolls.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The public may come before the board afterwards.

Mr. FOWLER. After it is crystallized into a tariff it is more difficult to get the board to change it than it would be if the public had an opportunity of assisting the board in the formation of it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The public may appear before the board, and if they make out a case the board may make any changes that are necessary.

Mr. FOWLER. Notice should be given that the tariff is going to be published, so that both parties would be heard—the parties interested in having the freight rates as low as possible and the railway companies, for and against—as to the fairness of the tariff proposed. It seems to me that that would be prudent. In that way persons interested would be heard, and would be able to assist the board in making up what would be a fair rate.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The publication in the 'Gazette' is publication of the official decision at which the board has arrived. The publication throughout the country of notice of the tariff that is proposed to be submitted would impose a most onerous obligation upon the railway company. It would be a tremendous business having people coming from all parts of Canada to be heard before the board, as well as the railway companies or their representatives, and discussing the question of rates. You must assume that the board will be advised by competent people as to what is a fair and reasonable tariff. It may be, after they have come to a conclusion, that in respect to some portions of the tariff there will be complaints. Well, the number of people that would have any complaints to make would, ordinarily speaking, be very few. They would make their complaints before the board, and the board would cause them to be investigated. The board would have their tariff officer make an inquiry, perhaps go to the locality from which the complaint comes, and get all the information to enable the board to say whether there should be any change made in the tariff or not. I would not like to insert a provision in the Bill that notice should be published.

Mr. FOWLER. When the tariff is required to be published in the 'Canada Gazette,' why not publish notice of application for the sanction of the tariff that is proposed also in the 'Canada Gazette'? It would not be necessary for every person who is aggrieved or who has a fault to find in connection with the proposed tariff to come to Ottawa, or wherever the board sits, to make his complaint known. We know very well that this is done by committees and by the representatives of the parties complaining, and they could do it as easily on a proposed tariff as on a tariff that had been promulgated by the board. It seems to me that it would be a much more satisfactory way of doing it, and if, after a certain required publication, there were no complaints, the tariff would go into operation as an absolute tariff. This would be done in just the same way as you make up the voters' lists. You publish your preliminary list, which is notice. It is only published in three or four places in each district, but this is notice to the public, complaints are heard, changes are made and the final list is made up and published. So, in this case. Notice of the tariff is published in the official 'Gazette,' and if there are no complaints the tariff goes, while if there are complaints, those who complain can appear before the board and have the tariff revised.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I propose to have control through this board of the rates, but I do not propose to burden unreasonably or unfairly the railway companies of the country. We want to secure that control with the least possible amount of friction.

Mr. FOWLER. What difference would there possibly be in allowing these complaints to be heard before the tariff was finally completed and making them after it was absolutely completed? You say that you allow the public to go before the board if they have any grievances, and that the board has power to make changes. Why not allow the people to go before the board before the tariff is finally completed, and have their complaints heard? It would not impose a greater burden on the railways to have that hearing before the final revision rather than to have the people heard afterwards. Would it not, as a matter of fact, be less of a burden, because then there is a certain limit of time during which applications for revision might be made? All complaints would have to be filed before the board before that time expired.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I cannot see that there is any advantage in adopting the hon. gentleman's suggestion.

On section 252,

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I move to insert in subsection 4 of section 252 the following:

No company shall, except in accordance with the provisions of this Act directly or indirectly pool its freights or tolls with any other railway or common carrier, nor divide its earnings nor any portion thereof with any other railway company or common carrier; nor enter into any contract, arrangement, agreement or combination to affect or which may affect any such result.

Mr. SPROULE. If you leave subsection 2 as it is, I think it is discriminating against the small shipper in the same line.

Mr. LENNOX. The question has occurred to me as to whether there is any conflict between subsection 2 and subsection 3. Subsection 2 provides that the tolls for longer distances may be proportionately less than the tolls for shorter distances if such tolls are under substantially similar circumstances charged equally to all parties; and subsection 3 provides that no tolls shall be charged which unjustly discriminate between different localities. Is there any conflict between these two sections in the opinion of the minister ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My view is that there is no conflict between them. The third subclause would not have reference to the idea that for the shorter distance you might charge a less toll proportionately. You cannot on a line 100 miles long impose a toll on freight carried fifty miles of that distance, greater than you charge for hauling it the whole distance.

Mr. BARKER. It means that you cannot charge for a part more than you charge for the whole.

Mr. LENNOX. Subsection 2 seems only to amount to this : That if on a certain part of the line they are carrying freight for say 100 miles, upon another portion of the line they shall charge substantially the same rates both being in the same direction. Take two branches converging towards one point and branch A is 100 miles distant from a common point B, the same, the circumstances being similar, they shall charge the same rate.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If the conditions are the same and the element of competition is absent.

Mr. SPROULE. It takes into consideration the quantity as well. If one man ships two carloads of grain and if another ships twenty carloads the man who ships the twenty gets the advantage. It has always been a bone of contention that the large shipper has a substantial advantage over the smaller shipper. I can understand making a reduction for quantities.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is no doubt that this is a very controversial question. The business of carrying freight on railroads has taken certain forms and we must need be on our guard lest we disturb the business conditions to a degree that would be injurious. Since the law relating to railways has existed we have had that principle recognized by legislation, and while I can see that some argument can be made against the principle yet when we come to work it out we do not know to what it ultimately might lead. There does seem to be good reason for giving the shipper of a whole train load a lower rate than if he only shipped half a carload.

Mr. SPROULE. I can understand that if you ship a whole train load of cattle you get a rebate, but no matter how many cars you ship if it is less than a train load you get no rebate.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The difficulty is in arbitrarily saying that you shall not charge any less proportion whether you are carrying a very large quantity or a proportionate quantity less. The special car rates are the rates which are likely to cause most trouble.

Mr. SPROULE. You substantially recognize the right of the large shipper to an advantage over the small one. This Bill says that the tolls for larger quantities may be proportionately less than the tolls for smaller quantities.

Mr. BARKER. It does not say that they shall be, but that they may be, and the board will consider all this.

Mr. SPROULE. When it says may, it practically means shall. That is what we are told by the lawyers.

Mr. GALLIHER. After all, is that not one of the conditions of trade which we cannot very well govern here ? To my mind, the question for the small shipper is not so much whether the large shipper gets a better rate than he does, but whether he gets a fair rate himself. I claim that it would not be fair to tie any company down to give to a man who gives them hundreds of carloads to ship in a year no better rate than they would give to a man who probably gives them one carload. That does not seem a fair proposition, and the root of the matter seems to me to be, does the small shipper get a fair rate for the goods he ships ?

Mr. SPROULE. That is plainly discrimination.

Mr. GALLIHER. I do not think it is.

Mr. SPROULE. If you give a better rate to the large shipper than to the small shipper, you discriminate in favour of the large shipper as against the small. I will give you an instance of how it works. A man may be shipping peas. The man who ships them in large quantities gets a lower rate, and is enabled to pay one or two cents more per bushel than another man, and in that way he can destroy the other's trade, no matter what he does.

An hon. MEMBER. That is all the better for the farmer.

Mr. SPROULE. No, it is not, because he drives the small purchaser out of the market, and then he pays what he likes. There should be no discrimination between the two shippers unless it is in train load lots. It seems to me that the man who fills one car is entitled to the same rate as the man who fills six or seven, unless he makes a full train load, in which case I think he should be allowed some rebate. This was one of the means adopted by the Standard Oil Company to crush out all the smaller dealers until that company had the control of the market, and then they put up the price to suit themselves. It is to avoid such things that we should have some control over this matter.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. In the endeavour to exercise what we call a rigid control over the rates, you must be careful that you are not going to disturb unnecessarily or seriously the business conditions of the country. I know not in what form you could better secure the proper measure of control over the adjusting of rates as between the large shipper and the small shipper than you do by saying to the board that they may for so and so charge proportionately less. Who is to judge what may be the proper allowance or proportion of reduction ? It is the board, and their decision is absolute, subject only to an appeal to the Governor in Council. You must apply your mind to the existing facts and circumstances, taking everything into account, and you cannot frame your legislation safely, it seems to me, in any other way than you have it here. I realize as well as the hon. gentleman does what is the nature of the public grievances. There are many complaints, but many of them are very unreasonable. You could not possibly give them the relief they ask unless you were absolutely to destroy the business of the country done by the railway companies. Recognizing that these things are subject to a great deal of complaint, I have been thinking it out as well as I could, with the assistance of persons not at all interested in railways, and I have been unable to see how we could safely say that there should be no less rate charged upon a large quantity than upon a small quantity. I think you would find in practice that that would not work out even to the advantage of the small shipper. It is wholly impossible for you to legislate in such a way as will deprive the man of large means and resources of the advantage which he possesses over the man of small means and small resources.

Mr. SPROULE. It is because he has it in so many other ways that we desire to prevent him having it here. Parliament has laid down the principle, and the board is expected to apply that principle. I know that this complaint is made again and again. The larger purchaser gets special rates over the small purchaser, and in addition to that he gets such an advantage in the matter of freight rates that the other man is forced out of the market. I have heard this complaint over and over again, although it has been repeatedly affirmed by the railway companies that there was no discrimination. This section practically admits the principle, and it would be an instruction to the board to act upon that principle.

Mr. BARKER. What the hon. member says is quite correct; this subject has been discussed again and again. It has been discussed for a quarter of a century, and if we sat here for a week and heard arguments on one side and on the other, we would not be an inch further advanced towards an agreement. The only result would be that if we passed a law absolutely preventing what this clause permits the board to allow, we would inevitably destroy our through business, and there would not be a ship coming to a Canadian port for traffic.

Mr. SPROULE. Might I remind the hon. gentleman that I said distinctly, that I did not ask you to apply it to distance ?

Mr. BARKER. It is not merely a question of distance. Every week the large railway companies have got to fill ships. Rightly or wrongly the ship must be filled or she would have no ballast, and would have to lie in harbour empty; and the next time you wanted that ship, she would not come to your port. The great shipping business cannot be carried on as the ordinary retail business of the country is carried on. You might as well say that a wholesale merchant should be compelled to charge as much for a hundred tons of goods as the small merchant charges for a small quantity. This subject has been discussed over and over again, and parties will never agree upon it. The only way, it seems to me, is to have a board such as is provided here; let both parties go before that board and argue the case out; get the rules established, and they will be competent to deal with this question, having the opinion of experts on one side and on the other.

Mr. SPROULE. Is not the combined intelligence of parliament equal to the combined intelligence of a board ?

Mr. BARKER. Certainly not.

Mr. SPROULE. The wisdom of parliament which makes the law which controls the board, ought certainly to be equal to that of the board that is so controlled. The fact that we cannot agree for some time is no reason why we should not try to reach a conclusion. Otherwise, we might as well refuse to consider about three-quarters of the Bills that come before us. In time, and after consultation, we reach conclusions though at first it seems impossible to do so. I do not see any harm in bringing this matter to the attention of the committee. I speak after years of experience in this House, when I say that I have heard it most positively stated in the Railway Committee and on this floor that legally the company could not do that. This has been stated by men who might fairly be regarded as railway experts, eminent lawyers and old parliamentarians. I am only asking to have the principle embodied in the law which I have been told actually rules—that there shall be no discrimination.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No unjust discrimination.

Mr. SPROULE. What the minister may consider unjust I may consider just. But discrimination results always in freezing out the small shipper, buyer or dealer. I have heard it so often argued on behalf of the railways that this is not done, that it is a matter of surprise to me to hear it declared not only that it can be done, but that you must change the system in order to avoid it.

Mr. FOWLER. Cases differ so much that it is impossible for the House to lay down a general rule, and so it leaves it for the board to arrange. The board are seized of the circumstances of this case, and can decide each case by itself. If you have a fair board, I do not think there will be any difficulty in preventing unjust discrimination. We expect discrimination in favour of the large operator against the small one. That is necessary in trade. The only thing is to prevent unjust discrimination, and that can be prevented by the board considering each individual case.

Mr. SPROULE. That reasoning does not appeal to me. Suppose there are two men shipping wood from the station of the town in which I live. One has a rate of $2 per cord to Toronto while the other must pay $2.25. The second man simply cannot remain in the trade and compete with the other. The result is to freeze out the small shipper, give the control to one man and then he pays what he likes.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The commission would deal with a matter of that kind.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). It is just like the large fish eating up the small ones—it is the law of the survival of the fittest operating here as in everything else.

Mr. LENNOX. I have listened with great attention to the remarks on both sides on this subject. The hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker) is recognized as an expert in these matters, and I am not going to discuss the points that have been raised. But I would like the minister to give me a little information. We are supposed to be improving the law as compared with the old law. Will the hon. minister please point out what those improvements with regard to this matter are? We are substituting a board for the Railway Committee, and, of course, I recognize that that is supposed to be an improvement. But, apart from that, how do we overcome to any extent, the evil that has been complained of in the past? I have no doubt there is a great deal to be said on both sides as to a proper remedy, and as to whether discrimination should be allowed in any instance. I assume that the hon. minister, having given his attention to this matter, has succeeded to a certain extent, at all events, in dealing with the difficulties experienced in the past and that those difficulties will not be so great as they have been.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. One radical change is made in a matter that lies at the bottom of the trouble that has been experienced in the past. I am not going to say that we have reached a perfect remedy for existing difficulties, because we know that perfection is not to be looked for, and we know that there is no more complicated problem in the world than the problem of railway tariffs and rates. The existing law is based upon the theory that the railway companies shall fix and regulate tolls subject to approval. All that the Governor in Council can do is to say that the tolls proposed shall not receive approval, and that is an extremely drastic course for any government or for any tribunal to adopt. They have not the power to reduce a toll from say $1.10 per ton to 75 cents a ton between certain points. They cannot make such changes as that. But under this law the board will have the absolute right to fix the toll in all cases, with one exception, which we shall come to later on, and which I shall endeavour to explain.

Mr. FOWLER. Would it not help it out to add to subsection 2, 'provided that there shall not in any case, be any unjust discrimination'?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is the very basis of these clauses—that there shall not be any unjust or unreasonable discrimination. I refer to section 253. There could hardly be anything broader than that. The words are 'undue or unreasonable preference or advantage' and undue preference is what is complained of. The language is that used in the English statutes.

Mr. FOWLER. But when the section forbids undue discrimination in any respect whatever, does that not apply only to things mentioned there?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is not singled out in that clause. The language here is that which is used in the English statute and has been declared by the courts to forbid unjust discrimination, undue preference or advantage in any shape or form, in regard to rates and tolls as well as anything else.

Mr. FOWLER. Then why keep these words 'in any respect whatsoever,' if the same words above apply to everything? If these words in line thirty are intended to cover every kind of preference or undue discrimination, then why do you repeat them afterwards? In the first place, you start out to particularize, and then you add a general statement which is supposed to cover everything that is not mentioned in the particular statement, that is, that the words 'in any respect whatsoever' do not apply to the interchange of traffic, in receiving, forwarding and delivering traffic, but they apply to every conceivable thing in connection with traffic. Then if they do, I say it is wholly unnecessary to repeat them. But my contention is that these words 'in any respect whatsoever' only apply to affording proper legal facilities for receiving, forwarding and delivering traffic.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not understand what the hon. gentleman is driving at.

Sush tolls may be either for the whole or for any particular portions of the railway; but all such tolls shall always, under substantially similar circumstances and conditions, be charged equally to all persons, and at the same rate, whether by weight, mileage or otherwise, in respect of all traffic of the same description carried in or upon a like kind of cars, passing over the same portion of the line of railway; and no reduction or advance in any such tolls shall be made in favour of or against any particular person.

There is the very first section under the head of discrimination. Now does that or does it not say that there shall not be discrimination?

Mr. FOWLER. The very thing we are trying to get at is permission of the board to allow discrimination at all. The whole gist of this paragraph is to allow the board to discriminate. The point I want to make is this: You want to provide, not that there shall be no discrimination—because it may be right sometimes that there should be discrimination in the interests of trade—but that there shall be no unjust discrimination, which is an entirely different thing. So if you add those words and provide that there shall be no unjust discrimination, you completely cover the ground. The words in section 253 do not supply that sufficiency.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We say that as to this one limited particular, the tolls may be proportionately less for larger than for smaller quantities if the board thinks it would be reasonable and proper to make such allowance.

Mr. FOWLER. But they have power to make unjust discrimination under this Act.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They may commit errors, their judgment may be fallible.

Section agreed to.

On section 254, subsection 3,

3. In any case in which the toll charged by the company for carriage, partly by rail and partly by water, is expressed in a single sum, the board, for the purpose of determining whether a toll charged is discriminatory or contrary in any way to the provisions of this Act, may require the company to declare forthwith to the board, or may determine, what portion of such single sum is charged in respect of the carriage by rail. 61 V., c. 22, s. 2 Am.

Mr. FOWLER. Does it mean that the board may determine without hearing the company?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They would hear the company, I presume, on a question of this kind before they decided it, but if the company did not want to make a declaration the board might determine.

Mr. FOWLER. Why do you not say 'and may determine' instead of 'or may determine?'

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think that would make any difference.

Mr. FOWLER. By inserting the word 'and' you would require the company to make a declaration and if the company did not make a declaration the board would determine.

Mr. RUSSELL. Is this clause the same as it is in the statute?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, and it was very well understood at the time it was enacted.

Mr. RUSSELL. It is very unsatisfactory, because you ask the company to declare, and it may make a very preposterous declaration. It is the board that should determine.

Mr. FOWLER. Yes; you say 'and may determine,' even though they get a declaration of the company.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Suppose the company do not make a declaration?

Mr. FOWLER. If you have the word 'or' in, it seems to me they could determine without a declaration from the company, which might not be fair.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It might be a proper thing to do.

Mr. FOWLER. Yes, but it would prevent any unfairness to the company if the board requires them to make a declaration. By using the word 'and,' the final adjustment of the matter is in the hands of the board, irrespective of what the company may declare.

Mr. LENNOX. I want the minister to explain to the committee what the meaning of 'in the interest of the public' is in subsection 2.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think it will be conceded at once that it is a very proper consideration for the board as to whether or not the public interests are to be affected favourably or unfavourably by the reduction of the tolls. You project a railway into a district where perhaps some particular class of industry cannot, in its initial stages, pay the same proportionately high rates as are imposed on the same kind of goods on the same railway in other directions. With a little assistance from the railway in the way of a diminution of the tolls, the establishment might be brought up to a paying standard and able to bear the ordinary toll. It seems to me a very proper thing for the board, not to consider the interests of the railway company alone, although it may very well do that, but to consider the public interest and the advantages to the community, and the board might very well be invested with jurisdiction to allow exceptional treatment. That is the idea we had in our minds in using that language.

Mr. LENNOX. I see it perfectly clearly now, and I quite concur in the view of the minister.

Mr. BARKER. There is another aspect in which that is a reasonable clause. It sometimes happens that there is a large amount of perishable freight on a part of the line, and unless that could be all moved at once and the cars given to that district in preference to another, that freight would be destroyed.

On section 255,

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is another instance in which there is a material distinction between the existing law and the present Bill. The existing law provides that the freight classification shall be settled by the railway companies. The Governor in Council now possesses only the negative power to say that they will not approve. Under this Bill it is in the power of the board of railway commissioners to take articles out of one classification and to put them in another. Practical railroad operations show that after all the power to control the freight classification is largely a power which affects the rates, and that power is fully conferred upon the board of railway commissioners by this Bill. I move to add as subsection 4 :

Until the board otherwise orders or directs, the freight classification last approved by the Governor in Council before the passing of this Act shall continue in force ; and any freight classification in use in the United States may, subject to such order or direction, be used by the company with respect to traffic to or from the United States.

The first portion of this clause will not provoke any comment, but as to the United States, it happens in actual practice that the United States freight classification controls all traffic which is brought from that country into this, or taken from this country into that ; both ways. If it came out of the United States and went through Canada and into the United States, it would be all subject to the control of the United States rates. There are four classes of freight classification in the United States, and the one which obtains in the west is different from the one which obtains in the east, but it would be impossible for our railways to carry any freight unless it meets with the requirements of the United States freight classification. They simply dominate, and there is nothing we can do to prevent that control continuing.

Mr. FOWLER. Does that apply to goods coming from an American point and going to a point within Canada ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It applies in both cases.

Mr. FOWLER. This amendment does not mean that when this present classification will be changed it shall be changed with respect to the United States as well ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Unless the board orders. It is hoped that possibly some modification may be effected at a later date in respect to the action of the United States railroads.

Mr. FOWLER. And you provide that the board may meet that occasion ?

Mr. LENNOX. In reference to the wording of the section, I am not quite sure that it bears out what the minister intends, if you should put a narrow construction on it. Narrowly construed, ' to and from the United States ' would mean the boundary line.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think so. I think that refers to all the traffic, even traffic which comes through Canada and enters into the United States again, because it is from or to. A point at the boundary line must be either in one country or in the other.

On section 258,

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS moved that this section be amended by adding thereto, at the end of the section, the following words :—

And in estimating the tolls to be charged in passengers' tariffs, any fraction of five cents less than two and one-half cents, shall be waived by the company, and above two and one-half cents shall be considered as five cents by the company.

Amendment agreed to, and section, as amended, agreed to.

On section 261, subsection 3,

3. Until the company files its standard freight tariff or tariffs as the case may be, with the board, and such tariff or tariffs is, or are, so approved and published, and also published in the manner in section 274 in such case provided, no toll shall be charged by the company.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This would require, under section 274, that the tariff shall be posted in every station. And, if the railway should happen to fail to have the tariff posted in any one of possibly hundreds of offices, they could not recover tolls. They may intend to have it posted, and actually have it posted so far as they know, but the omission to post it in any one office would prevent them from recovering their tolls. I move that this be amended by striking out the words 'and also published in the manner in section 274 in such case provides.'

Mr. FOWLER. Could it not be provided that they should not be allowed to recover tolls from the particular station in which the tariff was not posted? Section 2 provides that every standard freight tariff, on approval by the board shall be published by the company for two consecutive weeks in the 'Canada Gazette.' Here is where, I think, the provision should be made for a preliminary tariff.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We threshed that out, and I cannot agree with my hon. friend's (Mr. Fowler's) view.

Mr. LENNOX. I suppose there is no use in urging this point further upon the minister. As to the point of publication in the station to which the hon. minister has just referred, I think there is a good deal in what he has said. But I think it is important that there should be a rule, and an almost invariable rule, that the tariff shall be posted in this way. So, while the provisions should be less drastic, there should be some provision on the subject.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Under section 274 they are required to post the tariff, and a penalty is provided in case they fail to do so.

Mr. LENNOX. I think that will cover the case. The point is to secure the public.

On section 266,

Mr. LENNOX. Does the hon. minister propose to sit very late to-night?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think I will not ask the committee to sit beyond twelve o'clock to-night.

Mr. LENNOX. I might mention to the hon. minister what is known to most hon. members that there is a circular from the secretary of the Dominion Commercial Travellers Association. I do not know whether the hon. minister has taken that into consideration or not. He speaks of an amendment to section 275.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What is that about?

Mr. LENNOX. I will show it to the hon. minister. The writer says there are several things that people do not generally know, and I do not want to read it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Would the hon. gentleman kindly let me see it?

Mr. LENNOX. I will send it over to the hon. minister.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, I have arranged about that. I have an amendment covering it.

On section 269,

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The foreign traffic business is a business which we are bound to encourage, and the amendment suggested in this section has that end in view. Suppose a shipper in Chicago wishes to send a train load of grain to Montreal; the rate in respect to that has got to be made on the minute. The shipper is perhaps applying to a dozen different railways to know what rate they will give and he may go to a Canadian company and say: Can you make me as good a rate as the others have offered, and the Canadian company has to make its rate right away. It would be impossible to insist that he should send his tariff ahead, for it would practically stop all that business. They are obliged to file that tariff with the board under penalties, but if there is a train going through you ought not to be able to stop it. You must recognize that there may be a relaxation of the strict rule that is maintained with regard to the ordinary traffic.

Mr. BARKER. That is to say, that the contract would be good but the company might be subject to a penalty.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. LENNOX. I agree with every word the minister has said, but what strikes me as preposterous, is that such language should ever have crept into the original section.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We are always learning.

Mr. LENNOX. This is such an excellent improvement that I think it must have emanated from this side of the House, although I suppose the minister will not give us credit for it.

On section 271,

Mr. SPROULE. I think we have done a very good day's work and we ought to finish now.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Very well; I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. LENNOX. During the afternoon it was mentioned in reference to the amendment I moved that it would be referred to on Thursday. Since that time the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) has informed me that the cattle-guard question might possibly be taken up on Thursday. I have been paying a good deal of attention to that matter, and I want to be here when it comes up. I would willingly forego the chance of discussing my amendment rather than the chance of discussing the cattle-guard question, and I hope the minister will leave that question over to a later day.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will endeavour to meet the hon. gentleman's views.

Progress reported.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. SPROULE. What business will be taken up on Monday and in what order ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. On Monday, private Bills have precedence. If the Grand Trunk Pacific Bill comes on, private Bills may occupy the day; but if government Orders are reached, we will take up the Bill respecting the Canadian Northern Railway, and perhaps some other Bills on the list. If there be further time, the Minister of Railways and Canals will resume with the Railway Commission Bill.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12 a.m. Saturday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, June 29, 1903.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 214) for the relief of Florence D. Graves.—Mr. Scott.

PRINTING OF PARLIAMENT.

Mr. PARMELEE moved that the fourth report of the Joint Committee of both Houses on the Printing of Parliament be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick) moved for leave to introduce a Bill (No. 215) to amend the Criminal Code, 1892. He said : This Bill contains amendments which are exceedingly numerous and of some importance, but they are amendments to details of different sections of the Criminal Code ; there is no general principle at stake. I would, therefore, ask the permission of the House to introduce the Bill, and when we reach the second reading, or are in committee, I will undertake to explain the amendments.

Mr. CLARKE. Does this Bill have any relation to a Bill proposed in the other House containing an amendment to the Criminal Code, introduced by Senator Lougheed ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I do not recollect the terms of his Bill, but I have not drawn my amendments with any reference whatever to the Bill referred to.

Mr. HENDERSON. Does this Bill contain an amendment dealing with cigarettes?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. It has a clause that deals with the question of cigarettes.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

COUNTY COURT JUDGES.

Mr. LENNOX. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to direct the attention of the government to a despatch which appears in the 'Mail and Empire' of June 27 :

> Ottawa, June 26.—Mr. C. W. Coulter, K.C., of Cayuga, has been appointed county judge of Haldimand county in succession to the late Judge MacMillan. Mr. Coulter formerly represented Haldimand in the House of Commons.

We have discussed several times in the House the expediency of appointing judges in the county in which they are practising. I would ask the Minister of Justice if there is any intention of departing from this sound principle ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I propose to consider this matter in connection with certain alterations that are to be introduced to the Code in respect to county court judges. I will then express an opinion on the question.

PROVINCIAL AUTONOMY FOR THE NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to move, with the consent of the right hon. gentleman, that the papers brought down relating to the granting of provincial autonomy in the North-west Territories be printed forthwith, and that rule 94 be suspended for that purpose.

Motion agreed to.

CENTURY LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 175) respecting the Century Life Insurance Company.—Mr. Morrison.

On section 1,

Mr. SCOTT moved that the following subsection be added to section 1 :

2. Provided that the liability of any person who at the time of the passing of this Act may be indebted to the company by subscription for shares in the company or otherwise, shall not be affected by this Act ; and any such liability shall be held to be the same as if this Act had not been passed.

Mr. MORRISON. Would the hon. gentleman (Mr. Scott) please explain ?

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I may say that there are a certain number of people who have subscribed for the shares of this Century Insurance Company who complain against the extension of time now being granted. They contend that they have subscribed under certain conditions and that if this extension is granted the conditions will be changed. I understand that they wish not to complete the purchase of their shares and it has been pointed out to them by persons who are competent to speak that if an extension is not granted they will have no further trouble about the matter, but if the extension is granted they will be pursued in the courts and be compelled to complete the purchase of their shares. I brought this subject to the attention of the Banking and Commerce Committee when the Bill was being considered there, and it was contended then that even if the extension were not granted the liability of these people would remain the same and that action might be taken against them in the courts. The amendment which I introduce is to leave their liability what it is at the present time, whatever it might be if the extension were not granted, and it seems to me to be an amendment against which no objection should be taken.

Mr. MORRISON. As the hon. gentleman has said quite correctly, substantially the same amendment was considered by the committee. The sense of the committee was that it was not expedient or necessary to consider it seriously and the Bill was reported in the shape in which it is now. At that time it was considered that this was a question that was entirely a legal one, and one with which this House or this committee should not deal, that if there is any abuse the courts can be resorted to as the remedy of these shareholders is not taken away by the provisions of this Bill. I think the committee should take the same view as the Committee on Banking and Commerce did in this respect. I think my hon. friend has not shown that if this amendment is not put in anybody will be prejudiced or injured in any way. I rather think this is a matter for the courts altogether, that it is a legal question which it is not necessary for us to take into consideration. I would ask my hon. friend to withdraw his amendment. I do not see the force of it. Its adoption would only be encumbering the Bill, and in my opinion discriminating in this case very obviously.

Amendment negatived.

On section 2,

Mr. SPROULE. I think this is a very bad principle. I do not think the company should have the right to determine what a paid up policy will amount to according to their own values. I think this should be determined according to the mortuary statistics, proportioning the amount with regard to the length of time that the policy holder is likely to live. If this is left entirely to the company the company will give little or no return.

Bill reported.

CANADIAN TRANSPORTATION AND STORAGE COMPANY.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 176) to incorporate the Canadian Transportation and Storage Company.—Mr. German.

Mr. HENDERSON. I notice that this Bill has been called more than once and that the promoter of the Bill has not been present. This is a Bill of considerable importance, and I assume that there is no one in the House who can explain its provisions. I think we are making a serious mistake in putting legislation of this kind through the House day after day when members promoting the Bills do not take sufficient interest in them to be here and explain. I move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. McCARTHY. The gentleman in charge of this Bill understood that the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Bill was going on this afternoon, and he believed that this order would not be reached. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Henderson) thinks the Bill so important that he wants the member in charge of it to be present, I move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to, and progress reported.

ASSINIBOINE WATER POWER.

On the Order being called :

House again in committee on Bill (No. 192) to enable the city of Winnipeg to utilize the Assiniboine River Water Power.—Mr. Puttee.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. The promoter of this Bill is not present, Mr. Speaker, and as I have given notice of two very important amendments, I ask that the Bill should stand.

Mr. SPEAKER. The Bill stands.

Order allowed to stand.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 81) respecting the Brandon and South-western Railway.—Mr. Morrison.

Bill (No. 150) to incorporate the Columbia River Improvement Company.—Mr. Galliher.

SECOND READING.

Bill (No. 211) respecting the Nicola, Kamloops and Similkameen Coal and Railway Company.—Mr. Galliher.

THE ALLIANCE BANK OF CANADA.

Mr. RUSSELL moved the second reading of Bill (No. 212) to incorporate the Alliance Bank of Canada.

Mr. DAVID HENDERSON (Halton). Mr. Speaker, I do not propose, at this moment, to offer any opposition to the second reading of the Bill; but I desire to intimate to the mover that at some subsequent day I shall move an amendment to the Bill which I think will possibly meet with the approbation of this House. To my mind, we are going too far in the incorporation of new banks. It strikes me that, as during the present session, we have granted some six new charters, besides two others on the list, possibly it is time to call a halt. There is a feeling throughout the country that our banks, in order to obtain profitable business have taken too many investments outside of this country, and it is a question whether we are right in allowing our banking institutions to stretch out into the United States too far, to invest in American securities and encourage by their doing so, the practice of speculation which is rife in this country, and which has caused such very material losses to our people. I do not charge the banks, in the first place, with anything of that kind; but I do say that without the chartered banks these speculations cannot be carried on, and if we wish to strike a blow at these speculative operations that have caused so much loss, injury, suffering and sorrow to the people of this country during the present year, we must go back to the source of this trouble. If we can minimize it in any way, I think it is the duty of parliament to deal with the question. The purport of my amendment is to limit the investments of banks so that they will not be able to assist brokers, loan companies and others who are engaged in this speculative business in obtaining the requisite money to carry on these operations. I believe that if we minimize the advances along that line, we shall minimize the injurious consequences of the investment of large amounts of money on call loans in the United States on American stocks. I will simply read the amendment I have to propose, so that the promoter may understand the position, and, having stated the course I intend to pursue, I shall allow the Bill, so far as I am concerned, to go to the Committee on Banking and Commerce where the matter can be dealt with. I am reminded by a question from the hon. member from East Elgin (Mr. Ingram) to say that I have no particular desire to interfere with the charter of this bank any more than that of any other. This is not a special matter in the case of this bank at all. The amendment I shall propose is as follows:

> Notwithstanding anything contained in the Bank Act, the said bank shall not, either directly or indirectly, lend money or make advances upon the security of, or take as collateral security for any loan made by it, the bonds, stocks and other securities or obligations of any company or corporation or body corporate not incorporated by the parliament of Great Britain, or by the parliament of Canada or of a province of Canada, until the consent thereto by the shareholders of said bank shall have been obtained at a special meeting of the said bank specially called for that purpose.

Or I may propose the amendment without the latter clause.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

QUESTIONS.

SALE OF THE STEAMER 'BAYFIELD.'

Mr. THOMSON (Grey)—by Mr. Sproule—asked:

1. What is the amount expended in repairs on the steamer 'Bayfield' in the past six years?
2. Has the steamer 'Bayfield' been sold, and to whom?
3. How much was she sold for?
4. Was it by public or private sale?
5. What was the date of sale?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Hon. Raymond Préfontaine):

1. $6,571.89.
2. Yes, to John Harrisons & Sons.
3. $3,250, the highest offer.
4. The intended disposal of the 'Bayfield' was generally known in that section. The only favourable offer was accepted and the sale was confirmed by council.
5. 14th March, 1903.

DREDGE 'SIR WILFRID LAURIER.'

Mr. THOMSON (Grey)—by Mr. Sproule—asked:

Who was in charge of the dredge 'Sir Wilfrid Laurier,' when it went down in Lake Ontario ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. James Sutherland). The Department of Public Works has no information regarding the dredge named. The dredge was not the property of the government.

LOANS TO THE DOUKHOBORS.

Mr. WILSON—by Mr. Sproule—asked :

1. What is the amount of the loan made to the Doukhobors, and what is the date of said loan ?

2. Has any of said loan been repaid ? If so, how much ? What interest, if any, is charged on said loan ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton). The total expenditure charged to the Doukhobor account is about $20,000, made in 1899. None of the advances have been repaid. The usual interest of five per cent will be charged in the case of the advances. It is the intention to make the amount a charge against the homesteads of the persons assisted.

BUOYS IN BAY OF QUINTE.

Mr. PORTER—by Mr. Alcorn—asked :

1. What is the name of the person, or persons, employed to care for buoys in the Bay of Quinté, from Deseronto to Murray canal, during the seasons of 1901, 1902 and 1903 ?

2. What sums were paid for such service in each of the three years mentioned, with dates of such payments ?

3. What was the arrangement, or regulation, governing the amount of such payments ?

4. By whom were such arrangements made on the part of the department, in each of these three years ?

5. Was there any correspondence between the government and any person, or persons, in regard to the employment of any particular person, or persons, for such service ? If so, who are the persons with whom such correspondence was held ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Hon. Raymond Préfontaine):

1. Samuel Davenport, from Casey's Point to upper dock on Big Island, including Deseronto. Allen McDonald from Mississauga Point to Nigger Island. Cornelius Mullens, from Nigger Island to Murray canal.

2. Samuel Davenport, May 10, 1901, $42.50; December 9, $42.50 ; May 14, 1902, $42.50 ; December, 4, 1902, $42.50 ; May, 1, 1903, $35. Tenders are invited and a new contract made for $70 per annum.

Cornelius Mullens, May 10, 1901, (placing) $33 ; January 8, 1902, taking up fall of 1901, $33 ; July 19, 1901, (placing) $33 ; December 17, 1902, $33. Account not yet paid for 1903.

3. Tenders were publicly invited and contracts made by the department directly in each of the three years.

4. By the department directly.

5. No correspondence between the government relating to the employment of any particular persons for such service.

BELLEVILLE HARBOUR.

Mr. PORTER—by Mr. Alcorn—asked :

1. What are the boundaries of the harbour of the city of Belleville, under the jurisdiction of the commissioners appointed by this government ?

2. Has any body, or corporation, any jurisdiction over the area comprised within such boundaries, other than the harbour commissioners ? If so, what body or corporation ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Hon. Mr. Préfontaine) :

1. The boundaries as at present of the harbour of the city of Belleville are the same as established by statute in 1889—52 Victoria, chapter 35—when the harbour of Belleville was placed under a commission.

2. Not that the department is aware of.

INSPECTOR OF BINDER TWINE.

Mr. WILSON—by Mr. Sproule—asked :

1. When was the first inspector of binder twine appointed, and at what salary ?

2. Will Mr. J. L. Haycock be employed the whole year inspecting binder twine ?

3. Will his travelling expenses be paid by the government ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Rt. Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright):

1. Mr. J. L. Haycock has been appointed inspector at the salary of $1,200.

2. and 3. He will be employed the greater part of the year and his travelling expenses will be paid.

PUBLIC WORKS EMPLOYEES, TORONTO.

Mr. CLARKE asked :

1. What is the cause of the delay in paying the salaries of the employees of the Public Works Department stationed at Toronto ?

2. Is there any reason, and if so, what is the reason, that the said employees are not paid at or about the same date each month as the employees of the other departments of the civil service ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. James Sutherland) :

1. The present delay was due to the fact that there were no funds available.

2. This department is not aware of the date on which employees of other departments are paid, but our employees at Toronto, are generally paid the first week of each month.

DAMAGE TO TORONTO ISLAND.

Mr. CLARKE asked :

Has the Minister of Public Works been communicated with respecting the damage reported to have been done to the south-eastern portion of Toronto Island, and to the breakwater at that point, by the recent storms ? And if so, what steps are being taken, or will be taken, to repair the damage, and to give adequate protection to the island in future ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. James Sutherland) :

1. Yes.
2. A sum of $14,000 has been placed in the main estimates for 1903-4 for the construction of groynes and protection work on that portion of the Toronto island.

DOMINION DAY ADJOURNMENT.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I move :

That when the House adjourns on Tuesday next it stand adjourned until the Thursday following, the 2nd of July next.

Mr. CLARKE. What business will likely be taken up on Thursday afternoon ?

The PRIME MINISTER. It is our intention to take up the Railway Commission Bill.

Motion agreed to.

CANADIAN NORTHERN RAILWAY GUARANTEE OF SECURITIES.

Bill (No. 209) respecting certain aid for the extension of the Canadian Northern Railway (the Minister of Railways and Canals) read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

On section 1,—Government guarantee of bonds.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair). The existing lines of the Canadian Northern, outside of the portions we are now proposing to aid, will total up 924 miles according to the memorandum which they furnished me. The first line referred to in section 3, is from Port Arthur to the crossing of the Rainy river, 288 miles ; the second is from Stanley Junction to Gunflint, 67 miles ; Winnipeg to southerly southern boundary of Manitoba, 108 miles ; Beaver to Gladstone, 19 miles ; Gladstone to Winnipegosis, 125 miles ; Sifton Junction to Erwood, 177 miles ; Gilbert Plains branch, 27 miles ; Carman branch, 63 miles ; Neepawa Junction to Neepawa, 35 miles ; Emerson branch, 15 miles. There are encumberances to-day upon number 1, which would be 288 miles, of $20,000 per mile. On all the others $10,000 per mile. That is the situation and in addition to the mortgage which would secure the $13,000 per mile there is a second mortgage upon all these lines.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. On the rolling stock ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, on the rolling stock as well. A portion of the rolling stock which they have now was obtained from one of these car trusts, but a very considerable portion of their rolling stock is owned by the company outright ?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Outside of that ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Mr. Chairman, I assume that the schedule of the Bill follows the terms of the resolutions ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, there is one additional clause.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That is clause ten ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). And of course the schedule. I would have thought that perhaps it would have been better to have been a little more definite in the schedule which does not mention the length of line in each case, although that has been given by the hon. minister. Perhaps when we come to consider it we can make it a little more definite in that regard.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We might put the mileage opposite each line.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would think it would be a very proper time for the hon. minister to give us some statement of the general policy of the government in regard to transportation west of Lake Superior and indeed from that to the Atlantic coast. We have asked that information in this House from time to time, but I do not think we have gathered very much thus far, except possibly the individual views of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals expressed outside of the House. We have not only this measure but another very important measure before the House at this time a measure which, as we supposed, was coming up for consideration this afternoon—I refer to the Bill to incorporate the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company—and in the meantime, from influential organs of public opinion which are supposed to be largely in the confidence of the government, we are receiving intimations that the government is likely to propose a policy in regard to the extension of the Intercolonial Railway to some point farther west. It seems to me that in considering the aid which we shall grant to so important a part of the transportation system of Canada as this road will undoubtedly be, it would be useful to the House—indeed it is due to the House—to have some statement from the government, or from the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, as to what the policy of the government is in regard to the whole scheme of transportation and particularly in regard to transcontinental railways. It is asking the House to take something of a leap in the dark when we are desired to deal with this Bill without any information such as that which I have suggested. My hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals said, when the resolutions were being discussed in committee, that this line of some 720 miles in length which we are now being asked to assist would stand by itself separate and apart from any general scheme of transportation. I am inclined to take issue very strongly with the hon. minister in regard to that. I do not think this line should stand by itself. This is a very important line indeed. We have a system shown on the plan or on the map which the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals has laid on the Table to-day, and we see that this proposed system will extend very far indeed towards the Pacific coast. We know that, if not the same company, at all events the same gentlemen have obtained a charter to the Pacific coast, and it has been publicly announced on their behalf that their intention is eventually to extend their line to the Pacific coast and to own and control a transcontinental line. Well, it becomes very important indeed that the government should, at this stage, give the House its policy in regard to the whole system of transportation. Has the government made up its mind, or if not, when does it expect to make up its mind, as to whether or not it will leave this question of transcontinental railways entirely in the hands of private individuals or companies granting them for that purpose such assistance as may be thought reasonable? Has the government under consideration the question of extending the Intercolonial Railway to any point farther west? I do not think that I am asking too much of my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals when I ask him to give the views of the government to the House in regard to that very important question at this stage. As I said before I do not think there is any more proper time for doing so than on this occasion when we are asked to deal by way of very substantial assistance with a line which must become part of a transcontinental system sooner or later.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Mr. Chairman, I do not blame my hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax) for making the request for information which he has made to the government in respect of the general question of transportation, but in doing so I do not admit that he would have been perfectly entitled to make such a request though this proposition were not under the consideration of the committee. I cannot help regarding the question of aid to the Canadian Northern as a question which is not at all necessarily or otherwise connected with the matter with respect to which the hon. gentleman desires us to give him further knowledge. The hon. member of course is aware that proposals have been made to the government respecting the construction of another transcontinental line. If we cannot so describe the line of the Canadian Northern, at all events, there is one transcontinental line which will justify me in speaking of the proposals which are before the government as proposals respecting another transcontinental line. The present line of the Canadian Northern is one which was not projected, and which has not been aided from the standpoint of a line from the Pacific to the Atlantic. We have never had from the gentlemen who are interested in the Canadian Northern any request that they should be regarded as having in contemplating a line reaching from the Atlantic ocean at an early date, or as part of any scheme or plan which they say are to carry out in the immediate future. They came before the government a year ago and my hon. friend knows what transpired just before the session came to a close, when the right hon. Premier (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) stated that the government had a very important proposal before them. I do not know whether he referred to the Canadian Northern by name, but it was in reference to the Canadian Northern that he spoke. They were very anxious to get into the country which their charter authorized them to traverse, and the government were very anxious that they should do so, for the reasons that that country was beginning to fill up and is being looked to by new settlers as a very desirable country in which to settle and we felt that for the encouragement of settlement by people who had not gone through, and for the further encouragement of people who had gone through, it was essential that the line of the Canadian Northern by the route, plans of which had been submitted to the government and subsequently approved, should be constructed and that these gentlemen should at the earliest possible day enter upon the prosecution of their work.

We are urging the matter now because we feel that it is only fair to that company and it is only fair to the enterprise itself that it should be known parliament had given its sanction, so that they would be in a position to finance the project without any further delay. We regard it as vitally important that this road should be built with all possible speed, and to that end it is our purpose and intention to facilitate it, in every way in our power, of course, with the sanction and approval of parliament. That proposition therefore was one with which the government practically dealt with so far as the government could deal with it until parliament had passed its approval upon their proposals; and the government dealt with it before any question had come before us or had been submitted to us from any quarter by any other organization looking to the construction of a line from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Therefore this proposition which is before us to-day is in fact a separate and distinct proposition from the other. No one imagines for a moment that the building of this Canadian Northern line will exhaust the territory which we have available for settlement in our prairie region; no one will imagine for a moment that another line—if it shall be incorporated by parliament, and built, pursuing a more northerly route some miles distant from the most northerly line now located—no one will imagine for a moment that it will not go through a country which will be productive from every point of view. And as that line will likely, when it is taken up by the government, reach the Pacific and reach it as speedily as possible, and will be an all Canadian route when it is constructed ; it is a separate and totally distinct proposition from that with which we have now to deal, and it is a proposition that is not in the slightest degree affected, as it appears to me, by the proposals which are now under the consideration of the committee.

I would be very glad indeed to inform my hon. friend (Mr. Borden) what decision the government had arrived at in respect to another transcontinental line, but when the submission is made to parliament by the government that submission must be a precise one; it must be a definite one; it must be one made with some detail; it must be one which has been well considered, and it would be premature, entirely premature, until all these various considerations have been passed on by the government and have been decided upon, that any statement should be made to parliament. I can say to my hon. friend (Mr. Borden) that we are as anxious as he is to be in a position to announce to parliament whether we are going to ask parliament to take up the question of another transcontinental line at this session, or are going to defer it to a later period. Any member of the government would be as glad as my hon. friend, when a decision is reached, to present all the details which may bear upon so large a problem as that. We are just as keen as he is to reach a decision upon these matters. But that decision has not yet been reached and it would be impossible to make any announcement to parliament upon the subject now. I do not think that very many days will elapse before we will be able to take parliament fully into our confidence upon the subject, but in the meantime my hon. friend will have to rest content with the assurance, that the reason why the government is not giving him any more information to-day is not because we have information which we could give him and which we are withholding, but because we have not reached that point which we think it necessary to reach in order that we may put before the House and before the country, propositions which are well considered, which are practical, which are precise, which are definite, and which are such as we feel we can defend.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The Minister of Railways has told us explicitly that the government has not yet come to a decision in reference to the Grand Trunk transcontinental railway. As my hon. friend (Mr. Borden) has pointed out, the Canadian Northern Railway people have announced that they intend not only to build to Edmonton but to reach the Pacific coast. In fact they shortened their route in order to make it available as the shortest possible transcontinental line. They also abandoned that portion of the Hudson Bay Railway and their western extension for the purpose of starting afresh at a point which would give them the shortest connection between Winnipeg and Edmonton. It is a well known fact that it is their intention to go to the coast. The government have these facts before them, and we have had the statement of the Prime Minister that he does not intend to subsidize a second transcontinental road across the continent. All this being so, the government must have considered how far they intend to go with the Grand Trunk Railway Pacific in their proposal to build a road across the continent. The hon. minister says that it may be the intention of the government to assist a road north of the proposed Canadian Northern Railway road which runs to Edmonton and thence to the coast. He says there is plenty of room in that country for another railway. Of course there is. But what the leader of the opposition wants to know is : did not the government consider all these things when they came to a decision to assist the Canadian Northern Railway ? The government must have considered that. What would be the use of the Grand Trunk Railway or any other railway built by a private company from Quebec, to end in Winnipeg. It would not be worth anything to any company unless it had a western connection and a connection with the great lakes also. When they get to Winnipeg they must have connection with the fertile plains west and also with Lake Superior, and also, as I believe, in the near future, with the Hudson Bay, whence the wheat of that section of the country will be shipped to the markets of the world. All that must have been considered by the government when they came to a decision to assist the Canadian Northern Railway to Edmonton. Is this to be a road merely for the purpose of carrying immigrants and for taking out the grain from that section of the country. Not at all. The assistance that is given to the Canadian Northern Railway must be in the light of its being a transcontinental road and before the government assisted it they must have come to a conclusion as to whether they were going to assist two roads to the Pacific coast or not. I should judge, from the statement of the hon. Minister of Railways, that the government have not come to a conclusion upon the subject—that they have not been able to make an arrangement between the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway and the Canadian Northern. After the statement of the premier, they would not come to the House and ask for a subsidy for another transcontinental railway; because it is well known that the Canadian Northern Railway intend building to the Pacific coast. That company is being assisted by this government to the extent of $13,000 per mile, not for the purpose merely of reaching Edmonton. Their ulterior object, as every man in this country knows, is to construct a transcontinental road. Therefore, I argue that the whole subject must have been well considered by the government, they must have come to some conclusion in reference to it, and they ought to be prepared to take the House into their confidence and state whether, in the event of the Canadian Northern Railway Company projecting their line to the Pacific coast, it is their intention to assist the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway from Quebec to Winnipeg. As I have said before, unless the Grand Trunk Railway Company have the right to build to the Pacific coast, and to extend colonization lines into different parts of the country, a line from Quebec to Winnipeg would be an entirely useless one. In view of the statement of the premier, the application of the Grand Trunk Railway Company, and the intention of the Canadian Northern Railway Company to build to the Pacific coast, surely the House and the country are entitled to more information than has been given by the Minister of Railways on this important subject.

Mr. KEMP. I think the House is entitled to more information on this subject than has been given on many occasions. The hon. Minister of Railways says that the reason this Canadian Northern Railway system has never been treated as a transcontinental system is that its promoters have never informed the government that they had the ambition to build a transcontinental railway. It has been rumoured for more than a year past, to my knowledge, that they were ambitious to build through to the Pacific coast. When the lines which are now under construction are completed, for which the government are prepared to guarantee the interest, the Canadian Northern Railway Company will have an independent system by which they will be able to reach the head waters of the lakes, and ship the products of the country to the markets of the world. In a sense, when they reach the head of the lakes, they reach the seaboard almost as much as would a railroad built from Winnipeg to Quebec, the only difference being that they reach fresh water instead of salt water; for the ports at the head of the lakes are open almost as many months of the year as the port of Quebec. To my mind it is ridiculous to say that the Canadian Northern Railway has not been considered in the light of a transcontinental railway. Can the government justify, before this House and the country, the bonusing of another railway paralleling the Canadian Northern Railway beyond Winnipeg? Are they of opinion that, with the Canadian Pacific Railway and its branches, and with the Canadian Northern Railway and its branches, there will be sufficient railway facilities in the north-west for some time to come? Then, what will be the object of building a line from Quebec to Winnipeg? These are subjects which the government must have considered, and on which they ought to be able to give us some preliminary facts and figures. For my part, I feel that the time has arrived when the government should be in a position to say more to the House than they have said on the transportation question.

Mr. SPROULE. I want to refer to one statement the Minister of Railways made. He said it is premature to give the statement to the House. Well, this House has been sitting for over three months and a half, and we must be drawing within measurable distance of the end of the session; surely the House ought to be in possession of the information soon, or otherwise not be expected to consider the subject during the present session. If the government cannot give the information now and yet purpose maturing their plans before this House is prorogued, then they must come down in the dying hours of the session with their decision, just as we have had resolutions regarding railways many times in the past. I think that is hardly fair to the House. In this instance the information is doubly important, because it has reference to a great through railway that ought to be considered as a whole, and not in piecemeal, as it is by these resolutions. We have had various rumours in the press of late, one being that the government have decided to build a line from Quebec to Winnipeg as a government line. If that be the case, I respectfully submit that the House and the country ought to know it. It has also been rumoured that the government have reached no conclusion, but that there is a diversity of opinion amongst the members of the cabinet on the subject. If that be so, let them state that they cannot reach a conclusion this session, and will not be prepared to submit any proposition to the House during the present session ; and then they can go on and mature their plans. But it is due to the House and the country that we should have some information on the subject one way or the other at this stage of this session, so that we may know what is before us for the balance of the session.

Mr. CLARKE. I rise, Mr. Chairman, to emphasize the position taken by hon. gentlemen on this side of the House. It seems to me that it is the most reasonable proposition that could emanate from the opposition, to ask the hon. gentleman and his colleagues what they propose to do with regard to providing additional facilities for the solution of the transportation problem by giving aid for the construction of additional lines. The hon. Minister of Railways has said that the Mackenzie & Mann outfit was never looked upon as a transcontinental line.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I did not say that. What I said was that they had never approached the government from that point of view at all.

Mr. CLARKE. Of course, it would be an insult to the intelligence of the hon. minister to think, for one moment, that he was not fully aware of the efforts this company has been making during the past few years to improve its position, and the ultimate object which it has in view and which it hopes to attain by the legislation it has secured in this House for the promotion of the different sections of its line. He must be aware that when the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway scheme was first mooted, when notice was first given of the intention of its promoters to apply for incorporation, its eastern terminus was at Gravenhurst. Since then the Mackenzie & Mann Company have practically gained control of the Great Northern Railway, which gives them a line from Quebec to Montreal, and eventually to Ottawa ; and he also knows that they have charters which will extend their system from their present terminus to the Pacific coast. He must also be aware of the fact that in Ontario, they are making connection between their present terminus at Port Arthur with Sudbury, and finally Toronto. If such a scheme cannot be considered transcontinental, I would like to ask how the hon. minister can look upon the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway as a transcontinental scheme ? That scheme had first its eastern terminus at Gravenhurst, but by degrees it has extended it east to Montreal and then to Quebec and now down to Moncton. What claim has this new proposition to be considered transcontinental that is not possessed by that of Messrs. Mackenzie & Mann ? In my humble judgment these gentlemen have proved themselves practical railway builders, and their enterprise is certainly entitled to be considered as transcontinental in its character. If that be the case, we should have a fuller explanation of the policy of the government than has been vouchsafed by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals. Does the hon. minister seriously think that the construction of a line from Quebec to Winnipeg will aid very materially in the solution of the transportation problem ? Would it not be wise for the government to make up their minds and put the opposition in possession of the conclusions they come to with regard to the solution of this problem before asking us to consent to a government guarantee or bonus, amounting to millions of dollars, in order to aid the construction of the Mackenzie & Mann lines ? The policy that ought to be adopted is the one that will at the earliest moment open up the prairie lands of the North-west ; and as a complement of that policy are the additional facilities that should be provided at Port Arthur and Fort William and the harbours on the eastern side of Georgian bay. It is absurd to say that we are going to solve the problem of furnishing sufficient transportation facilities, if we content ourselves with guaranteeing the bonds or bonusing a road whose eastern terminus will be at Quebec and its western at Winnipeg. The construction of such a line is not necessary. We have the Intercolonial Railway running from Quebec to Montreal, which can be extended as far west as the government choose to take it. We have also the transcontinental line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and we have the Grand Trunk Railway running from Quebec westward to North Bay. Why should not the government devise some plan for making use of the road already constructed north of Lake Superior, where the traffic is now very light ? Why not make an agreement with the Canadian Pacific Railway which would secure running rights over that section for the Grand Trunk Railway, the Canada Atlantic Railway, and if necessary, the Intercolonial Railway, so that these roads might get up to the North-west, while the Canadian Northern Railway system could at the same time come from Port Arthur eastward ? A proposition of that kind would meet the approval of the House, and the opposition have a right to complain of the meagreness of the information supplied by the government as to what the intention of the government really is.

I have noticed in the Toronto papers that an attempt is being made to promote the construction and operation by the government of a road between Quebec and Winnipeg. Will the hon. gentleman vouchsafe any information on that subject ? Is it the intention of the government to shelve the Grand Trunk Pacific scheme for this session, so far as giving any aid to it is concerned, or to construct a national road from Quebec to Winnipeg and operate it ?

We have had the most meagre information on these points, and it is only right that we should be furnished with such information as I have suggested before we proceed further with the consideration of this Bill.

Another point I would lay before the hon. minister is this : Provision is made further on in this Bill that the Mackenzie & Mann enterprise shall not be consolidated with the Canadian Pacific Railway, that its proprietors shall not sell it out to the Canadian Pacific Railway, or pass it under the control of that company. Why is there a provision made to prevent the absorption of the Mackenzie & Mann system by the Canadian Pacific Railway ? Why is not a similar provision inserted respecting its absorption by the Grand Trunk Pacific or any other transcontinental line that may be constructed ? It certainly seems to me that we have not the information we have a right to expect, and I strongly support the position taken by my hon. leader, namely, that the government should give us more information than they have yet vouchsafed before asking us to proceed further with so important a measure. We ought certainly to have a more definite declaration from the government as to what their transportation schemes really are and how they hope to give the country a satisfactory solution of that most pressing problem now waiting to be solved. The way these schemes are presented to us is not at all satisfactory, and we have the right to expect better things of a government which claims to be before everything else a business administration. I hope that the government will give us additional information or tell us that they have no policy to lay before the House, and that the best thing they can give us is this proposition to aid the Mackenzie & Mann project in the North-west.

Thé MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have nothing to add to the statement I have already made to the committee. I stated in effect that the government had not matured its plans sufficiently to lay them before parliament. In that respect we lay ourselves open to any reflection which the hon. gentleman may choose to cast upon us, but not having matured our plans, it is a physical and moral impossibility for me to present them to the House. I hope my hon. friend now understands why I do not give him information he asks.

Mr. CLARKE. I thank the hon. gentleman for this information. He is perfectly candid and frank, and I would ask him, in view of the statement he has just made, whether it would not be more reasonable to postpone further consideration of the Bill before us until the government have made up their minds and laid before parliament a completed scheme ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think not, and I will tell the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clarke) why. It is for the very reason that he himself stated to this committee—the absolute necessity of providing railway facilities for the people who are already living in the district to be traversed by the road and who are now going there. We want to afford these facilities at the earliest possible moment; we are under engagement to do it, and we are carrying out that engagement, so far as lies in our power, by asking parliament for the authority provided in this Bill. Whether there is any transcontinental railway determined upon so far as government action is concerned, or whether it is not, is not material, so far as the present proposal is concerned, in my opinion. I think this road should go forward with all possible despatch. I think that every day of delay counts, because I am sure the gentlemen who are concerned in this undertaking will require to finance it, and should have an opportunity to do so at a season when financial arrangements can be made. We should not be justified in delaying to ask parliament to take action until we had matured our plans with regard to other matters that may be before us.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). We all remember very well that this project was before the House, or at least before the government, last session; and, if it is to be regarded in the light in which the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Blair) presents it to the House to-day, I should think the government should not care about mentioning the word ' delay ' in connection with it. I understood, certainly, from what took place at the end of last session, and from the comments which were made by the government press at the close of the session, that the government delayed doing last session what they are doing now for the very reason that this was a transcontinental scheme, and they proposed to have a policy with regard to it. If it is not to be regarded in the light in which it is presented on this side of the House, why has there been delay for more than a year in giving these railway facilities to the North-west Territories ? Why did not the government bring down the proposition more than a year ago ? Why is it that now they present it to the House and still have no policy, though the question of policy must have been under consideration for a year at least ? Now, the government is face to face with one of two positions with regard to this matter. Either they did regard this line, a year ago, as of so much importance in connection with the question of transcontinental transportation that they deemed it wise to do nothing until they could have a definite and specific policy with regard to that great question—they apparently did take that view of it a year ago, and therefore held their hands—or, on the other hand, if they did not take that view a year ago, as I have said, there seemed to have been no good reason why there was a waste of at least a year in providing any facilities for this very important section of the North-west Territories at a time, when, as the government knew, immigration was pouring in at a rapid rate, and was likely to increase in proportion during the present year. It seems to me that the delay that has taken place during the past year can only be because the government regarded it in the light in which we, on this side regard it now. What justification then, have the government to come down, three and a half months after the beginning of the present session, still telling parliament they have not matured a policy with regard to this great question ? I, for one, shall object strenuously to having a great question like this dealt with by parliament during the last ten days or fortnight of the session. As this is a matter which, in some shape or other, has been under consideration for at least a year, it would be treating, not only parliament but the country, unfairly, to ask that the people's representatives should consider it hurriedly, as such matters have to be considered in the closing days of a session. And I say that if the government are not prepared to deal with this question from the standpoint of a definite and specific policy of transcontinental railway connection, they ought to be so prepared, having had the question under consideration for at least a year. And, when the hon. gentleman speaks, as he does, of this line, comprising about seven hundred and thirty miles of railway, as standing alone, standing by itself, something to be dealt with apart from the great general question, I do not agree with him. I believe that the people of the North-west now look, or at least they will in the future look, to the question of communication with the Pacific coast as of very great importance to them—perhaps as of as great importance to them as the question of transportation to the Atlantic coast. If our opportunities with regard to trade on the Pacific ocean and with the countries beyond the Pacific ocean are to any extent realized, it will be just as important to the constituents of my hon. friend from Alberta (Mr. Oliver) that there should be means of communication, and good means of communication, from that portion of the country to the Pacific, as that there should be means of transportation to the Atlantic. I do not say it is of such importance now, but I say it is very likely to be of as much importance in the future. And, even at the present, it is of importance that that portion of the country should have the means of communication with the great province of British Columbia. For these reasons, I must dissent, notwithstanding the arguments of the Minister of Railways (Hon. Mr. Blair), from the position which he has taken in saying that this 600 miles of railway from Gilbert Plains to Edmonton can be regarded as standing by itself and not necessarily connected with a great scheme of transcontinental transportation.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. The Minister of Railways and Canals provides in this Bill, section 8, that it shall be unlawful for the Canadian Northern Railway to lease or sell any of its lines or any portion thereof to the Canadian Pacific Railway. Now, as we are aware, the Canadian Northern goes through the State of Minnesota, having a length in that state of about one hundred miles. If it is to be unlawful for the Canadian Northern Railway Company to amalgamate with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, a Canadian corporation, would it not be wise to make it unlawful also for them to amalgamate with an American corporation ? There have been efforts in the past, and there are efforts to-day, to divert our trade to American channels. It seems to me that it would be the part of wisdom for the government to say that the Canadian Northern shall not amalgamate with any American corporation that would divert our trade to American ports. That would be the easiest thing in the world. Any one who knows that part of the country will see, I hope, the strength of the position I take. I fully recognize, with the hon. minister, that it is important to give additional means of transportation to our North-west friends. But, at the same time, it seems to me that we should never lose sight of the national fact, that we must not spare any efforts, we must not spare any means, to secure for ourselves the trade that we are building up in the west. So I would be very thankful indeed if the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals were in a position to offer us some information as to the point I am now raising.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think it must be plain that from the first moment the Canadian Northern acquired a charter from parliament authorizing it to build into the Northwestern country, the condition was annexed that they should not be allowed to amalgamate with the Canadian Pacific Railway. That was the feeling and temper of parliament at that time, and that feeling and temper were shown in the agreement that was entered into by the Canadian Northern with the Manitoba government. That stipulation is one of the clauses of that contract. It was thought well, seeing that had been the expressed desire of parliament, that it should be continued in the existing arrangement. I do not know that a clause of this sort is of much value, because it will always be open to parliament to allow the Canadian Northern to amalgamate with the Canadian Pacific Railway, and it could not make any agreement, that is to say, the company could not be amalgamated unless parliament did give them power. Whether or not you have a clause of this kind in the present legislation or any other charter, they could not do it without. There is, however, something beyond that in the clause which says that they may not make pooling arrangements nor enter into an agreement whereby rates upon freights or passengers shall be pooled. That is in addition, and that has been thought a wise and prudent provision, and is contained I think in all other contracts and agreements that have been made by the Canadian Northern, as well with the provincial government of Manitoba as with ourselves. My hon. friend has stated that this road runs a hundred miles in the state of Minnesota. The fact is it is only about fifty miles. But why was that? It was because it would have been necessary, when the road was being constructed, in order that it should continue through Canadian territory, to incur a very large expense to cross the lake within Canadian territory; and it was one of the understandings at that time with the Canadian Northern when we gave them assistance to construct the Rainy river branch, that if, at any future time, it was considered desirable that the road should take a short cut and should be built across the Lake of the Woods, the company would, upon receiving assistance, make that change in the route. I presume they will be prepared to carry it out at any time with reasonable assistance.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Is there an understanding of that kind with the company?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There was an understanding of that kind. I was asked by the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Clarke) why the same restriction should not apply to other companies. There are no other companies existing in that country at present, and if parliament chooses at any time to impose that restriction upon any company that is incorporated, it is quite free to do so. Whatever we might put in here, it would be necessary that legislation should be had by any other company chartered for the purpose of building through that country if it desired to make connection with the Canadian Northern.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I do not object to the clause stating that the Canadian Northern may not amalgamate with the Canadian Pacific Railway. I see the reason of that. The people of the west want competition, and they believe, rightly or wrongly, that there will be no arrangement with the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Canadian Northern, because there is such a clause in the Bill. I hope they are right. But the point to which I wish again to call the attention of the Minister, is that if it is made unlawful for the Canadian Northern in the present Bill to amalgamate with the Canadian Pacific Railway, it seems to me it should be made unlawful also to amalgamate with any American corporation.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They could not amalgamate without we gave them the power.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I would rather have it stated. There is nothing like making a clear bargain. The Canadian Northern are applying to us for aid, and the government have pledged themselves to give such aid, amounting, I think, to about $9,000,000. Parliament will vote that. But is it not fair, is it not prudent, that the Canadian people should receive an assurance, so far as it is possible to give such assurance in legislation, that the trade we are building up with our credit will not be diverted to American ports? My hon. friend has only to look at the geography of the country. He will find, he has found out already, no doubt, as I have myself, that the American railways could tap these Canadian railways and divert our trade to American territory. It would be an easy thing to do. Now, the question is whether, in giving an additional guarantee, in placing the credit of the country at the disposal of the Canadian Northern, it would not be prudent to ask from them some guarantee that they will not amalgamate with any American corporation whose object would be to divert our trade. I think that the hon. gentlemen on the treasury benches should pause a little, and reflect, as the right hon. gentleman is accustomed to say when he is inviting us not to press him. This is a very important question, and they should consider it before they go further with this Bill. I think my objection is worthy of being taken into consideration; I do not make it in any unfriendly spirit, far from it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think the hon. member must be aware of the fact that the traffic from our western country could not be diverted to the south and carried away by American railways without an amalgamation between an American railway and a Canadian road. It would be mere matter of shipment; and is the hon. gentleman prepared to say, is there any member of this parliament prepared to say, that we should put a clause in any charter we grant to a Canadian railway, that it should not be allowed to ship any of its products to the south of the boundary line, even though its products might be required there for consumption? Would anybody have any reason to say that that would be wise legislation? The only way, it strikes me, by which you could prevent the shipping of the products of the west via the United States railways to the sea, is by making it to the interest and advantage of Canadian railways to ship them otherwise.

Mr. CLARKE. How can that best be done?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. By constructing the shortest possible line to the ocean over Canadian territory. My hon. friend knows further that even if you pass legislation of that kind, you cannot say that the shipper shall not have a right to send his products whichever way he pleases to reach their destination. Let my hon. friend appeal to the representatives from the west, and ask them what they would think of a clause of that kind. They would say that their people would not sustain them if they voted for any such a proposition. You have to allow trade to follow the line of least resistance in reaching its destination. You cannot by legislation do otherwise. You can only make the inducement strong enough by making the Canadian route the shortest and best.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I beg to take the strongest possible objection to the statements of my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals. This is not a question for the west or for the east. It is a Canadian question in the broad sense. The west is not the only portion of Canada that is concerned in the measure that is before parliament to-day. The west is not voting the money alone. This country is pledging its credit to an enterprise which is a national enterprise, and it is a national question with which parliament has to deal. Again I say it is not a question for the west exclusively, and to that view I have objected every time the point has been raised. Our ambition is to establish trade between the different provinces as far as it is possible to do so. The way of doing that, as the hon. minister has stated, is to provide communication. I do not ask that it shall be forbidden that any railway corporation shall ship to the other side of the line. That would be a preposterous proposition. Nobody thinks of it. I do not suggest that, but I suggest a clause concerning American railways similar to the one which is included concerning the Canadian Pacific Railway. I would like to prevent amalgamation with any of these American railways.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My hon. friend must see that amalgamation means a combination of two companies, not for the purposes of traffic, but as a corporate body—the amalgamation of two distinct corporate bodies into one corporate body with identical interests. What effect would that have upon shipping through the United States or anywhere else?

Hon. Mr. TARTE. What I fear is the amalgamation of this Canadian Northern with some American corporation which will divert our trade.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We are always liable to that.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. The hon. minister says we are always liable to that, but that is not an answer, in my opinion. Parliament is called upon to give a large guarantee after having given a large amount of money to Messrs. Mackenzie & Mann. Is it not reasonable that the Canadian people should have by law the assurance that this corporation which is being helped with Canadian money be not amalgamated with an American corporation? I think I am right in that. It is not a question of shipping. It is out of the question to ask our railways not to ship goods to the other side of the line. That is not what I mean at all. I mean to say that we should insert a clause concerning American railways similar to the one which we have in this Bill—clause a—concerning the Canadian Pacific Railway. I shall not insist any more upon the point now. I have raised the question. Parliament is seized of it, and it is for the House to decide.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Mr. Chairman, I think everybody will sympathize with the desire of the hon. member (Hon. Mr. Tarte) that the trade of the west should go through Canadian channels, but I think we will all agree with the remark of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair) that the only way that the trade of the west can be got to go through Canadian channels is by making Canadian channels the most advantageous channels for that trade to go through. You are not going to force 100,000,000 bushels of wheat by a route that is disadvantageous from the commercial standpoint by a clause in this Act of parliament. So far as the general question which my hon. friend has raised is concerned, I fear that he has lost sight of the history of this transaction. When the question of aid to what was called the Ontario and Rainy River Railway, or what is now the Canadian Northern Railway, from Winnipeg to Port Arthur was under consideration by the government, and later by this House, the question of these 40, 50 or 60 miles going through American territory was then considered, and the question as to whether we should compel that railway company to build across the Lake of the Woods was fully dealt with at that time. It was considered by the government, and I think also by the House at a later date, that the excessive expense which would be caused to the company by compelling them to build across the Lake of the Woods could not be justified and that the desire of the company to get down to Port Arthur, to a Canadian port, and assist in transporting the grain of the west ought to be facilitated by allowing them to go around by the cheapest and shortest route. There is nothing any more dangerous in the Canadian Northern running around 40 or 50 or 60 miles through the State of Minnesota on their way to Port Arthur than there is in the Canadian Pacific Railway running through the state of Maine to get to St. John, and nobody has ever suggested that special legislation should be brought in to compel the Canadian Pacific Railway not to divert any portion of its traffic as it runs through the state of Maine on its way to a Canadian port. We know that that is impracticable legislation. The real fact is that the lines which the Canadian Northern own in the province of Manitoba were originally built by the Northern Pacific Railway, and that as matters stood at that time and before the building of this line from Winnipeg to Port Arthur, the trade did go through American channels. It went by the Northern Pacific to the port of Duluth, and the government had in mind in assisting the Canadian Northern the changing of that condition of affairs, and as a result of what has been done for this railway a very considerable amount of business has been done by the Canadian Northern and enormous quantities of grain have been taken to Port Arthur which otherwise would have been shipped by way of the port of Duluth.

Mr. CLARKE. Would the hon. Minister of the Interior (Hon. Mr. Sifton) say where that grain goes now from Port Arthur ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That is another point. That is a point which is important, but it is a point which my hon. friend (Mr. Clarke) will readily admit cannot be dealt with here. That must be dealt with in another way. What I desired to point out was that the building of this railway was for the purpose of overcoming that which was taking place at that time, and which is being counteracted to a great extent by the construction of the Canadian Northern. Would my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Tarte) suppose that when the Canadian Northern, as a business corporation, is expending $1,000,000 at Port Arthur for the purpose of building up a storage system there that will enable it to handle the grain, it would destroy that investment absolutely by making some arrangement out of which it would get no financial advantage, and as a result of which its traffic would be handed over to the control of somebody else ? The proposition is preposterous. What we must do in the consideration of this whole question from beginning to end is to endeavour to make our arrangements of such a character and to improve our transportation in such a way that Canadian channels will be more advantageous than the American, and I think that the development of the Canadian Northern Railway, if it is attentively considered, will be found to be one of the most effective instruments in carying that into effect in so far as it has gone up to the present time, and instead of the product of the prairies going, to a considerable degree, by way of the Northern Pacific through American channels, as in former years, through the inauguration of this system it will go through Canadian channels. It seems to me that the objection which has been raised is an artificial one, and cannot be considered to have any force or effect upon the proposition as it is now before the committee.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Kindly look at the map which is placed before us. Here is Port Arthur and here is Duluth. We are all aware that Mr. Hill's system centres at Duluth. I suppose that Duluth has the most magnificent elevators in the world. Mr. Hill owns the greatest part of them and other people own the balance. There is nothing easier than for Mr. Hill to buy the Canadian Northern and divert all the trade from the west to that port. My hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Sifton) says that it is preposterous to suppose that Messrs. Mackenzie & Mann would destroy the fine property—and it is a fine property I am glad to say—that they have built at Port Arthur. Messrs. Mackenzie & Mann will not live for all time; men pass pretty quickly; we are not going to be so long on this side of the big ocean, and Messrs. Mackenzie & Mann will go as we all will go. We are not dealing today with men; we are dealing with the future and we are dealing with a broad situation. My hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Clarke) has said that Messrs. Mackenzie & Mann have a charter to the Pacific ocean. So they have, and more than that they have made arrangements with the government of British Columbia to go on with their work. They are energetic men; there are no better builders of railways than these men are.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Hear, hear.

Mr. CLARKE. Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Whatever our opinion may be of their different schemes we must admit that they have shown a great deal of ability and energy.

Mr. CLARKE. That is right.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I believe that I am not far from the mark when I say that these gentlemen intend to build their railway to the coast and they will come to us again; there is no fear as to that. They cannot build that without the credit of this parliament and they will come to this parliament. Having these facts before our eyes it seems to me that it would be the part of prudence to take our precautions. The Minister of the Interior says : You did not take such precautions when the Canadian Pacific Railway was built. The hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Sifton) is younger than I am, and I might call his attention to the fact that most of the newspaper men in Quebec, although we were government supporters, objected very very strongly to that part of the Canadian Pacific Railway scheme. My hon. friends on the treasury benches only have to look at the debates which took place then to find that there was in the province of Quebec especially, a very strong opposition to that part of the scheme. However, if we believe that the government of the day were not right in allowing the Canadian Pacific Railway to pass through the state of Maine, then we should not repeat that mistake. We cannot prevent the Canadian Northern Railway from passing through Minnesota; we all grant that; it is done. If an error has been made we cannot prevent it, but what I suggest—and I suggest it in a friendly way and in the interest of the country at large—what I suggest is that we shall not allow a Canadian corporation that we are all glad to help, to amalgamate with an American corporation. The Canadian North-west is developing and will develop more and more. Our national interest is to unite the different provinces by the bonds of common interests, and we are now in a position to offer the best route, provided we take means to see that our trade is not diverted from our own country. Here is a Canadian corporation which is seeking the aid and credit of this parliament, and I ask that a clause be inserted to prevent amalgamation. I do not know if this suggestion has been made before, but I believe that Messrs. Mackenzie & Mann would consent to it. However, we are not here to please corporations or contractors. Messrs. Mackenzie & Mann have not only a charter to go to the Pacific ocean but they have also a charter to the port of Quebec. When my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Sifton) cited the example of the late government concerning the Canadian Pacific Railway, he lost sight of the fact that we are discussing now the possibility of pledging the credit of the country, or of giving aid to another transcontinental railway in Canadian territory exclusively. Most of the members of this House, I take it, are insisting on having an all-Canadian route, and evidently that is of importance. Those who have followed the events of the past few years will remember that in a little wrangle that took place between the Canadian Pacific Railway and my former colleague the Minister of Railways, the port of St. John was threatened with being abandoned and the port of Boston was to be adopted. If there had not been a strong public sentiment in favour of having the Canadian Pacific Railway located at a Canadian port nobody could tell what might have taken place. Railway corporations have not very big hearts; they are the properties of hundreds and thousands of people; directors change often, and so we are not dealing with men but we are dealing with a problem and in my humble opinion that problem should be solved in the interests of Canada. It is for that reason that I urge the government to take into consideration the point that I have submitted.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is a universal sentiment in this House adverse to the idea of any portion of our railroads falling into the hands and under the control of American railway interests. There is no question as to that. The hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Tarte) has that feeling in common with everybody, and we would all regret to know that any of our large and important railway undertakings had been acquired in the interest of any railway corporation across the border. Why? Because we would fear that Canadian interests would be jeopardized. My hon. friend has that fear and he thinks that a little clause in this Bill would probably prevent it in the case of the Canadian Northern Railway. It is because I cannot see that by any possibility we could prevent such a state of things occurring that I am against putting any such clause in the Bill.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Might I ask just for information: Does the minister believe that if there was a clause concerning American railways similar to that which prevents the Canadian Pacific Railway from amalgamating with the Canadian Northern Railway, that this company could amalgamate with an American company?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have tried to answer the question before and to tell my hon. friend that a clause in the Bill such as he suggests would be just about as good as no clause at all; it would be no worse, it would be no better. They cannot under any circumstances amalgamate with an American railway unless they get power from this parliament to do it.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What is the use of saying that they cannot do a thing and shall not do a thing when they have no power to do it unless parliament says they may do it.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I know of a Canadian railway that has been refused permission to cross the American frontier, and it has had to amalgamate with an American railway.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. True. We have in this parliament countenanced and legalized an amalgamation of two or three railways in particular, down in the Niagara district. But any legislation of this parliament would be helpless if men of capital acquired a controlling interest in the stock of any of our railway companies. The management would at once fall into their hands. Is any one in this parliament prepared to say that we ought to pass an Act declaring that none of the owners of shares in any of these corporations can assign their shares to any one? Because the moment you assign or transfer the stock to any one, that moment you give up the control.

Mr. CLARKE. Is there any value in clause eight of this Bill?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is this value as between these two Canadian railways, that it is notice to them that they shall not amalgamate. But the most valuable part of the clause is not that they shall not amalgamate, but that they shall not enter into any agreement whereby rates shall be pooled.

Mr. CLARKE. If we are going to have the Grand Trunk Pacific, why not have a similar provision in this Bill with respect to it ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Because it is not in existence.

Mr. CLARKE. It is seeking an act of incorporation now.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. And when the Grand Trunk Pacific or any other company which is seeking legislation at our hands, asks for power to amalgamate with the Canadian Northern, then, if parliament has the feeling that it ought not to be done, it will not be done; and if parliament has the feeling that it ought to be done, it will be done, even though there may be a clause in the charter saying that the company shall not do it.

Mr. CLARKE. Then, if the argument of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals is consistent, the position we should take is this, that if it is an advantage to Canada to have an additional transcontinental railway, and if we think it should not amalgamate with the Canadian Pacific, then we should have a similar provision respecting the proposed Grand Trunk Pacific ; and if there is no such provision in this Bill, it should be in the Act of incorporation of the Grand Trunk Pacific which is before the House. I cannot see why the Canadian Northern should be prohibited from amalgamating with the Canadian Pacific Railway, and not be prohibited from amalgamating with the proposed Grand Trunk Pacific. Why should not the same rule be applied to both ? If the people of the west are to have the advantage of competition, why should we not render it impossible for the Canadian Northern to amalgamate with any other line ?

Mr. DAVIS. One reason is that the Grand Trunk Pacific, if it ever materializes, will be subject to the railway commission which is to be appointed, whereas the Canadian Pacific Railway cannot be, under the arrangement which was made years ago.

Mr. CLARKE. I understand, then, that this parliament is powerless to pass any legislation to prevent the Canadian Northern and the Grand Trunk Pacific from amalgamating. Is that the position we are in ?

Mr. DAVIS. No, not at all. I want to say that it appears to me we talk a good deal of nonsense in regard to American railways. When any Canadian company is organized, and receives a charter from this parliament to operate a railway, it becomes subject to the Railway Act of this Dominion, and therefore it does not make much difference whose money builds the road—it is a Canadian road subject to Canadian laws. How are you going to prevent the stock of any corporation passing into the hands of Americans if they choose to buy it ? The stock is sold in the open market, and anybody who likes to buy it can get control. The safeguard for the people of this country is that the road is a Canadian road under Canadian laws, and it does not matter who owns the stock. The difference between the Grand Trunk Pacific and the Canadian Pacific Railway is this. The Grand Trunk Pacific has not yet materialized; we do not know whether it is going to be built or not; but the Canadian Pacific Railway enjoys a monopoly under legislation of this parliament passed years ago, and we can have no control over the rates on its main line; whereas the Grand Trunk Pacific, if it is ever built, will be subject to the Railway Act, and the railway commission will have control over its rates. So that we do not want the Canadian Northern to amalgamate with the Canadian Pacific Railway because we have no control, whereas we do not care whether it amalgamates with the other or not, because we have control.

Mr. CLARKE. Then it seems to me that clause eight is only put in for effect, and that it is practically of little or no value. If it is an advantage to have two lines through that country, and a greater advantage to have three lines, why not make provision now, when incorporating another transcontinental line, to prevent it amalgamating with this road ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We do not legislate in that way.

Mr. CLARKE. Probably not. It seems to me, however, that if this discussion has done nothing else, it has elicited the fact that the idea of aiding the Grand Trunk Pacific this session, at any rate, is at an end. The legislation which we are about to pass is legislation which was foreshadowed about fourteen months ago, in an announcement made by the premier respecting aid to this road. We are crystallizing into law a policy announced fourteen months ago; and the government have not progressed one step in the solution of the transportation problem since that time. I had the pleasure of being in the North-west last fall, and I can appreciate, from the point of view of the people living there, the importance of giving aid to this road. Nobody is opposing the granting of this aid; but we are objecting to the meagre information given by the government respecting their policy on this great transportation problem. There is no doubt that the roads the government are assisting by this Bill will be profitable almost from the moment they are completed, because they will pass through a most fertile country. Why does the government not elaborate its policy, and give further assistance to carry this road to the Pacific coast? Let us have two transcontinental roads before we commence agitating for a third. I think that is a reasonable proposition, which ought to commend itself to the government. At any rate, I am satisfied from the statements made by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals and by the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis) that this clause eight is of no practical value at all; and, that if the Canadian Northern and the Canadian Pacific wish to come together, they can do so, so that a few years hence we may wake up to find that instead of having two transcontinental lines we have only one.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton). Just a word on that point. Does the hon. gentleman know that two railway companies incorporated by this parliament cannot amalgamate without special authority? My own view is that the first three lines of this clause have practically very little legal effect. They may stand as a declaration of the policy of parliament; but inasmuch as no two railway companies can amalgamate, as has been pointed out by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, without a special Act of parliament, that lack of power would be just the same as if these two clauses were not there. As pointed out by the Minister of Railways and Canals, the important part of the clause is that which forbids any traffic arrangement except such as may be approved by the Governor in Council. So that, as a matter of fact, the views of the hon. gentleman and our views are practically the same. There is not much to dispute.

Mr. CLARKE. Are we not appointing a railway commission to regulate rates, and would they not have power to do that?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Although this clause would have no legal value, I do not agree that it has no practical value. It has this practical value, that it is formally one of the conditions on which this aid is granted; and if at any other time, one of these companies should come forward with a proposal to amalgamate, they would be met with the statement: You knew at the beginning that you received this aid on this condition. If parliament should see fit to waive that condition, of course this clause would have no legal effect, but it is there as a notice of the desire and the intention of parliament and a declaration of the policy of parliament.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. That is just what I have in mind. It may be that this clause has no legal value now, but if parliament makes it a clear condition, that condition will have just the effect which my hon. friend the Minister of Finance has stated. I am asking parliament to declare that an amalgamation cannot be made with American railways any more than with the Canadian Pacific Railway. It seems to me that if there be any reason for inserting this clause with regard to the Canadian Pacific Railway, we should make it equally applicable to American corporations who may have designs on this Canadian railway. Such corporation will be aware of the fact that this parliament has pledged itself not to allow of any amalgamation. It will act as a warning, even if it has no legal value. We are about unanimous in granting the aid we are asked to give, and it seems to me that such a condition, as the one I am urging, should not be opposed, especially, in view of the fact that we are providing against amalgamation with the Canadian Pacific Railway. Mr. Hill's system is more to be feared than the Canadian Pacific Railway. If we fear the Canadian Pacific Railway to such an extent that we insert this clause, we should not hesitate in applying the same clause to American railways.

Mr. CLARKE. And the Grand Trunk Railway.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. That is a horse of another colour. That is another question altogether. Perhaps we are not proceeding on right lines at all. I am not sure that we are. My hon. friend from Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis) has just stated to the House what is in the minds of many people. He has led us to fear that our railways, which we are helping every year by millions, may some day be bought up by foreign corporations and managed in their interests. What he says is perfectly true. We cannot prevent a corporation placing its stocks and bonds in the markets of the world. Some two years ago, it was very well known to those who follow those matters closely, that Mr. Hill and other American capitalists were very seriously contemplating purchasing a majority of the Canadian Pacific Railway stock. They tried to do so to the best of their ability, but as the Canadian Pacific Railway stock is scattered all over the world, it is very difficult to obtain control of it. The stock of a corporation like the Canadian Northern is, however, not so difficult a proposition. There is a good deal therefore in the argument of my hon. friend from Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis). We are helping railways, we are pledging the credit of the country in their behalf, we are pledging parliament in this case to the extent of $9,000,000. I hope we will not be obliged to pay the interest, but if we are to be called upon in a week or two to pledge the credit of parliament again for a transcontinental line at $20,000 a mile, or less or more, the question will become more serious, and it would be better to pause now and apply some kind of principle to matters of such importance. When we were discussing in the Railway Committee, the charter of the Grand Trunk Pacific, all the members of that committee without exception, understood that the Grand Trunk Pacific would run through Canadian territory from beginning to end. To-day, however, we do not seem to entertain the same view.

Mr. DAVIS. Supposing the stock of those railways passed into the hands of Americans to-morrow, would they not still be Canadian railways subject to Canadian laws, just as they are to-day ?

Hon. Mr. TARTE. There is nothing more easy than for a railway company to carry its trade either to American or Canadian ports. Transportation from west to east means through-rates. Suppose Mr. Hill bought the majority of the stock in the Canadian Pacific Railway, the maritime provinces and even the port of Montreal would not see much of the western trade. He would naturally divert as much as he could to his own ports and railways.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What line does Mr. Hill own into New York or Boston ?

Hon. Mr. TARTE. He has connections with other American lines.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What lines does he own ?

Hon. Mr. TARTE. He has very fine lines to Duluth and St. Paul.

Mr. DAVIS. Might I ask the hon. gentleman another question ?

Hon. Mr. TARTE. My hon. friend can speak when I am through. Here is the port of Duluth and near it is the Canadian port of Fort William, here is Buffalo and here is Port Colborne—Buffalo on the one side and Port Colborne on the other. Mr. Hill has his organization on the lakes as on the land, and to-day he is carrying his trade to American channels. Not one pound of freight under his control goes through Canadian channels. Suppose he bought the Canadian Northern to-morrow, he would divert the traffic over that road to the American ports where all his interests are centred. No one can doubt that. We are subsidizing railways right and left, we are prepared to give to anybody who wants to build railways, without making sure that the trade will be developed through Canadian channels. That is a mistake. I am not here to give advice to the government, and probably it would not be accepted, if I did ; but I hold such strong views on that point that I must express them. This country is growing, and it is bound to grow very fast, from east to west. Let us, then, keep this growing trade to ourselves. That is not asking too much, surely. We are not legislating for to-day. We are only six millions to-day ; but at the rate at which immigrants are coming in to the west and into all the provinces, we may be ten millions within a very few years indeed. I say again, let us manage our national business to-day in such a way that we shall not be reproached by those who come after us with having been imprudent.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Before the committee rises, I wish to say a word or two. The discussion which has gone on nearly all the afternoon, in my opinion, has been irregular and not in accordance with the rules of the House. The principle of the Bill is to be discussed, when the motion is made for the second reading. But when the Bill comes to the Committee of the Whole and is gone over clause by clause, each clause is a separate subject in itself, and when that clause has been discussed we cannot return to it. But there has been no such subject before the committee this afternoon. Hon. members have wandered from one end of the Bill to the other. When we resume this evening, I hope we shall take the sections up in regular order and discuss each by itself.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not wish to dissent from the ruling you gave before six o'clock, Mr. Chairman, though I feel like disagreeing with it to some extent. But before section 1 is adopted, I desire to ask the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair) a question. There is an impression throughout the country that the government have not settled their policy on the subject of transportation. Certainly, so far as this House is concerned we have no information. To give the House hope of being enlightened, and to satisfy the country as far as possible in the meantime, I would like to ask the hon. minister if he hopes to be able at an early day to put the House in possession of the facts as to what the government policy is with regard to transcontinental lines ?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Unless I am overruled by the committee, I must stand by the ruling I have made. I invite discussion of that rule, and, if I am overruled, I must submit with the best grace I can.

Mr. SPROULE. I respectfully submit, Mr. Chairman, that I am neither discussing nor infringing the rule of the Chair. But I submit also that I have a right to ask a question, and I intend to avail myself of that right when any Bill is before this House.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have no objection, if you will allow me, Mr. Chairman, to answer the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Sproule) question. It is the very strong hope and expectation of the government that, within a very few days, we shall be able to make an announcement to the country on the subject referred to.

Mr. WILSON. I would like to ask the hon. minister if he sustains your ruling and is going to proscribe the discussion of the whole Bill in the committee ? I happened not to be in the House when the second reading was proposed, and so had not an opportunity to give my views upon it. I presume that if you, Mr. Chairman, adhere closely to your ruling, I shall be obliged to move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again, in order to have an opportunity to speak.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I would point out to my hon. friend (Mr. Wilson) that we are now discussing the first clause and that clause contains the provision for the guarantee of the bonds of this road which is the essential feature of the whole matter. That affords pretty broad scope. I think there is no question but that the ruling of the Chair is correct, but that ruling would not preclude a discussion of all that is covered by the first clause—and it covers the essence of the whole matter.

Mr. WILSON. Then the hon. minister (Hon. Mr. Fielding) does not object to a general discussion?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Within the limits of section 1.

Mr. WILSON. There is this to say—that a member of this House who speaks but seldom, is more apt to stray beyond the real question than one who speaks every day. I represent a rural constituency, one that is opposed to anything like bonusing a railway. My constituents feel that the time has come when it should stop. We have already bonused railways, I think, to the extent of $300,000,000, and if we——

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. How many railways has the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wilson) in his riding ?

Mr. WILSON. I am very glad the hon. minister (Hon. Mr. Blair) has asked that question. For, on a previous occasion when I was discussing this point, I was twitted by the hon. Minister of Finance with the suggestion that I had in my constituency all the railways that were wanted. At that time, we had 2½ miles of railway that had been bonused. But since hon. gentlemen opposite came into power, who were pledged against bonuses, they have added six or seven miles of bonused railway. These are the only roads in my constituency that have been bonused.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is not an answer to my question.

Mr. WILSON. What does the hon. minister wish to know ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. How many railways has the hon. gentleman in his riding ?

Mr. WILSON. We have the Bay of Quinté Railway that runs from Napanee to Deseronto, seven miles; and another extension of that road from Napanee to the limit of my riding on the east, about 2½ miles; and then the Grand Trunk runs through it from east to west.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Is that bonused ?

Mr. WILSON. No, Sir.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Not bonused by Canada ?

Mr. WILSON. No, if the hon. minister thinks it was, will he tell me when ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am asking the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wilson).

Mr. WILSON. I can tell the hon. gentleman how it was bonused. I think he gave us an answer to that question himself. They were given a loan of $15,000,000 I believe. That was taken over at confederation at $25,000,000, and has been running ever since. I presume it represents about $100,000,000 that they owe now, and I guess, always will owe. Now, it is just this way : I object to a few men getting together, millionaires or others, forming a company, and coming to the government, and asking for a bonus for their benefit. I think that is unfair and undesirable. Besides that, we have the authority of the best railway men in this country and the United States for saying that where railways are required it is not necessary to bonus them, because where there is business for railways they will be built, money will be found to build them. Besides that, these gentlemen on the treasury benches, when they came into office, were strongly opposed to bonusing railways. I remember distinctly a letter that was written by the present Minister of Trade and Commerce, in which he distinctly said that the policy of the Liberal party was against bonuses, and I think they got a good many votes all over Ontario on the strength of that. But since they have come into power, I think they have voted about $26,000,000 in bonuses, and I think they have paid out about $11,000,000. The people in my section of the country think it is time this should come to an end. We have various farmers' institutes, or farmers' associations, in my riding which have been passing resolutions lately, and I think they sent one of their resolutions to the government asking that no more bonuses should be given to railways. They met on the 20th of June and also passed a resolution opposing any guarantees being given to railways. The feeling is that if it is a good thing the railway company will own it, but if it is a bad thing, we shall have to take it ourselves. I wish to say that I am entirely opposed to this way of doing things. Again, I see no provision in the Bill as to what is to become of the money when the railway promoters go to London to sell the bonds. These bonds are guaranteed by the government, and no doubt will sell well. Now I see no provision in the Bill as to what is to become of that money. I think it is a reasonable presumption that the railway men will control that as they like, that is to say, if this Bill is to be our guide. I do not think they should be allowed to do that, I think if we guarantee their bonds, the money should go into the hands of the government and should be paid out on progress estimates then we would be sure that the money would go into the building of the road. But if it goes into their hands —I am not going to say they will make an improper use of it—but they will have an opportunity of doing it if they like. Therefore, I wish to record my voice against this kind of aid to railways. Let the people who want to build railways furnish the money to build them. If it is thought that we must have railways and we cannot get them built in any other way, we had better build them ourselves and own them, rather than give bonuses like this. There is another trouble I see. The whole of this indebtedness is coming due at one time, at the end of fifty years. Now is it probable that this railway is going to put away a portion of its earnings every year to pay that large sum when it comes due ? I think if we are going to do this at all, there should be a sinking fund so that they will pay so much a year, and you would have provided when the fifty years was up that money would be paid, and the government would not be called upon to pay it.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Before the clause is adopted, I wish to make a few remarks in reference to some observations made by the Minister of Railways and the Minister of the Interior, in the discussion which occurred upon this first clause. I think I am perfectly in order, because I am considering that portion of the road which is being given in security, besides the portion which is intended to be built. The Minister of Railways stated, and I was glad to hear him make the observation, that the government had reserved the power of compelling the Northern Railway, if necessary, to rebuild that portion of the road which passes through the state of Minnesota, and to make it pass entirely through Canadian territory.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I said there was an understanding they would do that.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I understood from the Minister of Railways that there was an understanding in that direction. I am with those who believe that that road, or any transcontinental road, should be a purely Canadian road. The Minister of the Interior said that it was unnecessary to compel this road, which had a more facile means of communication than passing through Minnesota, to go to the large expense of passing entirely through Canadian territory. He instanced the road that passes through the state of Maine to St. John. Let me remind the Minister of Railways and the Minister of the Interior of a fact which has been brought out in discussion lately, that where the path of communication, for either exports or imports, passes through a foreign country, that foreign country virtually controls the political existence of the country to which the road belongs. In all cases where it is possible, I think our railroads should pass exclusively through Canadian territory. The question arose lately in reference to the Bagdad Railway passing through Asia Minor to India, and the principle was laid down by the greatest thinkers that the country which controls the path of commerce controls the country where it originates. Therefore, we should insist that this road should pass if possible through Canadian territory. The Minister of Railways said, oh, what is the difference ? What is to prevent American capitalists from purchasing the majority of the stock in a Canadian railway ? The purchase by a foreign corporation of a Canadian road does not give them the absolute control of the bonds. There are many means of control. For instance, we might insist that the majority of the directors of any railroad in Canada should be British subjects. That alone is sufficient to give us the control of our road, though the majority of the stock might be held by Americans. The minister says, well, what is the object of anything of that kind ? What is the object of a provision in an Act of parliament to prevent the Grand Trunk Railway or the Canadian Pacific Railway from obtaining control of this road ? He says such a provision is useless in an Act of parliament. Before there could be an amalgamation with the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway or any other railway, they would have to get authority from this parliament, not only before the owners could sell the road, but before they could transfer its control. Then what is the use of putting that into an Act of parliament? No use whatever. It is only a matter of show, only a matter of deceiving the public. The Minister of Finance said that this was a notification to the public generally, or to the people who invested in this road, that at no time would the Canadian parliament authorize a transfer of the Canadian Northern Railway to the Canadian Pacific Railway. But the parliament of Canada can at any time change that decision, and give authority to this road to sell or transfer any corporate powers that it possesses, or to amalgamate with the Grand Trunk Railway or the Canadian Pacific Railway. Then a provision of this kind is useless in the Bill, it is only for the purpose of deceiving the public, the people of Canada who are investing their money in this undertaking. Then the Minister of Railways says that they can virtually obtain control of it. If they can virtually obtain control of it, what is the use of putting a provision of this kind in the Act? If they can get a majority of the stock and can get control of the institution, what is the use of making a provision of this kind? There is no use whatever of putting it into an Act of parliament. Then, provisions of this kind are useless, because the parliament of Canada can at any future time by legislation give to the Grand Trunk Railway Company, or the Canadian Pacific Railway, or any other railway, authority to amalgamate with this particular road. As to American roads, the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals instanced some roads which the Americans at the present time have control of and which the parliament of Canada gave them control of. If they have obtained control from the parliament of Canada, parliament ought never to have consented to anything of the kind. The only legislation I am aware of that has been passed by the parliament of Canada is in reference to the bridge at Niagara Falls and to the electric road from Detroit to Niagara Falls, which has been given power to amalgamate with a Canadian electric railway company. It was wrong to allow them to do anything of the kind. The parliament of Canada should be very careful to prevent any American railway getting control of any corporate railway company in the Dominion of Canada. It is against the policy of the country. I warned the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals in the Railway Committee in reference to that particular subject. I warned him against giving power to any American railway to obtain control or to obtain corporate powers over a railway in the Dominion of Canada. One provision which should be embodied in the general Railway Act and in the charter given to any railway company in this country should be that a majority of the directors of the road should be British subjects.

Then, in reference to the general policy of the government we have not heard anything from the hon. Minister of Railways or the Minister of the Interior. The hon. Minister of Railways states that upon a subsequent day shortly the policy of the government will be declared in reference to transportation and in reference to these transcontinental lines. But, here is a subject which peculiarly interests the people of the country. We are granting a subsidy to a transcontinental line. The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals and the hon. Minister of the Interior may say that the government have not considered their policy in reference to that. They should have considered it. They should have been prepared, when they brought down a motion for the purpose of assisting a transcontinental line, as I say this is, to state their whole policy in reference to transportation and in reference to transcontinental lines, and in reference as well to the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, whose Bill is at present before this House. In connection with this Canadian Northern project they should have considered their policy in reference to the Grand Trunk Pacific as well as in reference to the question of the subsidy if it ever comes before this House. If we are to judge from the observations of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, we must conclude that this is abandoned for the present. Then, they should state the policy of the government as to whether they intend to abandon it or as to whether they intend to consider it in reference to the Canadian Northern. The parliament of Canada and the people of this country, when they are asked to subsidize 600 miles of road, or virtually to build it, because the amount of the subsidy is within $5,000 per mile of the cost as estimated by the department of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, are entitled to a statement from the government as to what their policy is in reference to the transcontinental system of roads and in reference to transportation from the North-west to this section of the country.

Mr. WRIGHT. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Haggart) one question before he sits down. He says that we should have in the Railway Act a provision that the majority of the directors of a railway in Canada should be British subjects. Take the case of the Kingston and Pembroke Railway. Mr. Flower, of New York, owns most of the stock. He appoints directors here in Canada, who are Canadians, to run the road and do all the work. These are British subjects; still, Mr. Flower runs the road to suit himself, because if these parties that he hired here did not do as he told them to do, they would be dismissed. I cannot see that there will be any particular advantage in having a provision of that kind incorporated in the Railway Act.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I can tell the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wright) my opinion in reference to the matter. When a corporation which has its entity in a foreign country and which, by the laws of this country, is enabled to obtain control of a railway in this country, and where you interfere with laws given to a foreign corporation, it becomes the corporate powers or rights which our laws give to a foreign corporation, it becomes then a question between Great Britain and the United States how far the investment in the entity or corporation which they receive from the American company is interfered with by legislation in lessening their interest or affecting it in any manner, and that is a strong reason why no corporation which has its power or entity in a foreign country should be allowed to obtain corporate powers over a railway in this Dominion of Canada.

Mr. WRIGHT. I recognize fully what the hon. gentleman would like to protect, and I believe these interests should be protected. All I say is that I cannot see how he is going to protect it in the way he mentions.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman must see that the entity or corporate powers which are given to a foreign company are entirely different from the corporate powers which we give to a similar institution in this country. If the corporate powers which are obtained in New Jersey or in New York give more extensive or greater powers than are given to a corporation in this country, the greater powers which they had obtained from New Jersey or New York state would be the governing or ruling powers over the corporation which had been obtained here, thus giving them an opportunity of obtaining wider powers than the powers which this parliament gave to the corporation or entity over which they have control.

Mr. BARKER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Wright) asks what advantage it would be if a director should be resident in this country. It seems to me that answer is a very simple one. A director who is a resident of this country would be held directly responsible to the courts of this country for any illegal act he did, while a director who lived in New York could escape the jurisdiction of the courts.

Mr. KEMP. Mr. Chairman, I do not rise for the purpose of obstructing this Bill in any sense. I think that, perhaps, seeing that these people were promised aid at the last session of the House, this Bill might go through with perhaps some amendments to it. I wish to refer to what was said this afternoon in regard to the traffic gathered by this railway west of Fort William or Port Arthur being diverted to American channels and American ports. I would like to draw the attention of the committee—I suppose the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals knows more about it than I do—to the fact that since the removal of canal tolls this season and up to within a week ago more grain has gone over the St. Lawrence route than went down by that route during the whole of last season. I have the utmost confidence in the St. Lawrence route and in the fact that in future the great bulk of grain produced in the North-west Territories will find its way out by way of the St. Lawrence route. The reason that the grain has not been going down so much as we think it should have gone has been a lack of Canadian bottoms plying on the lakes. These ships, we are glad to know, are being built, and this year probably there will be twice the number operating that were operated last year. I think we may depend upon it that in future the outlet for the grain of the North-west Territories during the season of open navigation will be through the St. Lawrence route. I believe we will cope successfully with Buffalo and New York, and even now that is taking place. I wish in this connection to ask the Minister of Railways—and I ask the question because of so many rumours in reference to this line of railway being built by either the government or by a private corporation, from the city of Quebec to Winnipeg—I ask if the minister has any data or any surveys of this country at present in regard to the country through which this railway will pass ? Is it a country of mountains or an agricultural country ; is it fertile or is it barren ? Whether the government builds the road or whether it is built by a private corporation, it will be necessary for us to know what this railroad will cost approximately before entering into such a gigantic enterprise.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My hon. friend (Mr. Kemp) will realize that he is speaking outside of the subject.

Mr. KEMP. I am just asking a question.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The government could not carry on any surveys or make any explorations unless money were furnished it by parliament for that purpose, and parliament has not supplied the means to provide for such an undertaking. It does not follow, however, that there has not been a survey and exploration between Winnipeg and Quebec. I believe that for some time past surveyors representing not one but more railway companies have been traversing various sections of that country. It goes without saying that the government would not strike one blow in the way of construction —no matter if it should determine upon the policy of construction—until it had taken all necessary and proper means to satisfy itself that the country was one through which a railway could be advantageously constructed, and also as to the character of the country from a railway construction point of view.

Mr. KEMP. Whether the government builds the road or whether it is built by a private corporation these necessary steps would have to be taken.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The necessary steps would have to be taken by some one.

Mr. McCARTHY. I am still in some doubt, Sir, whether the measure before us is being discussed as a transcontinental road or not. I understood that hon. gentlemen opposite at the beginning of this debate rather insinuated that they did not think the government had made a sufficient announcement upon that point, but latterly, however, they have been discussing it as a transcontinental road. That being so, I am rather at a loss to understand why these gentlemen have not placed upon the Order paper the same kind of resolutions which they deem so essential in regard to that Bill which I had the honour to introduce into this House. If it is essential that a transcontinental road before being subsidized or aided by this government should require to have stipulated in its Bill, a clause that the directors and officers should be British subjects, I am amazed that that amendment is not now on the Order paper in connection with this Bill. If it is necessary that a transcontinental railway, whether it be an all-Canadian road or otherwise should find an outlet for its freight only through a Canadian port, I am also surprised that these hon. gentlemen who were suggesting that it was so essential in respect to another railway should not deem it as essential with regard to this railway. We had a very lengthy discussion in respect to another railway all of which pointed to the necessity of its being an all-Canadian road, or otherwise forsooth the Canadian parliament should not grant one dollar of aid. It was also suggested that rather than grant aid to that railway if it went to any other but a Canadian port, it should take a circuitous route and go 100 or 150 miles out of its way to reach a Canadian port, and thus transport its freight that additional mileage, and of course at an additional cost to our producers, or else it was not worthy of aid at the hands of the Canadian parliament. As I understand it these absolutely essential things for the other railway are not now suggested with regard to this railway. I did not agree with these propositions at the time; I do not agree with them now. I believe that if we are to export successfully the products of this country, they must be borne to the sea-board by the shortest route in the shortest possible time and in the cheapest possible way. But Sir, I direct attention to the fact that we have none of these motions upon the Order paper to-day which were deemed to be so necessary before aid should be granted to the other railway. We have no stipulation that the terminus of this road must be a Canadian port and that the freight originating on this line must be exported through a Canadian port. Not only that, but we were told that any railway that is entitled to aid from this parliament should have a clause inserted in its subsidy Bill, or in some other Bill connected with it, that they should build the sections of the railway simultaneously and under the direction of the parliament of Canada. If that be true in respect to one railway, why is it not true in respect to another railway? Why should not the rule apply to one railway as well as to another? I am not objecting to the aid given to this Canadian Northern Railway, nor am I protesting against it in any way, but it is well known that their charters extend from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and yet in view of this transcontinental aspect of the line, some hon. gentlemen do not seem to think that the rules they apply to another suggested transcontinental railway should apply to this. I call attention to this simply because of the unparalleled length of the discussion that has taken place with respect to the Bill pertaining to another railway. Not only that, but when this other railway was not seeking aid so far as the parliament of Canada is advised, though there might be newspaper rumours to the effect that they might hope for aid or possibly that they might apply for aid—but only when they are simply asking for a charter, we are told by notices of motion and by lengthy speeches in the House——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman is altogether outside of this section. He is discussing a matter that is not before the committee. I hope the hon. gentleman will come down to a discussion of the question before the House.

Mr. McCARTHY. Yes——

Mr. HENDERSON. I think your point of order is well taken, Mr. Chairman. I have no doubt that the hon. gentleman (Mr. McCarthy) thought that it was the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Bill that was before the House.

Mr. McCARTHY. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that my remarks are as germane, if not more germane, to the question before the Chair than the interruption of the hon. gentleman from Halton (Mr. Henderson). I do not know that I occupy unduly the attention of the House in respect to matters which are not germane, but I do know that on several occasions I have heard debates in this House which were not so germane to the question before the Chair than the argument which I am attempting to direct the attention of the House to. However, whether it be the question that is before the House or not, the issue is a question of giving material aid to the road which is under discussion, and, the question also arises whether it is to be a transcontinental road or not. It is contended on one side that it is to be a transcontinental road, and it is known that charters are possessed by that company that will make it a transcontinental road. Whether or not it is the intention of the government to assist to make it a transcontinental road is another question. I do not for a moment question your ruling, Mr. Chairman; I abide by it. I was not in the House when the direct question was put, but I think I heard the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Kemp) discussing whether the directors should be British subjects or not and having taken my cue from him, if it is a wrong cue, I apologize.

Mr. KEMP. I do not think I referred to that subject. I was referring to Canadian ships on the lakes.

Mr. McCARTHY. I apologize. It was the hon. gentleman from Lanark (Hon. Mr. Haggart) who made the suggestion. Having discussed that question, and having been ruled out of order, I wish to say that if it is considered necessary in respect to one road to have a clause directing that any of the freight originating in Canada should be exported through or by a Canadian port, it is just as essential in this case as in any other. I am not saying that it is essential or to our advantage to have such a clause, but I call the attention of the House to a proposition which is on the Order paper with respect to another railway. I would also point out that it is just as essential in this case as in others that the president of the road should be a British subject. We have been told that the proper place to protect ourselves in respect to all these questions is in a Bill granting relief. I simply point out that if it is sought not to discriminate in favour of one railway as against another, these provisions which have been urged so persistently in respect to one railway should be dropped if they are not urged against another.

Mr. SPROULE. I wish to ask the hon. minister if it is intended that the government shall raise the funds to be paid out through these trustees, and if so, on what principle ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Of course, it is quite impossible for any person to say just what machinery the government would be advised by the Department of Justice is the wisest to adopt when the work is being undertaken. I have no doubt in my own mind that the government would not contemplate for a moment the idea of handing these bonds over in a body to be dealt with by the company. What I am sure the government will see the necessity of doing, when they come to deal with the matter, will be to furnish the bonds as the progress of the work will justify—no faster than that. The proposals made by the company to the financiers will cover the whole issue, and they will have an understanding with them that the money is to be supplied just as the bonds are supplied. I have not had any consultation with the Canadian Northern people on this branch of the subject at all, but it will be dealt with in a business like way, I apprehend.

Mr. SPROULE. I presume, then, it is understood that the bonds will all sell at par, and that you would not issue all the bonds at once, otherwise they would draw interest from the time they were issued, although they might not be used till some time afterwards.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It has been suggested by the hon. member for Lennox (Mr. Wilson) that these bonds will be pledged, and that the company will receive all the money and be free to do what they please with it. I would point out that the Bill provides that the time and manner of the issue of the sureties shall be such as the Governor in Council approves of, and the hon. gentlemen may trust that the government will see that the money is placed either in the Dominion treasury or under the control of the government in some way, certainly not under the control of the company.

Mr. SPROULE. Would it not be well to make provision for the repayment of the loan at the expiration of the time ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The government will consider all that. There is no doubt that there will be a certain length of time during which it will not be expected that the company will make any large contribution towards a sinking fund; but the time might come when they would be in a position to do so; and that is one of the things to which the government will give its attention and arrange on the most satisfactory terms and conditions that may be settled upon.

Mr. SPROULE. It is to satisfy ourselves on these points that we desire to get the information, because I have no doubt that under the Bill the government have the power to take these safeguards; but unless they intimate that they intend to take them, they might be overlooked or neglected.

Mr. WILSON. I do not see why that clause should not be in the Bill, and I am surprised that the Minister of Railways and Canals should say that there is any discretion in that company in regard to that matter, and that they could sell the bonds from time to time as they were called for.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I did not suggest that. I said that no doubt the company will make its arrangements with the financial men in regard to the whole issue, and receive the money from those people as they required it.

Mr. WILSON. I would still prefer a clause in the Bill to regulate the issue of the bonds rather than leave it in the hands of the Governor in Council.

On section 2—security by first lien on lines aided.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is the Minister of Railways and Canals in a position to give the House any more definite information as to the terms and conditions of the mortgage, which ought really to be before the House at this stage, in order to give us a thorough appreciation of what the terms of the arrangement between the government and the company really are.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, I am not able to make any fuller statement than I made the other day, when the hon. gentleman had the assurance that the matter he referred to would be considered by the Department of Justice when it came to address itself to the preparation of these securities.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It leaves the matter in certainly a very indefinite condition. I am quite sure that when a similar proposition was before the legislature of Manitoba, the mortgage which was given the government of that province was placed before the House at the same time, so that the House, in considering the proposal of the government, had before it the proposal as a whole and knew exactly what was proposed to be done. This arrangement might take a dozen different forms, some of which might be regarded by the House as entirely satisfactory, so far as the security would go, and there might be other forms which might not commend themselves to the House. As it is, we are just taking a leap in the dark regarding this matter of security; and while it is quite true that the aid of the Department of Justice will be invoked, nevertheless, where the terms of the mortgage involve so much that is of the highest importance, it seems to me a matter of very great regret that the hon. Minister of Railways is not able either to place before the House the document which the government proposes to take or to give us any information whatever on the question of what the terms of the proposed mortgage shall be.

On section 3—lien to rank after existing charges on all property of the company,

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I understood from the hon. minister the other day that if default were made in the payment of the interest, the government would be in a position to exercise the power, under its mortgage of taking possession of the road. How is the government to exercise that power unless by payment to the bondholders of the full amount of their bonds ? Suppose there should be a default in the payment of the interest before the whole of the bonds become due, how will the hon. gentleman exercise the power of taking possession of the road ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. In what form or to what extent the powers which belong to the government, as guarantors of the interest, shall be exercised, in case of default, is a matter which must be entirely in the discretion of the Governor General in Council. It is not intended that the government should tie its hands as regards the exercise of these powers. On the contrary the intention is to secure to the government all the rights which would belong to any one, under similar circumstances, in case the company made default in the payment of interest. I do not by this wish to suggest the government would consider that, in the early life of a road, it would be just and equitable to enforce its rights, whatever they may be, and I do not think that parliament would consider such drastic action as proper or fair treatment or that the company should not allow a reasonable opportunity to get its road into operation or establish its business before being treated as a defaulter. But that is a matter within the discretion of the government, subject always to the control of parliament.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I am aware that the hon. minister would not care to exercise the power of taking possession of the road or any of the powers which the bond-holders might exercise upon a simple default. But the trouble is this : Here is a default in the payment by the company of interest to the government. The bond-holders, however, are paid their interest by the government, and they may not choose to part with the bonds. They may prefer to keep possession of them until the end of the fifty years, and the government will have to pay the interest during all that time. How can the government exercise any right to take possession of the property or exercise the control which would belong to the owners of the bonds ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Where there is default, the government must have the right, according to the terms of the mortgage, of taking possession of the property.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. But the bond-holders are in possession of the bonds, and the government can only exercise its rights on the understanding that it pays the shareholders the interest and the total amount of the bonds at the end of the fifty years.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Default in the payment of interest would be a ground upon which the government would claim the right to take possession of the property, if it chose to do so, and operate the road.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I understand that the government are going to put in the mortgage the right to exercise the power of taking possession at any time the company is in default, just as the bond-holders would do.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Quite so. But I am not going to say that we will arbitrarily stipulate that that power must be exercised in one, two or three years. The government will reserve the power to do so according to the arrangements stipulated in the mortgage.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What the hon. member for Lanark (Hon. Mr. Haggart) suggests has a good deal of force in it. It will be a complicated matter to work out if the mortgage be taken in the form first suggested by the hon. Minister of Railways. There would be no difficulty, however, if you simply take a mortgage, which would protect the government in case it should be called on to pay out any moneys under its guarantee. It would be simple to provide that the government, having paid six or twelve or eighteen months interest, would be in a position to foreclose the road.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It would not be necessary to have two mortgages for that purpose. One would be sufficient.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I have never suggested two mortgages. I have always suggested that, inasmuch as the proposed bond-holders, mortgage would give the bonds no additional value, because they are guaranteed by the government, the only necessity for a mortgage is to indemnify the government against its guarantee.

Mr. FRASER. And to prevent any other lien.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Yes.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I make the suggestion because I know that some questions of a similar nature arose on a former occasion, and the government could not exercise its power until the whole amount fell due.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We will take good care that that is not the condition in this case.

Mr. SPROULE. In what position would the government be, in the event of the company making default under its agreement with Manitoba? The Manitoba mortgage covers the whole line, and not only the portion it subsidized. Supposing the Canadian Northern defaulted to Manitoba under their agreement, what position would the present government be in with regard to the securities then?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. When that event occurs, my hon. friend may be sure that we shall direct our immediate attention to it. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) understands me—I do not wish to express an opinion upon that point without having had an opportunity to consider it. It does not alter the case here, because we take our second security on the other portions of the line as an additional security. A very large proportion of their mileage is subject to only $10,000 per mile indebtedness, and we take additional security on that.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not suppose there would be very much difficulty in ascertaining what would take place in the case suggested, if there should be a default, and the mortgage to His Majesty in the right of the Manitoba government should be foreclosed. That being a prior lien upon the line mentioned, foreclosure of that mortgage would cut out the second charge of this government upon those lines, but upon those lines only, leaving His Majesty in right of the government of Canada with a prior lien——

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I can understand that the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) wished to know what we would do in such a case —whether we would take over the property, and so on. I could not answer that now.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Whether the government would buy in at a foreclosure sale—I suppose that would depend on circumstances.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I could not answer that question now.

Mr. LENNOX. I understand the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) to be directing his attention not to the question of what the government would do if that contingency arises, but what steps they were taking now to protect themselves and the people in case of a difficulty arising with regard to the Manitoba mortgage.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The only thing that occurs to me is that possibly, parliament might give us power to raise sufficient money, when the contingency arose, to buy the lines in.

Mr. LENNOX. What I understand the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) to direct his attention to is not what the government would do when the difficulty arises, but what precaution the government proposes to take now in getting this security to protect themselves in case the railway company should default in regard to that prior claim. Now, it is unfortunate, I think that the government have not brought down to the House some general outline, at all events, of the scheme they propose as a matter of security to the government. There have been several pertinent remarks from this side of the House, and I understand that what we want, so far as we can, is to have an assurance from the minister that proper steps will be taken, so that, if the default happens in the payment of interest or anything of that kind, there may be the means in the hands of the country to protect the interest of the people. The hon. minister, a few minutes ago, gave a reply which was in this line—that he did not assume that the government would like to tie its hands by saying they would immediately act upon default. That I can well understand. I do not think that this House would want them to act hurriedly in case of some slight delay in the payment of interest. But what I understand we would like to have the government keep in mind in completing this transaction is that the necessary stipulations be put in the document drawn up, so that the government may be in a position, in case of default, to secure themselves and the people they represent. It is not necessary that these stipulations and provisions should be immediately exercised, but there should be such terms in the mortgage as to enable the government to control the situation when it arises, if it does arise. If that is done, we shall have no ground to complain with regard to the government, but if it is not done, we shall have great ground to complain. And, if we on this side fail to call the attention of the government to this point at the present time, the people will have great ground of complaint against us. I think it is to be regretted that this document, in outline, at all events, has not been submitted to parliament. But as it has not been, the duty will much more rest upon the minister and upon the government to see to it that there are such stipulations in it as will enable the government to control the situation in case of default.

Now, I would like to direct attention to another point, and that is with regard to what the hon. minister said a few minutes ago about payments—that he would not expect the railway company, within a few years, to be able to do anything towards reducing this indebtedness. That I would anticipate. I understand from the intention expressed by the minister that the railway company are not to be called upon to pay the bonds to the parties advancing the money for fifty years. Yet, it is not inconsistent with that provision that protection should be afforded, either by a deposit with the government or some other way, that there shall be some reduction of the indebtedness far short of fifty years. I think it is very desirable that that should be provided for, beginning within a reasonable number of years so that there shall be a regular and continual reduction of the indebtedness and, at the end of fifty years, it shall be substantially reduced.

On section 4,

The kind of securities to be guaranteed as aforesaid and the forms thereof, and the form and terms of the mortgage securing them, and the time and manner of the issue of the securities, and the form and manner of guarantee, shall be such as the Governor in Council approves of.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Can the hon. minister state whether or not there is to be any provision in the mortgage for a sinking fund at any time ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am not in a position to state definitely that there will be. I have already stated to the committee that that is a matter which is being considered. Hon. members are aware that in nearly all these great and successful railway undertakings the plan adopted is to retire the bonds as rapidly as possible, and make an issue of perpetual guaranteed stock. We all know from experience of railway corporations that the original debt or bond issue which has been incurred is not repaid. It stands against the property. The reason for not repaying it is not that the company might not be able to repay it, might not constitute a sinking fund which would in time wipe out the debt, but because demands—legitimate demands—are ever arising for the extension in all directions of the railway, the enlargement of its works, the increase of its capital expenditure. Instead of retiring the bonds, the company uses the means which would go to the retirement of those securities in the construction of new works and the carrying out of necessary improvements which are incidental to the work of every great railroad. I think that the government, perhaps, will not insist on a sinking fund, for the reason I have stated. It may be that when we get down to details it will be agreeable to both parties that guaranteed stock should be issued, and, retire all the bonds by the expiration of the fifty years. That may be agreed upon as being the best method of concluding the arrangement. All these things require to be canvassed and discussed fully, but we have first to get the authority of parliament in order to know that we could go on with the undertaking and give the guarantees which are necessary in the first instance. So I would not wish to be understood as making any more precise or definite statement on that subject. The committee may rest assured that no course will be taken except such as will absolutely guarantee the country from any possible loss on any securities which we take.

Mr. SPROULE. It is because the information is meagre that we have endeavoured to ascertain what is the understanding between the government and the company. It seems to me there has been no agreement reached in regard to details at all.

Mr. BARKER. I would like to ask the minister whether he proposes, under this clause, to ask the House to authorize the government to guarantee the interest in perpetuity upon any debentures that are issued ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, not at all.

Mr. BARKER. Well, you have power under this clause.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, we take it that we are limited as to the term for which our guarantee is to continue ; it cannot exceed fifty years. But it does include a guarantee of the principle as well as the interest, of course. But if it should ultimately transpire, when the arrangement is concluded that an issue of guaranteed stock is to be substituted for these bonds, to retire the bonds at maturity, that guaranteed stock would not be covered by any government guarantee. It would only be a new guarantee the same as the stock issued by the Canadian Pacific Railway, and which is authorized to be issued by various other companies, some of which have received their authority during the present session.

Mr. BROCK. No matter what view the government may take, or we may take of it, we know the view that a company such as is being formed will take of this. While they are able to borrow the money of this country at three per cent they are not at all likely to borrow money at four per cent to take up these bonds. The transaction that we are going into is one that will last for fifty years. That should be well understood at the present time, because other corporations are coming to the government, this matter is going to be extended, and it should be well considered. When you are loaning money for fifty years to this company at three per cent, you cannot well refuse a loan under similar circumstances to other institutions probably for a much larger sum. This country is going to become the banker at this very low rate of interest, I might almost say for all time to come, not only for this institution but for similar ones organized for the purpose of opening up the North-west, and for that great system of transportation which the government have had under consideration ; so that this loan may develop into an enormous sum. The government should consider that they are loaning money on terms which will incite others to come and ask for the same advantage. It is not like that kind of security that you can take to a bank or financial center and raise money upon it. This company has got to finance these bonds, not only through the present good times, but through all kinds of times that we may have during the next fifty years, probably many more years.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman surely understands that the government are not responsible for financing these bonds.

Mr. BARKER.

Mr. BROCK. You are, because without your endorsation these bonds could not be financed.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is true, but this is a totally different proposition to saying that the government are bound to see that these bonds are financed at a rate which means three per cent interest only. That means that the bonds must necessarily sell at par, I hope they may, it would be much to the advantage of the company that they should. Of course, if the bonds were being issued by the government itself, if we were making a loan and were issuing these bonds bearing three per cent interest, undoubtedly they would be good at par. But whether in an indirect way we guarantee the company holding these endorsed securities, is a matter to which I do not feel free to state with confidence for a moment.

Mr. BROCK. The government surely consider that when they endorse a bond they are responsible for it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Undoubtedly.

Mr. BROCK. And the bond to all intents and purposes is their own bond, and if that bond can be negotiated in the markets of the world at three per cent, it is not at all likely that an individual company will think for a moment of taking these bonds up, because they won't be able to go into the market and raise money at the same rate. Therefore I wish to impress upon the House and the country that what the government are doing at the present time is lending money, they are lending their credit, which is the same thing, to this company to build this road, and that the security they hold is the road itself, a road which I believe will be built for a few thousand dollars more than the government are guaranteeing. Under these circumstances I think the government should do as bankers would do. They not only want to know that they are going to get their interest, but they want to know how these bonds are going to be financed, they want to know the aranngements that are being made by this company for financing the bonds ; because the company do not pretend that they can pay this interest from the very date of the bonds, they have got to carry them for some little time. So the government should be assured that they are at once going to commence to pay interest upon them, and the company are going to finance them in such a way that the government will not be called upon, at any rate until the company have developed the new resources of the railroad, in such a way as to make this a good investment.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think myself that this government may very properly interest itself in this direction—I have had it in my mind for a long time—as to the manner in which these bonds will be disposed of, not because we would be responsible for any more than we guarantee, because we are really not obliged to pay any more than the face of the bonds on maturity. We would naturally desire, in the interest of the undertaking itself, and in the interest of our security, that the bonds should realize the highest possible amount so that all that money should go into the undertaking. The larger the amount that goes into the undertaking, the better the security will be. I can say to my hon. friend that this matter will not be lost sight of by the government, and that we shall look after the manner in which these bonds are financed.

Mr. BROCK. I may point out that it is possible that several hundred miles of this road might be built, and then the company might collapse, they might meet with great trouble in the financial market and might not be able to continue it. The government should, under these circumstances, say that they should have enough on hand to go on and finish the undertaking, because an unfinished undertaking is worthless. I think we are entering upon an expenditure that is likely to become very serious indeed, and that the government cannot take too many securities. We on this side of the House are very desirous that no stumbling block should be placed in the way of this company carrying out their undertaking, because we believe it to be largely in the interest of the country. Personally I have the greatest possible objection to piecemeal legislation and piecemeal railways. I think all this should have been done as part of that great plan of transportation that was suggested three years ago, and that we should have had our commissioners at work by this time, and this whole thing should have been thrown upon their shoulders. As it is at present, the government are taking upon their shoulders a good deal of the work that this commission should have had to do. But by the time they have appointed their commissioners and these have got to work, the government will have committed itself to such an extraordinary undertaking that the commissioners will find their hands tied by the time they get into office. I think that the government, on their own behalf as well as in the interest of this country, cannot take too many securities at the present time that this enterprise they have entered upon shall be so conducted as to make it safe for the country.

Mr. LENNOX. I would like to bring the hon. minister's attention to the question of a sinking fund. The answer which the hon. minister gave to the hon. leader of the opposition makes it pretty clear that at the present time the government have no intention of requiring that anything should be done in the way of a reduction of this debt within the period of fifty years. The hon. minister says that at the end of fifty years there will be no renewal of the security by the government, that the railway will have to pay this debt off by negotiating other bonds. He says that the government will then be free of it and that the railway company will have to carry on the indebtedness. That is all very well if it works out in that way, but whether it does or does not depends upon the position of the railway company at that time. If the government take the position in arranging the security that there is to be no sinking fund in the meantime, they are leaving it to chance as to whether they can get rid of the security at the end of fifty years. They will be confronted with this position that in the event that the railway company cannot then negotiate the security without the endorsement and guarantee of the government—and they are very likely not to be able to negotiate the security unless the government will endorse it from the fact that parties loaning money will look for a guarantee from the government—if the railway company cannot then negotiate the security without the aid of the government, the government will either have to again guarantee the security or else they will have to take the railway property into their own hands. I think that is a very unwise position in which to leave us. At the end of fifty years and long before fifty years have expired, we ought to be getting into the position that our liability will be less and less. We have control of this in the beginning and now is the time to make provision for the contingency which I speak of. We cannot shut our eyes to the fact that there are other railways which will expect the same thing from us and which will be entitled to receive it. I am not objecting to aid being given to this company if proper security is taken, but what I wish to impress upon the government is that there is a necessity in this case, having regard to the circumstances that we will be incurring other liabilities for other railways and in proportion as we increase our liabilities the credit of Canada will decrease, that something should be done within the period of fifty years, and beginning within a period of a few years—say twenty-five years—in the way of a reduction of this indebtedness. Otherwise, the government have no guarantee whatever that this money will be forthcoming without the aid of the government at the end of fifty years. I want to call the attention of the hon. minister and of the committee to the danger that threatens us in dealing with this matter. It would hardly have taken as long to prepare a document as it has taken us to discuss this measure by reason of the vague way in which it is brought before us. I believe this committee was resting upon the implied assurance of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals that there would be a decrease in the liability by means of a sinking fund or something of that kind and that that idea prevailed amongst hon. members. Until the hon. leader of the opposition got up and pointedly put the question to the hon. minister I believe this committee were quite prepared to believe that we were going to have a provision when the arrangement was carried out that would secure us in the line I have mentioned by having a sinking fund to diminish our liability from year to year. I do not mean that the hon. minister wished to mislead the committee, but he was allowing it to go in silence after I had asserted the fact and only for that pointed question we would probably all have gone away with the understanding that the government had undertaken that there would be a sinking fund. I think we must ask the hon. minister to make as definite a statement as possible as to what will be done in the way of securing us in the document that will be drawn up.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am surprised to hear the remarks which my hon. friend (Mr. Lennox) has made. I do not think my hon. friend realizes that this country has any future at all. I do not think he has the slightest conception of the magnificent territory through which this road is to pass. I do not think he realizes that the road will be one of the most profitable railways on this continent, which it will be by reason of the fact that it passes through a splendid fertile belt capable of almost continuous settlement from Winnipeg right up to Edmonton, to which point we are carrying the line. Almost the whole of the country for many miles on both sides of the line is susceptible of settlement. The hon. gentleman cannot have the slightest conception of the value which this property will acquire in a very few years to come. He talks about our requiring a sinking fund for our protection. It may be, on consideration, possibly desirable to provide for a sinking fund, but it may be infinitely better that the surplus earnings of the road should be expended upon the road in increasing the accommodation given to the public and in increasing the facilities that the public will require. I would not undertake to give the committee any assurance that we would insist upon the diversion of any portion of these earnings instead of ensuring their expenditure upon the undertaking itself. I think my hon. friend will, on reflection, see that it will be tying the hands of the government to an unreasonable degree, and that it would possibly be doing an irreparable injury to this great undertaking if we were to provide that the surplus earnings of the undertaking should be expended in the manner he suggests.

Mr. LENNOX.

Mr. LENNOX. I am glad the hon. minister has waxed eloquent over the enormous resources of this country ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Do not believe it ?

Mr. LENNOX. I will tell the hon. minister in a moment if he will allow me, whether I believe or not. It may be that I have for a moment been forgetful of the resources and the promise of this country, and of the prospect that this country will occupy a position greater than any of us can dream of at the present time. Those who are accustomed to wealth are apt to forget it. Belonging to the Conservative party, the one party that has always believed in the future of this country, that has always believed in the west, that has always believed in the great advantage of a transcontinental railway, I say, belonging to such a party, basking in the wealth of knowledge which the Conservative has possessed in the past, it is not surprising that I have for a moment forgotten the affluence with which we are surrounded, but, the hon. gentleman, belonging to the party which in the old days had a poverty of appreciation in that regard, which believed that country would never support one, let alone three or four transcontinental railways, belonging to a party which has suddenly come to realize what this country can produce, I think, he is carried away and that he is like a man who has suddenly come into a fortune. If I had not so much respect for the hon. gentleman I would suggest that he had almost lost his head. He gave us a very reasonable picture when he supposes that this railway is going to be a paying enterprise, that it will be a success, that there will be the best kind of trade for it to do, that there will be a vast amount of commerce for it to transport. This is all the more reason why the company should, while they are piling up money from year to year, as I hope and believe they will, liquidate this indebtedness. As they go along and wish to make extensions, adding to their rolling stock and equipment in various ways, they can do so, and being in good credit they can finance in such a way as to form a sinking fund and at the same time carry out their enterprise with success. I do not question the stability or success of this enterprise, but we are entering upon a career in which we may be called upon from time to time to make similar grants, and I do not want that the country should be adding to its liabilities from year to year without end making no provision for curtailing them. In five, in ten or in fifteen years as we incur increasing liabilities, I want that we shall have coming into the treasury something from the earlier grants which we have made, so that our indebtedness shall not climb up to an extent which would not be sanctioned by a prudent people such as the Canadian people are.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There should be some provision in the Bill, that a copy of the mortgage and a copy of all the securities mentioned in section 4 should be laid on the Table of the House within ten or fifteen days of the opening of next session.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Does the hon. gentleman think it necessary to put that in the Bill ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Perhaps not, if we have the assurance of the minister that it will be done.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will be very happy to do it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It is a very unbusinesslike way of dealing with the matter, but still it is better than nothing to be able to look at these documents. The hon. gentleman hardly realizes the extent of his lack of knowledge with regard to this matter. He does not know the nature of the terms of the mortgage; nor the date at which the powers will be exercised by the government ; nor whether there is to be a sinking fund, nor whether the government will reserve the power to pay these bonds before they are due, nor whether the government are going to reserve power to own and operate the railway in case of default. As a matter of fact, the minister does not seem to have any knowledge as to what the very important terms of the contract are to be.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am surprised that the hon. gentleman calls such a mass of material before him meagre.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would not call it a 'mass' of material.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I know that my hon. friend is afflicted with the disease which seems to have affected a good many of his friends; that is, the old story of saying that the minister does not know anything. I think we have managed to show that we have some knowledge of what we are doing and that we are conducting matters in a fairly businesslike way; so much so that my hon. friend has very little ground for successful criticism.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am only measuring the hon. gentleman's knowledge by what he has stated himself.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman would be quite ready to make the same observation if he were to ask me for a further array of impossible things. The hon. gentleman does not suppose that the government has nothing else to do during the session, but sit down and work out the minutiae of all these matters.

Mr. BARKER. What about the Yukon contract ? You were able to do that.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The Yukon contract was not drawn during a session of parliament.

Mr. BARKER. No; it was drawn a week before parliament.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think it was more than a week, but at all events it was not during a session of parliament. It is quite impossible for the ministry to give attention to these details during the session of parliament. I think you will find that when we come to deal with the matter we will be able to work it out satisfactorily to the country, even though our friends opposite may not admit it is satisfactory to them. I have no hesitation, however, in stating to the hon. gentleman and to the committee, that copies of the securities and papers will be brought down within the first fifteen days of the opening of the next session. If it escapes our attention and if the hon. gentleman calls attention to it my hon. friend will bring them down immediately.

On section 7,—running powers to other lines.

Mr. BARKER. This clause provides that the Governor in Council may grant running powers over some portions of this line in favour of other railway companies and upon terms considered equitable. If this railway company wishes to get some terms of relief from the position it may be in, it will be very easy to get somebody to suggest that running powers would be very desirable in favour of a particular railway, and the government may give certain concessions on such terms as are expedient and equitable, in consideration of the running powers being allowed. In that way, in the time of difficulty this company might induce the government—I do not mean to say that the present government could be induced to do anything that might be improper, but there might be another government not so careful of the country's interests as the present one, and they might be induced as a consideration for granting running powers over a portion of this line to do something that would interfere with the security of the country for the guarantee they have given. For example, if this country had advanced a million dollars or two million dollars, the government could make a stipulation that in consideration of their allowing running powers for a short distance upon the line, the country should wipe out all that liability. I would suggest to the minister, in the interest of the country, that he should add to this section some such words as these. 'But without impairment of the security of the government' or any words of that kind that will protect the country against the release of any rights which it has under the guarantee.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am unable to grasp the possibilities or the probabilities that my hon. friends foresees may possibly occur which would affect prejudicially the value of the government security in operating under that clause. I confess that I cannot see how it could possibly arise.

Mr. BARKER. I would suggest one or two ways in which it could arise. The owners of this subsidized road might ask the government, in consideration of running powers being granted on one part of the line, to release or discharge the lien or mortgage on the other parts. If the contracting party which gets running powers has to pay something to this company for the running powers, that is one thing ; but if the government has power to release the securities, that is another thing. I think it would be reasonable to say that whatever terms might be made for granting running powers, those terms should not be such as would result in an impairment of the value of the security under which this guarantee is granted.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is nothing which the hon. gentleman has suggested, nor which I think he can suggest, which would have the effect under this clause of impairing the value of the security which the government would have power to give without the authority of parliament. My hon. friend might almost as well say that we ought to have a clause in this Bill providing that the government should not some morning declare that the mortgage was paid and had ceased to be a security of costs. The one case is as supposable as the other. No government could do it. A government cannot extinguish any claim which is due, or discharge any security without payment. If it attempted to do it, the claim would be nevertheless enforced. Parliamentary authority is required ; my hon. friend must admit that.

Mr. BARKER. There is not a word here regarding parliamentary authority.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, because my hon. friend is contemplating that running powers would be given to some other company which offered as a condition to this company to consent that one-half the claim of the government against them should be cancelled. Where can power be found to reside in the government to extinguish any portion of that claim other than by actual payment ? When this clause speaks about equitable terms, it means that the company which requires the right to use these tracks shall pay in an equitable way and according to equitable conditions—not that the company which gives this mortgage to us shall receive from the government or from anybody satisfaction for their security, but that they shall receive from the company which gets the right to run over their tracks proper consideration for the privilege they obtain.

Mr. BARKER. The clause provides, not that this company shall grant running powers, but that the Governor in Council may grant running powers on terms that may be considered equitable. The consideration of the grant will pass as between the government and this railway company, and in consideration of the government doing that, they may release the company which is guaranteed from any liability which they have against them.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My hon. friend must know that even without that clause, under the ordinary clause found in the Railway Act to-day, and which has been there for years, the Governor in Council, through the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, has the right to grant running powers to one company over another company's lines on terms that may be considered equitable. Strike this clause out, and the general law would still hold it. The only reason it is here, is that it may appear in the terms of the agreement as one of the conditions of the guarantee, giving it a contractual character, in addition to the ordinary legal sanction which is found in the Railway Act. Does the hon. gentleman want to leave the Railway Act without any provision of that kind ? Because if he has any warrant for his anxiety on that point, he cannot permit the Railway Act to continue with that clause in it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The difficulty of my hon. friend from Hamilton arises because in one of the clauses you give the Governor in Council power to deal with the securities, and in this clause, though from another standpoint, you give the Governor in Council power to deal with the question of granting running powers over portions of the railway, and you have these words added, 'upon terms considered equitable.' My hon. friend is not arguing that the government can without statutory authority do anything to impair the security, but he is arguing that the terms you are using here might carry the action of the government to that extent.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Does the hon. gentleman think it would ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The Governor in Council, under section 7, might inadvertently place the country in such a position that the powers otherwise exercisable under this guarantee would be stayed for a time.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. How is it possible to conceive that a company, which owned this railway subject to guarantee, and which was asked to give to an outside company permission to run over its tracks, should pay that other company ? Would not the contribution be from the other company to that company ? Then, how is any contribution which is to be made by the new company going possibly to work an impairment of the security which the government holds under this guarantee ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What I imagine my hon. friend from Hamilton has in mind, and what has occurred to myself, is that powers might be granted, under the very comprehensive expression used here, that would not be prejudiced by any encumbrance that might be placed on the road, and the government might find itself, by reason of the powers created by section 7, in a position not to enforce its security for a certain time at least. I am not prepared to say at the moment whether or not that result might be accomplished under section 7, but I can see enough in it to justify my hon. friend from Hamilton in bringing it to the notice of the government. There is another thing in section 7 which strikes me as rather peculiar, that is, that it seems to retain in the Governor in Council a power which the Bill at present before the House purports to vest in another body.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think the words 'Governor in Council' might just as well be struck out.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would think so, otherwise you are creating two bodies of equal authority to deal with that particular matter. The scope of the Railway Commission Bill before the House is that all such powers shall no longer be exercised by the Governor in Council, but by the board of Railway Commissioners.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The Railway Committee of the Privy Council can do it, but I have no objection to strike the words out.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That would remove perhaps to a considerable extent the force of what my hon. friend from Hamilton has suggested, because the Railway Committee of the Privy Council has not under the terms of a Railway Act, nor has the Board of Railway Commissioners under the Bill now before the House, any authority to in any way impair the security created by this measure.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS moved that the words 'the Governor in Council or' and the word 'also' be struck out of section 7.

Clause, as amended, agreed to.

On section 8,

It shall be unlawful for the Canadian Northern Railway Company to lease or sell any of its lines or any portion thereof to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, or to amalgamate with the said company, or enter into any agreement with the said company whereby rates upon freight or passengers shall be pooled ; but this provision shall not extend to traffic or running arrangements made with the assent of the Governor in Council.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There was a great deal of discussion on this clause when we were dealing with clause 1. Whether the first part of the clause has any legal effect or not, whether it is to be regarded as a formal notice or otherwise, it seems to me that no reason has been advanced for the insertion of this provision, so far as the Canadian Pacific Railway is concerned, which would not be equally potent with regard to any other railway company. Although I followed pretty closely the remarks of the hon. Minister of Railways and the hon. Minister of the Interior, I was not able to gather from them any reason which would justify the existence of this clause, so far as the Canadian Pacific Railway is concerned, which would not equally justify its existence so far as every other railway company is concerned. I would be glad if the hon. minister would say a word on that point.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There are two branches of this clause, concerning each of which a different line of observations might properly be made. The first portion is that which refers to the sale or amalgamating of the Canadian Northern with the Canadian Pacific Railway. This clause, in a different form but in precisely the same spirit and with precisely the same purpose, seems to have been adopted in almost all the legislation of a general character which has been passed both in this parliament and the provincial legislature of Manitoba. It is in conformity, therefore, with the previously expressed desire of parliament that this provision is inserted. I have no doubt that such a provision has been always made because it was felt that the Canadian Pacific Railway, which is a very powerful corporation financially, might conceive that it would be desirable to acquire the Canadian Northern and control it, and if in no other way that control could be secured, it might desire to control it by means of the acquisition of the Canadian Northern stock. Parliament did not leave that an open question for a later parliament to determine, but, so far as an Act of parliament could have any effect upon the actions of succeeding parliaments, this parliament has made it one of the conditions of the charter that the Canadian Northern should not pass its property over to the Canadian Pacific Railway. This no doubt was due to the strong western feeling that there should be two distinct railway corporate interests serving that country, and that they should not be allowed to unite to the disadvantage of the shippers in that territory, and to avoid such a possibility, parliament was asked to include that restrictive clause in any legislation it might pass. The same feeling does not exist with regard to any other possible combination. The North-west will have two great roads when this road is completed, and will thus have the benefit of competition, and there is no necessity for passing legislation which would anticipate something that may never happen. I cannot see any reason why the Canadian Northern should not amalgamate with any other company except the Canadian Pacific Railway nor why any other company should not amalgamate with the Canadian Northern. There would be nothing detrimental to the public interest, should either event take place, and should any such proposal arise in the future, we will be able to deal with it. It is wise always to legislate no further than the reasonable needs of the moment require, and it is not wise to endeavour to provide for too remote a period in the future. It would not be wise for us to say now that we should not allow the Canadian Northern to amalgamate with any other company or any other company to amalgamate with it.

Mr. BROCK. Why not ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Why should we ? Why should not the Canadian Northern have the privilege of adding to the strength of its road by uniting with another system ? Why should it not have the privilege of uniting with the Grand Trunk Railway if it wanted to do so ? At all events, it is a very proper thing for parliament to wait until the time comes when the companies exist and those companies want to have an amalgamation. When that time comes parliament will have the power to decide it ; it cannot be done without the decision of parliament. What is the use, then, of our projecting ourselves into the future to deal with a case that may never arise, and with which, if it should arise, we must deal according to the ideas and temper of parliament when the case is before it. Therefore, in my judgment, there is no reason why we should deal with this question now. When that request is made, it will be for the parliament of that time to deal with it. There is another phase of this case which has value and importance in connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway. And that is the clause which says that it shall be unlawful for this company to enter into any agreement with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company whereby rates upon freight or passengers shall be pooled. Such an arrangement would be equivalent in practice to an amalgamation ; and the object is to prevent that, so that there shall be the fullest advantage to the public which can accrue from competition. Now, we could not say properly—it would be a very great mistake in legislating for us to say—that under no terms should the Canadian Northern be allowed to make a pooling arrangement with any other road. It might be necessary for them to make pooling arrangements with companies. They run alongside the Canadian Pacific Railway and reach practically the same destination. Therefore, it is very much in the public interest to forbid pooling with that company. But I can conceive of companies existing in Canada with which it would be very much to the advantage of the Canadian Northern to have a pooling agreement, say, after the traffic had left their line and was being carried to its destination by land. It would be very desirable to make a pooling arrangement, subject to the approval of the constituted authorities, which would sit in judgment on such an arrangement. It would be a great advantage to the shippers. So we could not use that general language with regard to pooling arrangements, and it would not be wise for us to say that the company should not make such an arrangement with any other companies. It would tie their hands in carrying on the business of the company.

The DEPUTY SPEAKER. Carried.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. On division.

On section 9,

Any moneys paid by the government of Canada under the guarantee herein provided for shall be held to be paid in discharge of the liability of the government but not in discharge of the liability of the company under the securities so guaranteed or under the mortgage securing them, and the moneys so paid shall be held to be still secured by the said securities and mortgage, and the governmnt shall be subrogated in all the rights of the holders of the securities the interest upon or the principal of which has been paid by the government, and the government shall in respect of all moneys so paid be in all respects in the position of security holders in respect of whose securities default has been made in payment to the extent of the moneys paid by the government.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think the word 'the' before the words 'interest upon or the principal of which has been paid' should be struck out.

Mr. BARKER. It is all right there.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is better expunged.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). You want a comma after 'security.'

The DEPUTY SPEAKER. Shall the amendment be adopted ? Carried.

Mr. BARKER. I suppose it is quite clear that under this section, however great the payments of the government may be upon these securities, and however long the government may have to wait for the return of the money, the government gets no interest, but simply has the position of the holder of a coupon which bears no interest. If the government advanced say $2,000,000 in the course of a few years in taking up coupons, they could not recover interest. I want to know exactly what the intention of the government is, because it seems to me quite clear that however large these payments, or however long the government must wait, it gets no interest upon its money.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman's (Mr. Barker's) inference, assuming that this section covers all that the government would stipulate and include within the mortgage terms, is correct—there is no provision here for the payment of interest upon interest.

Mr. BARKER. I mean it does not give the government the right to it, if they wish to claim it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This clause does not pointedly contemplate that, but this clause by no means exhausts the power of the government in defining the terms and conditions upon which the line may be guaranteed.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The hon. minister has again used the expression that the government are not charging interest upon interest. I should think it would be unnecessary to point out that, though this is interest as between the bondholders and the company, it is not interest as between the company and the government. The government must pay this interest and, as between the government and the company, it then becomes principal. Has the hon. minister anything to say to the committee as to the terms of the mortgage in this respect? Will it be dealt with in the proposed mortgage? Is it the intention of the government to pay large sums under this without having the right, if they desire to exercise it, to recover interest, at the rate expressed in the agreement, from the company while these sums remain unpaid? Of course, it may be a very serious matter. The government may pay $250,000 or $275,000 per annum four or five years and this might remain for five or ten years longer unpaid. Therefore, it is a matter of some moment to consider, either now or hereafter. I do not know whether or not the hon. minister has made up his mind and is able to offer the committee any information with regard to it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I can only say that this is a question that, with many others, must arise in working out the details, and it will have to be considered and dealt with by the government.

Mr. BROCK. The government, I believe, occasionally have to borrow money from the banks, for which they pay five per cent. They may borrow money at five per cent to take up some of these three per cent securities. To get money to pay the three per cent, they may be obliged to pay five per cent. The government should obtain the power to charge what the money costs.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is a very proper subject for consideration.

Mr. BARKER. There is another reason why I would call the attention of the Minister of Railways to this point. It is usual on these railway mortgages to provide that on default no proceeding shall be taken by the trustees except upon demand of 66 or 75 per cent of the bondholders. Therefore I think the government, after advancing $1,000,000 at any rate, should be in a position to enforce the mortgage under the ordinary form of a trust mortgage, unless it can obtain the consent of two-thirds or three-fourths of the bondholders, who may be quite willing to leave the government out of this money, and leave them out for many years. It is necessary for that reason that the government should protect itself, and I have no doubt that the minister will see to it.

Mr. DAVIS. I would ask the minister if he has considered the proposition that was thrown out here when we were considering the resolutions, in reference to providing for the government being able at any time to take over the road and everything in connection with it, and to provide means whereby the value of the road and that sort of thing might be ascertained. I may say there is a feeling in our country at least that the time is coming when it will be necessary for the government to take over any undertakings of this kind, and we should at this time provide the machinery for so doing. I understand that the government at all times have power, by exercising what the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean) calls the principle of eminent domain, to take over any railway. In this case, I think provision should be made in the Bill so that if the government wish at any time to take over this road, they may have the means of arriving at a valuation of the same, and taking possession. That was discussed a while ago on section 8 of the Bill with reference to an amalgamation with the Canadian Pacific Railway. This will be a further safeguard, because the government would have it in their hands at any time, if anything should happen such as the hon. member for St. Mary's (Hon. Mr. Tarte) mentioned the other day, to take the road over and run it as a government property.

Mr. BROCK. Any suggestion of that kind, if adopted at the present time, would interfere seriously with the floating of these bonds that you are guaranteeing. I think it would have a serious effect if the government took power to assume possession of this road. Are the government going to be the debtors, and have these bonds issued to bond-holders, holding them for fifty years from the government of Canada ? I think the government would place themselves in a very invidious position, particularly in view of the fact that there is a scheme for a transcontinental railway at the present time. You are going to have one part of the road tied up under one set of conditions, and you don't know whether a future parliament would be able, under these conditions, to take over another portion of the road and to make it continuous to the Pacific. The fewer conditions you put in the better.

Mr. DAVIS. If the country's credit is good, and we guarantee the interest at 3 per cent on these bonds, the credit of the country is all right, and it does not make much difference what conditions we are putting in the Bill. The bondholders will look to the government that guaranteed the principal and interest, and it won't make any difference whether you put that in or not.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My hon. friend from Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis) perhaps misapprehends the tenor of the remarks made by the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Brock). The hon. member for Toronto sees a difficulty which I must confess impresses my own mind at the moment. He is proposing a measure of which it will be open to the government to avail itself in fifty or one hundred years from now, when the company might be desirous of floating securities in substitution of those which have been guaranteed by the government. The power is one not confined by any statutory limitations. It would be open to the government at any time to avail itself of the opportunities and the special means of ascertaining the value of the property, if it wished to take it over. Now I must say to my hon. friend from Saskatchewan that that proposition has not been considered, and I am not in a position to make any statement as to what would be the action of the government upon it. But I would suggest to the hon. member that we are now dealing with what perhaps will be for all time but a fraction of a considerable railway system, we are dealing with six or seven hundred miles out of an existing sixteen hundred miles, when these lines are built, and out of, possibly, 3,000 miles, when their branches and extensions in all directions are built. To take power under this clause to acquire 600 or 700 miles would not be a useful power, nor one of which it would be proper in future for us to avail ourselves. If we were submitting to parliament a general scheme of assistance to a completed line from one side of the continent to the other, we might consider the advisability of stipulating that the government should at any time avail itself at its option of taking that property over. But the same reason does not apply, it appears to me, to the case of a few miles of railway such as we are now dealing with. In making this remark I do not profess to indicate what would be the conclusion at which my colleagues would arrive. I propose to ask the committee to rise, when this last section is passed, and ask leave to sit again, in order to dispose of one section which has been left standing. I may say to the hon. gentleman that I will take this subject up with my colleagues in the meantime. But I may intimate to him, what strikes me at the moment, that it is not likely to meet with approval.

Mr. DAVIS. There is a strong feeling in our part of the country that something of this kind should be done. There is a possibility that we may have to acquire all the roads in the country, and when we are giving a large amount of aid to an undertaking of this kind, it is only right that provision should be put in the Bill whereby the government may take over the road if they see fit. If that time never arrives, the power will never be exercised, but it is just as well to have the power.

Mr. BROCK. It should be distinctly understook that the power should only be exercised in case of a national road from the Atlantic to the Pacific, not merely a small portion of a transcontinental road. If at any time the government should make up their minds to aid a transcontinental road, or to acquire various roads that together would make a continuous road to the Pacific, this might be a useful power. But the government of Canada should not take power to spend the money of Canada to acquire a portion of a railroad, a railroad in Manitoba for instance, it should be a national road of a national character.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I want to point out to the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals that I think the words 'Governor in Council' at the end of section 8 should perhaps be stricken out and that the words which appear at the commencement of section 7 should be substituted. Does the hon. gentleman follow what I mean ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Strike out the words 'Governor in Council' and substitute the words 'any authority created by parliament for that purpose.' Is the idea really to leave that matter to the discretion of parliament ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think this would be supplementary. Would that not be the view of the hon. gentleman ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Supplementary to what ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Supplementary to the power of revision, or to the consent of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, or of the railway commission. I do not think it would repeal or rescind the application of the Railway Act in any way. This is more in the nature of a contractual arrangement. It does not alter the Railway Act in any respect. I think it would simply mean that the supervision and authority of parliament which might be exercised over the railway might be exercised by the Governor in Council in the manner mentioned here.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Without much consideration, I would hardly be inclined to adopt that view of it. However, the hon. gentleman will perhaps have an opportunity of looking at this section and of giving it his consideration, and I will do the same.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS moved that the committee rise.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Before the committee rises, I would like to say that the schedule is not passed. I want to draw the hon. minister's attention to the fact that this does not comprise the whole of the road, that the part between Winnipeg and Gladstone is not covered as well as that portion which is in Minnesota, in fact, all the lines that were acquired from the Northern Pacific are not included. I would ask the hon. minister if any portion of the roads mentioned in this schedule are comprised in the agreement with the Manitoba government ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think all that are in Manitoba, at least, are. I will ascertain about that.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The purpose of my question is to point out the necessity of controlling freights by the Dominion parliament on that particular portion of the railway between Winnipeg and Gladstone which is left out of the mortgage altogether and out of the control that the government get over this road as well as the portion which passes through the State of Minnesota, I think that portion in the state of Minnesota is under security to the Manitoba government and I would like, when the hon. minister asks the House to again consider the Bill, that he will point out the particular portion of this road contained in this schedule that the Manitoba government have a lien on.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You say from Winnipeg to Gladstone.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. It would be from Winnipeg to Beaver.

Progress reported.

SETTLEMENT OR RAILWAY LABOUR DISPUTES.

House proceeded to consider amendments by the Senate to Bill (No. 17) to aid in the settlement of railway labour disputes.—The Postmaster General.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What are the amendments ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Sir William Mulock). Section 6 of the Bill has been amended by the Senate by striking out the words 'not exceeding ten days,' and inserting in lieu thereof 'within such time as the minister may fix.' Section 6 is a section providing for filling vacancies on the conciliation committee. There is no objection to that amendment. I move that the amendment be concurred in. In section 7, fourth line, the Senate suggests the insertion of the words 'and the Prince Edward Island Railway.' The government also concur in that amendment. In the original section 7 the Prince Edward Island Railway was treated as part of the Intercolonial Railway, but it has always been treated in our accounts under a separate head, and the amendment of the Senate is to make it clear that the Prince Edward Island Railway will be in the same position as the Intercolonial Railway.

Mr. BARKER. Which lieutenant governor would be selected then.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. If the dispute were in Prince Edward Island it would be proper that the lieutenant governor of that province would choose. The original section fourteen provided that witnesses might be summoned by the board to give evidence, and the Senate amendment makes it that the chairman of the board shall have power. I propose to move that the following answer be sent to the Senate :

That this amendment be amended by striking the words 'the chairman of' for the reason that it is inexpedient to leave it in the discretion of any one member of the board to determine who should be summoned as a witness, but the question should be determined by the board or the majority thereof.

In section fourteen also, the Senate declare that witnesses shall be entitled to their witness fees, whereas the original section does not give us a legal right to fees. It has been pointed out to me by the representatives of the railway employees that in many instances they are paid by their unions or by the men for taking an interest in these matters, and they do not wish to have it made possible that the men should get double pay for attending as witnesses. They think that such a thing might not expedite proceedings, and the men themselves have requested that they be not put in that position.

Mr. BROCK. I think it better that the men should be paid by the country than that they should be paid by one of the parties to the suit in whose interest they are appearing.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Under the original Bill it is quite in order for the board to use its discretion in the matter. In a parliamentary committee for instance a witness has no right to his witness fees unless the committee says he should be paid them, and the same principle can be applied here. I move :

That the fourth amendment be disagreed to for the following reason : Because many of the witnesses may be properly remunerated for their attendance as witnesses other than by payment by the board, and it would be inexpedient to make it possible for witnesses to be over remunerated for their attendance as witnesses ; and therefore it is more in the public interest that it be in the discretion of the board to determine in what cases persons should be paid for their attendance as witnesses.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). In what section is that discretion conferred on the board.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is not necessary to confer by express language upon the board the right to recommend. The board would have that right of recommendation, and under clause twenty-four if it were necessary to do so, the Minister of Labour might pass the necessary regulations applying to such a subject.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would be inclined to differ from my hon. friend with regard to that. This board is the creature of a statute and has no implied powers outside of the four corners of that statute.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Section twenty-four would give that power to the minister.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I have a great deal of doubt that such would be the case. I would not agree with the Postmaster General unless he would contend that section twenty-four is wide enough to allow him to practically construct a new Act out of this. That section confers upon the minister power to make certain regulations, but I do not think that it gives him power to provide for the payment of money.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That money would have to be voted by parliament and the vote would determine how it would be applied. The board would, under that authority, have the power to pay witnesses if there was a vote for that purpose.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It might be covered by the vote of parliament, but I do not think it would come under section twenty-four.

Mr. BARKER. If under the Bill as it stands the board could allow witness fees, they could also allow counsel fees and solicitors costs under section eighteen.

Mr. BROCK.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Exactly.

Amendments read the second time.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL moved that the first, second, and fifth amendments be agreed to.

Motion agreed to.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL moved :

That the third amendment of the Senate to the said Bill be amended by leaving out the words 'the chairman of' in the said amendment, because it is inexpedient to leave it in the discretion of any one member of the board to determine who may be summoned as witnesses, but the question should be determined by the board or a majority thereof.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). In the usual course, in any legal proceeding—and this is to all intents and purposes a legal proceeding—either party has the right to summon any witness he sees fit. It is an everyday procedure to go to the registrar or clerk of the court and get a subpœna for any witness you require, and it would hardly appear to me that the amendment proposed by the Senate is an unreasonable one. It would rather seem to be with a view of convenience. Otherwise you must have the formal meeting of the board before either party shall have the right to subpœna a witness. It seems to me you add a good deal of red tape to the procedure of the committee when you decline to adopt the amendment which the Senate has sent down to us. Particularly is that the case, in view of the fact that by the further amendment which is suggested, witnesses are to go without any witness fees. If they are to do that, it would hardly seem necessary to call three members of the board to authorize a witness to be summoned.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The amendment of the Senate is not adding to the convenience of the machinery, but rather putting an additional block upon it, taking from a majority of the board and vesting in the chairman alone the right to say who shall and who shall not be summoned. Practically it would be left in his hands in most cases, but it is not advisable to exclude the jurisdiction of the other two. The board in the first place would have to meet to organize and choose their umpire. So that I do not think in the practical working of it out, any trouble would arise from this power being given to the majority of the board.

Motion agreed to.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL moved :

That the fourth amendment be disagreed to for the following reason : Because many of the witnesses may be properly remunerated for their attendance as witnesses other than by payment by the board, and it would be inexpedient to make it possible for witnesses to be over-remunerated for their attendance as witnesses, and therefore it is more in the public interest that it be in the discretion of the board to determine in what cases persons should be paid for their attendance as witnesses.

Motion agreed to.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL moved that a Message be sent to the Senate to acquaint their Honours therewith.

Motion agreed to.

MONTREAL HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding) moved third reading of Bill (No. 201) to provide for further advances to the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal. He said: In moving the third reading of the Bill, I will answer a question which was put by the hon. leader of the opposition with respect to loans that have been made from time to time to several harbours. I find that advances by way of loans were made to the Quebec Harbour Commissioners to the amount of $3,748,519.62. The interest on this loan is very largely in arrear. Advances were made to the Three Rivers Harbour Commissioners to the amount of $81,760.97, and interest on this loan is also in arrear. Advances were made to the Montreal Harbour Commissioners to the amount of $3,450,000, and there are no arrears of interest with respect to this loan. These are the only advances made by way of loan to any of the harbours mentioned by my hon. friend.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the third time, and passed.

POST OFFICE ACT AMENDMENT.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Sir William Mulock) moved second reading of Bill (No. 208) to amend the Post Office Act.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Perhaps the hon. gentleman would be good enough to explain the Bill.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. So much of the Bill is in detail that it would perhaps be better understood if it were taken up clause by clause in committee. The first section deals with railway mail clerks, and it alters their status. Under the law at present in force and which has been in force for many years, third-class railway mail clerks are paid, on appointment $480; after two years service, $520; after five years, $560; after ten years, $640; In the second class they are paid on appointment, $600; after two years, $640; after five years, $720; after ten years $800. First class clerks are paid on appointment $720; after two years, $800; after five years $880; after ten years, $960, which is the maximum. In addition to these payments, they also receive what is called mileage, being half a cent of train run during certain hours, and one cent a mile during certain other hours. It happens that under the existing law the increase of salary of a railway mail clerk is very slow, and his promotion from class to class is equally slow, and depends, not wholly on length of service or efficiency, but also on the chance of there being a vacancy above him. Under the Bill I am introducing it is proposed to give all railway mail clerks who are deserving annual increases, abolishing classes. They will enter the probationary period of six months at $400 a year. The pay for the probationary period to-day is I believe, at $300 a year. After a mail clerk has been in the service not more than six months probationary period and has shown capacity and is likely to be deserving of apointment, he will be confirmed in his appointment. He then receives $500 a year and thereafter an annual increase of $50 until he attains a maximum of $1,200 a year, in addition to which he receives mileage. That is to say, a railway clerk will have a minimum salary of $500 a year and a maximum salary of $1,200 a year, together with mileage.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. You abolish the classes?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes, so that they all may get their annual increase and reach the maximum. This maximum is $240 more than it was under the old Act. The railway clerks calling is a very hazardous and labourous one. He has to run many risks and is frequently the victim of a railway accident, in which he very often receives injury and sometimes loses his life. Parliament has on several occasions in the last few years given a compassionate allowance to the widows and orphans of railway mail clerks where deaths have ensued. It happens not unfrequently that mail clerks are in accidents from which they appear to emerge with safety, but which nevertheless make them the victims later on of nervous diseases which shorten their lives. I think $1,200 is not unreasonable. The mileage varies, depending on the run. It is not quite possible to give an estimate, but I think it would amount, on an average, to $300 or $400 a year, but it is not all clear gain. When a man is travelling, even officially, on a railway car, he is put to more expense than if he were living in his own home.

Mr. CLARKE. Does the hon. the minister intend to increase the salaries of first class railway mail clerks who are now in receipt of the maximum?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. They will get an increase at the rate of $50 a year up to $1,200.

Mr. LEMIEUX. What is the maximum now?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. $960, but only a small proportion can obtain the maximum. Many are detained in the third class where the maximum is $640. The majority of mail clerks to-day are not receiving more than $800. As there seems to be a disposition to go into details, perhaps we had better go into committee.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Does the hon. gentleman want to get out of committee to-night ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am in no hurry.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). We expected to have the Railway Commission Bill.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I shall leave the Bill in committee after we make some progress.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not want it to be understood that we will go out of committee to-night.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and the House went into committee thereon.

On section 1, subsection (a)—railway mail clerks, appointment and salary.

Mr. CLARKE. Are we to understand that this provision is to apply only to persons who are hereafter appointed ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, the hon. gentleman will see by subsection (f) that it applies to the present clerks.

Mr. FOWLER. Take the case of a clerk who is getting the maximum of $960 under the present law, will he be given $1,200 at once ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, the Bill provides that he will be eligible for an increase of $50 each year until the maximum of $1,200 is reached, but no increase shall be granted, except in the case of a railway mail clerk over sixty years of age, unless the clerk, within a period of twelve months, passes a satisfactory case examination.

Mr. FOWLER. In other departments of the service, I understand that the maximum of a first class clerk is $1,500.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There are different salaries for different classes of first class clerks. The salaries are not the same for the inside and the outside service. I am only now dealing with the railway mail clerks.

Mr. FOWLER. I understand that, but I am within my right when I refer to these other officials in the hon. gentleman's department. As I understand it, when you come to make up the superannuation, it is made up from the salaries and not from the mileage allowance. Is that not true ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is on the fixed salary.

Mr. LEMIEUX (Gaspé).

Mr. FOWLER. The reason the railway mail clerks do not receive as high a maximum as the clerks in the service is that their salary is augmented by the mileage. This mileage is not taken into account in making up the superannuation, so that the railway mail clerk who has reached the maximum receives considerably less than a first class clerk who receives $1,500—and those who have not reached the maximum, proportionately still less. This seems to me an unjust discrimination against the railway mail clerks. Their service, as the hon. minister has stated, is very hazardous, they are exposed to much greater risks than those safely seated in their offices. If there is to be any discrimination, it seems to me, in all justice and fair play, it should be in favour of the railway mail clerks. You could take into account a railway mail clerk's mileage for three, four or five years preceding superannuation. There must be some record of how that mileage is paid. My hon. friend from Yale and Cariboo (Mr. Galliher) shakes his head. It seems to me it would be a very easy matter to strike an average for the years preceding in counting the superannuation of the railway mail clerks. I wish to call the special attention of the minister to this matter. As he has introduced a Bill to increase the salaries of these officials —and very properly, because I believe that the salaries of most of the civil servants of this country should be increased, for they were fixed many years ago, when the cost of living was nothing like what it is at the present time, and I believe there should be a readjustment all round—it seems to me he should take advantage of the present occasion and remove an unjust discrimination against the railway mail clerks in this matter.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). I am sorry that this Bill does not extend much further than it does. There are the letter carriers in the different cities who are just like beasts of burden, carrying large mails in all weathers, and sometimes having to take a hand-cart to carry the postal matter they must deliver. Another class that should be considered are the clerks in the inside service, who work night and day at very small salaries. If you deal with one part of the service, you should take a wider view and deal with the whole service. If we have surplus funds, as the hon. Minister of Finance has informed us that we have, there is no way in the world in which our money can be so wisely and so justly spent as in improving the position of the civil service of the Dominion.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. My hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Ross) has evidently not read the Bill, for it deals with a large number of the post office officials, including the letter carriers.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). What clause ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is in the Bill, and we shall reach the clause in due course.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Could the minister tell what is the mileage allowance on the average for the railway mail clerk ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I could not say exactly, but it would average $300 or $400.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I desired the information for the benefit of my hon. friend from King's, N.B. (Mr. Fowler), who thinks the superannuation of railway mail clerks is not sufficient. He must remember that at appointment they get wages largely in excess of the ordinary clerk going into the department. The ordinary clerk entering the service receives $400, but the railway mail clerk commences with $400 and mileage of, perhaps, $400.

Mr. FOWLER. But that does not help them very much when it comes to the time for superannuation, which may be twenty-five or thirty years afterwards, when he has got all this money expended. This superannuation allowance is for the comforts of his declining years, when he has worn himself out in the service of the country. I do not know whether any representations have or have not been made to the minister by the railway mail clerks ; but I have been requested to bring this matter before the committee when the Bill was before the committee, and I have done so. I think it is a case that requires fair treatment, and, at present, the railway mail clerks are discriminated against.

Mr. GALLIHER. The reason why I shook my head when the hon. member (Mr. Fowler) was making a statement was not that I did not wish to see the railway mail clerks receive a larger superannuation allowance, but what struck me at the time was that you must base this superannuation on some fixed sum.

Mr. FOWLER. Why ?

Mr. GALLIHER. For the reason that the amount earned in mileage may be different every year. It is different every year with a different class.

Mr. FOWLER. Well ?

Mr. GALLIHER. One railway mail clerk may have a run on which he will make a good deal more than another will make on his run.

Mr. FOWLER. Why can you not strike an average ?

Mr. GALLIHER. Why should you strike an average ?

Mr. FOWLER. Why not ?

Mr. GALLIHER. Suppose you have two railway mail clerks, one putting in more time than the other and travelling more. Why should his time be averaged up to help out one who does not do so much ?

Mr. FOWLER. You do not need to strike an average as between two railway mail clerks, but strike an average for each railway mail clerk, mileage for two, three or five years preceding the time of his superannuation. Treat him irrespective of everybody else, and you will find that it will practically average about the same.

Mr. GALLIHER. If it could be worked out, I should certainly be willing that it should be done. I quite agree with what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fowler) says upon the subject generally, but it struck me that there was this difficulty in the way, and that is why I shook my head.

Mr. FOWLER. Suppose you were superannuating a railway mail clerk. You take the average mileage he had made for the five years preceding superannuation and base your calculations upon that. Suppose he has earned an average of $300 a year for five years. If you have a clerk who is receiving $1,200 of salary, the maximum amount, you get $1,500 on which to base his superannuation allowance.

Mr. GALLIHER. I would be inclined to agree with the hon. member if it could be worked out.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is another point to be remembered in this superannuation question. If these gentlemen do not receive a superannuation based upon their mileage they are not taxed upon their mileage. Deductions are only made from salaries, and superannuations are based upon salaries from which deductions are made. If the railway mail clerks were to be superannuated on a higher basis, of course these extra payments would have to be treated as additions to salaries, and deductions made accordingly.

Mr. FOWLER. That is quite reasonable, of course.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. At all events, the whole question of superannuation is one for consideration in a superannuation Act. This Bill does not deal with superannuations at all, there is a civil service Superannuation Act that deals with this matter. It would not be proper in a Bill of this kind to deal with superannuations.

Mr. KAULBACH. I beg to draw the attention of the Postmaster General to another matter in connection with the mail service, and that is the country postmasters.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Would not that come up more conveniently on the estimates ? There are many interesting subjects connected with the post office, and that is one of them, but it is hardly germane to the question of railway mail clerks.

Mr. KAULBACH. Nevertheless, perhaps the minister will pardon me for a minute. I know there are a number of small postmasters in my county, and I am sure there are many in other counties similarly situated, who are receiving very small amounts indeed. They are supposed to be in their offices from morning until night, compelled sometimes to remain until ten or eleven o'clock waiting for some persons to come in for their mail matter. Why, the cost of the oil they burn is more than the amount they receive from the government. When the Postmaster General is making his provisions for the railway mail clerks, I think he might well consider the country postmasters and the small amount they receive at the present time.

Mr. CLARKE. I think the Postmaster General is doing tardy justice to one of the most useful class of officers in the public service. The increase he is giving them is not at all too much, indeed I think the House would endorse his action in making the increase still greater. There is a good deal in what has been said by the hon. member for King's (Mr. Fowler) respecting the superannuation allowance that should be given to these men when they retire from the public service. I would also like to suggest to the Postmaster General the advisability of providing some scheme of insurance for these men. He has drawn attention to the fact that in many instances accidents have occurred to these men while in the discharge of duty by which they have been incapacitated. A reasonable provision in the form of an accident insurance would be a very valuable protection to them. I brought this matter up two or three years ago, and I would like to ask the minister if he has given the subject consideration. These are a most deserving body of public officials, and worthy of his special attention.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have thought of a good many things in connection with the railway mail service, some of which I have disposed of. I have been for a long time contemplating some provision by which the government should decree by statute the payment of a bonus, or a compassionate allowance to the family of a railway mail clerk losing his life in the service, or to himself in case of accident. I am not aware that parliament has ever paid a compassionate allowance to the family of a railway mail clerk who has lost his life in the service, until the present government invited parliament to do so, when parliament unanimously agreed to the proposition. It has been our policy ever since coming into power to give a compassionate allowance of $2,000, a fixed sum, to the dependents of a railway mail clerk who has lost his life in the service. But we have not deemed it wise to put that policy into an Act of parliament for this reason: A railway mail clerk may or may not have a cause of action against the company in case of accident, or his family a cause of action against the company in case of his death. So that if by law he was entitled to a certain indemnity from the government, that fact would doubtless be taken into consideration in any suit against the railway company for damages. Therefore, it has been deemed wiser to leave the matter in the discretion of the government to deal with each case as it comes up. In the case of an accident to a railway mail clerk in the service, the invariable practice has been to allow him his full pay while incapacitated, and I recall one clerk receiving pay for several years, having been injured in an accident. That practice of giving an indemnity has worked well. I do not think any government would treat such cases otherwise than generously, so I think we had better leave that matter as it stands at present.

Mr. CLARKE. I made the proposition of an accident insurance as a matter of business, so that all the railway mail clerks in the service might be assured of securing a reasonable sum in case of accident. If he lost his life his dependents would be entitled to a fixed sum. In that way these men would be reasonably sure of the protection to themselves and their families to which they are entitled in view of the arduous character of the employment in which they are engaged. I would suggest that they contribute annually a small sum as part of the premium, so that $2,000 or $3,000 might be paid to them in case of accident.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Practically, without taxing them at all, we have adopted a system of giving a gratuity to their dependents in case of loss of life. That is an insurance without any assessment. If he desires any additional insurance, he can easily get it, considering that he is not obliged to contribute anything to the gratuity of $2,000 which we have been giving.

Mr. TAYLOR. What about accidents where he may not lose his life.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. We carry them on with full pay.

Mr. TAYLOR. There is another matter to which I wish to draw the attention of the minister, and bring up now instead of waiting for the estimates, when I may not be present. I hold in my hand an envelope marked 'form No. two, instructions to masters of vessels arriving from foreign ports.' These instructions read as follows —

By the Act of Congress approved March 2, 1895, on and after July 1, 1895, you are required, immediately upon landing, and before entering your vessel at the custom house, to mail to the auditor for the treasury department, Washington, a true copy of the manifest of your vessel.

Then, on another part of the envelope, it says :

Collectors of customs and boarding officers will supply masters of vessels with these envelopes, and instruct them in the requirements of the law.

Further it says :

Any master using this envelope to mail manifest will not be required to pay postage.

That has been the law heretofore, but this year the officials of the American government, when they furnish these envelopes, insist upon postage being paid.

Instructions to American customs officials insist upon payment of postage.

Whenever the captain of a Canadian vessel entering a United States port, mails a manifest to Washington as required by law, he is obliged to pay postage. If any American coming into Canada is required to send a document to the Minister of Customs or to any department of the government, the document comes postage free. I think this is a matter that the hon. Postmaster General ought to look into immediately because captains of vessels find it very inconvenient every time they go into a United States port as in the case of ferries running to the United States four or five times a day, when mailing a manifest to be obliged to pay postage. Parties may come from the United States carrying their pockets full of envelopes and they can mail them to any department at Ottawa free. This is a matter that was brought to my attention a day or two ago, and I promised to bring it to the attention of the hon. Postmaster General. I will send this envelope over to him.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. We have not much jurisdiction there, I am afraid. This is a case beyond the territory of Canada. This appears to be a general instruction to all masters. It does not apply merely to the masters of Canadian vessels or to British subjects. It is apparently a general regulation throughout the United States, applicable to American citizens as well as to British subjects.

Mr. TAYLOR. No, it applies simply to vessels going into the United States from a foreign country. They force our captains to mail a letter to Washington to give information and they make them pay the postage on it while we allow the captains of their vessels to mail their letters free to any department.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There is a printed regulation which says :

Any master using this envelope to mail manifest will not be required to pay postage.

Mr. TAYLOR. That is striken out this year. The hon. Postmaster General will see a circle around it, and there is a written statement that postage is insisted on.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. If it is struck out it does not appear to be limited to Canadian or foreign masters. It is struck out as regards all masters.

Mr. TAYLOR. If the hon. Postmaster General will read the printed matter he will see that it only refers to foreign vessels coming in.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, it only refers to vessels arriving. It says : 'Masters of vessels arriving from foreign ports,' applying to American as well as foreign ships. We all understand why letters written to the government at Ottawa come free. That is the law of Canada.

On subsection (b), section 1—examination of mail clerks.

Mr. CLARKE. Is it the intention of the Postmaster General to continue this yearly case examination in the case of a man who has been ten, twenty or thirty years in the service ? I find in subsection (h) of this section that :

The railway mail clerks over sixty years of age shall not be required to pass the case examination.

Surely, after a man has been in the service fifteen or twenty years he should not be obliged to continue the case examination until he is sixty years of age. I think if the hon. minister provided that after a man had been twenty years in the service he should not be required to pass the case examination it would work better than making a limit of sixty years of age as is done in subsection (h). I make that suggestion.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I suppose the hon. gentleman is familiar with the nature of the case examination ?

Mr. CLARKE. Yes.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Railway mail clerks will often continue on the same run for a long term of years, but they are liable to be shifted from place to place and if a man were shifted it would be most essential that he should understand the case examination for the route to which he has been transferred. Notwithstanding that there are constant changes in the running of trains and stage routes, the establishment of additional offices and so on, and it is necessary for a man to keep up with the case work. It is as necessary for him to know his case examination next year as it is this as there are so many changes in routes.

Mr. CLARKE. I make the suggestion because of the provision in subsection (h) which says that at sixty the case examination should stop. Why, if it is necessary, that a man should keep up his case work, should he stop at sixty ? Are they superannuated then ? I would suppose that when a railway mail clerk has been in the service for twenty years and has passed the yearly case examination that you might drop it then.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. At the age of sixty years a railway mail clerk is given a latitude that perhaps is not given to him in earlier life. During the earlier period of his life he is getting his increase of $50 a year. It is right, as his salary is increased that he should pass his case examination showing that he was deserving of it. If we did not have this case examination men might claim their increases and not give good service. It is of the greatest importance that railway mail clerks should understand their case work. It means that they shall understand as they are sorting the mails on the trains as they go at the rate of thirty or forty miles an hour what bags to put the letters in and what stations to put them off at. Bags are put on containing letters and correspondence for a great many different places. The railway mail clerk must open a mail bag when he receives it on the train and distribute the contents into various other bags and see that this mail matter goes to its proper destination. If he does not do so, if he is not familiar with the case work, he will put the mail matter into the wrong bags and the letters will be misdelivered.

Mr. CLARKE. It is just possible that this case examination may work out a hardship in case a man were sent to a different route than that upon which he had been running immediately before the case examination was held. Because of this arbitrary provision in subsection (h) the examination would cease at the age of sixty. I think if a man has been in the service for twenty years he should be relieved from a further annual examination. However, if the Postmaster General insists that this is a better plan we must defer to his judgment.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If a railway mail clerk passes his examinations regularly for five years, why would it not be sufficient to provide that he shall only be required to pass his examination upon a change of route.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There are changes every year in connection with every route.

Mr. SPROULE. If a man continues on one road for a long time and he becomes quite familiar with the offices, he may be put to great disadvantage if he is changed several times in a year.

On subsection (d), section 1—age and qualifications.

Mr. CLARKE. Why is he required to pass a qualifying examination ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The Civil Service Act requires it.

Mr. CLARKE. Are the provisions of the Civil Service Act adhered to in every branch of the post office service ? I think they are more honoured in the breach than in the observance.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not think so.

Mr. CLARKE. Is there any particular object in insisting that appointees to the railway mail service shall be required to pass a qualifying examination ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. These are rather high class officers and I do not think it is wise to change the Civil Service Act in regard to them.

On subsection (f)—present clerks may come under this Act.

Mr. CLARKE. Why should he have to advise the Postmaster General of his desire to come under this Act ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. He may prefer to remain under the old Act.

Mr. CLARKE. Cannot the Postmaster General suggest some other reason.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Suppose a railway mail clerk has a salary of $800, the maximum of the second class, and he thinks he ought to be made a first-class clerk, if he did get that promotion he would be immediately entitled to $960, and he may prefer to remain under the old law, which would give him on promotion an increase of $160 at once.

Mr. SPROULE. If he got an increase of $160 under the existing law and he wished to come under the provisions of this Act would he be entitled to an increase of $50 per annum ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. He can make his choice. A large number of clerks in the third class think they ought to be made second, and a large number of the second think they ought to be made first-class, and so on. They all have their expectations. They may wish to take their chances, and I do not propose to deprive them of that chance.

Mr. CLARKE. Is there any time limit under the present law when they get promotion ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No.

Mr. CLARKE. It is a matter of discretion with the minister.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. When a vacancy happens by death or otherwise.

Mr. CLARKE. Then a man would have to wait until another was removed to a higher sphere.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Something like that.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There does not seem to be a limit of time as to when the notice shall be given. He can wait a year or two and then come in.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I let him take advantage of all the benefits he can get out of the old Act and out of this Act.

Mr. GALLIHER. In connection with subsection 'g,' I would like to ask the hon. Postmaster General a question. I take it that persons coming under the provisions of the Act would start at their present salary, whatever that may be, and that time already served would not count upon the subsequent increase of $50. When would they get their first increase ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. One year from the date on which the last increase was received.

Mr. SPROULE. A man may not have received an increase for years.

Mr. CLARKE. Do you propose to give him $50 for each year that he has been without an increase ?

Mr. GALLIHER. I should think that would be a fair interpretation of it.

Mr. CLARKE. Does the hon. Postmaster General propose, in the case of a man who has been three or four years without an increase, that he shall receive three or four times the $50 ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, I do not propose that. I propose just what the Bill says, that if a railway mail clerk has not had an increase for a year or longer, he becomes eligible for an increase. If when this Act comes into force a man has not had an increase for a year, he would be eligible for an increase at once.

Mr. CLARKE. Then we are to understand that all the railway mail clerks will get increases under the provisions of this Act if they have not received an increase within a year before the 1st of July ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. They will be eligible for an increase at the expiration of one year from the date when they received the last increase.

Mr. CLARKE. And the case examination will have nothing to do with that increase ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not say that. They have to pass the case examination. The increases do not all date from the 1st of July. Suppose a man had an increase six months ago, he would not get another increase until six months from now. I think the case examination is held in the fall of the year, and any man who passed the case examination last fall would be entitled to an increase without having to pass another case examination within the year.

Mr. CLARKE. If the men are thoroughly qualified, would it not be a hardship, after doing this tardy justice, to retain this $50 for six or twelve months from now ? Because I understand from what the hon. gentleman says that they are not entitled to the statutory increase of $50 unless they first pass the examination.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not think the hon. gentleman understands the Bill. He complains of tardy justice. I am amending the law, which has been on the statute-book for many years, and the law requires the railway mail clerk to pass an annual case examination. That has been passed by all the clerks of the current year.

Mr. SPROULE. But unless they signify their desire to come under this Act, they cannot count their time until that is done.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That is within their own control.

Mr. SPROULE. And I gather that they must pass the examination afterwards before they can get an increase. The Bill so reads.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Look at subsection 'b' of section 1.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The Bill says 'unless the clerk within a period of twelve months passes a satisfactory case examination.' If you said 'has passed,' it would have a different meaning perhaps. Where do you date the period of twelve months from ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The Bill speaks of a man getting the increase within a year from the date of the last increase; and section 'b' says that if he has within that year passed a satisfactory case examination, he is entitled to the increase.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). However much the hon. Postmaster General thinks the statute means that, I cannot so construe it.

Mr. CLARKE. I take it further that the clause means that if the clerk passes his examination within the twelve months beginning the 1st of July next, his increase will date from the 1st of July, the day after to-morrow.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have explained that it means that the increase dates from the period of the last increase.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The minister may perhaps construe the section to mean what he thinks it means, but I venture to say that if it ever comes to be tested in a court of law, it will be found to mean something very different.

Mr. SPROULE. The increase is contingent on two things. One is that the man has to pass the case examination; the other is that he has to notify the minister of his desire to come under this Act. He may not have received an increase for three years, so that you cannot count a year from the time that he received his last increase.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. You are finding difficulties where they do not exist.

Mr. SPROULE. All I desire is to understand it. It does seem to me that if he received the maximum of his class some years ago, he could not get an increase unless promoted, and if not promoted he would not get an increase for some years.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think in that case it may be held that one year has elapsed.

Mr. CLARKE. I submit with the greatest possible respect that if more than twelve months had elapsed since he got an increase, he is entitled to an increase on the first of July, and he has a period of twelve months to pass his case examination.

Mr. GALLIHER. I think it means this. He is entitled to an increase, if at any time up to the time of granting this increase or within twelve months following, he has passed his case examination.

Mr. CLARKE. No, he is entitled to an increase, first of all, if more than twelve months have elapsed since he got an increase, and then he is given twelve months to pass an examination.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The clause seems to have been drafted in such a way that it is almost impossible to understand it. I see what my hon. friend from Yale means, namely, that if the clerk passes an annual examination he is entitled to the increase. Perhaps you might be able to take that meaning out of the clause, but it would be very much simpler if you would say that a clerk shall be entitled to the increase if within a period of twelve months next preceding the date of his increase, shall have passed the examination.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There is no object in repeating it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). This is new language. Because a certain expression has been used in the previous section, it does not necessarily follow that something entirely different shall receive the same construction.

On subsection (j) section one—mileage allowance,

Mr. GALLIHER. This seems to me an opportune time to call the attention of the hon. the Postmaster General to a request that has been made to me. It frequently happens that in winter times trains are storm bound or an accident occurs, and a train may be detained anywhere from one to ten or twelve hours. During that time the mail clerk is there and he has to get his meals and pay for them. He receives no extra remuneration or mileage, and yet he is on service during those hours, and I have been asked to put his case before the Postmaster General in order that an allowance may be made to him of twenty-five cents an hour or whatever sum might be deemed fair to be allowed for detentions of that nature.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There is a good deal of merit in that suggestion and I shall take it into consideration. It will be necessary to consult my officers, and if I think it advisable to take any action, it might be possible to make provision in the supplementaries.

On section 2,

Section 4 of chapter 28 of the statutes of 1902 is amended by striking out the word 'six' in the second line and substituting therefor the word 'three,' and by inserting in the eleventh line after the words 'responsible nature' the words 'or in recognition of special efficiency and good conduct.'

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This has to do with letter carriers. It is provided in the Act that the letter carriers serve a probationary period of six months during which they are in grade A. This cuts down the first probationary period from six to three months.

Mr. CLARKE. That only helps the new comers.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The section of the Act of 1902 provided that the letter carriers who were doing work of a specially responsible and onerous character might be put in grade E, which means a daily pay of $2.25. This amendment enables us to put into class, not only men performing duties of a special class, but also letter carriers who have shown especial efficiency and good conduct. Under the existing Act the promotion to grade E depends upon the nature of the work performed. If the letter carrier were serving a bank or were on some route that was especially laborious, he could be promoted. But, under this clause, a letter carrier who has a good record, without regard to the duties of his present route, can be put into grade E. Under this law a man could be promoted to grade E because of his past services.

Mr. CLARKE. Would it not be a graceful act upon the part of the minister to put all the letter carriers who are now in grade D into grade E where they could receive $2.25 a day instead of $2 a day? The memorials and petitions and representations sent to the Postmaster General have been numerous. These men are a very efficient body of public servants and are a very poorly paid class.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. They are much better paid than when I took office.

Mr. CLARKE. I am not aware that that is the case. The hon. minister is making amendments affecting those appointed since he came into office, but he has left those in office when he came in exactly where they were.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, no.

Mr. CLARKE. These men are now receiving $2 a day and the hon. minister is proposing, under this section, to widen the scope of the law, so that, if they can get the recommendation of the local superintendent they may be increased from $2 to $2.25 per day. It would be a graceful act for the Postmaster General, in view of the circumstances presented to him, increase of cost of living since he came into office, and so on, to give these men this pittance of 25 cents a day more. These men have appealed again and again to the Postmaster General. They will be satisfied with this increase, I am sure, and would redouble their diligence if that were possible to give a more efficient service. After all the extent to which the exchequer of the country would be affected would be very small, and this is a faithful body of public servants. As the hon. minister is widening the conditions under which they may receive this extra quarter of a dollar a day he should give it to all those who have reached the grade D.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I wish my hon. friend (Mr. Clarke) had pleaded as eloquently in years gone by for these officials. He had an opportunity years ago to render a service to these people; but he makes his appeal only at this tardy day, when he sees that justice is being done there. As he speaks of letter carriers, I think I may say that I am quite as sympathetic as my hon. friend, and I think I am proving that in a practical way. Let me show, for the information of the committee, what is the present remuneration of the letter carriers. Under the Act we passed last session the letter carriers not in grade E could receive a maximum of $2 a day. As soon as this Bill goes through, every letter carrier who has a good record—and none others should be entitled to special consideration—may receive $2.25 a day. He will be in receipt, at that time of the following sums: For 313 days—although he has two weeks leave of absence, he is paid for full 313 working days—$626. There is also a provision in the Act of last session giving an extra reward to a letter carrier who has rendered good service during the year, of ten days extra holidays or, at his option $20. The letter carrier could therefore receive $2 for every working day, and also a $20 bonus or $646. Besides his two weeks holidays he has the ordinary holidays observed throughout the country or portions of it. Also he is allowed uniforms, winter and summer of various kinds, which would mean a saving to a letter carrier of about $50 a year. This would make $696. If the letter carrier gets his extra 25 cents per day which the Bill contemplates, that would mean $78 making a total of $774 a year. And their services, do not, I think exceed eight hours per day. My hon. friend (Mr. Clarke) shakes his head. But I know what I am saying; they do not average more than eight hours a day. There is no necessity for my hon. friend to challenge the accuracy of that statement. I have it from the officials. And in many instances, their hours do not amount to anything like eight hours a day. Now, $774 is not bad pay for a letter carrier. I do not think that amount is realized, year in and year out, by many of the working people who, in one form or another, contribute to make up the pay of the letter carriers. At all events, whether more or less than workingmen, it is a great deal more than the letter carriers have heretofore obtained. Deducting the $50 for uniforms, it means practically $100 increase on a salary of $600.

Mr. CLARKE. Will the hon. Postmaster General please figure it out how the rate of those who reach the maximum class has been increased by $100 per year? How many weeks' holidays did the men get prior to the hon. gentleman (Hon. Sir Wm. Mulock) coming into office?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Three weeks.

Mr. CLARKE. That has been cut down to two weeks—away goes $14.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not understand the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Clarke's) reasoning under the old law they could get $600 and no more. Under this law they get more than I had first calculated. I said they received $100 more than under the old law, but they get $626 in wages and $20 bonus and $78 of increased pay under this clause, making a total of $724—practically an increase of $125 a year on a salary of $600. I think the letter carriers will be of the opinion that this is a substantial increase.

Mr. CLARKE. Did they get uniforms before the hon. gentleman came into office?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am not counting that in the comparative statement.

Mr. CLARKE. Does the hon. gentleman say that the letter carriers' position has improved by $125 since he came into office.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I say that under this Bill the letter carrier who gets the benefit of this Bill will have improved his pay by $124.

Mr. CLARKE. May I ask the hon. minister how many letter carriers in all the divisions of Canada earned $646 in salary last year?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not think the application of the law has been in force a year yet.

Mr. CLARKE. But the law the hon. gentleman spoke about gave them $2 a day that is $626——

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. And the bonus.

Mr. CLARKE. A bonus of $20—that is 10 days at $2 a day. May I ask the Postmaster General how many men in any city of Canada earned $640 last year ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have explained to the hon. gentleman that the Act was only passed last year. The hon. gentleman himself was a party to having an option of six months granted them in which to elect to come in. It was left optional with the letter carriers to come in or remain out ; some came in and some did not. Those that came in will get the benefit of this Act. I think when the time has arrived it will appear that they have gained a good deal more under the new law than they would under the old.

Mr. CLARKE. How many postmen have come in under the new Act ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am not able to say.

Mr. CLARKE. Will the hon. gentleman say that six men in the Toronto division have come in under the new Act ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes ; more than six.

Mr. CLARKE. More than six who have reached the maximum of $600 a year before the new Act was passed ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think so.

Mr. CLARKE. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will get the information before the committee reports the Bill, and also as concerns Montreal.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I will get the information, and keep the Bill in committee for another sitting.

Mr. CLARKE. Is it not a fact that those who came in under the provisions of the Act passed last year, lose all their pay in case of sickness ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE. Was that the case under the old law ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman is familiar with both the old law and the new.

Mr. CLARKE. I would like to know how many men, who were receiving $600 a year when the new law came into force, have taken advantage of it in each division of the postal service.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I will get the information for the hon. gentleman.

Mr. KEMP. How many years does a letter carrier have to remain in the service before he reaches the maximum ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL .Under the old law, between eight and nine years ; under the Act of last session, he can attain the maximum in a little over four years.

Mr. HENDERSON. I think this is perhaps an opportune time to bring again to the attention of the minister the very small allowances made to country postmasters.

Mr. CAMPBELL. That has been up two or three times.

Mr. HENDERSON. So has the question of giving an increased duty on vegetables. I am not aware that the hon. gentleman ever cast a vote in this House to assist the market gardeners or the postmasters throughout his riding. I have drawn the attention of the Postmaster General to that question, I dare say, two or three times ; I am not aware that the hon. member for West York (Mr. Campbell) ever drew attention to it, or cared a button whether the postmasters in his riding got a salary at all or not.

Mr. CAMPBELL. You do not know what the member for West York has been doing.

Mr. HENDERSON. No ; but we do know something that he did in his riding. What he has been doing behind the scenes, certainly we know not. But leaving that matter aside, I certainly think that while we are making such ample provision for the letter carriers in the city of Toronto for working eight hours a day—and I am not complaining of the amount they are receiving—I think some further provision should be made for country postmasters. It is a crying shame that throughout the rural districts men, and women too, have to give their services practically for nothing, for sums ranging from $12 up to $30 and $40 a year. Yet in order that the public service may be carried on, people have to give their time voluntarily for these insignificant sums. It is true that in some sections of the country these small pittances are added to by the people themselves who receive mail matter, in order to maintain an office. That should not be the case. Whilst the letter carriers in the cities are being considered, I desire to make an appeal on behalf of the rural postmasters. There is no doubt that many of them are entirely underpaid, and I do not think the Postmaster General could do a better service, something for which he would receive more gratitude from the people, than by giving a better compensation to these men who are performing this service practically for nothing.

Mr. LOGAN. I desire to add one word to what has been said by the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson). It seems to me this matter can well be considered by the Postmaster General, though I am aware that it would involve probably a considerable increase to the expenditure of the department. Still, it is not right that the country postmasters should be expected to attend to an office for the paltry sum of $12 per annum. There is a case in my own constituency where a daily mail runs through a district passing the post office in the morning and once again in the afternoon. That necessitates the postmaster's house being kept open, and he or his wife must be there to attend to that mail, even though no mail is left or taken. Certainly some provision should be made for better remuneration for country postmasters, and I strongly urge their case upon the attention of the minister.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. I must remind the Postmaster General of a deputation that came all the way from Manitoba on this very subject. The postmasters in Manitoba are underpaid, and there is a strong feeling out there that something should be done in their favour. If my memory does not fail, I believe the Postmaster General promised these men that he would give their request his most favourable consideration. I do not know what that amounts to, I see nothing in this Bill to help them, and unless we get the promise of another Bill on this subject, I am afraid that our friends from Manitoba will have no occasion to thank the Postmaster General for the kind reception he gave them when they came here.

Mr. MONK. I would like to say in respect to what has just fallen from the lips of the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. LaRivière) that very great complaint exists thoughout my own constituency and other constituencies similarly situated near Montreal in regard to the pay of country postmasters. They have, perhaps, not so much to do in the winter, but in summer all these places around Montreal are resorted to by the citizens of Montreal, and a very great increase of work falls upon the country postmasters, and I think it would be the duty of the department to give them some extra allowance for this. In regard to the question raised a moment ago by my hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Clarke), I would like to know if, when the hon. Postmaster General brings down the information in respect to the letter carriers and the salaries they have reached in the city of Toronto, he will be kind enough to do the same thing in regard to the letter carriers of the city of Montreal, because I have had the same inquiry, I presume, from Montreal as my hon. friend has had from Toronto, so that we can advert to the question when we get the information from the hon. minister.

Mr. SPROULE. I understand that it does not require a statutory provision to increase the salaries of postmasters and that it is done by regulation ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That is correct.

Mr. SPROULE. Then, it is not necessary to deal with it in connection with this Bill, but I would like to say a word in regard to what has been said about country postmasters. Of late years I have not had much to do with recommending their appointment, but I know that when our friends were in power we were obliged in some cases to raise money outside to pay these country postmasters over and above what they got from the department. They are about the poorest paid class of officers under the Crown in any part of the country.

Mr. CLARKE. I understand from the hon. Postmaster General that we may revert to this clause and discuss it again before the Bill has passed through the committee stage.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes, I have no objection to your discussing any of the clauses.

Mr. CLARKE. We cannot discuss it intelligently until we have got the information which the hon. gentleman has promised to bring down. It is understood that we can go back to this clause when the hon. minister brings down the information ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). Country postmasters in Nova Scotia were paid much higher salaries before confederation than they are receiving now. The salary which a great many of them receive now is no salary at all. It is too mean to be considered a salary.

On section 3,

Mr. CLARKE. That is to extend the time ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am informed that now that the letter carriers understand better the new law many of them wish to avail themselves of it and come in under it. They have drawn my attention to the matter and this is to give them an opportunity.

Mr. CLARKE. I think this is very commendable. As a result of coming in under it they will have their salaries increased from $100 to $150 a year ?

On section 4,

Mr. CLARKE. What does that mean ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Under the Civil Serivec Act every one had to serve a probationary period of six months before he was confirmed in his appointment. Being a probationer he was neither made permanent nor could he enter upon the full amount of his official salary. The object of this section is to get over that by allowing three months only to count and the other three months would go on and be considered as part of his permanent appointment, so that he will be able to ante-date the increase by three months.

On section 5,

Mr. CLARKE. What does that mean ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The Auditor General took exception that owing to the particular status of certain letter carriers they missed certain promotions and this is to enable them to get over some difficulties which stand in their way.

Mr. CLARKE. These are additional plums that the hon. gentleman is passing out to letter carriers.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. These are advantages to them.

Progress reported.

Motion agreed to.

RAILWAY ACT, 1903.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 21) to amend and consolidate the laws respecting railways.—The Minister of Railways and Canals.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK.

On section 271,

Mr. CLARKE. I would like to ask the Minister of Railways what provision is made in this Bill to insure that the privileges now enjoyed by commercial travellers as to fares, shall be continued? There is apparently a misapprehension existing among these gentlemen respecting the effect which this Bill would have on their existing privileges.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That would come under section 275. These gentlemen sent a delegation to meet me and I had the opportunity of hearing them. I told them that when the Bill came before the committee I would propose an amendment in accordance with their wishes, and I purpose doing so when we reach that section.

Mr. CLARKE. That is quite satisfactory. These gentlemen laboured under a misapprehension in regard to the matter, and that is why I brought it to the attention of the minister.

Mr. LENNOX. The hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) told me when he was leaving on Friday night that he had an understanding with the minister that this Bill would not be proceeded with. While the hon. gentleman did not ask me to do anything in the matter, I think it right to mention it to the minister.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Lancaster) spoke to me concerning certain clauses of the Bill which have been left in abeyance ; particularly the cattle-guard clause. I told him I would not take up these clauses in his absence, and I do not propose doing so. I hope, however, to get along with some clauses that are not controversial, and if any clauses should be passed which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lancaster) wishes to deal with, I have no objection that they should be returned to.

Mr. LENNOX. I have no doubt that that arrangement will be satisfactory. As regards this clause 271, I do not find that there is a precedent for it in any existing legislation, and I would submit with all due deference that the word 'reasonable' can have no reasonable place in that clause.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The word 'reasonable' occurs in the existing law, and practically the same provision as this has been in operation for a great many years and has caused no trouble or inconvenience.

Mr. LENNOX. I would suggest to the minister that there should be a reference printed in the Bill to show whether or not these sections are in the existing law.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We could do that.

Mr. LENNOX. If the word 'reasonable' appeared in this enactment for the first time it would be necessary to give it very careful consideration.

On section 273—filing and publication of joint tariffs,

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. This section seems to introduce a new principle into the Act, that is, not allowing a company to charge lower rates than the rates approved of by the board. I think the companies ought to be allowed to charge lower rates provided they do not discriminate against individuals or places. If the company think it is to their interest, perhaps at a particular season of the year, when they are competing with water transportation, to charge lower rates than those fixed by the board, why should they not be allowed to do so?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. In cases in which it is necessary that the company shall act promptly, that is to say, in all cases where the rates require to be fixed for competitive purposes, that is allowed. But where there is ample time, it has been deemed proper and reasonable that the company should prepare their tariff, notify the board, and give them a copy of the tariff. The board is thus put in possession of the intentions of the company. It is to enable the board to keep close supervision over the railways, and to have always before them knowledge of what is going on, that this provision is made. There is ample opportunity in ordinary transactions for them to do this. In extraordinary and emergency cases there is not, and therefore we have made it permissible for the railway companies, under what they call the competitive tariff, to make their tariff on the instant; and all they have to do is to forward that tariff at once, so that it may be known to the board that such a tariff on a competitive basis has been made.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Suppose a case like this occurs. Freight is being carried from the port of Buffalo on the American side to Montreal. The Canadian Pacific Railway has a line between these two points, on which the rate is fixed by the commission. Some time or other they may have to compete with the American route for the traffic. Is there any provision in the Bill which would allow them to do that?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It would be allowed on competitive business.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Suppose the railway were competing with water transportation, it would be allowed to lower its rates. But fifty or sixty times in the year a foreign railway company, when they find that the rates on our railways are fixed between Buffalo and Montreal and that they could not charge any less without the consent of the board, might immediately lower their rates and take the whole of the freight from our railways. It seems to me that more elasticity should be allowed to the companies.

Mr. DAVIS. I think that the hon. member for Lanark (Hon. Mr. Haggart) is perfectly right. In the United States that principle has been adopted. I notice that in one instance from Kansas city to Buffalo, while fixed rates were something like 12 cents, the actual rate charged was 5 cents per one hundred pounds. The same thing applied between Chicago and Buffalo. When the water rates come in, if you tied the railways up to a certain rate, they could not do anything at all. So long as they do not discriminate, I think you should allow them to cut rates as low as possible.

Mr. BARKER. The difficulty I see about the principle which the hon. minister is trying to establish is this, that it virtually makes the board traffic manager of all the railways. They have to know everything that goes on from week to week, settle the rates, variable as those must be according to the exigencies of business. The hon. gentleman says that an emergency can be met by the company acting upon it and afterwards giving reasonable explanation, but apart from emergency altogether, the traffic manager of a railway has from time to time to consider all the surroundings, and while he cannot raise the tariff rates he may be forced, by circumstances beyond his control to carry for less than those rates. If the board must be consulted on all these occasions, they will be virtually traffic managers of the road and be given all the discretion that ought to be given the officials of a road carrying on a commercial business. The hon. gentleman has not shown us the necessity for this. He has told us what he intends doing and why he thinks there is no difficulty, but how this will benefit the public he has not said, and I should think that there ought to be some very good reason indeed why a railway should not be allowed to charge as little as it likes, provided it charges everybody on the same scale.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman must see the importance, the absolute necessity of the board being advised of changes in rates, if it is to exercise proper supervision over these rates. No one imagines that any railway commission would be averse to a railway company carrying its traffic at the lowest possible rate, and there will be no fault found with any tariff which a railway company may propose because the rates are too low unless it be a discriminatory tariff. But unless you have some sort of control over the tariff which they make, how are you to judge whether or not the company are discriminating ? The board will then be at a great loss to form a judgment and to deal with the question of discrimination in an efficient manner. If you are to allow a railway company, without the knowledge of the railway commission, to reduce the rates, you will be undermining one of the safeguards provided in this Bill for the public protection. I have listened carefully to the objection made on behalf of the railways, but I do not see that I could abolish this principle in the Bill without greatly weakening and impairing the control of rates by the board. With these tariffs before it, the board will be able to see whether or not rates are being lowered in one direction or another for the purpose of discrimination, One of the things that the people most complain of is discrimination, and wherever it exists it ought to be stopped, and we are moving in that direction.

Mr. BARKER. I would like the hon. gentleman to consider whether he is not, by the method he is adopting, destroying in fact the competition between railway companies. I suppose he will concede that in a particular district, when the board settles the tariff, it will settle it for all railway companies. That being so, the board says to each railway company : You must carry at such a rate and no lower, but it is not uncommon that all the railway companies in the same district will not have exactly the same opinion as to how low a rate they can charge. Take the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway, the Grand Trunk Railway may be of opinion that it could carry at a five cent rate and the Canadian Pacific Railway might be of the opinion that it would require a six cent rate. The board, by its decision, might deprive the public of the benefit of the lower rate.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Where competition exists, each company may make its rates. There is nothing in this Act which suggests that a railway company may not charge lower rates than the tariff. On the contrary, the probability is recognized that that will be done. A railway company may make its rate as low as it pleases. All it has to do is to file its tariff and the board will not disallow it except where it is a discriminating tariff.

Mr. BARKER. How would the hon. gentleman deal with the case where one railway wanted to carry at the rate of five cents and the other wanted to charge six cents.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman is talking about one railway now against another. But the question of discrimination does not arise in such a case. The question of discrimination arises when a railway company deals differently with its own customers.

Mr. BARKER. I am speaking about tariffs which have been approved by the board. The tariff is binding on both companies. If one is willing to carry for less than that and the other is not, and you prevent one from carrying at a less rate than that fixed by the tariff, you prevent competition.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not at all. I must have failed altogether to make my meaning clear. I defy my hon. friend to point to a single syllable that will prevent competition. On the contrary everything points to competition. We do not require a tariff to be filed before a competitive rate is made.

Mr. BARKER. I am not talking about an emergency tariff.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Neither am I. The question is as to competition. Whenever a railway is offered competitive business, business which another railway could get, if they do not take it, they are authorized to make a rate of what they please and take the business. The only thing is that they must give the board notice by filing the memorandum showing the tariff they made on the business. Then they justify the tariff by the fact that they are giving it to get the business. Is that calculated to discourage competition ? I think not.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The hon. minister's explanation seems so entirely different from the section itself. The section is :

> And upon any such joint tariff being so duly filed and published, and published as provided in section 274, the company or companies shall, unless such tariff is disallowed by the board, charge the toll or tolls as specified therein, but until such tariff is so duly filed and published, no such toll or tolls shall be charged by the company or companies.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman is not dealing with the question. The clause the hon. gentleman has read is not the only clause of the Bill bearing upon the general question of tariff. This is a clause relating to joint tariffs upon a continuous through—route business—where one railway hauls a part of the way and another must haul the rest. and they have a joint tariff. There are a great many branches and subdivisions of the tariff question, and it is very important not to confuse them, because it is impossible to discuss them intelligently if you do.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Though this applies to joint tariffs, still the principle is there. A competitive tariff can be arranged where two roads must take part in the haul just the same as where the haul is altogether by one road.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Certainly.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The same principle applies to the joint tariff as to the other. My opinion is that under this clause the company should be allowed to charge anything under the amount of toll approved of by the board, without furnishing the department of the government with the information, provided they do not discriminate in a joint tariff against any individual or place.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. How would it be possible to insure the possession by the board of such information as would enable them to determine whether there was discrimination or not, if you allow the companies to make such charge as they please without furnishing the information as to what charge they have made ?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART What possible object is it for the board to know. They only want to know whether there has been discrimination or not. But, if there has been no discrimination against an individual or against a place, what possible object is it for the board to know whether the tariff charged is lower than that allowed by the board or not ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman starts out with the assumption—a very extraordinary thing for him to do—that there is no discrimination. I am trying to point out to him that somebody must determine whether there is discrimination or not and he cannot determine that unless the rates are made known.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. And would the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Blair) be kind enough to tell me how the board could know from merely seeing the rate whether there was discrimination or not ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. When they have the facts——

Mr. BARKER. The question of discrimination will only come up if there is a complaint raised. The person making the complaint would know whom to accuse of receiving the advantage, and that person could be brought before the board and made to give evidence as to the rate. The fact is that the hon. minister, to facilitate the trying of cases before the board, is destroying competition.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Barker) is altogether mistaken.

Mr. KEMP. The hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker) has said that the effect of this was to destroy competition. It seems to me that is the pith of the whole argument. I would like to give a concrete illustration of something that came under my notice a year or two ago. It relates to the matter of fuel oil. When the Standard Oil Company came into Canada, they raised the price of fuel oil to nearly double what it was before.

Mr. CLARKE. In what year ?

Mr. KEMP. About two or three years ago. The Canadian railways, the Grand Trunk and the Canadian Pacific Railway, saw that by water competition they would be deprived of carrying a certain amount of refined oil such as they had carried previous to the time the Standard Oil Company came into Canada. The rates from the fields where the oil was produced were, for refined oil 15 cents per 100 pounds, and for fuel oil, which is a by-product of the other, 9 cents per 100 pounds. The two Canadian railways abandoned the rate of 9 cents on fuel oil, which was worth about $1.50 a barrel against about $7 for refined oil, and allowed the fuel oil to come under the rate of freight on refined oil. So far as Toronto and every other town in Ontario east of Toronto was concerned, this rate held. But the Michigan Central has connection into Hamilton, and it refused to adopt the ruling of the other railways but went on carrying oil at 9 cents per 100 pounds as it had been carried for many years before. Now, under the provision proposed by the hon. minister with regard to this matter, that kind of competition will be destroyed.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think it at all.

Mr. KEMP. If the railway cannot make traffic at a lower rate of freight than those filed with the government, it seems to me that destroys competition.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have passed a number of clauses dealing with the general subject of rates. We have passed clauses relating to the subject of reducing rates without a word of criticism, nor would criticism have been justified. Read section 262. All this Act requires is that special freight tariffs and competitive tariffs shall be filed with the board, and such tariffs shall state the date when issued, and when to take effect. And the section says :

> When any such tariff reduces any toll previously authorized to be charged under this Act——

So, reductions are contemplated in plain and explicit terms. The company may reduce its tariff to zero if it will—

> —the company shall file such tariff with the board.

And so on. Now, I say that is all, and that tariff, as well as other tariffs, may be disallowed, but disallowed for sufficient cause. It would be disallowed if proved to be a discriminating tariff within the meaning of this Act; if it was not discriminating, no one having any qualifications to be a member of the board would disallow it simply because it reduced the rates. The very point is to get the rates down to a reasonable and proper basis, and when a railway company reduces, of its own motion, the rates which it charges, surely it is not to be assumed that the railway commission are going to disallow that tariff upon that ground alone. If there is any discrimination about it which will work unjustly to others, then of course the board may properly exercise the discretion with which the law invests them. Now, when we are dealing further along with other phases of the question of charges, of freight and tolls, when we come down to the joint tariff for practically foreign business, all that we provide is that these joint tariffs should be filed. Now, where is there any possibility of injury to any interest in requiring that these should be filed, and where is the foundation for the suggestion hon. gentlemen have made that we are interfering with competition ? I venture to say it cannot be found in the provisions of this Bill.

Mr. KEMP. The minister will admit that any tariff has to be registered and filed with the commission. Any railroad knowing that its cut rate which is of advantage to the public, was going to be made known to other railroads, would not file. A man would not make the cut rate if he knew his competitors were going to find it out immediately, and the public would not get the benefit of it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We are providing that these should not be made public, they are for the private and personal knowledge of the commissioners alone.

Mr. KEMP. But they are bound to file every cut rate.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, but they do not publish them, they are simply filed. That it seems to me, is a reasonable and proper precaution; the board should have knowledge of all the rates that are being imposed by the railway companies so that they may, having that knowledge, better decide as to whether or not there is any violation of the law in discriminating against other rights and interests.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I thought that before any special rates took effect they had to be published. First of all, you have to file them with the board and then you have to publish them three days before they take effect.

When any such tariff reduces any toll previously authorized to be charged under this Act, the company shall file such tariff with the board and shall publish the same in the manner in section 274 in such case provided, at least three clear days previous to the date on which such tariff is intended to take effect.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That expressly excludes applications for competitive tariffs. That clause has been amended.

Hon. Mr. BLAIR.

Mr. SPROULE. It seems to me you are abandoning the fundamental principle of the American law, which says that the great and beneficial effect of their board is publicity. You say here that you intend to keep it private.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I would like to be able to satisfy all my hon. friends opposite, but I do not see how I can do so. One says this is going to work unjustly because the competitive tariffs are going to be published; another condemns the Bill because he says that the great merit of the board is publicity.

Mr. SPROULE. I am merely drawing attention to that feature of the American law.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Kemp) and the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) must harmonize their views if they are going to act as a compact force in hostility to this Bill.

Mr. KEMP. I am sure I am not acting in any hostile way towards this Bill. I think the Bill is a very good one, but I am not clear as to the difference between a competitive tariff and a special tariff. I do not see any place in the Bill where this point is covered. This tariff is not to be published, but the one mentioned in clause 262 is to be made public. Now, where is the clause that refers to special competitive tariffs that are not to be made public.

Mr. BARKER. I suppose subsection 3 of 260 is the one.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You will find it in the amended subsection 4 of section 262. I admit that these are subjects of a technical character which the ordinary man is not able to understand without devoting a good deal of attention and study to them. I think that hon. gentlemen opposite, if they desire to assist in putting through the Bill, as I think they do, will have to take for granted that some attention and some study have been given to these things so as to make a scheme workable, without doing any injury to the business of the country. I could hardly be compelled to make hon. gentlemen opposite understand all these provisions when there may be some that I do not clearly understand myself.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. But the trouble with me is that I do not see the difference between a special tariff and a competitive tariff. Would the minister tell me the difference ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If the hon. gentleman will read the Bill, and is able to understand it, he will see the difference. Differences exist in railway operations and traffic. The law has defined the difference. I presume the hon. member will not ask me to go over it again and give a résumé of the whole definition and description of the whole classes of tariffs.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. No, I will not, particularly as I see that the hon. minister knows nothing about the difference. He has a very clever way of getting around the difficulty.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not know how the hon. gentleman can say that I do not know anything about it, because he is absolutely without any knowledge himself. I do not know how he will be competent to judge as to the competency of anybody else. This Bill provides for three different classes of freight tariffs. There is the standard freight tariff. That is the maximum. That is the tariff which is prepared by the companies and submitted to the board and if it receives the approval of the board it is the standard tariff that governs. Then, in special cases, in cases of special traffic and special classes of goods, this Bill contemplates that the companies may prepare and submit special freight tariffs. When these special freight tariffs are submitted they may go into operation and the company may make a tariff as low as it pleases as a special freight tariff. It has to be filed and this special freight tariff, if it is not competitive, the Act contemplates, shall be published. There is another class of tariff which is not intended by the company to come within either of these two classes, standard freight or special freight tariff, which may come within the third class which is called the competitive class, and which is designed to encourage competition in the fullest possible degree. That class of tariff may be imposed by the company without the sanction of the board. The company may take shipments under that tariff and the tariff need not be published. It is communicated to the board for the private knowledge and information of the board, and why we require that it should be placed before the board is that the board may have under its hand the means of knowledge so that it can determine whether or not from among the classes of business the company was doing at a certain time it was unduly discriminating in its provisions contrary to the provisions of this Bill. I think it would be difficult to design any more effective means of protecting the public and guarding against improper discrimination and at the same time affording the freest hand and the widest latitude to railway companies to go on with their business.

Mr. KEMP. Supposing that a railway company which did not make a competitive tariff was suspicious that a railway company which did make one was giving lower rates than authorized by the commission, if it applied to the commission or this competitive tariff, would the commission give it to that railway company ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is a matter, which, of course, would necessarily be in the discretion of the commission. If anybody who felt he had a grievance because some lower rate was given by the railway company to his neighbour than to himself came before the railway commission, the commission would say : Well, what is your complaint, what is it that you say the company has done for your neighbour ? If the information received from him should be such as to convince the board, or the member of the board that might be going into the matter at the moment, that there was ground to suspect discrimination was going on, it would not be necessary that the board should hand over a copy of this tariff to the complainant. They would be moved to have this thing further inquired into and such definite action taken as they thought proper to take against the company that was discriminating. The design is that this tariff shall not be made public so that opposing railways could know what a neighbour railway was doing in offering cheap rates. I think it is very proper that such information should be withheld.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. After that explanation I do not see any difference yet between the special freight tariff and the competitive tariff except this; the company has to publish the special freight tariff for a certain number of days and let the public know what it is. The competitive tariff need not be published at all. But, the moment the tariff is approved by the board or filed with the board, the distinction between the competitive and special tariffs ceases.

On subsection (c), section 274—filing and publication of competitive tariffs,

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Here is a provision for a competitive tariff, and the distinction between that and the special tariff was that one was to be made public and the other not. Under this section the competitive tariff is obliged to be open for the inspection of the public.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The intention of this is that the board, when they know all the circumstances of the case, may have power to exempt this from publication.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I see that ; but in some cases competitive tariffs are to be published unless the board specially exempts them. It appears to me that a special tariff may be a competitive tariff, and the two things are so closely joined that I cannot see the distinction yet.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will try to make my hon. friend see the difference between a special tariff and a competitive tariff. The distinction between these two tariffs does not consist at all in the circumstance that one may be exempted by the board from publication and the other not. A special freight tariff is a tariff which in addition is based upon the rules that govern it and it is controlled by the law on the short haul principle, but the competitive tariff is not.

Mr. KEMP. Might I ask the minister if, under any circumstances, such a thing as a competitive tariff could exist between the city of Ottawa and Peterborough, Ontario, for instance ? There is no water competition.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It would not be limited to water competition.

Mr. KEMP. The Canadian Pacific Railway and the Canada Atlantic Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway go to Peterborough—could a competitive tariff exist between Ottawa and Peterborough ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There cannot be any possible objection to competition between railroads running between any two points in Canada that are reached by two roads.

Mr. KEMP. Before this section is adopted, I would like to draw the attention of the minister to a matter which I think he has heard of before. How are the public to know when it is the intention of the committee to revise tariffs or classifications ? I think it was suggested to the minister that notice of all changes of tariff should be sent to certain boards of trade or other commercial organizations. It has been the complaint of these organizations for a long time past that they have not known of these changes, and have not been able to present the case of the public. Is there any way that the minister can suggest whereby notice of these changes could be made known to these organizations ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Certain boards of trade might be notified.

Mr. KEMP. Something like the following has been suggested :

The company shall file with the board as many copies of all proposed tariffs and freight classifications as the board may prescribe, and on receipt thereof the secretary of the board shall mail to each incorporated board of trade, chamber of commerce or commercial association in Canada a copy thereof, and shall send by mail a copy thereof to all other persons requiring the same.

I think fifty or sixty copies would be sufficient.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think we might make provision very easily ; but I would not advise as many copies as that. There are only three or four boards of trade that interest themselves in the subject. The Toronto Board of Trade is the only one with which I have had any communication on the subject.

Mr. KEMP. It represents pretty well the Ontario organizations.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think I would not be far astray if I said that one of our great railroads would have a thousand different tariffs in operation, and it would be a very serious matter to give notice of all these.

Mr. KEMP. The boards of trade look upon it as a very important matter.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is true, and I think the case would be met sufficiently by providing that the boards of trade of Toronto and Montreal should be supplied. They are the great centres, and perhaps would be the only ones requiring to be informed.

Mr. KEMP. You might provide for sending to cities of over 200,000 population.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will look into the matter, and put something in the Bill.

Mr. BARKER. If the minister adopts that clause or any modification of it, I would suggest that he would provide for sending to all cities where there are boards of trade.

On section 279, subsection 3,

3. Any person or any officer or agent of any company who shall deliver goods for transportation to the company or for whom as consignor or consignee the company shall transport goods, who shall knowingly or wilfully, by false billing, false classification, false weighing, false representation of the contents of the package, or false report of weight, or by any other device or means, whether with or without the consent or connivance of the company, its agent or agents, obtain transportation for such goods at less than the regular tolls then authorized and in force on the railway shall for each offence be liable to a penalty of not exceeding one thousand dollars nor less than one hundred dollars.

Mr. KEMP. I do not understand what the object is of making a double penalty for the shipper. The railway company, under the two preceding sections are liable to a fine of from $100 to $1,000. Under subsection 3, the shipper is liable to a similar penalty. But why put into the hands of the railway power practically to fine the shipper and hold his goods and confiscate them to pay the fine ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The object is to provide all necessary and proper, and possible guarantees that the law shall be enforced. In replying to what I understand to be the hon. member's (Mr. Kemp) view, I do not see why one of the parties should be subject to a penalty and the other, who may have wilfully incited or encouraged the unlawful act, should escape. We make both liable and put both on the same basis.

Mr. KEMP. I think the hon. minister does not understand me. I agree that the shipper should be subject to the penalties which are prescribed in subsection 3, which are the same as those prescribed against the railway. But the hon. minister not only subjects the shipper to the same fines as the railway company—to which I agree—but he allows the railway company to charge fifty per cent more if freight is not classified in the way prescribed.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is the fifty per cent tariff the hon. gentleman objects to ?

Mr. KEMP. I object to the double fine against the shipper. I may refresh the hon. minister's memory by again calling his attention to something I spoke of in the House a few days ago. The railway companies issued a classification which was to take effect on the 1st of May. Under the law, that should be submitted to the Governor in Council and approved. This has not been done, but yet the railways are operating under it. It may be said that the classification is not more onerous to the shipper than the schedule of a previous time. I am not speaking of the classification itself, but of a rule inserted in the front of this classification. To this rule I drew attention before. It provides that if articles are shipped under false names to deceive the carrier or avoid the classification, the agent is to charge fifty per cent in addition to the rate that would have been charged had the property been correctly described. So, the hon. minister will see that the railways, while they occupy the same position as the shipper with regard to the penalty of from $100 to $1,000, they have asked—I take it—the hon. minister to empower them by legislation to inflict a double penalty upon the shipper. I take it that the attention of the hon. minister has not been drawn to the fact that the shipper is already subjected to the same penalty as the railways, and should not be subjected to the double penalty at the hands of the railways without coming before the commission.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If I understand what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Kemp) has in mind, I must say that I cannot agree with him. The penalties imposed under this clause are not because the shipper is trying to cheat the railways, but for the purpose of securing the observance of the law. When the fine is imposed, it does not go into the exchequer of the railway. In the other case where the extra rate of fifty per cent in addition to the ordinary rate is allowed, that is for the protection of the railways. Suppose that a railway carries a cargo of grain the freight on which would be, for the sake of illustration, $200, but stowed away in that grain are ten or fifteen thousand dollars worth of very high class, rich goods, which, if properly billed would pay very high rates, the hauling of these goods being very profitable to the railway. If a man is trying to have carried as grain, goods that should be charged four to twenty times as high it is reasonable not only that he should pay a penalty for his fault, but that he should pay a higher rate to the railway company than he would be called upon to pay under ordinary circumstances. It is not a very excessive penalty that is imposed in this way. He only pays one-half more freight than he would have paid if the railway company were carrying the article under its proper classification. There seems to be no reason why, when fraud is being practiced upon the company, and they discover it, the shipper should not pay additional freight. That, at all events, is the reason why this clause has been inserted. I have talked the matter over fully with the railway people, and they made out a case that satisfied me this was a fair proposition.

Mr. MONK. It seems to me there is not sufficient reason to make the distinction between the punishment provided in subsection 3 and the punishment provided in the other sections. The shipper who commits the fraud described in subsection 3 incurs a punishment similar to the punishment provided in the other subsections. He is liable to pay a sum of from $100 to $1,000, and he is punished for that offence. Why should he be punished twice ? There is no doubt that under the common law, if that fraud is discovered and he is convicted, the railway company has a claim against him for the full amount ; and if, as mentioned by the Minister of Railways, he has stored that grain or other articles, he might be subject to the full amount of his freight, I think the Minister of Railways will admit that, without the proposed amendment. The fraud has been discovered. We will suppose he has paid his fine, and he is subject to the full amount of his freight under the common law. Then why should we subject him to this 50 per cent additional ? I say that he has purged his fault by the payment of his fine. It seems to me that the railway companies are demanding a little too much when, after he has paid his fine, they wish him in addition to pay 50 per cent more. He becomes, under these circumstances, liable to a double penalty. I think it would be better to leave it as it is.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not know that I can add anything to what I have said. It still seems to me reasonable that a man who has been caught in the act of practising a fraud in getting his goods carried at a rate much below the proper rate, should, when discovered, be called upon to pay something in addition to the price of that freight, because that is the only mode in which the company can protect itself. The railway company may perhaps, in the course of the year's business, carry a good deal of freight under those circumstances and in that way, without discovering the fraud, and after sustaining a loss. But when a man is caught operating in such a fashion, I do not think we are treating him unjustly when we say that, in addition to the proper rate of freight which he would have to pay, he should pay an additional sum to the company whom he may have defrauded in many instances. So far as the penalty is concerned, that is a separate proposition. But I do not see why we should feel any concern at all as respects the individual who is caught perpetrating such acts. He does not deserve any sympathy.

Mr. KEMP. This is another illustration of the plausible way the railways have of putting their case before the minister. I would like to ask the minister if the railways can cite a case where grain was ever carried in car-loads as silverware, or other expensive material ? I do not deny but that it might be done. A man who would do that would steal, he would do anything ; and there ought to be a law to reach such individuals. But under the Act, as the minister had it originally drawn, that man is subject to a penalty of $1,000 if he is discovered. Now, that is an extreme case, and it is another indication of the plausible and clever way the railways have of working. I venture to say that such a case never happened. But I wish to refer to the thousands and thousands of shipments that take place every day, from every warehouse in the country and from every factory in the country, which would be affected by this clause. Now, in that classification there are upwards of 3,000 different items. That classification is not carefully studied by the clerk in the employ of the manufacturer or the merchant : it is a most complicated document, and it is possible for a clerk to make a mistake. If he makes a wilful mistake, he can be punished. But this clause goes further, and as soon as the goods which are shipped reach the railway station they are subject to an inspection—by whom ? They are subject to the inspection of men appointed by the railways. These men sometimes know their business, but very frequently they know very little about what the goods are that are shipped. After making their inspection, they raise the billing of these goods, and they walk into the office of the billing clerk of the railway company and they say : Inflict a penalty on this man of 50 per cent over and above the freight of these goods, because they are wrongly billed. Who is to try the case ? The man is not asked. The railway people never go to the shipper and ask him why he did this, and get an explanation. Still they are just as liable to be in the wrong as the shipper. They are more frequently in error than the shipper, in my experience, and I have had a good deal of experience with them. And to say that a man should be subject to a penalty of $1,000 for committing such a mistake, and that his goods are liable to be confiscated by the railway with 50 per cent addition—I say it is an outrage, and the public of this country will consider it as such if it is persisted in. I would like to know where there is a precedent in Great Britain or the United States for such action. I say the dishonest shipper that will wrongfully classify his goods should be brought under the Criminal Code. I do not complain that he should be fined $1,000, even $2,000. Put him in jail if necessary ; but do not leave it in the hands of the railway to administer the criminal laws of this country.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is not proposed that the railways shall administer the criminal law. They cannot even enforce any of these penalties under this Act without leave of the board. But this is a case where a man has wilfully committed a fraud. He is not, as the hon. gentleman has just pictured him, an innocent man who has made a mistake by reason of the great extent and variety of the classification which he has not been able to understand. This is the case of a man who wilfully perpetrates or attempts to perpetrate a fraud upon the company in the transportation of his goods. Why should not that man be asked to pay more than the ordinary rate that he has tried to escape by getting freight carried for less ?

Mr. KEMP. Who is to say whether he did it wilfully or knowingly ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The court.

Mr. KEMP. I do not understand that the court would have to say it at all. The railway company would hold the man's goods, if the fraud is made plain under this classification. I am advised that the railway company could collect the fine as an extra charge and hold the man's goods until he paid it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The question is raised as to whether a man has done it wilfully and knowingly. The railway company cannot determine whether it has been done wilfully or knowingly, but if it were done wilfully and knowingly they would have the right, under this Bill, to insist upon the payment of the fine.

Mr. BARKER. I think justice will be accomplished if the merchant were compelled to pay his proper rate without imposing a penalty of fifty per cent, because he is made to pay the company a penalty in addition of from $100 to $1,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. He may or he may not. He is subject to it.

Mr. BARKER. This subsection contemplates that the railway company may commit an offence against the merchant. In that case the railway company has to pay a fine, but it has not to pay the merchant anything. If the merchant commits an offence he has not only to pay a fine, but he has to pay something to the railway company. I do not know that the penalty will do any good to the railway company. The punishment of this fine will deter the merchant from improperly representing his freight, and I think it will answer all the purposes if the hon. minister simply requires the merchant to pay the full rate he should have paid in addition to the fine. I think my hon. friend from East Toronto (Mr. Kemp) is quite right in saying that you are dealing differently with the merchant from the way in which you are dealing with the railway company.

Mr. KEMP. I would like to ask the hon. minister how this penalty of 50 per cent in addition is to be collected ? It is an extra toll. The railway will hold that freight until it is paid. Does the hon. minister pretend to say that the freight in each case of the hundreds of thousands of cases that will occur will be held until this matter is brought to the attention of the commission sitting in Ottawa, or some place else, before it is decided ? You would take up all the time of the commission if that procedure had to be gone to. The 50 per cent extra is in the shape of a toll and it would be collected by the railways, and if the consignee refuses to pay it, the railways will have the same power they have now in reference to any toll, to realize upon the goods.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will consider this subsection, and in the meantime we will allow it to stand if hon. gentlemen think it is unduly favourable to the railway company.

On subsection 5, section 279,

Whenever the company files with the board and publishes any tariff, and such tariff comes into force and is not disallowed by the board, under this Act, or participates in any such tariff, the tolls in such tariff, while so in force, shall as against such company, its officers, agents or employees, in any prosecution under this Act, be conclusively deemed to be the legal tolls chargeable by such company, and any departure therefrom shall be an offence under this Act.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Does that mean that they may file a lower or higher tariff than that which has been approved by the board ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This applies to any tariff. Of course, the company could not have any tariff higher than the standard tariff.

Mr. LENNOX. I think the word 'disallowed' is very dangerous. The theory of the Bill is that we are changing altogether the old system by which the railway company originated a tariff, put it in force, and the Railway Committee of the Privy Council would disallow it. Now a tariff is to be in effect only after it is allowed by the railway commission. It is quite true the company may originate it in the way of proposing it, but it gets its force and effect from the action of the board and from that alone. It has no force or effect until the board sactions it, and it is on that point that a difficulty may arise.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There are certain tariffs which may be filed and which do not require to be allowed or disallowed.

Mr. LENNOX. If the railway company conceives that a certain tariff ought not be submitted to the board, and they do not comply with these terms they are subject to all the penalties herein laid down. I think it is giving the railways a large and dangerous amount of control.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is the railways that are subject to these penalties.

Mr. LENNOX. That does not alter the case, because I suppose the railway company has the same right as anybody else. I am not fighting for farmers or merchants or any particular class. I am calling the attention of the minister to the effect of this on the people, no matter who these people happen to be.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is not for but against the railway company.

Mr. LENNOX. It is giving the railway company in the meantime an enormous control.

On subsection 6,

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I move to add to subsection 6 the following :—

Provided that upon the hearing and determination of any application or complaint before the board in respect of any such infraction, the board may in addition to or in substitution of any other relief, award to any complaining parties so aggrieved such damages as it may find him to have sustained, and the payment of such award shall be in complete satisfaction of any claim for damages, including repayment of over charges which such party would otherwise have had by reason of such infraction or matters of complaint.

Mr. LENNOX. What is the meaning of this ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This was in the Bill introduced last year, but on consideration we thought we had better drop it. However, this clause is in the English Act and is worked by the English Board of Railway Commissioners, and we are led to believe that it has answered a very useful purpose. The railway board having all the evidence before it, it would seem that they might very properly consider the question and make the award of damages to the person who suffered, and if dealt with in that way that is the end of the litigation. This law prevails in England and it has a good deal to recommend it. It is not of course entirely free from doubt, but it would be a very easy matter if it is found not to achieve any good purpose, to eliminate it from the Bill at any time. We have the English experience for a number of years to justify us in trying the experiment.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Has it been construed in England as ousting the jurisdiction of the courts with respect to damages.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think so.

Mr. LENNOX. Either this subsection 6 as originally printed should be allowed to stand without this addition, or if this addition be inserted then we had better remove the most of subsection 6. I submit that subsection 6 without this addition is quite plain enough in giving the right of action in an ordinary court of justice. It is not a question for the jurisdiction of the board at all. If it is fair that a company should be liable to make good in treble damages the amount of loss sustained, then this further provision should not be inserted to conflict with it.

In the first place, if the party aggrieved does not contemplate getting his whole remedy before the board, but contemplates bringing an action at law at a later date, he will not bring before the board evidence to show the full relief he is entitled to. Many cases will arise in the working out of this Act in which evidence will come before the board to put the board to some extent in possession of the facts. But where a suitor or party complaining does not intend to submit his rights to the board for determination of the damage he shall sustain, I submit that it would be unfair to deprive him of the ordinary rights which are directly conferred upon him under subsection 6 unless with his consent. If he sees fit to consent to it, I do not see any great difficulty ; but I submit that if there is any such proviso put in, although I am not in favour of it being put in at all, it should read that the board may, 'with the consent of the party complaining, but not otherwise,' do so and so. It is a case in which we are giving to the board controlling powers which I do not think are required in order to the efficient carrying out of the provisions of this Act.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am willing to insert the words, 'with the consent of the parties.' I do not think the board would act without their consent.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am inclined to think that there must be some change made in the section, otherwise it would not work out very well. For example, suppose that a person who believes himself to be aggrieved has begun an action against a company in the courts. Under the section as printed, he would be entitled to recover from the railway company. While that action was pending, a similar application might be made to the board under the provisions of this statute ; and unless this section were amended in some way, you would have the court and the board both dealing with the same matter at the same time. It seems to me that some confusion would be likely to ensue unless you had some language to show where the jurisdiction of the board ceased and the jurisdiction of the court began.

THE MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It would seem to me that even though the proceedings had been commenced, the adjudication would be made by the board.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Curiously enough I had almost the very case I refer to. The hon. gentleman may remember that there used to be a board of arbitrators in connection with the government railway. An action was commenced by an individual whose land was taken, against the officers of the government on the ground that the statute was not complied with before the land was entered upon. A line exceeding one mile in length on the Dartmouth branch had been commenced without an Order in Council being issued, though it could only be done by virtue of an Order in Council. While that action was pending, the Order in Council was passed, and proceedings were taken before the arbitrators, and the damages, being the value of the land, were assessed. Then the question arose whether or not that could be pleaded as a good matter arising after the action commenced. The court held that it could not. Perhaps it would be advisable to be pretty definite in regard to these two branches of the section otherwise you might have considerable litigation as to whether or not the application had been answered.

Subsection 6 allowed to stand.

On section 284—traffic agreements.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I move that this section be amended by adding at the end of subsection 1 the following words :

Provided that the board may by order or regulation, exempt the company from complying with any of the foregoing conditions with respect to any such agreement or arrangement made or entered into by the company for the transaction of the usual and ordinary business of the company, and where such consent of the shareholders may be deemed by the board to be unnecessary.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. This seems to be a very sweeping exception.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What is intended to be covered is any ordinary traffic agreement which may be made between two tariff officers, and which it is not necessary to have formally ratified by the shareholders. To go through all this formality with regard to a mere arrangement for an interchange of freight would be unnecessary.

Mr. BARKER. But might not this refer to agreements entered into for a term of years, for example. I should think it would be very dangerous to allow agreements to be entered into for a term of years without the consent of the shareholders.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. But agreements may be entered into for a week or a month—a mere part of the ordinary business. The board is empowered to dispense with the formalities in that case.

Mr. BARKER. But this clause has been in the Railway Act for twenty years and has never interfered with the ordinary interchange of traffic between companies.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They have simply disregarded it.

Section, as amended, agreed to.

SUPPLY—EXCISE DUTIES ON TOBACCO.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding) moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. DAVID HENDERSON (Halton). Mr. Speaker, in this morning's 'Globe' I see an article headed :

DUTIES ON TOBACCO.

Excise Largely Increased on the Foreign Leaf.

New Regulations Cause a Flurry in the Trade in Toronto—Users of Plug Tobacco Will Feel Increase.

I cannot understand, nor can many hon. members of the House understand, by what authority this additional excise duty has been imposed so suddenly upon the people of this country. The hon. Minister of Finance is in his place and in the absence of the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue (Hon. Mr. Bernier) I would ask for the information of the House by what authority this has been done ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I would prefer that the hon. gentleman would be good enough to allow the matter to stand until the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue is present.

Mr. HENDERSON. All right.

SUPPLY—THE MILITIA FORCE.

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON (Haldimand and Monck). Mr. Speaker. Before this motion is passed, I desire to make a few remarks concerning the present condition of the Canadian militia, its wants and the best way of meeting them. I have not spoken this session on this subject, nor will I now treat of it at great length. Fully aware as I am of the difficulty of getting the ear of this House at any time, and more especially at this late season of the session, I bespeak the attention of the honourable members, for I feel that I have matter of importance to lay before them. When his main estimates were under discussion, the Minister of Militia stated that later on, when he brought down the supplementaries, he would make a full statement as to militia affairs in general. I am purposely anticipating this because I wish to give him an opportunity of hearing in advance what I have to say, so that if he sees fit he may later comment upon it, having had plenty of time to verify my facts and figures in the meantime. I am sorry indeed that he is not present, but I can delay my remarks no longer, since I am momentarily expecting a telegram which may call me away from Ottawa for a indefinite time ; what I say, however, will appear in Hansard, and so be available to him. I may remark that while I do not claim to have a mandate from the militiamen of Canada, I have talked with scores of them since our camps of last fall, have studied the subject as carefully as possible, and am prepared to give an earnest opinion even though a few may be found to differ with it. I am encouraged to proceed in this matter by the feeling that only a few members of this House are absolutely indifferent to our militia, while the number of those actually antagonistic to it is insignificant indeed. We have had encouraging and sympathetic speeches from the member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) who most certainly will not be accused of a tendency towards militarism, from the member, the independent member, for West Elgin (Mr. Robinson) who will certainly not be accused of extravagance, from the members of His Majesty's truely styled 'Loyal Opposition,' and from a number of others on your right, Sir. But encouraging as all this undoubtedly is, it is as nothing compared with my feeling of satisfaction when I read the memo. of August 11, 1902, presented by our ministers in London to the British ministers there on the subject of imperial defence at the time of the colonial conference last summer. I would very gladly read that admirable document in toto, Sir, but for fear of wearying the patience of the House, none too robust in weather such as this, and I feel constrained to quote portions of it since upon it in very large measure, I rest my case. First, then, in regretfully declining to meet the suggestions of Mr. St. John Broderick, suggestions which in my opinion, apart altogether from questions of self-government, involved a much heavier expense than that hon. gentleman, unacquainted apparently with our wage market here, had imagined, an expense for which the people of Canada might not have been willing to stand, our ministers state that their objections arise 'not so much from the expense involved,' &c. I note this implied expression of willingness to spend a reasonable sum, for future use in this speech, and proceed with my extracts from the memo :

> They fully appreciate the duty of the Dominion, as it advances in population and wealth to make more liberal outlay for those necessary preparations of self defence which every country has to assume and bear.

Further on, in saying a good word for our force, attention is called with pride to the fact that :

> Annual drill in camps of instruction for the rural corps, and at Battalion Headquarters for the city corps, has been carried out each year for the past six years.

Proceeding the ministers say that they are far from claiming that perfection has been attained :

> If defects exist——

Say they :

> —there is every desire on the part of the Canadian government to remove them, and for this purpose the advice and assistance of experienced imperial officers will be welcomed and all reasonable efforts made to secure an efficient system.

Apart from this special memo., on page 32 of the report, we read an account of the discussion of the proposal of Mr. St. John Broderick for a colonial reserve; 'a special body of troops, earmarked for imperial service,' the part of which germane to my remarks runs as follows :

> The representatives of Canada and Australia were of opinion that the best course to pursue was to endeavour to raise the standard of training for the general body of their forces, to organize the departmental services, and equipment required for the mobilization of a field force, leaving it to the colony, when the need arose to determine how, and to what extent it should render assistance.

Taking all these quotations together, we find an absolute pledge given by our representatives for militia betterment, a pledge given on an occasion of grave importance, reduced to writing, mistake or misunderstanding an impossibility. Let me recall for a moment the personnel of our representatives on that occasion. There was the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), who has honoured our force by becoming the honorary lieutenant colonel of that smart French Canadian corps, the 9th Voltigeurs de Quebec ; there was the hon. Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding) who so constantly and carefully guards the treasury from leakage, there was the hon. Minister of Customs (Hon. Mr. Paterson), not a warlike man, it is true, but an eminently good business one, little likely to be carried away by the showy side of imperialism, whose department in large part furnishes the funds, a part of which I crave for our necessities ; there was the hon. Minister of Militia (Hon. Sir Frederick Borden) whose knowledge of and warm interest in the force which he directs is too well known to require commendation at my hands, and there was that shrewd and economical administrator the hon. Postmaster General (Hon. Sir William Mulock). Of him let me say a special word. Again and again have I heard him described as unfriendly to the militia. A more unfair charge was never put upon a public man. True, he has spoken out both manfully and well against militarism, but militarism implies a large standing force with a heavy expenditure, it is the very antithesis of a citizen soldiery, and as unpopular with our men to-day as with any other class in the community. His views, embodied in the memo. from which I have quoted give the lie to his slanderers, and enable us to claim him as one of our most valued friends.

Now, Sir, to come from generalities to particulars, from the foundation to the superstructure. While not one of those imperial officers from across the sea whose advice and assistance is to be welcomed as stated in one of the numerous quotations above given, the door is surely wide open also for the advice and assistance of 'one of the native born.' Am I not justified then in supposing that if I can convince this House that the Canadian army is in serious danger of disintegration in one of its very most important parts, relief will be granted, even though that may entail expense ? Am I not justified still further in the assumption that once let the cabinet be convinced that the militia is not even stationary but actually retrogressing, this cabinet pledged to Britain for improvement, and it must and will gladly meet the situation and destroy the danger ?

Well Sir, in all seriousness, after due consideration and recognizing the importance of the assertion, I say here to-day in my place in parliament that the militia, so far as the rural part thereof is concerned, is in infinitely worse plight to-day than it was two years ago, and that in my opinion another year under present conditions will utterly demoralize it.

The reason is not far to seek—it lies in the fifty cent daily wage. The time has come, Sir, to double that amount. For many years the militia struggled on for half a dollar a day, never satisfactorily progressing, ever calling for sacrifice on the part of officers and men. With the increased prosperity of the country, and the higher wages obtainable, the system has broken down. I do not blame this government and its predecessor for getting a fairly good article as cheaply as possible, but since we still require the fairly good article, and can no longer get it at the bargain counter, we must pay whatever higher price is necessary to procure it.

I shall not Sir, make mere empty statements, but I shall substantiate them by facts and figures. Let us see what happened at the recent camps in districts one and two, held respectively at London and at Niagara-on-the-Lake, I think I may say without fear of contradiction two of the best militia districts we have in Canada, but first, for the benefit of the large number of members not acquainted with the technical details, just a word as to the basis on which our force is established. Let me take a company of infantry for example. Our authorized strength for such is three officers, six non-commissioned officers, and thirty-six men. This is on a peace footing. On a war footing the number of officers and non-commissioned officers would remain precisely the same, but the number of men would be increased to 119, bringing a company exclusive of officers up to a strength of 125, thus making an eight company regiment, 1,000 strong.

Of course the idea was to give us the requisite number of trained officers and non-commissioned officers, with a fair sprinkling of drilled men in the ranks, hoping and believing that under such circumstances the infusion of new blood could be readily absorbed and controlled. This is known as the skeleton system, and considering our resources in men and money would answer very well if adhered to every year. Unfortunately this is not being done. Last year only the non-commissioned officers with one officer per company, and a small number of men, the latter for fatigue work only, and not for drill, were called out. This year all officers and non-commissioned officers, with twenty-one men per company, as against an establishment of thirty-six men, have been called out in the case of most regiments, though some have been left at home entirely. Well Sir, this means that starting as a sekeleton we have been called upon to parade as the skeleton of a skeleton. But worse is yet to follow. The number this year called out would mean about 253 for an eight company infantry regiment, while the figures which I shall presently submit prove that we have been unable to supply even this small quota, not a single regiment that I know of having turned out a full 180 out of the 253 required with the exception of the 30th Wellington rifles, which is a ten company corps. I have shown that we were called upon to furnish the skeleton of a skeleton, I now state that we have actually turned out the shadow of a skeleton of a skeleton. Can anything so ghost-like be longer called a militia force. True the officers and non-commissioned officers, the most important part, showed up in very fair numbers, but this will not continue. Men must have a pride in their unit or they will cease to act. I know the case of one company which this year had two officers and six non-commissioned officers to command two men, one of whom was the cook. The captain of that company, Captain Rolston, is one of the best militiamen I know, enthusiastic and able. Never before has he failed to bring out a full company of excellent physique. He told me that he had worked harder than usual at recruiting this year, with this disheartening result, and I believe that one more such experience will drive him from the force. The trouble works both up and down. A non-commissioned officer with no men to command loses interest in his work, and the colonel of a regiment which has dwindled to the size of a fair company loses heart and keenness, which I know to my sorrow.

And now for the figures :—In No. 1 district there is an establishment of cavalry, infantry, and army medical corps, of 3,611 officers and men, exclusive of the city corps, and of these only 1,248 attended camp; just barely one-third. In No. 2 district there is an infantry strength of 3,677 officers and men, exclusive of the city corps, and of these only 1,570, far less than half found their way to camp. Startling as these figures are they do not represent the full significance of the case, for not only are we reduced to a minimum in numbers, but the physique of those whom we do get out is anything but satisfactory. Those going to camp under present conditions may be roughly divided into two classes—the enthusiasts, than whom it would be hard to find a better lot, and a large residue who may fairly be described as the fifty cent men, a class not worth even that pittance, men who break the hearts of the good soldiers with whom they are associated, and who are brought out by captains in sheer despair to maintain even the semblance of a company. And here Sir, I cannot refrain from telling of an amusing incident closely connected with the physique of the men which occurred recently at camp Niagara. The inspecting officer was going round a company, and he found fault as to the age of several veterans whose Fenian Raid medals and leathery mahogany skin betokened advanced years. Reaching the other flank of the company he happened on a number of downy youths who must have barely escaped the nursery to be present, and again his strictures broke forth. The captain of the company listened in respectful silence till his superior officer was through, and then remarked, "what you say is no doubt all true sir, but the average age would be about right." Now Sir, I have given you the figures of these two districts, all that are at present available to me, but inasmuch as these are always much above the average, it is fair to argue that this lamentable state of affairs will be reproduced throughout the Dominion. It may be said that inasmuch as only parts of companies were called out the figures I have quoted are hardly fair, because, had the full numbers been summoned, the total turn out would have been much larger. This cannot, however, be the case. If on calling out but a fraction we have been unable to furnish even that part, then to call out more would produce no more. Having, as I firmly believe, established the danger beyond peradventure, I now come to the remedy, which in my opinion is an increase of fifty cents a day for every man in the force, exclusive of officers, and an annual drill for the whole establishment. At first blush this may seem a rather ambitious scheme, but the expense between the present and the proposed rate is nothing like as great as many in this House imagine. The total number of the militia, exclusive of the permanent force, of which I shall speak hereafter, is only 40,151, and figuring the officers at about eight per cent of the whole, or 3,212, we have 36,946 rank and file to whom my proposition applies. To give to each of these an increase of fifty cents a day for the twelve days during which the militia is annually under pay would be six dollars per man, or a total increase of $221,673, just four cents per head of the population of Canada. It is contended by some that a further allowance of 50 cents a day should be made for the horses of the cavalry and field artillery. I have not the exact number of horses to which this increase would apply, but I know that the amount involved added to the $221,673 would still total less than a quarter of a million, which is less than the annual expense of the Halifax garrison maintained for about three years, which has just recently been disbanded, and the saving arising from which may very well be applied to this necessary object. And to whom would the money go? Not to great corporations or to railway or manufacturing kings, but to thirty-six thousand odd of the young men of Canada—to men who for years have been keeping up a necessary part of the government of this country at an actual loss to themselves. This matter has been quite misunderstood by many honourable members of this House. I have heard it stated this very session in this very place that to increase the pay meant to double the militia vote. The militia vote this year on the main estimates is $1,777,308, and so far from doubling it we require but an eighth of an increase. If, however, the government thinks this increase for drill too great, I have a further proposition to make, which is to let the increase apply to country corps only. I make this proposition out of no disregard for the city corps, which have my admiration and respect. I served my time in the ranks of a city regiment, the Queen's Own Rifles, of Toronto, and my memories of those days are such as to keep my heart very warm towards the city boys; but conditions are different in their case. The country soldier leaves home for twelve days, and is during that time entirely dissociated from his usual avocation. The city soldier does his drill at night, after his day's wage has been earned, and at no loss and but little inconvenience. The country soldier on his return home gets no further privilege or profit from his association with the militia. The city soldier is the year round furnished with a commodious club yclept an armoury. Recognizing these facts, the city soldier in almost every case does not touch a cent of his pay, but turns it all in to the regimental fund. The question of pay, then, does not seriously affect him. The city corps are not suffering from low pay, but from liability to strike service, which I will discuss briefly later on. Even with the countryman at a dollar a day and the city man at fifty cents, I believe the former would cost the exchequer slightly less than the latter. Say that the armoury at Halifax cost $300,000, though as a fact I understand it cost quite largely in excess of that amount, and charge that up at six per cent for interest, repairs, and sinking fund—though here again I err by underestimate, for six per cent is not enough. Leaving it at that, however, the annual cost is $18,000. The establishment of the garrison using that armoury is 1,492; therefore each member of it costs for armoury accommodation for the twelve days per annum the sum of one dollar, which, added to his fifty cents, makes a total of $1.50. The armoury of my own regiment is an old frame building somewhat repaired of late, but which could be entirely rebuilt for $2,000. The number of men using that drill shed—it is very properly called a shed and not an armoury—is 367. Figuring on the same basis as that of the Halifax armoury, we find an annual charge of $120, and so each member of the 37th costs for armoury accommodation a little less than three cents a day. Add this to the dollar I propose should be given, and the country soldier costs $1.03 a day as against $1.50 for the city man drawing 50-cent pay, in both cases eliminating the cost of clothing and equipment, which should be practically the same. In this calculation, Sir, I may have chosen the extremes for comparison. I believe I have, but you will notice that there is the large difference of forty-seven cents per man per day still to play upon. Let me take a less marked case. The Armoury at Brockville cost $40,000, and is used by 277 men. These cost then 72 cents per day for armoury accommodation while under pay, and adding 50 cents for pay the total daily cost per man is $1.22. Next imagine a country drill shed costing $10,000, and a strong flight of imagination is indeed necessary, for I never knew of one approaching that in cost. It would be used by an 8 company regiment, 367 men. On the same basis of calculation the cost for armoury accommodation would be 16 cents per day, which added to the dollar I propose for the countryman would make his total cost $1.16 per day as against $1.22 for the Brockville man. If then we take the average cost of city armouries and country drill sheds, and work them out on the same basis as above, I feel sure that the country soldier at a dollar a day is still costing less than the city soldier at fifty cents a day. Wherefore again I say, if there be not enough to go round, raise the pay of the countryman, and no unfairness is done his neighbour. I have already stated that an increase of fifty cents per day per man would amount to $221,673. But suppose we let the pay of the city corps stand as at present. They number 15,757 men; and deducting this from the total strength, we see that to give the rural corps numbering 22,443, without officers, the increase, I propose, would mean a cost of only $134,658, or less than two and one-half cents per head of our population. It is true that two years ago I advocated increased pay on a graded scale. That might have done then, but since that time conditions have entirely changed, and it will not do at all now. It is too slow. Men drawing pay for twelve days in the 365 are not greatly elated at the prospect of getting ten cents per day more for the drill of the year following. An increase of that amount in the North-west Mounted Police or the permanent force amounts to something at the end of the year, but to the twelve-day soldier it has no drawing power.

While on this question of pay, let me once more say a word for the regimental chaplain, even if my advocacy of his case subjects me to some mild ridicule, as it did in 1901. The chaplain is undoubtedly a great aid to recruiting. Religion has not yet gone out of fashion in rural Canada, and the erroneous idea that camp is a Godless and wicked place has caused many a parent to keep his willing boy at home. To such people the assurance that a chaplain is going along removes the prejudice, and with it the prohibition. And yet the regimental chaplain is treated as an unwelcome guest. He is given no tent accommodation, and has to rely on the good nature of some brother officer for the very canvass over his head. He draws not one cent of pay, but, for all that, has his messing to pay for, as also his uniform. I think he should receive a fair allowance, say two dollars a day, and the total would be a mere bagatelle.

Thus far I have been treating of the pay of the non-permanent militia, but now I wish to refer to the permanent force. This body is not large enough to form a garrison in Canada, nor was it ever intended that it should. It is the teacher, the faculty, so to speak, of the militia. To this end, we require in its ranks good officers and good men as instructors. With regard to the former, we may consider ourselves fortunate considering the moderate inducements offered, but as to the latter we find that every branch is now far under strength, nor can this be otherwise when the men draw per day rather less than a plumber gets an hour. To my mind, the pay of the regulars must be increased. To what extent I shall not attempt to say, feeling less familiar with details here than in the case of the country corps, but the amount could be easily found out by inquiry from the proper sources.

Even with the increased pay, our force will not be on a proper footing unless we drill, as we used to do, every man every year. As I said before, the importance of this is freely admitted by our ministers, who point with pride to the fact that for the six years up to the time that they presented their memorandum to the British government, there had been annual drill for all. If you restrict us to a twelve-day camp, and I believe a longer period, because of the difficulty of getting away from ordinary employment, would be a detriment rather than an advantage, you must not reduce that to six days a year by making it twelve days every other year.

A great deal of unnecessary trouble was caused this year by withholding notice for camp until within from three weeks to ten days of the time ordered. Knowing that some regiments were not to be called out, a feeling of uncertainty pervaded the whole, and I can assure you that recruiting is too unpleasant a job to be undertaken on chances. When the summons did come, it was found that some of the best regiments had been overlooked. Of these some few were afterwards added to the list of the fortunate, but at so late a date as to give them totally inadequate time for preparation. One colonel of a belated regiment arrived in camp with seven out of eight companies, and he informed me that his eighth captain did not know yet that the regiment had been ordered out. Still another regiment, knowing itself to be amongst the most efficient, was preparing for camp as a matter of course, when the list of those chosen appeared and its name was not there. Subsequently, but at the last moment, it was added. Had it not been, I have it on good authority, that every officer in the corps would have sent in his resignation. Why are we put to these unnecessary inconveniences, when our burdens are already so heavy to bear ? We are told that parliament had not voted the money. Then let parliament hereafter vote it in time to give every one concerned not less than three months' notice. Better still, let it be the pronounced policy of the government to drill every man every year, and the uncertainty will entirely disappear.

Recruiting has still further been injured by leaving the regimental bands at home. Nothing is more attractive to the average individual than good band music, and with the soldier this is especially the case. The great armies of Europe have not eliminated the band—the sword may have to go, but the big drum, never. The strength of a band is limited to three men per company, and as these have to put in their rifle practice with the rest, and take part in all marches as well, we can see that they are not a mere luxury, but soldiers like the rest. When next year we go out, as I am sure we shall once more in full strength, let the band head our columns as of yore.

I shall now take up the danger threatening our city corps from their frequent employment for the protection of property during strikes. When a large strike is on it almost always follows that lawlessness results, and while I would be far from asserting that any large percentage of our labouring classes are bent, under such circumstances, upon destruction, the fact remains that there are always some who put in danger valuable property. To meet these men the militia is invariably invoked. Now, the young man who enters the militia does so from patriotic motives, to defend his country in case of war, perhaps with the hope of seeing active service far afield in the empire's cause, but for one thing he certainly does not join, that is to be a cheap policeman. Take, on the one hand, the average office man called out for several days to protect property. If his employer does not actually dismiss him at the time, he gives him a fair warning that he will certainly do so if it ever occurs again. Nor is it quite fair to rise in righteous indignation and attack the employer who takes this course as a grasping man and an unpatriotic citizen. It not infrequently happens that a number of men in a large office belong to some military organization ; in that case, or even where one belongs, if he be the trusted man in some particular line of the business, disorganization, with its attendant heavy loss, is sure to follow, and we are all alike very anxious to avoid the least injury to that very tender part of our anatomy—the pocket. This being the case, how can we expect any employer to submit without complaint to inconvenience and loss entailed in the suppression of some strike, a matter which excites no man's patriotism, a matter in which sympathy may even be with the strikers themselves.

Next take the case of the other main source of strength to city corps, the artisan, and in what a position does he find himself when called out on strike duty. in many cases directly opposed to his personal chums, to the members of his own union. The result of all this is that recruiting is becoming increasingly difficult in the cities, and some other means must be devised to meet the case.

A solution has been suggested in the employment of the permanent force, at least in all cases where the strikes are prolonged. The idea is not without merit, but must for all that be greatly modified if fairness to the men is to be maintained. To take permanent soldiers from place to place on strike duty under existing conditions would be unfair in the extreme. In their case too the men enlisted to be soldiers, and not a reserve for the police. They should not be asked to do such duty for their current rate of pay, whether in the future that be increased or not, but when doing policeman's work they should get constable's pay, or at least near it. In this case surely we can afford to be generous, since the city employing them would have to foot the bill, and so there would be no increase in the militia burdens of the country. I think I know Tommy Atkins quite well enough to assert that if this special pay were forthcoming he would be only too glad to serve as often as called on. More than that I am satisfied that the same amount of work could be done by a much smaller force of permanent soldiers. Their presence would overawe a mob more than ten times the number of volunteers every second man of whom was known personally by the rioters. Their discipline would be fully equal to any call made upon it, and knowing this the crowd would not go to such lengths as with their fellow-citizens for the time being fitted out in soldier's clothes.

With regard to the rifle clubs organized within the past few years, I would like to speak shortly. The membership in these now amounts to about 20,000. As many of these clubs are, however, military, and as in many of the civilian clubs, several members also belong to the active militia, we must greatly reduce this number if we would get at the value of the asset as a source of reinforcement in time of war. I do not think we would be placing it too low if we stated the number of rifle club men outside the force at about 10,000. There is undoubtedly cause of congratulation in this good beginning, but I must say we have no right to look upon it as anything but a beginning. That a proportion of 1 in 550 of our population is enrolled in these organizations is hardly sufficient. I have already explained the skeleton system on which our militia is organized. To fill the various corps up to war strength we would require about 80,000 men, and as these, even if trained rifle shots, would still be very green for the purpose of soldiering, surely they should not be more unfit still by knowing nothing of the rifle. Of the members of the clubs moreover many would be physically unfit for service, so that to get our 80,000 we should have at least a total of 100,000 to choose from or just ten times the number now enrolled. I think that there is plenty of willingness in all parts of Canada to join rifle clubs, but what we lack in many localities is leaders to undertake the organization required in forming an association. When business organizations seek to extend their operations they send men on the road to solicit customers. I think this is entirely a business proposition, and it seems to me that we could not spend a few thousand dollars better than in putting from ten to twenty smart young fellows from the permanent corps out to work up clubs of this kind. These emissaries could have a proper knowledge too of the suitability of certain localities for ranges, and could make reports on the same. The cost to the country for each member of a club is so insignificant, that we should avail ourselves of the opportunity to increase our resisting strength while adding but little to our tax burdens.

A cognate subject is that of cadet corps. Their spread is very gratifying, and I congratulate the minister on the assistance he is giving them. Here again we can get a great deal at little expense. A boy learns quickly, and what he learns in boyhood he remembers. The school teacher simply adds drill to the subjects in which he gives instruction, and no expense is incurred on his part. The amount to arm and equip the boys is not very great, and the practice with miniature ball cartridge teaches a great deal at a minimum of cost. The hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) has said that he fears we are encouraging overmuch the military spirit of the youth of our country. I cannot agree with him. I am satisfied that for half a century to come the opportunities in civil life in Canada will be so great as compared with anything a soldier can hope for, that the whole difficulty will be as it is at present, getting a reasonable amount of military duty done, not in a rage for militarism. More than that I believe that drill in our schools is an excellent thing for the boys, both physically and morally. As to the former, it makes the youths stand up straight and relieves them from the student's hump that is so destructive to the proper development of the organs of the chest, and as to the latter the discipline develops good manners and clean living. I am quite aware that education is a matter for the provinces, and that it is only by co-operation with them that anything along the line of a general introduction of drilling in the schools can be achieved, but I understand that in most cases they are willing to meet the federal government half-way, and, in fact, they have already done so in numerous instances. The Minister of Militia is certainly to be congratulated upon the progress he is making in the formation of the various departmental services, of which a few years ago we had absolutely none.

The army medical staff and corps are fast reaching an efficiency which is most gratifying to us all. It does seem, Sir, that when medical men put their shoulder to the wheel they do so with a will, and this has been no exception to the rule. Some of the brightest doctors and surgeons have cast in their lot with this branch of the service, and in case of trouble the sick and wounded would be looked after under the very best modern conditions. Then we take the engineers. Many of us had an opportuity of seeing the splendid work done by the Toronto company at the recent horse show there, and were delighted with it all. Perhaps the best feature of that unit is that it is composed of School of Practical Science men. These, after their course, scatter all over Canada, and each in turn becomes, if necessary, an instructor, with the apt Canadain handy-man as a pupil. The body is of incalculably more value for this very reason, than if composed of city men only, who would for the most part live and die in that particular locality.

The latest notable addition to our militia is the army service corps. In campaigning the handling of stores is a good half the battle, and we are now getting in a position to use the splendid natural resources we have in farmers' horses and wagons, &c. Under the superintendence of that hard working and excellent officer, Lieutenant Colonel Bigger, the organization is advancing rapidly. In our last camp we had the army service corps with us for the first time. They slaughtered our cattle for us, and never before did our men enjoy such good meat rations. Next camp, I understand, all the baking of bread will also be done by these all round handy fellows. While on the subject of rations, I wish to say a word of thanks on behalf of the men for the new scale, the greater variety it supplies, &c. The food in camp all round this year was excellent, and if, as we expect, the present standard be kept up, one of the main grievances which deterred fellows from going into camp will be removed.

Then there is now being organized an intelligence department and corps of guides, a most useful and necessary body, but on none of these matters will I enlarge, as the minister will no doubt give us a full account at a later date. The school of musketry, however, must not be passed over. I hear it very favourably spoken of far and near, and only a few days ago an officer who had served twice in South Africa told me that on returning to Canada he had taken the course, and found it most useful. He spoke of the indefatigable work being done by Colonel Cartwright, and pronounced this whole thing as the most useful move that had been made for years in the militia.

The very creation, however, of all these subsidiary services, if I may so call them, calls for the continuation of the main body whose handmaidens they are. In times past we had the men and not the equipment, arms, and services, are we now to find ourselves with good services organized, with plentiful arms and clothing, and without the men ? Or has the time not come, this time so ably described by the Minister of Finance as the times of prosperous Canadian finance, when we can afford to have both men and their complement at one and the same time in reasonable number ?

Sir, I have finished my remarks. I have striven to give credit where credit was due, and to point out dangers where they, in my opinion, existed. I have carefully kept politics out of my speech as I trust other gentlemen will do when treating of militia subjects, and which I always propose to do unless forced into another course by dissimilar conduct on their part. I believe that better days are yet in store for us, and that this government will yet spend the moderate sums I have mentioned to preserve to Canada the main part of her fine militia force.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). I think that speech is too good, and the subject too important and too well presented, not to require some observations from the ministerial benches. I do not say this as a military man, because that is not in my line, and it may be considered presumptuous on my part to say anything on the subject, even at the risk of being unpopular. I must compliment the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Thompson) on the very clear and able way he has presented his case, because I think he has made out a very good and a very strong case. But I must draw attention to the fact that I think he was a little remiss in not giving notice that he intended to bring this question before the House, so that some more members of the government might have been present, especially the Minister of Militia, to hear this able speech. I noticed that during the greater part of his speech there were only two Ministers of the Crown present, supplemented by another one who came in towards the close. I think it was too good a speech not to reach them, but I am afraid they are so busy with the affairs of state that they will hardly take time to read it in 'Hansard.'

Mr. THOMPSON (Haldimand). If they get no summer holidays.

Mr. SPROULE. He drew a painful picture of what our boasted militia have come to during all these years while the present government have been endeavouring to improve it in every direction and to make it what we all desire it should be. I do not think it is creditable to the government, or creditable to the militia either. If we hope to keep up a force in Canada that will be of any service to the country or of any value to the British empire, we must do much better than we have been doing heretofore. There was one thing I asked myself while the hon. member was speaking. When he gave us his description of what the present militia force was, he said it was 'fast crumbling into disintegration, and decay, and disorganization,' 'that it was only a shadow of a skeleton to-day.' That seems to be very much like the similia similibus curantur morbi species of practice, that is infinitesimal doses. I was going to say that it has degenerated down to homeopathy. It is said that Halmemam, the celebrated practitioner who first described the homeopathic treatment of disease, decided that you must reduce medicine to about the sixtieth dilution to get the most beneficial effects possible for the human body when diseased. Now, if that be the case, I must say that the Minister of Militia seems to be a patron of that idea, for he has endeavoured to dilute the militia down to that extent that it is to-day only a shadow of a skeleton. It was said in describing what homeopathic soup is that you take a chicken that has starved to death, you drive a stake in the ground, and you hang the chicken up in such a position in the open air that the shadow of the stake can shine on the boiling pot, and after boiling it for half an hour in that way you have homeopathic soup. I should think the government have been feeding the militia on homeopathic doses, and treating them to about the same regimen for the last two or three years, otherwise it could not have degenerated into the shadow of a skeleton, as the hon. member admits it has to-day. While he was speaking I was wondering whether the hon. member's county had voted twenty-five cents a day as additional pay for militia men for the present year.

Mr. THOMPSON (Haldimand). My county did not, and I never asked my county to do so, and I never will. It is not their place.

Mr. SPROULE. I agree with him there. But we know that many counties do that, and because the government do not provide sufficient pay, they supplement it by the paltry sum of twenty-five cents a day. I do not think any county should be compelled to do that, I think this country is wealthy enough to pay the men reasonably well without county councils being obliged to supplement the pay by a further amount. I notice that the amount voted in the militia estimates this year is $1,766,000. Now, it was stated that the men, instead of getting fifty cents a day, ought to get $1 a day, and I confess that I think they should. I do not think that any young man should be expected to go out and put in his time on drill unless he got at least $1 a day. There may be something in his enthusiasm and in his desire to have an outing, but all that is short of what is required to induce young men to take that interest in the militia force which they should take. An additional fifty cents a day, as I figure it up—I think they usually put in fifteen days drill.

Mr. THOMPSON (Haldimand and Monck). Twelve.

Mr. SPROULE. To give that additional amount it would require $260,000. Surely this country can afford to give $260,000 more, and particularly to the rural corps because they appear to be poorly paid. There is not that excitement or enthusiasm associated with the rural corps which surrounds the city corps or the eclat that attends military life in cities and there is not the same inspiration or stimulus to the young men of the country as there is to the young men of the cities. I think the government might give that additional amount and pay these young men what they should be paid. I, for one, though not a military man, have never objected to this. I have always said that I believed that the proper thing to do was to pay our young men reasonably well, because if they ever hope to make them of any value they must be kept up to the highest standard of excellence and you cannot do that when you starve them in pay and rations. I am glad to hear that there has been some improvement in the rations. I think the government might go one better and improve their pay as well. I regret the Minister of Militia and Defence (Sir Frederick Borden) is not present to hear what has been said to-night. We have a general officer commanding to give us advice as to what should be done and we have advice coming from various sources, but I think one of the most important things to be done in the interest of the militia is to see that the pay is increased beyond the amount at which it is placed at the present time.

Mr. S. E. GOURLEY (Colchester). Mr. Speaker, I want to say a few words upon this question. I only heard the latter part of the remarks of the hon. member for Haldimand and Monck (Mr. Thompson), but if the first part of his speech was as good as the last, I am sorry to have missed any of it. The hon. gentleman's speech is different from the speeches that used to be heard in this parliament ten or fifteen years ago. The hon. member for Haldimand represents young Canadians who will in a few years dominate the public opinion of Canada. I see it growing on every hand, and it is the public opinion that should have dominated Canada thirty years ago. But, were Conservative ministers of militia met in the past? Every vote that was brought down was opposed by narrow men who never looked an inch beyond their noses. In that way the whole public life of Canada has been narrowed and degraded. How differently we now treat hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House. Here I am in the interest of Canada doing all I can to strengthen the public opinion of this country. I am willing to do it and then I am willing to take the chance of going out into the country and beating hon. gentlemen opposite, because, I say, we are more liberal-minded than they and we can out-Herod them in the game of broad politics. I want to say one word about militarism. We hear an hon. gentleman in a high position in this country going around and talking about militarism. It is said that a country that is caught by catch words is a very ignorant country. The masses of the United States used to be caught by such a cry as 'Tippecanoe and Tyler too.' Some cry like that would elect a president of the United States against the most logical argument that could be advanced, because, at that time the people of the United States were untrained to think, untrained to understand the issue of public life and of public policy. To the people of England, of Germany and of France, such a catch cry as 'a cheaploaf,' or some nonsense like that, will appeal more forcibly than the most logical argument that could be adduced. Any hon. gentleman who undertakes to talk militarism in this country is simply stamping himself as a demagogue. There is no room for militarism in Canada. You must have a besotted and ignorant population before you can have militarism. You must have an army taken from the masses of the people who are ignorant. Then, you must have these ignorant people controlled day by day and you must have them under surveillance because they are unable to govern themselves. The people of Canada are a self-governing people. The people of Canada pursue occupations which make men of them. Every Canadian is more or less of a soldier in the civilized life of the country. A man is called to be a banker in the morning, he is required to be a constitutional lawyer in the afternoon, he is required to be a parliamentarian, he is required perhaps to be a mechanic, an agriculturist or a gardener; in short, he embraces all the qualities that go to make a well-trained man. His mind is trained, his intellect is alert, his body is alert and the result is that all we want in this country is a fortnight or three weeks training. There is nothing the men of Canada want more than a month's training to be more than equal to holding our own against the trained bands of Europe. When any man gets up in this country and talks about militarism he fancies that the people are uncultivated and ignorant and that a catch-word of that kind will take the place of a sound argument. We do not want militarism in this country, but what we do want is an undaunted martial spirit, the spirit of a brave people and you only can get that by having something of chivalry in the military life of the country. Every people that have dominated the world have been a martial people, an undaunted people, a people of pride and martial feeling will not only bear us triumphant in every war, but it will make us triumphant in manufactures and the arts of peace. Therefore, I was pleased to hear the speech that was made by the hon. member for Haldimand and Monck and to know that a just sum of money would be voted for the militia of this country in order that a martial spirit may prevail. I am proud every time the militia go out in my county. We have a splendid day in Colchester when the militia are called out. When the band strikes up our boys run out to see their neighbour boys going out to be trained. The day is looked upon as a gala day and it stimulates that feeling of self-reliance, courage and pluck that makes men assume the duty of being soldiers and of being trained to protect their country in time of need. Consequently, I am pleased with the state of affairs presented here to-night and I simply rose to say that what we want is a martial spirit in this country and I hope ministers of the Crown on the other side will not go around talking about militarism, because it is a degradation of public life to hear a minister engaging in any such nonsense.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). Mr. Speaker, I am sure no one will regret more than the Minister of Militia and Defence (Hon. Sir Frederick Borden) that he has been prevented from being present to hear the very clear and admirable address of the hon. member for Haldimand and Monck (Mr. Thompson). That hon. gentleman in addressing the House is at all times a very attractive and interesting speaker and especially when he takes up his favourite subject of the militia. I am aware of the circumstances under which my hon. friend found it necessary to address the House to-night and under which it was impossible for him to give notice to the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence. The hon. minister is obliged to be absent temporarily, and the hon. member for Haldimand and Monck has occasion to leave Ottawa, probably immediately, and, therefore, he thought probably he had better address the House now in case he should not be able to return. If the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence had been aware that the question was coming up he would have felt it his duty to be present. I know that next to the pleasure of hearing the hon. member for Haldimand, he will deem it his duty to read very carefully all that has been said. And while we cannot say that it is a very pleasing picture of the condition of our militia force, still if the facts are as stated by my hon. friend (Mr. Thompson) or any where approaching them, there is all the more reason why parliament should be made acquainted with it, and that hon. gentlemen on both sides should address themselves to the best means of bringing about a better state of affairs. I know that the Minister of Militia has had some of these matters under consideration and has offered some suggestions to his colleagues, and I have no doubt that when he comes to deal with militia matters in the supplementary estimates, he will be able to afford my hon. friend from Haldimand some measure of that comfort which he is so anxious to obtain regarding better provision for the militia.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). I merely want to say one or two words in regard to what has fallen from my hon. friend from Haldimand (Mr. Thompson), who has presented the subject to the House to-night in a very clear and interesting way. At the commencement of his observations the hon. gentleman (Mr. Thompson) was somewhat enthusiastic about these words which appear in the memorandum presented by the Canadian ministers at the colonial conference, concerning defence. He cited the words :

> If defects exist there is every desire on the part of the Canadian government to remove them and for this purpose the advice and assistance of experienced imperial officers will be welcome in all reasonable efforts made to secure an efficient system.

I would hardly be prepared to join in the enthusiasm of my hon. friend with regard to that expression, because I do not know exactly what else the government could have said :

> If defects exist there is every desire on the part of the Canadian government to remove them.

I would look upon that as a remarkably guarded phrase, and I should be inclined to think that the government could adopt any policy it saw fit after having used language of that kind, which excited so much the commendation of my hon. friend from Haldimand.

However, the speech of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Thompson) must be regarded as a very severe arraignment of the government with regard to its militia policy. There is no possible reason for attaching any other import to them. The position of matters is, that $1,000,000 was voted for militia purposes in 1896 and during the present year we have a vote of one and three quarter millions nearly ; yet my hon. friend, on his responsibility as a member of this House, and as an officer of the very highest rank in Canada, tells us that if the demoralization and disorganization which have been going on for the past two years shall continue for a very short time longer, the militia force in Canada will be practically non-existent. My hon. friend from Grey (Mr. Sproule) referred to this language, but he hardly did justice to it.

Mr. CLARKE. No body could do justice to it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). My hon. friend from Haldimand has told us that the militia force as called out is not even the skeleton of a skeleton, but merely the shadow of the skeleton of a skeleton. As he himself said, it would be impossible to use any stronger language as to our militia force. If there is every desire on the part of the Canadian government to remove defects, and if this disorganization and demoralization have been going on for two years, as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Thompson) says, it does seem to me that some reply should be made by the government at a very early date to the charge which is brought against it in this respect. I appreciate the fact that the Minister of Militia is necessarily absent to-night, and that my hon. friend the Minister of Finance cannot be expected to deal with a matter which is not concerned with his own department—particularly in view of the fact that the duties of his department are very onerous—but I do think that the presentment of this case by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Thompson) calls for the earliest answer on the part of the government. And in view of the statements made by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Thompson) I do not know how a very satisfactory explanation or answer can be given by the government. If the militia force of Canada can be brought up to an efficient standard by increasing the pay as the hon. gentleman suggests, I do not think that there is any man in this House who would not be prepared to support such a measure, if it really would accomplish the results which he hopes for. But possibly there may be some question as to that. My hon. friend (Mr. Thompson) has adverted to the fact that the wages are very high at the present time, that men are busy in other occupations, and as I understood his remarks, he attributes the falling off of recruiting to these facts. However, there may be some question as to whether the remedy which he proposes would be sufficient to bring our militia up to the standard which he thinks is a sufficient one. But if the House could be persuaded that the proper strength could be obtained by a measure of that kind, I do not think that many hon. gentlemen in the House would be prepared to say that the government would not be justified in adopting the course which the hon. gentleman has suggested. I agree entirely with my hon. friend when he says that we do not want any spirit of militarism in this country——

Mr. BOURASSA. The member for Colchester (Mr. Gourley) will not allow such a declaration.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I understood the remarks of my hon. friend (Mr. Gourley) in an entirely different sense from that which seems to have impressed itself on my hon. friend from Labelle (Mr. Bourassa). My hon. friend (Mr. Gourley) said that he for one would be opposed to the spirit of militarism in Canada, and he thought it was absolutely impossible that such a spirit should exist in this country.

Mr. GOURLEY. Hear, hear.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What my hon. friend (Mr. Gourley) said was that he did desire to see in Canada a martial spirit; that is a spirit of courage, a spirit which would induce us to resist any oppression from a foreign country. In fact I think he might have used the motto of the volunteers in England fifty years ago: Defence not defiance. It was in that way I understood the remarks of my hon. friend (Mr. Gourley).

Mr. GOURLEY. Hear, hear; they could not be misunderstood.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It is perhaps to be regretted that my hon. friend from Haldimand (Mr. Thompson) had not the opportunity of bringing up this matter when there was a larger attendance in the House, and when the Minister of Militia would be present. I have no doubt that when the minister returns and when those military gentlemen are present, there may be an opportunity to discuss this matter more fully. I have merely risen at the present time to say that the hon. member for Haldimand is to be congratulated on the very clear way in which he has presented his case to the House to-night, and I think that the case he has presented is one which demands a very early answer indeed from the administration, because the case made out—if the statements are to be taken as correct—is certainly one which is not complimentary to the government.

Mr. HENRI BOURASSA (Labelle). At the risk of falling short of the standard of patriotism which has been determined by the member for Colchester, I must say that I entirely disagree with the position which has been placed before us by the member for Haldimand. I do not dispute that the hon. gentleman is, of course, well versed on the subject of the state of the militia, which I am not; but I say that if with the present expenditure on militia matters, our militia is not in good condition, then the only remedy which I see for it is that the strength of our militia force should be reduced, and not the expenditure increased.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Would my hon. friend (Mr. Bourassa) reduce the force below the shadow of the skeleton of a skeleton?

Mr. BOURASSA. When I see such military men as my hon. friend (Mr. Thompson) and other members of this House who do not at all look like the skeleton of a skeleton, I am inclined to think that the metaphor is altogether too strong. It would appear, however, that the chief defect in the organization is as to numbers. I was not here when the hon. member (Mr. Thompson) spoke, but I understand that he quoted me as an authority, and said that I was in favour of an increase in the expenditure on militia.

Mr. THOMPSON (Haldimand). If I may be allowed a word in explanation, I may say that I did use the hon. gentleman's name in his absence. I said I felt much encouraged by the sentiments to which he had given utterance. As a matter of fact, it was in his speech on the address in reply to the speech from the Throne, in which he said he would like to see the militia put on a proper basis, and for one he was quite willing to take over the defence of Halifax and Esquimalt, which I may state would cost ten times as much as I am asking to put the militia on a proper basis.

Mr. BOURASSA. It is not so much the figure that I am criticising, as the spirit and the prinicple of the suggestion. I am not in favour of inducing the young men of this country to enter the militia. For those who have a taste and vocation to enter the militia, well and good. Let them enter the militia, and take it as it is. If the present pay is not sufficient to induce a sufficient number of good men to enter the militia, then I repeat, let the number be reduced and the pay be increased. If it is a good thing to develop the martial spirit in this country, it is also a good thing to keep our common sense, and it is perfectly foolish for any common-sense citizen to suppose that by increasing our militia by 20,000 or 50,000 men, we would improve our military position. It is perfectly ridiculous to have more men than are required to keep order in this country. My hon. friend resented the suggestion that our militia should be called on to do police work in this country. Those who attended the coronation did not like it very well when the British authorities called upon them to do police work in the streets of London, but I do not see why they should resent having to do police work in Canada for the purpose of making the laws of Canada respected after being called to do police work in London to keep the rowdies at a distance from the English aristocracy. But so far as external defence is concerned, I repeat that we should not lose our heads. To prepare for withstanding an attack from a European country is out of the question.

Mr. CLARKE. The new navy will protect us on the seaport.

Mr. BOURASSA. I am not much more enthusiastic for the navy under the control of my hon. friend the Minister of Marine than I am for an army under the control of the absent Minister of Militia. If we are ever called upon to organize this country upon a military footing, it will only be required by our situation in America. So long as we are situated as at present—perhaps this opinion may not correspond to the martial spirit to which my hon. friend from Colchester (Mr. Gourley) has appealed—but I think our greatest and only safeguard against foreign invasion from any European country is the neighbourhood of the United States—much more than any defence from our own forces—much more even than any defence from the British empire.

Mr. GOURLEY. Oh, hold on.

Mr. BOURASSA. I admit that this is not satisfactory to the high spirit of my hon. friend from Colchester. But we have to take the facts as they are, and this has been stated and acknowledged up to the last few years, before we grew to be such big people, especially in military matters. But so long as we are not a big people in population and in wealth, I do not think we should aim too much to be a big people in other things; it will not lead to much result. So far as attacks from the United States are concerned, as long as the hon. member for Colchester and his family are there, he has promised us that he will resist these attacks and even go to Washington. But the existence of the hon. member for Colchester is not eternal, and it may be that many Canadians are not willing to go to the trenches and even to Washington. The average people of this country, who have their own conception of patriotism, think it is foolish for the people of Canada to imagine that they can organize upon a military footing to resist a nation of 80,000,000 people in our neighbourhood. Therefore, so long as we are not in a position to organize to withstand an attack from the United States, I think it is perfectly foolish to increase our military expenditure. I must beg pardon of the House if I refer to a past debate; but since the hon. member for Haldimand has done it, I repeat what I said at the beginning of this session, let our militia be in number just what is necessary to maintain order in the different provinces of Canada, and let it be organized on a proper basis. Let our officers be properly trained, and let our soldiers be properly drilled, but no increase in the pay should take place until the number is reduced to what it should be. I have heard members of this House who are interested in military matters defend the policy of the British government and of this government in inducing young men who come from our military college at Kingston to enter the British army. I have already protested, and I still protest against that policy. If we want to have a proper militia force and a proper permanent force in Canada, I think it is foolish on our part to let the British authorities come here and offer commissions to the best young men who graduate from our military school, and deprive our militia and our permanent force of their services. We have organized a military school at Kingston for the benefit of the people of Canada, to train officers for the Canadian military force; and it is perfectly ridiculous to speak of the defence of Canada when we allow a foreign government—and in this respect the English government is a foreign government—to take the pick of our young men after they have been educated at the expense of the people of Canada, and place them in the British army. If we are going to have a Canadian militia, let it be Canadian ; let it be what is required for this country, and nothing more. It is all very well to speak of a martial spirit and all that, but it is equally well to keep our common sense.

Mr. A. B. INGRAM (East Elgin). I regret not having been present when the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Thompson) addressed the House on military matters. I regard that hon. gentleman, from his wide experience, as being able to speak intelligently on this subject. As one who has listened to military discussions in this House for fourteen sessions, I must admit that the militia of this country has suffered in consequence of the inexperience in militia matters of members who have discussed subjects of that character; and I am bound to say that a few of us who have taken more interest in military matters than others—though I regret to say that I am not a military man myself—are placed at a disadvantage by reason of the course pursued by the Minister of Militia during this session. First we had in the speech from the Throne an announcement of the intention of the government to introduce a Militia Act. That is abandoned, I understand, and the wrongs and weaknesses of our present Militia Act are still to continue, though many of those wrongs and weaknesses have been pointed out from time to time to the Minister of Militia. It has been customary for the heads of the various departments when submitting their estimates, to lay before this House their policy. We find that course not pursued on this occasion in militia matters. We find the minister deferring his statement until he brings down his supplementary estimates. That is placing many of us at a great disadvantage, and is besides a slap in the face to the officer commanding the militia, because I find in his report that he had submitted another and a special report to the Minister of Militia containing certain proposals which, if adopted, would add to the efficiency of the militia. If my hon. friend from Haldimand is correct, our militia are fast falling into a condition of decay, which makes it all the more necessary that these proposals, which the major general recommends for the purpose of improving our militia, should be before the House. But we are told that we cannot have this special report, but must wait until the dying days of the session, when the hon. minister chooses to make his statement. My hon. friend from Haldimand (Mr. Thompson) suggests that we should increase the pay of the rural corps, which would involve an expenditure in the neighbourhood of a quarter million dollars. We have something like $1,166,000 asked for in the main estimates, and the hon. minister proposes to bring down a very large item in his supplementaries, so that it will be seen that our expenditure on militia is by no means inconsiderable ; and such being the case, we are entitled to all the information possible which will enable us to intelligently discuss this question.

The hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa), who never misses an opportunity to criticise and disparage our militia force, referred, in a sneering manner, to the hon. member for Colchester (Mr. Gourley) as being one of our Canadian bulwarks, and one who would resent an attack by the United States. Well, Mr. Speaker, I believe that the hon. member for Colchester would, even if he were the only man to do so, resist any attack from the neighbouring republic, but I regret to say that I am not able to pay the same compliment to the hon. member for Labelle. In fact, I believe that he would rather defend an attack than resist it.

I do not think that in times of peace we should neglect putting our militia forces on the best possible basis. The time of peace is the proper time to prepare for war. If you have a good defence, that will go a long way to prevent any attack. I have no desire to say anything more than to strongly condemn the course followed by the Minister of Militia in not furnishing this House with all the information necessary to enable us to intelligently discuss the militia estimates.

Mr. JEAN BAPTISTE MORIN (Dorchester). I do not agree, Mr. Speaker, at all with the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Thompson). I do not share in the ideas he has expressed. In my opinion, if the government were to follow his advice, the result would be the ruin of our government and our country. I do not think I can better make clear my point than by taking a homely illustration. A man, for instance, has a son to whom, when he reaches a certain age, he makes the gift of a colt. The colt is broken in, and then requires a harness and a buggy and a whip. Then it will not do to leave that colt idling in the stable, but the young man must drive it out, and as he drives out he meets other young men on the road in other rigs, and occasionally he will stop at a hotel and have a drink with his friends, and leave the colt standing while he is enjoying himself inside. The result is that both the colt and the young man are ruined. The same thing would happen if we were to raise an army such as the hon. member for Haldimand speaks of. Here is a country to the south of us with a population of eighty million people. In the two states of New York and Pennsylvania there are more people than in this whole Dominion. That country is the only one we have to fear, and I say frankly that if the United States should take the notion of invading Canada, they will do so in spite of Canada and all England.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. MORIN. Yes, they will. Suppose you were to raise an army here of 30,000 or 40,000 men, what would that be against the United States ? It would not be a drop in the bucket. Whenever the Americans take it into their heads to come over, they will come in spite of anybody and everybody. If we raise an army, we will be like the young man with his colt. We will have to make use of our soldiers just to see how good they are, just to show the world how well they can fight, and the result will be that we will be wiped out, and that is all we will get for all our expenditure. I say let well enough alone. Go through this country from house to house, and you will scarcely see a gun or a rifle or a revolver, but travel through the states, and everywhere you go you will hardly find a family which has not two or three guns in the house. I have been in their houses, especially in the rebel states, and in many of these houses, where they had no bread, I have seen three guns hanging from the wall. I am talking from experience, and I would like to know what we could do if we fell into the hands of such a people. We have quite enough soldiers, and my advice is to let well enough alone. To have more soldiers would entail more expense, and we are spending quite enough already on the militia.

Mr. FRANK OLIVER (Alberta). I wish to congratulate the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Thompson), not so much on the clever manner in which he presented his case, as on his courage in presenting it. It requires some courage on the part of a private member to offer what may be considered a criticism of the administration which he supports. That is not a frequent occurrence in the House, and that makes it all the more creditable to the hon. gentleman who takes this course. It is right and proper that a member of this parliament, on whatever side he may be, should offer criticism from his place when he finds it necessary ; and I regret that in this instance, instead of my hon. friend being supported in the position he takes by the other side of the House, instead of the debate being pursued from the strictly non-partisan standpoint from which he spoke, his criticisms are at once made use of for party attack. Let me say that the government is not so open to attack on this point as is the opposition, whose duty it is to criticise and to put before the country the shortcomings of the government wherever any exist. There is a certain condition of affairs existing in regard to the militia force. The hon. member for Haldimand says the pay is too low. The pay is the same as it was ten or fifteen years ago, no more and no less. If it is not enough to-day —and certainly I, for one, say it is not enough, and I am glad we have the endorsation of members of the opposition to the same effect——

Mr. CLARKE. The members of the opposition are not making it a political matter are they ?

Mr. OLIVER. Not to that extent—I give them credit for that.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). In what respect are they ?

Mr. OLIVER. They—well, give me leave to finish my remarks. The pay being the same now as it was fifteen or twenty years ago, the reason that it is not enough now, when it was enough then, is that the conditions of the country have changed. Now that may not be placed to the credit of the government—it will certainly not be by our friends of the opposition—but I hope they will not blame the government for that change of conditions. As the general question has been discussed let me take the opportunity of offering to the House the views which I hold in regard to military matters and militarism. A voluntary organization, such as we have and hope to maintain, is the very opposite of militarism, as I understand the word. A system whereby the citizens of the country voluntarily band themselves together for the purpose of fitting themselves to defend the country in time of danger is entirely different from the system under which they are forced to take service and play the part of soldiers in such proportion to the population as to constitute a back-breaking burden upon the country. That is what I understand as militarism—the condition which prevails in European countries, where the whole population is levied upon, willing or unwilling, and the burden is so great as to cripple the state, financially, commercially and industrially. Now it would be a good thing if there was no necessity for soldiers. There may come a time in the history of earth when soldiers will not be necessary. I believe we are taught something to that effect in Sunday school. But the fact is that that time has not arrived. The fact is also that if we would play our part as men, as a nation and as a part of the empire, we must be prepared to hold what we have, even if we have to hold it as soldiers. There is only one way of doing it. As long as we are in the world, we cannot escape responsibilities of human beings. And the history of the world is this—the man or the nation who will not defend their own rights or their own honour very soon are brought into a position of being obliged to defend somebody else's rights and somebody else's honour. We cannot escape from that position and it is our part, as men, to support our place, if God has given us a place, and to support that place with credit and dignity. It has been said that there is no use in our organizing a military force in this country, that we are a small country and a weak country, and that we cannot provide a military force that would be adequate for our purposes. We are about six millions of people and our country is one of the largest countries in the world. We have interests to defend. Then in God's name, what else are we to do but defend those interests? And, although in Canada we are only five or six millions of people, we surely do not forget that we belong to, or, more properly, we are part of, an empire which stretches around the world, and which contains hundreds of millions of loyal subjects who are prepared to shed their blood in all parts of the empire and in all places of the world for the maintenance of what they believe to be their best interests under the empire's flag. If the native of India, a man who is not of the same race or the same religion as ourselves, who knows nothing of our language, if that man, the black man, if you like, is ready to shed his blood for the flag of Britain, surely, we men of Canada of British birth or British descent—or, if you like, of French birth or descent, for I would not say anything so discreditable to a man of the noble race of France as to say that he would not fight for what he believed to be his rights—it is not for us, surely, to say that we will not take our part as soldiers or as taxpayers in maintaining the integrity of the British empire, which can only be maintained by defending it wherever it may be attacked, be it near or far. I should say, certainly, it would be better to have a smaller number of soldiers and have them better paid, than to have a larger number of soldiers more poorly paid. I do not pretend for an instant that this country can offer to those who are its citizen soldiers an adequate monetary inducement; but we can certainly offer them an indemnity that will show at least our good will and that will not make an invidious distinction between these men who, when called upon to serve by putting in their drill as volunteers, are ready thus to show their patriotism, and those who stay at home and do not thus show their patriotism. We cannot all turn out and drill as volunteers. Possibly we all don't want to. Some of us are not very ardent military men in our own persons, and of those, I admit, I am one. But I hope I am not such a poltroon, such a coward, I trust I am not so unfit to be a citizen of a free country that I am not prepared to pay reasonably and honourably to the man who does sacrifice his time and thereby display his patriotism.

Mr. E. F. CLARKE (West Toronto). I should not have risen, but that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) who has just taken his seat, charged that in the discussion which has taken place since we had the pleasure of listening to the admirable speech of the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Thompson), gentlemen on this side of the House who have taken part in the discussion have endeavoured to gain party advantage from some of the statements made by that hon. gentleman. I think that such an expression is much to be regretted. I repudiate the assertion of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) and I invite him to make good the statement he has made that an attempt has been made by hon. gentlemen on this side to seek party advantage or make party capital out of what has been said. I was under the impression that a more sympathetic hearing could not have been given to any hon. gentleman than that which was given by hon. gentlemen who sit on this side to the speech, the splendid speech, the speech so full of information, delivered by the hon. member for Haldimand.

The hon. leader of the opposition took the opportunity of stating that he was in sympathy with the proposition of the hon. member for Haldimand, that if it were necessary to make the militia force efficient, an increase in the pay of militia-men should be given. That does not look as if any party capital was attempted to be made by hon. gentlemen on this side of the House; that rather looks as if they were prepared to anticipate the action of the government in supporting the proposition of the hon. member for Haldimand, and in endorsing his views, as the leader of the opposition did, in advance of a declaration from the govbe increased. I take it that when a reernment, that the pay of the militia should sponsible member of this House makes the statements that the member for Haldimand has made, that the members of this House would be derelict in their duty, no matter what the consequences might be, if they did not draw attention to them and emphasize these statements as best they could.

The hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) said that when the present government came into office the pay of the militia was only fifty cents a day. That is the sum they are receiving now. But, he says, conditions have changed. So they have; and what we find fault with in the administration of militia affairs is that those who are responsible for it do not seem to appreciate that fact, for they have permitted the militia force to remain in the same condition, and they are still receiving the mere pittance of fifty cents a day that they did eight or ten years ago. I am sure the minister cannot escape responsibility for that action. I should be very sorry indeed, when in a non-political way the member for Haldimand discussed the militia question, if it should afterwards be discussed from a party standpoint. His speech was not delivered in a partisan spirit; it was delivered rather with the idea of presenting, as the hon. gentleman did present, a faithful and truthful picture of the condition of the active militia of this country at the present time. If that picture has not been overdrawn, if that picture is true to life, as we must believe it is, in view of the statements he has made, may I ask my hon. friend from Alberta, who is an independent supporter of the government, can he congratulate himself upon the condition of things which exists at the present time in that important department of the government? Can any member of this House congratulate himself upon the statement made by the hon. member for Haldimand, that the force is fast crumbling into disorganization and decay?

Mr. THOMPSON (Haldimand). Just one word. I said the country force, the rural militia.

Mr. CLARKE. I have always supposed, and I have no reason to change my opinion, that the country part of the force was as much to be relied upon, was just as stalwart as any other part of the force; that it was an important and integral part of the force, the most numerous part of the force; and if that integral part of the force is in the condition the hon. gentleman states, surely we cannot be charged with taking party advantage of the fact if we draw the attention of the responsible minister to that condition of affairs, and suggest that he should do something to remedy it? That, I think, has been the head and front of the offending of which hon. gentlemen on this side of the House have been guilty. And was it not germane to the discussion which has taken place that the hon. member for East Elgin should draw attention to the report of the major general commanding the force? He was sent out here, I believe, to endeavour to make the militia force more efficient than it was, and it appears from the statements made by the hon. member for Haldimand that he was not sent out here any too soon. The Major General says in his report that he has forwarded another document to the Minister of Militia, drawing his attention to the condition of the militia force and making suggestions as to its improvement. Have the opposition not also the right to complain that, in a matter of so much importance, both sides of the House have been kept in the dark?

While I do not wish to encourage a military spirit, I think we would be a spiritless people if, in a country like Canada, we did not establish and maintain an efficient militia force that would enable us at all times and under all circumstances to maintain the integrity of this country. We are not living here on sufferance, notwithstanding what has been said by hon. gentlemen on the other side. We are here, and we are here to stay, and we are going to maintain the integrity of this country at all times and at all hazards. And when we are told that the militia force of this country is only the shadow of a skeleton, I think it is high time we paid more attention to the administration of militia affairs than we have been doing during the past three or four years. Sir, it is a most regrettable thing to hear the statement made in this House that if, unfortunately, the integrity of Canada should be attacked, if our territory should be assailed from Europe, or by a European force, we would have to look to the United States for protection. I hope never to live to see the day when that situation will present itself, when Canadians will have to depend upon the good offices of their cousins in the United States for the protection of the soil of Canada. We value too highly our connection with the great empire of which we form a part, we appreciate the privileges of a connection with that empire too highly, we realize too deeply the value we derive from that connection, to have any sympathy with such a view; and we believe that if Canadians are not able to defend their own territory they have only to make an appeal, and that appeal will be responded to by men of all classes and races who comprise the empire, which is world-wide, and which has the strength, the power, the ability and the willingness to assist Canadians when Canadians are unjustly or unfairly assailed.

May I be permitted to point out, without indulging in any attempt to make party capital, that in view of the condition of militia affairs in this country, we ought not to embark on a scheme of naval defence unless we first make our militia force efficient. I regret exceedingly that we have not had a larger representation of the members of the cabinet here to-night to listen to the remarks of the member for Haldimand. I sincerely hope that those remarks will not have fallen upon deaf ears, and that before this session closes the suggestions which he has made will be taken up and acted upon, and that a reasonable sum will be placed in the estimates to give effect partially or wholly, to the views enunciated by the hon. member for Haldimand. I am satisfied that if that is done that the hon. member for Alberta and every hon. member on the other side of the House will find that, true to its traditions, the Conservative party will be willing, in days to come, as it has been in days gone by, to treat in a non-partisan way all matters affecting the welfare of the militia of Canada and pertaining to the defence of this country. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that it is practically wasting a million and three-quarters of dollars annually, the sum now voted for the militia force, if we cannot obtain better results than those which have been presented to us to-night. It would be better to adopt the suggestion of the member for Haldimand, and spend another quarter of a million dollars, making the total expenditure two millions, if, as a result of that additional expenditure, the militia force could be brought up to that state of efficiency which the hon. gentleman says would be the case if the pay of the men serving in the rural battalions were increased.

Mr. R. JOHNSTON (Cardwell). I am glad that the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Thompson) has made this proposal to raise the pay of the volunteer force in Canada. It has been a great annoyance to the counties throughout the province of Ontario for many years that no sooner have the county councils got together in the month of June than the captains of the volunteer companies come before them and ask for twenty-five cents a day for the volunteers from that county. These counties who give the twenty-five cents extra, have not only to pay for their own volunteers, but they have also to bear the burden of general taxation to pay the volunteers of other counties. It is for the defence of the Dominion of Canada, and the whole Dominion of Canada has a right to support that defence. I believe fifty cents a day is not enough for our militiamen and that it should be doubled The county which produces no volunteers has a perfect right to pay the taxes in support of the volunteers belonging to a county that produces volunteers and gives them twenty-five cents extra. I know that there will be no attempt on this side of the House to try to make political capital out of this question and I am surprised that a so-called independent member, when such a thing was not mentioned on this side of the House, should try to make it appear that we are finding fault with the government when it was an hon. member on their own side of the House who found fault with them. I have nothing more to say except to express the hope that this House will be unanimous in declaring that our volunteers shall receive fair pay and that it will see that instead of leaving it to the county that produces the volunteers to produce the twenty-five cents extra as well that the Dominion of Canada shall be taxed to pay the volunteers.

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC SUBSIDY.

Mr. A. E. KEMP (East Toronto). Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to break in upon this important debate, but if no other hon. member wishes to address the House on the question of our militia, I would like to bring to the attention of the House another matter. I wish, however, before doing so, to congratulate the hon. member for Haldimand and Monck (Mr. Thompson) on his very able and very timely address with which I heartily sympathize. I regret that more of the ministers were not present in their places and I particularly regret that the Minister of Militia and Defence (Hon. Sir Frederick Borden) was not here, but I am glad that the hon. Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding) has intimated that he has undertaken to see that he shall read in 'Hansard' and shall digest everything that has been said. I hope the hon. Minister of Finance will also get the other nine or ten ministers who are absent to read the address in 'Hansard.'

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Will my hon. friend (Mr. Kemp) get the opposition to read it too ?

Mr. KEMP. I think it is more important for the ministers to read it than it is for the members of the opposition. However, I shall do all I can to get members of the opposition who are not present to read the hon. gentleman's address in 'Hansard' if the hon. Minister of Finance will undertake to do the same on behalf of the government.

I wish to draw the attention of the government and the House to an article which appeared in this evening's Ottawa 'Journal' in regard to the railway policy of the government. It is a short article and I will read it.

TO GUARANTEE THE BONDS.

Government's Decision Now Reached.

The Grank Trunk Pacific is Satisfied and the Road Will be Built.

C. M. Hays and Wm. Wainwright of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company had an interview last night with Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Sir Wm. Mulock and Hon. Clifford Sifton in regard to the question of aid to be granted to the proposed transcontinental line. It was stated after the meeting was over that a final arrangement had been reached between the representatives of the government and the company, to enable the line to be proceeded with. In other words the aid which the government had offered has been accepted by the company as satisfactory to permit the undertaking to be proceeded with. There are some details of the agreement to be worked out and it will be two or three days probably before the official announcement is made, but the main question has been disposed of, and that is that assistance is to be given by the government, and that it is considered by the company sufficient. The government aid will take the line of a guarantee of the bonds of the company, with a clause in the agreement giving the government power to purchase at the end of thirty years. A first mortgage will be taken as security. As already said all the details are not complete, but the government assistance will take this shape, which the company, it is said, regard as satisfactory to float the project.

What I wish to ask, Mr. Speaker, is whether that is the whole truth and nothing but the truth or whether part of that is fiction, and if so, what part ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am afraid I shall have to ask my hon. friend (Mr. Kemp) to be content with the assurance that if any such arrangements are made they will be communicated to parliament in a proper manner and at the earliest possible moment.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of the government the fact that a certain return which I mentioned some few weeks ago has not yet been brought down. That is a return in respect to a public building in Woodstock. When I brought the matter to the attention of the hon. Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Sutherland) he sent a memorandum across the floor of the House to the effect that the return had been brought down. I investigated the matter and before the House adjourned I pointed out that the return that had been brought down was in regard to the drill hall and that it was not in compliance with the motion for the return to which I had referred on the Orders of the Day being called. If the matter is brought to the attention of the hon. Minister of Public Works I will be glad, because there has been very great delay when there is no reason for it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am very sorry to find that the return has not been brought down. I will immediately communicate with the hon. Minister of Public Works about it.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Construction of lighthouses and aids to navigation, $322,000.

Mr. BENNETT. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries if any new lighthouses are to be constructed on the lower portion of Georgian bay.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Hon. Raymond Prefontaine). Mr. Chairman, this vote is the same as last year. The department propose to expend this year on new lights, improvements and to aids to navigation, $353,500. I will explain fully where this expenditure is to be made. First, there are two large items for two lightships, one to be on the Lurcher shoal near Yarmouth, and one of the east point of Anticosti. These two lightships have been under contract since last fall. We called for tenders and the contract was awarded to the Polson Iron Works Company, of Toronto. The tender was to complete the first lightship on the 15th August, 1903, and the second lightship on the 15th September, 1903. The price was $179,950.92. This tender was accepted by the department and a contract was awarded that tender being the lowest. The next lowest was from the Collingwood Ship Building Company for $180,000; and the next from Messrs. Matheson, of New Glasgow, for $100,000, for one ship. The department has at its disposal for the Lurcher, $80,000. There will remain to be paid during the course of this year the sum of say $100,000 to complete both light ships.

Mr. MONK. I understood from the minister that the contract for the lightship at Anticosti was given last year and that there is still a balance due on that of $95,000.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes.

Mr. MONK. I wish to know from the minister what improvements in lighthouses he intends making on the Lower St. Lawrence this year, and which are included in this vote of $322,000 ? I wish also to know whether he has taken into consideration the recommendations made by the shippers of Montreal as to the construction of these lighthouses ? It was contended that the present lighthouses too much resemble the ordinary houses on the coast. Is it the intention of the minister to adopt a different style of building for the lighthouses ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. All these lighthouses and aids to navigation which I have mentioned between Montreal and Quebec and between Quebec and the sea, have been recommended by those connected with navigation. I am informed by the chief engineer that every consideration has been given to the representations made as to the structure of the lighthouses. As to the colour of the lighthouses and as to the sloping roofs, all these have been considered by the department with a view to giving entire satisfaction to the shippers, and experiments are now being made. I may say that the Halifax Board of Trade has congratulated us on the fact that we have carried out their suggestions, and the only point now left for consideration is as to whether the improvements already effected will be sufficient without going to the further expenditure of $150,000 for establishing a lightship there.

Mr. MONK. It is not a satisfactory explanation to say that the recommendation of the shipping people have been considered and that some people in Halifax have approved of certain aids to navigation established there. The committee will recollect that the shipping people of Montreal went to the trouble of holding a thorough investigation into this matter, and without asking the government in any way to contribute towards its expense. A volume containing the evidence of all the captains and others interested in the navigation of the St. Lawrence was distributed amongst the members of the House last year, and there was also a compendium of that evidence distributed, and also the recommendations made by those gentlemen. There were suggestions with regard to the lighthouses on the St. Lawrence route; that route which at the present time is so heavily penalized,

I think unjustly, by the English underwriters. I did not know that we were going to take up this evening the subject of lighthouses; but I am sure that my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, has not failed, either by himself or by the officers of his department, to take cognizance of the suggestions made by the shipping interests of Montreal after that investigation as to lighthouses, and I would like my hon. friend to tell us precisely where he is going to put these lighthouses this year.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The map shows.

Mr. MONK. My hon. friend or his officers will recollect that the shipping interests of Montreal condemned our system of lighthouses as being inadequate and the lighthouses as being inferior to those of any other country; reflecting glasses were of an inferior quality, the lighthouses were not built as they should be, and there was not a sufficient number. It is therefore a question of great public interest, when we are called on to vote this money, to know where this sum is going to be spent. Has an estimate been made of the cost of each one of these lighthouses, and is it going to be provided with all modern improvements ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I thought I had answered that question. I am perfectly aware of what took place two years ago, when the shipping interest held the investigation which the hon. gentleman has mentioned. I had something to do indirectly with it, because I was then representing the city of Montreal and was mayor of Montreal and a member of the harbour commissioners. I had cognizance of the representations made by the shipping interests, and I accompanied the other members of the harbour commissioners to Ottawa to make representations to the Department of Marine and Fisheries under Sir Louis Davies and the present chief engineer, Col. Anderson. I remember what the hon. gentleman states, that many improvements were suggested, and the members of the harbour board pressed on the government to accede to the demand of the shipping interest. The whole matter was gone over. I had not in my mind exactly what the report of the chief engineer was at the time; but last year $220,000 was expended in doing part of the work. This year we are completing the work. I may state that since that time a few representations have been made, not of very great importance, and they have been listened to by the department. If the hon. gentleman will look at the map of the proposed improvements to be made between Montreal and Quebec in the years 1902-03, he will see the exact points where these improvements are to be made. The sites are those suggested by the shipping interest, and all that have been installed thus far, whether buoys, or lighthouses have received the approval of the shipping men. They have at different times come to the department, where the door has always been open to them, and where they have always been listened to. As regards the instruments used in the lighthouses, the lamps, the reflectors, the fog alarms, the whistles, and so on, all these have been studied carefully by the chief engineer, and the best instruments that could be procured in the world have been procured. When I arrived in the department, I found that instructions had been given to the chief engineer in that sense, and I concurred entirely in what had been done.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. minister will remember that when we were discussing the item of construction of lighthouses and aids to navigation it was agreed that any other subject in the Marine and Fisheries Department was to be discussable under this item, and he promised that he would bring down information with respect to Mr. Hurley and with respect to the sale of the steamer 'Bayfield.' I would like to ask him if he has brought down that information, and if he has, will he lay it on the Table of the House ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. As regards the old 'Bayfield,' I may say that as far back as 1900 there was a question of putting a new engine in the steamer. This is the report of Mr. Evans, on the steamer, made in 1900 :

If the department decides to fix up the engine now in her, I would suggest that a new foundation be put in and all bad frames under it and in that vicinity renewed, also some new beams forward of the boiler.

But if you decide to put in a new and modern engine I then would suggest that all ceiling be renewed and every bad or old timber be taken out and new work connected to the work that was done in 1896 at Port Dalhousie, this will also include deck and deck frame and bottom plank.

As regards my own opinion I do not think the steamer in her present condition is worth putting a new engine of the modern type in, and I agree with Mr. Stewart on this point, as I am aware that there are many parts of her that were put in the boat when first built.

I am also of the opinion that if the engine now in her can be made right, that it will be all right to fix her as I have described on that basis, and her ground tackle and out-fit are in good condition.

(Sgd.) WM. EVANS.

This report of Mr. Evans was made after a report from Mr. Stewart, which was as follows :

The 'Bayfield,' Southampton, July 15, 1900.

Sir,—In forwarding Mr. Nisbet's report upon the information he obtained from the dismantling of his engine last week I can state I saw the worn out bolt and the weakened flange.

It is a difficult thing to suggest the best remedy for the present unsatisfactory state of affairs.

The engine and wooden boat are thirty-eight years old : for the first twenty years of their lives they had the hardest kind of work in towing. Since we purchased the vessel nothing has been spent upon the machinery except for repairs that became absolutely necessary.

The cylinder has been bored out several times to make it true, but that cannot be done again, as the limit has been more than reached.

The bed plate of the engine is badly broken through the main bearing and is not worth the costly repairs necessary.

Then the boat is so old, a new engine could be used in her only a couple of years when it would have to be sold second hand, for a small sum, no matter in how a good repair it might be.

The boat is not large enough to temporarily accommodate an engine of size suitable for a larger boat, even if our old boiler could supply the necessary steam.

The boiler is now eighteen years old and can carry only eighty pounds steam. Our smokestack will have to be renewed in another year.

The present engine is a very extravagant one, she uses a ton of hard coal to steam twenty to twenty-five miles at eight and a-half miles per hour, when a modern engine will easily steam thirty to thirty-five miles on a ton of soft coal at eleven and a-half miles per hour.

If the present engine frame could stand the extra power I should recommend steeple compounding, with of course a new cylinder, but it would be dangerous as the connections are not fit. When this engine was built, fifty pounds of steam was a large amount and the frame was probably built for that, but it has been worked for years with a pressure of eighty to one hundred. The boat is too old for a new engine, the boiler has about lived its life and the engine is not worth the extensive repairs, the engineer says are necessary.

Should I be caught in heavy weather it is difficult to say what may happen.

I am, sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) WM. J. STEWART.

In 1901 there was another report, as follows :—

The repairs now being made to the hull of the 'Bayfield' are of such a nature that she will probably last as long as her boiler, say four or five years.

In the interest of greater economy and efficiency I would therefore strongly recommend that the old engine (now on the dock at Owen Sound) be replaced by a modern compound of greater power. The old engine was built in 1863, when the act of engine building, for economy, was not as well understood as it is at present. It consumes 300 tons hard coal per season, 100 of which ($500) could be saved by a properly constructed modern engine When under weigh now, the single crank causes a great deal of vibration and it is impossible even to write on board so that a lot of time is lost. Most of this trouble would be removed by a compound engine. With increased power there is no reason the steamer should not travel faster than seven and a-half knots, her present speed.

Should the department desire to sell the boat she would bring a small price in her present state, as a private party would have to compound the engine in order to run on a paying basis. With proper machinery in the now, rebuilt hull she would be much more valuable.

WM. J. STEWART.

Ottawa, January 9, 1901.

Attached to this report is the following recommendation by Mr. Adams, chairman of the board of examiners :—

Extract of report of chairman of the board of steamboat inspection relating to supplying a new engine for 'Bayfield.'

I would not recommend the expense of a new compound engine in the hull of that steamer, and the saving of fuel for the work she has to do would not pay the interest on the money and it is doubtful if the department were willing to dispose of the steamer if we could get fifty per cent on that outlay.

E. ADAMS.

January 11, 1901.

Mr. Stewart wrote to me that he could not go on with the work on Lake Superior with the 'Bayfield,' even if repaired, as he would not risk his life and the lives of his men on such a boat. He was instructed to see whether it was possible to dispose of it, and on the 12th March, 1903, he addressed me the following letter :—

Owen Sound, March 12, 1903.

The Hon. R. Préfontaine, Minister of Marine and Fisheries,
Ottawa.

Honourable Sir,—With further reference to the purchase of the steamer 'Bayfield' would say, we have decided that for immediate acceptance we will pay the sum of $3,250 cash for the 'Bayfield' and outfit belonging to the steamer. In outfit we would include such articles as were used for that accommodation of the crew and in the sailing of the vessel, but not anything which would be considered as belonging to the surveying operations, and we were willing that you should appoint any person you might see fit, to decide what shall be considered a part of the vessel's outfit and what should not, and herewith bind ourselves to abide by this agreement. As in the event of your not accepting this offer we must make other arrangements, we ask that you give this your early consideration.

Thanking you for your kind attention to this,

We remain,
Yours respectfully,
JOHN HARRISON & SONS CO.
E. P. Harrison, President.

I recommend that this offer be accepted except that I am to keep the articles of gear and furniture that I can make use of. One compass to go with the vessel.

W. G. STEWART.

I certify that this is a correct copy of the letter of John Harrison & Sons Co., and a correct copy of Wm. Stewart's recommendation.

W. W. S.

Mr. BENNETT. The matter is exactly where it was last night. The facts of the case are these : The department had on hand this valuable boat. Some strong party friends—these Harrison people of Owen Sound—made application for the boat. They knew what had been done by the hon. gentleman in the case of the 'Dolphin.' They knew that party friends were practically made a present of that boat, and they desired to be treated in like manner. As far as Mr. Stewart is concerned, while he certainly had experience in sailing the boat, he had not a single idea as to what its real value was. He was not a ship carpenter or steamboat engineer, and I have no doubt that there is in the hon. gentleman's department, in his private drawers, correspondence from these gentlemen, and probably from prominent Liberals in the riding, and in all probability from the defeated candidate, strongly urging that the boat must be handed over to the Harrisons without any competition. I repeat that if the hon. minister had spent $5 in advertising in the Owen Sound, Midland and Collingwood newspapers the fact that this boat was for sale, the department would have got $5,000 more than it did. These people were simply made a present of it, and are now using it in the business of towing logs. If the hon. gentleman proposes to conduct his department in the way this affair is being managed, he will not receive the commendation of people who wish to see the public funds and property properly administered.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There is no correspondence whatever in the department from the late candidate in the riding of any sort. And the transaction was perfectly fair and above board. Mr. Stewart wanted to dispose of the boat, and the officials of the department recommended that it be sold. The boat had been bought in 1884 for $14,000. It was thirty-eight years old, and the certificates I have laid on the Table show clearly to any business man that it was not fit for the service. As regards its sale for $3,250, I concluded to sell her at that price to Harrison & Sons, who were recommended to me as people able to pay the amount, and because it was considered by those competent to advise that the department would do well to sell it at that price. The boat was not delivered until the amount was paid.

Mr. TAYLOR. Where is the correspondence leading up to the letter of Harrison & Sons ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I have none.

Mr. TAYLOR. The letter you have just read refers to correspondence or previous negotiations.

Mr. BENNETT. If the hon. minister will refer to the letter of Harrison & Son, he will see that it evidently refers to some other document or some previous correspondence.

Mr. THOMSON (Grey). It is all the more remarkable that this course is pursued in the case of this vessel, because, two or three years ago a discussion was raised in this House over the sale of the 'Dolphin' under somewhat similar circumstances. She was sold without tender, and it was said that she was practically given away. The question was raised at that time, and the government was condemned for the course they pursued. Yet they have disposed of this more valuable vessel, the 'Bayfield,' in a similar manner. I am told that the fittings in connection with this vessel were worth about $1,700. And about a year ago the department spent about $3,000 in repairs, fitting her up with the most expensive quartered oak wainscotting, in fact she was fitted up in a most palatial manner. Yet we find the hon. minister disposing of this vessel, without tender, for a sum just about enough to pay for the repairs of the year before. There is something wrong about this transaction. I have had letters from Owen Sound, and I must say that it is news to the people there that this valuable vessel has practically been given away.

Mr. BENNETT. It is considered a joke.

Mr. THOMSON (Grey). What they feel most keenly is that this valuable vessel should have been practically given away in the very face of what had been said in this House in regard to the sale of the 'Dolphin.' I must say that the explanation given by the hon. minister is very unsatisfactory.

Mr. BENNETT. What was the other correspondence referred to in these letters ? Had Messrs Harrison & Son seen the minister personally or had some of his colleagues from Ontario seen him personally with regard to this matter ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am informed that there had been a conversation between Messrs. Harrison & Son and the deputy about the sale of this vessel. Mr. Stewart had been trying to sell her not only for this year, but for the year previous.

Mr. BENNETT. Do I understand that Mr. Harrison came to Ottawa ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. From the information I received from my officers I suppose that he did. He had an interview with Mr. Stewart and the deputy about the matter, and the result of the conversation was that he went home and wrote that letter, dated March 12th. For my part, I do not know Mr. Harrison and never saw him to my knowledge. Nobody approached me as regards Mr. Harrison.

Mr. BENNETT. It was a fortunate thing for the government that this matter was treated in this artful way—not to have the correspondence speak for itself, but to have the negotiations partly in the form of a conversation. Once again I tell the minister that, having spoken to men who know this vessel and the value of it, I feel sure that this country has lost, by this transaction of the minister, from $3,000 to $5,000. I can tell the hon. gentleman also that if he wishes to retain any reputation for himself in the disposition of any property belonging to the people, he will sell it hereafter in a public manner, and not in this clandestine way.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The only answer I can give to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) is that I am ready to take lessons and learn by experience. But the fact that hon. gentlemen opposite are not ready to go before the Public Accounts Committee and sift this matter, is a proof that, after all, this discussion is for the purpose of making more pages in 'Hansard' and nothing else.

Mr. COCHRANE. The hon. minister speaks of a business department and a business government. What an absurdity it is to take up the time of the House with such nonsense. He tells us the government were trying for two years to sell this vessel. Is not this a fine statement to make to intelligent men, when the government did not post up a bill or put an advertisement in a paper, as they might have done for five dollars, to let everybody know that the vessel was for sale? The department, it appears, have been stewing and fretting about selling this vessel, after having spent about $3,000 in fitting her up in fine oak wainscotting. And to explain the low price obtained for the steamer, the hon. minister says the vessel was condemned. Now, I would ask you, Mr. Chairman (Mr. Macdonald, Huron)—you know how you criticised transactions of the government when you were on this side—would any business department spend so much money on a vessel that was useless? Why, it is the height of folly—and I would like to speak of it in stronger terms, but I refrain in view of the mild way in which you, Mr. Chairman, used to speak about such things. Then the hon. minister wants to know why we do not take the matter before the Public Accounts Committee. Why, what good would that do? The documents are not there. The transaction was arranged partly in whispers and conversations that are not on record. If we attempted to make an investigation, no doubt, we should be treated as we have been treated in the Public Accounts Committee before. When a witness is asked a question that would incriminate a minister, he is told that he need not answer the question. Why do we not take it before the Public Accounts Committee? We do not need to. It is before the public of Canada, and they will realize quite handily, the absurdity of the defence submitted by the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries to this committee to-night.

Mr. THOMSON (Grey). I would like to ask if Mr. Stewart, who recommended the sale of the 'Dolphin' for $700, is the same agent who recommended the expenditure of this $3,000 for refitting the 'Bayfield' in palatial style, and also the same gentleman who recommended the sale of the 'Bayfield' to Messrs. Harrison & Son for $3,250?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I cannot give the hon. gentleman the information.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Perhaps the hon. minister could tell how much was spent on the boat for say, three years before the sale.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I have given that twice—within six years about $6,000 was spent.

Mr. THOMSON (Grey). And a year ago, about $3,000 was spent.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon, no such sum was spent in any one year.

Mr. BENNETT. If the hon. minister will refer to the Auditor General's accounts he will find it there. I quoted it in a previous discussion.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am informed by the chief engineer that that represents the repairs of two seasons.

Mr. BENNETT. If the organization of the department is so poor that the accounts of two years appear in one year, the hon. minister had better change it.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That is not our fault—we have nothing to do with the Auditor General.

Mr. COCHRANE. The Auditor General never combined two years' accounts in one in the world.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). But why spend $3,000 in two years on a boat that was so utterly worthless? Who recommended that?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The chief engineer of the department, I suppose—he does all these things.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Who is the gentleman that recommended the sale for $3,200?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Mr. W. J. Stewart. He is the gentleman in charge of the hydrographic survey, and he had charge of the boat. He has been in the employ of the department since 1884, he began with the boat.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). He might be in the employ of the department for fifty years and not know much about the value of vessels. I was talking about his experience and his knowledge of the value of vessels.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Mr. Stewart's recommendation was agreed to by Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Does Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper say that Mr. Stewart is an expert in the value of vessels ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Mr. Stewart is one of the best engineers in the country.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I was not talking about his ability as an engineer, but about his experience and knowledge of the value of vessels. He might be the best engineer in the world and not be capable of putting a value upon vessels. I have examined engineers in court dozens of times, when an attempt has been made to ascertain their knowledge of the value of vessels, and they either said they had no knowledge or the court has excluded their evidence because they were not supposed to be capable of forming an opinion. What I inquired was whether, in addition to his eminent ability as an engineer, he has any practical knowledge of the value of steamers of this character—because that is the whole question. Did the government obtain sufficient data from a competent person as to the value of this vessel before disposing of her ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That boat was bought in 1884 at a cost of $14,000, and surely an engineer who has been on board that boat year after year and season after season, without knowing the value of the boat, would not be fit to be employed in the department, even as an engineer on the hydrographic survey. He was surely intelligent enough to learn, in the space of twenty years, the value of the boat on which he was employed. Year after year he knew what repairs were necessary on that boat, and recommended them. I have laid before the House certificates, letters and correspondence of the chief engineer as regards that boat. It appears by Mr. Stewart's report that I have laid on the Table, that he made a report when it was necessary to spend $3,000 to replace an old engine with a new one, showing that he knew what he was talking about. I do not know that any other opinion has been advanced against his own. A boat that has been in use for twenty years and been frequently repaired, could not be worth many thousands of dollars at the end of twenty years. Hon. gentlemen can go on talking about it and trying to make campaign literature, but I do not believe many people will take much stock in it, especially when they cannot show that there has been anything crooked in the matter. Why do they not go to the Public Accounts Committee if they want to show that there were favours granted to any particular individual, that it was a preconcerted arrangement to dispose of this boat by private sale ? If they cannot prove any of these things, I do not think they will be able to make much political capital.

Hon. Mr. PREFONTAINE.

Mr. MONK. The hon. gentleman does not appear to know the functions of the Public Accounts Committee, because it is perfectly evident from his oft-repeated statement, that he thinks we can investigate in the Public Accounts Committee the necessity of advertising the sale of government property before disposing of it by private sale.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I never said we could investigate it in the Public Accounts Committee.

Mr. MONK. He has said two or three times this evening that if we had any investigation to make into the circumstances under which this steamer 'Bayfield' was sold, we can go and make it before the Public Accounts Committee. He does not know the functions of that commitee, because he ought to know that its functions are confined to looking into the expenditure of the past year, and are strictly limited to that by his own friends. We do not require any other campaign literature than the statement made by the hon. gentleman himself, that, after spending $3,000 in repairs upon this boat, it was disposed of at private sale, without calling for tenders, for the sum of $3,200. I think that statement will be sufficient to show the public in what way matters are going on in his department.

Mr. TAYLOR. In the correspondence that the hon. gentleman read, I did not hear him read anything from Mr. Stewart recommending these repairs. Has the minister Mr. Stewart's recommendation on that point ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I have not, but I will be able to find it.

Mr. TAYLOR. He has brought down the correspondence that suited his own convenience. We find that over $3,000 was spent, and we wish to know on whose recommendation it was spent.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. On the recommendation of the engineer ?

Mr. TAYLOR. Would that be in writing ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. What I have here is a report of the chief engineer of the 3rd of April, 1901 :

> The next time I have to do work with the minister I will suggest that we talk over together the question of providing a new steamer for the hydrographic surveys for the next year. It appears to me that the 'Bayfield' cannot be used after this year, as Lake Huron will be finished, and she certainly is not fit to go on to Lake Superior.
> (Sgd.) W. P. A.
> Chief Engineer.

Mr. TAYLOR. It was after that, that $3,000 was spent.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We had to keep her afloat, because we wanted her for the service, and we could not do otherwise than keep her in repair.

Mr. THOMSON (Grey). The hon. gentleman says that he purchased this steamer in 1884 for $14,000. Now, vessels on the Georgian bay which have been in the service for a longer period, are still in good repair.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The boat was already an old boat when we bought her, she was already over twenty years old.

Mr. THOMSON (Grey). But the rougher parts were all built over again, and altogether about $15,000 had been spent to keep her in repair. These government vessels are all kept in first class order, like the Canadian Pacific Railway steamers, deteriorating very little each year. The fact remains that the minister disposed of this vessel with about $1,700 worth of instruments, after $3,000 worth of repairs were put on the year previous with her engines, boilers and all the outfit, for the sum of $3,250, by private sale.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman is under a wrong impression. There were no instruments whatever, the boat was stripped, with just the necessary furniture left for the crew and nothing else. All the other instruments were taken away and they are in use now on the new 'Bayfield.'

Mr. THOMSON (Grey). Who was it that induced Harrison & Son to come down here in connection with the purchase of that steamer ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not know.

Mr. THOMSON (Grey). The hon. minister does not mean to say that there was not some inducement given them to come down and purchase that boat ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. They must have known that it was for sale. Mr. Stewart had been instructed to find a purchaser and I suppose it was on account of that they came here.

Mr. BENNETT. The other night I called the attention of the hon. minister to another matter. I asked him if he intended to make a present of the valuable water front to some party friends of his in the town of Midland named Pratt & Co. Has he decided that he is going to give that water frontage to these people ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The matter is under consideration.

Mr. BENNETT. Has he seen any parties within the last three or four days about it?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not know the parties even by name and I have not seen them.

Mr. BENNETT. Has the hon. minister not been interviewed about that water front at Midland within the last three or four days ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I have seen nobody about it.

Mr. BENNETT. Is there anything in writing in the hon. minister's department in reference to a grant to the Midland Coal Company of a portion of the water frontage that was sold to the town of Midland and handed over by it and upon which those parties have built a dock ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There may be, but I do not remember.

Mr. BENNETT. May I ask the hon. minister to ask his deputy if there is ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am informed by my deputy that he does not know.

Mr. BENNETT. Has there been any communication with the hon. minister himself by these parties as to this water frontage at Midland being granted to them ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Not to my knowledge.

Mr. BENNETT. Well all I can say is that this seems to be a most extraordinary thing. Here was a most valuable piece of water frontage in Midland. It was vested in the Crown. It had not been deeded to any person. The town of Midland made an arrangement with the government, or with the Department of Public Works, that they would purchase this water frontage and hand it over to the Dominion government for the Dominion of Canada and in return for handing it over, they having paid $10,000 for the property, they were to have a dock erected upon it. A valuable portion of the property that the town thought they were to have, has been built upon by private individuals. They have built a most extensive dock upon it and the Department of Public Works has been dredging around it. Yet the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries tells the committee now that these parties have gone to work and constructed this $20,000 dock on Dominion government property and that they have not asked him anything about it. Is that a fact ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It is a fact. I know nothing whatever about it.

Mr. BENNETT. Well, that seems to be a most extraordinary proceeding. Here is a piece of water front which was not vested in these parties. They had no more title to it than I had, and I had no title to it whatever, and yet they have gone on and built this dock and I am told by men who are familiar with the transaction in the town that they have the assurance of the department that they are to have the property. Does the hon. minister ask me to believe that these people would think of building a dock upon this property without consulting his department as to whether they could have it or not? It is nothing short of a scandal in that town and it will be a bigger scandal when I tell the people that the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries says that there has been no representation made to him about it, and that the parties have gone on and built that dock without consulting his department. If they have not consulted the hon. minister I say it is high time that the hon. minister put a notice on that property warning people that they should not trespass upon it by building docks upon it. Does the hon. minister propose to allow these parties to have it for nothing?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. James Sutherland). I think my hon. friend (Mr. Bennett) must be altogether mistaken in the statements he has made in regard to the property transferred to the Crown by the municipality of Midland. I think probably my hon. friend the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Hon. Mr. Préfortaine) is not responsible for anything that was done in regard to it. The transaction commenced some considerable time ago—probably a year or more ago. There was a long negotiation. The council had to pass a by-law to acquire some property which they were to transfer to the Crown on certain conditions.

Mr. BENNETT. I do not say that these parties have built a dock on all of the property that the Dominion government has had handed over to it by the town, but, there was a large wedge-shaped piece that the town had the assurance they were to have, and which was to become part of the property on which a public dock was to be built. On this portion which was never deeded by the Crown to any private individual, this dock has in part been built.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not agree with the hon. gentleman. When the papers are brought down I think they would show that my recollection of the matter is correct. A very considerable time elapsed before the by-law was voted upon and carried and the town was prepared to pay the owners of the property that was to be transferred. I think the hon. gentleman's firm were acting as solicitors for the corporation. There was a considerable correspondence with the Department of Marine and Fisheries, or perhaps the Department of Justice, in regard to the title and the description of the property. I feel safe in saying, that no property which was deeded to the Crown has been taken with the authority of the department by private individuals. It seems impossible that such a thing could have taken place.

Mr. BENNETT. The hon. Minister of Public Works misunderstands my point. There was a wedge-shaped portion, a very valuable piece of water frontage which was under the Crown, and which had never been deeded to any private party. Two different parties were contending for it. One of the parties who made a claim for it was the party who was selling to the town and when the town was buying from this private party it was well understood that the department would not deed that to the other party. Instead of it being reserved for the Crown some political friends of hon. gentlemen opposite have erected a dock upon it. May I ask the hon. Minister of Public Works, as the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries knows nothing about it, if it has been arranged that any part of the water frontage which had not been deeded to any person is to be handed over to this coal company?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My recollection of the matter which came before the department a year or so ago was that there was a dispute as to who had the title from the provincial government, when the provincial government were supposed to have the right to give a title to these water fronts, and it was claimed by the clients of the hon. gentleman and also by another party. I remember the matter was under consideration when I went to the department, and after very carefully hearing all parties and their solicitors, I think I came to the conclusion that it was right that the grant should be made to the parties who had purchased that portion of the water front from the original owners who had received the grant from the provincial government. At the time, it was contested by the parties and their solicitors, but I have never heard that that was not a fair decision in the interest of all parties concerned. I am not sure whether that grant was consummated to the parties that we decided were entitled to it as a matter of justice and right. I am perfectly satisfied that when the property was transferred to the Crown by the town of Midland, no part of that property has been transferred to any person. The hon. gentleman will remember that we had a good deal of trouble about the description and that engineers were sent there and the description amended. I believe that everything was done to protect the interest of the Crown and to do what was right by the parties. It does not follow that because the minister and the officers of the department decided on the claim of one party as against the claim of another, that any injustice was done. It would have to be clearly shown that a mistake had been made before they could have been accused of such a thing. I am perfectly satisfied that when the plans and titles are examined, it will be found that no part of the property transferred to the Crown by the town of Midland has been interfered with or is occupied by any person else. If so, it is without authority. As this is under the joint jurisdiction of the Marine Department and the Department of Public Works I was particularly careful to have a report from the chief engineer before permission was given to the people who owned the water lots to build, in order that it should not interfere with navigation and the prospect of improvement there, which I believe will be great. I personally felt that it was desirable in the public interest that we should be careful in giving permission for the erection of docks, and any action that was taken was taken after careful investigation and report by the chief engineer. I do not think that any mistake has been made. Everything that was done was done by the officers of the department in what they understood to be the public interest. There was no political influence or favouritism about it. Nor do I know that the minister or the officers knew particularly who were interested in these works. The parties were represented by solicitors and we had a great contest over the ownership. I feel satisfied that the papers will show that the public interest has been carefully protected and that no favouritism has been shown to one party or the other. I think my hon. friend will admit that so far as political friends or clients are concerned, I showed no partisanship in the matter and that there was no public favouritism in it. It was desirable that we should undertake very substantial improvements at once which in the near future we hope to very greatly extend. If any mistake has been made, it was not because of political feeling, because everything was done under the advice of the officers of the department, after careful investigation.

Mr. BENNETT. The minister is mistaken in saying that I was acting professionally for either of the parties. When I saw the minister I represented the town, because it was particularly asked by the town that in view of the fact that they were giving this large sum of $10,000 for the water frontage they should have this wedge-shaped piece as well. The town was buying the adjoining piece for $10,000, to hand over to the government, and the wedge-shaped piece was to be reserved by the Crown. It now turns out that it has been granted to these gentlemen without any consideration, and it goes without saying that they are strong political friends of the government. Had the people of the town understood that they were not to have the property that this dock had been built upon, the by-law for $10,000 would never have been carried. It was clearly understood that the town was to have it in addition to the property they were buying from Burton Bros., who were represented, I think, by the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy)—because when the minister showed me the file, the correspondence was between the member for North Simcoe and the department. I was not acting for either party. On the one hand Burton Bros. were claiming the wedge-shaped piece; and a gentleman named Jeffrey was claiming it also, and the town was asking that as they were buying the Burton property, for the large sum of $10,000, and as the wedge-shaped piece was in the Crown, that the Crown should not give it to any person, but should let it go with the other property. It now turns out, to the surprise of every one in Midland, that instead of the government reserving this wedge-shaped piece, and adding that to the property handed over to the Crown, the Crown have given it to another party. That action is going to interfere very materially with the prospect of the dock being of general utility to the public.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The hon. gentleman has referred to the application made in the name of Mrs. Jeffery.

Mr. BENNETT. I referred to her husband.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I did not know that Mr. Jeffery was in the matter. I remember distinctly that the previous owners to whom the Burton Bros. were heirs had sold the water lot, described by metes and bounds. The statement they made to me was that they had not sold it to the deep water, but they wanted the Crown to transfer to them the front of the lot on which the people had built the dock, so that practically they could not use the dock. It seemed to me a most unfair and unjust proposition. When they sold the water lot it was fully intended that it should go to deep water, and the parties had no right in law or justice to anything between the dock that the people had built on the lot they bought and paid for, and deep water. They had sold that piece of property upon which these people had expended their money, and then they wanted to deprive them of the use of it. The dock would be no use if you were to take the water, and that water did not belong to them anyway, but to the Crown. In my opinion they had no right to it at all, and it would be an injustice to deprive the others of it. As to the effect upon the harbour from the public standpoint, there is a difference of opinion between my hon. friend (Mr. Bennett) and the officers of the department. I am not personally responsible for that, except in so far as I took the advice of the officers of the department after careful consideration. I believe that the permission given by the Department of Public Works will not interfere with navigation or with the use of the harbour from a public point of view.

Mr. BENNETT. The minister has misunderstood me. What I say is that by reason of their encroaching upon this property, when the department builds their docks there they will be very much limited in space and it will be very detrimental to the harbour. However, we can discuss the matter on the Public Works estimates.

Mr. TAYLOR. The minister is to get the papers which he promised in reference to Mr. Hurley's report.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I did not promise any papers. I read the report of the Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries containing the verbal reports which he had taken from Mr. Hurley.

Mr. TAYLOR. I want some information with reference to the duties of Mr. Hurley and the work he has done.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I have no other report than what was contained in the report of the deputy minister.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then the hon. gentleman is paying a man $1,200 a year, and he has not a scratch of a pen to show what he has done for his money, what lakes he has visited or anything else. I want to know what waters Mr. Hurley has visited, and what work he has done. That report is simply a report made by the deputy minister ; there is nothing from Mr. Hurley in it.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The deputy minister has reported on the work done by Mr. Hurley. That is all I have.

Mr. HENDERSON. I assume that the committee is still considering the item of $322,000 for the construction of lighthouses. Early in the session I took the liberty of calling the attention of the Minister of Public Works to a matter in my own county, not knowing at that time, in the somewhat disturbed condition of affairs, whether the construction of lighthouses would be under the Minister of Public Works or the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. I was directed by the Minister of Public Works to let the matter stand until the Minister of Marine and Fisheries brought down his estimates. What I referred to was an old standing promise made by some one in the year 1900 that a lighthouse would be erected on the new dock that was being built by the government at the port of Bronte, in the county of Halton. This was freely referred to during the election of 1900, and the people there were assured that one of the advantages of electing my opponent would be that they would secure a lighthouse at this point. What I wish to ask the minister now is to see that that assurance, on which the votes of the electors were obtained, shall be carried out. I need not tell the minister that a lighthouse at that point would be a very desirable thing—not so much perhaps for the purpose of guiding vessels passing in and out of the port, because there is not a great deal of traffic, particularly in the night, in that part of Lake Ontario. But this port is a fishing station, and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries is interested in fisheries as well as in marine matters. The town of Bronte is the chief seat of the cisco herring fisheries. There are a considerable number of fishermen living there, who have a considerable quantity of plant, vessels and nets, and they have occasion to go out for a distance of ten or fifteen miles to set their nets and obtain their catch. These people are frequently caught out at night at some distance, especialy in the autumn, in stormy weather in the open lake, with nothing to guide them back to port. For the purpose of indicating to these men where to return to, a lighthouse would certainly be a very desirable thing, and I feel very much like the gentleman who promised that a lighthouse would be erected there, in pressing it upon the attention of the government although possibly not for the same reason that he may have had. I do not know whether the attention of the minister has been drawn to this matter by the gentleman who exercises the patronage of that county. I do not claim to exercise it. It is possible that he has not been allowed to forget the promise he made at that time ; but I regret very much to have noticed, when the hon. minister read the items of expenditure throughout the province of Ontario for the erection of lighthouses, that the important port of Bronte was overlooked entirely. I do not know whether it will appear in the supplementary estimates or not ; but as it does not appear in the main estimates, I trust that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries will not forget this important port, and will place in the supplementary estimates a sufficient sum to construct a lighthouse at this point. I am quite sure that if he knew all the circumstances, his generosity, his good nature and his desire to meet the views of his political friends, if nothing else, would induce him to do something for the relief of those people, who will appreciate any kindness in that direction which he can accord to them. I hope and trust, if the minister's attention has not been drawn to it before, that now that I have mentioned it, possibly for the third time, he will take a note of it, and that before another session passes over the people of Bronte will be delighted to have something which will guide them in the open lake in the dark nights to their homes.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Will the hon. gentleman tell me who made the promise and when it was made ?

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not like to mention the name of the gentleman who made the promise, but common rumour said it was made by the candidate who opposed me at the last general election. Whether he made it on his own responsibility or on the assurance of the government, I am not able to say, but I think that the hon. minister has sufficient ingenuity to divine, just as well as I can, the reason why the promise was made. Perhaps it was because I was elected that the lighthouse was not built, but it seems to me that when a promise is made to the electors it should be carried out. The people of Bronte, believing, no doubt, that this promise would be implemented by the government, gave a very strong support to my opponent, and on that ground are fully entitled to consideration even though their candidate was not elected. Hon. members know who my opponent was and the circumstances under which the promise was given. It is one of those promises that should be implemented by the governmnt and these people should not be disappointed.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The chief engineer of the department tells me that there is no correspondence whatever with regard to the establishment of a light at Bronte. If a demand be made, it will be examined on its merits by the engineer and a report duly made. If the light be required—and the hon. gentleman has made out a very good case in favour of these poor fishermen—no doubt the department will furnish it, but at present no action can be taken because there is no record of any demand being made for a light at that place.

Mr. HENDERSON. I trust the hon. minister will pardon me if I very humbly and meekly made the demand.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman had better make it in writing.

Mr. HENDERSON. I shall be very happy to do so if the hon. minister will give me any assurance that my request will receive the consideration of the government. No doubt the hon. gentleman has heard what I have said, and even though I should not communicate with him directly, his officers will learn from 'Hansard' the representations I have made, but I am quite willing to remind the hon. gentleman of what I have said and what the people would like very much to have, and I can assure him that they would be very grateful to the new minister if he should see fit to grant their request.

Mr. TAYLOR. Has the hon. minister the papers with regard to Mr. Mullens ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I beg to lay on the Table the tenders and articles of agreement between the department and Mr. Cornelius Mullens, of Belleville. One is dated 1st July, 1902, and the other 25th April, 1899.

Mr. MONK. These two maps which the hon. minister has laid on the Table are very confusing. In view of the importance of the question of improvement which we are discussing, we are entitled to have something which would show us the present state of improvements on the St. Lawrence route. Evidently this map was prepared before June, 1902.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Whatever is marked in black has been done and what is marked in red is to be done. It was brought up to date.

Mr. MONK. I think I heard the hon. gentleman refer to the lightship at Anticosti, has that been terminated ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No, it will be on the 1st of September.

Mr. MONK. Have the steel rails been erected which are contemplated at Isle aux Raisins.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Almost completed.

Mr. MONK. There is a gas buoy in the centre of Lake St. Peter.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That is placed. It was on the 13th of this month.

Mr. MONK. Are the gas buoys between Longueuil and Contrecoeur placed ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Some have not been delivered, but they have all been ordered. They are bought from the Pintsch Company, in Montreal.

Mr. MONK. What did they cost ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The price varies, some cost $1,700, others $900, and others, $200.

Mr. MONK. What is the average cost ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. About $1,000.

Mr. MONK. Something was said last year about experimenting with acetylene gas. What has been the result ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Some of the acetylene lights have been successful and others have not. What we are using is mostly the Pintsch gas.

Mr. MONK. In the lighthouses, is acetylene gas used ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There are six acetylene gas lights in the lighthouses.

Mr. MONK. What did it cost to instal this carbide apparatus in a lighthouse ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. From $300 to $1,000.

Mr. MONK. Are they purchased by tender ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. They are prepared by our own officers. The machinery is ordered by the piece and the pieces are put together by our officers and are looked after by our officers.

Mr. MONK. Are they all purchased from the same person ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. From different persons. They are built at different places. We have been more or less experimenting with acetylene gas as yet.

Mr. MONK. Taking this section between Montreal and Quebec, what is the amount the hon. gentleman expected to spend upon gas buoys and what upon lighthouses during the coming season ? I see there is exactly the same estimate as last year.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Twenty thousand dollars on each.

Mr. MONK. And in the section below Quebec—Quebec to the gulf ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. About $180,000, including $95,000 for the light-ship at Anticosti.

Mr. MONK. What remains now to be carried out of the suggestions made by the shipping interests ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. All that is in red on the map shown to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk).

Mr. MONK. Perhaps it would be better if the hon. minister would mention in a general way what they are.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I read the list.

Mr. MONK. The hon. gentleman read a list of what he intended to do. I asked what remains to be done to carry out the suggestion of the shipping interests, which he has told us he intended to carry out.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. This will carry out practically all the suggestions of the shipping interests. I must say that that will not be all the improvements contemplated. For instance, the lighting between Sorel and Quebec cannot be completed, as it will be completed during the present season between Sorel and Montreal, until the channel is widened and so improved that it can be navigated at night without danger. We expect to have the lighting of the channel between Sorel and Montreal, forty-five miles, completed by the first of August. Vessels will then be able to navigate that part of the channel safely, day or night.

Mr. MONK. Is that with the improvements mentioned in this map ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes.

Mr. MONK. Then, with the improvements mentioned in this map, there will be night navigation between Montreal and Sorel ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There will be safe navigation day and night between Montreal and Sorel.

Mr. MONK. I think the hon. minister will see the advantage in future, in bringing down an estimate of this importance, of giving to us in a little clearer way on the maps, if he chooses to place maps on the Table, exactly what improvements are intended.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. If the hon. member (Mr. Monk) would suggest in what way it could be made clearer, I should be glad to carry out his ideas. I am here to learn.

Mr. MONK. According to the map, all the gas buoys between Montreal and Sorel are to be established. But the hon. gentleman tells us that half of them have been established. I do not wish to take up the time of the committee in this way. Of course, I might put the hon. minister upon examination, and he will turn to his assistant for information and then will tell me that these are being carried out. The map does not show what is completed and what is contemplated.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) leaves my estimates pending for three months, with the work going on during that time, I can hardly keep the information up to date in the form he wishes. I cannot make a new map every day. I have stated that one of these lights was installed as lately as the 18th of this month. If the channel is to be completely lighted between Montreal and Sorel before the 1st of August, the hon. gentleman must suppose that the work is going on.

Mr. MONK. I see from the map that at Cape Race a syren and quick flashing light have been recommended. Has that been carried out ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It will be done this year but has not been completed yet.

Mr. MONK. A syren has been recommended for Cape Pine.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That is a matter to be considered with the imperial government.

Mr. MONK. I do not wish to take up my hon. friend's (Hon. Mr. Préfontaine) time in this matter. I can only say that I do not think he has taken as great an interest in transportation as he pretends to have done.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. minister has brought down the papers in reference to Mr. Mullens, and I must say that they go to corroborate the statement of my hon. friend from Grenville (Mr. Reid). In 1899, the former Minister of Marine and Fisheries Sir Louis Davies, called for tenders for this work for three years. The tenders came in and that of Mr. Mullens was accepted. His contract expired in March, 1902, and without a word, so far as the correspondence shows, that contract was renewed for three years. This was evidence on the face of it that the contract was renewed for a consideration. And that consideration was what my hon. friend from Hastings (Mr. Porter) says—that Mr. Hurley was to secure that contractor a renewal of his contract if he would sign the protest. If that were not the case, no doubt there would be correspondence to show it.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am informed by the officers of the department that it has been the invariable practice to renew a contract of this kind if the work was properly performed. That course was pursued in this case, and Mr. Hurley had nothing whatever to do with it.

Mr. BLAIN. Has there been any reduction in insurance rates on the St. Lawrence route during last year ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am informed that the new Canadian Pacific Railway fleet have been granted better rates than those charged in former years. The reason given was that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, having acquired the Elder-Dempster and some other boats, were offering more guarantee, it was said, than other companies before them, and also that the insurers believed the representations made to them that the channel was very much improved, and these reductions could be safely made.

Mr. MONK. When a lighthouse is constructed, is the contract given for the house only ? Is the lighting part installed by the department itself ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. If it is a lighthouse in the water; when a pier has to be constructed, we make a contract for the construction of a pier, or, sometimes, if we think it cheaper, having our own men, we build the pier ourselves. If the superstructure is in wood, it is given by contract. If there are a number to be built and the superstructure is iron or steel, a general contract is given for these, tenders being asked for. The lanterns are bought by the department from the best makers in England, and are bought at the market prices which are published in the newspapers.

Mr. LEFURGEY. What explanation would the minister give of the term 'guaranteed' there ? What guarantee were they offered ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Proper equipment, I suppose, and better boats, better captains.

Mr. BLAIN. When this item was up for consideration last year the minister stated that the large increase in the expenditure for lighting the St. Lawrence would result in a reduction of the insurance rates. Has the minister any information that because of that large expenditure on the lighting system of the St. Lawrence route, reductions have been made in insurance rates during the past year ? I may say that it is not possible that those would apply only to the Canadian Pacific Railway steamers.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I reason on this matter as any business man would from the facts. The facts are that the shipping interests for many years have been complaining that the St. Lawrence route was not safe, and that they were charged too high insurance rates. They approached the government four or five years ago, and represented that they could get no reduction in rates unless there were improvements in the lighting and buoying of the St. Lawrence. The government undertook to make improvements, which have been going on since then, and now we find that the navigation companies are satisfied, that the shipping interests are satisfied. We know that the government have made great efforts to improve the St. Lawrence route and to put it in proper shape. All these facts of course are reported to the insurance companies daily, and we are justified in concluding that the rates will diminish. The underwriters will no longer be able to urge that the channel is in a bad condition, that the lighting is insufficient. All these facts tend to convince the underwriters that they should reduce their rates.

Mr. BLAIN. The fact is that there has been no reduction in insurance rates up to the present moment.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It has been reported, I do not know it officially, that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company had obtained better rates than other companies. Now the fact that the shipping companies are not complaining, but on the contrary are expressing their satisfaction about the channel, would seem to indicate that these rates are reduced.

Mr. THOMSON (Grey). To return a moment to the repairs on the steamer 'Bayfield' I was surprised to hear the minister state that the repairs were much less than stated in the Auditor General's Report. I had not the Auditor General's Report before me at the moment, and was unable to put the figures before the House. In the meantime I have procured the Auditor General's Report for 1901. I can inform the hon. gentleman that in 1901 over $3,300 were expended for repairs on the 'Bayfield,' and that sum does not include the salary paid to the carpenter, which was over $300. In 1902, there were spent over $1,300 on the 'Bayfield.' In 1902, the carpenter was paid $472. So that altogether, in 1901 and 1902. $4,633 were expended in repairs on this boat. If you add the carpenters salary we have a total of $5,405. I find in the amount a compass bought in Glasgow for $219. I would like to know if the compass went with the vessel.

Some resolutions reported.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. MONK. Would the hon. Minister of Finance give us the order of business for the day after to-morrow ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The right hon. Prime Minister, in answer to a question yesterday, I think, stated that the business would be the Railway Bill.

Mr. MONK. All day ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Well, perhaps in a short time we will get through it.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12.05 a.m., Wednesday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, July 2, 1903.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PENITENTIARY ACT.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 217) respecting penitentiaries.

Mr. MONK. Will the hon. minister explain ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The Act is a mere consolidation of the existing law, the intention being to re-enact the clauses in a somewhat more practical form and to change the expression in some cases so as to carry out the intention of those who passed the legislation originally. The only real change in the Act is respecting the schedule which has reference to the salaries, and I may say that the re-arrangement of the schedule will result in an annual saving of something like $7,500 a year.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read a first time.

QUESTIONS.

INCREASE OF SUBSIDIES TO THE PROVINCES—STATEMENT OF HON. R. W. SCOTT.

Mr. LEMIEUX asked :

1. Did the Honourable Mr. Scott, Secretary of State, speak in the name of the government and with its authorization, when he declared in the Senate, a few days ago, that no increase of subsidies would be granted to the provinces?
2. If not, is it the government's intention to grant the provinces such increase as may be just and equitable ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I did not see any official report of the language attributed to Mr. Scott, the Secretary of State, but whatever Mr. Scott may have said on that occasion, he spoke for himself, as the government has not considered the question. To the second question, the answer is, that this matter will receive the careful consideration of the government at the proper time.

SUPPLY OF MILITIA TENTS.

Mr. TAYLOR asked :

What is the price paid, or to be paid, each for the 2,000 tents being supplied on rush order by the James W. Woods Company, as mentioned by the Minister of Militia and Defence, on page 3804, 'Revised Hansard' for 1903 ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Hon. Sir Frederick Borden). Twenty-five dollars each. The material used is non-absorbent duck.

RENT OF BUILDING ON SLATER STREET.

Mr. TAYLOR asked :

Has the government rented, or agreed to rent a new building, or a portion thereof, now being erected on Slater street by Mr. James W. Woods, or the James W. Woods Company, for the Department of Militia and Defence ? If so, what is to be the rental, and for what term ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. James Sutherland). No. An offer has been made and it is now under consideration.

RENT OF BUILDING ON QUEEN STREET.

Mr. TAYLOR asked :

Has the government rented, or agreed to rent a building, or part thereof, on Queen street, from Mr. James W. Woods, or the James W.

Woods Company, for the Militia Department? If so, what is the rental, and for what term has it been rented?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. James Sutherland). No.

TRANSCONTINENTAL LINE—THE POLICY OF THE GOVERNMENT.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would ask the right hon. Prime Minister if the government is prepared to make a statement in regard to the aid which it is intended to grant to a transcontinental line. We have had, as the right hon. gentleman is no doubt aware, several statements in the papers in regard to the proposed aid which is intended to be granted to a transcontinental line. It is a subject which I think was adverted to in the speech from the Throne, and one which at present engages greatly public attention. We would like to know; no doubt the public would also like to know, if the government has arrived at a conclusion upon that important point.

The PRIME MINISTER. Mr. Speaker, the government is not prepared to-day to make a statement upon this subject.

RAILWAY ACT, 1903.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 21) to amend and consolidate the law respecting railways.—The Minister of Railways and Canals.

On section 296,

Every officer or servant of, and every person employed by the company, who wilfully or negligently violates any by-law, rule or regulation of the company or its directors lawfully made and in force, or any order or notice of the board, or of the minister or of an inspecting engineer, of which a copy has been delivered to him, or which has been posted up or open to his inspection in some place where his work or his duties, or any of them, are to be performed, if such violation causes injury to any person or to any property, or exposes any person or any property to the risk of such injury, or renders such risk greater than it would have been without such violation, although no actual injury occurs, is guilty of a misdemeanour, and shall, in the discretion of the court before which the conviction is had, and according as such court considers the offence proved to be more or less grave, or the injury or risk of injury to person or property to be more or less great, be punished by fine or imprisonment, or both; but no such fine shall exceed four hundred dollars, and no such imprisonment shall exceed the term of five years. 51 V., c. 29, s. 294 Am.

2. The company may, in all cases under this section, pay the amount of the penalty and costs, and recover the same from the offender or deduct it from his salary or pay. 51 V., c. 29, s. 295.

Mr. INGRAM. Is this an entirely new section?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair). No, but there are some changes in the present law which are not material.

Mr. INGRAM. It is simply a farce, because there is no rule or regulation of any railway company in this country which is not wilfully and negligently violated. If this becomes law, it would simply be a farce as it hitherto has been, so long as railway companies are governed by rules and regulations such as they have now.

Mr. GALLIHER. Suppose the injury resulting from the violation by employees of any of the company's by-laws or rules should result in death, would not this clause clash with the criminal law applicable to the case of manslaughter?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This law has been in force a number of years, and I do not care to change it. If an employee were indicted for an offence under this clause, his punishment could not exceed that which is provided in it.

Mr. LANCASTER. There is a good deal in the contention of the hon. member for Yale and Cariboo. If a man committed the offence described in this section, he would be liable under the common law or the criminal law, even without this section. But the offence proved against him might subject him to a heavier penalty under the criminal law than is provided in this section, and that might cause trouble and confusion.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If an offence were committed which, in the opinion of the crown prosecutor, amounted to manslaughter, the accused would be indicted for that offence under the common law or the criminal code, and if convicted it would be in the discretion of the judge what sentence to impose.

Mr. LANCASTER. But suppose he were indicted for manslaughter and his counsel should contend that he should have been indicted instead for the specific act mentioned in this section?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No doubt my hon. friend, with his experience of the criminal law, would argue that the accused was not indictable for manslaughter and therefore ought to be discharged. If on the other hand, he was indicted under this section, he could not be punished beyond the penalty therein provided. It would be entirely within the discretion of the crown prosecutor to decide for what class of offence he should be indicted.

Section agreed to.

On section 290,

No company shall, either directly, or indirectly, employ any of its funds in the purchase of its own stock, or in the acquisition of any shares, bonds or other securities issued by any other railway company in Canada. 51, V., c. 29, s. 276 Am.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I desire to add a few words to this section. It has been brought to my knowledge that there are one or two companies which have been empowered to invest in the bonds and securities of other railway companies, which these companies have acquired; and in order to remove any doubt as to the legality of this proceeding, I propose to add these words :

But this shall not affect the powers or rights which any company in Canada now possesses, by virtue of any special Act, to acquire, have and hold, shares bonds or other securities of any railway company in Canada or the United States.

Section, as amended, agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin). As we are going back to sections already considered, I would like it if the hon. minister would agree to our taking up section 197, which has to do with gates at farm crossings. Great complaint is made in my neighbourhood in regard to the gates——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I would inform the hon. gentleman (Mr. Robinson) that that clause stands, and we shall be obliged to take it up later on.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, we will take that up at some other time, if the hon. member (Mr. Robinson) will agree to our going on with the other sections.

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin). All right.

On section 229—each day's violation of this Act, or order hereunder, a distinct offence,

Mr. GALLIHER. As I understand it, an offence committed by an officer, receiver, trustee, &c., is to be taken to be the act of the company, and will subject the company to like penalty with the individual. That might apply in the case of a fine, but where imprisonment is imposed I do not see very well how you can imprison a company.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It does not follow that because you cannot imprison a company, imprisonment should not be provided as part of the penalty. There is no difficulty about enforcing it as far as possible and, so far as it can be enforced, it is well to provide for enforcement.

On section 300, subsection 1,

Where any penalty, prescribed for any offence under this Act, is one hundred dollars or less, with or without imprisonment, the penalty may, subject to the provisions of this Act, be imposed and recovered on summary conviction before a justice of the peace ; and where the penalty prescribed is more than one hundred dollars and less than five hundred dollars, the penalty may, subject, as aforesaid, be imposed and recovered on summary conviction before two or more justices, or before a police magistrate, a stipendiary magistrate or any person with the power or authority of two or more justices of the peace.

Mr. BARKER. I would like to ask the hon. minister whether he thinks it prudent to invest two justices of the peace with power of imposing a fine of $500 either against a merchant or against a company or its officers ? It seems to me that this is rather extensive jurisdiction to give to two ordinary justices of the peace.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is always subject to review. And, of course, $500 is the maximum. I do not know of any other court of first instance to which you could well refer these matters.

Mr. LANCASTER. I would suggest that it be left to the county court judge in each county. I might say that, so far as Ontario is concerned, the justices of the peace are without professional qualification. They only qualify in regard to property, and they never do anything of consequence without consulting the Crown attorney or the county judge.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. In Ontario they have a superabundance of county court judges. With us, we have a county court judge for every three, four or five counties. To leave it to the county court judges would not always, therefore, be a very expeditious or convenient manner of enforcing the section.

Mr. BARKER. I think it is a very dangerous power to give to two justices of the peace. The magistrates may be of a different class in other provinces from what they are in Ontario; they are a very respectable people with us, but I do not think the people of Ontario will be satisfied that two magistrates hearing a case should have power to fine a merchant $500.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is, as I said, an appeal to a higher court. But after all, I am not sure that you do not confer in some existing legislation equally great powers upon two justices of the peace in other matters. If you were to take the trouble to run over the liquor Acts you will find that very large powers compared with these are conferred upon two justices of the peace. Is it a greater power to enable a justice of the peace to impose a fine of $500 than it is to send a man to prison ?

Mr. LANCASTER. A man cannot be sent to prison by a magistrate unless he consents to be summarily tried by the magistrate. There is no serious offence a magistrate can send a man to prison for, unless the accused has chosen to be tried by the magistrate. Under this section he can without consent. There are some very serious offences a magistrate can try a man for. The Minister of Justice will remember better than I do the crimes for which a magistrate can imprison a man in cases of burglarly and theft and others, but he could not be tried for those cases by a magistrate without his consent. But here there is no option, and there is a penalty of $500. The jurisdiction is absolute, it requires no consent from either party interested. Now the fact is that magistrates can impose a fine of $500, while they cannot put a man in jail for any very serious offence without he has consented to be tried by them instead of going before a higher court, which he would have a right to insist on. But as there is a county court judge in each county who is trying cases all the time in his county, I cannot see why it would not be better to leave this to a county court judge. As to the appeal, I am not sure, looking at this section hurriedly, that there would be the same appeal here there would be in ordinary cases. The only thing that would cause one to think so is that it says 'on summary conviction.' There is no appeal given in this section, yet you are creating a special offence that may not have been contemplated in the Criminal Code, which gives appeals for summary convictions in certain cases. But assuming that there is an appeal, the appeal would go to the county court judge, and why not have it dealt with by him in the first instance ? In regard to what I have said about magistrates, I except the county of Lincoln, where most of them are able and qualified ; but they may not be well qualified in other counties and I am told they are not.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman has suggested that we should have the county court judge exercise this jurisdiction, and that it should be limited to him. That might apply to Ontario, but not to other parts of Canada. There are no county court judges in some of the other provinces, none in Quebec at all, and none I believe in the North-west Territories. So you would encumber the thing very much if you undertook to set up different jurisdictions in different provinces.

Mr. LANCASTER. Could you not use a description that would give jurisdiction to a judge of the lowest degree that is qualified professionally, I mean a judge of the lowest grade who has a legal education ? Could we not use some expression that would apply to that judge in each province ?

Mr. BARKER. The judge of a court of record.

Mr. GALLIHER. That would make it very awkward in the North-west Territories.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There are various courts of record in the different provinces. I do not think it is so much a question of legal knowledge in these cases, as it is a question of good judgment, and good sense, and a disposition to do what is right; I think those are all the qualifications required. But what the hon. gentleman has said respecting the powers of justices of the peace to deal with serious cases, does not seem to me to assist us very much in coming to a better understanding of this matter. It is not a question of the gravity of the offence that has been raised by the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker), the question is as to the magnitude of the penalty which you are allowing a magistrate to impose. Now my argument was that magistrates are already authorized to imprison for a very considerable period, they are authorized to imprison now, for many offences, for three months, and in some offences for six months —I am not sure that in some cases the term does not go up to a year. I look upon it as being a much graver thing to have power to put a man in prison for a year, or six months, or even one month, than it is to impose upon him a fine of from $100 to $500. If the liberty of the individual may be taken from him at the discretion of two justices of the peace, I think you are giving them a very much less serious power when you say that the same magistrates may impose a fine of from $100 to $500. Now it is not an answer to the argument I made, to say that magistrates have no right to deal with serious offences without the consent of the person charged. My argument may be fallacious, but it is not answered by urging that proposition, because, as I say, whether the offence is serious or not, you have given, by your general legislation, to the same number of magistrates, or persons of the same status judicially, the power to do more serious things than to impose a fine. The Minister of Justice has placed in my hands some provisions of the Criminal Code which show just what magistrates may do. They comprise a large class of offences which the magistrate may try in a summary way, and over which he can exercise jurisdiction without requiring the consent of the accused at all. So that, you see, while at first blush, it may seem to be a somewhat large power to confer upon two justices of the peace, the law of the land confers upon one justice of the peace much larger powers and entitles him to impose more severe penalties.

On section 303—annual returns to be prepared,

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Was there not some question in regard to a tramway in British Columbia some six years ago which was proceeded against because the company did not put in returns ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It being held at that time that they were within the words of the section. The section was amended in consequence. Is it in that amended form now ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is in that form now.

Mr. ROSS (Ontario). Mr. Chairman, would it not be wise to have the company send a copy of these returns to each member of parliament ? We are dealing with railways in this country and we want to know how they are getting along. I do not think the railways would object to it. I know that many of us would be glad to receive the annual returns from the railway companies. I know that there is a clause further down providing that these returns are to be presented by the minister to parliament and they are then our property, but it seems to me that it would impose no hardship on the railway company if every member of parliament was furnished with a copy. We may use it or we may not. I, for myself, would find it very interesting to know how these railway companies are getting along.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will think over it and we can return to it later on.

Mr. BARKER. I would like to ask the hon. minister, if he should see his way clear to comply with the suggestion made by the hon. member for South Ontario (Mr. Ross) whether he could not send the periodical returns of the Intercolonial Railway to every member ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is a matter I want to consider before passing any opinion upon it. We are requiring under this Bill that the railway companies shall forward a great many papers and send in a great many returns. I think it would only be fair and reasonable that we should exercise some restraint upon ourselves in imposing these extensive duties upon railway companies. Some of the companies would not feel it seriously, but other companies find it very very hard to get along and make both ends meet. I think the committee would feel that we ought to consider that question in deciding upon a point of this kind. It would be very expensive, indeed, to have all these weekly returns distributed all over, in addition to it being a very laborious task.

Mr. BARKER. We see every week in the newspapers the returns of traffic and working expenses with regard to the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway, but we never see such a return with reference to the government railways. I think it would be an advantage to the members of the House if the minister would let us see weekly his own returns of the amount of traffic and working expenses and the returns for the corresponding period in the previous year.

Mr. ROSS (Ontario). We are not all shareholders in railways and it would be no trouble for the secretary of each railway to send to each member of parliament the annual printed report that goes out to the shareholders. If there is no objection I think the request of the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker) regarding the publication of the weekly returns of the Intercolonial Railway might very well be acceded to. We will then be able to see how the trade of the country is increasing all round.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will be very glad to consider that.

On section 305—semi-annual returns of accidents.

Mr. ROSS (Ontario). I presume this refers to human life. Does it refer to animals killed upon the track.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It covers all accidents of every kind.

On section 309—returns to board of assets, liabilities, &c.,

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I move to insert the following subclause :

Whenever by any Act or document a railway committee of the Privy Council is given any power or authority or any duty is cast upon it in regard to any company, railway, matters or thing ; the power or authority so given or the duty so cast upon it may or shall as the case may be, be exercised or performed by the board.

In some cases the duty is emphatically cast, and in others it is discretionary. I want to leave it in that form, but I want them to say that they must either do one or the other in accordance with what the Railway Committee of the Privy Council orders.

Section, as amended, agreed to.

On section 310—repealed Acts,

Mr. GALLIHER. Is it intended by this section to repeal all the Acts of parliament relating to railways except such as are therein reserved ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. GALLIHER. And any particular section reserved will be included in the Consolidation Act.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, the reserved sections will go into the consolidation.

On section 44,

Mr. BARKER. This relates to the subject of appeals from the decisions of the board. The hon. minister has been kind enough to furnish me with a copy of amendments which he proposes. These amendments are very important, and I see them now for the first time. I would ask the hon. minister if he would have any objection to giving us time to consider these amendments before proposing them to the committee ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Barker) sees no present objection to the amendments, I would ask him to allow them to pass. If he wishes, later on, I should be glad to agree to a re-opening of the discussion. What I wish to do is to get the Bill through as quickly as possible, reprint it and lay it in re-printed form before the committee.

Mr. INGRAM. May I ask the minister if he has amended section 24 in accordance with the notice I gave some time ago ? I was absent for some time when the Bill was being considered. The amendment had reference to the minimum number of men to be employed on the trains.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have introduced the substance of the hon. gentleman's amendment as an amendment to section 212.

Mr. INGRAM. Is the word 'minimum' used ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, but the board has power to regulate the number of men to be employed on all trains.

Mr. LANCASTER. The leader of the opposition suggested an amendment to section 66. As he is not here, perhaps that section might stand.

Mr. BARKER. The point the leader of the opposition raised was that you might have to prove the signature of the secretary, and he wanted to provide that the seal of the company should be affixed, and that that should be considered sufficient proof.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. To meet the suggestion of the leader of the opposition, I propose to insert the words 'sealed with the company's seal' after the words 'minute book' or 'minute books.'

Amendment agreed to.

On section 71,

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS moved :

That the words 'absolutely in his own right' be struck out.

He said : A great many persons who are acting as directors of prominent railway companies are trustees and not the absolute owners in their own right of shares. That is the usage. The matter is rather one of domestic concern than otherwise. It does not concern the general public and I see no objection to striking out the words 'absolutely in his own right.'

Section, as amended, agreed to.

Mr. BARKER. I think the hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Kemp) raised some question about the residence of directors. I suppose that will be open for discussion when this Bill is reprinted ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

On section 196,

Every company shall make crossings for persons across whose lands the railway is carried, convenient and proper for the crossing of the railway for farm purposes. In crossing with live stock, the same shall be in charge of some competent person, who shall use all reasonable care and precaution to avoid accidents. 51 V., c. 29, s. 191 Am.

Mr. LANCASTER. The hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) had one or two amendments to propose to this section. He is not here, but he will be here to-morrow. I think in his absence it would be hardly fair to go on with the section.

Mr. COWAN. On section 196 I have an amendment to propose to meet the requirements of the recent case of the Ontario Lands and Oil Company vs. the Canada Southern Railway Company, which is to be found in volume one, Ontario Reports, 1901, and in which the words 'is carried' in section 196 are commented upon. It is there held by Mr. Justice Meredith that the words 'is carried' refer only to railways constructed subsequent to the passing of the Act, and if the section is left in its present form in this Bill the words 'is carried' would refer only to railways, according to this decision constructed after the passing of this Act. I therefore beg to move, seconded by the hon. member for Haldimand and Monck (Mr. Thompson) :

That the words 'is carried' be struck out and that the following be inserted in lieu thereof: 'Which at any time has heretofore or shall hereafter be carried.'

This is to meet the suggestion made by Mr. Justice Meredith, one of the members of the divisional court, whose decision will be found at page 222 of the report previously cited.

Mr. BARKER. Would not that alter the liability of a railway company where the railway perhaps has been constructed for twenty years and where the crossing may have been paid for ?

Mr. COWAN. Of course, that would be subject to agreement.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We will allow this section to stand and I will consider it.

Mr. COWAN. There is another point that I would like to draw the attention of the hon. minister to and it refers to the case of a farm that has been sold or transferred after the construction of the railway. In this section it says :

Every company shall make crossings for persons across whose lands the railway is carried.

If a person had not owned the land prior to the construction of the railway, of course, the railway could not be carried across his land. Therefore, it should be so worded as to apply to the present owner.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You are using the words 'is carried' in the sense of their meaning when the road was first constructed ?

Mr. COWAN. No, I am not using the words 'is carried' at all. The section uses the words 'is carried.'

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You are interpreting them ?

Mr. COWAN. I am not interpreting them, but I simply stated the interpretation put by the divisional court upon them.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We will allow this section to stand.

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin). Section 197 says :

The company shall erect and maintain, upon the railway, fences, gates and cattle-guards as follows :—

(2.) Fences, of a minimum height of four feet six inches, on each side of the railway, and swing, or sliding gates.

I would like to have the words 'sliding gates' taken out. The swing gates are all right, but we do not want sliding gates twelve feet in length or shorter, because, when the snow comes in the winter time it is almost impossible for a man and much more for a boy or a girl to open these gates. If they are made to swing on hinges any child can open them, and it is no trouble to shut them, but it is almost impossible for children to open or shut these gates even in summer time. I would beg of the minister to strike out these words 'or sliding gates.' If he does that he will oblige the people in our section of the country very much.

Mr. COWAN.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am afraid that the hon. gentleman will not find a consensus of opinion in that direction. I know that some people prefer the sliding gates to the swing gates.

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin). Perhaps they have not so much snow in your part of the country.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think we have more snow than you have. I never heard any one complain down our way of a shortage in the supply of snow.

Mr. LANCASTER. This sliding gate is an old-fashioned arrangement, and I do not think it would be any imposition on the railways to make them put proper gates that would swing. Generally the younger members of the family are in charge of the cattle and it requires too much physical force to open and shut these sliding gates. I think the suggestion of the member for West Elgin (Mr. Robinson) is a good one and I would urge the minister to consider it.

Mr. INGRAM. When the cattle guard commission was in St. Thomas the leading farmers of the county of Elgin were summoned to meet them, and these gentlemen objected very strongly to the sliding gates and were as strongly in favour of the gates being put on hinges.

Mr. FRASER. I always considered that the sliding gate was the better gate for the summer, and even when we have snowstorms, if there is a bank of snow against the swing gate you will have to shovel it away before you can open the gate, whereas there would be no such difficulty with the sliding gate.

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin). If you were a practical farmer you would know better than that.

Mr. COWAN. The snow never bothers us in Elgin.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We will let the matter stand until Tuesday.

On section 275,

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I wish to call the attention of the committee to an amendment which I intend to propose, and I would be very glad to hear if there is any objection to it. This section provides that the railway company shall furnish free transportation on all their trains to the members of the board and such officials as may be indicated by the board, and I propose to add that the same free transportation shall be afforded to members of the Senate and the House of Commons of Canada. As a matter of fact at present I think that members of this parliament enjoy free transportation pretty generally if they care to take it, and those who do not enjoy the privilege do not enjoy it because they refuse it, thinking that if they accept it might compromise them in some way. As it is done pretty generally and as it would be done universally if all would accept, I think it is desirable that we should state in the Act that this privilege shall be as a matter of right for Senators and members of parliament, so as to remove any feeling of obligation which would otherwise arise. Moreover, we have in the Bill a clause which restricts the giving of passes and the offering of inducements for traffic and all that sort of thing, so that unless we included in some portion of this clause the right that members of parliament should have transportation they might be prevented from getting it. From both these points of view I have been led to suggest to the committee that the clause be changed by adding to the word 'trains' on the second line the words 'for members of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada.'

Mr. LANCASTER. I do not know whether the minister has considered the members of the provincial legislatures. I think they are in possession of the same privilege if it is a privilege, and for the reason the minister has stated they may be prevented from getting free transportation in future. I mention that as the minister may have forgotten it.

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin). I have to compliment the minister on placing that clause in the Bill. You may remember that a few years ago I introduced a resolution on the same lines, believing that it was only the right of members of parliament to come to this House of Commons on a pass to discharge their duties. I believe that when we take a pass from the railways we are not under any obligation to them, and I believe that we should get it as a right and not as a matter of grace. However, I think that we should go further and declare that no mileage shall be paid to the members. I hope the minister will find it possible to insert a provision in the Bill that members who come here on passes shall not accept the mileage allowance from the government. Some of the members perhaps will not like this, but I think it would be only fair and just to the country if you would provide that when we get passes from the railway companies we shall not charge mileage to the country.

Mr. FRASER. It would be very hard on some members; take the member for the Yukon, where there is no railway at all.

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin). You could pay his expenses if there is no railway; you can provide for him, but you should not pay a member who travels on a railway on a pass.

Mr. FRASER. You draw the distinction then.

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin). Yes.

Mr. FRASER. I think that so far as the local legislatures are concerned the custom is that the members of the cabinet get free passes. I understand the hon. gentleman's position to be that if we get a pass there should be no mileage.

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin). That is right.

Mr. FRASER. I take it that any gentleman who believes that, does not charge mileage when he takes a pass; we must be consistent.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). The objection to free passes on the railways is the temptation to hon. members to absent themselves from their parliamentary duties from time to time. Many of them leave Ottawa on Friday night and return Tuesday morning, while others, whose homes are too far distant to enable them to do this, are here all the time. The time of the session is thus squandered by hon. members availing themselves of the privilege of running away from parliament when they ought to be sitting here attending to public matters.

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin). The reference made by the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) with regard to members getting mileage does not apply to me. I think that every hon. member should get his actual travelling expenses. If he has to pay passage on a steamboat or even a railway, which does not give passes, he should be refunded the amount paid. As far as I am concerned, ever since I have been a member, I have only charged my actual expenses coming here, and I find from the reports I get, that there has only been one member of this House who ever did the same, and that is Lord Strathcona, so that I am in Lord Strathcona's class.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Does the hon. gentleman feel like forgiving Lord Strathcona?

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin). I forgive any man who does right.

Mr. BARKER. I would like to ask the hon. minister if he sees any objection to including members of the provincial legislatures among those entitled to passes, because, as the Bill stands, we prevent passes being given to them. We should at least allow railway companies the option of giving passes to members of the local legislatures if they choose.

Mr. GERMAN. I would like to ask the hon. minister if the provision compelling railway companies to carry members of parliament free, compels these companies to carry them free all over the country. Why should we pass legislation compelling the Canadian Pacific Railway or the Grand Trunk Railway to carry a member of parliament, say from Kingston or Welland to the Pacific coast for nothing, when not engaged on parliamentary duties. It is all very well to compel a company to carry a member of parliament free to his parliamentary duties, but why should it be compelled to carry him all over the country on his own private business? I may have private business in Vancouver or in any other part of the Dominion, and I fail to see why a railway company should be compelled to carry me free simply because I am a member of parliament. I think it well enough that there should be a clause providing that a railway company should be compelled to carry a member of parliament from his place of residence to the capital. Or, take it, as, for instance, with the Canadian Pacific Railway, which issues passes good for lines east of Port Arthur, or the Grand Trunk Railway, which issues passes for its lines in Canada. The Grand Trunk Railway has a line extending to Chicago. Surely, it should not be incumbent upon the Grand Trunk Railway Company to carry me or any other member of parliament to Chicago on my private affairs free of charge. I think the suggestion is going too far, and it might very fairly be changed. I have no interest in railway companies, but I do not believe in stipulating that a railway company shall be under obligation to carry me over their whole system because I happen to be a member of parliament.

Mr. BENNETT. I have listened very carefully to the hon. member for Welland (Mr. German), and in reply I think a very apt quotation in his case would be: 'Me thinks the lady doth protest too much.'

Mr. INGRAM. There may be something in the contention of the hon. member for Welland (Mr. German). But it seems to me that, instead of the free use of their passes by members of parliament in travelling about the country being a matter of complaint, a great deal of the time of this House would be saved if hon. members would travel more, and so understand better the subjects that come up here for debate. Many of us are ignorant of large portions of the Dominion and its actual resources, and not in a position to discuss intelligently questions arising in connection with those localities. It is all very well to assume a high tone of morality and all that kind of thing, but let us get down to common sense. If we do, we shall use our passes and gain a greater knowledge of the affairs of the country, so as to be able to discuss to better advantage questions coming before the House.

Mr. GOURLEY. If I were not a democrat, I would move that the railway companies should be compelled to furnish members of parliament with private cars, but being a democrat, I do not do so. I am surprised, however, that hon. gentlemen should talk of members travelling on passes on their private business. The railway companies should provide passes, not only for members of parliament, but for members' wives also.

On section 205,

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I move that this section be amended by striking out the words 'in the case of a railway not subject to the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada, but' and inserting the following: 'in the case of any railway, whether subject to the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada or not.' I think that the substitution of these words is necessary to make it perfectly clear. And the principle it seems to me to be a sound one—that if a railway company, whether subject to the legislative authority of this parliament or not, receives a subsidy from this parliament in aid of its construction, the acceptance of that aid should be taken as a covenant with the Dominion of Canada that the erection of stations shall be under the control of the board. And I may say that I have embodied a clause to this effect in every contract that has been made within recent years, so that these railways are already bound. But it seems to me well to put it in the Act.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. My hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Blair) will pardon me the suggestion that if the railway is not subject to our legislative authority, it must be subject to the authority of the province, and the question naturally arises whether a railway company subject to the legislative authority of the province can contract itself out of its obligation to be subject to the law of the province, and virtually make a contract to conform to the law of this parliament.

Mr. BARKER. This clause would not prevent the provinces insisting upon stations being built under their direction.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Then, you would have this delightful condition—the province might say: You shall have a station at this point; while the federal authority would intervene and say: You shall fix a station for the same locality at this other point. So, the company would have two stations for the same locality.

Mr. BARKER. It would cause inconvenience, but all I meant was that this would not prevent the province exercising its rights.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is within the power of this parliament to make the enactment, I believe. These companies, as I have said, as a condition of receiving subsidy from this parliament allow the government of the Dominion to indicate where the stations shall be built. That being a matter of contract, we only embodied a clause in this Bill to name the tribunal by whom that jurisdiction or authority of the Crown may be exercised, and we name the board as that authority. It does not affect the status of the road in any particular. The railway company have power to make such a contract. They have received the consideration in respect of which it is made, and we only say that the board shall represent the Crown in the enforcement and carrying out of the contract.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Let me make myself clear. As between the railway company and the government, if the company have received a subsidy subject to this obligation, we can, by legislation, give legislative effect to that obligation. But that is not particularly what I wished to say. If the company is under the legislative control of the provincial legislature then the provincial legislation would apply with respect to the location of the line and the location of the stations. But if the company enter into a contract with the Dominion government, so far as the company itself is concerned, it would be binding on the company, but it cannot be binding upon the provincial legislature. So the result would be that you will have two authorities to consider. You have the provincial authority, which undoubtedly has a right to determine the location of the stations; then you have the Dominion authority exercised by virtue of this contractural obligation with respect to the same subject matter. I submit this point to the Minister of Railways, though there may not be much in it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think any inconvenience is likely to result, because the provincial government may have given a subsidy and many have an interest in the railway. There will be nothing to prevent a railway company from entering into a binding contract with any provincial government or any private individual by which that government or individual will make a contribution and give to the company some money or other consideration on condition that the company will contract to locate and maintain a station at some particular point on their line which may be named by the person who has contributed. In that case the contract can be enforced against the company and no question can arise. The company has chosen to make such a contract, believing it would be more to its advantage to receive this subsidy encumbered with that condition attached to it than not to receive the subsidy and to be free from the condition. All we desire to do is to indicate that the board shall be the tribunal which shall execute the will, the declared intention and the purpose of the government in that regard.

Mr. LANCASTER. It might be doubtful whether the board could enforce that decision. Supposing that the company might not like the decision and wanted to resort to every means it could to get out of complying with that decision, no doubt the case would ultimately have to go before a court. The provincial legislature, for instance, might have made an order to comply with the very subject matter that this board was trying to force compliance with. The board would say: We want you to comply with this matter in such and such a way. While the provincial legislature would say: You must comply with the matter in another way. Now that is a question affecting the same station, not two stations, one and the same question that both parties are dealing with. Now the legislature might say that was not a sufficient compliance with the contract, or the railway commissioners might say it was not sufficient in their opinion. In that case the question of jurisdiction would ultimately be forced into some court for decision. In any case which is sought to be covered by this section, it seems to me the court would be obliged to decide that the provincial authority should govern, and that the order of our board would be nugatory.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Where a railway company makes a contract with the government which gives a subsidy of so much in aid of the construction of the railway on condition that the government name the places where the stations shall be located, that is wholly a matter of contract.

Mr. LANCASTER. Would you not have to have the provincial legislature agree to that? They may have control of that railway.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not know whether the provincial government could make such conditions; but supposing they did, we are not concerned about that. It is our business to see that they carry out their contract with us, and it is the business of the provincial government to see that they carry out their contract with them; and if the provincial government have made an improvident contract is not our look-out. I do not think a conflict is likely to arise, even from a contractural point of view. I do not think the board would unreasonably insist upon a location which was satisfactory to every body else.

Mr. SCOTT. I wish to propose an amendment to the Bill, a notice of which hon. gentlemen may find in the Votes and Proceedings of Monday, 8th June.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). An amendment to what section ?

Mr. SCOTT. I will leave it to the minister to say to what section it should be added. The amendment is intended to compel railway companies in the prairie country to fire-guard their lines, and thus prevent the spread of prairie fires which, from year to year, have, since the opening of that country, done serious damage. We have discussed at great length in this House the cattle-guard question, which is recognized as of great importance to the agricultural community ; yet I venture to say that every year as much damage is done in the North-west Territories by prairie fires breaking out along the lines of railway as is done in five years throughout the whole of Canada by reason of defective cattle-guards. Now the subject of this amendment was discussed at considerable length towards the end of last session, as hon. gentlemen will see who care to look up the second volume of 'Hansard,' page 4582. I trust it is not necessary for us at this time to go into the subject as exhaustively as we did then. The proposed amendment obtained last year a favourable reception by a considerable majority of the members of the House, but on account of the late date the matter came up, and upon the suggestion of the right hon. the Prime Minister and the leader of the opposition, the amendment was withdrawn at that time. The amendment I propose now is the following :

1. Every railway company owning or operating a railway in the North-west Territories shall, on or before the 31st day of July in each year, provide a fireguard on each side of the line of railway upon any uncultivated or unoccupied land not covered by timber adjoining such railway, consisting of a strip of ploughed land at least eight feet in width which shall at all times thereafter during the year be kept free from grass and other inflammable matter.

(2.) The fireguard shall be distant at least three hundred feet from the centre line of the railway, and the company shall cause the grass to be burned off between it and such centre line not later than the 1st day of August in each year.

(3.) The company shall, when causing such grass to be burned, have present sufficient persons and appliances to prevent the fire from spreading.

2. Any company neglecting or failing to comply with any of the provisions of the foregoing section, and the officers and directors thereof, shall be liable, on summary conviction, to a penalty of $1,000 for each day of such neglect.

3. For the purpose of complying with the provisions of section one hereof the company may enter upon any land not owned by it, and no claim for damages shall be maintained against the company for any act done in compliance with the provisions of the said section one.

This amendment follows in principle the legislation that has been adopted in the North-west legislature on the subject of prairie fires, so far as that legislature has jurisdiction ; that is to say that every individual and company, in that part of the country, which is subject to the jurisdiction of the legislature, is obliged, when using fire in any way, to take precautions against the spread of the fire. This is such a serious matter out there that the ordinary provisions throwing the liability upon parties for damage from fire are not deemed sufficient, and specific safeguards are provided which every person must use or be liable to punishment for failure to do so.

Mr. LANCASTER. Why does the hon. gentleman confine this amendment to the North-west Territories ?

Mr. SCOTT. The amendment only covers the North-west Territories. I think it will only be found feasible to apply it in a part of the country where the settlement is very sparse. It will not be feasible where there is any considerable settlement and where the land is cultivated alongside the railway. The North-west Territories comprise practically all of what is known as the semi-arid country, the purely ranching country and that is the only part of the country where probably provisions such as these are practicable.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say a word in corroboration of the remarks of the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Scott) as I did when he brought the subject before the House at the last session of parliament. I do not think that the hon. members from the eastern provinces can realize the enormous extent of the damage which has been done in that particular section of the country which he represents by fires arising from sparks spreading from railway engines The fires have in many cases been of an extremely destructive character, not only in so far as the private property of individuals has been concerned, but the damage has been of such a character at times that immense grazing areas upon which large herds of cattle have depended have been entirely destroyed. So that, not only has there been private damage but there has been damage to the community. My own recollection of the law in the province of Manitoba on the subject of fires—I speak subject to correction as I have not looked into it for some time—is that practically it amounts to this that any person who kindles a fire or allows it to spread is liable not only to an action for civil damages, but he is also liable to a fine and to a heavy penalty. What has always struck me as being a most remarkable and indefensible anomaly in our law is that the one institution which is most likely to set fire and which, as a matter of fact, does most of the damage, should practically be put in such a position that it is impossible that any penalty could be applied and it was practically impossible that damages could be recovered. The lawyers in the House are familiar with the fact that when an action for damages is brought it is necessary to show there has been negligence, and if that cannot be shown substantively, if it cannot be shown that the railway company did not have the latest and best appliances for preventing sparks from spreading from the engine the complainant fails. As a matter of fact, lawyers all know that it is, in the great majority of cases, quite impossible to prove any such thing, and in four cases out of five when an aggrieved person goes to a lawyer for the purpose of getting advice, he is advised that he will save time and money by not bringing any action. I have known in my own constituency of most grievous cases in which the entire property of individuals has been destroyed by fires set out by sparks from engines. It might appear to be a hardship to some extent that railway companies should be obliged to pay damages in all cases, but I am prepared to say, speaking for myself, that I think they ought to be liable for damages resulting from fires in any event. But, the hon. member for West Assiniboia does not, in his amendment, ask to go so far. He simply asks that the House should say that if the circumstances are such that by a small expenditure of money the setting out of fires can be prevented the railway company ought to be compelled to do that. It seems to me that proposition ought to meet with the approval of the members of the House without exception. I suggested to my hon. friend a moment ago, when he mentioned the amendment to me, that there were places where in all probability the amendment which he suggests would not apply. He has referred to the fact that in thickly settled districts where the farms are alongside the railway, and are occupied, it would be impossible to carry out the provisions of this amendment. Some other provision would have to be devised for such cases, but there are great stretches of country where this provision might be applied without practically any difficulty and at a comparatively small expense. It seems to me that in such a case the House ought to require that it should be applied. I suggested to my hon. friend that the question as to where fireguards should be required should be placed within some such authority as the railway commission which ought to be placed in a position to decide that point so that the railway company would not be put to unnecessary expense and it would see that the intention of the amendment was carried out.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to detain the House for a moment, but I simply rise to express my appreciation of the amendment which has been submitted for your consideration. As I represent a prairie riding and four railways will be passing through the entire length of my constituency, and as I have had considerable experience in cases such as the hon. minister—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. This is intended to stand.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The subject will be up again.

Progress reported.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

CANADIAN NORTHERN RAILWAY—GUARANTEE OF SECURITIES.

House again in Committee on Bill (No. 209) respecting certain aid for the extension of the Canadian Northern Railway Company.—The Minister of Railways.

On section 6—control of tolls on all lines of company,

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair). I propose to ask the committee to add to section 6 the following words :

Provided that the rates or tolls to be charged shall not in any case be higher than the rates or tolls which may be fixed in the contract to be made between the government of Canada and the Canadian Northern Railway Company under this Act.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I do not undertands that clause. Does it enable you to fix any rate you choose, and that the board of commissioners shall not have any control over it ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The board of railway commissioners will not be able to make the rates any higher. After they are fixed by contract with the government the board will not be empowered to make them any higher.

Mr. SCOTT. I presume this clause is introduced in accordance with the suggestions made at an earlier stage in regard to maximum rates. May I ask what kind of goods these rates will be fixed for ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There will be certain general commodities that undoubtedly the contract will make provision for—grain, lumber, mill stuffs and coal. We can name these four at present, but there may be something in addition.

Mr. BARKER. Can you give the House any idea of what you propose to do in this contract which you intend to enter into ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We propose to have the tariff placed on as low a basis as we feel we can properly place it, having regard to other roads and the tolls that are imposed. I cannot enter into the matter with more particularity at the present moment. We had some suggestions from the gentlemen who represent the district through which this road will run and our intention is to provide for the covering of these four specific classes of goods. I would not limit ourselves as to that, but we are prepared to go that far as to these four. I could not indicate the precise tariff at the present moment.

Mr. BARKER. In a large portion of the country through which this railway would be built there is an established rate on other railways at the present time. Do you intend to take these rates as the maximum ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Oh, yes; we do not propose to allow anything higher than the rates that exist,

Mr. BARKER. Do you propose to cut the rates very much below these ? Have you formed any opinion upon that point, because it is rather important. You see, you are going into that district from which the Canadian Pacific Railway is now carrying grain. If you propose to take ten per cent or twenty per cent off these rates that will immediately affect the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. If you say that you will take the Canadian Pacific Railway rates as the maximum we will know somewhat what the government proposes. I should think the government would not enter into a contract by which the Canadian Northern Railway should be allowed higher rates than those existing ; but if the government stipulates that this company must have lower rates than are now asked by the other companies, that would mean of course a reduction by those other companies at once. I presume the government would not have decided upon such course without very careful consideration, and I think they should be prepared to tell the House now what the result of that consideration is.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I cannot do that. It would be quite impossible for us without proper consideration to determine what these rates will be. In a general way, I can, I think, state with confidence that we would not propose to allow any higher rates than the rates which now obtain. As to whether it would be found impossible to establish any lower, or much lower rates, I cannot say at the moment. I should think myself—of course it is for the government to determine and I can only speak my own mind on the subject—my own impression would be that we would rather recognize the zone basis for the different distances of say 100 miles each, perhaps more, perhaps less. The rate should be at such a figure and so on covering the entire territory which this road traverses up to Edmonton. As to whether there would be any reduction below the existing rates is a matter which must be gone into very carefully and can only be decided upon after mature consideration, and no one in the government has as yet been able to address himself to the matter sufficiently to enable him or them to make a statement on the subject.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Let me see if I understand clearly what the effect of this clause is. The government intend to make a rate with the Canadian Northern Railway on these four items, and that rate can in no case be exceeded by the railway commission, but they may fix lower rates.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have discretion.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. There is a rate agreed on at present between the Manitoba government and the Canadian Northern Railway as to the carrying of grain from Winnipeg and points in Manitoba. The rates fixed by this government will not be higher than these rates at present agreed upon between the Manitoba government and the Canadian Northern Railway. Am I right ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think probably that the hon. gentleman is as nearly correct as one can be. The territory to which these rates will apply will be territory outside of the limit covered by any existing arrangement between the Canadian Northern Railway and the Manitoba government. There would no doubt be a disposition on the part of the government in settling a rate, to be guided very much by the existing arrangement as far as it will apply, and to make it applicable as much as possible to the territory beyond.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It will work out in rather a curious way when you come to fix through-rates. You will have a portion of this system which will be controlled by the government of Manitoba in their agreement confirmed by the legislature of Manitoba and further confirmed by this parliament, over which the government of Manitoba has power to fix rates over a line which may be a portion of this general system. How will that work out in the result ? You will have that authority acknowledged by this parliament as an authority having power to control the rates and that will extend over a portion of the line. Then you will have the authority designated by this parliament in the proposed board of railway commissioners which, within certain limits fixed by the contract referred to, will have the power to control the rates over the system beyond the confines of Manitoba. I do not myself see very clearly just how that is going to work out in the result. I have no doubt the minister has given consideration to it, and perhaps he will be good enough to say a few words in regard to the matter, so that we may clearly understand.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not see any difficulty in the working of it at all. So far as the control of the rates is concerned—I am using the word 'control' in its widest signification—the control rests in the government of Canada and would rest in any tribunal which the parliament of Canada would constitute for the purpose. While there may be contractual arrangements between the government of Manitoba and the Canadian Northern Railway, which would be enforcible I presume as against the Canadian Northern Railway by that government, it is only because they have made a contract and not because of legislation which they may themselves have passed, that they have what they call a control. All the same, the government of Canada could allow higher rates or could reduce them to a lower figure, and so far as this allowance of the larger rates is concerned it would be only subject to the restrictions which this Act imposes, and the discretion of the commission which is given under the Bill. The fact of the government of Manitoba having an arrangement in their territory, must enter very largely, and no doubt will enter very largely, into the determination as to what would be the rate which would govern beyond. That is not because the government has made any arrangement with the Canadian Northern Railway, but because the Canadian Northern Railway are bound to make certain rates over a portion of their territory. As certain rates are fixed on a part of their line, I apprehend that the government will feel at liberty to enforce a particular rate on the part which is outside and beyond Manitoba. In the practical working out there will be no inconvenience or difficulty. We prepare a schedule for the different distances. They are all through-rates very largely, as far as these particular articles are concerned, and not purely local rates, for small distances. What the people are most interested in is the long haul.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not quite agree with the hon. minister as to one view he expresses. Speaking off-hand and without precise recollection of the terms of the contract between Manitoba and the Canadian Northern, I would think that this government might fix a lower rate within the province of Manitoba than that which has been fixed by the Manitoba government. But this government could not, without practically repealing the statute of 1901, which confirmed the contract between Manitoba and the Canadian Northern—and to do so would be a breach of faith—legalize within the province of Manitoba higher rates. I dare say that this government, in virtue of the power it can exercise over railways, might fix a lower rate, but I do not think, as against the government and people of Manitoba, that it could fairly fix a higher rate and authorize the company to charge that rate, because to do that would be to repeal the statute we have already passed confirming the bargain between the Canadian government and the government of Manitoba. When you come to fix through-rates, are they not fixed over a long haul, say from Edmonton to the Atlantic? Would they not be supposed to be fixed on a somewhat different basis than over a shorter haul.

Mr. BARKER. A lesser rate per mile.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Then you see that the rate fixed by the government of Manitoba, within its own boundary, might not be of much assistance when fixing a through-rate from Edmonton. Here you have a Bill giving you power to fix through-rates over the entire system, and you have a portion of that system controlled by this parliament and another portion controlled by the Manitoba legislature. With these divided authorities, how are you to control the rates? Suppose you desire to fix through-rates from Edmonton to Fort William; over a portion of that line the legislature of Manitoba has the power to fix the minimum rate and over the rest of the system, from the confines of Manitoba westward, you have the railway commission controlling the rates, subject to the limitation fixed by this statute; how is that to work out practically?

Mr. LaRIVIERE. It must be borne in mind that the powers given the province of Manitoba to fix the rates are not confined within the limits of the province, but extend from its western limit down to Lake Superior, in the province of Ontario; and as my hon. leader has just said, it would be a bad feature if this Bill would interfere with the powers of the local legislature by giving power to the railway commission to increase the rates which might be fixed by Manitoba. In that contract with the Canadian Northern, the province of Manitoba assumed a very large responsibility. If the road is not a paying institution, the province becomes liable for the interest on the bonds which it has guaranteed, and as this power to fix the rates has not been given without consideration, I think we should look twice before we interfere with it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We are not interfering with the legislature of Manitoba in the slightest degree. The hon. gentleman will admit that this Bill recognizes and declares that the existing rates shall not be increased.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. What will happen if the province of Manitoba should think proper to lower the rates?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If the rates should be lowered, that would be certainly a matter which the Governor in Council would have to consider when fixing a schedule, under this contract to be entered into with the Canadian Northern. I am unable to see the difficulty or trouble which my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Borden) anticipates. I do not see how it could possibly arise. The further west you go, the longer the haul to Lake Superior; and the necessary result would be that in fixing the rates from the western boundary of Manitoba to Lake Superior, any change must be in the way of reduction. When you double the distance of the haul you reduce the rate per mile.

Mr. BARKER. Supposing you choose to fix rates on traffic passing through the province of Manitoba higher than the province of Manitoba contracted for? I presume that, under this Bill, this company would have authority to do that. Otherwise the Act would have no force.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is the other way.

Mr. BARKER. Would it not be necessary to make this Bill subject to any contract this company has lawfully entered into?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

Mr. BARKER. If the province of Manitoba has the right to define what the rates shall be in its territory and the board has the right to fix a higher rate, for this company, the question will be which is to govern?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It seems to me that the very reverse would be likely to follow. I do not want to enter into any discussion as to the ethics of the question, but I am under the impression that what legislation was passed by this parliament in respect of that contract was only of a confirmatory character. All that parliament did was to say in effect that the legislature of Manitoba had full power to enact the contract as it did. We did not commit ourselves as a parliament to the adoption of that contract. We did not appropriate the contract to ourselves. All we said was that it is a legal contract, so far as the province of Manitoba is concerned. It did not curtail in the slightest degree the power of this parliament to control rates in that country—not in the legislative point of view. That is the view I take. Whether or not parliament would, in the face of that arrangement, declare that the rates should be higher is quite outside the question in connection with this Bill. It becomes a mere academic question. If it were to be discussed, it is a thing that parliament could freely do, if it saw good reasons for doing it, without any charge of violating any contract or going outside of what would be fair and proper legislation. But the question does not arise here at all. It cannot arise, for the very simple reason that this amending clause provides that, in any schedule the Governor in Council may insert, if it comes to a matter of contract between the Canadian Northern Railway and the Crown, the rates shall not be higher than those which exist to-day.

Mr. BARKER. Which are contracted for?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Which are contracted for. We may hope that they may go lower, but they cannot go higher. If there is any change at all, it must be in the way of reduction. And I take it that, so far as the rates in Manitoba and the district west of the lakes are concerned, the whole will be less per train mile relatively than they are to-day, if the rates are to be made in the usual way having regard to the greater distance.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I understand the hon. minister to say that, as this is a matter of contract between the government and the Canadian Northern Railway, for the present it is their intention, in entering into the contract, not to interfere with the decision of the Manitoba government in reference to this railway.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have no such intention.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The government only seek to make provision, with a contract, for the section of country outside of Manitoba—that is the North-west Territories. That is, that the present rate, as fixed by the Canadian Northern Railway with the Manitoba government would be premised by the present contract——

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, no, it would be an element that would have to be considered.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. You do not intend to confine it to that, then?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not say that, Mr. Chairman. All I can say is that we shall be bound to consider it, but whether we shall regard it as controlling consideration is a matter that will have to be thought out.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Then, if you do not acknowledge that as the premise—that the Manitoba government have the right of fixing the rate—you have the power to fix the rates in Manitoba, notwithstanding the agreement of Manitoba with the Canadian Northern Railway.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We contended that when the matter went through.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. This is a matter of contract, and we are anxious to know what the contract will be for the carriage of freight. Am I to understand that the premise of the contract will be the present arrangement with the Manitoba government for the carriage of grain for that country, and that outside of Manitoba the government will be guided by the short and long haul? We want to know what the contract is likely to be. If it is to be premised on the contract with Manitoba that now exists, we know very nearly what it is. But if the government were to take power under the Bill to make any contract they like with the Canadian Northern Railway, we ought to know specifically what contract they intend to make.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is quite clear that the hon. gentleman's (Hon. Mr. Haggart's) anxiety and concern is lest we make the rates too low.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Oh, no.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is no other inference to be drawn from what he says. If the hon. gentleman is afraid that we are going to make the rates too low, I can only say that we do not propose to make them lower than will be reasonable and proper. What will be the basis is a matter to be considered. No doubt, this contract with the government of Manitoba is a very important matter to be taken into account. I am not ready to say that it will control, but with all other proper considerations, which enter into the fixing of rates—it will have its effect in governing the government. The whole conditions must be studied before we can decide just what the precise rates shall be for this portion of the line.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I would like to correct the observations of the hon. minister that I am afraid he will fix the rates too low. My argument was the very contrary.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We cannot make them higher.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Higher than the Manitoba rates?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS Higher than the existing rates

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. That is what I wanted the hon. minister to state specifically. He tells us now that he cannot make them any higher than the Manitoba rates now in existence, and that under the contract he intends to enter into with the Canadian Northern Railway, the rates for freight carried outside of Manitoba will be in proportion to the present rates in Manitoba. If that is the hon. minister's intention, it is perfectly satisfactory to me.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It does not seem to me that my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Haggart) apprehends the exact legal effect which the amendment of the Minister of Railways has proposed. This is an amendment to clause 6, and provides that the rates or tolls to be charged shall not in any case be higher than the rates or tolls which may be fixed under the contract to be made between the government of Canada and the Canadian Northern Railway.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. In Manitoba?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The clause to which it is proposed to make the amendment, is a clause which gives expressly the control of the rates upon this railway to the tribunal appointed by this parliament. The effect of the amendment, therefore, is that, after the commission is made and constituted, the commission cannot raise the rates higher than they are fixed in the contract. That is the only effect. If this were not put in, the position, so far as rates are concerned, would be that the company could not charge any rates upon its line—as my hon. friend understands, until its schedule of rates was approved by the Governor in Council. So, instead of having a maximum schedule of rates approved by the Governor in Council in the ordinary way, we are simply going to provide that this maximum schedule, so far as certain things are concerned, shall be in the contract. So, that is not changed at all, so far as fixing the rates are concerned, for we would fix them by Order in Council in any case. We propose to specify certain rates in the contract. But, as a matter of precaution, for the purpose of protecting the future, it is provided that after the commission is constituted they cannot raise the rates.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think the hon. Minister of the Interior (Hon. Mr. Sifton) perhaps does not understand that we are discussing the whole clause, and not the amendment alone. This is the first discussion we have had on this clause. The difficulty about it, notwithstanding what the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair) says, is that we do seem to have a question of divided authority because of the contract between the province of Manitoba and the company, providing that the Lieutenant Governor in Council shall, from time to time, fix the rates to be charged by the company for carriage from all points on the company's lines in Manitoba to Port Arthur and from Port Arthur to all points in Manitoba and from all points on the company's lines in Manitoba to other points on the said lines in Manitoba. The difficulty I have had is altogether apart from the amendment proposed—it is the question of divided authority under the statute of a few years ago and the section of this Act which we are now discussing. And I do not yet see why that difficulty should not arise. Suppose you were fixing a rate from Winnipeg to Edmonton, in what way will you listen to the government of Manitoba ? In what way will they have the right to exercise the power given by the company to Manitoba under its contract to determine that only a certain rate shall be charged ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Do I understand my hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax) to argue that because we declare by an Act of parliament that the legislation and the contracts which were entered into by the province of Manitoba with the Canadian Northern Railway were legally entered into, we thereby abrogated our control and authority over the rates of the railway ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Will the hon. minister allow me to answer him ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). No more than by passing this statute, we abrogate our rights to impose other conditions upon the company. But, inasmuch as a statute of this kind will be regarded as a contract between the railway and the country, it would not be usual to do that. Parliament would have the most absolute power to do it the very next session, but it does not usually exercise the power. I am simply applying that principle to the contract between the province of Manitoba and this company, and I am merely saying that, inasmuch as this legislature confirmed that contract, it would stand with regard to it, so far as the sanctity of the contract was concerned, precisely as this country would stand with regard to a company with which it had entered into a contract expressed in an Act of parliament.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman has not answered my question. He knows there is all the difference in the world between the two conditions. We annex this amendment to this clause for what reason ? Because we are constituting a commission which shall have full power to say what the rates shall be upon any railway in Canada. Now we are creating that commission, and in doing so we want to have that commission instructed, and we say to the public who will be using this railway, to the company which is constructing it, and to the people who are going into that country to settle along that road, that the commission shall have no authority to raise the rates any higher than they have been contracted for between this company and the Crown when this contract is entered into. I say we have by no legislation abrogated our power to control rates in the province of Manitoba. The object that every government has in view in taking any authority over the rates of a railway, is to keep them down. There is no danger of any quarrel to get them up. So no practical question arises. If a company agrees—I do not care if they only agree with a city, I do not care if they only agree with individuals—if they agree with an individual to make the rate so much, and it becomes a matter of public knowledge that these rates are lower than should obtain, then the commission will be justified in saying : You are bound by these rates, because you have yourselves declared that you will be prepared to carry traffic at these rates, and you cannot complain if we fix them. So it will be with regard to the state of affairs in Manitoba. We are not interfering with Manitoba, we are not surrendering our control, we are exercising and continuing our control; we are saying that not even the commission may take control of the rates out of the hands of the Governor in Council, because we make it part of the contract that the rates shall be so, and shall not be increased.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. What will be the position if the commission raise the rates in the province of Manitoba over the rates fixed under the agreement the government of Manitoba have entered into with the company ? What if your committee fixed a higher rate ? Which of the two authorities would prevail in that instance, the commission or the Manitoba government ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It will be open to the commission to reduce the rates to any point they please, and their jurisdiction is not interfered with by this amendment.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. But supposing they do not reduce the rates ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Then that is the rate that would obtain. If the commission made a rate less than the rate in this contract——

Mr. LaRIVIERE. I am not speaking of this commission, I am speaking of the Manitoba government that have power to fix the rates under their contract with the Canadian Northern. Supposing they further reduced the existing rate—and you say the existing rate will be taken as a basis—supposing they further reduced this rate, what will the commission do ? Will the commission be bound to reduce the rates or will they keep them at a higher rate, and then which authority will prevail ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think probably the commission will do their full duty in the matter.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. What is that ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. How can any person say what they will do ?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Supposing the rate fixed in the present contract is higher than the present rate with the Manitoba government, or supposing the Manitoba government exercised the right to make a lower rate, which is to prevail ?

Mr. SCOTT. It seems to me the difficulty spoken of does not enter into this particular question at all. We are dealing with rates upon the 720 miles of road which is being aided, and the Manitoba government has nothing at all to do with that, and will not pretend to fix the rates upon that line.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I beg your pardon, they have to do with it, they have to do with the parts of the road, they have to do with the road from Winnipeg. Except that part which is in Minnesota, they have to do with the whole of the Canadian Northern Railway from Winnipeg to Lake Superior.

Mr. SCOTT. Then I am under a misapprehension. It is my opinion that the Manitoba government will have nothing to do with fixing the rates, for instance, from Edmonton to Port Arthur.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Inside Manitoba.

Mr. SCOTT. It is the 720 miles of the line we are proposing to aid that it is proposed to fix maximum rates upon.

Mr. BARKER. No, we are dealing with all the line.

Mr. SCOTT. In that event I am under an entire misapprehension. But in any event, with regard to the maximum rates there cannot be any of the difficulty that is spoken of, because we simply fix maximum rates, which either the commission, or the Manitoba government, or the railway company itself may, if they choose, vary in the direction of lowering them. It is provided that these maximum rates cannot be increased neither by the railway company or by the commission nor by the Manitoba government.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The hon. member forgets that it is illegal to charge any lower rate than the rate approved of in this contract, or by the commissioners.

Mr. SCOTT. It will probably be illegal for the company or for any other authority to seek to fix a lower rate than is fixed by the commission. But in the particular rates we are dealing with now, they are upon lines over which the Manitoba government will have no authority.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. No.

Mr. SCOTT. Certainly, except they may have authority over the sixty-five miles of the extension from Grandview to the boundary line.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. From the western boundary of the province down to Lake Superior, the Manitoba government have power to fix the rates; and that is more than sixty-five miles.

Mr. SCOTT. We are dealing with rates on lines west of Grandview. Let me remind my hon. friend that two or three years ago the Crow's Nest Pass contract was made. Did he argue that the contract then made dealt generally with rates over the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway ? The contract only dealt with the rates on the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway to that certain extent specified with regard to the traffic, either originating on the Crow's Nest line or that which was destined to points on the Crow's Nest line; and to that extent only. Except as was specifically contracted for with respect to certain commodities, with regard to the reduction of the wheat rate, and certain other reductions, that contract had no reference to the rates on the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway. In the same way the rates we are dealing with have no reference at all to the rates on the lines that are under the control, to some extent, of the government of Manitoba. Now I fail to agree with the idea of the leader of the opposition that there may be doubt as to the conflict of authority, I do not think there is any dispute about that. I think that was laid down very plainly two years ago when we were dealing with the contract the Manitoba government made with the Canadian Northern. I remember distinctly that the Minister of Railways stated time and again, and the representatives of the Manitoba government and of the Canadian Northern Railway who appeared before the Railway Committee, stated their perfect understanding to be that the contract was not intended in any way to invade the authority of this parliament; and that while it was not a likely thing to arise, still it was quite within the bounds of possibility that this parliament might interfere with the minimum rates, with the lower rates that the Manitoba government might seek to establish on the lines under its control.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Of course my hon. friend opposite has in his mind the mileage which is now being contracted for. But I must acknowledge that he is in error with respect to the scope and the effect of the present clause. You cannot fix a rate for carrying the freight, grain or any other western products, from Edmonton to the lake without you regulate also that portion of the line which passes through Manitoba and goes to the lake as well as that portion which passes through the North-west Territories. And so with respect to freights on products going westward, you have to regulate the freight over the whole. Therefore the two districts are necessarily and inextricably mixed up together.

Mr. SCOTT. Only with regard to the traffic either originating it or destined for points on the other portions.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. But all the same it is being carried over the other portions of the railway and therefore as I have said——

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. There is no restriction even in that.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS The hon. gentleman had in his mind the rates in the North-west Territories and the freight on products that are sent out of those territories to the east, and what the charges shall be. There is no doubt that we propose to take control, and that we do enter into a contractual arrangement with the company as to what the rates shall be from the lake to Edmonton. On that point the section is abundantly clear. My recollection is that when this Manitoba arrangement was under discussion it was stated explicitly that the government of Canada in no sense abated one tittle of its boundary to control the rates.

Mr. DAVIS. Did not the Manitoba government undertake to fix the rates in Ontario ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. If I understand the argument of hon. gentlemen opposite, it is this : That when we ratified the contract between the Manitoba government and the Canadian Northern Railway Company we thereby took a position which precluded us from saying that we now have control of these rates. Or if our hon. friends do not go that far, they suggest the idea that if we have control we ought not to exercise it. Now this subject was brought before parliament at the time the Bill referred to was before us. In that debate I myself called attention to what had taken place in the province of Manitoba, for the purpose of showing that the representatives of the Manitoba government were under no misunderstanding in regard to the position, but that they perfectly understood that the contract which they had made did not interfere, and was not intended to interfere, with the right of this government to fix a maximum rate. In the debate I quoted from a speech which was made by a gentleman who was then and is now Attorney General of Manitoba and speaking in that capacity officially on this subject he must be held to have expressed the view of the government of Manitoba. Referring to some remarks which had been made by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair), he made the following statement :

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Whose language is the hon. minister quoting ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The Attorney General of Manitoba, Mr. Campbell. I quoted it in the debate when the Bill just referred to was before this House, and I am calling attention to it now for the purpose of showing that this statement was not in that debate controverted but was accepted by the House without dispute, that we acted at that time upon this assumption, that we had that understanding at that time and no attempt to dispute it or in any way detract from the force of that position being taken has occurred either on the part of the federal authority or on the part of the provincial authority. This is what the Attorney General of Manitoba said at that time when this very subject was under discussion and before this House had ratified the contract :

> We have no objection to the Minister of Railways or the government at Ottawa, if they think fit, to make a lower tariff than we suggest ; the people will have no quarrel with them——

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Of course, he would not object to a lower tariff.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I am quoting the whole of it, and the hon. gentleman will see the point when I get through—— > —because we will receive the benefit of whichever is the lowest tariff.

> A great deal has been said about the Dominion government not allowing us to encroach upon their rights under the Railway Act. We do not desire to encroach upon the rights of the Dominion government, and I believe when the Dominion government come to ratify this contract, as they will be shortly called upon to do, they will say, as it is proper for them to say, that they reserve to themselves to fix any amount that they like, and if the amount is less than the amount we fixed, no harm is done.

It will be seen from the words used by Mr. Campbell that he clearly contemplated that the only condition upon which this parliament would ratify that contract was the condition that the power of parliament to regulate rates over a Dominion railway should remain undoubted.

Mr. BARKER. To make a lower rate ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The present legislation before this House confirms that position and it does not in any way whatever infringe upon the principles which were laid down at that time when this Bill was before the House.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Mr. Chairman, I do not regard remarks of that kind as having very much effect upon the question which we are discussing. Otherwise, the view which undoubtedly was taken on both sides of the House when the Canadian Pacific Railway Bill was passed would have affected the action of parliament in regard to taxation of the lands of the company in the North-west Territories. It was proved pretty distinctly in this House by extracts from the speeches of Mr. Blake and other gentlemen in the opposition of that day, and by remarks made by members of the government of that day that they had the impression, when the Bill had passed, that it would have a certain effect in regard to the taxation of the company's lands ; but when this statute came to be examined later on after the expiration of twenty years it was found that the view which they had entertained was not the correct one.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Blake's view has turned out to be correct.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Not in all respects.

Mr. SCOTT. Very largely.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Not in all respects.

Mr. SCOTT. Practically.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That does not make the slightest difference in regard to my argument. The country is bound by the terms of the contract as embraced in the statute and it is not bound by the view which hon. members may entertain as to its meaning.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden, Halifax) suggest that I was arguing that a speech changed the meaning of legislation ? I was not arguing anything of the kind. We all understand the effect of the law as it stands at the present time. We have the right to control rates on a Dominion railway. If I understand aright my hon. friend and his friends were endeavouring to suggest that that right should not be exercised because of the contract that was entered into, and I showed what was the understanding of the parties to the contract at that time.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There is nothing in the remarks of the Attorney General of Manitoba, read just now, that deals expressly with the point which we have been raising. The position of matters is this : The province of Manitoba made a contract with the Canadian Northern Railway Company under which that company undertook that the government should fix the maximum rate over certain portions of the company's line part of which was within the province.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That is what we are proposing to do now.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That is what was done by the statute of 1901 passed by the province of Manitoba, confirming that contract. This parliament also confirmed that contract by an Act passed the same year. When this parliament gave its sanction to that contract, it expressly declared that the Canadian Northern Railway Company had power to make that contract and power to so bind itself, but parliament did not denude itself in any way of the power to modify that statute in any respect. Neither does parliament, by passing the statute which is now before the House, denude itself of the power to change all these terms next year. I was endeavouring to put the two contracts on somewhat the same basis and to suggest that parliament, having confirmed the contract between the Canadian Northern Railway Company and the legislature of Manitoba, should not afterwards give that company power to change higher rates in violation of the contract so made by it with the government of Manitoba and confirmed by the legislature of Manitoba and also confirmed by this parliament.

Mr. SCOTT. Why not higher rates as well as lower ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The question of lower rates is the one which is important to the province of Manitoba.

Mr. SCOTT. If the hon. gentleman would——

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If my hon. friend will permit me; I do not think he is assisting the argument by the suggestion he is making, because I do not think he understands my point. The Railway Bill provides that when the rates are fixed by the railway commission, the company shall not charge lower rates. If the railway commission, under the terms of this section, or under the terms of the General Railway Act, fixes certain rates which are higher than those agreed to by the company with the legislature of Manitoba, it will, as a natural and logical result, free the company from the terms of its contract. That is a difficulty that I find. I do not say whether or not that difficulty will arise. Let the company have its rates fixed by the government of Manitoba under the contract and let the railway commission fix higher rates which it may do under the terms of the general Railway Act, coupled with this section, and does not this result follow that the lower rates fixed by the government of Manitoba will be rates which it will be illegal for the company to observe.

Mr. SCOTT. I very much regret that my hon. friend's opinion is that my views upon this question are of no value to the committee.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon ; I said nothing of the kind.

Mr. SCOTT. Of course, I very cheerfully accept the apology. I asked whether if this government had the right to vary the rates by way of reducing, why it would not equally have the right to vary the rates by way of increasing them ? The province of Manitoba might have just as much complaint to make in reference to the enforcing of a lower rate than that which was fixed by the province on the Canadian Northern as to the enforcing of a higher rate, because Manitoba has to pay the shortage if too low rates are fixed upon the railway.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If the terms of this contract were such as to prejudice the effect of the contract between the government of Manitoba and the company, I think the same result would follow. I quite agree.

Mr. OLIVER. I would like to ask if hon. gentlemen opposite are taking the position that Manitoba has the right to hold up the North-west Territories on a question of railway rates because the province of Manitoba happens to lie between the North-west Territories and the ports ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) would gather anything of that from any remarks I have made, I think his imagination must be very luxuriant.

Mr. DAVIS. If this commission has not power that virtually happens.

Mr. OLIVER. If that is a fact they are attacking the wrong Bill. I find that section 3 of the Railway Bill is the following :

> This Act shall apply to all persons, companies and railways (other than government railways) within the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada, and shall be incorporated and construed as one Act, with the special Act, subject as herein provided.

And further on, in section 260, it says :

> The standard freight tariff or tariffs, where the company is allowed by the board more than one standard freight tariff, shall specify the maximum mileage tolls to be charged for each class of the freight classification for all distances covered by the company's railway.

That clause of the general Railway Act has passed the House with the approval of the hon. member. If the power taken under that Act is not identical, and as far-reaching, and if it does not apply just as fully to the Manitoba bargain as this clause does, then I do not understand the meaning of words.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would suppose that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) would understand that in contending for lower rates, if they are lower rates fixed by the government of Manitoba, as against higher rates, if they should be higher rates fixed by the railway commission, full justice and every advantage would be given to the North-west Territories, for it can hardly be imagined that one class of rates would be charged in Manitoba and another class in the North-west Territories.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) imagine that that clause of the Act applies to the railroad which the Manitoba government has a contract with.

Mr. OLIVER. Well, I can take only the reading of it, and it says :

> This Act shall apply to all persons, companies and railways, other than government railways within the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada.

These railways are under the legislative authority of the government of Canada, and there is no exception in regard to contracts entered into between these railways and the government. I think the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Haggart) should go back to the general Railway Act, for as I take it this provision merely states what is already contained in the clauses of the general Railway Act which have been passed. I repeat : Is it to be understood that the Manitoba bargain is to be considered as a hold-up upon other arrangements that it may be possible to enter into for more favourable terms ; that it may be possible to enter into between this parliament and any railway company in regard to traffic to, and through, and from the North-west Territories. If that is so then certainly that bargain looks in a very different light to me from what it did when it appeared before this parliament. I thought it was a good bargain for the province of Manitoba and I supported the endorsation of this bargain by parliament. But, if I had had an idea that that bargain was going to be used as a means of holding up the North-west Territories or as a means of holding up this parliament from making better arrangements on behalf of the North-west Territories, I certainly would have been very far from tying my hands in any such way. However, I will be very slow to accept the dictum, even of my hon. friends opposite, that such was the case. Surely, if parliament has the right—as has been conceded on both sides—to change its position from session to session, it has also the right not to be tied by the action of a provincial parliament in a contract made with a railroad company. Would the hon. gentleman suggest, that supposing the Grand Trunk Railway came to-morrow to parliament with a proposition to run a line through Ontario, Manitoba and the Territories, and that it was the will and pleasure of this parliament to give that company aid under certain conditions; would they suggest that the Manitoba bargain would hinder this parliament from making these conditions. It seems to me that would be the logical conclusion of the hon. gentleman's contention, because unless the aid that is to be given by this parliament is given, the Canadian Northern Railway cannot build through the Territories. It is for the purposes of aid a separate institution from that part of the railroad in Manitoba, and if this parliament is not to have a free hand in legislating for the benefit of the people of the Territories in regard to roads that they are heavily subsidizing, I must confess that I am glad that it is the gentlemen on the other side of the House who are taking that position and not the gentlemen on this side.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) mistakes the argument made on this side of the House. Our endeavour is that no rate shall be fixed or placed in the schedule which is a greater rate than at present in force in Manitoba; or, taking the Manitoba route into consideration and applying the long haul and short haul to the Territories or outside of Manitoba, it shall not be greater than the rate at present in force in Manitoba. That is what we want carefully guarded and embodied in the Act. We want a statement from the Minister of Railways and Canals to that effect and we have not got it yet.

Mr. OLIVER. I hope you will not.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. All I ask is that in the schedule attached to this Act the present rate which is in force in Manitoba shall be taken into consideration in applying to roads in the North-west Territories, plus the short and the long haul. As a matter of fact we are carefully guarding your interests.

Mr. OLIVER. Thank you.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. If the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Haggart) has given us a correct statement of his views, there is no particular necessity for him having any dispute with the members from the North-west Territories, because I do not fancy that my hon. friends behind me are anxious to have higher rates in the North-west Territories than there are in Manitoba. The amendment which the Minister of Railways and Canals has suggested is for the express purpose of enabling the people of the North-west Territories to feel that for all time to come the rates which are adopted in connection with this contract are the rates which they can depend on having. I fancy that the views of my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Haggart) are as near being carried out as he can expect.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Will the government do it? Will they insert a clause saying that it will be exactly as I stated?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I am not prepared to say to my hon. friend that we will allow him to say that the rates shall be so and so, because when the rates come to be fixed I suppose that my hon. friend will understand that under any and all circumstances we would have to take into account the rates which are existing in the province of Manitoba, and he must see that the effect of the amendment that the minister has suggested is to enable our friends in the North-west Territories to feel that not only for the next year or two, but for all time to come they are going to get the benefit of that rate.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Will you even give us a promise of that without putting it into the statute.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. As a matter of fact my hon. friend knows perfectly well that there is no dispute between him and the gentlemen on this side of the House so far as that point is concerned. The remarks of the leader of the opposition indicated, that I quoted the statement of the Attorney General of the province of Manitoba as indicating what is the effect of the legislation passed by this House. I presume that it will be unnecessary for me to explain that I had no intention of suggesting any such meaning. The quotation which I made in that connection, was for the purpose of showing that there was not any misunderstanding on the part of the members of the Manitoba government in regard to the effect of our legislation; but, that when the Act was passed by this House it was with the full understanding of the legal effect which I maintained to be perfectly clear and unimpaired, namely, that we retain the right to fix the maximum rate and that we did not impair our power in anyway whatever by passing that legislation.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The gentlemen on the other side of the House admitted it.

Mr. McCREARY. It seems to me that there is more consideration given to this question of rates now than was given to it at the time the Manitoba Bill was passed. It is my recollection that when the Manitoba legislation first came up in the local House, it was discovered that they, the company, required auxillary or enabling legislation to enable them to make such a bargain with the government of Manitoba. The question of rates was not at all under consideration, and it did not assume that phase until it came down here. The speech which was then made Mr. Campbell, the Attorney General of Manitoba, and part of which was read by the Minister of the Interior to-night, was made more for political purposes than as dealing practically with the Bill. If we wish to quote some of the utterances that were made on this Bill, I think we might take those of the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) who is one of the oldest parliamentarians here, a gentleman who has a good deal of experience in matters of this sort. After quoting from the speech of the Attorney General Campbell, he said:—

> That is the statement of Mr. Campbell, and it will be observed that he states plainly that the Dominion government may fix maximum rates. But he does not state that the Dominion government may increase the rates, that it may override the action of Manitoba in any direction or in any manner that it may deem advisable in the public interest; and he does not state that the putting of rates below a reasonable figure, while it would benefit the people of Manitoba so far as freight rates are concerned, would leave the people of Manitoba to pay the deficiency

Again :

And he does not say to the people of Manitoba that these rates that he is talking about, which the Dominion government may revise, which the Dominion government may increase, and which, if lower than a paying rate the government of Manitoba must make up indirectly if not directly—he does not say that these rates are, in any event probably higher than the actual natural rates charged for business will be within two or three years, when other railway lines are completed, and when Manitoba is enjoying the benefits of competition that will come without guarantee, without liability, without incurring the obligations he would recommend.

Again :

Yet in return for that obligation she was getting absolute control of rates, when the truth is that she has not such control, the Dominion having paramount authority, the railway committee of the Privy Council can treat these rates in any manner it chooses—if the public interests require it the rates can be raised as well as lowered.

Here is the point I want hon. gentlemen to observe.

The interests of Ontario against discriminating rates can be protected by raising them.

The point was then taken that the province of Manitoba had not the power to revise the rates in the province of Ontario, and hon. members opposite will not contend that it has. A portion of this system runs beyond Manitoba. The hon. member for Provencher (Mr. LaRivière) has said that the province of Manitoba had control of the rates from Winnipeg to Fort William. The idea is preposterous. The Dominion government can raise or lower the rates between Fort William and Winnipeg. Suppose there should be a failure of crops for two years in Manitoba, and that province would have to pay this $673,000 annual interest due. This road would not be able to pay that interest, and the province would have to do so. And suppose the railway promoters stood in with the provincial government and said : Do not lower those rates, let the debt accumulate on the province. In such an event, the government of the Dominion might possibly have to come to the assistance of the province to help it out of its difficulties. It would never do for this governmont to divest itself of control over the rates, either by lowering or raising them. The full power of controlling these rates is just as much with the Dominion government now as when the Manitoba bargain with the Canadian Northern Railway was passed.

Mr. GERMAN. If this section should pass as it stands, it will put it within the province of the Railway Commission to render absolutely nugatory the agreement entered into between the Manitoba government and the Canadian Northern Railway. That contract gave the control of the rates to the Manitoba government.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You are speaking of the original section without the amendment.

Mr. GERMAN. I do not think that the amendment will take away from the effect of this section, as regards the power of the railway board to render nugatory the agreement between the Canadian Northern Railway and the Manitoba government. That agreement gave the Manitoba government control of the rates, and it was sanctioned by the parliament of Canada, but this section provides that the Railway Commission shall have the right to raise those rates. That would give it the right to practically annul the agreement, in so far as the control of rates is concerned. It might be argued that that agreement is a bad one. I never thought that it was a good one, but the people of Manitoba approved of it and I do not think that this parliament should now set it aside. If the Manitoba government and the people choose to burden themselves with a liability by reducing the rates in the interest of the farmers of that province, I do not know that this parliament, or a commission created by it, could take away from them that right and impose a higher rate. If the Manitoba government should fix a rate of two cents a bushel to Port Arthur, I do not think that we should give the Railway Board the power to make that rate four cents a bushel, and I think we might well insert in this Bill a provision that the commissioners cannot have the power to increase the rates, so far as the province of Manitoba is concerned, beyond those fixed by the Manitoba government.

Mr. PRINGLE. I do not intend to enter into any discussion concerning the agreement between the Canadian Northern Railway and the province of Manitoba, nor do I intend to discuss the question as to what legal power the province of Manitoba has, under its agreement with the Canadian Northern Railway, to fix rates ; but as this discussion touches the question as to whether the province of Manitoba has any power under that agreement to regulate the rates, it seems to me that there should be a rider added to this section No. 6. I have drafted a very short one, to which I would ask the consideration of the hon. the Minister of Railways. I would propose to add these words :

Subject, however, to any rights which the province of Manitoba may have, under its agreement with the Canadian Northern, to fix rates.

There is nothing in that rider which admits that the province of Manitoba has jurisdiction to fix the rates ; but if it has, then there would be nothing in this Bill which would prejudice that right. I merely throw this out as a suggestion.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I can see very serious objection to adding those words. I venture to say that there is not any gentleman learned in the law in this House who will express the opinion that the Dominion parliament has divested itself of the entire and absolute control over the rates on railways through Manitoba and any portion of the territory that the Manitoba agreement may effect. There was no lawyer of any standing who expressed that opinion when the Manitoba contract and legislation were under consideration.

Mr. PRINGLE. Why were not those clauses in that Bill struck out? Why were they left there? And why did this parliament ratify and confirm that agreement? It is only under that agreement that any question can be raised as to the power of Manitoba to fix the rates.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There could be no question in my mind. I have not heard yet any lawyer of standing express the opinion that our legislation in respect of Manitoba robs us of any portion of our power or control over the rates. All we did was, as far as our legislative sanction went, to legalize the legislation which had been passed by the Manitoba government, a portion of which was clearly passed by a body incompetent to legislate fully and properly in that direction. They came to us and said: We have asked the Canadian Northern Railway to make an agreement with us to allow us, as between ourselves and them, to control the rates—not as between the Crown, as represented by the government of Canada and the Canadian Northern Railway, but as between the Canadian Northern Railway and the Manitoba government. We said: Go ahead. We will say, if you wish, that you had power to make such a contract; but we did not thereby divest ourselves of the legislative power that resides, and resides only, in the parliament of this Dominion. The ex-Minister of Railways did not hesitate to declare that we were not giving away our legislative power, that we were not surrendering any power, and other hon. gentlemen affirmed the same thing. That Act passed with the fullest knowledge that we were just as free to pass any legislation we might deem proper regarding the control of rates in that territory as if the Manitoba Bill had never become law. But my hon. friend (Mr. Pringle) asks us to add words to this clause which would recognize that the province of Manitoba and the entire district that comes within the operation of that contract are withdrawn from the control of this parliament. He is asking us to surrender our control and to say that neither the Railway Board nor any other tribunal we may establish is competent to deal with this question and that, therefore, we will hand it over to the Manitoba government. He asks us to add these words: 'subject, however, to any rights which the province of Manitoba may have, under its agreement with the Canadian Northern Railway, to fix rates.' Of course, my hon. friend might say, if they have not the power, this does not give them any. But is it not the legislative recognition of a doubt at least? Is it not tantamount to a parliamentary declaration that we believe they have such control under the legislation we passed a while ago, and, therefore, we must re-affirm our own power? I could not accept this amendment for that reason. I can not, for the life of me, understand what this discussion means. I cannot see the point or relevance of it. There is no question but that the power of the parliament of Canada is today as full and ample as ever it was. Then what reason is there for us to say that we ought to denude ourselves of it either in whole or in part? As to this discussion having a practical effect, I fail to discover a trace of it. Every body knows that the only question that can arise is with reference not to raising but to lowering the rates, and the whole effort of the people is not to get the rates up but to get them down. And when parliament says that no commission which may be constituted, or the Governor in Council, when it comes to deal with this question, its efforts will not be to get the rates up, but to reduce the rates. Now the third clause of the Act passed by the parliament of Canada which we have been discussing provides that nothing in this Act or in the indentures or schedules made in pursuance of it shall limit the rights and powers existing in the parliament of Canada, the Governor in Council, the Railway Committee of the Privy Council or other commission or authority. Does not that settle it, if there was any question about it before? Then what is it we are debating? Why it is not even an academic question, for my hon. friend himself will not say that there is any doubt in his mind as to the full power of this parliament to legislate as it pleases. He has not said that, and he will not say it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I have said exactly the contrary over and over again.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Then if he has stated the contrary, what is the point in the suggestion that there will be some conflict? There will be no conflict if we have supreme powers. In working out all these things there may be difficulties, but it is the business of those working them to overcome those difficulties. We do not wish to get into unpleasant conflict with the government of Manitoba, nor would any commission wish to do so. But their effort will be to get the rates down. That is what the people want, and the commission will not wish to antagonize public opinion, nor will the Governor in Council. What, then, is the use of talking about the question when we are all agreed ?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The hon. minister has said that I stated that the Bill passed by this parliament with reference to the contract made by the Manitoba government did not abrogate our power. Every one agrees to that. We have full power to abrogate any contract we enter into without compensation to the individual.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Does the hon. gentleman say that we entered into a contract ?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I say we entered into a contract. Why what are the facts ? The two parties come here to get the provincial legislation confirmed, for they had not the power to confirm it themselves, there being a reserve power in the Dominion government. We are the empowering party. To the extent that we ratify that legislation, we are a consenting party.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We did it with all sorts of reservations.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The hon. minister is too good a lawyer not to know that that is mere surplusage. We had all these powers without reserving them in an Act of parliament. In this respect we are in the same position as we are in with regard to a contract with the Canadian Pacific Railway or any other company. We have the power to break any of those contracts tomorrow without indemnifying the parties concerned to the extent of one cent. There is no one who doubts our power. But what we argue is that, having, as empowering party, given our authority to this contract, we are bound by the contract and are bound not to interfere with it in any manner without sufficient reason and without indemnity. That is all we maintain. The hon. minister asks what we are fighting about. The hon. minister loftily looks at members on this side as though to say : You poor fools, you have been talking for a long time, but you do not know what you are talking about. Why, suppose the commission fixed a rate of twenty-five cents for carrying grain in Manitoba, while the bargain between Manitoba and the Canadian Northern Railway called for a rate of twenty cents. The superior power is with the Dominion government to fix the rates. What then would be the effect, but to abrogate the contract between the Manitoba government and the company to that extent. All we ask of the minister is that the rate fixed in the schedule shall not be higher than the present rate charged in Manitoba by the agreement between the Manitoba government and the Canadian Northern Railway. He refuses to consent to that.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I did not refuse to consent to it.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. He refuses to consent to anything. He reserves to himself the power to put in the schedule rates which will give the Canadian Northern Railway a different bargain from the one they have with the Manitoba government.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Why not ?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Because it is bad faith. We empowered the Manitoba government to enter into that contract with the Canadian Northern Railway by confirming the agreement. And now, we break the agreement.

Mr. SCOTT. This Bill does not interfere with the Manitoba arrangement.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The hon. member (Mr. Scott) seems to differ in his interpretation of the clause from all the rest of the House. The hon. minister told us a little while ago that they have the fixing of the rates in the North-west and from Manitoba to Lake Superior, and he might have gone further, and said that under this clause he has the fixing of the rates in Manitoba itself. The hon. minister will not deny it.

Mr. SCOTT. That is not being granted by this Bill. It exists. It is set forth in the Railway Commission Bill and is already the law.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Then, what does the hon. member (Mr. Scott) say to the contract we empowered the government of Manitoba to make with the Canadian Northern Railway ?

Mr. SCOTT. My contention is that this Bill does not interfere with it any more than it has been interfered with by Dominion legislation for the last two years.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Dominion legislation does not interfere with it. But under this Bill the hon. minister takes the power specifically to fix the schedule rates. It was never interfered with before. He takes the power under this Bill to fix the prices they shall charge.

Mr. SCOTT. Not on traffic originating in Manitoba or destined to points in Manitoba, but only originating on or destined to points on the line we are now aiding which is nearly all outside of Manitoba.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Further, I have put forward the argument that, with regard to certain railroads under provincial jurisdiction, in Manitoba, I doubt whether the Commission Bill would apply. The hon. minister says it applies to all railways. He says, further, that when the commission fix rates, the railway companies cannot charge less.

Mr. SCOTT. That is not new law.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. It is new law ; it never was in force before.

Mr. SCOTT. The power has always existed. We are simply creating a new tribunal to exercise that power.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I can tell the hon. gentleman that it never was law before.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Scott) is right. It was always the law. May I ask the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Haggart) a question ?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Well ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Will the hon. gentleman say that, in this clause or any portion of it, the government is asking parliament to give it any more power than it would have if the clause were not in the Bill ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I will tell the hon. minister what might be urged very well with regard to that. There is a principle well known to the hon. minister, but, perhaps not so well known to my hon. friend from Alberta (Mr. Oliver) or to my hon. friend from West Assiniboia (Mr. Scott). It is that a general statute does not ordinarily repeal a special statute. You may very well argue that the provisions of the general statute would not interfere with the Act of two years ago. But in dealing in this special Act with the same railway, section 6 might have an operation by way of repealing that Act which the general statute would not have.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Does my hon. friend say that the legislation which was passed in connection with the Manitoba Bill, took away or diminished in any particular the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada to control rates ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I told my hon. friend over and over again that so far as the technical power is concerned it certainly does not ; neither does the passing of this Act take away our power, the technical power of parliament, hereafter to modify any of its provisions. The passing by this parliament of an enactment that the lands of the Canadian Pacific Railway should not be taxed until after a certain period, did not take away from parliament the technical power to repeal that provision the next year if it wished. Every one understands that, it is not necessary for the hon. gentleman to emphasize that, we have not denied it, we have affirmed it over and over again.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Does the hon. gentleman say that by enabling the Canadian Northern to make a contract with the Manitoba government so that it would be legal as between the two parties, we thereby deprived ourselves or surrendered the general control of parliament over the rates on that line that we formerly possessed ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If I have not made my position clear, I fear it is hopeless to attempt to do so any further. It is the case of any two parties who required a contract to be confirmed and who come to this parliament to have it confirmed. Parliament has the right to repeal such a statute or to modify it in any way it sees fit ; but it does not usually do so without having the consent of the parties.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We simply state to the Canadian Northern Railway and to the province of Manitoba : We will allow you to make this contract between yourselves, and since you cannot make it without our coming to your assistance, we will give you the authority to make it. But we do not divest ourselves or limit ourselves temporarily or otherwise in respect of the rights which we possess as a parliament over the whole subject.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Perhaps the hon. gentleman would have no objection to adding to the clause something like this : ' Provided, however, that nothing herein contained shall repeal, modify or affect the provisions of the Act, 1, Edw. vii, chapter 52, entitled an Act respecting the Canadian Northern Railway.' Then you are making it clear that you are not by this statute repealing the statute of two years ago or modifying it. That is not open to the objection the hon. gentleman raised to the proposed amendment of my hon. friend from Cornwall. Now, with regard to the observations of my hon. friends from the North-west Territories with respect to any remarks that I have made, I have no doubt that they did not intentionally misconstrue them ; but I must insist that I shall be bound by what I have said with regard to this matter rather than by any construction which they have seen fit to place upon my remarks, which was not in accordance with my intention. I should unhesitatingly regard any observations I have made as tending to the advantage of the people of the North-west Territories.

Mr. PRINGLE. So far as the statute is concerned, it was very clear under section 2 that the Canadian Northern Railway Company were given pretty full powers. Among those powers was the power of entering into this contract with the province of Manitoba. Now with regard to the contract itself, the whole gist of it is that in consideration of the guarantee of the said bonds the assignment of the said lines, &c., the Lieutenant Governor in Council shall from time to time fix the rates to be charged or demanded by the company. Now I apprehend there is no question that the Canadian Northern Railway would be bound by their contract, it having been declared in this Act that they had full power to enter into that contract with the province of Manitoba, and the whole gist of this contract being the guarantee of these bonds, the consideration being that the Lieutenant Governor in Council of Manitoba had power to fix the rates. Now if the Lieutenant Governor in Council of Manitoba fixes the rates with the Canadian Northern Railway, I understand the minister's contention is that while it might be binding on the Canadian Northern, it is not in any way binding on the Dominion of Canada, that is, the Dominion of Canada can override anything that is done by the province of Manitoba. But would it be fair, when the province of Manitoba guaranteed these bonds on the sole consideration that they would have the power to fix these rates, that this parliament should override these rates so long as they are fair and equitable? Now the clause I proposed to add did not in any way commit this parliament to the position of taking away from the Manitoba government the power to fix these rates. I was very careful in my language not to put it in that form. I simply said:

> Subject, however, to any rights which the province of Manitoba may have under their agreement with the Canadian Northern Railway.

Now it seems to me it is only reasonable that that language should be added to that clause. But I do not apprehend that this Bill, so long as the rates were reasonable, would in any way interfere with the agreement made by the province of Manitoba with the Canadian Northern Railway.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think that either the amendment moved by the member for Cornwall (Mr. Pringle) or that moved by the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Borden) ought to be adopted. They are both very objectionable. The argument of the member for Cornwall, it seems to me, is one that bears strongly against his own proposition. He claims that the government of Manitoba were authorized by that Act to fix the rates upon the Canadian Northern within their territory. Now what does that expression mean? It means that they are authorized by this parliament to make these rates as high or reduce them as low as they please. Now stop and consider, this is not a thing from which you can logically escape. Does the hon. member seriously think that, from any moral point of view, from any ethical point of view, from any view that ought to affect the conscience of parliament in trying to do what is just by the province of Manitoba, that we should hand over to the province of Manitoba the right to make the rates in that territory as high or as low as they please? They have great interest in making the rates high because they had assumed large obligations. They had undertaken to pay a tremendous amount of money every year, $600,000 or $700,000 a year in the event of default by the company, a small province, with a small revenue and a large obligation. Now if we had power to cut the rates down but did not have any power to put them up, my hon. friend would be the first to argue that in cutting down the rates we are taking away the only security the government of Manitoba had to guarantee the repayment of their loan and to relieve themselves from their indemnity. Now can it be seriously argued in this House that we must stand with our hands tied helpless while the government of Manitoba are making the railway traffic pay just as large a figure as they choose? My hon. friend made use of the words 'just and fair.' Who shall determine what is just and fair? If his argument holds good, in ratifying this legislation we ought to say: We will allow you to exercise this power if you do it fairly and justly. It is too late for us to say that we ought now to step in and revise or repeal or modify our legislation. We are not doing that, we are proposing to occupy the ground we have always occupied. By this Bill we take nothing away from Manitoba that we gave them, and we are not assuming any more authority than we have ever had since the Manitoba Bill was sanctioned by this parliament. It did not need any more legislation to say what the rates should be upon that line, even though these rates did not conform to the rates which the Manitoba government and the Canadian Northern had agreed upon. I must ask the committee not to accept either of these amendments. We ought not to recognize the surrender of what we know we have never surrendered. We ought not to make any qualification which involves the suggestion that we have surrendered that jurisdiction either in law, equity or from any other point of view.

Mr. LANCASTER. The hon. minister says that we have never surrendered that either in law, equity or from any other point of view.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. LANCASTER. If we had the power to prevent that bargain being made and after looking into the merits of the bargain and concluding it was one that ought to have been made, and after giving our sanction to the bargain, does the hon. minister think that we would be justified in doing something that would contradict the bargain that we sanctioned?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I say unhesitatingly that we have not abandoned anything. We gave nothing in anyway, no pledge or guarantee, nor did we commit ourselves to the merits of the Bill in the slightest particular. So far as I am concerned I voted for the Bill, not because I believed in the merits of it; I thought it was a very onerous undertaking for the province of Manitoba to assume, but they could not legally execute it because the railway with which they were contracting was a railway outside of the jurisdiction of the legislature of Manitoba, and therefore they could not make a contract with it. But I did not feel that this parliament should stand off and say: We are better able to judge as to whether you should enter into this contract or not. We will use the power we happen to possess and we will decline our aid in ratifying the contract you desire to enter into and would have entered into without any arrangement with us if it had not been that the railway company was a creature of this parliament. That was the sole reason. If you look at this Bill you will see, as I read it at all events, that parliament took the utmost pains to say that it was not giving up anything in conscience or in law in the way of power or authority or jurisdiction. It was just as free after this Bill was passed as before. We could repeal, I suppose, this legislation, although it is in the nature of a contract between parties, but I do not think we ought to repeal it. Then we would be open to the charge of having gone back upon an engagement we had entered into. But we retained all our powers unreservedly and without qualification when we introduced this clause.

Mr. LANCASTER. If there is no intention to repeal what is the objection to the amendment of my hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax)?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Because, it is altogether unnecessary.

Mr. LANCASTER. It may be unnecessary in one view but if we agree that there is no intention to repeal that is all the amendment of my hon. friend provides for.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My objection to it is that it may be said that parliament, in putting in that amendment, entertains doubts and that we were reiterating our authority. That would be putting parliament in a false position. We entertain no doubts because we have no doubt whatever that we have the power.

Mr. PRINGLE. Mr. Chairman, it seems a very peculiar position for the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals to take. He tells us that there was no merit whatever in this agreement, that the agreement was one by which the province of Manitoba might involve itself in an extraordinary liability and in great danger, that he saw nothing whatever in that agreement that was meritorious——

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I did not say that.

Mr. PRINGLE. I think the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals clearly said that there was no merit at all in the agreement, and yet the hon. minister votes for this Bill by which this contracting party who had no powers whatever to enter into this contract is enabled to enter into a contract with the province of Manitoba. Then, the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals goes farther and says: We are not morally nor are we legally bound by the rates which the province of Manitoba may fix with the Canadian Northern Railway Company. I am not going to argue it from the legal point of view, because, notwithstanding that it is so absolutely clear to the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, it is not so absolutely clear, but, I say, that, apart from the legal question, the parliament of Canada, to my mind, is morally bound to stand by any agreement which the province of Manitoba entered into with the Canadian Northern Railway Company fixing these rates. It is perfectly ridiculous for the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals to say that the legislature of Manitoba might fix these rates at such an excessive figure that they will be burdensome to the people of Manitoba. What is the legislature of Manitoba? It represents the will of the people in Manitoba and it acts in the interests of the people of Manitoba. Its desire will be to make these rates just as low as it is possible to make them, and I think it is ridiculous to insinuate that the legislature of Manitoba may put these rates up to an excessive figure.

Mr. DAVIS. A portion of the road that the Manitoba government is supposed to exercise control of lies outside the province of Manitoba and is in the province of Ontario. Supposing that the Manitoba government, having, according to the statements that these hon. gentlemen have made here, the right of raising the rates as well as lowering them, undertook to raise the rates in Ontario, where would the people of that portion of Ontario go to get relief? Where would they be represented? The hon. gentleman's argument is ridiculous.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They cannot have the power to reduce the rates unless they have the power to make them.

Mr. PRINGLE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Davis) has asked a question as to a matter which is not in this discussion at all.

Mr. DAVIS. It is in this discussion.

Mr. PRINGLE. It is not. In so far as I am concerned, I said that I was not discussing the legal aspect of the matter. The absolute power of controlling rates still remains with the Governor in Council and this parliament.

Mr. DAVIS. This railway, when it is constructed, will run from Edmonton to the lakes. A portion of it lies in the Northwest Territories and a portion in the province of Manitoba. If the hon. gentleman could have his ideas carried out there would be one rate existing in Manitoba which might be a great deal higher rate than that in the North-west Territories. How are you going to arrange that? Are you going to have a division of authority as to railway rates all over the Dominion?

Mr. PRINGLE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Davis) was present during the full discussion of the Bill confirming this agreement between the province of Manitoba and the Canadian Northern Railway Company. He is perfectly well aware that the consideration of this contract was that the province of Manitoba should be able to enter into an agreement with the Canadian Northern Railway Company for the fixing of rates. I admit that it was understood in the discussion that the rates should be still subject to the control of the government in clause, but he supported this Bill and this very contract. The province of Manitoba has given a very valuable consideration to the Canadian Northern Railway Company for what? Simply for the concession that the government of Manitoba could arrange the rates as between the Canadian Northern Railway and the province of Manitoba, subject, if you will, to the higher jurisdiction of the Governor in Council here. But, what I say here, as opposed to the statement made by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, is that there certainly is a moral obligation upon this parliament to support any arrangement that is made by the province of Manitoba with the Canadian Northern Railway Company under this agreement, and it is ridiculous for the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals to take the position that there are no merits in this agreement.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I did not say that.

Mr. PRINGLE. And that although it was dangerous to the province of Manitoba he voted for it.

Mr. DAVIS. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if, when the government of Manitoba made this bargain, they had not their eyes open? They knew that any rate they made would be subject to the control of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council.

Mr. PRINGLE. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if when parliament passed this legislation it had not its eyes open.

Mr. DAVIS. A portion of the Act which has been read by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals shows that we retained all these powers.

Mr. SCOTT. I contended before and I contend again that we are discussing a difficulty that does not exist in this matter at all. A question I would like to have answered is with regard to this 720 miles of railway that we are dealing with in this Bill. What control does the Manitoba government contend that it has, or what control has it, or can it possibly have in regard to this proposition we are dealing with? Has the government of Manitoba any control over it? These 720 miles of new road are not affected at all by the bargain made between the Canadian Northern Railway Company and the Manitoba government two years ago.

Mr. FRASER. This is all outside of Manitoba.

Mr. SCOTT. Yes, we have the matter clouded to some extent by the fact that there is a general provision for the control of rates by the commission.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I will inform the hon. gentleman what portion the province of Manitoba have control of under this Bill. They have control from Port Arthur to the crossing of the Rainy river, from Winnipeg to the southerly boundary of Manitoba, from Gladstone to Winnipegosis, from Sifton Junction upwards on that part that is in Manitoba; they have control over the Emerson branch and from Beaver to Gladstone.

Mr. DAVIS. Is this government guaranteeing any of these?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. These are the roads which are included in this Bill, and the Manitoba government have control over them under their contract.

Mr. DAVIS. We are dealing with 720 miles of railway which are not yet built.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. You have not read the Act, Sir.

Mr. OLIVER. You have read a schedule of the property that is going to be mortgaged by the Canadian Northern Railway for the money advanced.

Mr. SCOTT. Will my hon. friend from Cornwall (Mr. Pringle) indicate what control the Manitoba government have over these 720 miles?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. That is in the agreement which was confirmed by this government.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There was never anything confirmed about that 720 miles.

Mr. PRINGLE. The leader of the opposition has answered all that, and I do not wish to take up time discussing it.

Mr. SCOTT. We are discussing a difficulty which does not enter into this at all. Suppose we strike out clause 6 entirely, then the position or the law with respect to public control of rates is not changed in the least.

Mr. PRINGLE. Does not the provision that the control of all lines owned by the Canadian Northern Railway shall be in the Governor in Council; does not that cover portions of the Canadian Northern Railway which are in the contract between the Canadian Northern Railway Company and the province of Manitoba ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Would you like to have that struck out ?

Mr. SCOTT. What I say is that if you wipe that out altogether it does not make any difference. We have this matter mixed up with the amendment which the Minister of Railways suggested regarding certain maximum rates. I may say, without any breach of faith, that it was upon the representation made by supporters of the government from west of Lake Superior that the provision for maximum rates has been suggested by the Minister of Railways and Canals. These maximum rates, so far as I can understand, are not intended to refer to any traffic originating upon the line under the partial control of the government of Manitoba, but entirely with regard to traffic originating upon this 720 miles of railway that has not yet been built, and that the government of Manitoba has nothing to do with.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Suppose we agree to strike out all the portions of that clause that are so offensive to hon. gentlemen opposite, will they let the Bill pass and let us get on with some useful business ?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Oh, you can put it through without any amendment or anything else.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My hon. friend says that, because he knows that his whole contention is without foundation and is an absolute waste of time.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What is your suggestion ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Let it read :

> The rates and tolls to be charged for the transfer of freight and passengers upon the lines of railway so aided shall not in any case be higher than the rates and tolls which may be fixed in the contract to be made between the government of Canada and the Canadian Northern Railway under this Act.

If this clause be amended in that way, and if you strike out all reference to the other lines owned by the Canadian Northern Railway and strike out the statement that they shall be under the control of the government of Canada it is all the same thing. If my hon. friends opposite think it will alter the matter, and that it will suit them, and they will let the section through, I am perfectly willing to strike these words out.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The minister still does not provide that it shall be in the direction of preserving the contract between the Manitoba government and the Canadian Northern Railway.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What business have you to put that in ?

Mr. LANCASTER. I cannot see for the life of me why the amendment of the leader of the opposition should not be accepted. If the minister is going to do anything that will have the result of repealing any agreement which this House has sanctioned, it is a most extraordinary thing. Could the province of Manitoba in equity repeal that bargain that they have made with the Canadian Northern Railway ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They made the bargain.

Mr. LANCASTER. That bargain would have no legal effect unless it were endorsed by the authority of this parliament, and in equity we are in the same position as the province of Manitoba.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not at all.

Mr. LANCASTER. Then we should not have passed the Act ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not at all.

Mr. OLIVER. Would the hon. member allow me to give him an instance ? My attorney in Edmonton sends me a legal document to transfer land, for my signature and I sign it. I was a party to the bargain, but it had no effect until I got a notary public to certify to the signature.

Mr. LANCASTER. That has nothing to do with it, but I will give a parallel case. Suppose my hon. friend is an executor of an estate and his consent is required to the sale of land belonging to the heirs and the heirs selling does he mean to say that after he gives consent he can turn around next year and say that he had power to repudiate it ?

Mr. OLIVER. It is not the same thing at all.

Mr. LANCASTER. It is exactly the same. Here is a contract between the province of Manitoba and a railway and it is no earthly use to that railway unless the Dominion parliament sanctioned it. The parties come to the Dominion parliament and get it sanctioned, and can the Dominion parliament turn around a year or two afterwards and try to reserve their right to break it ? If there is any equity in the matter at all this parliament should stick to the bargain which it endorsed. As the leader of the opposition has said we may have the power in strict law to break that bargain, or we may have power as a parliament if we wish to use it, to do a most inequitable thing, but there is no court of equity or no court of conscience which would rule that we could break a bargain which we solemnly entered into.

Mr. OLIVER. Did the hon. member give his support to that endorsation by this House ?

Mr. BARKER. What difference does that make ?

Mr. OLIVER. It does not make any difference as a matter of fact.

Mr. LANCASTER. This parliament did it as a whole.

Mr. OLIVER. At the very time we gave that endorsation to that bargain and as part of that endorsation we said : We do not change our attitude or our control. That statement was as much a part of the endorsation as the other part of it.

Mr. LANCASTER. In equity that could not amount to anything more than our waving our specific right to deal with that particular matter about which we were legislating, but still retaining our rights generally. We must have meant something when we passed that endorsation, and what we did was to preserve our rights generally in regard to similar matters, while we waived our right in that particular instance.

Mr. OLIVER. If the exception was intended surely the exception would have been stated, but as a matter of fact, no exception was made and the wording covered everything as far as the English language could be made to do so.

Mr. LANCASTER. Does the hon. gentleman mean that we were not confirming anything that had been done by Manitoba ? Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that the exception was so wide that although we passed an Act concerning a certain agreement we did not mean anything ?

Mr. OLIVER. It means just what it said. I claim that the endorsation of that agreement meant exactly what we said.

Mr. LANCASTER. What was that please ?

Mr. OLIVER. That we gave effect to that agreement without prejudice to our right to control, whenever we chose to exercise it.

Mr. LANCASTER. That you gave effect to the agreement without prejudice to breaking it the next day.

Mr. OLIVER. Precisely; that was precisely the meaning of the words; that was the argument made in the Railway Committee; that was the understanding that was arrived at; there is no doubt about it.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The hon. minister promised to give us an account of the character of the road which is to be built, the gradients running west and east, and a general description.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The grading will be 26 feet to the mile going east and will not exceed 52 feet going west. The curvature is very favourable but I cannot give the maximum.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

SUPPLY.

House again in Committee of Supply.

Department of Public Works—contingencies, further amount required, $7,500.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. James Sutherland). When the vote of $10,000 in the main estimates was taken, it was found that there was an expenditure of over $8,000 yet unpaid, and it was necessary to provide this vote in order to make up the amount required for the current year.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I suppose this is not paid yet ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The principle amount due is to the stationery department for printing, &c.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. That seems an enormous sum out of the whole vote of $18,000 and nearly all in the Stationery Department.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Year after year the vote has not been large enough to meet the liabilities. At the end of the year 1901-2, there was a balance of $8,376 of an overdraft. That was at once deducted from the amount of the vote of $10,000, leaving only a small sum for the year's service.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I suppose the hon. gentleman has the contingencies remaining unpaid, what are the principal ones ?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I find that this item was voted the other night and consequently there is nothing before the House.

Mr. HENDERSON. Has the hon. minister made provision for the full payment of these contingencies in the estimates for next year, or will he again come down with supplementary estimates ? It would be better to ask for an amount sufficient to cover the appropriation required for 1903-4, so that the House will understand how much really is required by the government.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My instructions to the officers were to make up accounts in full, and next year I shall take particular care to see that the necessary amount required for this service is procured.

River Kaministiquia, dredging, $24,706.15.

Mr. BENNETT. Is this under contract?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This money has been all spent and is due for dredging on the Kaministiquia river. The amount still due is $24,706.15.

Mr. HENDERSON. Is this not an extraordinary proceeding—first to spend the money and then ask for an appropriation? I gave warning a year or two ago, when an item similar to this came up, that in future I would move that the item be struck out. I do not think that we are here simply to register the acts of the government in the expenditure of public money. We are here to consent to that expenditure, in the first place, and I hope that the hon. minister will take ample provision for all he requires in the future and not ask parliament to be simply a registering body. I take no exception to the expenditure, because the Kaministiquia river is one of the most important harbours in the country. With the possible exception of Quebec and Vancouver there is no harbour more important.

An hon. MEMBER. And Halifax.

Mr. HENDERSON. No, Halifax isn't in it. A great deal of money will probably have to be expended on the Kaministiquia in the future, because the country will demand it.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have no objection to take to the remarks of the hon. member (Mr. Henderson). This is undoubtedly one of the great works of the country. As the department has not sufficient money appropriated, perhaps, it was justified in spending more than was voted. However, I do not say there is any reason why we should be again in that position. It is far better to ask for the amount required. As to this particular work, I have asked the officers of the department to make full provision in the estimates, so that parliament may be seized of the exact amount we intend to spend.

Mr. BENNETT. The appropriation for 1902-3 for dredging was $35,000. Has this amount of $24,760 been spent in addition?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That was another case of paying out of appropriation what was spent the year before. The full amount was not intended for the current year. My desire was to find out exactly how the accounts stand and make provision in the supplementary estimates, and to take a vote for next year for all that will be necessary.

Mr. THOMSON (Grey). I did not understand the hon. minister to answer the question asked by the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett). Was this work done by contract or by the yard? Who were the contractors?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This work has all been done at fifteen cents per yard. I think the amount is principally due to the Great Lakes Dredging Company. I have here a full plan of the works which I will lay on the Table.

Trails, roads and bridges—Yukon Territory—To pay account of Trading and Exploring Company, Limited, for transportation of men from Hutchiku on the Yukon river to Lake Labarge, in September, 1899, $481.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is to pay the travelling expenses of thirteen men, as stated in the item, being at the rate of $37 per man. The amount has not been paid sooner, owing to the delay in procuring a properly certified account to be passed by the Auditor General. These parties live in Dawson, and it was a matter of communication between the department, the Auditor General's Department, and the parties having the claim. The account duly certified having been received, the vote had lapsed. This vote is to pay the amount.

Telegraph lines—Quesnel-Atlin section of main line and Port Simpson—Hazelton and 150 Mile House—Quesnel Forks (Horse-fly) branches—additional amount for construction, $20,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is to settle outstanding accounts in connection with this telegraph line. The deputy minister informs me that he believes this will pay the construction accounts in full. If the committee desire, I can give the details of the amounts to be paid.

Mr. BARKER. Is this another case of the previous year's estimate being exceeded, or is it a case of paying one year's expenditure out of the following year's appropriation?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Both statements might be partly correct, but I do not understand either to be wholly so. An appropriation was not taken for the amount necessary, but this particular vote is to pay accounts which did not come in in time to be paid out of the vote.

Mr. BARKER. Is this under contract?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. These are unpaid accounts under contract.

Mr. BARKER. Did any portion of these items relate to the year 1901-2?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I think they were all contracted for in that year.

Mr. BARKER. I suppose the hon. minister will have no objection to their going before the Public Accounts Committee?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, if there is to be an investigation, I think all these accounts ought to go.

Mr. BLAIN. Are extensive repairs going on upon this line ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, only the usual repairs.

Mr. BLAIN. What is the condition of the line ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The information received by the department is that the line is in fairly good condition.

Mr. BLAIN. I notice an item in the western papers that a party of men has been sent out to reconstruct the line at different points.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That is not correct.

Mr. EARLE. By whom are the repairs being carried out ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There is a staff of line men located along the line.

Mr. EARLE. The damage to the line is reported as being very serious, and, as the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) has said, it is reported that a party of men have gone out to make extensive repairs. It was suggested by the late Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte) that one portion of the line it was almost impossible to keep in repair, and it was proposed to overcome the difficulty by laying a cable. It was reported in the western papers that a party had gone out under the direction of the gentleman who constructed the line, to make repairs. Is there anything in that ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. As I have said, there is no knowledge of it in the department. There is no foundation for the statement.

Mr. BLAIN. Will the hon. minister give us the receipts of the line ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There will be an item later, on which that will more properly come up, and I have promised to give a full statement of the details.

Public works—chargeable to income—public buildings, Nova Scotia—Arichat public building, $4,800.

Mr. BENNETT. Has this building been completed ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes. This is to pay the balance of the contract.

Mr. BENNETT. What has been the cost of the building ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Including heating and fittings, $8,813.65.

Mr. BENNETT. I have no recollection of this vote having been up before, but it seems the money was voted in a preceding year. Though it may be a little late to protest, it is well to let the public know what is being done here. At this place, Arichat, in the county of Richmond, the population I think is under 600. The total receipts of the post office are $772, and the business is so insignificant that the Post Office Department would not allow the postmaster a single cent for the premises. Now the Department of Public Works are erecting a building at a cost of some $11,000 or $12,000. Would the minister tell us what purposes are to be served by this office, and what remuneration will be paid to the caretaker ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The building has been completed. The revenue of the post office is $772.75, and the customs revenue is $1,520.74. I suppose this is the chief town in that county, and the trade seems to be considerable. While the revenue from the post office seems small compared with that of larger centres, the amount of money orders issued was over $45,000.

Mr. BENNETT. Will there be a caretaker appointed for this building ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. An arrangement has been made with the postmaster to take charge of this building. A very small allowance, if any, will be given to him.

Mr. FOWLER. The minister says that the revenue from customs was sufficient to justify this expenditure. Does he consider that an income of $1,500 a year is a considerable income for a customs house ? As a matter of fact, that would represent the duty on about $6,000 worth of goods, an amount which an ordinary business man would bring in in one importation. And yet the hon. gentleman is putting up a building costing $11,000 or $12,000—$8,000 up to date, and $4,000 to be added.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, the building is completed at a total cost of $8,813.

Mr. FOWLER. Well, even $8,000 is an outrageous cost. Besides, there is the salary of the caretaker. The expenditure is out of all proportion to the amount of revenue received at that place.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I understand that the previous government had a building there which became useless.

Mr. FOWLER. Because you own a small piece of land in the town of Arichat, worth perhaps a couple of hundred dollars, is it necessary to utilize it by putting up a building at a cost of $8,000 or $9,000 ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There had been a building there before owned by the Dominion government.

Mr. MATHESON. I can give the committee a little information. In 1882, the Conservative government bought a piece of land, and an old hardware shop about seventy years old for a post office. After that had been used for some time as a post office, we thought it was time to build a new one. We did not build it very large, and we built it to suit the requirements of the place. There should be no objection to it unless you want to use the old building for another seventy years.

Mr. LANCASTER. What is the population of the place ?

Mr. MATHESON. You can find that out by the census.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The population of Arichat and of West Arichat are about 2,000.

Mr. FOWLER. Is the post office in Arichat or in West Arichat ?

Mr. MATHESON. There is a mail going to West Arichat from the Arichat post office.

Mr. FOWLER. How far apart are the two places ?

Mr. MATHESON. About four miles.

Mr. FOWLER. So this post office at Arichat cannot accommodate the people of West Arichat. The government built a post office at a little place with a population of 590 souls simply because at one time they owned a lot of land there and a wooden building.

Mr. BLAIN. When was the first vote voted ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. In 1901-2, $4,000 was voted.

Mr. BLAIN. I think this is a case where the opposition have a right to object. The government come forward and ask for an appropriation of $4,000 for the purpose of constructing a public building in that town, and before the building is completed we are asked to vote more than double that amount. I am of the opinion that when a building is to be constructed the department should tell us what it is likely to cost before they ask us to undertake its construction.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It was not stated in the beginning what the total cost of the building would be, because it was not known. But so long as parliament is made aware of the amount of the obligation that is quite sufficient to justify parliament in voting the money. There are many works undertaken by this department as well as others for which the full amount is not asked at first, but so long as parliament is told what the estimated cost of the work would be, that is usually considered a sufficient reason for undertaking the work. In this case the amount of the contract was $4,400.

Mr. BLAIN. I suppose it is fair to assume that that is the amount the government intended to expend upon the building. Perhaps the hon. gentleman would tell us how it is that the extras are more than the first contract.

Mr. MATHESON. The estimates of three years ago were less than the estimates of the same work would be now. Lumber has almost doubled in price.

Mr. BARKER. The most of this work was done two years ago, $3,000 of this was spent in 1901-2. It is not the present prices we are dealing with.

Mr. MATHESON. The money was voted then, but it was not spent.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I think that my statement that the contract was $4,400 is somewhat misleading. The amount of the contract for the building was $4,400, but then there was heating, which cost $1,038, fittings and letter boxes, which cost $2,074 ; fencing and sidewalks, $200, and incidentals $157.20.

Mr. BLAIN. What proportion was done by contract out of the full amount ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The whole of it was done by contract.

Mr. FOWLER. What kind of heating is there in this building ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Hot water.

Mr. FOWLER. The difficulty is that when coming before parliament and asking for a vote the statement is made by the minister that a building is to cost only so much money, and then when complaint was made that it is costing more, the answer is : We have spent so much money and we must finish it. We had a glaring example of this in the Grande Vallée expenditure. In that case the first amount asked for was $5,000. It was supposed by the committee that that was all that would be required, but the expenditure since has amounted to over $60,000. If the officers of the department are competent, as I believe they are, because I do not think the fault lies with them, when an expenditure is asked for we should have before this committee an exact estimate of the final cost of the building or work upon which the money is to be expended. As far as the enhanced price of building material is concerned, it is certainly not sufficient to account for the difference between the sum asked for and the sum expended in this case. It is true that building materials have advanced in price, but not more than 25 per cent, although the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Matheson) told us that in his part of the country they had advanced 100 per cent in price.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have no reason to know that this estimate was not given when this vote was asked for. The practice in the department is that the chief architect always furnishes the minister, when the estimates are sent down, with an estimate in detail as to what in his opinion the work will cost. There is no reason why that should not be submitted to parliament, and I quite agree with the principle contended for by the hon. gentleman.

Mr. THOMSON (North Grey). I would like to ask the hon. minister why the government finds it necessary to expend $8,000 for a public building in a village with population not quite 600 ? Is the government prepared to adopt that as a policy ? If it is, we have in the province of Ontario hundreds of villages with a greater population than that mentioned here in which there are no public buildings. Is it because the hon. member, representing this particular constituency, has a special pull that the public fund should be spent in this way ? Is it the intention of the government to pursue this course in the future ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Perhaps this government, to a certain extent, is treading in the path of its predecessor. The hon. gentleman must know that when his party were in power there were cases of this kind.

Mr. BENNETT. There were no cases as bad as this.

Mr. THOMSON (North Grey). Is that the best justification the hon. minister is able to offer for an expenditure of $8,500 for a public building in a place of this kind ? The fittings that have gone into this building must be most palatial, because we find that $2,000 have been spent for letter boxes and fittings. I believe if you go through the province of Ontario you will find no such buildings as this even in towns with 4,000 inhabitants ; yet no expenditure in the province of Nova Scotia is considered too large to keep this constituency politically safe.

Mr. FOWLER. What are these fittings ? With a population of 600 in the village it is costing $4 per head to put up this public building. What do these fittings consist of? Have you furnished rooms in this building for the population ? And is there a ball room there ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The fittings are the usual fittings to be found in public buildings throughout the Dominion.

Mr. FOWLER. Would it not strike the hon. minister that these fittings are a little above the usual class of fittings when it cost $2,000 to fit up a post office, the building of which cost $4,400 ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The fittings and the furniture would be very much the same as they would be in a much more expensive building, unless the building was a very much larger one. I think this is a very fair proportion having regard to the expenditure of the building.

Mr. FOWLER. How many boxes are there ?

Mr. MATHESON. There is a bonded warehouse in the basement, and there is a place for the collector of customs.

Mr. FOWLER. Have you anything in that bonded warehouse ?

Mr. MATHESON. Yes, the necessary fittings.

Mr. FOWLER. What necessary fittings would be in a bonded warehouse ?

Mr. MATHESON. Then, there is the savings bank department, and the janitor's room.

Mr. BENNETT. This is a very extraordinary expenditure. Figured out it means that for every head of the population in that town of $600—and it is a little village if the hon. gentleman will pardon me for calling it a village, because in Ontario it would be considered a very small village—this country is bribing that village, and incidentally the whole riding with an expenditure of $15. The hon. Minister of Public Works can figure it out, and if he is going to proportion the bribe to the whole Dominion with public buildings, it will only cost $90,000,000. I am going to ask the hon. minister to consider an application from the town of Midland for a public building. Its population is 4,500, and on behalf of the hon. Minister of Customs (Hon. Mr. Paterson), and in pursuance of an old promise, I am going to ask for cold justice for the town of Owen Sound. The hon. gentleman will perhaps recollect the promise made in his behalf that if he was elected in the riding of North Grey they would get a post office building. They have not got it yet.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) says that this expenditure was made to bribe a constituency to secure it for the government, and then he says that we should bribe Midland in his riding, I suppose, so that the government might carry it, and that we should bribe Owen Sound, so that my hon. friend who represents it now (Mr. Thomson, North Grey) may not come back. Is that the hon. gentleman's logic ?

Mr. BENNETT. I am quite willing that the hon. gentleman should go into the constituency of East Simcoe and expend all the money they wish, because some of the expenditures they have made in that constituency I have protested against on the floor of this House. You wasted three or four thousand dollars of public money on a dock in the village of Hawkestone, and you so disgusted the decent Liberals there that I had a less majority against me than ever before.

Mr. MATHESON. The government the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) supported bought an old hardware shop in Arichat when they were in power, and they promised to give us a post office but they never did so. I do not see why the gentlemen from Ontario should be so jealous of a little money being spent in Arichat. Arichat was a flourishing town before Midland had a man in it civilized enough to wear clothes.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am afraid that the minister is being so hard pressed that I shall be obliged to come to his rescue. In bygone years I advocated the construction of post offices in towns of from 1,500 to 2,000 population throughout the country. I consider that the government would save money in the rentals which they have to pay, and they could procure abundance of money to build these post offices at three per cent. In place of an old frame building that has been used for some other purpose for seventy years, you could have a substantial brick or stone building with a fireproof vault. But there is no reason in the world why the government should not erect a post office in that town of Arichat for $5,000 or $6,000, sufficient for the requirements of the place and containing a residence for the postmaster so that there would be no expense for the caretaker. The policy is all right, but the working out of this policy by the government is all wrong. That policy should have a general application. I do not know of any more popular or more profitable undertaking that the government could engage in, than the erection of public buildings of that kind all over the country. I hope, however, that the minister will not confine his attention to the old antiquated town of Arichat. If it be true that it was in existence long before the white man settled in Midland, it must be an unprogressive and decayed old town, if it has not a population of more than 600 now. I trust it is not a sample of the whole county of Richmond, because if the county be as unprogressive as the town, there is no doubt that the government thought it necessary to do something to keep the place alive by constructing this building. But what I do say is that it is monstrous to spend $2,000 for fittings in a post office to supply 600 people. There are hundreds of towns in the province of Ontario more populous than Arichat which have very inconvenient buildings for post offices. In the morning and evening when the mails arrive in these towns, the congestion is so great that it is almost impossible for a person to get his letters, and yet no public building is erected in these Ontario towns, while an old antiquated place like Arichat, which seems to be dying of decay, and where there is not enough people to make a crowd when the mails arrive, gets a post office building which costs over $8,000. I favour the policy of erecting public buildings in progressive towns and I hope the minister will carry out that policy, but as I have said, it is monstrous to spend $8,000 for a post office building in a town of a population of 600. I believe the Minister of Public Works himself commended some years ago the very policy that I am advocating now. I know the member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) did, but he is not here to-night.

Mr. FRASER. Oh, yes I am.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am very glad he is here, because I see that we will be called upon in a few minutes to vote for a public building in Guysborough, and the hon. gentleman is manly enough to be here to defend what may possibly be a job something like that which is to be perpetrated in Arichat. I think, Mr. Chairman (Mr. Holmes) that you yourself advocated the very policy that I am advocating now, but some mistake was made in the carrying out of that policy in Clinton. It was all right to erect a post office in Clinton which would cost $6,000 as was first proposed, but if my memory serves me right they spent somewhere about $15,000 on that post office in the end. I will not undertake to say whether it was the member (Mr. Holmes) or the minister that was at fault, but anyway they spoiled the whole plan and instead of spending $6,000 as might have been spent in the public interest, they worked out the policy so that they spent $15,000, which was to that extent, an absolute waste of public money. I hope the minister will take warning from what has been said, and that he will cut off something of the fittings——

Mr. CAMPBELL. And spoil the job.

Mr. HENDERSON. The member for West York (Mr. Campbell) has spoiled many things. He is trying to spoil the market gardeners at Toronto. He would not vote to help them in anyway, but he is perfectly willing to endorse an expenditure of $8,000 for a post office in a little town of 600 population away down in Nova Scotia. What strange things the member for West York (Mr. Campbell) will do at times. I trust that the Minister of Public Works will erect public buildings at a moderate cost in many thriving towns in the Dominion, but I do hope that he will not spend such large sums of money as this vote indicates in carrying out that policy.

Mr. MATHESON. I was very much pleased with the speech of the hon. member (Mr. Henderson).

Mr. HENDERSON. Hear, hear.

Mr. MATHESON. The Conservative government promised a post office in Arichat and they did not build it, and they ran the Conservative majority down to only twenty-one, that was against me, and I presume that their speeches to-night will kill that twenty-one as dead as Julius Cæsar.

Mr. BENNETT. Are they all for sale there ?

Mr. MATHESON. If they were all for sale you would have more of them than you have. The Conservative government bought the property and they promised a post office, but they never fulfilled their promise, and they would leave the post mistress to stand on the ice all winter.

Mr. WADE. Who promised the post office ?

Mr. MATHESON. The Conservative party bought an old hardware shop for a site in 1882.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh !

Mr. CAMPBELL. I am rather surprised to hear the hon. members for East Simcoe and Halton, who have been so many years voting estimates, such as $15,000 for the Marysville post office, objecting to this item. At Marysville they built a post office which cost some $15,000 and where the revenue is only $350 a year.

Mr. BENNETT. What is the population of Marysville ?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Four or five hundred.

Mr. BENNETT. It is 1,400.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The late government spent $15,000 on the post office there, and there were many other instances of a similar nature in the days gone by which never drew a word of protest from these hon. gentlemen, but now because there is an item for a post office in the town of Arichat, which is the centre for that whole county, they are very indignant.

Mr. BENNETT. On referring to the census returns for York, it will be seen that the hon. gentleman is about as near to the facts as he usually is. He makes the statement that in Marysville the population is 500, where the population is 1,400.

Mr. CAMPBELL. When the post office was built some ten years ago, the population was only 500.

Mr. THOMSON (Grey). I do not think there is a public building in the county of Grey built by the government. Let me give a list of the towns and their population in this county. Meaford with a population of 1,960, has no public building. Shelburne, with a population of 1,188, has no public building. Thornbury, with a population of 900, has no public building. Owen Sound, with a population of 9,000, has no public building. Hanover, with a population of 1,300, has no public building. Durham, with a population of 1,392, has no public building.

Mr. WADE. Which of those are county towns ?

Mr. THOMSON (Grey). Owen Sound is the county town of Grey. Markdale with a population of 892, has no public building. Yet we find here in a small place of 590 population, the government has spent $8,500. There must be something radically wrong, when such an insignificant place is to have so expensive a building and when all these much larger places I have mentioned have not received such consideration. If the government are prepared to adopt the principle that each place like Arichat should have a public building, we are satisfied, but I am not prepared to vote such heavy expenditures in places like this when towns five or six times as large are not to have any public buildings. The government has oceans of money to spend on these little insignificant places but nothing in the larger centres.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cape Breton). It has been represented that Arichat is a very small insignificant place and further that when this vote was originally proposed, the amount then estimated was but $4,000. If hon. gentlemen will take the trouble to look back, they will find that when this vote was originally proposed the estimate was very much in excess of $4,000. I have a distinct recollection of that vote when first submitted. Arichat is not so broken down a place as the hon. member for Halton would have us believe. Look at the money transactions. You will find that $45,819.10 were sent from that post office in money orders alone during the past year. That is a respectable volume of business. I think the government is perfectly justified in making ample provision for the conduct of business of that kind.

Mr. MATHESON. Then there is the customs house besides.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cape Breton). I am simply speaking of the business done in the post office, and if hon. gentlemen will study the returns they will find that Arichat is after all not so insignificant. If the hon. member for Halton would turn to the great province of Ontario, he will find very few towns that do more business in money orders Will he find half a dozen or a dozen ?

Mr. BENNETT. Hundreds.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cape Breton). I stand quite willing to be corrected.

Mr. THOMSON (Grey). That money order business may be accounted for by this circumstance. You probably have not got a bank there ?

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cape Breton). Yes, there is a bank there, the Union Bank of Halifax, one of the best institutions in the country.

Mr. HENDERSON. I desire to say in reply to the hon. member for Cape Breton that the statements I made with reference to Arichat, which he thinks not quite fair, were based on the remarks made by himself. He told us the age of this building, how long the town had existed, and I concluded that it must be a very unprogressive place or it would have to-day a population of more than 600.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cape Breton). But I took good care to state that the Conservative party had neglected it.

Mr. HENDERSON. The hon. gentleman said the late government made a promise, which shows that they were not neglecting it. It would appear, however, from what the hon. gentleman said, that after sending an engineer down there to investigate, the late government considered the place was not of such importance as demanded the expenditure required by the erection of a post office.

Mr. MATHESON. Are you quoting facts or drawing from your imagination ?

Mr. HENDERSON. I think the hon. gentleman has been drawing very largely on his imagination. What I said was a fair deduction from the remarks of the hon. gentleman from Richmond, and I do not think I should be held responsible, if there is anything wrong in what I did say. Two or three nights ago I had occasion to bring up a matter very much similar, where a promise had been made of a public work in my own county at the time of an election. That same thing seems to have been done in Nova Scotia. I asked the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries to implement that promise. I do not care whether it was made properly or improperly, once a promise of that kind is made to the electors, the government should keep faith with them. I have not objected to the erection of a post office in Arichat. I approve of the policy of erecting post offices in small towns, but not in towns where there are only 500 or 600 people. Where there are 1,000 or 2,000, I believe in the policy of erecting public buildings, because the interest on the cost would simply take the place of the rental. The policy is good, but it is worked out badly in the case of Arichat. The government might have a very suitable post office, which would meet all requirements, for $2,000 or $3,000 less money.

Mr. THOMSON (Grey). The more you look into this matter the more serious it appears. The total revenue from this post office at Arichat is $772, and the salaries and commissions amount to $533, giving a net revenue of $232. If you compute $8,000 at 4 per cent, you get $320, which you are going to pay a year on a post office which only nets you a revenue of $230. The postal revenue at Owen Sound is $14,400, and the total expenses are $4,500, leaving a net revenue of $10,000, and yet Owen Sound has no public building. In Meaford the postal revenue is $3,199, and the expenditure $1,255; leaving a net revenue of $2,000. I merely mention these facts to show that we are putting up a building in this particular place where, judging by its postal revenue and business, there is none required and no demand for it except for political purposes.

Mr. WADE. It has been alleged by hon. gentlemen opposite that a good deal more money is spent on these buildings in Nova Scotia than in Ontario. I give that statement a most emphatic denial. It has been the policy of governments in the past to put up these public buildings in county towns.

Mr. THOMSON (Grey). Is Arichat a county town ?

Mr. WADE. Yes, it is the county town. The building is completed, and will accommodate the post office savings bank, the post office, the collector of customs, bonded warehouse, tide-waiters, &c. It costs a good deal to complete a building of decent proportions for these services. I would like hon. gentlemen opposite to understand that there are as many towns in proportion throughout Nova Scotia which have not post office accommodation as there are in the province of Ontario. For instance, there is the town of Arichat West, and, in my own county, the town of Bridgetown——

Mr. THOMSON (Grey). Is it a county town ?

Mr. WADE. Arichat is the county town. There are only two towns in Nova Scotia, so far as I know, that are not county towns that have buildings, and in those cases the buildings were put up by the late government. In the town of Annapolis, which had a population of little over 900, the late government put up a large and expensive building, but they did not build one in Bridgetown, which, I think, was quite as large or larger. The reason assigned at the time was that Annapolis was the shire town and so entitled to the building. The town of Lunenburg, with a population of about 2,000, has a building erected which cost $45,000, but the neighbouring town of Bridgewater, with a population of over 1,800 has no post office building even to the present time. The policy was adopted by the late government of building post offices in the shire towns first, the other towns being supposed to come in for consideration afterwards. It does seem to me that if the late government purchased the site for this building and promised the people that the building would be constructed, hon. gentlemen opposite who say that the government should carry out its promises can hardly complain because the building is completed, particularly as the building is for the shire town of this county of Richmond.

Mr. MATHESON. I think it unfair that this should be spoken of as a post office simply, when it is intended for a bonded warehouse, custom house, post office, savings bank, and telephone and telegraph office. Allow for the rent of these different government offices and also for the rent that will be received from the telegraph and telephone companies, and I think it will be found that this building is a paying investment. This was started by the party of hon. gentlemen opposite who are now talking against it. But we were told all along: What is the use of expecting a building if you do not send a supporter of the government—that is of the late government. We sent a supporter, but we did not get the building. An hon. gentleman tells us that they sent an engineer to examine, and he reported that the building was not necessary. I would like to know where that report is. I asked the hon. gentleman who made the statement if he was drawing on his imagination or talking from facts. I suppose that if he were talking from facts, he would be able to produce them; and as he does not do so, I would infer that he is drawing on his imagination. He says that all the information he got about the town was from me. I am not aware that I said anything injurious to the town——

Mr. BENNETT. The hon. gentleman said the post mistress had cold feet.

Mr. MATHESON. And some hon. gentlemen opposite will have cold feet before they get into power again if they go on this way. It is not by repudiating their obligations that statesmen get along. This building is completed, and I do not think it would be businesslike now to repudiate it and refuse to pay the price. Yet, if hon. gentlemen opposite mean anything, that is what they mean. The town of Arichat was never considered a very insignificant town, though it must be confessed that part of the population left it during the eighteen sorrowful years when hon. gentlemen opposite were in power. They are now citizens of the United States, where they are well appreciated. But some of them are coming back now, and, with improvements such as this building in the town, we hope to draw more of them.

Guysborough public building, $11,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is to complete the payments for the building, the construction of which is finished.

Mr. BENNETT. What is the total cost?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is $20,747.

Mr. BENNETT. The population of Guysborough seems to be 1,400, and the government formerly rented premises for the post office for $40 a year. If the hon. minister intends to apply this method all over the country, the results will be far from pleasing.

Mr. FRASER. Much that has been said about the county has been true of Guysborough. A building there serves in an important measure for the whole county. The population of the county is 18,000, and the county town is the centre where the court sits, the place of the savings bank, custom house, and so on. This is the beautiful building, and the postmaster appointed by the late government lives in the building, so that there will be no cost for caretaking. There is a railway now being built of about 200 miles.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Carried.

Mr. BLAIN. When was the first vote taken for this building, and when was the contract let and what was the price?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The first vote taken was in 1901-2 and the total contract was $20,747.

Mr. THOMSON (Grey). I am surprised to hear the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) trying to offer a defence for an expenditure of this kind. Though I have only for a short time had the honour of a seat in this House, I have read the speeches of the hon. member with great pleasure, and always regarded him as an outspoken enemy of expenditures of this kind. I find that, accor ing to the public accounts, the total revenue of the post office in this town for last year was $996, while the expenditure for salaries and commissions was $725. That is, the salaries and commissions amounted to very nearly as much as was received altogether. Yet this government is expending $20,000 for a post office building. And the hon. member for Guysborough defends it. And were it an expenditure in another constituency, it would not look so badly, but to defend such an expenditure for his own constituency it looks all the worse.

Mr. FRASER. I never spoke against public buildings——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. FRASER. Never, I always thought it was a good idea. Now I know that it is a good thing to have a building in each of the shire towns of Nova Scotia. It may not pay immediately, but eventually it will pay. This is a fine stone and brick building, standing on a very fine lot overlooking the harbour and so close that the ships can come right up to where the building is. I do not defend this because it is in my own county, for I never spoke against expenditures of this kind. I do object to buildings of this kind that were intended to bribe constituencies. Think of Lunenburg getting a building at a cost of $45,000. I did not say a word against it, for I thought that good judgment prevailed in that case. And I know that good judgment prevails here.

Mr. THOMSON (Grey). The hon. member says this is a county town. Is he prepared to use his influence to get a building put up in Owen Sound, which is a county town, with a population of 9,000 and a postal revenue of $15,000 ? Will the hon. gentleman raise his voice in favour of justice being done to Owen Sound ?

Mr. FRASER. Decidedly, I will not object—badly as Owen Sound is represented.

Middleton armoury (revote of $2,900 lapsed), $8,400.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is required to complete the construction of the armoury at Middleton.

Mr. BENNETT. In what county is Middleton ? What is the population of the town and what the population of the county ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is in the county of Annapolis, and the population is 900.

Mr. BARKER. What is the total cost of that building to be ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Eight thousand five hundred.

Marysville, public building, $2,700.

Mr. BARKER. This, I think, is the place that the hon. member for York, N.B. (Mr. Gibson) spoke of. I understood him to say that the money had been expended some years ago to put up a building here, but I see now there is a vote asked for a site for a building.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There was a revote taken several years ago, but it was not expended. The building is now completed, at a total cost of $13,233.

Mr. BARKER. How long has this been under construction ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Since 1902.

Mr. BARKER. I understood the hon. gentleman from York to say that some $15,000 had been expended by the late government. It is evident that he could not have known what he was talking about.

Montmagny public buildings—Governor General's warrant, $2,800.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. During the heavy storm at that place this building caved in and it was necessary to make repairs at once. My opinion is that it will be necessary to revote this and put up a new building. I am having it now investigated and reported upon.

Mr. HENDERSON. Was the $2,800 expended ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, it was not. I came to the conclusion when this accident happened and the roof fell in, and after having an investigation made by an architect, that it was not desirable to use the Governor General's warrant. We had some temporary repairs made, and we will have to take a vote to pay the Governor General's warrant.

Mr. BENNETT. Was this building erected by the department, or was it purchased ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I think it was purchased and largely improved by the department. I will have a full report made of it by the engineer.

Deseronto, public building, $4,500.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is a very expensive building. The total cost is $40,555.50. This sum will complete that building.

Toronto post office—building for branch office in west end of city (station C), $10,500.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This completes the work. It was let by contract.

Mr. BARKER. I would ask the minister to allow that to stand, if he has no objection. My hon. friend from West Toronto (Mr. Clarke), I think, wants to make some inquiries.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have no objection whatever.

Item allowed to stand.

Kingston Royal Military College—revote of $2,000 lapsed, $32,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is to make provision for completion, during the fiscal year, of the gymnasium and residence. The amount of the contract was $35,956.

Mr. BARKER. Will that complete everything ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. All the work under contract. I think there has been an application for some fittings, they will come down in the estimates for 1903-4.

Ottawa—for the completion of the bacteriological laboratory for the cattle quarantine branch of the Department of Agriculture, $6,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That is the balance of the contract to complete the work.

Toronto, assistant receiver general's office, additional vault accommodation—Governor General's warrant, $1,500.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Representations were made by the Finance Department that the funds were in danger from the bad state of the building, and the need of repairs was so urgent that a Governor General's warrant was asked for. This is to make that good.

Ottawa, public buildings—electric lighting—for purchase of transformers installed in buildings on Parliament Hill and the Langevin block, inclusive of wiring in ducts, &c., $11,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. These transformers were supplied by the Ottawa Electric Company, at the time the electric light was put in.

Mr. HENDERSON. We have several times been left in total darkness by the failure of the electric light. I must ask the minister what steps can be taken to prevent it in the future. Last night when we were here about 10 o'clock, the lights again went out. Has any investigation been made to determine the cause of the trouble last night, or on previous occasions? There must be something defective. Whether the contract has not been properly carried out or whether there is something that cannot be overcome, I do not know, but I have no doubt the minister will give it his attention, so that we may not again be left in the uncomfortable position in which we have found ourselves on several occasions.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is certainly very annoying to have the lights go out. An investigation has been made by the officials of the department, and we have ascertained that the difficulty has not arisen from any defect in this building, but the trouble has been at the power house of the electric company. I was informed myself by one of the officials of the company that it was owing to a defect in one of their switchboards, which has been remedied, and we may not fear any recurrence of the trouble in future. One thing we might adopt to prevent a recurrence of that trouble, would be to have a storage battery, but that would be very expensive. The chief architect has informed me that it might cost about $70,000 to instal a storage battery, and as the company claim that they have discovered the cause of the accidents that have been happening during the present session, and that when a new switchboard has been put in the interruption to the service is not likely to happen again, I think we might give it another trial before undertaking such a large expenditure.

Mr. HENDERSON. Has the hon. minister ever taken into consideration the question as to whether it would be more economical for the government to manufacture its own electricity instead of paying a company for supplying the current. To my mind, if the municipalities throughout the country find it profitable to put in electric plants to light up the towns and villages, we, with such a large extent of buildings here requiring so many lights, might well operate along the same lines. I have no doubt the hon. minister or some of his predecessors have had that under consideration. I dare say his officers can give us some information as to which would be likely to be the cheaper.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have thought about the matter but I have not had the investigation made that I intend to have made. Of course we have no water-power and a comparison would have to be made as to the cost of instituting a steam plant and as to whether a saving could be effected under those circumstances. It is a matter that will receive attention during the coming season. I think the cost will be rather high? I will ask the chief architect and the officials of the department to look into the matter and see if any saving can be effected.

Mr. BIRKETT. I think the difficulty last night was caused by the severe storm passing over the city.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, and I am informed by one of the officials of the company that it was on account of the switchboard being out of order.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am surprised to hear the hon. Minister of Public Works say that the government could not make a comparison because they have no water-power. Do I understand that all of the water-power has passed out of the hands of the government? Surely such a magnificent property as the water-power has not been all disposed of by the government or passed beyond their control entirely? If it is so I very much regret it because it is something that no doubt parliament could have utilized to very great advantage. Perhaps the hon. minister made a slip when he made that statement. I would be very glad to know whether that is really the case.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am afraid it is too true that these water-powers were not thought to be of so much value and that they passed out of the hands of the crown many years ago. However, the matter will receive consideration. I do not suppose they thought of lighting this building with electricity when it was first built?

Ottawa post office and customs house—fitting up examining warehouse and putting in electric elevator; also alterations and improvements in post office, $6,500.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is to complete the payment on the contracts for improvements made to the Ottawa post office.

Mr. BIRKETT. Certainly they were not made before they were required.

Manitoba—Winnipeg immigration buildings—isolation hospital (revote of lapsed amount), $6,200.

Mr. HENDERSON. Has the hon. minister ever taken into consideration the terrible risk that people are put to who may be housed in the immigration building near the Canadian Pacific Railway station at Winnipeg? On viewing it last autumn it struck me that on almost any occasion a fire might take place amongst the old wooden structures there, and so in a particular structure of this kind with the means of getting in and out some terrible calamity might occur at any time. I hope before too much money is spent in repairing a building of this kind the government will take into consideration the propriety of having one erected on some other site where there will be less danger from fire.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Representations were made to the department and are now under consideration. I think the urgency of providing a better service there would perhaps require a new building altogether. It will be necessary, I think, in the interests of the public that we should have a new building. It may be possible before the supplementary estimates come down that we will have plans to submit to the House showing what is proposed to be done.

Ottawa public buildings—gas and electric light, $2,500.

Mr. BLAIN. Where is the gas.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Right here.

An hon. MEMBER. It's all outside of the chamber.

Mr. BLAIN. I am not joking. Why is not the gas turned on to the building so that we may have it when the electric lights go out.

Mr. GALLIHER. All you have to do is to light a match.

Some resolutions reported.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. BARKER. In the absence of the leader of the opposition, might I ask what business will be taken up to-morrow.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Minor Bills and Supply for Public Works Department.

Mr. HENDERSON. Will the Seed Inspection Bill come up.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I think that stands.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12.10 a.m., Friday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, July 3, 1903.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

ADULTERATION OF BUTTER.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 207) to prohibit the importation, manufacture or sale of adulterated, process or renovated butter, oleomargarine, butterine or other substitutes for butter; and to prevent the improper marking of butter,—The Minister of Agriculture.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Hon. Sydney Fisher). I beg leave to move that section 4 be struck out and the following substituted :

No person shall import into Canada, offer, sell or have in his possession for sale any butter containing over 16 per cent of water.

My object is to give this clause the same form as the succeeding one.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What was the form in which it passed the committee before ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. This does not change the meaning of the clause, but only the form.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The percentage is the same as in the English Act ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Exactly.

Mr. McCREARY. When the Bill was up before the House the other day, I had not the information before me to enable me to speak intelligently on the subject. During the past few days, however, I received from Winnipeg protests against the measure from the firm of Messrs. Reid, Rice & Company, produce packers and exporters of butter. In the older provinces there are creameries at convenient points, but in Manitoba and the Territories we have but few creameries. The farms are larger, generally half a section, thus requiring half a mile distance to cross which makes it difficult to use the creameries. It is true that in the Territories, along the Calgary and Edmonton line and the Manitoba and North-western, the government had come to to the rescue of the farmers and established creameries, but in Manitoba there are but few creameries. In that province we have at present a very large number of Galicians, Mennonites, and other foreigners, as well as natives of the country, who live largely on the products of the ten or fifteen cows which each one possesses, and who besides are able to make a certain quantity of butter for sale. This butter is not up to the standard required for export or the standard in the creamery. I can well recollect a few years ago a certain dealer in butter from Scotland, who went among the Mennonites to see the butter they made. He had photographed in Winnipeg an invoice of some of this butter, which he had bought at the rate of three cents a pound. This quality of butter, although made from pure milk, is not worth more than seven to ten cents a pound, and it is sold to the dealers at that rate. This firm established itself in Winnipeg for the purpose of buying this butter. The butter is not adulterated in any way, but it is as pure as any butter in the market. Going through a certain process of boiling, purifying and cooling, the butter is so improved that they are able to sell it at fifteen or sixteen cents per pound. They tell me that this butter is so improved that it will keep as long, or longer, than the butter made in the creamery. They sell it in large quantities to railway camps and other large consumers. And, owing to this process, the manufacturers are able to pay the farmers a much higher price for this class of butter than could otherwise be paid. I think that all desirable purposes would be attained if this Bill were restricted to cover only the butter for export, while butter sold for home consumption should be allowed to go through the process I have spoken of and be sold without restriction. I do not know whether the minister has had under consideration this phase of the Bill, but I can tell him it will seriously affect the county I live in, as well as the county represented by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. LaRivière), especially the Mennonites there, who manufacture large quantities of butter. It is true they do not know how to manufacture it well, but they are trying to learn as quickly as they can. But if this Bill passes they will be at the mercy of store keepers and others, and will be compelled to sell their butter at three, four or five cents a pound, as they did some years ago. I would bring this to the attention of the hon. minister, and would ask hon. members here, who are conversant with the subject, to give their ideas upon the points involved.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have gone into this matter, as the hon. gentleman (Mr. McCreary) suggests, very thoroughly. I have stated already in the House very plainly the necessity for the provisions of the Bills which strike at the manufacture in Canada of process butter. I do not think that the House has cavilled, much, if at all, at the stand I have taken on this subject. The hon. gentleman speaks of one particular firm in Manitoba that manufactures this process butter. I knew of that firm before I undertook to frame this Bill, and it was partly in consequence of representations which came from the creamery men in the province of Manitoba——

Mr. McCREARY. They are jealous, of course.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. They are jealous of the reputation of their own butter.

Mr. McCREARY. That is doubtful.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE —that I was led to go into the matter more carefully in regard to the province of Manitoba. The description which the hon. gentleman has given of this manufacture, I think, clearly illustrates the danger involved in this process to our general dairying trade. My hon. friend (Mr. McCreary) suggests that these provisions should only apply to the export trade. I do not think that is possible, for we can never tell where butter which is once allowed to be made and put upon the market will end. Butter may be made intended for the retail trade at home, but if the retail market happened to be a little quiet, the butter will immediately be sent forward for export. My hon. friend says that this process serves the purpose of helping the farmer. The dairy interest in this country is the one in which the farmers are more interested than in any other; and the great export trade in dairying products in this country is the foundation of the prosperity of our dairy market. If we had not that splendid export trade, all our butter in this country would have to be sold at the low prices which my hon. friend mentioned, for, without the export trade, our production would flood the home market to such an extent that we could not possibly sell our butter at prices profitable to the maker. It is true, perhaps, that some few people in the country are making such a poor grade of butter that they cannot sell it at any price at all, but, by this process they would be able to foist upon the market at home an article which was not good to begin with and which, by the process under description may have been made to appear better, but is not made better permanently or really.

Mr. McCREARY. Does the hon. minister mean to say that you cannot improve butter or pork or any of these lines of goods—even milk—by process of boiling and purifying?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I mean to say that the manufacture of this process butter may, for the moment, overcome certain flavours, tastes and qualities; but I say also that by the process of boiling—as the hon. gentleman described it, melting is really the term—the quality of the butter is destroyed, and though it is afterwards chilled and put upon the market, there is only one way by which it can be done properly or successfully. That way is to incorporate in the butter a certain quantity of milk in which it is washed. That milk immediately deteriorates, and the butter will not keep and cannot be put upon the market with a good reputation. The statement that this butter can be kept ad infinitum is not correct. In some instances, it may have been frozen and kept in that condition, for a time. I believe it has been. But the statements that it is kept for a length of time can only be based upon the keeping of the butter by freezing, which is impracticable for the ordinary trade of the country. As a matter of fact, the experience of the United States has shown that butter cannot be kept under ordinary circumstances and retain its flavour and condition. At the same time, it may be sold by the manufacturer so as to get it on the market, and be made, for the time being, to appear to be a reasonably good article of food.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I do not wish to interrupt the hon. minister, but I would like to ask him what he means by the word 'manufacturer'—would that include the farmer who makes the butter ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, it is provided in the Bill that the word 'manufacturer' applies to any body making butter.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman's amendment reads 'manufacturer or exporter' and I thought perhaps it would not apply to the farmer who made the butter.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It would. The clause under discussion at the moment, which deals with the sixteen per cent of water, would apply to any body in the country. I think I explained that pretty thoroughly when the Bill was under discussion before.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I was not present.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. As to this matter of process butter, and dealing with what my hon. friend from Selkirk (Mr. McCreary) has said, I cannot help reiterating most emphatically—and I take the full responsibility of doing so here as Minister of Agriculture, and as having studied this question from its very base up—that it is absolutely necessary in the interest of the dairy trade in Canada that we should to-day put a stop to the manufacture of process butter in this country. My hon. friend speaks of this firm in Winnipeg. They have written to me, and in their letter to me they stated that the present laws of the United States were pernicious, and that those laws dealt with people who were engaged in the manufacture of this article in a way unjust and unfair. I want my hon. friend to understand that in the United States these laws were passed by congress a year or a year and a half ago, because they found that the manufacture of process butter in the United States was bringing the butter trade in their country into an intolerable impasse. And they went only so far as to restrict and license it, because the manufacture has reached such a point of vested rights that they were not able to do what we are proposing to do to-day, and what they would have been glad to do could they have done it. And it is because these restrictive laws have been passed in the United States that these people interested in the manufacture of process butter are trying to establish their trade in Canada, a trade which has hurt the dairy trade of the United States and that would have the same results here. I take the full responsibility of saying this, and I throw upon any person who trys to prevent the prohibition of process butter in Canada the responsibility of a disastrous injury to our butter trade.

Mr. HENDERSON. I fear that the hon. Minister of Agriculture is going altogether too far in the amendment which he has just proposed. It seems to me that we are over careful in the restrictions that we are placing upon ordinary trade. I am not making any reference to process butter, something which I know very little about, and consequently will not speak of. But I think it a very dangerous thing to place a penalty upon a man who chances to buy butter, and with the making of which he had nothing to do, simply because it has in it a certain proportion of water. The hon. minister tells us that ordinary butter contains about 13 per cent of water. Now there is very little difference between 13 per cent and 16 per cent, so little that a merchant dealing in butter might easily have in his possession at any time butter that actually contains 16 per cent. I think that these restrictions thrown around the butter trade are quite uncalled for, and they are dangerous, for they are liable to get a man into trouble at almost any time quite unwittingly. More latitude should be given. In fact, I believe the people have been getting along very well by making their own rules and regulations in regard to dairy butter, and I fear the minister is not going to benefit the ordinary people of the country by such restrictions as he proposes.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The amendment I now propose does not in any way extend the provisions of this Bill as they were passed after discussion by this committee. This proposed change is simply a change in form ; it does not add to the restriction agreed to by this committee a little while ago.

Mr. McCREARY. I would ask the minister if, after having brought this Bill to this stage, he would not consider the matter of letting it rest until next year. I know there are many farmers in the west who have come in without means and who have accumulated three of four cows, and if this Bill is passed, it will deprive them of the means of making a living. Let the Bill stand over so as to give them a warning, that they may take steps to establish creameries. I know plenty of families who have come in there and who get their entire living, with what they make on the railways, out of three or four cows, because they do not patronize the creameries. I do not think it will endanger the country in any way to delay the passing of this Bill. There are many men coming in from Austria, Iceland and from Finland who depend upon three or four cows to make a living for the first two or three years, and if these people are not allowed to sell their butter except at three cents a pound, they will simply be compelled to give up making butter to sell. I do not think it will do any harm to hold the Bill over for one year so that the government may take steps to come to their rescue and establish creameries in Manitoba under the supervision of the government, the same as they have done in the Territories.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have pointed out already my reasons for not delaying the Bill. If we delay the Bill, vested interests will spring up in the country which will make it more difficult to pass such a law as this. My hon. friend speaks about the poor settlers in Manitoba. Though there may be a few who do not make butter good enough to sell for more than three or four cents a pound, I know that there are in Manitoba a number of successful creameries, as well as in the other provinces, where the people make a quality of butter which is much better than that my hon. friend describes. If these people are making butter which is only worth three or four cents in the market, they will not get more than three or four cents from the manufacturers mentioned. These will get the butter for the least possible price and the profits will go to the firm in Winnipeg who are making this process butter, and not the farmers.

Mr. HENDERSON. I understand the minister is not making any material alteration in the provisions of section 4 by his amendment, he is merely changing the wording. But I understood him to say that it is possible to make butter with over 16 per cent water in it. Now supposing a farmer's wife should bring a roll of butter into a country store which contained 16 per cent of water or over, how is the purchaser to know that it does contain that quantity of water? It is impossible for him to know, yet the moment he purchases that butter he is liable to a heavy penalty. To my mind the effect of this legislation will be that people dealing in this article will simply have to tell the farmers that they must pay them one or two cents a pound less in order to protect themselves. I believe this legislation is altogether against the interests of the farmers of the country.

Mr. BROCK. It would be a disaster if a great national industry of this country was to be made subservient to a few people who are producing an article of butter not fit to eat, and certainly not fit to be exported. The people in England are turning towards this country at the present time for their food supply, and it is for our food supply we are endeavouring to get a reputation in England. I think the objection of the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) will be done away with very shortly, because there are no people who so quickly get down to making a good article of butter as our Canadian farmers. I am not at all afraid that there will be much injury done to the butter trade by passing the Bill now before us. I would not delay it for a year, because it is highly important at the present time that everything that can be done to give this country a good standing in the markets of England and of Europe should be done at once.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. When the Bill was passing through committee at a previous stage there was a discussion on clause 10 which describes the penalty, and my attention was drawn to the fact that the penalties ranging from $400 down to $10 were not sufficiently restricted. There are two classes of offences under this Act, one being the manufacture of these forbidden articles, and then there are several other clauses defining smaller offences. I wish to divide the penalties into two classes; therefore, instead of clause 10, I wish to substitute the following:

Every person who, by himself or through the agency of another person, violates any of the provisions of this Act, shall, for each offence, upon summary conviction, be liable to a fine not exceeding $50 and not less than $10 for such offence in violation of any of the provisions of sections 4, 8 and 9 of this Act; and not exceeding $400 and not less than $200 if such offence be a violation of any of the provisions of sections 5, 6 or 7 of this Act, together with the costs of prosecution, and in default of payment of such fine and costs, shall be liable to imprisonment, with or without hard labour, for a term not exceeding three months unless such fine and the costs of enforcing it are sooner paid.

Amendment agreed to.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There was a little discussion the other day upon the question of local trade where small packages of butter are marked 'creamery.' I did not consider that this amounted to a great deal, and I was very anxious that the general provisions of the Act should apply specially to the export trade. Since then, various representations have reached me showing that there is in Ontario especially, a considerable trade in rolls and prints and small packages which are marked for local trade 'creamery.' Now, these are packages which cannot be used for export, therefore putting the word 'creamery' on them does not injure in any way our export trade. As my object in providing that the word 'creamery' should not be put upon packages of butter, was for the purpose of protecting our export trade, I propose to add as section 16 of the Act the following:

Nothing contained in sections eight and nine of this Act shall apply to butter in rolls, prints or packages of less than twenty-five pounds in weight, not intended for export.

I think that will permit this local trade, which I have described a few minutes ago, still to employ the word 'creamery,' without injuring our export trade.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. What about the butter put up in tins?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The words used are 'rolls, prints or packages of less than 25 pounds in weight.' Packages for export never include less than 25 pounds. I have made inquiries of my officers, and they tell me that they have not seen for years a package of less than 25 pounds sent for export. The ordinary packages are 56 pounds, and in some cases half that amount.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. But butter is frequently put up in tins of from two to five pounds each.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That would not come under this clause, these packages would come under the ordinary provisions of the Act.

Mr. BRODER. That would not hinder a man shipping in boxes a large number of these pound packages of butter.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, but he could not put the word 'creamery' on them.

Mr. BLAIN. In the county which I represent we have a number of farmers who supply Toronto restaurants with butter. They send it into the city in packages containing fifty pounds and some as much as seventy-five pounds, sending it by express instead of driving it in by wagon. That section would prohibit them from stamping their butter as creamery butter for the reason that they send it by express from their station to Toronto in boxes containing more than twenty-five pounds. May I ask the hon. minister if the section would apply to butter sold in this way ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Not if it were in rolls, or prints, or blocks. If each package was done up in paper marked 'creamery' then it would come in under this proviso and it would not be subject to the penalty for putting 'creamery' upon it, although they might send it in boxes full of these prints.

Mr. BLAIN. If they put fifty one pound packages in a box and send it by express to Toronto they would not come under the penalty of this Bill ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

POST OFFICE ACT AMENDMENT.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 208) to amend the Post Office Act.—The Postmaster General.

On section 6,

So much of schedule B to the Civil Service Act as relates to clerks in city post offices, as amended by section 15 of chapter 28 of the statutes of 1902 is repealed, and the following is substituted therefor :—

Clerks in City Post Offices, Inspectors' Offices, and Superintendents of Railway Mail Service Offices.

4th Class, on appointment, $400 ; by annual increases of $50 up to $700. Any stamper and sorter may be promoted to the 4th class, and on such promotion his initial salary as such 4th class clerk shall be not less than his salary as such stamper and sorter at the time of such promotion.

Junior 3rd Class, on appointment, $700 ; by annual increases of $50 up to $800.

Senior 3rd Class, on appointment, $800 ; by annual increases of $50 up to $900.

Junior 2nd Class, on appointment, $900 ; by annual increases of $50 up to $1,000.

Senior 2nd Class, on appointment, $1,000 ; by annual increases of $50 up to $1,200.

1st Class, specific duties with fixed salaries in each case to be determined by the Postmaster General ; no salary to be less than $1,200, or more than $1,500.

2. Any clerk in any of the said offices who, at the passing of this Act is in the third class, shall be deemed to be a junior third-class clerk, his salary until otherwise ordered continuing to be the amount which he is then enjoying, subject to annual increases not exceeding fifty dollars until it reaches eight hundred dollars a year.

3. Any clerk in the second-class at the time of the passing of this Act shall be deemed to be a senior second-class clerk, except that if his salary be less than one thousand dollars, it shall, until otherwise ordered, continue to be the amount which he is then enjoying, subject to annual increases, not exceeding fifty dollars each, until it reaches twelve hundred dollars a year.

4. Notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act any clerk shall be eligible for promotion to any higher class in the outside branch of the Post Office Department without being required to pass any examination except such as may be prescribed under regulations to be passed by the Postmaster General and having reference to the duties to be performed by such clerk.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Would the hon. Postmaster General (Hon. Sir William Mulock) explain how this affects the present law ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Sir William Mulock). Under the present law there are four classes. Hon. gentlemen will perhaps remember that last year we created a fourth class with salaries ranging from $400 to $600. That left a class from $600 to $800 and another class from $800 to $1,200. To-day, instead of having the fourth class with a maximum of $600 we propose to make the maximum $700 so that the salaries will run from $400 to $700. Then, we come to the third class. The third class is divided into two grades, the junior third class from $700 to $800 and a senior third class from $800 to $900. Instead of stopping at $800 as the maximum, it will now be possible by getting into the senior division of the third class to get a maximum of $900. Then, instead of as at present, the first-class commencing at $800 and going up to $1,200, there are two second-class subdivisions, a junior second beginning at $900 and going up to $1,000 and a senior second beginning at $1,000 and going up to $1,200.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. In the second-class they can go up to $1,200, can they not ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. In the third class they go from $700 to $900, in the second class from $900 to $1,200, and in the first class from $1,200 to $1,500. I leave the first class the same as before—from $1,200 to $1,500. There are three classes prior to getting to the first class.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. You are only dividing them up without increasing the maximum ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am not increasing the maximum. You might be willing to give a man $1,000 a year whom you would not be willing to give $1,200. You might want to promote a man from $800 to $1,000 and by putting him into the third class, by gradual increases he might go up to $1,000, but you do not wish to be compelled to put him into a class in which he might reach a higher maximum than he was worth.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Have you figured up the amount by which this will increase the expenditure in your department ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It will amount to a very considerable increase, I think. I will give that in the estimates. It will be in the supplementary estimates which are already prepared to be submitted to the House in anticipation of these amendments. Speaking from memory—perhaps I am in error—I think that these various increases will involve an increase in the expenditure of from $30,000 to $40,000 a year.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. $40,000 a year ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think so, but I would not like to be held by these figures.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. If you transfer a person from the inside service to the outside service, the law provides that he will be required to pass an examination, but you abolish that under this Bill ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. At present there are promotion examinations under the Civil Service Act, but these promotion examinations have no specific reference to the duties of the office. It appears to me, when it comes to promotion, that the examination should not be on the work learned at schools but on the work learned in the department. After a young man has passed his civil service qualifying examination, and years go by, if he is deserving of promotion, I do not think it is fair to ask him to go back to the class of work involved in text books. The proper subject of examination is in reference to the duties of his office.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. You will require a grade or class examination ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The department will prescribe the examination having reference to the work on which the man is engaged. If he were a railway mail clerk we would want one kind of examination, and if a clerk in the department, a different examination.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I understand, but under this Bill you abolish the examination ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Only the promotion examination.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. You abolish any examination. Subsection 4 says :

Without being required to pass any examination except——

I see that section provides for such an examination as may be prescribed under regulations to be passed by the Postmaster General.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes, such an examination as we prescribe. The principle of these changes is the same principle as is applied in the case of railway mail clerks. Under the former law the inspectors were appointed at an initial salary which they remained at for ten years and jumped at once from that figure to another, and after remaining for a further ten years they were eligible for promotion to another salary they having served twenty years in all. I propose to apply the ordinary principle and let the salaries be increased by annual increments towards the maximum.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Would the annual increment amount at the end of ten years to more than the present system ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think not. Of course they would go step by step each year and would earn more in the ten years.

On section 8—salary of superintendent.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The maximum salary of superintendents is $1,500 and it is proposed to make it $1,800.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. How many superintendents have you ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There is one superintendent for each railway mail division ; ten altogether, I think.

On section 9—newspaper postage.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. How will this change in the newspaper postage rate affect the revenue ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The object of this clause is to reduce the postage on newspapers carried within a limited zone of 300 miles. At present the rate is half a cent a pound and we propose to reduce it to a quarter of a cent when the distance of transmission does not exceed 300 miles. The loss of revenue would probably amount to from $50,000 to $75,000 a year.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). How will you discriminate in the case of papers to be delivered in places where there is a free delivery.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Suppose a publisher in Montreal desires to send his papers to Ottawa where there is a free delivery he would pay the old rate. There is no difficulty about the arrangement. The publisher will separate them and we have officers to check them.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Will this new rate cover the cost ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The Postmaster General is a convert to this idea because I concurred in his opinion of some years ago that these newspapers should pay enough postage to recoup the country for the expense.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). It seems to me that this is discriminating against enterprising journals whose circulation reaches out beyond 300 miles. Certainly some of these papers are among the very best publications we have, and they ought to be encouraged whereas by this law they have to pay half a cent a pound, and the others only one-quarter cent a pound. Take the 'Farmers Advocate' for instance, which is an excellent journal, and which circulates from one end of the Dominion to the other, and it will be placed at a disadvantage by this postal rate. The 'Montreal Star' is a newspaper that is subscribed for over the whole Dominion and a large proportion of its list of subscribers live more than 300 miles away from the place of publication. The 'Montreal Star' would be at a like disadvantage. I cannot see the justice of this.

Mr. CARGILL. I think that this is a reform in the wrong direction. The Postmaster General is very well aware that there are valuable periodicals published in Canada which find their circulation at a greater distance than 300 miles from the office of issue. My hon. friend (Mr. Smith) has referred to the 'Farmers' Advocate.' That journal is circulated throughout the length and breadth of this country among the agricultural community and it is a very valuable paper. The postage should be reduced on it rather than increased. I have a letter here which was sent me in the interests of the 'Farmers' Advocate', and I am sure that when the Postmaster General, as he usually does, gives consideration to this matter in the interests of the farmers, he will come to the conclusion that the proposal in this Bill is a mistake. There are other valuable publications in Canada which the farmers get a great deal of information from, and as we all know their circulation is mostly at a greater distance that 300 miles from the office of publication.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I hardly see how this can be regarded as an increase, and my hon. friend can hardly understand the proposed amendment. It is purely a reduction. If the press of Canada prefer the law to remain as it is, I would be more pleased than they. At present newspapers pay a rate of half a cent a pound, and I am reducing that to a quarter of a cent when the distance is not too great. Newspapers cannot be treated the same as letters. They are rather commercial goods delivered to us by the hundreds of tons, and I am not aware of any business principle which would warrant your carrying a ton of merchandise 3,000 miles at the same rate as 300 miles. It is not practicable to divide the whole Dominion into zones and charge by the distance carried, as is done by railways and express companies. However, if my hon. friend and the press prefer to have the law remain as it is, I shall be more than pleased.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Some prefer it and others do not.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There are none who prefer it in their hearts. It will be some time before this Bill can become law, as it has to pass the Senate, and there will be ample opportunity for the press to object to the measure. If they prefer to pay half a cent per pound in a zone of 100 miles, there will be no objection on my part.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. This publisher prefers it.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. He really does not.

Mr. BELL. Have you calculated the loss ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. From $50,000 to $75,000 a year. This is substantially a reduction of $50,000 to $75,000 to the press.

Mr. CARGILL. I understand that it is a reduction, but at the same time it discriminates against certain publications. It discriminates against periodical or agricultural newspapers, such as the 'Farmers' Advocate.' The newspapers are issued daily and have a circulation within much less than 300 miles, but publications such as the 'Farmers' Advocate' are circulated east and west and north and south throughout the whole country, and the greatest portion of their circulation is outside the 300-mile limit. Therefore these publishers would prefer the rates left as they are. Here is what the publishers of the 'Farmers' Advocate' write :

We see that the government has brought in a Bill to amend the Post Office Act which contains a proviso reducing the rate on newspapers from one-half cent to one-quarter cent per pound for a radius of 300 miles. We desire to point out that the 300 mile radius is very unfair to many publishers including ourselves. Publications that can command an extensive circulation outside of the 300 mile zone must necessarily have merits and are of more importance to our country than those of a restricted circulation, and instead of the rate of postage being increased beyond the 300 miles, it would be more in the interest of this country to give such papers a lower rate. We would prefer to see the half-cent per pound remain as it is or even increase the rate and put every paper in the country on the same basis doing away with the present free postage for 20 mile zone. Otherwise allow all papers free postage as formerly. The proposed change will discriminate against the 'Farmers Advocate' as much, if not more than any other paper in Canada, as more than half its circulation is beyond the 300 mile limit.

Mr. BIRKETT. I would like to offer my congratulations to the hon. the Postmaster General for his efforts on behalf of the outside service. It seems to me a step in the right direction for the civil service generally to have the position of these gentlemen a little improved. If there is any class of men in the service underpaid, it certainly is the outside service, such as the letter carriers and the clerks in the city offices. At the same time I would ask the hon. gentleman to endeavour to take the whole question of salaries into consideration. Thirty years ago, when the maximum was fixed, it was a pretty fair rate, but to-day it is too small. In the city of Ottawa everything has gone up in price. Rents have increased and the prices of all commodities, so that $1,000 to-day is not as good as $600 was a few years ago. If the hon. gentleman would use his influence and continue the work begun in his own department and use his influence with members of the other departments, he would be entitled to the gratitude of the civil service. Three years ago, without any compulsion, we advanced our own indemnity. If we can do that for ourselves, we ought to be able to do as much for others and give them good value for their services.

Mr. HENDERSON. We have drifted away from the question of newspaper postage. Can the hon. minister tell us the amount of money realized on newspaper postage during the last year?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Something over $100,000, probably $125,000.

Mr. HENDERSON. It is proposed to make a change in the law, in which I agree in some respects, though perhaps not in all, because I think it involves considerable discrimination. It is proposed to reduce the postage on newspapers to a gross amount estimated at from $50,000 to $75,000 a year, so that practically all the revenue that the hon. gentleman will get from newspaper postage will be $25,000 or $30,000. It seems to me that the enormous amount of labour keeping track of this postage will eat up all the revenue, and I think the hon. gentleman would do very well to go back to the good old days when knowledge was not taxed in this way and newspapers were sent all over the country free. The hon. gentleman says he has a surplus. I do not fear that this will wipe out the surplus, but I think it is hardly worth while charging a postage on newspapers, from which we obtain but $25,000 to $30,000 a year, and which is paid by certain sections of the country. There is no doubt that some classes of newspapers will receive more favourable consideration under this change. Take the province of Quebec for instance, as a rule the newspapers of that province do not circulate outside its limits. The 300-mile limit, I take it means a distance of 600 miles from end to end. This would practically cover the whole province of Quebec. Therefore, the newspapers published in French, with rare exceptions, would pay but little postage, while the newspapers published in Montreal in English and circulating over the Dominion, such as the Montreal 'Star,' will be called upon to pay a considerable amount in postage. I simply use this to show that there is a discrimination. I do not think that the Postmaster General's object in changing the law is to give a special benefit to a particular class, but it works out in that way. And I think that rather than have it said that there is discrimination, it would be better to do away with postage on newspapers altogether.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). How much revenue would be derived from the newspapers outside the 300-mile zone?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. My recollection is that the postal revenue from newspapers is from $125,000 to $150,000. My deputy advises me, from memory, that it is a little over $100,000, but I believe my recollection is a little more accurate. When I was asked what a loss this would mean, I said it would be about half the revenue, for I presume that half of the newspapers are within the 300-mile limit. It is probable that after this Bill becomes law, if it does become law, we shall collect somewhere in the neighbourhood of $75,000 a year for postage on newspapers.

Mr. CARGILL. I do not often ask the government to take my view of a case, but I would urge upon the Postmaster General to withdraw the discrimination he proposes upon one class of newspapers. I am in favour of a reduction in postage, but I cannot understand why this discrimination takes place. I know that the Postmaster General represents an agricultural constituency and is interested in a farming community.

Why he should put an extra tax on published periodicals, while allowing political sheets to be sent about at about half the rate, I cannot understand. All those who subscribe to the 'Farmers' Advocate' and all other periodicals which circulate throughout the length and breadth of this country ought not to be subject to this tax. I hope the hon. Postmaster General will reconsider the matter and place all these publications on the same basis.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Cargill) speaks of discrimination, but he has not brought forward any argument to prove that discrimination is proposed. At present there is a uniform rate for all Canada of half a cent a pound, regardless of the distance, as there is a uniform rate for letters. But letters are posted separately, and it is absolutely impossible to vary the rate with the distance. But newspapers are posted by the car-load, just as the hon. member for East Bruce (Mr. Cargill) ships lumber. Would the hon. gentlemen think it discrimination to have a certain rate on lumber from his mill to Toronto, and a different rate from his mill to a point at double the distance? If not, the same argument will apply to newspapers. I am in favour of uniformity in the benefits and burdens of legislation. I do not believe in discrimination of any kind, but hold that all should be equal before the law and all interests should be treated alike by the law. If every newspaper in Canada should pay a quarter of a cent per pound for transmission of papers for a certain district, all are treated alike. The hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) speaks of newspapers in Quebec. Well, take Toronto which is one of the great centres of newspaper publication, many newspapers published in Toronto are transmitted for a greater distance than 300 miles. No matter where the newspaper is, it will get the benefit of the reduction. The only discrimination that I can see in the matter is the discrimination in favour of the press in giving them transmission of goods at lower rates than are given other people by railway. That is class legislation, I admit. If we desire to do away with discrimination, the right direction in which to move would be in the direction of increase in postage on newspapers.

Mr. CARGILL. I am sorry that the hon. Postmaster General cannot see that he is discriminating against some publications in favour of others. For instance, he is supposed to be the proprietor of a newspaper in Toronto called the Toronto 'Star.'

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I wish I was.

Mr. CARGILL. The circulation of that newspaper, I feel sure is confined within a radius of one hundred miles. So the hon. gentleman circulates that paper at a cost of one-quarter cent per pound. But if I were the publisher of the 'Farmers' Advocate' in Toronto and the large bulk of my subscribers lived in the maritime provinces or Manitoba or the North-west Territories, my Bill for postage would be very heavy. This appears to me to be a clear discrimination against newspapers of wide circulation.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I ask leave to make just one observation in answer to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Cargill). Of course, he has no authority or foundation for the suggestion he made as to my being the proprietor of the Toronto 'Star' or any other newspaper. I wish I were the proprietor of the 'Star,' for it is a very valuable educational journal, if I may be permitted to say so. I have been credited with being the owner of a number of newspapers, but I am not. I am not the owner of the 'Star,' and have no more interest in it than my hon. friend (Mr. Cargill), except, perhaps, that I am a better well-wisher of it than he is.

Mr. CARGILL. I have no objection to the 'Star' at all.

Mr. GALLIHER. Before the Bill is reported, I would ask the Postmaster General if he has considered the advisability of incorporating a section in the Bill, on the lines suggested by me, to make an allowance to mail clerks for detention. I pointed out that trains are often storm-bound or otherwise delayed, and mail clerks are kept for hours in employment for which time they receive no remuneration. Then they often have to purchase one or two meals and, in the west these cost something—fifty to seventy-five cents each. Yet the mail clerks receive no allowance for this, nor any remuneration for the extra hours they serve. I suggested an allowance of twenty-five cents per hour for this detention. I mention the matter again because, as I understand it, if the Bill is reported without the clause to the effect I suggest, the Postmaster General may not be in a position to make an allowance of that kind.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. member for Yale and Cariboo (Mr. Galliher) mentioned this matter at an earlier stage of the Bill. I think there is much in the point he has mentioned. But whether it can be satisfactorily arranged at this period of the session I do not know. I have handed the 'Hansard' containing his remarks to the officers of the department, to see if it is possible to devise a practical scheme to give effect to the hon. gentleman's wishes. However, it will not be necessary to have such a provision by statute. It can be provided for by an item in the estimates, just as, to-day, we have items making provisional allowance for the west where the conditions are different from those of the east.

Mr. HENDERSON. I wish to say that I was in error in what I said a moment ago. I was under the impression that the Postmaster General was simply extending the 20-mile limit to a 300-mile limit. I find he is making three zones instead of two. However, it does not materially alter my argument with regard to discrimination. I was in error when I stated that in the province of Quebec, French daily newspapers would be carried free, whereas English papers that would extend throughout the Dominion would have to pay half a cent a pound. I should have said the French papers would pay one-quarter of a cent per pound.

Mr. SCOTT. There are a couple of points I would like to bring to the attention of the Postmaster General. For months past, I am informed, the mail cars supplied in the western part of this country have not furnished sufficient space for the mail clerks. In several instances, when the mail is of an excessive quantity, it has to be put in box cars, and this greatly hampers the work of the mail clerks. Another point is that under the regulations, so I am informed, a mail car requires to be placed in a certain part of the train, in a certain position with regard to the engine, and that this regulation is being often broken. I desire to call these points to the attention of the Postmaster General.

Mr. BLAIN. I would ask the minister if he has given any further attention to the question of the increase of pay for country postmasters ? I think this subject has been brought to his attention several times in the past. We have a large number of postmasters in country districts who are receiving salaries of from $10 up to $30 or $40. In my county there are some places where the country merchant at the cross roads, who has kept a post office for several years, has now refused to continue that post office, and in some cases the office has been removed from the store and given to the blacksmith : this is not very satisfactory. I think a clause should be introduced into this Bill to make provisions for these salaries. I am not asking that increases should be given in all places, but there is certainly no comparison between the present pay of the officers referred to in the Bill and the pay received by country postmasters generally. The minister, of course, will reply that the revenue in these country offices is very small. That is quite true, but that is caused by the system of centralization. A large number of people who used to receive their mail matter in the rural districts are now receiving it at the town where they have to go frequently for business. In the province of Ontario, farmers who are directing their attention to making butter and cheese and raising poultry require to go to the post office more frequently than formerly to attend to correspondence or to watch the market. I am of the opinion that some arrangement should be made whereby country postmasters would receive a reasonable allowance to which they are entitled. I wish to direct the minister's attention to another matter, and that is the very small pay that is received by the mail carriers in country districts. Some of them drive six or eight miles for the small sum of fifty cents.

Mr. CHARLTON. Are these not contracts given out by tender ?

Mr. BLAIN. Sometimes they are, and sometimes they are not. Perhaps they do not do it that way in the hon. gentleman's riding, but in many cases these engagements are made without tender. I am not complaining of that principle, but I say that some rearrangement of the routes should be made in the country districts, so that the mail carriers could receive a proper remuneration.

Mr. KAULBACH. I brought this matter to the attention of the Postmaster General a few evenings ago.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Would the hon. gentleman permit me to make an observation ? The salaries of the postmasters are not determined by statute, except it be the salaries of city postmasters, but they are determined by the Postmaster General. The statute gives that power to him, therefore no legislation is necessary. In a little while the estimates of the Postmaster General will be before the House, and I think that would be a more appropriate time to discuss these matters that are foreign to this Bill. I have no doubt that this whole subject of salaries to postmasters will then come up for consideration.

Mr. KAULBACH. I am glad to hear the Postmaster General make that announcement, and knowing the generous heart which he possesses, I hope he will pay some attention to the requests we have made on behalf of the country postmasters.

Mr. BELCOURT. Before the Bill is finally adopted, I wish to express my hearty approval of it, and at the same time to express the gratitude of the civil servants, who are receiving at the hands of the Postmaster General substantial justice in the increase of salary which he has provided for them. I had hoped that another portion of the service under the control of the Postmaster General would also receive by this Bill the increase to which they are entitled. I refer more particularly to a number of temporary employees, of whom there are a large number in Ottawa, whose position is rather unsatisfactory, in that it is temporary. There are civil servants who have been in the employ of the various departments for many years, and whose employment is still of a temporary character. They also, I think, are deserving of an increase which, under the law as it now stands, it is not found possible to give them. I hope that before the session closes, or at all events early next session, the temporary employees of the Post Office and other Departments, whose position, as I say, is unsatisfactory on account of the nature of their tenure of office, and because of the insufficient salary which is paid them, will receive the government's attention. I am sure that if the Hon. Postmaster General comes to their relief he will be entitled to the gratitude of that class of civil servants, just as he is now entitled to receive gratitude at the hands of those who are employed in the outside service and who are provided for in this Bill. I do not know if he has considered the matter, or if he is in a position to tell us what, if any, measure of relief he is prepared to grant to this class.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This Bill is limited entirely to the post office clerks. My hon. friend refers to another class in the service, a temporary class which is scattered through all the departments. It would not be appropriate, therefore, that a Bill dealing solely with one department should deal with a class of temporary employees found in all the departments. Legislation with reference to the civil service is done by amendments to the Civil Service Act, and it has generally devolved upon the Minister of Finance to take charge of legislation of that character.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. While on this subject, I would ask the Postmaster General whether he has given attention to the need of reorganizing the staff of the Winnipeg post office ? The staff there is quite inadequate, and the salaries paid so far have been so low that the government have not been able to secure the services of qualified men. Last year I moved for a return of the number of employees who have been engaged in the Winnipeg post office for a few years, both permanent and temporary, and I was furnished with a list of over 300 names, showing that men were actually coming in and going out from that office after a short time, both on account of inefficiency, and more especially on account of the small salary they were getting, because they could do far better by leaving the post office and getting employment elsewhere. We cannot get a permanent staff of officials for that office for the paltry salaries that are being paid so far. This Bill will provide for an increase in the salaries of post office clerks, and also for the selection of better qualified officers. I believe that the number of officers employed in the Winnipeg post office is quite inadequate for the services required.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not think that the Winnipeg post office is suffering from an insufficiency of staff. The Winnipeg post office is suffering from several causes, one the inadequacy of the accommodation. The city is extremely prosperous, it is growing and there has been a growing congestion in the government building in Winnipeg. The government building at Winnipeg is used not only for post office purposes but for the purposes of the customs house and Inland Revenue Department, and with the increased activity in Winnipeg and the west, lack of accommodation makes it very difficult to handle the business satisfactorily. In addition to that circumstance we have had a great transition in Winnipeg, as it has grown from what it was a few years ago until it is now a leading metropolitan city. That in itself seems to require a staff different from what was formerly required. Again, the former postmaster has been recently superannuated. He had been in office many years. He was a most faithful man, but he was advanced in years. He had had no post office experience and he had not educated up under him a staff equal to the growing requirements of the city. The assistant postmaster had for many years been an invalid, a paralytic, and my hon. friend (Mr. LaRiviere) is aware how great the consideration is which is usually extended to a public officer under these circumstances. I found him in that condition and I leaned the side of leniency and consideration towards him. The staff reported that they could get along very well and he was allowed to remain in office filling a responsible position, the duties of which he was not able properly to discharge. The postmaster himself was gradually becoming unfit for duty, and there was no efficient staff growing up to take charge of the growing business of the Winnipeg post office. Well, the process of improvement cannot take place with the stroke of the pen. There must be a gradual education.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. How long is it since the present postmaster was appointed to office ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Not two years ago. The late postmaster was superannuated, the assistant postmaster paralyzed and ultimately dying, and now we are having practically new officers. The new postmaster is getting into his business and beginning to learn it. He is a good business man, I think my hon. friend will admit, a man who is considered fully qualified, as far as business attainments are concerned, for the office; and with experience, I have no doubt will fully justify his appointment. However, it takes a little time for a man to get into the work. We have some good officers there. We are endeavouring under the system now in force to educate men in the technical work of the post office at the best offices and have them available to be despatched to other offices to educate the staffs there. We have in the last few months sent to the Winnipeg post office three expert post office men. They will be of great service in educating the rest of the staff and bringing them up to a proper degree of efficiency, and I think if we could only get more accommodation everything would be satisfactory there. At present you cannot find an idle building in Winnipeg. There is a large amount of mail matter arriving in Winnipeg for transmission beyond that has to stay over for other trains, and yet, at the present time, there is no way of handling that mail matter except by taking it to the city post office. There is no accommodation in the station and there is no building near the station to be rented. The Canadian Pacific Railway are erecting a new station and in that new station they will provide ample accommodation for the post office so that mail matter not required locally will be handled at the station. At present there is no way of doing that and it has to be taken to the city post office. Hon. gentlemen can see that this is a waste of money and produces a state of congestion in the post office itself. Unless the Canadian Pacific Railway satisfy us that they are going on with proper despatch to have that building erected the government will be obliged to erect a building at the station so as to avoid having to dump into the Winnipeg post office mail matter that is not required for delivery in the city of Winnipeg. But, in the meantime, I can assure my hon. friend that the standard of efficiency of the Winnipeg post office is rapidly being improved and that the trouble has not been because of an insufficiency of officers but because of an insufficiency of accommodation. I think I am correct in saying that the report recently showed that the number of officers there was more than was required, but the drawback there is because of the difficulty in getting good results out of them.

Mr. ROBINSON (West Elgin). Mr. Chairman, no doubt the committee will remember that at an early stage of the session the hon. Postmaster General (Hon. Sir William Mulock) promised the House that he would take into consideration the question of a rural mail delivery. I notice there is no provision in regard to it in this Bill and I would like to know whether the hon. Postmaster General really has taken that matter into consideration with the view of extending the delivery of mail matter to rural districts once a day. I think we may properly ask that this great boon to the agricultural community shall be provided in Canada as it is in the United States. There is nothing I know of that would induce farmers, young or old, to stay upon the farm so much as to give them a mail delivery at least once a day, and if it can be done in the United States I see no reason why it cannot be done in Canada. The United States are expending over $13,000,000 annually for the purpose of giving the farmers a mail delivery once a day, and I think if they can do it there we certainly ought to introduce the system here. I would like to know from the hon. Postmaster General whether he has taken the matter into consideration and whether his department are trying to work out a plan so that eventually we can have such a mail delivery as that of which I have spoken. There is another point that I desire to mention to the hon. minister and that has reference to the delivery of mail matter in cities of from 10,000 to 12,000 inhabitants like St. Thomas. This city of about 12,000 inhabitants where the people are obliged to go to the post office two or three times a day to get their mail. It seems to me there is no economy in that. Two or three men could deliver these mails every day and the people would be saved the time and expense of going to the post office. This government ought to take this matter up and give the people the advantages they have in other cities. In Great Britain, when a letter is posted to any part from John O'Groat's to Land's End, if it is properly directed, the post office authorities are determined to find that individual. If they can do that in Great Britain we certainly ought to be able to do it in the thickly settled parts of Ontario and Quebec. I think we are far behind in the matter of mail delivery as compared with other countries. Such an enterprising gentleman as the hon. Postmaster General of Canada should take steps to inaugurate a system of mail delivery in the smaller cities and in the rural districts.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I would like to say to the committee that the discussion for the last half hour or forty minutes has been wholly and entirely irregular. If I were to ask any hon. gentleman what section of this Bill he was discussing he could not tell me. We must discuss the different sections of the Bill, but for the last half hour no hon. member has been discussing the Bill. I was waiting until I found patience would not pay any longer and now I must call the attention of the hon. members of the committee to the fact that if they wish to discuss the Bill they must discuss section 9, because all others are passed. I think it is therefore better that the committee should rise and report the Bill.

Mr. BELCOURT. Mr. Chairman, a minute ago I asked the hon. Postmaster General if a certain number of civil servants who are temporarily in his department would receive his consideration. The Postmaster General answered me that the question was one for the Minister of Finance, and availing myself of the intimation, I beg to ask the Minister of Finance the same question which I put to the Postmaster General.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. That is wholly outside the Bill.

Mr. BELCOURT. It is perhaps not very approximately relating to the Bill, but it might come within the purview of section 7. At all events the Postmaster General referred me to the Minister of Finance.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have no objection to give my hon. friend (Mr. Belcourt) the information if it is in order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. It is not in order, but you can give it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is not unlikely that we shall have some changes to propose in the Civil Service Act, and without referring to what other points may be touched upon, I gave an intimation some time ago that the government would probably deal with the question of temporary clerks. There are two classes of temporary clerks; there is the temporary temporary clerk and the permanent temporary clerk, if I may so describe them. There are persons who are denominated temporary clerks and who have been in the service for many years, and there are others who are temporary clerks who are brought in for short service and are not likely to be continued. Perhaps it is well that we should make a distinction between the temporary temporaries and the permanent temporaries, and I think that it is likely that the Bill to be introduced, in accordance with the intimation I gave some time ago, will revive the third-class clerkship, and we will transfer to that third-class a number of those temporary clerks who have been in the service for a long time and who are practically permanent officers; still, however, retaining the temporary class for those who it is expected will only be for a short time in the service. These are the lines on which our thoughts are running and I expect they will be included in a Bill before the session terminates.

Mr. INGRAM. Will that apply to the outside service.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It only applies to the service at Ottawa.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I am now about to report the Bill and if the discussion is to continue in reference to temporary clerks, I have ruled that out of order.

Mr. WADE. I wish to make a few remarks and call the attention of the Postmaster General to the present postage rate upon books which is one cent for two ounces. I have heard a great deal of complaint about this rate from booksellers in cities and towns who are in the habit of sending books by mail. I wish to ask the Postmaster General if he will not make a reduction——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order. The hon. member has put a question, but I will rule the Postmaster General out of order if he attempts to answer.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. If the hon. member (Mr. Wade) wants to move a new section to that Bill he can do so.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. I am perfectly in order. I want your ruling.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. If an hon. member states he wants to move an amendment that is another thing, but the hon. member (Mr. Wade) did not say anything about an amendment.

Mr. WADE. It is not so often I raise my voice in this House and when the chairman interrupted me I was about to ask the Postmaster General if he would not consent to an amendment making a reduction upon postage on books. I rose to say that, and I intend to say it if I can. I gave as my reasons for this request, that I have heard a great many complaints from booksellers, especially in large cities, who do a large business in sending books to the country by mail. The existing rate of postage militates against the business. I trust the Postmaster General will run the risk of answering that question, even if he should be ruled out of order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I certainly will rule him out of order if he does. When members are out of order, they are of course not purposely out of order, but I ask the committee to stand by the chairman in having the rules obeyed.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The government should set the example.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Perhaps so. There is another thing I would insist upon, and that is that when an hon. gentleman is called to order, he will not persist in standing on the floor and saying that he is bound to have his say. I hope hon. members will help the chairman to maintain that order which is necessary to carry on the business of the House. The Bill is reported.

Mr. SCOTT. To bring the discussion back——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The Bill is reported.

Bill reported.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL moved the third reading of the Bill.

Mr. SCOTT. If I am not out of order now, I wish again to bring two points to the attention of the Postmaster General. By the regulation of the Post Office Department the mail-cars should be put in a certain place in the train in relation to the locomotive, and I am informed that very frequently the railway company fails to observe this rule. The other point I wish to mention is that for months past the mail-cars have been entirely overcrowded. The mail cars supplied by the railway companies have been entirely inadequate to carry the mails. So much is this the case that frequently whole cars of mail matter have been put in box-cars. That has occurred so generally for months past and has been carried on to such an extreme, that the work of the mail clerks has been made almost impossible.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. If my hon. friend (Mr. Scott) will allow me I will endeavour to deal with two subjects he has brought to the attention of the House when the Post Office estimates are being considered.

Mr. WADE. May I be permitted to ask the Postmaster General at this stage, whether he does not think it desirable that he should take into consideration the advisability of reducing the postage upon books for the reasons I have stated ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The subject which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wade) has brought to the attention of the House is of great importance, and if he would be good enough to allow it to be discussed when the Post Office estimates are under consideration, I think I will be able to satisfy him.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the third time, and passed.

CONSTRUCTION OF DRY-DOCKS—GOVERNMENT AID.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 178) respecting the encouragement of the construction of dry-docks.—The Minister of Finance.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). When this Bill was last before the House some questions were asked with respect to the dry-dock at Collingwood and one hon. gentleman requested that a plan of that dock might be prepared and brought before the committee. I have had a plan prepared by the Department of Public Works, and I now lay it on the Table of the House. The chief point that was raised in the discussion, was, whether the dry-dock at Collingwood was merely a change from an old dock or whether it was actually a new dock. We have asked the Department of Public Works to make a report with reference to that subject. That report, which, I think, answers the several questions raised in the debate some days ago, has been placed in the hands of one hon. gentleman opposite. The substance of it is that the dock is not an old dock renewed. but that it is entirely and substantially a new dock.

Mr. BENNETT. What is the estimated cost of the Collingwood dock ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Four hundred thousand dollars.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC PRINTING AND STATIONERY.

House proceeded to consider amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 182) to amend Chap. 27 of the Revised Statutes respecting the Department of Public Printing and Stationery.—The Minister of Justice.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What are the amendments ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick). The amendment is practically the one suggested by the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Clarke) when the Bill was up for the consideration of the House ; that is to say, that the selection of the employees be left in the hands of the King's Printer.

Amendment read the first and second time, and agreed to.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

House proceeded to consider amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 82) respecting and restricting Chinese Immigration.—The Prime Minister.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). These amendments are two in number. The first provides that a Chinaman shall not be subjected to the tax when he is the personal attendant or servant of a British subject visiting Canada. The tax is collectable but can be refunded to him. The section reads as follows :

> In the case of a person of Chinese origin, who is a personal attendant of or servant of a British subject visiting Canada, the tax payable under the first subsection of section six may be refunded to the person paying the same, upon his furnishing satisfactory evidence that such Chinese attendant or servant is leaving the port of entry with his employer or master on his return to China, if within twelve months of the date of his arrival in Canada and upon returning to the controller of such port the certificate granted under section thirteen.

The second amendment is to provide that Chinamen employed upon the steamers, which ply on the Pacific ocean, may land and do their work without paying the tax.

Amendments read the first and second time, and agreed to.

ALIEN ACT AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 204) to amend Acts relating to Naturalization and Aliens.—The Prime Minister) read the second time, and the House went into committee thereon.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The object of this Bill is simply to amend one or two clauses of the Naturalization Act in order to facilitate the proceedings whereby naturalization can be obtained by aliens. The hon. member for Provencher has suggested that a change is necessary in Manitoba and I propose to make the following change :

Such certificate shall be presented in Manitoba to the court of King's Bench during its sittings in the judicial district in which the alien resides, or, if the alien resides in the eastern judicial district, to a judge of the court of King's Bench sitting in court or to the court of assize and nisi prius, during its sittings in the judicial district in which the alien resides, or to the county court of the county court division within which the alien resides.

With regard to the North-west Territories, I propose to strike out the clause and substitute the following :

In the North-west Territories to a judge of the Supreme Court of the North-west, sitting in chambers in the judicial district within which the alien resides.

It is more convenient to make the application to the judge in chambers than to the court.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. But the general principle is that the naturalization of an alien shall be in open court.

The PRIME MINISTER. By a subsequent section we provide that notice shall be given of any application to be naturalized. As the law now stands, no notice is required.

Amendments agreed to.

On section 2,

The PRIME MINISTER. The amendment you have just made, Mr. Chairman, with regard to the application to judge in the North-west Territories, will necessitate an amendment here also, because this clause provides only for sittings in court. Therefore, I propose the following as subsection 5 :

In the North-west Territories the foregoing provisions of this section shall not apply, but in lieu thereof the procedure shall be as follows :—

On the presentation of the certificate, the judge shall cause a copy thereof to be posted up in a conspicious place in the court-house in which he holds his chambers for at least two weeks.

At any time after the said copy is so posted any one may file with the clerk of the court where the said copy has been posted a written notice of objection to the certificate of naturalization being granted, stating the grounds of such objection. On the Wednesday following the expiration of the two weeks for which the copy is required to be posted, the judge shall hold a sittings in chambers, at which, if no objection has been raised, he shall direct the issue of a certificate of naturalization to the applicant, and if objection has been raised he shall decide such objection in a summary way. The judge shall have power to adjourn the said hearing from time to time.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. CHARLTON. I would ask the Prime Minister if any provision is to be made with reference to repatriated Canadians ?

The PRIME MINISTER. We are just coming to that.

Mr. LANCASTER. I was called out of the House unexpectedly to the telephone a moment ago, and did not hear the explanation with regard to section 2. I do not understand why the Prime Minister is making it necessary to put in this notice. With the indulgence of the committee, I would like to hear an explanation. I presume that section 11 applies to the whole Dominion.

Mr. CHARLTON. I rise to a point of order. Is it not necessary to make a motion to reconsider a section, if a member wishes to go back to a portion of the Bill that is passed ?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. We are still on section 2. Of course, we have just considered the addition of a subsection—subsection 5.

Mr. LANCASTER. If necessary, I will move to reconsider.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. It is not necessary.

Mr. LANCASTER. We have not found any difficulty, so far as I know under the present system, and no frauds have been perpetrated. That system is that the applicant goes before the magistrate and proves his residence and other qualifications. The magistrate gives a certificate, and that is filed any day before the opening of the court. These applications are called at the opening of the court and again at the closing, which may be the day following or a week later. Of course, it may be the same day, but very rarely. Everybody who is interested has notice from the opening of the court of what is to be done, so that any attempted fraud may be checked. Under the system now proposed, a good deal more labour and trouble would be thrown upon the applicant. He has to give notice in writing, stating name, residence and occupation, and file it with the clerk of the court at least three weeks before the sitting. I fear that this will mean that people will be obliged to employ a solicitor or attorney to draw the notice and present it in due time. This will throw difficulties in the way of the naturalization of aliens, and this, I think, ought not to be done except for urgent reason. I would ask the Prime Minister what necessity has arisen for this change ?

The PRIME MINISTER. I may say to my hon. friend (Mr. Lancaster) that when this Bill was first discussed this subject struck me very much as it has struck him. I thought that the less formality there was about an alien getting his naturalization papers the better it would be. In the old provinces, the law as it is has worked to the satisfaction of everybody. There has been no fraud complained of. But I understand that, in the North-west Territories, where immigrants are coming in in very large numbers, these formalities are necessary in order to prevent fraud. I agree with my hon. friend that it would have been better to afford facilities to an alien who wishes to become a British subject. At the same time, certain things must be complied with under the law. An alien in the North-west must be a resident for a certain time before he can become a British subject. The law has placed it at three years. We are assured that unless we have some restriction, some notice given for the time provided in the Bill, it is possible that frauds will be committed—in fact frauds have been committed already. That is the only object of the amendment.

Mr. LANCASTER. I quite grasp what the Prime Minister has said—that it is necessary to make this provision because of the special conditions in the North-west Territories. But would he not consider the advisability of incorporating this in the amendment which provides special practice with regard to the North-west Territories and leave the general practice for the rest of Canada as it is ?

The PRIME MINISTER. I would not give an answer off hand to my hon. friend on that subject. But if he will let the Bill go through, we will have the third reading delayed so that I may have an opportunity of discussing it.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I have had a little experience in the courts with respect to matters of this sort, and that experience leads me to believe that, while it is desirable to facilitate the naturalization of those who come to this country for the purpose of becoming citizens, it is also desirable to know something about the men who are to have the great advantage of becoming Canadian citizens. At the sittings of the court in the province of Quebec, for instance, the clerk gets up, and, in the hurry and jumble of the preliminary business, reads the list of names. Nobody knows what is going on, or is aware of who the applicants for naturalization are. I think the suggestion that three weeks notice should be given beforehand is not an undue burden to put upon a man who desires the great advantage of being naturalized as a Canadian citizen.

Mr. LANCASTER. But the notice to be given as advocated by the hon. Minister of Justice (Hon. Mr. Fitzpatrick) does not draw the attention of anybody more than does the reading in the court. No one finds it out unless he is searching for it. But, under the present law, those who are interested in the matter know that the announcement is to be made at the opening of the court, and can search to see what the applications are.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. But the publication of notice on the first day of the court is still required, while the posting up of notice for two weeks in advance is required in addition—it is an additional precaution.

Mr. LANCASTER. I admit that, but the filing provided for by the Act we are now passing does not attract anyone's attention. No one will know by the filing of this notice who are entitled to be naturalized, unless his attention is drawn to it, and unless he is sufficiently interested to go and search.

Mr. MACPHERSON. The hon. gentleman from Lincoln and Niagara (Mr. Lancaster), mentioned the point about this applying exclusively to the North-west Territories. In British Columbia we are face to face with a very serious problem, and that is the naturalization of Japanese and Chinese. There was a case in Vancouver where some 1,100 Japanese were made British subjects, and I venture to say on my responsibility as a member of parliament that two-thirds of these men had not been in the country for more than one year. The majority of the Japanese who come into our country have only been there about three years. As a matter of fact, these men are put through the mill, as you might say, far too hurriedly. One man was found who so far forgot the oath of his office as to say that he was prepared, for fifty cents a piece, to put these men through their facings and make them British subjects. Of course we are all glad to see new citizens coming into our country. I think this law is an excellent law, and ought to apply to all parts of the Dominion. A man who is himself a British subject is the best judge of the men who are likely to make good British subjects, and we cannot hope to make out of these orientals anything like the British subjects that we would like to get. I hope the Prime Minister will appreciate the position we are placed in, and make the law applicable to British Columbia. The hon. gentleman suggested it should only apply to the North-west Territories.

Mr. LANCASTER. I did not suggest that, but I was suggesting to the Prime Minister that as he admitted there was no trouble about the other provinces, he should make his section especially applicable to the North-west Territories.

Section, as amended, agreed to.

On section 3,

The PRIME MINISTER. I move to strike out this section. The law is made uniform now except in the district of Keewatin where the Governor in Council shall decide to whom application shall be made.

Section struck out.

On section 4,

The PRIME MINISTER. I desire to call attention to section 18 of the Act which says :

A statutory alien may, upon the same terms and subject to the same conditions as are required in the case of an alien, apply for a certificate of naturalization.

And so on. A statutory alien is a British subject who has become the subject of another nation, and who wants to come back again to his British nationality. Therefore if Canadians who have gone to the States want to come back to Canada the law is that they must reside here three years in order to become British subjects again. We propose to change that so that a residence of only three months will be sufficient.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I thought that under the British law no man could divest himself of his allegiance without the consent of his native country ; that although he had taken an oath of allegiance in a foreign country, as soon as he came back he continued to be a British subject, except in so far as his rights of naturalization in a foreign country were confirmed by treaty between that country and the imperial authorities. There is, then, a treaty existing between the United States and Great Britain by which British subjects can be naturalized in the United States ?

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes. Now in consequence of this amendment it will be necessary to make another amendment. The statutory alien who wants to become a British subject will have to take an oath, the form of which is contained in the Act as form F. I therefore propose to amend form F in the schedule of the Naturalization Act by striking out the words ' has duly resided in Canada for a period of three years ' and substituting ' has duly resided in Canada for at least three months.'

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS. Before the Bill is reported, I want to make an observation on a statement I understood the Prime Minister to make in the discussion of this Bill. He said that some irregularities had taken place in the North-west Territories, and that fraud had been committed. I want to say that so far as I know, and I am pretty well seized of the facts up there, I never heard any complaint of any fraud having been committed in the North-west Territories. I think it was in British Columbia in connection with the Japanese that frauds of that sort took place, but not in the North-west Territories. The people of foreign origin up there will not take it as a compliment to be told that they have tried to become naturalized before they had resided long enough in the country.

The PRIME MINISTER. I apologize.

Bill reported.

SUPPLY.

House again in Committee of Supply.

Mail subsidies and steamship subventions—steamship service between Canada and South African ports, $109,500.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Rt. Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright). This is a new vote for a steamship service to be maintained between Canada and certain South African ports. The total cost will be £30,000 sterling per annum, and this is merely for the portion of it during the balance of the year 1902-03. It is divided among three different steamship companies; the Allans take one-third, the Elder-Dempster Company take another third, and the Furness-Withy Company the remaining third. The service is a monthly one. If hon. gentlemen desire to have the full terms of the contract, I will lay it on the Table of the House when the main vote is taken for the service for 1903-04. I have not it with me at the moment.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Would the right hon. minister state the general class of steamships that are to be employed in this service, the rate of speed, tonnage, &c. ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I will state it from memory as I have not the contract under my hand, not expecting this item to come up this evening so that the hon. gentleman will understand this is subject to correction. The rate is ten knots per hour, the steamships were to be between 5,000 and 6,000 tons gross register to the best of my recollection and when the traffic grew, as it is hoped it may grow, they were to provide as many steamships as the traffic demanded. These are the main conditions.

Mr. WILSON. I would like to ask the right hon. minister if he could tell us something about the trade that is being done in South Africa.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The committee will understand that this is an experimental and tentative trade. The steamships that have gone up to the present, I believe, have been well filled.

Mr. WILSON. Since the war is over ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Yes, they have been well filled with cargo. What traffic we can obtain in return I am not prepared to say. Things are in a state of flux in South Africa at the present time, and it is very hard to say what will develop there, but there is a great demand for certain articles which I think we can well produce. For instance, we ought to be able to send a considerable quantity of lumber and large quantities of provisions. I think our flour ought to find a fair market particularly in Natal, and we may possibly be able to do a considerable business in Cape Colony in agricultural implements and goods of that sort.

Mr. WILSON. What do you expect by way of return freights ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. That is a point which we cannot well decide. There is not a very large quantity of articles raised in South Africa from which we can hope to secure return freights but we hope the trade will develop. As hon. gentlemen are no doubt aware a commissioner, Mr. Jardine, is at present exploring that country and he has been reporting to us as to what may be done. I may say that he thinks that in staple articles there is a fair opening for doing a considerable trade and apparently the quantity of goods that has been sent out would warrant us in concluding that his expectations have been justified, but, of course, the committee will understand that this is experimental. This service has been pressed upon us by a very considerable number of merchants and manufacturers in various parts of Canada who found that they were at a great disadvantage in exporting to the South African colonies in competition with the United States. They said : I believe with perfect truth, that their consignments, if they had to go by way of New York, were put on one side and they were at a very great disadvantage on that ground alone in competing with American manufacturers and producers. The whole terms of the contract, of course, are set out. As I said I have not the contract here, but I propose to lay it on the Table when we take the main vote for the service for the current year.

Mr. BLAIN. Could the hon. minister say how long the contract is for ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. For five years if approved by the House.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What are the terminal points and is there a fixed day for sailing ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. They are to sail as nearly as possible at the middle of the month. They go to Cape Town, Elizabethtown and Durban. The ports may be varied from time to time as the government and the company deem expedient, but there must be three ports.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What are the ports on this side—St. John and Halifax ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. They go from Montreal and Quebec in the summer, and St. John and Halifax in winter.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I hope the hon. gentleman has made an arrangement by which there is a fixed day of sailing.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. That is provided for in the contract.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. When does this contract commence ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The contract commenced in October.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Oh, it has commenced ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. It has commenced, of course, subject as usual, to the provision that parliament shall vote the money. They take it at their risk of parliament voting the money. This is for three-quarters of a year.

Additional to statutory provisions for services between Canada and Australia, $28,388.88.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The committee will remember that we have been carrying on a service between our Pacific coast and Australia for a considerable number of years. Of late it has been found impossible to get that service continued without a considerable increase of subsidy and we are asked by the Australian government to pay a certain proportion, they paying another proportion and this is for a part of the service amounting roughly to about £6,000. The total increase which they will require is some £16,000 of which we would have to contribute a matter of £10,000 or £11,000, and the Australian government the balance.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Did not you have a contract with these people to carry on the service ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. It has expired.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. This is a new service ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. This is a renewal of it, and they demand more.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). What is the total amount paid for this service ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I think, ultimately, about £40,000 a year. I may remark to the committee that the trade with Australia has increased very considerably within the last few years. On the other hand, owing to the conditions which the committee is aware have prevailed in Australia, the return trade is comparatively small. I think if hon. gentlemen will look at the Trade and Navigation Returns they will see that our export trade to Australia has increased by something like $1,000,000, and it has apparently increased considerably this year. In 1900, the trade was $1,626,000, and in 1902, it was $2,586,000; and I understand that during the past twelve months, in spite of the depressed condition of these colonies this trade has shown a considerable increase. It is largely in agricultural implements and articles of that kind.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). What is the amount of the subsidy ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. £40,000 will be the sum total on our side; and a considerable further sum by the British government and by Australia.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). How much of this trade is carried on the subsidized vessels ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I think the Canadian Pacific Railway Company charter some sailing vessels for the purpose of carrying timber, but the bulk of the trade is carried in the vessels which we subsidize.

Mr. BROCK. What are our imports from Australia ? I think our imports come very largely by way of London.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. About $152,000, but that would hardly indicate it, because we have to take into account what comes via London. Such articles as wool would come through London, because London is the great wool mart, and it is more convenient to import in that way. The House is aware that for several years back our sister colonies have been suffering from the most severe drought they have ever experienced, and our imports during the last few years cannot be taken as a fair indication, but in spite of everything our exports show on the whole a gratifying increase. Although Australia was at one time a wheat growing country, there has been found a very considerable demand for Canadian flour, and our agents report sales of Canadian flour at a very much higher rate than any other flour in the Australian market.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). It is a matter for regret that this government does not establish direct steam communication between Canada and Australia, as we have done in the case of South Africa. It is impossible to carry on this trade successfully with the long railway haul from our manufacturing centres to the Pacific coast, and if we intend to compete with the American manufacturers, who have direct steamers from New York, then this government must establish steamers to run from Montreal and Quebec in summer, and from St. John and Halifax in winter direct to Australia. Let me read this interview with Mr. Bosworth, one of the leading officials of the Canadian Pacific Railway, which bears on this subject :

> Mr. Bosworth's attention was drawn to the statement made by Mr. John Gordon, the owner of large stores in Adelaide, Melbourne and Brisbane, of the possibility of opening up a considerable trade for Canadian cotton fabrics in Australia, but that he feared the charges entailed by the long railway haul over the prairies and through the mountains would prevent the development of such trade to very large dimensions.
> Mr. Bosworth replied that the railway could not compete with ships running from eastern ports to Australia with cotton cargo, but a good beginning had already been made in the shipment of Canadian manufactured cotton to Australia. For some months past the Canadian Pacific has been carrying from 100 to 150 cases of cotton for Australia by each steamer.
> This indicated that at existing rates a profitable market can be opened up for Canadian cotton in Australia. If the trade assumed such proportions as to warrant the running of vessels direct with Australia, the railway could not hope to successfully compete with ships, but there was no indication as yet that it would do so, although it was very encouraging to see its gradual growth.

Besides cheap woollen and cotton goods, we could export from Canada to Australia a large quantity of doors and sashes and dressed lumber if we had direct steamship communication. You can never have a successful Canadian industry unless you give facilities for export as well as for the home market. That is a thing that the manufacturers of Canada should see to at the earliest possible moment. What would England be to-day if her manufacturers were confined to supplying the home market ? I read recently that nearly three-quarters of the tonnage that passed through the Suez canal was of British ships, and that 75 per cent of the cargoes were from Great Britain. If we are going to follow in the wake of the great mother country, we must afford facilities to have our products carried to other markets than our own.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). Is this subsidy to be permanent ? Has a new contract been made for a term of years ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Probably it will. We are in correspondence at the moment with the Australian government about it.

Some resolutions reported.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at 8 o'clock.

TORONTO AND HAMILTON RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. HENDERSON. When will the order to resume adjourned debate on the Bill No.

147 to incorporate the Toronto and Hamilton Railway Company be taken up ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Not before next Wednesday, and perhaps not then.

Mr. HENDERSON. I think that when this Bill has been allowed to stand from day to day, those who are opposed to it should be given some notice of when it will come up.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have nothing to do with the Bill further than this. A number of the representatives of the municipalities waited upon me and told me that they were in conference together with the parties interested, and the hon. member for York (Mr. Campbell) who is quite as anxious that the measure should not be advanced except on lines satisfactory to the public, has announced that he will not move the Bill before next Wednesday.

Mr. SPEAKER. I would remind the hon. gentleman that there is nothing before the Chair.

Mr. CAMPBELL. With your consent, Mr. Speaker, I would just state that the Bill will not come up before Wednesday next anyway.

CANADIAN TRANSPORTATION AND STORAGE COMPANY.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 176) to incorporate the Canadian Transportation and Storage Company.—Mr. German.

On section 7,

Mr. BARKER. The general nature of this section is objectionable. It is recognized, as a general rule, that we should not give any company the power to acquire or purchase another company unless the latter be named. But here we have the power given wholesale to this company to acquire others having the same object. That is against the prevailing idea of the present day that there should be no monopoly.

Mr. GERMAN. I do not see any objection to this company acquiring the rights of other companies having similar objects. Some other company may be in existence for the same purpose, and be not going on to do business at all.

Mr. BARKER. I do not suppose there could be a monopoly by the combining of companies having dissimilar objects. A monopoly is a combination of companies having the same object, and it is one of the principles of our legislation to avoid that sort of thing. We find frequently the Railway Committee requiring a company applying for the power of amalgamation to name the companies with which it proposes to amalgamate.

Mr. GERMAN. There is only one company at present in existence—and I do not know that that has a legal existence at present—which has the same objects as this one. That is the company which procured a charter from this parliament, and which has in its act of incorporation a clause identical with this. I think that that company has become defunct through the lapse of time, but there may be a company having similar objects which this company might desire to acquire. I cannot see any danger of monopoly. If another company desires to sell out, why should not this one acquire its rights ?

Mr. BARKER. The government are responsible for all the legislation of this House, whether private or public, and the rule has always been strictly enforced that whenever any company wants to acquire the property and franchise of any other, it must name that other company which it proposes to buy. No one can tell what may be the effect of a clause such as this.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This matter was considered by the committee, and a modification was made which it was thought would meet any fair ground for criticism. My hon. friend from Hamilton is quite right when he says that it is the policy of parliament to have the name given in cases of proposed amalgamation of railway companies, but it is not the policy of parliament to follow that rule in other cases.

Paragraph (h) of section 7 which gave this company the right to construct, acquire and operate other electric tramways, telegraph and telephone lines was considered so objectionable that it was struck out, but in considering subsection (f), as amended, which gives this company the right to acquire the business, good-will and property of any other company having similar objects, the committee took the view that that was not objectionable as it could only lead to amalgamation on a small scale and nothing in the nature of a monopoly injurious to the public.

Now, my hon. friend says that that creates a monopoly. But, suppose this is a steamship company, and there is a small steamship line operating in conjunction with them—an extension of their route—and they desire to buy it up and unite the two concerns. This would not be a monopoly or a policy to be discouraged. Of course, it is limited to the amount of its capital, and can only buy what its capital will purchase. The illustration I have given is a case that constantly happens with private individuals or corporations—two concerns engaged in similar lines unite ; and, unless the union is of a very large amount of capital I do not see that there is anything in it in the nature of a monopoly. I sympathize with the object my hon. friend has in view and bear testimony to the fact that in the committee he takes the position that we should watch these things carefully. One of the greatest dangers of loose legislation is in private Bills. Government Bills generally are scrutinized very carefully; but private Bills sometimes pass without the care that should be bestowed upon them. Therefore, I am glad to welcome the expression of opinion of hon. gentlemen who look at these matters closely. But I think my hon. friend on further consideration will see that this does not involve the danger that he thinks it does.

Mr. BARKER. I am not speaking with reference to this particular Bill or the gentlemen who are promoting it, but with regard to the general principle. The company will be a transportation company merely. But a railway company is a transportation company merely. It is hardly a case like that of one individual entering into partnership with another. Individuals have the right to do whatever a free man may do or whatever two or more persons may contract with each other to do. But these companies are creatures of parliament. This is a company with large capital and extensive power, its powers are not confined to the purchase of lines already in existence, for it is free to acquire all companies that may be formed hereafter and that would naturally come into competition with them. They may buy up such companies, and so deprive the public of the competition which is looked for. The principle for which I am contending is that that kind of thing should be guarded against. If the hon. minister (Hon. Mr. Fielding) speaking on behalf of the government, thinks there is no objection to the clause I bow to his judgment. But it does seem to me that the principle that is applied to railway companies to prevent them from acquiring generally other railway companies should be applied to any corporation of this kind. If this company wants to acquire any existing steamship company, it is competent for parliament to consider whether it is reasonable that they should do so. But to give it a blanket authority, for all time, to acquire any company that may hereafter seek to carry on similar operations to those which this company is authorized to carry on, I think is a mistake.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. James Sutherland). I cannot agree with my hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Barker). Wherever a number of persons ask to be incorporated as a company to carry on business not asking for any privileges from parliament other than that of incorporation, I think they should be left with the same powers and privileges as an individual has. Where a company has received special privileges, in the way of subsidies, grants or anything of that kind, the case is different. Under such conditions, it is quite right that the power should be reserved in a parliament. In the case of railway companies, previous to the adoption of the policy of granting subsidies, it was not thought necessary to impose these conditions that my hon. friend suggests, nor do I think it would be in the public interest to do so in this case. Banks are given great and special privileges——

Mr. BARKER. Are they authorized to amalgamate ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Even they have power to amalgamate. But I cannot agree that it is in the best interest of the country and a benefit to business generally that, if men unite their capital to conduct business, they should be deprived of the ordinary privileges allowed to one individual or to several forming a partnership. It is not likely that they would exercise this power unless it were to the general advantage. I cannot imagine that there is more danger of a monopoly being brought about by giving these powers to a company like this than there is by leaving with an individual the power to purchase the business of another individual or the shares of a corporation.

Mr. BROCK. I am always in favour of hampering anything that may be to the detriment of business, In this case a number of individuals are asking for a charter for a definite business, and have subscribed their own capital. They ask no privilege except that possessed by all people who are doing business. I can hardly agree, then, with my hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Barker) that we should take power to prevent an amalgamation which would be allowed to individuals. It must be remembered that we have not in this country probably, too much capital. If it is necessary for a company like this to amalgamate with some other for the better carrying on of the business in which they are engaged, then, I think in the interest of business and of the country, it is well that they would be allowed to do so. If it could be shown, as in the case of two great railway companies, that the amalgamation would have the effect of preventing competition I can understand that the country might step in and prevent it. But I do not think that a case has been made out to show that it is necessary that the country should be free to step in and prevent the amalgamation of another company with this one for the purpose of combining their resources in carrying on the business.

Mr. BARKER. May I ask if section 9 as the Bill was originally printed stands as part of the Bill ?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. BARKER. That gives this company the right to receive subsidy from the government or any person. Is it reasonable, if a company like this receives subsidies from the government, that they should have power practically to use the money of the public to buy up competing concerns ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The putting in of this clause does not give them subsidies, but only gives them the power to receive them if they are given. And I fancy the company would have difficulty in getting subsidies. The power that gives them a subsidy, whether the Dominion, a province or a municipality, would make its own terms, which would properly be attached to the giving of the subsidy. There is no danger in this, for it simply says : If you can get a subsidy, you may enjoy it.

Mr. BARKER. And it says also : And if you get it and think that the way to enjoy it, you can use it to buy up other companies.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. But my hon. friend (Mr. Barker) will see the broad difference between this Bill and legislation affecting railway companies. My hon. friend from Centre Toronto (Mr. Brock) pointed out that to unite two railway companies would create a monopoly, because you cannot conveniently or without very great expense lay another railway alongside of it. But there is no monopoly whatever, in uniting two steamship lines, for instance. If you amalgamate two steamship companies and you want another, you can easily get a charter for it. The conditions which would make a monopoly in the case of a railway do not exist in the case of an ordinary commercial company. The elements of monopoly are not in the latter case.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

THE ASSINIBOINE RIVER WATER-POWER.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 192) to enable the city of Winnipeg to utilize the Assiniboine River water-power.—Mr. Puttee.

Mr. LANCASTER. In view of the absence of the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Puttee) the promoter of the Bill, I think it would be well to let this matter stand.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. I gave notice of a couple of amendments since the Bill was last before the House. The suggestion I then made is borne out by the Board of Trade of Winnipeg, and it does not affect the Bill at all. I do not want to obstruct that Bill, because I am in favour of it. There is one point that I want guarded, and that is that the navigation of the Assiniboine river shall not be interfered with. This company is asking to build a dam at or near the city of Winnipeg, or further up the river, and they are in fact asking that they shall not be compelled to put in a lock. There is a provision in the Bill whereby all the plans and specifications are subject to the approval of the Governor in Council. I am satisfied with that, I know that the Governor in Council will not approve of anything that will interfere with navigation, or anything that should not be approved of. But while that power is given to the Governor in Council, by clause 7 ; it is stated that—

The plans and site of the said works may be approved of by the Governor in Council without making provision for the construction of a lock or other works for the purposes of navigation.

Well, I am opposed to that, because it will restrict the power of the Governor in Council. But should the Governor in Council think well to order that a lock be put in, I think it should be done. But if the Governor in Council think that there is no necessity for a lock on any of the works done by the company, then that would suit the company. The object of this Bill is to give powers to the city of Winnipeg to dam the Assiniboine river in order to raise the level of the water in that river, to create water-powers and to provide for the supply of water for the city of Winnipeg. There is no objection to that at all. But in all these works I maintain that the navigation of the river should not be interfered with. I am satisfied to leave it to the Governor in Council to approve of the plans and to authorize such work as they chose to approve of. But as the Bill asks that the Governor in Council be vested with these powers without restriction, I gave notice that I would move that clause 7 be struck out, and that the words 'if necessary' in clause 4 be also struck out. These are all the amendments I have. They only affect the navigation of the river, and I leave to the Governor in Council the responsibility to say whether locks shall be constructed by the city or not.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is the first time the clause which the hon. gentleman refers to has been brought to the notice of the Public Works Department, and in view of the absence of the hon. member who has charge of this Bill, I would ask that the Bill stand for consideration. This is a very important matter, seeing that the Bill practically declares that this river which is now navigable shall be made non-navigable. The interests involved are very great, and I desire a little time to have the officers of my department consider the matter and make a report upon it. I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. McCREARY. Before the motion is put, I desire to say that I am a little surprised that the hon. gentleman who is promoting this Bill had not said something about it, or wired me on the subject. The city of Winnipeg is an important part of the province of Manitoba, but at the same time there are other parts of Manitoba of some importance. The dams and locks referred to in this Bill would cut the county of Selkirk, which I represent, almost entirely. Now the danger is this, that the Assiniboine river is a river of very low banks, not more than three or four feet above high water mark at places, and an attempt is being made now to render that river navigable. Some six or eight months ago I urged the Public Works Department to send an engineer for the purpose of ascertaining if the crooks in that stream which dammed the water back could not be straightened out by making cuts. An engineer has gone up, I understand, and made a report on the navigability of the Assiniboine river, and in order to see what is required to make the river navigable. Last year the overflow of that stream caused damage in the city of Brandon, in Portage la Prairie, and the municipalities from Brandon down to Winnipeg of probably $450,000. A fair estimate made by the Board of Trade of Portage la Prairie gave the damage in the Portage municipality as $200,000. Between there and Brandon the damage would be probably $200,000. In the city of Brandon the water-works were washed away and great damage was done. Now this river will have to be improved, if not for the purpose of navigation, at least to prevent its banks overflowing. The Canadian Pacific Railway also were very seriously interfered with in their traffic, as the river flowed so far over its banks that it went up to the Canadian Pacific Railway track. In fact the old trail along the Assiniboine river was three feet and a half under water, the same trail that I travelled over twenty-three years ago, dry-shod. The water reached as high a level as the railways eight or ten miles east of Portage. So if we are going to allow the city of Winnipeg to put in locks at the city of Winnipeg that will interfere with navigation, or keep the water back, then they will certainly hear from the old settlers who reside along that river and from several other places further west beyond Brandon and Portage la Prairie. In regard to this canal also from the Assiniboine river to Lake Manitoba, using Long Lake as part of the channel, I presume that has been a work contemplated for the last twenty-four years, but nothing has been done. It is difficult to say what effect it will have on the waters of Lakes Manitoba and Winnipegosis. So if the scheme is carried out as proposed in this Bill it would affect a very large portion of the province of Manitoba. I would therefore ask the Minister of Public Works to have his engineer make a thorough report before he allows the city of Winnipeg either to throw a dam across the river at Winnipeg or to put in locks.

Motion agreed to, and progress reported.

GASPE AND WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 166) to incorporate the Gaspé and Western Railway Company.—Mr. Gauvreau.

On section 6,

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I do not know whether the Baie des Chaleurs Railway Company or the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway Company have the power from this parliament to sell to this company ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Hon. Raymond Préfontaine). They have no power to sell to this company. This company does not exist. It is going to be put into existence now by this Bill.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. These two other companies are in liquidation ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. They are in the hands of trustees.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. And the Bill gives power to this company to purchase these lines of the Baie des Chaleurs and Atlantic and Lake Superior railway companies ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Exactly.

On section 13,

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. This seems to me to be a peculiar Bill. I am sorry that I was not at the Railway Committee when it was discussed. This is for the purpose of conferring railway powers on this company and authorizing it to purchase these two lines which are now in the course of liquidation. Does it interfere with the bonds or any other securities that have been issued by these two companies ? The roads could be sold and the bonds cut out. In the province of Quebec a sale is an absolute sale. It has no respect whatever for bonds or anything else, whatever they may be, issued on the road. This Bill then empowers this company to take over these roads. This parliament has power to grant to this new company the right to operate as a railway company and to take over these roads without respect to the bonds or anything else.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. If the property is sold by judicial sale, and not otherwise.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Yes, but the powers of the provincial government, or the court, to sell might be limited by the restrictions imposed by this parliament in regard to interfering with the bonds that were issued under the greater powers given by this parliament. The power of sale exercised under the provincial authorities is an absolute sale. This confirms the sale, or virtually confirms the sale, and gives to this company powers that the provincial authorities would not have the right to confer.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. These railways can be sold by the sheriff, and the Bill pre-supposes a case of this kind. It pre-supposes the case of the sale by the sheriff of the district of these roads. If the roads are sold by the sheriff and bought by any party, they could be sold to this company and operated by this company. Otherwise they would be of no value, because nobody could operate them unless he came before parliament and was authorized to do so.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I see in subsection 4 of section 9 there is this proviso :

But nothing in this Act shall in any way affect the rights of the bondholders of the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway Company or the Baie des Chaleur Railway Company.

That is to remain in the Bill ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. That may have an effect. But my argument, I think, is perfectly right if that were not in, when I say that in the province of Quebec the sale is absolute and that it does not pay any attention to the corporate powers of the company which are given by this parliament. If it were not for this reservation, this Bill would cut out the bondholders.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. All this clause does is to enable this coumpany, as an incorporated company, to buy at the sale. This company, if it buys at the sale, will buy just what the person, or court, or tribunal, is authorized to sell, and no more. Whether these roads are subject to bonds, or whether, by reason of the proceeding under which the sale takes place, the bonds are not to continue as an obligation upon the roads, whichever is the case, the purchaser acquires the property subject to these bonds or free from these liabilities. The company simply buys what the court has authority to sell. We do not authorize the sale, so that we cannot affect any person's rights, or claims, or bonds. We only authorize this company to buy, so that if a proper sale of this property took place this company might go and be one of the bidders or be the purchaser. This last clause I do not think has any effect one way or the other, because the authority of the company to buy the property, by imputation or otherwise, could not affect any encumbrance which still remained on that property.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART.

RED DEER VALLEY RAILWAY AND COAL COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 102) respecting the Red Deer Valley Railway and Coal Company.—Mr. Cowan.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I understand there is a land grant in connection with this railway. Has it lapsed ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That was disposed of in the committee. The Governor in Council have considered the matter, and I was authorized to inform the committee that they would not consent to any land grant.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 99) respecting the Canada Central Railway Company.—Mr. McCreary.

Bill (No. 141) respecting the Medicine Hat and Northern Alberta Railway Company.—Mr. Davis.

Bill (No. 159) to incorporate the Canadian Yukon Western Railway Company.—Mr. Davis.

QUESTION OF PROCEDURE.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. SPEAKER. I am not supposed to be in the Chair. We were in committee of supply before 6 o'clock, and the hour for private Bills being over, we are back again in committee of supply.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The hour has expired for private Bills, and you, Sir, have called the next order, and before we proceed with the next order, I intend to make a motion.

Mr. SPEAKER. I do not think that would be regular. We have the right to consider private Bills between the hours of 8 and 9, but when that hour has expired we revert simply to the consideration of the matter which was before the House when it took recess. I do not think any motion could be in order now, because we are supposed to be again in committee of supply.

SUPPLY—GRAND TRUNK TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY.

House again in Committee of Supply.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again. In making that motion, I wish to draw the attention of the government to a very important statement which appears in the leading organ of the government, the Toronto 'Globe,' this evening. The statement is as follows :

A GOVERNMENT RAILWAY FROM MONCTON TO WINNIPEG.

It Will be Leased for Fifty Years to the Grand Trunk Pacific.

And Running Rights Will be Granted to Other Railways—For the Western Sections a Guarantee of Bonds Will be Given —Work to be at Once Rushed forward and Material to be Bought in Canada.

(Special Despatch to The Globe.)

Ottawa, July 2.—The main features of the government's policy in connection with the proposed transcontinental railway line have practically been determined, and it is expected that within a few days a contract with the Grand Trunk Company will be signed. The government undertake to construct a line from Moncton to Winnipeg via Quebec, and to lease it to the Grand Trunk Pacific Company for fifty years. For the first five years the company will pay no rental to the government. For the second five years they will pay the net surplus of receipts over working expenses. For the remaining forty years they agree to pay three per cent on the cost of construction.

The Western Section Guaranteed.

The government will guarantee the bonds for the stretch of line which the company themselves are to construct. In the case of the prairie section the guarantee will be 75 per cent of the actual cost of construction, but is not to exceed $13,000 a mile. The government have arbitrarily fixed 500 miles as the length of the mountain section, and for this distance the guarantee will also be 75 per cent of the actual cost up to a maximum of $30,000 a mile.

The rates to be charged are to be subject to the control of the Governor in Council or the railway commission, but on the government section of the line the rates are not to be cut down to a figure that will prevent the company from paying the annual rental.

Running Rights Provided For.

Other railway companies are to be granted running rights over the Winnipeg-Moncton section. This is to be a matter of mutual agreement, and in the event of failure to arrive at a friendly understanding, the government will prescribe the terms, subject, of course, to the rights which the Grand Trunk Pacific possess as lessees and operators of the line.

Materials Used to be Canadian.

In view of the government constructing the eastern section of the railway, the Grand Trunk Pacific Company have reduced their capital from $75,000,000 to $45,000,000. The company, as an evidence of good faith, will deposit $5,000,000 in the Bank of Montreal in cash or approved securities. As far as possible the materials used in the construction are to be of Canadian manufacture. The government have made a point of stipulating that, wherever it could be done, the articles that enter into construction should be bought in Canada, and the company readily agreed to this. A majority of the directors must be resident in Canada. Mr. C. M. Hays is to be president of the company, and Mr. Wainwright, vice-president. Among the directors will be one of the Rothschilds—probably Lord Rothschild, the head of the great financial house—Lord Welby, Sir Charles Rivers Wilson and Mr. Arthur Smithers.

To Rush the Work Forward.

Mr. Hays and his associates are in earnest in the desire to begin construction and push the work to completion as rapidly as possible.

* * * * * *

Sixty Survey Parties Out.

The company have sixty survey parties out at present, of whom ten are working between Lake Abbittibbi and Quebec.

I would ask the government whether there is any truth in the statement I have just read ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I might say to the hon. gentleman that the government is in no way responsible for this report, or any report which is being published now in the newspapers. A great many guesses undoubtedly are being made. Possibly it may turn out that some of the guesses are correct, but no authoritative statement has been given out by the government, and none will be out probably for a few days.

Mr. BARKER. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Further discussion is out of order.

Mr. BARKER. There is a motion before the Chair.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. But the discussion is not relevant to that motion. The question under consideration is the question of supply, and a discussion of the subject now brought up will lead the House away from that question. As the hon. member for Lanark (Hon. Mr. Haggart) has had the opportunity of putting his question, and has had an answer, the discussion must now cease.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I withdraw my motion.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Shall the hon. member have leave to withdraw his motion?

Mr. DAVIS. He ought to be thankful to let you withdraw it.

Motion withdrawn.

St. Andrews—repairs to wharf, $850.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This vote was granted in 1901-2. The amount lapsed, but the work was gone on with, and we are asking this vote to pay for the work done during the past year.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. How did the amount lapse ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It was voted and the work was not completed the 30th June, a year ago, so the vote lapsed.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Why did you not make provision last session ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There was an amount voted last session, but it was not sufficient.

River St. John and tributaries—amount due to local government, not to exceed one-half the first cost of wharfs built by them in tidal waters, 1895 to 1902, $7,850.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is to make provision for paying the contribution to the local government of New Brunswick, not exceeding half the sum spent by them from 1895 to 1902 in the construction of wharfs in the St. John river. This is an arrangement made several years ago between the Dominion government and the provincial government of New Brunswick.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. When was the arrangement made ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have forgotten the date, but it was when Hon. Mr. Foster was Minister of Marine and Fisheries. The vote was given for this amount previously, but, owing to some difference between the Auditor General and the parties, it has never been paid. This is to pay the amount in full.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I suppose the real objection on the part of the Auditor General was that he was not satisfied that the amount for the wharfs was correct.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No ; as I am informed, the dispute was as to the form of the vote. The Auditor General held that, as the money was voted, it could not be paid to the provincial government. Hon. gentlemen will note the form of this vote, which is 'amount due to local government.' That not having been in the previous vote the Auditor General said the money could not be paid over.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Then, if I understand the minister correctly there has been an agreement between the Dominion government and the local government as to these particular wharfs built from 1895 to 1902, that we should pay one-half the cost ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, that is practically correct.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. And the only trouble was that the Auditor General thought the amounts should be paid to the contractor instead of to the local government.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That is hardly it. He was not satisfied that, with the vote in the form in which it was formerly passed, the money could be paid to the local government. There is no doubt about money having been spent on the various works.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Spent by the local government ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). Is that the total amount paid by this government under this arrangement since 1895 ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is the amount due since 1895, but not the total amount paid. An amount was paid year after year under this arrangement, but it must have been going on for several years up to 1895, when exception was taken to it by the Auditor General, and since that time it has never been rectified. This is to pay all that has accrued from 1895 to 1902 to the provincial government.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What is the total amount expended by this government on wharfs on the St. John river and its tributaries, leaving out the city of St. John ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I had a statement here for the main estimates, but I haven't it at hand at the moment. I will bring the information down.

Harbours and rivers—Quebec, Cacouna—extension of wharf, $1,350.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is to pay for some materials purchased in connection with this wharf for the current year.

Mr. BROCK. I suppose that this wharf was built for the accommodation of the Richelieu and Ontario Navigation Company. What return do we get for the money expended on such a wharf ? I am a little interested in these points because we in Ontario occasionally make a request for public expenditure on such works. For instance, in Toronto we sometimes want something done on our harbour, but find it difficult to get it. But when I go down to Cacouna, which is a pleasure resort, I find a large amount spent for a wharf for the benefit, as I take it, of the Richelieu and Ontaria Navigation Company. What does that company contribute ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is a public wharf, but I suppose it is used by the steamers of the Richelieu and Ontario Navigation Company. It was originated, however, for the benefit of the public, and I take it that it was because the wharf was there that the company's steamers called. I understand that the greatest influence in bringing about the construction of this wharf was that of one of our most influential statesmen, the late respected leader of the Conservative government, Sir John Macdonald, who had a residence there.

Mr. BROCK. I think the hon. gentleman is mistaken. Sir John lived at Rivière du Loup, not at Cacouna.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I might be mistaken on that point, but the information in the department is that the work was started as the result of his influence in the first place. I do not say that it was not the proper thing to do, but I am explaining to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Brock), in answer to his question, how the wharf came to be built. I do not think it was built at the instance, or for the benefit of the Richelieu and Ontario Navigation Company.

Mr. BROCK. I think it was built for the benefit of the hotel that was constructed there by a company, and I do not see why the government should build a wharf for the benefit of such a concern. It is not to accommodate a section of the country with a large population, but simply to promote a summer resort.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Brock) is mistaken. There is a large district served by this wharf. At any rate, the Dominion, for many years, has followed the plan of building these wharfs, and, unless we change our policy I suppose we shall have to continue building these wharfs to some extent.

Mr. BROCK. I do not wish to be misunderstood. If the respected head of the government some years ago, the late right Hon. Sir John A. Macdonald recommended that this should be built and maintained by and at the public expense, make no mistake about it, I would asquiesce, for I know that he would not have recommended it unless it were to the public interest.

Mr. MORIN. I believe the hon. minister is mistaken in saying that the Richelieu boats go there. They may go there but only occasionally. Cacouna is visited only by people who go to spend the summer there.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Would the hon. gentleman (Mr. Morin) allow me ? I misunderstood the information furnished me by the engineer. I understood him to say that the steamers stop there, but I was mistaken. The wharf is altogether for the benefit of the people who reside there regularly or as visitors.

Mr. MORIN. The people who go there to spend the summer are generally rich people, and, if they want wharf accommodation they should provide it themselves. There is a railway there, and people can go down and up by rail. But sometimes they engage a steamer at Quebec and take the trip by water for pleasure. If they enjoy these pleasure trips, they should pay for them. The poorer class of people realize no benefit whatever from this wharf.

Mr. BLAIN. Would the hon. minister tell us the size of the wharf—I see that this item is for an extension.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The wharf is 977 feet long, 24 feet wide and the mean height is 17 feet, and 24 feet wide.

Mr. BLAIN. How much has been expended on it up to the present time by the government.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The total is $26,611.60.

Mr. BLAIN. Would the hon. minister explain why the wharf has to be extended ? One would imagine that it was quite large enough for the business.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. They want deeper water to allow the larger class of steamers to reach the wharf. However, this amount has been expended, the material was purchased, and this is to pay for it.

Mr. COCHRANE. Does the minister know for a fact that any business was done there other than we have learned from the hon. member who has just spoken ? I do not object to spending money to aid people to get in their commodities or to get them out, but I think we should draw the line at a mere pleasure resort for wealthy people going up there from Quebec to spend the summer. I object to spending $25,000 or $30,000 of the people's hard-earned money to benefit a few pleasure seekers. I feel a little sore about this, when I remember that in my riding there are five or six wharfs of more importance ; one of them, Presqu'Isle harbour, one of the best in Ontario, where millions of bushels of grain have been shipped, and not a dollar of public money has been spent all along that shore. Does the minister know whether there is any need at all for this work ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There is no doubt that the wharf is largely used in the summer time by the class of people to which the hon. gentleman has referred. I think also it is used a good deal by people in that district to ship their produce over to the north shore. This is in the county of Témiscouata.

Mr. BROCK. Is there any revenue from that wharf ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There is no revenue. The government owns the wharf.

Mr. COCHRANE. If the people wanted a wharf and the government owned it and they exacted any tolls, there ought to be a revenue ; and if there is no revenue and the government own that wharf, it is quite evident that there is something wrong. If there was business done over that wharf, and it was conducted on business principles, we should have some revenue from it.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There is a large number of these wharfs that have never been transferred to the Marine Department.

Mr. MORIN. There is a wharf only six miles above there, at Rivière du Loup, where the steamboats belonging to the Richelieu Navigation Company land. All the boats going up and down the St. Lawrence stop at that wharf. On the north shore, almost opposite, is the mouth of the Saguenay river, and right opposite Cacouna is what is called Red Island, a very dangerous place for navigation. No boats of any kind dare go to Cacouna except special boats. All the business done is transacted at Rivière du Loup wharf. So that you can see at once that the wharf is of no use except for the purposes I have mentioned before. I do not see why the government should spend the people's money in that way. There are other places needing a wharf more than that place.

Mr. BLAIN. Did the engineer of the department go down and examine this place, and report that such extension and repairs were required ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, that was done. This was a work on which the previous government had spent at least $20,000, and it would be poor policy to allow that work to go to pieces when a small expenditure will keep it up. I cannot admit this work is of no use. It may be, as the hon. gentleman says, an advantage to people who reside there in the summer. But it is a great advantage to have these people, mostly foreigners, perhaps, reside there during the summer season. But when I find a work for which $20,000 had been voted by the previous government without criticism, I think it is the duty of the department to keep that in proper repair.

Mr. EARLE. But there is also an extension.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There was a small extension added in making the repairs, an extension of about 50 feet, so that schooners could use the wharf.

Mr. BROCK. My objection is not to the expenditure of $1,350, but there is a principle involved. The government are spending the money of this country in building a wharf, and we ask upon what principle they are proceeding. Are they doing it in the interest of the general public or in the interest of some private company ? I contend that if this is not in the general interest of Canada, it must be in the interest of a hotel company, and that is something to which we should draw the minister's attention. If in the past this country has foolishly spent money on this work, there is no reason why we should go on spending money upon it. If that place is worth building a wharf upon, the Richelieu & Ontario Company will spend that $1,350 or more, if necessary. If it is not worth their while to do it, it is not worth the while of this government to do it. Let the companies who are making money out of it spend their money in keeping up this wharf.

Mr. MORIN. I do not agree with what the minister said just now. He said that the late government had built a wharf there. That is correct. But you must remember that you have condemned the late government and voted them out of power for their bad conduct. Now, what are we to think of you when you turn round and do things just as bad, or worse ? If the late government has done wrong, do not follow their example; draw a line and quit that kind of business.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). We have not heard from the minister any answer to the request of the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Brock) as to the principle on which the government are proceeding in building wharfs of this kind. It seems to me there ought to be some well defined principle for giving grants to wharfs. There are many wharfs on our lakes and rivers, and on our ocean inlets, on some of which large sums have been expended, and on others nothing has been expended.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The policy has been to build wharfs whereever they are considered to be in the public interest. We must admit that the public money has been pretty widely distributed. Applications are numerous, and it is not possible to meet them all. But this is not a new work, it is an old work, and I do not know that it comes under any new policy. As I have said on several occasions, as long as it is the policy of parliament to build these wharfs, I suppose it will remain in the discretion of the government to say what wharfs they will build in the public interest. I do not think that this work is subject to severe criticism, in view of the fact that it has been established for so long a time, and that the residents in that district have pressed for improvements.

Mr. MORIN. Here is something I cannot understand. Here are $34,526 asked for. What is the use of our criticising one item ? You come here and you want $1,300 to extend that wharf. We prove to you that the wharf is of no use, and while you hear us you do not pay any attention to us at all. You just do as you please. If you are going to do so, why not pass this item in full, $34,000, and be done with it ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The hon. member who represents Temiscouata (Mr. Gauvreau) says that the people in that district take a very different view from that of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. MORIN. I will bet you they do.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. And the difficulty is to decide between the hon. gentlemen as to the necessity of this work.

Hull—completion of wharf, including freight shed, $3,200.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is in settlement in full of the contract.

Mr. BARKER. I see that this work has been going on since 1900. In 1900-1901 the government paid $9,460 on this work. In 1901-2 they paid $40,977.59 upon it. Perhaps the hon. minister can tell us what they paid under the appropriation of last year?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The total amount paid on the work was $52,042.71.

Mr. BARKER. I make it $53,637, but the difference is not very material. These items came up in this way year after year. I have called attention to it in the railway estimates. We never know when we pass an estimate for a public work whether we are authorizing what is going to complete the work or simply throwing in so much on account. I want once again to protest against this manner of conducting public business. I cannot say what occurred in 1900, but year after year items are passed for public works without the explanation which ought to be given. Will the hon. minister assure us that this really completes the business?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This will complete the work.

Mr. BROCK. Really the figures are rather appalling. We are not very far from Hull, and we are able to judge of the amount of money we have expended, and we want to know what benefit we are going to get from it. Does the hon. minister assume to say that this country is getting a return for an expenditure of $50,000 on a work of that kind? I can understand that it may be an advantage to lumbermen and other people who make money out of it, but what is the Dominion government getting out of it? Are we getting 3 per cent on the money we have expended?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is impossible to give any idea of the revenue. The work has just been finished, and it will be transferred to the Department of Marine and Fisheries at the end of another year, and if there is any revenue to be derived from it we will know then. At the present time, it has not been transferred, and there has been no revenue derived.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The statement of the hon. minister confirms the report that was in circulation at the time of the appointment of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Hon. Mr. Préfontaine) that all these public wharfs were to be transferred to the Marine Department.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Ever since the Marine Department has been established, these wharfs, when completed, have always been transferred to the Marine Department.

Mr. MORIN. Will the hon. minister be good enough to tell the committee whether any steamboats carrying passengers ever go to that wharf at Hull?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I only give the hon. gentleman the information that I have, which is that the Ottawa River Navigation Company use that wharf. It is the intention to run the ferry between Ottawa and Hull from that wharf.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). Is it not unusual to build freight sheds on wharfs?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. In a great many places it is usual to build freight sheds on these wharfs.

Mr. BROCK. It is not unusual, but it is very improper.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is a good work, whether a justifiable one or not, I do not know.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). These freight houses are not constructed on all wharfs. How does the hon. minister select the particular wharfs on which to build freight sheds?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. In some of these smaller places freight sheds have been built for the accommodation of the public. It depends a great deal on the conditions in the locality where the public wharf is constructed. In most places corporations and private individuals get the privilege of building right on the wharf, or on the adjoining property.

Isle Grosbois, opposite Boucherville—dredging channel, $5,151.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is to pay for the dredging done there during the past year. This is the full amount that was spent there and it is in payment of the work done.

Mr. MORIN. This is special dredging, because around there last year and years before the government have done a great deal of dredgirg in the main channel, but the dredging at this island must be special dredging for a special channel.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, this is special work ordered by the Minister of Public Works. There was no appropriation made, and this is to pay the people who did the work.

Mr. BARKER. I see this work was not begun this year by accident. It was begun in 1900. The Canadian Construction, Limited, received $4,039 upon it in 1901-2, and although there was no appropriation asked from parliament for further expenditure last year, the department appears to have gone on and authorized the continuance of the work, and incurred a liability of over $5,000. This is another specimen of what we had up in connection with the Galops canal, where two years ago some $50,000 was expended by the government without any authority whatever from parliament. At the end of the year we had the most extraordinary statement made that the work had been proceeded with without the authority of the head of the department, and yet an engineer and a gang of men were supervising the work the whole season. The minister says that this present work was proceeded with last year without authority of parliament, and yet we are asked to pay $5,000 now for it. This is an extraordinary way of conducting the business of the country. I appeal to the minister whether that is going to continue. Are we to give carte blanche to the minister to spend any money he likes, and then allow him to come here for a vote of indemnity ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not ask that we should have carte blanche. I do not approve of the system. I think it unfortunate that this thing should occur. I have to ask for several similar items to pay accounts for which no appropriation has been authorized, and some of them I think are perfectly warranted and could be justified and I would be willing to take the responsibility for them. As to the others they were authorized by the minister. These people have done the work in good faith and they perhaps had no means of knowing that there was no appropriation by parliament and that it was not authorized. The Premier, I suppose, and the government have to take the responsibility, but I do not know that they had any more knowledge that this was going on than had the hon. member for Hamilton.

Mr. BARKER. It is the country that is taking the responsibility. The country has to pay it. If the minister himself paid it we do not care who would take the responsibility.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The minister authorized this work without an appropriation and I do not think it would be right for us to repudiate the amounts. The work was probably well done. I am not pretending to defend or approve of the system of spending money without authority.

Mr. BROCK. This work was done under the responsibility of a member of the government of which the Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Sutherland) is a very important minister. The whole country has to take the responsibility because the whole country has to pay it. From the minister's own statement the government is deserving of censure for being derelict in their duty in allowing any minister to spend money without the authority of this parliament. So far as we on this side of the House are concerned, we repudiate the responsibility and we enter a strong and vigorous protest against that kind of thing being done. Even the minister himself will not pretend to defend this thing. The government has no right to ask us to vote money in this kind of way. If a minister has done this on his individual responsibility, he should be made individually responsible for it.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am afraid you would have a poor lookout for getting it back.

Mr. MORIN. Some time ago a gentleman from Quebec was here when we were voting money for public works, and after the House adjourned he complained to me that they could not get one dredge in or around Quebec. He pointed out that vessels could not get to some of the wharfs on account of the sand and gravel banks and that the trade of the port was greatly hampered. That gentleman asked me to mention this to the Minister of Public Works the next time the House was in Committee of Supply, and I avail of this opportunity of doing so.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There is a small dredge at Quebec but I do not think she is large enough to do deep dredging. However, with a view of getting value for our money we have asked parliament to be kind enough to give a grant of $75,000 for the purpose of purchasing a dredge that would be able to do the work at Quebec and below Quebec.

Mr. BROCK. In addition to this sum of $5,151, I suppose you have not taken into account the $20,000 or $30,000 which would be represented by the use of the dredge in doing this work. Do you keep a separate account for these dredges showing day by day the work they do and their expenses. Is this an additional amount to that ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This work was done by contract. An account is kept of the work done by the government dredges, the cost of each dredge and all that sort of thing. The expense of these dredges is as a rule paid out of the vote for maintenance of dredges belonging to the government.

River St. Maurice—dredging eastern entrance of channel, $555.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is a justifiable work, and the vote is for a small overdraft.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Is it outside of the jurisdiction of the Three Rivers commissioners.

Mr. BUREAU. The jurisdiction of the Three Rivers harbour commissioners extends only to the St. Lawrence. This work was done at the junction of the St. Lawrence and the St. Maurice rivers, where there are large mills and where barges come to load lumber. This work was urgent during the spring because then they were splitting their booms and a dredge could not enter after the booms were put down. The water is sometimes too low there to float the logs. I requested the government to do this work in the interest of the lumber trade of Three Rivers which asked for it.

Mr. MORIN. Are they dredging the river so as to be able to float logs ?

Mr. BUREAU. They dredged the mouth of the St. Lawrence to allow boats to come in to load lumber. What I said was that there was not water enough to float logs at certain seasons of the year.

Mr. MORIN. Was the dredging done in order to float the logs ?

Mr. BUREAU. The purpose of the dredging was to allow the barges to come in to carry the lumber away after it is sawn, and also to allow the barges to go higher up the river. They had to make a cut through a sand-bar, where logs sometimes get ashore, and that work had to be done before the booms were laid or otherwise the dredge would not have been able to get out again. Does my hon. friend (Mr. Morin) understand what I mean?

Mr. MORIN. I understand very well ; I was not born yesterday.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

St. Nicholas—rebuilding and strengthening parts of pier damaged by ice, $2,300.

Mr. MORIN. I do not live very far from this place, and it would appear that every year there is a wharf carried away by the ice and a vote of money to replace it. I wish the minister would build a wharf there that will stay or else let him quit building wharfs.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I will try and invent some plan to have them tied down ; I notice that a good many of them seem to be slipping away every year.

Valleyfield—dredging, $2,400.

Mr. BROCK. What are you dredging at Valleyfield for. Is it for the use of these large mills, or is it for the public convenience ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is for the deepening of the harbour and for the public convenience. Although I have not been there for a long time, I imagine it would also be of some advantage to the mills.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Does the hon. minister know whether the old canal is being used for vessels or not ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is not being used for vessels.

Mr. MORIN. As the hon. minister does not appear to know anything about this appropriation, I shall take the liberty of telling him, so that he may no longer remain in ignorance. I was in that place last year at the time of the election, and I saw that the Milling Company had built a dam there partly across the St. Lawrence, which raised the water three feet and overflowed thousands of acres of land. The people at the time of the by-election were all saying that what they wanted was a representative in the House of Commons who would get money from the government to dredge this stream. But there were others who said that the Milling Company should be made to do the dredging because they were the ones who were responsible. I heard the gentleman who was elected declare at a public meeting that he would use all his influence to obtain government money in order to have that dredging done, but now that the hon. minister is informed who is the cause of this overflow, he should conclude not to spend any government money on dredging this stream. The company which built the dam is responsible for the damages and should be made to pay.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My hon. friend is damning the wrong dam.

Mr. MORIN. The people there said that the water never rose before the company built this dam.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The overflow was not due to that work at all, but was due to the building of the government dam on the St. Lawrence for the purpose of raising the water on the Beauharnois canal. I think that the people are entitled to some remedy, and I hope, as soon as I have a full report, to be able to recommend something practical for their relief.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Was not part of this dredging done for the raceway from the mills ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. None that I am aware of.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What is the object of that dam ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is built at Valleyfield for the purpose of raising the water for the canal.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. In order to make an entrance into the canal?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, it is built for canal purposes at Valleyfield.

St. Laurent—Isle of Orleans—completion of wharf, $7,300.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is to pay balance of the contract for this work.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What did the wharf cost ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. $16,598.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What was the amount voted by parliament ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. $12,000.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Why did the hon. gentleman enter into a contract for $17,000 ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have no doubt that when a vote was asked for $12,000 an estimate of the cost was given showing that it would cost $17,000. There was no necessity for asking for any more than could be spent within the year.

Mr. MORIN. The item says for completion of wharf. I believe it should be for extension of wharf.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, it is to complete the extension.

Mr. MORIN. How long was the extension ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. About 90 feet.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What was the total cost of the wharf in this village ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. $33,169.

Mr. MORIN. It seems to me that the department manages these matters in a rather peculiar way. When a public work is necessary, why not send out an engineer to make a report and give an estimate of its cost, and then we will know what we will have to pay ? But here is a vote for $15,000, and the department is at full liberty to expend up to that amount, but if the department were limited to the cost estimated by the engineer, it could not go beyond that. But so long as a certain amount is voted, the people of the locality and their representative will insist that that whole amount should be spent.

Doucet's landing—dredging on east side of wharf, $1,700.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is opposite Three Rivers. The dredging was done in the river. The wharf is Grand Trunk property and this is to allow large boats to get up the river.

General repairs and improvements to harbour, river and bridge works, $5,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is to supplement the appropriation made in 1902.

Rivière du Nord—dredging channel to St. Andrews landing, $4,400.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is on the Ottawa river. This work had to be done and the amount is paid out of the general appropriation. We have therefore to take a special vote now to recoup.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Then the amount for this particular work was not voted at all by parliament.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There was no special vote for this work.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What vote did you pay it out of ? Not out of the general repairs and improvements to harbours and rivers ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, the contractor was paid out of general improvements.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What was the contract and the total cost of the work.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. $4,379.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Then whoever had charge of this work, which is an entirely new work, let the contract when he had not even the money in the general vote to pay for it, and the hon. minister comes now and asks parliament to recoup him. How was the money paid when you had nothing to pay it out of ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This amount was paid out of the general vote.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. But your general vote was overdrawn by $5,500. You are taking an amount to recoup it.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. At the time this expenditure took place there was something to the credit of the general vote. We used the money, and, at the end of the year, there was work requiring the full amount of the appropriation. I am asking this to recoup it and make it good.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Yes, but the curious thing to me is that you had a vote for $15,000, and you expended $20,000. Is there an Order in Council or Governor General's warrant ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am pretty sure there was no Order in Council or other authority. The parties who did work laid out under the general vote have not been paid. The contract in this particular case was paid. But this is to recoup the general vote.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Who were the parties who lay out of their money to the extent of $5,500 ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The principle amount was due to the Canadian Construction Company, Montreal. They are not paid yet, and cannot be paid until this money is voted.

Mr. BLAIN. The total amount, including item 73, is $34,526. Would the hon. minister say what proportion of that amount was voted by parliament, if any? Is all this expended without the authority of parliament?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No special vote was taken for this money. I have explained how the work was ordered, how it was done, and why we are asking the vote to recoup the appropriation.

Mr. BLAIN. Then the total amount——

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The actual amount is $4,379.40.

Mr. BLAIN. Is it the intention of the department to continue the construction of these wharfs and this dredging in the same manner?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. So far as I am able to control it, the same system of conducting business will not be continued.

St. Jérôme—wharf on Lake St. John, $420.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is to complete the payment of the contract.

Mr. MORIN. Is this expenditure for the benefit of the public? Or is it, as I have been informed it is, for the benefit of an individual who has a saw-mill at the mouth of the river, and who, in low water in the summer cannot bring barges to his mill, but has asked for this money to dredge about 200 feet of the river so that he may bring barges to his wharf?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The hon. gentleman is mistaken; this wharf is for the benefit of the public.

Mr. MORIN. All right; I have been misinformed.

Harbours and rivers, Ontario—Cobourg—completion of repairs, $2,000.

Mr. BROCK. Is that for a wharf?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is on a report of the chief engineer for the completion of repairs commenced in the first six months of the fiscal year.

Hawkesbury—dredging, $2,500.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is to pay the balance due on the dredging done at Hawkesbury during the past year.

Midland—dredging, $16,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is to pay the balance due for dredging done at Midland.

Mr. BENNETT. Was this amount expended up to the end of the last fiscal year ending June 30th last?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. BENNETT. In the main estimates is a vote of $12,000 for the dredging at Midland. Has any part of that been expended?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I hope not. I gave very strict instructions that none of the money was to be anticipated. The estimates now before us make full provision for the past year.

Mr. BENNETT. Can the hon. minister inform the House where this $12,000 is to be expended in Midland, and where the dredge is working now, or has been working for the past two weeks?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I shall be glad to bring down a return of the money spent. It has been spent under the authority of the engineer, and has not been brought to my personal attention. I will also bring down a statement, if the hon. gentleman desires, showing where it is intended to dredge during the season.

Mr. BENNETT. All I can say is that it is nearly time some work was done at Midland in the interest of the general public. And, if the hon. minister is not aware where the dredge is working to-day, I can tell him that it is high time some work was done in the general interest of the general public. May I ask if any body is in charge of the work as overseer, and what his allowance is?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Do I understand the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) to say that this $16,000 was spent otherwise than in the general interest at Midland?

Mr. BENNETT. I would not apply that remark to the whole expenditure, but I can say that where the dredge has been working lately, is not in the interest of the general public. She is digging up dry land. Instead of working the dredge in the yard or whatever it is she is working in, it would pay the country better to have men go at it with pick and shovel.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The chief engineer informs me that the dredge has been doing work for private parties, which was paid for by those parties.

Mr. BENNETT. Is the work that has been done there during the past week at private or public expense?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not think that any has been done during the past week at public expense.

Mr. BENNETT. Who is in charge of the work on behalf of the department, and what is his allowance?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. William Hacker, and his allowance is $3 per day.

Mr. BENNETT. I see he was allowed 50 cents per day for a boat. Is that paid now ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. BENNETT. When I tell the hon. minister that the man who is doing the work at his boat-house, where he has boats to rent, and where he is at work part of the time, about fifty yards away from where the dredge is working, he will see the necessity of making a present to this man, for sweet charity's sake of fifty cents per day, for boat-hire.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Is it not a fact that the dredging was done during a good part of the season at the iron works at the other side of the harbour ?

Mr. BENNETT. It was, but not this year.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). What is the total amount spent at Midland harbour during the last five years ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It was $46,108.64.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). Will it be necessary to continue spending permanently or will the work be completed ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My information is that this is a good harbour, and that, once it is dredged to the depth required, it does not fill up much.

Mr. BENNETT. If the hon. minister will accept any suggestions from me, I would say that the place where the work requires to be done is near the elevator. It is certainly annoying to see large vessels come in near the elevator, and, if they approach within fifty yards of the elevator, they take chances of running on a bar.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is my intention to spend this money there, and I shall look into it and see that it is done.

Mr. BENNETT. If the minister will do that, I think he will do the work in the general interest.

Bruce Mines—dredging, $5,200.

Mr. BROCK. Is there a harbour at Bruce Mines ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, and there is a public wharf.

Mr. BENNETT. What is the nature of the dredging at Bruce Mines ? Where is it being done ? There is a perfectly straight line of shore there.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am informed that it is to build an approach to the wharf.

Mr. BLAIN. How much money has been expended at Bruce Mines altogether up to date ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. $20,389. So far as I am aware, this work was commenced in 1900.

Mr. BROCK. Has the hon. gentleman any information as to the rent we are getting for the enormous amount of money we are spending there ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This wharf was transferred to the Department of Marine and Fisheries in August last, and no doubt when the estimates of my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries are under consideration, he will be able to tell the revenue derived.

Mr. BROCK. One would suppose it was more especially under the control of the Public Works Department, being a wharf, and supposed to be for the general benefit of the country.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is not a new system at all. When a public work of this description is constructed by the Public Works Department, it is transferred to the Marine Department, who appoints the wharfinger and attends to the collection of the revenue.
